STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

PLEA FOR RESALE OF EXPROPRIATED MIRABEL LANDS

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, in the Montreal Gazette today another example of injustice to the people of Quebec has been brought to my attention. Farmers in the area surrounding Mirabel, whose land was taken away from them at ridiculous prices, are fighting to regain their rights under our Constitution and under their privilege as Canadian citizens. The Government has to be condemned for the attitude it took toward those people at Mirabel. Those people had excess land expropriated, taken away from them. The Government did not do the same thing in Pickering, because it knows the people in Pickering would battle for their rights.

I request the Government to reconsider its hard stand against these fine people from the area around Mirabel who had their homes taken away from them, homes which go back many generations. This land should be returned to the original owners or their heirs in order to retain the identity of that community. The area of Mirabel is a disaster, Mr. Speaker. It has not provided any benefit to the people there. It has only been hurtful to those citizens.

I request that this House bring forward an act to permit the original owners to repurchase the 50,000 acres—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

MEDICAL CARE

REGULATION OF NUMBERS OF PRACTISING PHYSICIANS

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Association of Interns and Residents has brought to the attention of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs that a practice exists under the existing Medical Care Act and, according to CAIR, will continue to exist under the Canada Health Act, whereby a Province can regulate the number of qualified practising physicians by denying them a medicare billing number. Such a practice is now occurring in the Province of British Columbia.

It must be remembered that these doctors have been declared fully qualified by an appropriate College of Physicians and Surgeons which is responsible for assessing their training and awarding licences to practise. Although this practice is at present restricted to one Province, it is conceivable that it could be adopted by all the Provinces in Canada, thus denying the right to practise to qualified physicians who are Canadian born and Canadian trained.

In all Provinces but Quebec they can opt out of the system and be paid under the insurance scheme providing that they set fees within the accepted level of pay in the fee schedule. This problem, I feel, has not been solved in the deliberations of the Standing Committee. It is a principle of fundamental fairness that duly qualified doctors be assured that they will have an opportunity to practise within medicare, otherwise they may be deprived of an opportunity to earn a livelihood in the practice of their profession unless a second tier outside medicare is established.

AGRICULTURE

FUNDING OF MANITOBA EXHIBITION ORGANIZATION

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, for years the Department of Agriculture has underfunded the Provincial Exhibition of Manitoba, and it is time for a change. The Exhibition organization puts on three fairs each year, including the Royal Manitoba Winter Fair in Brandon, which begins this coming Monday. It is the largest spring fair of its kind in western Canada, and it has a tremendous economic impact on the entire Brandon-Souris region.

Thanks to a dedicated organizing group, all three fairs have prospered and grown. Unfortunately, federal funding has not kept pace. Last year the federal Government contributed less than $22,000, which covered only a fraction of the Exhibition organization's three-quarters-of-a-million-dollar budget. In fact, over the past eight years there has been only a paltry increase in federal funding.

Other exhibitions elsewhere in the country are not underfunded to this degree and there is no excuse for the lack of adequate funding in Manitoba. Although the three fairs put on by the Provincial Exhibition in Manitoba are top notch, the organizers know that in order to keep on attracting top competitors and exhibitors, they must offer adequate prize money. That may not continue to be possible unless federal funding is improved.

I strongly urge the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) to adjust his Department's funding arrangements in such a way as to give the Provincial Exhibition of Manitoba the support it deserves and, indeed, the support it has earned.

THE LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to call to the attention of the House that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) is once again breaking new ground. He has agreed to appear on open line shows across the country, but on one condition, that no one can call in. It will be an open line show, but will be open from one end only. Yesterday, his press assistant confirmed that this was in fact the case but refused to say why the Hon. Leader of the Opposition would not allow people to phone in and talk to him. Today, fortunately, Bill Fox, his press secretary, has been more forthcoming. He said that the Leader of the Opposition has made it a policy not to appear on any open line shows because they are too volatile and can be manipulated by rival political organizations.

People of Canada, do not call in to the Leader of the Opposition, because the line will be busy.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

VALLEY RIVER INDIAN BAND—PURCHASE OF GRAVEL PIT

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, the Valley River Indian Band in my constituency has been after the Department of Indian Affairs to assist in the purchase of a ballast pit within their reserve. This pit could be compared to the hole in a doughnut relative to its location in the reserve. An offer to sell the land to the Band was made in 1981, but no meaningful action was undertaken by the Department. The sum of $15,000 was asked for but not accepted. This represents a pittance when one takes into account the fact that the Department spent $30,000 over the last two years to supply gravel to this reserve.

This historically legitimate land claim should have been settled years ago, had the Minister heeded my representations. The social and economic value of this land to the Bank is far greater than the amount requested. I call upon the Minister and the Department to act immediately to secure this piece of land for the Valley River Indian Band under their land claims programs and projects.

BANK OF CANADA

ALLEGED STATEMENT BY GOVERNOR

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of S.O. 21 to protest against a statement by the Governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Bouey, who said yesterday that workers are partially responsible for high interest rates in this country, because they are getting higher wage increases than their American counterparts.

Mr. Speaker, I think Mr. Bouey is being unfair to Canadian workers. He should not forget that last year, most workers in Canada took cuts in wages, and others were obliged, as in Quebec by the provincial Government, to forgo scheduled wage increases. Furthermore, most workers have had to accept the work sharing concept.

Mr. Speaker, I think Mr. Bouey ought to set an example and take a cut in salary or simply offer his resignation.

POLITICAL PARTIES

LIBERAL PARTY LEADERSHIP CAMPAIGN

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I want to share with the House a letter I recently received. It starts out: "Dear John: It was so nice to see you on TV after all those years. It seems like only yesterday that you quit while I was in the middle of the Ontario election campaign in September, 1975. Like many Canadians I wondered where you had been for the past nine years. Some said you were making films. Some said you were writing a pricy newsletter based on your experience as Finance Minister. Some said you were working in a fancy restaurant.

I didn't think you would be returning to politics when I heard you were practicing law on Bay Street. But you have quit that, too, although you have not quit the bank directorship. By the way, John, now that you are 'fresh' to politics, you should practice your one-on-one TV interviews. Shifty eyes, swivel chairs, a tense expression and evasive answers may have been OK in the days of radio when you were Finance Minister, but we are using television now and your lack of experience shows."

It is signed, Mr. Speaker, "Affectionately yours, Bob Nixon, former leader, Ontario Liberal Party".

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RECOGNITION OF HONORARY BALTIC CONSULS

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, Canadians from all three Baltic states, Latvia, Lithuania, and Estonia, continue to be concerned over the fact that the federal Government's publication Diplomatic Corps And Consular And Other Representatives In Canada does not include the names of the honorary consul generals representing each of these states in Canada. In light of the fact that this publication includes names of representatives from agencies such as the International Labour Organization, the International Atomic Energy Agency, and the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries Organization, to name but a few, I urge the Government and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) to include the names of the above three honorary consuls general under this special category of "Other Representatives".

On behalf of all Canadians of Baltic descent, I urge the Canadian Government to give some recognition to the representatives of these three important areas of the world by including their names in the above directory.

INDIAN ACT

CALL FOR REPEAL OF SECTION DISCRIMINATING AGAINST WOMEN

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, it is a shame that I have to rise in the House today—

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McDermid: Wait for it—and again make a plea to the Government to bring forward legislation immediately to remove a Section in our Indian Act which discriminates against Indian women in our country.

• (1115)

Mr. McDermid: Section 12.(1)(b) is the offending Section. It has been promised by this Government year after year in the Speech from the Throne, by the Minister responsible for the status of women (Mrs. Erola), by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and by the Minister of Indian Affairs (Mr. Munro). Yet we have no legislation. It is a black mark on the country. It is a black mark on the Government of the country. A Bill must be introduced in the House immediately so we can remove that discrimination in the Indian Act. It is a shame, and it must be done right now.

CRIMINAL CODE

DEFINITION OF CHILD—CALL FOR AMENDMENT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, recently in Winnipeg a father was aquitted on a technicality after admitting that he had sexual intercourse with his adopted daughter. Apparently he could not be charged with having sex with his adopted daughter because the child was born out of wedlock and is not therefore a child according to the law as it now exists. The charge was changed to having sex with a foster daughter, and the man got off when the judge ruled that an adopted daughter does not fall within the definition of a foster child.

Clearly this is one of those cases in which the law is an ass. Action must be taken to amend the Criminal Code to provide better protection for illegitimate and adopted children. The Attorney General of Manitoba and others have called upon the federal Government to amend the Criminal Code to close this loophole. I would certainly urge it to do so as quickly as possible. I am confident there would be co-operation from all Members of the House.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—COMPARISON WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The Minister has said that when interest rates rise in the United States they must also rise in Canada. Can the Minister explain to 1.5 million unemployed Canadians why unemployment in the United States has been falling in the past few months, and rising in Canada? Why can we not share in some of the gains if we have to share in the pains?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, very simply, employment has risen in the United States and also in Canada. The reason that our unemployment figure has not gone down faster is the significant difference between the participation rates, that is, the number of people coming into the work force in Canada and in the United States. I will give my friend a figure. The increase in participation in Canada last year was 40 per cent larger than it was in the United States. We have had a much larger number of entrants into the labour force in Canada than there has been in the United States. This is part of the explanation.

The cycles of recession and recovery are not identical in Canada and the United States. Over time those cycles tend to be similar, but in the short term they have never coincided in the past. One should expect there to be lags in either direction between the two countries. However, fundamentally the same general direction applies.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, Canadians who are unemployed will have a lot of difficulty with that economic gobbledegook which can only be understood by some economists.

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO REDUCE UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, let us talk to the 1.5 million Canadians who do not have jobs. Why can we not tell them we are going to try some of the things they have tried in the United States which have cut down unemployment? Forget about entrants into the work force. Why can we not have some of those events in Canada which cut down on unemployment in the United States, so that we can put Canadians back to work?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I cannot help the Hon. Member very much on the first question if he refuses to use his brain and examine reality. The statistics are there. They indicate that we had a much larger growth in the labour force in Canada than the United States had last year. I ask the Hon. Member to look at the figures. He should be able to understand them, even if he refuses to make the effort of exercising his mind by analysing the consequences of having a larger growth in the labour force in Canada than in the United States.

As to the second point he raised, I want to stress to him that indeed we have taken steps in this country to stimulate the economy. In effect the deficit itself indicates how much more the Government is injecting into the economy compared to what it has taken out of the economy.

We have announced a number of measures, particularly last year, that are now in operation, whereby we are stimulating the private sector with about $2.4 billion in tax incentives. We are also adding significantly to government infrastructure capital expenditures, in order to stimulate construction and activity in the housing industry.

I remind him that under the Special Capital Recovery Projects we will spend over $1 billion in federal funds this year. We have also set up a fund of $1.3 billion for this year that will come to the help of young people in this country who are experiencing the largest percentage of unemployment at the present time.

HOUSING

MORTGAGE RATE PROTECTION PLAN

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): No matter how the Minister of Finance slices it, unemployment in Canada is 11.3 per cent and rising, and unemployment in the U.S. is 7.8 per cent and going down.

Mr. Speaker, I want to return to a question I asked the Minister earlier this week with respect to mortgage interest rates. He stated that the Mortgage Rate Protection Plan will protect home owners against excessive increases in interest rates. As the House and the country will know, but the Minister of Finance does not know, that plan protects Canadians when the mortgages are renewed three and four years from now. What is he doing today to address the rise in mortgage interest rates which will cripple the building industry and prevent Canadians from buying homes?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member says that unemployment is at 11.3 per cent and rising. He must have statistics that no one else in Canada has. I suggest that he should wait for the Statistics Canada figures for next month. He might be surprised. What will he say if unemployment comes down next month? I regret that the figure is high at 11.3 per cent and I am concerned about it, but I do not think the Hon. Member helps the situation or shows that he is looking at it with any particular degree of fairness when he says it is rising. There is no evidence to that effect. Indeed, I suspect that we may have contrary results when the figures come out next time.

As far as the Mortgage Rate Protection Plan is concerned, as the Hon. Member knows it will be effective at the time of renewal of mortgages, but it will be a very effective program. It has the support of all the agents concerned, including the housing industry, the construction industry in this country, and the Canadian Consumers' Association. I hope my hon. friend will support that measure when it comes before the House.

With respect to the immediate situation, it is regrettable that mortgage rates have gone up by half a point. However, I do not think that my friend can conclude that this will cripple the housing industry, any more than a decline by half a point would have suddenly led to a huge boom in the housing industry. These movements are rather small and I am confident that we will not see them become larger.

PLIGHT OF JOBLESS OLDER WORKERS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. He will have received a letter from the Canadian Council on Social Development pointing out that older workers, particularly adult men who are heads of families, are the people most severely hit by long term unemployment, that is, people who have been without jobs for more than a year. In fact the number of jobless in that group has more than doubled in the last couple of years.

Since most of the Government's job-creation programs are directed toward younger workers, and therefore the group I am talking about does not qualify because of age, and because their unemployment insurance benefits have been exhausted and they are literally living in despair, why is the Government not paying more attention to the plight of jobless older workers particularly when their numbers have increased so dramatically in the last couple of years?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, now the Hon. Member is complaining about too much assistance for young workers compared to what is being done for older workers. I wish the Hon. Member's Party would get its act together. First, they attack us for not doing enough for young people, and today the Hon. Member is saying we are doing too much, compared to what is being done for older workers. I may remind her that the Government has direct job creation programs some of which are mainly aimed at young workers, but there is also a substantial number aimed at all workers, including the older workers.

I may also remind her that the Department of Employment and Immigration has special programs for the people to which the Hon. Member is referring. These include the program based on Section 38 of the Unemployment Insurance Act as well as the labour adjustment programs, some of which are being used to help the textile and footwear industry. We have set up programs specifically aimed at older workers who have not yet reached retirement age but are facing a difficult situation in industries that are in a relative decline. We have adjustment programs for these workers to help them cope with these very difficult circumstances.

I should be happy to send the Hon. Member a list of these programs if she does not yet have that information.

• (1125)

LONG-TERM IMPACT OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, the Minister says he wishes I would be consistent. I wish he would not attempt to deceive people.

Has the Minister read this letter from the Canadian Council of Social Development which points out so dramatically the plight of the older worker? We know the great difficulty with younger workers, but the Government also has to realize that there are real problems for those people who are older. They point specifically to the age group between 55 and 65 who are living in real difficulty. The Council also asks the Minister whether he would put more study into the long term problems arising from unemployment.

In light of the studies being done in the United States, which I raised with the Minister last week, will he not take this recommendation of the Canadian Council on Social Development and look into the long-term impact of unemployment and what it is doing to the people of this country? It is really having disastrous effects on their lives.

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have read the letter thoroughly to which the Hon. Member refers.

Miss MacDonald: Your colleague has not.

Mr. Roberts: I had some discussions with the people serving on the Committee on Social Development. I have also raised these questions, to which the Hon. Member has referred, with my provincial counterparts at the meeting held in Saint John a few days ago. Yes, we are concerned about both the short-term and the longer-term implications.

Miss MacDonald: I am glad you are. The Minister of Finance is not.

Mr. Roberts: It was as a result of that, that the provincial Ministers at that conference agreed with me that we would try to hold a special conference of employment ministers on this subject and on, for instance, skills development and literacy problems, sometime before this summer. We are working on that conference. It may not prove to be possible to have it as quickly as we would like, but the employment ministers in Saint John agreed with me that we would try to organize such a conference before the summer.

Miss MacDonald: Thank God. You are more humane than the Minister of Finance.

FINANCE

INCREASE IN INTEREST RATES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday the chartered banks, following the direction of the Bank of Canada, raised their interest rates again for mortgages and consumer loans. For the past number of weeks the Minister of Finance has been repeating that the Government does not have a high interest rate policy, yet every week we see the bank interest rates sneak and creep up to a higher and higher level.

The course of action being followed by the banks now is the same course that was followed in 1981 when we saw interest rates go from 18 per cent in May to 19 per cent in June, to 20 per cent in July, and to 21 per cent in August. If the systematic increase in interest rates that we now see occurring is not part of a high interest policy, would the Minister care to tell the House and the Canadian public what is a high interest rate policy?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to use the expression of the Hon. Member and ask him what the NDP was saying when the interest rate in Canada was sneaking and creeping down from 21 per cent to 11 per cent? Were members of the DNP claiming that the federal Government had a low interest policy and that this was terrible? They were not, obviously. They were realizing that the economy was evolving in a situation both in Canada and the United States where we were able to have a situation in which interest rates were coming down.

At the present time, as I have indicated, we have a situation where we have practically eliminated the difference between the U.S. and Canadian rates. We have been able to bring interest rates in this country down to the levels of the United States whereas, before the six and five program, for instance, we had a spread of up to 4 per cent and 5 per cent above United States rates. If the United States rates go up, as they have been creeping up since January, it is unrealistic to expect that we can have a situation in Canada where we have lower interest rates than the United States over an extended period. We may be able to do it for a few days or a few weeks, but as I have repeated over and over again in the House to my friends, they should realize that if Canadians can get 11.5 per cent for their money in the United States, they will not keep their money in Canada at 9 per cent or 10 per cent. It is as simple as that.

Mr. Deans: In effect the Minister is saying that there is nothing we can to independently, that those people who are now unemployed can continue to look forward to years of unemployment, and that those who have jobs can look forward to further unemployment. In effect, that is what the Minister is saying, that nothing can be done in Canada. Surely he knows that there is a large body of opinion that high interest rates in Canada can do nothing but hinder investment in the country and stall the economic recovery, if in fact there is an economic recovery taking place.

UNEMPLOYMENT LEVELS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, is it really necessary for the Government of Canada to replay the disasters of 1981, 1982, and part of 1983, and to allow unemployment to go from 1.5 million to 2 million or 2.5 million people? Is that the only answer with which the Government can come forward to deal with the economic problems facing many people in the country today?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, of course not; of course not. Our policy is not a policy of impotence.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: I have indicated to the Hon. Member repeatedly that indeed we have achieved a lot in bringing down the inflation rate in the country, that we have achieved a lot by increasing productivity, that we have achieved a lot by having the largest trade surplus in our history, and that indeed we have achieved a lot by reducing the difference between U.S. interest rates and Canadian interest rates. This has allowed us to be more competitive, more productive, and more efficient, and has prevented us from having even higher unemployment than we have at the present time.

We do not have a high interest rate policy. Our policy is one of having the lowest possible rates of interest that we can achieve in this country. That is what we are working at and trying to achieve. This is the aim of our policy—the lowest possible rate of interest with the highest possible rate of growth in the economy.

Mr. Deans: Surely the Minister recognizes that high interest rates in the years 1981, 1982 and 1983 directly resulted in higher unemployment, higher levels of bankruptcies, both personal and business, and in what virtually turned out to be chaos in the lives of almost two million Canadian families. Surely the Minister also recognizes that to deny those people and others the opportunity to fend for themselves and create a life for themselves, is to deny that the Government has any responsibility.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, surely it is not unreasonable to suggest that if the result of high interest rates will be, without exception, higher unemployment, higher levels of bankruptcy, higher levels of mortgage foreclosures, and more chaos in the economy, the Government must then take it upon itself to pursue a different policy, a policy of lower interest rates, a policy of government responsibility, a policy which says that the Government of Canada will set an interest rate that will satisfy the best interests of Canadians living in Canada, rather than follow an interest rate made in the United States which works havoc with Canadian workers, manufacturers, and employers?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the tirade of the Hon. Member with a great deal of interest. I have to repeat what I have just told him, that our policy is to have the lowest possible interest rate. That is the Government's policy. I cannot say it in more or in better words. That is our objective. This is what we are trying to achieve at all costs. Once more, the notion that somehow the Government could dictate interest rates here well below those in the United States is living in fairyland. Once more, even NDP supporters would be the first ones to ship their money to the United States if they could get more than in Canada for it. It is as simple as that.

PLIGHT OF FARMERS PAYING HIGH INTEREST RATES

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Hopefully he will know that there is a very serious agricultural crisis which is worsening day by day. At least 50 farmers in my constituency of Brandon-Souris will not be able to put in their crops this spring, at least in part due to high interest rates. Those high interest rates are partly due to the fact that many farmers in Manitoba and elsewhere in Canada are locked into Farm Credit Corporation loans at 16 per cent or higher. Are the Minister and his Government incapable of doing something to help these farmers, many of them are in their thirties, some of whom are in their forties and sixties, who are being forced off the land by policies of the Government for which it should forever feel ashamed?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member is aware that the Province of Manitoba has some responsibility. Those farmers did not reach the position they are in overnight. Agriculture is a joint responsibility in Canada.

We subsidized the interest rates of some of those farmers about whom he is talking, down to 12 per cent. Some of them have not made any payments during the two years they were subsidized down to 12 per cent. It has cost the Government millions of dollars to subsidize those interest rates. We were lending at 16 per cent and 16.75 per cent, whereas private lending institutions were providing money at 20 per cent to 23 per cent.

When he says that we did not do anything, I would gently remind him that the marketing system which his Party seems to support is very sick and does not give farmers a decent return. Then he wants the Government to come along and assist that sick marketing system under which they are operating. I want them to make up their minds on just what they want. He knows as well as I do that many farmers in the Province of Manitoba who are in some kind of marketing system are looking after the market themselves, running it for themselves, and are paying bills too.

ASSISTANCE FOR FARMERS

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. On behalf of farmers in my constituency who are being forced into bankruptcy, either by creditors or voluntarily as a result of high interest rates, why are the Minister and his Government prepared to liquidate the debts of Canadair and yet do nothing to help average, ordinary farmers?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I may remind the Hon. Member that every year, the Government makes it possible for the Farm Credit Corporation to lend hundreds of millions of dollars to the agricultural sector in this country, and that every year, the Department of Agriculture spends hundreds of millions of dollars to help the industry and ensure it will be productive and able to compete on world markets. The fact is that agriculture in Canada has proved to be one of the most dynamic sectors in our economy and in the world, for that matter. With the support of the Government of Canada and the policies this Government has implemented, the agricultural industry in Canada has proved to be extremely productive, but there have been difficult times where high interest rates have caused problems for a number of farmers, and as the Hon. Member is aware, we have implemented a number of measures to help farmers facing particular problems.

SMALL BUSINESS

SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BANK

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. His description is very appropriate. Incompetent is a very appropriate definition of the Minister of Finance. There are thousands of people who are worrying about jobs. Small businesses are panicking because of the new trend of interest rates going up. Will the Minister of Finance put in a contingency plan to protect the small businesses of this country by means of reintroducing the SBDB in its original form, which was intended not only to help bankrupt companies but to help those strong small Canadian companies that were so damaged by the previous rise in interest rates?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to receive the Hon. Member's suggestion.

[English]

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, we have heard this Minister give long, macro economic dialogues in this House over the last week.

An Hon. Member: You have learned a new word.

Mr. Fennell: I have learned a great deal. The Minister has failed to tell the Canadian public what he is going to do to get people back to work, to save small businesses and get this country moving again.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not understand how this fits into Question Period. The Hon. Member has made a speech. I have not heard a question. He complains about long answers. I gave him a short one. He should be satisfied with that. I could go on to explain to him—

Mr. McDermid: No, no.

Mr. Lalonde: You are afraid of getting longer answers? You will get one. In the last budget I introduced measures to produce—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Minister of Finance has made a point. Questions of a general nature are hardly suited for Question Period. We are now entering a period of mini debates, not questions and answers. This is an evolution of this period upon which Hon. Members might care to reflect.

Oral Questions

BANK OF CANADA

GOVERNOR'S STATEMENT ON WORKERS' WAGES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a short and very specific question for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday Gerald Bouey, the Governor of the Bank of Canada, stated that Canadian workers are partly to blame for high interest rates in this country because their wage increases are higher than in the United States. According to the United States Labour Department figures, the 1983 wages of Canadian workers were only 93 per cent of those of workers in the United States. Does the Minister agree with the Governor of the Bank of Canada that Canadian workers are partly to blame for high interest rates? If not, will he tell Governor Bouey to go take a walk in a storm?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the question is not only in terms of Canadian workers, but all Canadians. Over a period of several years settlements regarding wage and salary increases in various forms, not only of the ordinary worker, but of senior officials and so on, have been more than in the United States. To give my friend some idea, in 1981 non-COLA commercial wage settlements in Canada were 5.1 per cent higher than in the United States; in 1982 they were 3 per cent higher, and in 1983 they were 1.7 per cent higher than in the United States. If we go back before 1981, we find similar figures over a number of years.

When 60 per cent to 70 per cent of our Gross National Product is composed of salaries and wages for all Canadians, it is clear that the wage component is a significant factor in our economy. If our increases in wages, salaries and remuneration generally are larger than in the United States, we will not be able to compete with the United States, which is our main client and one of our main competitors. I am sure the Member knows that. This is a reality that this country has to face. We have to remain competitive.

The only way we will be able to have relatively higher settlements than in the United States and still remain competitive is if we can have a higher rate of productivity in this country than in the United States. My friend knows that in the last few years the rate of productivity in Canada was not as high as in the United States. I am happy that in the last year we have improved our rate of productivity. I hope that all Canadians will ensure that our economy will be even more efficient than in the future.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, the fact remains that the average manufacturing wage in this country is only 93 per cent of that in the United States, $11.44 an hour compared to $12.31 an hour.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNOR'S SALARY BE REDUCED

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I believe he is aware that Governor Bouey's salary last year was $104,000. His American counterpart, Federal Reserve Board Chairman Paul Volcker, was paid the equivalent of $85,000 in Canadian funds. If the Minister will not fire Governor Bouey, will he at least take the next logical step and reduce his salary to $79,000, which would be 93 per cent of the salary of Mr. Volcker?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I remind my hon. friend that the salary of Governor Bouey has not been increased in the last few years. In fact he has turned down an increase in salary to which he would have been entitled under the six and five program.

PENITENTIARIES

MILLHAVEN—HIRING OF PART-TIME CONTRACT WORKERS

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. Considerable pressure has been building among employees as well as inmates at Millhaven Penitentiary over the recent number of stabbings and murders, a situation worsened by inmates' access to drugs and alcohol. Employees have brought their concerns to the attention of the Commissioner of Correctional Services. In view of this situation, and the decision by your Ministry to hire commissionaires for part-time—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member should address his remarks to the Chair.

Mr. Vankoughnet: Mr. Speaker, is the Solicitor General aware that part-time contract people are being hired for positions in control towers on the inside of these prisons? I wish to refer to comments that have been made that these people are not of a qualified background so that situations which arise, such as that at Archambault—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is making a representation. He really should ask the question.

Mr. Vankoughnet: Mr. Speaker, is the Minister aware of this situation? If so, what is he prepared to do to address the situation which has been brought to the attention of the Commissioner, especially considering the recent coroner's report in eastern Ontario that drug abuse and alcohol are rampant in that institution?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I met with the union. In fact I meet with them periodically, almost every three months, and go over an agenda of items of concern. That particular matter was not on our most recent agenda. However, I am certainly willing to discuss it with the representatives of the union.

I approved a policy of replacing professional members of the CSC with part-time people in areas where no threat at all is to be presented to the security of the institution. I challenge the Hon. Member to relate the kinds of jobs replacements he has referred to with the kinds of problems that exist in the institution. The manning of a tower by any person who is qualified to do that, does not bear on the possibility of excessive drugs in the institution.

I am very concerned about the escalating costs in the past of the Correctional Service of Canada. During this period of restraint I have taken special steps in the institution to try to bring costs down. Using commissionaires who are well qualified to do the job they are given, rather than using highly trained professionals of the CSC to do jobs which do not require professional training particularly, is a very important way of saving money for the taxpayer.

PERIMETER SECURITY

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, what we are dealing with is not economics; we are talking about human lives. For the Minister to suggest that we have people in penitentiaries who are not fully qualified is incomprehensible. Everyone who works in a penitentiary, such as Millhaven especially, should be well qualified. That is very important, whether they are back-up people or whatever they are. We are not just talking about economics; we should be talking about the security of the inmates and the people with families who work there.

My supplementary question concerns perimeter security, Mr. Speaker. There have been suggestions that there will be fewer people in guard towers on perimeter security because of the new electronic surveillance equipment. I have been told by people who work there that this equipment is not functioning very well at all because of weather conditions in that area. I should like to know what the Minister is doing to make sure that the perimeter area is secure, and if he has plans for further reducing the number of people in these towers.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member is genuinely concerned about this, I do not know why he does not show up at the meetings of the Justice Committee where such matters are discussed. I took the case for perimeter intrusion detection electronic devices to that Committee and I think I was able to satisfy a great many of the reasonable Members who attended that, in a lot of cases, electronic surveillance is more effective than surveillance only by people, without electronic surveillance, as has been done in the past. I think the Hon. Member could learn a lot by attending that Committee. One thing he would find is that no measures have been introduced, even to save money—absolutely no measures—that would increase the risk to a community or to the staff who work in an institution, or even to the inmates.

INDUSTRY

PETROCHEMICAL TASK FORCE REPORT

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. There is a need to create jobs, and the petrochemical industry has that potential. Is the Government prepared to consider the recommendations of the task force on petrochemicals in a favourable way? Will he announce whether he is prepared to forgo the up-front taxation on the feedstock, especially to allow a more market responsive taxation system to be put into place?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, not long ago we received a report from a task force on petrochemicals that was set up by the Government. This report was received by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Our officials are examining the report and its implications, and we shall be happy to inform the Hon. Member as soon as we have finished studying the report and Cabinet has made a decision.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: Supplementary. A short supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: A short supplementary. The Hon. Member for St. John's East.

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a short supplementary question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration who is sitting next to the Minister of Finance. Perhaps he might be able to explain to the House why, more than five weeks after the Budget, he has not yet been able to utilize the $150 million made available to him by his colleague in the last Budget for—

Mr. Speaker: That has nothing to do with the original question. This is not a supplementary. It has nothing to do with it. The Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette.

Mr. Trudeau: Learn the rules.

RED BEEF STABILIZATION PROGRAM

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture about the red meat situation. There have been discussions recently with provincial Ministers and four of them agreed in principle to a so-called tripartite red beef stabilization program. The Minister is on record as saying two years ago that something could be done. I wonder if he would be prepared to tell us what stage the discussions are at now, and when we can look forward to the introduction of legislation in the House that will facilitate matters.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member is aware of the meeting held here in Ottawa on February 9 with some Ministers. In fact every province was represented. They are not in unaminous agreement about how the plan should work, put there was enough feeling of support there that I have instructed my officials to go ahead with the legislation. We had a meeting about it this morning and they are proceeding with the draft legislation at the present time. The date they have set for approval and, hopefully, for a signing function by the provincial Ministers and myself, is in July of this year.

STATUS OF DISCUSSIONS

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, if I understand the Minister correctly, that means that a plan will be in place by July 1. If that is the case, when will it take effect? Will it be in effect in time for the fall crop of calves? Could the Minister bring us up to date on the state of the discussions with the various sectors involved? We are talking about a hog plan and two separate plans in the beef industry, one for the calf operation and one for slaughter calves. Could the Minister bring us up to date on those discussions?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it seems that the pork producers are almost unanimous across Canada; sheep people are as well; cow-calf people are, but the big problem is in the finished cattle sector, whether it would be for this year. It is a tripartite type of agreement. It has not been agreed whether it would be for this year or not, but we hope it would be paying for the calendar year 1984.

HEALTH

RESEARCH INTO LONG-RANGE AIR POLLUTION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The Minister recently agreed to an amendment to the preamble to the Canadian Health Act which included the insight that we will only bring about improvements in the wellbeing of Canadians if we address the environmental causes of disease, as well as other causes of disease. I wonder if the Minister could tell the House how she reconciles that legitimate perception with the fact that a request for $1.2 million to continue studies on the health effects of long-range air pollution has been rejected by her Department? Is she aware of this rejection and, if so, did she support it? If she is not aware of it, what will she do to make sure that this kind of important research continues?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the problem of limited resources is well known, particularly in fields like the one for which I have responsibility. It is true that at the last banking date we could not find that sum of money. It means competition with programs such as the creation of the first native health professionals career program, which I thought must have top priority for the health status of Canadians. You simply have to weigh priority. There is an interdepartmental committee on an acid rain program, to fight air pollution, that is now working with my officials to try to find, through other public and even private sources, funds for the continuation of this study. My Department will analyse the data collected in the first four years of the program.

IMPORTANCE OF RESEARCH

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, it would appear that, along with others, the Minister is trying to find money to continue this research. That is a good thing and I hope she is successful. May I say to her that it is not a question of trading off a program that she suggested, with the one that I mentioned. This kind of research is very important and ought to be structured into the long-range plans of the Department of National Health and Welfare. When she gets around to doing that we will be completely satisfied.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what the question was, exactly, in the second representation made by the Hon. Member. The fact is that the data collected up to now will be analysed by my Department and we hope that other stages of the program of research will take place. I think it is better to consider this as a temporary disruption of funding more than the cutting off of funds forever.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

NATIVE BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT FUND

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. His predecessor, who is now the Secretary of State for External Affairs, with great fanfare in 1981 announced that he was creating a $345 million fund to develop Indian businesses. May I ask the Minister how many loans have been given from that fund since 1981?

• (1200)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this question should more properly be addressed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I am not responsible for the administration of the loans and of the fund.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, that is not where the loan responsibility rests, just to give the information to the Minister of Finance. It rests with the Department of Trade, but there is not a soul from that Department over there and it was the Minister of Finance who announced it.

ACTIVATION OF FUND

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Will the Minister make a commitment to encourage his colleagues to activate that fund so that Indians can start small businesses, and have proper funding which would help the unemployment situation which is tragic with the Indian people?

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has difficulty accepting a supplementary in view of the responsibility of another Minister for the program, according to the rules and practices of the House.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. McGRATH—RELEVANCY OF SUPPLEMENTARY QUESTION

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order arising out of your ruling during Question Period as to the relevancy of my supplementary question. I do not often challenge the Chair. Indeed, under the rules we cannot challenge the Speaker's rulings. However, clearly, Mr. Speaker, I think in this particular case you were wrong, and I say that with great respect—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: My question was clearly supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for St. John's East is an experienced parliamentarian for whom I have personally a great deal of respect. I am sure the Hon. Member knows that supplementaries are in the discretion of the Chair. I believe an examination of today's Hansard will indicate that this Question Period was not the finest hour. With all due respect, the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) asked a very specific question relating to incentives with regard to the petroleum industry in his area, and a very specific—

An Hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Speaker: With all due respect, in the interpretation of the Chair, this was an incentive for investment. The Chair had great difficulty relating the supplementary as posed by the Hon. Member—and this was a discretion of the Chair in an attempt to accommodate Hon. Members—to an investment incentive program announced in the Budget. In the circumstances, the Chair determined it was not a relevant supplementary.

The Hon. Member will note that the Chair had one or two other difficult decisions to make today. With all due respect, the Chair would be delighted to meet with the Hon. Member afterwards. If there is a true feeling there has been an injustice done, the Chair is always willing to look at the record and try to be as fair as possible in the circumstances in granting supplementaries.

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I have noticed that the Speaker during the last several weeks has been recognizing Hon. Members to ask questions without supplementaries during the last five or ten minutes of each Question Period. I would like to commend the Speaker and ask him to continue the practice.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member, however well intentioned, is out of order at this point.

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, I have been away from the House for several weeks. When I opened my desk drawer I found that someone had left a "weapon" in my desk. I believe, actually, it is the kind of thing which someone should use on the Minister of National Revenue, but you are welcome to have it!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will bring this to the attention of the Sergeant-at-Arms and wishes to assure the Hon. Member that it is inconceivable that any Hon. Member of this House would bear any ill will toward him!

PETITIONS

MS. MITCHELL—PROTECTION OF CHILDREN

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from over 900 parents of school children who live throughout the Cities of Vancouver, Coquitlam, Surrey, Langley, Richmond, North Vancouver, Burnaby, Port Moody, Delta and West Vancouver in British Columbia. These parents ask that an error in the federal Criminal Code of 1976 be corrected so that growing children can be protected in parks and playgrounds from convicted sexual offenders. They ask that this law be changed now to protect our children as humanely as possible. I fully support this petition, Mr. Speaker.

MR. BLENKARN—LAW ON ABORTION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed largely by a great number of women with respect to the terrible conditions which exist in Canada concerning abortion. They urge that the Criminal Code be amended so that abortion be available only for the absolute protection of human life.

MR. WENMAN—CANADIAN ARAB HORSE REGISTRY

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty and responsibility to present a petition on behalf of Arab horse breeders in my constituency of Fraser Valley West and elsewhere. The nature of the petition is to protest the arbitrary and undemocratic activities of the Canadian Arab Horse Registry which proposes to introduce mandatory blood-type tests of questionable value, and charge importation fees for horses already registered in America.

The purpose of this petition is to ask the federal Government to order CAHR to change its constitution to allow proxy voting and require that all directors be persons who have bred and registered foals successfully over the last five years in the Canadian and/or American registry.

Does the Federal Business Development Bank perform a merchant-banking role and, if so, in 1983 (a) how many (i) small businesses utilized the bank's services (ii) financial packages did the bank arrange and what was the dollar value of those packages (b) what amount, if any, did the bank collect in fees for its services and what was the cost of providing those services (c) in how many companies did the bank participate as an equity partner or short-term holder of stock options and what was the net profit or loss on these equity transactions?

Hon. David Smith (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Yes, the Federal Business Development Bank (FBDB) does perform a merchant banking role, pursuant to its new mandate and, in 1983:

(a) (i) 51 small businesses utilized its services. (ii) 18 financial packages were arranged and the dollar value of these packages was $6,165,000; 19 were under consideration; 14 were abandoned after investigation found that financing was not required or the bank was not able to arrange financing.

(b) $70,055 in fees was collected and the cost of providing those services was $55,958.

(c) The bank participated in 10 companies as an equity partner or short-term holder of stock options. No net profit or loss can be reported because none of these equity transactions were sold during the year.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. André Ouellet (for the President of the Treasury Board) moved that Bill C-24, An Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to introduce on behalf of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray), a Bill which, needless to say, is an important piece of legislation. We hope that this Bill will provide the new and comprehensive framework we need to provide for authority, control and accountability with respect to federal Crown corporations.

As the House is aware, the need for such a framework was mentioned in 1977 in the Blue Book of the Privy Council Office, which, at the time, suggested a number of legislative measures, as did the Bill on Crown corporations tabled in 1979 by the Government then in power, and finally, the policy statement and Bill presented by our Government in 1982, and again in 1983 in Bill C-153.

In establishing the formula provided in the present Bill, the Government was able to use to good advantage the views expressed by all Hon. Members on the subject, and especially the reports presented by the Public Accounts Committee, by the Auditor General and by the Lambert Commission, the Royal Commission on Financial Management and Accountability.

• (1210)

[English]

The essence of the legislation now before the House, Mr. Speaker, is that the control and accountability of Crown corporations can best be strengthened by clarifying the roles and responsibilities of Parliament, the Government, boards of directors, and corporation managers. The result is that Parliament's role is enhanced, the ability of the Government to act as a vigilant and effective shareholder is improved, the audit system is reinforced and expanded, and the corporations themselves retain the necessary freedom to operate in accordance with sound management practices. The House will take special note of the fact that the Auditor General has expressed general support for this legislation and, at the end of my remarks, with the consent of the House I will gladly table appropriate correspondence in this regard between the Auditor General, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray).

It is useful to note, Mr. Speaker, that the public and parliamentary debate on this matter has focused on questions of control and accountability. The discussion has not centered primarily on the more fundamental political or philosophical question of whether Crown corporations should exist. This is, I believe, a testament to the justifiable pride and satisfaction with which the public over many years has viewed this characteristically Canadian enterprise. Governments, at both the federal and provincial levels, have frequently in our history chosen the corporate structure for achievement of specific roles and specific policy objectives, opting for the advantages of an arm's length relationship with the Government. This corporate instrument of public policy has been employed in areas of transportation and energy, in broadcasting, and in a wide range of activities ranging from support for agriculture and fisheries to the financing of exports, the administration of ports, and the minting of coins. It is interesting to observe, Mr. Speaker, that the corporate holdings of the provincial governments, which include, of course, the large power utilities, exceed those of the federal Government on the basis of total assets represented.

[Translation]

I assume our Progressive Conservative friends opposite will bear this observation in mind. It is true that the provinces—which unfortunately, I must say, are almost all being run by Progressive Conservative Governments—are much more involved and have much broader powers through their provincial Crown corporations than the Government of Canada does.

That is why I fail to understand why in some areas, our Progressive Conservative friends are against federal Crown corporations, while they do not seem to have any objections to provincial Crown corporations—

[English]

At the federal level I want to say that it has now been more than 30 years since a general legislative framework governing the operation of Crown corporations was put in place. In bringing the legislation up to date, Mr. Speaker, it is necessary to recognize that there has been substantial growth and change in that period and that federal Crown corporations vary in many ways. Some have thousands of employees while others have fewer than 25. Some operate in a competitive environment, others do not. Some are financially self-sufficient while others depend in whole or in part on parliamentary appropriations. Some Crown corporations have rather broad mandates while others have been created for very specific purposes. Measures are therefore necessary as a beginning to clarify the manner in which these diverse Crown corporations are classified for legislative purposes.

At present, most Crown corporations are listed in Schedule B, C or D of the Financial Administration Act, but in a manner which is, I have to admit, not consistent. Through legislation under Bill C-24, all present Crown corporations will be either listed in the schedules or exempted by statute from the provisions of the Act. Each year the President of the Treasury Board will table in Parliament the names of the subsidiary Crown corporations. Through this legislation three parent Crown corporations will be exempted from the provisions of the Financial Administration Act; The Bank of Canada, the Canadian Wheat Board and the International Development Research Centre.

Mr. Mazankowski: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ouellet: The Government has concluded that in these three cases the new policy could result in inappropriate relationships given the special nature of these corporations and the provisions of their existing Acts of incorporation. I am glad to see the former Minister of Transport, who is a defender of the Wheat Board, approve this decision of the Government.

Mr. Mazankowski: Very much so.

Mr. Ouellet: The Bill has also provided that those Crown corporations of a governmental nature would be henceforth grouped in Schedule B of the Financial Administration Act and be referred to in future as departmental corporations. They would be subject to provisions of the Act that now apply to Government Departments.

All parent Crown corporations of a commercial nature will, under the Bill, be listed on a new Schedule C of the Financial Administration Act. This schedule will have two parts: parent Crown corporations operating in a competitive environment and not normally dependent on operating subsidies, such as Air Canada or PetroCan, will be listed in Part II of Schedule C; the other, more numerous corporations which are dependent upon parliamentary appropriations, such as the CBC, or that operate in an environment where competition is less severe, would be listed in Part I of Schedule C.

It is important to emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that the framework for control and accountability in this legislation also specifically addresses subsidiary Crown corporations. For the first time, therefore, the relevant provisions of the Financial Administration Act include requirements with respect to the subsidiary Crown corporations, providing a rigorous system of reporting and control for them which has been absent to this point.

Hon. Members will observe that the provisions of the Bill distinguish between parent and subsidiary Crown corporations. Primary control by the Government and Parliament will be exercised through the parent companies. I direct attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that the Bill provides that subsidiaries will not be able to engage in activities denied to the parent corporations. The Bill provides, moreover, that the Government may extend the controls directly to subsidiaries if it considers such action necessary. The legislation applies as well to the Canada Development Investment Corporation, despite some preliminary suggestions to the contrary. I am sure all Members in the House will be pleased by this decision of the Government.

The Government's ability to direct and influence the activities of corporations in which it has less than 100 per cent ownership is, of course, limited because the rights of the other shareholders must be respected. Where such investments are held by Crown corporations the proposed legislation does, however, require that the Crown corporations be held accountable for their investments. For example, if a Crown corporation holds a minority interest in another corporation, it would be inappropriate for the Government to impose its public policy objective on that enterprise. The Crown corporation would be obliged to account for that investment interest in the corporate plans submitted for government approval.

While the main elements of control are embodied in the legislation, some flexibility will be essential in matters concerning government approval of specific corporate decisions. A single set of controls, as specified in the legislation, applicable to Crown corporations irrespective of their degree of commercial involvement, simply will not work. The necessary flexibility will be achieved through the use of regulations covering such matters as the timing, form and content of corporate plans. I would like to say immediately that the Government is prepared to table the regulations when the Bill goes to committee. When the Bill goes to committee we will immediately give the members of the committee the regulations.

It will thus be apparent, Mr. Speaker, that nothing in the use of such regulations will weaken the statutory role of Parliament. It is important to stress this. The regulations will be there to give flexibility. In no way should this be construed as a reduction in the role and responsibility of Parliament. The regulations are designed primarily to expedite relations between Crown corporations and the Government as a shareholder.

It is fundamental to the Government's position on Crown corporations that the role of Parliament in these matters be clarified. Explicit parliamentary approval will be required for the establishment of any new parent Crown corporations, for the mandates of these new corporations, and for any subsequent change to their mandates.

This approval could be sought in one of two ways. One approach would be through a special Act. The Bill also provides, however, that in the case of corporations created under general companies legislation, parliamentary approval would be sought through a motion that would enable substantial discussion in the appropriate standing committee. Parliament will continue, of course, to have authority to approve the financing of Crown corporations' activities where appropriations are required.

Parliamentary approval would be required as well for the disposal of any ownership of a parent Crown corporation. Here again the Bill proposes parliamentary consideration of either special legislation or a motion which would be studied in a standing committee. Parliament has the right to expect a systematic flow of timely, pertinent information on the management of Crown corporations.

This would be achieved in the following manner, Mr. Speaker. First, Parliament would be made aware of the objective of Crown corporations for each planning period through the annual tabling of corporate plan summaries.

Second, in their annual reports the parent Crown corporations would be required to report on the extent to which they and their subsidiaries met their objectives for the financial year. These reports as well will be tabled in Parliament.

Third, the approved operating budgets of all parent Crown corporations requiring parliamentary appropriations would be tabled, as would all appropriate capital budgets.

Fourth, all government directives would be tabled.

Fifth, the President of the Treasury Board would table an annual consolidated report on all Crown corporations listing all government corporate holdings and including employment and financial data. Finally, Mr. Speaker, all reports tabled in Parliament would be referred to the appropriate standing committee or committees.

The Government would be responsible for the major strategic decisions of Crown corporations and must, threfore, be in a position to review their plans and requirements. The Bill will give the Government the authority to require that the necessary information be supplied in advance to allow the Government to make proper revisions. This does not mean, however, that the Government should create a parallel management structure which would serve only to diffuse managerial responsibility. It is certainly not in the mind of the Government to do such a thing. Parallel systems are not contemplated and should not take place.

Responsibility for the appointment of the boards of directors of parent Crown corporations will rest exclusively with the Government. It will also appoint the chairmen of the boards and the chief executive officers in all cases where the Act of incorporation does not provide otherwise. It is the Government's view, Mr. Speaker, that the Government, as the single shareholder, must retain this right of appointment. In this position it is supported by the Auditor General and by similar actions in those provinces where Crown corporation legislation has recently been reviewed.

The Government will be required by legislation to approve any extension of the activities within the mandates of Crown corporations, whether through the creation of new corporate entities or the acquisition of shares or assets. Government approval will also be required for the disposal of wholly-owned subsidiaries or of major businesses or activities of parent Crown corporations. Specific government approval may be required as well for the disposal of property. Prior government approval will also be required for corporate borrowing and for operating and capital budgets. The Government's responsibility is to ensure that parent Crown corporations have specific objectives against which their performance, including that of their wholly-owned subsidiaries, would be measured.

For this reason, parent Crown corporations will be required to obtain annual government approval of their corporate plans in which the Government will expect a statement of clear objectives for the planning period. Hon. Members may wish to be reassured that in cases where corporations with subsidiary or holding interests submit consolidated plans—the CDIC would be the typical example—there are provisions that each of the separate businesses and activities must be identified.

The government approval procedure which I have outlined does not mean that Crown corporations would be faced with major change in their strategy each year. However, it would be the means whereby the Government would have an opportunity to review corporate objectives and, from time to time, require new policy directions where appropriate.

Situations will undoubtedly arise where the Government will want particular parent Crown corporations to take on specific assignments that are in line with both corporate mandates and broad public policy but which may not, in the board of directors' view, be in the mainstream of the corporation's activities. The legislation therefore gives the Government the ability to issue directives requiring corporations to implement such assignments but only after consultations with the board of directors. The proposed legislation specifically provides, however, that where the Government issues a directive it is the Government, not the board of directors, that would be accountable for the consequences arising from the implementation of such directives.

Nevertheless, it is quite clear in the legislation that the board's duty to implement the directive has to be observed promptly and efficiently. Government directives would be tabled in Parliament and responsibility for them would clearly rest with the Government. It is expected that such directives would be few in number and infrequent.

The corporate plan will provide the primary vehicle through which the Government and the parent Crown corporation agree on the broad objectives for the total corporate entity. The Government considers it inappropriate to issue directives that could be construed as interference in cultural activities that Parliament has entrusted to certain Crown corporations. The Bill therefore provides that no directive could be issued to the Canada Council, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the Canadian Film Development Corporation and the National Arts Centre Corporation, dealing with the form or content of a project, production or broadcasting program. The same prohibitions will apply to directives concerning the provision of financial assistance by these corporations to any person or group. Any other directive issued to these corporations would be tabled in Parliament and the Bill provides that no action on the directive could be taken until 30 days after the tabling occurred.

In summary, the Government's involvement is reserved for major strategic issues, for matters of public policy, for approval of corporate plans and budgets, and finally, for appointments of the chief executive officers and the board of directors of the parent Crown corporations. For these purposes, the Government will be prepared to deal quickly with matters that often will be of critical importance to the successful operation of the corporation. The Government will be expected to give the parent Crown corporations and, through them, their wholly-owned subsidiaries, clear guidance on policy matters and the Government's requirements for information.

I would like now to turn to the provisions of the Bill relating to the role of directors and managers. Given a clear parliamentary mandate and government concurrence in strategic directives, Crown corporations are responsible for the efficient and effective management of their affairs. Bill C-24 makes it clear that direct responsibility for such management rests with the board of directors. In order that this pivotal role of the board will be beyond question, the Government has restated in this legislation the duty, the responsibilities and conflict of interest provisions applying to directives as they are set out for private sector companies in the Canada Business Corporations Act.

Mr. Blenkarn: Except they don't get indemnity by the Government.

Mr. Ouellet: In short, the responsibilities of the directors of Crown corporations will be those that apply in the private sector.

Mr. Blenkarn: Except for indemnity.

Mr. Ouellet: The Hon. Member talks about indemnity. In many cases the members of boards in the private sector are much better paid than what we are paying in government.

Mr. Blenkarn: Are they, now? How would you like to table the directors' fees in the CNR?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I would invite Hon. Members to reserve that type of exchange for the committee stage. The Hon. Minister has the floor.

Mr. Ouellet: I want to say that, indeed, a lot of competent and great citizens have agreed to serve on boards of many Crown corporations out of a sense of duty and responsibility to do their share for their country.

Mr. Nystrom: Like Jack Horner.

Mr. Ouellet: In fact, they are doing so at personal expense in many cases.

Mr. Blenkarn: A thousand dollars a day salary.

Mr. Ouellet: I think the Hon. Member is wrong in his assumption.

Anyway, I want to say that it is to the board of directors that the Government will look for the integrity and soundness of plans, recommendations and proposals concerning the direction of the Crown corporation, and for judgments and guidance on operational issues. It is the board that the Government will hold primarily responsible for performance. It is to the board that the legislation provides specific responsibilities related to the audit function, including overseeing effective internal audits and ensuring that proper, thorough external examinations are conducted for the annual audit report and periodic report on the corporation's management systems.

I would like to conclude my remarks by briefly reviewing those aspects of the Bill relating to the auditing of Crown corporations. Hon. Members will agree that a good audit system is essential if management is to be alert to possible weaknesses in the corporation's control systems and if the shareholder is to have a reliability check on the corporation's activities. Properly structured, precisely defined as to role, and carefully organized as to reporting relationship, good audit systems form an invaluable check on the comprehensiveness and soundness of a corporation's management system. It is the fundamental objective of this legislation to ensure that the sound and comprehensive management system is put in place as soon as possible.

Because Crown corporations often have goals that are not purely financial, the auditor will be asked to attest to the accuracy and consistency of non-financial performance indicators which the Government has indicated it wants verified.

The management systems that most Crown corporations now employ to ensure that assets and operations are managed efficiently will henceforth explicitly be required by statute. The proposed legislation will also generally require Crown corporations to have an internal audit activity which will be under the general direction of an audit committee of the board of directors.

Audit works best when it is regarded by management as a tool to improve the performance of the corporation. At the same time, the auditors work for the shareholder, in this case the Government of Canada, and the shareholder has a right to be assured that the corporations have established proper management systems. The new proposals include an external special examination of the management systems, structured in a way that should provide the shareholder with the necessary confidence while helping management improve its performance.

At least every five years, all Crown corporations will have an external examination to provide reasonable assurance that there are no significant deficiencies in the management systems and practices of the corporation. This examination at least every five years will normally be carried out by the auditor performing the annual audit, but in certain circumstances it may be appropriate to have another qualified person undertake the examination. The legislation provides the flexibility.

For corporations in Part II of Schedule C, those operating in a highly competitive environment the examiner's report will be made only to the board of directors, in order not to expose the corporation to public scrutiny of a kind that its competitors would not face. We have to be realistic in this regard and make sure those who are in competition cannot give information that would be detrimental to the good operations of the corporations. Indeed, there would be many ways for companies competing with Crown corporations to seek information to their advantage, which is not really in the public interest. Therefore it will be important, in order not to expose corporations to public scrutiny of that kind, to make sure that does not take place. However, this implies a very special responsibility on the part of the board to protect the interests of the shareholder. We will rely on the good judgment and good sense of responsibility of the shareholder as well as the people sitting on the board on behalf of the shareholder.

For corporations in Part I of Schedule C, the examiner will have the right to bring significant deficiencies to the attention of the appropriate Minister and, if in the examiner's opinion the circumstances warrant, to the attention of Parliament, though only after consultation with the board of directors, the appropriate Minister and the auditor general.

Audits and special examinations are designed to provide an independent, objective assessment, for management and the shareholder, of the adequacy of financial and management controls. Auditors and examiners may not, however, question the merits of particular policy or business decisions, or the objectives of the corporation.

The legislation also proposes a clear and strengthened role for the Auditor General. On or after January 1, 1989, the Auditor General would be appointed by the Government as the auditor or joint auditor of each Crown corporation listed in Part I of Schedule C, unless the Auditor General waives the requirement that he be so appointed. A phasing in of this new role has been proposed so as to avoid disruption of the work now done by private sector auditors. I will be possible under certain circumstances for private sector firms to undertake the special examination of corporations in Part I of Schedule C.

For those Crown corporations listed in Part II of Schedule C, an auditor would be appointed by the Government after consultation with the board of directors. As is the case with those corporations in Part I of Schedule C, the special examination would be carried out either by the auditor or another qualified person.

I referred at the outset of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, to the general support of this legislation given by the Auditor General, who was frequently consulted by the Government and its advisers in the course of preparation of the Bill. As Hon. Members who have followed this matter closely will undoubtedly surmise, this was not a simple exercise in legislative draftsmanship. Many views have been expressed, and the number and variety of Crown corporations meant that many individual situations had to be taken into account in developing a single, comprehensive approach that would commend itself to Parliament.

I want to say—

—and I will say it in French, as one who is responsible for one of our major Crown corporations, that I wish to congratulate the Treasury Board officials who helped prepare this legislation on their concern for consultation, their insight and the excellent job they have done. Personally, I am very pleased that these consultations took place, I am very pleased with the insights I received from Treasury Board officials, and I must congratulate them publicly for their excellent work, all of which has made it possible to introduce this Bill before the Parliament of Canada today.

[English]

I want to say in my concluding remarks that after reviewing the final draft of the Bill, the Auditor General wrote to the Prime Minister to say:

> I am entirely supportive of this version of the proposed legislation . . . . I recollect that last June I wrote you, expressing my concerns about the need for a more effective accountability framework for Crown-owned corporations. I think it therefore only appropriate that I write again now when there is such tangible evidence of action that will help alleviate my concerns.

The Auditor General has written to the President of the Treasury Board and again I quote:

> I sincerely appreciate the opportunity to be consulted where the office has expertise in matters such as the proposed Bill to amend the Financial Administration Act regarding Crown corporations. I hope that this sort of cordial and constructive relationship with your office will continue in the future.
> I think the version I have discussed with Mr. Clark who is the Associate Secretary of the Treasury Board, goes a long way towards responding to our major concerns as outlined, for example, in Chapter 2 of our 1982 Annual Report. With respect to the auditing regime, I am supportive and hope this Bill finds favour with other Members.

I think Members of the House will share the Government's view that the support of the Auditor General for this Bill is an important reason for its support by all Members of this House. I look forward to it in order that it can go to the committee soon where my colleague, the President of the Treasury Board, can provide more detailed explanations of the Bill and discuss in more detail with all Members of Parliament the fine points of this good legislation.

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, it is very sad that the Government has chosen to ignore one of the most serious problems that face Canadians today. Crown corporations are a very serious problem. They are insidious and they represent a huge subgovernment. Crown corporations employ more people than the Government itself. They lose $4 billion a year. It is not easy to come to grips with this problem and it will never be solved if the Government wants to go through a façade of motions and legislation. It knows as well as anyone that this legislation fails to come to grips with the questions of accountability and control.

An extensive book could be written on accountability and control, all the audit provisions in the world could be introduced and the roles of the directors and officers could be specified, but the problems of Crown corporations will never be solved if there is a lack of political will and intent on the part of the Government to bring the corporations under control. Intent is at the heart of the issue. As long as the Government wants to play games with Crown corporations through political appointments and to create a regime in which no one is responsible, as long as it wants Crown corporations to be responsible to Cabinet, it will never come to grips with the problems because no one is responsible. The Cabinet is collectively responsible, and everyone's responsibility is no one's responsibility.

On behalf of the Conservative Party let me say that we would dearly love to support this piece of legislation. We think it is a serious problem. If the legislation came to grips with only a smattering of the problems, we would support it. The Minister's words were fine-sounding ones. If we could implement what he said in his speech and if the legislation addressed what he said, he would have my blessing and the blessing of the Conservative Party. But the Minister knows full well that his words are empty and are not reflected in the legislation. He knows full well that it is just another smoke and mirrors job, which is so typical of the Government. Why will it not come to grips with the problems? The Government does not have the political courage to come to grips with them; that is the truth.

Time does not allow me to go through the Bill clause by clause to demonstrate its numerous and manifest defects, but we will take it apart in committee. We will deal with it clause by clause in committee. Perhaps we will be able to make enough amendments to give the Bill some substance so that it will come to grips with the problems. Instead, today I will focus on a few general points. In so doing, I hope to demonstrate, first, that the Bill is not what the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) said in his statement following first reading; and second, when closely examined, the Bill is so full of defects that it represents no improvement whatsoever to the current situation.

The legislation offends me as it should every Member of the House. I should like to indicate why. I will begin with the regulations, or should I say lack thereof because the Government has not even produced any such regulations. It has the utter audacity to present the Bill but it did not bother to present the regulations. We are buying a pig in a poke. The legislation indicates that certain matters will be spelled out in the regulations, but we do not know what the regulations indicate. The Government wants opposition Parties to support the legislation but it is not prepared to tell us what it says. That is typical of an arrogant government.

This Bill gives huge regulatory-making powers to the Government. As such, it is typical of the Government's excessive desire for secrecy and unbounded administrative discretion in running the affairs of government, insulated from any parliamentary or public scrutiny and control. Government Members say: "Keep them in the dark; let us not open up the process so that Parliament knows what is going on".

I refer Hon. Members to the wide discretionary powers given to Ministers under the National Energy Program as an example of how the Government operates. In earlier times, such legislation would have been rejected out of hand by the House. I regret to say that we have reached the point where the Government blithely tables this legislation and feigns shock when Hon. Members express honest and heartfelt dismay at the extent of regulatory decision-making powers within it. Government Members say: "Oh, we would not dream of doing anything like that", but we have come to know otherwise. The Bill itself says one thing. When the regulations are presented, the Government does quite another.

There are three fundamental problems with the extent and nature of the regulating powers in Bill C-24. First, every section of substance has attached to it a regulation-making power by which the Government in effect defines how the section will operate or by which Crown corporations can be exempted from the requirements imposed by the section. As one example, I refer to Section 100 which appears to indicate that the Minister of Finance must approve the terms, conditions and timing of any and all borrowing by a Crown corporation. However, Subsection 135(4) authorizes the Governor in Council, by regulation, to exempt a specified Crown corporation or a Crown corporation of a specified class from the application of this section. What the Lord giveth, the Lord taketh away. The Government is asking Parliament to buy a pig in a poke. Without seeing the regulations, how can we possibly know how the Government intends to use the Bill?

Second, even if we were to see the regulations, how would we know that the Government would not change them the day after the Bill is passed or use them over the years to subvert completely Parliament's intention or understanding when it approved the Bill? The answer to the question is that we would not know. We have no assurance; there is no guarantee whatsoever in the legislation.

Third, there are few if any criteria in Bill C-24 that constrain or establish a framework within which the Governor in Council may make regulations. There are no criteria limiting the Government's power to move corporations from one schedule to another, from one classification of Crown corporation to another. The form and content of corporate plans, operating and capital budget and corporate by-laws are set by regulation, but we do not know what are the regulations. How do we know whether it will be a one-line operating plan? Is that what the operating plan is—a one-line capital budget? Bill C-24 does not specify the circumstances under which the Government may exempt corporations from any requirement in the Bill.

The Minister indicated that he intends to table the regulations before committee review. We thank him for that small mercy.

Perhaps I could call it one o'clock at this particular point.

[Translation]

The Deputy Speaker: Order. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the House rose at one o'clock, the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson) had the floor.

Mr. Thomson: Mr. Speaker, if it is permissible, I understand that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Ouellet) would like to table the correspondence with the Auditor General.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before recognizing the Minister, I should inform the House that this can only be done with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in my speech I referred to correspondence exchanged between the Auditor General of Canada, the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray). I therefore wish to table this correspondence in both official languages and I would like to thank my hon. colleagues for giving their unanimous consent.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the Minister of Labour. Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Thomson: Mr. Speaker, just before we adjourned for lunch, I had concluded that there are no criteria contained in Bill C-24 by which the Government is limited in its power to move corporations from one schedule to the other. There is no form in content with respect to corporate plans operating in capital budgets. Corporate by-laws are also set by the regulations. Bill C-24 does not specify the circumstances under which the Government may exempt corporations from the requirements of the Bill. I went on to say that it was reassuring to at least note that the Minister had offered to table the regulations before or when the Bill goes to committee.

One of the contentions that the Minister put forward in his remarks that is crucial in so far as Parliament is concerned is the role that Parliament should play in the control of Crown corporations. In his statement of March 15, the President of the Treasury Board said that Bill C-24 would clarify the roles and responsibilities of Parliament. This morning the Minister expounded at great length on how Parliament was going to control Crown corporations in the future.

Bill C-24 entails a clear and major erosion of parliament's existing control over Crown corporations. This is the latest manifestation of the Government's contempt and disregard for the House. The Minister's statement said that by statute Parliament will be required to approve the creation, mandate and financing of Crown corporations. But that is just nonsense, Mr. Speaker; it is not true at all.

Let us examine Parliament's control over the creation of Crown corporations. First of all, Parliament will have no control whatsoever over the creation of subsidiaries of Crown corporations. I contend that this has been the major cause of the problem. It has been the creation of subsidiaries of Crown corporations that has caused the greatest proliferation over the last 15 or 20 years. There are really only seven what may be called commercial Crown corporations but they have over 150 subsidiaries. They have bred like rabbits. Parliament does not have any control over the creation of these beasts at all. In effect, the Government is letting Parliament guard the front door of the stable while all the horses run out of a wide open back door.

Second, Bill C-24 says that a Minister does not need parliamentary approval for the creation of a Crown corporation if he or she already has the power to do so through an existing Act of Parliament. As Hon. Members know, there are any number of Acts of Parliament which give Ministers the right to create a parent Crown corporation. For example, under the energy resources legislation the Government could create a new Petro-Canada at will; under the Atomic Energy Control Act the Government could create any number of new parent Crown corporations. In the short time that we have had this Bill before us we have counted a dozen pieces of legislation that give Ministers such power. Parliament does not really have any control over the creation of Crown corporations; they can be created under the existing legislation. I hope the Government would consider an amendment that would preclude this. Surely that is not too much to ask.

Third, in a few instances a Minister might deem it appropriate to table a special Bill. This is very offensive, Mr. Speaker, and I say it is not in the spirit of parliamentary democracy. It is a flagrant, arrogant statement. If a Minister does table a special Bill to create a Crown corporation and Parliament is given the opportunity to review it, that review will be limited to 30 days in committee and seven hours of debate in the House, maximum. Is the Government kidding? Is this some kind of practical joke? Does the Government really expect Members on this side to accept legislation that would limit our time to review something of the magnitude of the Petro-Canada Act or the Air Canada Act to 30 days in committee and seven hours of debate in the House? The Government is putting closure in the Act. I say that is arrogant and we will fight this Bill until the cows come home before we allow it. It is unprecedented; it is automatic legislative closure and is contrary to what I thought Parliament was all about.

Fourth, we have an opinion that suggests that Bill C-24 does not bind the Crown under Section 16 of the Interpretation Act and, therefore, does not remove the Governor in Council's current prerogative to incorporate new Crown corporations without parliamentary approval. In other words, the words in the Act and the words of the Minister belie any kind of parliamentary control of the creation of Crown corporations. The Minister should know that when any legislation is placed before the House, the first thing that is asked is whether it is meant to bind the Crown. That is the first question the draftsman will ask. In the case of Bill C-24 one has to ask why the Government chose to ignore that question. As we read it, the Bill gives the Governor in Council the prerogative to incorporate new Crown corporations at will, without parliamentary approval.

I want to return to the Minister's assertion that I referred to earlier, Mr. Speaker. Just how does Bill C-24 do anything that requires Parliament to approve the creation of every parent Crown corporation? Those are the Minister's words, not mine. He said that Parliament must approve the creation of every parent corporation. I have given four examples of ways the Government can escape that obligation. If it can escape the provision to come before Parliament, then I have to ask myself if there is any sincerity behind the legislation. It belies what the Minister has said.

The Minister went on to say quite a bit about the role of the board of directors. It will exercise greater control over Crown corporations. I am dismayed, but not surprised, to see that the Government has learned nothing from the fiascos at Canadair and de Havilland, from Atomic Energy of Canada Limited or Air Canada, from Polysar or the Cape Breton Development Corporation. The Government has chosen to ignore the recommendations of the Auditor General of Canada, the Lambert Commission and many of the Crown corporations themselves with respect to the role and responsibility of the boards of directors.

In effect, Bill C-24 would convert boards of directors into advisory boards with little or no power. If we are to come to grips with the control and accountability of Crown corporations, it is absolutely crucial to have ministerial accountability, not collective accountability. Everyone's responsibility is no one's responsibility, Mr. Speaker. The pillar of control and accountability must be ministerial accountability. You have to tie the can to someone and hold him accountable. That is a problem which occurred with Canadair, de Havilland and Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, as well as a number of other Crown corporations. No one assumed responsibility.

A regime of accountability and control lies with an effective board of directors. If all the responsibility is taken away from a board of directors, how can one expect them to act as a responsible body? That is what Bill C-24 has done. The Governor in Council and the Cabinet are all things under this legislation. In the private sector, the principal role of the board of directors is to recruit the chief executive officer and supervise his stewardship of the corporation. That is the essential role of a board of directors. It must pick that chief executive officer and hold him accountable for the operations of that corporation. Under Bill C-24 the Cabinet appoints the chief executive officer, sets his tenure and remuneration. The board of directors has nothing to do with the selection of the chief executive officer. The Cabinet picks its political appointee.

The Cabinet also appoints the chairman of the board. The board does not even have to be consulted. In some cases like Canada Post and Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation and other Crown corporations, the Cabinet even appoints vice-presidents and other various lesser management posts beneath the chief executive officer. How in the world can the chief executive officer hold management accountable if the Cabinet appoints the management for him? It is a great system of accountability and control when the Cabinet decides who is going to be the vice-president of marketing for such and such a corporation! In that case, the chief executive officer of some Crown corporation could say to one of his vice-presidents: "We have a problem and this is the way we should be dealing with it. Would you please address the problem and bring your recommendations forward to me?" The vice-president could then say: "I will think about it. I am not accountable to you; I was chosen by the Cabinet. How can you tell me what I should or should not do?" That is just crazy. You cannot have a regime of accountability under those circumstances, Mr. Speaker.

Not only does the Cabinet appoint the vice-presidents, or can, but it is also going to appoint the auditor. In most corporations where one wants a responsible board of directors, that responsibility is assigned to the boards. If you make that the board's responsibility, then that auditor is responsible to report to that board of directors. When you deny the directors that responsibility, they can ask what they are there for. We know what the Government wants them there for. It wants them for window dressing. It needs a spot for political appointments. That is what this Bill does, and does deliberately. This legislation has made the board of directors valueless to the accountability process.

The Cabinet will even approve the by-laws on behalf of the board of directors. The board of directors is supposed to approve the by-laws. This Bill does not even give it the right to approve the by-laws of the corporation. Cabinet is going to set the dividend policy. Cabinet can direct the board on the conduct of the corporation's business and its affairs. What on earth are the directors supposed to do? This Bill completely emasculates the board of directors as far as its responsibility is concerned. I say to this House and to you, Mr. Speaker, that if we are going to have accountability in Crown corporations, not only do we have to have ministerial accountability but we have to have a board of directors which acts in a responsible way in so far as management is concerned. But no, this legislation denies the board those responsibilities. It is just a window dressing operation.

I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, what Bill C-24 expects these directors to do. It expects them to be good Liberal appointees, to go to board meetings and collect their per diem.

Mr. Ouellet: No, no.

Mr. Thomson: That is exactly what the legislation does. Read it. The Minister said it himself. It expects them to be good Liberal appointees, to go to board meetings, to collect their per diems and to do what the Government tells them to do. That is exactly what Bill C-24 says.

Mr. Ouellet: Show me the word "Liberal" in the legislation.

Mr. Thomson: The Minister said he wants the board to do more than that, but that is not what this legislation says. Has the Government learned nothing? Have we gone through the fiasco of Canadair and de Havilland only to perpetuate the system which caused the problem in the first place?

As you know, Mr. Speaker, I am co-chairman of our Party's task force on Crown corporations. Our task force has spoken to many chief executive officers and directors of Crown corporations. One theme dominates. Crown corporations do not know who they are accountable to. We have been told the tale of a chief executive officer of a major Crown corporation who comes to Ottawa at the invitation of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). The Minister of Finance tells him: "You do this". The chief executive officer replies: "I thought I was responsible to the Minister of Transport". He is told that he may very well be responsible to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy), but the matter has been discussed with him and this is what he is supposed to do. The chief executive officer is told it is not necessary to talk to the Minister of Transport. "You do what I tell you and everything will be just fine".

The next day the chief executive officer speaks to the Minister of Transport and tells him the situation. The Minister of Transport says: "I beg your pardon? I have never discussed this matter with the Minister of Finance". The chief executive officer replies: "Do you want me to carry out this policy or not?" The Minister of Transport says: "No, I do not want you to carry out that policy".

That story is just typical of the types of operations and problems we have with Crown corporations today. It is the major problem which Members opposite cannot seem to get through their heads. How can you have a system of accountability when chief executive officers have to account to more than one person? How can they be expected to know which way to go? It is a hopeless mess and this legislation does not even attempt to address that problem.

My view is that we will never solve the problems of Crown corporations until they come under an effective regime of individual ministerial accountability. That is the core of the problem, Mr. Speaker. Bill C-24 goes in the opposite direction. The individual Minister is nothing but a post box. And, of course, that is the way Government wants the system to run.

• (1430)

Let us look at the question of Canadair. Who was responsible? Was it the board of directors? The chief executive officer? The Minister? We did not have a Minister we could hold accountable for Canadair. No, Sir; the thinking of the Government is that if we had a Minister accountable for the losses in Canadair, he would have to resign, or he would have to think about it. If he was accountable for the loss of $1.4 billion of taxpayers' money, do you not think that the Minister might have to give a moment's thought to his responsibility and hold himself accountable and resign?

Mr. Cullen: You lost the Avro Arrow.

Mr. Thomson: Mr. Speaker, that is typical. They do not want to address the problem so they throw the Avro Arrow at us after 25 years. What does that have to do with what I am talking about here this afternoon concerning ministerial accountability?

Mr. Cullen: It has everything to do with it.

Mr. Thomson: If someone lost $1.4 billion of taxpayers' money, he should darn well resign. But under this Government's system no, Sir, we are not going to make any Minister accountable. We will have collective Cabinet responsibility and in that way no one will be responsible or accountable. A great way to run a railroad!

The real authority is, of course, exercised by Cabinet or Treasury Board; groups of Ministers rather than individuals. In being accountable to so many Ministers, corporations will continue to be accountable to no one.

It is interesting to look back at Canadair because you cannot help but use it as an example of everything that is wrong with Crown corporations. One of the most extraordinary things about Canadair, and I find it absolutely incredible, is that here we have a government trying to tell us that there is a new regime of accountability and control as far as Crown corporations are concerned. They want us to believe that. However, the board of directors of Canadair was reappointed in its entirety. Who was responsible in Canadair for the fiasco? It could not have been the board of directors because the Government chose to reappoint every single one of them. They had no responsibility. Was it the Minister? No, it was not the Minister, because there was no Minister accountable. It was the Cabinet, so what really should have happened is that the whole Cabinet should have resigned. No one is accountable except for an amorphous collectivity called the Cabinet which, in the end, ducked the responsibility.

What have they done, Mr. Speaker? They have put all the problems off on the new super Crown corporation, the granddaddy of them all, the Canada Development Investment Corporation, the CDIC. Bill C-24 does nothing but perpetuate this lack of real accountability. That covers my four general points, Mr. Speaker, and there is much more I intend to cover in committee.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, please allow me to make these two brief points. If Bill C-24 is such a good piece of legislation, why is it not good enough for CDIC? Why does Bill C-25, the CDIC Bill, differ in so many ways from Bill C-24? For example, Bill C-24 authorizes Cabinet to appoint chairmen and chief executive officers. Bill C-25 allows the board of directors of CDIC to appoint the chairman and chief executive officer. Which is the right way? Obviously the Government does not know.

The Government says the Auditor General supports this Bill. Well, I met with the Auditor General on Wednesday for three and a half hours and I found that he had not even seen the final draft of the Bill. Nor had he seen the regulations. Even at that he expressed many reservations about the Bill. I shall leave it to him to make his case at the appropriate time.

The Government will say that I am being paranoid. Trust us, they will say, because we know what is best. We would not dream of doing all those nasty things Bill C-24 would allow us to do. Oh, no? The Canadian Ownership Account was approved by Parliament, over our objections, on the grounds that it could be used only to finance new energy companies. The revenues in the account are now going into the general revenues of the Government. On that evidence alone, why should we trust the word of the Government on anything as important as Crown corporations?

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we can do better. The Government has been studying Crown corporations since 1972 and has been promising reforms since 1977. Is Bill C-24, this almost incomprehensible piece of legislative mish-mash and gobbledegook, the best they can manage after all that time? Well, when our chance comes we will show the other side not only what can be done with Crown corporations but what must be done. Bill C-24 will go where it belongs, in the trash can.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wish only to say a few words on the Bill before the House today. The Member of my Party responsible had to be in his constituency and I will try and substitute for a minute or two. The main detailed criticism, suggestions and comments on this Bill will be made, of course, by our people at committee stage.

I am very pleased to say that in general we are pleased to have a Bill like this before Parliament. I do not think it goes far enough on the accountability of Crown corporations, which are a very important aspect of Canadian economic life, one which is often ignored by parliamentarians and not scrutinized closely enough by those of us in this place.

We have many Crown corporations in this country, and if I remember correctly, there are now about 300 or 310 federal Crown corporations. These corporations administer very substantial amounts of money, and in fact, the 300 federal Crown corporations have a total budget of about $67 billion. That is a lot of money, and that is why I think we should have more control over the accounts and books of these Crown corporations.

As far as employment is concerned, today, about 265,000 people work for federal Crown corporations. That is about the same number as are working in the Public Service today. And there are not only federal Crown corporations—

[English]

—we also have many provincial Crown corporations. In my own Province of Saskatchewan we have a very proud and honourable tradition and heritage of having many Crown corporations which have made a tremendous impact and played a tremendously valuable role for the people of Saskatchewan. In fact, you will find that historically all three Parties in this House, and when they have been the Government in various provinces, have created Crown corporations, supported them and nursed them along the way. That, of course, includes the Conservative Party, who are often very critical of Crown corporations in this country today. I think sometimes they are being a bit hypocritical when they speak against Crown corporations. One need only look at Bill Davis in Ontario and the Crown corporations in that province, or at Peter Lougheed in the Province of Alberta with PWA and many Crown corporations like that, plus their involvement in the oil industry. That shows the Conservative Party historically and currently believes that Crown corporations have a major role to play in our country and society.

As I said, in our province we have seen the contributions of many Crown corporations. I am thinking now, for example, of the Saskatchewan Power Corporation, the Saskatchewan Government telephones, and more recently the establishment of the Saskatchewan Potash Corporation which now controls about 40 per cent of the potash in our province. That is the largest potash corporation outside the Soviet Union. These Crown corporations have made a tremendous contribution to our country and our society.

As I was saying before, hundreds of thousands of Canadians work in the various Crown corporations throughout the land. Some of these corporations are very big. Hydro-Québec is a very large Crown corporation that has made a tremendous contribution.

I and many people in my Party are concerned that often Crown corporations are not as accountable as they should be to Parliament, the legislatures and the average citizen across the country. In the 1940s the then Premier of Saskatchewan, Tommy Douglas, decided that if Crown corporations were going to play such an important role in the province they should be more accountable. In Saskatchewan a special Crown corporations committee was established. The reports and activities of all the Crown corporations in Saskatchewan must now be referred automatically each year to this particular Crown corporations committee. Therefore there must be accountability. The officers, presidents and chairmen of the Crown corporations must appear before that particular legislative committee. They must be accountable. They must explain what their plans are and be available for cross-examination.

I believe that is the direction we should be taking in this Parliament as well. My friend, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), has often said that the annual reports of CNR, Air Canada and all the other Crown corporations should be automatically referred to the relevant parliamentary committee. In that way we, as elected representatives, will have a chance to make our point of view known and to say what our constituents want us to say about the direction of these particular Crown corporations.

I can speak from experience of the problems we had with the CNR in my constituency. In Melville we have approximately 700 CNR employees. They have had many frustrations with that particular Crown corporation. Many of the workers in the CNR feel it is time that that Crown corporation was socialized or re-nationalized to make it more responsible to the ordinary Canadian citizen. That is one of the frustrations I have with the system we have today. Communities are affected by the insensitivity of a large Crown corporation like the CNR. In many communities in my constituency rail lines have been abandoned and elevators have been pulled down because we could not persuade the CPR to continue service to these communities on these branch lines. We have had many fights about retaining branch lines. We have won some and lost some. It would be much easier to win these battles if the CNR were more accountable to this Parliament and to the people of Canada. That must be one of the objectives of Bill C-24 which is before the House today. Hopefully, Members of Parliament can amend the Bill at committee stage to provide more accountability to Members of Parliament.

The important thing is to make sure that Crown corporations are more accountable to the ordinary citizens of the country. Canadair, de Havilland and other Crown corporations have been in trouble recently and have been aided and assisted by the federal Government, rightfully so in some cases. However, in some cases I wonder very seriously. When I think of these corporations I get angry because there is not more accountability, we cannot have the officers appear before parliamentary committees and we cannot have more input into the decisions made by these Crown corporations.

While we have this type of Bill before Parliament we must discuss attempting to democratize Crown corporations a lot more than they are today. In this country we must have a lot more economic democracy and a lot more decentralization of decision making and power to give more power to the ordinary citizen. There is no reason why workers in Crown corporations should not have members on the boards of directors. There is no reason why the workers should not be more directly involved in the management and control of the Crown corporations on an ongoing, day to day basis. That is the kind of step we must take.

Our country is a federation and therefore the provinces must be more involved in some of the national Crown corporations and national institutions which we have in the country. I am thinking, for example, of the Bank of Canada and the importance of monetary policy. I do not believe it is wise to have so much control resting solely with the Minister of Finance. I believe the provinces should have the right to appoint people as directors of the Bank of Canada so that there is some input from the provinces. Provinces have a tremendous impact on monetary and fiscal policy. The actions of Hydro-Québec are very important in terms of our monetary and fiscal policy. The actions of the Saskatchewan Power Corporation, Saskatchewan Potash Corporation or some of the bigger corporations in Ontario and British Columbia are very important in terms of monetary and fiscal policy.

We must democratize Crown corporations, making sure the provinces have some input into who sits on the boards of directors. The time has come when producers, farmers and fishermen must have more say about who becomes a member of the boards of directors of such Crown corporations as Canagrex. They must have more say about the management of our Crown corporations. In the economic sense we must democratize these institutions and make them truly national and truly Canadian institutions.

One of the problems in the country today is that we are much too centralized. There is too much power in and too many decisions being imposed from Ottawa. We must recognize regional differences and try to build a national partnership. If we did this I believe we would be much better off. For example, Mr. Speaker, we are the only democratic federation in the world that I know of in which the most populous regions dominate both Houses of Parliament. The two central provinces dominate the House of Commons because of representation by population. The two central provinces also dominate the Senate. I do not know of any other democratic federation in the world where the most populous regions will dominate those Houses. We do not have a balance between population and regionalism in the country. I believe that is one of the problems with some of our national institutions as well. They do not reflect the country as a whole.

When the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Pepin) was the co-chairman of the task force on the Constitution with the late John Robarts, he and his colleague tried to address some of the problems of regionalism and how more national, representative institutions could be created in the country. They suggested some changes and amendments which could be made.

I believe that the 300-odd federal Crown corporations could be more reflective of the country if we had more parliamentary accountability and more input from the provinces. Many of these Crown corporations operate in areas which are co-jurisdictional, such as agriculture. We should have workers on the boards of directors. They should be more involved in the management decisions. We should have ordinary citizens elected as directors as well.

These are just some of the things I believe we should be doing. The Bill before the House gives us that opportunity. As I said at the beginning of my remarks, I hope this debate does not degenerate into a debate about Crown corporations being negative, bad and the bogeyman of our society. I hope that in this debate we will try to improve the role of Crown corporations, try to integrate them more carefully with the nation as a whole and try to make them more accountable to Parliament and the people of the land. If that is done I believe this will be a much better country for each and every citizen.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to say a few words in this debate on Bill C-24, the Crown corporation Bill, and amendments to the Financial Administration Act. This Bill is essentially a response to a great deal of concern that has been expressed by the Auditor General and the relevant committee of the House of Commons. As well, it draws on the Lambert Commission report on financial management and accountability and indeed in many way goes further than that report.

The Bill also takes into account information received by the Government in its 1977 Privy Council Office white paper on Crown corporations. It is also based on reports of the Public Accounts Committee going back to the Polysar report of 1977. We particularly studied the recent Public Accounts report on control and accountability of Crown corporations. We believe that we have addressed many of the principal concerns while also taking into account the comments we have heard from business and professional associations.

In trying to strike a delicate balance, we feel that it just makes no sense to overly restrict these Crown corporations. By doing so we would unnecessarily put at risk their financial viability in the marketplace and jeopardize the considerable investment which the taxpayers have made in these Crown corporations.

This morning, the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson) talked about these Crown corporations losing $4 billion per year. I suggest that he is using a certain amount of licence to say that these Crown corporations lost $4 billion a year because many Crown corporations are those which will be included in Schedule I of the Act when it is adopted by Parliament. These include agencies like Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation which receives $1.5 billion to assist in providing Canadians housing and shelter; the CBC which receives approximately $744 million a year; groups like the Canadian Wheat Board which receives $118 million a year; the Federal Business Development Bank which receives $118 million a year; the Farm Credit Corporation, and VIA Rail. They are all Crown corporations but they are agencies that really provide a way of delivering a government service to the people. I believe the Hon. Member is inadequately explaining the real situation when he says that these Crown corporations lose $4 billion a year.

I have the impression that the Hon. Member is very opposed to Crown corporations. It is his right to be so. I recall when I was working with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources a few years ago that his Party was very opposed to the Bill establishing Petro-Canada. That is a free choice for his Party to make. Our Party supported the establishment of Petro-Canada and did so. We believe it was beneficial to Canadians at large and it certainly carries broad support throughout the country.

However, I notice that most Hon. Members on the other side are not opposed to provincial Crown corporations, such as the Alberta Energy Corporation or Ontario Hydro, which certainly is much larger than any federal Crown corporation. It is a way for a government to provide services.

This Bill sets out a regime for dividing these Crown corporations into those which receive appropriations from Parliament and those which are competitive and capable of operating without parliamentary appropriations. They are organized on a reasonably rational basis.

The Member suggested that there is really no political will to put this Bill through Parliament. I suggest that the fact it was introduced exactly a week ago yesterday and is before the House today certainly indicates that we want to proceed with this Bill. I believe he made an excellent suggestion to have this Bill go to committee for a vigorous discussion, as usually takes place in committee.

It has also been suggested that this regime does not make anyone responsible for particular Crown corporations. However, I think the legislation follows the recommendation of the Auditor General that the responsibility for these corporations should go back to the Government and the responsible Minister. The appropriate Minister will make recommendations to the Governor in Council with regard to directives, the operating budget and the corporate plan which will be tabled in Parliament. Obviously, the appropriate Minister for each Crown corporation will not only be legally responsible but politically responsible during Question Period every day in the House of Commons. There cannot be much more responsibility to Parliament than having to answer questions daily during Question Period or defending the directives, corporate plans and operating budgets before the appropriate parliamentary committee. I cannot imagine any more direct way of putting responsibility on the individual Minister.

The Hon. Member suggested at the beginning of his remarks that the Government had produced no regulations. This is not surprising since regulations often are not tabled at the time of second reading because we are dealing with the purpose of the Bill. Clearly, the Minister, acting on behalf of the President of the Treasury Board, has indicated that those regulations will be made available at the committee stage. While this is not done very often, the Minister has given the commitment in this case that the regulations will be put before the committee dealing with this Bill.

The Member also suggested that the regulations give too much power to the Government. Obviously, regulations can be enforced only to the extent provided for in the Act. It is important to note that the regulations as passed by the Government must be contained in The Canada Gazette and are subject to review by the Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments.

He suggested that Section 135(1) gives power to the Minister of Finance for the financial control of Crown corporations but there is an exemption in subsection (4). The reasoning behind that is that the over-all financial budget of a corporation, such as the Export Development Corporation, is approved but when such a corporation must go to the market for a particular borrowing a regulation could be applied for it to be exempt from that individual need for financial resources. Of course, all regulations are published in The Canada Gazette and are subject to scrutiny by Members of Parliament through questions in the House and in the Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments. It has also been suggested that regulations can be changed. Sure, any regulation can be changed, but the Government has to be able to defend the change when it is published in The Canada Gazette either here in the Chamber or in the appropriate committee.

The Hon. Member talked about the regulations relating to the moving of a Crown corporation from Schedule C Part I to Schedule C Part II, and said that this can be done without any constraint. If this is done by the Government, it has to be reported in the House of Commons and the move becomes effective 31 days after tabling in the House. I think the idea was that we are trying to provide some flexibility in this legislation. I think there is a provision now that Crown corporations can be put on existing schedules by an Order in Council, but they can only be removed by an Act of Parliament. There are some Crown corporations on the list which the Government no longer has. The flexibility provided in this provision would be beneficial in that regard.

The Hon. Member also talked about Clause 130 which covers corporate plans and budgets. He mentioned that there might be a one line plan. If we look at Clause 130 in the Bill, we see the heading "Corporate Plans and Budgets". These items must not only be recommended by the responsible Minister but must be approved by Cabinet and placed before Parliament. The corporate plan must cover all the activities of the corporation and its subsidiaries. The corporation must under its mandate state its objectives over the plan period as well as its expected performance for the current year relative to the previous stated objectives. The plan must set out information according to the corporation's major lines of business. New corporations would have to outline what their objectives and main lines of business or plans would be. As a result, much more detailed information will be made available to Parliament. The idea is to improve management control and to have a constant flow of information to Parliament from the Crown corporations so that Parliament may be able to maintain its control over Crown corporations.

It is suggested that Parliament is really losing its power to control Crown corporations. I would argue the other way, that Crown corporations can only be set up now under the Canada Business Corporations Act without regard to Parliament. When this Bill is passed it will be paramount over every other Crown corporation with the exception I believe, of the Bank of Canada, the International Research Institute and the Wheat Board.

Mr. Benjamin: Tell us what you know about the Wheat Board.

Mr. Foster: This Bill will be paramount. The Hon. Member has expressed a great deal of concern that certain corporations can be set up without regard to Parliament. I recall that when we put the Petro-Canada Bill through it gave the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) the power to establish energy corporations to hold the Crown's share. As well, there was such a provision under the Atomic Energy Control Board. Those powers, Mr. Speaker, have been removed from those two pieces of legislation. There may be other agencies which have some power. I think that needs to be discussed in committee. I think it is clearly the intention of the legislation to make it so that all Crown corporations will have to be set up under the two routes which are established by this Bill, namely, through the Business Corporations Act which requires the tabling of a motion here, referral to the standing committee and debate in the House or by a special Act. I think any major parent corporation will be established by an Act of Parliament in the future, just as CDIC has had a Bill put before the House in recent days to establish it by an Act of Parliament.

I want to mention a couple of other points which the Hon. Member outlined. He complained about parliamentary control over the board of directors. It is proposed that the board of directors be appointed by the Governor in Council, but in the Bill the responsibility of the boards of directors is taken directly from the Canada Business Corporations Act. That responsibility is spelled out as being to exercise skill, care and diligence. It seems to me that the Bill is a balance between having a good board of directors to operate Crown corporations but having control through the Government and the Minister to Parliament, so that Crown corporations ultimately will be following the will of Parliament and the will of Government.

The Hon. Member suggested that chief executive officers should not be appointed by the board of directors.

Mr. Blenkarn: That is normal.

Mr. Foster: I think the Government's position on that was that chief executive officers should be appointed by the shareholder, which is the Government of Canada—

Mr. Blenkarn: That is not normal.

Mr. Foster: —that we ultimately have the responsibility, namely, the Government.

Mr. Dick: Why have a board?

Mr. Foster: In the consultations which the Department had with the Auditor General I think that that was his view, that likewise the chief executive officers should be appointed by the Governor in Council.

I was interested in the suggestion made by the Member for Calgary South that the board of directors does not have to approve the by-laws. I was not very clear on that. Clearly the by-laws are passed by the board of directors of the corporation. Under the Conservative Bill of 1979, each one of those by-laws, as I understood that Bill, had to be approved by the Governor in Council, the Cabinet. There is no such approval suggested in this Bill. It is suggested clearly that where the Government wishes to override a by-law, it would be able to do that, but it would not have to do it in normal circumstances.

I wanted to mention those few items, Mr. Speaker. I think we really want to see this Bill passed. We want to see accounting by Crown corporations and control over them by the Parliament of Canada approved. I hope there will be co-operation to see the Bill moved reasonably soon to the standing committee so that we can discuss its many details. It is a very complicated Bill, but I think it will meet many of the needs of Canadians which Hon. Members on both sides of the House have suggested. I hope this matter will be referred to committee after a thorough discussion at second reading.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, would the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Foster) advise us of the criteria which the Government used to place some Crown corporations in Schedule C, Part I and in Schedule C, Part II? When the representative on our side was talking to the Minister and his special assistant, Mr. Ed Clark, formerly of National Energy Board fame and lately of Paris, he was told that they could not really explain it. Does the Parliamentary Secretary think that perhaps it has something to do with audits, that they wanted to ensure, for example, that the Canada Ports Corporations would have the auditor the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) wanted appointed from Winnipeg? Was that the reason Canada Ports came under Part II? Was the reason for CNR being in Part II that Jack Horner, lately of Crowfoot, wanted to ensure that the CNR was in no way subject to a government audit? Could he explain the real rationale and at the same time explain why VIA Rail and Loto Canada are in Part I but other corporations like the Canada Ports Corporation do not qualify?

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, the rationale for placing Crown corporations in Schedule C, Part I and Part II is that generally Part II corporations are those which are in competition in the marketplace and do not regularly receive or depend mainly upon parliamentary appropriations for funding. Those in Part I are corporations which tend to be less in competition with private sector companies and are dependent mainly upon parliamentary appropriations for their funding.

Mr. Blenkarn: Perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary could give us the rationale for St. Anthony Fisheries Limited, which is in competition with private fisheries companies, being in Part I, whereas the Canada Ports Corporation, which is an absolute monopoly institution—no one else can operate a port except the owner of the port facility which happens to be the Crown—is somehow in competition and is included in Part II? The other corporations in Part I are clearly in the business of being competitive. That does not fly, and the Parliamentary Secretary knows it. Is it really the audit?

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, the reason is as I have outlined. Corporations like Air Canada which are in competition with CP and other world-wide airways and CNR which is in competiton with CPR—

Mr. Blenkarn: What about Loto Canada?

Mr. Foster: Loto Canada is not operational yet.

Mr. Blenkarn: It used to be.

Mr. Pepin: You killed it.

Mr. Blenkarn: If we killed it, why is it there?

Mr. Foster: For instance, VIA Rail is not in direct competition with other railroad companies in Canada.

Mr. Fennell: What about with buses?

Mr. Foster: Of course it is with buses. However, I have indicated the general rationale. As Hon. Members can appreciate, it is impossible to draw a completely fine line between those which are and those which are not in commercial competition. The general rationale is that those which usually operate without parliamentary appropriations or in competition are in Part II and the other ones, the majority of Crown corporations, are in Schedule C, Part I.

Mr. Blenkarn: Could he explain why Canadair, de Havilland and Eldorado are suddenly missing? Is it because the Government intends to pass the CDIC Bill? If that is the case, why is Teleglobe Canada in Part II? As the Parliamentary Secretary knows, if the CDIC Bill passes, Teleglobe suddenly becomes a subsidiary of CDIC. He knows that CDIC does not own shares in Canadair, de Havilland or Eldorado at the present time, until the CDIC Bill passes. Why do we have such a ball-up? At this stage of the game, because this Bill comes before the CDIC Bill, why are Canadair, de Havilland and Eldorado totally left out?

Mr. Foster: As a matter of interest, I am told that St. Anthony Fisheries is no longer an active Crown corporation. That is one of the difficulties the legislation is trying to overcome. We had the anomaly of the Governor in Council being able to put Crown corporations on a schedule but not being able to remove them from a schedule without an Act of Parliament, so it was not possible to remove a corporation like St. Anthony Fisheries.

With regard to the Hon. Member's question concerning Eldorado, last year the Government published a statement indicating that corporations being held by CDIC were corporations of which the Crown under certain circumstances would consider disposing. However, they are mostly corporations which are in active competition. Eldorado Nuclear is in competition with uranium mining operations in Saskatchewan, with Rio Algom and Denison Mines. The shares of Massey-Ferguson and so on are in competition with those of other farm implement companies. All these companies are held by CDIC.

Mr. Blenkarn: I know most of the companies in the schedule, but not Mingan Associates, Ltd. I was wondering if the Parliamentary Secretary, whose job it is to understand this Bill, could tell us what is Mingan Associates, Ltd.?

Mr. Foster: If the Hon. Member will hold off for a little while, I will try to determine just exactly what Mingan is. I have not mastered all the names on the list.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious from the questions I have asked and the questions which Hon. Members on this side will be asking that the Government has given very little thought to Bill C-24. The schedules cannot properly be explained, not only by the Parliamentary Secretary but by the public servant responsible for the Bill, Ed Clark of Paris. We have a Bill which is difficult for us to support. Indeed, it should be difficult for the Government to support. One wonders why the Bill was brought forward in the first place. It is certainly a Bill which accomplishes little in terms of parliamentary control over Crown corporations, indeed government control over Crown corporations.

We have difficulty with the Bill. Until we have received a great deal more explanation from the Government, we will not be very co-operative. We suggest that in committee, if indeed the Bill goes that far, the Bill should be sent for redrafting and be re-presented to Parliament on another appropriate occasion.

The question of Crown corporations is not new in this country. Indeed, this Party has been responsible for creating Crown corporations on a number of occasions. We want to make it very clear that we do not oppose the use of the Crown corporation technique to handle those obligations of Government that cannot be handled appropriately in a country like Canada in any other way than a corporate set-up following the concept of a Crown corporation. Looking over the history, I note that the first Crown corporation in this country was the Royal Canadian Mint, incorporated in 1870, certainly a long time ago, under the auspices of Sir John A. Macdonald.

The major Crown corporation incorporated federally was the Canadian National Railways. Prior to that, Ontario really broke the ice with the creation of Ontario Hydro in 1902. When governments created these Crown corporations in the beginning, they created them because there was no other way to accomplish a national goal. A Crown corporation was created to build a seaway. A Crown corporation was created to look after the sale and dispersal of hydroelectric power. Those Crown corporations were used as a main asset of the falling water in our many rivers.

Crown corporations were used to put together a rail system when our rail system was likely to fall apart through bankruptcy, insolvency and the rest. Because this is a large country, we needed that transportation badly. It was also on that basis that we incorporated Air Canada, or TransCanada Airlines as it was then called. On that basis we brought forward the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation when there were no radios and no communication.

What the federal Government and indeed every government must do is to review from time to time our use of Crown corporations to see whether they are still valid and needed, whether the purpose for which they were originally created is still a valid purpose. I think of the CBC, for example. It is now only one of the communications companies in Canada using radio and television. I wonder, perhaps the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) ought to wonder, why we have to spend $900 million this year to keep the CBC alive when the late Lord Thomson of Fleet said that to own a television licence was a licence to print money.

When we look at these corporations we have to look at them in that cold, hard light. Canadian National Railways was necessary in order to have a national transportation system, but is it necessary to have whirling restaurants in the sky in CN Tower Limited? Is it necessary to have hotels spread across the country? Is it necessary to have a hotel organization which, according to my calculations, produces a profit of 1.36 per cent on money invested? The Minister says you have to add certain interest attributable to that investment and so on. He thinks he can get it up to a 5.5 per cent return on investment. He says further that some of those investments are managed by the Hilton Hotel chain. Without the hotels managed by Hilton, the return on an investment of $137,812,-000—which is the book value, not the real value and land and premises—is $93,000. That is what we make, except for the help of the Hilton. We must have a review of this. This Bill on that issue deliberately prevents Parliament, indeed prevents the Minister, from getting down to brass tacks on where we are going.

Let us look at some of the purposes for which the Crown corporations have recently been created. In the past they were created to fulfil needed government services. That is not entirely the case today. Crown corporations now seem to be incorporated because this Government wants more interference in the private economy, it and its bureaucrats want to be businessmen.

Parliament was forced to incorporate Canagrex. Parliament has seen the Export Development Corporation grow from an organization designed to insure and act as a re-insurer for accounts receivable for exporters of Canadian goods into a monster-lending organization. It looks after its friends only. We see the same with the Northern Transportation Company. It uses its leverage in the north to put out of business or deprive from getting ahead private corporations in that field. Is this the purpose of a Crown corporation? If so, that purpose has to be questioned.

More dangerous perhaps is the nationalistic idea. "We are government and we can run things better than the businessmen". Therefore, the Government decided to get into the oil business. According to this year's estimates, we have to pay our oil company $520 million. Every other country with an interest in an oil company receives dividends; we get the bill. Only in Canada!

We have Teleglobe Canada in the communications business. Does it have to be a Crown corporation, or should it be in the private field? Is it only there because of nationalistic reasons, namely that Government civil servants want to own an active business? Is that the reason we have Canadair and de Havilland? For whom do we build executive jets? Is it for Ministers to toot around the country, former civil servants or former employees of Petro-Canada who have now become chief executive officers of the CDIC? Is it so that they can travel around the country in their own private jet? Is that the reason? Is it for the development of Canada or is it because these fellows want to run businesses? They could not get into business on their own, so they use the taxpayers' money to do it. A great deal of concern has to be expressed by all Members at all times about where we are going with these corporations.

We have a task force on Crown corporations that is working on the issue. It is trying to clarify where we, as a nation, should be going with this concept of Crown corporations and Crown-owned businesses. I want to go over some of the recommendations that have come out of that task force. I will read them into the record as they are and then go over them and point out how this Bill is so deficient that even on the preliminary recommendations of that task force, we could not support it. First of all, a Crown corporation should be there to rationalize and clarify the Government's relations with Crown corporations based on a return to a system of effective and individual ministerial responsibility. The key words are "individual ministerial responsibility".

The second principle is that there should be a classification system for Crown corporations based on the extent of a corporation's reliance on government financing and its role in implementing public policy objectives. There have to be different strokes for different folks. The schedule system in this Bill does not show that at all. A lottery company is mixed up with VIA Rail. Why we are in the lottery business God only knows! Where does the public purpose, public financing and the need for financing come in? Do we have to pour money into the lottery company?

Third, stringent measures must be there to restrict the incorporation of Crown corporations and the acquisition of Crown corporations and their subsidiaries, and new Crown corporations should only be created by a special Act of Parliament.

Fourth, there must be a requirement that three to five-year business plans be filed and tabled with Parliament and examined by Parliament and its committees.

Fifth, there must be a real clarification of the role of Auditor General in auditing Crown corporations and of his relationship with private sector auditors and the extent to which auditors are entitled to audit, explain and get into the meat and bones of a corporation to find out why it works in certain ways.

Sixth, there must be an improved accounting procedure so that the accounting procedure of a Crown corporation is exactly the same kind of accounting procedure as in private business. In many of these corporations it is virtually impossible to figure out whether it made a profit or a loss. The financial statement filed by VIA Rail is an example. It almost indicates that VIA Rail is profitable, yet we know that it costs very close to $700 million per year to keep going. How a corporation's financial statement could indicate profitability when it costs money to operate, is beyond me. We must have financial systems that reflect the private system and what it costs to operate a corporation.

Seventh, there must be clarification of the roles and responsibilities of directors of Crown corporations. As my colleague pointed out, the Bill makes the directors of Crown corporations part of an advisory panel; they are not responsible for anything. If they make a mistake, the Government indemnifies them. If they are sued as directors, the Government bails them out. They cannot recommend the appointment of a president, a chief executive officer or a vice-president. They are well paid eunuchs.

Last, Mr. Speaker, it is essential that there be a joint Senate and House of Commons committee whose job it is to police Canada's investment in these myriad corporations. Members of both Houses must look at these corporations and their financial statements; they must examine their financial officers to make sure that the purposes of the corporation are being met.

Let me go through the various reasons for which we say this Bill is not satisfactory. With respect to rationalizing the relationship to an effective Minister, my colleague has said that we believe a Minister must be clearly on the line for what happens in a corporation. He pointed out the disaster that occurred in Canadair. There was no one Minister to take responsibility. When the buck can be passed around the Cabinet table or around a government Department, when not even the directors of the corporation are responsible, then this particular method of dealing with Crown corporations is faulty. For that reason only the Bill is faulty.

Let me go further, Mr. Speaker, and deal with implementing the policies of the corporation and the classification of them, whether a corporation is an A corporation or a B corporation and whether or not it is serving a government function. We cannot be sure whether all B corporations are serving a government function. For example, is the Economic Council of Canada a government Department? Is the Atomic Energy Control Board a Government Department, or is it part of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited? Where does it fit? More thought must be given to Schedule B corporations. For example, the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation is shown as a B corporation, yet in Schedule C there appears the Canadian Arsenals Limited and other corporations involved in defence. But where do they fit? It is important that the classification in the Bill be revised and that it be made on the basis of whether the corporation fulfils a government function, whether it needs the continual injection of money for certain functions, and whether the corporation is an ordinary commercial corporation out on its own.

To suggest that we could ever support a Bill that allows a government to create a Crown corporation on 30 days' notice with a seven days' debate to go into any field it wants, would bring disaster on any parliament. Surely even the New Democratic Party cannot support this Bill on that basis, even though it seems to enjoy Crown corporations. Crown corporations just go on and on with no control at all. For example, the examiners are not under control. Parliament must refuse to pass the Bill. It is not the kind of Bill that we can legitimately look at, as Members of Parliament responsible to our constituents.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Hon. Member if in his humble opinion, since the board of directors of a Crown corporation does not have the usual powers of a board of directors in the private sector or as set out in the Canada Corporations Act and is not liable like private sector directors, this is just a porkbarrel for Liberals at a high salary?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, one begins to wonder what the functions of directors are in a corporation. A director's function is to receive the report of the operating office of the company; to give advice to make sure that the corporation is proceeding well; to hire and fire chief executives and senior personnel in a company. These directors do not have those powers, so really we are not quite sure what they are there to do. A number of small private corporations operate with little activity from the directors. The chief executive officers of these companies are all appointed by the Cabinet. In some cases vice-presidents are appointed by the Cabinet. The Chairman of the board—and I do not know why there is a chairman of the board if it has no power—is appointed by the Cabinet. At that point, Sir, these companies are under the direction of the Cabinet; they are not under the direction of the board of directors. In the traditional sense, really, there is a necessity for a board of directors. If one wants to have advisory panels or something of that nature, fine. Perhaps the Hon. Member is right that these are directorships only for the opportunity to appoint one's friends to some cushy job where there is more than a decent stipend.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of my hon. friend in light of his remarks and the remarks of the lead off speaker for the Progressive Conservative Party. When that Party complains that these members of boards being appointed are nothing but Liberal hacks and are jobs created for Liberal friends, can I take it from that that if and when there is a Progressive Conservative Government, there is no way it would appoint Progressive Conservative hacks? In other words, could someone even like myself look forward to an appointment to a board of directors of a Crown corporation, or be appointed as chairman of the board? Who did the Hon. Member expect the Liberal Government to appoint, Conservatives, NDPers?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the question. The essence of the problem, Sir, is not who is appointed but, rather, the job which has to be done. There is no point in appointing a person to do a job unless there is, in fact, a job to be done. One should not create a corporate structure the board of directors of which is composed of eunuchs, and that is what we have in this Bill. I suppose that if we were going to appoint someone who would be a good eunuch, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) would qualify.

We believe that the way this Bill should be structured is for the directors to have the responsibility to ensure that the corporation acts properly, and they should be responsible for the actions of the chief executive officer and the other officers of the company. They should have the job of selecting the chief executive officer and the other officers who are going to do the work in the company. That, Sir, is what directors are all about. If one is going to have directors, they had better do some work and they had better be responsible for their work. This Bill gives them no responsibility at all.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): We are resuming debate.

Mr. Benjamin: Question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): I am sorry, I would like to give the floor to the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) on a question, but the time allowed for the question period has now expired and we are back into debate.

Mr. Manly: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I believe that there is supposed to be a ten-minute question period and, from my observation of the clock, that ten minutes has not elapsed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): I am advised by the Table officers who keep the time that I made a mistake. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Regina West for a question.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, to be a little more serious with my hon. friend, he mentioned government policy objectives and Crown corporation policy objectives. Does he differentiate on the assumption that a Crown corporation is there to serve public and social policies, in which case the Government would be responsible for the parameters of that public and social policy? Would he then agree that the board of directors would be responsible for Crown corporation policy only in terms of the operation of the corporation within the parameters of the social and public policy laid down by the Government of the day?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, with respect to corporations which are in the social fields—and I would think the Hon. Member is looking at the Schedule B corporations in this Bill—these particular corporations, and some which are in Schedule C, Part 1, are corporations which are really boards under a corporate structure. There does not need to be, in my view, a board of directors for these corporations. There might have to be an advisory panel, but there does not need to be a board. These corporations are really departments of government, really doing a government function, so that the people involved are virtually part of the government department. For example, I point out to the Hon. Member the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission. That is a government department function—

Mr. Benjamin: What about CN and Air Canada?

Mr. Blenkarn: It is very difficult to judge why it should be a corporation in the first place. It is really, Sir, part of a government Department. I would think we would get rid of many of these and bring them back into government—

Mr. Benjamin: What about CN and Air Canada?

Mr. Blenkarn: —so that they would be directly managed and handled by people who are employees of the Government of Canada as civil servants. My friend screams out, "CNR". The CNR is a different matter. The CNR is not a social corporation. It is a business corporation. It is expected to make a profit. We would expect it to make a profit. We would hope it would pay dividends. If its functions were clearly of such a kind that we would begin to wonder why it should not make a really good profit, we might even sell it off. However, that would be an entirely different proposition. It is not a social corporation and directors of that type of corporation ought to be good, solid business people who take solid responsibility for the solid management of the corporation.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. gentleman this question: a government of the day, of whatever political stripe, lays out a public policy regarding a Crown corporation like CN or Air Canada. That may mean that it cannot make money, or can only break even, as a matter of public policy, otherwise it would have to decrease services. Would the Hon. Member then feel that the board of directors of Canadian National, for example, or Air Canada, or similar Crown corporations, would be able to overrule or ignore that public policy of the government of the day?

Mr. Blenkarn: Again, Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the question. The problem comes from mixing a business corporation with a social purpose. It is our view that the social purposes, or the necessity purposes of those types of corporations, should be paid for separately by the Government. In other words, if it is a government concept that, for national unity purposes or some other purpose of that nature, it is essential that Air Canada, for example, run a regular service into Baker Lake in the Northwest Territories, then we think that the Government of Canada should pay the cost of that service directly to Air Canada as a fee for asking the corporation to perform that service. That particular service should not be cost subsidized, because when you do that, you allow management to duck away from its responsibility. They can always say, "Well, you know, we didn't make any money because we had to run this unprofitable service". You never get down to how unprofitable that service was or why they did not make a profit. That type of service ought to be charged for and paid for as if it were a commercial service run by the commercial operation that the Crown corporation should be.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, before I start I want to commend the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson) and the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) for expertly putting forward some concerns we have regarding this Bill. These are things that the Government should take very seriously and I will put on the record some reasons for that.

In the time available I want to deal with two concerns regarding this Bill. The first has to do with conflict of interest guidelines in the legislation and how they are inadequate to determine whether or not the chief executive officer is carrying them out. The second concern is that of accountability.

Conflict of interest is most important in the private sector. You simply cannot have employees, directors or chief executive officers owning shares in competing companies. There cannot even be the appearance of a conflict of interest. Because of that, the Government, through legislation and within the Public Service, and even in Cabinet, has laid out directives regarding conflict of interest. Yet when we look at this legislation, especially Schedule C, Part I and Part II, the conflict of interest guidelines are not clearly outlined. The responsibilities of senior managers, appointed by the board to critical positions and who perform essential duties related to the overall well-being of the company, are not adequately or clearly defined.

I have taken some interest over the last number of months in northern transportation, and I have had responsibilities over the last number of years in the area of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In looking at the Crown corporation which operates in Alberta, Saskatchewan and the Northwest Territories, the Northern Transportation Company Limited, I have found a number of interesting situations which are the result of improper guidelines concerning the operation of Crown corporations. I specifically refer to conflict of interest, Mr. Speaker.

In 1969, Arctic Cruise Lines Ltd. began as a private company and was then incorporated in 1974. Four of the eight directors were shareholders. Twelve of the original 30 shareholders were Northern Transportation Company Ltd. employees. Two of the three applicants, who were in the corporation in 1974 and were listed as the first directors of the company, were NTCL employees. There is no problem with that because Arctic Cruise Lines was set up to be a passenger service company along the Mackenzie River system. NTCL distributed goods and services by barge along the Mackenzie and around the coast in the Beaufort Sea and Arctic Ocean. Therefore, in 1976, when NTCL requested all permanent employees to divulge any possible instances of a conflict of interest, there were none. I requested a copy of their conflict of interest guidelines and have found them to be good ones, drawn from instances which had been laid out here in the House of Commons. I will describe them briefly.

They said, Mr. Speaker, that employees must not act in any manner which might result in or create the appearance of using a corporate office or company appointment for private gain; giving preferential treatment to any person; losing complete independence or impartiality; and affecting adversely the confidence of the public in the integrity of the company. Employees must not engage directly or indirectly in any personal transaction or private arrangement for personal profit which accrues from or is based upon their official position or authority or upon privileged information which is acquired by reason of such position or authority. Employees must not act in any official matter with respect to which there exists a personal interest incompatible with an unbiased exercise of official judgment, or have direct or indirect personal business or financial affairs which conflict or appear to conflict with official duties and responsibilities.

These employees submitted letters indicating to their respective shareholders that there was no apparent problem with employees of NTCL holding shares in a small passenger service company. Arctic Cruise Lines did not do well financially. Demand for passenger service along the river was not great. So in 1979 Arctic Cruise Lines changed its name to Arctic Offshore Limited and became active in the offshore market for the movement of goods. As a result, it came into competition with Arctic Transportation Limited, another private company in the area, and of course the NTCL Crown corporation.

Since 1980, that company has enjoyed great success. It has increased in size by 168 per cent while NTCL has decreased by 30 per cent. Both the president of NTCL and the president of Arctic Offshore deny there is competition in the area. However, their chief competitor, Arctic Transportation Limited, maintains that they compete with both Arctic Offshore and NTCL for the same contracts. There is, of course, some discrepancy there.

Now, Mr. Speaker, four employees of NTCL are shareholders of Arctic Offshore. One is in a key position which oversees contracts for marine maintenance, and the other was, until recently when I brought this matter up, a director on the board of Arctic Offshore.

What is the problem, Mr. Speaker? The problem is that there are unclear guidelines, uninformed board members and unattentive management. This situation has existed since 1979. During this period of time the manager of sales and contracts for NTCL was a shareholder in Arctic Offshore, a competing company, against which he had to bid. There is an appearance of conflict of interest here. Because of a lack of vigilance, nothing was done about this conflict of interest until a Member of Parliament inquired into the affairs of that company. Now, of course, the chief executive officer has requested that these people divest themselves of their shares, almost five years after the first appearance of a conflict of interest.

What does this say? This company has not been brought before a standing committee of this House for six years. Members of Parliament and the people who are supposed to be responsible for the direction of this company were not asked any questions regarding its operation. That is why it is essential to have a joint committee involved, as has been recommended by Members on this side of the House. It would have the responsibilty of bringing that corporation and other Crown corporations before it each year with a proper audit requesting proper information so that the types of things I have just described would not be allowed to exist.

• (1600)

I have put questions on the Order Paper requesting information of this company. They have been on the Order Paper for over two months and have not been answered. If a Member of Parliament does not get proper information, it is impossible for him to even look into the company on behalf of the taxpayers of the nation. That is why one of the recommendations we are making is so important. That recommendation is for the establishment of a joint committee. I hope to continue my remarks on accountability when this Bill comes up again in the near future.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed with Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS— MOTIONS

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Stand.

METRIC CONVERSION

IMPERIAL AND METRIC DUAL LABELLING OF AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should permit, on a voluntary basis, the dual labelling in both the imperial and metric systems of all goods and products used in the production of agricultural commodities.

He said: Mr. Speaker, until the Clerk read the motion I had not realized this was Motion No. 99. That is a pretty significant number in Canada. It is the number which Wayne Gretzky, the very prominent hockey star of the Edmonton Oilers, wears. I hope I will be as successful in achieving the passage of this motion as he is in scoring goals.

I believe the motion before the House is logical, realistic, practical and makes a lot of common sense. There is a farmer from Montreal here who is sniggering. That is about the mentality of the Members across the way. It is the mentality of the people who disregard the agricultural community and shove these things down our throats without any consideration, knowledge or understanding of the facts. I suppose the Hon. Member will pose as an instant expert in the agricultural industry in a few moments. I appeal to all Hon. Members of the House to consider what the motion does and to support it.

We have had far too many costly experiences caused by confusions and complications which have arisen in the conversion from imperial to metric. They have resulted in the loss of crops and severe damage to production in the agricultural industry. This ought not to be ignored. I appeal to all Members of the House to consider this motion seriously, a motion which, I repeat, is realistic, practical and makes common sense.

The key word in the motion, Mr. Speaker, is "voluntary". In this Party we have never believed in the forced imposition of metric in the country. We do not believe that the imperial system should be outlawed. We believe there is room for both, particularly during the transformation from imperial to metric. We are really saying that there is room for freedom of choice, Mr. Speaker. In my view there is no justifiable reason for refusing dual labelling. It would be convenient, it would enhance safety, and it would be much more economical for the producers. As I have said, there have been some very huge crop losses as a result of confusion due to metric conversion. I will support this statement later on in my remarks.

With the exception of one Bill having to do with the conversion in the grain industry, there was never any legislation to bring about metric. It has all been done through Order in Council. As a result, many of the worst fears of Canadians have been borne out by the result of the forced implementation of metric. It has caused confusion, uncertainty and costly mistakes. Altogether it has imposed a very costly burden upon the economy of Canada.

This is particularly true in the agricultural sector and particularly in the use of agricultural chemicals. Withg today's farming methods producers have come to rely very heavily upon fertilizers, pesticides and herbicides to enhance crop yields. These chemicals are very expensive and complex. It is important that they be applied properly. There is simply no room for trial and error. If the chemical is applied too lightly, it will be ineffective. If it is applied too heavily, it will burn the crops. There is no room for error.

There have been many examples of the results of confusion in the conversion from the imperial to the metric system. The Farm and Country magazine of July 20, 1982 carried the headline, "Metric Goof Takes Toll". This article reads:

Stratford-based ministry crop specialist Pat Lynch says 200 acres of "dead alfalfa" resulted from farmers in his area using the recommendations. He estimates that there are about 50 to 100 mistakes in the book.

This was a result of the conversion. About 50 per cent of the year's barley crop in a particular area was damaged as a result of a miscalculation in the application of weed spray used on the crop. There are many other examples.

Another factor as well is that if these chemicals are handled improperly they present a very major safety hazard. Health and safety concerns are important from the farmers' point of view as well as from the point of view of the consumer and the public at large. If we can overcome the problems of safety and of jeopardizing one's health by using imperial, we should be allowed to use it in a voluntary way. We use two languages in this country. We have labelling which provides for two languages. I see nothing wrong with the application of dual labelling which would provide for both metric and imperial.

There is another thing which should not be forgotten in this debate, that is, that when the Bill converting the grains industry to metric was debated in the House, the matter of hectares was not included. It was deleted from the Bill. Therefore, acres are still the standard unit of measurement within a metric system. That complicates the issue further. At least in western Canada, farmers are still measuring their land in acres. It is really part and parcel of the way the land is surveyed out in western Canada. It has almost become part of the tradition and culture of the agricultural society of western Canada. While they still use acres, farmers must utilize metric to apply the weed spray. Therefore they are using acres, kilograms and grams, which generates massive confusion.

This motion would provide a very simple way of overcoming that confusion. When we talk about conversion from pounds, gallons and acres, it becomes a very complex procedure in which there is a high potential for error.

Here is another letter sent to the Red Deer The Advocate by a person named Donald Hansen who says:

> In the real world of basic production, you cannot start on a given day with all new metric tools and equipment.

That is another very valid point. Most of the equipment used by the farmer utilizes the imperial system. While the weed spray, chemicals and herbicides he buys is in metric, the machinery he has uses the imperial system. The seed drill machinery is based on acres and is not converted to hectares. The weed spray devices have tanks that are measured in gallons, not litres. The farmer has this equipment, but he must employ metric using that imperial equipment. The point is made when he says this:

> You must, for many years, convert fuel tanks, spray tanks, boom widths, nozzle spacing and size, pressures, flow rates, implement widths, depths and heights, speeds and distances, truck boxes, fertilizer spreaders, ammonia tanks, countless fields and fences, transit rods, natural gas meters, fuel meters, ammonia meters, nitrolators, grain tester charts and measuring vessels.

These are all in imperial. He goes on to say:

> Land measure must always be imperial since that is how this country was surveyed.

That is the point I was making earlier. He goes on to say:

> I learned that in order to convert my spraying operation completely to metric, I would have to do well in excess of 20 conversions.

It would require 20 conversions in order to make that application. I say that it is a real burden and that it is most unfair.

I have another comment from a person by the name of Gil Cyr of Prescott who said:

> —'farmers from across the country have been urging the federal and provincial governments to allow such instructions to be put in imperial measure as well as metric. Due to mixups caused by unfamiliarity with the metric system, crops have been chemically burned, ruined and sometimes the produce is even unsafe for human consumption, he said.
> 'You consumers in the city don't realize how dangerous some of these bad chemical mixes can be—all we've been asking for is to give us the freedom of choice in using either metric or imperial measure,' he said.

I think that really makes the point. We have many clear indicators from the agricultural community that they want the freedom of choice or dual measurement. I know the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has received many representations from Members of the House, including the Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) and the Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) on the need to address this very real problem. It could be addressed very easily by simply allowing dual labelling. However, we have seen no sensitivity at all from the Minister of Agriculture.

The Canadian Federation of Agriculture has called for dual labelling. As well, the Women for the Survival of Agriculture stated the following in very short and succinct terms:

> We want you to know that our group, Women for the Survival of Agriculture, fully endorses dual labelling—metric and imperial, on all farm sprays, chemicals and fertilizers. We feel that dual labelling is a necessity, not a luxury.

The livestock groups have balked at conversion to metric in their industry because of the concerns in other parts of the agricultural sector.

Therefore, this motion really deals with something that is very logical and practical and which makes common sense. If the metric system is so superior, as the Government suggests it is, why are so many farmers unwilling to use it? There may be a time, 10, 15 or 20 years from now, when new generations of farmers may be able to adapt to the metric system easily when the machinery will be adapted to the metric system, but that does not apply today. The fact of the matter is that we now have a program that has been developed that is very bureaucratic, difficult to deal with and the cause of confusion. It has cost farmers and the economy a lot of money.

I appeal to the House to give serious consideration to this motion, because this problem will continue for some time. If we cannot address this very fundamental and simple issue in the House, then I am not sure why we are here. This is where points of view should be debated and where decisions of this nature should be made.

I conclude by saying that beneath the confusion that surrounds this issue perhaps there is another more important underlying issue, that is, the issue of forced metrication without consideration of the rights and freedoms of individual Canadians. We all know that this program was really forced down the throats of Canadians without adequate consideration.

I thought that The Financial Post of July 31, 1982, put this whole issue into perspective, in the following words:

Metric Conversion

Forced metrication is an obvious violation of the rights of Canadians to freely transact with one another on any commercial basis they choose. Although the Canadian Civil Liberties Association has been silent about this issue, metrication is a clear and present danger to our civil liberties, which encompass far more than rights to speech, drugs, sex, criminal procedures, and so on. Our civil liberties include, as well, the right to engage in 'capitalist acts' between consenting adults, whether measured in pounds or grams, inches or centimetres. People should have the right to sell by the hatful, if they can attract any customers that way. In the words of Howard Bradfield, metric protester, 'Your freedom to measure is a measure of your freedom.'

I think this whole exercise demonstrates another classic example of the Government's penchant for intervening in the lives of Canadians. It is part and parcel of its whole approach that it alone knows what is best for Canadians, collectively and individually. It refuses to submit this issue to the proper legislative process and it refuses to be held accountable. I repeat that this situation is a product of the bureaucrats and politicians who have remained in their ivory towers and failed to recognize the difficulties and consequences that have arisen therefrom.

I say that we have an opportunity here to correct a wrong, to provide a mechanism that would ensure that the producers of food in this country would be blessed with some measure of convenience simply by allowing dual labelling on these very important commodities which they use in the production of agricultural products. It is practical, sensible and will give Canadian producers an opportunity to go through a transition period without facing the prospect of suffering losses.

Quite frankly, I think that this is a small issue but one that has a far reaching impact that could provide benefits to agriculture, individual farmers and indeed rewards to the Canadian economy.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise on the motion but forward by the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) concerning the dual labelling of farm input products. The Hon. Member is certainly aware of the support given by all Parties to metric conversion in January, 1970, when the Government introduced its white paper on this subject. He is also aware that the Government met with more than 2,000 representatives from provincial governments, business and agricultural organizations to plan metric conversion in the agri-food sector. That program was unanimously supported by the provincial governments both in 1973 and again at the Federal-Provincial Conference on Metric Conversion on July 26, 1976.

I believe the metric question has been well explored and extensively debated both in this House and by Canadian society generally. Now the Hon. Member wishes to raise again the issue of dual labelling on all goods and products used in the production of agricultural commodities. I do not see how we can support this.

Metric amendments and conversion dates for feeds, seeds, fertilizers and agricultural chemicals were all established in consultation with the agri-food sector. Bulk grains were converted to metric in February 1977. Feeds, seeds and fertilizers were all converted during 1979-80. Agricultural chemicals were to be converted to metric measurements during 1978.

However, a review of the program showed extra time was required for farmers to become more familiar with metric measurements. So, Mr. Speaker, we agreed on a new date, that of January 1, 1981, for metric conversion in the agricultural chemicals industry. We have always been flexible in the matter of metric conversion.

At that time, there was also agreement that any form of dual labelling was inappropriate. That is because there are many calculations involved in the application of agricultural chemicals including not only package size, but tank capacity, nozzle rating, the speed of the spraying equipment and so on. The Hon. Member is well aware of the many calculations involved, I am sure.

I am sure he can appreciate also the dangers of switching, either intentionally or not, from one system of measurement to the other during these calculations. Consider, Mr. Speaker, the danger of attempting to switch to imperial units for spraying rates after making the correct dilution and mixing the required quantity for application in metric units. An error could destroy one's crop, and the chance of making such an error in this case is high.

Mr. Mazankowski: That is exactly what is happening now.

Mr. MacLellan: It was felt that this could lead to real and serious problems in this important sector.

Of course, the Government recognized there were risks in having metric-only labels. We concede that, but it was agreed that fewer risks were involved than with dual labelling.

I should also point out to the Hon. Member the results of a series of tests run at evening classes in Manitoba in February, 1981 to determine whether farmers were adapting to metric. It was found that the error rate was much higher when calculations were done in imperial units compared to calculations presently done in metric units.

Metric is a much easier system of measurement with much less chance of error if it is used throughout. And when it comes to agricultural chemicals, simple calculations are crucial to the safe use of pesticides.

Both the federal and provincial governments have been working with agricultural organizations and the Canadian Agricultural Chemicals Association in an ongoing educational and public awareness program for farmers and food processors to minimize calculation errors.

Safety must be the primary issue here and not convenience of the procedure. Certainly it would be convenient to have dual labelling.

Mr. Mazankowski: Let's do it then.

Mr. MacLellan: But it could lead to more cases of improper mixing and application that would threaten the health of the producers themselves and of our entire food industry.

There is another issue here, as I see it. How do we approach this whole question? Are we looking at it with the future in mind or simply in a reactionary way?

Mr. Mazankowski: In a realistic way.

Mr. MacLellan: In a realistic way. The Hon. Member referred to Wayne Gretzky and hoped to be able to score here today. I think the House would agree with me when I say that I think the Hon. Member has fanned his shot.

Mr. Mazankowski: He uses an imperial hockey stick.

Mr. MacLellan: We must remind ourselves that we are living in a metric world.

Today, 90 per cent of the world's population use metric measurements, and by the end of the decade 90 per cent of the world's standards will be metric only.

Mr. Flis: The Tories are back in the Dark Ages.

Mr. MacLellan: As a nation dependent on trade, we would be foolish to ignore this. Even now, 85 per cent of our agricultural exports are to countries using the metric system. As well, the U.S. is continuing its program of metric conversion, and metric conversion in our own agri-food industry now is 95 per cent completed.

This is the fourth spring that Canadian farmers will be buying agricultural chemicals with metric-only labels. It would be improper to turn back the clock with dual labelling and tempt some farmers to return to imperial calculations. It would only mean continued controversy and debate and another painful round of conversion sometime in the future.

Much of the pain of conversion is behind us. Experience has shown Canadian farmers have adapted to metric and, in fact, have found it simpler to understand and apply. Admittedly, most Canadians have grown up with the imperial system, but we cannot let this influence our ability to look to the future. A new generation of Canadians today are growing up with metric. Metric has been in our educational system for a decade now, and these young Canadians will soon be entering professions, including farming.

Such actions as dual labelling are not forward thinking. Farmers are accepting metric. Our young farmers have grown up with metric. The only responsible course for us as the Government to take is to use metric measurements only. It is in the best interests of our farmers and of all Canadians in general.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker I sympathize with the intent of the motion of the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). I suspect that he and I and others like us are of the age where it is pretty well too late for us to learn the intricacies of metric. I find that students, young small-businessmen and young farmers have learned metric well in school and at their places of work and can handle it very well. But I want to remind you, Sir, and other Members of this House that from 1969 to 1974 I sat on a committee on a number of occasions with a former colleague from Vancouver-Kingsway, Mrs. MacInnis, dealing with amendments to the Weights and Measures Act and other pieces of legislation. We heard from numerous witnesses. They were almost unanimous in supporting a systematic, intelligent conversion to metric over a period of years. At first, 5 years was talked about, then 10 years, and then 25 years, but then a consensus was reached that we would need a period of 15 years. That is about the time that it will take before it is all in place.

I think the Hon. Member for Vegreville is correct when he talks about dual labelling in the case of any product that is poisonous or hazardous and that in those circumstances extra precaution has to be taken so that the user of that product is fully aware of how to use it. If it requires an additional label or an additional pamphlet, whether it is a farmer or anyone else using the poisonous or hazardous product, it is better to be safe than sorry. In those circumstances it should be incumbent upon the packaging and labelling industry and upon the chemical industry to make certain that the extra information is available for every user of any dangerous, hazardous or poisonous product.

I was somewhat amused by some of the matters raised in the House by Hon. Members such as the hon. gas pumper from Peterborough. When metric legislation was introduced, I recall how the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and the Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) castigated the Government for taking so long to do it. I appreciate that there is something of an intellectual and sometimes physical trauma when making a change in people's minds concerning measurement, but there is no turning back the clock. I think of what it would cost farmers and their organizations if we reverted to imperial. We must remember the millions of dollars which elevator companies have invested in scales alone.

Mr. Mazankowski: I am not saying that.

Mr. Benjamin: I appreciate that, but the Hon. Member for Vegreville has a point about the dual description of measurements, particularly in the case of hazardous and poisonous products.

In committee we heard from representatives of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Food and Labelling Association, the Chamber of Commerce and all farm organizations. We heard from various transportation companies and all kinds of witnesses, from consumers to scores of individuals with expertise in the area of measurements, be they national or international. As I said earlier, there was overwhelming agreement to make the conversion.

The question is not whether or not we make the conversion. The question is how intelligently and how safely we do it. Surely that is a question any government of any political stripe has to be concerned about on a day to day basis. If the Government cannot accept totally what the Hon. Member for Vegreville wants, at least it could look at instructing the Metric Commission by Order in Council to ensure that those who manufacture and distribute wholesale and retail hazardous and poisonous products accompany metric labels with imperial labels to reduce any possibility of misunderstanding or error. Surely that only makes sense in the process of converting completely to metric, something to which the next generation will be attuned. There are many hundreds of thousands of people today—and I am one of them—who are still struggling with the metric system. I do not have much trouble with kilometres, but I still have a little trouble with Celsius and I am totally lost with kilograms. My children know it 100 per cent; the next generation will have little or no difficulty.

The Standing Committee on Transport visited the Bombardier plant at La Pocatière, Quebec. It was proud that it had received three contracts with one State and two cities in the United States. The plant was successful in its tenders for transit equipment and railway equipment, and the tenders called for them to be submitted in metric, not imperial.

I noticed the other day when looking at the commodity exchange in Chicago that the U.S. Department of Agriculture announced some sales of specialty products all in metric, not in imperial. That is fine, but they were not dangerous, hazardous or poisonous products. It is part of the international picture. In reality, both the United States and Canada have no choice if they are to export and import internationally with other countries. The two of us cannot deal only with each other. That is the reality.

If the Government will not accept the Hon. Member's motion as is, I urge it to ensure, particularly in the case of agriculture but in the case of other industries as well, that dual labelling of hazardous and poisonous products continue for a few more years. Not only should there be dual labels, but there should be accompanying literature so that there can be no misunderstanding in the use and application of the products. Surely that makes good sense. It is better to be safe than sorry.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the motion of the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) that the Government should permit dual labelling on a voluntary basis of farm sprays, chemicals and fertilizers in both the metric and imperial systems.

The constant argument of the Government is that back in 1970 there was an agreement that we would move to metric conversion. That was a couple of years before I arrived in the House, but in looking at the Debates, I find that that was not the case at all. At that time we agreed to allow the establishment of the Metric Commission to look into whether it was sound to move toward metric conversion.

In fact, the gentleman who responded for our Party, Mr. Ged Baldwin, stated some reservations at that time while agreeing to the establishment of the commission. He said:

> We should think particularly of our trading relations with the United States, which of course is and has for some years been examining its position with regard to adoption of the metric system. Whether we like it or not, what we must do to a considerable extent is keep pace with what is being done in the United States. I think it might well be suicidal for us to adopt the metric system without considering what is being done in the United States.

He had reservations at the time the commission was set up, but the Government then took that as its guiding light and said that there was no need to bring it back to the House of Commons for Members of Parliament to agree or disagree. From that point to this time, except for one piece of legislation from which Hon. Members in fact removed hectares and included acres, there has never been a bill dealing with metric in the House.

Therein lies the problem. People will accept a policy which is in their best interest, if they feel that they are a part of it. If they feel that it is in their interest and agree with it, they will take the time to learn the changes. However, if the best policy in the world is implemented improperly, people will reject it. That has been the case with metric. There is a feeling in the country that it is being shoved at people, particularly those who are beyond the educational system and do not understand it. We all know about mental blocks. It is very difficult, if one does not want to sit down and study, to learn it.

I know of many cases in my constituency where farmers have indicated—and I have the same difficulty—that they will not trade in their sprayers which are in gallons because they have many years of use left. In the last few years the label on chemical spray containers has indicated so many litres per hectare. I do not carry a calculator in my shirt pocket when I am measuring spray on the farm. It is impossible to do so. It would not last very long in the dust. Often you scratch in the dirt. Sometimes there is a layer of dirt on the machine. I have seen that done often. Calculations are being done on something of great significance to a farmer's livelihood, the number of ounces per acre or litres per hectare of chemical to be put on his or her crop.

Efforts have been made. Nothing is worse, and I know this from experience, than having put effort and your life savings into a crop only to find that you have made an error in spraying because the nation's Government will not allow the can of spray to have dual labelling. That is absolutely ridiculous. It does not cost the manufacturer anything more once the machinery is set up. Why are we doing this? Is it because the bureaucrats feel that everything has to be put on its convenient little shelf, or because it is not acceptable? Is that the reason?

Surely we as Members who are here to provide leadership and guidance ought to be able to suggest that in the areas of pesticide sprays and fertilizer, which are so important to the production of food, because the average age of our farmer is still over 50 years dual labelling should continue for a number of years. It should continue until younger farmers who are familiar with the measurement system take over or until the older farmers with computers are able to comprehend the changes in measurement. It does not cost this Government anything. It is not a matter of pride to say that we have metric and therefore no one will ever use the imperial system again. That is ridiculous. Members should seriously look at this motion going forward.

The livestock people of this country rejected the system for sales in metric. They put up such a lobby that the Government backed off on changing the measurement of beef in sales rings. According to the Department of Agriculture, the livestock industry is one of the Metric Commission's problem areas. Many more are starting. People are beginning to have second thoughts about a program which is being forced upon them. They are starting to reject it. They say that it is their right to accept something, but if it is to be forced on them, they want the right to reject it.

The trucking industry, in a letter to the then Leader of the Opposition, the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), said this:

> The Alberta Trucking Association has been opposed to metric since it was first introduced to Canada. It has led to a great deal of confusion in the marketplace and it has cost far more than ever contemplated.

The cost of forced conversion has been tremendous. If we had not been so rigid in the forcing of metric on our citizens, the cost could have been distributed over 20 or 30 years. Why the rush? I fail to comprehend why we have to rush into putting this system in place.

I support the Hon. Member's motion for reasons of convenience, rather than having to convert. I have seen farmers take a metric can and pour the spray into a gallon can so they have the correct level. Then they pour it in the sprayer. They often forget that the chemical is not the same as it was five, six or ten years ago. The number of parts per million of concentration in that spray may be higher or lower than previously. Hence, an error is made.

On the basis of safety, a very small indication on a can of pesticide, farm poison, chemicals, sprays or fertilizers should be put in place. Duel labelling should continue for a number of years until the people are used to the change to metric. That is not too much for the farmers of this nation to ask for.

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, in dealing with this motion I want to refer to a couple of words mentioned by the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) in his opening statement. He suggested that the motion is realistic, practical and makes common sense. He also used the word "voluntary". One of the strong arguments made by Members opposite is that this process should be voluntary. I want to deal with those aspects.

First, I want to deal with the voluntary part of it. As we have heard on many occasions, the conversion to metric is being shoved down the throats of the Canadian people without adequate consideration. This argument was made by the Hon. Member for Vegreville and the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger). This is a compelling argument. The only problem is that it is not true.

Subsequent to the acceptance of the white paper by this Parliament and the establishment of the Canadian Metric Commission, many industries indicated their interest in forming voluntary committees to plan and manage the conversion of their industry to metric measurement. The number of such volunteer groups eventually reached 104 in every sector of the Canadian economy. One such group was formed to represent the chemicals and chemical products sector. This group held its first meeting on July 10, 1973 in Ottawa. In total, some 14 different associations maintain representation on this committee. Three groups in particular were responsible and highly supportive of conversion to the exclusive use of metric units in agricultural chemicals and pesticides. They were the Canadian Fertilizer Institute, the Canadian Agricultural Chemicals Association and the Canadian Chemical Producers Association.

In addition, it is important for people listening to this debate to know that each of these committees worked through an extensive program which included investigation, planning, scheduling and implementation. In the course of its work, the committees prepared their own timetables for implementation of their plans. This was not imposed by the Government. Members opposite always say that the scheduling of implementation was imposed on the affected sections of the economy, but that clearly is not true. With the few exceptions where ordinarily regulated items are involved or where the sector committee felt regulation was desirable for orderly and fair treatment of all concerned, the schedules were implemented by those sectors represented on these committees.

This process goes back to 1973, and before that to the white paper of 1970. We must understand that the white paper did not originate in the mind of the Government but in the fact that teachers, businessmen, farmers and representatives from all groups of the Canadian economy came to the Government and said that this process was important to them and that it must take place. It is a process in which thousands of Canadians have been involved for 15 years.

When Hon. Members opposite say that there is a mad rush to impose metric, that is a nice and compelling argument, but it is not true. The Hon. Member for Vegreville claimed that his proposal was realistic. How can we determine that? I suggest there are one or two factors that should be considered. The first factor is safety and the second is economic considerations. I should like to deal with safety first.

It is precisely because of safety that the chemicals and chemical products industry sector and its 14 associations insisted that labels should carry only one system of units and recommended against the use of dual units. I know that the Hon. Member for Vegreville is not listening to this because obviously the correct facts are of no concern to him. What is of concern to him is simply—

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member from wherever he is cannot impute motives. I hear what he is saying. I am in my seat and that should be recorded. It is not customary for any Member of the House to talk about another Member's presence or whether he is paying attention. I have heard every word the Hon. Member has said and it is not very enlightening.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The point raised by the Hon. Member for Vegreville is well taken.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, if I misrepresented the presence of the Hon. Member in the House I did not presume to suggest that he was not here. If I could refer to the times when Hon. Members opposite argue that some of our Ministers are not in the House, this might just even things up a little bit.

It was precisely for safety considerations that the chemical and chemical products industry sector insisted that labels should have one system of untis and recommended against the use of dual units. It was clear that the farming community would have to be sufficiently familiar with metric units to be able to apply agricultural chemicals and pesticides effectively and safely. Such concerns were identified to both the federal and provincial Departments of Agriculture, which agreed to share the responsibility of ensuring that the user, the Canadian farmer, would be sufficiently conversant with metric units. I understand that many courses were conducted by provincial Departments of Agriculture in order to familiarize agricultural producers with the changes.

On the first item the Hon. Member said that what recommends his motion is that the labelling is to be voluntary, and then he argued that his suggestion is realistic. I have just proven that on grounds of safety it is not realistic at all.

I should like to deal with the other aspect of the matter, whether we can consider this motion to be realistic by some economic standard. That is the consideration that I find the most compelling. What are we concerned about day in and day out in this House if not with exporting products and creating jobs for the many thousands of Canadians who unfortunately cannot work because of some of the impediments in the economy?

I do not understand how the Hon. Member for Vegreville can come into the House and ignore the overwhelming economic considerations. I do not think he could have considered all of the issues. I do not think he has attended any information meetings on the subject before having made the arguments he presented today. I have had limited experience in this area, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Mazankowski: You are certainly showing it now.

Mr. Berger: I have had enough, however, to understand the importance of the economic arguments.

Last April I attended a conference in Washington of the American National Metric Council. I should like to relate to the House some things that I learned at the conference. A letter was addressed to the conference by the President of the United States, who is not exactly known as a fanatic about things un-American. He wrote as follows:

> In the past year, the issue of metric transition has become increasingly important in the area of international trade and productivity. The National Productivity Advisory Committee has recommended that the Federal Government continue to support conversion to metric measurement to enhance U.S. international competitiveness and hence productivity in several industries.

I do not think anything could be clearer. The President of the United States is talking about international competitiveness and about productivity. These things are certainly of concern to the United States because, as we are all aware, it has a tremendous trade deficit. Perhaps we are one step ahead of the Americans in this area. I think it is incorrect to say, as the official Opposition always does, that we have to follow the Americans. When it comes to trade and international trade I do not think that we have any lessons to learn from them.

[Translation]

At that congress, the Under Secretary of the U.S. Department of Commerce stated that "the Reagan Administration favours conversion to the metric system for the same reasons that aroused the opposition of John Quincy Adams in 1821: international trade. In 1821, all international trade was between the United States and England, and both countries used inches and pounds. Today, 95 per cent of the world is metric". Someday, the conclusion will have to be that if we want to export products, we have to do so according to the metric system.

[English]

There is one thing about that conference that the Hon. Member might understand. A speaker who was arguing very persuasively in favour of conversion on the grounds of competitiveness and productivity told the story of a Japanese businessman and an American businessman. They were walking down the street and all of a sudden were confronted by a great, big grizzly bear comming at them at tremendous speed. The Japanese businessman, who happened to be a health nut, had his jogging shoes with him. He got down on his hands and knees and started to put his shoes on. The American businessmen asked, "What are you doing, my friend? You don't honestly think you can outrun that grizzly bear, do you?" The Japanese businessman stood up and said, "You perceive the question incorrectly, my friend. All I have to do is outrun you".

That is what this is all about—international competitiveness, exports and productivity. These are the factors that Hon. Members opposite are always crying about, yet these are the factors they are not willing to face. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has said on many occasions in this House, they are the coalition of the antis—they are the people who are always "against". They are always saying that now is not the right time, let us wait 20 years, whether that applies to the Constitution, the Crow rate or the metric system. I suggest that the Hon. Member for Vegreville wake up one of these days and start to consider some of these things.

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-3, an Act relating to cash contributions by Canada in respect of insured health services provided under provincial health care insurance plans and amounts payable by Canada in respect of extended health care services and to amend and repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: As Hon. Members are aware, there are seven motions standing on the Notice Paper at the report stage of Bill C-3. Motions Nos. 1, 2 and 3 should be grouped for debate and voted on as follows: Motion No. 1 by itself; a vote on Motion No. 2 will dispose of Motion No. 3. Motions Nos. 4, 5 and 6 will be debated separately and voted on separately. Motion No. 7 seeks to provide a means of disposing of the funds withheld from cash contributions to provinces found not to be in compliance with the Act. Nowhere in the Bill is there any mention of a proposal to dispose of such funds. As a result, the introduction of this kind of provision in the Bill would be entirely irrelevant to the Bill.

Should the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), who is present in the House, wish to present procedural arguments on this motion, I will hear him now, if he wishes to be recognized for this purpose.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make this perfectly clear. I take it you are ruling it out of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is trying to indicate to the Hon. Member the thinking of the Chair. Before ruling, the Chair is inviting the Hon. Member to present his arguments. This is a practice we have developed in an attempt to accommodate Members. In fairness to the Hon. Member, I thought he should have an idea of what was in the Speaker's mind.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what bearing this will have on your decision, but this is an amendment which was regarded as being in order when it was presented in committee. It was debated at that time. It is because I feel strongly about the amendment that I took the opportunity to reintroduce it. We are talking about moneys which the federal Government proposes, through this Bill, to withhold from provinces. We are talking about an identifiable sum of money. That money will go to a particular place, that is to say it will go into the public accounts and stay there presumably, unless of course it is returned to a province, which is another provision in the Bill indicating where the money will go under certain circumstances. In this amendment we are saying that in a different set of circumstances, for example in the case of the federal Government withholding the money permanently, this is how the money shall be spent.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is prepared to rule at this stage. May I refer Hon. Members to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 773(1), which states in part:

An amendment is out of order if it is irrelevant to the bill, beyond its scope—

After hearing the argument of the Hon. Member, it still appears to the Chair that this amendment is irrelevant and beyond the scope of the Bill and, therefore, out of order. I must so rule.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill) moved:

Motion No. 1

That Bill C-3 be amended in Clause 12 by striking out line 10 at page 9 and substituting the following therefor:

"of the cost of insured health services; and

(e) must, in accordance with the regulations of this Act, provide for an acceptable ratio of ward versus private and semi-private beds in hospitals, including hospitals owned or operated by Canada.

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford) moved:

That Bill C-3 be amended in Clause 12 by striking out line 10 at page 9 and substituting the following therefor:

"of the cost of insured health services; and (e) must provide that all medical practitioners or where applicable, dentists may participate in the plan."

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill) moved:

That Bill C-3 be amended in Clause 12 by striking out line 10 at page 9 and substituting the following therefor:

"of the cost of insured health services; and

(e) must provide that any duly qualified medical practitioner and, where applicable, dentist, who has been licensed by the province to practice in the province, may participate in the plan.

• (1115)

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to speak to my amendment and then to the amendment of the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday). Must I do that within the same time frame?

Mr. Speaker: The Chair decided that amendments Nos. 1, 2 and 3 would be lumped together for debate but voted on as indicated. No. 1 is voted on separately and No. 2 would dispose of No. 3. The Hon. Member is invited to make his remarks concerning the three amendments in this intervention.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the intent of our amendment with regard to providing for an acceptable ratio of ward versus private and semi-private beds in hospitals is to ensure that the overall goals of the Canada Health Act are indeed achieved throughout the country. One of our concerns is that if this is not specified in the Bill it is possible that a two-tier hospital care system could develop.

We have seen, particularly since 1977, and more specifically in the last couple of years, a trend on the part of certain provincial governments to encourage hospitals to find ways of generating revenue on their own. One way to achieve that, of course, is by turning more of their bed capacity over to the classification of private or semi-private rooms so that they generate revenue over and above that which would be generated through ordinary ward beds under the health insurance plan.

We wanted to ensure that this Act would provide a mandate to the Minister of National Health and Welfare to take action, should she or he in the future discern that a province is evading universality and accessibility, with respect to clause 12, by not making a suitable number of beds available under the plan. This is not a new idea and has been done before by regulation. We feel this should be made explicit in the Canada Health Act. If this is not done, a situation could arise where accessibility could be threatened by a lack of availability of ward beds. This would then create a situation in which Canadians would rightly want to insure themselves against the unavailability of those beds, if it were seen as something that is inevitable. Eventually Canadians would feel that they have to take out private health insurance to make sure that they could get a bed when they needed it because the hospitals in their area were following that kind of policy. Very soon, the very thing we are trying to prevent in this Bill, through elimination of extra billing and user fees, could take place with respect to the availability of beds. Therefore, this amendment seems to be self-evidently in keeping with the spirit of the Canada Health Act.

I did not see any reason in committee and I do not see any reason now why this amendment cannot be enshrined in the Bill.

The amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Oxford is a reintroduction of an amendment many of us tried to move in committee in various forms which would meet what I consider to be the very legitimate concerns of the Canadian Association of Interns and Residents, which is that all people who graduate from medicine and are licensed to practice medicine should be able to do so in the plan wherever they so choose, so long as they want to meet the conditions of the plan.

I am not saying doctors who want to extra-bill in a province where extra billing has been outlawed should be able to operate within the plan. That is not the kind of right we are talking about. We are talking about the right of physicians to have geographical freedom within a particular province. This Bill is directed at what is going on in British Columbia and what could go on in many other provinces where we find provincial governments, through the limitation of billing numbers per area, restricting the right of physicians to practise in a particular area. I think this is something that should be addressed in another way. If provinces want to find ways of redistributing physician manpower, then there must be a way that is more acceptable than refusing the right to practise in this way, particularly when you consider that there are people now graduating from our medical colleges who are now interns and residents and who, if they want to practise in B.C., for instance, face the possibility of not being able to do so. Also, as was pointed out to me by people concerned, there is one case where a husband got a billing number and the wife did not. The wife is also a physician. The only way she could practise medicine was to move away from where her husband was living and practise somewhere else. That is completely unacceptable. We have an opportunity to do something about that in this Bill. This amendment is the result of many, many refinements. I see no reason, nor, I am sure, does the Hon. Member for Oxford why we could not meet in the Bill those very legitimate concerns of the Canadian Association of Interns and Residents.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, if I understand correctly, the New Democratic Party Member, the party critic, has just spoken to motions No. 1, No. 2 and No. 3. Regarding motion No. 1, his Party is asking us to amend the Bill to include "an acceptable ratio of ward" (beds), which are usually four to a room, versus semi-private beds, which are two to a room, and private rooms.

We have already discussed the motion in Committee, where it was decided to drop the proposal. The point I raised at the time was, that by including a provision for ward beds in the Bill, we would be putting an additional and unnecessary constraint on the system, and that for the time being, the situation was not alarming anywhere in Canada, and that in any case, the federal Minister could use regulatory powers existing under the Act, if necessary, and without having to resort to an amendment, could pass regulations and discuss them with the provinces, as I said before.

I do not remember exactly what the statistics are, but in Ontario, for instance, which has the largest population of any province in Canada, two-thirds of hospital-days for all kinds of patients are attributed to wards. In fact, public demand is for private or semi-private rooms rather than wards. Since I have been Minister of Health, there have never been, to my knowledge, any complaints from Canadians because they did not have access to a ward. If a patient wants to be on a ward, in other words, a room with four beds, the hospital is obliged to provide the bed free of charge, and if the hospital in question has no ward available, it must provide a semi-private or private room, without extra charge.

I believe this answers the question raised by motion No. 1.

[English]

We discussed Motion No. 2 a great deal because it causes concern to all members of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. The spirit of the motion, if not the exact wording, was defeated.

The motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) is well intentioned; it wants to overcome a new problem in the system which refers to procedures used by provinces to control the number and distribution of doctors when this applies. It applies in many parts of Canada as we have a great number of doctors in proportion to the population. If provinces had a special practice it was usually to provide positive, financial incentives. This technique has worked best in the experience that has been accumulated, coupled with other incentives such as refresher courses and material or professional incentives. One province tackled the problem by a disincentive, a reduction in salary. Another province started the practice of issuing billing numbers through a provincial mechanism and commission in a way that could be considered discriminatory.

After a study of the legislation by the Department of Justice, we think that medical practitioners are protected for practising within medicare through the concept of reasonable compensation. In other words, it is not for the federal Government to decide where doctors will settle, once they are licensed; this is purely a provincial matter. Through federal legislation regarding conditions for federal funding, however, reasonable compensation must be provided for all medical practitioners who practise within medicare and provide insured services. We think that medical practitioners who provide insured services must be reasonably compensated. They should have a billing number. Individuals or groups—although the latter must be verified—could take a provincial government to court if this were denied to a medical practitioner who provided insured health services.

Motion No. 3 was also presented by the health critic of the New Democratic Party and in a way has the same meaning as Motion No. 2. Unless Hon. Members have questions on it, therefore, I think I have made the point and should not take up more time of the House.

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, we are debating Motions Nos. 1, 2 and 3 this morning. All three deal with Clause 12 of Bill C-3. Clause 12 defines the requirements that will be expected of the provinces with respect to accessibility to the health care plan in any province. It makes a lot of sense that there should be something in the Bill to provide for a uniform type of insured health service with uniform terms and conditions, as paragraph (a) of Clause 12 provides. Similarly, there should be a tariff payable to physicians and other health practitioners. We take no issue with that whatsoever.

As both the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) and the Minister have said, we are concerned that there are changes taking place in the administration of health care in the provinces. Because of the perceived over-supply of doctors and perhaps an under-supply of doctors in certain areas, attempts are being made at the provincial level to limit the number of physicians permitted to practise in a specific area of a province. British Columbia has found a method whereby it can do this by refusing a billing number to a physician.

The Canadian Association of Interns and Residents, as can be surmised from the name, represents the up and coming professionals. They realize that the way the Act is presently written, they have no protection whatsoever. After having spent many years in universities, medical schools and one to six years of interning, graduating and getting a licence to practice, having been granted a licence to practice in any given province—and we must remember the provinces control the education, training, admission to medical schools and the licensing of these physicians—they can then be told by the province that even though they have completed their course successfully and are licensed to practice, they are not going to receive a billing number.

The Canadian Association of Interns and Residents perceived this as a real threat to them after having spent up to ten years trying to learn their profession. For all practical purposes they may not be allowed to practise in their own province. They could practise outside the plan. Across this country, 95 per cent of the physicians want to be in a plan if it is a suitable plan.

The Canadian Association of Interns and Residents are to be commended on the effort they made during the committee stage of this Bill. They had representatives in attendance the whole time the Bill was before the committee. From time to time they supplied us with various amendments which would take care of their problem. They consulted with leading constitutional experts regarding the legality of such amendments. They were assured by the authorities that the amendment would not be in conflict in any constitutional way.

It was my impression as well as that of my colleagues from all Parties on the committee that there should be protection for these young graduate doctors. I believe it is fair to say that the Government feels the same way. For some reason, however, there is not an amendment in the Bill or a change to give the protection that these interns must have.

The Government raises the argument that possibly there will be some difficulty inasmuch as we are perceived as intruding into the provincial domain. The whole Bill is an intrusion into the provincial domain in one way or another. The amendment of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill and my amendment in no way take away the ability of the province to license and qualify physicians to practise in their province. All the amendments say is that if they are to be given that right and privilege, it should be extended a bit further to allow them the opportunity of having a billing number so that they can practise within the plan.

I suspect the Minister has received a lot of pressure from the provincial governments. I can understand why it will cause them difficulty. We have a broader obligation. Our main obligation is to protect the interest of all Canadians. We are not doing that by passing a Bill that is discriminatory. A province would not have to allow a physician who is duly qualified and licensed to practise within that plan. This is what concerns Opposition Members.

I hope that when government Members see the difficulty caused by this Bill to young graduates, they will be prepared to accept either my amendment or the amendment of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill, which is more complete than my simplified amendment. I would say that when we last consulted with the Association of Interns and Residents on Friday, they found this simplified version that I proposed quite acceptable. I would be willing to vote for both those amendments.

With regard to Motion No. 1 in the name of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill, we share his concern that there be a sufficient number of public and standard wards available in a hospital. As the Minister pointed out, if a person is admitted to a hospital on an emergency basis and requires hospital accommodation, if all standard ward beds are taken up, they automatically receive private room coverage at no extra cost. There is no extra charge to them.

Mr. Blaikie: What if the private rooms are all full?

Mr. Halliday: They will get a bed somewhere in the hospital. My concern is that this Bill does not provide what Mr. Blaikie is asking for, namely, enough hospital beds. Unfortunately, that part of the health care system is not addressed in this Bill. In spite of Mr. Blaikie's amendment, over the next number of years we will find people in dire straits because the Government has not provided in this Bill any mechanism to increase the availability of hospital beds. In my view, it is unimportant whether it is a private bed, a semi-private bed or a standard ward bed, because we need all three. If Mr. Blaikie is concerned about two-tiered—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I simply wish to draw to the Hon. Member's attention that he must refer to another Hon. Member by his riding.

Mr. Halliday: I was doing that, Mr. Speaker, until I was so taken up with my argument that I overlooked it. My apologies to you, Sir.

My point is that there will be a shortage of all three types of beds in the immediate future. Unfortunately, this Bill does not take care of that situation. The amendment of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill will not take care of it either. It will take more than that kind of change to really look after the needs of the health care system.

In conclusion, I and my colleagues in this Party will oppose Motion No. 1. However, we are prepared to support either or both Motions Nos. 2 and 3.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak to the motions before us at the present time. In his motion, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) suggests that the Governor in Council should regulate an acceptable ratio of wards to semi-private and private rooms. He advances the argument that accessibility could be limited by the availability of ward beds, that a two-tiered system would develop, and that preferred access, particularly for elective services, could be gained by those carrying private insurance.

On the first point, there does not appear to be much evidence to support the fact that accessibility could be limited by the availability of ward beds. For example, over each of the past five years, approximately 36 per cent of the beds have consistently been designated as preferred accommodation throughout Canada, whereas only 25 per cent to 26 per cent of hospital days have involved preferred accommodation charges. The income derived from preferred accommodation has actually dropped as a proportion of the total expenses over the past five years. Furthermore, it should be understood that the provinces themselves regulate the proportion of beds that can be so designated and the practices of hospitals in regard to such charges.

The ratio of preferred to total beds ranges between zero per cent and 48 per cent from province to province. In some provinces, fewer than 20 per cent of the beds are designated as preferred accommodation. Invariably, a lower proportion of actual hospital days are charged preferred rates. For example, 19 per cent of British Columbia's beds are designated preferred beds, but only 10 per cent of the hospital days are charged at preferred rates. The point is that there does not appear to be much overwhelming evidence of a problem of reasonable access to an extent that would warrant the federal Government's directly regulating the matter specifically through this Act.

It might be argued that the situation could change in the future. In that event, there are sufficient grounds in law and prescribed processes laid out in the Act to permit the federal Government to intervene if it became necessary. The provisions in Bill C-3 clearly spell out what the insured services are, the conditions under which access to those services must be provided, and what the federal Government must do in the event those conditions are breached. The conditions and requirements under Clause 13 and subclause 22(c) provide the means to monitor the situation, and most assuredly would signal the emergence of any problem in regard to persons being denied access to necessary hospital services.

Few provinces have demonstrated through their respective laws and practices any strong inclination to inhibit access through restricting the availability of standard ward beds. Surely this is a provincial administrative matter that does not require precise specification in federal regulations. As well, from the standpoint of federal-provincial relations, surely this is a matter that can be entrusted to the provinces in the proper exercise of their respective responsibilities.

I turn now to the amendments to Clause 12(e) proposed by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill and the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday). I have listened to the Hon. Member for Oxford and can certainly understand his point of view. I can understand his concern in this regard and, as he said, all Parties including the governing Party are concerned about the situation of our young doctors. He said that health care is being regulated by the provinces to restrict the number of doctors who can practice in a particular region of a province. This is really a very serious situation, Mr. Speaker.

I think that the standing committee has given a good deal of attention to this matter and has discussed it quite thoroughly. As the Hon. Member for Oxford has stated, I think that there is a feeling of concern among the members of the committee, but I think that this matter does not fall completely within federal jurisdiction. Wording has been included in the Bill to create a framework for negotiations between the provinces and the interns and residents. It is hopefull that this framework will be satisfactory in solving what may be a potentially troublesome problem. However, it is our feeling that this is as far as we can possibly go in this regard.

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, first, in responding to Motion No. 1 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), let me say that the point that is being made both by the Parliamentary Secretary and by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday), is that the manner in which beds are designated in given provinces is an area of provincial jurisdiction. However, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill does not agree with that position which we took in committee and are taking in the House this morning.

The reason for our position is that while there is a national health care plan which, through block funding, provides for certain proportionate payments both for hospital care and/or medical services, the fact remains that there is no provincial health care plan or system that is identical in all respects. There are 10 individual provincial health care plans, plus another configuration which relates to the Yukon and the Northwest Territories because of federal responsibility. Perhaps I could use this moment to say that I hope this Bill might offer another opportunity for us to say that we feel that those health care services in the Territories should be transferred to the territorial governments at the earliest opportunity.

Complementing the 10 health care plans plus the ones in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories is the federal contribution. If certain conditions established by the Established Programs Financing Act and the hospital and medicare Acts now to be consolidated into the Canada Health Act are met, the provinces have the responsibility and the jurisdiction to administer and regulate the health care system.

It then must be asked whether the House has any authority to speak in favour of the position put forward by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill. It is my view and that of our Party that this motion directly interferes with the provincial jurisdictions. Additionally, I think that one should be very careful when saying, from the vantage point of the House of Commons, that the individual health care systems across the country should be the same. I do not think that that is desirable and we are not in favour of that. However, this motion would dictate to the provinces a ratio of ward versus private and semi-private beds.

I think that this motion would affect not only the provinces but the hospital administrators as well. Hospital administrators are surely the professionals who work with these matters on a day-to-day basis and they should not only have the right but they should have the responsibility to determine what kind of configuration and arrangement is needed in given hospitals in order to serve best the needs of Canadians who are serviced by those hospitals. My argument against this motion is straightforward and is based upon the fact that I do not believe we would have a better system if in fact the motion of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill were to be endorsed by the House today.

I will group Motions Nos. 2 and 3 as the Chair has done. I would like first to endorse the motion put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Oxford. It has been said already in the House that there was an extensive debate on the manner in which medical doctors operate within the health care plan. The committee was confronted with a difficulty. If a national health care plan exists which is within the parameters described in Motion No. 1 and a person is accepted by a provincial medical school, attends that school and meets the academic and professional qualifications, then once the Canada Health Act is passed and the province has established the academic criteria under which it will license that person, a potential hitch arises before that person is able to practise his or her profession. If the Canada Health Act Bill is passed wherein a penalty is imposed for extra billing, or if the person operates outside the plan—and, to my knowledge, there are now approximately six doctors in Quebec who are operating that way—a person, having met all the provincial criteria, who wants to fulfil his or her professional training, must have a billing number. That person must have a number whereby he or she can bill the health care system of the province for services rendered. The difficulty which this amendment tries to address is that once a person has met all the qualifications, there should not then be a barrier, through an administrative technique of withholding a billing number for that medical officer, preventing that person, having met all of those criteria, from practising.

I recall, Mr. Speaker, that during the First Ministers debate on the Constitution but, more important, in the committee of officials during that summer when various amendments were considered, one of the areas which was most thorny was the so-called mobility rights clause. While there was a strong argument that Canadians should have the right to move from one province to another, from a province to a territory or from a territory to a province, without impediment or internal barriers, there was a concern expressed as well that provinces which had a provincial unemployment rate greater than the national average should have some means whereby they could provide for employment or economic activity which, if not totally protecting their citizens, would give them some access to the jobs available. For example, in Atlantic Canada there is a recognized provision—although not in the Constitution—whereby contractors in one Province have a 10 per cent advantage over contractors from another Province.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, the federal Government did the same thing in the Territories. It is interesting to note, when one looks at some agreements in principle on Indian land claims, in what direction those kinds of provisions will go. That is not as yet a very clear concept. However, there was a general agreement in principle that Canadians, if they met the qualifications, should have the right, with no internal barriers, to practise their profession or trade in any province in Canada. What this amendment then addresses is that, having met the qualifications, those persons should not only have the right to practise within the plan but should not be barred from practising within any province if they have met the criteria.

If there is a problem of distribution of medical personnel, Mr. Speaker, and some people argue there is, I would think that the matter is better addressed through positive incentives. For example, the Province of Ontario, as well as other provinces, has had this kind of plan. In the Northwest Territories and the Yukon there has been a northern allowance. While some of us might argue that the northern allowance is not adequate, and there has been some argument in terms of whether it should be taxable—and we have fought the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) time after time on that—the fact remains that a positive incentive would bring more harmony into the profession and would attract people to practise in geographical areas in which otherwise they might not be as interested. This clause, Mr. Speaker, attempts to address that exact question, and I commend it to the House for approval.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak for a few moments in particular on Motion No. 2. I sat in the House and listened to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacLellan) indicate the Government's intention not to support Motion No. 2, and I was disturbed by it. The reason given by the Parliamentary Secretary seemed to centre on the issue of provincial jurisdiction. The tone of that intervention was such that the Liberal Government was trying to paint itself as a group which paid proper attention to provincial jurisdiction.

I believe that anyone who looks at the record of the Government in this Chamber over a four-year period of time would be inevitably drawn to the conclusion that if there has ever been a Government in the history of this nation which did not pay attention to the issue of provincial jurisdiction, surely it is the present Liberal Government. That kind of excuse for not supporting the motion rings particularly hollow on this day.

Motion No. 2 is a motion designed to ensure the equal right of all well trained medical practitioners to participate in the health insurance scheme of this country. Years ago, the provinces invited the federal Government into the manpower jurisdiction when they gave the federal Government the power to deal with unemployment insurance in this country. It is a responsibility of this Chamber and of the federal Government, and a legitimate one, to be concerned about manpower issues in this country. We must make sure that we have an adequately trained work force to do the kinds of things which need doing in this country.

When it comes to health care generally, Mr. Speaker, it is inconceivable that we can have a decent system of health care in this country without professionally trained people willing to provide that kind of service to their fellow Canadians. The health care system is composed of facilities, but what really makes it work is the people within them. We heard earlier this day, Mr. Speaker, that it takes between six and ten years education beyond high school before these medical practitioners are properly trained and ready to start their careers. As we look at this Canada Health Act, Mr. Speaker, and this amendment today, one of the questions every Hon. Member of this Chamber should ask himself about each and every clause in this Bill is, what is the impact of a particular clause on the mind-set of young people in this country who are trying to make a career decision? We should not have a clause or a set of words in this Act which says to the young people in this country that they should not really consider a career in the health care profession because it may turn out to be a bad career. In particular, without Motion No. 2, which was moved by the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday), we can see clearly that this Bill says to the eighteen-year-olds in this country that they should really stop to think about whether they want to invest ten years of their lives in a training process because it may happen that, at the end of ten years, some government somewhere in this country will say to them, "It is nice that you took those ten years of training, but we will not allow you to participate as a useful citizen in the health care of this country". In the absence of this amendment, Mr. Speaker, that is what we are saying to the brightest eighteen-year-olds in this country. We are saying, "Do not take a chance. Do not be willing to risk ten years of your time and your money to get yourself well trained, because somewhere, some day some group of politicians is going to say to you that you cannot make a living practising what you have learned".

The Government has a few more hours, Mr. Speaker, and I urge it to reconsider its decision. I urge the Government to think about the wisdom of supporting this amendment. As we look to the future, we can see jobs in manufacturing disappearing. We can see the disappearance of a lot of jobs in Canadian society. It is a little harder to look ahead to see where the jobs of the future are likely to be, but it is clear that one area of jobs will be that of human services. That will require generally more people in the future. We have in this country a gradually aging population and we can see that our health care system is going to have increased demands made upon it simply as a consequence of the demographics of the aging population. In the future we are going to require more people in the health care professions, not fewer.

We in this Chamber, Mr. Speaker, in the month of March, 1984, should be looking at every clause in this Bill from the viewpoint of whether or not it will encourage the best and the brightest to commit their lives to human service through the health care profession. Anything which goes in the opposite direction is just simply wrong. But anything which encourages young people to commit their talent, energy and humanity to the care of others is going in a positive direction.

We may look at this Bill as being designed to provide more publicity for the Government in trying to deal with a specific economic situation, but at the heart must lie our concern for those who are less fortunate healthwise than most Members of this Chamber. We can go to any hospital in this or any city in the country and see people concerned, scared and suffering. That can only be alleviated through treatment by people with skills, commitment and compassion. The lives of the sick are made a little better when people with those qualities have committed their lives to that kind of service.

Amendment No. 2 is an important amendment in that it indicates that Members of this Chamber, the highest court of the land, want to say to the young people of this nation that if they will commit their lives in this field, then we will enact the legislation which ensures that when they have completed their training, they can be a full partner and a full participant in our health care system, not a second-class partner.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, this Bill is back in the House after two months of detailed study in committee, and there are certain amendments before us, as you have delineated. There have been some surprises along the road with this Bill, surprises to the Canadian Medical Association, the provincial Governments and the people of Canada generally. However, I do not think there was anything more surprising than, when one turned on the radio this morning, to hear a CBC report stating that this Bill had come out of committee with not very much argument, very little debate and very little controversy. The only thing I can say about that, Mr. Speaker, is that, as usual, the CBC was not present at any of the committee meetings and really did not have a clue as to what took place.

The reason I mention that, Mr. Speaker, is that during the course of debate in committee on this Bill we heard some very, very poignant and telling testimony from groups, organizations and individuals, experts in the field of health care. As a result, members of the Opposition were able to put forward amendments that we knew would improve the Bill. Not only were we prepared to put them forward and listen to such telling arguments as were presented by the Canadian Medical Association and the Canadian Nurses Association, but we were able finally to convince the Government that it would be in the interests of the health care delivery system of this country to make the amendments we had originally proposed in the name of the Government so that they would be incorporated in the Bill.

The reason I mention that, Mr. Speaker, is that after much protracted debate and argument in committee, there was one proposal which the Government refused to adopt even though it acknowledged, as the Minister has acknowledged here this morning, the merits of the argument. The arguments for the proposal were put forward primarily by witnesses from the Canadian Association of Interns and Residents, the young graduates coming out of medical school, the people who are still in training or who have just recently graduated. They are concerned about their future and whether or not they will be able to practise the profession for which they have spent so many years training. These people came before us and talked as individuals, made their presentations collectively, and there is no doubt that the strength of their argument made a major impression on the committee.

There is no question that we do not want to see any kind of restrictions, either in a professional or, as my colleagues, the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) and the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) have said, any restriction on mobility even in moving from province to province. It is debatable, obviously, whether or not those restrictions will be put in place at the provincial level, although there is one case where perhaps that is already being done and it may happen in other cases. We have the opportunity here, Sir, to ensure that that kind of restriction is not unduly enforced upon people who have already shown their good intentions by meeting the criteria demanded of them in their performance.

Amendment No. 2 was put forward by the Hon. Member for Oxford, and amendment No. 3 by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie). They have been grouped for debate. These amendments seek to ensure that these young people will be guaranteed the ability to practise their profession, that no impediment will be placed to prevent them from carrying out their profession because of some restriction or reluctance at the provincial level to provide them with a billing number. In this amendment we are asking that they be given the chance to prove themselves. I am sure the Government understands the worthiness of that argument.

I listened to the Minister in committee and I listened to her here this morning. The willingness which the Government exhibited in committee to accept amendments to improve the Bill did not by any means satisfy all our objections to it. The Government willingly accepted amendments which would have made it possible for a mechanism to be built in so that doctors can be assured of a fee schedule in any province. It willingly accepted an amendment to make sure that the term "health care practitioner" is incorporated in the Act for future developments. We are asking that that same willingness be applied to the needs of interns and residents throughout the country. I do not think that should be a major hurdle for the Government. It should not be a major impediment which the Government is not prepared to take in its stride.

This is not an amendment which would unduly stretch the Act or bring into contention any great provincial responsibility. It is an amendment which is sensible and sensitive to the needs of the people to whom it is directed, and one which should not really cause the Minister any great trouble. In fact, Sir, I am pretty well assured she does not have any great trouble with it. Therefore, I ask her at this stage to consider incorporating this amendment into the Bill to make sure we have taken that one last step to make this a better Bill than it is at present.

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, along with the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) I was somewhat surprised, after the hours of committee deliberations, to hear and read that there was not much controversy and not much input by the opposition Parties to the application of Bill C-3, the amendments now coming out of it, and those that were considered in committee. I was rather surprised as well, Mr. Speaker, that a limitation was going to be imposed on the discussions this morning with respect to the linking of Motions Nos. 1, 2 and 3.

This morning I would like to join my colleagues in addressing particular Motion No. 2, which perhaps created an undue concern on the part of the Government. We were told that Bill C-3 was introduced with the purpose of accessibility in mind to ensure that Canadians across the country had access to the greatest medicare system in the world. We were told that in order for Canadians to be assured of that accessibility there had to be protection against the possibility of erosion of medicare through user fees and extra billing.

When the original medicare Bill was tabled, not much consideration was given to medical practitioners. It was stated that they would not become functionaries of the state. Even now it has been said that our medical practitioners would not be and are not functionaries of the state. Yet, through a devious and roundabout way, they are being affected by Bill C-3, which may affect medicare, in a way we may not have properly and thoroughly considered.

Motion No. 2 as introduced by the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) introduces a very plausible concern. Interns and residents say they are not interfering with the provincial right to license doctors. However, if they are going to spend many years going to medical school to become specialists in the field, surely there must be something in this legislation to prevent erosion and give Canadians the right of accessibility to the medical practitioners of the future. However, the Government does not see it that way because it has a fixation on the two potential erosionary capacities of user fees and extra billing. Unless we can assure the people of tomorrow that there will be sufficient practitioners skilled in the practice of medicine tomorrow, there will be a greater erosion of medicare than that which we have considered to date.

On the basis of consistency, I am wondering why the Government has refused to introduce amendments to ensure that doctors reaching this level of internship and medical practitioners who are residents within hospitals will be allowed to opt in as licensed doctors and participate in the medicare system which we have all grown to accept as part of our social structure, part of our way of life, and part of a system of which we have become so proud and which we consider to be the best medicare system in the land. To refuse to give that right to those students who have come this far and are now calling themselves doctors, is an injustice to the medical profession. They should be assured of this right through legislation. The thrust of Bill C-3 is accessibility. The greatest threat to accessibility and to the quality of medicine is the lack of medical practitioners with necessary skills.

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words on amendments Nos. 1, 2 and 3, and particularly on amendments Nos. 2 and 3. On listening to the debate at the present time the House could be led to believe that Members who support the Government have ignored the problem which was being raised by the Canadian Association of Interns and Residents and that we did nothing about it. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that Members who are supporters of the Government did introduce an amendment to paragraph (c) Clause 12 adding the word "all" before the words "insured health services". Paragraph (c) now reads: "must provide for reasonable compensation for all insured health services rendered by medical practitioners or dentists;". There was disagreement as to the effectiveness of this amendment, but we believe that by adding the word "all" before the words "insured health services" the concerns of CAIR are being reasonably met.

I would like to point out that that is the same type of wording that exists in Clause 9 which deals with comprehensiveness. Clause 9, at line 15, reads:

—the health care insurance plan of a province must insure all insured health services provided by hospitals, medical practitioners—

I believe that the concerns that were being expressed by the interns and residents have reasonably been met by the amendment that we proposed to add the word "all" in paragraph (c) of Section 12. Since this Bill addresses health services and accessibility of patients to health services, rather than accessibility of professional groups to a public plan, I believe that that was the right way to approach this question.

At first glance, amendment No. 2 and amendment No. 3 do not seem to be offensive, but there is a slight difference between talking about the totality of insured services and providing, according to the amendment of the Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday), that a provincial plan must provide that all medical practitioners or, where applicable, dentists may participate in the plan. I do not believe it is the business of the Parliament of Canada or of the Canada Health Act to determine how medical practitioners in a province should or should not be in a plan. I do not think that is the intent of the legislation nor do I believe it is relevant to the legislation.

What is relevant to the legislation is that all insured health services be covered by a plan. We believe that this leads to the conclusion that if medical practitioners who are licensed in a province and licensed under the laws of the province, either by a college of physicians or the province itself, provide insured health services that are described in the Act, the plan must show that all insured health services are covered. I believe this is the best way to proceed.

We are talking about adding the word "all" before the words "insured health services" rather than prescribing to the provinces that they "must provide all medical practitioners or, where applicable, dentists may participate in the plan", as both amendments would do.

Amendment No. 3 of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) also proposed that the plan "must provide" etc. I do not believe it is relevant to this Act that we should prescribe legally who should or should not be in a plan from the point of view of the medical profession.

My purpose in speaking this afternoon is simply to say that we did recognize that the Canadian Association of Interns and Residents has a legitimate problem and we tried to respond to it reasonably. We believe we have. I did not want the record to remain, as the debate has shown, that somehow we had neglected the problem that was raised by CAIR and were not sensitive to it. We are sensitive to it and we believe we have done what is reasonable by adding the word "all", before "insured health services" in Clause 12, which would do the same thing as we did in Clause 9 dealing with comprehensiveness.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak on the question of accessibility as it concerns both the public and those who provide medical services. This includes nurses, who I believe have made an exceptionally good case for an extension of their jurisdiction and participation in a better health service system than exists presently.

I suggest that a bureaucratic cement has set in at the federal level which has made it rigid and incapable of accepting anything except power. Bureaucracy at the provincial level is now in the process of making those who supply medical services essentially civil servants. We have seen that union negotiations have forced nurses to go on strike. In some provinces they are now forbidden to strike and have become part of the Public Service. This affects accessibility.

With respect to accessibility, I wish to point out to the Minister that there are many doctors in this country who are prevented from practising medicine. We accepted many refugees, such as Vietnamese and Polish physicians, a great majority of whom must scrub floors and act as janitors because our bureaucracy has prevented them from practising. Somehow the bureaucracy believes that medicine was invented in some medical schools in Canada or the United States and that foreign doctors, although we know many have passed equivalent requirements and have the same qualifications as Canadian graduates, cannot qualify.

The bureaucratic boondogging over financing between the federal and provincial governments has meant that there is an artificial limitation imposed on the number of entrants into internship. In Ontario, even domestic graduates have been kept out of the practice of medicine by this budgetary limitation imposed on hospitals by the provincial and federal governments. This means that many young men and women have wasted years of study.

The Minister should pay particular attention to the Government's cynicism in accepting refugee doctors while denying them the right to practise even when they prove their qualifications. They cannot practise until they go through their internship, but they are at the bottom of the list for admittance. I ask the Minister if she has ever heard Dr. Nguyen here in Ottawa talk about the problems of Vietnamese doctors whose medical qualifications will expire after five years if they do not proceed to internship. Yet in my province there is a need for 30 doctors in rural areas in some of the small hospitals. Here again is the boondoggle of bureaucracy. For instance, there is the building of ten-bed hospitals.

Miss Bégin: Not today.

Mr. Lambert: I will agree, but they were fine. Why does the Minister not talk, with due respect to the Chair, to the people involved? There are many ten-bed hospitals functioning well. The Minister shakes her head. That is only because she is a prisoner of her bureaucrats on that point. There are many districts in which ten-bed hospitals work. But you need to have the doctors. Hospitals have been closed because one man or woman cannot maintain a ten-bed hospital. Doctors are not sentenced to a life of work seven days a week, 18 hours a day. But if you listen to the bureaucrats from their comfortable pews, doctors should accept that kind of role.

I am making a plea. For goodness' sake, let us get rid of this cynicism that we have exhibited as Canadians. We should start with the Government of Canada, the Department of Employment and Immigration first. What about the Department of Health and Welfare? Other people would suggest it is the Department of Wealth and Welfare. But what about Health and Welfare Canada? What about the refugee doctors? We have to get rid of this scandal of duly qualified medical graduates from universities in Poland being effectively barred from practising. I know of some particular cases. I speak out of sheer frustration against the obstacles being placed before highly qualified and dedicated people wanting to practise medicine that prevent them from doing so. This is simply because they cannot get an intern position. This is nonsense. The Minister would do far more for medical care in this country if she went after that particular problem than does this whole Bill which does nothing but, in my mind, take a giant step toward total socialization of medical services. It is all under the guise of accessibility and universality but it still slices like bread. That bread is the total socialization of medical services in Canada.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I want to argue against Motion No. 1 in the name of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie). But first I want to compliment the members of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. During the past two months the actions of that committee have shown Parliament at its best and how this House should operate in the sense that dozens of amendments were accepted and incorporated into the Bill both in terms of word changes and whole new clauses which acted within the concept of federal-provincial relations. I know the members worked hard. They heard many witnesses and they made the changes. Nevertheless I was astounded this morning at the CBC coverage. It appeared as though Parliament had not been doing anything on this Bill. As has happened so often to us, we participate in debates here in the House but then when you watch the news at eleven o'clock at night and see what is reported, you wonder if is the same debate in which you have participated. I guess that is just the typical CBC pattern on things.

As far as Motion No. 1 is concerned, I submit it is too aggressive within federal-provincial relations. It is they who have to deal with health care. The amendment of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill mentions federal dollars which, as you recall, Mr. Speaker, amount to some $5 billion which Canadians through Parliament are allocating to health care. We are simply saying to the provincial governments that for that $5 billion we think we are entitled to reasonable conditions. That is where these five conditions came from, portability, accessibility, and so on.

A very delicate balance has to be maintained between federal and provincial jurisdictions. In terms of the Constitution, the jurisdiction is purely provincial. That has been the case since 1867. During the 1950s and as a result of the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act, which was passed by the Diefenbaker Government, and then the Medical Care Act passed by the Pearson Government, the federal Government allocated cash to provincial Governments and, as a result, we demanded some conditions.

Let us examine, Mr. Speaker, the wording of the amendment which reads:

(e) must, in accordance with the regulations of this Act, provide for an acceptable ratio of ward versus private and semi-private beds in hospitals, including hospitals owned or operated by Canada.

That mentions an acceptable ratio. But acceptable to whom? Presumably it is acceptable to someone in the Department of National Health and Welfare. That is what throws the whole process, this delicate balance between the federal and provincial governments, out of whack. Federal bureaucrats here in Ottawa will then have the power to make decisions as to what is an acceptable ratio of beds in hospitals in all the provinces. I think that is aggressive and unacceptable. That type of decision should be left with the provinces.

In support of that argument, I will read into the record the clause which was accepted by all Parties. We find it in the preamble. It reads:

Whereas the Parliament of Canada recognizes: that it is not the intention of the government of Canada that any of the powers, rights, privileges or authorities vested in Canada or the provinces under the provisions of the Constitution Act, 1867 (formerly named the British North America Act 1867), or any amendments thereto, or otherwise, be by reason of this Act abrogated or derogated—

And, therefore, as parliamentarians we are making the statement that we want to respect that original jurisdiction because the provinces are closer to the people and have much more flexibility to change things around.

I speak against Motion No. 1 and I hope the House will agree with me.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I was not going to speak to motions Nos. 1, 2 and 3 which are now before the House, but after the comments of the previous speaker, I would like to continue in the same vein and say, although there are people who claim this does not happen often enough, that sometimes in the House of Commons, Members on both sides of the House do a good job. As a Member of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, I wholeheartedly support what was said by the Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker), who expressed his appreciation for the thorough job done on the Committee by Members on both sides of the House. That the Bill was amended and improved the way it was, is certainly a good indication. I must say it was the result of efforts on the part of all members of the Committee, irrespective of party lines.

That being said, and since I have the floor, I would like to say a few words about motions 2 and 3. In Committee I had an opportunity to explain extensively my position with respect to the complaints aired by the Canadian Association of Interns and Residents and its Quebec counterpart.

Like my hon. friend, the Member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau), I would like to point out that I support the intent of the sponsors of the motions, since there are two that are similar, and this debate in Committee has brought out the very real problems facing young doctors in negotiations with provincial governments, that determine the geographic distribution of physicians in the provinces. I think few Canadians were aware of these problems, and the representatives of the Association of Interns and Residents very skillfully described the realities with which they had to cope.

The problem we had as Members of Parliament was to find a reasonable way of accepting the principle that these problems existed, without directly interfering with the direct contractual relationship between the provincial governments, responsible for discussions or negotiations with the medical associations in general and physicians in particular, and those providing health services, which in the present case means doctors or young doctors.

My hon. friend from Gloucester pointed out that the amendment to Clause 12(1)(c), which links the concept of reasonable compensation to all insured services, would make it possible for the federal Minister of Health to intervene, if necessary, should a group of physicians be denied reasonable access by a given province to the health services system. It is a compromise. It is a compromise that does not go as far as the two amendments now before the House. It is a compromise, however, that recognizes a situation where provinces might prevent young doctors from earning a living by refusing to give them a billing number. Personally, I am convinced that the amendment that was made, linking the concept of reasonable compensation to all medical services, plus progressive penalties that may be imposed by the Minister of Health under the new health legislation, constitutes a last resort, but still a real recourse for these doctors, enabling them to use the new Health Act to oblige the federal Minister of Health to intervene in cases of manifest abuse.

For these reasons, and because the issue has been discussed at length in Committee, I personally am satisfied that we have gone as far as we could in responding to the problems put forward by the Canadian Association of Interns and Residents. In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I would like to again congratulate the representatives of the Association on their efforts to inform Canadians, and Members of Parliament in particular, of these problems which are now public knowledge and can no longer be ignored by the provincial Ministers.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

And five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 79(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The next question is on Motion No. 2. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 79(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The House will now proceed to Motion No. 4.

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford) moved:

That Bill C-3 be amended in Clause 12 by striking out line 14 at page 9 and substituting the following therefor:

"only if the province has chosen to enter into, and".

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to usher in this motion before the House. I think it is a very important motion and should be considered. At first glance, the way the Bill was amended in committee might seem to indicate that it was not essential to consider adding the word "only" to a motion which has been debated to a considerable extent in the last two months.

We are still dealing with Clause 12 which has proved to be a fairly controversial clause. It contains some very important concepts and principles which need to be considered. Clause 12 deals with accessibility. The amended version of Bill C-3 provides in Clause 12(1) the criteria that have to be met by a province if it is going to provide the kind of accessibility that should be available to Canadians. It deals with the types of insured health services provided under uniform terms and conditions, and requires payment for insured health services in accordance with a payments plan authorized by the province. It was difficult to come to grips with paragraph (c) which appears at the top of page 9 of the Bill beginning at line 3 and reads as follows:

(c) must provide for reasonable compensation for all insured health services rendered by medical practitioners or dentists; and

The difficulty was that professionals in the field did not know what reasonable compensation meant, nor did the provincial Governments responsible for providing it know what reasonable compensation meant. It made some sense that in committee, members from all three Parties accepted the fact that there had to be some method devised to try to define what we were talking about. We ended up with this additional subclause (2) which tried to delineate what we felt would be deemed to be reasonable compensation. In other words, if a province met these certain specific criteria that are outlined in subclause (2) of clause 12, the province would then be deemed to have met the criteria of providing reasonable compensation.

We were able to look at a series of suggestions and we received some advice from the professional sector. Of course, there was no place better to look than to the author of the current bible on health care in Canada, Mr. Justice Emmett Hall, who in 1979 was asked to make a study of the health care system in Canada. His report is entitled Canada's National-Provincial Health Program for the 1980s. The essence of his report is that he accepted the concept that we needed to ban extra billing and user charges. He had no difficulty with banning those charges but he insisted that if we were to ban them we had to be equally stringent in providing what he called adequate compensation for professionals.

If I may, I would like to take a couple of moments to read from Mr. Justice Emmett Hall's report. The Government has used that report on many, many occasions and the Minister has referred to it numerous times because it does indicate exactly what she wants it to indicate regarding extra billing and user fees. However, she has ultimately refused to accept what he also required as part of the twinning mechanism which he felt was absolutely mandatory. For the benefit of the record and for the benefit of the Minister who is present today, and I appreciate the fact that she is present, I would like to read what Mr. Justice Emmett Hall actually said in his report. At the top of page 28 it reads as follows:

> Consideration and discussion of the question of outlawing extra billing however resorted to must always be accompanied by a recognition of the physician's right to adequate compensation and vice versa.

The next paragraph reads as follows:

> These two elements must always co-exist; there cannot be recognition of one without recognition of the other.

The middle of that page reads as follows:

> Provinces have the power to outlaw extra billing and should do so. It must be a condition of any legislation outlawing extra billing or balanced billing, in whatever form invoked, that the Province enacting such legislation will itself in the legislation agree to accept binding arbitration as now proposed. The two elements must be twinned.

Mr. Justice Emmett Hall then went on to say that he does not want there to be any mechanism whatsoever whereby that requirement can be overturned or appealed.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that the good words you have heard spoken this morning about the work of the committee in the last two months are indeed true. We have looked at this matter very seriously and there has been a certain amount of compromise on both sides of the House in the committee proceedings. We have come up with an amendment which does not actually accept the demand of Mr. Justice Hall that there be no mechanism for appeal. On page 9 of the amended Bill, beginning at line 31, paragraph (c) does allow for the legislature to do what Mr. Justice Hall indicated should not be done. He had indicated that any decision made by an arbitration board should not be amenable to appeal. In our attempt to compromise, we allowed that a provincial Government should have the right in the end to bring before the legislature and overturn a decision of some court of arbitration.

In the next few moments I would like to point out that subclause (2) of Clause 12, paragraphs (a), (b) and (c), provide the criteria that must be met by the province if it is deemed to have met the terms of reasonable compensation as we would like them to be. In the amended version of the Bill, that clause now provides that there must be a provision in each province for negotiation relating to compensation. Second, it provides that there must be provision for the settlement of disputes if, for some reason, the profession and the Government do not see eye to eye on the outcome of those negotiations. There is nothing wrong with that and we all agree with it. However, the difficulty lies in the wording at the beginning of subclause (2). This is where my one-word amendment must come in. We acknowledge the fact that if a province were to ban extra billing, it would then fulfil one of the criteria of Mr. Justice Hall, which was a very important criterion in his view. The Bill is now acknowledging what will happen if extra billing is not permitted in a province. Subclause (2) reads as follows:

> In respect of any province in which extra-billing is not permitted, paragraph 12(1)(c) shall be deemed to be complied with if the province has chosen to enter into, and has entered into, an agreement with the medical practitioners and dentists of the province that provides——for negotiations and settlement of disputes.

What is missing is the word "only" which must be added to line 13 in order to make it work. Without that word, this clause has no teeth. Unless this is set into law with the inclusion of the word "only", thus making provision for negotiation and settlement of disputes, the paragraph will be inadequate and will, in effect, have no teeth.

The Government may argue that it is not necessary to include the word "only" in that paragraph, but those who have looked at it, including professional people, have realized that there is absolutely no protection here whatsoever without the word "only". This must be done if we are to follow Mr. Justice Hall's recommendation that if we are to ban extra billing, we must have equally stringent rules regarding the requirement for adequate or reasonable compensation. Only by adding that word will we have the requirement demanded by Mr. Justice Hall.

PENITENTIARIES

CONDITIONS AT MILLHAVEN INSTITUTION

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) has taken an unprecedented step in hiring unqualified commissionaires at Millhaven, one of Canada's maximum security penitentiaries. The hiring of the Canadian Corps of Commissionaires Inc. was not a local decision but one made in Ottawa, and, as the Minister told this House on Friday, he himself approved that policy of replacing professional staff with part-time, unqualified personnel. This is irresponsible and can only add to an already unstable situation.

Since my questioning of the Minister on Friday, another inmate was murdered over the weekend.

Every position in a maximum security institution is of crucial importance, especially to the staff who have to be locked up with dangerous individuals. The institution is now under control only because all privileges have been suspended. This will not address the situation, because as soon as the lock-up is discontinued the murders will continue. It is common knowledge in Millhaven that two inmates were to be terminated last Friday but only one was actually murdered.

It is disgraceful that drugs and alcohol are as available as they are in this institution. The problem lies in the unnecessary large number of outside visitors being permitted in the institution. There visitors are not properly checked for contraband, and therefore no one within this institution is safe. An institution with Canada's most dangerous criminals run in such a manner is shameful.

It must be pointed out also that the local administration at the institution is not at fault; it is the attitude of senior correctional officials who intimidate officers with the threat of early retirements, transfer, or dismissal if unreasonable orders from Ottawa are not carried out—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

SIXTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF FOUNDING OF ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, Canadians have much to celebrate in this, the Year of Tourism. Newfoundland, Quebec, and Ontario will celebrate their respective anniversaries. The Ontario Provincial Police marks its seventy-fifth anniversary, and in my riding Barrie celebrates its twenty-fifth anniversary as a city.

April 1 will mark the sixtieth anniversary of the Royal Canadian Air Force, which officially came into being on April 1, 1924, as a permanent service at Canadian Forces Base Borden. The Air Force was responsible for the mapping of Canada's North, its members fought valiantly in two world wars, and it is today in the forefront of Canada's efforts in aerospace technology. The first flying school in Canada, established in 1917 at Base Borden, now trains both aerospace and Army ordnance personnel.

The Air Force celebrations are especially significant for the constituents of Simcoe South, home of Base Borden. Over all, military and civilian salaries, combined with defence spending, inject about $100 million into the local economy. Last year 20,000 students passed through the training facilities at Base Borden, highlighting its significant contributions to Canada's military efforts.

Base Borden is as integral a part of my riding as it is of the Canadian Armed Forces. I am proud to be its representative in Parliament. Congratulations on the sixtieth anniversary of the founding of the Royal Canadian Air Force.

VIA RAIL

CALL FOR RESTORATION OF STOP AT ITUNA, SASK.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, a couple of years ago, VIA, under the then Minister of Transport, Jean-Luc Pepin, decided to end its transcontinental passenger service. The people of Melville and other communities across the West fought very hard to have that passenger service reinstated, which will happen in June of this year. It is reinstated because of the tremendous fight put up by a number of communities for that passenger service.

My appeal today, Mr. Speaker, is that the passenger train stop at the small town of Ituna. It always used to do so in the past, and people from that community and surrounding communities could always take a train to wherever they were going. Then VIA comes back it will not be stopping at Ituna; it will only stop at Melville. People in the Town of Ituna and the surrounding communities have been circulating petitions and writing letters asking that there be at least a conditional stop, a flag stop, for that particular community.

What is very important to realize is that there are several thousands of people living not just in the town but in the small villages and farm communities in the surrounding area. They do not even have direct bus service to places like Regina. I would like to appeal now to fellow Hon. Members of Parliament, to the CTC, and to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy), that when VIA comes back in the month of June it stop in the town of Ituna as it did before VIA was taken out of service some two or three years ago.

These people deserve a train service. Because they live in a small rural community should not mean that they are discriminated against by the Government which sits across the way, or by the CTC.

FISHERIES

REOPENING OF GEORGETOWN SEAFOODS PLANT IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, all Prince Edward Islanders welcomed the announcement on Friday that, at long last, Georgetown Seafoods will be reopened under the ownership of National Sea. However, many basic questions about the federal Government's plans remain unanswered. For example, what constitutes the twenty million pounds of fish allocated to the plant? Will the allocation be from the Gulf, or from outside the Gulf, or from both, and in what proportions? What species are to be included, and what comparative numbers? Will the fish be harvested by the inshore fleet or by the offshore fleet? Under what conditions have the assets of Georgetown Seafoods been turned over to National Sea to protect the interests of the plant in the event National Sea decides to leave Georgetown at a later date?

In what specific ways is the $2.25 million initial capital investment to be spent, particularly since no one had previously estimated that more than $500,000 would be required to make the plant operational? Are anticipated initial losses at the plant being capitalized through the start-up financing?

The long-term profitability of Georgetown Seafoods requires satisfactory answers to those questions. I am serving notice to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) that I shall be posing those questions to him upon his return to the House later in the week.

WORLD FIGURE SKATING CHAMPIONSHIPS—TRIBUTE TO CANADIAN ATHLETES

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the group of talented and dedicated athletes who represented Canada last week at the world figure skating championships here in Ottawa.

As a team, their placings in all competitions were outstanding, and all Canadians can be justly proud of their achievements. We were especially thrilled last Thursday when Barbara Underhill of Oshawa and Paul Martini from Woodbridge came from behind to capture the gold medal in the pairs competition with an exciting and flawless freestyle performance. This is Canada's first world title in figure skating since Karen Magnussen won the women's singles world title in 1973, and the first in the pairs competition since my distinguished colleague, the Hon. Member for Halton (Mr. Jelinek), and his sister Maria, won that title in 1962.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REDUCTION OF SERVICE THROUGH DAUPHIN, MAN.

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, Canadian National Railways plan to discontinue the operation of trains 492 and 493 through Dauphin on May 27, 1984. The people of Dauphin are very concerned as the town has experienced a number of reductions in CN employment in recent years which has had a detrimental impact on the local economy. Services have been reduced, and there is growing concern that these moves by CN will eventually lead to the elimination of Dauphin as a major CN divisional point. In view of this, and CN's growing record of diminishing service to the people of my constituency, I call upon the Minister to look into this specific matter, and review CN's operation and plans in general for this part of Manitoba, to ensure that this area will receive service of high quality well into the future.

CONDEMNATION OF LIBERAL PARTY'S PROGRAMS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, through socialistic programs, deficit after deficit even in the good years, an ever increasing national debt now totalling more than $150 billion, programs which force lay-offs and create unemployment such as cutting the capital cost allowance in the first year, Gestapo methods of collecting taxes from the poor, the hungry, and even the kids of the nation, refusal to recognize the only pension a farmer or businessman has is his farm or his business, meagre and ineffective efforts to solve the unemployment problem of our youth, and no recognition of the dire need of women between the ages of 50 and 65, et cetera, this Liberal Government has brought Canada to its knees and to the very verge of bankruptcy. Now the same Liberal Ministers who initiated all these devastating programs are hypocritically offering to change their programs if elected Leader of that bankrupt Party.

The people of Canada are not naive. The only hope for this nation is to kick out the Liberals and elect a PC Government headed by the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Mulroney). It will have a fresh approach, the free enterprise approach, and a determination to build trust and faith in this country. It will be willing to sit down and talk with the provincial Governments, and will be determined to reflect the thinking of the greatest possible number of our people. It will cease having government compete with industry. A PC Government can hold this nation together and satisfy all regions with fairness, understanding, and compassion for all peoples, including the minorities.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before recognizing the Hon. Member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail), the Chair would call to his attention the rules of the House which preclude using Standing Order 21 to recognize visitors in the Gallery.

AIR SAFETY

SMOKING RESTRICTIONS URGED FOR AIRCREWS

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, there has been a lot of discussion lately about tourist and commercial travel. I want to focus the attention of the House of Commons on a very important issue, that of air safety. Last year we had that disaster in Cincinnati where 23 people lost their lives. Then, more recently, we saw where an Air Canada pilot caused a fire in the cockpit of an aircraft, resulting in a forced landing. Most recently a PWA aircraft was totally destroyed by fire in Calgary.

To follow up on my interventions in committee with respect to representations being made to the president of Air Canada and to the air travel industry in general concerning the health effects of breathing noxious cigarette fumes, as well as the air safety aspect, I would ask if the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) would consider restrictions on airline employees smoking in aircraft in order better to protect the travelling public who are at risk because of the carrying, on aircraft, of inflammable materials. I ask the support of this House in encouraging the Minister to take action in this regard.

COMPARISON WITH SITUATION IN UNITED STATES

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. He will realize that, despite the fact interest rates went up last week, the dollar continues to go down and is now struggling to stay above 78 cents. However, my question has to do with misrepresentations he made in the House last Friday.

The Minister said on Friday that the cycles of recession and recovery are not identical in Canada to the United States. We should expect there to be lags in either direction, but fundamentally the same general direction applies. How can he say that when in the U.S. today the unemployment rate is 7.8 per cent, down 1.7 per cent since last August, while in Canada at the same time the unemployment rate is 11.3 per cent, having dropped only .3 per cent since last August? It would take the creation of 400,000 jobs here in Canada just to move our unemployment rate back to the same level as it is in the U.S. How can the Minister say we are moving in the same direction when we are going in the opposite and worst direction?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I invite my friend to look at the figures and he will realize that both here and in the U.S. there has been strong job creation in the last year. As I indicated, since the end of the recession we have created over 450,000 jobs in this country, 54,000 of them last month. Both in Canada and in the U.S. there has been a strong upward movement in job creation.

My friend has pointed out that unemployment in the U.S. has gone down faster than in Canada. This is quite true, and I have said so in this House many times. The main difference is that the rate of increase in the participation rate, or the number of people joining the labour force, is significantly larger in Canada than in the U.S. For instance, last year the relative rate of increase in Canada was 40 per cent higher than in the U.S. As we get more and more people joining the labour force in Canada, in numbers larger proportionately than in the U.S., it is harder to bring the unemployment rate down. But the fact is that the U.S. and Canadian economies grew strongly last year and we expect them to grow strongly this year, and we also expect employment in both countries to grow strongly, and unemployment to come down in Canada also.

Oral Questions

NEW ENTRANTS TO LABOUR FORCE

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, why does the Minister persist in trying to get away with these canards? Does he not realize that from August, 1983, to February, 1984, the number of new entrants joining the labour force in the U.S. was 576,000, compared to 61,000 in Canada? The U.S. unemployment rate before the recession was the same as ours, 7.5 per cent, but it is now 3.5 per cent better. When is the Minister going to admit that they are doing much better in the U.S., and when will he emulate them, follow some of their policies, and do something for the unemployed of Canada, instead of giving specious reasoning and misrepresentations to the House?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the rhetoric of the Hon. Member will not change any of the facts. Of course there are more new entrants into the job market in the U.S. than in Canada; they have ten times the population. I have indicated that you have to look at the percentages. The fact is that the percentage increase in the number of people joining the labour force in Canada in 1983, compared to the U.S., was 40 per cent higher. I invite my friend to check the facts and figures. Then he can abandon the rhetoric he indulges in. However, I do not think that will lead him to that at all. He is more interested in rhetoric than in facts.

Mr. Crosbie: There are 1,476,000 Canadians officially unemployed. They are not interested in the Minister's rhetoric or in his attempting to explain away the unexplainable. They want jobs, and the Minister is doing nothing to assist them.

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO REDUCE UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, in 1968 when the present Prime Minister came into office there were 360,000 unemployed, and today there are four times that many. That is not rhetoric; that is fact. When are the Minister and the Prime Minister going to take some interest in our economy and develop some new policies or new approaches which will reduce the figure of 1,476,000 unemployed? That is not rhetoric. That is 1,476,000 unemployed people you are doing nothing about.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I intend to address the very question raised by the Hon. Member in a speech I am going to make next Wednesday. I invite him to read that speech. He will discover the facts of what has happened to the economy since 1968. He will discover, among other things, that we have created something like three million jobs since 1968. These are jobs that have been created in Canada that did not exist in 1968. These jobs have been created in the Canadian economy. We have known higher rates of growth during that period than most other industrialized countries. If my friend takes the trouble of reading the speech, he will find that the economic record of our country since 1968 is indeed one of the best of all industrialized countries.

UNEMPLOYMENT RATES IN CANADA AND UNITED STATES

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. He has claimed that we are using rhetoric to alter the facts. He is using rhetoric to misrepresent the facts. He persists in saying that the number of people entering the labour force in Canada is greater than the number in the U.S. The facts show that for the last six months the percentage increase is exactly the same for both countries. The figure is .5 per cent.

Why does the Minister blatantly misrepresent the facts when trying to explain why unemployment in the U.S. has dropped substantially, about 18 per cent in the last six months, compared to a marginal drop in unemployment in Canada of about 2.6 per cent?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I may remind my hon. friend that the growth rate of the Canadian economy in 1983 compared very favourably with that of the U.S. economy. During the first two or even three months of this year, it seems the U.S. economy experienced a very high growth rate, as much as 7.2 per cent real growth. I am not in a position to know exactly what the growth rate was in Canada, but eventually StatsCan will publish these figures, and we will then be able to compare. Once more, however, what I said about the increase in labour force in 1983 reflects the true situation. In 1983, in Canada, there was a proportional increase in the labour force that was 40 per cent higher than in the United States.

My hon. friend chose to take the figures for the last six months. I referred to the figures for 1983, and perhaps she would care to check those figures.

[English]

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I think the record should show that the Minister of Finance did not answer the question.

AVERAGE WEEKLY WAGE

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal with a second error and omission in the Minister's recent remarks. Last week he said that he agreed with the statement by the Governor of the Bank of Canada, Gerald Bouey, that Canadians are partly to blame for high interest rates because Canadian wage settlements are higher than those in the U.S. In the first nine months of the fiscal year, which is how Statistics Canada measures it, StatsCan reported that the average weekly wage in Canada, excluding agriculture, rose 3.2 per cent. That is well below the 5.1 per cent recorded in the U.S. in the same period. Since the facts contradict the Minister's own statement, why is he unfairly blaming Canadians for his own high interest rate policies?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have just got a very nice example of wilful distortion of a statement made by a senior official. What the Governor of the Bank of Canada has said before the parliamentary committee is on the record. I invite my colleague to go and check exactly what he said. Neither the Governor nor myself has blamed anyone. I invite the Hon. Member to check the words that have been used by the Governor, rather than seriously distorting his statement.

The figures in terms of rates of growth of wages in Canada and the United States over the last few years are there for everyone to see. Last Friday in the House I mentioned a number of figures for the last few years. Those are the figures which were released by official organizations such as Statistics Canada. If my friend does not like those figures, she can argue with Statistics Canada. However, they are there for everyone to see.

If the Hon. Member checked back before 1981 she would see that for years in Canada we have had higher levels of remuneration growth in wage settlements than there have been in the United States. I have indicated that we cannot hope to compete with the United States if, year after year, we have higher rates of settlements than in the United States, unless we are going to have higher productivity than the United States. This is grade one economics. If my friend does not realize that, her case is rather hopeless.

FINANCE

GOVERNMENT'S INTEREST RATE POLICY

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance. Two years ago when interest rates in Canada reached nearly 21 per cent and there were almost 2 million people unemployed, we had been following and were continuing to follow the interest rate policy established by the United States Government. We saw the dire consequences of that action, with more bankruptcies in almost every single sector of the Canadian economy. Is the Government now prepared to risk the same kind of consequences by following the U.S. interest rate to whatever level it reaches, regardless of the effect it will have on the Canadian public?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is a discussion which we already had in great detail last week. I have nothing to add to what I said on the subject last week. However, I may remind my hon. friend that in case he is panicking, there is no reason to believe that in the months to come, interest rates will start rising as they did a few years ago.

All analysts who are looking into the situation, or at least the vast majority, agree that even if interest rates in the United States were to rise, the increase would not be substantial. In fact, there is no reason to believe in the pessimistic scenario given by my hon. friend.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, that is the same answer we got in 1980 and 1981. The difficulty is that there is not an analyst anywhere who fully understands what the consequences will be, or where the rates will go. It will be too late to turn it back once the rates get to 16 and 17 per cent.

EFFECT OF INTEREST RATES ON UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, as reported at page 2331 of Hansard of last week the Minister said: "Mr. Speaker, an increase of one-half of one per cent in the interest rate does not necessarily mean there will be fewer jobs in Canada."

Between 1981 and 1982 each one-half per cent increase in the interest rate resulted in a net loss of 100,000 jobs seasonally unadjusted and 35,000 jobs seasonally adjusted. Is the Minister prepared to follow the upward spiral of interest rates which is now being pursued in the United States, recognizing the loss of jobs that will result in Canada if we follow it lock-step as we did through the years 1980 through 1983?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, surely my friend recognizes that an increase of one-half of one per cent in interest rates does not necessarily lead to higher unemployment. It depends on a number of other factors, including the general economic environment, the confidence of consumers, the expectations of businessmen as to what will happen in terms of consumer demand, and the world demand for a number of products in the mining and forestry industries, to mention only two.

To find evidence that jobs can still be created and unemployment reduced, even though there may be some slight increase in the interest rates, one has only to look at the situation in the United States in the last three months. In the United States there has been an edging up of rates since January. They have still been creating jobs very quickly and have known a very high rate of growth in their economy.

Along with my friend I recognize that large increases in interest rates would indeed have a very serious, dampening effect on the economy. However, the type of increase which has occurred, or is likely to occur, is not necessarily one which would lead to a decline in employment. On the contrary, the evidence from the United States in the last few months seems to indicate that there can still be strong growth in the face of edging up of interest rates. Obviously our preference would be for interest rates to be lower and to continue the downward trend which existed last year. The object of our policy is to have the lowest possible interest rates in this country.

• (1430)

EFFECT OF INTEREST RATES ON BUSINESS SECTOR

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, back in 1979 the present President of the Treasury Board said: "The effect of each one-half per cent increase in interest rates results in a loss of $375 million to the business sector". Given the fact that a figure like that, if calculated based on today's values, would be considerably higher than $375 million, how can the Minister stand in his place and suggest for one moment that if interest rates rise by one-half of one per cent, albeit incrementally, there will not be a net loss in the number of jobs if there will be in fact a net loss in the amount of revenue that goes to every company in Canada?

Why does the Minister insist that it would be better to wait, hoping that nothing goes wrong, than to take an independent path for Canadians and establish, once and for all, that we have the power and the right to determine what kind of future Canadians ought to have?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the very nice rhetoric of the Hon. Member. It would be very interesting if the NDP were to put this into mechanics and show us what they would be proposing specifically, in terms of policy and mechanics, and how they will have interest rates in Canada that are significantly lower than in the United States while still having growth in this country and still increasing the real income of the workers. It will be very interesting to see what they will come up with, rather than the rhetoric they are giving us.

With respect to his question, again I refer him to the period that preceded the recession we experienced in 1981-82. At that time interest rates went up quite rapidly and significantly.

Mr. Deans: Incrementally.

Mr. Lalonde: Businessmen still kept investing and borrowing. We knew very high rates of growth while interest rates were growing. Obviously we reached a point when there was an abrupt stop, and then decline and recession, but if my friend checks the facts he will learn that, during the rise of interest rates, investors in this country, businessmen, continued to borrow and invest very rapidly and significantly.

You must look at these things in terms of the context of the situation. At the present time there is no reason to believe that the slight increase we have known in the prime rate will lead to a decline in employment.

Mr. Deans: If it does?

Mr. Lalonde: We will see in the next few weeks and months exactly what will happen in the economy. We are monitoring the situation carefully. If need be, we will make the necessary adjustments. In the meantime I see no reason to change the basic policy that we have been following.

Mr. Deans: What adjustments?

GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING

RAIL EXPANSION ADVERTISEMENT

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Deans: What adjustments?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster has the floor. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain had seven minutes and two supplementaries.

Mr. McKnight: I certainly hope you are as lenient with me, Mr. Speaker, as you were with that Member.

On March 8 of this year an erroneous and misleading advertisement, entitled "Canada's Rail Expansion Program", appeared in The Financial Post. It stated that $16.5 billion of investment would be made by the railroads by 1991, and some 375,000 new jobs would be created. The Minister knows that his own Department estimates that the investment by the railroads by 1991 will only be $12.5 billion, and the railroads' admission is that there will only be 155,000 new jobs created. Will the Minister stop this self-serving and misleading advertising paid for by the taxpayers of Canada?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that the Hon. Member did not attend the full meeting of the Transport Committee last Thursday when we spent several hours talking about the whole grain expansion program.

Mr. McKnight: You haven't spent several hours yet.

Mr. Axworthy: It would have given us an opportunity to have a much broader and more diversified discussion. I would point out to him that the impact of the Western Grain Transportation Bill is still very substantial. In this year alone some $1.1 billion of new capital investment will be going into the Canadian economy, providing a number of major acquisitions, purchases for new equipment, and facilities across the country, from Trenton, Nova Scotia, to the Hamilton area with, of course, substantial investment in the western provinces in which I know he is interested.

The whole point of the advertising is to bring to the attention of the Canadian business community the opportunities that exist under the Grain Transportation Bill for the possibility of a number of new sales and new supplies for the railroads. It is the whole point of the advertising which I hope the Hon. Member will endorse because it is a very strong opportunity for Canadian business to get into a new area of product development.

Mr. McKnight: I will repeat my question to the Minister but, as an aside, the Minister has not spent several hours in the Standing Committee on Transportation since he has become Minister.

REQUEST THAT ADVERTISEMENT BE STOPPED

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, in light of the statements by his own Department that $12.5 billion is all that the railroads will invest between now and 1991, and the railroads' statement that there will only be 155,000 jobs created, will he stop this misleading advertisement? In view of his decision not to seek the leadership of his Party and to support the candidate from the Canadian Pacific, will you stop spending taxpayers' money to advertise erroneous information?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will address his remarks to the Chair.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it would help if the Hon. Member stopped making silly, gratuitous statements in the House of Commons. Then we could get down to some serious exchanges in Question Period.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: I see we have rattled their cages again. The fact of the matter is that the change in those estimates does not affect the job factor substantially because part of the reduction in capital investment is due to the reduction in the inflation rate between the time the original forecasts were made and what we have been able to succeed in bringing it down to since that period of time. It only makes good sense that, if you reduce the inflation rate, less capital goes in but you still get the same job impact as a result.

CONTENT OF ADVERTISEMENT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Transport tell us if the advertisement in The Financial Post of March 8 is true?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think I have already explained. Again I would register my—

Mr. Blenkarn: Yes or no.

Mr. Axworthy: We will try to answer the question when we are ready. The fact of the matter is that—

Mr. Blenkarn: It is false.

Mr. Axworthy: —the advertisement that was put into The Financial Post, as I said to the previous questioner, is designed to provide information to the Canadian business public because of the opportunities that that capital investment offers for the business community to begin supplying a wide range of new facilities and equipment.

We are presently reforecasting the total expenditure over that period of time in light of a new improved economic condition that this country is facing. We have to revise the numbers because of that new forecast. We will revise them. What is true is that that Western Grain Transportation Bill is one of the most important economic investments ever made in the history of this country.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ISSUE NEW ADVERTISEMENT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): We have a most remarkable situation here. The Minister of Transport has admitted that his advertisement is false, at least in part. He now tells us in the House of Commons which parts, which subparagraphs of his advertisement are true, and consequently which are false.

When will the Government start telling the truth? Is the Government going to issue a new advertisement, paid for by the Liberal Party, because it was their Minister who told the falsehood, that sets forth the true facts? Will he give us an undertaking now that he will stop this lying by advertising at public expense?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Member has a wonderful facility for being able to twist and turn a very simple, basic fact into something that is totally distorted in relation to the opportunity. I would ask the Conservative Party if they are now prepared to say that they do not favour that investment of billions of dollars that will be going into the Canadian economy? Are they opposed to the expansion and modernization of that transportation line? Are they prepared to have an advertisement, paid for by the Conservative Party, which would state for the first time where they stand on western transportation, because we have never heard them say in the House what their stand on the issue was?

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ISSUE ANOTHER ADVERTISEMENT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister start to tell the truth? Will he issue another advertisement that corrects this false advertisement, paid for by the people of Canada, to advance the interests of the Liberal Party?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as I explained in the committee, which the Right Hon. Member did not attend—because we went through this examination—the advertisements were originally commissioned some six weeks ago. The new forecasts, which are not even yet completed and will not be completed for another week, revise those forecasts down. I can hardly be expected to be so prescient as to be able to tell six weeks ago what a forecast that will not be available for the next week would have in it.

• (1440)

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: If the forecasts are different, we would then change the advertisement.

Oral Questions

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

FARMER'S REQUEST FOR LOWER INTEREST RATE

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: Leader.

Mr. Hovdebo: During the last few days I have received many letters regarding the interest rates charged by the Farm Corporation. I want to quote from one letter as follows:

> This interest rate is very high and I am having trouble making my payments. I am wondering if there is some way that this loan could be changed to a lower rate of interest.

The letter is signed by a Mr. William R. Walter who lives in Codette, Saskatchewan.

Can the Minister give me an answer that I can pass on to Mr. Walter?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member can tell his constituent that my concern for his constituent is as great as his.

Mr. Stevens: Throw your hat in the ring.

Mr. Crosbie: Don't forget to put your head in it.

Mr. Whelan: We are investigating and trying to find a way that we can lower the interest rate for about 8,700 farmers who are paying as high as 16.75 per cent. As I said in the House the other day—and this question has been asked several times, Mr. Speaker—when we were loaning that money at that rate, 16¼, 16½, 16.75 per cent, the cheapest the farmers could get it was 20 per cent, 21 per cent, and 22 per cent. Also we subsidized that rate. For some of them it was 5 per cent, and for some of them 4 per cent subsidization—

Mr. Stevens: Did you?

Mr. Whelan: —which brought the rate down in some instances to 12 per cent, and in some instances to below 12 per cent. To say that we have not done anything—and the Hon. Member has not said that, but I am surmising what his supplementary question is going to be—we have done more here probably than any other part. We are concerned and we are hoping to put forward a paper to work out a long-term policy on these rates if we can.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER EXTEND EMERGENCY AID PROGRAM

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Agriculture. One in seven Farm Credit Corporation borrowers is in arrears and in trouble. Since the Minister of Finance has indicated that he has no intention of doing anything about the high and increasing interest rates, would the Minister of Agriculture extend, at least for those few farmers who are getting some benefits from his emergency program, the program beyond April 1 and make it available to another 8,000 farmers who are in trouble because of the high interest rates of this Government?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member refers to the Minister of Finance, let me say the Minister of Finance has been very responsive in the past when we have made requests to assist farmers who found themselves in financial difficulty. He has not told me that he is not going to be responsive to any reasonable, constructive suggestion that I am liable to make to him.

GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING

COST OF ADVERTISEMENT ON TRADE

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for International Affairs.

Mr. Regan: Minister of International Trade.

Mr. Nielsen: I am sorry, Minister of International Trade. I certainly would not want to downgrade a potential leadership candidate like him, Sir.

Mr. Crosbie: In the 21st Century.

Mr. Nielsen: Did his department, or the Department of External Affairs, pay for an eight page, full colour advertisement appearing in The Globe and Mail today lauding the awesome accomplishments in the field of External Affairs personally brought about by the Minister and the Government and bearing no relationship whatever in terms of our foreign trade being due to any other factor, such as the falling dollar? The question is related to the justification for the expense in printing that kind of trash.

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, Canadians—

Mr. Crosbie: Throw your hat in the ring, Gerry.

Mr. Stevens: You are their only hope.

An Hon. Member: You can walk in the fog.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Regan: They are unruly today, Prime Minister.

Mr. McDermid: Do you have to check in every five minutes?

Mr. Regan: I am very happy to do so.

The Hon. Member belongs to a Party that never likes to hear good news. I am surprised at the fact that he can greet as bad news something that I consider to be the subject for tremendous satisfaction and enthusiasm, and that is the job that we are doing in international trade.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Regan: Last year we had an $18 billion trade surplus, Mr. Speaker. At this stage in a recovery usually you get a flattening out in the amount of the trade surplus because, as the economy recovers, people tend to buy more imported goods. That is particularly true when you consider how soft the European currencies are against ours and the difficulty of selling into Europe because of the currency situation.

You mention the question of the Canadian dollar vis-à-vis the American dollar. Compare the disadvantage that we have because European currencies have gone down some 40 per cent against ours in the last four years, and consider the fact that the less developed countries have no credit worthiness to buy much in the way of imports these days.

Mr. Crosbie: Move over, Turner.

Mr. Regan: Yet we build an $18 billion surplus. Our trade figures—our exports—are at an all-time high. I want the Hon. Member to know that I have got that Department just a-hummin', and I am proud of what it sells.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: Well, by George, Sir, if that Department is just a-hummin' it's the only damn thing over there that is.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: That was not, however, what I was asking the Minister.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, quite apart from the fact that the reason for the increase in trade is the deep depression that we are in, and quite apart from the fact that we are not importing, what about the advertisement? What about the hundreds of thousands of dollars that go to pay for an eight-page full advertisement which does nothing more than pat the Minister on the back and pat the Government on the back? Are we to expect this kind of thing? What about the activities of the Minister of Transport and those of other Ministers? The expenditure of taxpayers' dollars on this kind of trashy advertisement—is this the kind of thing we can expect from now until the election?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen that ad, and I will have a look at it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Regan: I want to say to the Hon. Member through you, Sir, that I consider an ad of that type in relation to what we are doing and what we can do in exports—

Mr. Nielsen: Remember you have not seen it.

Mr. Regan: —to be tremendously important.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Regan: Let me tell the Hon. Member very briefly why. As well as we are doing in exports, we can do a great deal better if we can get an orientation by more companies and more businessmen in this country toward exports, to recognize what is being done, and how, in product after product, we are successfully competing with the best in the world, outdoing the United States in telecommunications exports, in relation to mass transit equipment, and in many other fields, but unfortunately we do not yet have enough companies here in this country that are aggressively developing our export markets. That ad helps to bring the importance of that to their attention. I hope that you will review your position and agree—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must remind the Hon. Minister to address his remarks to the Chair.

Mr. McDermid: You had hair when that picture was taken, Gerry.

FISHERIES

WHITE COAT SEAL HUNT—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans but in his absence I will address it to his Parliamentary Secretary. The Parliamentary Secretary will know that the Conservative Party, through its official critic, the Hon. Member for South Shore, has asked the Government of Canada on several occasions in the last few weeks to impose a ban on the white coat hunt for seals. The Parliamentary Secretary should also know that yesterday in Newfoundland the Minister of Fisheries for that province publicly disagreed with that policy and publicly complained that neither he nor anyone else in the industry or in the Province was consulted.

Can the Parliamentary Secretary tell this House, and more importantly assure fishermen, assure industry players, assure provincial Governments with whom we need to consult to have a successful fishery policy in this country, that this Government will not be acting arbitrarily and will not have a knee-jerk reaction to a policy which I am told does not even meet with the approval of the Hon. Member for St. John's West?

● (1450)

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member, all Members of the House and all Canadians, will know that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans has strongly defended the industry and fishermen in this country. His statements have been very consistent and he has not given into threats or blackmail on this issue. The Hon. Member is quite correct in saying that the Hon. Member for St. John's East has publicly stated that he has not been consulted in his caucus or by the critic for his Party about the recently announced policy of the Official Opposition. The Government's policy remains the same—strong and consistent.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PACIFIC PETREL PROJECT—REQUEST FOR RELEASE OF REPORT

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. As the Minister is no doubt aware, I made official application three weeks ago for access to the report of the inquiry into the Pacific Petrel affair. Since a wooden sailing ship can hardly be considered of strategic importance or of national security relevance, why is the Minister stonewalling my request? He has had the report on the Petrel for some three months. How much longer must we wait to find out the truth about this mismanagement of public funds?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the report is being prepared for delivery to the hon. gentleman within the time set out in the statute.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I hope it will not run its full time, because the report was prepared three months ago and I should like to see it urgently.

COURT MARTIAL PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. The commander of Maritime Forces Pacific has stated in The Times-Colonist of Victoria that he knew about the Pacific Petrel project all along, as did the senior staff at National Defence Headquarters, yet the Department is court-martialling a relatively junior player in this drama and making him the scapegoat for everyone from the Vice-Chief of Defence Staff down.

Will the Minister now release the inquiry and assure the House that no action will be taken against National Defence personnel without a full, public revelation of the facts?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows, as a former Minister of National Defence, disciplinary action is taken within the Department by the officer responsible for the command in question. That is the procedure that has been followed in this instance. The hon. gentleman knows full well that the proceedings will be commencing tomorrow. I hope that he will not ask me to start commenting on proceedings that are in progress. I will abstain from doing so.

FINANCE

COST OF GOVERNMENT BORROWINGS

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In view of his projections in the February Budget of the cost of government borrowings of approximately $20 billion, I should like to know what interest rate he used to calculate that cost? Does he accept the fact that a .5 per cent increase in interest rates in Canada represents as much as $750 million in additional government expenditures?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's mathematics may be all right assuming that these interest rates will last all year, but there is no reason to believe that this will be the case.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister. He knows that government borrowings already take as much as 90 per cent of Canadian savings. In itself this represents a major pressure on interest rates. Notwithstanding the Minister's previous answer, what principle will the Minister use to accommodate that additional cost to the Government? Will he increase taxes to compensate for the additional cost, will he decrease services, or will he increase the deficit?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, my friend will have to wait for the fiscal year report for 1984-85.

INDUSTRY

PETROCHEMICAL TASK FORCE REPORT

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Following on the presentation of the report of the petrochemical task force—and I believe that the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin asked the Minister of Finance about this last week—I should like to know the position the federal Government is taking vis-à-vis action on the report. Many Governments are involved, and producers and producing provinces are also involved. Given the fact that the report was commissioned by the federal Government and done by the private sector, what role have the federal Government, and the Minister's Department in particular, taken?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we have had some meetings with the industry, and my colleague, the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development, and I are working on the problem. One possibility is conversion from oil to natural gas. We are having discussions at the present time with the Government of Alberta about an incentive price for new quantities of natural gas in the market. After my last discussion with Mr. Zaozirny he was supposed to come up with a reduction in the price of new quantities of natural gas. I am still waiting for his answer but I hope to talk to him this week. This will go a long way toward resolving the problems of the petrochemical industry in the East.

There is also a responsibility on the Ontario Government because a lot of investment in the Sarnia area has to be protected. I hope the Ontario Government will want to play a role there.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR REDUCTION OF MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Housing starts in Canada reached a peak in 1976 with 273,000 units. They declined to 126,000 units in 1982 and slowly picked up to 162,000 in 1983. They are already beginning to stall in 1984 because of the decrease in disposable income. Now they will be further depressed because of higher interest and mortgage rates. Considering that this will destroy any hope for recovery in the lumber and construction industries, what steps will the Minister take to bring mortgate rates down so that Canadians can once again build and purchase homes?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should know that the figures for housing in the early part of the year have picked up. The forecast is for increased housing construction in 1984 compared to 1983. As far as the lumber industry is concerned, the Hon. Member knows that a larger part of that industry depends on the American market for its production and that a relatively small share of the total production is consumed in Canada. A good part of it is also consumed abroad. The housing market in the United States looks quite good at the present time. There is no reason to believe that the lumber industry will encounter more difficulties this year than last year; on the contrary, we are confident that things will improve.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN LUMBER AND CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRIES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, housing starts in January were 129,000. That is not good enough for the Canadian industry. While we depend on the American market for lumber, it is also important that the Canadian market be high enough to take its share of the lumber industry. Forest workers in Canada have had two years of depression-level unemployment; 30 per cent of construction workers are laid off across Canada, and carpenters in Victoria have a 70 per cent unemployment rate.

In light of these facts, how high does unemployment amongst lumber workers and construction workers have to go before their voice is as loud as the voice of Governor Bouey? How high do interest rates have to go before the Minister takes action to protect Canadian jobs?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have to repeat to the Hon. Member that we expect housing starts this year to be higher than they were last year.

AIR SAFETY

CANADIAN AIR SAFETY BOARD—MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The question is a few weeks old but it has lost none of its importance. On February 10 a press release from the Prime Minister's office stated that the Minister of Transport was to be responsible for the Canadian Air Safety Board, yet Mr. Justice Dubin's report was explicit in saying that anyone but the Minister of Transport was to be named to this position. Can the Minister of Transport tell the House why this was done in complete opposition to the Dubin report?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the rationale for that is that we are trying to consolidate and centralize a number of the safety operations in the Department of Transport so that we can have a comprehensive approach to the problem. The Canadian Air Safety Board does not in any way respond to any ministerial direction; I simply report to Parliament for it. It has a complete, detached, arm's length reference. This means that we are able to keep an overview of all safety activities and to ensure that we have a full and proper safety approach. That is virtually our No. 1 priority, and that is the rationale for this action.

DUBIN REPORT RECOMMENDATION

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, it is very obvious that the Minister of Transport does have a handle on all of the things that happen in the air transport industry, and the Canadian Air Safety Board is one of those things. The Standing Committee on Transport and many other committees assume that the Minister of Justice or the Attorney General for Canada would be in a position to reply to the House of Commons on behalf of this Board. It is absolutely fallacious for the Minister to say that there is no conflict. Would he not take another look at this situation to see if he would do the right thing by following Chief Justice Dubin's request and putting it into the hands of another Minister?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member would take another look at the Dubin report he would see that the actual text indicated that it contained the recommendations of several groups which appeared before Mr. Justice Dubin but that Mr. Justice Dubin himself did not have a very strong view on the question. I would like to ask the Hon. Member to take at face value what we are trying to do, because it is very important.

We are trying to deal with the issue of air safety. It is important to have a complete and total picture of what is going on in both the inquiry and investigation side as well as the inspection and setting of standards side. If those two sides were fragmented between different Ministers we would not be able to bring that kind of comprehensive approach to bear. However, I can certainly assure the Hon. Member that there is nothing in the mandate of the aviation safety board which allows the Minister to interfere in any way with its ability to undertake independent inquiries and to report publicly and directly on the results of those inquiries. I have no power to interfere with that in any way, but I do have the ability to match up the activities of the safety board with the other regulatory activities of the Department to make sure that we do have a complete and total understanding of the problem, and the ability to respond to the problem in a policy way.

TRANSPORT

BRACKEN FORMULA FOR ALLOCATING HOPPER CARS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Transport whether or not he is satisfied with the Bracken formula for allocating hopper cars and whether or not he anticipates any change to the formula. Does he think that the formula has the effect of keeping the big companies big and the small companies small? Is he causing any studies to take place with respect to the Bracken formula? Would he tell us what his intentions are?

An Hon. Member: Good question.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Hon. Member who said that it is a good question. However, it is a question of great magnitude as well, and one that hardly can be answered within the realm of Question Period.

I would point out to the Hon. Member that that is the whole purpose of having the Senior Grain Transportation Committee. It brings all of the major participants in the grain transportation system in western Canada together to meet on a monthly basis and examine issues exactly related to the efficient use and allocation of cars in the grain system. I will certainly be glad to refer the question to the Grain Transportation Committee so it can refer back to me about the Hon. Member's concern.

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions presented by Hon. Members on Friday, March 23, 1984, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

The Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney) has served notice of a point of order.

PRIVILEGE

MISS CARNEY—ALLEGED UNPARLIAMENTARY REMARKS BY MR. LALONDE

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a question of privilege arising out of the remarks made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) in answer to a question which I asked him. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that today I referred to his support for the remark made by the Governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Bouey, indicating that Canadians are partly to blame for high interest rates because wage settlements are higher here than in the United States. In his answer the Minister of Finance said that I wilfully misrepresented this statement.

As you are fully aware, Mr. Speaker, it is parliamentary to say that a Member misrepresented the facts but it is unparliamentary to say that a Member attempted to misrepresent the facts and, further, it is unparliamentary to say that a Member wilfully misrepresented the facts. Therefore, I respectfully ask the Chair to direct the Minister to withdraw his remarks.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I see that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) is not present in the House so he will of course have to examine today's record and take note of the question of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney). In the meantime, in considering the matter, it might assist the Chair to refer to page 112 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms where the words "misrepresent" and "misrepresentation" appear as being one of those instances where it has been ruled parliamentary to use such an expression.

However, at page 109 of the same edition of Beauchesne's, an example of an unparliamentary expression is set forth as being "attempted to misrepresent", because obviously by using the word "attempted", one is attributing a state of mind and inferring a deliberate intention on the part of the Member to misrepresent.

My submission to you in support of the point of privilege of the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre, Sir, is that if it is unparliamentary to use the expression "attempted to misrepresent", it is even more unparliamentary to use the expression "wilfully misrepresent". I hope that the Minister will review this exchange and will, hopefully, do the proper thing tomorrow at the first opportunity, which would be to apologize and withdraw the offending expression.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will make note of this and will examine the record.

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-3, An Act relating to cash contributions by Canada in respect of insured health services provided under provincial health care insurance plans and amounts payable by Canada in respect of extended health care services and to amend and repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, and Motion No. 4 (Mr. Halliday).

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, at one o'clock, when the House took recess, the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) had presented his amendment to Bill C-3. I would now like to summarize for the House the history of Clause 12 as amended by the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, to clarify the reasons for the present form of this Clause in the Bill, the report stage of which is now being considered by the House, and the exact implications of the amendment being proposed by the Hon. Member for Oxford.

Mr. Speaker, the House will recall, and the Hon. Member himself referred to this point, that Mr. Justice Hall has always indicated the inherent duality of eliminating extra-billing, which he proposed, and the need for providing doctors with a framework for negotiations with the provinces which are responsible for setting standards of compensation for insured health services. More specifically, Mr. Speaker, when he appeared before the Committee, Mr. Justice Hall indicated that the binding arbitration procedure which he recommended in his 1980 report should not be imposed through legislation, and should certainly not constitute a fundamental condition for implementing the federal legislation.

Aware of this dilemma, Committee members examined the concept, favoured by Mr. Justice Hall and recommended, much later, by the Canadian Medical Association—I say much later, because originally, the Association did not see the need for it—in order to see to what extent this framework for discussion could be incorporated into the federal legislation, while leaving intact the concept of shared responsibility or jurisdiction, it being understood that health is a provincial responsibility, generally speaking, with respect to providing services, allocating resources, and setting priorities, while federal jurisdiction covered spending powers and a responsibility, taken on twenty-five years ago, for making federal transfer payments, provided the five essential conditions are met.

Now, the concept of reasonable compensation, since that is what we are talking about here, which was in the original 1966 legislation on health care, went as far as the Canadian Government thought it could go in urging participating provinces to ensure that their doctors received "reasonable" compensation, a subjective concept, I agree, which is or was in Bill C-3 as originally introduced in the House, considered at the second reading stage and referred to Committee.

The Committee had to decide, first of all, whether or not this framework for discussion, this framework for negotiations leading to binding arbitration—arbitration, that is, always preceded by negotiations—could be put in the federal legislation without interfering directly with the responsibility of the provinces which, with respect to negotiations, and I was referring earlier to compensation, is not contested. The answer was yes, after lengthy discussions in Committee. We decided that this framework could be incorporated in the federal legislation. The second question, a corollary of the previous one, was to decide whether or not we had to impose, on the ten participating provinces, this framework for discussion and negotiations and, eventually, binding arbitration, within the concept or general framework of reasonable compensation.

The Committee decided: no, we did not want to impose binding arbitration on the provinces but we would leave it up to the provinces to operate within the framework of the negotiations specified and enumerated in paragraph 2 of clause 12 as amended in Committee.

I think that is the basic element which enables us now to reply to the argument and the amendment moved by the Hon. Member for Oxford. Indeed, if subclause (2) is optional—and so it is, obviously—we must check whether or not the proposed amendment nullifies that option. I say it does because subclause (2) provides that, if the provinces and the medical associations involved have signed and agreed on a negotiating formula, the reasonable compensation criterion will be respected. On the other hand, if there is no agreement, the reasonable compensation criterion takes precedence—the subjective criterion which remains and which, in the final analysis, will always leave the Minister of National Health and Welfare free to intervene if necessary and apply the penalties mentioned in clause 14 and the following clauses of the Bill.

Now, what would happen if the amendment of the Hon. Member for Oxford were adopted? By adding the word "only", we would inevitably commit the legal negotiating structure proposed under the reasonable compensation clause. Without legal structure, without agreement among the provinces, the federal Minister would necessarily have to resort to penalties as provided for in the Bill and as the federal Minister is authorized to do pursuant to the Bill. I respect the Hon. Member for Oxford for what he is attempting to do, and I might add that I agree with him that we ought to make sure that Canadian medical practitioners do receive reasonable compensation and have the means to obtain it. But still the basic problem remains unsolved and we have to cut the Gordian knot. Yes or no, does the House want to force the mechanism proposed in the Bill on the provinces?

It is an issue or a problem which is difficult to solve and I would rather not get into a lengthy argument on the delicate balance between the federal presence and the provincial responsibilities in the field of health care, for we all know the conditions of that essential balance. Personally, I would much prefer that the Canadian Government did not force—I repeat, force—the provinces and the medical associations concerned, through the new Canada Health Act, to accept any legal structure whatsoever. In my opinion, that is exactly what would happen if we were to adopt the amendment of the Hon. Member for Oxford.

Although I appreciate what he is attempting to do, that is why I cannot support his amendment since it would force the provinces to accept a structure which the committee made sure would not be compulsory.

● (1520)

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, this amendment was proposed in committee and there is quite a history behind it. I think it is important, in order to understand what is being proposed, to look at the background of this amendment proposed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday). It has always been difficult to answer a number of questions on a national health scheme, but one question which has always been front and centre is: How do you establish a national health scheme yet retain professional freedom within that scheme? The definition of professional freedom might have various dimensions or parameters depending on the observer, but what has happened through the years is that a certain equilibrium has been established between the province, represented primarily by the Ministry of Health, the Health Services Commission, and the medical profession, generally represented by a provincial organization or the umbrella body, the Canadian Medical Association.

It is interesting to note that Mr. Justice Hall, in his report studying the health care system, which report was commissioned by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) when he was Minister of National Health and Welfare, made two fundamental points. He said that extra billing and user fees had the potential or eroding medicare as Canadians had come to understand it. We can argue about the consultation process, and I am going to get to that on third reading, but for the purpose of this debate the perception of Mr. Justice Hall was that that was a potential problem. However, he never looked at the solution to that problem, as he identified it, in isolation.

He also recognized that the primary focus of the health care system had to be service to Canadians first. In order to have proper service, the health care professionals had to feel not only that they were being fairly treated, but that their professionalism was being recognized. The other half of the argument that he put forward was that if extra billing was either to be outlawed or penalties for its use applied, which could eventually lead to its demise, then there had to be reasonable and fair compensation for the medical profession.

Members can argue that those are two almost irreconcilable points of view. When you add thereto the reality of federal-provincial jurisdictional components and responsibilities, you come up with a very difficult problem to solve, if a solution can be found. That is why, Mr. Speaker, just on that narrow ground, it was our preference that negotiations with the provinces take place before the Canada Health Act is brought in. But that is not what we have been facing over these past few weeks. That being the case, when one comes to the operative words "reasonable compensation", what does it mean and how do you get it?

I said that what is reasonable would vary with the individual. I cannot speak for the Canadian Medical Association, but I know there are a lot of discussions within that organization and their provincial affiliates as to how to address this matter of the established equilibrium being eroded. There was this new factor, that of a penalty being imposed if extra billing continues. I do not know what the legal fees relating to this clause are, Mr. Speaker, but I know that an awful lot of work went into the clause, and so at least in part we addressed the question. I say "in part". What concerns me, if we do not accept this amendment, is this nebulous but real relationship which a professional has to his or her place of work. That is real. I know that the majority of Canadians say they wanted penalties for extra billing, but the existing mechanism had created an understanding, an equilibrium. All the committee tried to do was to restore some mechanism whereby, if the equilibrium, the fairness and reasonableness, is not achievable, then at least the mechanism to try and reach those goals might be set up. I am convinced that if we do not have that kind of mechanism, the medical profession will feel that their professionalism, their training and their service is not recognized adequately. I am not talking about dollars, I am talking about attitude. It is part of professionalism. That is why I think this amendment is so important.

If we were to have that kind of negative attitude toward the system and the manner in which the services are provided and compensated for, who would suffer most? That is the question we have to ask. Is it the medical profession? Is it potentially the Canadian public who needs the service? I am not saying that doctors will automatically try to provide an inferior service, but I think we have to deal with the psychology of the situation and with how a professional views himself or herself. That is the point I am trying to get across. I suggest that the manner in which the Ontario Medical Association puts forward its case does not augur well for the manner in which the problems endemic to the health care system will be resolved.

I do not subscribe to the concept that this is conscription—I want to make that very clear. It is not civilian conscription. If you look at many professional groups, having established a salary and working conditions, that is their contract. But within this system I suggest it would be detrimental to the public if we saw the Canadian medical profession, either by their rhetoric, their actions or the actions of this House, being pushed into or moved into a position where they feel that what we often call job action is justified. The greatest hurt would then be inflicted on those Canadians who need health care services.

It does not do the Canadian Medical Association or health care providers any good, who, through a bargaining mechanism, withdraw their services from the ill. I must admit I do not have a lot of evidence that that kind of action has in fact benefited the profession. Maybe this goes back to my relationship to a profession I was once in. I never felt that job action was a better solution than sitting down around a table and, no matter how long it took, or how frustrating the experience, eventually as adult men and women coming up with an agreement.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired. Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. Member to continue?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member may continue his remarks.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I thank Hon. Members for their courtesy. I would like to say, that being the case, I urge Members to once again examine this motion. I believe we have come some distance toward addressing the problems which have been put forward by my colleague and others. I believe that we could strengthen the solution which the committee came up with after hours of hard work. I commend the motion, Mr. Speaker, to the House in order that within months we will not have job action or the potential of job action which would hurt those Canadians who need the service of the medical system.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, even though I speak in support of the amendment by the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) I have never accepted the argument which was put forward by the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) that there is some kind of inextricable link between professionalism and extra billing. I have always found it very difficult to understand how the professionalism of one profession, in this case the medical profession, could be so bound up with the ability to extra bill patients when the professionalism of other professions is unrelated to whether or not they are able to bill clients over and above what they are paid through their salary.

Having said that, I would like to say that I have always supported, on behalf of my Party, the recommendation of Justice Hall that the outlawing of extra billing in any particular province go hand in hand with binding arbitration procedures in those provinces. I have stood up in the House on many occasions over the past four years and called on the Minister to do something about the erosion of medicare represented by extra billing. Many times I included in my representations to her our support for the concept of binding arbitration. Therefore, I have no problem supporting an amendment which I know has the support of the Canadian Medical Association, a group I am normally not in agreement with. I do not do this out of any affection for their Association, particularly given their most recent activity; I do it in the interest of consistency and in the interest of the position I have taken since the beginning of this debate on the erosion of medicare and how extra billing ought to be eliminated.

In that respect I would submit that we are unlike the other two Parties in the House. We are unlike the Tories who never said boo about extra billing. I invite people to check the record. I invite them to search through Hansard high and low, between the lines, through the lines and around the lines to find out if anyone in the House on behalf of the P.C. Party ever expressed a concern about extra billing before the Canada Health Act was actually tabled and a political judgment was made that the Act would be supported, which is fair enough. We were calling for the elimination of extra billing and for binding arbitration when others were paying no attention at all to extra billing.

This gives me an opportunity to make a general comment which is related to the concern of the Hon. Member for Provencher about professionalism. In recent days with the turning over of the membership list of the Canadian Medical Association to the National Citizens' Coalition, as was reported in the newspapers, and with the full page ads—

Mr. Epp: The Ontario Medical Association, not the Canadian Medical Association.

Mr. Blaikie: I am sorry, the Ontario Medical Association—I stand corrected and the turning over of their membership list to the National Citizens' Coalition and the full page ads taken out by the National Citizens' Coalition against the Canada Health Act. Not only that, but the ads we have seen in the Ottawa area recently, where the monitors are going, "beep, beep, beep" is supposed to be what is happening to medicare as a result of the Canada Health Act. I am known to be a critic of doctors. I do not have high expectations of them, but I have maintained my respect for them as professionals through all the debates we have had from one end of the country to the other, whether in Victoria with the special parliamentary task force on federal-provincial fiscal arrangements, or in the committee hearings on the Canada Health Act.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I think some of the things which have gone on lately have brought shame to the vocational integrity of the medical profession in Canada. I am genuinely, deeply disappointed. There must be thousands of doctors who feel as I do. I certainly hope that is the case. I am confident that is the case. I hope they will make it known to their various leaders that they have had enough of being embarrassed in the way that they have been embarrassed, particularly in recent weeks, by some of the advertisements we have seen in the Ottawa area. It is to pile dishonour upon dishonour to have the National Citizens' Coalition declare itself to be in alliance with the position the doctors have taken.

This is a terrible thing, Mr. Speaker. I hope the opportunity will present itself for all right thinking doctors to speak out. They may disagree with this Bill and that is fine. Disagreeing with this Bill is a legitimate political stance as long as one is willing to debate it within the bounds of reasonableness.

We do not know what the effects of the Canada Health Act may be. We do not know whether the penalties will have the desired effect in Ontario. We are only talking about what may happen. Provinces still have the freedom to do as they wish with regard to extra billing. Referring to that as civilian conscription, talking about having heart surgery done by civil servants, is the kind of tactics, unreasonableness and fear mongering that is completely unacceptable.

I hope that this debate might mark the beginning of a reform movement within the medical profession itself. I hope that the "old boys' club" could be broken up so that new doctors with fresh ideas of how the medical profession works in greater harmony with other health care practitioners and more accountability to the community might say that they cannot afford to let those in the Canadian Medical Association or Ontario Medical Association represent them throughout the country because they are doing a poor job. I hope that small group within those associations is doing a poor job in speaking for ordinary doctors who often work under difficult circumstances to do their best to care for their patients. Nobody has denied that. I hope the CMA and the OMA are doing a poor job of representing those ordinary doctors in the sense that I hope they are not representative of the views of ordinary people, as we have discovered in our travels throughout the country.

I am disappointed by the medical profession and its participation in this debate. One receives messages from them that are incoherent and quite childish, referring to political fraud. But having said that, I support this amendment because in spite of the doctors, I support fairness for them and a balanced approach to the elimination of extra billing.

I was one of the first to suggest in committee that without an amendment such as that proposed by the Hon. Member for Oxford the legislation would not meet the legitimate needs for some kind of balance as expressed by the doctors. If the Government does not support the amendment it should remove the Conservatives' amendment altogether, since it is merely a poetic or rhetorical addition to the Bill. It does not require anything of the provinces.

Mr. Thacker: It is a statement.

Mr. Blaikie: Perhaps it is. I am simply trying to point out the legal meaninglessness of it. I am acceptable to arguments for leaving it in but I am simply saying that it does not have much effect as it is. It may be legitimately argued that it should be left in because it has some symbolic effect, similar to the amendment for the health care practitioner. In that respect, perhaps it would be better to leave it in.

The provinces do not seem to understand the purpose of the amendment, which is unusual, because usually there is close communication between the CMA and the provinces. The provinces are concerned that the amendment in its present form, without the subamendment by the Hon. Member for Oxford, is far too aggressive and places them in a difficult position. This shows a political irony because the Progressive Conservative Member for Oxford is suggesting that we should be more intrusive. That does not disturb me because I have always wanted the federal Government to be more intrusive in the case of medicare and the preservation of its principles. I am pleased to welcome the Hon. Member for Oxford aboard and to express my happiness that he finally realizes the responsibility of the federal Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, having listened to the oration by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), I am not sure whether his support is an advantage or disadvantage. I will have to weigh what he said very carefully.

In any event, I would like to speak briefly to the amendment that has been put forward by my colleague for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) because Clause 12(2), as it exists in the Bill before us, is in itself an amendment. The words of subsection 2 have been agreed to in committee although they were not the first preference of the Conservative Party members who sat on the committee on Health and Welfare.

The amendment that was put forward in committee by my colleague for Provencher (Mr. Epp) would have provided a much firmer and more equitable system of reasonable compensation than we have before us today. I wish that the Government, in recognizing that there had to be a balance between the removal of extra billing and the provision of a regular schedule of fees for the medical profession, would have accepted what my colleague put forward. If it had done so, the necessity for the amendment by the member for Oxford would have been eliminated.

The amendment by the Member for Provencher would have indicated to the doctors, the provinces and other interested parties that the necessary equality has been carried out in order to make the entire system work. While we have accepted the fact that there should be no extra billing, we have provided a mechanism whereby medical practitioners can be assured of reasonable compensation for the services which they so willingly and devotedly give to Canadians. It would have been a proper step to take, but it was not accepted. Instead, we are faced with the Government's amendment to Clause 12(2) as it is now before us. That amendment embodies the concept of what my colleague from Provencher put before the committee but does not have the strength and therefore, in my view, will not prove satisfactory in the long run.

There are inherent weaknesses in the amendment which the Government has incorporated in this Clause of the Bill. It is in that light that the Hon. Member for Oxford sought to strengthen the Bill, if only minimally. Nevertheless, that amendment does bring some strength and depth to the procedure of providing for reasonable compensation that the present amendment lacks.

When I spoke to other amendments before the House this morning, I talked rather encouragingly—something I do not always do—about the way the Minister and some of her colleagues had been generous enough to at least accept the concept of the amendment, if not the wording, that had been put forward by opposition Parties in committee. They took some steps toward meeting what we thought were those qualities of fairness and justice that were so clearly delineated by Mr. Justice Hall. However, the Government was not totally receptive.

One of the advantages of the report stage of any Bill is that it gives the Government the opportunity for sober second thought. It is not only the other place that has that opportunity, it is provided in our rules and procedures for the Government to come to that stage itself.

I believe that this amendment allows the Government to take a second look at the proposals it has put forward. I am sure that in the light of sober second thought the Minister will see the reasonableness of this amendment, and the need for it. I know that later this day she will want to advise her colleagues that this very small but very important amendment should be incorporated into the Bill because it would strengthen the mechanism that we are now introducing. That would reassure many people who are concerned about the lack of any kind of balance in the Bill. It would reassure them that there is a willingness to see that these difficulties are met, and that in the long run once again we will have a better Bill.

I commend the amendment to the Minister. I am sure she will give it that degree of sober second thought that I have urged upon her. I will be only too happy to see her and members of her party stand in their places later today and indicate their support for this amendment.

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, may I commend at the outset to Hon. Members in this House and to those in the press gallery a reading of the first draft of Bill C-3, the Health Care Act. It went through the proceedings of this House up to and including second reading. I would like Hon. Members to compare that draft with the Bill we have before us this afternoon. After that careful consideration if they do not come to the conclusion that major surgery was done on the Bill, and I refer specifically to clauses 3 and 4 being the objectives and the purposes of the Bill, I would then ask them to refer to clause 12. Just before someone says it is not relevant to the issue let me state that clause 12 itself contains such words as "adequacy of funding" for hospital care, and "reasonableness" of remuneration to medical practioners in the delivery of medicare.

Those words were part of the first draft and part of the indication by this Government when it introduced Bill C-3 that there was going to be a new era in medicare. Witnesses, one after another, came before the standing committee indicating that, yes, while Bill C-3 was limited in its approach, this was simply phase one or stage one to a second or third stage which might quickly follow.

They were disillusioned after they saw the amendments that were introduced by Government Members and the changes that were made to the Bill itself. I supported the continuation of the term adequacy of funding for hospitals. But that was eliminated. The Government did not, and I am glad it did not introduce any resolution with respect to eliminating the word "reasonableness" for medical compensation to our practioners.

The Hon. Mr. Justice Hall, who has often been referred to as the founder of medicare in this country, commissioned as he was to conduct a review ten years after the implementation of medicare, did indicate there was a potential for erosion through user fees and extra billing. He said in his report, and he said during the committee's deliberations, that it was a potential only, that there was no present erosion to the degree that we were not first in the world with respect to medicare, but it had a potential and that, therefore, something should be done about it.

Having regard to suggestions about disturbing, or failing to disturb the equilibrium, obviously that distinguished jurist had in mind that if you eliminate extra billing there has to be something else in its place to protect the income of medical practioners. He suggested as part of that balance that there be compulsory arbitration. First reading of Bill C-3 did not contain any such provision of arbitration or a compensating process. Only after committee deliberation was clause 12(2) introduced, having to do with that arbitration process.

I suggest that even with the introduction of that arbitration process there is no guarantee the Government can deliver on its clause 12 "reasonableness" of compensation if there is no agreement reached between the provinces and the medical profession in each of those provinces, because the default clauses, clauses 14 and 15, do not apply to provisions of this nature. They only apply to whether it is dollar for dollar adjustment of block funding. They only apply where there has been, perhaps, some extra billing by a province or an abuse, if you call it that, with respect to user fees. There is no way that the federal government can guarantee our medical practioners that reasonableness of income.

It is incumbent upon this House to protect those practioners of medicine as far as we can possibly go. That is one of the reasons our party insisted that there be included in the Bill an arbitration process. If today, or before this Bill is finally given Royal assent, we can protect them even further, it is the duty and the responsibility of Members of this Houe so to do. That was the purpose and the intent of motion No. 4 as introduced by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday). If those medical practioners are not to be adequately compensated here in Canada, then I repeat what I said this morning, that the greatest threat to accessibility of medicare is not through extra billing and user fees, the greatest threat will be the lack of skilled practioners in medicine. That is not a risk which this country nor Canadians should take.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): It becomes incumbent upon us this afternoon to impress upon the Minister the desirability of strengthening clause 12(2) by the inclusion of that single word "only" and the responsibility of the Government will only be eliminated, will only be diminished, if the federal Government sees each province enter into a written binding agreement with its medical practioners that will provide them with reasonable compensation for their efforts.

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to take part in this debate and to address the issue raised in Motion No. 4 proposed by the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday). I can understand the Hon. Member for Oxford presenting this kind of an amendment to the House of Commons. It is consistent with his view. He is honest and logical in his view. He has been sincerely concerned about the procedure for compensation and arbitration for the medical profession with or without Bill C-3.

What is very hard to understand, however, is how a party that has, at least up to now, given itself the vocation of not only respecting provincial rights, but defending provincial rights, can be so hypocritical in this kind of situation when it is prescribing, because that will be the effect of the amendment.

The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) says there are only a few words when in fact there is just one word, the word "only". But the effect of inserting the word only in the Bill at this time would be to prescribe to the provinces and to the legislatures of the provinces an arbitration procedure in advance. It would be the Parliament of Canada involving itself in a crude intrusion into the jurisdiction of the provincial legislatures to prescribe an arbitration procedure, not only between two professional groups, which is bad enough, but between professional group and a provincial government in the establishment of a fee schedule. It is pure hypocrisy for a Party to support this kind of amendment, a party that wants people to believe that it respects provincial rights.

There is another reason why I am against this amendment and against prescribing to provincial governments the detailed kind of arbitration procedure set out in Clause 12(1)(c) on page 9 of the Bill. Under a variety of statutes Parliament provides compensation, grants, investment tax credits, loans, loan guarantees and all kinds of assistance to industry or groups in the country without prescribing how their workers are to be compensated.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) wants to be fair to the medical profession—which is a change of heart—and in this case when Parliament, through spending power, provides money to provincial governments under certain conditions he wants to make sure that there is a reasonable and fair compensation or arbitration procedure. Through IRDP, under the Ministry of Regional Industrial Expansion, and through a variety of other programs we provide assistance to provincial governments, companies or groups and do not require that an arbitration procedure be followed. In fact, in many ways the federal Government allocates money to groups that employ workers who are not unionized, but are at the mercy of provincial labour laws.

This amendment is a crude intrusion into the jurisdiction of provincial legislatures. Therefore, it is not acceptable that Parliament should pass it without the agreement of the provinces. It is also inequitable. It says that in the case of the medical profession Parliament should start prescribing arbitration procedures when giving money to provinces for medical care or hospitalization, but this is not prescribed under other programs where money is given to provincial governments for equalization or post-secondary education, for example. Under federal law, many Departments provide money to groups, individuals, provincial governments and business enterprises.

I think the Progressive Conservative Party should make up its mind; either it wants to respect the spirit of the Constitution, the federal-provincial balance when the federal parliament uses the spending power, or it is going to cater to any group in the country that can mount an effective lobby. I think it is trying to show medical practitioners that it is very sympathetic to them; that it did not want to ban extra billing without the doctors having an arbitration procedure. However, it is not ready to say to the medical profession, "Sorry Messieurs et Mesdames, you missed the opportunity when Mr. Justice Hall brought in his report in 1980, when the Parliamentary Task Force on federal-provincial fiscal arrangements reported in 1981, and when the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), at the request of the Province of Saskatchewan, offered to define and control extra billing and twin that with a fair compensation system and an arbitration procedure for the medical profession."

At the time the medical profession totally ignored that and determined it was going to fight the issue of extra billing and user fees at the ideological level. It made the political error of thinking it could convince Cabinet and Members of the House that this was a time of so-called neo-conservatism, that the public wanted less government and it could win by stopping political action on the part of Parliament to discourage extra billing and user fees. It is too bad it made a political mistake. It misread public opinion and it misread Parliament.

Now the Conservatives want to say that they would give a little bit when they know very well that if this amendment were adopted it would be a crude intrusion into provincial jurisdiction. Provinces would take the Bill to court and would probably lose in the Supreme Court. Perhaps that is what the Conservatives want. Perhaps they are afraid to face up to the tough decision to discourage extra billing and user fees. Perhaps this is all a plot on their part to make sure that some provincial governments bring the Bill to court. In that case medicare would go down the drain.

In committee the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) proposed an amendment that would have had the same effect as the one now before us. He justified it by saying that if Parliament moves on extra billing and user fees without provincial agreement, it should be able to move on the question of arbitration without provincial agreement. What he did not say then, and what he did not say today, is that we are not proceeding legally to ban extra billing or user fees. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill made that point, however.

Technically and legally speaking we are not touching the very crucial legal question of extra billing and user fees. What we are doing is putting conditions on moneys that Parliament provides to provinces under its spending power. We are saying that under certain conditions the appropriations to these provinces will be reduced and we are prescribing the extent to which they will be reduced.

The opportunity was there in 1980, it was there in 1981, it was there in 1982 for the provincial governments—with the support of the medical profession if it had seen the writing on the wall—to make sure that Parliament would not move unilaterally in the area of extra billing and user fees unless there was a recommendation, through agreement with the provinces, for an arbitration procedure. The doctors fooled themselves, Mr. Speaker. They made a bad political error and a bad error of judgment. Now they are in the position in some provinces that they do not have any arbitration procedure.

Contrary to the views of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill, I believe that the Government has proposed a meaningful opportunity for the provinces to elect a certain arbitration principle and procedure and that the law would provide that that would satisfy the provision in Clause 12(1)(c) for reasonable compensation. This is important because it provides a model and a moral impetus, a political impetus, to the medical profession in the provinces to get their provincial governments to agree to an arbitration procedure. I believe that kind of moral pressure on the system is good for Parliament and it is within our rights to do it. It will provide a model that we hope some provinces will adopt right away. I believe that two or three of them will apply it right away, and that will mean that the medical profession will have the tool to pressure those provincial governments politically to make sure that they get some kind of arbitration procedure. They deserve it.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, that was an incredible speech. For the Hon. Member to stand up in this House and say that the doctors have made a political mistake is to underline in part what is wrong with the Government's approach to health care in the country. I would prefer—and I think most Canadians would—a doctor capable of diagnosing my gall-bladder problem, my heart problem or my disease. We do not expect doctors to go to university for ten years to study politics. If the health care system is regarded as something necessary to turn doctors into politicians, then I think we have identified one of the key problems of the Government's approach to health care generally.

We are dealing with Clause 12, Mr. Speaker. It begins with the following phrase:

• (1610)

In order to satisfy the criterion respecting accessibility, the health care insurance plan of a province—

A number of subclauses follow. It is a clause dedicated to assuring Canadians access to quality health care. However, does it deal with the issue of accessibility as it may be experienced by a patient? May I suggest to the House that for the most part it totally ignores the problems in the Canadian health care system as they affect the issue of accessibility.

If I were to walk out the front door and get hit by a taxi cab, Mr. Speaker, the first issues of accessibility which would concern me as a patient would be the availability of an ambulance, a hospital bed and a well trained professional to look after me. The problems that exist in the country relating to accessibility are not in the order of paying $5 and having to give up seeing a movie. The problems are the absence of a hopsital bed when needed, the absence of a piece of equipment when needed, and the absence of a medical practitioner when needed.

I have heard the spokesperson for the New Democratic Party say that he does not understand the relationship between the quality of health care provided by a professional person and the fee or income of that professional person. To say that is to live in an environment like that of Alice in Wonderland. We are asking people to commit their lives to health care professions. When they do, what do they face, Mr. Speaker? They face first a long training period. A medical doctor will pay for his education for six to 10 years and gives up income.

When a health care professional graduates, what do we say to him, Mr. Speaker? We say that he should be available to his community 24 hours a day, seven days a week because illness does not respect the clock. Illness is not very pleasant to encounter, neither for the person who is ill nor for the person who cares for that person. We tell health care professionals that we want them to be available 24 hours a day, seven days a week, with their knowledge, expertise and compassion to provide a service to people. We then hear a spokesperson for the Government stand up and talk about labour relations.

Do we want people to enter the health care professions who are more concerned about whether a work day should be seven hours, six hours and 40 minutes or seven hours and 20 minutes; whether a coffee break should be precisely 15 minutes long? Do we really want to apply a labour relations model which was developed for use in factories and assembly line tasks to health care professionals? Do we want to impose that on people who are supposed to be committed, who spend a long time being trained and who professionally upgrade themselves year after year and day after day? Do we want to impose a factory and assembly line model on those people?

When we tell people that they must have a fee schedule, we are telling them that a particular treatment or diagnostic procedure is worth $10, $15 or $22. When talking to patients, we frequently hear them say things like: "Yes, I got in to see my doctor. Sometimes I waited an hour, sometimes I waited two hours but the one thing that I do not feel very happy about is that my doctor did not spend enough time with me. I do not really feel comfortable that he knows about all of my symptoms or all of the things that are wrong with me. I am not really sure about the diagnosis so maybe I will have to try and go back and see him in another week or two." Senior citizens in the country will tell you, Mr. Speaker, that 10, 20 or 30 years ago, that did not happen. The relationship between a patient and a doctor was more fulfilling for both the doctor and the patient.

We now have political Parties, and I put the NDP and the Liberal Party in this category, that view health care as an issue of labour relations and promote models that will lead to assembly line type care in a profession which requires commitment to people. The Government chooses to intrude on the lives of Canadians, patients as well as practitioners, by tackling one tiny part of the accessibility concern and not the most critical part. It chooses to tackle it by saying that it will fine or double tax those people in the province who do not do what the Government tells them they must do. If the Government is going to do that, the thought of the quality of health care professionals I am likely to encounter 10 or 20 years from now scares me to death.

The Government must be willing to try to counterbalance that provision with a provision which will provide some sense of equity and fairness for current and future professionals in the field. If there is no assurance for individuals who choose to enter health care professions that they will be treated equitably, fairly and will be allowed to practise their profession in a caring and compassionate manner, then how can any of us in the chamber encourage the best and brightest of our young people to choose this kind of a profession? How can any of us deal with our children who may be 18, 19 or 20 years of age by saying to them that they should go to school and study medicine, nursing or physiotherapy? How can we say that to them in all good conscience if we also say to them that a group of civil servants and politicians who they will never meet or influence are going to tell them how to do their job, not because that group has any training or experience, but simply because society gives it the power to do so? That is what is wrong, Mr. Speaker.

What is wrong with the approach taken by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) to medicare in the country is that she has no compassion for or understanding of the long-range need for qualified, bright and compassionate people to serve their fellow human beings as health care professionals. She is in danger of doing more damage to the potential of our health care system in the long run than perhaps she really imagines. It is all right to sit in the front row of the House of Commons and be chauffeured around, but out there on the streets people are being hurt, people are sick and those people deserve the best quality brains and compassion the country has to offer. Does she want to treat health care professionals like machines on assembly lines? If she stands in the House later this day and turns down the two amendments proposed by the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday), then she is asking to have assembly line workers providing health care in the country instead of the best, the brightest and the most compassionate professionals. I urge the Government to change its mind before it is too late.

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-3, an Act relating to cash contributions by Canada in respect of insured health services provided under provincial health care insurance plans and amounts payable by Canada in respect of extended health care services and to amend and repeal certain acts in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill) moved:

That Bill C-3 be amended in Clause 15 by striking out line 31 at page 11 and substituting the following therefor:

"made, and said order shall not come into force unless it is affirmed by a resolution introduced and passed in accordance with the rules of those Houses."

He said: Mr. Speaker, this amendment is symbolic, shall we say, of a number of amendments I moved in committee, all of which, if accepted, would have had the effect of providing more parliamentary accountability in the process by which the Government of Canada, within the context of the Bill, could have reduced transfer payments to provinces which were not meeting program conditions other than those concerning extra billing and user fees.

As we know, where violations exist concerning extra billing and user fees there is a non-discretionary formula of a dollar for dollar. What we, and a number of people, were concerned about, as well as witnesses who came before the committee, was that with respect to other criteria there was too much authority given to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) to decide on what the penalty would be to any particular province.

In committee I suggested that instead of the matter being referred by the Minister of National Health and Welfare to the Governor in Council and Cabinet, if the Minister arrived at a judgment that a province was violating principles of accessibility, portability, provision of information, visibility, or whatever, that the matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. In that way Parliament would have an opportunity through one of its committees to look into whatever judgments were being made about a particular province's health care plan by the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

This would have had two effects: First, it would provide a forum in which provinces could go beyond the limited opportunities provided to them for dialogue between themselves and the federal Government with respect to whether they were violating the principles of medicare. It would have provided a forum where their case could have been heard. Presumably, if the provinces had a half decent case, there would be at least one Member of Pariament, or one political party, willing to put its case before the committee. There would be an opportunity for the principles of natural justice to be observed and for the provinces to have more of a hearing than they will get in the process provided for in the Bill as it stands.

Second, Mr. Speaker, I believe such an amendment would go a long way toward meeting some of the objectives which were set out for the future of Parliament by the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedures, which were, and I feel rightly so, that more power should be in the hands of parliamentarians and in the hands of committees of this House, and less power in the hands of cabinet, the Governor in Council and individual Ministers. This amendment would meet that kind of concern, Mr. Speaker.

Instead of this kind of one authority versus another, the Minister of National Health and Welfare versus the ten provincial ministers of health, or a particular Minister of Health, there could be a Committee of the House of Commons involved in the process. This amendment provides that in the final analysis, if the Minister wants to make a reduction in a federal transfer payment to a province, the Minister simply cannot do that by fiat. The Minister would have to do that with the approval of Parliament. This is what this amendment is all about, Mr. Speaker. I believe that all who are concerned about increasing the accountability of cabinet, the Prime Minister's Office and bureaucracy in general—and federal-provincial relations, for that matter—to Parliament, can see in this amendment an opportunity to advance that particular perception. I hope that I will receive support from Hon. Members on those grounds.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 79(11) the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The House will now proceed to consideration of Motion No. 6.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill) moved:

March 21, 1984—That Bill C-3 be amended in Clause 20

(a) by striking out line 28 at page 12 and substituting the following therefor:

"to the province

(a) in respect of the first fiscal year in which the province fails to comply, an amount equal to one dollar for every dollar,

(b) in respect of the second fiscal year in which the province fails to comply, an amount equal to two dollars for every dollar, and

(c) in respect of the third or a subsequent fiscal year in which the province fails to comply, an amount equal to three dollars for every dollar;";

(b) by striking out line 41 at page 12 and substituting the following therefor:

(a) in respect of the first fiscal year in which the province fails to comply, an amount equal to one dollar for every dollar,

(b) in respect of the second fiscal year in which the province fails to comply, an amount equal to two dollars for every dollar, and

(c) in respect of the third or a subsequent fiscal year in which the province fails to comply, an amount equal to three dollars for every dollar, that".

He said: Mr. Speaker, this amendment addresses the very heart of the Bill because this is the crunch, really, as to whether these penalties will have the effect of actually eliminating extra billing and user fees. As has been said so many times, this is one of the few things which the Bill sets out to do.

• (1630)

We and everyone who supports the Bill have to ask whether or not these penalties will in fact result in the Provinces moving to eliminate extra billing, either by agreement with the medical professions or simply by imposing one regime or another. I kind of go from optimism to pessimism to optimism to pessimism. My first judgment was that for Provinces like Ontario and Alberta, where it so happens that we have the biggest extra billing problem, the penalties as they now stand are fiscally insignificant. The Provinces could decide to absorb these penalties if they felt ideologically attached enough to extra billing and user fees. The hope was that these penalties might be politically significant, that political criticism from within the Province of a Government which consistently chose to forfeit the revenues represented by the penalties in order to meet the needs of a minority of doctors would at some point become unbearable, and action would be taken against extra billing and user fees. That is still possible. What we are concerned about, which leads to my fluctuating view of a happy outcome, is that recently we have seen the Ontario Minister of Finance, Mr. Grossman, predicting that there will be an increase in Ontario taxes and OHIP premiums, or several other effects flowing from the penalties imposed on Ontario through this Bill. But none of the effects he has speculated upon have anything to do with the elimination of extra billing.

We already know the position of the Minister of Health in Alberta. He defends extra billing and user fees as an extension of his free enterprise view of reality. He sees all of this in somewhat the same vein as the National Citizens' Coalition, that it is part of the creeping communist conspiracy.

I think this is a legitimate concern about the penalties. I am sorry it has not been shared by the Government or by my Progressive Conservative colleagues, with whom I have had an opportunity to collaborate on a number of amendments. I realize when it comes to penalties that we in the NDP are alone in this respect and alone in this amendment.

We propose that a Province which continues to allow extra billing and user fees be penalized in an escalating fashion. After the first year, when you have a dollar for dollar penalty, we then go to a $2 for $1 penalty in the second year and a $3 for $1 penalty in the third year, and that it stay that way until something is done.

We have left in the three-year period of grace so that if the Province of Ontario, after its three-year agreement with the doctors has expired, wanted to put an end to extra billing it could get all its money back. There is no problem there. The increased penalties would not be permanent if there was the political will in Ontario to find a solution.

We agree with the perceptions of several of the witnesses who came before the committee, notably the Canadian Health Coalition and others, who think that the penalties are too light. I realize the Government feels that if it had more than a dollar for dollar penalty, it would be crossing some kind of political quasiconstitutional line, and it is not willing to go beyond a dollar for dollar penalty. The Government never really made available to Members of the Committee or this House the specific advice or judgment on which it based its opposition to the notion of escalating penalties. But I say to the Minister of National Health and Welfare that if she really expects the Canada Health Act to work, something in the order of escalating penalties would have been well advised in combination with what I suggested in motion No. 7, which was ruled out of order, that of some kind of positive incentive to Provinces who want to clean up their act with respect to extra billing and user fees. You would have a carrot approach for those Provinces who wanted to respond to the national consensus against extra billing and user fees, and a more effective stick for those Provinces you already know do not want to respond and are going to find every way they can not to respond. They are simply hoping that at some point in the future they will find a federal Government more friendly to their perceptions of how the health care system works. I hope that will never be the case. I hope that the consensus we have seen in the last two or three months against extra billing and user fees will hold.

I hope the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) will continue to speak for health care for the Progressive Conservatives and not the Hon. Member from Calgary and others who have spoken today and indicated the more traditional Tory line on these matters. I sometimes wonder how they are ever going to get it together and get up and vote for the Bill, because when you listen to them they sound like they are speaking against it.

I recommend these penalties, Mr. Speaker, as I have before, albeit futilely, to Members of the Government and my Progressive Conservative colleagues. I want to put on the record once again our concern that these penalties as they stand, in the absence of any positive incentives and the willingness by the Minister to reopen the question of federal funding, are likely not going to work, and somewhere down the line we are going to have to have this debate all over again.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), he is suggesting a bit of overkill. We have no proof it will work. After all, the purpose of this new Canada Health Act is to have legislation which can be implemented and which will effectively ban forever extra billing and user fees. The purpose of the Act is not to be punitive without reason. Although I have no special legal training, it has always appeared to me as a legislator, together with my colleagues in this House, that any piece of legislation not only must be fair but must be seen as having a clear element of fairness and equity if people are to have any respect for the legislation. If you think of this measure from the practical point of view, then the same holds true. Let me explain what I mean.

The existing legislation permits the federal Minister of National Health and Welfare to apply a very serious financial penalty to provinces where extra billing or user fees exist, denying accessibility. We have not been able to use it—let us call things by their name—because of several factors, one of them being that the penalties are so big. Just to refresh the memory of my colleagues, it must be equivalent to the total monthly cash money transfer from the federal Government to the Provinces. The penalty is so big that it could easily result in a disruption of services in the province involved. Then we would not have achieved what we wanted to achieve. Just the opposite. We could create a very serious backlash against the whole institution of medicare. So that everyone could be accused of causing a fatal accident which might not have anything to do with a service or an emergency department, or what not, being closed down by the provincial authorities in retaliation for the withholding of federal funding. All of that because the penalty is much too big. We believe that we are offering something very fair and operational. The penalty on extra billing and user fees must be big enough to mean something to the provincial authorities; something to push them into banning extra billing and user fees on the one hand, but not so big as to easily call for retaliation and disruption of services to Canadian patients. That is why we thought the concept of a dollar for a dollar was very fair.

I do know, but perhaps the Hon. Member needs a holiday. I am no doctor, but he said he goes up and down, he is optimistic and pessimistic. He either needs a tranquilizer of some sort or a holiday, otherwise why would he say things like that? Perhaps he needs a doctor who will not extra bill him.

Getting back to a more serious tone, I do not understand why he worries so much. The way the penalty works no provicial authority can make money out of the system. They can have no incentive whatsoever to let extra billing continue, or to institute user fees themselves. That is what we want.

In addition, I would not in terms of fairness be able to accept an escalation of penalty over three years. Some of the provinces have contractual agreements with their medical associations that exceed one year. Some have two year agreements. To my knowledge, one has a three year agreement. I believe that should be respected. The purpose is not to get at a province. The purpose is to make sure that medicare gets back to what it was intended for when it was created by this Parliament and to get rid of a bad habit which developed in recent years in the system, namely, overcharges to patients via extra billing by doctors and specialists, or user fees from the provinces. That is the purpose.

I think it is only fair to give the provinces a chance. This is an explicit clarification of the rules of the game. Many of them have already indicated that they will respect the new legislation of this Parliament and will, either all at once, or over the three years allowed, correct the situation that exists in their own provincial governments. That is the purpose of the Bill.

We cannot be pessimistic because a given provincial health Minister announces that he will first fix a certain part of the problem and then address another dimension of the extra charges in his province. We cannot be pessimistic about most provinces of Canada. Knowing how Canada functions, I believe that it will set the tone. Except for two provinces I believe all provinces will fully apply the spirit of this Bill and do away with the extra billing and user fee situation within the first three years.

Whenever they do so, as long as it is within the three years, they will immediately be reimbursed the amount of the penalty which was withheld from them. Of course we will not pay interest on it. However, the intention is to give them back exactly what was withheld from them. As my colleague said, they will have had the stick applied to them.

However, the Bill is not punitive and simply attempts to consolidate medicare. If the situation of overcharging is corrected in the first three years after the passage of this legislation, which will be deemed to be passed as of April 1, that money will definitely be reimbursed to them.

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief. In my mind Motion No. 6 does not address the central issue. The central issue is the withholding for a three year period of moneys equivalent to the extra billing or user fees which have been charged in the province. Hopefully during that three year period there will be an agreement made to enable the provinces to receive the full amount of money they are entitled to under the established programs financing. In my mind this motion is punitive, Mr. Speaker. I do not think it addresses the issue at all. It is for that reason I will be voting against it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 6. Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 79(11) the recorded division on the proposed Motion stands deferred.

[Translation]

The House will now proceed with the deferred divisions on the report stage of Bill C-3:

An Act relating to cash contributions by Canada in respect of insured health services provided under provincial health care insurance plans and amounts payable by Canada in respect of extended health care services and to amend and repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof.

Call in the Members.

The House divided on Motion No. 1 (Mr. Blaikie) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe from consultations with the House Leaders of the other two Parties that the vote we have just taken could be recorded in the same fashion for Motion No. 6 and recorded in the Votes and Proceedings as having been taken.

Mr. Pinard: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the vote that has just been taken shall be recorded against Motion No. 6?

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, at the appropriate time we would have addressed that question. You are going to have to put the motion in any case. We would agree at that time.

Mr. Speaker: The next question is on Motion No. 2. A vote on this motion will also dispose of Motion No. 3. Mr. Halliday, seconded by Mr. Epp moves:

That Bill C-3 be amended in Clause 12 by striking out line 10 at page 9 and substituting the following therefor:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, as you have noted, the vote on Motion No. 2 has disposed of Motion No. 3. Had it not been for the vote of the Hon. Member for Hamilton West (Mr. Hudecki), I would have suggested you might find a disposition to apply the recorded division just taken on Motion No. 2 to Motions Nos. 4 and 5 as well. If the Hon. Member for Hamilton West intends to vote the same way on Motions Nos. 4 and 5, that could be done and the vote recorded in Hansard as though it had been taken. If, however, the Hon. Member for Hamilton West is going to treat the votes on Motions Nos. 4 and 5 differently, or, in other words, if he is going to vote the opposite way on Motions Nos. 4 and 5, he might so indicate and we could so record the vote as though the division had been taken with the exception of the Hon. Member for Hamilton West who would be shown voting the other way.

Mr. Hudecki: Mr. Speaker, I propose to vote for Motion No. 4 and vote against Motion No. 5.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, the way I understood the proposal made by the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), if you were to seek the consent of the House, it would be possible to apply the result of the vote on Motion No. 2 to Motion No. 4, since the Hon. Member for Hamilton West (Mr. Hudecki) has just indicated that he would support Motion No. 4. Therefore, the vote on Motion No. 2 would apply to Motion No. 4 and to Motion No. 5, with the difference being that the Hon. Member for Hamilton West would vote differently on this motion. I think we could dispense with having two recorded divisions.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw to your attention the fact that I have missed the votes until now and I wish to be included in any arrangement that is made from now on.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 4.

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford) moved:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Canada Health Act

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I will speak slowly and I will try again. If the vote on Motion No. 4 were to be applied to Motion No. 5, with the difference being that on Motion 5 the Hon. Member for Hamilton West (Mr. Hudecki) would be recorded as voting differently than he did on the previous vote, we could then dispense with the recorded division. If we could have unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, it may be considered.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: With unanimous consent the vote that applied to Motion No. 4 will apply to Motion No. 5 with the exception of the vote of the Hon. Member for Hamilton West (Mr. Hudecki) which will be reversed on this vote in comparison to the previous vote.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill) moved:

March 21, 1984—That Bill C-3 be amended in Clause 15 by striking out line 31 at page 11 and substituting the following therefor:

"made, and said order shall not come into force unless it is affirmed by a resolution introduced and passed in accordance with the rules of those Houses."

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Perhaps the Chair could now entertain the request made a little earlier by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans); I think he wanted the vote on motion No. 1 to dispose of motion No. 6. I realize you must first put the question, but at least we could then dispense with another recorded division.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the vote taken on Motion No. 2 shall also apply to Motion No. 6, with the addition of the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser)?

Does the Hon. Member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) wish to clarify this?

Mr. Nielsen: I am afraid with the noise that it might be recorded improperly, Sir. The same vote as was recorded on Vote No. 1 should also apply to Motion No. 6, with the addition of my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser).

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, if the Conservatives want to vote with the Liberals, we will agree.

Mr. Speaker: There appears to be unanimity on this matter. The vote on Motion No. 1, with the addition of the vote of the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), will apply to Motion No. 6.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill) moved:

(a) by striking out line 28 at page 12 and substituting the following therefor:

"to the province

(b) in respect of the second fiscal year in which the province fails to comply, an amount equal to two dollars for every dollar, and

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Miss Bégin moved that the Bill as amended be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read a third time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, there are Hon. Members on this side who want to speak on third reading, so I believe we should follow the customary and normal practice of our Standing Orders, as you have suggested yourself, and deal with third reading at the next sitting of the House.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I believe the request made by the Hon. Member is fair. We still have twenty minutes. We may consider terminating the debate on third reading at six o'clock and hear from a couple of speakers on his side.

Mr. Speaker: The House cannot proceed at this stage to third reading without unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

It being 5.40 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

Mr. Speaker: Shall all orders and items preceding No. 69 stand by unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

INCOME TAX ACT

SUGGESTED DEDUCTION FOR VOLUNTEER FIREMEN

Miss Coline Campbell (South West Nova) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act to allow volunteer firemen who receive no allowance from a government, municipality or other public authority, to deduct from their income, expenses incurred in the exercise of their duties as volunteer firemen.

● (1740)

She said: Mr. Speaker, do I understand that this only goes until six o'clock?

Mr. Speaker: Unless the House otherwise decides, the normal hour of adjournment will be six o'clock.

Miss Campbell: Mr. Speaker, there is less than 20 minutes left and I am sure there are many Members who would like to have the hour to speak on the purpose of my Bill today. I would like to have had the full hour.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): There are ample precedents to the effect that Private Members' Hour ends at the regular hour of adjournment. On previous occasions some procedures have encroached on Private Members' Hour, like today, and the rulings have been that Private Members' Hour will last for the remainder of the hour. The Chair will have to abide by these precedents and state that the Private Members' period today will be approximately 18 minutes.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I do not know if this is appropriate, but I believe I am one of the three scheduled to speak on the adjournment debate today. If it would facilitate the debate in Private Members' Hour, it would be my intention to give up my time so it would be added to Private Members' Hour. That would be acceptable to me.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, the occasions for Private Members to put forward their legislation have been encroached upon, trampled upon, and always taken up by some Government business. I sympathize entirely with the Hon. Member who finds that through no fault of her own Government time has take up private Members' time. To me, Government time is no more important than private Members' time. Therefore, the private Member is entitled to her full hour and there should not be this sort of poaching which has been going on for years.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I certainly agree with your interpretation that Private Members' Hour is between five and six. That being the case it does not really give the Hon. Member the opportunity to fully debate the subject she has put before us today. We would certainly be willing to call it six o'clock and move to the Adjournment Debate, on the understanding that this Private Members' Business would have to go back into the rotation of business to be called before the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): This might be feasible providing there was unanimous consent. However, the House might wish to agree to the subject matter of the Hon. Member's Bill being protected on the list. Is this what the Parliamentary Secretary had in mind?

Mr. Evans: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): At this point there seems to be difficulty in reaching an agreement. I suggest we stay with the practice and the rule within the Private Members' Business period today and—

Mr. Lambert: Highly unfair.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): It is fair because it has been the practice.

Miss Campbell: I am sorry there was not consent to allow this to go to another Private Members' day and retain its place in the rotation. I understand the Opposition said no.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Miss Campbell: Then who said no, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Epp: John Evans.

Some Hon. Members: Your own Member.

Miss Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before wasting any more time on that, I do not plan to speak—

Mr. Shields: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. We are already on a point of order. The House is fairly active this afternoon. May I ask Hon. Members to try to determine how we are going to resolve this.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, the question was that we proceed to the Adjournment Debate and allow the Hon. Member her full 60 minutes tomorrow, protecting her position on the list. I think there was general agreement. That may have been misunderstood across the way. We on this side agreed to that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): With all due respect, this point has already been decided. I asked if there was consent and there was not. The Hon. Member does not have to come back with the same point which has already been resolved.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, the reason we cannot guarantee at this time that the Hon. Member's Bill would come up tomorrow is that we do not know whether she will be available to debate her Bill tomorrow. If the Hon. Member is in the rotation and we can leave it to the normal channels to have it determined as to when she is available to debate her Bill, that is fine. That is what I think the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) was saying. We would be prepared to leave the Hon. Member's Bill in the normal rotation, on the understanding that it is not essential that it be done tomorrow; that it be negotiated, as it always is, having regard to the availability of Members on both sides of the House to debate the issue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is there unanimous consent on the proposal by the Parliamentary Secretary?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Then we shall call it six o'clock and proceed now to the Adjournment Debate.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

NATIONAL REVENUE—REGISTERED CHARITIES—DEPARTMENT'S INTERPRETATION—CHURCHES' OPPOSITION TO DIVORCE LEGISLATION

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, at times even I am amazed at what can happen in this House, and this is one of those times. When everything seems to be going in the opposite direction, suddenly by some great stroke of luck everyone starts agreeing again.

The point I want to raise relates to a question I asked in the House respecting the operations of Revenue Canada. Members are aware of the difficulty Revenue Canada has in its dealings with Canadians; its arbitrary measures, its use of garnishee orders. But the point I want to concentrate on today is as onerous as anything which has been brought before this House in the last month.

In order for members of organizations such as churches to get a receipt for the purpose of tax deductions in the amount of donations made, there is a 20 per cent maximum limit on the amount of income which can be receipted. There has always been a debate as to what is a legitimate activity of a church, which is a registered charity. Over these last years there has been an arbitrary approach, by which the Department of National Revenue says that a church can only be involved in activities which are exclusively "for charitable purposes", and that it devote its resources exclusively to charitable activities.

The question then comes up as to whether a church violates its status as a registered charity if it gets involved in opposition to legislation. I will be specific. Presently on the Order Paper of the House is Bill C-10, an Act to Amend the Divorce Act. Many churches in Canada are opposed to the provisions of the Divorce Act. Some of their members and some of their leaders have signed petitions against the Divorce Act. They have spoken out from their pulpits and in public forums against the Act. If they do that are they violating their status as a registered charity? In my mind the answer is no.

I have a letter in hand addressed to the Pentecostal Assemblies of Canada signed by one Miss A. A. Conway, dated March 1, 1984. The pertinent paragraph reads as follows:

> We would comment that in our view while it would be acceptable for a religious organization to take a public stand on a moral issue, it would not be acceptable for that organization to engage in a campaign designed to bring pressure to bear upon a government to implement legislative changes or adopt a policy which the organization advocates.

Those words are frightening, Mr. Speaker. It is saying that if the church recognizes that there is a moral issue they can say so. That is always what churches and their adherents have done. That is one of their responsibilities to society. They are to be the leaven in society, as are their members. However, if a Bill flows from this House that is in conflict with the moral issues for which that church stands, then that church is in violation of the regulations under which it was registered as a registered charity. In my mind, Mr. Speaker, that is a violation of religious freedom.

Surely this country is better off when churches, their leaders and their adherents speak out against moral decay. Surely the country is better off when legislation which comes before the House is assessed by churches from a moral viewpoint. Surely law that comes here is not neutral, only legal, and has no moral consequences.

However, that is how this paragraph is now interpreted. I do not know if the Government really wants to follow up on that kind of interpretation from Revenue Canada. If it does, and if it does not clarify it today, I will tell them one thing. There are many people in the country who will see that kind of an interpretation as a direct attack on religious freedom and a direct attack upon what churches should be doing.

I will remind Hon. Members of a Bill which was before this House, C-10, through which churches were to be registered and were to give certain information regarding their membership. In fact, if a member was asked to leave that congregation, that ex-member could then go to the courts to ask for redress and, in fact, reinstatement. Is this another intrusion by the state on what I believe is legitimate activity by the church?

I ask the Parliamentary Secretary to clarify if the Government feels that it is not a legitimate practice for churches to take an active stand against or for legislation which, in their assessment, has moral implications? If churches are only supposed to act on what are exclusively charitable activities, how does the Government define charitable activities? What is the definition of a charitable activity? I think that all of us could agree on some, but what is the definition? I believe it is incumbent upon the Government to clarify this issue.

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) is a very persuasive member, and I must say that he has almost persuaded me and others with his eloquent argument. However, I must say also that the law is the law, is the law. Mr. Bumble, in the Pickwick Papers, said that the law is an ass. Maybe it is. Maybe it is in this case as well and is something we must look at.

Having said that, the matter raised by the Hon. Member relates to the larger question of the incompatibility, for purposes of tax administration, between political activity and registration as a charity. It is a question which has been covered more than once in the House, possibly even in these proceedings, but I shall be happy to assist the Hon. Member at the risk of what may seem to be repetition to others.

Under the Income Tax Act, a registered charity must be constituted and operated exclusively for charitable purposes. However, the Act does not define charity. The Hon. Member raised this. We must therefore rely on the courts and that is where we come to the law. Perhaps it is time we provided a proper definition, or a clarification of charity and what the interpretation should be. That has not yet been done. Perhaps it is a job for Members of Parliament. Do not blame the courts for doing the job the way they see it at the present time.

The courts have said in particular that political activity is not charitable in nature, and have also concluded that efforts to procure a change in legislation can be considered to be political in nature. I must say that this appears to be stretching the point a bit. Once again, I think further clarification is necessary from Parliament.

In the circumstances as they presently exist, the Department has no choice but to decline to accept for registration as a charity an organization with political objects. In addition, any organization already registered as a charity under the Act is putting that status at risk when it engages in political activity. Perhaps it is necessary to explain as well what we mean by "political activity". I find it rather doubtful that what the Hon. Member is talking about is, in itself, political activity per se.

I am sure that the Hon. Member in these and other circumstances would want the Department to administer the law at this time as it has been interpreted by the courts. We must follow the law and that is all we can do. I hope that satisfies the Hon. Member at this time.

Adjournment Debate

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM—COSTS OF CANADA LANDS EXPLORATION—OIL SANDS POTENTIAL

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, last week I addressed a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien). I asked him how he could justify spending $12 billion on PIP grants for development in high risk exploration. I am talking about the offshores, in the tundra and the far north. His answer, as reported at page 2283 of Hansard was that:

> Helping industries carry out exploration in Canada's North and off the coasts of Newfoundland and Nova Scotia is of fundamental importance to Canada because we must know what our resources are and how much our petroleum and natural gas reserves are worth, if we are to ensure self-sufficiency and security of supply—

I am not denying for a moment that getting an inventory of the oil and gas reserves we have in Canada Lands or on the offshore is of fundamental importance.

Clearly the Minister is evading the question because basically we are not going to achieve oil and gas self-sufficiency. The practise of the Government, through its National Energy Program and the PIP grant system taking taxpayers' money in the form of the petroleum gas revenue tax, and transferring it directly in the form of grants, totalling $12 to $14 billion since the implementation of the National Energy Program, is totally ludicrous. To suggest that there is not another way to gather the information and get the inventory in place in Canada Lands and in the off-shore is silly. Activity was going on off-shore and in Canada Lands. The large companies were ready to gamble and take the risk. All we had to do was put the proper incentives in place to allow these companies to go ahead.

In northeastern Alberta we have the Athabasca Tar Sands which contain the single largest known oil reserve in the world. We have that in Canada, and we have the technology in place to extract the oil from those oil sands. We have the qualified people to do it. One single plant would create 30,000 to 40,000 jobs across the country. Why are we not focussing the attention on our oil sands? I made this suggestion to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien). He indicated that he had signed agreements on three small plants in northeastern Alberta, the in situ plant at Cold Lake and two others. They are relatively small but work is going ahead, not because of the National Energy Program but in spite of it.

The National Energy Program completely killed oil sands activity. The Minister is now modifying the Program by removing some of the onerous taxes on these plants and is allowing them to go ahead. It has been proved conclusively, by the millions of dollars that are now being expended around Bonnyville, Cold Lake and Grand Centre, on the Wolf Lake and the Cold Lake projects, that when the Government removed the restrictive taxes put in place through the National Energy Program exploration would go ahead.

William Hopper, President of Petro-Canada, announced as recently as last week that Petro-Canada is prepared to go ahead with a mining operation north of Fort McMurray if this Government removes some of the restrictive taxes that are in place under the National Energy Program. He made that very clear.

I say to the Government, put the incentives in place and the companies will develop the oil sands. I say put the incentives in place and the major companies will explore the off-shore off Newfoundland, in the Arctic Circle, in the tundra and in the so-called Canada Lands.

Let me remind Hon. Members of the original discovery at Leduc No. 1 in 1947. Prior to that major companies came to Canada, invested money, explored for oil and drilled dry hole after dry hole. They were doing what is called wildcatting. They finally struck oil. At that point in 1947 there was not one Canadian oil company of substance in Canada—not one. We did not have drilling companies, seismic crews or companies, mud companies, logging companies, nor any of the multitude of companies that service the oil industry. Today these types of companies are close to 100 per cent Canadian owned because the companies that were encouraged to take the risk had the funds behind them to do so.

I say the Canadian taxpayer should not be paying $12 billion to $14 billion over the life of this National Energy Program to drill in high-risk exploration when we have oil sands ready to be developed. The same encouragement should be given to Canadian companies today. It would create activity and jobs across the country. This is just silly. We should be encouraging the majors to do it because they have the wherewithal, not enticing small Canadian companies to go into the offshore and the Arctic. When it comes to production time the small Canadian companies do not have the financial backing to enable them to put the oil onstream if and when they find it.

Hon. Members should remember that we have the largest, single, known oil reserve in Canada in the Athabasca tar sands. We have the people, we know where it is. We need it for energy self-sufficiency, but we are going to lose the opportunity that we have.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in his question of March 21 concerning the costs of Canada Lands exploration, the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) referred to expenditures of taxpayers' dollars on high-risk exploration in the amount of $12 billion by 1986. For the record, I would like to point out that the forecast of expenditure under the Petroleum Incentives Program for the period January 1, 1981 to the end of 1986 is $8 billion on all lands in Canada. This includes payments under the program for Alberta, financed by the government of that province, which, together with Petroleum Incentives Program payments for programs in other provinces, account for close to 30 per cent of the total program. Consequently, Canada Lands exploration will receive something in the order of $5.6 billion over the period 1981-1986, not $12 billion. There will be an equal distribution of the $5.6 billion between Canada Lands in the north and off the East Coast.

Turning to the Hon. Member's objective of generating thousands of jobs through oil sands development, the primary purpose of oil exploration and development is to open up the country's oil resource potential for present and future generations. The extent to which this primary objective generates jobs is a very welcome consequence and, in this connection, Canada Lands exploration is producing jobs in areas where they are badly needed, particularly in the Atlantic provinces.

The argument is sometimes made that we should put all of our effort into the oil sands because the oil is there and the technology is known. The fact is that oil sands development is not without its risks and, in the matter of technology, reference could be made to a recently published statement by C. W. Bowman, head of the Alberta Oil Sands Technology and Research Authority, who said: "—in spite of progress to date, further quantum jumps in technology will be required before the full impact of the oil sands is realized".

The policy of this Government is to proceed on all fronts in working toward the objective of oil self-sufficiency. The results off the Newfoundland and Nova Scotia coasts have demonstrated the value of this approach.

At the same time, federal policy is very actively directed to oil sands and heavy oil development. The federal Government operates major incentives for the opening up of these resources including the provision of earned depletion allowance, relief from the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax, the world oil price, and special provisions to encourage heavy oil processing and marketing. The fact that the Cold Lake, Wolf Lake, and Elk Point oil sands projects are underway is evidence of the effectiveness of these measures, and of the royalty reduction provisions of the provinces. Other similar projects will not be long in coming.

In these brief comments, Mr. Speaker, I have emphasized the importance of an integrated program of oil resource development. Results show that it is paying off in terms of new resources while at the same time generating economic benefits for regions most in need.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman but his time is up.

EMPLOYMENT—APPROVAL OF FUNDS FOR PROJECTS ON INDIAN RESERVES—FORMULA FOR ALLOCATING GRANTS

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I rise in this Adjournment Debate regarding a question I put to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts) on February 15 as reported at page 1412 of Hansard. I inquired about the current status of projects under the Canada Works Program that had been recommended by the Saskatchewan region. I had concurred in them as I had some informal consultation about the applications.

Since the recommendations, some five and a half months have now passed. When I asked the question, there was no word as to whether or not the Minister would give the final approval for these projects to go ahead. It was beginning to look as though we would be into the summer employment programs soon, yet the winter works project under Canada Works had not been approved and put in place.

In my constituency of The Battlefords-Meadow Lake, there were some 11 projects of which I was aware that had been recommended at the regional level. These included Project No. 1395 of the Saulteaux Band, Project No. 1390 of the Pelican Lake Band, Project No. 1348 of the Island Lake Band, Project No. 1403 of the Joseph Bighead Band, Project No. 1409 of the Thunderchild Band, Project No. 1344 of the Moosomin Band, Project No. 1417 of the Sahgaiehcan Band at Loon Lake, Saskatchewan, Project No. 1337 of the Onion Lake Band and Project No. 1375 of the Native Youth Service from the North Battleford Indian Health Centre, as well as another project which was later approved from the Witchekan Lake Band. This makes a total of some 11 projects.

In his response on February 15, the Minister said that I had not raised this matter before. The point is that I raised it informally on many occasions with the Employment and Development Branch, as well as with other employees of the Canada Employment and Immigration Department. Finally, out of frustration and after hearing so many times that the grants were caught up in an argument between the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) and the Minister of Employment and Immigration, I asked the question in the House to try to move them to some response.

I understand from talking to the Department of Employment and Immigration in Regina that they finally received notice today that those projects have been approved. Of the 11 projects, I would like to know from the Parliamentary Secretary which were actually approved and what amounts were actually approved for those projects.

Another problem I would like to point out to the Parliamentary Secretary at this time is that the programs have changed over the years. In 1980, the first year I was elected as a Member of Parliament, the forerunner to the program we are talking about now was called Canada Community Development Project I; the second year, it was called Canada Community Development Project II; and the third year it was called Canada Community Development Project III. The name has now been changed to Canada Works.

The problem is not only with the change in the name of the program, but is with the change in the steps that the funds must go through. The first year under Canada Community Development Project I the projects were allocated by constituency for the general stream, for Treaty Indian people and for Non-Treaty Native People. This all went into a constituency allocation. At that time, the funds were recommended for Minister's approval through participation of employees of the Employment and Development Branch of Canada Employment and the Immigration Commission. They were also recommended for the approval of the Minister by a local advisory board that was appointed locally and consisted of nine people at that time. As well, funds were recommended for approval by the Member of Parliament.

The next year, the local advisory board was phased out so that it was left up to the Member of Parliament and employees of the Department to recommend to the Minister how those funds should be allocated to groups within the constituency. We finally find ourselves in a situation where, under the Canada Works Program, the native allocations, whether they be for treaty, Métis or Non-Status Indians, do not come before the Member of Parliament for input any longer. In fact, the funds are no longer applied to these particular groups by constituency. They are applied to the province or by region. It is only by the good graces of employees within the Department and within the Employment and Development Branch that we are or are not consulted on the funding that goes into these projects. Our concurrence in the allocation of these funds is certainly not a formal requirement.

A couple of things happen, Mr. Speaker. I would like to say to the Parliamentary Secretary that, first of all, there are expectations built up by the native people in terms of the process which the funding mechanism goes through from the time the allocations are made until they are completed. Even though I did not have direct input into the funding for native programs under Canada Works, we still are asked as Members of Parliament what is happening to the funds, why they are held up for so long? It causes a communication problem.

I believe the second problem it causes, Mr. Speaker, is a lack of local consultation. I would urge the Parliamentary Secretary and the Minister of Employment and Immigration to go back to the system where there are local advisory boards, along with the local Members of Parliament, in consultation with the employees of the Employment and Development Branch of the Department of Employment and Immigration. In this way they can sit down and discuss the allocations of these moneys which are made to groups within the constituency. I believe that is a much preferable route to be taking, Mr. Speaker, than the one we find ourselves taking now, where there is really a breakdown in communications in the program. I believe this is quite evident in the fact that it took some five and a half to six months from the time the projects for the reserves I mentioned were recommended by the region until the Minister finally gave approval to distribute these funds.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak to the issue raised by the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish) concerning allocations for native projects under the Canada Works Program. Contrary to the Hon. Member's impression, the Province of Saskatchewan did receive a special grant under the latest Canada Works series to create additional jobs for Treaty and Non-Treaty Native people. That provincial grant to be used exclusively for native projects amounts to $960,000, including $362,151 set aside for eleven projects sponsored by Saskatchewan Treaty Native people. In addition, approval has been given for 16 Non-Treaty Native people sponsored projects worth $597,372. Those two grants add up to $959,523, that is $477 less than the original grant. Last February 15, the Hon. Member alleged that no project for the Metis or Non-Status Indians had been developed in his constituency.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should enquire more thoroughly about activities in his constituency under the Canada Works Program. I know he listed some 11 projects. I imagine that, as far as these 11 projects are concerned, keeping in mind what I have just told him, these projects have certainly been accepted. I do not have their numbers at hand, but I imagine that the Department will be able to provide an answer to the Hon. Member on the basis of what he has said in his comments. Personally, I can assure him that I shall check with the Department to determine whether these eleven or six projects mentioned by the Hon. Member have been accepted.

In fact, the records of the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission show that three projects for Non-Status Indians have been approved for the constituency of The Battlefords-Meadow Lake. I would like to take this opportunity to tell the Hon. Member that four other projects for Status Indians have also been approved for that region.

Mr. Speaker, on December 8, 1983, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts) announced that a considerable amount of money, that is $15 million would be allocated to the Canada Works Program to promote projects submitted by Status Indians. The Canada Employment and Immigration Commission is already considering proposals made by band councils even though this amount will be available only at the beginning of the upcoming fiscal year, namely on April 1, 1984, in a few days from now. The Hon. Member maintains that the amount allocated to his constituency is based on an 8 per cent unemployment rate. As the minister stated in his letter dated September 12, 1983, moneys are allocated on the basis of the surplus manpower rate, which contrary to the unemployment rate, excludes workers on sick leave or on maternity leave. All the constituencies having a surplus manpower rate higher than 8 per cent have received a basic allocation. On the other hand, regions with a surplus manpower rate of 8 per cent or more were allowed to receive additional amounts. This type of distribution guarantees a fair and equitable use of these funds. Finally, Mr. Speaker, I repeat that the native people of The Battlefords-Meadow Lake are receiving considerable amounts of money for job creation and that they may very well be granted additional amounts. I believe that this takes care of the question asked by the Hon. Member.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

At 6.20 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1984-85

The House resumed from Wednesday, March 21, consideration of the motion of Mr. MacLaren that Bill C-21, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and the amendment of Mr. Darling (p. 2292); and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Deans (p. 2299).

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, the Bill we have before us is based on the Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) which was presented over a month ago. In that Budget the Minister of Finance indicated that the borrowing requirements for this year would be $25.55 billion. In addition, he wanted $4 billion as a contingency allowance running into the year 1985-86, for a total amount in this Bill of $29.55 billion.

A number of things have happened since the presentation of the Budget and the introduction of this Bill. It is quite apparent now that the demand for borrowing in the Budget and this Bill is no longer appropriate to today's conditions. That is the reason for the amendment which is before you, Mr. Speaker, specifically demanding a change in the Bill. May I point out that as of March 21, the Government had $8.1 billion on deposit with chartered banks, trust companies and the Bank of Canada. Let me also point out that under existing borrowing authority the Government expects to raise an additional $500 million or $600 million before this weekend is over. The Government currently has more cash on hand than it needs, even with its profligatory spending habits, to carry through until June 30.

It is unconscionable that the Government should ask us to approve this Bill in its present form. Indeed, if one analyzes the $8.1 billion presently on hand and takes at face value the $25.55 billion that the Government says it needs, then the right to borrow should be limited in this Bill to below $20 billion. There is no justification to grant the total amount asked for in the Bill. The Bill is an attempt to have Parliament approve that which Parliament should not approve.

It would be different if we could trust the spending habits of the Government but it has become abundantly clear to all of us that the Government knows no limits in controlling its voracious appetite for money. If there is a nickel to be found, it will find two or three places to spend it.

Last year the Government overestimated the amount of money it would need for interest in the year ending March 31 of this year. You will also note that in the Supplementary Estimates the Government found that it had a provision for an extra $440 million. Did the Government reduce the deficit of Canada by $440 million as a result of a decline in interest rates for a period last year? Not at all. It spent that money and even more.

When the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) came before us at approximately this time last spring and produced estimates for the year 1983-84, those estimates involved spending in the order of $86 billion. By the time we were through with the Supplementary Estimates (C) for this year alone, those estimates climbed to $92.66 billion, which is an increase of over $6 billion. The Government overestimated and overspent. Part of that overspending was due to the fact that it saved $440 million in interest because of a short decline in interest costs for last year.

The fact is that if the Government saves money it will spend it. If it can borrow money it will spend it and does so faster than any other government in the history of this country. Parliament is required to stand up, be counted and demand that the Government pay attention to the future of Canada. We can only do that by denying this Government borrowing authority for moneys it clearly does not need. If we do not deny the Government, and if we allow the Government to have this Bill—on the face of it the Government does not need it; the Government could reduce the amount in the Bill by $10 billion and it would still have a lot of money—the Government will borrow the money and spend it. We cannot afford to give the Government that privilege.

The Liberals ask where would we save money? I have indicated to this House on a number of occasions, and I repeat, that it would not be very difficult for anyone to slice back at least $5 billion of this Government's spending without touching a single social program.

Is there a reason to pay for the insulation for people's homes, Sir? Is there any reason that the Government of Canada should borrow money to give people new furnaces? Is there any reason we should borrow money to buy French butter at $5 a pound to maintain that high-falutin' restaurant on Sussex Drive in the Pearson Building? This kind of expenditure program, if it is only butter at $5 a pound from France, insulation, new furnaces or a host of advertising, or if it is large grants to corporations like the CBC and the Export Development Corporation, can be cut down. These expenses must be cut down.

To reduce seriously the amount of money in this Bill, to demand that this Bill be rethought, is not an unrealistic demand. We as a responsible Parliament must make that demand and we do make that demand. That is the purpose of the amendment before you, Sir.

I said the Minister was profligate. I have only to point out to you, Mr. Speaker, the Minister's own departmental spending on administration in the Ministry of Finance. That Department was budgeted to spend $26 million in March, 1981. This year that Department will have spent on administration alone $44.5 million. In the course of less than three fiscal years, the Minister of Finance has increased the cost of administering his own Department by 75 per cent. You call that restraint, Mr. Speaker? You call that control over spending? You call that reasonable administration? I call it maladministration, Sir. To have the Ministry of Finance propose this Bill to us today is disgraceful. On that basis alone, this Minister must be brought to task.

In past days interest rates have risen dramatically. I draw your attention to the fact that in June or July of last year this Government was able to borrow long-term money, that is on 25 and 30-year bonds, at a yield of 11.5 per cent. This week those bonds are being offered at 13.5 per cent. In other words, the cost of long-term money has risen since last summer by two full percentage points. Since February 15 interest costs on government debt have risen at least 1 per cent. If we are going to come to grips with this problem, and I point out to you, Mr. Speaker, that the increased cost of interest is at least $1.5 million since the budget, then we must come to grips with the amount of borrowing; otherwise we will have no control over interest expense.

I note that my time is up. I ask this House to pay close attention to the amendment and demand that this Government change the Bill.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to note how few members of the Government care to defend their borrowing requirement, to stand in this House and deal with it. Any time this House is faced with a borrowing Bill, it has an obligation to screen that Bill as closely as it can. Every member of this Chamber must ask themselves how much does the Bill really entitle the Government to borrow. They should ask when Government intends to borrow this money, because that has an effect. I suppose most critically they must ask why the Government needs to borrow the money and what it intends to do with it.

When reviewing these three questions, Mr. Speaker, we must examine this piece of legislation before us which indicates that the Government wants to borrow $29,555 million, or $29.5 billion. That is not what the Government intends to spend; that is just what it intends to borrow and what it is asking this House to approve. That is such an enormous amount of money, Mr. Speaker, that it boggles the mind. To put it into perspective, it is 91 per cent of the projected savings of all Canadians. The Government wants to borrow 91 per cent of every penny saved by every Canadian.

That is nice for those who have the savings. There will probably be some competition to borrow that money and, therefore, the interest on those savings will increase, but it leaves 9 per cent for the rest of us who may want to borrow to buy a car, put a mortgage on a home, start a small business, or even to keep a small business going. When the Government takes 91 per cent of Canadian savings through borrowing and only leaves 9 per cent to the rest of Canada, what can we predict, Mr. Speaker? We can predict that interest rates will go up. The minute this Bill was laid on the Table in this House of Commons, interest rates started to go up, Mr. Speaker. If they go up far enough and fast enough, it will bring hardship to everyone on fixed incomes. It will drive businesses into bankruptcy and create increased unemployment.

It is bad enough, Mr. Speaker, that the federal Government now wants to borrow 91 per cent of Canadian savings, but we have been faced in this House over a four-year period with legislation put through by closure which provides Crown corporations with unlimited borrowing authority. So when the Government says it wants to borrow $29.55 billion or $29,550 million, it is talking about borrowing it wants to do straight up front. It is not talking about the additional amount which this Government has insisted Crown corporations and their boards of directors have authority to borrow.

It is not very much of a logical leap, Mr. Speaker, to see that in reality the federal Government and Crown corporations are trying to borrow all of the savings of the taxpayers of this country, leaving nothing for Canadians to borrow without going abroad. And, Mr. Speaker, when we go to the United States, Germany, Japan or England to borrow money, we get it, but all of a sudden we begin to notice in the daily newspapers that the value of the Canadian dollar is falling. A dollar is not worth a dollar. A couple of months ago it was worth 82 cents or 83 cents. Today it is worth 78 cents.

Then we have to look at a senior citizen on a fixed income who goes to the corner grocery store to buy a tomato. If the value of the dollar has fallen a nickel, from 83 cents to 78 cents, you can be sure that the cost of that tomato has risen, 5, 6, or maybe 10 per cent, simply because the Canadian dollar has fallen. That's the rhythm. That is the insidious nature of a government borrowing Bill.

We are looking at the largest government borrowing Bill in the history of this nation. Never has a finance minister and a government come before this Chamber to ask Members to vote to give them permission to borrow so much money. They are asking for permission at a time when there is already enormous pressure on ordinary Canadians. Think about the last two weeks. Interest rates are rising, the cost of living is rising, and unemployment is rising. All of those things that bothered us for the last two or three years bottomed out and we are starting back in the direction of trouble.

What does this Government want to do? After watching back-benchers on the government side for four years, you see that the first impulse is to throw money at any problem they face, not money the Government has the courage to collect through taxes, but borrowed money, hidden money. They always choose to transfer the debt obligation to their children. They spend today to get re-elected and let the kids worry about paying it back. That is the kind of government we have had.

We have grand announcements in the budgets. We are going to have marvellous job creation in this country. I look at a leadership candidate for the Liberal Party of Canada. He has supposedly been in charge of the Special Employment Initiatives Program, $150 million a year. Where does the money go when we finally get the data on the table? It does not go to Canadians who are unemployed. It is not distributed justly or equitably. It goes to Members of Parliament to hand out to their friends in their ridings, if they happen to be Liberal Members of Parliament. That is why the Government wants to borrow money and that is why it wants so much. It is facing an election. It wants to borrow money to create slush funds to ensure the election of Liberal Members of Parliament.

If there is any sense of fairness in Government back-benchers, any sense of commitment to this country on what is right for it instead of what is wrong, I urge Members opposite to stand in this House and vote for the amendment. Once in the life of this Parliament, just once, let them do what is best for Canada and not what they believe is best for the Liberal Party of Canada. That is what is at issue in this amendment. I urge that course of action upon them.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I have been in this House since 1979, much too long for some Members opposite, because every time they come here and demand more money without a sufficient accounting and without Members across the way doing their duty to their constituents, I will stand up and object again and again. Government Members have been before us seven times in the last year demanding billions of dollars, every dollar of which comes out of the hide of ordinary Canadians who are very much pressed when trying to maintain their families, keep their children in school and carry on. There is simply no way that Government Members are going to get this money. They might as well bring in the closure motions and oppress the people once again because they are not going to get it with any consent.

If government Members were to reduce the amount of $29.55 billion to something that they could rationally convince us the Government needs for the more legitimate dimensions of its spending, then of course we would be prepared to sit and listen to that and approve of a Bill which was within limits. As my colleague said, the $29.55 billion is simply not relevant to the needs of the Government today. It has $8.1 billion in cash in the bank right now and it has the authority to raise by this Friday an additional half a billion dollars. Therefore, it has more than enough to get it through to June.

Come June, there will be a new leader on the government side and there will very likely be an election. The new government which will come in after that election should then have to face the reality and expose to the Canadian people the true facts about the financial bankruptcy of the Government on the opposite side.

However you cut it, Mr. Speaker, it returns to the ordinary Canadians. When the Government brings on inflation with these massive deficits, that impacts on senior citizens with fixed incomes far more dramatically than it does on the rest of us who might have a bit of land and who have indexed salaries that go up every year. It impacts on the poor who never have an opportunity to escape their plight. The inflation has resulted in post-secondary educational costs rising so that young people are even having to give up on the expectation of going to university.

How can a young man ever hope to purchase a farm today, Mr. Speaker? The inflation brought on by the Liberal Government has affected land as much as anything else and has driven the price of land well beyond its productive capacity. One might say that if the property is valued at more than its productive capacity, why not buy it and extend the payments for 15 or 20 years rather than 10 years. Oh, no, the Government does not want that to happen. It stepped in with its forward averaging and its blocks on rollovers so that no one can buy that land. Even within one's own family, those payments can only be extended for 10 years. I know from my own family farm experience that, based on the productivity of the land, those payments must be extended at least 18 years in order to purchase that land and still be able to pay income taxes on the income derived from it.

The Government has blocked the young people of Canada. Any farmer who votes Liberal in the next election is voting for a noose around his own neck. Six times now government Members have imposed taxes on fuels that are used by farmers. There are six individual taxes on energy. Every acre of land, amounting to hundreds of acres throughout the country, must be driven over at least five times every year. That includes the working of the land before seeding, the spraying for weeds, the swathing, the harvesting and the post-harvesting work. Every acre must be driven over that many times and every gallon of fuel has had six individual taxes imposed upon it by the Liberal Government. I say that any farmer who votes Liberal is putting a noose around his neck and that is absolutely true.

Any senior citizen who votes for the Liberal Party is voting for absolute poverty in the last few years of his life. With an inflation rate of 3 per cent or 4 per cent, it takes 12 to 15 years before a pension of $1,000 has dropped to $500. However, what happens under inflation of the kind the Liberal Government has brought about?

Liberal back-benchers do not stand up in the House, Mr. Speaker, and I do not care about that, but they should be standing up in caucus and telling Cabinet Ministers that if the Cabinet does not get the deficit under control, they will stay out of the House or rise and vote against the Cabinet. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that if any P.C. cabinet of the future tried to do what this one has done, there is no way I would support them.

Under our system of parliamentary government, the Cabinet or executive is responsible and must be accountable to all of us as ordinary back-bench Members of Parliament. We have to do our job. If a cabinet of whatever stripe fails to do its job, we have an obligation and a duty, not only in democracy but in law, to bring that Cabinet down. Liberal members opposite have not done that. They have not fulfilled their duty to the country. Surely that duty is not only to the people who are living today, to the senior citizens who are in poverty and the young people who do not have an opportunity to go to university or buy a business. They have a duty to our children and our grandchildren as well. That is their real failing, Mr. Speaker. Liberal members on the opposite side have no sense of the future. That is typical of a radical, left-wing socialist group. That group wants to remake mankind on one giant, quantum legislative leap. As a result, government Members pass laws and get themselves into troubles which they cannot get out of because they do not have a sense of the future. They have no sense of what it means to build a country like John A. Macdonald and John Diefenbaker did.

In 1968 there was a minuscule national debt. There was a balanced budget and yet in 1968 there was Old Age Security, health insurance and medicare. There was a post-secondary education system and the economy was generating 10 jobs for every one of us who came out of the university system in 1968. What do we have now? There is now a national debt that, including Crown corporations, amounts to over $200 billion. Over 35 per cent of every tax dollar goes to service the debt. That 35 per cent of every tax dollar goes into the hands of people in this society who already have incredible wealth.

With another decade of rule under Liberal members, we will be like all of the Third World countries. There will be a small group of people who have massive wealth and there will be a huge class of poor people. What the Government is doing, as any radical, left-wing socialist government does, is destroying the middle class. The middle class is that great buffer that avoids extremes in language, religion or economic matters. The middle class is a great buffer against extremism. However, once the Government has destroyed that middle class, we will find extremism in this country. Unfortunately, it will be ourselves, our children and our grandchildren who will suffer.

Our grandchildren will look back and wonder how it could have been that in 1968 we had balanced budgets and a tiny national debt even though we had just come through a major depression and a World War that required an enormous drainage of wealth from ordinary citizens. In 1968 everything was fine until we elected that Government across the way and the ordinary Liberal back-benchers, in order to be re-elected again and again, got us into a deficit situation.

It is true that one can fool all of the people some of the time and one can buy the people with their own money. Besides creating the deficits, Mr. Speaker, another despicable thing government Members have done is pit one region of the country against another. They were prepared to go to the people of central Canada and say: "If you vote for us, we will get that western petroleum energy for less than world price". However, were they prepared to go against the hydro-electric power that is produced in the central provinces? Certainly not, Mr. Speaker. There is no export tax on hydro-electricity but there is on petroleum energy. Are there six individual taxes imposed on hydro-electricity in the country? Certainly not. However, there are on petroleum energy.

People in the west are simply fed up. I am telling you, Mr. Speaker, that they have had enough of this. If the Liberal Government is re-elected again, there will be an uprising in the west that you will never forget because it will tear this country asunder, and it will happen because that Government has not done its job.

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I should like to add a few words to the debate on Bill C-21, an Act to provide borrowing authority to the federal Government. Today the federal Government is asking for authority to borrow some $29.5 billion which would allow it to gather in enough money to operate for the coming fiscal year. It has also asked for a $4 billion contingency over and above the amount actually set out in the Estimates.

As it bothers the Conservatives, it also bothers me that we are in a perpetual debt situation. In the past I have said that if it is necessary to have deficit financing, so be it, but it cannot be ongoing. Any government deficit financing, whether it be federal, provincial or municipal, must be viewed as an investment in the future so that at some point there will be a return on the money borrowed. That is not the case today. The ongoing deficit financing of the Government has brought us to a situation where by the time the borrowing authority is approved—and because of the Government's majority it will be approved—the debt will amount to over $70 billion. At some point that has to stop, Mr. Speaker. There is no business, no law practice and no government that can continue with deficit financing and still operate as we do in this country.

What bothers me as much as the deficit financing that so many governments go into today, particularly the Liberal Government, is what the Conservatives say in this House. Their record in the federal Government is not a very long one. The Conservative provincial governments have also shown a dismal performance. Indeed, some of the things that the Conservatives in this House criticize are evident in the actions of Conservative provincial governments.

The Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) was quoted in Maclean's magazine on July 12, 1982 as saying "If I told what we would do we would never get elected". I think that is true, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) spoke of doing away with programs that would get the construction industry going in the country. Those are the programs that the Conservatives would cut from the Budget in order to try to balance the books. I do not think they could do it even then. They have the same mentality when it comes to government financing as the Liberals. The Conservatives never criticize the Government's bailout of Dome Petroleum, Chrysler of Canada, Maislin Industries or Massey-Ferguson, and the list goes on of cases where the Government has thrown good money after bad.

We cannot have it both ways, Mr. Speaker. If the Liberals and the Conservatives believe in leaving the private sector alone and letting the marketplace take its course, why is it that when large corporate entities get into trouble they are handed a cheque yet some of the companies still go under. That is one place where government debt could be drastically cut.

I only have ten minutes to speak in the debate, Mr. Speaker, so I want to turn to the situation of that great Tory Government in Saskatchewan which said it was open for business when it took office in April, 1982.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Anguish: Today the Tory Government of Saskatchewan has the largest and fastest growing deficit in North America. The previous government left a surplus of $139 million and in the previous 11 straight years had balanced or surplus budgets. Since the Conservative Government took over it has brought in three budgets. Until Wednesday of last week, when the last budget was brought in, it had a deficit of over $500 million, the largest in the history of the province. In addition—

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The Chair fails to see how the deficit situation in the Province of Saskatchewan relates to Bill C-21 which we are discussing here.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): I should like to suggest to the Hon. Member that he try to relate his remarks to what we are discussing.

Mr. Anguish: With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, because of the transfer of money to the provinces from the federal Government under the Established Programs Financing legislation and many other things that the borrowing authority is used for, I am sure you can see the relationship between the provincial deficit and the federal deficit. Much of that money goes to the provinces. If you cannot see the relevance I should like to explain it a little more. Then, when I finish my remarks, perhaps you could make an assessment of whether the two are related.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. Would the Hon. Member resume his seat? The assessment of the Chair is that we should be discussing Bill C-21.

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Speaker, I can see that the dignity of the Chair is increasing with each new occupant. I congratulate you on your firm delivery of the rules.

At the present time the Conservatives criticize deficit financing as done by the Liberal Party in Ottawa, the Party which you used to represent, Mr. Speaker. Things are coming to the point where about half of the money raised in taxes goes to pay interest on the national debt. In Saskatchewan the interest on the deficit alone now amounts to $92 million per year or $11,000 per hour. Whether the deficit in Saskatchewan or the deficit of the federal Government is relevant to you and me, Mr. Speaker, is something that people have to think about. It is not something far removed from them as individual taxpayers; it is something governments do, to make a commitment on behalf of the taxpayers of this country. A previous Conservative speaker said that even if we are not responsible at this time for repayment of the debt, our children and our children's children will be, and I agree with that.

The amount of taxes paid by individuals is an ever-growing proportion of their gross income. At the same time, a number of companies do not contribute to taxes in this country. Fifteen of the largest industrial corporations in Canada did not pay any corporate taxes in 1981 and 1982. General Motors of Canada did not contribute anything to the general revenues of the country in 1981 and 1982, nor did Alcan Aluminum, Canadian National Railways, Hudson's Bay Company, Steinberg, Simpson-Sears, Noranda Mines, Total Petroleum, Massey-Ferguson, Stelco, Genstar, Domtar and Inco.

The Government must do two things in order to balance the Budget, but first, it must aim at getting the debt under control. So many times the Auditor General has said that we have lost control of it and he is right. After more than 100 years of Tory and Liberal administration we find that the debt is increasing every year.

The Government can either raise taxes or, preferably, collect taxes where they are due from those with high incomes who pay no income tax at all, and from those corporate entities who do not pay any corporate tax at all. Or you can start slashing programs, like the Conservatives say they would do and which the Liberals are afraid to do. I prefer that we have responsible fiscal management without arbitrarily slashing programs as the Reaganomics of the Tories suggest under their Bay Street boy from Baie Comeau. The Liberals, who are afraid to do anything, are the greatest manipulators in the history of Canada, and they have their Bay Street boy from wherever he is. Some say he is from the west, some from the east, depending on where he stands. We have to find parliamentarians who are going to act more responsibly to get the things like this borrowing authority and our huge national debt under control for the sake of the taxpayers of Canada, the individuals, and the children who will have to suffer the consequences.

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, we talk about responsible Members of Parliament. For the last ten minutes I have listened to some of the most irresponsible statements I have heard in this House for the past five years.

Mr. Anguish: Is that relevant?

Mr. Thomson: Where is this gentleman coming from?

Mr. Anguish: Is he relevant, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Thomson: The Hon. Member mentioned 15 corporations who did not pay any income tax in 1981 and 1982. I am not familiar with the financial statements of those 15 companies but I suggest not one of them made a profit. You cannot have it both ways. Does the NDP expect corporations who do not make money to pay taxes over and above their losses and thereby deprive Canadians of an opportunity to work? The Member asks for responsibility. Day in and day out the NDP members stand up in this House and suggest greater programs and greater spending. The latest suggestion is to have another $4 billion of job creation in Canada. Where does he think the money is going to come from? Does it grow on trees? In one breath he says he wants responsible government, and in the next breath he wants totally irresponsible fiscal management.

It is unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, that Members in this House cannot speak intelligently to what I believe is the single most important problem facing this country today. All of us in this House are responsible and what is at stake is the economic future of this country. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) stands up in this House and says interest rates need not prevent growth. Who is he kidding? Every single Member in this House knows full well that when interest rates increase, productive capacity in this country goes down. We all know that when fewer corporations embark on upgrading plant and equipment, there will be that many fewer Canadians buying a house and taking on a mortgage. Yet the Minister of Finance, one of the most responsible posts in the federal Cabinet, has the utter audacity to say that increases in interest rates need not prevent growth in this country. It is an unmitigated misrepresentation of the truth.

Mr. Kristiansen: Then why do you support the policy?

Mr. Thomson: Why does the NDP support the Government? You have been the rump for the last five years, and for the last 15 years you have kept these boys in power.

Mr. Kristiansen: That is unmitigated BS.

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Speaker, is this relevant?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. With all due respect to the Member who has the floor, I would like to ask all Members to refrain from shouting in the House when someone is trying to speak.

Mr. Pepin: Or trying to sleep.

Mr. Kristiansen: When you dump this stuff on the street, someone has to shovel it.

Mr. Thomson: I find this extraordinary. It reminds me of that great fellow Nero who fiddled while Rome burned. The Liberal leadership candidates talk about jobs and a new beginning. Someone said something about a new incentive system for private enterprise and greater recognition of the private sector. I cannot understand where these guys have been for the last 15 years. Women's place in society; medicare; income redistribution; federal-provincial relations; we talk about everything except the most significant problem facing the future of this country, that of a $30 billion deficit.

Mr. Kristiansen: The deficit is between your ears.

Mr. Thomson: Mr. Speaker, it is utter fiscal madness. I am not opposed to borrowing money. I would not even be too upset if we were borrowing $30 billion for perhaps one year to address the problem of a serious recession. But it is not $30 billion, it is $150 billion which has been borrowed over the past 15 years of Liberal government, and it is the next $111 billion which will be borrowed over the next five years. Those are staggering numbers and I am not going to go into the numerical size of the problem. What aggravates me is that Members opposite have the audacity to stand up and say there is really nothing wrong with a $30 billion deficit; after all, it is only 6 per cent of the GNP. What has that to do with the problem? The Government will simply not recognize the enormity of the problem these deficits are going to create for future economic growth in this country.

Therein lies the problem. They ask: "What is the problem? What are you complaining about, John? We have managed to struggle along for the last 15 years. We keep borrowing and borrowing and borrowing. So what is wrong with keeping on borrowing?" I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, what is wrong with that. Hundreds and thousands of young Canadians in our schools today are not going to have jobs. They are going to look back and ask why. This Government stole their birthright.

The size of these deficits today, Mr. Speaker, will remove the opportunity for a future generation or generations to go to work. Why? Every Member of the House, including the NDP, understands that it is the private sector that creates jobs rather than the Government. Government does not create jobs. If we want the private sector to create jobs and be the engine of growth in Canada, as so many of the leadership candidates of the Liberal Party propose, we must give them a chance. There is not going to be economic growth when the Government borrows all the savings of Canadians. That is what is happening. That is part of the problem. We have 1,400,000 people out of work today in the country because of 15 years of profligate fiscal mismanagement by the Liberal Government.

Canadians are going to realize more and more that governments cannot borrow their way to prosperity. In order for future generations of Canadians to have jobs and for us to have economic prosperity in this country, we must come to grips with the size of these deficits. We must face them head on. Yet I hear not one single word from the Liberal Party or the Liberal leadership candidates today about the most serious problem that faces the economic future of this country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman but his 10 minutes are up.

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I would like to follow up on one of the comments made by the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson) who preceded me. Managing a government is really no different from managing your home or your own personal business. Here on the Hill we often lose sight of the fact that if one continues year after year to spend more than one takes in, sooner or later someone catches up with them. We are debating the necessity or lack of necessity of borrowing $29.5 billion. As I pointed out earlier, that is more than the total fiscal planning and financial forecasts of the present Government. In other words, the Government is looking for a slush fund of $4 billion, far beyond what is required to run the current operating costs of the Government.

We have reason to be suspicious of slush funds. On numerous occasions in the House we have pointed out some of the uses these extra funds are put to. It is sad and I regret to report that when there is a requirement to borrow $29.5 billion in order to continue the Government's business it means that for every dollar of revenue the Government takes in it is planning to spend $1.50. You cannot run your home, your own personal business or a country that way. The dollar ends up being devalued. Inflation goes up because it costs more dollars to buy the same imported goods. The net result of all this added inflation is added unemployment. Since the number one issue in Canada today is getting more people back to work, it is counter-productive to spend more money than we have, thus driving up inflation and devaluing our dollar. They all go hand in hand with a forecast which is rather gloomy for the 1.5 million people who are presently unemployed and falls short of what they might expect from the Government. They would expect the Government to manage its own affairs better.

To drive the point home, you sometimes have to use what seems on the surface to be a rather ridiculous example. I am going to use butter as an example. I am sorry that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has left the House. He will probably be back. The Minister responsible for agriculture in the country has allowed something to happen which should never have happened. The Minister responsible for foreign affairs has also allowed something to happen which should never have happened. In other words, our Government is condoning the illegal importation of agricultural products. Not only is it bringing in products which are not approved, but they do not fall under the Official Languages Act. They are imported with French only on the wrapper. They are sold in downtown Toronto.

A Mr. Herbst in downtown Toronto was fined $4,000 when he tried to sell a four-ounce chocolate bar that did not have metric on the wrapper. To appeal the case would cost him in the neighbourhood of $20,000 which he cannot raise. Consequently, he cannot appeal. That is what the Government will do to a small, independent retailer who is trying to sell a four-ounce chocolate bar which does not have French on it, or metric.

I wonder what the Government would do to the foreign affairs officials who allowed the purchase of butter with a French only wrapper. That has been proven in the courts to be illegal. Do we have two systems of rules and regulations? Do we allow French only material to come into the country? Do we not prosecute the people who use, purchase and sell them?

Mr. Pepin: Yes.

Mr. Domm: What civil servant is being prosecuted for purchasing French only butter?

Mr. Pepin: The importer.

Mr. Domm: The importer? The Minister mentions the importer as being prosecuted. What about the official, who is on a salary as well, who buys illegally imported product? Why is he not in court? What happened to the chef at the embassy—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order. The Chair has some difficulty relating the Hon. Member's remarks to Bill C-21 which is under discussion at this time. May I ask the Hon. Member to try to get back on the subject.

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, Bill C-21 calls for a $4 billion slush fund to allow the present Government to continue to waste money. I am trying to give an example of where some of that money is going. This morning's Ottawa Citizen reports that it costs $500,000 a year to run the ninth floor Pearson Building dining room which is using illegally imported French butter. It is reported they are paying as much as $10 a pound. Some of the $4 billion slush fund is being spent to sustain a restaurant. We have enough trouble selling products from our own agricultural community today without importing French butter illegally and then having it sold in one of our Government ministry restaurants. This is not the Parliamentary Restaurant which we as Members of Parliament are responsible for, but the restaurant at the foreign embassy which is under the ministry of foreign affairs. They are wasting Canadian taxpayers' money and are not spending the money locally buying Canadian agricultural products. The chef says the reason he buys it for that restaurant is that it is the best. It is brought illegally into Canada and should not be purchased by any Minister. It should not be the Herbsts, the small independent dealers in Toronto, who are prosecuted for selling English only chocolate bars. We have a ministry here which imports French only butter.

I was flying on Air Canada the other day and had some wine. I noticed that the labels were all in French only. We are importing and paying more for that wine than we would for domestic wine. Yet the Air Canada people are serving it. I believe that needs investigation as well.

If the Government would show some accountability in the priorities it places on its spending, the Canadian people would have more respect for its request to borrow funds above and beyond what is actually required. It is perfectly safe to say that we in the Official Opposition have no intention of supporting a $29.5 billion borrowing Bill. Even if the Government must bring in closure at every stage, we still have no intention of supporting it. We have shown that to date and we will continue to show it. We might be here for a long time debating the Government's need for $29.5 billion more than it is taking in income.

It costs every Canadian $1.50 for every $1 received by the Government. In other words, the Government cannot live within its means. Thus there should be no concurrence in this piece of legislation which will put our grandchildren in hock.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, Canada is a resource-rich land that is wanting in nothing. It is filled with agricultural productivity and has one-fifth of the world's fresh water. Its forestry capacity is unparalleled by any nation in the world. Its hard rock mineral capacity is the envy of virtually every nation.

Mr. Pepin: There are no oranges.

Mr. Malone: When we compare Canada with Japan, which is an island of rock with resources of fish and tin, we are wavering well below in our economy compared to what it was in 1968 and we are now about sixteenth in the world compared to Japan which is in second place. While we have had a blessing of great wealth, we have not had the capacity to take advantage of it. We have some of the world's best educated people yet today we are faced with a borrowing Bill for $29.5 billion.

It is the eighth time that the Government has made a trip to the public pump in this Parliament. The other Bills the Government brought in were Bill C-30 for $12 billion, Bill C-59 for $14 billion, Bill C-111 for $6.6 billion, Bill C-125 for $7 billion, Bill C-128 for $4 billion, Bill C-143 for $19 billion, Bill C-151 for $10 billion, and it has now come to Parliament with Bill C-21 to ask for $29.55 billion. The amount of money being asked for has shocked Canadians into not caring. They do not understand what is happening because they do not have any concept of what $1 billion is. This present Government is trying to hoodwink the people the same way that C. D. Howe did when he said "What's a million?"

Let me describe the amount of money we are dealing with because it may be important to some people to put what the Government is trying to do into perspective. The Government is asking to borrow $29.55 billion. If that is put into $1 bills and stacked one upon the other, there would be a column 120 miles high. I fly back and forth between Ottawa and my constituency in Alberta. When I am in the airplane flying at 40,000 feet, I am sometimes concerned about that first step. It seems to me that I am a long way up, yet 40,000 feet is just a little under seven miles. If we hit that column of dollar bills, representing the amount the Government is asking to borrow, it would extend another 113 miles above us. It is an example of the debt that the Government is imposing upon us. When one includes Crown corporations, the country is now some $200 billion in debt.

The Government pretends that it is not a significant problem. It takes the attitude that it is only borrowing 6 per cent of the Gross National Product. The fact is that the tradition in the United States has always been to try to keep the debt within 2 per cent of their Gross National Product. When their debt went above 2 per cent of the GNP in the past five-year period, there was an energetic approach to try to return to the 2 per cent ratio of the GNP in the United States.

The Liberal Government basically believes that it can borrow without end. Let me say that the notion of borrowing is that when one borrows, one lives at a higher standard of living but at a cost which must be repaid in the future. Today the Government is living off the fat of the land of a resource-rich nation but to the indebtedness of our children and their children. A burden is being placed on them of debts of a spendthrift government.

Mr. Pepin: Have you never borrowed?

Mr. Malone: The Government presently has $8 billion cash on hand and is asking to borrow an amount of which $4 billion has not been accounted for. I say to the Minister opposite, who would like to give my speech, that when the Government seeks to borrow $29.55 billion it would do a Liberal grand to stand up in the House and defend that request. Yet there has been one Conservative speaker after another, one NDP speaker and another seeking to be recognized, who are speaking in this debate. The Government wants to borrow $29.55 billion but its members do not have the courage to stand in their place and tell Canadians how they justify that request. I can say why they cannot justify it. The Government already has $8 billion which it can use and another one-half billion dollars of borrowing authority that it can borrow before this weekend.

More importantly, after the upcoming Liberal leadership convention presumably there will be a new government. It does not matter to Government members now who will be in power; it will borrow for all of next year, including $4 billion which it cannot even account for. Those members do not worry about the books. There is no accounting for the Liberal Government; it just takes money without any idea or responsibility for its use.

When parliamentary democracy began some 725 years ago, it became clearly established that the purpose of Parliament was to control the king's purse. That is why we are here. However, not only does the Liberal Government borrow wildly, it is asking for money without the decency of telling us what it is for.

Furthermore, as indicated by the Auditor General of Canada, there is a massive hidden debt couched in our Crown corporations. Mirabel, Canadair and Petro-Canada are all spending money frivolously.

Mr. Pepin: Mirabel is not a Crown company.

Mr. Malone: The two tallest skyscrapers in Calgary belong to Petro-Canada. There are 500 acres of marble on the outside of those buildings. That marble was cut in Finland but Finland could not polish the marble. That did not bother the Crown corporation because it simply stacked the marble on a ship and sent it to Italy to be polished. Since it wanted the colour of marble that came from Finland, it sent it to Italy to be polished, and then to Canada.

The Government's perspective on such matters is simply to borrow and borrow. The Government has a hidden level of bureaucracy that looks after Canadair with billions of dollars, Petro-Canada with close to a billion dollars and Mirabel with close to a billion dollars, all without any accountability. Now it returns to Parliament to ask for $29.55 billion. When one includes the Crown corporations, its total debt is close to $200 billion.

The good Minister across the way tries to give his speech while I am giving mine, without standing up to take his ten minutes to justify why this country must continually go into debt. Why can he not stand in his place and tell us that this debt should come down? Why can he not tell us that 2 per cent of our Gross National Product is a more realistic goal for borrowing rather than hovering as we are at 6 per cent of our GNP and always between 5 per cent and 8 per cent?

Surely we have an obligation to bring that debt into some kind of perspective. Since the Government takes the C.D. Howe attitude by asking "What's a billion?", perhaps it would be wise to put into perspective just how much $1 billion is. For any person in Canada, whether from Gopher Gulch or Cactus Creek, $1 billion means spending $100 every minute, 24 hours a day, seven days a week for 19 years. That is $1 billion. Would it not be a great high school graduation party if you were able to take $200 billion at that rate? Yet this Government does not give us any answer why it should be extended money. It has $8 billion now and another half a billion coming up if it wants the authority by the end of this week. It is also asking for another $4 billion.

After Mirabel, Petro-Canada, Canadair and all the rest, the answer from this side of the House is no, the Government is not going to get it. We are going to dig in and we are going to fight, because we have a responsibility not only to make the national economy work but to make Parliament work. Parliament will not be working, Sir, unless we make this Government accountable to its economy, to its finances, to its borrowing, to its debt. Our debt ratio is too high. It is unacceptably too high. We have no hope for the future if we are going to borrow against tomorrow. What is needed in this country are jobs. We have to get those jobs in place by putting financial strictures in operation. Every time we pay $3 in tax, $1 goes to pay for the interest charges on the debt.

I see that you are telling me that my time is up, Mr. Speaker. I want you to know, Sir, that that is all that is up, certainly not the issue, just the time. It is unfortunate because I want to get into other matters. We could have 30 per cent more services or 30 per cent less tax. But as long as we have that kind of debt—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

Mr. Malone: I am sorry it has, Mr. Speaker. Could we have unanimous consent for me to carry on because I have more to tell the Government?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I want to participate in the debate today on Bill C-21. The Government is asking Parliament to pass this Bill so it can borrow an extra $29.55 billion. I oppose this Bill. I am sure the Government can find ways and means to spend $29 billion. It seems to be quite successful at spending money, but it certainly has not been successful at balancing the Government's books.

Right now the total federal public debt stands at some $181 billion. The interest on that loan is some 20.3 billion per year. In other words, 21 cents out of every dollar collected in taxes is spent just to pay off the interest on our public debt. This is crazy.

An individual who managed his own finances this way and found that 21 per cent of his income had to go to banks and other organizations from which he borrowed money could not survive. Perhaps the only reason this Government continues to survive is that it is able to borrow more and more and can dig itself deeper holes in order to get the dirt to fill in the previous hole it dug for itself. This is irresponsible, shortsighted and just plain dumb.

It is interesting to hear some of my colleagues to my right, members of the Conservative Party, raising some arguments against the debt. They have certainly projected themselves as a Party in favour of balancing the books. The Tories have projected themselves as a responsible Party. But the actual facts and figures prove something different. My colleague, the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish), earlier gave Saskatchewan as an example where a Conservative Government which came into power in 1982 has proceeded to run up the fastest growing deficit in North America at present. When that Conservative Government took power, it found a surplus of $139 million in the Saskatchewan treasury. Right now with a budget brought down last week in the Saskatchewan legislature there was a deficit this year of $267 million. That is an accumulated deficit in three years of some $929 million. The interest on that deficit is costing the people of Saskatchewan $92 million a year. Broken down into a shorter time frame, that amounts to $11,000 an hour which the people of Saskatchewan are paying in interest charges. This is a Conservative Party that claims to be responsible and not to believe in deficit financing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. I must remind the Hon. Member that he should try to relate his remarks to Bill C-21 which is before us. Discussing the deficit in another jurisdiction—

Mr. Nickerson: It is an analogy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Yes. The Hon. Member can mention en passant what is happening in a province but he cannot make his whole speech on something other than Bill C-21.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I would like to debate the point with you but I do not want to lose part of my ten minutes. I was attempting to show in a discussion on deficit financing some of the deficits that are occurring. I was attempting to point out some of the track records of some political parties which are making certain claims in this House. I believe it is very relevant to this debate and what is being said here. It is certainly a heck of a lot more relevant than whether chocolate bar wrappers have French on them or not.

Not only do we find deficit financing in Saskatchewan but we find it in Tory Ontario, Tory Alberta, and Tory British Columbia. The highest deficit in Great Britain has occurred under a Tory Government led by Margaret Thatcher. We find the highest deficit in the history of the United States has occurred under a new right-wing President, Ronald Reagan. Why do we have a Party that believes in less government, in cutting government services, yet when Conservatives get into government they end up having some of the largest deficits in the history of their jurisdictions? At the same time these governments are cutting government services and social programs. This is happening in the United States, Great Britain, in the Province of Saskatchewan, the Province of Alberta, the Province of British Columbia and the Province of Ontario. We wonder why.

The Conservatives do know how to cut government spending but they do not know how to raise government revenues in a fair and equitable manner. That is the cause of major deficits.

En passant, Mr. Speaker, to use Saskatchewan as example, in the last year of the NDP Government of 1981-82, some $512 million in provincial revenues were collected through income tax. At the same time, from our non-renewable resources in Saskatchewan the provincial government collected some $758 million. How does this compare to the Tory record of 1984-85? Well, personal income tax as a percentage of provincial revenues has gone up some 40 per cent. The provincial coffers collected $714 million from personal income tax, up some $200 million. But what happened to revenues from non-renewable resources? There was no change, Mr. Speaker. The Government is still collecting $759 million from resources. In other words, the percentage of public revenues from the personal income sector has increased, yet that from the corporate and resource sector has, as a percentage, decreased.

We find the same circumstance, Mr. Speaker, with our national Government. The Liberal and Tory economic policies do not differ all that much. We find it on the federal level. In 1952 total tax revenues from individual taxpayers was some 46.3 per cent, while the corporate sector provided some 53.7 per cent of the total taxes which were collected in 1950. In 1962, individuals were paying 59.9 per cent of the total revenues whereas the corporate sector share had dropped down to 40.1 per cent. The latest statistics are for 1980, when the federal Government took in $24.9 billion in revenue, 30.5 per cent of which is derived from the corporate sector and 69.4 per cent from individuals.

That is the problem, Mr. Speaker. Government has allowed the multinational corporations tax loopholes and special tax incentives, so that they are no longer carrying their fair share of the tax burden in Canada. It is not that we are over-spending on social programs. Canada's record in terms of social programs is certainly not one of the best in the world. Some European countries, Mr. Speaker, Germany, Holland and the Scandinavian countries, with much less natural resources than Canada, pay their old age pensioners, unemployed, sick and disabled much better pensions and income support than we do here in North America. Yet, Mr. Speaker, they do not have deficits because they make certain that everyone pays their fair share. We do not, Mr. Speaker.

I am reminded of a recent article in The Globe and Mail about how big corporations beat the tax man for billions by using tax havens, setting up dummy companies in Bermuda or in the Dutch Antilles, costing the Canadian taxpayers billions of dollars every year. I am reminded, Mr. Speaker, of the $22 billion in deferred corporate income taxes for 1980. I am reminded of the billions of dollars which companies like CPR owe the federal treasury in deferred taxes. Yet, Mr. Speaker, not a word about this highway robbery by the corporate elite of this country, the multinationals. It is not the small-businessmen; it is the corporate elite sponsored by the Conservatives or the Liberals.

Essentially, they have the same notion, and that is the trickle-down Reagan economic notion of "You feed the horse a lot of oats and eventually the sparrow will get some". We must watch our step, Mr. Speaker, because it is a slippery road out there and the sparrows are sure not getting any. I stand opposed to the Bill, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a few statements concerning the subject matter before the House and to put a few facts on the table.

The broad economic objective of the last Budget, as was that of the April, 1983 Budget, is to initiate and sustain an investment-led expansion of economic activity which will create employment without the re-emergence of inflation. That basically was the objective. This objective has been pursued both through short-term expansionary measures designed to provide stimulus and jobs and through longer-term initiatives designed to increase investment and improve productivity and competitiveness.

A rise in the deficit during a period of cyclical weakness provides an important cushion to the over-all level of activity. It helps ensure that individual hardship during a recession is not excessive. If the Government was to attempt to prevent the automatic increase in the deficit that is induced by the recession, this would result in a more severe recession, more unemployment and more hardship for the Canadian people. That would be the result of a policy which has been advocated by the Hon. Members opposite. In the medium-term, however, a deficit reduction is vital. This is to ensure that public sector deficits do not crowd our private investment as the latter is expected to grow more rapidly after 1984.

A continuation of the recovery will automatically result in a narrowing of the deficit. Rising employment will mean less money will be required for unemployment insurance benefits and personal income taxe revenue will be higher. Corporation income taxes and revenues from sales taxes will also increase. That is automatic. In addition, scheduled increases in tax rates, in part implemented in order to finance the Special Recovery Program announced in the April Budget, will reduce the deficit further.

Developments over the past year and a half or so demonstrate that there is no clear connection between deficits and interest rates; none. Interest rates are considerably below their pre-recession peak despite a rise in the federal deficit. This is not to suggest, however, that interest rate developments are not affected by events in the United States, as the former speaker suggested. Rather, during a cyclical downturn private demands for credit generally decline—indeed, this is in large part what causes the recession—so there need not be any conflict between private and public borrowing. As economic conditions improve, government borrowing requirements should automatically diminish when private credit demands are rising. If it becomes clear that the federal deficit is not falling fast enough, the Government stands ready to adjust its fiscal plan in order to prevent a clash of credit demands.

Since 1975 the federal Government has been committed to restraining the trend growth in spending to no more than the trend growth in GNP. This commitment does not mean that the growth of expenditures must equal the growth in GNP every year. During a cyclical downturn expenditures would generally be expected to grow faster than GNP, since a deterioration in economic conditions would put upward pressure on expenditures and GNP growth would, of course, be slower. Similarly, the ratio of expenditures to GNP would be expected to decline during the recovery phase of the cycle.

The Government has been successful in meeting its expenditure targets, although it has been suggested otherwise in this debate. In the 1975-1976 fiscal year, total outlays, which are the Government's expenditure control variable, were 22.9 per cent of GNP. By 1980-1981 they had fallen to 19.1 per cent of GNP. Slow growth in GNP, the associated upward pressure on spending from low activity levels, rising public debt charges and some discretionary measures resulted in total outlays rising to an estimated 23.3 per cent of GNP in the current fiscal year. However, if trend rather than actual GNP were used in the calculation, the total outlays-to-GNP ratio would fall to 21.6 per cent, significantly below the ratio in 1975-1976. In other words, the ratio of total outlays to GNP is projected to decline continuously from 1984-1985 forward, reaching 20.8 per cent by 1987-1988. Restraint in expenditures should contribue to maintaining the downward momentum on inflation.

The Budget also introduced measures to strengthen economic partnership and enhance economic security. The proposals for employee profit participation plans are aimed at encouraging business and labour to share in goals through profit sharing. Economic security will be most visible and most visibly enhanced by the increase in the guaranteed income supplement for single pensioners. The pension proposals, including the reduction of the vesting period of two years—

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have before me Hansard of March 5, a time when you were in the Chair. You repeatedly called to order the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall), who at that time was reading his speech. You quite correctly brought him to order and told him not to read from a prepared speech but to address the House verbatim. I wonder if Members on that side could be brought to the same order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Hon. Member who has the floor was reading. Would he start speaking as provided in our rules?

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I was merely reading from some notes I had prepared, after listening to the globbledegook originating from the other side. It is very important that you listen to what I was saying. What I was trying to do was capsulize the important points which Hon. Members opposite have been making. It is very difficult to do that when somebody is required to speak in this House verbatim, as the Hon. Member put it. The comments I would have to make would have to be very general, if I were not allowed to refer to my exact notes. If the Speaker will permit it, I will continue my address. If the Hon. Speaker will also permit me to make reference to some of my notes during my address—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): It would settle the problem for the Speaker to let it be known that the Hon. Member's time is up.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Did you say my time was up, my entire time?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order. Will the Hon. Member resume his seat. His time is up. I have to recognize another Member.

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, the basic point that seems to be missed in this debate is that this borrowing authority of $29.5 billion equals 96 per cent of total personal savings in Canada this year. To indicate to anyone in this House, as the previous speaker tried to do, that the borrowing by this Government does not affect private industry and its borrowing is pure balderdash and he knows it.

This is the largest borrowing request by any government in Canadian history. More important, contained in this Bill is $4 billion that is intended to be used as a slush fund. It begs the question: Is this because the Government is worried about its forecasted revenues? Is it because the Government is planning some grandiose spending scheme prior to the upcoming election? Is this slush fund to be used once again to buy the voters of Canada with their own tax dollars?

We talk about the economic climate in Canada today and how we can improve it so that government expenditures will be reduced. In the last week or so, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) indicated in Question Period that Canadians are sending their money offshore or to the United States because of the higher interest rates there. He accuses Members on this side of the House of being one of the first to do that. He told our socialist friends to my left that they would be the first to move their money to the United States if they could earn more by investing there, and that is why interest rates are going up.

Has it not occurred to the Members of this House that we should have a stable climate in this country, where investors can have confidence in what will happen to their investments? We would then have a capital inflow and a drop in our deficit. Has it ever occurred to Hon. Members that every month we pay $1 billion in the form of unemployment insurance to people we are telling not to work? In order to keep the unemployment figures down, we are paying people to go to schools and universities for training. This is paid out of the unemployment insurance fund and exceeds the $1 billion.

It is lunacy for this Government to come forward with a borrowing authority that contains a $4 billion slush fund. I do not trust the Liberal Government to use that money wisely. It is like me going into a bank and applying for a $50,000 loan when my requirements are only $40,000. If I told the bank manager that the extra $10,000 was for a slush fund, just in case, the bank manager would run me out of the building. Every Member experienced with borrowing money from an institution knows that would happen. The person who authorized the loan containing the slush fund would be fired from his job. The people of Canada should fire us if we do not stop this spendthrift Government from gaining access to a $4 billion slush fund. That is the main point before us today.

We know that the Government requires authority to borrow money. We know the economic mess the Government is in and therefore it has to continue to borrow. We know this must happen because we cannot shut down everything overnight. Bills have to be paid. However, we also know that no government going into an election campaign should have at its disposal $4 billion to throw at the taxpayer. That is our concern today with this borrowing authority. Remember, too, that the borrowing authority is 96 per cent of all savings across Canada. That is the disaster.

Has the Government deliberately underestimated the deficit? Was it a political ploy that at the time of the last Budget the Minister underestimated the deficit? Was it deliberately underestimated? There are clear signals in the Budget that that is what was done. Was that done so that the Canadian people would not know before the election how disastrous this Government's economic policies have been? Is that the reason? Now the slush fund is to be increased by $4 billion. Will the deficit really be $4 billion higher, or is it a slush fund for an election? Clearly their fiscal projections lack confidence.

The tragedy of this borrowing authority points to the tragedy that exists from coast to coast. A million and a half people are unemployed because the economic climate has dropped so drastically. The tragedy of the unemployed across the country exists because the Government has created, over the past 15 years of Liberal administration, a climate in Canada in which the world investment community feels it is no longer safe to invest. In order to invest in Canada, investors must go through a bureaucracy. Investors who look at opportunities in Canada throw up their hands and say: "Who needs it?" They say that because they feel their investment dollars are required all over the world in the emerging countries and they may move freely from one country to another.

As a result of the eighth borrowing authority Bill which has come before the House since 1980, the fundamental problem we face is that we have not established and maintained an investment climate in Canada which is trustworthy and for which the rules will not be changed. An investor must be able to say to himself: "I know what the rules are, I can invest for 10 years and I know that the Government will not, through retroactive legislation, confiscate some of my property". This has been done. It was done through the National Energy Program. We set the rules and we told investment companies to invest their dollars, to explore, to find us oil and gas and to invest in our mines. What did we do? A Budget was brought in that included the National Energy Program and said that we were going retroactively to confiscate some of the wealth that had been created—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I think that before proceeding I should make reference to the fact that we are not debating the motion that the Bill now be given second reading but rather the amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling). His amendment reads as follows:

> That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:
> "this House holds the opinion that the granting of an authority for the borrowing of a sum greater than the amount required to meet the government's needs to the end of the current fiscal year is objectionable in principle and this House therefore declines to give second reading to Bill C-21, An Act to provide borrowing authority."

Some Hon. Members: You are reading.

Mr. Nickerson: I thought it very necessary to read briefly into the record the excellent amendment introduced by the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. May the Chair just add that we are dealing with a subamendment which reads as the Hon. Member has indicated except that the word "fiscal" has been deleted and replaced by the word "calendar". This is a subamendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans).

Mr. Nickerson: Of course you are quite correct, Mr. Speaker, but because that is a frivolous and meaningless amendment, I did not care to mention it.

I share the views that have been expressed by many Members on this side of the House this morning. I think the time has come when Parliament must say no to the Government. Every Member of the House, whether on this side or the other, should recognize the inequity of the situation as it exists today.

I would call upon all Members of the House to use, just for once, the responsibility that has been imposed upon them by their electors and to vote in favour of the amendment that is before us today. I call upon every Member to make sure that the Government goes back to the drawing board and returns to the House with a Bill that does not ask for $30 billion, $4 billion of which is some kind of slush fund or contingency fund, but with one which makes the Government do its homework and come before Parliament with a request for only those moneys which are absolutely required.

It is my opinion that the national finances of Canada must be brought back under control. We simply cannot continue to live the way we are living. We simply cannot continue to have borrowing authority Bills brought before us time after time asking for more and more money as if there is no end to it. We know that the end must come. I would hope that it would come now and that the Government and all Members of the House would exercise some degree of responsibility.

The Government is drunk with its own spending and its own borrowing. Time after time it returns to the House. It seems unable of its own accord to exercise any form of self-control. It is fiscally incontinent and it lies upon Members of the House to bring the Government back to reason in the financial field. It is a historical responsibility of Parliament to do so.

It has been brought to our attention once before today, but it is worthwhile to repeat, that looking back over the many years, the historical responsibility of Parliament is to be a shepherd of the taxpayers' dollars. When the time comes, as it has today, to say no to the Government and to refuse to authorize the expenditure of additional unnecessary funds, the Crown must be refused for the sake of Canada.

It is of great concern to me that the deficits we continually incur are of a structural nature. We have heard the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) try to argue that this is not the case, but anyone with half an eye can see what has happened. Ever since the days of the former Minister of Finance, John Turner, there has never been a year in which the Government has not come before us to borrow yet more money. We are on a roller-coaster, so to speak. Even if the economy were to improve somewhat, perhaps as a result of what is happening in the United States, it still would not solve our problems because they are built-in problems. We can only change the continuing, re-occurring and ever-increasing deficits through an over-all change in policy.

We need a new approach. The approach taken at present is that every government department figures out how much money it needs or thinks it would need and every Minister is subject to pressures from various public interest groups which invariably want the expenditure of additional public funds. Each department totals that amount and perhaps adds another 10 per cent for contingencies or some kind of slush fund, and all of this is totalled together and eventually presented to Parliament. This is the wrong approach.

The fundamental question parliamentarians must ask themselves is what is the maximum fiscal burden Canadians are prepared to carry by way of taxation, and by way of deficit financing as well because we pay for that eventually through inflation and the lowering of the value of each dollar that we own. What should happen is that this determination should be made and then the government departments and each Minister should be forced or obliged to operate within that maximum amount.

Parliament must say no to Bill C-21. We must call a halt to this profligacy. We must make the Government become responsible and we must implement the system I have outlined.

THE LATE RIGHT HON. BORA LASKIN

TRIBUTES TO FORMER CHIEF JUSTICE OF THE SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have had consultations with the House Leaders on the other side and we have come to an understanding that at this time today tributes will be paid to the Right Hon. Bora Laskin. I understand that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) wants to do that and he is on his way. I would ask you very respectfully to recognize the Prime Minister for that purpose.

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

The Late Bora Laskin

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, yesterday Canadians lost one of their greatest champions of equity and fairness. I rise in this House today to pay tribute to the Right Hon. Bora Laskin, the 14th Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada.

Any attempt to categorize the man is predestined to fall short of doing him justice. His public persona is well known: he was a brilliant scholar and academic—a mentor to thousands of young men and women, all of whom recall him with genuine affection. His writings, particularly on property and constitutional law, remain required reading for any serious law student.

I personally did not have the privilege of studying with this great teacher, but I would be remiss if I did not state the very great personal debt I feel to him, intellectually and emotionally. I am a life-long student of the Constitution and sometime teacher, and certainly in latter years, a practitioner of constitutional matters. I want to say that it was with something like a sense of awe that I approached the writings of the man and read his judgments, so much were they imbued with clarity and a sense of equity.

His judgments during his 19 years on the bench demonstrated sensitivity, humanity, thoroughness, intellectual rigour, and an unfailing understanding of the law.

[Translation]

That his majority judgments should have become part of our jurisprudence is entirely normal, Mr. Speaker, but it is remarkable, on the other hand, that his dissenting judgments have also become an important source of reference and inspiration. It is perhaps the distinguishing mark of the great law scholar that Bora Laskin was, that his judgments, whether for or against, were always interesting, never indifferent, always inspired respect and were never disappointing. We are thankful that this exceptional Canadian, even after reaching retirement age, continued to serve his country and his fellow citizens with the integrity, dedication and generosity that was his.

[English]

Always sensitive to the needs and conditions of the country, he expressed an important truth when he said: "The law must constantly adapt to the changing reality of Canadian life".

He was regularly honoured with citations, awards, and degrees, but he never sought recognition and never hoped for greatness. His life was a private pursuit of excellence, and no one was more amazed than he by the attention his remarkable success attracted.

Bora Laskin found pleasure not in reviewing his own accomplishments but in the company of his family and his students. His humility was as refreshing as it was genuine.

I recall once asking him which of his many achievements he remembered most fondly. "That is easy," he replied. "When I was young, back in Fort William, I played baseball. I still hold the record for the longest home run hit out of the local ballpark."

Today, as the sympathy of the nation goes out to Mrs. Laskin and her children, we are all conscious that we have lost a remarkable man who gained the respect and admiration of Canadians, and of countless others throughout the world, for his dedication to the rule of law, to civil liberties and social justice.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, greatness has been compared to a forest giant that, when removed, leaves emptiness around it. Such was the greatness of Bora Laskin. Without being born to privilege or easy accomplishment, his qualities were such that greatness was his inevitable destiny. He walked the path of high achievement without forgetting his roots and with an unswerving commitment to the rights of the humble and unrepresented.

He was, above all, a great and distinguished Canadian. His outlook was essentially and distinctly Canadian. He read with uncanny certitude the scroll of Canadian destiny. He possessed, in my judgment from afar, a keenly sensitive appreciation of where we had been, where we were, and where this nation must go. He used his talent and his genius, his deep understanding of the broad sweep and play of constitutional forces, to assist the forward movement of this nation.

He remained true to his origins. His parents were Russian Jewish immigrants who settled in western Canada and moved to Thunder Bay. His unswerving commitment to minority rights and his deep sense of tolerance were ingrained by the heritage of which he was so justifiably proud.

The power and insight which were to mark his judgments in the highest Court of Canada were apparent as a student, and later professor, at the University of Toronto where he won a reputation as a strong and able defender of civil liberties.

I can remember in the early 1960s, as a law student at the University of Laval in Quebec City, that the comments, articles, and opinions of Mr. Laskin were held up as examples of excellence which all associated with the law strove to emulate.

In ten turbulent years he placed his stamp on the Supreme Court, which became described as "Laskin's Court".

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, he is referred to, and rightly so, as liberal rather than radical, innovative rather than revolutionary. In fact, he will be remembered as a man of his time, for having wanted to adapt the law to changing circumstances. Bora Laskin was very concerned that Canadians did not understand how the legal system worked and, especially, were not aware of the importance of the role played by the Supreme Court in Canada. Because of this, he made a considerable effort to give the Court's important judgments more publicity and attention. He liked to say that it is necessary to have informed citizens if we are to maintain and observe the law.

His death is a tremendous loss, not only for the judicial and legal world but for all Canadians.

• (1410)

[English]

His supreme achievement was to shake the Court out of the straight-jacket of orthodoxy in which it had long operated. He brought the Supreme Court to the mainstream of major national issues, cutting the knot of constitutional impasse in order to remove from the political arena the vital issue of Canadian rights. The Court became a deeply human entity whose rulings were to become part of the daily living of every Canadian.

Bora Laskin was an ornament to his profession, his community, and to the nation. He kindled a light that will not soon be extinguished.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, with the death of Bora Laskin we have witnessed the passing of a truly great Canadian, one who was humble in his origins. He was a man who grew up as really an ordinary boy, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has reminded us, who took great pleasure in playing sports and who cited his baseball accomplishments as perhaps the most noteworthy of all.

He was a modest man who achieved great heights in our society. In many aspects of his life, not simply in his contributions to our judicial system, he made a distinguished contribution. He was a teacher of extraordinary ability. During the late 1960s I had the pleasure and honour of sharing with him the responsibilities of a commission at York University which was looking into the then existing difficulties on the campus, including, as they did, the conflicts that were occurring between young people and faculty members. These conflicts were occurring not only in our nation at that time but indeed throughout the industrialized democratic world. During that period I saw Bora Laskin close at hand as a man with a fine mind, a rigorously logical intelligence, but also as a man of broad sympathies and democratic inclinations. During the work he did at that time in the University community he made a great contribution to the intellectual and student life of the University.

He was, as Canadians know, one of the truly great judges of our period. For 19 years he worked particularly on bringing home to Canadians the importance of fundamental human rights. He was a great defender of the Charter of Rights. He was a great believer in improving the rights of women in our society. He was a scholar, making a distinguished contribution to our own tradition of constitutional law. As has been noted by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) and the Prime Minister, he really did prepare our Supreme Court for its new role in our society for the decades to come. He went beyond the old rigidities of the law. He saw law as a liberating and changing force in society. More than any other man of his time, he showed leadership to our existing Supreme Court to ensure that it would function in that kind of way in the future.

We regret his passing, Mr. Speaker, as only a nation can regret the passing of one of its distinguished sons or daughters.

The Late Bora Laskin

An extraordinary man has left an extraordinary gap in our nation. We send our profoundest sympathy to Mrs. Laskin and other members of his family.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, a great honour I have had in life has been the friendship of the late Chief Justice Bora Laskin and of his beloved Peggy. I knew him first when I was a student and he was a pioneer in legal education who, with the late Cecil Wright, established the concept which made the University of Toronto Law School the centre of excellence and a model for most of the law schools founded in Canada since then. In those days all the students at the school, and we were not many, shared a sense that we were part of something special. Indeed, we were. Bora Laskin was our inspiration to legal excellence.

He was also our inspiration to hard work. During my three years at the law school, Professor Laskin's door was never closed, and the worktable beside the door was where he could be found, morning, noon, and night, weekdays and weekends, preparing lectures, preparing opinions, editing law reports and, nevertheless, taking the time and interest to give advice to students about the law, about job prospects, and about personal problems, as if he had no other responsibilities.

His true and highest calling was that of teacher. To his surprise, and to mine, I led his classes in both constitutional law and in property law. That was the basis for continuing contact and friendship that we shared over the years. His later distinction was no surprise to any of the thousands of students like me for whom he was a model. His passing is a grievous loss to Canada.

Bora Laskin was also a member of the Jewish community. His Jewish roots were a clear and constant part of his life. A love of the law and a love of learning are central values to Jewish culture, and every Jew in this country has shared pride and satisfaction that a member of our community was called to the greatest heights of service to Canada. It says much of our beloved Canada that he was so recognized. This is a sad day for all Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, unlike my colleague, the Solicitor General, I never had the opportunity of being a student of Chief Justice Laskin, except in the broader sense, because I had chosen a rival law school. But I did have the great pleasure of being for six years his colleague on the teaching faculty of the University of Toronto. He was a man who was very kind to young professors, provided of course that you were prepared to accept his own very high standards of dedication and excellence. He was never too busy to give advice. He was a master of detail, but nevertheless, and despite his great legal knowledge, he was also a warmly human person who was always prepared, when he saw an inequity, to respond to the needs of the situation and to be kind, and even indulgent, to the student or person involved.

He was a very great Canadian, and it has been one of the greatest joys for me, being Minister of Justice at this time in our history, that my former colleague was at the same time the Chief Justice of Canada. He was a great scholar, a great person, a very human man. I want to extend my sincere sympathy, and I am sure that of all my colleagues in the House, to his wife and his family.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest that we rise and observe a minute's silence in memory of the Late Chief Justice, Bora Laskin.

[Whereupon the House stood in silence for one minute.]

• (1420)

Mr. Speaker: Order please. Would there be unanimous agreement that the period of questions extend until five minutes past three?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR ADJUSTMENTS TO ECONOMIC POLICY

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. I would like to refer him to yesterday's Hansard where, as reported at page 2422, he said:

> If need be, we will make the necessary adjustments.

He was referring to the economic situation. He went on to say:

> In the meantime I see no reason to change the basic policy that we have been following.

If that statement means anything, Mr. Speaker, it means that the Government is not powerless to affect our economic situation, as it has been claiming now for some months, and that it could make adjustments.

Unemployment is up for the fourth month in a row. There has been an increase in the average time that the unemployed are unemployed in excess of 14 weeks. The number of people working full-time is 352,000 below the pre-recession peak, and 68,000 below the number when the Liberals returned to govern in 1980. The number of young people without jobs is 346,000 below that peak, and there are 288,000 more youth unemployed than when the Government came to power.

In view of those facts, why not make the adjustments now? If you can make adjustments to the economy as you implied yesterday, why not do it now? Why wait? Why are you still requiring the unemployed to suffer, if you can take action that might prevent that?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first of all, it is not the Government that has claimed nothing could be done about the economy. These are statements the Member made when he was Minister of Finance. I have already quoted some of those statements of his which are in Hansard.

Second, I would like to invite the Hon. Member to address the Chair when asking questions, and respect the rules of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: Poor baby.

An Hon. Member: Come on.

Mr. Lalonde: Third, I want to tell my friend that the forecast I made at the time of the Budget—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Tell the Speaker.

Mr. Lalonde: —of growth this year of 4.9 per cent is still valid. When I prepared the Budget of February 15 I bore in mind the figures that the Hon. Member mentioned. The Budget of April 15, 1983, and the Budget of February 15, 1984, were aimed at addressing the economic problems of the country. I am confident that the measures I announced in the Budget of February are those which are required and are adequate for the time being.

As I have indicated, however, we are monitoring the situation and, as Minister of Finance, I am concerned with trying to make sure that every step is taken to ensure that the Canadian economy will experience the best possible rate of growth and we will be able to address, in the most effective way, the economic problems that we face in our country.

LEVEL OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister confirmed again today that he is monitoring the situation. Yesterday he said:

> If need be, we will make the necessary adjustments.

Do we not need adjustments when there are 1,476,000 unemployed? Do we not need adjustments when the interest rate has just gone up, when the dollar is sinking, and when inflation has started up again? For two months in a row we have had renewed inflation. How long do the unemployed and everyone else in the country who is suffering from your economic chaos have to suffer before you make those adjustments? Why not make the adjustments now?

Mr. Speaker: Order. In the interest of everyone, I am sure the Hon. Member for St. John's West will realize questions should be addressed to the Chair.

Mr. Crosbie: Through you, Mr. Speaker. I repeat the question.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the main thing that is sinking these days is the credibility of the Conservative Party.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: I would like to repeat to the Hon. Member that in the Budget which I put forward last February I introduced measures to deal with the economic problems the country is facing. I indicated that there would be no magic solutions and it would take time to reduce unemployment.

However, the Canadian economy experienced a strong rate of growth last year. It will experience a strong rate of growth this year. It is through the application of consistent, responsible economic policies that we will ensure this country will know the growth it deserves—not by the kind of rhetoric in which the Hon. Member is indulging.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the Minister that he was the one who said, on the day after he tabled his Budget, that he was happy that his new Budget was not having any effect on the Canadian economy. The Minister said that.

INTEREST RATE INCREASES—BUDGET STATEMENT

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in his reply to questions the Minister made light of the interest rate increase of one-half of one per cent which has just occurred. Why did the Minister, in his Budget of February 15, The Canadian Economy in Recovery, say:

> Further progress in reducing interest rates and the growth of costs is essential if the business sector is to restore its financial strength and become a sustaining force in the recovery.

Why did the Minister say that on February 15 if he now believes that interest rate increases are nothing to be feared at all and he is not worried about them? Why this inconsistency? Why is the Minister now contradicting his Budget? Which Minister has the Toni? Which Minister is the phoney?

Mr. McDermid: Obviously there is no Toni there.

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am used to the Hon. Member, and I am not going to get upset about his lighthearted approach to serious matters. However, I may remind him that the Government's position has been to favour the lowest possible interest rates, that a decrease in interest rates would be a very welcome development, and if it were up to us, we would be delighted to take measures that would bring about an additional decrease in interest rates.

Unfortunately, Canada does not live under a glass bell, isolated from the rest of the world. We are part of the world economy, and we are also very much affected by events in the United States. If there is a rise in interest rates in the United States, clearly we would not be able to keep our rates at levels lower than those in the United States over a prolonged period of time.

I would remind my hon. friend that the banks' prime rate today is at the same level as in the United States—not higher and not lower—while several years ago, we had differences of up to 4 and 5 per cent between our rates and those in the United States. I want my hon. friend to understand that we are doing everything we can to ensure that interest rates in Canada will be as low as possible. I realize that if it were feasible, it would be preferable to have lower rates than the levels we have at the present time. I wish we did, but we must be realistic and understand that if interest rates rise in the United States, we will not be able to dissociate ourselves entirely from what is happening over there.

[English]

SIZE OF GOVERNMENT'S BORROWINGS

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the Minister of Finance that we are living in an international world and we have to be conscious of what is going on outside the country. The policies he has been following over the past few years have gotten us into this position. I would like to draw to his attention another reason for the current weakness in the Canadian dollar. It is the growing awareness of Canada's reliance on international borrowing.

● (1430)

I have the Morgan Guarantee Report which shows that last year Canada was No. 3 in the world in the size of international borrowings, and the second largest borrower in the world the year before. I should remind the Minister that that equals the total of the two largest problem borrowers, Brazil and Mexico. The reason why we are doing this is that we are being pushed out into the world by the high international borrowing.

How much longer can Canada continue to borrow amounts of this magnitude in foreign markets—far in excess of other industrialized countries like France, the U.K. and Italy—before we have a serious balance of payments problem, a much more serious problem with the Canadian dollar, and the consequent increase in interest rates that that will bring?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have another rather incredible question from the Tory benches. One day they complain that the world has lost confidence in Canada, and the next day they come and say: "Look at that. We are large borrowers around the world. The world has confidence in Canada and is ready to lend us money".

The industrial history of this country has been built on foreign borrowings. We need a lot of investment from abroad. We need a lot of borrowing from abroad because we do not have enough resources in this country to ensure the full potential that this country has.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: You better go to Brazil.

Mr. Stevens: That is what the Brazilians used to say.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Minister of Finance has the floor.

Mr. Lalonde: Not only can the Tories not look forward, they cannot even look backward to learn the history of this country. I invite them to look back and see how this country was built. It was built by a large influx of money from abroad, either in the form of borrowing, investment, or both.

As far as the specific point raised by the Hon. Member is concerned about what will happen, I must remind him that in the last two years we have had the largest trade surplus in our history and our current accounts are on a positive, not negative basis. We have had a surplus on our current account basis.

The story is to keep on being as effective as we have been in terms of competing in the world markets, exporting as we have been doing, and ensuring that we remain in a positive situation on our national accounts basis.

Mr. Wilson: I shudder for this country when I see the Minister of Finance keeping his head in the sand as he did in that particular response. Surely he understands that the bankers of this world had confidence in Brazil and Mexico, yet look at the situation in those countries today.

EFFECT OF INCREASE IN INTEREST RATES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The weak dollar is clearly the reason why interest rates are rising today. High interest rates will bury some small businessmen and farmers who are only now struggling to get out of the mud in which the Government put them in 1981 and 1982. Will the Minister reassure these small businessmen and farmers, who create about 75 per cent of jobs today, that some of the alternatives he was talking about yesterday will be brought forward and directed to the problems that they are facing, so that they will not begin to lay off people and increase the level of unemployment?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, perhaps my hon. friend would care to refer to some statements by a number of economists who have pointed out that an increase in interest rates like the one we experienced in the last few days will not necessarily lead to a slow-down in economic growth. As my hon. friend is aware, many other factors play a role in decisions regarding economic growth.

I may also remind him, for instance, that as far as small businesses are concerned, the Government announced a number of measures in its Budget last April, adding further measures in the Budget brought down in February of this year. These measures are more specifically concerned with substantially simplifying taxation for small businesses. We are going to cut three-quarters of the small businesses tax legislation, and we shall be giving small businesses a tax advantage of $150 million, as a result of the measures I announced in the Budget.

I believe these measures are an indication of our firm belief in the importance of small and medium-sized businesses in this country as far as job creation is concerned, and of our willingness to take steps to ensure that this sector will experience enough growth to create the jobs we need in this country.

[English]

MONITORING OF INTEREST RATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. He just said that there is a great need for foreign investment in Canada. I remind the Minister of Finance that he gave corporations in Canada almost $3 billion in blank cheque giveaways in his last Budget and that the same corporations invested about $2 billion outside Canada last year. If he did something about that he would have less need to be concerned about more foreign investment.

Since he said in response to a question from the NDP yesterday that he was monitoring the interest rate situation and would be prepared to take action at some point, at what point will the Government take action? Will it be when interest rates reach 12 per cent, 14 per cent, 16 per cent, or when?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party has expressed interest in the question of foreign investment. He is concerned about money going out, for instance, and I must remind him that he should also look at money coming in. I want to tell him that in 1983 this country had a net capital inflow. When the money that goes out is compared to the money that comes in, it can be seen that we had a net capital inflow of $5.5 billion last year. We had a net inflow into this country of $5.5 billion in foreign investment in 1983. My friend should look at both sides of the picture and realize that Canada has been a net beneficiary of foreign investment in 1983.

With respect to the specific question which he raised, let me repeat what I stated yesterday, that we are always monitoring the situation and carefully looking at the evolution of the economy, but there was no reason to make any change to the provisions I had put forward in my Budget of February 15. I still believe that the measures that were contained in that Budget are those required in the current circumstances.

Mr. Broadbent: I say to the Minister of Finance that that simply will not do. It is not just the members on this side of the House who want an answer as to when the Government will be prepared to take action, it is the home owner who must renew his or her mortgage next month, and the business person or farmer who is desperately trying to stay afloat right now.

GOVERNMENT ACTION INQUIRY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, it was the Minister who made the promise in the House yesterday, and then in the committee, that the Government would be prepared to take action at a certain point. In the name of the farmer and home owner who must know, if they are to have some stability in their lives, when will the Government take some action?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the Hon. Member was not in the House yesterday or in the committee yesterday, because then he would have at least quoted me correctly. I did not say that we would take action. We are already taking action, and we have taken action. We have done this in the Budget which I have put forward, and in the Speech from the Throne. We are continuously taking action.

I said that we are monitoring the situation and, if necessary, adjustments will be made to our policies. At the present time I see no reason to make any adjustment to the proposals I put forward in the February 15 Budget. If my friend wants to take the time and trouble to check what was said, he could at least represent it accurately.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I made the mistake of assuming that the Minister of Finance, as a Liberal, meant action when he said that he would make adjustments. I should have known that action and the Liberal Government are a contradiction in terms.

TIMING OF POSSIBLE POLICY ADJUSTMENTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I accept what the Minister has now said, that he is really not promising action. If that is the case, will he tell us when he will make his adjustments? The last time we went through this merry-go-round in interest rates they went up to 22 per cent, which was an unmitigated disaster for the economy of Canada and the people of Canada. Is the Minister telling us that he will not make adjustments even if interest rates go back up to 22 per cent? At what level will he act?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, Perhaps if the Hon. Member were in the House more often, he would have less trouble interpreting and understanding the answers we are giving, which are quite straightforward.

I clearly indicated that the Government has taken many measures to address the economic situation in Canada.

● (1440)

These measures were included in the Budget brought down last April and are aimed at assisting all sectors of the Canadian economy, and especially the private sector which needed incentives to provide for the economic recovery we experienced in the past year and are experiencing at the present time. These measures have been amplified by additional measures in the Budget brought down on February 15 of this year. In that Budget and in the Speech from the Throne, we announced a series of other measures, including measures to assist young people, for whom we created a special youth fund of $1.3 billion to help create jobs for young people. We also announced measures to assist small businesses, measures that will provide a stimulus of about $150 million for small businesses; measures to help those who are in need, including single Canadians over 65 who, this year, will receive $50 more with their guaranteed income supplement. Those are just a few of the many measures that have been proposed by the Government.

GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING

COST OF ADVERTISEMENT IN CALGARY HERALD

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Can he explain the need for a full page ad in The Calgary Herald promoting himself and his hat, instead of placing a much smaller ad in bold print, if one was needed at all? Can the Minister justify the expenditure of $4,000 promoting his profile? Had he funnelled that money to one farmer and his family, he might have saved them from bankruptcy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I can show the Hon. Member the correspondence and I can show him how many years that ad has been carried to support agriculture in one of the greatest provinces in the production of agriculture in Canada, and that is Alberta. We have done that since 1979. It is too bad the Hon. Member does not read The Calgary Herald more often, or he would see the ad more often.

MINISTER'S HAT

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, the ad has a rather large picture of the Minister and his hat. Would the Minister of Agriculture announce his leadership intentions now before he spends any more of the taxpayers' money, so that farmers and other Canadians will know? Otherwise we would suggest that the Prime Minister take away his stetson, in its place put a dunce hat, and send him off to the four corners of the country.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member reeks with jealousy, that's for sure.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: What a profile.

Mr. Whelan: He only wishes that he could be identified so well with a hat of any kind, or without one as far as that goes. He only wishes to be known so well not only in Canada but all over the world. The green hat was given to me by a group of farmers in western Canada—and to wear also. They told me: "Mr. Whelan, you wear that, because green is a sign of growth, green is a sign of hope, green is a sign of prosperity, green is a sign of money, and green is for the Irish too."

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: And green is the sign of rot.

Mr. McDermid: And green is the sign of old cheese.

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

DESCRIPTION ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. He recently told a television interviewer that we would not catch him not doing his job. We would be grateful to catch him in his seat.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Discipline him, Pierre.

Miss Carney: The Minister recently told the CBC program entitled The Journal that the energy ministry was in a turmoil when he took it over a year and a half ago. Turmoil was his description, Mr. Speaker.

We are aware of the turmoil created by the National Energy Program, the suspension of drilling, the loss of jobs, and the collapse of the market in that area, but we have never had the Minister acknowledge that these policies of the Liberal Government created turmoil. Could the Minister please elaborate on the nature and the degree of the turmoil he found when he took the Department over from his predecessor, the current Minister of Finance?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I can see that Members on the other side are very worried that we are having a good leadership race, and they know now they are going to lose the election. I forgive the hon. lady for her nervousness.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: I think the answer was lack of communication, because at that time there had been a difficult agreement negotiated between the provinces and the federal Government and we had to explain policy. After that we were in Alberta dealing with the provincial Government and the industry, explaining the policy and why we needed self-sufficiency, security of supply, and Canadianization. They understood that our policy was so good—

Mr. Crosbie: Why didn't Lalonde do that?

Mr. Chrétien: —and now, after the many months the Hon. Member has been my critic, she has not been at all able to come up with anything better than the energy policy that we gave to the Canadian people.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXPORT PRICE OF NATURAL GAS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I can only assure him that we expect to relieve him of his duties after the next election.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: The Minister also said in The Journal interview:

> Tell me where there is a problem in energy today.

I ask the Minister whether he considers no problem his failure to deal with the natural gas pricing situation so that we are only exporting 40 per cent of our contracts, his failure to reach an agreement with Newfoundland, and his failure to reduce the financial outflow under the PIP grants which are already $400 million over budget this year. Is the Minister really telling this House that none of these are problems?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should know that in a few months I will not be Minister of Energy because I will be Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: I can assure the Hon. Member that I will have a very good Minister of Energy, because I have a lot of friends on this side who will be happy to serve in that capacity. They all know, as the Opposition knows, that we have made a lot of progress. For example, on the pricing of natural gas the movement made last summer was undertaken in agreement with the industry and the Government of Alberta. That was an agreement with the provincial Government and the industry. I say to the Hon. Member, ask the Hon. Member in front of her who was Prime Minister for seven months. He could not do anything with the Government of Alberta. It needed the Liberal Government to make an agreement with the Government of Alberta.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

LABOUR CONDITIONS

YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I am sure he is aware that during February—

An Hon. Member: Shut up, you yahoos.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: Tell him. He will have a question of privilege.

Mr. Fulton: That is right. I am sure the Minister does have a question of privilege regarding that last comment.

I am sure the Minister is aware that during February there were 212,000 unemployed in British Columbia, 74,000 are between the ages of 15 and 24. I am sure the Minister is also aware that over the next 10 weeks over 100,000 will be hitting the job market in British Columbia.

My question to the Minister results from a weekend survey done by The Vancouver Sun which reveals that B.C.'s ten largest corporations will only hire a couple of hundred students, and B.C.'s largest corporation, MacMillan Bloedel, only plans to hire six summer students. Since Statistics Canada has revealed that already unemployment among young people in B.C. is over 25 per cent, would the Minister tell us what new measures he plans to take during the coming weeks and months to put some of those people back to work in British Columbia?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, first, if my colleague, the Minister of Energy Mines and Resources, keeps on making such extraordinary statements I will have to think seriously about whether or not I will put him in the next Cabinet.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roberts: I think the hon. gentleman—and I thank him for his question—knows that my colleague, the Minister of Finance, at the time of his Budget indicated that there would be an increase in funding for employment for young people of something like $150 million. The Cabinet has under very active consideration how to use that money, perhaps for some new programs, or in relation to a variety of existing programs, which will help respond to the problem that he has cited for us.

● (1450)

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I am sure if the Minister continues to wear that tie he will get a job on Saturday Night Live.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ADVICE TO YOUNG UNEMPLOYED

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): It is now estimated in British Columbia that there will be close to 200,000 young people unemployed and on the street by the middle of the summer. Since big business will not hire them, the Vancouver Sun has learned, and since the Canadian Federation of Independent Business in a recent survey learned that 73 per cent of small businesses in British Columbia will not hire young people this summer, and since the Minister's entire program in British Columbia will only create 11,900 jobs, what is the Minister telling this House, and young British Columbians, they should do? That is 188,000 young people who will be out of work this summer. What should they do?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I believe the short answer to the question of the Hon. Member is that they should look very seriously at using the programs of Summer Canada. Its funding has again been increased this year, and may very well be increased once again before the summer months arrive. They should also use the services of the Canada Employment Centres, which are active in British Columbia, in order to assist them in finding work.

All of us realize that the situation is going to be difficult. However, as I hope the Hon. Member recognizes, the Government has already taken considerable steps in terms of funding, something like $1.3 billion of funding this year, in order to create jobs for young people and help them with training, and to provide services which bring young people into contact with jobs. The most important advice I can give to the Hon. Member to pass on to his young constituents is for them make active use of our employment facilities.

INDUSTRY

REQUEST FOR CONTROL OF TEXTILE IMPORTS

Mr. Arthur Portelance (Gamelin): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade.

On July 21, 1983, the Minister announced that the Government would take several initiatives to assist Canadian clothing manufacturers who were concerned about the increase in clothing imports. In the same press release, the Minister pointed out that he would be using bilateral agreements with the main suppliers on the subject of proper marketing practice. However, although the press bulletin and policy were well-intentioned, the House is aware that after the first two months of this year, January and February we saw a substantial increase in import permits, and this while last year's levels were already unacceptable. I would like to know whether or not the Minister intends to implement the policy he announced last year?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the situation in the textile industry is a difficult one at the present time. First of all, we must protect the workers. We have taken steps to protect their jobs. Last week, I met with the Advisory Council representing the industry, and we hope to be making recommendations to the Government within the next few weeks.

POOLS

SPORTS POOL CORPORATION

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. I always thought that Government over there was a Government of compromise. There were three Ministers in that portfolio prior to the present Minister. One is in the other place. He is going to lose a baseball franchise because of the lotteries. The second, who just spoke, was a sports broadcaster. He had a difficult time with his French lesson. The third Minister, from Montreal-Mercier, was a loser as far as sport was concerned. But I would like to ask the present Minister, who is at least a golfer, why has he not sat down with his provincial counterparts to reach a compromise as far as the sports lottery is concerned, a sports lottery which is now reaping the Government $35 million annually?

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, the issue is quite simple. First of all, since the federal Government has nothing to do with lotteries, we could hardly sit down with some people and talk about lotteries. So much for that.

Second, Mr. Speaker, it must be recalled that in 1979 the Government of Mr. Clark simply gave up its rights in the field of lotteries.

Third, it exchanged some $300 million to $400 million for revenues of about $200 million. It is easy to trade in a Cadillac for a Volkswagen!

Fourth, Mr. Speaker, we told everybody involved in lotteries that we have no intention of invading that field and that the athletic events pools we are setting up will be used only to help amateur sports, the Calgary Olympics and medical research. I think that it is clear and that the position of the former Government is quite clear. It was clear as well for all previous Ministers and only the Hon. Member opposite seems to be confused.

[English]

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL MEETING

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Is the Minister aware that if he were to sit down with his counterparts he would be able to have at least three or four draws annually for the Calgary Olympics? Since the Minister has not had contact with his provincial counterparts, would he like me to set up a meeting to resolve the whole matter as a conciliator? Vous comprenez, Jacques?

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I understand very well. If I would take the Hon. Member as a conciliator, we would lose hundreds of millions of dollars.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Mr. Olivier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to repeat here that we intend to respect the 1979 agreement. But what we did not do, however, was to give away our right to set up sports pools. That is why the House of Commons adopted a law and we have every intention of getting into sports pools.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

TRANSFER OF FUNDS WITHIN BAND BUDGETS

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Has he flown the coup again? I will, then, direct my question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, Mr. Speaker. When will the Minister give direction to his Department to allow bands to transfer funds within their budgets from one category to another? When is he going to do this? He has gone across the country saying he is for Indian self-government. When is he going to allow this to happen?

Mr. Nielsen: Here is your chance!

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Yukon says this is my chance. I would only comment, Mr. Prime Minister, in view of some of the answers given by some of my colleagues on this side, there is going to be a rich opportunity for the backbench when I am in charge.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: Line up, boys!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I would say this, Mr. Speaker, if the Government can expect the support, which we hope we will get from the Official Opposition and the Hon. Member when the Government comes in with legislation setting up Indian self-government, that will be one of the inevitable results of that type of legislation. It can only be through the legislative route that that type of measure, that very beneficial measure, indeed, which the Hon. Member is talking about, can be accomplished. I hope I would have his support.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ALLOW TRANSFERS

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is going across the country talking about Indian self-government. Two years ago the Department of Indian Affairs imposed regulations on bands across the country which would not allow them to transfer funds from one category to another. I have three bands in my riding, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Would the Hon. Member ask his question?

Mr. Shields: I have three bands in my riding, Mr. Speaker, and I would like to ask the Minister if he would allow them to transfer funds from category to category within their budgets, not calling on the Department of Indian Affairs for any more money, instead of forcing the bands and their councillors to go on welfare, shutting down their offices, because they cannot transfer those funds.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member is talking about one band I have in mind, it is not so much a question of being able to transfer funds. The Hon. Member, Mr. Speaker, is fully aware of what I am talking about. There may be just complete insufficiency of funds, period, for reasons I do not believe we need go into at the present moment. If it means transferring funds between parliamentary Votes, the Hon. Member has been a part of the Standing Committee and he knows I cannot legally do that.

There may be other restrictions under the Financial Administration Act which we can only overcome by passing the legislation setting up Indian self-government, and making provision in the legislation for the type of flexibility about which the Hon. Member is talking. That is why I am going across the country, along with a lot of the Indian leadership, advocating this. That is why I believe most members of the Official Opposition and the NDP supported the recommendations of the standing committee to establish a new financial relationship between the Indian people and the Government to accomplish that very thing, which can only be accomplished on a wide scale by legislation.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—LEVEL OF CANADIAN REPRESENTATION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns the situation in Cyprus. The Government has given a clear statement condemning the unilateral declaration of independence on the part of Turkish Cypriot authorities. The Government has been very firm in this. Will the Government show our concern with the ongoing situation, and show our concern and support for the legal Government of the Republic of Cyprus, by strengthening our representation in Nicosia, specifically by raising our representation there to the level of a high commission, and having a High Commissioner in the capital at Nicosia in place of the representation we have now, which is at the level of honorary consul?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have, as the Hon. Member mentions, supported the Government of Cyprus and we have opposed the unilateral declaration on the part of the Turkish Cypriots. In addition, we have been supporting the efforts of the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who is presently involved in an important process to bring the two parties together in the hope that some negotiated settlement can be brought about. I do not think in the present circumstances we would materially affect the situation by changing the level of our representation in Nicosia.

COMMITMENT TO GOVERNMENT OF CYPRUS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is no doubt aware that the situation is of concern to all Canadians, particularly to our Greek Canadian friends who have just celebrated Greek National Day and the liberation of their country from foreign occupation. The situation in Cyprus is fragile, to say the least. Will the Minister tell us what measures in addition he might be prepared to undertake to show our concern and ongoing support for the legal Government and what diplomatic measures through the United Nations, as already mentioned, which might be taken with our ally, the United States, a major backer financially of the Turkish Government? What measures might be taken by way of economic or other sanctions that would show our very strong commitment to the legal Government of the Republic of Cyprus.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asks us to give a demonstration of our commitment to the situation in Cyprus. I do not think any country has demonstrated a greater commitment than Canada. As the Hon. Member knows, we have maintained a peace force in Cyprus for almost 20 years. We will be asked once more by the Secretary-General of the United Nations to maintain a Canadian contingent of the United Nations Peace Force in Cyprus. We have done that in the expectation that at some point the parties will come together and resolve the problem so that our presence will no longer be necessary.

I must say at times I wonder how long we will have to remain in Cyprus in order to induce the contending parties to use the method of negotiation so that we can, at the appropriate time, withdraw our forces. I do not think it was ever intended that a peacekeeping force should remain in a situation for that length of time. I think that explanation is a pretty firm indication of the long-standing commitment that we have shown to Cyprus.

ILLEGAL IMPORTATION OF BUTTER FROM FRANCE

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Will the Minister indicate the results of his inquiry with the Canadian Dairy Council with respect to the illegally imported French butter which was used by the Department of External Affairs, at up to $10 a pound? Does he agree with the External Affairs chef that French butter is better than the best of Canadian butter?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should not have had to ask the last part of his question. He knows there is no better butter than our butter, the butter that we have in Canada. It is utter nonsense to suggest that somebody else has better butter than we have.

The price was never $10 per pound. The butter was brought into Canada illegally. It was brought to our attention in November or December of last year. We asked the RCMP to make an inquiry. We do not know how it came into Canada without a permit. Any butter that comes into Canada must come in under a permit under the Export and Import Permits Act, and be subject to our inspection.

This butter was not inspected by our people. We do not understand why anybody would want to bring it in. It was only used for a short time in the External Affairs restaurant, not in the cafeteria where the ordinary people are.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: They use Canadian butter. The chef in that cafeteria says it is the best butter in the world.

We know that the chefs who compete in international competitions that we sponsor world-wide, and who win world championships and gold medals, use Canadian butter in Europe and wherever else they compete.

Butter on sale in Ottawa this week is $1.79 a pound.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIVILEGE

MISS CARNEY—ALLEGED UNPARLIAMENTARY REMARKS BY MR. LALONDE—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: Yesterday the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney) raised a point of order, complaining of an expression used by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) when answering a question in the House. I have carefully reviewed Hansard and I find that the Minister used the words "a very nice example of wilful distortion". However, I also find that the Hon. Member, when asking her question, said: "Why does the Minister blatantly misrepresent the facts"?

I find it difficult to make a distinction between "wilful distortion" and "blatant misrepresentation". If one is out of order, then I suggest the other is as well. It seems to me that the Hon. Member and the Minister have in the cut and thrust made something close to an equal trade. These kinds of exchanges have become a regular feature of our Question Period, regretfully in my opinion. Questions and answers become mini debates in which political accusations fly back and forth all the time. I would add that it would greatly assist the Chair if Hon. Members were to avoid the kinds of expressions to which I have referred.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, just so that I may understand your ruling, is it now the position of the Chair that the attribution of a wilful desire to mislead is no longer a breach of the privileges of the House?

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has made it quite clear, and I believe this has been a traditional position of the Chair, that the circumstances have to be taken into account. Unparliamentary terms are to be judged in the light of what they do to the House and what they do to the level and tone of debate. The Chair is simply pointing out that when a question begins with an accusation and, in the cut and thrust across both sides of the House, words are used, it is very difficult to draw the line between one expression and another. This is by no means intending that out of a blue sky people can cast aspersions on Hon. Members in the way in which the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) is concerned. The Chair would obviously be very much concerned if that were to develop. The Chair is expressing a reservation concerning the language that has been used, not only in the answers, but in the questions in recent Question Periods in the House.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is very important that in our exchanges we keep not only the decorum of this place, but we respect the rules of this House and its traditions. Indeed, as you indicated, I had used unparliamentary language. I am very happy to withdraw the word "wilful". If I may use the expression, I hope that my colleague will do the equally gentlemanly thing.

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, I will do the ladylike thing by withdrawing the word "blatant" from my remarks.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair expresses its appreciation to both the hon. lady and the hon. gentleman for their actions in these circumstances. If other Hon. Members of either sex could be guided accordingly in the future, it would assist the tone of the debate.

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I do not know whether or not you recall the exchange between myself and the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Olivier), Mr. Speaker. I do not believe that he intentionally wanted to mislead the House regarding the amount of money that could possibly be made in lotteries when they are making $35 million a year right now and are going to lose that—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is, of course, entitled to debate the matter and may no doubt make some valid points in debate. I invite him to take advantage of a statement under Standing Order 21 or of some other opportunity to make his point.

PETITIONS

MR. MITGES—AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present a petition signed by citizens of the riding of Grey-Simcoe who are deeply concerned and wish to see that everything possible is being done to maintain a viable automotive industry as well as other related industries such as rubber, glass, plastics, textiles, steel, aluminum, machinery and electrical products. The petitioners are therefore asking the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Lumley) to act on the recommendations of the task force which was given the responsibility of doing an in-depth study on the industry as a whole. Concurrence in the recommendations by the Minister would be of immeasurable help and assistance to create the necessary positive economic climate for the betterment of these industries.

MR. YOUNG—NUCLEAR WEAPONS-FREE ZONE

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by over 500 residents of my constituency. Those residents of the riding of Beaches in the Province of Ontario and other concerned citizens, who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefore provide a remedy, humbly sheweth that the citizens of Canada oppose the arms race and any escalation of the arms race and that Canadians believe the testing of the Cruise missile in Canada makes this country an accomplice in the arms race.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to demonstrate its opposition to the arms race by declaring Canada a nuclear weapons-free zone.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 357, 401, 490 and 728.

ARTISTS' STUDIOS ACQUIRED BY DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Question No. 357—Mr. St. Germain:

Does the Department of External Affairs and/or the Canada Council maintain artists' studios at the (a) Cité Internationale des Arts in Paris (b) Institute of Art and Urban Resources in New York and, if so (i) how many (ii) at what total cost?

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of External Affairs and the Canada Council as follows: (a) (i) Three. (ii) Those studios were acquired by the Department of External Affairs in 1964 for a total cost of $48,000. The maintenance costs of these studios are paid by the artists. (b) (i) Two studios are leased by Canada Council. (ii) $U.S. 7,000 per year.

SALE OF NUCLEAR TECHNOLOGY

Question No. 401—Mr. Howie:

Did the Government attempt to sell nuclear power technology to China and, if so, was there any indication of success with respect to potential sales of the Candu reactor or any other power technology?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes. The Canadian Government has authorized AECL to pursue prospects for sale to the People's Republic of China of nuclear power reactors and related nuclear facilities and technologies subject to Canadian non-proliferation policy requirements. It is our understanding that marketing efforts have been undertaken.

While China's hydro power and coal reserves are extensive, it is interested in nuclear energy to serve the energy deficient industrialized and populous eastern and southern regions of the country. China's long-term nuclear program is still at the drafting stage but tentative plans have been drawn for a first phase to be completed by the early 1990's. To complete this first tranche, which will include two 900MWe at the Guangdong site, two 900MWe units at Huadong, a 300 MWe plant at Qinshan and two 250MWe heat and power plants at Jinsham, the PRC has selected the light water reactor technology. We are assured that research and development on other reactor types such as the heavy water reactor (like Candu) will be continued, leaving open the possibility of their introduction in the future.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—EXPENDITURE FOR HOSPITALITY

Question No. 490—Mr. Howie:

For the fiscal year ended March 31, 1983, what total amount was spent for entertainment outside Canada by the Department of External Affairs?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Expenditures during 1982-83 for hospitality outside Canada amounted to $8,292,898.

SUPPLY REVOLVING FUND—ADVERTISING MANAGEMENT SERVICE

Question No. 728—Mr. Blenkarn:

With respect to the Supply Revolving Fund, in the fiscal year (a) 1982-83 (b) 1983-84 (c) 1984-85, what was the forecast or actual total expenditures and revenues for the Advertising Management Service and was this ever shown as a separate item in the Main Estimates and, if so, is it so indicated now and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of Supply and Services): In 1982-83, the actual total expenditures and revenues for Advertising Management Services were $60.404 million and $60.147 million respectively. In 1983-84, the forecast total expenditures and revenues are $51.310 million and $52.0 million respectively. In 1984-85, the forecast total expenditures and revenues are $54.914 million and $55.0 million respectively. Advertising Management Services was shown as a separate item in the Main Estimates in 1982-83 and 1983-84. The Advertising Management Services is not shown as a separate activity in 1984-85 because it is a sub-activity of the Printing and Communications activity. In 1983, the Treasury Board approved the Operational Plan Framework for Supply Administration which effectively reduced the number of activities from thirteen to seven. All departments and agencies are required to submit Operational Plan Frameworks in accordance with the requirements of the Policy Expenditure Management System. This framework including a program activity structure must be approved by Treasury Board. The relationship between the old activity structure and the new is depicted on page 3.55 Supply and Services, Canada, 1984-85, Part III of the Main Estimates Expenditure Plan.

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have been answered.

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1984-85

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacLaren that Bill C-21, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and the amendment of Mr. Darling (p. 2292); and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Deans (p. 2299).

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I am absolutely astounded by the introduction today of the motion to impose closure yet again on another borrowing Bill. I do not know how many times in this Parliament the Government opposite has cut off debate and prevented the representatives of the taxpayers of Canada from doing their duty. In this case, Sir, it is clear that the duty of Members of Parliament is not to allow the Government to borrow yet more funds without a proper explanation and without a firm commitment on the part of the Government to mend its ways and stop this wanton spending and fiscal incontinence.

It was my intent this afternoon to use the one or two minutes remaining to address quite properly the subamendment which is supposed to be before us this afternoon. This subamendment would change the word "fiscal" in the amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) to the word "calendar". In my opinion, Sir, the wording of the amendment might be in error. Whether or not the substitution of the word "calendar" for the word "fiscal" would make it any better, I do not know. If it were possible to move an amendment to the subamendment, it would be my humble opinion that we should delete after "government's needs" the words "to the end of the current fiscal year". The amendment would then incorporate the principle without tying us up regarding to which particular fiscal period it applies.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. May I inquire from the Hon. Member if he has made a formal motion or was it a rhetorical motion?

Mr. Nickerson: Sir, it is my understanding of the rules that an amendment has been made to the motion on second reading and a subamendment has been made to that amendment, and therefore it is impossible for me to amend it yet further.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I appreciate the Hon. Member's comments.

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, like my colleague, the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson), I am absolutely appalled. I am not amazed and not in the least bit surprised but I am appalled at the lack of any type of fortitude in those across the aisle. They have no shame and there are no limits to the depths to which they will sink.

Since I first came to the House, and other than a short stint in 1979, the Government has ruled by fiat and by closure. It gives it fancy names like time allocation, but it is a simple matter of closure. It is a matter of closing off the rights and the will of Members on this side of the House who wish to bring the concerns of Canadians before the House especially for something as important as the financing of the country.

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): Guillotine.

Mr. Stewart: That is right, it is the guillotine. I rise to support the amendment to Bill C-21 proposed by my hon. colleague from Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling). When I last spoke on this Bill, Mr. Speaker, I pointed out that the Government does not need even half of the money it is going to the trough for; it has $5 billion in reserve and that is enough money to take us to next November. It should not get one cent more than $20 billion and it knows that, so it has imposed closure. The amount is still astronomical and is an irresponsible demand on Canadian taxpayers—a demand made without accountability. There has not been one word about how the money is going to be spent.

• (1520)

Today's deficit symbolizes all that the Government has accomplished over the past 16 years—nothing. The size of the deficit is linked directly to the poor performance of all the major economic indicators and the list is a discouraging one.

The over-all performance of the Canadian economy in recent years—despite what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) had the audacity to say today—has been so far below its potential as to be staggering and idiotic. It will remain so over the next few years unless there is a fast change of government.

In January of this year the Conference Board of Canada forecast a gloomy picture for the next two years. That is why it is so disturbing that the Minister of Finance continues to rise in the House to try to tell Canadians something that is absolutely not true. The forecast is for four quarters of negative growth in 1985 and a negative rate of job creation in the last half of this year, leaving us with double-digit unemployment for some time to come. The figures could be a lot worse if one could interpret exactly what the Minister said in his Budget. That was gobbledegook, but the effect is that we will still have over one million people unemployed by 1987. The Conference Board forecasts a rise of at least two more percentage points in interest rates by next year with no hint of a decline, and weak or negative capital investment.

There is only one reason for all this, Mr. Speaker, and that is that the federal deficit is seen as remaining in the $27 billion range. Despite all this the Government makes no effort whatsoever to address the problem, as the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) pointed out to the Minister of Finance just a few moments ago.

How can the Government promise Canadians a modest recovery when Canadian manufacturers are operating at 72 per cent of capacity, when over 10,000 Canadian businesses declared bankruptcy last year and when a record number of farms—488, I believe—declared bankruptcy last year? All of these businesses and farms could have been bailed out with less money than it cost to purchase and maintain de Havilland and Canadair. What lunacy, Mr. Speaker! What is being practised on that side of the House?

The rate of bankruptcies among Canadian businesses is up 82 per cent since the last PC Government when a sensible Budget was brought in by the then Minister of Finance. Farm bankruptcies have increased four-fold while we argue in the House about a green hat. Is this what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) had in mind on February 10, 1980 when he said that Liberals would "manage the economy in such a way that interest rates would in fact come down . . . because the economy would be administered in a sounder way"? I do not know where he is taking his soundings but I do not like the depth of our debt. If eight borrowing Bills worth $102 billion in one Parliament is sound economic management, Mr. Speaker, then we need no further evidence that the Prime Minister has no interest in the economic well-being of Canadians.

The extent of Liberal fiscal policy has been reduced to the economics of supplementary borrowing Bills and, again, closure. Canadian hearts must bleed when people pick up the newspaper and see that Parliament is being eroded. It is being strangled. The Liberals do not even put up any speakers. I have been sitting here all day and one Member on the Government side has spoken but has not defended the huge amounts of money being borrowed.

The Liberal Government will be judged harshly, as it should be judged, in the next election. The Government must explain to Canadians why our over-all economic performance since 1974 has been ranked by Euromoney as thirty-seventh in the world, just behind Guatemala and Norway. Can that be called a wonderful record? Yet the Minister of Finance claims that we do not have the resources. That is ludicrous; not only do we have the greatest natural resources in the world, we have the greatest resource of any country—our people.

In the past decade we ranked sixty-second in terms of economic growth; twenty-sixth in terms of export-led growth; twenty-fifth in terms of inflation; thirtieth in terms of currency strength; and twentieth in terms of balance of payments growth. Yet the Minister of Finance had the audacity to tell Canadians that we are prosperous. It is a cruel joke, a hoax, Mr. Speaker. When you are down that far, Mr. Speaker, the only place to go is up. That will not be with the rogues opposite, Mr. Speaker, but with the Progressive Conservatives after the next election.

The Government is looking for $30 billion more. What is really at issue is the total lack of concern for the enormity of the problem that we face. It is this uncaring attitude that has eroded investor confidence in the country. Since the last election $17.6 billion in direct investment has been scared out of the country. The Finance Minister talks about $5 billion. I do not like the odds, Mr. Speaker; they are better than three to one.

I might mention that when Mr. Turner was Minister of Finance inflation increased by 5.5 per cent; the dollar fell by only about two cents; the money supply grew at an annual rate of 16.2 per cent; interest rates doubled; economic growth fell from 7.5 per cent to 1.2 per cent; government spending doubled and the deficit increased from $702 million to $5.5 billion. A lot of people are putting their faith in this "Man from Glad" who was the patriarch of deficit financing. Canadians had better not look to him for their salvation.

When the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) was Minister of Finance, inflation rose from 8.5 per cent to 9.3 per cent; the dollar fell by 6.5 cents; the money supply grew at an annual rate of 13 per cent; interest rates rose from 7.5 per cent to 11.25 per cent; economic growth fell from 3.6 per cent to 1.1 per cent on an annual basis and government spending increased by 8 per cent per year. That Minister planned to raise the deficit from $10.8 billion to $12.5 billion in the year the Government was defeated. He is the other movie star hero opposite whom the other half of Members on the government benches are supporting. The only movie he ever made that characterized him was the one made about the Challenger Jet by Canadair when he, as Minister of Finance, put the first $50 million of taxpayers' money into a hair-brained scheme on which we now owe over $2 billion. There is no reason to believe that either of these potential leaders—oh heaven save us, Canada!—will do anything different.

There is no way to justify a borrowing Bill of the magnitude of Bill C-21 because most of the money requested will be left for the new leader to dispose of. After an election it will be the same old bunch. We have very little idea of how the present group plans to spend, other than wastefully. We know that this is the most profligate, spending Government in the history of Canada and we do not know how the next leader plans to use this money.

My colleague's amendment would restrict the amount being asked for. I support it and I support any move that would limit the size of the latest, gluttonous grab by the Government for a record amount of supplementary funds. I should like second reading to be denied the Bill in its present state but now, to add insult to injury, comes the greatest calamity that can befall Canadians on a fiscal Bill, and that is closure. I urge Members with any intestinal fortitude at all to oppose the Bill.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester): Mr. Speaker, I want to associate myself with the remarks of the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart). He has described the outrage that Canadians are bound to feel regarding Bill C-21 which will escalate the borrowing authority of the Government of Canada to over $100 billion in this Parliament. We are informed that the gag will be imposed and that Parliament will be prevented from engaging in the legitimate debate it has a right to expect. The taxpayers will be prevented from hearing the legitimate arguments being put forward. That causes all Canadians a great deal of concern because the Government is playing around with the future of Canadians who cannot speak out because of their age but who are going to be saddled with the horrendous debts being piled on their backs by this Government in an almost obscene effort to try to buy the Canadian taxpayer and voter with his own money. This is happening at a rate which is shocking to the sensibilities of every taxpayer and every businessman in this country.

It amazes me, Mr. Speaker, to listen to the leadership candidates for the Party which is now the Government of Canada talking about a $30 billion deficit as if it were something Canadians should expect; that is the way you run a country. Well, the way you run a country is to try to bring the expenses of the nation in line with the taxes being paid by the people of the nation. You cannot keep piling on the shoulders of ordinary Canadians, many of them too young even to understand what is happening to them, a debt which is growing at a rate almost unparalleled in the history of any developed nation in the world. We have seen this nation go from a people who were frugal in their appreciation of how their tax dollars should be spent and were respectful of Members of Parliament who had some appreciation of the fact that the tax dollars paid into the Treasury of Canada were tax dollars which Canadian citizens expect Members of Parliament to guard and spend wisely and frugally, to a Government which has become representative of the free-spending drunken sailors who do not really care where the money comes from and who just throw it around at an unprecedented rate, mainly at their friends, no one else but their friends.

Many years ago the then Member for Prince Albert, the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker, used to say, in the early era of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), that the "Just Society" was just for Grits. All you have to do is to look at the catalogue of appointees to the various boards and commissions to recognize the accuracy of that remark. It is nothing short of a total scandal, almost a total dictatorship, when you have a Government which uses the devices of Parliament to gag Members of Parliament from legitimate debate in relation to the moneys being borrowed to finance the over-expenditure on Government services; to finance the waste and extravagance of a Government, which has been too long in office and has not respect for the taxpayers of this country or for anyone but itself and its friends; and to see to it that its friends are looked after over and over and over again.

If you are a good friend, you go from one job to another job to another job to another job. There are always good jobs for Grits. We have, for instance, the present Chairman of the Canadian Transport Commission. Since he became a Liberal in 1968 he has been able to bounce from one position to the next position to the next position. He even got an appointment just short of his birthday, which would have prevented him from taking the position he presently holds. We have another gentleman from Nova Scotia who has gone from one appointment to the next appointment to the next appointment. I do not know whether there are fewer Grits in the country; I think there are—

Mr. Turner: You want to go to the Senate, Bob?

Mr. Coates: —but what I would say, from what I can see, is that they seem to be running out of Liberals whom they want to appoint because they are shifting present Liberal appointees from one position to the next position to the next position. You would think that when you shuffle the deck you would be able to find some new people.

My friend, the Hon. Member for London East (Mr. Turner), just now asked me if I wanted to go to the Senate. I want to go to the Senate with him. I think the two of us should go to the Senate. However, Mr. Speaker, I am deeply concerned about the amount of borrowing. I would think that Canadians who look at what they are paying in taxes now and look at the horrendous amount in tax dollars which go to service the debt we now have, must be really alarmed as they listen to Liberal leadership candidates who seem to feel that the deficit is one of the minor problems facing the country. They must be alarmed when they look at the Budget, which was brought down a month and a half ago which told us one story, and then, within a month and a half, see unemployment figures escalating, inflation escalating and an attack on our dollar. How much can you believe these people? Who can you believe over there? Can you believe anyone?

You certainly have to come to the conclusion that what they told us a month or so ago is certainly not the reality today. When we compare ourselves with the U.S., with a country as rich in resources as Canada, a country as rich in potential entrepreneurship as we have in Canada, why are we in such a terrible economic mess as compared even with the U.S., and certainly much more so with other countries in the world?

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I support the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) and I regret very much that the Government has taken the decision to impose closure on this particular piece of legislation.

Mr. Pierre Gimaïel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, if we consider the amendment proposed by the Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) concerning the Government's borrowing authority, and if we consider more specifically the question being asked by the Hon. Member, namely, why the Government is asking for an extra borrowing authority, in other words, an amount in addition to the sums of money required until the end of the fiscal year, clearly, the Government of Canada, owing to the vast number of responsibilities that have been vested in the Government over the past few decades by successive governments, I should say by successive Parliaments which passed a host of bills, a process to which Members of the party in power or the Parties in power in Parliament at the time and Members of the Opposition have contributed, clearly the Government's role, which is daily becoming increasingly important in the lives of Canadians, demands that this Government meet some very impressive obligations.

Over the last few years, I believe we have experienced very dramatically how instability can become a part of the lives of all Canadians, of our economic life, and how it can do so without warning and very quickly, depending on what is happening among our neighbours to the South. In this respect, the House is well aware of the various obligations the Government has to Canadians, obligations both in the human and the economic sphere, and that whether it is helping the unemployed through unemployment insurance, manpower training, technological and resource assistance, economic development through various initiatives or incentives given to companies and Canadian investors, the Canadian Government must respond, and respond immediately, to the needs of Canadians according to the state of the economy in this country.

As I said earlier, during the last few years we have realized that instability can occur, and with that in mind, a contingency fund has always been agreed to by the Party that happens to be in power. I am referring to a contingency fund to be added to the Government of Canada's borrowing authority. Why, Mr. Speaker? To having to go back to the House in the course of the year and ask for another borrowing authority in addition to the one already adopted; and quite simply because every time the subject is before the House, we get a very long debate that is always the same—practically the same speeches by the same Members—and what it all boils down to is that the Government is being given the same borrowing authority once again.

By adding a contingency fund, the Government can more readily intervene to help those Canadians who need assistance most, because most of the time, the contingency fund is there to give a "leg up" to Canadians who need short-term help, just when the economy requires Government intervention. The point is to try to respond to those needs as quickly as possible. That is why there is reason to question the grounds for the amendment proposed by the Opposition.

The Opposition's role, and no one will deny this, is to challenge whatever the Government does, and in this connection, I think it is a good thing and a very salutary custom to ask, when additional amounts are being requested and contingency fund is required, why the Government finds it necessary to do so and why it is asking for these additional funds. However, that does not mean Opposition Members should always hand out the same old arguments, the same phrases about "blank cheques", and the rest, the same terms which I have been hearing in the House for four years, year-in-year-out, and always for the purpose of making Canadians believe the Canadian Government is taking their money to send it God knows where! When the Government of Canada borrows money, first of all, it borrows from Canadians, to meet their needs. Most of this money goes back to Canadians. If it goes to people other than Canadians, it is to pay for services being offered to Canadians. In fact, the Government of Canada is, in so doing, acting according to the mandate it has been given by the House of Commons through the legislation passed by the House and, to go back even further, in accordance with major policies formulated by governments in the course of this century and especially during the last years and decades.

Mr. Speaker, if it is not so, it is because men and women were elected in this country who, more than anything else, wanted all Canadians to have a standard of living and a quality of life that is the best in the world at the present time.

There are Canadians who were elected to this Assembly and who wanted to ensure that in Canada, everyone would have shelter, food, health care, and an education, and an opportunity to live in safety without risk of war or suffering from any discrimination that would prevent a person from achieving his personal development. This has been possible by the will of those who were elected by Canadians to come and represent them here in Parliament, because over the years, they have listened to their constituents, to the people who elected them. Each time I rise during this debate on the borrowing authority legislation, Mr. Speaker, I keep wondering why we should be having this debate at all because every expenditure incurred by the Government is subject to the control mechanisms operating within the Canadian Parliament, whether we are speaking about the work of Parliamentary committees or sub-committees, the questions which Ministers have to answer in the House or the control mechanisms established by the Auditor General of Canada. Why should we waste hours upon hours each time discussing whether or not the Canadian Government should be allowed to borrow? This debate, if it were carried out constructively, could be extremely interesting, but Opposition Members always make it an unproductive exercise. They keep insisting on certain points which throw some kind of gloom over the fact that the Government is borrowing money. There is nothing gloomy about it. The Canadian Government understands its role and the responsibilities ascribed to it through the centuries by previous Parliaments, and the Canadian Government is meeting these needs. When the revenue intake from taxes is adequate, the Government does not have to borrow, but when tax revenues run short, the Government borrows, but it must be said that it then borrows mostly from Canadians and very little on the foreign markets. The Government borrows from the Canadian people. This is therefore a banking operating which does not add to the national debt, because when Canadians owe money to other Canadians, it is not a national debt; it is an operational deficit based on the fact that the Government decides on one of the options it has to obtain funds and invest them in the nation, in the country, in people, in human development, and it does so by borrowing money from Canadians. When Members opposite try to suggest that this money is being squandered, they forget that it is used to provide for infrastructures, whether it is in the area of transportation which is the greatest challenge in Canada, or education, or health care. For instance, This year, transfer payments to the Provinces by the Canadian Government will come up to over two-thirds of what the Government of Canada will borrow during the year. Do the Members opposite consider that transferring money to Conservative or NDP Governments in the Provinces amounts to squandering? They could have a point, but we have signed agreements to do so. If we had been brighter, perhaps we would have arranged to provide such payments to Liberal Governments only. However, as this Government respects the choices made by Canadians and the fact that they have put other parties in office in various Provinces, transfer payments are still made as provided under the Federal-Provincial agreements. If Opposition Members do not agree with this, let them say so and let them convince the people in their Provinces that they must not put in office governments which do not know how to spent these funds since these parties seem to disapprove of these transfer payments.

Just to show how inconsistent they are, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Members keep asking the same question: Why? What is wonderful in Canada is that the answer to this question is this: because Canadians, and especially those who represent them in the House of Commons, all these Members who have been sent to this House all through the years and the Ministers of this Government, realize that the first duty of a Government is to answer the needs of the people instead of taking a holier-than-thou attitude and trying to establish, somewhat like what is happening now in Quebec, a super-government with super-powers. Its first duty is to serve the needs of the people who have worked hard through the years to build a wonderful country with one of the most peaceful, wealthy and loving populations in the world.

[English]

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to say a few words on this borrowing Bill. The Government has put this Bill forward in an attempt to borrow almost $30 billion for the operation of the Government for the next few years. When considering this Bill and its amendments, possibly we should be looking at the option of cutting back the amount of government spending that has been taking place. The record of the present Government would not make anyone proud. We must recognize of course that it did not begin the deficit. That honour belongs to the administration of my predecessor from Prince Albert, Mr. Diefenbaker, who began the huge deficit budgets and started the snowball down the hill. It has been growing ever since.

Let us look at the record of the present Government. The Gross National Product in Canada is approximately $430 billion. The deficit for 1983-84 was $31.45 billion. The current accumulated deficit, most of which can be attributed to the present Government, is approximately $120 billion. This year, it projects a deficit of $29 billion. It is asking us for borrowing authority for $30 billion, which is more than its projected deficit. The Government has been telling us every day in the standing committees that it will probably save something from the Estimates which it has put forward.

The Government is paying interest rates of approximately 11 per cent on most of this accumulated deficit. That is the average of all the unmatured, marketable bonds and Treasury bills that are outstanding. It amounts to approximately $17 billion a year in interest, not including Crown corporation debts. This means that more than 25 cents of every dollar that Canadian citizens pay in taxes go to pay for the deficit the Government has accumulated over the years. It is asking us to authorize an increase in that deficit, and at the rate we are going it will double in the next ten years.

The total liabilities of the Government are approximately $223 billion, including Crown corporations. One could add all of the committed funds which the Government has generously offered and which could be called bailouts. Although Chrysler was able to pull out of its difficulties, there are corporations like Massey-Ferguson, Dome Petroleum and Maislin that have been aided by what have been called bailouts. These may cost the Government at some time in the future—

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. People on this side of the House share the Hon. Member's concern about the deficit and the cost of servicing the debt. I would like the Hon. Member to check to see if his research notes do not come from either James Laxer or Tory research notes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is hardly a point of order; that is a debating point. I invite the Hon. Member to make a contribution to the debate whenever he wishes, but that was definitely not a point of order.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Since that was a false point of order, I wonder if the time could be added to my colleague's allotted time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair will of course exercise its usual discretion in that matter.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, we are talking about the needs of the Government and its request. Our amendment suggests that it cut $10 billion from its request. If it did so, we would support it in its requirements even though we think it should not have accumulated such a deficit over the years.

We can see that the Government has not been a very good manager, but we should also consider the Official Opposition. We cannot judge recent Conservative Governments except to examine the Diefenbaker Government which began this deficit spending. However, there are other examples, such as the three year-old Conservative Government in Saskatchewan which took over a surplus of $140 million. In three years, deficit budgeting has managed to put that province into a deficit position of $850 million. That amounts to approximately $11,000 an hour or $275,000 a day that the people of Saskatchewan are paying in interest for the privilege of having a Progressive Conservative Government in Saskatchewan. In its first few months of office, that Conservative Government placed a greater burden on the people of Saskatchewan in the form of a deficit that is larger than had been accumulated in that province in the previous 55 years. That is what we can expect from a Progressive Conservative administration. It is the same kind of deficit financing that we can expect from the present Government.

If we are to consider the Liberal administration and a possible Conservative administration, we should also consider a New Democratic Party administration as well. There was a New Democratic Government in Saskatchewan for 30 out of the last 40 years. In that time it did not accumulate any deficit. If there was a deficit in one year, it was paid off in the next year, so that there was no accumulated deficit in those 30 years. That Government produced the best social service programs in the country and was able to pay for them as a result of its planning. It never planned any social services until it was ready and willing to pay for them. As a result of this careful administration in planning its expenditures, it provided Saskatchewan with 30 years of a government and social structure that was the best in Canada, probably the best in North America and one of the best in the world. This was accomplished in Saskatchewan without creating a deficit, and it represents the kind of planning that is necessary to make expenditures that are worthwhile and meaningful for the people of Canada.

When considering the Government's request for further funding, we should look no further than its record. In a matter of 16 short years the Government has put us in a position where it will probably take future governments another 15 years to get out of it. We should be doing that kind of planning now and not increasing our deficit at this time.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacLaren that Bill C-21, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and the amendment of Mr. Darling (p. 2292); and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Deans (p. 2299).

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I rise this afternoon to join my colleagues in denunciation of the Government which introduced closure on this Bill. This is a most blatant Bill. This is a record breaking borrowing Bill. It is larger than any other borrowing Bill brought before the Parliament of Canada. It stands in the amount of $29.55 billion. I just heard the Hon. Member for Lac St. Jean (Mr. Gimaïel), in a most fallacious argument, ask why we have speeches in opposition to this borrowing Bill at all because the same responses and the same comments are being made. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, and I ask Members opposite, is there no man or woman of conscience and integrity on that side of the House? I suggest to you that any open-minded government would be coming before this House and giving an explanation as to why it needs the dollars the Government proposes to spend.

This same borrowing Bill includes a $4 billion contingency fund. The Hon. Member for Lac St. Jean says, "Why, we are only borrowing from Canadians. It does not become a real debt. It is not part of our deficit. It might not have to be paid off. The money is being borrowed from Canadians". I suggest that when a Government comes before this House and borrows more money than do all Canadians all across this land save in one year, then it is forcing interest rates up and driving up inflation. What is bound to follow is the kind of action this Government is now taking.

However, I want to make a comment in support of the amendment introduced by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling), the only kind of comment that is an appropriate response to the borrowing Bill now introduced. The issue is clear and so is that amendment. The Government has come to Parliament in search of borrowing authority in the amount of $29.55 billion. This amount is not only the largest borrowing authority request in Canadian history, it goes beyond the needs of the present Government. My colleague has responded that we should throw the matter back. Let us not give this Bill second reading. Let us reconsider the Bill in a credible and conscientious manner. His response is made on the basis of principle. I wonder on what basis the Government has introduced this Bill.

Observers of the Thirty-second Parliament will wonder if borrowing Bills represent the sum total of this Government's program. We have had eight similar borrowing Bills in lesser amounts since the 1980 election. The slippery slopes start early. After February 1980, within three months of that date, the Government came to the House clamouring and asking for $12 billion in borrowing authority for that year. That was followed by a request for $14 billion, then an additional $6.6 billion, then $7 billion, and so it went until we have now reached the $29.55 billion plateau. The Government has had a total, since February, 1980, of over $102 billion. This Government is marked by its ability to spend dollars and to give money away in special programs, such as the Special Employment Initiatives Program. Why should we trust a very partisan, selected means of allocation?

The effect of runaway spending and continued borrowing has led to the disaster which this country is now facing. Canada's net debt has doubled. Our gross national debt has climbed from $103 billion in the 1979-80 fiscal year to an estimated $190 billion in this fiscal year. My constituents in St. Catharines know full well what huge overdrafts and liabilities mean. Unless restraint is practised in Government as well as at home, it is only a question of time until the whole house of cards comes tumbling down.

There is no disputing the fact that mounting fiscal problems face this Government. We have heard over and over again the aggressive tactics of National Revenue. Yet here we have the Government asking Parliament for borrowing authority in excess of its current needs. If Parliament approves the request, we will indeed be on the road to disaster, economic fiscal disaster. The Government will not be able to ignore Parliament for the months to come. It will have to answer to the people of Canada sooner or later. The fat bank account will lead to even less regard for the taxpayers' dollar. In an election year we can count on reckless expenditures if that opportunity arises. You can bet your hat that that $4 billion contingency fund will be spent within the next few months.

Interest rates will again be pushed up by these heavy borrowings if the federal Government borrows the entire $29.55 billion, and it will. The credit market will be crowded out, leaving no room for legitimate expenses and investment. Heavy demand and a slight supply means higher mortgage rates and interest rates for every-day common living. I have said before the inflation is bound to follow. It will be pushed up by higher interest rates. Finally, the Canadian dollar will continue to plummet in relation to the American dollar. This will be the inevitable result of a Bill of this kind.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) once challenged unemployed workers to get off their backsides and find a job. We on this side of the House, Mr. Speaker, urge the Government to get off its rear end and start trimming the deficit we are facing. In this time of so-called economic recovery, there can be no excuse for the record levels of borrowing and expenditure. Canadians themselves are trying to make up for lost ground, but their own Government is throwing up road blocks. Come October 1, the Government, which cannot find a dollar to cut in its expenditures, will be asking Canadians to hand over an additional $2.1 billion in taxes.

In the 1985-86 fiscal year, the additional taxes will amount to the almost $4 billion that we are talking about, for a total of $6 billion in less than two years. This is clearly outrageous. The Canadian taxpayer is faced with a situation of give, give and pay. It is the taxpayer who is expected to do the belt-tightening, but there is no evidence of that on the part of this Government. With one voice the taxpayers say, "Cut the deficit and let us get on with the economic recovery that we have been told we might have".

In the City of St. Catharines the average taxpayer is currently paying $1,000 a year on his or her portion of the service charges on the national debt. The Government is putting forward an outlandish request to borrow an additional $29.55 billion. It is clearly telling the taxpayers in my home town of St. Catharines that $1,000 is not enough. More will be needed because the Government wants to borrow more so it can spend more. Taxpayers in St. Catharines are not different from taxpayers anywhere else in Canada. They work hard, they earn their money, and $1,000 means something to them.

I recognize that my time is drawing to a close, Mr. Speaker. I could go through a long list of useless expenditures which this Government is making, but time will not permit. Our Party is simply urging the Government to hold the line on that $1,000 per taxpayer which we in St. Catharines will have to pay. The adoption of the amendment put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling), would be a positive first step in that regard. I urge Hon. Members opposite to take a second look at what they are doing to this country. Stop it now! Concern yourselves with the deficit which our young people, the generation after them and the generation after, will have to face.

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to be taking part in the debate this afternoon, because I think the Opposition would have everyone believe that Bill C-21 is the mechanism through which the Government administers its deficit programs.

Mr. Speaker, we must not confuse borrowing authority, which is the subject of Bill C-21, and the appropriations or budgets for each Department which the Government must put before the House every year, sometimes two or three times a year, because sometimes there are supplementary estimates, and that is when the House of Commons authorizes the expenditures the Government has to make. Therefore, when the House is considering a borrowing authority Bill, it should not necessarily concentrate on the value, the merit, or the lack of merit of the Government's expenditures or determine whether the House of Commons should approve the deficit in this debate. The Bill before the House, Mr. Speaker, merely says, when there is a deficit which the House of Commons will already have approved or not, how the Government is to meet its responsibilities. The Bill authorizes the Government to borrow $29.550 billion, because that is the amount required to cover the Budget deficit, and we have added to that a contingency fund of approximately $4 billion to guard against any rapid imbalance in the negotiations or management operations of the Government, including debt management as well as management of foreign exchange.

In some cases, the Government of Canada, in others, the Bank of Canada, must borrow abroad or pay back loans abroad, not only because the loan is due or because it makes sense from the point of view of debt management, but also because sometimes this is a way to control or manage the value of the Canadian dollar. Our policy is that the Canadian dollar should be allowed to float, in terms of its value, on international markets. But we also have a policy according to which any upward or downward movements of the dollar should be as orderly as possible. Now, the Government's policy of managing upward and downward movements of the Canadian dollar does not mean that we are setting the value of the Canadian dollar at a level determined by any fiscal policy, but just that we want to make sure that over a period of one or two weeks, there is no undue pressure on the Canadian dollar. On the other hand, when the value of the Canadian dollar depreciates on the market, it may be important to sell Canadian dollars on the market to ensure that there will not be too much pressure over too short a period. This is to prevent any imbalance.

So, the additional borrowing authority of about $4 billion which the Government is seeking through this Bill is not for money that the Government might decide to spend on its own as it sees fit, because any public expenditure must be approved by the House of Commons. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, anyone who claims that the $4 billion is a slush fund for the election or money to be spent as and when the Government sees fit is distorting the situation, misleading the public and twisting the debate. There is no way the $4 billion can be spent unless it has been authorized by the House of Commons.

Now then, Mr. Speaker, why is the federal Government running a deficit? Well, Mr. Speaker, the federal Government is running a deficit mostly because, up until less than a year ago, we went through a recession. First of all, there was the impact of the federal Government's efforts to stimulate the economy during the second half of the seventies. At that time, a whole series of incentive measures were announced for the private sector, particularly the investment tax credit introduced in the budgets of 1975 and improved in the following budgets. Then the personal tax exemptions were indexed so that Canadian taxpayers would have more money to spend, with the result that, as parliamentarians, we had to ask Parliament to raise taxes. If we had decided to leave personal exemptions as they were instead of taking action, in 1973 or 1974 as I recall, then in fact the taxes levied by the Government would have risen automatically with inflation. Some people said that we were wrong to do that, the Government should not benefit from inflated dollars.

But the result was that the deficits grew heavier than expected. Even so, the federal Government cannot decide what the deficit will be only on the basis of expenditures and revenues. It is easy enough for a provincial Government to claim that it will balance its budget if there is a strong economic recovery after a recession. But the federal Government cannot be satisfied with simply balancing its books, because it does have responsibilities with respect to the macroeconomy. It is up to the federal Government to see to it that the whole Canadian economy is either boosted or cooled down through tax policies, depending on the economic situation.

During a recession, the federal Government must get the economy moving through higher expenditures, so we end up with a deficit. In times of excessive growth rates, the Government may very well slown down the economic activities, therefore it will cut its expenditures or perhaps raise taxes. In other words, the role of the federal Government is more than a book-balancing act.

[English]

Hon. Members of the Conservative Opposition particularly—the New Democratic Party is a little more confused on this than it used to be—are trying to suggest that one could balance the books at the federal level as you do in a business or as is done in the provincial Government. Conservative Members ignore totally, Mr. Speaker, that the federal Government has a responsibility in the management of the macroeconomy and that the buck stops here. We are the ones who can use the federal Budget and federal expenditure to stimulate the economy and to make sure that we maintain the safety nets, the stabilizers we have in place in the economy, when we are in a period of recession.

The Conservatives have been so impotent as a federal Party over the years that they neglect to see the importance of the federal Government in the economy. It is difficult for them to come up with any federal policy on anything. They forget that the federal Government is an important institution in this country. It is important that the people look up to this Parliament and say, "Will you please make sure you manage the economy and your expenditures in a way which will protect people who depend on the safety nets in a period of recession".

Those Hon. Members are so confused, Mr. Speaker, and internally divided among themselves, that they lose sight of the fact that there is an important job to be done here. It is not only a question of balancing the books. The federal Parliament has the responsibility to use fiscal policy to affect the economy and, Mr. Speaker, the moneys which this Bill would authorize the Government to borrow are moneys which will be approved by Parliament. The reserve that they are talking about will have to be approved by Parliament if it is to be spent. This reserve is to ensure that there is no disruption in the money markets. It is to make sure that if the Bank of Canada felt that the Government should pay foreign debts it could borrow in Canada to pay for reasons of foreign exchange management. This is what the Government is looking for in Bill C-21. All the Opposition Members are trying to do is to confuse the public. They are so confused themselves that when they speak, they confuse the public. They want the public to think that we will be authorizing this kind of expenditure, and that is not the case at all.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I cannot believe what I just heard from the Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau). It was an unbelievable attempt to explain away the futile and miserable expenses and losses of this Government. He tried to suggest that the Government is borrowing this money somehow to manage the Canadian dollar. It is managing it all right. It is dropping right out of the sky, going down continually. I therefore hope it is borrowing it for a more productive purpose than that of managing the Canadian dollar.

It would be explainable to the House of Commons if the Government were borrowing the money to invest in some business arrangement, to provide some incentive to Canadians or a tax-bearing account or business. Instead, most of this money has been frittered away on expenditures that cannot be justified, and on wastage. The Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) had the list of all the waste that has gone on with this Government. Members of the Opposition offered the Government an opportunity to set up a parliamentary committee to assist them in finding ways to slow down the spend, spend, spend of the federal Government with absolutely no control so that we are now running deficits of $30 billion.

Mr. Gimaïel: The provincial governments are spending it.

Mr. Schellenberger: The Member opposite talks about provincial governments. The federal Government is finding it so difficult to finance its mismanagement that it is attempting to push on to the provinces part of the borrowing. It thinks they have room. Is that the way to manage a national economy? I doubt it. That is why the amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) makes so much sense.

Why would Members of Parliament be asked to justify that type of borrowing when there is no way the federal Government can explain over $10 billion of its expenditures? If it came before the House and gave the reasons why it required this kind of expenditure, and if they were reasonable, I am sure Members on all sides would approve it. However, the Government has not done that. It has not attempted to come forward with the reasons why it needs borrowing authority for $29.5 billion.

Members have often spoken in this House and to the Canadian people about the kind of burden this will place on Canadian society. This Bill alone means $800 for every man, woman and child in Canada. At the same time we find in the Estimates an estimate for the propping up of Canadair. It is a tremendous amount of money. It lost $1.4 billion last year and $330 million this year. If that were the case in the private sector, the board of directors would be questioned about that amount of loss. The chairman of the board would be asked to justify the management of the company which lost that money. What has the Government done? Instead of requiring Canadair to come before the Minister and telling them that they have not managed the company very well and that they must be replaced, that has not been done. I do not think they even had their fingers rapped. They replaced everyone on the board of directors, including the chairman, a former Liberal who sat in this House.

How can we as Members of Parliament say to the people of this country that we are going to approve this kind of borrowing authority? In 1968, not too long ago, government spending was only $12.3 billion. Today, the Estimates, including the Supplementary Estimates, show the amount to be close to $100 billion. One out of every $5 will be spent on financing the deficit, which has accumulated to $180 billion, compared to $17 billion in 1968, just a few years ago. One out of three dollars of revenue collected by the Government goes to financing this kind of deficit.

In the Budget, which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) brought down a short while ago, he projected that if we do not throw this Government out, which happily we will do soon, deficits of $25 billion plus will continue for the next four years. If that is allowed, by 1988 the net deficit in this country will have risen to $261 billion. So many dollars will be taken out of the Canadian economy by the Government that there will be very little room for the private sector to borrow money to set up revenue-producing industries and create jobs in the private sector. The Government feels it has a monopoly on this, but it is not doing very well when we have a 11.3 per cent unemployment in this country today.

What is happening? We had a Bill before the House just lately which will transfer more of its expenditures and a larger tax base to the provincial governments as far as borrowing is concerned. It will shift the burden of the cost of social services, medicare and education to the provinces. Not only is the Government asking to borrow more money to spend, it is shifting the burden to the provinces, which, it feels, have more room to borrow. This is an ongoing example of borrow-spend, borrow-spend. It goes on and on. Looking at the massive Estimates for this fiscal year, it is astonishing to note the growth of Government spending.

I entirely support the amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka which states that this House should not grant a borrowing authority of that magnitude when the Government cannot justify its expenses. That is objectionable in principle, and this House, therefore, declines to do that.

I guess that the impact of the excellent speeches by Members of this Party is such that the Government can no longer take it. The Minister stood in his place after Question Period today and said we have to halt this debate. The government Members cannot handle the pressure anymore. It is getting to them. They are having trouble explaining this deficit, therefore they intend to cut off all debate. Members of Parliament will not be allowed to bring forward objections to this kind of borrowing, objections to unjustified spending and constant waste by this Government. Members of Parliament will not be allowed to attempt to straighten out the Budget. Therefore, we have had notice of the motion that will allow the Government to move closure on this debate in the very near future.

It is a very difficult situation for a Member whose riding contains hundreds of families that own small businesses or farms and are finding themselves pushed to the brink of bankruptcy at this time. My constituents come to their Member of Parliament and say: "Why has the economy progressed in such a fashion that even though I am managing my business in a proper fashion and have been doing so for 10, 15 or 30 years, I now find myself in this kind of difficulty?" The only answer I can give to them is that they have a national Government that does not know how to manage the funds of the taxpayers of the country.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon we had the unaccustomed pleasure of hearing two government back-benchers speak at this stage of the debate. The only time they dared appear is after the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren) had served notice of limitation of time of debate. Therefore, they could safely enter the debate because their interventions of whatever nature would not interfere with the flow of the business of the House.

The Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Gimaïel) attempted to justify the Liberal Party, as he has attempted to justify it in the past, by indicating that anything that the Liberal Party or administration does, as long as it will maintain the Liberals in power, is good for the Liberal Party.

• (1630)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Gimaïel) on a point of order.

Mr. Gimaïel: Mr. Speaker, I never said what the Hon. Member has just said. I never said anything about the Liberal Party being prepared to do anything to cling to power. If the Hon. Member is quoting me, I would urge him to be accurate, because the people of his riding would like to keep fond memories of him.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert).

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is so unfamiliar with the Standing Orders that he cannot tell the difference between a point of order and a point of debate. I am prepared to debate with the Hon. Member at any time, but when it comes to procedure he ought to restrict his points of order to that subject.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would ask Hon. Members to cooperate. When the Chair gives the floor to a Member to make a speech—the Standing Orders are clear and Hon. Members were so advised many times—the Hon. Member who has the floor must not be interrupted. In any case, the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean is again raising a point of order.

Mr. Gimaïel: Mr. Speaker, my point of order has to do with the fact that I have no objection against my colleagues quoting me in the House. However, they should repeat what I said, not something I did not say, especially when it is the last speech of the Member involved.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member wanted to clarify his remarks, and that is quite acceptable. The Hon. Member for Edmonton West.

Mr. Lambert: I want to say to the Chair that those are points of procedure, not simply points of debate. So, Mr. Speaker, they are asking—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry, but the Hon. Member for Edmonton West has just said something about the Chair which may or may not be acceptable. However, the Standing Orders are clear on that point. If a Member is not quoted correctly—that is in the Standing Orders and I will be pleased to find the exact reference—that Member may rise on a point of order to set the record straight. Therefore, I have nothing more to say. The point raised by the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean was quite in order and I would ask the Hon. Member for Edmonton West to continue his remarks.

Mr. Lambert: I do not want to insist, Mr. Speaker, but if you care to check Hansard and reflect upon what I said to you, I think you will agree with me.

But then, on the other hand—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. There is another point of order. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Dubois: Mr. Speaker, I am disappointed to see that a parliamentarian with as much experience as the Hon. Member has does not show respect for the Chair, and I would suggest that you ask the Hon. Member for Edmonton West to withdraw his remarks.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please! If the Hon. Members will bear with me, I do not think it will be necessary to go that far. However, I would like to quote the relevant Standing Order to which I referred a moment ago, namely Standing Order 41(1) on page 33, which provides the following:

> No Member, unless otherwise provided by Standing or Special Order, may speak twice to a question except in explanation of a material part of his or her speech which may have been misquoted or misunderstood, and the Member is not to introduce any new matter, but then no debate shall be allowed upon such explanation.

As I understand it, the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Gimaïel) wanted to clarify an interpretation which was different from what he claims having said earlier in his speech. The matter is therefore settled and I invite the Hon. Member for Edmonton West to resume his comments.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, while I may accept your ruling, I do not have to agree with it. With regards to the comments made by the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean, which I quoted, they are to be found in a speech he made in this House several months ago.

Mr. Gimaïel: Which you have not read!

Mr. Lambert: I have read it many times and it was also in the newspapers—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please! Would the House allow the Hon. Member for Edmonton West to express his views?

The Hon. Member for Edmonton West.

• (1640)

Mr. Lambert: All right. Crows on the fence do not scare me.

We now have before us an amendment moved by the New Democratic Party which would somehow limit the effect of the amendment moved by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) providing that there be no need to ask the House to approve an amount of $29.5 billion during this fiscal year, while the NDP would want it to be the calendar year. I quite agree with the purpose of their amendment. As the Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) has said, the Government simply thought it proper to ask the House for the authority to borrow $29.5 billion, and the House should be grateful enough to accept this request. After all, he says, the Government is anxious to ensure the well-being of the country and this request is quite consistent. We are not spending this money! We are just dumping bucketsful of it into bottomless pits such as Canadair and de Havilland, and then asking the House and the Canadian taxpayers to give the Government everything it needs during an election year to continue its squandering.

[English]

The Auditor General, newspaper editorialists, business commentators and even some leadership candidates do not agree that the Government should have the right to spend money as it sees fit and that the Canadian taxpayer should have nothing to say about it, should not be worried and should have confidence in what the administration does and intends to do. On the other hand, one of the leadership candidates has said that the Government has to put order into the fiscal management of the affairs of the country.

One of the big problems with the Government has been the breakdown in responsibility, the overlapping and granting of credits to Crown corporations without end. There is no better time to bring the Government to account for its debts than during borrowing authority debates. The Government has shoved us into debt in excess of $160 billion this year, and the deficit is going to be $31 billion or more. This is predicated upon a certain amount of recovery in the country. During the last two or three weeks the indicators from the money market have been a fall in the stock-market, with an increase in interest rates, an increase in unemployment, and an increase in the rate of inflation. All these factors call for the greatest caution, at the very least.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) disdains any suggestion that we might be in difficulty. Any Minister of the Government who conducts himself in such a fashion deliberately misleads the public, as was done in 1979-80 when the Government was in opposition and during the election campaign of 1980. Over the next two years it let the Canadian public have it. We saw interest rates rise to unprecedented levels. We saw inflation rise as we have rarely seen it in this country. For those on the Government side who are new here, I would point out that during the last year of the Korean war, inflation was 13.5 per cent, although that lasted for only a short time. That is higher than it was 18 months ago, but that does not mean it has not started an unfortunate climb again. For the Government to ask for a borrowing authority of $29.5 billion in these circumstances is ludicrous.

I do not know if you are aware, Mr. Speaker, that some four or five weeks ago the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington), at my suggestion, asked the Minister of Finance about a bond issue of $650 million, a good portion of which was new money. Most of it was long-term bonds with a coupon rate of 12.5 per cent; the shorter term rates were a little lower. The market reaction was that a portion of those bonds was sold at par and the balance at a discount. The market reaction was that on Government of Canada bonds in excess of ten years, 12.5 per cent was not enough, considering the performance of the Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but the Chair did allow him extra time in view of earlier interruptions. His time has now expired.

Some Hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member to continue his remarks?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, we agree, provided that the Hon. Member does not take more than two minutes.

Mr. Lambert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In summary, I should like to ask the House to support the amendment of the New Democratic Party and then to line up behind the amendment of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). That would bring back some reality and responsibility to the House and would mean having a Parliament, rather than a rubber stamp—et je les compte, les "rubber stamps" sur les banquettes ministérielles. We do not have to do it and we should not do it.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to enter the debate with regard to the borrowing authority. Today the Government is obviously asking for authority to borrow a very considerable amount. We must consider what the Government's priorities are, and this raises some very serious questions about the attitude that Parliament should take to granting further borrowing authority. I think specifically of the Petroleum Incentives Program on which the Government has spent something like $1.6 billion. These grants have gone to the petroleum industry, but this money has created very few jobs at a time when there are 1.5 million people unemployed in the country. Taking into account those who have given up looking for work, who are discouraged because there is no work to be found, the real figure is more in the order of two million people. Yet this is when the Government asks for additional borrowing authority, when it has spent $1.6 billion on incentive grants to the petroleum industry.

Those priorities are totally inappropriate in the present economic circumstances; they are insensitive to the human needs that exist in the community. If the Government were compassionate, it would borrow money to put people back to work rather than continue to funnel it to the petroleum industry.

It would not be so bad, Mr. Speaker, if there was only one example of the misdirection of scarce public funds. But look at the job-creation funds which went primarily into Liberal ridings. This use of public funds undermines the confidence of people in their Government. There is no way that any citizen of this country can have confidence in any Government which borrows money and then spends it in Government ridings rather than in opposition ridings. The unemployed of this country live in both Liberal and opposition ridings, and it is crucial that the Government comport itself in a way which will maintain public confidence. The funnelling of public money into Liberal ridings is surely the best way to undermine that confidence and encourage Parliament to reject requests from the Government for further borrowings.

Not only has this Government spent money unwisely, Mr. Speaker, but it has failed to collect taxes. The figures for 1980 indicate that there is something like $22 billion in deferred corporate taxes. Yet the Government comes before this House asking to borrow something like $29.5 billion. We all know that over the last 20 years the burden of taxation has shifted quite sharply from the corporate sector to the individual taxpayer. In light of the fact that corporations are paying a smaller and smaller portion of the costs of Government, that individuals are being asked to pay a larger and larger share, and the Government is asking for authority to borrow almost $30 billion, how can it justify the continued deferral of some $22 billion in corporate taxes? Perhaps it is time that the Government, rather than doing this, came forward with legislation to ensure that these corporations pay the money they owe and start paying a fair share of the costs of running the Government in this country.

Mr. Blenkarn: Which company does not pay its tax?

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I can give the Hon. Member a few examples. I have a list here of 15 of the largest Canadian industrial corporations which did not pay—

Mr. Blenkarn: Why don't you go to a Justice of the Peace and file an Information?

Mr. Kristiansen: It is legal because Tories pass crooked laws. Now, get off it.

Mr. Keeper: Fifteen of the largest Canadian industrial corporations did not pay—

Mr. Blenkarn: Why don't you go and lay a charge before a Justice of the Peace?

Mr. Kristiansen: It is perfectly legal; you guys were the crooks.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, it is quite understandable that when we raise the question of fair taxation for corporations, the Tories start shouting and defending the corporate sector in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, we must be getting under the Tories' skin when they start shouting and squealing so loudly. The 15 largest Canadian industrial corporations which did not pay corporate tax in 1981 and 1982 are the General Motors Corporation of Canada Limited, Alcan Aluminium Limited, Canadian National Railway Company, Hudson's Bay Company—

Mr. Blenkarn: How many people do they employ?

Mr. Keeper: Here they are shouting again, Mr. Speaker. The Tories are seeking to defend—

Mr. Shields: Let's put them into bankruptcy and put those people out of work.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, they seek to defend the corporate sector. I am not surprised that when I raise the question of fair taxation for corporations, the Tories squeal. Just because a company employs people does not mean it does not have the responsibility to pay a fair share of the cost of public services in this country.

Mr. Blenkarn: Close them down.

Mr. Kristiansen: The Tories say they want to close them down.

Mr. Shields: Pass another NEP.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if this shouting from the Tory benches is not an endorsation of the trend which has been taking place over the past 20 years of shifting the burden of taxation in this country from corporations to ordinary individuals. It is very clear that the Conservative Party continues to serve as the mouthpiece for large corporations.

One of the reasons the Government is before us today asking for such a large amount of money is that we still lack a fair taxation system in this country. I am thinking of the Budget in which the Government gave some $600 per year to pensioners at the same time it gave a gift of $5,000 or more a year in write-offs to taxpayers who earn something like $90,000 a year. That is clearly inequitable and it continues the trend toward an unfair distribution of taxation in this country.

The sad thing, Mr. Speaker, is that the leaders of both the Conservative and Liberal Parties come from the corporate community. From their public statements it would appear that they intend to continue to leave the burden of taxation on the backs of ordinary Canadians and allow corporations a free ride.

Mr. Pierre Deniger (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes I have left, I would like to introduce some coherence in the incoherent comments made by my hon. friends opposite. Mr. Speaker, all this in spite of the fact that, if I recall correctly, the Budget was quite clear and indicated quite logically and precisely why the Government needed the amount indicated in Bill C-21.

Mr. Speaker, the Members of the Opposition are criticizing the deficit, but what are they themselves proposing? They want to reduce the deficit, but how are they going to do that, Mr. Speaker! The Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) said he would reduce the deficit by increasing the Defence Budget. The Leader of the Official Opposition said he was going to reduce the deficit by increasing supplementary transfer payments to the provinces.

An Hon. Member: He does not know what he is talking about!

Mr. Deniger: The Leader of the Official Opposition said he was going to reduce the deficit by reducing taxes for those who are well off. Mr. Speaker, that makes no sense at all, and when we asked the Members opposite about this, what did they say? They said nothing, because they cannot find anything intelligent to say about such proposals.

The Opposition is very clever, in fact it excels in giving us targets and objectives.

Mr. Pinard: What about the means?

Mr. Deniger: What about the means Mr. Speaker, what about that?

My hon. friend who sits on the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, is very quick with his comments. However, although he thinks of himself as a champion of sorts, the Opposition Member has no means to propose either, because I know perfectly well he agrees with the former Minister of Finance of his Party, and that if he did announce the kind of draconian measures he was considering, the Canadian people would never elect him and his Party in the next election. And I am just quoting—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being 5 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

INCOME TAX ACT

SUGGESTED DEDUCTION FOR VOLUNTEER FIREMEN

Miss Coline Campbell (South West Nova) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act to allow volunteer firemen who receive no allowance from a government, municipality or other public authority, to deduct from their income, expenses incurred in the exercise of their duties as volunteer firemen.

She said: Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank Members opposite for allowing me to go ahead, particularly the Hon. Member who will probably have his turn tomorrow.

My motion is not new to the House. I proposed it on May 8, 1980. As you have just read the motion, Mr. Speaker, I will not reread it. However, it was debated on July 16, 1982. As there was no opportunity to debate it a second time in the House, it died in the last session and was reintroduced in December, 1983, at the start of this session.

I will be very brief in my remarks as I have already spoken on this subject. Many of the firemen from South West Nova and other areas have a great interest in this motion. I should like to explain why. The present Income Tax Act provides for exempt expense allowances for volunteer firemen up to the amount of $500 per year. The exemption applies only to allowances received by volunteer firemen from a government, municipality or other public authority.

In many cases, Mr. Speaker, volunteer firemen receive no allowance and, at the same time, incur personal expenses in the course of carrying out their duties as volunteer firemen. These duties include the protection of lives, homes and businesses in many communities across Canada. These expenses are incurred because they do not know when a fire is going to take place. The volunteer firemen may be at a social event or at work and they must go immediately to answer the call of a fire. They may be dressed in their good clothes or sports clothes, which may be damaged in the course of fighting the fire. There is no deduction given under the Income Tax Act for those expenses.

In the past I have asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) to consider giving a special status to volunteer firemen who serve their community year in and year out, receive no allowance and therefore do not receive the benefit of the $500 deduction under the Income Tax Act. In my view it would show the appreciation Canadians have for volunteer firemen.

The Minister has asked how this provision would be implemented. It could be implemented by a clerk of any municipality, on the authority of a fire chief, stating that a given firemen has served 100 per cent or 80 per cent of the time throughout that year. In the latter case he would get 80 per cent of the income tax deduction provided for under the present Act.

I do not plan to speak further, Mr. Speaker, I have spoken in the past on this motion. I know there are many interested people who would like to see this particular motion passed in the House. I will allow it to be debated by others here today.

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to speak on this subject, not only as a private Member, but as a representative of all the Conservative Members of the Official Opposition. We have continually supported the idea of this motion in principle. We intend to do that today. We hope we will not face the same kind of filibuster or talking out that this particular piece of legislation in the form of a Private Member's Bill or motion has received in the past. I would like to give two examples of what I hope will not happen today to kill this piece of work which has been done by the Member who is interested in this subject and who has spoken very well of the concern she has for volunteer firemen.

I would like to refer to Hansard of July 16, 1982, at page 19431. At that time the Hon. Member for South West Nova (Miss Campbell) first moved this motion with exactly the same wording. At that time we spoke in support of it. As we approached the end of the designated hour, something which had happened before happened again. The Liberal Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher) proceeded to talk the motion out. It was brought to the attention of the House but we did not wish to talk it out. However, the time passed and the motion died.

In 1983, as indicated on page 22009 of Hansard the same Liberal Member for Mississauga North, who was then the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance, followed the same procedure. We spoke in support of the deduction for volunteer firemen, but the Member for Mississauga North, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance, stood up to talk it out again. Even after the late Member for Nepean-Carleton, Mr. Baker, asked that it not be talked out, the Member for Mississauga North continued on. He said:

> On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I thank the representatives of the other two Parties for making their position so clear and for their willingness to move ahead on this. However, I suggest it is probably much better to simply pass along our enthusiasm to the Minister of Finance and leave it at that.

At that point the time ran out and again the motion died. You do not have to give me the fast sign on this because we have an hour set aside for debate on this motion. As I pointed out in my opening remarks, we are not going to use the designated time we have.

I would like to reiterate that there is a need for consideration to be given to a deduction for volunteer firemen. I am sure members of the New Democratic Party are of the same opinion. We are not looking forward to the same thing taking place as occurred in 1982 and in 1983. I am sure that the Member who brought this motion forward hopes that the same procedure is not followed today.

• (1710)

As a reeve of a municipality in the northern part of Peterborough County that had a volunteer fire fighting organization and as a warden of the 18 municipalities of Peterborough County, I can say that this proposal is long overdue. I hope that when I sit down no one else will stand up at ten minutes after five and that this motion can be sent to committee. Witnesses can be called, if necessary, and the concerns of the Government can be expressed as well as those of the Opposition, both NDP and Conservative.

We can do some fine tuning to the intent of this resolution, but let us not see a reoccurrence of 1982 and 1983 when we heard platitudes from the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance when government Members were really talking out the motion.

I congratulate the Hon. Member who brought in this motion and offer our support from this side for its speedy passage. As private Members I believe we can work rapidly on this and refer it to committee. I would be very pleased to second the motion, if it is so put, that the subject matter be referred immediately to the Finance Committee for consideration and adoption by the Government with the support of both opposition Parties.

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the NDP I want to address this very important issue of the income tax deductions for volunteer firemen. Like the previous speaker, I come from a constituency where the role of the volunteer firemen is extremely important because of their contribution to our community. Other members of my Party have also spoken on this matter and have urged that the Government take action to ensure that volunteer firemen are able to make deductions from their income tax for the kinds of expenses that they have incurred.

I know that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen), has addressed this issue and stressed the importance of this type of measure being put in place. He spoke to an earlier motion put by the same Member who raised this concern today. I want to emphasize that our Party has been supportive of this measure.

The last time this issue was discussed I deliberately refrained from making comments so as to allow for a vote to be taken in the allotted one hour that we had. It was the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher) who jeopardized the motion at that time.

Since we have more time today, I want to point out some of the concerns that I believe should be taken into account when addressing this measure. I am sure that other Members have also written to the Minister of Finance prior to his Budget proposals to ask him to include this particular measure in the Budget. However, neither the Budget proposals of February or those of April contained any provisions concerning what we had been asking for at that time.

Let me compare the motion which is before us now with the similar motion that was brought forward on December 12, 1983. The motion on December 12, 1983, read:

That in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act to allow volunteer firemen who receive no allowance from a government, municipality, or other public authority, to deduct from their income expenses incurred in the exercise of their duties as volunteer firemen.

Of course, there are a number of similarities with the proposal that had been introduced in the previous session by the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid). There is the request that a greater degree of deductibility be allowed for expenses incurred by volunteer firemen during the course of their duties. The difference between the two proposals is that the one made by the Member for Brampton-Georgetown suggested a limit of some $1,000 per firemen per year while this motion has no specific limit. We applaud that measure.

I do have some concern with regard to what might be explicitly meant by the word "allowance". As the House knows, some volunteer firemen in some areas receive a small stipend to alleviate the costs somewhat. I hope this matter might be considered in a fair and just manner if it is referred to the committee.

For the benefit of the House, I should mention some of the expenses that volunteer firemen incur during the course of their duties. I have talked to some fire chiefs in my area. My office recently had a conversation with Mr. David Seeley who has just taken over the new fire chief position in Dauphin. He noted that, from his perspective, volunteer firemen are a different breed of people. They give of their time and their talents and of course they even risk their lives. He suggested that it was the least the Government could do to ensure that they did not also have to give continually of their own money as well.

We are aware that the present $500 that could be given to a volunteer fireman can help somewhat, but let me talk about some of the expenses they incur. For example, in the case of a large constituency such as mine, in which there are 34 municipalities, seven Indian reserves and 12 northern community councils, there is the gas that is required for private vehicles to go to and from fires. The cost of gasoline has gone up and those volunteer firemen pay for it out of their own pockets. As well, there is the maintenance of these vehicles and the fact that they require various warning lights. These vehicles must be plugged in during the winter, especially in the more northern rural constituencies, so that they are ready to be driven to a fire when the fireman receives a phone call.

In addition, volunteers require protective equipment, such as clothing, helmets and boots. Many of them have to incur also the cost of time lost as a result of not having shown up for work. There are various courses that firemen take. I know that volunteers from my constituency try to upgrade themselves by taking various fire-fighting and first aid courses. They must incur the expense of the travel time that is necessary to take these courses which are held in larger centres. Many of them also want to be constantly informed about some of the latest technologies in fire-fighting and therefore will subscribe to the appropriate magazines. All of these are costs incurred by volunteer firemen.

Let me give one illustration of what it costs a fireman when he must lose time from work, since it is an incident that happened just last week. There was a fire at the Dauphin elementary school that started on Monday night. The volunteer firefighters were at the scene that night, on Tuesday, and were still there on Wednesday morning. As David Seely said, these volunteer firemen in our area are a rare breed. They offer their own talents, time and energy to contribute to this type of volunteer activity.

This does not take place in only one community in my riding. I could mention every part of my riding and show the contribution that volunteer firemen are making there. It does not matter whether you go to a place like Swan River, Roblin, Grandview, Gilbert Plains, Winnipegosis, St. Rose, Ethelbert, McCreary or Minitonas. The reason I am mentioning some of these place names is to give you some idea, Mr. Speaker, of the impact which these volunteer firemen have. I am just talking about locations, but other things could be said in their favour.

How much more time do I have, Mr. Speaker? I understand we are allowed 20 minutes. Do we have until six o'clock, Mr. Speaker? Could I have a little guidance on the matter? I do not think I should cut my speech short if there is more time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the Hon. Member putting a question to the Chair?

Mr. Lewycky: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The debate is allowed to proceed for a full hour, 60 minutes. We will normally adjourn under the Standing Order at six o'clock.

Mr. Lewycky: Thank you for the clarification, Mr. Speaker.

What about the smaller communities up north, such as, for instance, Mafeking? There are great distances between these various towns. We have little towns, for example, like Inglis, Camperville, Amaranth, Benito, Bowsman, Fork River, I am trying to emphasize the importance of a constituency such as mine. It really does make a difference if you add up the costs. What about the southern part of my constituency? There we find places such as Glenalla, Ochre River, Plumas, or I could mention my home town of Pine River where I was brought up. Then there is Rorkton and Meadow Portage. I could go on endlessly listing some other places where there are fire chiefs. I have mentioned only the towns that have volunteer firemen, but there are other people associated with them as well. I think it is important we recognize that. The ordinary person does not participate in these types of duties.

If one looks at the record of some of these fire-fighters one finds that they have been involved for a long period of time. If you are involved in any kind of social work, Mr. Speaker, you would know that individuals experience burn-out. When one is involved in social work dealing with people problems for a period of two, three, or four years, it is possible to burn out. Just consider the types of stress and frustration some of these individuals go through. Consider the amount of time they devote to this service.

I have just examined records of the fire chiefs in Dauphin and I find the situation amazing. Just let me cite the record of the previous fire chief, David Seeley. He retired this year. He retired after being fire chief for 28 years. Here is a man who has served almost a whole generation by offering fire protection to his neighbourhood. He served as fire chief for the last eight of the 28 years. People in urban centres have fire-fighting equipment. Perhaps some people wonder if there really is a necessity for this type of fire protection in rural areas. If you look at the number of calls firemen in Dauphin have to make in the course of a year, you will find that an average of 60 fires a year occur, many of them in rural areas. Firefighters have to go a fair distance from where the fire truck is located.

More and more people are recognizing the value of this kind of volunteer activity. The number of people participating in this kind of force is growing. In small communities such as mine where there may have been 18 firefighters several years ago, now there are 30. This is a great help.

I just wanted to bring some of these matters to the attention of the House. This measure is very important and it should be passed on. The Hon. Member ought to be commended for raising the matter. I hope the motion is referred to the committee. Fortunately, the Hon. Member for Mississauga North is not in the House so he will not talk it out.

Let me come back to the allowance. The exemption should be made for all types of volunteer firemen even if they are paid only a small pittance. Revenue Canada is sure to collect it anyway. There is no problem there. But the amount of expense firefighters have in the pursuit of protecting citizens at large is great. The savings given by the firefighters to their areas are substantial.

In conclusion, let me illustrate. I will take my home town of Dauphin which has a small population of 10,000. In 1983, for the 30 volunteer firemen who are on call 24 hours a day, 365 days a year, the total amount of allowance given was $46,000. If you were to translate that amount into paying firefighters a salary for an entire year, you might be able to pay two firefighters on a full-time basis working a 40 hour week. This indicates the fantastic economic saving that occurs from having these firemen in your community. Other community organizations are involved. There are the Kinsmen groups who contribute by way of having all types of equipment donated to the fire-fighting association. Other groups might get different kinds of equipment such as that which cuts through metal. There are special kinds of shears to cut through automobiles. Then another implement is the jaws of life. I know that one organization in Dauphin has purchased one of these for our fire department. All these contributions by other associations contribute to the entire effort.

It is for these reasons that I feel we should support this measure. I trust government Members will not talk out this motion as they did the last time. I hope this matter goes to committee, which will make sure that the volunteer firemen in our communities receive not only recognition but the assistance they need to carry out this very important activity.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in support of this Private Member's motion proposed by the Hon. Member for Southwest Nova (Miss Campbell). I shall be very brief.

We should have respect for this institution. More important, there should be respect for the Members who, after all, in the final analysis, make the rules. Private Members' hour should have meaning, especially on motions that have the support of all three Parties. This motion is supported by all three Parties of this House. It is a motion, as I know from my research, which is not objected to by the Department of Finance. It would cause no problem in the central agencies. It would do an enormously good turn in providing a small measure of recognition for the tremendous job of voluntary service to the community carried out by volunteer fire departments all across Canada.

Some people think this is a motion, Mr. Speaker, which is only going to assist a few fire departments here and there in Canada. In my own riding, a district encompassing some 90,000 people, with 350 miles to 400 miles of coast line, with several hundred small communities, there are only three municipalities big enough or financed well enough to have paid fire departments. All the rest of the communities, Mr. Speaker, depend for their very life and limb upon the good citizenship, the spirit of voluntarism and the compassion of those men who have agreed to serve in voluntary departments.

I can think of Stephenville Crossing, Cormack, Cow Head, Deer Lake, Pasadena, Massey Drive, Gillams, Parson's Pond, St. Pauls, Rocky Harbour, Port au Choix, Irishtown, Mount Moriah, only to name a few, Mr. Speaker. All of the citizens of those communities can go to bed at night and rest easy knowing their children are safe because there is a dedicated group of people who ask for no pay, no thanks and no revenues. They merely want to serve their communities. All this motion asks, Mr. Speaker, is that the volunteer firemen in those small communities, who have built their fire department with their own hands and raised the money to buy their own fire truck, be recognized. All the motion asks is that when a voluntary fireman is out fighting a fire, receiving not a penny, Mr. Speaker, nothing but thanks from those he helps, if he is to do damage to his own person or his own clothing, he can receive a tax break in replacing those things damaged during the course of a fire. That is all this motion asks. Surely to God it is not too much to expect that in Private Members' hour in this House, which in the final analysis decides the law, all Parties can agree to having a vote.

I can spend a lot more time speaking on this Bill, but I will not do so because I do not want to be accused of being one of those who, for silly, bureaucratic, old, archaic, institutionalized, nonsensical reasons, talks this Bill out. Let us get on with it.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I want to join with my colleague from Nova Scotia, the Hon. Member for South West Nova (Miss Campbell) in supporting this particular motion which was laid before the Chamber. Like the previous speaker, I believe this particular motion is a tax policy issue. In looking at the tax policies, some people would perhaps question whether or not we should use the income tax system to provide such benefits to volunteer firemen. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the provisions of Section 6(1)(b) and Section 8 of the Income Tax Act ought to be looked at quite seriously.

We ought to concede to the request made by the Hon. Member for South West Nova. As a result, I want to lend my support, Mr. Speaker, to this particular motion and say, yes, it is an exceptional benefit being proposed for firemen, but firemen, Mr. Speaker, across this country, particularly volunteer firemen, provide a great service to the Canadian people. I wish to join with others on this side of the House who support not only the pith and substance of the motion, but, indeed, the effects it will have on the people it is supposed to serve, namely, the volunteer firemen of Canada.

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for South West Nova (Miss Campbell) for introducing this motion. As the House has heard, it is supported by the Conservative Party, the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm), myself, and the Hon. Member for Dauphin-Swan River (Mr. Lewycky). There will be only two speakers, as I understand, from the Conservative Party in support of this Bill because we all know the Liberals are trying to talk it out. There have been three Liberal speakers already. We will be very interested to see how many more Liberal speakers there will be before the clock runs out at six o'clock. If Hon. Members opposite have the interest of the volunteer firemen at heart, they will let this motion pass and go to committee. It has been talked out before. We heard all about it from the Hon. Member for Peterborough.

I support the volunteer firemen, not just in the riding of Victoria-Haliburton, but right across the country. I believe that if we prevented this motion from being referred to committee tonight—and I am sure if that happens it will be because of the Liberal Party—we will be doing a great disservice to the smaller communities which are scattered throughout this large country of ours. I suggest that the Members opposite think about this. They have had three speakers until now. We are cutting it off at two speakers. With these remarks, and to keep it short, I will sit down. I certainly hope this Bill will get into committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Before recognizing another Hon. Member, the Chair would like to draw to the attention of all Hon. Members Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, Fifth Edition, Citation 435. I raise this matter advisedly, having listened attentively, as I always do, to comments of Hon. Members from all sides of the House. I quote Citation 435(1):

> It is not an amendment to a motion to move that the question go to a committee.

I leave that to the reflection of Hon. Members, having taken good note of the comments made in their speeches. The matter before the House can be disposed of in two ways: by accepting the motion or by rejecting the motion outright or, if it is the intention of Hon. Members to do so, by sending this motion—to a committee of the House to have it redrafted, because in its present form the Chair could not accept a motion to the effect that the subject matter of the motion be referred to the committee. I leave that to the reflection of Hon. Members for the time being.

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, with the concurrence of the Chair and all Parties in the House, I would like to submit to the Chair a motion that the contents of the recommended—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is not in order for the Hon. Member on a point of order to make a motion or recommendation at this time because he has already spoken, unless, of course, he were given unanimous consent to do so.

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. We will now proceed with debate.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. The point raised by yourself, Mr. Speaker, was the very point I was going to mention. I was also going to point out that the motion we are debating here reads:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act—

The fastest way in which this change could be brought into effect would be if the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) would consider this as a change to be brought in in his Budget, and I presume there will be a Budget fairly soon in the fall. That is the fastest way in which it could be accomplished.

I have just one or two points to make, Mr. Speaker, having to do with the importance of this particular resolution brought forward by the Hon. Member for South West Nova (Miss Campbell).

Volunteer Firemen

Some provincial governments have reduced substantially the amount of money available from municipalities over the past few years. One is Newfoundland. Therefore, local governments cannot afford to give the benefits that richer or medium-sized community town councils can give. We see this incredible inequity with volunteer fire brigades. One volunteer fire brigade might be given a $500 allowance, which is taken care of under the Income Tax Act, Section 61(b)(8) and, overriding that, Section 81(b) where they can take advantage of it. In a small rural community that has had its grants in lieu of taxes, its share of provincial revenues, cut over the five or six years by the incredibly stupid Newfoundland Government, they cannot give that same allowance to be used as a deduction under the Income Tax Act.

I just concluded a conversation with the Deputy Mayor of the Town of Gander. He made that very point. He knew this would be coming up before the House. He asked me to support this measure on behalf of volunteer firemen, not only in the Gander area but all around the coastline. He made the very important point that we do not pay enough attention to the volunteers, in this case the volunteer firemen.

I wanted to make note briefly of what the motion says and to say that the fastest way for it to be accomplished is to convince the Minister of Finance to bring in the necessary change from $300 to $500. The extreme inequity of the system and discrimination for the rural areas of this country, such as in my riding of Gander-Twillingate, should be unacceptable because provincial governments discriminate so much against the municipalities. A recent Newfoundland budget cut this back even further. Because they do that, I feel that this House of Commons should at least recognize the value of volunteer fire brigades and try to make up for the errors of Tory provincial governments which could not care less about the people.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to intervene briefly in the debate in support of the resolution proposed by the Hon. Member for South West Nova (Miss Campbell). As has already been indicated, the disposition of the House is to support voluntary fire departments across the country and those who serve in them. It is well recognized that those involved in volunteer fire departments are under financial disability in providing services. There is no question that their treatment under the Income Tax Act has been less than fair. There does not seem to be a disposition to deal directly with the motion presented by my colleague from South West Nova. In the interest of advancing the cause of volunteer firemen across the country and in the interest of adopting a sensible approach to the problem of taxation in relation to them, as suggested by the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker), the motion ought to be reviewed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and given full consideration. Therefore I move:

That the contents of the motion proposed by the Hon. Member for South West Nova be presented for consideration to the appropriate standing committee of the House of Commons for consideration by that standing committee.

The motion can be seconded by the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) or possibly the Hon. Member for South West Nova.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If I may quote myself and re-quote Beauchesne, as I did earlier, I draw the attention of the Hon. Members to Beauchesne, Citation 435(1), which reads: "It is not an amendment to a motion to move that the question go to a committee." The Hon. Member formulated his motion in the terms "I move that the contents of the motion", which is the same as that the subject matter of a motion "be sent to the appropriate committee for consideration". That type of motion is definitely out of order and, I regret to say, unacceptable. In support of that, I have quoted Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, Fifth Edition.

Miss Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Possibly you could clarify this for the House. A few minutes ago I understood you to say that there are two things that could be done. We could stop debate and the motion would be referred to the Minister of Finance recommending that he consider it, or we could debate it until six o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I draw the attention of Hon. Members to the wording "that in the opinion of this House the Government should consider the advisability". If the House were to accept this, it would be an invitation to the Government to consider the contents of the motion and nothing else.

What the House has to do is either to accept the motion as it has been put or to reject it outright. The amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Halifax West is out of order. As a matter of parliamentary practice, you do not refer the subject matter of a motion of this nature to a committee. The subject matter is the motion itself. It has to be disposed of here and now. It cannot be disposed of in another place such as a committee of the House. I hope my comments help Hon. Members to appreciate the conundrum we are in.

Mr. Lewycky: Mr. Speaker do I understand it correctly that if there was unanimous consent to this motion at this time, this motion would be given to the Minister of Finance for his consideration?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion reads: "the Government should consider". If the House were to accept the motion, it would then be up to the Government to take whatever action it sees fit. That is all it says.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. This is why I rose on a previous occasion. I was going to make the same point as Your Honour. It is quite unfortunate to find, if one examines Beauchesne or Erskine May, that when the words, "In the opinion of the House the Government should consider the advisability of amending" a certtain Act, are used in a motion, whether the motion is or is not talked out, is or is not voted on, it takes no effect as a government motion.

The House is saying that a particular change should take effect. "To consider the advisability" is a very well known term. It has been used for centuries under the British parliamentary system. It is simply to bring the subject to the fore for discussion. The Government then takes the subject matter of that discussion under advisability.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I remind Hon. Members that the power to initiate an expenditure of money comes under the royal prerogative. That is why the motion is worded in the fashion it is. It is the only possibility Hon. Members have of debating that type of an initiative. It does not incur an outright expenditure of money on the part of the Government which comes under the royal prerogative. The motion simply asks the Government to consider doing just that. That is why it must be left in the hands of the Government. It is for the House to accept or reject the motion or to send it on to the Government, if I may use that expression.

• (1750)

Mr. Jack Masters (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, in the limited time available to me let me say first that I feel almost nervous about being in what may appear to be opposition to the volunteer sector of Canada and the volunteer firemen in particular. I am certainly well aware of the role that they play since I am from northwestern Ontario. I do have a great deal of respect for the special breed of people who will volunteer their time and I have a great deal of respect for the service that they perform throughout the country.

The difficulty I have with the proposal which is before the House is simply that, in my view, we are approaching income tax changes in an ad hoc way and too freely. While it is very popular and easy to support the idea of assisting volunteer firemen and helping with the admittedly extraordinary expenses they might accrue, where do we stop? In northern Ontario, we have a group of people who are very much involved in search and rescue operations. That group performs its duties in many part of Canada and, in a way, performs the selfsame kind of service. Is the proposal then to be that we have now examined the issue of the volunteer firemen and we will give something to them that we do not give to other volunteers?

What about our good friends in the St. John Ambulance Association who perform yeomen service year in and year out across Canada? Do we then tell them that they have extraordinary expenses because they have to drive to and from the places where they will be performing their services? Perhaps they too should be included in this Bill and given some special assistance since they are not covered by that exception which already exists for municipalities and organized situations. I understand that the Hon. Member is trying to give to the volunteer firemen in unorganized areas the same kind of tax breaks as are allowed to those who volunteer on behalf of municipalities, federal installations and things of that nature.

The list then gets longer because there is also a very worth-while group of volunteers who assist with hospital work. We do not think about hospital work as being an avenue to personal danger to one's health, but I know of people who, while doing volunteer work in a hospital, have contracted something which they would not have contracted had they been doing something else rather than volunteering their time. Those people too have incurred extraordinary expenses.

While this group may be a bit different from the volunteer firemen, what about the ski patrols who also perform such services? The Hon. Members opposite are laughing. However, the ski patrol does perform a valuable service even in the face of certain dangers at times, and its members too are volunteers who contribute to the public good.

I suppose what I am trying to indicate, Mr. Speaker, is that all of us may have the greatest sympathy for and can relate very easily to the volunteer firemen and very quickly agree that they do perform a service. However, should we then give them special consideration which we do not give to others? As I have tried to indicate, the list could go on and become much larger. After we get away from the volunteer sector, we could then turn to those people who incur certain expenses in connection with the earning of their livelihood, some of whom admittedly do receive some tax breaks. This presents all kinds of problems. Does one need a personal automobile to go to and from work if work is 150 miles away? In some cases yes, in some cases no.

While I would say that the intent of the Hon. Member's motion is certainly commendable and that we certainly do support the volunteer sector in its many forms across this great land of ours, I personally find it difficult to continue with the practice of approaching special taxation measures in the ad hoc way that has already created so many problems. I think of our hon. friends opposite who have had many things to say about Revenue Canada, and not many of them have been complimentary of late. However, those Members who are quick to say that they will look after the volunteer firemen might be the same Members who would then have a quarrel with the Department later on because it was doing something special for certain groups.

I do support the intent of the Hon. Member and commend her for bringing the matter before the House. I do believe that her idea is very serious and it is very tempting to help the volunteer firemen. However, I would first want to see us in a position of having examined the entire matter, not in isolation but in the context of the many tax changes that are required in the country.

Mr. Alain Garant (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, whenever the House is called upon to deal with motions such as this one calling for tax exemptions in favour of one group or another, the temptation is always very strong to be nice and say yes. It could always be argued that the exemptions sought are very modest and would make a group of Canadians very happy.

However, unless we are ready to say yes also to all other motions of this type and to face the ensuing financial consequences of our action on the federal budget and the Canadian economy as a whole, we must really stop and see what would be their impact on our taxation system.

Requests for special tax exemptions must be considered in the light of certain fundamental criteria under which our tax system operates. One of these criteria is that personal tax exemptions should not be granted because any kind of deductions from individual income tax will result in a loss of revenue for the government, which must be compensated by tax increases for other individuals.

We are not dealing here merely with exempting a class of individuals of certain expenses, but with shifting part of their tax burden to other classes of individuals, and such a tax shift could not be justified.

From this point of view, Mr. Speaker, the motion moved by the Hon. Member for South West Nova (Miss Campbell) violates therefore a basic tenet of a fair income tax policy.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

HUMAN RIGHTS—APPEAL IN SEXUAL HARASSMENT CASE—FUNDING OF APPEAL

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I asked several questions on sexual harassment to three Ministers. First, I put a question to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Blais), because the Robichaud incident occurred in that Department. Then I asked a question to the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan), because it was he who advised to appeal the decision when Mrs. Robichaud won her case before the tribunal of the Human Rights Commission. Finally, I put a question to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) because his Department is funding the appeal and it was also his Department that issued the Government guidelines on sexual harassment. I raised the first question recently on the adjournment motion. The Minister of National Defence himself did not seem to know anything about the Robichaud case. His Parliamentary Secretary avoided answering by making a distinction between military and civil proceedings related to sexual harassment. Military or civil proceedings are not the issue here, but in either instance something has to be done to protect women. But instead of supporting the woman who had filed a complaint, the Minister or of National Defence raised objections and, when the woman won her case, he even decided to appeal.

[English]

This is an extremely flagrant case. It took a complainant a number of years, going through the ministry and finally winning at the Human Rights Commission. The result was that the Government conducted an appeal.

My question to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) concerned the funding and the guidelines on sexual harassment, but the Minister went off on the question of the right to an appeal. Of course, Mr. Speaker, I grant that either side has the right to appeal. The question is whether the appeal is justified, whether there is good reason for it and if public funds should be spent to undo what the Human Rights Commission has already accepted.

The President of the Treasury Board also used the flimsy excuse that the case occurred before the issuance of guidelines, as if that would change things. We are worried that the guidelines are window-dressing. If there were some spirit behind the guidelines they would be acted upon promptly and there would be no appeal. There is no reason to argue, from a failure to institute guidelines earlier, that one should therefore not take sexual harassment seriously and appeal a case that occurs.

Treasury Board guidelines are clear on what personal harassment is and what the Government's responsibility is. On paper that is good; personal harassment of any kind is considered a serious offence subject to the full range of disciplinary sanctions up to and including discharge and would be treated accordingly by management. Further, management has a continuing responsibility to stop any harassment that occurs in the workplace whether there has been a complaint or not. If a manager is aware of harassment of an employee and does not take appropriate corrective action, disciplinary sanctions may be imposed on the manager as well as the offender.

That is well and good, Mr. Speaker. However, in making the appeal the President of the Treasury Board used the argument, quite unjustifiably, that the Government has been implicated in the decision of the Human Rights Tribunal and therefore had to appeal. If they would apply the logic of their own guidelines they would see the Government has implicated itself. An employer is responsible for having conditions of work which exclude sexual harassment. So the Government must be involved, and the Human Rights Commission acted quite properly in criticizing the Government for its failure to provide decent working conditions for the woman complainant in this case.

Let me quote from a letter from John Baglow, president of the concerned Local of the Public Service Alliance of Canada in arguing against the appeal and asking for its retraction:

This employee has already had to endure savage harassment by her supervisor for a period of years, and now faces court action brought against her by a Department clearly committed to upholding the right of male employees to exact sexual perks from their subordinates.

He asks the Minister to stop this:

I appeal to you . . . to intervene personally to put an end to DNDs campaign of intimidation—

That is very strong language and, I regret to say, it is justified.

Finally, let me comment on the decision of the Department of Justice to appeal the case. I am reminded of the Department's past decisions to appeal equality cases when women win them. The Lavell case is a shameful example involving rights for native women. When the woman finally won at the federal court of appeal, it was the Department of Justice which appealed that decision requiring the woman to go to the Supreme Court of Canada. We see that practice continuing. A woman wins a case at a lower level and the Department of Justice goes for an appeal. This indicates that equal rights for women is window dressing, public relations, and when we get down to the crunch of a real case, the Government does not take its own commitment seriously.

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I first want to pay my respect to the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) and congratulate her on her aggressive action in pursuit of justice on behalf of women, particularly in the area of sexual harassment. In this particular case, however, I think her timing is rather poor. Neither the Minister nor I are in a position to go into the details of the case because appeals are pending before the court. Her colleague, the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant), had an exchange with the Minister on the subject two weeks ago. At that time the Minister clarified the situation by stating that the Department is appealing the liability issue. This is the only area being appealed.

Under these conditions I can only add that the answers provided by the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) are worth repeating. In recent years this Government has legislated far reaching and comprehensive legislation which protect the rights of all Canadians. To name a few, the access to information legislation, the Privacy Act and the Human Rights Commission, not to mention the Charter of Rights—all benefit Canadians.

Situations arising from practical implementation of these measures must be dealt with at all levels, especially in the first stage, very carefully. As they are brought before the courts precedents are set which will govern future applications. The onus is therefore on all parties to pursue these matters with the utmost care. When it is judged that appeals are required, they must be pursued.

If one were to summarize the intent in theirs answers, both Ministers sought to make sure that it was understood that neutrality and fairness must be guaranteed. This is the only response I am in a position to make at this time.

THE SENATE—APPOINTMENT OF EIGHT NEW SENATORS. (B) REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER DELAY MAKING FURTHER APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, on January 18, 1984 I questioned the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) about his attitude and actions with respect to Senate reform. I specifically asked the Prime Minister how he considered that his appointment of eight new Senators contributed to the process of Senate reform. Instead of providing me with an explanation of the reasons for those appointments to the Senate, he assumed the position, as he often does, that the best defense is a good offence. He simply went on the attack claiming that over a period of time the Opposition Parties had blocked any attempt at Senate reform, sometimes in conjunction with the elected representatives in the provinces of Canada.

That was not a fair approach to the very serious matter of Senate reform, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister knows, as well as all Members of the House of Commons, that the process of Senate reform started with the institution of the Senate in 1867, and has continued since. There were a number of reforms over this period which I will not detail. However, I will indicate that in 1978 the Government of Canada, under the current Prime Minister, proposed Bill C-60. This Bill established very far reaching reforms to the Senate and provided for a House of the federation of a quite different kind than the existing Senate. That Bill was ruled unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of Canada. The Supreme Court of Canada said that Bill C-60 was beyond the power of the Parliament of Canada. The Prime Minister used that as an excuse for taking the action that he did. He said he appointed eight Senators because there was no hope of Senate reform.

That attitude was not consistent with the facts. In December of 1982, just prior to the Christmas recess of that year, the Prime Minister, along will all Members of the House of Commons, had given unanimous approval to the establishment of a Special Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons to consider Senate reform in order to strengthen the role of the Senate in representing the regions of Canada and to enhance the authority of all Parliament to speak and act on behalf of Canadians. That was the mandate given to that Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons which I will refer to as the Senate Reform Committee in my remarks.

Proof positive that the Prime Minister paid attention to the existence of the Senate Reform Committee and the ongoing work of the committee was the fact that on December 7, 1983 in the Speech from The Throne, when the words of the Governor General of Canada were delivered in Parliament, it was said that the Government will continue to take an active interest in the work of the Senate-House Committee on senate reform. Mr. Speaker, that sets the stage. We had a Senate Reform Committee appointed in December 1982. We had the Speech from The Throne confirming the existence of that committee and the fact that the Government was looking forward to the recommendations of that committee. That was all contained in the Speech from The Throne on December 7, 1983. Shortly thereafter the Prime Minister proceeded to make a number of appointments to the Senate.

I would like to set the stage for the consideration of some of those appointments, Mr. Speaker. First and foremost there are 104 seats in the Senate of Canada. They are divided among the provinces with approximately 24 seats allocated to the Maritime Provinces, 24 to the Province of Quebec, 24 to the Province of Ontario and 24 to the Western Provinces of Canada; with six seats allocated to the Province of Newfoundland and a seat each to the Yukon and the Northwest Territories.

The Senate Reform Committee found out in its travels across Canada, in its broad range of interviews with a number of persons and organizations, that people did not think this representation was adequate, that the Senate was not properly representing the regions of Canada and that in the interest of the Canadian federation the Senate ought to be expanded. More importantly, the views of many were that the Senate ought to be elected.

In January of 1984, having received a short extension, the Senate Reform Committee filed its report recommending an increase in the Senate seats to 144 to represent the regions of Canada. Under that distribution, western Canadian provinces would get almost twice as many seats in the Senate, Quebec and Ontario would remain the same and other provinces and territories would receive additional seats.

In addition to the increase in the number of seats to 144, the proposal was that the Senate would be elected. However, it was recognized and realized that those kinds of changes would take a long time to accomplish and would indeed require a constitutional amendment. As a necessary interim measure, the committee suggested that vacant seats in the Senate be filled along sensible lines, as recommended by the committee.

There were 21 vacancies at the time. The Senate Reform Committee said specifically that the present composition of the Senate does not represent the social and cultural structure of Canada adequately and that this is unacceptable. It said that in filling the present vacancies, priorities should be given to correcting this deficiency through the appointment of women, members of aboriginal groups and members of cultural minorities.

The Senate Committee report, which was an all-party committee, also unanimously agreed that the imbalance between political parties should be remedied in the making of these appointments.

What did the Prime Minister do? He completely destroyed any hope or possibility of Senate reform. In the course of making appointments, he appointed political partisans of the worst kinds, including Senator Pitfield, Senator Kirby, Senator Grafstein, Senator Cools and Senator Marsden. This was all at a fantastic cost to the people of Canada. Those Senate appointments will continue until the years 2010, 2012, 2016, 2018 and so on, at a cost of millions of dollars to the people of Canada. That is not the spirit of Senate reform. The Prime Minister, in making these appointments, has destroyed the force of the report and destroyed Senate reform for this decade and decades to come.

[Translation]

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased with this opportunity to speak after the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby), and first of all, I must say I find it regrettable that he referred to Senators from the other place by name, because according to Parliamentary practice, it is customary not to name Members of Parliament individually, so as not to interfere unduly in the affairs of the other House. I regret the Hon. Member did so, and I would certainly not want our listeners, the people of Canada, to get the impression that a climate of suspicion or fear is being entertained by both Houses which would undermine the credibility of these institutions. Especially since—

[English]

The question that the Hon. Member has raised is important and fundamental. I would like to draw your attention to the fact that before we could change anything on the status, role and composition of the Senate, we would have to take into consideration Section 42 of the new Constitution Act of 1982 which states in part:

(b) the powers of the Senate and the method of selecting Senators;

(c) the number of members by which a province is entitled to be represented in the Senate and the residence qualifications of Senators;

This is done in accordance with Section 38 or the amending formula that provides very specifically that before we could change anything there, there should be resolutions of the Senate and the House of Commons and a resolution of the legislative assemblies of at least two-thirds of the provinces that have, in the aggregate, according to the then latest general census, at least 50 per cent of the population of all the provinces.

[Translation]

It is quite clear from the letter and the intent of the Constitution that after patriation, we can no longer alter powers, nature, composition and the manner in which the provinces are represented, unless resolutions are passed by both Houses and at least seven provinces representing 50 per cent of the population of Canada formally signify their approval. Unfortunately, as we saw at the Constitutional Conference on March 8 and 9, the Government of Canada cannot introduce formal proposals for Constitutional amendments, without obtaining the agreement of at least seven provinces.

In the present case, the Hon. Member mentioned various possibilities, including that of not appointing Senators to fill vacant seats. That was the purpose of the question the Hon. Member put on January 18, 1984. Mr. Speaker, I think the Government, and more specifically, the Governor General in Council, would not be acting responsibly if over an undetermined period of time, a substantial number of seats were allowed to become vacant, so that eventually, we might have a situation where more than 50 per cent of the seats in the Senate would remain vacant until the required consensus was achieved to get the agreement of seven provinces representing 50 per cent of the population, so as to proceed with the proposed Constitutional amendments.

Consequently, the point raised by the Hon. Member is important. I agree that various parties and various Canadian minorities must be able to find their way to the Senate. I do not agree that the Hon. Member's proposal will help us succeed in bringing this about, and I think he should devote his energies to persuading the provincial governments, and especially those that belong to his Party, to agree to the formula proposed by the Special Committee last December.

MINES AND MINING—WESTERN CANADIAN COAL PRODUCTION. (B) IMPORTATION OF UNITED STATES COAL

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): On March 13, I asked a question of the Minister of State for Mines (Mr. Rompkey) regarding the sale of western Canada coal to central Canada markets. I would like to outline for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Mines (Mr. Gimaïel) the nature of the campaign initiated by the United Mine Workers and supported by myself and a growing number of municipal jurisdictions.

We have a campaign to promote the Canadian use of western Canadian coal. The Parliamentary Secretary will be aware of the Northeast Coal project, alternatively known as Tumbler Ridge or Quintette coal. This project involved the development of new coal fields in northeastern B.C., at Tumbler Ridge as well as the building of the infrastructure required to move that coal to the port of Prince Rupert. The project was co-sponsored by the federal government and the Government of the Province of British Columbia at a cost of approximately $2.5 billion. The viability of the project was supposedly assured by the signing of long-term contracts with Japanese buyers. The Bennett Government and the federal Government poured money into establishing rail lines, port facilities, and building a town at Tumbler Ridge. The project is now operational but the market for coal has been severely reduced. The Japanese have experienced a decline in their coal requirements and have requested renegotiation of the long-term contracts seeking both price reductions and quantity reductions. The federal Government and the B.C. Government find themselves in a bind. They have invested $2.5 billion in building the northeast coal project and are now being forced in essence through price concessions to subsidize Japanese use of Canadian coal in order to keep the much ballyhooed northeast mega project alive.

Meanwhile, longtime coal producing areas of the country, like the Elk Valley in my riding are experiencing numerous layoffs. Twelve hundred and fifty miners in Sparwood have recently been through a two-week shutdown. Fording coal, owned by Canadian Pacific, recently announced a five-week summer shutdown which will throw 1,348 workers temporarily out of work. At the same time Quintette Mines in northeastern British Columbia is advertising in the St. John's, Newfoundland, Evening Telegram for workers.

As a New Democrat I have no philosophical difficulty with the concept of Government participation in the economic development of this country. I do feel though, that this Government has over-emphasized capital intensive mega projects in its approach to economic development. The counter-productivity of this approach was very much in evidence in this situation when Quintette was built. The banks hold the mortagage. The interest payments have to be made. Quintette will stay in production if only to save the face of the B.C. Government and the Government of my friend, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Mines. This I accept as a political reality, even though it defies all economic good sense.

What I am urging is that the federal Government support southeastern British Columbia coal to the same extent as it has supported the development of northeastern coal. I will provide a suggestion as to a cheap and easy initial step for the federal Government. I propose that a joint federal-provincial task force involving both coal producing and consuming provinces be created to study the use of Canadian coal and specifically to study: (a) the relative direct cost of Canadian and American coal to consumers; (b) difference in transportation costs; (c) direct and indirect costs to the economy of high levels of acid rain; (d) the cost and benefits to the entire Canadian economy of a joint federal and producing province and consuming province funded transportation subsidy to encourage the use of Canadian coal; and further, be it resolved that this task force hold public hearings and issue a public report.

Western Canada produces approximately 40 million tonnes of various types of coal per year, of which approximately 15 million tonnes are exported, 4.5 million tonnes are delivered to central Canadian markets and the remaining 21.5 million tonnes are consumed by the producing western provinces. In 1982, Canada imported into central Canadian markets 16,515,114 tonnes of coal from American suppliers. Of this amount, 4,446,044 tonnes were metallurgical coal and the remaining 12,069,070 were thermal coal. The average price to import this coal was $55.66 per tonne for thermal coal, for a total of $671,764,436, and $70.78 per tonne for metallurgical coal for a total of $314,690,994. The total cost to Canada to import coal in 1982 was nearly $1 billion; $1 billion per year lost to Canada's balance of payments. As matters stand, Canada exports the same amount of coal to other countries as it imports from the United States, thus making Canada nothing more than a brokerage house for American coal.

● (1825)

Mr. Pierre Gimaïel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the comments made by the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker) concerning the coal industry and the role played by the Canadian Government in developing this industry in recent years. I can also easily understand why he wants to uphold the interests of his constituents and to extend the market for Western coal, especially in Canada, and I must say by the way that it is a very high grade of coal having a very low sulphur content which puts it among the less polluting in the world.

In any case, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that the Canadian Government has been actively involved in this industry for several years. When the Government did become involved in the coal industry in Eastern Canada, for instance, on Cape Breton Island, it did so at the request of the Provinces, mainly the producing Province, and also because of its desire to keep this very important energy source fully developed and readily available for all Canadians.

Obviously, as the Hon. Member said earlier, the Canadian Government also became very directly involved in the development of the Western coal industry both in providing export assistance and in the development of new markets. The efforts made by the Canadian Government in Korea and the Far Eastern countries to explore new markets specifically for Western coal are extremely important.

In addition, in spite of the Hon. Member and his party, the Canadian Government provided a new transportation policy for Western Canada last year, after a very animated debate in this House. The party of the Hon. Member is the one which objected most strongly to this new policy which aimed at double-tracking East-West railway lines to increase the traffic in both directions and also at opening new markets for Western Canadian products.

I was glad to hear him say today that Ontario, or Central Canada as it is known in the West, would be a major market for Western Canadian coal. It is true also that traditionally Ontario Hydro bought in the United States at a lower cost the coal it needs and which is more polluting than the Western Canadian variety. It is a fact. It is also true that through its double-tracking policy and the new Crow rate, the Government of Canada last year found a way to change such traditions and to contribute to the industrial development of the West and to the sale of Western Canadian resources to Central Canada, the most populated area of our country. Unfortunately, his party opposed these initiatives and filibustered the bill for several weeks in every way possible, without considering that although transportation costs could be a little bit higher, the economic benefits would be tremendous. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, it should be emphasized that because the Government of Canada did what it had to do, the sales of Western Canadian coal have increased. My last point and the one I want to conclude on is that the Government of Canada sold 17 million tons of coal for which it received $1.23 billion on behalf of Canada and all Canadians. That was 400 tons more than what we had imported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please! The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted.

Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At 6.30 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

POOLS

SPORTS POOL CORPORATION

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Mr. Speaker, I always thought that the Government was one of compromise rather than a Government of arrogance or deceit. Yesterday I asked a question of the Minister concerning the lotteries, and the 1971 agreement by which the provinces are giving the federal Government $35 million without doing anything. All of a sudden the Minister is saying, "You could have made $100 million or $200 million".

There is a French expression which says that it is better to have $35 million in the hand than $100 million in the bush. The Government does not have that. It is spending from $12 million to $15 million to set up a network to get into this new lottery business, and the Minister stands there and says that he does not have time to meet with his counterparts in the provinces, the people whom he could sit down with, and delete some of this expense that he will go into.

I am very disappointed. Not only that, they will lose a baseball franchise in British Columbia. Just wait until those British Columbians get hold of some of you people. Just wait and see.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

FOREIGN SERVICE

TRIBUTE TO AMBASSADOR HECTOR ALLARD

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, every day hundreds of individuals in Canadian embassies, consulates and high commissions are called upon to defend and protect Canada's interests abroad. They have earned an excellent reputation for Canada on every continent. Through their intelligence and sense of duty, the members of our diplomatic community have made a tremendous contribution towards the development of Canada's stature internationally. This reputation, now firmly anchored in our international relations, goes back to the origins of our diplomatic policies.

At this point, I would like to elaborate on the role played by the first Canadian Ambassador to Mexico. Through his efforts, the links between our two countries were further developed during his mandate. He did the same during subsequent postings to Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Haiti and finally Denmark.

This Canadian Ambassador distinguished himself by his patriotism, dedication and national pride. I am happy to announce that he was a Manitoban of métis descent, a great Canadian who served his country loyally and with great dedication until his retirement in 1968. I would therefore ask the House to pay tribute to Ambassador Hector Allard—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired.

METRIC CONVERSION

AMBIGUITY OF SPEED LIMIT SIGNS ON OTTAWA RIVER PARKWAY

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, it has been brought to my attention that a war veteran was jailed in Alberta recently for not understanding speed limits in metric and exceeding the limit.

Shortly after, an Ottawa man won a case he took to court after receiving a $205 speeding ticket and six demerit points while exceeding the limit in miles per hour as controlled by the federal Government on the Western Parkway.

The National Capital Act governs speed limits on federally maintained roads. The sign reads "60". This man probably knew that he was breaking the law in being legally over the speed limit. But because of the ambiguity of the signs, and using that as a loophole in the law to plead his case, he won.

Where is the so-called consistency and standardization assured us by the Government in its weights and measures policy? This is hardly an example of uniformity. Are there two laws in this country, one for a former war veteran who goes to jail under provincial metric law forced on a province by the federal Government, and another for one who, after being caught under its own federal law using imperial, goes free? Where is the just society?

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

STATEMENTS BY MR. McKNIGHT ON COMMITTEE ATTENDANCE BY MINISTER OF TRANSPORT

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, yesterday's Hansard shows that the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight), while posing a question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy), said twice; "The Minister has not spent several hours in the Standing Committee on Transport since he has become Minister."

This kind of statement cannot go unchallenged, especially when the Hon. Member who made such a false statement is on the Transport Committee. He knows that the Minister of Transport has already appeared before the Transport Committee four times—August 23, September 7, February 7, and March 22. He has never refused to come to the Transport Committee when asked.

He also knows that the Minister, as soon as he was appointed to his new portfolio, flew to Quebec City to join the committee when it was holding hearings on Bill C-155. On the same day the Minister held an informal meeting with the members of the Transport Committee, offering his co-operation in solving transportation problems for the good of the country. The Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster should do the honourable thing, and either withdraw his false statements or make a new statement setting the record straight.

INDUSTRY

EXPORT OF LOGS—EFFECT ON PLYWOOD MILL

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, 130 workers from Victoria Plywood face a bleak future since the indefinite closure of the mill last December. In the meantime, the mill owner, Pacific Forest Products, is exporting logs, but plywood workers cannot get details of these exports.

● (1410)

Officials from the Department of External Affairs, which issues the export permits, refused to release this information. They claimed the details of the export permits were confidential, that to release these details would undermine Pacific Forest Products' competitive position. Now they are reviewing the situation.

Canadian workers have to compete with workers throughout the world. One factor that should give them a competitive edge is our forest resource. By exporting unprocessed logs we destroy this edge for our workers. We are exporting jobs.

The Government should be more concerned to protect Canadian jobs than to preserve company profits for companies like Pacific Forest Products.

I call on the Government to take the following steps. First, provide full access to all details of log export permits. Second, take action to prohibit the export of unprocessed logs. Third, develop a Ministry of Forestry which could develop aggressive marketing to expand sales of processed forest products into North Africa—

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

DAMAGE CAUSED BY ACID RAIN—GOVERNMENT'S ATTITUDE

Mrs. Eva Côté (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Minister of the Environment and Ministers from nine European countries made a commitment last week, at an international conference on acid rain, to reduce sulphur emissions above their territories by 30 per cent between now and 1993. They will also reduce the amount of nitrogen but did not specify by what percentage. The House is aware that these two chemicals are the main cause of air pollution.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of all Canadians and especially on behalf of Quebecers, I wish to take this opportunity to congratulate the Canadian Government on hosting this Canada-Europe conference on acid rain. Representatives of the ten countries discussed the urgency of preventing serious damage by acid rain to our natural environment, especially forests and bodies of water.

This first international attempt to reduce air pollution was called a historic moment by the Environment Ministers who met in Ottawa last Tuesday and Wednesday.

Mr. Speaker, once again, I wish to offer my sincere thanks to the Canadian Government for having shown once again its commitment to improving our quality of life.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PURCHASE OF FRENCH BUTTER

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I am deeply concerned, and I am sure all Canadians are concerned as well, to see that the Department of External Affairs has been buying French butter at $10 a pound for one of its so-called posh restaurants in the External Affairs Building. This is indeed a slap in the face to our dairy industry.

To make matters worse, it has been found that this butter was imported illegally into Canada, at a time when butter production in Canada is at an all-time high and has been selling at discount prices in supermarkets in an effort to cut down the surplus.

It is indeed a shocking state of affairs that a Government Department would be party to such an illegal act. It is odious and offensive, to say the least.

Canada produces the best butter in the world, and it is an affront to our dairy producers by those responsible, to have their product downgraded in this manner. The bad publicity engendered by this act will have repercussions on our export markets.

How does this action square with the Government's decree to buy Canadian in its efforts to stimulate our over-all economy? How does this action square with the Government's efforts to maintain employment in the agriculture section which is already hard pressed? Not very well, to say the least, Mr. Speaker. Therefore, I call upon the Government to take immediate action to reprimand those responsible, and to make sure that such an occurrence will never take place again.

THE ADMINISTRATION

TIMING OF VISITS BY HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN AND HIS HOLINESS THE POPE

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of the nation-wide concern caused by the irresponsible remarks of the Secretary of State, will the Prime Minister reassure millions of Canadians that the political aspirations or ambitions of the Liberal Party will not in any way interfere with the visits, as scheduled, of Her Majesty the Queen and His Holiness the Pope for later this year?

• (1415)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that question from another source might not surprise me, but this one does. The Leader of the Opposition has been clamouring for an election. He said we must have an election as soon as possible.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I guess they are getting cold feet over there because we have such a lot of good leadership candidates. I think it is obvious that, unless there is a dissolution before the middle of June, I will be in no position to declare when the election campaign will be. The Leader of the Liberal Party and then, hopefully, the Liberal Prime Minister, will decide when to advise His Excellency about dissolution.

I have a solution, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nystrom: Run again, Pierre.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: If there should be an election during the Queen's visit or the Pope's visit I see no reason why the then Liberal Leader or the Opposition Leader should get involved. There would be two former Prime Ministers, the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead and myself, who could do well in escorting the Queen around.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE VISITS WILL NOT BE CANCELLED

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is quite right when he says that we have been asking for an election as soon as possible, that is, while he was there.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: Now, it gets better and better every day—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: —as one putative successor after another repudiates and contradicts what this distinguished Prime Minister has tried to do for 20 years. That is what is happening in the Liberal Party.

The Prime Minister will acknowledge that his attempt at humour did nothing to dispel the grave concerns of millions of Canadians that the Liberal Party is contemplating using these two very important visits for political advantage. I want his assurance, and I hope he can give it to me, that these visits of Her Majesty the Queen and the Pope will go forward as scheduled, that they will not be abruptly cancelled to serve the partisan ends of the Liberal Party, to the dismay of millions of Canadians. Can he give that assurance right now?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the preamble was not imbued with any more logic than the question itself. If the Hon. Member is also a putative successor to the job of Prime Minister, I do not see why he is distressed that I am being repudiated by other successors, because he has been repudiating my policies for a long while. Certainly a long while ago he wanted to have an election so he would be able to repudiate my policies and actions.

The logic of asking me to give a guarantee of what might happen after my writ has ceased to run some time in June is certainly unconstitutional. How can I possibly decide when there should be an election or not if it is called after I have ceased being Prime Minister? I would like the Leader of the Opposition to think about that.

INQUIRY WHETHER ASSURANCES SOUGHT BY ORGANIZERS OF VISITS

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, can the Prime Minister indicate if he has received requests for such reassurances from the organizers at the Palace or at the Vatican, and from those charged with this responsibility here in Canada? Can he say whether the Government of Canada has received requests for such assurances and, if so, what response has been given?

● (1420)

The ham-handed, insensitive statements of the Secretary of State have caused grave concern and alarm across the country that the Liberal Party is trying to use this for partisan ends. I ask the Prime Minister to repudiate that, along with the Secretary of State.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know of no such representations made to me or to my office, but I will naturally inquire. I am a thousand per cent certain that the Palace would not make such a request of me because their knowledge of the Constitution seems to be better than that of the Leader of the Opposition. They know that a sitting Prime Minister cannot undertake to set a date for an election which might hypothetically be called after he has departed the job of Prime Minister. As far as the Vatican is concerned, I would venture to say they would have the same knowledge of the Constitution. I cannot give the guarantee. If I were asked, I could not answer anything differently to either the Vatican or the Palace, and I am sure they will not ask.

NATIONAL REVENUE

TRAINING OF DEPARTMENT'S AUDITING STAFF

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. The Income Tax Act is arguably the most complex Act that Parliament has passed. One of the main criticisms which the task force has heard from accountants and lawyers is that the auditors for Revenue Canada are ill-equipped to do their job because they have not been properly trained. Indeed, many times they demonstrate their incompetence. I wish to read to the Minister from a letter I received from a senior auditor of Revenue Canada. He told me this:

> The total time allocated for training is hopelessly meagre. It is less than 10 per cent of what the major accounting firms consider necessary to keep their staffs current.

Does the Minister accept the criticism that there is a lack of training in the Department? Does he accept the criticism that there ought to be more chartered accountants to deal with these matters? Does he accept the criticism that the most senior auditors deal with the big firms, and the most inexperienced deal with the small business people? Does the Minister have some concern with respect to those matters?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, in concluding, the Hon. Member asked whether I was concerned about this criticism. Of course I am concerned, very much so. However, I may remind the Hon. Member that one of our primary concerns is to focus special attention on the training given our staff, not only auditors but all personnel in the Department.

[English]

ANSWERS GIVEN TO TELEPHONED INQUIRIES

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that millions of taxpayers are now filing their returns. He also knows that many taxpayers do not have accountants. What they do is telephone their district tax office. One of the legitimate criticisms is that the people answering the phones do not know what they are talking about. They are giving bad advice to the taxpayers. It was reported in The Toronto Star yesterday that 40 per cent of the answers given were proven to be incorrect. Does the Minister understand that the people answering the phones and giving advice to taxpayers are, by and large, incompetent as a result of a lack of training, and what exactly is he going to do about it?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I disagree with the Hon. Member's conclusion that the people answering the telephone are incompetent. I do not think the Hon. Member has his facts straight.

I think he should bear in mind that when questions are asked, the person answering them must know all the facts. It is extremely difficult in most cases, in specific cases or circumstances, to know all the facts.

We are concerned in my Department about this result. In any case, the Hon. Member was able to read the comments of the Director or Supervisor of this particular group. However, I want to give the Hon. Member, the House and Canadian taxpayers the assurance that the group that answers telephone requests is regularly tested by the supervisors. They also analyze the kind of questions they are asked, and regularly improve their ability to answer taxpayers' questions satisfactorily.

FINANCE

HOUSING MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and deals with an issue which is on the minds of tens of thousands of Canadians, and that is the renegotiation of an existing mortgage, or the negotiation of a new mortgage for a first-time home buyer. The people of Canada heard earlier this week that the Mortgage Bankers Association of the United States is now predicting mortgage rates in the 14 per cent to 15 per cent range, and Canadians know that the Minister of Finance feels that Canadian rates must track or be greater than American mortgage rates. If the Minister were to be negotiating a mortgage today, would he take out a mortgage at a floating interest rate, would he negotiate a short-term mortgage, or would he negotiate a very long-term mortgage knowing his own position on this particular topic?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated that the bank rates and prime rates in Canada and the United States must be very, very closely related. As far as mortgage rates and other rates are concerned, the Hon. Member knows that there have been larger differences in those in the past. As a matter of fact, interest rates on consumer loans in Canada were lower than they were in the United States over an extended period of months last year.

There is no guarantee or assurance that higher mortgage rates in the United States will necessarily mean higher mortgage rates in Canada. We will have to see the evolution of the situation. In addition, my friend is asking me at best about the speculation of a particular organization in the United States as to what will happen to mortgage rates. I invite the Hon. Member to show a little patience. He may be disappointed, and things may turn out better than he thinks they will.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is speculative to a certain extent, but it is related to the kind of issue which every Canadian who sits down to negotiate a new mortgage, or renegotiate an existing mortgage, must face these days. It is a real issue facing most Canadian citizens today.

I would like to repeat my question to the Minister since he is responsible for government policy and since people look to him for some guidance about what to expect in the future. If the Minister were to sit down and negotiate or renegotiate a mortgage today, would he negotiate a floating interest rate, a very short-term, or a very long-term mortgage contract? Can he give Canadian citizens some indication of what he would do?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is a well-known rule of the House that speculative questions are out of order. Obviously the answers to such questions would be out of order as well.

EFFECT OF MORTGAGE RATES ON CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Construction Association said today that unstable interest rates will mean a terrible year for the construction industry. This means that it will be a terrible year for those Canadians negotiating a mortgage, for the construction industry, and for the manufacturing industry which serves that critical industry during a recovery. Is the Minister prepared to allow interest rates to be maintained at present levels, or increased, and watch the Canadian construction industry, that portion of the Canadian manufacturing industry that is associated with the construction industry, and Canadian home owners, knocked to their knees as a result of his high interest rate policy?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I shall be happy to answer this question. I had some meetings with the Association of Canadian Industries a few weeks ago and also with the construction industry, and the Hon. Member ought to know that the latest figures on residential construction, particularly in Canada, are very encouraging for the first three months of this year. It seems the rate of construction in 1984 will be higher than it was in 1983.

I would like to draw the attention of my hon. friend to the fact that the construction industry referred to unstable interest rates. There is no reason to believe that the movements of the past few weeks will lead to further substantial movements in interest rates in the weeks and months to come.

As I said before, I am sure my hon. friend would not have seen fit to rejoice and say our problems are solved, if interest rates had gone down by one-half of one per cent. Similarly, an increase of one-half of one per cent should not be a reason for him to declare bankruptcy, go around in sack cloth and ashes and imagine that our economy is going to stop growing—on the contrary! I would invite him to look at the figures for the Gross National Product in January 1983, which indicated for that month an increase of 1.3 per cent, in real terms, which is exceptionally high.

NATIONAL REVENUE

DEPARTMENT'S TREATMENT OF TAXPAYERS—CASES SUBMITTED TO MINISTER

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Three months ago I began sending him documented revenue cases ranging from harassment and discrimination to outright blackmail by his Department. At one time I was in contact with the Minister's office on a daily basis compiling all of these documented cases. I am still waiting for an answer which, after up to three months, is not forthcoming. In fact not one of my requests or letters regarding these cases has been answered by the Minister.

I want to ask the Minister if he can justify not responding for up to three months to these very important cases? Can he justify the dozens and dozens—nearly 100 cases where innocent citizens have been allowed to suffer mentally and financially? Finally, can he justify his Department allowing small businesses to continue to go bankrupt as a result of his inefficiency?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Shortly before Christmas, Mr. Speaker, I asked all district office heads to get in touch with each Member of the House to tell him or her that each district office has a special service staffed by officials whose responsibility is to answer specific questions from Members to whom taxpayers voice their criticisms or send requests for information.

I know that most Members on this side of the House responded positively to the invitation of district office officials and that those Members have been dealing directly with district offices to solve the problems of their constituents.

The Hon. Member would rather take the long way around—he is saying no. If he is lazy, he ought to admit it openly instead of trying to blame others! He is doing it the hard way, but he should understand that we receive hundreds of letters every day which we must forward to district offices for review of specific cases. Under those circumstances, it takes a lot longer to get an answer.

Again I extend the same invitation to him. If he wants to act effectively and assume his responsibilities, let him go to his district office and defend the interests of his constituents instead of shirking his responsibilities by writing letters.

[English]

SEIZURE OF COMPANY'S FILES

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Mr. Speaker, that answer is simply not good enough. Butler Manufacturing Company (Canada) Ltd. is a company which was forced to spend over $60,000 defending a non-action which is directly the responsibility of the Minister. That is why his answer is not good enough. This company was subjected to search and seizure by his Department, over 200 files were taken by force, and then were returned without any penalty. Before they were returned, however, the company had to sign a document agreeing "— that it will undertake no claim, action, demand, or proceeding of any sort against the Minister of National Revenue or his agents, or servants in respect to the search and seizure action".

Can the Minister justify this type of action? Does he not believe that it is extortion? Does he not believe that it is blackmail on the part of the Government? What is he, or the Government, going to do to stop this type of blackmail by this ridiculous Liberal administration?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the second question of the Hon. Member is more irresponsible than his first.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: Never.

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: He knows very well that I cannot comment on specific cases. In all likelihood, he would be the first one to rake me over the coals if I were to do that.

I have just told him that my invitation stands. If indeed he wants to fulfill his duties and prove that the interests of his constituents come first—and that does not seem to be the case—he should stop writing letters and washing his hands off the whole issue, he should go to the district office and explain his concerns and those of his constituents to our officials. He might be surprised to find out that the efficiency of Revenue Canada officials stands out in sharp contrast to his own inefficiency.

[English]

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has been permitted a supplementary at some length, and was allowed to cite from a document. I believe he has had ample opportunity to put his case. The Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone).

AUTHORITY FOR USE OF THIRD PARTY DEMANDS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of National Revenue. Bearing in mind that there has been a wild increase in third party demands, why is it that persons under the age of 30 are showing up in banks with briefcases full of stamped but uncompleted third party demands, asking who has that particular account at that particular bank, and then issuing a third party demand? I should like to know who is the authority when there is simply a stamped signature? Where is the authority for that kind of demand on a person's account?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I have already had an opportunity to explain to the Hon. Member the procedures to be followed by taxpayers who owe money to the Department.

I also told him on several occasions that any taxpayer who receives a notice of assessment from the Department is welcome to explain to us the particular circumstances or personal hardships he is experiencing and that we are prepared to make arrangements with any taxpayer. When the Department has to take more drastic action, it is usually as a result of the taxpayer being grossly negligent in at least making an attempt to come and explain his predicament to the Department.

[English]

OFFICIALS' CONDUCT WHEN FILLING IN THIRD PARTY DEMANDS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister suggests that he has had an opportunity to explain how we should make the approach. He is literally asking every Member of Parliament to plug into this pyramid of Swiss cheese wherever it might be encountered in Canada. We have a Department without ministerial responsibility, Mr. Speaker. Therefore I ask this Minister, who has no point at the top of his pyramid and asks why everybody is plugging in everywhere, and tell us how he can justify someone standing in a bank, in full view of the public, filling in third party demands? In small towns, neighbours can watch who is getting a third party demand.

I can hear the Minister shaking his head. Does he not have any respect at all for the individual citizen's right to privacy? As Minister, will he not take a sensitive approach to make sure that individual Canadians have not only the force of law but the respect of the law?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the Hon. Member and all Canadian taxpayers that we do have a lot of respect for both the law and the taxpayer and that any action we might take is in keeping with utmost fairness and justice for everyone.

REFUGEES

SUICIDE OF CHILEAN APPLICANT FOR REFUGEE STATUS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have a matter that is literally a question of life and death for several people, and therefore I am addressing it to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. As the Minister, his secretary and staff know well, Raul Rivadeneira, who committed suicide the night before last in Toronto, had been arrested, tortured, and mutilated by the fascist Government of Chile. He escaped to Canada in 1980, leaving his wife and infant son in Chile. He immediately applied for refugee status here, and was refused.

Later, in front of the Minister's representative at the Immigration Appeal Board when he was directed to recall his experience of torture, he collapsed in a seizure and required hospitalization. A United Church of Canada representative wrote to the Minister asking that Rivadeneira receive an entry permit on humanitarian and compassionate grounds to save him the pain of reliving the torture. This was refused. Now, just hours before a new hearing—

Mr. Speaker: I invite the Hon. Member to ask his question.

Mr. Heap: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wanted to explain that the suicide occurred within hours of his being required to relive that torture. Will the Minister, for the sake of Rivadeneira's widow and orphan son, now acknowledge that he was indeed a refugee within the meaning of our law, and that he had a genuine, well-founded fear of persecution if he returned to Chile?

• (1440)

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, my department is well aware of the case to which the Hon. Member is referring and of course regrets the decision of this Chilean to take his own life.

I must advise the Hon. Member, however, that following his arrival in Vancouver in 1980, this man was allowed to return to Chile for a short while before applying for refugee status. In short, he had arrived in Canada before 1980 and had later on been allowed to return to Chile. Unfortunately, he became ill before his application was considered, and the same happened to the examining official.

Concerning this man's widow and child who are still living in Chile, I can assure the Hon. Member that we will look into their situation. We certainly regret the unfortunate passing of this man who, not having exhausted all possible recourse, decided to put an end to his life on earth. We will do our utmost to help his widow and child if they meet the criteria of the Immigration Act.

[English]

PLIGHT OF WIDOW AND CHILD

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): I thank the Parliamentary Secretary for his understanding answer, up to a point, and I would ask him whether the regret which is felt by the Department would extend now to the widow and child who have been seeking to enter Canada? They would have been able to enter Canada if Mr. Rivadeneira had been recognized as a refugee. They still wish to be admitted into Canada, and are being persecuted now by the police in Chile.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Based on the evidence on file, we could not definitely conclude that this man, who had been allowed to go back to Chile and then return to Canada, had been tortured in his country of origin. My hon. friend is certainly aware of the fact that the provisions of the Immigration Act which apply to people seeking refugee status do not apply automatically. As I said, I will ask my officials to see what can be done for this man's widow. Yet, I cannot promise him anything, for the legislation is there and must be enforced. There was no way he could have been automatically granted refugee status. The evidence on file did not support his claim that he had been tortured. But, as I said, we will look into the situation of his widow and child.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

NORTHERN TRANSPORTATION COMPANY LIMITED—ANNOUNCEMENT OF INTENTION TO PRIVATIZE

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the distinguished Minister of Transport.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Flis: Recently the Northern Transportation Company Limited, a Crown corporation, appeared before the Transport Committee to answer questions regarding its annual report. A member of the Transport Committee asked the President of the company whether NTCL could now be privatized. Unfortunately, the Transport Committee did not receive an adequate answer, one way or the other. Can the Minister inform the House of the Government's intentions regarding the Northern Transportation Company Limited?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I believe, as most Hon. Members in the Chamber know, the Northern Transportation Company has provided a very valuable service as a Crown corporation for the past 40 years in supplying a number of communities in the Western Arctic and the Keewatin District. However, after a very careful review and discussion with the Board, the Government now feels that the objectives no longer require Crown ownership. Therefore, we will take immediate steps to privatize Northern Transportation Company Limited, and to that end I have directed the board of directors to undertake to contact potential purchasers of the company. At the same time we will be undertaking evaluation of the company to make sure that we receive full value back for the Crown Treasury.

At such time as a decision or a proposal is made, we will be back to Parliament with a specific proposal, Mr. Speaker.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST INQUIRY

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, my question for the Minister of Transport concerns the privatization of the Northern Transportation Company Limited. Could the Minister inform the House whether his initiatives for the privatization of that Crown corporation came about as a result of the investigations done by the United States military into the use of United States military equipment, and the conflicts of interest which have been discussed in the Transport Committee respecting some of the managers, directors, officers and employees of that company?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, once again the Hon. Member is introducing an unnecessary and absolutely irrelevant factor into consideration. The fact of the matter is that the decision was made first on the recommendation of the board of directors, based upon the changed economic circumstances and the various commercial opportunities which could be achieved through a diversification of that company into a number of new areas. It was a conclusion of the Government that we should not be in the business necessarily of diversifying, but it would be in the long-term interest of northerners, particularly of the native people in the North, who could have the first opportunity to buy this company, thereby using a major new entrepreneurial activity to help in their own economic development in the North.

TAX COURT OF CANADA

BACKLOG OF CASES

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice who is the Minister responsible for the Tax Court of Canada. When we hear the litany of bad cases recited by my colleagues, we realize that the only hope for our tax system in Canada is the appeal process. There are now reports of a backlog of thousands of cases, which will delay decisions affecting taxpayers. Will the Minister advise the House exactly how many cases there are pending before the Tax Court of Canada? Reports indicate more than 2,000. And will he tell the House what action he is prepared to take to eliminate this backlog so that justice can be done for these taxpayers who are awaiting court decisions?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, we have already taken action to deal with that backlog. The Hon. Member may recall that last year the House passed amendments to supply the new Tax Court with an additional number of positions which will enable those cases to be dealt with more expeditiously. I might add that the new Chief Judge of that Court has been attempting to organize the business of the Court in such a fashion that the backlog will be cleared up as expeditiously as possible.

I do not have the figures with me today, Mr. Speaker, as to the backlog. It is substantial, as the Hon. Member says. We put the figures before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs last week. The Hon. Member could find them in the records of that committee.

DELAY IN HEARING APPEALS

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, I do have some figures concerning the Tax Court of Canada. There are over 2,100 cases, I am told, by the court officers. There are 735 new tax appeal cases already this year. Now there are reports that it will take at least a year to have a tax appeal case heard, longer in some centres. Would the Minister tell the House whether he thinks that is an appropriate length of time for the hearing of an appeal, bearing in mind that each one of these taxpayers has paid an amount of money in taxes and is waiting for a decision in order to determine whether he or she is entitled to a return of those funds? Surely, even if we cannot do anything about Revenue Canada, we can do something about the Tax Court of Canada, in order to provide justice for our taxpayers.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I will take the Hon. Member's question as a representation that we should add further positions to the Tax Court of Canada. I will promise him to give due consideration to that proposal. I trust we will have the support of his Party if we bring forward such legislation.

CANADA COUNCIL

APPLICATION OF FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT—REQUEST FOR COUNCIL'S EXCLUSION

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. It is now clear to everyone that the Government's new Financial Administration Act will violate the political independence of the Canada Council, indeed, of all federal cultural agencies. That is why, on Monday, the Canada Council, in an historic and significant statement, asked the Government to exclude it from the legislation. Is the Minister willing to take a stand and support the Council in its fight to make sure that its political independence is maintained and that it is not caught by increased political activity on the part of the Government, in connection with its responsibilities?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make it extremely clear that the political independence of the Council is indeed maintained. Obviously, the Council would like to continue in the present state of affairs. However, I believe this Parliament has been besieged from time to time with a number of reports from various responsible people, including parliamentarians, indicating they thought that an increase in accountability of all Crown corporations, of all people who receive funds from parliamentary appropriations, should take place.

The inclusion of the Canada Council and other cultural agencies in the Crown Corporations Act was designed to allow the Hon. Member and other parliamentarians to ask meaningful questions of the Council regarding how it is spending its funds. It is clear to me that in this system there ought not to be any group of people receiving funds from Parliament who are not accountable for the way those funds are spent. The specific exclusions included in the Crown Corporations Act indicate clearly that the Government has no intention whatsoever of being involved in the day-to-day operations of the Council, or of indicating to the Council how its funds should be spent.

However, that does not mean that the Council ought not be accountable to Members of Parliament during the course of the study of appropriations as to how it is spending its money. I believe that will be good for the Council. On the other hand, I can understand that some of the bureaucrats of the Council would like very much to maintain the privileged position that they now have of not having to answer to anyone in the system on how they spend their funds.

Once again, if the Hon. Member refers to the Crown Corporations legislation he will see there is an exemption on substance indicating that the artistic judgment of the Council is to be maintained, that the peer judgment system is to be maintained, and that grants are to be made on the basis of independent peer judgments made by juries appointed by the Council. He will also notice that there is a second exemption included for the Council in that Crown corporations legislation. That is to the effect that any directive to the Council has to be tabled in the House of Commons and referred to the appropriate parliamentary committee before that direction becomes effective. In that sense there are two guarantees of the independence of the Canada Council.

COUNCIL'S INDEPENDENCE

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the reason the Minister is excited about the matter is because he knows he speaks with a forked tongue on it. The reality is that the Canada Council has been fully accountable to this Parliament through that Minister, and has been fully accountable to the Auditor General and therefore does not need this legislating. The Clark Government excluded the Canada Council specifically because it wanted to defend a principle. That principle is that the Canada Council will not have its political independence violated and be subjected to political control and interference by the Government. That is a principle worth defending.

Why, in its hour of need, has the Minister of Communications not been willing to defend the Canada Council, and the cultural agencies of the country against the political activity of this Government?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I suggest the Hon. Member check the record of some of the statements made by Members who sit on his side of the House. The Hon. Member is suggesting that all of the Crown corporations involved in the cultural sector ought not to be accountable for the way they spend their money. I am talking of approximately $1 billion a year in expenditures. They are not accountable now.

Mr. Crombie: They are accountable now. You know it.

Mr. Fox: Second, as I indicated to the hon. gentleman, there are two exemptions—

Mr. Crombie: And they are accountable to the Auditor General.

Mr. Fox: If the Hon. Member does not want me to answer his question, I will not.

Mr. Crombie: Yes I do.

Mr. Fox: If the Hon. Member wants me to answer his question I suggest to him that he read the Crown corporations Bill. I also suggest that he examine the way the Government is handling all of the Crown corporations under its jurisdiction, and compare that to the way the Government proposes to handle the Crown Corporations active in the cultural field. He will see that only in the cultural field have we made two exemptions. One is a substantive exemption on the nature of the judgments that Canada Council and other corporations of that nature have to make. The second is a procedural exemption. Those exemptions do not apply to any other Crown corporation, and that indicates the very strong resolve of the Government to maintain and enhance the independence of the Council and other cultural agencies.

INCOME TAX

EXPENSE DEDUCTIONS FOR VOLUNTEER FIREMEN

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. It concerns the matter of tax deductions for our country's volunteer firemen. Does the Minister know that yesterday this House debated a Private Member's Motion which called for an increase to the inadequate $500 maximum deduction presently allowed volunteer firemen for expenses incurred during the performance of their duties? Is he aware that Members in all Parties gave their enthusiastic endorsement to this Motion?

My question to the Minister is quite straight-forward. Will he consider increasing the present level of tax deductibility allowed volunteer firemen for the costs they incur in the performance of their duties?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, my answer to the first question is yes. To the second, naturally . . . I always consider all questions and all representations made to me concerning any future budget.

[English]

Mr. Lewycky: Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the Minister is heeding this representation.

INCREASE SOUGHT

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister assure the House that in the course of his study he will give the same sort of consideration to any increase in tax deduction applying to all volunteer firemen, whether or not they presently receive a token allowance for services they may have rendered?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have already said that I have knowledge of the discussion in the House. I heard the representations and I will examine them.

TRADE

CAR IMPORT QUOTAS

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. For some time now we have been imposing import quotas on foreign-made cars. Considering the soaring sales and profits of North American companies, and the fact that the quotas will expire at the end of this month, I would like to ask the Minister if he intends to increase import quotas to allay the fears of consumers and perhaps restore the competition which prevailed two years ago and which has all but disappeared because of our import quotas?

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear! Good question.

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I believe that it is very important to protect Canadian workers, but we also want Canadian consumers to be able to buy cars at competitive prices.

[English]

I think the Hon. Member raises a very serious question which requires a very balanced approach. It is important that there continue to be quotas on the importation of Japanese cars until we are able to see what investments they are prepared to make in our country. They now have a very substantial share of the Canadian auto market, at 21 per cent or 22 per cent. At the same time I would view it in a very serious way if the Canadian industry were to take advantage of the limitations on the flow of cars from other sources as a reason for increasing the prices of domestic automobiles unnecessarily. I have no reason to believe they are doing so. However, it is an important question which I will examine carefully.

EMPLOYMENT

REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL FUNDS TO CREATE JOBS FOR YOUTH

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is for the Minister of Finance.

Yesterday, the Minister said that his Budget included a proposal to set aside $1.3 billion for job creation initiatives intended for young Canadians. The Minister is certainly aware that under the Canada Works Program, the budget for summer jobs for students is providing enough funds for only one-third of the projects submitted. In view of that, the Minister will certainly understand the relevance of my question. I would like to ask him whether he intends to double this budget so that at least 66 per cent of the projects submitted may be approved to help young Canadian students.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the Hon. Member's Leader has decided to leave after his short five-minute weekly visit to the House. I would have liked him to hear the question asked by the Hon. Member and my reply.

In any case, I would like to inform the Hon. Member that I have added $150 million to the budget allocated to young people under this program. This will bring up to $1.3 billion the amount set aside to provide assistance to unemployed young Canadians. These funds will be distributed by the Cabinet Committee in charge of social affairs, with particular attention being given of course to the recommendations received from the Minister for Youth and the Minister of Employment and Immigration. As soon as these decisions are made by the Cabinet Committee, I am certain that the Ministers will inform the Hon. Member and the public.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ACTION

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance will admit that it may be somewhat difficult to direct questions to the Minister of Employment in view of his current ambitions. However, I think that the Minister of Finance is familiar with the question I want to ask him today. He certainly knows that the budget available to create jobs for students is definitely inadequate.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is well aware that it is never possible to approve all the applications submitted by those who would like to help to reduce unemployment in Canada.

However, I appreciate his party's and his own belated interest in issues which concern young people considering that the position of the Progressive Conservative Party has always been to cut back on social programs. When they were in power for a short stint in 1980, the first thing they did was to abolish the job creation programs designed to help the unemployed throughout the country, including those intended for unemployed young people. Even today, all we hear them say is that we must reduce our expenditures and the deficit, but at the same time, they rise in the House to ask us to double our funding.

Mr. La Salle: Do you want to do anything about it or not? That is the question.

Mr. Lalonde: I think that the Hon. Member should recommend to his colleagues that they put a stop to their hypocrisy and make up their minds on this issue.

Mr. La Salle: It would be indecent if you were not to do anything!

Mr. Lalonde: Either they seriously want to help the unemployed as we do—

Point of Order—Mr. Olivier

Mr. La Salle: If you do not want to do anything, it is ridiculous then!

Mr. Lalonde: —or else they want to mislead the population as they are trying to do.

PETITION

MR. KRISTIANSEN—NATIONAL FILM BOARD FILM ON ABORTION

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, as the Member of Parliament for Kootenay West it is my duty and privilege to present a petition signed, among others, by some 20 residents of my constituency from the cities of Trail, Rossland and Nelson, British Columbia.

To the Honourable the House of Commons and Parliament assembled, the petition of the undersigned residents of the Provinces of British Columbia and Ontario, who now exercise their right to present a grievance, humbly sheweth that we strongly protest the use of federal funds by a federal agency, The National Film Board, to produce a film which glorifies a citizen's open flaunting of the Canadian law on abortion. The petition further suggests that Dr. Morgentaler should not be receiving federal financial aid to promote his efforts to change laws, illegally. Therefore, the petitioners conclude that the five-part docu-drama entitled "Democracy on Trial" should not be completed or released.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER SECOND READING STAGE OF BILL C-21

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)) moved:

That, in relation to Bill C-21, an Act to provide borrowing authority, one sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of the second reading stage of the Bill; and

That fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for government business on that day, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of that stage shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

He said: Mr. Speaker, as Hon. Members are aware, under the Financial Administration Act, statutory borrowing authority must be obtained by the Government from Parliament. The Bill now before the House seeks new borrowing authority of $29.5 billion. This amount is equivalent to the $25.5 billion financial requirements set out in the recent Budget, plus a non-lapsing contingent amount of $4 billion.

As Hon. Members are also aware, the amount of borrowing authority granted for the last fiscal year was $26.7 billion, an amount equivalent to the financial requirements forecast in the April, 1983 Budget and slightly below the financial requirements forecast in the latest Budget. The borrowing program for 1983-84 was planned to approximate the size of the financial requirements and thereby use up all the borrowing authority granted for the fiscal year. With the fiscal year 1983-84 now drawing to an end, the Government seeks by the Bill now before us to replenish its borrowing authority for the fiscal year 1984-85.

As I said earlier in our debate, the Government, like any responsible borrower in the private sector, must be in a position to conduct its borrowing operations without timing constraints. It is for that reason that we have moved for time allocation on Bill C-21. The full Estimates of the Government have been provided to the House and the debate on the Budget has been completed. Thus, the essential prerequisites for determining the level of borrowing authority, which are the planned sources of revenues and expenditures of the Government, have now been provided in complete detail. The Opposition has been given full information and has had ample time to study this question. Bill C-21 was tabled on February 17. It has been debated for eight days, two more days than the time allotted to the Budget itself.

I should like to underline again the importance to the Government of having unrestricted access to the capital markets so as to take advantage of market opportunities and to minimize debt charges. Given the size of the financial requirements and the relative size of the Government's debt operations in the capital markets, timing can be of critical importance. The level of outstanding Government debt will increase by an average of about $2 billion every month. In addition, previously issued debt is coming due and must be refinanced. Each new issue is carefully tailored to meet the prevailing market conditions and investor demand. Any disruption in the ongoing borrowing program could lead to unnecessary dislocation and erratic pressures in the capital markets. In turn, this could lead to pressures on interest rates, higher debt charges for the taxpayer and higher borrowing costs for individuals and businesses across Canada.

Even a savings of a small fraction of one per cent involves significant dollar amounts. Given the relative importance of public debt charges in total government expenditures, it is the primary goal of the Government to minimize all such charges. This goal can only be achieved if ample borrowing authority is always available so as to ensure that the large borrowing operations of the Government do not interfere with those of other levels of Government or of the private sector. We have a collective responsibility to see that the goal of minimizing public debt charges is vigorously pursued.

Members may want to recall that the first fiscal quarter, the quarter about to begin, is usually a period of particularly heavy seasonal cash requirements because of tax refunds and several other factors. Such a cash drain must be financed by market borrowings.

I should like to refer now, in a general manner, to some of the comments that have been made in the course of our debate on Bill C-21.

Some comment was offered to the effect that the Government has not made any effort to restrain wasteful expenditures of the type described in the Auditor General's report. This is simply untrue. Since 1975 the federal Government has been committed to restraining the trend growth in spending to no more than the trend growth in our GNP. This commitment does not mean that the growth of expenditures must equal the growth in GNP each and every year. During a cyclical downturn in our economy, expenditures would generally be expected to grow faster than the GNP, since a deterioration in our economic conditions would naturally put upward pressure on government expenditures and economic growth would of course be slower. Similarly, the ratio of government expenditures to our GNP would be expected to decline during the recovery phase of the cycle.

The Government has been successful in meeting its expenditure targets. In the 1975-76 fiscal year, total outlays were 23 per cent of our GNP; by 1980-81 they had fallen to 19 per cent. Slower growth in the GNP, the associated upward pressure on spending from low activity levels, rising public debt charges and limited discretionary measures available to the Government resulted in total outlays rising to an estimated 23 per cent of GNP in the current fiscal year. The ratio of total government outlays to our GNP is projected to decline continuously from 1984-85 onward, being reduced to some 21 per cent by 1987-88.

Government deficits are not an indication of fiscal irresponsibility. A rise in the deficit during a period of cyclical weakness in our economy provides an important, even an essential, cushion to the overall level of activity and helps to reduce individual hardship during a recession. Attempting to offset the automatic effects of recession on the Budget balance would simply make a downturn more severe and individual hardship more difficult to sustain. Indeed, it is appropriate for the Government to undertake discretionary measures to reduce taxes and increased expenditures to offer additional support to the level of economic activity during a period of cyclical weakness, a point that has been stressed throughout our recent debate by Members on this side of the House. From 1975 to 1978 the federal deficit rose significantly in order to stimulate our economy; but from 1979 to 1981 there was a steady reduction in our deficit.

Mr. Blenkarn: When we were in power.

Mr. MacLaren: In the absence of the 1981-82 recession, further progress in reducing the deficit would certainly have been made. The fact that the deficit helps stabilize cyclical swings in our economy is consistent with attaining a deficit level in keeping with the long-run needs of our economy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The Chair regrets to interrupt the Hon. Minister, but his allotted time has expired. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, the Minister speaks glowingly about the efforts of this Government at restraint. The House should know that the administration costs of this Minister's Department have increased 75 per cent since the Estimates filed in March, 1981. The administration costs have gone up from $26 million to $44.5 million. That is what this department will spend in the year ending this March.

The Minister speaks glowingly of the Government's projections and how he is going to handle the deficit. I call the attention of the House to a report by Susan Clark, an economist with Richardson Greenshields, in an article filed by Don McGillvray of Southam News which appears in today's paper. Briefly, Susan Clark estimates that the Ministry of Finance has underestimated deficits in the past six years by an average of 21.5 per cent. That is for current deficits. If they hold true, and there is every reason to believe they will hold true, the deficit this year could well be $35.5 billion. Susan Clark goes on to estimate that on previous years, if you go for a two year projection, the Department of Finance undershoots the mark by 55 per cent, which would indicate that the deficit for the year 1985-86 is likely to break $42 billion. So much for restraint. So much for the Department's estimates. So much for the projections and so much for the Department's credibility.

It is a sad day in the House when we cannot come to grips with the problems of the House by negotiation, and closure has to be imposed. For the past two and a half weeks negotiations with the Government have been entered into by this Party and by the New Democratic Party with respect to how this House of Commons can come to grips with the financial problems of the country, the deficit and the borrowing requirements.

The House will know that this Government will cease to exist very shortly after June 16 next. A new Prime Minister will undoubtedly be sworn in well before the end of June, 1984. There will be a new government in place which may go to the country or which may decide to call Parliament back in the fall and present a new budget, a new economic direction and a new policy on handling the affairs of Canada. In any case, the Budget of February 15 has gone by the boards. It is dead, finished. This Government is gone by the boards, dead, finished on June 16. To proceed with this Bill on that basis is wrong. Our negotiations were on that basis and we thought we had some agreement on that basis. We were prepared to give the Government enough money to carry through to November. The Government said it needed enough money to carry through for the full calendar year. That is why the amendment of the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) is before the House.

• (1520)

We were talking about enough money to carry the Government until, say, the first of 1985. But, all of a sudden, negotiations are cut off. No effort is made to trust the House of Commons. No effort is made to come to grips with the deficit, which may be $35.5 billion or may be $42 billion. Who knows where we are going, because there is no control on spending.

Mr. Riis: No accountability.

Mr. Blenkarn: Over this past month we have seen interest rates rise. The Government is prepared to pay 13.6 per cent for 20-year money on its bond issue of April 1, and 12.5 per cent for one-year money.

There is something wrong going on and we as Members of Parliament do not have the right to give a blank cheque. We cannot do that, particularly in view of the fact that this Government will cease to exist come the middle of June. Therefore, it is with sadness that I rise to say that we should not now be talking closure, we should be settling this Bill and getting organized to handle the deficit problem in order to come to grips with economic reality, interest rates and unemployment, the real problems affecting Canadians.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, we should give the Government enough borrowing authority to carry on for perhaps the balance of this year. Then a new Government, whether it be Liberal or Progressive Conservative, will be able to present a new program which gets this country on the road again. But this Government refuses to listen. It refuses to face reality.

If you look at today's Order Paper, Mr. Speaker, you will see that not only does the Government demand $29.55 billion, but there is notice of a supplementary borrowing authority Bill as well.

Mr. Kristiansen: They never get enough.

Mr. Blenkarn: Not only does it want $29.55 billion, and it wants it through closure, but it wants more in a supplementary Bill. Where is the limit to the Government's appetite?

Mr. MacLaren: There is none.

Mr. Blenkarn: The Minister yells across, "There is none". There is no limit to the Government's appetite, to its abuse of Parliament or to the prerogative of the Crown. The Government stamps on the right to object and the right to free speech. It stamps on the rights and privileges of my children and your children. We cannot go on in this fashion. The same thing will happen here as has happened in other countries in the past. Borrowing will get to the point where we cannot pay the interest, as is the case in Argentina, Brazil and Mexico. Then what will happen to the value of our currency as the Government prints and prints and prints money, as it defrauds pensioners, savers and retired people of their savings by counterfeiting and destroying the value of our currency?

Sir, we in this House must be responsible and demand accountability from this Government. We cannot go on any longer with a program of borrowing and borrowing and borrowing, deficit on deficit on deficit, ad infinitum. That is a funny word, is it not? Is that not the word of a certain company with an annual meeting tomorrow? Another loser! Sir, this country has had enough of losers. Let us get on and do something with winners. I say to you that this motion should not pass, this Government should be forced to the negotiating table, and we as parliamentarians must cut back on the deficit and the borrowing powers of this Government.

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat astounded at how the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) can stand up and talk about how the Government must be responsible and at the same time make such an irresponsible speech. He referred to Argentina and Brazil. He talked about how the Government could not continue to borrow until the day we could no longer pay interest. He somehow tried to compare the situation in Canada with that of Brazil. The fact is that he knows that is not true. He knows our situation is vastly different, because we are not borrowing from foreigners; we are borrowing money from Canadian citizens. The interest payments go to Canadian citizens and they stay in our economy. That is the fundamental difference which he chooses to ignore.

He also referred to the Budget of February 15. He said that on the day after the Liberal leadership convention that Budget will be gone by the board, it will be "dead" to use his words. Of course, he ignores the fact this Budget is built upon the Budget of April, 1983. He ignores the fact that the economy continues on a day-to-day basis, that people continue to spend money. He ignores the fact that this Government has incorporated in a series of budgets a number of progressive measures and investments which are going to benefit Canadians for years and years to come. He forgets programs such as that of the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board, the Industry and Labour Adjustment Program, and the special recovery projects which were introduced in the Budget of last April. These policies are designed—

Mr. Hawkes: To re-elect Liberals.

Mr. Berger: —to invest in Canadian infrastructure and industries of the future, in order to ensure the prosperity of Canadians for years to come. I suggest to the Hon. Member for Mississauga South that our economy, thanks to efforts made by successive Liberal Governments, is adapting to international competition much better than the American economy, which he holds up as such a great example.

Our country, Mr. Speaker, as you are probably aware, has known for the last couple of years a series of record trade surpluses. The United States has recorded substantial trade deficits. Why is that? Even though their economy is expanding fairly rapidly, it is probably due to the fact that a phenomenal portion of their expenditures is on the domestic armaments industry. It does little to add to the international competitiveness of their economy. We in Canada do not have a commitment to arms expenditures which resembles anything like the American commitment. We have chosen to spend money in a manner which I and many Canadians consider to be much more socially productive and which will improve the long-run competitiveness of the Canadian economy.

I suggest that the Hon. Member read an article which appeared in the May 11, 1982 edition of The New York Times. The article written by Robert Heilbroner is entitled "Deficits and Deficits". He was responding to the idea that a constitutional amendment be adopted in the United States to enforce a balanced federal budget. He suggested that those who advocated such a proposal might also consider making it unconstitutional for businesses to spend more money than they take in.

Mr. Heilbroner points out that if there were a prohibition on so-called business deficits, it would bring an end to much economic expansion. Corporate borrowing and spending is not called a deficit; it is usually called a business investment. If it is advisable for businesses to borrow money and invest in the future of a company, why is not the same true of government? What is wrong with a government borrowing money to invest in the present and the future of the Canadian economy and the Canadian people?

As the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren) pointed out, in the recent downturn it was only normal that expenditures of government rise, such as social expenditures, unemployment insurance payments, manpower training and so forth. What would the result be if we cut out those expenditures? Is the Hon. Member suggesting that we remove the safety net, allow people to starve in the streets, do not invest in the future of our people and do not provide Canadians with resources to build their country?

In conclusion I wish to refer to a couple of fundamental aspects of this Bill. As the Minister indicated in his speech on March 7, the Government seeks new borrowing authority of $29.5 billion; $25.5 billion for the financial requirements set out in the current Budget, plus a non-lapsing contingency amount of some $4 billion. I point out to the Hon. Member for Mississauga South that the financial requirement is $1.5 billion less than the estimated requirements for the current fiscal year. This is a substantial decline over the current year. It represents an acceleration in the growth of budgetary revenues and slower growth in expenditures. It reflects the recovery that occurred in 1983.

The contingency has two purposes. One is to accommodate the impact of large unpredictable foreign exchange operations on our financial requirements, and the second is to ensure that Government can continue its regular debt program if the House is not in session or, if it has been dissolved, the Government must be able to borrow without time constraints. It must be able to take advantage of market opportunities so as to minimize overall debt charges. To do otherwise, to follow the course suggested by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, certainly would be irresponsible.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis).

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, thank you for giving me the opportunity—

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It does not reflect in any way on my colleague. However, it has been the tradition that we alternate political Parties when responding to a motion on time allocation. Traditionally the Chair has not only recognized Members on the Government side and the Opposition. I am curious to know whether that tradition has now been broken.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The House being in debate on a new motion, with all due respect to the Hon. Member for Simcoe North, possibly he would wait for a while and the Chair could recognize the Member from the other Party so as to have a first round of speakers from each Party. Is that agreeable?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am in agreement with the suggestion that we carry out the tradition of the House.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the procedure you are outlining in terms of the first round, but I want to be sure that our right of having more speakers in this debate than the New Democratic Party is protected, that we are entitled to representation that is roughly equivalent to our proportion in the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Chair will see that the right of the Official Opposition is protected.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for recognizing again that we have a tradition in this House that has been in place for many years. That tradition is that in the first round of speakers, each political Party has a representative to state its point of view. I thank the Hon. Member for enabling this to occur.

I speak today with a heavy heart. We have indeed spent a number of days on Bill C-21, an Act to authorize the borrowing of $29.55 billion. Recognizing that that figure includes $4 billion of a non-lapsing contingency fund, I suggest to the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren) that by debating such a large borrowing Bill, the largest in Canadian history, spending a few days discussing the merits of the Government's programs and hearing suggestions from Members opposite is a wise use of Parliament's time.

I have sat here for eight days listening to my colleagues suggesting countless examples of how Government spending has been questionable, inappropriate and misallocated. Time and again I heard my colleagues suggest what the Government ought to be considering in terms of getting our economy back on track. Suggestions were made for kick-starting our recovery back to life, how to improve the forest industry, how to improve construction opportunities, what to do about the failing fisheries industry, how to assist agriculture, and how to provide assistance to small and medium-sized businesses in this country. One could go on and on.

The last number of days in which we have reflected on Bill C-21 have been very useful. When I look down the long list of suggestions and proposals put forward by Hon. Members, I believe that eight days on a borrowing Bill of nearly $30 billion is not an unwise use of the time of this House. I remind the Minister of State for Finance, who is responsible for this Bill, that when you peel away all of the rhetoric around this question, you find that there are basically two reasons why we have a federal Government. The first is to collect taxes through a system that is fair and in a manner that is equitable. The second is to take those taxes which have been collected in a fair and equitable manner and expend them in a wise way. This will result in an improvement in the economic stability of the country and an improvement in the lot of the average Canadian citizen. By and large, Mr. Speaker, I believe that that is the role of the Government.

Just the other day, it was brought to the attention of Hon. Members that Wood Gundy, a very reputable firm, sent out a letter to its clients and prospective clients suggesting that if one's income was at least $40,080 a year, Wood Gundy could arrange one's financial affairs so that one would pay no income tax at all. In other words, Wood Gundy was saying that it could take advantage of the 200 and some loopholes provided in the Canadian tax system and arrange one's finances so that one would have to pay no income tax at all. Of course, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has brought forward a number of budgets in the past session as well as in the present one which include a handful of tax concessions or, as I like to call them, tax loopholes for select groups of Canadian citizens. I believe that you would have to look long and hard, Mr. Speaker, to see how Canada is advantaged by these tax loopholes.

The other day in Toronto, the President of the Bank of Montreal, Mr. Mulholland, made the case that the corporate sector of Canada is awash in tax concessions. In other words, one of the chief executive officers of Canada's banking establishment is saying that we cannot take any more tax concessions from the people of Canada simply because we cannot invest them as wisely as we should.

I have talked about the collection of taxes, which brings me to the question of how these tax moneys are expended. Are they always expended in a wise way? Are they always expended by a Government that has thought through the implications of government expenditures? When looking at the track record of this particular administration, there is absolutely no way that one could make the case that a great deal of thought has gone into the expenditures we are asked to approve on a regular basis. I will use two or three examples of that that have been brought to our attention as of late, Mr. Speaker.

The other day we were debating the decision of the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Smith) to expend a number of dollars south of the border in order to attract Americans to visit Canada on holidays. It seems to be an honourable goal to spend millions of taxpayers' dollars to attract visitors to Canada so that our hospitality and tourist industry could be stimulated. On the other hand, we have just found out that, as a result of other legislation, the Government has increased through the tax system the cost of gasoline in the country. When American visitors drive their vehicles into Canada, the avenue of transportation which most would pursue, they find that their travel costs are significantly greater than at home. This would certainly act as a retardant to visiting Canada. As well, taxes are levied on such commodities as alcohol. When someone from the United States come to Canada and wants to have a glass of wine with his dinner or a small cocktail before or after his dinner, he finds that the costs are significantly higher in Canada than they are in the United States.

There is an absence of any overall conceptual planning for the hospitality and tourist industry of Canada. Provincial governments are acting independently and in many cases are imposing room taxes and additional food taxes on our visitors. At first glance, those food taxes may appear to be fair and equitable but, like most taxes, they are not. I refer to the 7 per cent tax on food in the Province of British Columbia, which tends to tax family-oriented restaurants most heavily. In small eating establishments, people must pay a 7 per cent provincial tax on any bill over $7. It does not apply to the Wendy's or McDonald's chains. In other words, the national or international fast-food chains do not pay the 7 per cent food tax.

Mr. Blenkarn: Don't you know the tax in Ontario applies to hamburgers?

Mr. Riis: I am talking about the tax in British Columbia at the moment. The point I am making, Mr. Speaker, is that even a tax that has been instituted by the Province of British Columbia works against the development of a strong and vibrant tourist industry.

In summary, I say that our taxes are being collected unfairly. The tax system is inequitable and is biased in favour of the large corporate sector at the expense of the small and medium-sized businesses. Our tax system is biased in favour of the upper income earner at the expense of the average and low income earners of Canada. There is no rhyme or reason to the expenditures of the Government. There is very little if any planning being done. There is very little strategic thinking about how we can best invest the taxpayers' money to ensure economic returns in the future.

The Government comes before Parliament and asks for authority to borrow $29.55 billion and hears countless hours of suggestions, which the Government simply ignores. It simply turns a deaf ear on the dozens and dozens of positive, creative and innovative suggestions of Hon. Members. The Government is then forced, in its arrogance, to bring in something called time allocation, a fancy term for closure, to muzzle parliamentarians, to close off debate and to close off any further discussion and analysis of the collection and expenditure of $29.55 billion.

We on this side of the House tried to negotiate an arrangement to allow relatively rapid passage of this borrowing request. We tried our best to ask the Government to borrow a certain amount of money until the end of this calendar year. The New Democratic Party put forward an amendment which in effect said to the Government: "Take what money you require up until the end of the year and we will debate the request for any other funds in 1985 as warranted by expenditures and planning." We tried to facilitate the movement of this particular Bill through the House. We tried to make an arrangement that was satisfactory to both sides, but we failed in that endeavour and the Government simply went blithely ahead with its original plan and indicated that it is not interested in hearing the voices of parliamentarians opposite or on its own benches. That is something that we feel very strongly should not have occurred, and for that reason, we will be voting against this motion at the first opportunity.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I have enjoyed this debate on Bill C-21, the borrowing authority Bill, which has lasted for several days. At various times I have been more than moderately amused by some of the comments made by Members opposite. I like hearing the ranting and railing about too much government spending and large deficits. I have heard a lot of rhetoric, Sir, and I have seen a lot of posturing. However, it is interesting that what Members opposite do not say is so very revealing.

Members opposite do not say where significant cuts could be made in the Government's overall spending program which amounts to some $94 billion. The critic for the New Democratic Party spoke about suggestions that have been made in the House. We receive suggestions every day about how we as a Government could spend more money. Rarely do Members of Parliament tell us specifically where we could cut spending in very significant ways. I like the company of Members of Parliament, but the conversations that go on in that company are never about cuts but are, rather, about how the Government can do more. How often do we talk about where taxes could be increased and who will be hit hard? Very rarely. However, we are all in favour of tax decreases.

The critic for the New Democratic Party spoke about closing tax loopholes. We would not have to worry about that if we simply used the income tax system as it now exists and obliged Canadians who legitimately owe taxes to pay those taxes. However, if we do that we get a huge howl from opposition Members. They howl that Revenue Canada is somehow undermining democracy by collecting the taxes that are authorized by the House.

The Opposition says that we have too much spending and deficits which are too large. But where should we cut, Mr. Speaker? Where will the additional money come from? There is a great servant of this House, one whom every Member of Parliament respects, and that is the Auditor General. If we were to take all of his suggestions and carry them out carefully, using a scalpel with the skill of a surgeon rather than using a chopping axe as has been done in some parts of the country, notably British Columbia in its recent budget, and if we were very, very skillful, we would still have to borrow money, perhaps not $29.5 billion, perhaps only $29 billion but we would still have to borrow money. We must borrow because there are some very big needs in the country and they must be met. That is the legitimate reason for borrowing money.

The needs I refer to, Mr. Speaker, are health care, the unemployed, job creation, pensions, economic development, defence, and Indian affairs and northern development. These are expenditures that must be met, but today the revenues coming to the Government of Canada are less than they would be in a booming economy. There has been a recession and only now are we moving into a period of recovery. During that recovery we cannot forget those in our society who have needs.

Where could we get more revenue? Certainly not from the working poor or from the middle class who have been eloquently defended here in recent days. The New Democratic Party would say that we should go after companies and corporations, but not many of them are making huge profits these days. Sometimes we are told that we could collect deferred taxes, but that might result in plant closings, a reduction in research and development or less exploration. Tax increases are not "in". To help the recovery we should probably have more tax decreases than are now allowed by law in accord with the increase in the rate of inflation, a 5 or 6 per cent decrease in taxes this year.

Some Hon. Members have put forward the idea that governments should be run like any Canadian household. I look at a lot of households, Mr. Speaker, and find that they borrow. If a new house is needed, they go out and get a mortgage. If they need a new automobile—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): They pay it back.

Mr. Penner: The Hon. Member says that they pay it back. That is the kind of empty statement that Hon. Members opposite toss out. When has my hon. friend bought a government bond or any other financial instrument that he has not paid back? They are always paid back. If someone needs an automobile he can get a personal loan. If there is a student in the family going to university or college who needs money for tuition fees, money for books or living away from home, it is not uncommon for the family to borrow. People borrow on the basis of need. I could tell my hon. friends that there are needs in our society and that the role of government is to respond to those needs.

Unemployment insurance is one need that is costing the Government a great deal. Do my friends opposite still argue against unemployment insurance? I remember the 1972 election campaign waged by the Conservative Party which wanted to beat the Liberals on the basis of the new unemployment insurance plan. Do they still talk of doing away with unemployment insurance? Do they put that forward as a way to cut government expenditures? If they do, they should say so. I have heard Hon. Members opposite ridicule government job-creation programs that are giving thousands of Canadians an opportunity to do something useful in their communities. If we do not want to allow the Government to borrow, if we do not want an increase in taxes, then we should obviously cut expenditures.

I have listened carefully for suggestions from the Opposition for major cuts. I have waited for the Opposition to put forward its program for the next election. I have heard the word "more". I heard that opposition Members would spend much more on national defence, I have heard that they would spend much more on research and development; I have heard that they would give more to the provinces for post-secondary education, that under the new health care Act the provinces should get more money for health care. I have heard them say they would like to do away with Canada's aerospace industry.

At the moment we know and everybody knows that it is necessary for the Government to borrow because there can be no significant cuts. Although my friends opposite rail about government spending, they know there can be no cuts in Old Age Security, the child tax credit, unemployment insurance or job-creation programs.

From whom do we borrow, Mr. Speaker? Some may think that we go offshore to borrow large sums of money. We know that is not true. Only a small amount of money is borrowed offshore; most of it is borrowed from Canadians who have large amounts of savings. The Government borrows these savings and uses them for growth and development and the humanization of our society. I find it difficult to believe that if Hon. Members opposite were in government they would not want to continue with most of this and would come asking us for the right to borrow money.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to enter this debate. When I was asked to stand down in favour of my colleague in the New Democratic Party, I did it in favour of history. Years from now, when people ask me what the New Democratic Party stood for in Parliament, I want to be able to say that in its last year, 1984, I assisted it in participating in the proceedings in the House.

I should say that I am sorry to participate in this closure debate. No one likes closure. I want to refer to some of the speeches that have been made, however, particularly that of the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner).

Like many Members on this side of the House, I was shocked to hear the Hon. Member come down squarely in defence of the collection practices of the Department of National Revenue. When he goes back to his riding I think he will find that the people there are not very impressed with his defence of the auditing and collection techniques of the Department of National Revenue.

There certainly are big needs in the country, Mr. Speaker—the need of Maislin Transport for $34 million, or the big need to rent the Centennial Tower so that we can lease three out of fifteen floors. That is the kind of need the Liberal Party has developed over the years.

I do not want to say that the previous speaker lied when he said that this party was in favour of doing away with the aircraft industry, because that would be unparliamentary; I would only say that he has come as close to the truth as one can without actually lying.

Let us get down to real facts now, Mr. Speaker, and why the Liberal Party wants closure. Why did it bring in closure on this Bill? I think there are two or three reasons for that. The first is that the Liberal Party is feeling the heat throughout the country because of its mismanagement of the economy. There is increasing unemployment in Canada. Someone had the nerve to refer to the problems of the U.S. economy. One of its problems is that it has only 7.8 per cent unemployment; we have an 11.3 per cent unemployment rate. We keep bringing this to the attention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), who obviously has no answers, so the Government decided to cut debate. But closure is the problem of the Liberal Party.

Let us deal with the specifics, the leadership campaign. Five out of the six candidates for the leadership of the Liberal Party were directly involved in the creation of the deficit, to pay for which we must borrow. Those are the people going out across the country explaining to Canadians how different it is going to be if they are only chosen in the next election. This debate on the borrowing of more money is of supreme embarrassment to those leadership candidates. It is no wonder they want closure enforced so the debate can come off the floor of the House of Commons.

Let us talk about the other candidate, the one out of the six who is not a Member of Parliament, that colleague of the Members opposite who quit and went back to practise law on Bay Street at $300,000 a year. Let us talk about that candidate who is now going to come back and save the country by running for the leadership of the Liberal Party. It is that candidate, Mr. Speaker, who started the trend of deficit in the first place. He also wants closure on this Bill. He wants it out of the House of Commons.

I did not have an opportunity to speak in the original debate because closure was brought forward. I am pleased to have this opportunity now to speak to just exactly what the Government is doing. It is trying to borrow some $29 billion to fund runaway spending.

The Bill contains a contingency fund which is far more than it needs. What bothers us on this side, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that when deficits are projected, they never seem to be able to get the figure right. The projected deficits are always increased when it comes down to the final facts. The government never seems to be able to come under the projected deficit. It is always over. Spending in 1984-1985 will be up a further 9 per cent. Here is a government, Mr. Speaker, with a large deficit already, which cannot seem to come to grips with the economic realities of today. Therefore, the only solution it has to the problem is to borrow, borrow, borrow.

What is going to happen? What will the results be from what the Government is doing? What are the costs to the Canadian people? I was amused when the Minister introduced the closure motion and talked about the goal of the Government to minimize interest charges. We all remember, Mr. Speaker, in the fall of 1981, how it minimized interest charges by bringing in a Liberal interest rate of 19.5 per cent for Canada savings bonds. That was part of the Liberal high interest rate policy which carried on through 1980, 1981, 1982 and 1983. That policy was responsible for record high bankruptcies, record high foreclosures, record high powers of sale, and record high farm bankruptcies. That was the result of the Government's policy.

What are the costs? The Canadian people have the cost of paying the interest on this ever growing burden. It is our estimate, Mr. Speaker, that servicing the debt in 1984-1985 will cost an estimated $20 billion. That is $800 for every man, woman and child in Canada. It is $1900 per taxpayer. Interest on the national debt will be 4.7 per cent of the Gross National Product of Canada.

What is the second cost to Canada? It is the loss of fiscal flexibility. I was also amused when one of the previous speakers talked about the importance of the Government having access to financial markets. No government could possibly go to financial markets as often as this one. In fact, in 1968-1969, $1 in every $9 raised by the Government was needed to service debt. Today, $1 in every $3 is used by the Government to service debt. Now when the Government goes to these markets it talks about, what does that do to the money market? Well, it is quite clear what it does. It crowds out the other borrowers. It crowds out businesses which do not want to throw money away like this Government but want to create jobs, and it raises their costs of doing business. That is one of the economic costs we find from the practices of the Government. Further more, if those people cannot get the money in the money markets in Canada, they are forced to go out of the country to borrow. That means they are going to pay higher interest rates.

The last cost, Mr. Speaker, is perhaps the cost we should be most concerned about, that is, the lack of confidence which the continual borrowing brings about in the minds of the Canadian people and in the minds of the international markets which watch us. I believe that is the cost we are all paying right now.

I regret that my time is cut short. I appreciate that that is a rule of parliamentary procedure. It is very unfortunate that the Liberal Party is cutting off debate on this Bill and, naturally, our Party will be voting against the motion to cut debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Alain Garant (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I take great pleasure in addressing the House on one of the most important Bills it is now considering—the Borrowing Authority Act.

Mr. Speaker, we must realize the vital implications of this Bill for all Canadian citizens, wherever they may be. Needless to say, Hon. Members have commented at length on the size of the deficit, and Opposition attacks in this respect have not been lacking. However, I think it is time to look at the facts.

The Canadian people will realize that in the middle of the recession we have just experienced, this Government acted responsibly. No Mr. Speaker, it was not easy, during the recession, to reconcile social and economic considerations. However, our Government managed to maintain our achievements in two areas that are so essential to the well-being of Canadians.

The problem was how to help those who were most severely affected by the economic recession, while injecting the necessary funds to sustain levels of economic activity, lessen the impact of the recession and thus create much-needed jobs. Mr. Speaker, we chose to pursue our humanitarian policies, although it would have been very easy to shirk our social responsibilities.

The better times we are experiencing today are proof that we did the right thing. The economy is improving regularly, and the Government is continuing to introduce economic policies aimed at bringing down inflation, increasing employment, cutting Government expenditures, thus reducing the deficit but doing so in an orderly and responsible manner.

How can the Opposition maintain its arguments, which do not hold up under closer analysis? How can they claim the Canadian Government is spending rashly when it has been proven, and the figures are there, that half of the increase in the deficit recorded since 1981 is directly due to the impact of the recession on public revenues and expenditures, and especially unemployment insurance benefits.

A substantial portion of the remaining increase in the deficit is due to increased public debt charges. Thus, only a relatively small proportion of the expected rise in the deficit is due to official and discretionary measures taken by the Government.

● (1610)

Mr. Speaker, this Government has decided to accept a relative increase in the deficit in order to support economic activity in periods of cyclical weakness, because it realize that continued recovery will automatically bring about an orderly reduction in the deficit, as could already be seen in the last Budget brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde).

Mr. Speaker, on what basis are Opposition Members claiming that the level of the federal deficit demonstrates this Government's inability to control its expenditures? They should look at the facts.

Since 1975, the federal Government has been committed to keeping the trend growth of Government expenditures within the trend growth of the GNP. However, this commitment does not mean that every year the Government must intervene to the same extent. During the downward phase of a cycle, it is reassuring to be able to rely on greater support by the Government, while during the upward phase, the Government can and must withdraw gradually in favour of the private sector. That is exactly what this Government intends to do, and what has helped it to achieve its spending objectives.

During the 1975-76 fiscal year, total Government spending was 22.9 per cent of GNP; in 1980-81, it had dropped to 19.1 per cent of GNP. During the present fiscal year, because of a general slow-down in all western economies, the Canadian Government's spending should be allowed to rise to 21.6 per cent of the GNP trend, a level that is still substantially lower than that for 1975-76. It is expected that this percentage will keep on dropping until 1987-88.

Mr. Speaker, how can Opposition Members possibly conclude that the Government has been inconsistent in financial matters? I repeat, they should look at the facts. In times of cyclical weakness, an increase in the deficit substantially alleviates the impact of a general drop in economic activity and ensures that the problems facing individuals during a recession are not excessive. Any attempt to nullify the automatic impact of the recession on the Budget balance would merely aggravate the recession itself.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. I am told that apparently, the Hon. Member is reading a prepared text, which is not customary in the House. The Hon. Member may occasionally consult notes or he may quote from a document, provided he indicates his source, but he may not read a prepared text.

Mr. Garant: Mr. Speaker, during an economic slow-down, it is up to the Government to take discretionary measures to reduce taxes and increase expenditures in order to sustain the level of economic activity. Between 1975 and 1978, the federal deficit was substantially increased in order to stimulate the economy. From 1979 to 1981, however, there was a continuous drop in the deficit. If there had not been a recession in 1982, Mr. Speaker, the deficit would have continued to drop.

The fact that the deficit contributes to cushion the cyclical fluctuations of the economy does not fly in the face of our efforts to achieve a deficit whose trend goes a long way indeed towards meeting long-term economic requirements. And that, Mr. Speaker, is what the short-sighted views of Members opposite prevent them from understanding.

And to top it off, they argue that the deficit of the Canadian Government fuels inflation and leads to soaring interest rates. Here again the facts belie those statements. Mr. Speaker, the evolution of the situation since 1981 shows that there is no direct relation between deficits and inflation, nor between deficits and interest rates. As a matter of fact, the recent increase in the federal deficit came at the same time as a considerable decline in inflation. Besides, despite the higher federal deficit, interest rates are still a long way from the pre-recession peaks.

Mr. Speaker, all that goes to prove that deficits can be an effective and appropriate economic budget management tool when business slows down. As to the suggestions made by the Opposition, I must admit quite frankly that I have been unable to reconcile them. How can they say that they are really intent on reducing the deficit even more, when the few concrete suggestions they made this past year would see a reduction in Government revenues or an increase in public expenditures—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The time allotted to the Hon. Member has expired. The Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell).

[English]

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to check the number of times I have spoken on closure in the last five years. Closure is the mechanism put in place by the Liberal Party to shut us up. It is a disgrace to Parliament. It is a disgrace to my constituents and to Canadian citizens at large. It has been overused and must be stopped.

We listened to a speech by a government Member just now. Regrettably I must tell you that the statistics he was quoting are totally inaccurate. I do not know whether he has ever been to a finance meeting. I do not know whether he has ever read statistics. However, there was no accuracy. As an example, he stated that in 1978 they had to increase the percentage of deficit. In 1978 the deficit actually decreased from the previous. I do not know where he got his figures, Mr. Speaker, but they are out of line.

We are debating borrowing authority and being clamped down on it. March 31 comes this weekend. On March 31, prior to the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his gang taking over, the total deficit of the country was $18 billion. One year from this weekend the national debt will be 10 times that amount. It will be $180 billion plus. This country is in bankruptcy, Mr. Speaker. The Government is bankrupt of ideas. It is providing nothing to improve the private sector.

The Member who spoke previously also stated that it is up to the private sector to bring us back. Ninety-two per cent of our personal savings go to fund the Government. That leaves 8 per cent. How can the private sector compete at reasonable costs?

• (1620)

It is ridiculous to invoke closure on this Bill which concerns such an important subject. It will affect every child in this country and his or her children for generations to come. I have five children. My grandchildren will have to face up to this debt some day, and they will not be proud of what the Government of Canada has done to them.

The Government tells us that the deficit and its borrowing requirements are not so bad. I would point out that the Government's borrowings and its debt is very serious. The United States has a deficit of 4.7 per cent of its GNP, while our deficit is 6.9 per cent of GNP and rising. It is rising because the economy is declining.

The Government will not generate the revenue that it has anticipated. Furthermore, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has already initiated a supplementary borrowing Bill when we have not even finished with this Bill. He realizes that he did not tell the Canadian public the truth six weeks ago when he said that the deficit would be down. When he was in committee last week he did not deny that he would have trouble getting the deficit down. But we are faced with a higher deficit in the coming year than we have faced in the past. That is why we are objecting to the Bill. The Government will not tell us all of its intentions for this money or tell us about all the gimmicks it has up its sleeve. It is playing games with the Canadian public, who are getting sick and tired of it.

Mr. Chénier: Wait until the next election. You will be out of here.

Mr. Fennell: I will not be out of here. I am sure that a lot of your colleagues will be out of here.

The Canadian public only has to realize that in 1968 we spent 17.4 per cent of our GNP and last year we spent 25.3 per cent. I will wager that it will go up to 26 per cent next year. The Government is sending us downhill on a rapid slide. Wonderland in Toronto has nothing compared to the slide into the drain upon which the Government is putting us.

The Government has been unfair and untruthful to the Canadian public. Let me illustrate this by quoting some statements made by the Government. One of the best quotes is from the Minister of Finance, who said, "Deficit spending is good for economic growth". The Government has spent throughout the 1970s when we were in good times, but that did not do us any good when the crunch came in the 1980s. The Government's actions have been damaging to the country. It states that there is a deficit because of the positive initiatives of the Liberals. One of the most important factors in the present circumstances is economic mismanagement. The Government does not know where the money is coming from and does not know where it is going. It also said that there is nothing wrong with having a large national debt. It will be the generations of the future which will realize the damage.

History has shown that any country that has experienced a high deficit such as this has had to resort to printing money. That is the only solution for that bankrupt bunch across the way.

The Government keeps telling us that there is nothing wrong with a short-term deficit. A deficit from 1968 to 1984 that has risen by $162 billion is not a short-term deficit; it is long-term spending.

Another rather amusing quote from the Government is, "Over the next few years the deficit will fall dramatically". And this quote particularly strikes me, "Relative to other nations, our deficit is not out of line". Based on GNP, the United States will have a deficit of $1.25 trillion. If the deficit in the United States were at the same level as that of Canada, it would be $2.5 trillion.

When we compare our debt to that of the United States, it shows that we are in trouble. Yet the Government is putting the clamp on us and saying that we cannot discuss this Bill any longer. According to the Budget, the Government does not need the funds that it is requesting. It has between $4 billion and $8 billion in the bank. While it asks for $29.5 billion, we are told it will spend only $29 billion. There is something dishonest about the way the Government is dealing with this country and Members of the House.

Mr. Chénier: You can't count.

Mr. Fennell: I hear the yelling from the other side. I understand that.

Mr. Chénier: Nobody is yelling.

Mr. Fennell: They are nervous about the fact we are giving statistics that will hurt those Members. The interest burden which we are forced to carry is now 20 per cent of our total expenditures. This burden has removed any fiscal flexibility that we might have.

There have been no new plans to get the engine growth moving again. There has been nothing. The Government has put us on a downhill slide.

Mr. Chénier: You are repeating yourself.

Mr. Fennell: I will repeat myself many times in order to get the point across that what you have done to this country is serious. Besides its spending program, one of the major costs the Government is placing on the country is a lack of confidence in Canada. We have totally lost the confidence of the rest of the world. Our productivity is at an all time low. While the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Lumley) has worked hard to increase productivity, it cannot be done overnight. The Government is spending the same amount on research and development as it did in 1968, whereas Japan has increased its expenditure threefold.

I appreciated the opportunity to speak to this Bill, but I am very annoyed about having to speak to closure. It should not be permitted in the House, and I hope that this is the last time I am faced with closure in the House.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Cousineau) on a point of order.

Mr. Cousineau: Mr. Speaker, I just want to set the record straight. The Hon. Member spoke about closure, whereas, in fact, the motion is asking for a time allocation.

[English]

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I want to re-emphasize the comments made by my colleague, that this is not closure but simply time allocation. The reason for time allocation is that since debate on Bill C-21 started, there have been 93 speeches made on second reading in the House on the Bill, the amendment and the subamendment.

Mr. Fennell: I notice that you did not speak much on it.

Mr. Ferguson: There were 17 speeches by government Members, 64 by the Official Opposition, and 12 from the NDP. The Bill has had approximately eight days of debating time before the House of Commons. When one considers that six days are allocated for the Budget debate, I suggest it is time that this debate was brought to an end.

The Hon. Member spoke about the increase in our deficit. If one looks at the Budget documents, particularly the fiscal plan at page 63, a review of the last 16 years shows that the GNP increased more than fivefold since 1968. In fact, the preliminary estimate for this coming year is $389 billion for the GNP. When we have the ability to repay, the deficit can be adjusted accordingly.

The Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell) suggested that government borrowings may be as much as 90 per cent of Canadian savings. I should like to point out to him that the ratio of financial requirements to private domestic savings in the 1984-85 fiscal year is projected to be about one-quarter, rather than 90 per cent as cited by the Hon. Member. Financial requirements are projected to be $25.6 billion in 1984-85 and private domestic savings are expected to be just under $100 billion, using the national accounts definition of savings. Such statements as this concern us, certainly those of us on this side of the House. He made comparisons that really paint a distorted picture of our financial position, of our ability as a nation to provide the safety net for our seniors, the disadvantaged and the unemployed. But we as a Government are obliged to look after the welfare of the people, particularly those in most need.

In reality, when we look at the amount of borrowings in Canada by the Government, much of the borrowings are borrowed from Canadians themselves. Consequently it is a much different perspective than that of other nations where a large percentage of their borrowings are from outside their boundaries. The broad economic objective of the Budget, as with the April 19, 1983 Budget, is to initiate and sustain an investment-led expansion and an economic activity that will create employment without the resurgence of inflation. Certainly this Budget has to be looked upon as an expansionary Budget to ensure the people of Canada that the Government's objective is to assist small business to expand and create the much needed jobs for Canadians.

I find it most difficult to listen to members of the Opposition complain about various sectors of our economy, suggesting they are not doing very well at all. I should draw to their attention what is happening under the National Energy Program. In 1983 we had the best year in history for oil wells drilled and completed. Over four thousand in Canada were completed. The best year previous to that was 1980 when slightly over 2,600 oil wells were drilled and completed. I am not referring to gas wells because we have a huge surplus of natural gas in Canada. Approximately 11,000 gas wells are capped in the Province of Alberta alone with no markets available at the present time. Consequently searching has been diverted to the oil sector. To date there has been a tremendous increase over 1983 for the first two months of the year. This tremendous increase occurred not only in Alberta but in Saskatchewan and other oil-producing provinces. The program has been accepted and is showing the fruits of the thought put into it.

I should also like to point out that in the month of January, 1984 we had the biggest trade surplus on record, in the amount of $2.1 billion. This shows that Canadians are aggressively competing in and pursuing world markets.

Let me point out also that since the recovery began Canada has created 424,000 new jobs for Canadians. In the month of February alone over 54,000 new jobs were created, most of them full-time job opportunities. It is in this context that the Government is quite correct in the policies that it is pursuing. But in so doing, we have to make sure the vehicles are in place to assist the expansion as the recovery is gathering momentum.

I am alarmed at the situation in some areas of our economy and society, but there is nothing there that a stable hand at the helm cannot overcome. I am concerned about some of the things confronting those going to our post-secondary schools and universities. The Government of Canada is providing funding for these universities. Approximately 58 per cent of the cost of post-secondary school education in the Province of Ontario is borne by the Government of Canada. Students pay about 19 per cent through tuition fees and the province picks up the balance. But while the federal Government's share in Ontario has increased by about 78 per cent since the Established Programs Financing Act came into place in 1977-78, the proportion provided by the province has decreased during that period. Consequently I am most alarmed about this. I hope the demand for opportunities for higher education will be recognized by the provincial government and the necessary changes made to provide educational opportunities for those who wish to continue.

I should also like to touch briefly on the continuation of the recovery. This will automatically result in the narrowing of the deficit. During the recessionary period we came through, revenues were down compared to what they would have been under normal circumstances. Naturally payments were higher. During that period more people were collecting unemployment insurance. As more jobs are created those payments will be less demanding on our federal treasury. But by the same token, revenues will accrue from the other side of the ledger. It is in this context that we have to recognize that if at all possible the recovery is expansionary and responsible.

Development over the past year and a half or so demonstrates that there has been no clear connection between interest rates and the deficit, and interest rates are considerably lower than in the pre-recession peak despite a rise in the federal deficit. This is not to suggest, however, that the interest rate developments are not affected by current events in the country to the south of us. Rather, during a cyclical downturn private demands—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The Chair must interrupt the Hon. Member to advise him that his time has expired.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, it is an incredible day. Here we are engaged in a two-hour debate in which the Government has decided to use its voting power to close off freedom of speech on a borrowing Bill. On the same day, Mr. Speaker, we notice on the Order Paper the Government's intention to borrow another $4 billion. Here we are closing off freedom of speech on the major Bill and yet at the same time introducing a motion which will lead to the Government's attempt to borrow another $4 billion on top of $29.55 billion. As I say, this is an incredible day.

I listened to the Hon. Member who just spoke. I wonder whether or not we could convince him to brag on the front page of his electioneering pamphlets about standing up in the House of Commons some 20-odd times to invoke closure, to invoke the denial of speech in this House. That is what Liberal back-benchers have done. They have supported the Government some 20-odd times in their declaration that freedom of speech is to be denied Members of this House. That is what they intend to do later this day.

Why, Mr. Speaker? Why do Members opposite prefer a society in which a Cabinet, a small group of elected people, in some cases elected and in some cases appointed, deny the freedom of speech? What would they replace it with? If they carry this propensity toward closure far enough, what will we have? We could have a dictatorship in which everybody submits. That is one of the logical, long-term consequences. I do not think Canadians, indeed North Americans, would stand for that. But what will we resort to if our freedom of speech is to be denied? Do we have to resort to fists? Do we have to resort to bullets and revolution?

The framers of the rules of the House of Commons put in place a provision to allow a government, the majority of the Members of this House, to cut off debate. But do any of us in our wildest imagination think that rule was put in place to be used routinely? That Members elected to this Chamber were not allowed to speak on matters of importance to the Canadian people? I do not think so. I think the rule was placed in the rule book to be used very, very sparingly, on occasion, when a minority of Members were clearly abusing the House on something not particularly important. That is why the rule was put in there.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the majority Members of this House are abusing the rule. Looking back, I remember the Government advertising on television, with some $6 million worth of flying geese, for the need for a new Constitution. Here we had the fundamental law of the land about to be changed. It was like a thunderbolt out of the blue; none of us had ever seen it, no provincial Premier had ever seen it. The Government laid it on this Chamber and two weeks later invoked closure to cut off debate. Two weeks, Mr. Speaker! That is an abuse of the rules of this House.

Today we stand here looking at a Bill to borrow $29.55 billion. This will hurt businesses, hurt people on fixed incomes, and it will lead to increased unemployment. It is a fundamentally important Bill and the Government wants to cover it up by depriving Members of this House of the right to speak on the Bill, the right to alert Canadians to its implications. A little later this day the Government is going to ask us to vote on the motion and I suspect the Liberal Members will stand up and vote for closure. It will be more than 20 times that they have done that in the life of this Parliament. I suggest democracy is at risk through the abuse of the rules of this House and the willingness of the Liberal Party to participate in that kind of abuse.

This is a fundamentally important piece of legislation, Mr. Speaker. I heard Members opposite stand up earlier this day and say that we are just borrowing the money from Canadians, that all the interest will stay in the country. Mr. Speaker, technically that may have been a correct statement. In practical terms it is far from the truth. Canadians are net borrowers. This country cannot exist in this set of circumstances without borrowing money from abroad. Each time we do that, then some of the interest goes abroad. The Government of Canada might think it is borrowing Canadian money from Canadian banks, but lying behind that is the need of the Bank to borrow money abroad. What does that do? It drives down the value of the Canadian dollar, thereby increasing inflation.

When we stand in this House and ask for the right to debate the need to borrow this money, and the Liberal back-benchers are ready to stand up and say "No, we will deny you the right of free speech", then Canadians should ask themselves what is the Government trying to hide? What is it trying to cover up? The Government has told us it is going to be short $24 billion this year but it is asking to borrow over $29 billion. There is another motion in the Order Paper to borrow another $4 billion. The Government wants to borrow $9 billion more than it has told us it is going to spend. Why?

Do you think, Mr. Speaker, that perhaps the Government wants to create slush funds, to plough the money into Liberal ridings to try and bribe the voters? Do you think that is a possible explanation, Mr. Speaker? It is a burning question. In light of that, why does the Government want to move closure? It would just as soon the Canadian people never found out why the Government wants to borrow $9 billion more than it has told us it is going to spend. Will we see more flying geese on our television screens?

In Question Period we started to look at some advertising programs. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) has ads out across this country which are full of inaccurate information. The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lumley) has ads out across this country, more to get his picture across the country than to do anything good for Canada. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts), a candidate for the leadership, has had tremendous increases in advertising about the marvellous things Canada Manpower Centres are doing. Well, Mr. Speaker, what those dollars are doing is creating false expectations in the minds of Canadians.

Borrowed money is being used to tell Canadians that programs exist for training, for job creation, but when people go to the Canada Manpower Centres they find that the budgets are spent and the job creation opportunities do not exist. I urge Members of the Liberal Party to consider whether or not the interests of Canada would be better served through further open debate on the need to borrow this money. I urge them not to vote for over the twentieth time to stifle this House, to deny Members of this House the right to freedom of speech.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have listened now for a few days to Tory arguments against the borrowing authority Bill. In reviewing some of those arguments, I see they have ranged from that of the hon. gentleman who just spoke, who said that this extra money would be used as an election slush fund in Liberal ridings.

Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I wish that were the case. I have felt for some time that the Government of Canada is really not spending enough money in Liberal ridings. When you run for re-election you have to tell the people what you are able to accomplish for them. They say that because we are on the Government side, we should have far more power than those on the Opposition side. That is straight reality. Over the years, the Government has always operated, and I have not seen anything to the contrary, in a manner whereby all constituencies are treated equally. I would venture to say that the majority of Government funding has gone more to urban areas than rural areas. This is because with many programs, government operates through the Public Service. A good example is the Summer Student Employment Program. A constituency allocation is made for direct job creation in summer student employment and another allocation that operates through the Public Service. If there are no Government offices in your riding, you do not get any of that rather large chunk that is allocated.

The Opposition say that this contingency amount might be used as an election slush fund. They question accountability. They say that the Government should be held to account to control expenditures and that it should show leadership. They question management, calling it fiscal irresponsibility. They say that nothing is being done to address the problems of waste. Certain opposition members have pointed out where they believe government programs should be cut. There are certain areas where one could see a distinct difference between Progressive Conservative policy and that of the Liberal Party. There is no doubt about it, there are certain areas, such as job creation. When the Conservatives were last in government, direct job creation by the federal Government was discontinued in favour of, as they put it, allowing the private sector to create jobs. Unfortunately, private enterprise does not exist as far as business opportunities are concerned in certain areas of this country. Unfortunately, a great many rural and economically depressed areas have no private enterprise on which to build.

What do you say when you adopt a policy like that? Do you say that because there is no private enterprise, you have to remain on welfare? Do you tell people they cannot have government services such as community building, water and sewer facilities or wharves because there is no private enterprise? That is the basic difference between the Conservative Party and the Liberal Party of Canada.

No government will be able to do away with direct job-creation programs such as Canada Works, community development programs, the LEAD Program and the like. Listening to the former Conservative Minister of Finance, I am surprised that the Conservative Party still enunciate that as being an area that should receive a cut. He says there is a waste of money in government expenditures. If the former Conservative Minister of Finance is ever again the Minister of Finance and the Conservatives remain in power long enough to carry through that policy, no Conservative Member will have a hope in the world of ever again collecting any votes. It would be an absurd, silly, cruel act to discontinue direct job creation in rural and high unemployment areas. It is unthinkable that any political party would ever advocate that action, yet they do it time and again.

With regard to the comments of opposition members, there are some facts that should be laid on the table. In checking this contingency amount, I have discovered that a contingency amount has traditionally been included in requests for borrowing authority. Either it has been requested or it has not. If it has been requested, and if it has always been the case, what in the world are opposition members talking about? What kind of scheme is the Opposition cooking up to convince the Canadian people that for the first time this Liberal Government, going into an election this year, is creating this large fund to be used for political purposes? A mere check with the authorities and those who know would show that this is normal procedure. The reason it is there is to cover the impact of a large or unpredictable foreign exchange operation concerning financial requirements and to ensure that the Government will be able to continue its regular debt program if the House is not in session or has been dissolved. In essence, the contingency is designed to avoid any disruptions in the borrowing program which might lead to further disruptions. That is a fact. It is a normal course of action. It is not as some Members opposite would have Canadians believe.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I am sure anyone watching this afternoon would not have the faintest idea what we are doing. I cannot help but wonder at the way in which the arguments have been presented. The arguments themselves are certainly valid, but they are not relevant to what is before us. I want to talk about why time allocation is being brought forward and why we are opposed to it.

The Government has done two things. In the time that I have been here, at least, the Government has developed a pattern of asking for all of the borrowing authority in one Bill and asking for more than it can reasonably justify at the same time. On this occasion it has asked for $29.5 billion for the fiscal year 1984-85. It is not only a lot of money but it is $4 billion more than the Government can justify on the basis of its own accounting.

On top of that, it is my conviction, a conviction shared by most of my colleagues, that if the Government is to be accountable it ought not to ask for all of its projected borrowing needs at one time. There ought to be an opportunity during the course of the fiscal year for Members of Parliament to judge the performance of the Government on the basis of its borrowing needs and to pass judgment as to whether the Government has managed the affairs of the nation in a reasonable way, whether it has borrowed only for those which can be seen by the majority to be necessary projects.

This time we did what we have always done and attempted to present an argument to the Government. We recognize that the Government, whether it be the Liberal Government of the day, the Conservative Government of yet another day or a New Democratic Party Government, will from time to time be required to borrow money. However, we feel that it is important that the Government not be allowed to borrow at any time more than it requires for six months. We presented that argument to the Government. It has been put forward by myself and by many of my colleagues. The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) and other members of the New Democratic Party who speak on finance matters regularly have often argued that borrowing authority for six months is all that the Government can reasonably expect to receive through one Bill. That would mean that at this point in time, the Government would require an amount not exceeding $15 billion and probably something less than that.

Had the Government brought forward legislation along those lines, we would have been prepared to deal with it reasonably and expeditiously and to have proceeded to the other important matters that ought to be taking up the attention of the House of Commons. We offered the Government that argument and it was not accepted. We were then asked to look at the possibility of a need for borrowing authority for more than six months, because this is an unusual year and there is the prospect of an election looming. It was thought that perhaps under these circumstances the Government ought to be given authority to borrow for more than six months but less than a full year. We considered that argument and on the recommendation of my colleague, the finance critic for the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap, we thought that allowing the Government authority to meet its needs and commitments for nine months or until the end of the calendar year would be appropriate in the circumstances.

I know that my colleague the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), a Member who is constantly involved in matters such as these, was a little doubtful about whether we should extend the period of time to nine months. However, after considerable discussion, even he agreed. He is known throughout the House as being a frugal man who is vitally concerned about fiscal responsibility. In fact, all Members of the House have paid tribute to the fine work he did on the committee which studied fiscal responsibility and fiscal transfers.

In any event, we agreed among ourselves that we would extend the amount of time to nine months. Had the Government been willing to bring forward legislation along those lines, we would have accepted the request for authority to borrow a sum of money in the order of $18 billion or $19 billion, with the requirement that the Government return to the House of Commons to request the additional borrowing authority that it required when it required it and if it required it. We think that that is an appropriate approach for a government to take to borrowing, whether it be this Government or any other government. I suspect we will never find out whether the Government would have accepted that argument or not. We did in fact move an amendment to a motion to that effect but it is not likely to be accepted.

The public of Canada, who may well be riveted to their television sets with the eager expectation of seeing a vote take place in the House of Commons very soon, should understand what this is all about. I think that by explaining the situation as I have, perhaps they now appreciate that the reason we could not give approval to the borrowing of $29.5 billion or $29.6 billion is that it is more than the Government has proven it needs and it is for a complete fiscal year. We disagree with that in its entirety. We draw the line at that. Therefore, using the only method available to us, we had our speakers rise and, in an intelligent and compassionate way, explain what our position was and beg the Government on frequent occasions to consider that position and accept it as reasonable. However, the Government has, for one reason or another, failed to respond properly.

I do not think that the public of Canada would want this Government, the Government of Saskatchewan, the Government of British Columbia in particular, the Government of Ontario or any other government, to be given carte blanche to borrow far more than it needs. It is therefore incumbent upon us to make sure that that does not happen. It is because of our opposition to allowing the Government to do so that the Government has chosen to use time allocation.

I am not like members of the Conservative Party who say that time allocation is an inappropriate tool. It exists in the rules to be used on occasion. However, this is not the right occasion. I can imagine that there may well be an occasion when it might be appropriate but this certainly could never be considered by any thinking individual as the right time.

I want the public to understand why we are opposed to what is happening here today and why we feel that what the Government is doing is wrong. I want the public to understand why we do not necessarily align ourselves with all the Conservative verbiage which has gone on.

Further, before I sit down, I wish to say that it does not surprise me that the people of Canada do not have a lot of confidence in the House of Commons. We are asking them to accept the fact that we should be allowed to do something which they themselves would never, ever be prepared to allow. The Government is asking them to accept that it should be given this massive borrowing authority in one lump sum which the people of Canada, who have to pay the bills, would not want the Government to have.

I would like, therefore, to suggest to the Government that when it asks for borrowing authority in the future, it should make it for no more than six months at one time and it should be held accountable for its actions. I think it will then find from this Party some willingness to look seriously at those kinds of requests.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being 5.07 p.m., the two hours provided for the consideration of the motion now before the House under the provisions of Standing Order 82 have expired.

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1984-85

The House resumed from Tuesday, March 27, consideration of the motion of Mr. MacLaren that Bill C-21, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and the amendment of Mr. Darling (p. 2292); and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Deans (p. 2299).

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, it is a difficult time to begin a debate on this particular subject matter, particularly after the time allocation motion we have just had. However, perhaps that is why I was asked to begin the debate at this stage, because as a former Parliamentary Secretary I must say that I have had a lot of experience with time allocation on government borrowings.

We have followed the same pattern with all of these borrowing Bills. The Opposition speaks for as long as it can, it raises what I believe are many serious points in its debates, and eventually the Government decides that it must govern and introduce time allocation. While it is not an easy circumstance, I believe it is necessary.

I know the concerns that are raised by the Opposition Parties and I respect them. I have seen the Tories argue consistently in the House that a dollar that is borrowed could be reduced to 50 cents. There is nothing the matter with that argument. I think it keeps the Government on its toes.

Equally, the Tories argue that borrowing Bills should be relatively small and that the Government should come back to Parliament to justify itself on a regular basis. Again, I think that is a respectable argument and is one that I commend. On the other hand, all of this needs to be kept in balance. We need an efficient Parliament and an efficient, smooth borrowing process with the Government.

Although we have heard some very good and, I must say, traditional arguments surrounding time allocation, in this particular case I believe it is time we got on with the job. I believe there is enough in front of Parliament that we should get on to some of the other legislation.

Any debate on borrowing authority is a debate about government support for the economy and specific people within the economy. It is a debate today about how much support should be given, how much money the Government should borrow and spend to support the economy. The current debate focuses on whether we are causing any damage to the economy as a consequence of our borrowing. I do not believe we are. I believe we have stimulated our economy and the recovery through our borrowing and spending. We are helping those who need help. We are in a very good position in our international circumstances.

It is interesting to watch the Conservatives in this same debate. Let me remind the House that only a few weeks ago the former Conservative Finance Minister said that future Tory policy would be mean, tough and nasty-minded. The Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), who hopes to be a prominent Tory economic spokesman in the future, says that he would cut right across the board in every department, despite demonstrated needs or despite demonstrated service.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Fisher: Equally, in The Globe and Mail on the weekend, we saw an article that reinforced our view that the Tory Party will attack universal social programs.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Fisher: There was a quote in The Globe and Mail that said that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) wanted to study and remove the universality in our social programs even if that meant that we would have to have means tests.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Fisher: These are not claims that I am making; these are claims that one can read in The Globe and Mail and in The Toronto Star.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. There is so much noise surrounding the Hon. Member that I cannot hear him from the Chair even with my speaker turned on full blast.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I know that my colleagues feel passionately about the Government's support for the economy and they feel passionately that the Conservative Party should not be allowed to do these things. Therefore I understand the spontaneous demonstrations that we are hearing among these high-minded people.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to look at the way the Canadian Government is supporting the economy. You will note, for example, the very clear parallel between our commitment to Canadair and de Havilland, on the one hand, and the historic Tory move to destroy the Avro Arrow 25 years ago. If we follow the advice of the Tory Party, we would sink de Havilland and Canadair in the same way that they sunk the A.V. Roe Company in my riding. Thousands of people with good products and markets and with great technology would be out on the street if the Tory Party had its way. We should know the consequences of Tory policy. We should know that Canada would be denied access to these high technology products. Canada would be denied jobs. Our best brains in the industry would once again go south, to the United States, the way they did in the 1960s. That is the kind of Tory policy that we on this side reject. We are prepared to support our economy and to support our businesses.

We did the same thing with Chrysler. The House will remember that we were criticized for supporting the Chrysler Corporation, yet we were prepared to do that because of the thousands of people employed directly there and the hundreds of small businesses that rely on the Chrysler Corporation for their livelihood. We made a commitment to the future of the Canadian economy by supporting the Chrysler Corporation. Today, that commitment is paying off. That corporation is back on its feet. The partnership that it formed with the Canadian Government has proven to be fruitful and has proven to maintain a basic institution in our economy.

One can say the same thing for small businesses. Thousands of them have had support from us from the Federal Business Development Bank, the Small Business Bond Program and the hundreds of other efforts we have made in smaller ways for each of these businesses. We are prepared to spend money to get our economy going again. That is the spirit of the Special Recovery Program. Look at how it reaches out to weaker industries, flat industries, tourism, for example, or the construction industry. The Special Recovery Projects are ways to stimulate those soft parts of our economy until the participants are able to stand up on their own two feet and support themselves.

Equally, Mr. Speaker, we are ready to reach out to individual Canadians who are in need. We are ready to support home owners through our mortgage insurance plan. We are ready to support pensioners through higher guaranteed income supplement. We are ready to support people with their pension planning through bigger RRSPs. We are ready to support employees with profit sharing plans. We are ready to help unemployed youth with greater dedication of funds to the Youth Opportunity Fund. Look at all of our commitments to job creation. It does not matter which category. What about Canada Works, Summer Canada, and Environment 2000? All of them represent a partnership where we take the resources of the federal Government and put them to work on behalf of individuals who need their help. That, Mr. Speaker, is a Liberal approach.

We support our economy and we support individuals who need our help. We are doing all of this in the context of an economic recovery.

It is important as people get jittery these days to remind ourselves that the economic recovery is actually under way. We hear lots of doom and gloom but the recovery is here. We know that. We can see that our inflation rate has dropped dramatically. Even though we are nervous about interest rates and our dollar, we can still look to the deepest days of the recession and see how far we have come toward recovery. These events surrounding our dollar and our interest rates are events forced upon us from the outside world by the American economy, its dollar that is so strong on international markets and by American interest rates which are so high.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the Hon. Member rising on a point of order?

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is the following. Mr. MacLaren, seconded by Mr. Lumley, moves that Bill C-21, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be now read—Shall I dispense?

Some Hon. Members: Dispense.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the amendment to the amendment. Mr. Deans, seconded by Mr. Young, moves that the amendment be amended by deleting the word "fiscal" and substituting the word "calendar" therefor. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

And the division bells having been rung:

Mr. Speaker: Order. After consultations with the Parties involved I have decided to stop the bells and suspend the sitting until nine o'clock tomorrow morning.

At 6.26 p.m. the sitting was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 9 a.m., Thursday, March 29, Mr. Corbin in the Chair.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment to the amendment lost.

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I was a little disturbed at the voting procedure. As far as I could tell the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) came in when you were well into reading the motion, took his seat and voted. Two other Members right behind him stayed at the back and did not vote. I just wonder if we should look at that procedure and see whether that vote should be counted.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I did come in while you were reading the motion. I heard the motion but I came in while you were reading it.

Mr. Speaker: Is that acceptable? In the circumstances—The Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen).

Mr. Nielsen: I believe the Government House Leader will be rising on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Would the Hon. Member please take his seat? In the circumstances the Chair is going to allow the vote of the Hon. Member for Spadina to stand.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to be polite and let you rule on the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae). That is why I was waiting to rise.

Mr. McDermid: He was not saying anything.

Mr. Pinard: Yes, I know.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has difficulty in reading the minds of Hon. Members.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I realized you were about to say something.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, last night I had conversations with both House Leaders of the Opposition, the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). We agreed that today we would deal with third reading stage of Bill C-3. I think they would corroborate that.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed unanimously that notwithstanding any Standing Order the House will sit again later this day?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

At 11.20 a.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

The House met at 11.20 a.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADA HEALTH ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that Bill C-3, an Act relating to cash contributions by Canada in respect of insured health services provided under provincial health care insurance plans and amounts payable by Canada in respect of extended health care services and to amend and repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the third time and do pass.

She said: Mr. Speaker, this is probably the last time that an opportunity will be given to me as Minister of National Health and Welfare to speak on Bill C-3, which is being debated on third reading today. This Bill may not be a Bill which received unanimous consent from parties all over Canada, but it is a Bill of consensus, and that is important. That is the Canadian way of doing things, to make improvements to what exists, thereby building up what has been the social fabric of this country for so long.

I, therefore, would like to thank all Members of this House, and in particular, of course, the members of the Standing Committee who have devoted so many hours to meeting with witnesses, studying their claims and viewpoints and making their best efforts to improve the Bill. If I may, I would like to single out the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), as well as my colleagues on this side of the House. I do not know if this is the tradition, but I believe it is very important for all Canadians to know that this Bill—without presuming the outcome of the vote—will be passed unanimously, based on indications given to me by all three Parties, and will not have expanded but consolidated, I believe for years to come, our health care system in Canada.

What this Bill accomplishes is modest, but it is an essential step. It has been a difficult decision to make. We would have preferred time to have settled the problem. However, time was rather against medicare in the sense of pressures from all sides, starting with the recession itself, which were pushing some of the players into overcharging patients, through extra billing by some doctors and specialists and by user fees charged by some provinces. This Bill, therefore, is needed to clarify the existing rules of the game and to make sure that the weak spots, if I may say so, in the existing legislation will be consolidated, explained and defined in a way in which all Canadians, through a relatively simple, written piece of new legislation, can understand the rules of the game and know what their rights are. In that way they can protect themselves and will be able to see both the tremendous powers and the limitations of our health care system.

As I said, although it was a difficult decision to make, I believe this Bill is essential. Everyone will agree that I should name Mr. Justice Emmett Hall in particular, and through him all the key players, political and public, who have given Canadians over the last 25 years the medicare we know and enjoy, the medicare which is one of the best in the world. I am sure all Members will recall what Mr. Justice Emmett Hall said about the erosion of our health care system, an erosion which would have sooner or later made the house collapse because its foundation would have been too much eroded by the overcharges to Canadians.

I would like to say a word about the federal-provincial relations aspect of this Bill. Health in Canada is primarily, and I am sure everyone knows it now, a matter of provincial jurisdiction. Personal health services must be delivered by the provinces. In fact, I believe it is fair to conclude, after having travelled and heard witnesses from all over the country, that we have 12 different health care systems, including the two Territories, all functioning according to local traditions, but offering basically the same services to Canadians, and operating around the same five basic conditions of free accessibility and comprehensiveness of services, which means the basic list of ensured free services is the same for all Canadians wherever they live.

However, these services are delivered according to the corner of the country in which a particular patient lives. Patients who live in the far north will be transported to the best and closest hospital. If they live in downtown Toronto, in the suburbs of Vancouver or in the east end of Montreal, they will be transported downtown to the closest hospital. They will in both places receive the quality care we are used to in Canada and which we want to keep.

Federal-provincial relations are a major dimension of this piece of legislation. If I had had a chance to speak to my provincial colleagues to this platform, I would have liked to reassure every one of them that the meetings we had in January had been brought to realization by the amendments made to Bill C-3 in the standing committee of this House of Commons. I believe each of them would be rather pleased with what we have done. The members of the committee have worked together very seriously on this, and we have done our utmost to improve the Bill while respecting the basic rules of the game to which I had given my commitment. By that I mean, in particular, that in no way should we be imposing on the provinces, directly or indirectly, additional charges to the heavy financial burden they now have. Any Member who knows enough about the Bill can see that we have honoured that commitment.

We have tried to make it a better Bill, and I was pleased at the end of the committee work to hear senior officials, the people who have been implementing medicare in the last 25 years, saying spontaneously how pleased they were that it was not partisanship which had governed the work of the committee but excellent improvements made by the Opposition and the Government to make the Bill better. I think we can be proud of what will be a workable piece of legislation, which is the purpose of any Bill.

We have recognized the concerns of different players who at times may be seen by some of the parties in that complex system as "enemies", in the sense they would make demands on the system for money, equipment or for changes in orientation. We have tried to recognize their legitimate concerns without imposing anything on the provinces which is not our place to impose.

Perhaps I should refer in particular to one clause which is causing worries, it seems, in the last hours, although to my knowledge without reason. I am anxious that all parties have a chance to study carefully the revised version of the Bill with all its amendments, in particular Clause 12(2). In that clause we are adding a possible choice for the provinces who want it by defining a model process for negotiations between the medical associations and the provincial governments. This process originates from the medical associations, more precisely from the Canadian Medical Association. It was put forward first by the Official Opposition, and followed by a counter-proposal in which no mandatory dimension was included.

I know some Members would have liked to see a real process of negotiation enshrined in the law as the way to do things between doctors and provincial governments. We all know that we did not have that power under the Constitution; therefore we did not impose it on the provinces. It would have been wrong. Instead, we added to the old rule of the game, which has been there for 15 years, which says that doctors must receive reasonable compensation. That stands; it is the cornerstone of medicare in Canada.

We added a possible model which all Members thought could be tested, promoted and eventually become the way to do things in Canada. It will work only if the parties want it to work. It will be for provincial medical associations and provincial governments to decide if it is workable. If not, they can choose any other model of labour relations with the medical associations to reach reasonable compensation for doctors. I think this is a key point and I wanted to stress it.

Why do I single out only one occupation in the health system? I do so in a way to do justice to people who are key players in the system and who have been more or less outside of the federal-provincial political scene. They have expressed their views differently but I want them to know, together with other players, that I think they have been heard, that they have advanced their cause and we have to honour a commitment to them by proposing, wherever provinces want to use it, a possible new model of labour relations which can literally respect the dignity of both parties.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may be allowed to say a few words about my home province. I must say I was disappointed when Quebec opted for political confrontation instead of a dialogue on Bill C-3. I thought it was most unfortunate but I am happy that we have been able to allay the fears they had raised in the health services field in Quebec, and I think that now, the word has gone out that there was no problem and no reason to be alarmed. I am glad that in the process, Quebec officials came to meet with our officials at my Department here in Ottawa, and the point was clearly made that there would no longer be user charges in Quebec for patients or convalescents, and I am referring to what might be called the short-term chronically ill. This practice which started with the separatist Government was spreading, unfortunately, and the Quebec Government, and I am referring to Mr. Lévesque's Government, has acknowledged that it was against the Health Insurance Act, and that in Quebec, patients who must stay in hospital for longer periods of time, for instance, three, four or seven months, before going home, can no longer be charged user fees, irrespective of the length of time they must stay in hospital. I believe this is important, and that we should all be glad we were able to deal with this problem and with a practice that goes counter to the philosophy of health insurance.

Mr. Speaker, I see my time is running out, and I would like to finish my comments regarding the future.

[English]

I am sure members of the committee, who were not necessarily specialists in health matters but who have become specialists in health matters after all the briefs they read, the witnesses they heard, the reading they did on the Bill, including the amendments and the background documents, would agree that most participants, if not all, spoke of that Bill as the first step. Some even went overboard and said it was not even important, but everyone agreed that it had to be done. Well, it takes time to pass a Bill through the House and it will be done very soon. It will be behind us very shortly.

I think one of the great advantages of this Bill and its process was to put health back on the map of Canadian concerns. I think Members will share the view that probably because of the recession, having such an expensive proposal, everybody preferred not to talk about it in order not to do it any damage. But all the participants have really said far more than the Bill itself. They have said that we have to fix these financial barriers and get rid of them, but; and they each had a "but". They wanted to speak of where health was going. Depending on where they come from in the system, they wanted to speak of costs that should or could be reduced by allocating resources differently and using them in the most effective way.

• (1140)

Being a woman, I am sure no one will mind if I refer to the nurses, as a group of players par excellence who are somewhat in second place in the system, if I may say, in terms of social prestige. They are still a key participant and probably spend the greatest number of hours with patients who are in the hospital. The nurses spoke of the lifestyle and asked if the environment and lifestyle was helping the cause or not. They spoke of aging and challenged us to see if we were ready for new demands on the system from an aging Canadian population. They spoke of death and how dying has lost its human aspect. They spoke of the palliative care units and how their own role could be very different.

In turn, consumer groups spoke of self-help and asked why ordinary Canadians who are not particularly knowledgeable on technical health matters could not still make a contribution and in some way control their own health. In other words, they are no longer passive.

Women question the way the conventional hospital-based birth process takes place. Is it the only way of doing it? They talked about midwives as another method in the birth process. The discussions always concerned choices as opposed to everybody being put into one mould and having to follow one procedure.

It has been very important to have the chance to debate health in Canada, to debate its orientation and the need to speed up the reorientation of health toward health promotion and prevention, as well as establishing where our great system needs improvement or more money and specific areas ensuring that we do not lose the excellence and momentum we have built.

Therefore, I would like to reiterate, since the need for the dialogue has been expressed so clearly, that to respond to such an obvious need and to move ahead with innovative ideas, I am proposing to initiate a national conference on health to provide an opportunity for dialogue with all the interested groups. None of the existing processes permits all the groups to get together in a workable manner and this conference would give everyone a chance to be equal in expressing their views.

I do not intend to dictate how this forum will be organized. I hope that all Members of the House who have done such a good job in committee would find the forum a way to remain connected to the health system. This will be a conference of all interested parties and partners in the health system. Its organization and planning will be undertaken jointly. My officials will soon be in touch with all those who are interested in order to plan the content and launch the conference.

Let me conclude by saying that we do not want this to be simply a meeting; we would like to see these discussions have a real influence on what will happen in the health field. I have listed but a few of the topics which it could cover.

This is almost an emotional moment for me, due to what this health Bill represents for Canadians, as well as the difficulties attached to it because of the contradictory interests and problems of so many parties involved. I will finish by reading from a handwritten letter by an Ontario physician who said: "As a physician, I urge you to continue your work and to actualize the Canada Health Act. Please resist the temptation to compromise—" The letter continues.

That is what we have all done. I hope we have done our work well, which I am sure we have, so that Canadians will enjoy the best health system in the world for years to come.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Minister's positive statements in the closing debate as well as throughout the entire debate. One of the policies that she has underscored most consistently has been her opposition to extra billing and user charges. I understand her concern about that very well. What is her position regarding the extra billing and user charges imposed on the clients of Dr. Henry Morgentaler?

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Hon. Member to be more specific? I do not know what he is talking about.

Mr. Friesen: It seems plain that Dr. Henry Morgentaler operates a business on a fee for service basis and it is supposed to be, in his jargon, health care. Does she support that kind of extra billing?

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, I do not see why I should start naming doctors who extra bill or do not extra bill. Bill C-3 is very clear that extra billing is an overcharge on the patients that is totally against the law.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, the Minister has indicated her intention to begin the process of setting up a national conference on health. I think that is a good idea on the face of it.

One of the amendments that was moved in committee, by me actually, concerned setting up a national health council. It was a suggestion that was made as early as the parliamentary task force, I believe, and was called for by the nurses. Is the Minister open to the idea of there being some permanent opportunity for dialogue and constructive discussions between all the players in the health care system and having something permanent come from such a conference?

In other words, if it is the will of the people who attend that conference that it not simply be a one-time event, would the Government be open to that kind of opportunity?

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes. The idea of a national health council which was promoted so well during the debate in committee, particularly by the Canadian Hospitals Association, is a very good one. The first time I heard of it was when I became the new Minister of National Health and Welfare six years ago. There are some groups who care about this idea and lobby for it.

However, when I put this idea to my provincial counterparts, some time ago now, they did not approve of it. Since it was some time ago, if the idea is suggested again at a conference in which they will be the key participants, perhaps all interested parties could see the interest in it. In such a case, we will surely entertain such a project.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, the Minister has had a request for a meeting with provincial ministers regarding some of the amendments in Bill C-3. Has she complied with that request? Does she intend to meet with them or will we pass the Bill before such a meeting takes place?

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, the member refers to telegrams which were received from provincial health ministers in the last few days and from the minister from Alberta in particular, probably in the name of other ministers since he will be the host of their annual joint meeting next September. I immediately sent back one telex. Today I asked officials to send back another telex to explain what their main concern seems to be. From my own conversation with some of them it is what I addressed earlier today, namely, the new section on doctors' negotiations with the provinces. Their concern is that the committee members imposed that on the provinces. I think the original amendment put forward by the Tory Party would have imposed it, but we defeated the amendment in committee. We wanted it simply as a model to give the choice to the province.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, the Minister in her remarks acknowledged that the biggest weakness with this legislation is the lack of being able to deal adequately with preventive health care. She made particular reference to midwives. Given the fact that having a child at home in the case of a normal birth would save a great deal of money and at the same time adds to the bonding between mother and child, what can the Minister tell us that will assure us she is going to do something that will be effective in terms of making sure the opportunity to have a midwife in attendance is available to Canadians and that this conference will not be just a way of letting things slide?

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member touches on a perfect example, among thousands, of what health is all about in the sense that it is a provincial responsibility as to personal delivery services. The recognition of midwives in the child birth process can be given at any time by any province under the existing and the new Canada Health Act. But it is a totally provincial matter—totally. It is at the choice of province x, y, or z to set into motion whatever licensing—I do not have with me the details according to each province—is needed, to make it official either on a pilot project basis or across a given province according to its own priorities in health delivery.

Mr. Flis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) and also the Members from all three Parties who served on the committee for coming up with a first-class made in Canada health Bill and service. As the Minister pointed out, the delivery of the services now lies, and always did, in the hands of the provinces.

This creates many difficulties for a lot of senior citizens who live part time with children in one province and then part time with children in another province. I have many examples where senior citizens in their 80s and 90s live six months or three months in the Province of Quebec and then another six or three months in the Province of Ontario. They run into the problem of a waiting period to qualify for health services. One province has a three-month waiting period to qualify for medical services. Therefore, these seniors are in a bind. Do they have to go back to the province which still covers them to get the service? Are they faced with a province saying: "Sorry, you have to wait three months"? Does the Bill address this problem of so many senior citizens who have the right to live part time in one province and part time in another province?

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, I will have to check the exact details of the situation but the general principle has been clearly established in this Bill. One of the five conditions is portability. The Hon. Member has a very good point. We did not hear much about portability. The media spoke much more about accessibility and comprehensiveness, universality. But portability raises quite a practical problem for border towns, towns exactly like Hull and Ottawa, for seniors who travel a great deal in the country to see their children and families.

I do not have the exact details but, in the case of an emergency, citizens are treated anywhere in Canada and that should not pose a problem. Again, details escape me right now. Officials of the provinces have been working, I think for at least a year now, on a detailed protocol of portability and the rules of the game both within Canada and outside. This Bill reinforces the concept of portability for all Canadians within the country.

Mr. Gamble: Mr. Speaker, did I understand the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) to suggest in response to one of the questions asked by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen), that extra billing was illegal, to use her words? If, indeed, that is what she said, could she clarify that for the House, having regard to the specific provisions in the preamble to the Bill which clearly indicate that it is not the intention of this Bill either to abrogate or to derogate from any of the provisions of the Constitution Act of Canada, and having further regard to the well-recognized fact that the provision of medical services lies entirely within the control of the provincial governments?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The time provided for questions and comments has expired. Perhaps the House will allow the Hon. Minister to reply. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the courtesy of all Members. I will answer rapidly. The Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) asked me specifically about Dr. Morgentaler. To clarify that, I should say that Dr. Morgentaler's services are not insured services under provincial plans because he does not perform them in a hospital the way the Bill provides. The services that are insured must respect the Criminal Code and they must be performed in hospitals. I did say in answer to the Hon. Member that extra billing would be a breach of the Act. I repeat, and I hope the Hon. Member knows what extra billing means—

Mr. Gamble: Yes.

Miss Bégin: Extra billing is a breach of this federal legislation. The Hon. Member will not get me into a big constitutional debate because that would not help anybody. We made sure this Bill respects fully the Constitution by which the provinces are in charge of health care. I think I said it several times in my speech this morning. But what we buy for close to $10 billion a year does not include extra billing. We do not buy it. The Bill has spelled out why extra billing would be a breach of the Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Debate. Is the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I thought you had extended time to the Minister and if that was the case—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House agreed to allow the Hon. Minister to reply to the previous question. It was not a general extension of time. However, the Chair is in the hands of the House. If there is a wish to prolong time for questions and comments I will ask the House if it is so disposed. Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, as I am sure the Minister and all Members of the House are well aware, the costs for medicare for a period of time now have been escalating upward at a very significant rate. I think we have probably come to a period when there has been a levelling off from those reasons that have forced prices up in the past. However, I think we are through the door now and into a new age where technology will cause new mechanisms to make the old methods of hospital treatment rapidly obsolete. We will have new machinery coming in rapidly.

Does the Minister have any concerns about the new wave of technology with respect to cost? If she has, apart from this Bill, has she any recommendations as to how we as a society might keep both the best medicare and be able to afford it in light of what the chip may do to us in an extremely rapidly exploding advancement in technology?

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, this is a relevant and a pertinent question. The Hon. Member comes from a riding in Alberta. His province, for example, is one of the two provinces in Canada that we pay just a little below 50 per cent; I think we pay 48 per cent of the medicare costs. It is because that province, as one of its priorities, added a major element to its expenditures when it decided a few years ago to build beautiful new hospitals in almost every small town. They are now faced with a very heavy added, ongoing cost to their health systems. I was reading the Alberta budget yesterday or the day before. This year health in Alberta will receive 10 per cent more from the provincial government. I am giving something like 10 per cent more myself to the provincial government of Alberta this year in federal payments.

Technology alone is only one of the heavy components. Everyone wants to use high-tech and get the best and latest gadgets, often for reasons of prestige locally. If the provinces are interested, one thing which could be introduced is a small, independent national institute which would be absolutely independent of government. It would be publicly funded, of course. It would be autonomous and would assess all new technologies, which often come from the United States, Japan and West Germany. It would give confidential, detailed reports to each provincial health minister to equip them with enough good arguments in order that they could resist temptations and pressures. That is one way of getting at it.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I have a quick question for the Minister. It relates to something which many times I wanted to bring up in committee. I had even considered whether an amendment in this direction might have been in order. It has to do with the Territories. Could we get an assurance from the Minister that, upon passage of this Act, action will be taken by her to ensure that there is no extra billing or user fees in the Yukon or the Northwest Territories? These are areas of the country over which she has a great deal more influence than she has, for instance, in the provinces. The Act ensures that if certain things continue they will have consequences for provincial governments. Could we have an assurance from the Minister that she intends some action with regard to the Yukon in particular, where I believe user fees have existed in hospitals?

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, I wish my officials had signalled to me when I asked them for the detailed answer on the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. I will give them a pair of glasses for the next time!

I do not have the answer. I know why the Member asked the question. It is because of the federal privilege linked to the Territories. Of course, we will not permit in the Territories what is not permitted in the rest of Canada. To my knowledge there is no extra billing or user fees in the Northwest Territories. As to the Yukon, I must say I do not recall the situation at this particular moment, but I believe it has been abolished.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, the Canada Health Act is now back in the House for final reading. As I have throughout this debate, I listened to the Minister today with great attention. One of the new proposals she put forward was for a national health conference to continue the debate which I think has been well dealt with in committee. She did not ask us for any specific proposals today with regard to the health conference. I might suggest to her some dates for the conference. Perhaps the dates June 14 to 17 would be a time when she would consider holding such a conference. She might think that would be a better debate to take place than some of the other things that might be going on at that time.

As the House and those of us who have been following this debate will be aware, the Progressive Conservative Party has supported this Bill. It supported it at second reading when we were debating it in principle and has supported it at committee stage. But Mr. Speaker, I do not want the House to come to the conclusion that because the Progressive Conservative Party has lent its support that means that we are totally satisfied with this Bill. Throughout the debate we have said that we consider it to be too narrow, too restrictive, and that it really does not come to grips with the basic issue of how to provide for a more effective and efficient health care system in the country or how such a system could be adequately funded. Those things were not dealt with in this Bill. In some ways, as has been said so often in this debate, even the title of the Bill itself is a misnomer.

Our criticisms throughout were aimed at improving the Bill. We tried to do that conscientiously. We did not do it by trying to obstruct or hold up the workings of the Bill in committee. Throughout committee sessions and at report stage of the Bill we put forward amendments which we believed would improve the Bill. Some of them were accepted, at least in concept, and others, I regret to say, were turned down. Nevertheless, we did work as responsible committee members to try to make the Bill more acceptable to the groups who were intimately concerned with it. As we did this we always kept in mind the health care needs of the Canadian public.

In this regard, Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay particular tribute to the work done by the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), the health critic for the Progressive Conservative Party. Because of a long-standing commitment in Manitoba today he is unable to be here. When he left last night he was not aware that the health care Bill would be up for debate today. He has been diligent and untiring in his efforts not only to improve the Bill, but also to contact and discuss it with the various groups concerned—the Canadian Medical Association, the Canadian Hospitals Association, the Canadian Nurses' Association and the provincial health ministers. He met and discussed with all those who had a particular interest in the Bill in order to reduce the controversy which has swirled around it.

I would also like to commend my colleague from Oxford (Mr. Halliday), another full-time member of the committee. He also is unavoidably absent today. However, he has single-mindedly devoted his time and attention to this Bill over the last several months.

Upon its initiation in 1966 medicare was acclaimed as one of the greatest triumphs of our political system. It remains so to this day. My colleague from Provencher put it very eloquently at second reading when he said:

> Medicare is more than medicine and economics. Medicare is a service for individual Canadians and one of the critical bonds of Canadian federalism. Without it, we would suffer both as individuals and as a country.

Those were the remarks made by our Party's critic on health and welfare at second reading of the Bill when we approved that Bill in principle. We did so, Mr. Speaker, in part at second reading stage because of the objectives and purpose of the legislation as spelled out in Clauses 3 and 4. We thought the objectives and the purpose of the Bill were its very heart and core. You can imagine our surprise and astonishment, Sir, and indeed the surprise and astonishment of the many witnesses who had appeared before the committee, when, after all the witnesses had been heard, the Minister moved to change substantially these key clauses with little or no explanation to this date.

I would like to cite the policy objectives which were removed from the original Bill to show the way in which the purpose of the Bill was narrowed when the Minister belatedly changed her mind and brought forward these amendments. I will state what was in the original Bill and what was removed. She deleted from Clause 3 these objectives:

> It is hereby declared that Canadian health care policy should be designed and administered (a) to encourage effective allocation of the nation's health resources; (b) to facilitate the provision of adequate health services throughout Canada—

From Clause 4, the purpose of the Bill, she removed this paragraph:

> The purpose of this Act is to advance the objectives of Canadian health care policy while recognizing the primary responsibility of the provinces for the provision of health care services—

Those were critical statements, objectives and purposes which were removed from the Bill before us today. In that respect, it makes it a lesser Bill than it was at the beginning. Many witnesses with whom I spoke after those amendments were introduced and pushed through by the majority of Government Members of the committee felt that they had been duped, that they had been misled. They appeared before the committee on the basis on which the Bill had been presented to them in which the objectives and the purposes had been spelled out clearly. They provided their testimony on those criteria, not on the radically altered criteria that appear in the Bill today. We argued this at committee stage. I want to point out once again that I think that the changes that have been made in Clauses 3 and 4 by the Minister diminish the Bill.

I wish to turn my attention for a few minutes to two amendments which, after lengthy argument and debate, were accepted by the Government. At least the concept was accepted. The first deals with the question of guaranteeing medical practitioners a reasonable payment for their services. As Mr. Justice Hall pointed out to the committee, the elimination of extra billing should require that a mechanism be put in place that would guarantee, or at least allow for, a fair and equitable level of compensation for medical practitioners. When Mr.

Justice Hall appeared before the committee, he said on February 14, at page 510 of the committee hearings:

> Accepting that physicians have a right to be fairly and adequately compensated can be stated this way, no more, no less, and the state has a right to be concerned with the problem.

Not only because of his testimony but because we as members of the committee and as an Opposition Party felt there should be fairness and equity in the system if extra billing was to be eliminated, as it is in this Bill, we proposed, and the Minister referred to this this morning, that Clause 12 be amended to add a new section. That proposal was put forward by my colleague for Provencher. He said that the new Bill—> —must provide for reasonable compensation for insured health services rendered by medical practitioners and dentists by the enactment of a law providing for negotiation of compensation with the provincial organization representing a majority of the practising physicians in the province and for the settlement of disputes by conciliation on binding arbitration at the option of the medical profession's organization by a panel.

This panel was to represent both medical professionals and the Government to ensure that all parties were equally treated. We thought that would be a proper mechanism to be built into the legislation. I quoted the amendment at length. I did so because I wanted to ensure that I made a specific point. While the Government did not accept our amendment, feeling that perhaps it was too strong and had gone too far, nevertheless it did force the Government to agree to the concept that we were advocating.

Later, government members introduced a watered-down version of that amendment. That was no small achievement in itself. It was not what we thought would be adequate, but it at least introduced the concept of fair and adequate compensation. We tried to strengthen that at report stage. While it was not all we wanted, it has gone some way to meeting the concerns that we, members of the medical profession and I believe the public at large feel, realizing that this system has to have measures of equity and fairness built in.

Similarly with the second amendment. We listened to many representations, notably that of the Canadian Nurses' Association who argued so eloquently and presented their case so strongly that the definition of those who provide health care services in this country should be broadened to include those other than doctors and dentists. That was a very great concept to put forward. It meant that doctors and dentists would no longer be the sole point of entry into the health care system, thereby permitting the future reorientation of the system from one of illness treatment to one of illness prevention and non-hospital care. Without a doubt, that is one of the major changes that has been made to this bill.

If I may be permitted to refer to the original amendment that was put forward in committee by myself, our version stated as follows:

> Health care practitioner means a person lawfully entitled to practise a health care profession in the place in which the practice is carried on by that person.

It would have done more to reorient our health care system to a "wellness" concept than an "illness" concept. Even though the Government did not accept it in its entirety, it did accept the concept. That has been a major step forward in the system of health care delivery in this country.

I would like at this point to bring to the attention of the Minister a concern that has been raised with me since the Bill came out of committee. It is one which had not been dealt with in committee and which is now causing some concern. I may be wrong in my interpretation of the rules, but before debate ends at third reading, the Minister has the option of closing off the debate with a few words. If she does that, I would urge her to address the concern that I raise. It is something the committee did not deal with and it may be that there was a minor oversight that should be addressed.

I speak of the funding of research in teaching hospitals and the adverse effects that this new Bill may have upon that funding. This point was raised in a letter that was sent to the Minister, a copy of which was forwarded to me by Dr. Lawrence Wilson, Dean of the Faculty of Medicine, Queens University. He wrote to the Minister in this regard. He said:

> In examining the possible consequences of passage of the Canada Health Act, I am concerned about one of the provisions of the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act which will be repealed. The regulations under the latter act clearly set out that the indirect cost of research in hospitals was an "allowable" cost under the Hospital Insurance Plan.
> If the Act is repealed and no reference is made to such costs, we can expect a further reduction of funding of our teaching hospitals. And this would occur in a climate where significant under-funding already takes place. This in turn will have a most discouragingly negative effect on the research potential of Canadian medical schools.

● (1220)

Dr. Wilson brought that to the attention of the Minister and myself and he describes the situation most clearly. It may be that the committee failed to come to grips with that particular concern and, if so, I would hope that the Minister and her officials would look into the matter and see whether or not the point that Dr. Wilson raises is a valid one and whether or not the regulations in the former Act have in fact been transferred to the new Bill so that that issue will be covered. After all, medicare involves the quality of medical service and not simply its cost. It is that quality that is tied up with research and the funding to research in medical schools.

There is one area, however, in which the quality of medical service and its costs are inextricably linked. I refer to the question I raised earlier, which is the reform of our health care system from one of acute hospital care to one of preventive and, to a lesser degree, non-hospital care. That no doubt was an issue that was addressed by almost every witness who came before the committee.

As I indicated earlier, the use of the term "health care practitioner" and not just that of "medical practitioner" opened the door to such a reform. I must say, however, that that opening is little more than a crack which will be of small use if no further action is taken by other governments.

Dr. Helen Glass, the President of the Canadian Nurses' Association, wrote to me the other day after the Bill had come out of committee. Her letter included this statement:

> In our view, this change—

She means the inclusion of the term "health care practitioner".

—allows for a better, more appropriate use of all health care practitioners in the delivery of health services which can better meet the health care needs of Canadians. While it is not all we had hoped for, it will open the window to the future, in assisting all those involved with health care delivery to begin the process of matching health care needs to insured services which must be available to the Canadian public.

That statement was made by the National President of the Canadian Nurses' Association in response to the changes that were made in committee. That association welcomes those changes but, as I said, it thinks it is only a small step forward and there is a great deal yet to be done.

One obvious question arises from the statements of Dr. Glass and from the statements of others we heard from in committee regarding this very issue. Why is such a reform necessary? Why should we move from the situation that prevails at the present time where the front line of medical care lies with medical practitioners and the hospitals? Why should we move the front line from that very critical area of care into the communities and into a preventive health care system? Why should that come about? What possible advantages could result from that?

Well, Sir, I believe that the answer to this question is two-fold. First, by reducing the emphasis on acute hospital care, there would be a much greater incentive and willingness to treat the sick and the elderly in their own homes, in community clinics or in places where they cannot now receive front line treatment. Such a move, I think, would greatly reduce the trauma and the emotional upheaval that is so often associated with entering hospitals. As well, it would begin to make us as a society much more conscious of the need to begin to take care of our own health rather than always leaving it in the hands of someone else. There is a responsibility upon us as Canadians to begin to say to ourselves that we have a need to take care of our own health. We need to know the ways in which we can take care of our own health and not always leave it up to someone to take care of us when we become ill. I think that is the direction in which the reform of the whole health care system can be moved.

Just as important as that is the fact that over the long term, and I emphasize the long term, by concentrating a great deal more than we do at the present time on preventive and outpatient care, we could greatly reduce the staggering financial burden which our health care services impose upon society. If we could begin to move these health care services into the community, it could eventually begin to reduce the tremendously high-cost services that are now delivered in hospitals by medical practitioners. I would think, Sir, that that would be a facet of the situation which we would want to take into consideration. However, I say that knowing that it will not happen overnight and that, indeed, the paradox of it might be that in the short term it might have to cost more. I am not going to hide from that particular fact. We know that it would require additional new funds to reform the system. In close co-operation with the provinces, the federal Government would have to pay its share for an expanded number of insured services as well as perhaps some of the capital costs involved with new buildings, new equipment and support services. However, if we are to truly rationalize our health care system in the country, I believe this move to be essential.

If this matter is so important, and I believe it is, one could rightly ask why the committee did not deal with it. The problem comes back to this Bill. This Bill does not really allow us to deal with that most fundamental question. It deals with the adequate funding of the health care system, the expenditure of additional funds and the changing expenditure of additional funds, but that can only be introduced by the Government after very meaningful consultation with the provinces. It could not be introduced by opposition members in committee. Opposition members could not bring forward the expenditure or reallocation of moneys now in the system because we are not permitted under the rules of Parliament to do so. Nevertheless, Sir, on many occasions we indicated that we do not believe that the funding is as efficiently carried out as it should be at the present time. Indeed, the committee was powerless to act in this regard but I think it has spoken up and raised enough concerns about it that we know that that is the way we will have to proceed in the future.

We on this side of the House will continue to work toward what we consider to be real health care reform. We do not believe this Bill really comes to grips with what we call meaningful health care reform. We will continue to work toward that goal. We were successful, we believe, in improving Bill C-3 in some regards but the changes, though minor, were a step in the right direction. The hearings of the committee, however, proved to all of us that there is much work that remains to be done. The challenge to us is self-evident. All that is required is the courage to get on with it.

In closing, therefore, I would like to reaffirm my Party's support for this Bill. I would also reaffirm, Sir, the support of this Party for the larger question of improving the entire field of health care services in the country.

[Translation]

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, thank you for allowing me to put a question to the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald).

[English]

Some parts of the Hon. Member's speech I could debate but really, we agree to disagree. I wonder if she would be kind enough to contact Dr. Lawrence Wilson, the Dean of Medicine at Queen's University? I do not have the right to speak in any other final way at third reading; that is only permitted on second reading.

The problem of research in hospitals in that for 18 years, subject to federal-provincial negotiations and agreements, some of the overhead cost of research in hospitals was cost-shared on a 50-50 basis. All the cost-sharing agreements disappeared when block funding came into effect about seven years ago. The overhead cost of research that was included in cost-sharing was built into the new financial base and is therefore in the block funding grants, but it is no longer attributable to any particular hospital. The province gets the money.

Of course, the MRC and the NHRDP programs continue their medical research funding. The problem is that since block funding, Dr. Wilson or any other medical researcher, can no longer put their overhead under special cost-sharing but it is included in what we pay to the provinces. I do not know how it is passed on.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that the rules permit the Minister and myself to get into a dialogue at this point. I appreciate the way she has posed the question, asking me to get in touch with Dr. Wilson. This is a complicated issue and I have raised it so that the Minister and her officials will look at it.

I appreciate the way she has posed her question and also the information she supplied but perhaps the Minister could respond to Dr. Wilson's letter and be good enough to send me a copy of her reply.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald). She will be aware of this last-minute flurry of concern on the part of the provincial health ministers which was referred to earlier by the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes). Their eleventh-hour concern has a lot to do with the amendment on binding arbitration and the relationship between provincial government and doctors set out in Clause 12 of the Bill.

I wonder if the Hon. Member could undertake to speak to those of her Progressive Conservative colleagues who are Ministers of Health in most of the provinces and tell them, as I have endeavoured to do with the Minister of Health who is of this Party, that the clause is not what they think it is; it is not binding. In fact, that is the complaint that the Hon. Member and the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) had. Indeed, the Hon. Member for Oxford moved an amendment which, if accepted, would have made the clause binding. I should like to ask the Hon. Member if she would be willing to get the message across—perhaps she has already endeavoured to do so—that this is not what it appears to be; it is not binding.

I hope we will not find ourselves in the position that I had an inkling of from the remarks of the Hon. Member for Calgary West and other members of the Progressive Conservative Party that they might be calling for the Minister to meet with the provincial health ministers over a concern that the Conservatives feel is not there in the Bill.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I can say that I have been in touch with certain ministers. The Hon. Member will know of my close association with the Minister of Health in the Province of Ontario. Representing the same constituency, as we do, we have had an opportunity to discuss this. I have attempted to bring to this clause the clarification that the Hon. Member has outlined. Prior to introducing the motion that we did, which, as has been pointed out, was a much stronger motion with regard to mechanism that would have introduced a fair and reasonable compensation for the medical profession, we had conveyed it to the health ministers. They knew our intentions.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, it is not often one gets a chance to question Conservatives so one must take every opportunity that is presented.

The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands raised the question of funding and said that we were not able to do some of the things she wanted done, that I wanted done, that other members of the committee and witnesses before the committee wanted done, because there was not a willingness on the part of the Government to reopen the question of federal funding or a political willingness to provide more federal funding.

Having that in mind and the commitment made by her Leader this summer that a future Progressive Conservative Government would provide more federal funding for medicare, could I ask the Hon. Member if the commitment stands? Would a Progressive Conservative Government provide more federal money for health care and would it be willing to renegotiate—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I should remind the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) that comments and questions must relate to remarks made by the previous speaker.

Mr. Blaikie: They do.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I may have missed the point. The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) will reply.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I would reinforce the commitment made last year by my Leader with regard to funding of the health care system in this country. He said what he would do—the additional funds he would want to see put into the system. I would ask the Hon. Member to go back to Manitoba and urge the good folk of Manitoba to vote Conservative in the next election. That way they will be sure of getting better health care services in this country.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I should like to indicate that there are many other ways for the people of Manitoba to accomplish the same end with a happier political effect.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Debate. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, this is one of those rare opportunities one is presented with in political life, and I hope there are more, when one has been able to follow a political issue through what we might call a chapter in history—in this case of medicare. I believe that chapter began in 1977. What we are seeing now is an effort on the part of the federal Government to shore up and correct some of the consequences of the mistake it made in 1977 when it went to block funding and gave up some of the control and influence it had over medicare prior to that time.

I say it corrects some of the consequences, not all of them. The federal Government also needs to be willing to reopen the federal-provincial relationship. I have had much to say about that all along and I still believe it to be the case. Nevertheless, we are coming to the end of a chapter in the history of medicare which I am particularly pleased to have been a part of, having called on the Minister many times in the four years in which I have been the New Democratic Party health critic to do something about extra billing and user fees, to bring in some legislation. I remember commenting on the recommendations of Mr. Justice Emmett Hall in September, 1980. I was a member of the task force on federal-provincial arrangements in 1981, which called for many of the things we now see before us in the Canada Health Act, particularly the increased flexibility on the part of the federal Government to respond to violations of the principles of Medicare by the provinces by being able gradually to withhold moneys from those provinces. That was one of the key recommendations of the task force. One does not always have the satisfaction of being able to point to things which one had an opportunity to recommend, along with other Hon. Members of Parliament, and to see them come into force.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With the indulgence of the Hon. Member, may I be allowed to interrupt his remarks briefly so I may convey a message to the House?

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received as follows:

Government House
Ottawa

March 29, 1984

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Roland A. Ritchie, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 29th of March, 1984, a 12.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

I have the honour to be
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Edmond Joly de Lotbinière,
Administrative Secretary to the Governor General

CANADA HEALTH ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss Bégin that Bill C-3, an Act relating to cash contributions by Canada in respect of insured health services provided under provincial health care insurance plans and amounts payable by Canada in respect of extended health care services and to amend and repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Could I have some clarification, Mr. Speaker? Does that announcement mean that in a few minutes we are all going to rise and go to the Senate and watch a little lawn bowling and then come back? I would like the people who might be watching, Mr. Speaker, to know exactly what is going on and why things are being interrupted in this particular way.

As I was saying, we are at the end of a particular chapter in the history of medicare. The history and the future of medicare is something which we in the New Democratic Party take particularly seriously, having been instrumental from the beginning in seeing it pioneered in Saskatchewan. The first time hospitalization insurance was introduced was in Saskatchewan in 1948. The first time medicare happened was in Saskatchewan in 1962. Recently, we have had a part to play all along in the development of medicare, from warning the Government in 1977 about the consequences of block funding to our opposition to the unilateral federal cutbacks in 1982, and to our participation over the last few years in calling on the Government to do something about extra billing and user fees.

I am, therefore, proud to stand here, Mr. Speaker, I hope very much in the tradition of people like Tommy Douglas, Stanley Knowles, Woodrow Lloyd, and others who have had so much to contribute to the development of medicare in this country. I hope that what is accomplished here today, and in subsequent days through the third reading and passage of this Bill, will come to be seen as a significant development in the history of medicare. But history will have to judge that. We cannot because the jury is still out. There is still no verdict as to whether this Bill will have the effect which the Minister, and I imagine all Hon. Members, hope it will; that is, the elimination of extra billing and user fees.

Why is the Bill so important, Mr. Speaker, despite its flaws? It is important, Mr. Speaker, because of the consensus it represents. I am very grateful and delighted that the unanimous support for the Bill has held through committee and despite whatever pressures there may have been on other Parties in this House to be more critical of the Bill. I am very happy that the consensus against extra billing and user fees has held, and it shows every sign of holding until the day very soon from now when we can all rise in our place and vote for this Bill. There is a chance now, Mr. Speaker, that the—

Here they come, Mr. Speaker; they are calling on us to go to the Senate. All the more reason to abolish them, Mr. Speaker, because they are interrupting our business in this way.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[Translation]

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable Deputy to the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the Chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate Chamber.

• (1250)

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that when the House went up to the Senate Chamber, the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give in Her Majesty's name the Royal Assent to the following Bills:

Bill C-27, An Act for granting to the Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1984—Chapter No. 3;

Bill C-28, An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1985—Chapter No. 4.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, it is always refreshing to be back in the House of Commons after a trip down the way to the museum at the other end of the building. I wonder if I might—

Mr. Speaker: With all due respect to the Hon. Member, the practices of this House are such that references to the other place are not made with disrespect. I am sure the Hon. Member would wish to observe the traditions and practices of this House.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, it is always nice to be in the House of Commons after having been to the other place. I was wondering if we could not agree to call it one o'clock?

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock later this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

TAX CREDITS AND ALLOWABLE POLITICAL ACTIVITY

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, in November of 1974, the then Secretary of State, the Hon. Hugh Faulkner, told the first Conference of National Voluntary Organizations that he was creating a national advisory council on voluntarism. Four areas were identified for investigation and recommendation for government action. First in importance was the need to modernize the definition of "allowable charitable advocacy", that is, to permit government support to groups that oppose its policies or urge other action.

Now, ten years later and six Secretaries of State later, the Government is promising a task force but no incentives to encourage Canadian voluntary groups.

Beginning this Sunday, April 1, the National Voluntary Organizations, representing the 125 largest national agencies, will meet in Ottawa for "Consultation 84". Conscious of the pending general election, the delegates will develop strategies around the question: "What kind of Canada do we want for 2001?"

Mindful of a decade of broken Liberal promises, Canada's NVOs continue to ask for government action in two priority areas: first, the implementation of the give and take 50 per cent charitable tax credit; and, second, an agreement on the definition of allowable political activity by charities.

AIR TRANSPORT

SERVICES IN EASTERN QUEBEC

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Mr. Speaker, eastern Quebec is very discouraged about the whole issue of air transportation. When I say eastern Quebec, I mean the North Shore, of course, and the Gaspé.

Mr. Speaker, Quebecair has shown its contempt for the people of these regions by completely changing its schedules and the kind of aircraft it is using to carry passengers, and it has done so without consulting with the communities concerned, I am referring to the Madgalen Islands, the Gaspé, the North Shore and Quebec's northernmost regions.

I therefore ask that the Canadian Transport Commission consult as soon as possible with the people concerned, with a view to providing safe and efficient air transportation that will be available to all users in these regions.

On the North Shore and in the Gaspé, air transportation is an essential service for the travelling public, and I think it is absolutely vital that the Canadian Transport Commission rule on the issue once and for all. Mr. Speaker, I would also ask that Air Canada, from now on, use its licence to cover the route Sept-Îles-Quebec City-Montreal, and Montreal-Quebec City-Sept-Îles, in order to compete with the existing service, because at the present time, both the North Shore and the South Shore have no choice but to fly Quebecair, and it is impossible to get decent service.

Even if the region is experiencing economic problems, it is not right that two companies that are financed by Quebec taxpayers should keep these people in a state of deprivation as far as air services are concerned and for such a long time.

YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, generations have been lost in wars, generations have been lost in economic depressions. Another generation is adrift in the chaos of Liberal economic mismanagement.

Our youth today are victimized, jobless, and untrained. They are dropped like loose change as they wait to inherit the bill for this Government's reckless, unchecked credit card approach to financial management.

The Government's legacy to our youth is the national debt that has provided them with neither training nor employment. The bloated deficit spews forth higher interest rates, crushing the hopes of our youth.

Under the pressure of sliding self worth and despair, too many are collapsing into crime, alcoholism, drugs, prostitution, and suicide. The 15 to 24 age group has the largest incidence of suicide of any group. That is the highest price imaginable for man or woman to pay.

Let us remember this stark horror when we think about the Liberal slush funds that cheat the unemployed and patronize the friends of the Liberals.

As the dishonesty of the last Budget becomes more vivid every day, there is nothing forthcoming from the Government to deal with youth unemployment, the national catastrophe, the horror story of this century. It does not have to be this way. With a decent Government, the youth of this country can realize their dreams.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

SIXTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF FOUNDING OF ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my concern that an outstanding event in our national history might pass without due recognition in the House. I refer to the sixtieth anniversary of the founding of the Royal Canadian Air Force.

From its inception on April 1, 1924, and throughout its 44-year history, the RCAF earned a reputation for dedication and excellence that placed it second to no other air force in the world. The preservation of peace was the RCAF's most important task, and its successes in this regard are now well chronicled for history. Also important were the contributions made by the RCAF in the exploration and development of our vast country, the provision of personnel and equipment for civil and humanitarian assistance, and the building of strong citizens and leaders for our communities.

Many Canadians, civil as well as military, contributed to the success of the RCAF. Their sense of vision, high ideals and standards, and their traditions are carried on today in the air element of the Canadian Forces. I am certain that I can speak for all Canadians when I express pride in our great Canadian air heritage, and congratulate all those associated with the Royal Canadian Air Force and, more recently, the Canadian Forces.

MULTICULTURALISM

EQUALITY NOW REPORT RECOMMENDATIONS—NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY SUPPORT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, it is unusual for Party Leaders to participate in this time period which is normally used by other Members of the House, but I do so today because of the great importance of the subject matter. I refer to the report by an all-Party committee of the House entitled Equality Now. It is a report that concerns the multicultural nature of our country.

We in our Party believe that multiculturalism should become a day-to-day reality in every aspect of Canadian life and not merely a token gesture that occurs from time to time in the political bodies of this land. The NDP has previously committed itself to many of the key recommendations of this report and, in particular, I want to underline five of them which we think should be acted upon immediately by the Government of the day. These include: first, the creation of a full fledged Department of Multiculturalism with its own Deputy Minister; second, the establishment of a permanent Standing Committee on Multiculturalism in the House of Commons; third, affirmative action programs for the visible minorities in the Public Service; fourth, the establishment of CRTC guidelines to prevent stereotypical and inadequate portrayal of visible minorities in the media.

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member, but the time normally allotted has expired. Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. Member to continue?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Broadbent: I urge the House to adopt the recommendations.

INCOME TAX ACT

EXTENSION OF TUITION EXPENSE DEDUCTIONS SOUGHT FOR PARENTS OF UNEMPLOYED YOUTH

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain), has just underlined the devastation that is facing a generation of our youth, the age group between 15 and 24 who are largely unemployed and the most hardest hit sector of our unemployed population. For many of them this is a time of disorientation, discouragement and, in fact, a total waste of time. Yet this would be an excellent time for them to spend their time in educational institutions, a time at which they could prepare for the coming technological age, not only for jobs but also for leisure time. At the same time it is a time when they are broke and they cannot afford that kind of expense to pay the tuition.

• (1410)

For many of them their parents would be willing to pay the tuition fees even if the children are of the age of majority if they could use that expense as a tax deductible item. I would urge the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) to look at the plight of these unemployed, encourage them to go to school, allow the parents to deduct the tuition expense as a tax deductible item in order that the young people could prepare themselves for the coming technological age, and also in order to use that time for better use as leisure time.

EMPLOYMENT

LACK OF OPPORTUNITIES IN RURAL AREAS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, some federal constituencies received a total of $3 million of support funding from Canada Works and "LEAD" Programs this year. In my constituency, Crowfoot, only the bare minimum of $100,000 was allocated.

The vast majority of government assistance programs are based on data collected by Statistics Canada with respect to rates of unemployment. Government officials and policy makers argue that a high rate of unemployment is the single legitimate reason for infusion of government incentives. This mentality, at first blush, seems logical, but in reality is robbing vast regions of rural Canada of opportunities for growth. There has not been a smoke stack in my constituency since Chief Crowfoot's teepee caught on fire some time in the last century.

So ingrained is the belief in many parts of rural Canada that the surrounding hamlets, villages, and towns have no industries and, therefore no jobs, that any student who is worth a pinch of coon's breath, automatically and deliberately leaves for a larger centre as soon as he or she exits high school. Rural communities export their unemployed.

There are, of course, fewer unemployed persons in rural Canada. It does not follow in logic that we can then conclude that employment opportunities are plentiful.

It is high time that we look beyond the mirrored veil that has led Governments to false conclusions about why unemployment exists.

Rural Canada is forced to export the unemployed. Most of the unemployed from my constituency are on lists in Lethbridge, Calgary, Red Deer, or Edmonton.

Mr. Speaker: I must interrupt the Hon. Member to advise him that his time has expired.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRINCIPAL BUDGETS OF MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): I rise today, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the entire NDP caucus to denounce the March 22 announcement by the Commissioners of Internal Economy that the principal budgets of MPs would be increased by a mere 4 per cent.

This decision by a group of Liberal cabinet Ministers flies in the face of the recommendations of an all-Party committee that the principal budgets of Members should be increased substantially to allow Members to give their assistants just and equitable pay increases and bring staff salaries in line with those of other House of Commons employees.

The NDP caucus cannot accept the injustice inherent in the decision of the Commissioners of Internal Economy. All Members of this House know that their assistants work long hours with no extra compensation, have little or no job security, and now they have been condemned to remain second class employees in relation to other House of Commons staff.

This is an issue that transcends party lines and I, on behalf of the entire NDP caucus, urge all Members of Parliament to voice their indignation and outrage at the arrogant and grossly unfair decision of the Commissioners of Internal Economy.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

NATIONAL REVENUE

REASSIGNMENT OF DEPUTY MINISTER

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. On February 24 the Minister had seven occasions on which he could have given a vote of confidence to his Deputy Minister. He refused to do so. This morning, in a formal way, the axe fell on Bruce MacDonald. Clearly he is the scapegoat. He is the one to carry the can.

I ask the Minister two questions. First, will the Minister please clearly state the reasons why Mr. MacDonald was dumped? Second, what responsibility does the Minister assign to himself for the tremendous chaos that exists within Revenue Canada? What responsibility does the Minister assign to himself for the maltreatment and the maladministration of his Department?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I first want to correct the Hon. Member's question. The Deputy Minister of National Revenue was not fired.

An Hon. Member: He escaped.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bussières: He was reassigned to other responsibilities in the Privy Council Office.

Second, I want to tell the Hon. Member that I want to continue with my work with the officials of the Department—

Mr. Crosbie: What work?

Mr. Bussières: —in order to serve the Canadian taxpayers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Feeble applause.

Mr. Speyer: Mr. Speaker, Mr. MacDonald is being used as a sacrificial lamb. He is the one the Liberals have assigned to carry the can for the irresponsibility of the Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister of National Revenue have any intention whatsoever, because ministerial responsibility is assigned to him, of tendering his resignation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hey, hey!

Mr. Trudeau: I am glad on this side we have a Leader that the other side can say "Ho, ho, hey!" at. But when does their Leader show up?

Some Hon. Members: Never.

Mr. Trudeau: Never.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: He asked you a question yesterday.

Mr. Crosbie: Try to be relevant.

Mr. Trudeau: I would want to answer that question very simply, Mr. Speaker. If the Minister had any idea of retiring, I would have dissuaded him and refused his resignation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speyer: It is very interesting to me, Mr. Speaker, seeing a lame duck Prime Minister defending the indefensible.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FARLINGER STUDY

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I have another question for the Minister of National Revenue. Over two months ago Mr. Farlinger was assigned the task of looking into the administration of Revenue Canada. He was to report to the Minister on an interim basis on what he found.

Has the Minister talked to Mr. Farlinger? Has he talked about the administration of the day-to-day activities of Mr. MacDonald? Was any weight placed on Mr. Farlinger's representations in the reassignment of the Deputy Minister?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have to make it clear that the Hon. Member does not know what he is talking about. Deputy Ministers are not reassigned by Ministers. Deputy Ministers are appointed on the recommendation of the Prime Minister, not of the Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SUGGESTED APPOINTMENT OF OMBUDSMAN

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, my question is also addressed to the Minister of National Revenue. The Minister appointed Mr. Farlinger to investigate the Department. The Prime Minister fired the Deputy Minister as he just stated. The Department is now putting cute little ads in the paper to try to appear to be helpful. It is the first time the Department has done so in six years.

Mr. Nielsen: At a cost of $300,000.

Mr. McDermid: The Minister is saying that Members should contact district offices to solve the problems. Then, lo and behold, last weekend the Minister went out to Vancouver, admitted he could not solve the problems of his Department, and suggested that the Government appoint an ombudsman to solve the problems of the Department. Don't you think that is enough evidence to demand the Minister's resignation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member stated something which is false in his question, that Mr. MacDonald had been fired. He has not been fired, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Crosbie: Dispensed with, emasculated, removed.

Mr. Fraser: Wasted.

Mr. Trudeau: If I did not have extreme confidence in the competence of Mr. MacDonald, first, he would not have stayed in his Department for six years and eight months, because that is way above the average, that is way above the three to five years that have been recommended by the Lambert Commission as a normal assignment time. Therefore, I kept Mr. MacDonald there because I believed, and I still believe, that he was doing a good job. I also believe that Mr. Farlinger's report will show that he was doing a good job. He was reassigned. He was not fired.

Second, he was reassigned to the Privy Council Office, and that is not a place where we take incompetents. That is a place where we take people who can do a job.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1420)

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): It is interesting to note that the Deputy Minister has been there for six years, but after six months of heat he is soon moved out of there and hidden somewhere in the back of the Privy Council Office where no one will see or hear from him again.

Does the Minister accept any responsibility for the mismanagement of that Department at all? If so, why does he not do the honourable thing, submit his resignation and admit he has been a complete failure?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, Members opposite have been complaining for at least six months about how badly this Government,—this Department—had been administered.

Some Hon. Members: Right on.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: They have been asking the Minister almost daily why he did not take a grip on that Department, why he did not deal with some officials who were displeasing the Canadian taxpayers and why he did not intervene with officials at various levels. Now they are suddenly discovering that everything was perfect in that Department and only the Minister is wrong. If anybody was to blame, perhaps I should have considered moving Mr. MacDonald earlier, but I did not want to do it until the Tory task force has finished its hearings and is prepared to make some kind of recommendation.

Mr. Crosbie: Sixteen years of irresponsibility.

Mr. McDermid: There is enough evidence to prove he should be moved.

Mr. McKnight: You are not helping him, Pierre.

Mr. Trudeau: The only thing that is certain is that the people sitting on that side should not be moved. They should stay there for a long while yet.

Mr. McDermid: It is not going to happen and you know it, Prime Minister.

FINANCE

INCREASE IN BANK OF CANADA INTEREST RATE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. We have just learned that the Bank of Canada has increased interest rates again for the sixth week in a row. This is bad news for farmers, small businesses, home owners, and for the more than 1.5 million Canadian men and women who would like to get a job. This is bad policy from the Government of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The Minister is always talking about the necessity of sending appropriate signals out to Canadians to build confidence in the future. Why did the Government of Canada not send the right signal out today by saying no to this increase in the interest rate by the Bank of Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, last week when the Hon. Leader of the NDP was travelling in northern Ontario he had some hallucinations, no doubt coming from the aurora borealis, to the effect that there was a great conflict between the Governor of the Bank of Canada and myself. That was absolutely without foundation and was an irresponsible statement for a man, who claims he is a responsible man, to make.

Today he is no more knowledgeable when he speaks about terrible increases in interest rates and what that will do to farmers, small business people, et cetera.

First of all, the Bank of Canada does not set the rate. That rate is set by the market for Treasury Bills every Thursday.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, the Bank of Canada rate went up today by two one-hundredths of one per cent. That is a terrible increase which is going to stop the economy dead in its tracks no doubt, if we listen to what the Hon. Leader of the NDP is saying. He knows very well that a change like this does not, and will not, make any difference to the interest rates, whether the prime rates at the banks, the consumer loans, or the mortgage rates. We do not expect any impact from this development today on the interest rates which are being charged to Canadians.

Oral Questions

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister says they do not expect any impact. If they do not expect any impact why did they go ahead and do it?

The Minister also notes that this incremental increase is really not that important. Two years ago we went through such incremental increases week after week and the Government did not do anything about it. Interest rates went right up to 22 per cent. That type of thing can happen. We in this Party want the Government to take action to stop it.

After interest rates went up for the fourth time a question was put to the Government which linked unemployment with increases in the interest rates. I will repeat that question to this Minister now. The question was : "—will the hon. gentleman tell the House whether the Government intends to abandon its policy of deliberately creating unemployment—" by pursuing these high interest rates? I would like to ask the Minister that again today.

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the answer will be very short and very quick. It is exactly the same as the one I gave to the previous question. The Government policy is not to maintain high interest rates, but to keep them as low as possible. Our policy is to create as many jobs as fast as possible in Canada. It is not a policy such as the one advocated by the Hon. Member.

[English]

EFFECT OF INTEREST RATES ON UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell the Minister that that question came after the fourth interest rate increase that occurred in 1979. The interest rates were then raised by the Conservative Government of the day. The question came from the Hon. Member for Windsor West. The Minister's answer today was exactly the same answer that the Hon. Member for St. John's West gave a couple of years ago.

Mr. Crosbie: Think up your own answers, Marc.

Mr. Deans: It is because they both think alike that they give the same answers.

Mr. Broadbent: If it was true in 1979 that high interest rates increased unemployment when the Conservative Party was in government, will he please provide his wisdom to the people of Canada and tell us why unemployment will not worsen when a Liberal Government increases interest rates?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I answered that question several times last week. I suppose my hon. colleague was once again not in the House, and perhaps he could read Hansard from time to time. If he does, he will realize that I explained that in spite of the increase in interest rates in Canada and the United States during the last few weeks, we should not necessarily conclude this will have a negative impact on employment and the growth rate of the Canadian economy any more than it does on the U.S. economy. In fact, although interest rates in the United States started to go up in January and February, the American economy's rate of growth was higher than it had been for many months. So there is no automatic and immediate connection between a slight increase in interest rates and slower growth and increased unemployment. Such a connection cannot possibly be established as directly and simplistically as the Hon. Member suggests. I may remind him that in Canada, in 1980 and 1981 for instance, interest rates rose rapidly, and for several months the Canadian economy continued its growth and unemployment continued to drop, despite the fact there had been an increase in interest rates.

The Government does not favour an increase in interest rates. Once again, our policy is to have the lowest possible interest rates, although I realize that people would prefer to have rates that are lower than those we have at the present time. However, I repeat that we cannot adopt the NDP's philosophy which boils down to saying: Stop the world, I want to get off. We are living in the real world, we are on the North American continent, and the Canadian and U.S. economies are extremely interdependent. To ignore this elementary fact is to be totally unrealistic, which is, I would say, rather typical of the NDP.

THE ECONOMY

CONFERENCE BOARD OF CANADA FORECAST

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. I would like to point out to the Leader of the New Democratic Party that the Minister of Finance faces the same problem I did. I faced 12 years of irresponsible Liberal Government wreckage of the economy. He faces 16 years of the same. That is why the interest rates are going up.

We have a very sombre forecast from the Conference Board today. It predicts a slowing in the pace of economic growth. It predicts just 3.3 per cent this year and .5 per cent for next year, with the possibility of a recession in 1985. It says the unemployment rate shows no improvement and in fact will be rising over the next few months. It says the most notable factor causing this outlook is the continuing high level of the interest rates.

• (1430)

The Minister has consistently downplayed the influence of high interest rates. When will he make the adjustments that he said last Monday he could make? When will the Minister start making those adjustments? When will the Minister bring in a Budget that has an effect on the economy rather than no effect, leaving people in the pickle they are now?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will have to explain. I know the Liberal Government and Liberal Party have been in charge of this country for most of the last 16 years. I told my friend I was going to make an important speech on the subject yesterday. I invite him to read it. In fact I have taken the trouble of personally sending him a copy. I hope he will read it from beginning to end. He will find that, compared to any other industrialized country, over the last 16 years the record in Canada compares favourably. In fact it is better than most other industrial countries during that period.

In order to save time and to help educate the Hon. Member, I will send him a copy now across the aisle. It will be very helpful if he gets this important address delivered to La Chambre de Commerce de l'Outaouais in Hull, Quebec last night.

Second, if he wants to blame us for the rise in interest rates, he will have to explain to me why they have risen by the same amount in the United States in the last few months. In fact they started to rise in the United States before they began to rise in Canada.

Finally, my friend refers to the Conference Board forecast. He knows that for the last several months this has consistently been the most pessimistic of all forecasts. Instead of spending his time trying to find the gloomiest possible forecasts, I invite him to look at the most recent figures for growth in the gross domestic product. He will find that in January the gross domestic product, the Canadian economy, grew by 1.3 per cent in that single month. If he were to project that over a full year, which I do not, it would generate something like 16.3 per cent growth. That would be totally unrealistic, but the economy is not in a state of going into a recession. It has gone from a stage of recovery to a stage of expansion. We intend to continue our policies to achieve that purpose.

REQUEST FOR STOP TO TAX INCREASES

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, the weaker the Minister's ground, the more gaseous he gets. The trouble with the Minister's speeches is that the unemployed cannot eat them. I want to ask the honourable ostrich this—the Conference Board forecasts continuing high interest rates for Canada, with all the bad consequences that has for consumer spending, residential construction and so on. It notes that tax increases in Canada sharply contrast to the United States where they have real growth and real job creation. Will the Minister now take action to stop these tax increases in Canada, the 1 per cent increase in sales tax in October and the increase in income tax? Will he stop that so that we can get growth in jobs and growth in the economy like they have in the United States?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, hearing the Hon. Member, the Canadian public will have no difficulty in concluding why they should continue to leave that Party in opposition for another 16 years. The only outlook they give to the country is one of pessimism, doubt, self-doubt, a lack of confidence in this country, and an outlook that offers no hope to this country. I invite my friend to look at the figures again. Look at the forecasts that have been made in this country. They forecast real job growth. They forecast real growth in the economy in 1984, not the kind of gloom and doom that the Conservatives are offering as the only alternative.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Feeble applause from Bussières again.

Mr. Nielsen: It sounds like Hull to me.

BANKS AND BANKING

POSSIBLE DEFAULT BY ARGENTINA ON LOAN REPAYMENTS

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance, who undoubtedly is concerned about the possibility of the Argentine defaulting by not paying interest on its international loan commitment. Will the Minister indicate how our banks, under his supervision, got into this unfortunate situation where they have about a $14 billion loan position with various Latin American countries, in sharp contrast to roughly $7 billion to Canadian farmers and only $1 billion to Canadian small business men? Will the Minister explain how, under his supervision, Canadian banks got so exposed? In short, can he assure the House that the loans will be repaid without default?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, since the Hon. Member himself was once involved in certain banking operations—about which I will say no more today—he ought to know that the Minister of Finance has nothing to do with the lending activities of banks.

In fact, Canadian banks have been lending a lot of money to many foreign countries and, generally speaking, those loans have quite often paved the way for the purchase of Canadian goods and services, thus contributing to job creation in Canada. Canadian banks are very active on the international scene and, like banks in other countries such as Europe and the United States, they are doing a great deal of international business which helps Canada. Mexico, Argentina, Brazil and Romania did have some difficulties. I would refer my colleague to the events in recent years, when the international banking community and other international institutions cooperated to make arrangements with those various countries to make sure that they would pay back the money owed to Canada as well as to Canadian banks and other countries.

International organizations and banking institutions are now involved in international negotiations. The best indications are that the Government of Argentina, which is now under a democratic régime, will take the necessary steps with a view to respecting fully all its international commitments. Indeed, the Argentinian Government did say that it knows full well that Argentina's real and long-term interests will best be served if it meets its international obligations.

[English]

ROLE OF EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs, who is in charge of the Export Development Corporation. Has any move been made in that Corporation, presumably at the Minister's direction, to require the Corporation to extend no further credit to the Argentine until matters are clarified? In answering the question, will the Minister indicate what is EDC's current exposure with respect to loans to the Argentine?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the nature of the confidence that I have in the management of the Export Development Corporation is such that it is customary to allow them, with their executive officers and board of directors, to determine the method and amounts of credit that, according to their formula, are appropriate for various countries. The question of lines of credit for Argentina or any other country would be determined in the way that they have always functioned. I have to say that at the present time Argentina is not regarded as a very good credit risk.

PLIGHT OF OLDER UNEMPLOYED WORKERS IN HAMILTON, ONT.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Due to a merger between Consolidated-Bathurst and MacMillan Bloedel, Consolidated-Bathurst closed its plant in Hamilton about a year ago. Of the 225 who lost their jobs, 75 were over the age of 50. They now have no job. They will not qualify for UIC benefits as at the end of next month. There does not appear to be anything under the labour adjustments program that will permit them to be compensated. They have no hope left. Is there anything for them within any of the Government programs presently in effect? Is there anything that the Government can offer that will guarantee that those older workers who lost their jobs through no fault of their own will not have to live in poverty until retirement age?

• (1440)

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman speaks in terms of a guarantee. No one can give absolute guarantees to workers who have lost their occupations as a result of technological change or as a result of a recession. There are extensive programs for training and for retraining which are available, particularly to those who are receiving the benefit of unemployment insurance payments. Something close to $500 million worth of funds is available for training throughout the country. Much of that is available to people who are in the condition described by the Hon. Member.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I must say that that answer is simply not good enough. The fact of the matter is that the Minister knows full well that, for people over age 50, the opportunity to be retrained for any kind of meaningful employment is dramatically reduced as compared to other age groups. He also knows that in the Hamilton area very few employers are employing individuals who are currently unemployed.

RETRAINING PROGRAM INQUIRY

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is quite simple. What about those people who have lost their jobs because of a merger, a decision made by Consolidated-Bathurst and MacMillan Bloedel, and who are now at an age when retraining is virtually impossible and finding another job is almost equally impossible? What kind of program can the Minister now offer to those people to guarantee them that between now and the time they are able to retire legitimately, they will have some kind of income to keep themselves and their families from starvation?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has asked an impossible and obviously flawed question. If he makes the assumption that it is not possible for those people to have jobs, and if he makes the assumption that it is not possible for them to receive training, then obviously it will not be possible to respond to the situation in which they find themselves. He has stacked his question in such a way so as to ensure that there is no possible answer that can be given to it. I am not nearly as pessimistic as he seems to be about the possibility of people of this age finding job opportunities and retraining programs to assist them.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SRI LANKA—INTERNAL CONFLICT

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, but in his absence I would like to direct it to the Minister of External Relations. In July of last year it was reported that hundreds of Tamils were killed and thousands were left homeless in Sri Lanka because of conflicts between government troops and Tamils who were demanding independence for their northern province.

Today I received a call from a representative of the Association of Tamils in Canada who was concerned that 42 Tamils were massacred by government troops in the North of Sri Lanka. His facts differ from the information reported in today's Globe and Mail. To defuse any wild rumours and accusations, could the Minister tell the Tamil Canadians and the House whether his Department was in touch with the High Commissioner, and when, and could he give a status report to the House on the conflict in that country?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, in response to the question of the Hon. Member, the Department keeps in regular contact with our ambassador in Colombo regarding the situation in that troubled land. Canada, of course, expressed its concern in relation to the events of a tragic nature that occurred there some number of months ago. Regarding the circumstances to which the Hon. Member refers today, I am not aware whether there has been a report from the High Commissioner within the past 24 hours, but I will make inquiries in that regard.

EMPLOYMENT

REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL FUNDS TO CREATE JOBS FOR YOUTH

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Since in its last Budget, the Government had set aside $1.3 billion for measures aimed at helping young people find jobs, and considering the fact that the Minister is surely aware that the funding earmarked for Summer Canada-Student Employment will cover only one project out of three that are proposed . . . In the circumstances . . . I have the impression my question should be put to the Minister of State for Youth. Therefore, as the Minister is well aware, there are indications that the funds earmarked for students this summer will cover one project out of three.

Could the Minister inform the House whether she has already made recommendations for additional funding within the $1.3 billion envelope, to give students a better chance?

Hon. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for his question. Hon. Members, both on the Government and Opposition sides, have made a number of representations for additional funding for the Summer Canada Program. Representations have been made to the Committee on Social Development, and next week I will be able to announce how much additional funding our colleagues will receive for the program in the ridings.

NUMBER OF PROJECTS TO BE FUNDED

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Minister's answer is far more informative than the one given by the Minister of Finance yesterday, and I congratulate her.

In the circumstances, since the Minister is aware that this budget covers only one project out of three, could she perhaps inform the House what percentage of the projects that have been presented will be approved, also considering the importance of the purpose of this program, which is to provide jobs for students this summer?

Hon. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that the $150 million will be spent in a way that is satisfactory to all young people in Canada, and that a sizeable portion of this amount will be earmarked for programs for students this summer.

[English]

DISTRIBUTION OF FUNDS

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of State who is responsible for youth programs and is supplementary to the question put by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Joliette. We are certainly encouraged by the Minister's comments. However, could we have the assurance that when additional funds are secured, those additional funds will be given out riding by riding in relation to need, separate and apart from any political affiliation which is the way a senior Minister distributed funds with respect to an earlier program?

Hon. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that the $150 million will be spent for youth, and a good amount of that will be spent for student employment this summer. Not only will funding to this program be increased, it will never be cut by our Government.

PETRO-CANADA

ALLEGATION OF GASOLINE PRICE FIXING

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who has been continually leaving his seat. In his absence, I would direct my question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I see that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has returned to his chair, Mr. Speaker, and I will therefore direct my question to him.

Just a few days ago, the Minister said in the House that if some indication of price fixing by Petro-Canada which was causing consumers to pay more for gas was brought to his attention, he would investigate it. I would like to advise him that a major independent service station chain, Seabrooke Motors Ltd. in East-Central Ontario, has had its supply affected by Petro-Canada. It has been charged more for fuel than it can retail it for in the market today.

Petro-Canada is showing favouritism to its own company-owned and operated service stations, thus cutting off supply to independent dealers. This is driving the price of gasoline up and fixing it at that level. Would the Minister responsible for Petro-Canada, Canada's own oil company, be kind enough to look into this matter and confirm to the House today that there is price fixing, not only at the refinery gate but at the retail level as well?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I cannot confirm such an allegation, but I will look into it. I think that Petro-Canada deals with these matters like any other oil company does. The mandate that it has received from the House of Commons is to do in the marketplace what is commonly done. If something is being done which is unusual or against the law, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has the mandate to make sure that there is no price fixing and collusion among the companies. I think that Petro-Canada is subject to the same laws as any other corporate citizen in the land.

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is aware of the fact that this investigation by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has been going on for eight years. Evidence that has been before the courts has been reported in the newspapers. No one but the Minister is responsible for Petro-Canada, and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is responsible for the consumer.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ACTION

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. If he has the interests of the consumers of Canada at heart and if he will tolerate a 50 cent per gallon change in price on a phone call from Petro-Canada, discriminating against the private, independent chains of petroleum stations across Canada, why will he not do something? Why would he not direct Petro-Canada to stop this price fixing at the refinery gate and at the retail pumps of Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Petro-Canada's job is to do business just like the other oil companies. It must serve its customers competitively while taking market trends into account. Prices are changing regularly on the markets in Quebec, Ontario and elsewhere, and Petro-Canada certainly operates along the same standards and under the same laws as other Canadian companies.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

EXTENSION OF COVERAGE TO TIP INCOME EARNERS IN QUEBEC

Mr. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is for the Minister of Unemployment and Immigration.

As he is aware, thousands of Quebec hotel and restaurant workers who receive tips are impatiently awaiting the results of his discussions with the Quebec Minister of Revenue about their entitlement to Unemployment Insurance benefits. I would like the Minister to tell us about the results of his discussions with Mr. Dean yesterday in Quebec City.

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I met my provincial counterpart, Mr. Dean, yesterday morning to discuss the Quebec Government proposal and examine the situation in this regard. I indicated that it would be impossible for the federal Government to agree with the Quebec proposal at this time because there is now a case before the Supreme Court on the issue. In addition, the Quebec proposal generally concerns the provisions of the law. We would therefore have to consult the other Provinces in order to learn their views before taking any action. The third aspect of the Quebec proposal will certainly require an amendment to the legislation, and it will take some time for this to come before the Canadian Parliament if we do decide to proceed along that line.

I cannot provide any assurance for the short term to the Quebec Government, but I have suggested that it might be worthwhile to raise this issue with the other provincial governments. We would then have to wait and see whether a consensus can be had in the recommendations made by all the Provinces.

MULTICULTURALISM

EQUALITY NOW REPORT—CONTRACT COMPLIANCE LEGISLATION

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. The report entitled Equality Now, which was released yesterday, documents the existence of systemic discrimination in Canada. While that discrimination may not be intentional, the impact is to exclude visible minorities from full and equal participation in Canadian society. I know that the Minister has made positive comment on the report, but I should like to inquire about a specific recommendation.

The report recommends that the Government introduce contract compliance legislation which would require people who contract with the federal Government to introduce affirmative action programs for visible minorities. Is the Minister prepared to act on that recommendation?

Hon. D. M. Collenette (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should congratulate my colleague, the Hon. Member for Essex-Kent, and members of the committee, for this report.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Collenette: The fact that it has been well received by people generally, especially those in the visible minority communities, is testament to the good work they have done.

With respect to the whole question of affirmative action, and that is what we are really talking about when we talk about contract compliance which was one of the recommendations, I should inform the Hon. Member that we do indeed have a program already. It was announced by the President of the Treasury Board only last year and it has been worked on since then. When one talks of affirmative action one has to distinguish between the voluntary approach which we have taken so far in Canada, and which I believe has met with some success, and the compulsory approach which was taken in the United States after the enactment of the civil rights legislation in 1964 and the directive on contract compliance.

This is a serious question and I should like to hear the views of all Hon. Members, the Parties generally, and the Canadian public, before the Government takes this very difficult step. I will be discussing this with my Cabinet colleagues in the next few weeks and I would ask the Hon. Member to be patient.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, the Minister should know that Members of Parliament have already expressed their opinions with regard to contract compliance in the report Equality Now.

RECOMMENDATION TO ESTABLISH SEPARATE DEPARTMENT

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister about the multiculturalism policy for which he is responsible. He knows that ethnic groups across the country, including visible minorities, have been calling for a higher priority on multiculturalism. The report that was issued yesterday calls for a Multiculturalism Act which would create a full Department of Multiculturalism, with a Deputy Minister. Is the Minister prepared to act on this recommendation?

Hon. D. M. Collenette (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to correct the Hon. Member's impression of what happens in Parliament. When the report was tabled, that was simply an expression of seven Members of Parliament; there has been no motion to concur in that report and therefore there is not yet an endorsement from Parliament as a whole. When the Hon. Member said that all of Parliament has expressed its views on the subject, that is a little different from the actual tabling of the report.

The Hon. Member asked about an Act. Last December's Throne Speech gave a commitment to introduce a Multicultural Act. That is now progressing through Cabinet and I hope to be able to make some positive statement on it very soon.

On the question of a full Department of Multiculturalism, it seems to me that the Prime Minister answered that question rather explicitly last October. I should like to advise the Hon. Member, and perhaps warn him and those who feel that the answer is to upgrade multiculturalism to a full Department with a full Deputy Minister, that if this were done there would be a danger that we would ghettoize multicultural policy once and for all in this country. I do not want to work toward that, and I am sure that the Hon. Member does not either.

INTEREST ACT

INTRODUCTION OF AMENDMENTS

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Will the Minister advise why she is holding up the introduction of a Bill dealing with mortgage rate insurance and amendments to the Interest Act? Will she tell us why she is waiting? Will she also let us know how high mortgage rates must rise before she will move to introduce this legislation which was promised in the Throne Speech?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wish to assure the Hon. Member that those amendments are being drafted now and will be presented as fast as we can get them to the floor of the House.

PLIGHT OF HOME OWNERS WITH HIGH INTEREST MORTGAGES

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, the Minister, her predecessor, and the Minister of Finance gave 750,000 Canadians trapped with high interest rate mortgages some hope for relief through their pious statements. Then they abandoned them. Will the Minister tell us whether she has been able to lever some special treatment from the mortgage industry for these unfortunate people, because she appears to have yielded to industry demands for changes in the Interest Act and then hung out to dry the 750,000 Canadians trapped with high interest rate mortgages?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have made every effort to go to bat for every one of those people. Thousands of them have come to us for assistance through the Department of Finance and the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. We have written to every financial institution in every case, and very often we have been able to get a measure of help for these people. I have said that we will not be able to legislate retroactively. We intend to bring forward legislation that will address the problem, but in the meantime we will continue to be of every assistance possible to people who are in difficulty.

Oral Questions

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

INVESTMENT BY RAILWAYS—FARMERS' FREIGHT COSTS

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Transport. He will be aware that farm bankruptcies in western Canada are up 110 per cent this year over last year. He will also be aware that the position of farmers in western Canada has deteriorated as a result of the new freight rate regime enacted as a result of Bill C-155.

Given the fact that the railways have now expressed the view that they will not invest the $16.5 billion as was promised, and that it will be closer to $12 billion, what corresponding reduction can the Minister promise to farmers? They were asked to pay more to get more, and now that investment will not take place. Is he considering any action to reduce the burden on the farmers in a corresponding way?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the investment that will be made by the railways will still be on target in terms of developing the major expansion of the capacity of the rail system in western Canada. There is no reduction or diminution in the commitment. The realignment of the forecast is simply because of economic circumstances that have changed. Fortunately we have had a substantial reduction in the inflation rate, and this means that the actual dollar cost of the project has been reduced substantially but the work will still go ahead. There is no reduction in that respect.

Some of the projects related to other aspects of the transportation system, particularly in the coal area, have been put off for a longer period while waiting for a pickup of the export market in the coal and natural resource area.

I can tell the Hon. Member that we will hold the railways very clearly to their responsibility to expand the railway system substantially so there will be no blockages and no handicaps in the movement of our grain. We will continue to monitor the situation and, if they do not live up to those commitments, we will apply the sanctions and penalties which I am capable of applying under the Act.

REQUEST THAT ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN BE CANCELLED

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, the Minister acknowledged before the Standing Committee on Transport the fact that there would be a reduction in railway investment. The railways have said there would be a reduction in investment, and there will be a reduction in the number of jobs. There is a reduction in the traffic forecast. As a minimum, would the Minister cease and desist the false and misleading propaganda which is being perpetrated on Canadians across the country through an expensive ad campaign which is insulting not only to the Canadian taxpayer but, indeed, to the farmer? Would the Minister at least do that much in acknowledgment of the fact he admitted in committee the other day?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do want to point out to the Hon. Member that the purpose of the information program is to alert Canadian businesses to the many opportunities this rail expansion program offers. It is one of the largest economic development projects ever undertaken in the history of Canada. It is very important that Canadian manufacturers and suppliers are able to bid for that work so that they will receive the maximum value out of the program.

Mr. Mazankowski: Tell the truth.

Mr. Axworthy: They will not receive that value if they are not aware of the wide range of opportunities available. That is the reason we have the information program.

Mr. Mazankowski: Would you tell the truth?

MR. KRISTIANSEN—NATIONAL FILM BOARD FILM ON ABORTION

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table the report of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petition presented by the Hon. BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for the Yukon on the usual question on House business?

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Would the Government House Leader reaffirm that tomorrow will indeed be an allotted day and inform us as to the business of the House as far as he can take us into next week?

While he is answering that question, he will know that there is on yesterday's Notice Paper notice of the introduction of a supplementary borrowing Bill which, I am informed, is in the amount of $4 billion, pursuant to a House order which was made last year. Is it the intention of the Government to move for leave today to introduce that legislation?

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, on the first question, I want to confirm that tomorrow is indeed an Opposition Day, as I indicated yesterday. In so far as the business for next week is concerned, I had a meeting this morning with my colleagues, the House Leaders, and indicated to them, after asking them a few questions, that I could not be in a position to be very specific at that time, unfortunately. I should be in a position to be more specific a bit later. I am waiting for some information. It is not clear if Bill C-21 will be called on Monday or on Tuesday. That is one of the items I hope to receive information on rather soon.

In so far as the special order to which the Hon. Member referred a moment ago dealing with supplementary borrowing authority up to $4 billion, indeed notice has been given to introduce this Bill. Of course, if the Bill were to be introduced, I can, in the name of the Government, put on the record—as I indicated to my colleagues earlier today—that whatever amount of money would be borrowed out of that $4 billion would be deducted at the committee stage from the amount specified in Bill C-21. This is now on the record. This is a commitment of the Government.

I want it to be clear that if we introduce and proceed with the Bill for the supplementary borrowing authority as provided for by the special order, this will be done because in the short term it is necessary and urgent to get some money for April to be able to spend, and to be authorized to borrow. Such an amount of money, up to $4 billion, once again, would be deducted by amendment to Bill C-21 before it is completely disposed of.

Mr. Nielsen: Dealing first with the House business once again, I can understand the difficulty in determining whether it is going to be Bill C-21 on Monday or Tuesday. We can expect that uncertainty to be clarified when the Minister has the information which he says is about to come to him. However, what do we do on Wednesday and on next Thursday, if he can take us that far?

With respect now to the notice concerning the supplementary borrowing authority of $4 billion, we are now debating in Bill C-21 a measure which would authorize the Government to borrow $29.5 billion. Regardless of the Minister's reassurances, we know that there are $8.1 billion of cash deposits available to the Government now. It seems to us to be totally unreasonable to be introducing borrowing authority for a further $4 billion in addition to the $29.5 billion when the Government has this kind of cash deposit at its disposal to meet its April commitments.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: First of all, I have no intention of arguing the point Mr. Speaker, but I think that he should double-check his information. Also, the Hon. Member should be aware that April is the month when the Government needs cash because of greater expenditures. He should know, therefore, that reserves are artificial and if Bill C-21 is not referred to the committee until next week it is as a result of the stalling tactics of the Official Opposition, period. At 6.15 p.m. last night, we were ready for the vote. Hon. Members were in the House, but for no reason at all, the Official Opposition decided to delay the taking of the vote until this morning and demanded as a prerequisite that Bill C-21 be not referred today to a committee, delaying again by a few days the consideration by a Standing Committee of this important piece of legislation. The Hon. Member should know that basic to our Parliamentary system is the Government's ability to levy taxes, as well as borrow and spend money.

For the first time since I was appointed Government House Leader several years ago, we have had the good fortune of having the budget tabled in the House almost on the eve of the presentation of an act to provide the Government with a borrowing authority to meet its requirements up to $29.5 billion.

The Hon. Member is well aware of all that. So, when he claims that because it has some $8 billion in cash deposits, the Government should not avail itself of previously adopted regulations and ordinances of the House, he is mistaken, and if he really wants to demonstrate his good faith and desire to let the Government operate normally, he should end this filibuster and allow the House to pass Bill C-21 as soon as possible. I repeat that we are ready to negotiate in good faith, and that Members on the opposite side should do likewise. If we fail to come to an understanding, the Government will have to assume its responsibilities. If we have to introduce other bills, therefore, we shall do so in a manner consistent with our Standing Orders and Parliamentary practice.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief and will not respond in a partisan way whatsoever. Will the Minister answer the simple question: Is it the intention of the Government today to move for leave to introduce that supplementary borrowing Bill?

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I think the answer is obvious, but I suppose the Hon. Member will have to wait and see when we reach Introduction of Bills. Certainly, we want to introduce that bill as early as possible. It is an urgent plea.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Yukon; then the Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni.

Mr. Nielsen: Then under those circumstances and in order that we can despatch the business of the House in an orderly fashion, and for the reasons I stated in my preamble, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald):

That the House do now proceed to Orders of the Day.

If there is any doubt at all, Sir, about the acceptability or propriety of that motion, I would like to speak to it.

Mr. Pinard: That is moved on a point of order and so it is out of order.

Mr. Mazankowski: Axworthy moves motions on points of orders.

Mr. Speaker: Moved by the Hon. Member for Yukon, seconded by—

Mr. Pinard: I understand, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member for the Yukon, who still wants to paralyse Parliament, was recognized on a point of order to ask questions on House business. Therefore, I suggest it is out of order to move such a motion on a point of order.

• (1510)

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member was recognized, and the language the Chair used was the usual question relating to Government business, which is not a point of order. It has become a practice of this House to recognize at this time on a Thursday a question relating to the business of the House. That is the understanding of the Chair. Certainly the Chair did not interpret this as a point of order, or as an appeal to a point of order, at that time. Therefore the Chair has no alternative but to accept the motion.

Mr. Nielsen, seconded by Miss MacDonald, moves:

That the House do now proceed to Orders of the Day.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the Members.

And the division bells having been rung:

Mr. Speaker: Order. Since it is 6 p.m., the usual hour of adjournment for the House, obviously the Orders of the Day cannot now be read. Accordingly, the motion before us has lapsed pursuant to Standing Order 8(1). I do now leave the Chair until tomorrow at eleven o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At six o'clock, the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

TOURISM

IMPORTANCE TO ECONOMY

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I want to stress the importance of the domino effect of tourist dollars, and I wish to appeal to the House for support in bolstering the ailing tourist industry.

The dismal economic forecast is likely to have a detrimental effect on tourism this year. A large percentage of the population in my riding depends on tourism to keep bread on their tables. I believe it is crucial to recirculate tax dollars back into the tourism industry to fight unemployment through job creation.

The injection of funds into tourism invariably results in a highly desirable domino effect whereby all sectors of society may benefit. A strong tourist area is usually accompanied by healthy cottage and tertiary industries which may be unrelated to tourism.

We must regard tourism as an investment in the future of this country. It is an underdeveloped resource at this point and, so long as this is the case, Canadians will continue to miss the boat.

Obviously, escalation of the tourist industry will create widespread employment and revenue. We already have the natural resources. What we need most is a Government capable of capitalizing on what God has given to all of us.

FORESTRY

GOVERNMENT'S PARTICIPATION IN FORESTRY DEVELOPMENT

Mrs. Éva Côté (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I may remind the House that last Friday, in Rimouski and New Richmond, the federal Minister of the Environment (Mr. Caccia) announced a $19 million forestry program. The purpose of this program is reforestation and improvement of private woodlots in the Lower St. Lawrence and Gaspé regions. With this contribution, which will be in the form of professional and technical, as well as financial assistance, the Canadian Government has shown its awareness of the fact that forests are a major natural resource and a necessary source of income for our region's producers and workers in the forestry sector. Under this program, farmers who also own private woodlots will be able to go to the Environment Canada office in Rimouski and receive any services they need for woodlot improvement.

On my own behalf and on behalf of owners of private woodlots in the Lower St. Lawrence and Gaspé regions, I want to thank the Government for doing its share to develop the forestry industry in our region, an industry that has suffered severe damage in recent years as a result of the spruce budworm epidemic.

AIR SAFETY

DANGERS OF SMOKING ON COMMERCIAL AIRCRAFT

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I rise to express a purely personal opinion on a matter which has concerned me for some time, namely, smoking on commercial aircraft. During several recent flights I have discussed at length, with air crews of both Air Canada and CP Air, the hazards they face from smoking.

The staggered smoking and non smoking sections on the average commercial airliner are a joke. Most aircraft ventilation systems blow sidestream smoke all over the place and make life miserable for those in border line rows near the smoking sections.

Of far greater concern to flight attendants are the people who have a few drinks, fall asleep, and drop lighted cigarettes on scattered newspapers or on the upholstery. Such incidents have the potential of turning the most sophisticated airliner into a flying inferno, 35,000 feet up. Ground fires on aircraft, as we have seen, can be just as devastating.

Smoking is a luxury. On commercial airliners it is a very dangerous luxury.

While we can do nothing about long haul international flights, we can protect passengers and flight attendants from the annoyance and dangers of smoking on domestic airlines.

Even as a pipe smoker, my own personal desire would be to ban all smoking on domestic commercial airliners in Canada. Since that proposition raises all kinds of questions, such as the effectiveness of smoke detectors in washrooms, I want to see this issue ventilated through a full public hearing by the Canadian Transport Commission.

Surely lives are more important than the luxury of lighting up on Canadian airlines.

LABOUR RELATIONS

FAIR WAGE GUIDELINES—APPLICATION TO KAMLOOPS ARMOURY CONTRACT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Davis-Bacon Act in the United States of America establishes a federal fair wage guideline for all federal Government construction projects. In Canada we also have a federal fair wage guideline that accompanies most federal Government contracts. There is some question whether these federal fair wage guidelines are being followed by certain contractors and their sub-contractors on major federal construction projects. For example, with the federal Government's armoury construction contract in Kamloops there have been suggestions that perhaps the federal fair wage guidelines are not being followed.

Since many of these federal contracts have been awarded to non-union contractors, it is very important that Labour Canada ensures that these guidelines are being adhered to. These guidelines are the only real protection that workers on these sites have to ensure that they receive a fair and equitable wage. Therefore I urge the Government to take whatever action is necessary to monitor federal projects in an effort to ensure contract compliance with federal fair wage guidelines.

NATIONAL REVENUE

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY TASK FORCE HEARINGS

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative Task Force on Revenue Canada has completed its cross-Canada hearings. People from all walks of life made representation to the members of the Task Force, most capably chaired by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty), and all Canadians owe this Task Force a debt of gratitude.

Constituents of mine, Lou and Doris Kannon, bravely appeared before the Task Force and told their story of the tax Department presently threatening them with seizure of their property if they missed another payment of $700 a month. In 1980, Lou Kannon was in a coma after a serious fall, and the tax Department demanded $4,300 in taxes. The family contacted me early in 1981 and arrangements were made to pay $400 a month, plus a cash payment of $1,000 to Revenue Canada.

Because of health problems, a payment was missed. Then Revenue Canada demanded $700 a month payments. While Mr. Kannon is just now back at work, it was impossible to meet last month's payment on time. Then there was the threat of seizing their property, the last thing they have besides each other. Lo and behold, after their appearance before the Task Force, officials of Revenue Canada are now willing to sit down and negotiate a realistic repayment schedule.

The Progressive Conservative Task Force on Revenue Canada made the point loud and clear that this harassing must stop, and humane and fair treatment must be the watchword of Revenue Canada. Could this action mean they are starting to listen? For the sake of all Canadians, I hope so.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

INDIAN RIGHTS IN LABRADOR

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): On several occasions, Mr. Speaker, I have risen in the House to censure the Province of Newfoundland for denying native people in the Labrador region of Quebec the right to go fishing, trapping and hunting in the Labrador region of Newfoundland. Time and again the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has made representations to the Newfoundland Government to make sure that the rights of native people would be respected in Newfoundland's Labrador region.

Bearing in mind that negotiations have repeatedly ended in a stalemate, very soon I will join the Quebec Montagnais and Naskapis of the Labrador region and march on Newfoundland territory to uphold their right to trap and fish in that province's Labrador territory.

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that a show of solidarity is needed so that at long last the Indians will be free to live according to their traditions in those northern reaches of Quebec and Newfoundland. Since Newfoundland has so far turned a deaf ear, as Member for Manicouagan representing those people, I will march right along with them on Newfoundland territory to show peacefully that Indians do have rights which must be respected throughout Canada and that the Government of Newfoundland is ill advised to prevent them from living in accordance with Amerindian customs.

MEDICAL CARE

NURSING SERVICES IN NORTHERN COMMUNITIES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, over wide areas of Canada's North, medical services in the settlements are provided by nurses in the employ of the Department of National Health and Welfare. The dedication and hard work of these nurses are to be applauded as they have been responsible for upgrading community health standards for many years. Since these nurses work alone without direct supervision from doctors, the nearest of whom may be located hundreds of miles distant, it is imperative that they be highly trained, not only in southern nursing practices techniques but also in fields such as diagnosis, drug prescription, X-ray interpretation, midwifery, and how to cope with emergencies of many kinds.

The nurse-practitioner program at the University of Alberta provided training in these needed skills, and nurses from remote areas learned much of great value to them and, as a result, saved many lives and reduced considerable suffering. It therefore comes as complete shock to find that Health and Welfare is discontinuing its support of the nurse-practitioner program. While the Liberal Government has millions of dollars to spend on imposing official bilingualism in the North, how, Sir, can it be so callous as to cut out the training programs for nurses who serve in an area where the infant mortality rate, for instance, is nearly double the national average?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

REASSIGNMENT OF DEPUTY MINISTER

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, yesterday we saw the disgraceful and cowardly spectacle of the Government sacking the Deputy Minister of National Revenue in the hope of distracting attention from the complete abdication of responsibility of the Minister. In view of the fact that the Minister of National Revenue refused pointedly on seven separate occasions in one day during Question Period in the House of Commons to back his Deputy Minister, will he deal honestly with Members of the House of Commons now and tell us in a straightforward way what was his recommendation to the Prime Minister? Did he recommend the transfer of his Deputy Minister?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Ho, ho, ho, ho! Ho, ho, ho, ho! Where are they this morning?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member were sincere in his desire to stand up for the Deputy Minister and to show his respect for him, he would not have said that we have sacked him. He knows that this is a way of showing his contempt for that man, and that is not our position.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, on the strength of the Minister's performance to date, I can understand why the Prime Minister does not want to allow him to answer questions.

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put my supplementary question to the Minister. We will see whether or not the Minister of National Revenue will attempt to hide and refuse to give answers to this question. In view of the repeated revelations over the course of the past several months that ordinary Canadians have suffered because of the Minister's gross neglect of his responsibilities, I would like to ask him what personal responsibility he feels that he carries as Minister for the conduct and activities of the officials of his Department. What personal responsibility does he have as Minister for the people whose rights have been taken away?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I wish the Hon. Member would revise his notion of ministerial responsibility. I can say that I take every responsibility with respect to my Department that is in line with those ministerial responsibilities.

[English]

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, the Minister would have us believe that he has been held hostage by his officials for the past year and a half as if he were a ministerial Patty Hearst. If the Minister had integrity, he would have resigned if he could not run his Department.

REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, why is the Minister not prepared to do the honourable thing? Instead of trying to place the blame for his abdication of responsibility on his Deputy Minister, why does he not tender his resignation now?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am aware that yesterday, the Hon. Member was busy elsewhere. I suggest that he read the answers given by the Prime Minister, and I wish to repeat what I have said to him previously, that I intend to continue to perform my duties to the best of my ability, bearing in mind the need for fair and just administration of our Income Tax Act and our tax system in general.

[English]

Mr. Bosley: Mr. Speaker, if the Minister spent half as much time looking after his Department as he does looking after patronage in Quebec City, we would be better off.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

DEPARTMENT'S ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Members opposite want to laugh about the hundreds of Canadians across the country who are in desperate straits because of the activities of that Department. The Minister knows that hundreds of Canadians are stuck in an assessment appeal process whereby they are having their appeals heard by the same people who assessed them. Yet this Minister has $300,000 per week to spend on advertising to puff his image. If the Minister has the money, why does he not fix the system before he runs ads?

● (1120)

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, here is another glaring example of the way Opposition Members tend to ignore the Canadian taxpayer.

The advertisements we put in the newspapers during the past few days are a response to the taxpayers' need for simple, straightforward information on the tax returns they must file. At this time of the year, when people have to file their tax returns, we want to make every effort to inform them quickly, simply and effectively, to help them comply with the various provisions of the Income Tax Act. That is our objective, and not the twisted attitude the Hon. Member is reading into these advertisements.

[English]

Mr. Bosley: Mr. Speaker, what the ads mean is that the guide is incomprehensible.

INCOME TAX GUIDES

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is running a bunch of ads but he is not bothering to run an ad to tell Canadians that what the guide says about Canada Savings Bond interest is wrong. He is not bothering to tell Canadians that they have the right to treat some of that interest as capital gains because of a court case he lost.

Let me ask the Minister this question in general about the guide, about the ads and about what has happened. Either the Minister knows, as we have discovered, that the system and the way the Department is treating taxpayers is in a shambles, in which case he ought to resign, or he is going to have to explain to the House how it is that after two years he does not know it, in which case he ought to resign.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is showing his ignorance on two accounts. First of all, he is showing his abysmal ignorance with regard to the Department of National Revenue, because it is a Department that functions well. Second, the Hon. Member shows his level of comprehension is lower than that of the average Canadian taxpayer, because according to tests of our ads, the vast majority of Canadians think they are straightforward, easy to understand and useful.

Since the Hon. Member failed to understand the ads, this means he scores well below the intellect of the average Canadian taxpayer.

INCOME TAX ACT

DEFERRED CORPORATE TAXES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I should like to pursue this line of questioning but to move away from the collection of taxes to the tax system itself. To a growing number of Canadians it seems to be becoming increasingly inequitable. In 1983 major corporations in Canada had deferred taxes of more than $22 billion, which was roughly equal to the 1983 deficit. What do these taxes mean? An executive of Consolidated Bathurst is quoted as saying: "If you ask me when I expect to pay, I'll tell you, never." This company currently owes the Government $218 million in deferred taxes and it received a $3.6 million tax credit for 1982.

What benefit do the people of Canada receive from allowing corporations to accumulate deferred taxes, particularly when they are of the opinion that they will never repay them?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would be surprised if this executive were proven right. If he is, I doubt if his company would want to keep him for very long because, if the company does not end up repaying those taxes, that would only be because it will not be making profit for quite a few years. If I were a corporate executive I would expect that I would want my firm to get back into a position of making substantial profits and thus be in a position to pay taxes.

I suppose I can understand any corporate executive, like any individual citizen, preferring not to pay taxes. The fact is, however, that the tax incentives that have been given through the Income Tax Act to corporations, for instance, are on the basis of investment that the companies are encouraged to make in this country to create jobs, and to expand. As the Hon. Member knows, once those investments are made, either in expanding plants or buying new equipment and machinery, people are entitled to claim depreciation and expenditures against profits.

• (1125)

If the company is, indeed, spending at least as much in terms of expansion and depreciation which it can claim, as it makes profits, obviously it will not be paying taxes. However, eventually, unless it keeps on expanding and adding constantly to its plant, it will be called upon to pay taxes. It is the same for any individual who can claim losses in a particular year. If he keeps on making money he will pay taxes later on. This is the situation which applies both in the personal income tax area and in the corporate income tax area.

What my friend has to remember is that these tax incentives are built in so as to expand plants in Canada, expand investment and create jobs for Canadians, which I am sure my friend would also want to see happening more and more.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, the question which was posed to that executive was not if he planned to pay taxes in terms of the corporation, regarding deferred taxes, but when. His response was, I believe, very typical of many senior executives today, Mr. Speaker. "Never" does he plan to pay those particular taxes. It is a real shell game, which goes on and on.

TAXES PAID BY SMALL BUSINESSES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): My second question directed to the Minister of Finance is this. According to the Canadian Federation of Independent Business most of the job-creation, as we all know, occurs in the small business sector which pays an average tax rate of 24 per cent. However, the Minister of Finance will know that a few years back Shell Canada paid no income tax, Trans Canada Pipe Lines paid a tax rate of 7 per cent, Husky Oil paid a tax rate of 5 per cent, and the Royal Bank of Canada and the Bank of Montreal paid no taxes in 1982.

How long does the Minister of Finance plan to stand idly by, continually asking the small business sector to maintain its particular share of taxes when, because of his Government's tax incentives or, as some people like to call them, tax loopholes, major corporations are making considerable profits and paying no income tax? How long is the Minister prepared to stand back and let this system continue as it is?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I believe my friend needs help in terms of logic. You cannot compare an average when you look at the small-business sector and say the average is such a percentage of taxes, then take individual large corporations and say this one and that one has not paid taxes. I could make, I suppose, a list of hundreds, probably thousands, of small businesses which also pay no taxes.

What my friend has to look at is the effective tax rate which is being paid by large and small businesses. If my friend looks at the figures he will find that, indeed, when one looks at the effective tax rate being paid by small and large businesses in this country, as far as the tax rate itself provided by the law is concerned, small businesses pay proportionately less in terms of the effective tax rate than the larger firms.

I have announced a number of measures in the Budgets of last year and this year which are aimed specifically at giving greater incentives and support to small businesses. I have made it a priority of my responsibility as Minister of Finance to come to the support of the small and medium-size business sectors because, indeed, I believe they are the main creators of jobs in this country.

Again, I want to refer only to the last Budget in which I announced a measure which would cut by three-quarters the income tax legislation dealing with small business, and would generate about $150 million of tax savings to growing small and medium-sized businesses.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance will know that if you take the average of all the corporate taxes paid, the effective tax rate last year came in at 23 per cent. That is the average corporate tax rate in this country. I suspect that amply demonstrates that the corporate sector is not paying its fair share of taxes.

SHARE OF TAXES PAID BY CORPORATIONS AND INDIVIDUALS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my third question refers directly to this point. Back in 1950 the corporate sector and the personal sector paid on a 50-50 basis. All income tax collected by the federal Government was on a 50-50 basis. Since 1950, Mr. Speaker, 75 per cent of the tax burden imposed by the federal Government falls directly on the individual taxpayers of Canada, on the personal income tax side of the ledger. I ask the Minister how much longer can we expect the Government to have in place a tax system which moves more and more of the tax burden onto the backs of individual taxpayers in order to allow more and more corporate bribes?

• (1130)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, my friend will have to reflect a little bit on the nature of corporations when he says they are paying less taxes. Corporations are legal entities, but in the end they do not have an individual physical existence. Behind corporations you have shareholders and employees, et cetera. My friend refers to the percentage of taxes in the 1950s. I would like to know what his Party's objective would be for an ideal division of the tax load between the corporate sector and the personal sector.

I invite him to reflect on how many corporations would establish and carry on businesses in this country if you ended up with a tax situation where they would be paying, let us say, twice as much as they would be paying in the U.S. or Europe. You have to watch constantly the evolution of the situation in industrialized countries and make sure your tax burden on corporations does not get seriously out of line with what is happening amongst your competitors. This is for the very obvious reason that the corporations and the jobs will move to those countries; they will not come here. It seems to me that it is quite obvious that this would be the reasonable and normal conclusion that any sensible Canadian would reach.

NATIONAL REVENUE

OFFICIALS' TREATMENT OF FISHERMEN'S FAMILIES

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. The P.E.I. Minister of Fisheries told the PC task force on Revenue Canada in Charlottetown that Revenue Canada officials, aided by the RCMP, descended upon fishing families there and used "criminal-interrogation techniques" in their audits of law-abiding citizens. That Minister said that "Revenue Canada has terrorized communities, demoralizing our people and creating fear and mistrust among them."

Knowing as he must that he, the Minister of Revenue, is ultimately responsible for such wrongdoing against decent, law-abiding people, how can he in good conscience refuse to tender his resignation so that confidence can be restored in the tax system and in Revenue Canada, not only in Prince Edward Island, but right across Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I wish the Hon. Member would show more common sense. I am convinced that that statement is a gross exaggeration of the facts. That is a far cry from Revenue Canada's internal policy with respect to Canadian taxpayers.

[English]

Mr. McMillan: The Minister has just called the Minister of Fisheries of Prince Edward Island a liar.

FUNCTIONING OF DEPARTMENT—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, for months the Minister of Revenue has proven himself administratively incompetent. He has misled Parliament and, through Parliament, the people of Canada, with respect to auditors' quotas in his Department. By all accounts his Department is completely out of control. Every taxpayer in the country has lost confidence in his ability to be fair. What would it take—a major tax revolt—for the Minister to tender his resignation?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member claims that the Department is completely out of control. I must point out to him that we are now processing over 17 million tax returns and that, up until a few days ago, we already had refunded in excess of $500 million to Canadian taxpayers. We are now more than a month ahead of last year's pace, Mr. Speaker, and if that is not a sure sign of the Department's efficiency and sound management, I really do not know what it is.

[English]

TAX STATUS OF NATIONAL CAPITAL REGION CIVIL LIBERTIES ASSOCIATION

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the same Minister regarding his control of his Department. In testimony yesterday before the PC task force on Revenue Canada, officers of the National Capital Region Civil Liberties Association reported that early in 1982 the Association received almost $10,000 in donations to assist a Canadian citizen, based on the compelling nature of his case.

In the fall of 1982, President Don Whiteside made a routine inquiry with the Minister's officials about filing on behalf of the Association and was told, to his amazement, that their charitable tax status had been cancelled a couple of years previously. Will the Minister explain why he permitted this attack on this Association's important work? Why were they not given notice that their status was being revoked, and why did they not have time to appeal?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind the Hon. Member that it is very difficult for me to comment on a particular case, for the simple reason that I am prevented from doing so under the provisions of the act. Secondly, had he had the courtesy of bringing that case to my attention, I would have examined the facts.

However, perhaps I should tell him that when an organization fails to abide by its contract with society—charitable organizations must indeed operate within strict parameters if we want the system to be administered in all fairness—it receives a warning to that effect.

Supposing that a mistake might have been made in this case, I would urge the Hon. Member not to draw a general conclusion. Surely he knows enough about the administration of that division to refrain from jumping to such a conclusion.

[English]

Mr. McLean: Mr. Speaker, it is difficult for Canadian voluntary agencies to have confidence in the sense of fair play of the Minister and his officials when there is not even an element of courtesy when a decision is being made. In answer to the Minister, I have raised in recent weeks the case of the B.C. Human Rights Association, and that of l'Association des services de réhabilitation sociale du Québec, which have also been treated in an arbitrary manner.

ADVOCACY ACTIVITIES OF CHARITABLE ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, will the minister confirm the report that the Department has authorized the engagement of five additional lawyers to investigate advocacy activities of Canadian charities?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is making completely unfounded and quite unacceptable allegations. It is contrary to Department practice, and he knows it, to make arbitrary decisions about the tax situation of any taxpayer. The same thing goes for charitable organizations. I would ask him to act more responsibly and, before making judgments, to wonder if in some instances there might not be some facts which justify the Department taking action against charitable organizations which run afoul of the law.

If the questions put by the Hon. Member are meant as an open invitation to charitable organizations to break the law, Mr. Speaker, he is being irresponsible.

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

WESTERN PROCESSING INDUSTRY—IMPACT OF FREIGHT RATES

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. During the Crow debate the Government made various promises, one of which was that the processing industry in western Canada would be greatly supported by the change in the Crow rate. Right now the crushing industry in western Canada is in trouble, part of which is due to the minimum compensatory freight rates to eastern Canada. Can the Minister tell us his position on these compensatory rates? If it is a position of protection for the farmers and industry in western Canada, will he take that position to the Cabinet and get a favourable decision for western farmers?

• (1140)

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in the Hon. Member's question he indicated that the compensatory rates were a problem. I am not sure I understand that, because in fact the rates are still in existence. They still provide a subsidized rate for the movement of canola products into eastern Canada. If he is saying that removal of those rates might present a problem, I tend to agree with him. We are presently working to find a solution for that.

I would like to remind the Hon. Member that, during the examination of the grain transportation Bill in committee, it was indicated and written into the Bill that those products would now be eligible for the new Crow rate. They are able to provide for a new rate which will allow export, particularly through the port of Vancouver, and therefore will open up markets. My colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, and I are presently working on a proposal to ensure that there still is assistance. We have a very strong commitment to the maintenance of the canola industry. The Hon. Member should rethink his proposition that the present MCRs are a problem. They are not a problem, and in fact are a great assistance.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I recognize the error I made in the present expenditure.

POSITION OF MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In a speech he made last week in Toronto the Minister of Agriculture was less than direct about his position on MCRs in the future.

Mr. McDermid: "Less than direct". That was kind.

Mr. Hovdebo: In the past the Minister has waffled on this matter. Again I point out that the passing of Bill C-155 was based in part on protection and increase of processing in western Canada. Would the Minister of Agriculture give us an indication of where he stands on this matter and whether he is going to take it to the Cabinet in support of western farmers and western processors?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows fully well that the one concern which both the Minister of Transport and I have, is to make sure that the industry stays healthy, whether east or west, and to work out a program for that. The Minister of Transport told the Hon. Member pretty straightforwardly what we are doing. We are working together on a program at the present time.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

PENSION REVIEW BOARD—DELAY IN HEARING APPEALS

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. This past week Mr. Cliff Chadderton, who, I think has some 30 years experience representing veterans, made his 30th appearance before the Veterans Affairs Committee. Among the areas that he expressed concern about was the Pension Review Board. Appeals are now building up. We had backlogs with the Entitlement Board, and it now looks as though we have backlogs with the Pension Review Board. What action is the Minister taking to head this off? Is he expanding the size of the Board or training people? Would he also comment upon whether counsel has been found for this particular Board?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we looked at the issue of the backlog before the Pension Commission some two and one-half years ago and took administrative measures to speed up the processing of claims to clear up the backlog.

It was obvious to me and to the members of the Commission that, as the backlog was cleared up at the first level, there would be implications for the Entitlement Board and the Pension Review Board area. We have now reached the point where the increased number of entitlement boards and increased number of cases before the Pension Review Board are benefiting from the clearing up of the backlog at the first level. We are examining ways and means by which we can accelerate that process to ensure that the backlog and increased number of cases at that level are dealt with expeditiously.

In terms of the Member's second question on legal counsel to the Pension Review Board, that is presently under consideration by the Board and we anticipate we will have a replacement very shortly.

NATIONAL REVENUE

CONDUCT OF SPECIAL INVESTIGATIVE BRANCH

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. He has surprisingly taken credit this morning for returning to taxpayers the amounts they have been over-assessed. He says that is to the credit of his Department.

Mr. McDermid: He is giving them back their own money.

Mr. Stevens: Would the Minister tell the House whether he has any twinge of conscience for what he has been doing to my constituent, Tom Murphy, who was unfairly assessed $200,000, and appealed to the Tax Review Board? Mr. Frost of the Tax Review Board held that this was a case showing that on occasions taxpayers are victimized. He went on to say that this taxpayer has lost his business, his money, and his credit, because of most improper conduct on the part of the Special Investigative Branch of National Revenue in Ottawa. Why have the Department and the Minister persisted for eight years in refusing to give this constituent of mine proper compensation?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, considering his many years of experience in the House, the Hon. Member should know that I could not comment on individual tax returns.

Because he behaves often as a newcomer, I am not at all surprised by his question. All I can say is that my Department is trying to run a system which is both fair and equitable towards all Canadian taxpayers.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York-Peel may have a supplementary question, bearing in mind the problem on individual tax returns.

Mr. McDermid: This is a little different from a tax return.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, as you have undoubtedly noted, the Minister acknowledges he knows this case.

Mr. McDermid: He knows this case full well.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Minister of National Revenue. Can you explain to the House why you have refused to tell your solicitors—

Mr. Lalonde: Order. Order.

Mr. Stevens: —to accommodate this man's sad plight and give him fair compensation?

Mr. Lalonde: You cannot ask questions like that.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat what I have just said. In spite of his pestering, I refuse to comment on individual tax returns.

[English]

DETENTION OF TAXPAYER

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, in response to the Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe just a few moments ago the Minister of National Revenue said that he tries to run a fair and equitable system. I would like to ask the Minister about Christopher Collins who got a speeding ticket near Perth, Ontario, while en route to Chicago on March 2. An allegation showed up on the police computer that he had not paid tax in 1978. He was detained and jailed. He was threatened with 30 days in jail by the RCMP from Ottawa. He paid the RCMP $345 in cash in order to continue his trip. Upon his return he found a T4-62 slip dated June 25, 1981, indicating no tax payable and no tax refundable. Will the Minister tell us—

Mr. Lalonde: You cannot ask questions like this in the House. Order. Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must bring to the attention of the Hon. Member that a very specific question such as he has posed should be on the Order Paper. If he wants to ask a general question regarding relationships between one tax authority and other collection agencies in the country, that is permissible. However, if he is asking about an individual case in the level of detail he has posed, it should be on the Order Paper.

Mr. Malone: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lalonde: You cannot have a supplementary question on an illegal question.

Mr. Malone: It is not illegal. The question is about fairness, equity—whether the Minister can run that kind of Department, and whether the RCMP are the collection agency.

Would this incompetent Minister try to tell us whether he accepts that as fair and equitable, whether that is the kind of system he runs, and whether he thinks that is in concurrence with the honourable nature of Parliament that the people of this country expect?

• (1150)

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has chosen to ignore your admonition and to make wild allegations.

He should know that it is not the RCMP but the Department of National Revenu which is responsible for collecting back taxes.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has been permitted to ask a question. The Minister has replied. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill.

Mr. Malone: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

LOSS OF QUEBEC CITY RADIO STATION'S LICENCE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Communications who is responsible for the CRTC.

Mr. Malone: The Minister of Revenue has no honour at all. He should resign.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blaikie: I am just waiting for the Hon. Member for Crowfoot to calm down, Mr. Speaker.

The Minister will be aware of the FM station in Quebec City, CJMF that will lose its licence to broadcast at midnight tonight, due to the CRTC ruling that CJMF has contravened its promise of performance. CJMF in Quebec City has an audience of over 300,000 people. They have collected names on a petition, to the tune of 142,000.

[Translation]

Does the Minister intend to take action to allow that station to broadcast until the case is heard in the Supreme Court?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I know exactly what kind of suggestion the Hon. Member would like to make. If he referred to the Broadcasting Act he would see what are the cabinet's powers as far as the decisions of the CRTC are concerned. He would see for example that the cabinet cannot interfere in the delivery or renewal of a permit or its amendment.

Parliament has not given the cabinet the power to intervene when the renewal of a permit is denied. Therefore, the government cannot take any action at the moment considering the quasi-judicial nature of an organization such as the CRTC.

[English]

COMMISSION'S DECISIONS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister why it is that the CRTC gets tough on a music station, when it does not get tough on pornography, or Canadian content regulations on TV? There are plenty of things on which we would like to see the CRTC get tough but it does not do anything. Here we have this one instance where we have 142,000 people indicating that they would like—

Mr. Speaker: Will the Hon. Member please ask his question?

Mr. de Jong: What is wrong with rock and roll?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blaikie: Could the Minister tell the House why it is that the CRTC is under instructions to be firm in this case and not firm in so many other cases when firmness is warranted much more?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to see the Hon. Member's new found interest in communications matters. I think it is the first time he has risen in his seat in the House to raise such a question. The CRTC, to answer his question, has nothing against rock radio stations. There are a number of rock radio stations in the country at the moment. The CRTC feels, however, that when someone applies for a licence, in fairness to the other people who apply for licences, the licensee must live up to his promise of performance. In this case, according to the CRTC, the individual licensee did not live up to his promise of performance, thereby being unfair to all other applicants who made applications for that licence.

There are a number of rock licences that are available in the country at the moment. There is nothing to prevent the present licensee from reapplying for a licence, and this time indicating the type of radio station he is going to operate.

I am sure that if the CRTC modified licences in the way the Hon. Member is justifying, then he himself would be on his feet saying that the CRTC was being unfair to other applicants across the country.

Oral Questions

NATIONAL REVENUE

DEPARTMENT'S TREATMENT OF ARTISTS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. It is very general, but the situation is certainly disturbing. Why is Revenue Canada continuing to harass and reassess Canada's artistic community in spite of repeated calls for a moratorium? How can the Minister justify actions against artists even while a special sub-committee of this Parliament is meeting to discuss Revenue Canada's procedures? This is a disgraceful contempt of Parliament, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member does not seem to be aware of the most basic rules of this House. What is even worse, he does not even show the least respect for legislation passed by Parliament. What he is asking me to do, in view of the fact that a certain matter is being considered by a committee, is to suspend the application of some of the Income Tax Act provisions for the benefit of a specific group of taxpayers. The Hon. Member should try and learn a little bit more, first about the practices of this House, and second about how our laws are applied.

As long as the Minister of Finance has not decided to change our fiscal policy and has not proposed amendments to the Act in this House, the Minister of National Revenue must apply the statute as it is written.

I must also point out that we are not chasing after artists specifically. I can even tell him that two out of three artists who have written to me, after my invitation to these artists to call on their District Office, have told me: "We went as you suggested and we are very satisfied with the way we were able to come to terms with your officials." I can also add that I announced last week that we had accepted the first of the three recommendations made by the Canada Council with respect to the way artists are treated by the Department of Revenue. We have accepted the first recommendation. We are considering the other two which concern the Council grants, and I can tell the Hon. Member that our way of treating this group of taxpayers is as equitable as possible.

[English]

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see the Minister reads his own press release, and that we did not have to get this through the freedom of information provisions.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR POSTPONEMENT OF PROCEEDINGS AGAINST ARTISTS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I have another question for the Minister of National Revenue. Why has the Minister not gone one step further in the interest of fairness and ordered all proceedings against artists to cease at once—

Mr. Lapointe: It is impossible.

Mr. Scott: —at least until the special subcommittee of this Parliament has completed its work?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I find it difficult to understand the Hon. Member's way of looking at equity and fairness. He is telling me this: "Do not apply the law; go against it; go against Parliament; go against the court rulings because some issue is being considered."

Mr. Speaker, if this is the Hon. Member's idea of fairness and equity, I have serious doubts about his approach.

[English]

DEPARTMENT'S AUDITING PRACTICES—TRAINING FILM STATEMENT

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of National Revenue. Last night on CBC television a Revenue Canada training film was shown in which it was stated that Revenue Canada auditors treat audits as fishing expeditions. Is that the policy of the Minister's Department, that audits are fishing expeditions? If it is not, why is the Minister using the film?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is referring to a film used to train a very specific group of auditors, and I am referring to those who audit large corporations. The Hon. Member is quoting part of a sentence spoken in the film which, if I am not mistaken, lasts about forty-five minutes and is meant to stimulate discussion at seminars held by our auditors.

After the film is shown, the auditors are asked to share their experiences, to see how they can improve the performance of their duties when auditing the files of large corporations.

Therefore, I think it is ridiculous of the Hon. Member to take a sentence and quote it out of the general context in which a training film is used.

[English]

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, the Minister's answer is a red herring. Considering the fact that we have repeatedly asked to have that training film made available to us and he has refused to do so, he can hardly complain that we are taking things out of context.

TRAINING OF OFFICIALS TO ANSWER TELEPHONE INQUIRIES

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is addressed to the Minister of National Revenue. If he feels there is a need to inform Canadians about Revenue Canada, and he is spending $300,000 on an advertising program—

Mr. Beatty: A week.

Miss Carney: —why is the Minister not spending that money up-grading the people who answer the telehones in Revenue Canada, considering that a Toronto newspaper found 40 per cent of them this week could not even answer the questions? Why is the Minister not using that money for training instead of advertising?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to inform the Hon. Member that we spend a lot more than that on training people who answer the phone, not only money but time, and a staff of experts is available to the employees who answer calls from the public.

I can inform the Hon. Member that this training is not given two minutes before they start their duties. Training is on a daily and weekly basis, with meetings with supervisors, when they review the type of questions they have been asked and look at more satisfactory ways of answering taxpayers.

PROCEDURE AND ORGANIZATION

RINGING OF DIVISION BELLS—REFLECTIONS OF MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: I am now ready to share with the House my reflections arising out of the events of Monday and Tuesday, March 19 and March 20, reflections, I may say, which have been reinforced by the events of Wednesday and Thursday, March 28 and March 29.

Ever since the occasion in March, 1982, when the division bells were allowed to ring indefinitely, the House has been confronted with a problem which it has yet to resolve. The situation which occurred when the bells continued to ring for 15 days was unprecedented in our practice and the Chair was faced with a dilemma. Had the Speaker ordered the bells to stop, she would have been accused of partisanship on behalf of the Government. By not stopping the bells she was exposed to criticism for failing in her duty to ensure that the House was able to function. It was a classic "no win" situation.

When the deadlock was finally resolved by the Parties, Madam Speaker Sauvé made a statement in which she underlined the agonizing conflict of duty with which the Chair was confronted. She quoted the well known parliamentary authority, Redlich, who wrote:

> Protection of a majority against obstruction and protection of a minority against oppression are both alike functions of the Chair. It is hardly too much to say that they exhaust the duties of the high office held by the impartial guardian of parliamentary law.

[Translation]

She spoke of the impossibility of reconciling these two functions in the face of the situation in which she found herself. She pointed out that the House had a responsibility to give guidance to the Chair and I should like to quote some of her words:

> The Speaker is the guardian of the rules of the House. He does not invent them. It is up to the House to decide what changes are necessary. I merely point out that there is a problem. In the meantime, the Chair will continue to be vulnerable until the House provides it with guidelines which would lead to settled practices regarding those very difficult and highly controversial questions, where the rules and practices appear to be less than satisfactory.

[English]

She concluded her statement by stating:

> It is my hope that such a situation will never again occur in this House. However, should it occur again, the Chair, unless it is provided with firm guidelines, would need to consider its course of action with very great care under the new circumstances. I trust that in the overriding interests of this honourable institution, the House will take steps to make known its will as to how the Chair should act before any such situation occurs again.

Shortly after the bells crisis, a special committee was appointed to consider the reform of the procedure of the House. A number of changes recommended by the committee were adopted on a provisional basis. It is within the framework of these changes that the House is currently operating. Many of us hope that the committee would address the problem of the bells and bring in a recommandation which the House might have found acceptable. However, it did not do so.

In the absence of any guidelines, certain initiatives have been taken by the Chair. Dilatory motions have been declared to have lapsed if not voted on by the hour of automatic adjournment.

On three occasions, when the question before the House has been a substantive one, the bells have been suspended overnight and have continued the following day. This practice in no way interferes with the indefinite ringing of the bells when substantive questions are before the House. It came about as a result of the humane considerations referred to by the Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) when speaking to the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) on March 20.

The Chair was also influenced by the need to maintain the dignity of the House. The spectacle of a lone occupant of the chair and a gowned clerk, during the fullness of the night in an otherwise empty House, the prisoners of a theoretical assumption that the House might be ready to vote at any time appeared to the Chair to be absurd.

I should now like to deal with the arguments raised by the three House Leaders when they spoke on this matter on March 20. The Hon. Member for Yukon asserted that the Chair exceeded its authority in suspending the sitting and the bells. He said:

> The suspending of a sitting overnight in the midst of a division is almost without precedent.

There was, of course, only one such precedent, on May 9, 1983. We now have another resulting from the bell which commenced on March 28. He went on to say that he could find no text or precedent which supported the authority of the Chair to suspend a sitting "at whim". I agree with him. I assure him that the action I took on March 19 was not taken lightly. I looked at precedents. I engaged in consultations. I waited until almost the very last minute in the hope that the representatives of the Parties would notify me of their intentions.

The Hon. Member for Yukon referred to the power of the British Speaker to adjourn or suspend a sitting in circumstances of grave disorder. Let me assure him that the thought of justifying my action in terms of this procedure never entered my head. There was no grave disorder. This practice has no bearing on the situation which faced us. There is nothing in the British practice and precedents which could assist us in resolving any problem related to the bells. This problem is uniquely Canadian. I know of no parliamentary jurisdiction outside Canada where the bells can ring for an unlimited period prior to a recorded vote.

The position taken by the Hon. Member for Yukon was that the timing of a vote rests entirely with the Whips because a division is an expression of the will of the House, not of the Chair. Thus, in his view, even the suspension of the bells overnight is beyond the authority of the Chair, without the consent of the Whips, even though such action cannot affect the length of time the bells may ring nor the outcome of the vote. That is his view and I respect it.

[Translation]

The Hon. President of the Privy Council, while supporting the action of the Chair in suspending the bells, agreed with the Hon. Member for the Yukon that the decision as to the timing of a vote was a matter for the Whips. He pointed out that there are no standing orders to provide any direction as to the Speaker's role where the bells are concerned. Neither is there any jurisprudence except in relation to the lapsing of dilatory motions and the suspension of the bells overnight when a substantive motion is before the House.

The question which arises, therefore, is: how is the Speaker to assist the House without a standing order or a resolution of the House to guide him? How is he to fulfil his duties when he finds himself trapped in a situation whereby, whatever he does, his action will appear to be partisan? With nothing but common sense to guide him, he can only do what appears to be sensible in the circumstances.

[English]

The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) made a number of significant comments. He said that at some point the House has to come to grips with the problem that threatens to be a potential disaster for the parliamentary system. He pointed out that the rules of the House are intended to protect each and every Member. And he underlined the embarrassment for the Chair when it finds itself in a situation such as occurred on March 19.

He has my full sympathy in the expression of these views. Let me assure him that the Chair is ever mindful of its duty to protect minorities. However, where voting is concerned, there is little the Chair can do as long as the timing of a recorded vote remains exclusively in the joint control of the Whips of the Government and the Official Opposition. In practice, total control can be exercised by only one of the two, acting on his own, because under our present practice the vote cannot take place unless both Whips approach the Table together. Perhaps, in taking account of the problem, the House or the House Leaders might give some thought to the position and rights of a third party.

Let us consider the implications of allowing the bells to ring indefinitely. When taken to an extreme, the practice can paralyse Parliament completely. We have seen in Manitoba how the Government was forced into proroguing the legislature because an indefinite bell was used by the opposition to prevent a vote on an important government measure. We can imagine a government in a minority situation using the indefinite bell to avoid facing defeat on an issue of confidence. We have also seen how the bells can disrupt the arrangements for signifying the Royal Assent to bills. While the House is fully within its rights in ordering its affairs as it sees fit, I suggest that the other place and the representative of His Excellency the Governor General were subjected to a grave discourtesy as a result of what happened on March 28. Do we in this House of Commons really want to enshrine this device permanently in our practice?

It seems to me that the House has three options. The bells can be controlled by the Whips, by the Speaker or by Standing Order. I think the House should consider the pros and cons of all three options. If the Whips have unrestricted control over the bells, we all know what the possibilities are. It means that either the Government Whip or the Official Opposition Whip can exercise an absolute veto over the taking of a vote. Perhaps this suits the purposes of the Government and of the Official Opposition. Is it satisfactory to the House as a whole? Is it acceptable to back-benchers? Is it fair to a third party?

If the Speaker were to control the bells, it could place a very grave responsibility upon him. The advantage to the House would be that the control of the bells would be in the hands of an impartial arbiter. He would, to repeat the words of Mr. Redlich, have regard to the "protection of the majority against obstruction and protection of a minority against oppression". Thus he could be expected to intervene if the bells were used to obstruct a government measure indefinitely. He could also be expected to intervene if the Government were trying to prevent a vote it expected to lose.

The third solution would be to adopt a Standing Order which would place a limit on the length of time the bells may ring and possibly also provide for the scheduling of votes at pre-determined times during the week. In this way, all Hon. Members would know in advance the amount of time available to them to reach the House in order to vote. I believe this would be the ideal solution. Only the adoption of a Standing Order could settle this issue once and for all, and I suggest to the House such a Standing Order is sorely needed.

I shall, as has been suggested, be consulting with the three House Leaders with a view to regulating this very important procedural question. For the time being, pending an agreement to change the practice or until I receive other instructions from the House, I shall continue to follow recent precedents. Dilatory motions will be deemed to have lapsed at the ordinary hour of adjournment if not disposed for earlier. In the case of substantive questions, if not disposed of before the ordinary hour of adjournment, the sitting and the bells will be suspended until 9 a.m. on the following sitting day, unless the Chair is notified of a specific intervening hour at which the Whips intend that the vote should take place.

I am not suggesting that either of these practices provides a satisfactory answer to the problem. Without a limit on the bells, we shall continuously be facing a potential procedural dilemma.

[Translation]

The House is master of its own procedure. The authority of the Chair comes from the House. In areas of uncertainty, the Chair can only do its best to interpret the will of the House and protect the rights of its Members. Without the support of the House, the Chair is powerless. I think we should learn from recent experience. The problems we face have been exposed. I would like to thank Hon. Members for their contribution to this discussion. It has been instructive for the Chair and I hope for all Hon. Members.

Above all, I believe it has been instructive for this great institution which we all cherish. The Chair stands ready to co-operate with the House in any attempt to regulate this difficult and pressing problem. The House should, however, be aware of the Speaker's position. He should not be placed in a situation where he is confronted with conflicting duties.

[English]

Until the House comes to grips with this problem, it will remain a constant threat to the efficiency of the House and the security of the Chair. I suggest the credibility of the parliamentary institution is at stake. I believe we have the duty to protect it.

• (1220)

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of arguing the issue again since in your comments today, you already referred to the views expressed previously by the Parliamentary House Leaders. However, considering recent events and the comments of the Chair in this respect, I feel it is my duty, as Leader of the Government in the House, to say very briefly what my reactions were. My first reaction was extremely positive, with respect to the Chair intervening, because you have shown a very real concern for seeing this institution operate in a normal way, and I believe that in the circumstances, the House can hardly have any reservations about the intentions of the Chair, which were to make a contribution while respecting the will of the House towards making it possible for Parliament to be respected and operate in a normal way.

The Chair also referred, very appropriately, to recent, sometimes appalling, events which I would nevertheless like to touch on very briefly to justify your action as well as the suggestion I would like to make to the Chair. The latest incident . . . and there have been three during the last two weeks, Mr. Speaker, in which the public, which was unfortunately unable to intervene, witnessed a constant ringing of the division bells. The latest incident was yesterday. I think it is shocking, because the division bells were used to achieve two negative and entirely unacceptable objectives. The first was to prevent Parliament from sitting, which is intolerable when we consider the number of people to serve and the volume of legislation before the House, and the second, to prevent one of the parties to a contract from meeting its obligations. In my view, the latter is just as shocking and intolerable.

The House will recall that last June, we had a Bill in which the Government asked for authority to borrow a certain sum of money. The Government negotiated with the Official Opposition and made a deal. An agreement was reached. The deal was: "We are going to cut the amount but you will let us ask Parliament for the difference, with a three-day debate, subject to certain conditions". We met these conditions, Mr. Speaker. The conditions were very straightforward. They were laid down in a special Standing Order of the House, so this was being taken very seriously, and the purpose of the Standing Order was to prevent the Government from losing its part of the deal in a new session, and under the Standing Order we were only obliged to introduce a Bill by the end of March. Therefore, entirely legitimately, we gave notice as required under the Standing Order. We advised the Official Opposition of our intention to act on this agreement, and we made it abundantly clear that we wanted to request, on short notice, a borrowing authority of $4 billion, according to the Bill appearing on the Order Paper. We even informed the Official Opposition that we were ready. I made a solemn commitment on behalf of the Government—it is on the record—yesterday, that we were prepared to subtract the $4 billion from another Bill that is before the House, so that the Opposition would not lose anything, and the Government was not trying to get more out of the deal made with the Official Opposition than it had obtained when the Opposition gave its word that the Government, if it did so within a certain period, could have a three-day debate; $4 billion in order to meet its obligations, pay income tax refunds to Canadians, and so forth. So where do the division bells come in? The Conservative Party used the bells to prevent the Government from acting on the rights it had under this agreement with the Opposition, although the Government held up its side of the agreement. It is absolutely shameful to use the bells to break your word and prevent an agreement, consecrated by a special Standing Order of the House, from being executed. The second appalling aspect of the attitude of the Progressive Conservative Party yesterday, when it let the division bells ring until 6 p.m., was that, in a democratic country, they were preventing the Government from introducing a Bill. What is more fundamental to our freedom? We have a Charter of Rights and a Constitution, we have established the importance of Parliament and the freedom of citizens to be elected members thereof and to pass laws, and one of the simplest ways of passing legislation in this country is to allow a democratically elected Government, to introduce a Bill, during the normal sitting hours. Granted, the Opposition may not agree with the substance, it may debate the Bill and there are rules governing debate. But by preventing Parliament from sitting simply to make it impossible for a democratically elected Government to introduce, not to adopt but to introduce a Bill, are they not running roughshod over democratic principles and insulting the Canadian people? I am saying that it is shameful and totally unacceptable, and I suggest that you, Mr. Speaker, are quite right to intervene at this time and urge all parties to seek ways of enabling the Chair to put a stop to the efforts of a political party bent on bringing Parliament to a standstill, ignoring democracy, flouting its contractual commitments and thus giving the people a pitiful example which ought not to be followed anywhere. That, Mr. Speaker, is the first instance of the Progressive Conservative Party resorting to bell-ringing tactics in recent days.

The second instance has to do with the incident which occurred at 5.40 p.m. the day before, or two days before, when Hon. Members had just voted on a time allocation motion to put an end to filibustering. A few minutes later, the question was put on an amendment. Hon. Members were still on Parliament Hill since they had just voted a few minutes earlier. The Progressive Conservatives knew that the Governor General or his representative was standing by in the Senate, waiting for Members before giving Royal Assent to a supply Bill. They knew that the messenger was at the door and that, in a show of respect for Her Majesty, we had to go to the other place for Royal Assent at six o'clock or shortly after. Despite all that, rather than let the vote be taken rapidly since Members were present, they decided to let the bells ring throughout the night until morning, after the beginning of the day, that is after the regular sitting hour. They openly admitted that they wanted to wrench compromises from the Government through blackmail, saying: If you do not make the concessions we want, Parliament will not sit today, Royal Assent notwithstanding. That was an unspeakable insult to the Senate and particularly to the Governor General or his representative.

Here again, it seems to me to be the kind of abuse we have been witnessing and which is so reprehensible that you are seeking a remedy by appealing to Hon. Members. Here again, in a totally unacceptable and unwarranted tactical expedient, the Progressive Conservative Party completely ignored the Members who were quite prepared to vote and said: No, we are walking out, we will be back tomorrow. The bells will ring, forget about Royal Assent and we will even prevent the House from considering a Bill tomorrow unless you make certain concessions. That is quite unacceptable. That is blackmail, an act of sabotage against this institution, hijacking Parliament!

If we consider what has been happening in Manitoba, again it looks as though the provincial Conservatives took their cue from the federal Progressive Conservative Party which had let the bells ring for 16 days, an incident to which you referred in your remarks. The Conservative bells have been used to impinge on the rights of the Franco-Manitobans. Such an occurrence in Canada is completely unacceptable and shameful. The blue bells, the Conservative bells, the bells used to strike against Canadian freedoms are the bells which were used for the first time by the Progressive Conservative Party in this House two and a half or three years ago, when, for 16 days, before the whole world, news flashed that in the world's foremost freedom-loving country a parliamentary institution was paralyzed because some people on the Opposition side had decided that, to boost their own political interests, it was more relevant to prevent Parliament from operating than to allow democracy to prevail and a government to rule normally and let the people pass judgment on its accomplishments every four or five years as provided for in the Constitution.

Mr. Speaker, those are the abuses which you wanted to help eradicate in presenting your comments this morning, and I congratulate you for it. You have been sitting for 25 years in this House as a parliamentarian and as a politician. I have only been here ten years. However, I am lucid enough to understand that you cannot build anything in our society by knocking down our democratic institutions, the first and most important being the Canadian Parliament.

As a parliamentarian and a Member of this House, I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that my role is not that of a helpless witness to such irresponsible and destructive acts, that my duty as a parliamentarian does not allow me to remain passive and silent. I have been House Leader of this Government for 4½ years and, for a number of years, I have witnessed actions which are absolutely repugnant to a parliamentarian. The comments you made this morning, Mr. Speaker, have given me an opportunity to say so publicly and to mention some rather recent examples of a behaviour which should certainly not be repeated if we want not just to protect this institution, but also to enhance the credibility of politicians in the eyes of the public.

I suggest that those who use such tactics not only should refrain from doing so, but should also apologize publicly and determine not to do so again. We are still in March; there is an Order of Business for today. We shall request the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a Bill and we shall ask the Opposition strictly to agree to respect the rights devolved to us by way of honest negotiations and provided by Standing Orders which were agreed upon by all the Members of this House. Following the discussions I had with the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) yesterday, I expect that the Members opposite will not agree to that unless I have been able to convince them to show some common sense. If they fail to agree, we shall not insist. I would not want to lower myself and prevent this House from sitting today on the grounds that this is an Opposition day. I shall not let my behaviour be influenced by the bell ringing tactics of the Opposition the way the Manitoba Conservatives let theirs be influenced by the Federal Progressive Conservatives. We shall simply refrain from introducing the Bill if there is not unanimous consent, but the people at large will know that this type of obstruction on the part of the Official Opposition is unworthy of a nation which takes pride in the fact that its people are free and that it sets a democratic example for the rest of the world. Whoever will have prevented us from having unanimous consent and who will continue to threaten to use these extreme measures will bear the responsibility for it. We shall see how the public will pass judgment on these facts; we shall see how the public will distinguish between the Progressive Conservative Party before and after Mulroney. Is the civility to which he refers less noisy than it was at the time of the bell ringing for the energy Bill three years ago? Do the bells we have heard these last three days show a change of spirit or attitude on the part of the Progressive Conservative Party in the House? It is unfortunate that the Leader of the Official Opposition is not here at this moment. He is never here and even when he is, he very seldom has any question to ask. He is the new Quiet Man, the "Mr. Muffler" of Canadian politics.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to go on much longer, but Canadians have a right to our respect. They have the right to see their Parliament and their Members of Parliament debate issues in the House. As Members of Parliament, we have no right to prevent debate from proceeding by letting the division bells ring. The Progressive Conservative Party started this new fad of paralyzing debate, infringing on our freedom of speech, and preventing Members of Parliament from passing legislation. One would have hoped that, with the new Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, there would have been a change in attitude, so that Canadians would no longer have to put up with these unfortunate incidents. However, that is not the case, and the public can judge for itself that in the final instance, the Members opposite are the same ones who let the bells ring for sixteen days during the energy debate. They are the ones who undermined Parliament's credibility, who took this institution hostage, and who now, under the leadership of the new Member for Central Nova (Mr. Mulroney), have not changed one bit. It is the same clique, the same old gang of obstructionists that is preventing Parliament from functioning, and, Mr. Speaker I say this is very unfortunate, and I am certainly not convinced that the change in leadership on the Progressive Conservative side was a change for the better. On the contrary, it has become a leadership that is silent on policy and very vocal through its use of the division bells. It is both regrettable and intolerable.

Mr. Speaker, you said that, pending adoption of a Standing Order, the Chair would let itself be guided by common sense. About two weeks ago, and this is my third example, when the bells rang somewhat longer than expected because of the weather, the Chair consulted with Party representatives and found out, at least as far as we were concerned, that it was true the weather was bad in eastern Quebec, that there was fog in the Maritimes and that weather conditions would have prevented Hon. Members from exercising their sacred right to vote in the House. I think it is a matter of common sense. When the division bells ring for such reasons, the Chair having consulted with Members on both sides of the House, it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that it is only common sense and only logical, and that the public is prepared to accept this.

However, with respect to the two most recent examples, the Manitoba issue and the energy legislation bell-ringing incident three and a half years ago, you have every right to try to convince the Parties to reach an agreement so that you will have guidelines to follow and avoid finding yourself too often in situations where you might appear to favour one side over the other.

In the meantime, Mr. Speaker, I hope that parliamentarians will continue to seek a solution and work together to find a way out. I am prepared to sit down with you and discuss the question, as you have suggested, along with the Opposition spokesmen if they are interested—or without them—with a view to improving the situation. However, until such time as we do settle the issue, surely we ought to rely on common sense. We agree with you and, as far as we are concerned, we want to impress upon you that we have never considered nor do we consider now resorting to bell-ringing tactics. Still, we are not going to let the Opposition continue to breach freedom in Canada by playing bell games as it has been doing so shamefully both here and in the Manitoba Legislature.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, we, of course, will want to study your very thoughtful reflections that were obviously given a great degree of care in preparation. Certainly, I for one would be very happy to meet with you, if I took it from your remarks that there is a suggestion that we do so. In the meantime, because the Chair raised the precedents, allow me to say that the manner in which the Government House Leader has referred to the precedents is very saddening to me. What he has done is that not once, not twice, but three times today he has attempted to use this occasion to use French-English rights in this country as an instrument of division rather than one of unity.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Division Bells Procedure

Mr. Nielsen: I deplore that kind of conduct when we on this side have displayed in this House of Commons our adherence to using that issue as an issue for unity rather than disunity.

The roots of this problem go far deeper than most Members here can recall. One or two of us sat here in 1957, 1958, 1959, 1962 and 1963. That was an occasion when the Liberal Opposition of the day had some 45 Members against the overwhelming majority of the then Prime Minister Diefenbaker. As Mr. Pearson himself called it, "that happy band of warriors" held up in the House the Estimates of the day for 49 days, refusing supply, deliberately obstructing the House and, indeed, forcing the Government of the day to go to Governor General's warrants in order to pay the salaries of the Public Service. Yet in this day and age, when we as a responsible Opposition attempt to use the tools remaining, we are called obstructive. When the Government does it, it whines about the weather, or about uncontrollable events; but when we do it, it is called obstruction.

I have no quarrel with what was done by the "four horsemen of the apocalypse", as they were called in those days—Mr. Chevrier, Mr. Pearson, Mr. Pickersgill and Mr. Martin. They were magnificent parliamentarians all, doing what they thought was a responsible job in opposition—and it was, Mr. Speaker.

Therein lies the root of the problem. After the 1963 election we of course changed sides; Mr. Pearson and his Liberal Party took office and we moved to this side of the House. One of the first things that the Government did was look at the Standing Orders and say: "By George, we cannot ever be caught in a situation where we can be prevented from getting our program through, as we did to the Conservatives when they were in office".

The method used to avoid being subjected to the same terms as we had been subjected to when they were in opposition, was to change the Standing Orders. In the process the effectiveness of the Opposition was weakened. The tools it had hitherto possessed in order to discharge its responsible function as an Opposition were taken away. In doing that, the Opposition was left with precious few tools with which to oppose when it believes that opposition is warranted. All it is left with are the tactics that we have used that focus on ringing the bells or moving dilatory motions such as the one moved yesterday. That is all the Government has left any opposition as tools with which to perform its functions.

In effect, we have reached the stage where the Prime Minister's oft-quoted remark is closer to the truth than many people believe—that Members of Parliament, when they are 50 feet off the Hill, are nobodies—because the place is becoming irrelevant in terms of the institutional structure itself—a parliamentary government and a parliamentary opposition.

I agree with the Government House Leader that the Government is there to govern; that is its mandate. But the Government has to admit that the Opposition has a function to perform as well, and that function is to oppose where Opposition—in its view, not the Government's—is essential. It has to be provided with the tools to present that opposition.

We are left with a psychology where we are compelled to the conclusion that unless we do things the way the Government thinks we should do them, we are guilty of obstruction. That is not a good approach to the maintenance of this institution and what it is supposed to be in the parliamentary sense.

Now I want to say a word about yesterday. The Government, through the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), tells us that the borrowing Bill before us for $29.5 billion will be sufficient to cover its needs right through to March 31, 1985. That is what he said; that is all the money the Government needs. We believe that is an overstatement, but nonetheless we are debating the Bill now. Then the Government came along the day before yesterday with a notice—

Mr. Evans: Don't mislead the House.

Mr. Nielsen: I will not even bother—

Mr. Evans: You had better not.

Mr. Nielsen: —replying to that inferential charge from an Hon. Member who has not been here long enough to appreciate the implications of what he is saying.

After telling the House that all it needs to cover its entire requirements for the fiscal year is $29.5 billion, two days later the Government puts a notice on the Order Paper asking for authority to borrow a further $4 billion, which makes the total $33.5 billion.

Mr. Evans: What did our House Leader say yesterday?

Mr. Nielsen: If the Hon. Member would just keep quiet for a moment, as I did when his House Leader spoke, and allow me to complete my remarks, I will get to his question. I think he should at least extend the same kind of courtesy that we extended to the Government House Leader and bless us with his silence.

• (1240)

The Government says that if we give it that further $4 billion worth of borrowing power, whatever portion it uses it will deduct from the $29.5 billion—I see the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren) nodding in agreement with that—by way of an amendment to be introduced at the committee stage. We do not question that. We do not question the validity of the Government's word in that regard. What we do question is that it needs it.

Why is it bringing forward a Bill for a supplementary $4 billion when it has cash deposits of $8.1 billion? April, we know, is a heavy expenditure month. All the bills come in and all the refunds must be made, and the like. However, there are enough cash reserves to cover the demands up to the end of April by more than two times now on deposit with the Government. I see the Minister of State for Finance disagreeing with me there, but that is our advice.

In committee, we asked the Governor of the Bank of Canada and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) to explain why the cash deposits now available to the Government are so far beyond those which were available last year, more than double. They will not answer. They will make no disclosures and give no explanations. In the absence of explanations and in the absence of answers, and in the presence of the fact that it has that $8.1 billion there, what are we to do to act responsibly? We must oppose by any means available to us on the basis of the information which we have or have not received despite repeated attempts to get it. The only manner in which we can oppose, Sir, is to prevent the introduction of that Bill.

I am convinced, Sir, that it is false to say that not giving government this supplementary borrowing Bill of $4 billion will hold up the payment of income tax refunds. That is a political statement and it is a sad one, to my way of thinking. In any event, it is false.

One last thing, Sir. It will take the Government, by the application of Standing Order 8(3), five days to get its $29.5 billion. It would have taken three days—not much of a short-cut—if we had permitted it to go the supplementary borrowing route. It was not necessary and it would have had a hangover in that $4 billion for which we were being asked to provide authority. That is what we are objecting to. If the Government House Leader was really serious about parliamentary reform which would permit governments to govern and permit oppositions to discharge their responsibilities, he would bring forward for quick passage all of the outstanding reports of the parliamentary committee on reform. These reports were dropped from the Order Paper at the prorogation of the last session, but are still there, as the Government House Leader told me before. They are in the public domain, but they are sitting on the shelf, no longer on our Order Paper. If the Government was really serious, it would bring all of them forward and let us pass them before the end of June. Let us give them quick debate and bring about meaningful reform in this place.

I, for my part, and on behalf of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, with whatever tools have been left to it, will be very pleased to sit down and have a very serious discussion with the House Leader and with you, Sir, and with the House Leader of the New Democratic Party, to see if we can design some method of bringing those reports before the House, agreeing on a time limit for their debate—a short time limit—and for their very quick and expedient passage.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of our House Leader today, I would just like to make a few comments concerning your reflections, the remarks of the Government House Leader and those of the House Leader of the Official Opposition.

First of all, I would like to join with others in commending you for deciding to deal with this very difficult issue within the limitations, as you yourself pointed out, of what the Speaker is able to do about this issue in the absence of any clear instruction from the House, and in the absence, I might say, of any clear political will to do something about it. I believe you are to be commended for taking your responsibilities as Speaker seriously in trying to do what you can within the very real limitations which you yourself pointed out. I will have more to say about those limitations in a moment, Mr. Speaker.

I hope that co-operation between the House Leaders will be possible in the near future and that some kind of agreement could be reached with respect to a Standing Order which would give the Chair more instruction, more clear guidance, with respect to the taking of votes, but perhaps leave some discretion with the Chair for special circumstances or whatever. But that is just a personal view of mine. I do hope that there could be that kind of co-operation.

However, my concern is that the remarks of the Government House Leader were not, in my view, designed to create that kind of co-operative atmosphere. He did not go anywhere toward creating that possibility. If anything, he damaged that likelihood by bringing in things which have nothing to do with what is going on here in the House of Commons, in the federal Parliament. The Government House Leader would have been well advised not to have commented on the things he did comment on and to have stuck to what our responsibilities are here in the House of Commons in ensuring that we conduct our business in a way which commands the respect of the Canadian people.

I feel we do have to do something about the bell ringing episodes. I am sympathetic with the comment of the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) that very few tools are left to oppositions to indicate to government: "Hey, we are really serious about this". I do not always agree with the Official Opposition as to what it decides to get its back up about and go to the wall for. In fact, I very seldom agree with it. However, I do agree that very few tools are left to oppositions which, for one reason or another, make that decision. Fewer tools, I might say, are left to an opposition Party which is not the Official Opposition. So there is a problem.

I ask my Progressive Conservative colleagues to consider, especially since they regard themselves as defenders of the parliamentary traditions despite the damage which has been done to that tradition by the Liberals over the years, whether, in spite of the legitimacy of the argument that this is one of the few tools left to the Official Opposition, we are not, by having these bell ringing episodes, doing damage to the very institution which I believe the Progressive Conservative Party genuinely cherishes. The public really does not understand, and I believe no one can really understand, just what is going on with the empty Chamber and the ringing of the bells. It is always an embarrassment to me, Mr. Speaker.

For instance, yesterday afternoon there must have been people here who had only one day in Ottawa. They come here to watch the debates of the House of Commons and all of a sudden the Speaker says "Call in the Members", a bell starts to ring, and everyone takes off. Surely people who watch us all the time on TV must be getting used to it by now so they know what is going on. But people who come here out of the blue to see their Parliament in action must really wonder what the devil is going on when the bells start to ring. I do not know if they are told, or if they could be told: "Don't bother sitting around because there is not going to be a vote today". "Well, I have four hours". "Sorry, there will not be a vote". "Well, they were all just in here". "I know, but they have all taken off".

I think what you were pointing to, Mr. Speaker, is that this does not lend itself, to understate the case, to enhancing or even preserving the dignity of the House of Commons, or the perception of democracy as something conducted by adults in a reasonable manner within which context there are rules for disagreement. I certainly agree with everyone who has said we have to do something about this. If doing something has to be part and parcel of giving more genuine power and input not just to opposition Parties per se, but to back-benchers and Parliament itself, then so be it.

I have a special interest in this, as you know, Mr. Speaker, as Vice-Chairman of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure. I regret that we did not come up with a solution to the bells problem, but in order to do that we would have had to come up with a solution to the over-all problem that Members of Parliament in general, and opposition Parties, official or otherwise, do not have enough genuine input into the process around here. That is the problem and delay becomes the only mechanism by which people can indicate they are dead serious about their opposition to something. They want the opportunity through delay to allow public opinion perhaps to mobilize or whatever.

Delay does have its benefits. Delay is not always the bad thing that the Government House Leader would have us believe. The word "efficiency" is thrown around too loosely. I would like this place to be as efficient as possible, but what the Government House Leader means by that word is not what I have in mind. Quite often he means the Government getting its legislation through as quickly as possible regardless of the contrary views here in the House of Commons.

What I wanted to point out, Mr. Speaker, is that there should not be too much self-righteousness on either side of the House in this issue. Some of the tactics employed by the Opposition have been embarrassing. Although I have not been here very long, I paid attention to the role of Parliament for a long time before I got here, and no one has done more damage to Parliament over the years as the central political institution in this country than the Liberal Party of Canada. They have done this by making major policy announcements outside of the House, by Ministers refusing to make statements in this House so that people can respond to them. They have done this through some of the rule changes they forced through unilaterally in 1968. The list goes on, Mr. Speaker, of the way in which the Party now in power has taken away from Parliament as an institution. So let us not have the Government House Leader get up and wax eloquently and self-righteously about his appreciation for Parliament. If he has that appreciation as an individual, then he ought to do something about his Party and he ought to be more honest about the role they have played in downgrading this institution. Then maybe we can take him seriously.

You have laid out the options with respect to the bells, Mr. Speaker. Either we can continue as we have, with the decision on when a vote is taken resting completely with the Whips, which I hope everyone regards as unacceptable; or you could have more authority as the Speaker to decide; or we could have a Standing Order. What I want to say goes back to the recommendations made by the special committee, which were mentioned by the Hon. Member for Yukon. Right now the Speaker does not have that kind of authority. This is no reflection on your personal competence or ability to do the job; it is a reflection on the structure here. That is why we recommended that the Speaker be genuinely elected by the House of Commons; that there be a process for electing the Speaker which would give the Speaker of the House of Commons more genuine moral authority in the House. Then option number two would, I think, be much more acceptable.

However, going beyond the question of the bells, I think this is an opportunity for us to reflect on why it is that the Chair in its present circumstances feels the limitations it does. This is because of the way in which the Speakership has grown up over the years in Canada. This again is a peculiarly Canadian problem. The Speaker of the House of Commons in Westminster has much more moral authority than the Speaker of the House of Commons in Canada has ever had because the appointment is much more removed from the perception that it is the will of the Government only and not that of the House of Commons. This is an opportunity for us to reflect on that.

Having said that, I would just like to say one more thing before I sit down with respect to the comment the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is reported to have made some time before I got here, in 1979 I believe, that when Members of Parliament get 50 feet off the Hill they are nobodies. Mr. Speaker, my contention, having listened to many witnesses in the special committee and from my own experience as a Member of Parliament, is that it is just the other way around. When we get off the Hill and we are in our constituency, or speaking at a conference, or anywhere but in the House of Commons, we are somebody because our people expect that Members of Parliament have a larger role to play in how this country is run than we actually do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: It is when we get into the House of Commons that we are nobodies. For the most part we have absolutely no effect on what goes on around here. There are exceptions, but one of the things we have to do to revitalize this institution is change our political culture and the way we now regard Parliament. A big change in that respect will have to come from that side of the House because they are the Government, they are one of the Parties which is a contender for government in the next election, and because they in all likelihood—God forbid, but this is the way Canadian history works out—might be the Government again.

Mr. Stevens: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: Sinc Stevens is clapping at the fact that the Liberals might be the Government again.

Mr. Stevens: Oh, no!

Mr. Blaikie: I think he must have misunderstood me. In any event, there are great changes to be made and I think the Government ought to show a little leadership. Instead of being so self-righteous about it, why do they not do what the Hon. Member for Yukon suggested, and what I and other Members have suggested many times, and get on with implementing the recommendations of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure? Then we could take the Government seriously.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair would like to thank all Hon. Members who participated for their comments. They have obviously been well motivated and thoughtful.

I wonder if we might now, since it is one o'clock, take up the rest of Routine Proceedings at two o'clock today?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock later this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I have had consultations with the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). I cannot see anyone from the NDP present at this stage but I suppose they will not object. We propose to suspend Routine Proceedings until after the third speaker on the motion to be debated on this Opposition Day. That will give us time to continue with the debate we began before the lunch hour. If you seek unanimous consent to postpone Routine Proceedings until after the third speaker has spoken on the Orders of the Day today, I think it would be agreeable to us and to the other Party.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, that is quite agreeable. I hope that each of the three speakers will take their full 20 minutes.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 62—INTEREST RATES

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) we will have to seek consent for the motion to be moved by the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens).

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent that the Hon. Member for York-Peel will move for the Hon. Member for St. John's West?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (for Mr. Crosbie) moved:

That whereas the depreciating dollar and increasing unemployment, inflation and interest rates endanger economic recovery and undermine job creation through their damaging effects upon agriculture, small business and business investment, this House regrets the government's failure to include in its February 15th Budget, or to adopt at any subsequent date, policies to provide the necessary conditions for a reduction in interest rates and the strengthening of the Canadian dollar and calls for the immediate resignation of the government.

● (1410)

He said: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) hopes to join this debate as it proceeds. Unfortunately, he is detained at a luncheon meeting and has been unable to finish his speech to get here in time to join in the debate.

I would hope in discussing the motion now before us that we can do so in a comparatively non-partisan way. We are actually dealing with something that is a terrible tragedy not only for hundreds of thousands but for about two million Canadians. I am, of course, referring to our unemployed, our jobless. It is fine to talk about those big figures, but let us look at what has happened since 1980. I think we sometimes forget the human aspect when we talk about raw unemployment figures. If we go from town to town across Canada we find that Saint John, for example, had an unemployed population in 1980 of 4,000. There are now 7,000 people unemployed; 3,000 more are now out of work in Saint John.

In Montreal we find 74,000 more out of work today than in 1980, that figure having risen from 124,000 to 198,000 currently. To express that in percentage terms, it means 13.7 per cent of the work force in Montreal have no jobs. They are out of work.

However, if you look at the Ottawa-Hull area, you find a startlingly different picture, Mr. Speaker. While unemployment has gone up, it has gone up only 3,000, from 29,000 to 32,000. I suggest that is one of the problems we live with at the federal Government level. People, certainly the bureaucracy in an area such as Ottawa, get isolated. They do not, as people in other towns do, sense the magnitude of the unemployment that is occurring in Canada.

Sudbury has had a 100 per cent jump in unemployment, from 5,000 persons to 10,000, since 1980. Toronto, usually looked upon as a comparatively full employment area, has seen 75,000 people added to its unemployed list since 1980. In Toronto there are now 156,000 unemployed. Hamilton has seen its unemployment almost double from 17,000 persons to 33,000 currently. I emphasize to all Members, even to the socialistic Members because they seem to care so little for these things, that this jobless situation has occurred in just three years. In the case of Hamilton, in percentage terms unemployment has jumped from 6.4 per cent to 11.9 per cent. Winnipeg has seen a jump in its jobless total from 18,000 to 32,000 people.

Then we come to the tragic situation in Calgary and Edmonton. Isn't it strange, Mr. Speaker, that I am in the House of Commons on March 30, 1984, talking about declining economies in what only four years ago were two of the most prosperous cities not only in Canada but in North America? While our economy was doing poorly, certainly in the late 1970s, we at least had the Province of Alberta where the economy was comparatively buoyant. Then came the National Energy Program. An industry that was relatively successful in Alberta may have hit some decline, but the National Energy Program accelerated that decline beyond belief. As a result in Edmonton, where there were 14,000 out of work in 1980, there are now 46,000 out of work, a jump of 32,000 persons. A total of 32,000 people is roughly the population of the largest town, Newmarket, in my riding. It means, in effect, that every man, woman and child is out of work in Newmarket. Or you could say that the entire population of Newmarket, 32,000, is out of work in Edmonton alone. In percentage terms, unemployment has tripled, from 4.1 per cent to 12.1 per cent in Edmonton.

Then we have Calgary. Twelve thousand was the number of people looking for work in 1980. I do not have to remind Hon. Members that was when, unfortunately, we got turfed out of power. There are now 45,000 people unemployed in Calgary, up 33,000. In percentage terms the figure has almost tripled, from 3.6 per cent to 12.2 per cent.

In Vancouver we find 48,000 more people out of work today than in 1980, the figure having jumped from 36,000 to 84,000 persons, meaning that 12.3 per cent of the population of Vancouver are out of work.

I wanted to mention those figures because when we look at some of the points in our motion before the House, we gloss over what we are talking about in human terms. I want to refer to the depreciating dollar, inflation, the interest rate increases that we are experiencing and the general lack of growth in our economy. All of this need not have happened, yet when you look back over the years, in my case since 1972 when I first became a Member of this House, you can see how predictable it was, how the Government of the day was taking step after step that would lead to the present malaise as sure as the sun will rise tomorrow.

What brought me into this House was the way the Government went about the income tax revision, blatantly ignoring the public initially and putting tremendous consternation on Canada's whole economy. There was an indication even back in the late 1960s and early 1970s that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was bad news for the nation. His priorities were wrong. He was fascinated, as history has demonstrated, with things that disunited Canada, that essentially focused the nation and certainly this House on things other than getting our economy first and foremost operating satisfactorily, and secondly giving Canadians the prosperity to which they were entitled.

That is the chronic problem with which we have been living. I suggest it started to show up most vividly during those hung years when we had a minority Liberal government aided and abetted by the socialists between 1972 and 1974. It was during that period that we found that, in the Liberals, desperate anxiety to retain power, the then Trudeau Government accepted virtually any ultimatum thrown its way by the socialists to our left. The net result was, with the weak Minister of Finance then in place, spending soared.

I thought we had lost that Minister at the federal level but now I understand that he believes he should not come back as a new Minister of Finance—heaven forbid—but as the Leader of the Liberal Party and presumably Prime Minister. Of course, I am referring to John Turner. When he was Minister of Finance I was able to watch him, for some time as a critic, double government spending before he left after 40 months. He doubled federal spending and introduced the nation to peacetime deficit financing for the first time. By the time he left office, the deficit had soared from one which was well below a billion dollars. If we go back a number of years in which there were some years in surplus and some years in deficit, he left us with a deficit of $5.6 billion. Some now say that this is the man who was responsible, a man of fiscal restraint. I would invite anyone who wants to say that to look at the record first. Inflation and unemployment went up while the rate of growth in the economy went down, along with our dollar. That was the beginning of the colossal catastrophe which faces the country now.

After he established these spending programs to which I referred, which doubled federal spending during that 40 months, he then brought in indexing. The Government became involved in that very awkward fiscal position in which there was virtually no control over the spending side, which was not indexed except in reverse, where inflation would make expenditures soar, while revenue was indexed so that it plateaued. Having set in place the fiscal stance that saw a levelling of revenue but an ever-growing expenditure line, he then not only quit as Minister of Finance but went back to the private sector and made hundreds of thousands of dollars a year presumably advising people about what was wrong in Ottawa, if one believes his private letters of the time.

That is what we have inherited. We have inherited a regime that has left a gap between revenue and expenditures of over $30 billion. As has been pointed out, on a per capita basis that is 50 per cent more than the deficit which the Americans are so worried about in their country. The deficit not only sops up the savings money of the country, it drives up interest rates and is putting us into the position where 30 per cent of every tax dollar that comes into the federal treasury must be earmarked to pay interest alone. That is what is happening.

The Government will admit that 20 per cent of their expenditures goes out in interest to service the debt, but it is not so quick to admit when speaking about the $100 billion of expenditures that it only has approximately $66 billion in revenue. This means that for every $1.50 that it spends, it only has $1 to cover it. That is why I say that 30 cents out of every dollar it has in revenue must go to pay someone, and it is more frequently the foreigner who picks up that 30 cents, or part of it.

This is the scenario in which we find ourselves. The Government likes to say that other countries are presumably as bad off as our country. I know from your years of attentive study in this field, Mr. Speaker, that you know that is untrue. Let me confirm what you know to be untrue. For example, the best comparison we have for our economy is easily the American economy. We plunged into the recession, which we now refer to as past history but which may or may not be true, sooner than the Americans. We went deeper into the recession than the Americans and our recovery from that recession has been much slower. If our economy had performed under the emperor as well as the American economy has performed under their President, there would be 448,000 more Canadians working in Canada today. The truth is that the Government, rather than the Yankee battering which it loves to do, should perhaps admit its failure to the Canadian public, because if our economy was running at least as well as the American economy, almost a third of our unemployed would not be out of work at all.

Let me give some other facts. Each Canadian employee today would have $967 more per year in after-tax income if we were doing as well as the Americans. Our industrial production would be $4 billion higher than it currently is. It would also mean that our Gross National Product would be $13.2 billion higher. I could give other comparisons. For example, while our unemployment level on a national basis is 11.3 per cent, the American unemployment level is 7.8 per cent. During the past three months U.S. prices went up 4.4 per cent on a seasonally adjusted annual rate basis while Canadian prices went up 7.4 per cent.

I am putting this on the record because I think if we are honest with our constituents it is not just enough to acknowledge what a mess we are in but we should also acknowledge that it did not have to be that way. Certainly the situation in the United States demonstrates that our situation did not have to be so bad.

I also said that we should not be overly partisan about this subject because I believe that there are solutions. If I may, I would like to recommend, in attempting to decide on solutions, that all members, certainly Liberal members, and even the socialists if they care to read, as well as ourselves, should read a book that has just come into our offices. It is a book written by the late Maurice Lamontagne entitled Business Cycles in Canada: The Post-War Experience in Policy Directions. I invite Hon. Members to read this book because I believe that the senator repeatedly asked us to consider some of the options, such as the research and development potentials, the technology potentials and the trade opportunities. In short, he tried to have us think about the future that could be as opposed to dwelling on that philosophical, academic cross-purpose that the Prime Minister led us into.

This book allows us to learn some of the senator's thoughts even after his death. I would invite many in the House to read what the late senator had to say because I can assure Hon. Members that if we would accept some of the suggestions that are being made, the future in Canada can be one where indeed we will have 500,000 more working than are projected to be working under the present Minister of Finance's projections through to 1987. Inflation will be lower. Interest rates will be lower. The deficit will be less. However, before we can reach that goal, we must do what the motion calls for—demand the resignation of the Government and let somebody who knows how to run things in a business-like manner get into office.

● (1430)

Mr. MacLaren: Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the Hon. Member who has moved the motion of, in effect, censure on the Government is not able to be here today to give substance to his allegations. On the other hand, while stating in his motion a number of dreadful things that he sees this Government doing, the same man not many months ago said he would do exactly the same thing. Here we have the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) saying that the Government has failed in a number of respects, yet a few months ago he said that if he were in government he would continue with the general approach taken by the Finance Minister. I don't doubt in those circumstances that the Hon. Member finds it difficult to be in the House—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Standing Orders provide for a ten-minute question and comment period after each speaker. May I inquire from the Minister if he rose to make a speech, make a comment or put a question?

Mr. MacLaren: Mr. Speaker, as I informed the Chair earlier it was my intention to ask for the floor following the—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I appreciate the Hon. Minister's comment. Nevertheless, the Chair is bound by the Standing Orders to inquire if any Members wish to pose questions or make comments following the previous Member's speech.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, the previous speaker referred to the years 1972-74. It was a great insight for me to find out where we really got into trouble. I was aware it was during the day of the support of the red rump that the Liberals brought in these extra policies that caused us trouble. Could the Hon. Member expand? Did the total deficit in those two years amount to $5 billion, or was it each of those years? Can he expand on what he was telling us about that two-year period and what happened subsequently?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the period that the Hon. Member is referring to is, of course, that period between 1972 and 1974. We find that in the very early 1970s there was a comparatively balanced budget position. One year there was even a fair surplus. Then the deficits start to mount. By 1975 the deficit was $5.4 billion in that year alone. It was caused by high spending prgrams being put in place without the corresponding funding. Unfortunately, that was not the end of the story. With the indexing that I referred to that the then Minister of Finance, Mr. Turner, brought in, the revenue in subsequent years tended to plateau, yet his big spending programs—and incidentally we found this out in Treasury Board—never costed out.

Mr. Pepin: As recommended by your Leader.

Mr. Stevens: As a result you have that yawn, that gap between revenue and expenditures, that is now producing a $30 billion deficit. The Minister of State for External Relations (Mr. Pepin) says "as recommended by your Leader", who was the then Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Stanfield. That is typical of how the Liberals only listen to part of what we say. What Mr. Stanfield said at the time was that the only way we could once again get control of expenditures in this country was to cut off from government what they call their tax dividends.

With our personal income tax structure the way it was, if there was a 10 per cent increase in the economy—let us say it was pure inflation—taxes went up 17 per cent. He said you have to index that because as long as you hand that kind of a melon to a government, it will start spending it. The other side, and this is obviously what the Government and the Minister of State for External Relations have forgotten, was that you have to bring in government restraint hand-in-hand with indexing your revenue. That is something this Government and certainly Mr. Turner never did. We are now rueing the day.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I must apologize for disrupting the train of thought, if any, of the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren). I have a question for the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) knowing that he has some knowledge of the banking industry. Will the fact that Canadian banks have extended great amounts of money by way of loans to countries such as Argentina, Brazil and Mexico, which are having a great deal of difficulty repaying these loans, affect interest rates in Canada in the near future and the level of economic activity? What are the relationships between moneys that have been loaned abroad and moneys that have been loaned to Canadian businesses or the Canadian Government? Could this state of affairs have been prevented by some form of government policy? Is that a reasonable suggestion?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the question. I believe it is important that we remember just what did happen with respect to this sizeable exposure of Canadian banks to what are generally regarded, as the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) said the other day, as not good credit risks. Our banks have an exposure of approximately $14 billion in loans to various Latin American countries, mainly Mexico, Brazil, the Argentine and certain others. This has become a tremendously worrisome asset on their balance sheet. While some rescheduling has been taking place, there is that deep down feeling that they are just fudging things. Unless the loans are rescheduled, they are just not current. This weekend we may find that the Argentine will say: "We are not going to play the game any more. We are not going to pay the interest. We are not going to reschedule. We just think the terms are too severe".

Mr. Pepin: They said they would.

Mr. Stevens: If they said they would, that is good. What I am saying is that it is a very anxious thing for any banking group to have to live with. It is worth remembering that what that causes the banking community to do is widen its spread between the cost of its money and what it charges its customers. We have a very wide spread at the present time. The banks need that spread to provide for future losses that they feel may occur. Second, it makes them come down exceedingly hard on commercial borrowers in this country. Commercial loans in this country have been reduced by about $12 billion over the last couple of years. They are calling in that money. Guess where they are putting it? They are bailing out the Government, buying Government debt. That puts pressure on the Canadian businessman. That is why the farmer who, in the aggregate, has access to only $7.5 billion from Canadian banks is being forced as hard as he is to pay up or be foreclosed.

• (1440)

In short, the system can only take so much expansion. If one part of the system, such as foreign credits, becomes questionable as far as security is concerned, it means that the better part, the domestic part, takes severe pressure both in interest rate rises and in the collection and recall of those loans.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I wonder if the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) could deal again with this matter of foreign loans through the banks. Perhaps he could deal with the degree to which the federal Government is involved in the operation, either indirectly through the EDC or as a guarantor of some of the loans that have been made for the purchase in Argentina, for example, of the Candu reactor.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, again I thank the Hon. Member for his question. As he undoubtedly recalls, the Export Development Corporation, a corporation which carries the full faith and credit of Canada behind it, has loaned the Argentine something over $300 million. Not only did the corporation loan that money on the strength of its directors' decision but it also went through another section of the Act and got a direct loan from the Government of Canada approved by the Cabinet Ministers as opposed to the directors of the corporation.

In short, not only did the EDC extend what it felt was wise in the case of lending to Argentina but, when it ran out of money, it then had the Government indicate that that was still not enough and add another one hundred million some odd dollars to be authorized directly by the Cabinet. I hope that that money will be repaid in due course. Again, it puts the Government in a position of being exposed on a loan that is shown as an asset today but may never be recovered in full.

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we are faced today with a motion presented by an Hon. Member who, as I noted earlier, is not present in the House. In any event, the motion is at variance with the Member's own stated view that, if he were Finance Minister, he would do exactly what the Government has been doing. It is also, of course, at variance with the facts. If the Hon. Member opposite had taken the trouble to search out the facts, he would have seen that the allegations made in his motion cannot in fact be substantiated. The motion is, however, at one with the gloomy view of the economy which he always tends to bring forward. He has become sort of an apostle of doom and gloom and I am not surprised that he takes advantage of this occasion, against the evidence, to present an exceedingly gloomy picture of Canadian economic prospects.

The heart of the resolution is an interesting one. It attempts to suggest that somehow the Canadian Government can avoid dropping the value of the Canadian dollar vis-à-vis the U.S. dollar and at the same time hold down interest rates if at the same time U.S. interest rates are rising. That is the situation we are facing today. As a result of principally two factors, U.S. interest rates have increased over the past few months. There is an expectation that those interest rates will grow again in the time ahead. Why is that? Principally because the United States is running a very substantial structural deficit.

Let us pause for a moment to describe a structural deficit. I dare say that there are one or two Members opposite who may want, as they often do, to point out that in per capita terms the Canadian deficit is somewhat higher than the U.S. deficit. The fact is that the Canadian deficit reduces automatically as tax revenues increase and as the costs of social programs diminish during the period of recovery. The United States deficit, by contrast, is one which is fixed until such time as the United States Government does decide explicitly to reduce its deficit spending.

At the same time as it is engaged in high levels of deficit spending, the United States has experienced a period of substantial economic recovery. There is an anticipation in the U.S. capital markets that a crowding out shall occur unless the United States Government reduces its deficit spending. In anticipation of that type of crowding out of private investors in the money markets of the United States, U.S. interest rates have been rising.

Attracted by those rising United States interest rates, foreign money, including Canadian speculative short-term money, flows into the United States. A Canadian speculating on the U.S. dollar may buy U.S. dollars and pay for them with Canadian dollars, thus drawing down the value of the Canadian dollar. In those circumstances, what will happen in Canada? We can either respond by adjusting our interest rates or we can let the Canadian dollar reduce its value.

The Chicken Littles across the way say: "My goodness, the sky is falling. Look what is happening. Interest rates in the United States are going up, Canada will have to respond and interest rates will go through the roof". They cry out in horror that the sky is falling and wonder what we are going to do. I shall tell them what we are going to do, Mr. Speaker. We shall go on doing what we have been doing. We shall moderate any sharp reductions in the exchange rate of the Canadian dollar with the U.S. dollar and we shall equally move to ensure that there are no sharp or rapid increases in interest rates in Canada.

I see no evidence, Members opposite cite no evidence and indeed economists who write in the newspapers and elsewhere cite no evidence, that we need fear very rapid increases in interest rates in Canada or indeed that we need fear rapid devaluation of the Canadian dollar. Members opposite know that the reason this is so is that fundamentally the Canadian economy is exceedingly strong. There is ample evidence of that at hand, some of which I shall cite in a moment.

If the Member opposite is suspicious of any evidence that I may cite, I would draw his attention to the Conference Board of Canada, an institution much favoured by Members opposite because it often presents, as they do, a very gloomy view of the prospects for the Canadian economy. The most recent quarterly statement of the Conference Board of Canada forecasts that the inflation rate is to decline for the remainder of this year, easing from about 5.8 per cent in 1984 to about 4.6 per cent this year.

Mr. Stevens: How about real growth?

Mr. MacLaren: The Conference Board goes on to note that unemployment is expected to decline during the coming year. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that there shall be real growth of a substantial nature in the Canadian economy during the calendar year of 1984. The Member opposite alleges that there shall be no real growth in the economy. That, of course, is nonsense.

Mr. Stevens: No.

Mr. MacLaren: There shall be very substantial growth in the economy.

Mr. Stevens: Tell us how much.

Mr. MacLaren: If he thinks for one moment that the rapid rate of increase experienced during the initial period of a recovery is to continue indefinitely, then of course he is at variance with all economic forecasts. The initial spurt of economic recovery in any such cycle is typically followed by a period of sustainable and stable growth, and indeed of slower growth. We have said that from the beginning. We knew it would happen. The Hon. Member opposite must have known that it would happen, yet the Chicken Littles are saying: "My goodness, the sky is falling". We are saying, we have said and are continuing to say that there shall be sustainable and real growth in the Canadian economy in 1984.

Let me deal for a few moments with the economic forecasts for the future. However, I also wish to spend a moment dealing first with the question of the impact of the United States interest rates and the United States fiscal policy generally on the Canadian situation. As I have suggested, the United States has had rapid economic growth in the last few months matched with a substantial federal deficit. The Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board in the United States has noted that those two factors combine to pose a "clear and present danger to the sustainability of growth and the stability of markets both domestically and internationally". He calls on the United States Government to take action to reduce its deficit spending in order to permit greater private sector borrowing in the economy as the expansion goes forward. If the United States Government does not make that move, then there is a danger that interest rates there will continue to climb.

• (1450)

As I have said, Mr. Speaker, I do not anticipate a sharp increase in interest rates in the United States during the course of this year. I suggest to the Hon. Member opposite that there is no way in which the Canadian people can immunize themselves from the effect of interest rate increases in the United States if that should occur. The fact is that the Canadian economy is part of a total North American economy. We operate open borders for the flow of capital, goods and services, and unless the Hon. Member somehow thinks that we can revert to wartime circumstances and successfully impose on an infinitely more complicated economy sustained by electronic transfers of payments a system of exchange controls, then I think he is talking through his hat.

What we have to do in Canada over the longer run is to ensure that we are more productive and more internationally competitive. That is what the Government has been promoting over the past year and a half during our period of economic recovery, the first milestone being the April, 1983 Budget and the more recent Budget of February.

Our competitive position in Canada, since the recovery began, has improved substantially because we have succeeded in bringing down the rate of inflation in Canada. Wage settlements and inflation in Canada have declined dramatically and, accordingly, productivity has increased dramatically.

Our friends opposite often want to compare Canada with the United States so let us make some comparisons. In the final quarter of 1983 the level of wage settlements in Canada was lower than that of the United States. Our unit labour costs have moderated considerably compared to those of the United States. Our surplus on merchandise trade has grown and has reached record levels, unlike the situation in the United States where that country is running a major, unprecedented trade deficit. Canada is reaching record levels of export trade and the United States is experiencing the very opposite trend.

These and other developments are positive elements that have made for confidence in the Canadian dollar in the first year of our recovery, and there is every reason to believe that full confidence will continue. Obviously we want to sustain that recovery by a stable dollar and stable if not lower interest rates. The downward pressures on the exchange rate of the Canadian dollar with the U.S. dollar pose some difficult economic choices for Canadians. On the one hand we know perfectly well that downward pressure on the exchange rate can introduce inflation into Canada, but equally we know that large increases in interest rates can also cause problems for our economic growth. As I mentioned earlier, we have been working to ensure that any such changes are moderate and that there is no substantial devaluation in the Canadian dollar or sharp increases in interest rates.

I said that the real assurance that neither of these deleterious circumstances will occur rests on the fundamental strength of the Canadian economic recovery. I want to cite for the Hon. Member opposite, who seems to choose his statistics in a most curious fashion—

Mr. Stevens: But they are accurate.

Mr. MacLaren: —that, for example, in January we had a record merchandise trade surplus of $25 billion at an annual rate. The Hon. Member opposite may wish to belittle that achievement but it is one of which all Canadians can be proud. For my part, I would see Canada experiencing very real growth in export trade during the remainder of 1984.

Mr. Stevens: That is what we are saying, the economy is moving.

Mr. MacLaren: Partly as a result of that factor and other factors, real domestic product increased by 1.3 per cent in January. That means an increase of 16 per cent at annual rates. No one expects the economic recovery to bound forward at such a pace indefinitely but I say again to the Hon. Member opposite that he can be certain, if he will take the trouble to look at the forecasts, that we will achieve very real growth during the remainder of this year. Retail sales increased some 3.1 per cent in January alone. That is more than a one-third increase over the similar period last year at annual rates.

Regarding manufacturers' shipments, Hon. Members opposite may wish to consider, in terms of what inventory replacement means and what manufacturing expansion means, that manufactured shipments rose by almost 7 per cent in January and new orders by some 9 per cent. That would be in both cases of manufactured shipments and new orders almost a doubling of those of last year. Unemployment was up some 54,000 jobs in February and housing starts rose for the fourth consecutive month.

All those factors are at least on a par with the situation in the United States and in several respects exceed the economic pace in the United States. I do not know what purpose Hon. Members opposite have in seeking to undermine confidence in the economic recovery in Canada and the growth we are now entering upon, but I would suggest to them that in their ever present comparisons with the United States they should recognize that in Canada we are experiencing a period of very real, sustainable growth.

In earlier discussions a number of Members, indeed the Hon. Member who introduced the motion today, have drawn attention to the fact that in Canada we have had a high level of unemployment that can only cause concern to us all; but they neglected to point out that some three million more Canadians are at work now than there were in 1968. After warnings from economists that 1983 would produce more job losses, in fact the economy responded in 1983 by creating some 403,000 new jobs. A year or more ago most forecasters called for continuing declines in unemployment. For example, the Conference Board of Canada forecast 163,000 fewer jobs, but business fooled the forecasters and by December the economy had restored three-quarters of the jobs lost during the recession. Last week Statistics Canada reported that our recovery from the recession is now complete and that we are entering a period of real growth.

How does our employment performance look as compared to that of our major trading partners? I have said that there are now three million more Canadians who work today than there were in 1968. That means that some 40 per cent more Canadians are at work today. The comparable figure for the six major summit countries is less than 13 per cent. In other words, job creation in Canada has proceeded at more than three times the average rate of the summit countries.

I believe it is time, Mr. Speaker, that we all recognized the remarkable performance of the Canadian economy in absorbing the increase in new workers. All of us welcome the fact that women today are working far more than before, that the young people of the baby boom years are now entering the work force, and the Canadian economy has met the challenge of absorbing many more new entries into the work force than are the European countries or, indeed, than has been experienced in the United States.

With our labour force growing faster than in virtually every other country in the industrialized world, we have nevertheless provided jobs for a very substantial number of Canadians. I, for one, Mr. Speaker, am confident that during the coming year we will see a further reduction in the levels of unemployment in Canada as our dynamic economy creates more jobs for Canadians.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary in his remarks passed off what he referred to as the Canadian deficit as being less worrisome than the American deficit.

Mr. Riis: Minister of State for Finance.

Mr. Stevens: I am sorry. Yes, I am referring to the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren), which makes what I have to say that much worse. He passed off our deficit as something which we should not be too worried about because, after all, it is not a structural deficit as in the United States. Our revenue, he said, will be popping up very shortly and will knock it off. Would the Minister of State for Finance explain to the House why, if that is so, his Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) said on February 15 that our projected deficit for this year would be $31 billion; for next year, $29.6 billion; for the next year, $27.9 billion; for the next year $27.1 billion, and for 1987-1988, $26.1 billion. That is a total of $142 billion in deficits shown in the projections by the Minister of Finance. Is that not, surely, a structural deficit which the Minister said was something we did not have in this country?

Mr. MacLaren: No, Mr. Speaker, the fact is that if the Hon. Member will look at the numbers again, he will see that those forecast reductions represent a magnitude of 10 per cent plus or minus for each of the next five years. Those are substantial reductions. We have set out in the Budget papers and, indeed, in the paper on the deficit which accompanied the April, 1983 Budget, our thinking on how, during the time ahead, we are going to have a gradual reduction in the level of deficit spending in Canada. But make no mistake about it, Mr. Speaker, this side of the House, this Party, is not going to cut back drastically on government spending in the way which our friends opposite seem to think is not only desirable but, apparently, in their view, is quite possible.

Who is it who is telling us that we should cut back on government spending? It is the Member who, when he was in office, would have reduced very substantially, as he said, the Public Service. Perhaps that still remains his view. However, is he not also saying that in reducing the number of those public servants, he is going to reduce substantially, if he were in office, a vast array of government programs? What is he talking about? If we are spending approximately $90 billion a year, are we going to cut out the social programs of which Canadians are rightly proud and which, during the period of recession through which we have passed, provided a safety net for those who could not provide for themselves?

His desk mate told us that his Party would eliminate universality. Then his Leader said, no, they would not eliminate universality. Then his desk mate said, yes, they would, and the Leader said, no, they would not. So I am not quite sure where that Party is on the question of social spending in Canada. However, unless the Hon. Member opposite; if he were in office—which is most unlikely—were committed to a policy of cutting out major social program spending on universities, medicare or old age, there is no way, Mr. Speaker, that deficits in Canada can be reduced overnight by 50 per cent or something of that magnitude. They can be reduced in the way I have described at 10 per cent or so a year, which is substantially different from what is done in the United States, which has, as I have said, a structural deficit of a character and nature fundamentally different from that in Canada.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, it is quite humorous to note the reply of the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren). The whole economic program of the gentleman he is supporting for the Liberal leadership, Mr. John Turner, is that the deficit must be reduced. The only economic policy he has announced to date is that the deficit must be reduced and that under his stewardship and leadership it will be reduced, contrary to what has happened for the last ten years. As a matter of fact, an Hon. Member for the same Cabinet, the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development (Mr. Johnston), said, "The deficit is a very pragmatic restraint which people do not see. I mean, people have to understand that government simply can't borrow and borrow". However, apparently the Minister of State for Finance, who should be one Minister in that Government who would observe that, is absolutely uncaring. My question, therefore, to the Minister is this: How can the Minister support the candidate for the leadership who is going to make his main economic plank a reduction of the deficit? And how can the Minister at the same time stay in the Cabinet with his colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) who suggested on November 4, 1982 that the baby bonus, known as the family allowance payments, might be eliminated for wealthier people who do not need it and who also said that he disagrees with his colleagues who say that the basic principle of Liberal philosophy is universality? How can the Minister of State for Finance stay in the Cabinet with such a Minister? How can he stay in the Cabinet with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) who said on November 7, 1982 that the Government is, " . . . wasting millions of dollars by sending monthly pension cheques to wealthy senior citizens and baby bonuses to families who don't need the money. Such funds should be directed to help the most needy"?

How can the Minister support a man who says his objective will be to reduce the deficit, and also stay in the Cabinet with two others who are opposed to universality and who have made savage attacks on the whole principle of universality? What bunk and hypocrisy the Minister has spouted!

Mr. MacLaren: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member opposite is ill advised, I would have thought, to speak of hypocrisy when he brings forth the resolution today, not many months after he told us he would do exactly what this Government is doing and what the Minister of Finance is doing. He cannot have it both ways. If he is going to endorse the policies of this Government—

Mr. Crosbie: Answer the question.

Mr. MacLaren: It seems incongruous that the same time he says he disagrees with the policies of the Government, he says he agrees with them.

On the question of deficit reduction, I do not know that we want to carry on a discussion on the floor of this House about what leadership candidates in the Liberal race have to say.

Mr. Crosbie: Why not? Is it embarrassing?

Mr. MacLaren: However, I am quite happy to pursue the subject by drawing attention to the fact that the Hon. Member quoted only part of what Mr. Turner, the candidate to whom he referred, said. He quoted only part of what Mr. Turner said.

Mr. Crosbie: Give us the rest of the weasel words.

Mr. MacLaren: The Hon. Member opposite is a past master of selective quotations and he chose to read only the first part of what Mr. Turner said. Mr. Turner, when he announced his candidacy, said that the deficit should be reduced over a period of time. That is what this Government says. But Mr. Turner has also said, as all of us on this side have said, that the deficit reduction will not be carried out on the backs of the poor, the aged or the sick in our society. We will do it in a gradual and reasoned way, reducing programs where possible and increasing government revenue as necessary. In that way the deficit will be reduced as set forth in the paper accompanying the 1983 Budget and confirmed again in last February's Budget. There is no discrepancy; we are on track and we are going to achieve a substantial reduction in the deficit by the end of the next fiscal period.

• (1510)

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, when listening to the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) and the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren) I was reminded of a book by Kathleen Hough called How To Lie With Statistics. I suspect that these Members have developed a fine art of selecting statistics to suit their purposes. The Minister of State for Finance says we on this side are presumably of the Chicken Little variety, concerned that the sky is falling. He went on to say that Canada is experiencing very real, sustainable growth, the Canadian economy is strong, and therefore the Government of Canada is going to go on doing what it has been doing.

Mr. Stevens: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think that in all fairness a Member should not be allowed to throw out an insinuation that a former speaker has lied with statistics without specifying what statistics he disagrees with. Does he say that what I said about the number of unemployed in Edmonton and Calgary is not accurate? What specifically does he feel was inaccurate?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am afraid that that exchange is in the nature of debate. Unless the Hon. Member for York-Peel makes a specific accusation, I must take the Hon. Member's comments as being simply a contribution to the debate. It is not a point of order.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can assist the Hon. Member by referring to the one comment, out of, I suppose, a whole number, which first caught my ear at the very outset of his presentation. He was condemning the Government for its national energy policy and commenting upon the level of unemployment in Edmonton and Calgary as a direct result of that policy. He was thereby implying that if he had the opportunity as a Member of the Government he would change that. Yet I remember very distinctly that when the Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party was in Edmonton not too many weeks ago, he said he would make no substantial changes to that policy.

Mr. Stevens: That is not true.

Mr. Riis: He was in a sense quite prepared to accept that. That was his exact phrase. It stood out on the front pages of The Edmonton Journal and The Calgary Herald.

Mr. Dick: Read the speech.

Mr. Riis: I did not have the opportunity to read the speech in full—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: —but I read the reports. I did not hear a single denial of the Leader when he said that. It is so easy for Members to stand up and hurl these insults and criticisms and imply that they would not do that. Yet I remember that when the Hon. Member for St. John's West was asked how he would change the course which the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) was taking—I believe it was in an interview in the city of Montreal—he said, that no, he would not change the present thrust of policy presented by the Minister of Finance. One assumes that because they are criticizing the Government for what it is doing, they would not want to repeat the same error. Yet we now have ample evidence to suggest that that is simply not the case. I say again that the national energy policy is something that the Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party said he would not change in any substantive way.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I am just wondering if the Hon. Member is aware that the Canadian Press issued an apology to the Leader of my Party for those comments, which they made erroneously.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. There should be no undue interruption of the Hon. Member's speech. An opportunity will be provided later on—

Mr. Stevens: But these are untruths.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: —for questions and comments. I suggest that if Members disagree with the Hon. Member's comments, they will have the opportunity to rise in the 10-minute question period.

Mr. Dick: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On a point of order, I hope.

Mr. Dick: Yes, Mr. Speaker. This Chamber is meant, hopefully, for saying the truth. I can prove that what he is saying is untrue, and he knows it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. That may or may not be the case. The Hon. Member will have an opportunity later on to rise and make his comments.

Mr. Crosbie: The hon. gentleman just misquoted what I was alleged to have said. I certainly said nothing in Montreal. He is talking about an interview in a Toronto newspaper and conducted in Ottawa last November, when I said that the general thrust of the last Budget had been the correct one. That is a long time ago and has no relevance to the present situation in which the thrusts are entirely misplaced; in fact, there has been no thrust in the Budget of February 15.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The point raised by the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), under Standing Order 41(1), is well taken.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I suppose I must say that I feel badly that I had misplaced the place of the interview and the source—

Mr. Crosbie: That is how accurate you are.

Mr. Riis: —but the former Minister of Finance in the Conservative Government said that, by and large, he agreed with that Budget put forward by the present Minister of Finance. When you consider what was in that Budget, that is quite a statement. I suspect that what he said in the House today will come back to haunt him in future weeks.

I want to go back to the point being made by the motion we are debating today. By and large it is a condemnation of the Government's economic and fiscal policies. Consider that the Minister of State for Finance has indicated that we have very real, sustainable growth taking place today. Our economy is quite strong. I wonder how on earth he can say those things when he knows perfectly well that interest rates are once again going up in what is now, I believe, the fifth week in succession. Unemployment is again increasing substantially. Inflation is increasing month by month. The Canadian dollar is falling, and would probably fall more if the Bank of Canada were not intervening on an almost daily basis to purchase Canadian dollars in order to keep it at an artificial level. Corporate investment in Canada is falling in spite of what the Minister has indicated. The misery index is on the increase.

By and large one has to ask the question: How could anyone, with those general trends before them and listening to any serious economist or financial adviser, say that the economy of Canada is healthy? You have to wonder whether the Minister has travelled throughout the country and looked carefully at the forest industry of Canada. After looking carefully at the forest industry of Canada, could you really say we have a healthy economy? After examining the West Coast, East Coast or inland fishery and talking to the people involved in the fishing industry, could you say our economy is strong and growing substantially? After looking carefully at the mining industry which stretches from one end of the country to the other, how could the Minister say that that particular sector is strong? After visiting the farming communities of Canada from Nova Scotia to British Columbia and really talking to the people involved in the production of food in this country, how can the Minister of State for Finance stand in his place and say that that sector is strong?

• (1520)

I am reminded of a quote by Mr. Michael Walker of the Fraser Institute. Not long ago he was quoted in Vancouver as saying that the Canadian economy is going full tilt. Presumably he did not say in what direction it was going full tilt, Mr. Speaker. A senior adviser to the right of center of today's society is suggesting to us that the economy of Canada is going full tilt. On what evidence is he saying this? How can people say that? That was said in the Province of British Columbia where the Fraser Institute is located. In that province there is a Conservative Government which has literally devastated that part of Canada.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): A Social Credit Government.

Mr. Riis: The Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) corrects me. I stand corrected. It might be called a Social Credit Government but it is being advised by the Fraser Institute. It is employing ultra-conservative policies and is made up primarily of card carrying Conservatives. Call it what you like, I call it a Conservative Government in the Province of British Columbia which has literally brought that economy to its knees.

Mr. Crosbie: Don't be so silly.

Mr. Riis: I challenge Hon. Members in the House to oppose the position that I take when they have an opportunity to rise. The economy of British Columbia is literally on its knees. Under that particular regime and with those particular policies in place the economy cannot by definition become healthy in the months and years ahead. It is a devastating situation, Mr. Speaker. I listen day after day as my friends in the Conservative Party complain about the deficit. I share that complaint. By implication there is the suggestion that if a Conservative Government were in power in this country the deficit would automatically be reduced.

I use two examples. I look to the Conservative Government which is in place in the United States and see what it has done with its deficit. Has it done what it promised the people of the United States it would do? When President Reagan campaigned in the last presidential election he literally promised the people of the United States that he would reduce the deficit in that country. Has he? Of course not. The deficit is significantly increased today. All implications and indicators show that it will continue to increase for many years.

We do not have to look at the United States, Mr. Speaker. We can look at our own country, and in particular at the Province of Saskatchewan. Today the Province of Saskatchewan has a debt that is increasing. It has not always had that debt. It has not always been in a deficit situation. For decades under the New Democratic Party led by individuals such as Tommy Douglas, there was no debt. There was absolutely no deficit or debt year after year, decade after decade. However, as soon as the Conservative Government took over in the Province of Saskatchewan, they had deficits and debts.

An Hon. Member: That happened before.

Mr. Riis: Yes, that happened before under Liberal Governments. When the New Democratic Party took over power in the Province of Saskatchewan, there was a debt. It was committed to reducing that debt. Not only did it reduce it, it eliminated it. For decades there was no deficit or debt. However, as soon as the Conservative Government took over in that Province, there was a deficit.

Myths can be perpetuated in this House by people presenting so-called facts which are unsubstantiated, very selective and highly edited. No wonder the people of this country are somewhat confused. No wonder the people of this country wonder what on earth the Federal Government and some of the provincial Governments of the country are doing. For example, Mr. Speaker, the Budget that the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) referred to, a Budget which he supported, was a Budget which brought a substantial number of tax concessions to the corporate sector of Canada. The Minister of Finance indicated clearly at that time that with a number of tax concessions—

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should not be misquoted here. I never said I supported the Budget of April 1983. I said it had some general thrusts that I agreed with. I have not said I supported the Budget. In fact, I voted against the Budget. The hon. gentleman should not say I supported the Budget of last April.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member very much for that intervention. I appreciate the Hon. Member for St. John's West clarifying the point that he supported the general thrust and a number of the—

Mr. Crosbie: Some of the general thrusts.

Mr. Riis: —some of the general thrusts of that Budget, Mr. Speaker, but perhaps not in its entirety.

To continue with what I was saying before I was interrupted, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance told the people of Canada that we must have patience, must be prepared to sacrifice, and must be prepared to share the burden of this recovery. He promised us that giving huge concessions to the corporate sector of the country, and in some cases to the upper income earners, was in our best interest because those individuals who had tax concessions provided to them would take the extra money and invest it in the economy in new plants, new equipment and new economic activity. As a result, jobs would be created for the unemployed in Canada, and this would go on year after year. Only part of that proposal worked, Mr. Speaker. Indeed the corporations received a considerable number of tax concessions. As a matter of fact, the President of the Bank of Montreal, Mr. Mulholland, was quoted as suggesting in a speech, made I believe in the City of Toronto, that the corporate sector of Canada was awash in tax concessions. He was really saying that the money saved through tax concessions could not be wisely invested in new plants and new equipment because of the under-utilization which was taking place in manufacturing in industrial Canada.

The Minister of Finance told only half the story when he said that by giving these huge tax concessions eventually economic development would occur, jobs would be created and unemployment would decrease substantially. With unused capacity in the 60 per cent to 70 per cent range, that reinvestment was simply impossible. One is not criticizing the corporate sector for not investing in new plants when present plants are operating at only 50 per cent, 60 per cent or 70 per cent of their capacity. One is not saying that one would necessarily do anything differently. The point is that that did not work.

The Minister of State for Finance is saying that they are going to continue to do what they have been doing because they feel it is the right thing. It is obvious that the present policies of the Government will not get the economy of Canada going as we would like to see it and as the people of Canada ought to see it. In comparison with countries around the world, many of them our economic competitors, Canada unquestionably has the greatest growth potential. Unquestionably we have more natural resources, energy resources and capital resources at our disposal. We have more expertise and more high-tech at our disposal. We have a population that is relatively well trained and well educated, although that is being threatened by the Government today. The only thing we lack, Mr. Speaker, is the political will to do the job.

Many people say it is difficult these days to have political will to do the job. I want to remind Hon. Members that we have seen Governments have political will and we have seen programs implemented relatively quickly. I will use the national energy policy as a case in point. The decision of the Government was to introduce a national energy policy, and within a matter of a very few months we had a national energy policy in place. I also recall the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) deciding that the country needed a bilingual policy. By the stroke of a pen, a policy was created and put into place overnight which has created a different Canada in relation to bilingual issues. Also with the stroke of a pen the Government of Canada decided that we should have a metric program in place. Indeed, within a very short period of time that program was launched and it has literally changed the measurement system of Canada. We have seen identifiable examples of where the political will is in place and there is no question action follows. There is a need now as never before for the Government of Canada to work co-operatively with provincial and regional governments, to work carefully with the industrial business and labour sectors in order to draft a co-operative economic international strategy.

What about our successful competitors? I think of some western European countries and countries such as Japan which have had an approach in place for some years and as a result are, by and large, much more competitive and productive than we are. People have some sense of where they are going. People have some sense of their country's destiny. People see where they fit in, whether they are corporate leaders, labour leaders, individuals or governments. People see where they fit into the overall strategy. But what if we do not have a strategy? Then we find many of our important corporate areas, and in some cases very strategically corporate areas, in trouble. In this case I refer to such corporations as Dome, Chrysler, Maislin, Massey-Ferguson, Canadair, de Havilland, Cooperative Implements, Consolidated Computers, White Farm Equipment, Pioneer Chain Saw, St. Anthony's Fisheries and Electrohome Limited. The list could go on and on. When major corporations get into financial difficulties, the best we have been able to do is to come in with some rather simplistic bailouts. Some have worked, some have not. In a sense, by definition, lacking any over all comprehensive economic and financial strategy, these bailouts cannot work because these corporations are not being bailed out in any particular context. If we had a national strategy in which all of the players were agreeing and participating, then perhaps we could view these so-called bailout requirements in some context. We could say in some cases, yes, it makes sense for the federal Government to use taxpayers' money to keep companies afloat and to encourage them into a more productive areas. In others we may decide that, no, because of the obvious direction in which this country is moving all the participants agree that this particular bailout does not fit into the overall strategy.

In summary, I suppose I support the general thrust of this motion put forward by the Hon. Member for St. John's West. I believe the Government has misrepresented the people of Canada in introducing appropriate economic and financial policies. I believe that one of the major items required in order to develop a sustainable economic growth and recovery in Canada is an economic strategy in the development of which all of the participants play a role.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I listened intently to the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis). I found his speech very enjoyable but somewhat lacking in concrete recommendations as to what he or his Party might do to save us from the economic ills that have been visited upon us by the Liberal Government. He came in at the very end and made the pitch that his Party has made on several past occasions, that there should be some kind of a national strategy, some kind of centralized economic plan for the whole country. I do not really want to ask the Hon. Member a question, but I want to comment on that view even though he did not outline what might be contained in that plan.

I think there are great dangers with that type of approach to life. Is that not how they organize things in the Soviet Union?

Mr. Riis: Try Japan.

Mr. Nickerson: What about the people who want to dissent? What if somebody does not want to fit into that plan? What if they do not want to take up their assignment in the salt mine, or the potash mine in Saskatchewan or wherever they are told to go by a socialist government? This is a great danger that I behold in this idea where there is someone at the pinnacle somewhere in Ottawa who assigns every manufacturer, every farmer, or every worker in Canada into his little slot according to this plan, Sir. I stand up to dissent. I think the people who want to go fishing should be able to fish in whatever lake or sea they want. I think that if we were to have that freedom of choice in Canada, which is rapidly disappearing, then a lot of our economic ills from which we now suffer would be solved. We should not be going farther down the road to centralized planning.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I can say that that is probably the most ridiculous statement I have ever heard raised in the House of Commons. I have heard what I consider ridiculous statements made in the House, but that one takes the prize by leaps and bounds. What I was suggesting was planning with all of the players involved. One sees this in countries such as Japan, Austria, Switzerland, West Germany—

Mr. Nickerson: In China.

Mr. Crosbie: In Czechoslovakia and Poland.

Mr. Riis: —in Belgium, Norway, and Denmark. When you hear arguments put forward such as that of the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson), it is no wonder that people have questioned the validity of this House. After an attempt to deliver what I thought was a suggestion for consideration to hear Members stand up and purposely and consciously ridicule that suggestion, knowing that that suggestion is in place in the most progressive economics in the world today, is to misrepresent, misinform, slant, and present a biased picture. It does a disservice to this House and to the institution of Parliament. As he made his statement, I will let that go for my own.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, one does not want to disturb the serenity and the capacity of thought of Members of the New Democratic Party. They have not had a new view or a new idea in at least twenty years. I want to test the Hon. Member now.

The Conference Board of Canada has just given its quarterly Canadian forecast. Mr. Maxwell, the chief economist, said when he released the forecast that the Keynesian theory that you can spend your way out of recession "simply is not working". We have surely seen the proof of that in the last couple of years. We have just ended a year with, I believe, a deficit of $31.6 billion. We have $29.5 billion deficit forecast for this year. We have had deficits in the last few years totalling in excess of $90 billion. We are spending, spending, spending. But we still have a bad recession, terrible unemployment, and all the other ill effects. I want to ask the Hon. Member a two-part question. First, does he agree with Mr. Maxwell? Has the New Democratic Party come to its sense? Is the New Democratic Party now ahead of the Liberal Party in realizing that this approach does not work? The whole system today is shagged up. Our whole economic system is wrecked with these government deficits and borrowings. That is why we do not have any real recovery. Would the Hon. Member agree with that?

Second, would he agree that one of the differences between the piteous state of the Canadian economy today, and the American economy which is booming ahead with real growth, with much better employment prospects, is its lower deficit? The American economy is ten times the size of ours, and its deficit is about 50 per cent lower than Canada's. We have had tax increases in Canada. This is in sharp contrast to the expansionary fiscal stance of the United States. We have increased taxes; the Americans have reduced taxes. The only reason the Americans have a deficit that is so large is that they have also increased defence spending. Would the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap not agree that this accounts for the difference between the two economies?

However, would the Hon. Member first agree with Mr. Maxwell that you cannot simply spend your way out of recession anymore? Are not the last four or five years living proof of the bankrupt policies of the establishment opposite, which is now tottering on its last legs toward a final cataclysmic event when the election comes?

● (1540)

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I think it is much more complicated than the question put by the Hon. Member for St. John's West. I think he wants a glib response that no, one cannot spend one's way out of a recession.

I believe that the more sensible way to approach it is to suggest that one can invest one's way out of a recession. I believe that now is the time when we have to find ways and means for encouraging average Canadians to invest in our economy once again, to encourage the corporate sector to invest in the Canadian economy once again and also to invest in the public sector in terms of developing the necessary infrastructure that an economy such as ours requires. To do that does not always result in increased government spending.

For example, I know that the Hon. Member feels strongly about the bribes that the Government presently gives to some of the major oil companies for exploration purposes. They amount to many billions of dollars for the last number of years and into the future. I do not think any serious economist would suggest that those bribes are necessary to encourage our oil companies to explore off of our coasts and in our frontier areas. If we were to take some of that bribe money that is given to the oil companies and perhaps if we were to collect some of the taxes that are presently called deferred corporate taxes, we would have a substantial amount of money to invest in the infrastructure that a country like Canada must develop in order to get on with developing our economy. Just so there is no mistake in the Hon. Member's mind, by infrastructure I mean better port facilities, better transportation facilities and perhaps some assistance to small business and the farming sector of our country. That is how we will get our economy going again.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of inaccuracies that I know the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) would not want to leave on the record. There was the inaccuracy about the speech made by our Leader in Calgary and Edmonton to which he referred and about which I am sure he knows the Canadian Press issued a retraction saying that the reports were in error. There was also an editorial in the Ottawa Citizen at that time stating that the press had not served our Leader very well because it had distorted the facts. Does he think it is fair and honest, in making his speech, to compare the Government of Mr. Douglas, which did not have deficits, the Government of the 1940s and early 1950s when indeed there were surpluses at the federal level and when Douglas Abbott, the Minister of Finance, was referred to as Sunny Abbott because he always had such glowing surpluses, with a situation 35 years later when we are in the midst of the deepest recession since the Great Depression?

Does he not recognize that Mr. Blakeney, the immediate predecessor of Grant Devine of Saskatchewan, also ran with deficits through the late 1970s and early 1980s? That might be a more fair comparison, instead of referring to a sunny period in our times when we were in a reconstruction 35 years ago?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I believe the record will show that the point I was trying to make was that at that time in Canadian history—in fact, Hon. Members can pick whatever date they desire, the late thirties, forties, fifties and sixties—while Conservative governments in all other provinces in this country were chalking up deficits that were placing their people in debt, including Atlantic Canada, parts of prairie Canada and central Canada, there was a single government in this country that was not. That was the New Democratic Party Government in the Province of Saskatchewan. That was the point I was trying to make.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I understand that we are reverting to Routine Proceedings. I am rising on a point of order at this time under Routine Proceedings.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As agreed to earlier, the House will now proceed to Routine Proceedings, and I recognize the Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) on a point of order.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DISPOSITION OF BILL C-21

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I want to confirm that we had consultations and that negotiations took place with the other Parties. I am happy to report that we have come to some agreement which will make it unnecessary for us to introduce today any Bill dealing with borrowing authority. The agreement is on Bill C-21. I believe, Mr. Speaker, you would find the unanimous consent required for the following motion:

That, notwithstanding any Standing or Special Order, at 4.45 p.m. on April 2, 1984, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted and every question necessary for the disposal of Bill C-21, an Act respecting borrowing authority, shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment, except as herein provided;

Provided that the said Bill shall be referred to a committee of the whole, rather than a standing committee, after being read a second time; and

Provided that a Minister of the Crown shall propose in committee of the whole the necessary amendment or amendments to reduce the borrowing authority requested in the said Bill to $24,550,000,000.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the proposal put forth by the Hon. President of the Privy Council. Is there unanimous consent to the proposal?

Mr. Nielsen: Yes indeed, Mr. Speaker. That reflects the arrangements that have been concluded between the Parties on the clear understanding that the notice with respect to the supplementary borrowing authority for $4 billion will not be proceeded with.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous agreement to adopt the proposal put forth by the Hon. President of the Privy Council?

Mr. Riis: Yes, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my Party I say that the same understanding has been entered into, and we concur.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Agreed and so ordered.

Motion agreed to.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I would like to seize this opportunity to outline the business for next week. On Monday we will resume debate on the third reading stage of Bill C-3. Tuesday will be an allotted Opposition Day. On Wednesday and Thursday of next week we will debate the report stage and, hopefully, give third reading to Bill C-12. The back-up legislation will be Bill C-10.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: On this same subject of House business, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the President of the Privy Council some information concerning the Joint Standing Committee of the House and the Senate on Official Languages established last week, on March 22, 1984, when the House agreed to the motion introduced by the Government.

We were unable to call the meeting to set up the Committee for the simple reason that we lack some information. Could the President of the Privy Council tell us, first, whether he plans to decide on the number of representatives from the House and from the Senate on this Committee, and second, what will be the ratio of members from the Senate and the House of Commons? Can he also tell us exactly what terms of reference will be provided so that the Report of the Commissioner of Official Languages may be referred to the new Committee since it has already been forwarded to the Special Joint Committee and not to the Standing Committee? There will have to be negotiations and adjustments made if this Committee is to have any work to do.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's interest in the Committee on Official Languages is a well known fact and I can assure him that, since the Committee established a few days ago is a Standing and not a Special Committee, we intend to allow this Committee to work efficiently. There is no doubt that, if we need a special indication from the House to send the Report tabled by the Commissioner of Official Languages to the new Committee, this will be done.

Concerning the other issues mentioned by the Hon. Member, I shall be happy to discuss them with him and suggest to the House that the appropriate arrangements be approved so that the Committee may operate normally. I can assure the Hon. Member that his concerns will be taken into serious consideration and that we are not interested in delaying this unduly. I hope that this whole situation will be clarified by next week and that the necessary changes will be made.

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL RELATIONS WITH CHILE

Question No. 585—Mr. McLean:

2. Does the Government enforce any restrictions on sales of military and security technology to that country and, if so, what is a list of all such restrictions?

3. To the knowledge of the Government, were there any sales, by Canadian firms, of either prison detection or offshore surveillance systems to the Chilean Government?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Canada maintains normal diplomatic relations with Chile and we also pursue normal commercial relations that will benefit Canadian producers and exporters.

2. The sale of defence related equipment to foreign countries, including Chile, is governed by the Export and Import Permits Act. As a matter of policy, the Canadian Government does not permit the sale of defence related equipment to countries engaged in hostilities or where there is an imminent threat of hostilities, or to countries for which the export of arms is forbidden by United Nations embargo. Applications for permits to export defence equipment that might possibly be used against civilians are carefully scrutinized and would be rejected if it appeared that such a use were probable.

There is no list of restrictions. However, a complete list of all products for which export permits are required is published as the "Export Control List" in accordance with requirements of the Export and Import Permits Act.

3. To our knowledge, since export permits are in general not required for detection equipment of the type normally used by prisons, only Sparton of Canada Ltd. has been involved in the sale of a detection system evidently intended for use in prisons in Chile. This sale was made to a private sector firm, not to the Chilean Government. Government officials have been informed by the company that most of the content of the system was supplied by its U.S. parent company, although parts of this system were assembled in Canada and the marketing was done by the Canadian subsidiary. The installation of the system was done by the Chilean prime contractor. No permits were required for export of this equipment and, therefore, the Government had no opportunity to comment on the appropriateness of the sale.

With reference to offshore surveillance systems to Chile, we understand that only at one point a Canadian company had identified an opportunity for such a system but the project has since been deferred. No application was made for an export permit.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 62—INTEREST RATES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Stevens (for Mr. Crosbie):

That whereas the depreciating dollar and increasing unemployment, inflation and interest rates endanger economic recovery and undermine job creation through their damaging effects upon agriculture, small business and business investment, this House regrets the government's failure to include in its February 15th Budget, or to adopt at any subsequent date, policies to provide the necessary conditions for a reduction in interest rates and the strengthening of the Canadian dollar and calls for the immediate resignation of the government.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren) apparently had something to say about the fact that I was not here to speak at two o'clock. I do not know where he is now. I guess he spoke and ran. If he is still around, he might come in and I will tell him where I was. I was to be at the Canadian Police College at twelve o'clock for graduation ceremonies. They had the eminent good sense to ask me to be the guest speaker. I was to introduce this motion, but I was not able to introduce it between twelve o'clock and 1 p.m. because of the bells, for whom the bell tolls, because the ding-dong Government over there has not solved the bell problem. I could not leave the ceremonies before I spoke there in order to rush back here for two. Therefore, my good friend, the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens), substituted for me as our first speaker and, of course, did his usual fantastic job.

If that settles the mind of the Minister of State for Finance, let me deal with his speech. His speech illustrated the smugness with which this Government is adorned. He is full right to the mug with smug. How could he treat the economic situation of this country as cavalierly as he did today and as his Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has been doing is beyond me. That smugness was illustrated in the Budget of February 15, when the Minister of Finance said:

In my April Budget, my goal was to secure the recovery. That goal has also been met.

What goal has been met? What recovery? Where is it? It is not present for the 1,476,000 Canadians who are unemployed. Since that Budget was brought down, every economic commentator has remarked on the fact that the Budget was based on unrealistic assumptions and forecasts, particularly the assumption that we are going to have an unprecedented six consecutive years of sustained economic growth. This is what the Minister's Budget said. We will be lucky if we even have any sustained economic growth today.

What has happened since the Budget came down, the Budget he is so pleased with, the one he says has met his goal of recovery? What has happened since then? The Bank of Canada rate has gone up for each of the six weeks since that Budget, from 10 per cent to the current 10.78 per cent. Interest rates have gone up, the prime bank rate from 11 to 11.5 per cent. Mortgage rates have risen by another half per cent or more, depending on the term.

Interest rates have been rising and are likely to continue to rise because the Canadian dollar has been depreciating just about every day since the Budget was brought down, particularly as a response to the stupidity of the Minister in saying, as he said and as I remarked in the House before on March 6, that he was not spending his nights up worrying that the dollar is not at 81 cents. What an incredible statement. If the Minister of Finance of this country is not worrying about the state of the currency in this country, the state of its economy and the state of its interest rates, how can we expect anything but that the currency of this country will devalue and be treated with the contempt it has been treated with since he made that statement?

Not only that, for two consecutive months the inflation rate has been back up again. It was down to a year-over-year rate of 4.2 per cent last November. It was up in December, up again in January. It has been up for the last two consecutive months, January and February. The latest figure is 5.5 per cent. The underlying trend rate of inflation is back up again. Surely that has to worry everyone. Even at a time of low inflation, our interest rates stayed at a prime rate of 11 per cent and higher. The real interest rate that people are now looking for on their money has exceeded 6 per cent and 7 per cent.

If the inflation rate is going to go up again, where are interest rates going to go? What is the reason interest rates have been staying up as they have despite the lower inflation rate? It is the fear of renewed inflation. In the last two months we have seen the reason for people to fear renewed inflation. Interest rates have gone up, the dollar is tending down and there have been other economic consequences. We have seen the lack of business investment and the like.

The Minister of Finance continues to pretend that all of those trends do not represent a danger to our economic growth. He continues to pretend that there is not need for a change in government economic policies despite all these facts. The Minister has been pretending all along that things are out of his control, that the Government control what is happening, that we are prisoners of the United States, lock-step with them, that no matter what we do in Canada, we have to follow what happens in the United States. That is his usual theme. Last Monday the Minister gave lie to that theme in this House when he said, as reported at page 2422 of Hansard:

We are monitoring the situation carefully. If need be, we will make the necessary adjustments.

What more need will we want to see?

In the meatime I see no reason to change the basic policy that we have been following.

If that statement meant anything, it meant the Government could take steps. The Minister said they are monitoring the situation, but they are satisfied that this is the right course, there is no reason to change the basic policy and no need to make these necessary adjustments. This Minister is satisfied that 1,476,000 Canadians should remain unemployed. That is what he said.

When the Minister is asked in this House about the unemployment figures, he tries to pretend that we are doing as well or better than the United States. He croaks of how we have had a large number of new entrants into the labour force. What malarkey! These are people who have been unemployed donkey's months, if not years, and they are coming back out to see if possibly there is a job. This is supposed to indicate a better situation in Canada.

The facts are entirely different. What are the facts? In August, 1983 there was an unemployment rate in the United States of 9.5 per cent. In Canada it was 11.6 per cent in August of last year. In February of this year, the unemployment rate in the United States was 7.8 per cent, a decline of 1.7 per cent. What is the situation in Canada? We have an unemployment rate of 11.3 per cent. The decline in our unemployment rate has been 0.3 per cent as compared to a decline in the United States of 1.7 per cent.

● (1600)

Do you know how many new entrants to the labour force there have been in the United States in those months, Mr. Speaker? There have been 576,000 new entrants to the labour force in the United States. How many have we had in Canada? Only 61,000. What do new entrants to the labour force have to do with this pitiful performance in Canada as compared to the performance in the United States? Nothing, Mr. Speaker, and less than nothing.

The number of unemployed in the country is up for the fourth month in a row. The rate of unemployment is up for the second month in a row. The number of people working full time is now 352,000 fewer than the pre-recession peak and 68,000 fewer than the number working when the Government came into office four years ago. The number of young people with jobs is now 346,000 fewer than the number who had jobs before the recession and 288,000 fewer than when the Government took office in March, 1980, four years ago. The effect on jobs of this Government entering office is that 68,000 fewer adults have jobs now than four years ago and 288,000 fewer young people have jobs now than four years ago.

We hear and see the Liberal leadership candidates, five of whom are Ministers of the Government, going around the country pretending that they have some new economic approaches. The Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) has a new economic program, but we have not heard what it is. He wants the Government to clear out of the board rooms of the nation. He does not want to have government intervention any longer, yet he remains a member of the most interventionist Government in Canada's history. The leadership candidate who is not a member of the Government is attacking the deficit. The Minister of Economic Development (Mr. Johnston) is attacking the deficit, and every Liberal Minister of Finance in the last 12 years has attacked the deficit, yet not one of them lifted a finger to do anything about the deficit which they are now attacking. It is a disgrace, Mr. Speaker.

I have here a study called Hidden Unemployment which was done by the Social Planning Council of Metropolitan Toronto. It indicates that 2,019,000 Canadians were unemployed last year and not the the 1,448,000 that Statistics Canada showed. Why is this? It is because Statistics Canada does not take into account discouraged workers who have given up looking for work because they believe there are no jobs available in the current market in Canada. This is the situation which the Minister said did not need adjustment.

Do you not think, Mr. Speaker, that the situation calls for some adjustment when there is an unemployment rate of 11.3 per cent, 1.5 million Canadians who cannot find work are looking for work and another half a million Canadians are no longer looking for work because they know there are no jobs for them? If the Minister has the ability to make adjustments to his policy, has the need not been proven for him to do so? The Minister is not even present today to give us his reasons for not doing so.

The Minister usually says that he is helpless because of the United States. When he gets up in the morning and changes his underwear, he should put on the stars and stripes. He should wrap himself in the American flag because, according to him, only the United States can do anything to help the world. As reported on page 2467 of Hansard of March 27, 1984, the Minister said:

> We are part of the world economy—

—that is something new that we did not realize, I am sure. He went on:

> —and we are also very much affected by events in the United States.

There is the old United States again. Every time the Minister hears the word "United States", he salutes. This is the same Minister who two years ago insulted the Americans. He went to the United States and told them that we are going to take over the energy field, we do not want foreign investment, we do not want United States investment. He went down there like a raging lion, Marc the lionhearted in New York. He was telling them what they could do with their foreign investments. He told them they could shove it, and not to Canada but elsewhere. Now he says every day that we are very much affected by events in the United States. This Marc is a different Marc Antony.

Again on page 2467 of Hansard of March 27, 1984, the Minister is reported as saying:

> If there is a rise in interest rates in the United States, clearly we would not be able to keep our rates at levels lower than those in the United States over a prolonger period of time.

This is the helpless Marc, the hapless Marc. He is certainly hapless and helpless. Anyone who reads the record will see that the comments he made in the House this week and last are confused, contradictory and shifty. He is shifting all over the place and does not know where to turn. This is not the certain, sure, strong Marc the lionhearted we have heard about who is going to save the Government. He is evasive, elusive, lacking certainty, looking around for pity, piteous looking. Of course, he is always arrogant and imperious. When shown wrong, he always proclaims his rightness. One need simply read his replies as reported in Hansard for the last two weeks to see that the economic fate of the country is in the hands of a man who does not know what to do, who has given up, who has no solutions and who will muddle through. His policy is one of muddleheadedness and addle-patedness.

The Minister is almost as bas as the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis). Never have I heard such shuswap as I heard from the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap today. He spoke gibberish with not one solid economic thought. Members on that side of the House have not grown beyond Cambridge University in the 1920s. They have seen where the Keynesian policies taken to their extreme have brought the Liberal Government of Canada, but they cannot even come up with anything new. All they want is the same old thing, only more of it.

Statistics Canada reports that "Consumer demand will continue to be restrained in the short term by the steady slowing of wages and weak labour market conditions". Does the Minister do anything about that? No, apparently that does not indicate any need for action. The Conference Board of Canada says that there is a slowing in the pace of economic growth this year and there is a possibility of a recession in 1985. Does that cause the Minister to take any steps? No, there is still no need to take steps. The Conference Board indicates that it cannot see any improvement in the unemployment rate and predicts a steady rise in unemployment to as much as 12 per cent in 1985. Does that cause the Minister to change his basic policy? No, apparently he does not recognize that that is needed.

As I mentioned earlier, the Conference Board has indicated that this dismal economic outlook results largely from "the continued high level of interest rates, particularly when viewed in relation to the rate of inflation". Does that bother this Minister? No, the Minister is not bothered by interest rate increases. Why, we heard him say this week that he pooh-poohed the damage done by interest rate increases. I know you do not believe me, Mr. Speaker, so I will read from the portion of Hansard in which he pooh-poohed. He said, as reported on page 2550 of Hansard:

—I explained that in spite of the increase in interest rates in Canada and the United States during the last few weeks, we should not necessarily conclude this will have a negative impact on employment and the growth rate of the Canadian economy any more than it does on the U.S. economy.

He says that we should not necessarily conclude this or we should not necessarily conclude that. Is that somebody who is speaking for a Government? If interest rates will continue to rise, the only conclusion we can come to is that there will be no economic recovery. We have seen that interest rates of 11 per cent have stopped the recovery in its tracks. Will interest rates of 11.5 per cent be any better?

We should not necessarily conclude this, that and the other. I can necessarily conclude that the Minister does not have a grip on what is happening in the country. He has served us too long. He and the Government are tired and have no new vigour or ideas which will change economic policy. They should do what this resolution asks them to do. They should resign and go to the people of the country and let them make the judgment as to who should lead the country out of the economic morass into which they have led us.

Again on page 2550 of Hansard, the Minister is reported as saying:

The Government does not favour an increase in interest rates.

● (1610)

That is a fantastic statement, Mr. Speaker. When is it going to do something to stop the increase in interest rates? No one favours an increase in interest rates. What kind of malarkey is that for the Minister to give to the House of Commons when he is asked a question? He goes on to say, "We are living in the real world, we are on the North American continent—" He did not even know three years ago that we were in the real world or on the North American continent. He was going to throw the Yankees out. Today we know what he is doing with the Yankees and we know what he is kissing down in the United States of America.

He also said, "—the Canadian and U.S. economies are extremely interdependent". We are in the hands of economic mountebanks, Mr. Speaker. If we do not change them, God only knows what is going to happen to the people of this country and to our economic future.

Unfortunately, I do not have time to cover all the points I would like to as I have only 20 minutes. In his remarks in the House this week the Minister did not say that his February Budget was based on the assumption of lower interest rates. I do not have the time to quote him now, but those interested in what he said about the Canadian economy in recovery should turn to page 15 of the Budget where he said:

Further progress in reducing interest rates and the growth of cost is essential if the business sector is to restore its financial strength and become a sustaining force in the recovery.

That is what he said in the Budget, but this week in the House he told us not to worry about interest rates going up, that we cannot necessarily assume anything. Why then did he make that statement in his Budget on February 15 if it did not matter and if we cannot assume anything? In his Budget he went on to say:

Without a gradual return of real interest rates to more historic relationships, there is a risk that the medium-term real growth outlook for Canada and elsewhere will be weaker than projected.

You had better believe there is a risk, Mr. Speaker. There will be no medium growth in Canada if interest rates continue to go up.

The Minister does not have any powers of prediction either, Mr. Speaker. On October 19, 1983, he predicted that interest rates would drop by another two to three percentage points in the next six months. But they have gone up by a half percentage point, Mr. Speaker, not down two or three percentage points. Imagine the Minister of Finance making a prediction like that which turned out to be so wrong. On May 11 he said that interest rates were to stay stable. What does stable mean if it does not mean that they do not move at all? He said that interest rates would remain stable for most of 1984 and drop toward the end of the year. So much for anyone who believes any of the predictions made by the Minister of Finance.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to move on to one other egregious error, if it was not deliberate, of the Minister in this House this week. On Tuesday, March 27, as reported at page 2467 at Hansard, he said:

We need a lot of borrowing from abroad because we do not have enough resources in this country to ensure the full potential that this country has.

Then he went on to say—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pepin: One minute.

Mr. Crosbie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I want to thank Hon. Members for giving me an extra minute.

Last Tuesday the Minister also said that we had a net capital inflow of $5.5 billion last year. The Minister continued, as reported at page 2468 of Hansard:

We had a net inflow into this country of $5.5 billion in foreign investment in 1983. My friend should look at both sides of the picture and realize that Canada has been a net beneficiary of foreign investment in 1983.

That is completely wrong, Mr. Speaker. I do not suppose it is deliberately wrong; the Minister is just confused, uncertain, shaken up. In 1983 in Canada the actual position with respect to what the Minister calls net capital inflow was that there was $200 million of direct investment in Canada and Canadians invested $2,525 million abroad in the same year. There was no net capital inflow into Canada of $5.5 billion; there was a net flow out of direct investment of $2,525 million. Canadians are sending their money out of the country because they have no confidence in the Government. To that should be added $6.6 billion in unidentified outflows. We had an investment outflow of $8.9 billion, not a net foreign inflow into Canada of $5.5 billion. There was $2.3 billion in direct investment and $6.6 billion was unidentified. That is one of the things that is putting pressure on the Canadian dollar.

Mr. Pepin: In conclusion—

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I have unanimous consent so I have to finish making my point.

Imagine the Minister of Finance making such a gigantic error when answering questions in the House. He should tender his resignation on Monday, Mr. Speaker. The only time we have had a greater investment outflow than we had in 1983 was in 1981 with the National Energy Program of the same Minister, when he was Mr. Hyde, the big bully-boy of the international investment scene—Mr. Hyde, but today he is Dr. Jekyll. He has his other face on today as Minister of Finance. As a result of the NEP and FIRA, in 1981 we had investment outflows of $20.3 billion, including $11.3 billion in direct investment lost to this country. In 1981 we still lost money. Canadians and foreigners who had money invested here are moving it out of the country. If that were not the case, Mr. Speaker, why would there be pressure on the Canadian dollar when there is a positive trade balance and a positive balance on the current account?

I was given unanimous consent in order to conclude my remarks, Mr. Speaker, so I will conclude by saying that all these points illustrate that the time has come for the Minister to admit that his policy is not succeeding. Since he has admitted that he can make adjustments, since he changed his tune last Monday, the time has come for these adjustments to be made. There are 1,476,000 reasons for adjustment to be made—they are the officially unemployed Canadians. There are another 600,000 reasons for adjustments to be made, and they are the unemployed Canadians who are not included in the statistics.

If the Government will not take this action, Mr. Speaker, then this resolution calls for it to resign. It has been in office for four years, and that has been four years of economic misery for the people of the country. It is time to put in another group that will take a different approach and will have the guts to do what they say must be done, and that is, to reverse the economic policies that are now under way, the sloth, the whole succession of deficits of the last 12 to 14 years, the inability to get up the gumption to attempt to tackle it.

It is time for the electorate to be given the chance to show if it wants a continuation of the last four years with the same group in government, perhaps with a different leader. We all know that the question is, "Would you buy a used government from that new leader, Mr. Turner, or not?" That is the question that Canadians are going to be asked—"Would you buy a used Government from this man or would you want to try a Party that has been opposing these ruinous, wasteful economic policies of the last four or five years?" That is the Party that I represent, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you for giving me the time to conclude, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I always enjoy the comments of the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). I have a two-part question for him. It seems to me that when he was Minister of Finance he reappointed Governor Bouey to the Bank of Canada. Knowing Governor Bouey's record, it was perfectly clear where he stood in terms of monetary policy and how he viewed the high interest rate policy of the Government. Why did the Hon. Member reappoint Governor Bouey, knowing where he was coming from, to put it in popular parlance?

The Hon. Member criticized the Minister of Finance for having said that adjustments would be made if necessary. He made the case very well that adjustments are required today. Could he give us two or three ideas of what his adjustments would be if he were given the opportunity to make them?

• (1620)

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for giving me the chance to address those questions. The Hon. Member should not make the silly mistake of blaming Governor Bouey for our present economic situation. It is only Governor Bouey who is standing between us and complete and utter economic disaster. Governor Bouey did not cause this situation. This situation is caused by the policies of this administration over the last ten years or 12 years. It so weakened our economy with its ever increasing deficit, with which we are all familiar, and its economic policies, that the only thing standing between Canada becoming a banana republic and economic chaos is Governor Bouey, who is trying to defend our currency. He is trying to operate in such a way that we will have a country which can still compete internationally and will not go through ruinous inflation again.

What would interest rates come to if we allowed the dollar to go down 10 cents or 15 cents, or whatever, and then went into another round of fantastic inflation? The whole cycle would start again. Where will the Canadian dollar end up? The Canadian dollar has been devalued, Mr. Speaker, in the last four years something like 22 per cent or 23 per cent. That has not been the solution. It has not brought economic miracles to Canada. Suppose the Canadian dollar devalues another 25 per cent? What can that do except to bring us quickly down the slope to economic chaos together with ruinous inflation. Do we want to be another Brazil with 250 per cent inflation, another Israel, or any of those countries which cannot keep up?

It is not Governor Bouey, it is the policies of the Government which got the Canadian economy, particularly on the fiscal side, in the shape it is in. It is not Mr. Bouey's fault. If Mr. Bouey was not there, we would have to invite another "Bouey". So do not worry about Mr. Bouey. It is the Government which is responsible for this wreckage, not Governor Bouey. He is a consequence of the policies of the Government.

With regard to the second point, what would I do? First, I will say that nothing can save the economy while this Government is in power. No one has any confidence in it. Capital is going to flee this country because of its record of intervention and incompetence. If we are there, confidence will be restored; the flight of capital out of Canada will stop; the pressure on the Canadian dollar will stop. One thing I would not have done is to bring in the tax increases which the Minister of Finance brought in in April and which he confirmed again in February. How could this be the right time to have tax increases when there is not any kind of vigorous recovery going on in the economy? I would not impose another 1 per cent increase in the sales tax on the Canadian people in October, and I would not have made the changes in the child tax credit and the other changes which were introduced in the Budget of last April. So we would not be going on this course.

Why is the United States doing better? Because despite its budget deficit, which is considerably less than ours, it has reduced taxes. It has not gone, like the Minister of Finance and the Government of this House, in the other direction. The record of Mr. Reagan is fantastically successful compared to the Trudeau-Lalonde record. Reagan streaks ahead of them economically. The U.S. has 7.8 per cent unemployment. Here we have everybody unemployed. Mr. Trudeau started with 360,000 Canadians unemployed. Today he has 1,476,000.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Crosbie: Can I have another question, please. Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Questions and comments must both be brief and to the point.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I have a certain amount of respect for the hon. gentleman who just spoke. I believe his feet are on the ground. He is certainly not like his Leader, who probably gets up every morning and looks in the mirror and takes a bow. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman, if he is advocating an increase in the value of the dollar, whether he would like to make that policy statement on a wharfhead of a fish plant in the City of St. John's? I would like to ask him if he believes he would survive being hove off that wharf into the water? And if there are any ice pans there, he would be tabby-panning across to the south side hills.

Would the Hon. Member state clearly now whether it is the policy of the Progressive Conservative Party to bring up the value of the Canadian dollar, and how far, and would he admit it to the fish processors in Newfoundland and the fishermen, who do not receive enough in unemployment insurance benefits?

Mr. Crosbie: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is getting all exercised about this Government's policy. That is exactly the policy of the present administration. Does he not realize that the Government permitted interest rates to go up just so that the value of the dollar would be increased? When the hon. gentleman goes back to see his fishermen, would he advise those fishermen that his Government has just prevented the dollar from sinking down to 75 cents, 70 cents, 60 cents or whatever he thinks they want it to sink down to? Because when the fishermen realize that, they will throw the Hon. Member over the head of the wharf on his keester. When they realize that this Government has kept interest rates high and allowed them to go up to 22 per cent a year and a half ago just to protect the dollar, the hon. gentleman will not even get to the wharf. They will have him cooped up in a barrel and capsized before he even gets to the head of the wharf.

Yes, we do not stand for a deliberate devaluation of the Canadian dollar. No country can prosper which deliberately allows its currency to devalue. I will say that to the fishermen on the wharf in St. John's West, or anywhere else in Newfoundland. I will defend my economic policies. In fact, their love for me is shown by the fact that my vote increased fantastically down in St. John's West after my last Budget. When they give me a chance to bring in another one, it will be 100 per cent down there.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Question, comments? Debate.

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I always enjoy the spectacle of a speech by the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), because that is what it is, really, a spectacle. No wonder he receives a lot of invitations to speak across the country. He is a big drawing card. He makes people laugh and is good on his feet. When people are in an atmosphere where they want buffoonery, the best guest they can get is the Hon. Member for St. John's West. As a matter of fact, sometimes I think I would invite him to come to my constituency, because he would draw a lot of people.

This man, who ran in the leadership convention last year, did very well. I was proud as a Canadian to see that he did so well. Some people say that had it not been for having to speak French or understand French, perhaps he would have become leader of the Conservative Party and perhaps he would have become Prime Minister of the country. As a Canadian who is a francophone and happens to be from Atlantic Canada, I felt some sympathy for the Hon. Member because, really, a person should not be deprived of gaining power because he does not speak one or the other language. However, what the Hon. Member should realize is that the fact he could not speak French did not really hurt him that much in the convention, because I feel that unilingual francophones who cannot understand English would have probably voted for him if they had not understood what he said.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Could I invite the Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) to speak to today's motion, please?

Mr. Crosbie: Good idea.

Mr. Breau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. As I was saying, unilingual francophones, listening to the Hon. Member speaking on his motion today, would be more likely to agree with him if they did not understand what he said. If they had understood what he said last June, then he would have lost some delegates in the convention. No question about it.

What the Hon. Member is talking about is supply side economics. I applauded a while ago when the Hon. Member said that President Reagan had a great policy. I was happy to hear the Hon. Member for St. John's West tell the House of Commons and the public that that is what he wants, supply side economics.

That is the kind of policy which President Reagan has brought to the United States of America. The Hon. Member for St. John's West is really an honest man. He has been saying it in public since he has been finance critic of his Party, only to be repudiated by his Leader, who has a hidden agenda. He says the truth. He says it and he means it. He says he admires the economic policies of the U.S. and their job-creation record. He admires the way they have brought down inflation and unemployment. Yes, Mr. Speaker, there are ways to create jobs and bring down inflation other than the way this Party and this Government has done over the past 16 years or so. You can stop the economy flat. You can do what President Reagan and the Hon. Member for St. John's West say is great. You can cut off welfare payments to people, you can cut off food stamps for people at the low end of the economic scale as they did in the U.S., and increase military expenditures.

• (1630)

President Reagan is not running a tight fiscal ship. He has increased military expenditures to an incredible level and reduced the expenditures affecting low-income people, the poor. That is what he has done. That is not running a tight fiscal ship. The Hon. Member says he loves this because he is talking supply side economics. He says that if you look after the wealthy, the powerful, the big institutions and large corporations, the benefits will trickle down to the people. But they do not, Mr. Speaker.

The Liberal approach is to reject supply side economics because it increases the economic and social gaps in society. We have another way to go about it.

The Hon. Member also spoke about the National Energy Program and this Government's foreign investment policy. I wonder if he realizes where he is from. He is from Newfoundland. The Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) asked him about the strength of the Canadian dollar. The motion of the Hon. Member for St. John's West says:

> That whereas the depreciating dollar . . . undermine job creation through their damaging effects upon agriculture, small business and business investment—

Well, the Hon. Member, in his answer to the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate, said that yes, he wants to strengthen and increase the value of the Canadian dollar. But the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate rightly pointed out that the fishermen in St. John's West or in his riding, or in northeastern New Brunswick, cannot sell their fish, or the company to which they sell fish cannot resell it, unless they undercut the European countries which are dumping fish in the U.S. because they have devalued their currency. How can a Member from Atlantic Canada, in this economic context, be sincere to the people he represents if he advocates an increased value in the Canadian dollar? That will ruin the Atlantic fishery. The pulp and paper industry in Atlantic Canada, in fact all over Canada, is having a hard time because we have to compete with European economies which have devalued their currencies. When the value of the Canadian dollar, Mr. Speaker, is reduced by market forces, not by deliberate Government policy, what happens? The regions of this country which export products which were protected by the national economic infrastructure and trade policies this Government has built up, in other words Ontario and parts of Quebec, are the ones that benefit.

If the country accepted the economic and monetary policy of the Hon. Member for St. John's West, we would not let the market determine the value of the dollar. He would want to increase it. The result is that the Atlantic fishery could not compete, the pulp and paper industry and construction industry could not compete.

The Hon. Member criticized the NEP and said it was a bad policy because some American interests did not like it. Does he not realize that it is because of the NEP that billions of dollars are being invested now in the Newfoundland offshore? The NEP rationale was to say that now that we have obtained just about the limits of new discovery of oil from conventional sources, there are still secondary discoveries and tertiary recovery methods. Over the last 30 odd years a tax and price regime was put in place to permit Alberta and Saskatchewan in particular to develop a petroleum industry. The rationale of the NEP is that now we have to look elsewhere, we have to look at the so-called Canada Lands because they are under federal control. The offshore is federally controlled, as the Supreme Court of Canada confirmed two weeks ago. We said we now need a new regime. Who but the Parliament of Canada can provide that regime?

The NEP, Mr. Speaker, is there to make sure that in the Canadian north, in the Atlantic offshore, we will have a regime which will encourage exploration for oil and gas. Therefore, I just do not understand how a Member from Atlantic Canada can suggest that the NEP has been bad for the country.

A lot has been said about the deficit and how it is supposed to be so bad. But, Mr. Speaker, why do we have a deficit in Canada, and how can we deal with it? We have a deficit because, first of all, in the mid-1970s the Government started to change the tax system so as to leave more money in the hands of Canadians in order to stimulate the economy. In order to make the tax system more equitable, we adopted a proposal that the—the former Whip of the official Opposition laughs at that. It was advanced by one of his former Leaders to make sure that the federal Government would not benefit from inflation. Indexed personal exemptions meant that less revenue came into the federal Treasury.

Mr. Kempling: You did not cut expenditures.

Mr. Breau: That is right, because we also indexed the social payments to the cost of living. The result is that more money goes out and less money comes in. So you have a deficit. Then, later in the 1970s, we had the oil crisis. The federal Government determined through a series of policies that we would have a tax regime and the National Energy Program to give incentives to develop the petroleum and gas industry. We had policies to help people insulate their homes and reduce the consumption of oil for the good of the whole country. We wanted security of supply. That means you use the fiscal policies of the Government of Canada. You increase expenditures, but you do not necessarily increase revenue when you do that. The revenue has not come in because world petroleum prices have not continued upwards. Therefore, we cannot sell our natural gas in the U.S. as we thought we could because we have to be competitive.

Another reason for the deficit is that in the last two years we have had a recession. Now you need to be mischievous or not understand anything about the economy to suggest that the recession we just came out of had its roots in Canada. How can anyone, unless he is being overly partisan, suggest that Canada was the only country that had a recession? The causes of the recession were partly in Canada, but they were in greater part from outside of Canada. The economy was stopped dead in the United States through monetary policy because President Reagan agreed with the Chairman of the Federal Reserves Board in the United States to recoup a great part of the American dollars which were financing the rest of the world for so long. They did that by increasing interest rates. What should countries which border on the United States do? Should they close their eyes and ignore what happens in the United States? That is done at a great cost. We determined we could not do that. That had the effect of slowing down the Canadian economy because people were worried about high interest rates. They were not building homes, buying cars or buying appliances. Therefore, unemployment was created.

To suggest that the economic recession which we just went through had its causes only in Canada is not to understand the workings of the economy of Canada, let alone of the rest of the world. During that recession we did not cut down on social programs as they did in other economies such as Great Britain and the United States. We continued to increase them. This is the basic difference between supply side economics and Liberal economics, between the Tories and the Liberals. We did not reduce social expenditures for people who cannot defend themselves, the real victims of an economic recession. We did not cut back on UIC payments. We increased them. We did not cut back on our payments to provinces for medicare, post-secondary education and equalization. The poorer provinces of the country continued to get increases from the federal Treasury. When the recession was at its worst and the federal deficit was going up, we were still increasing payments to Newfoundland, P.E.I., New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Manitoba by over 12 per cent a year. Even when we had a restraint program to limit discretionary expenditures of the federal Government to 6 and 5 per cent, we continued to increase health transfers to provinces by 13 per cent. We transferred post-secondary education to 6 per cent but we did not touch the equalization program. In my Province of New Brunswick it went up by 11 per cent from 1982-83 to 1983-84.

Liberal Governments do not adopt policies that only protect the economy for the wealthy, the powerful and those who can look after themselves. We do it more gradually because the economy will correct itself gradually. In the meantime, with a series of safety mets, we protect those in society who cannot protect themselves from the ravages of inflation, unemployment and economic recession. That is why we have a high deficit.

Is the deficit too high? That is a question of judgement. I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that in the mid-term the deficit will come down. It is now about 8 per cent of the GNP. It will go down to about 4.7 per cent in the fiscal year 1987-88. The financial requirements of the Government will go down from 6.9 per cent of the GNP to 3.4 per cent of the GNP in three years.

When Canada participated in World War II, our deficit went up to over 20 per cent of the GNP. Did the economy stop flat? After the war we had an incredible period of growth. Saying that the deficit automatically means we are not going to have economic recovery, that the economy is going to be stifled because of the deficit, is all hogwash. Some of our partners in the OECD have higher deficits. Japan has a higher deficit than that year after year. In Japan they have such a high trade surplus that they have a surplus of yen. They absorb it with high fiscal deficits. With the savings rate at over 14 per cent of personal disposable income in Canada today, if we did not absorb a good part of that savings rate at the federal and provincial levels, chances are we would have to export finance and invest money elsewhere. The Japanese had to invest yen outside of their country. That is not necessarily bad because it builds relationships with partners.

The federal Government has a high deficit not only because it refuses to balance its books. It is because the federal Government has a fiscal responsibility in the overall economy. It has a responsibility to make sure that the ups and downs are as smooth as possible. In private industry, private budgets and even in provincial governments it is possible to balance the books. However, over and above the expenditures and revenues we must look at the overall economic interest of the country in the mid-term and in the long term. We must use the credit of the whole country to the advantage of the overall economy. With government expenditures we must make sure that an economic recession will not hit only those who cannot defend themselves.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member for Burlington has a lot of useful information to give us so I will try to be as brief as possible. The Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) and the Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau), who just spoke, seem to be supporting the NDP policy of allowing the Canadian dollar to sink lower and lower.

They say that will encourage trade. That might be so. However, it does that because in real terms the value of wages and salaries in Canada will decline. On this side we want to encourage additional trade, but we would do it by encouraging productivity, making each unit of effort produce more.

Why does the Government advocate a decrease in wages and salaries for Canadians in the country?

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, neither I nor the Member for Gander-Twillingate said that we encouraged a policy to decrease the value of the Canadian dollar, or sink the Canadian dollar, as the Member just said. No one ever said that here this afternoon. The Opposition says that is what we say. However, that is not what we say. We say that the dollar should reflect the market forces, that it should be at the value the market forces dictate. It is true that a lower dollar improves your export opportunities, but it can damage you importwise. Over a period of time this has the effect of putting some pressure on wage rates and on all cost pressures. This is true in the manufacturing sector in particular, in the areas that are already strong. However, in the resource areas of the country; the west, the north and Atlantic Canada, that will not happen. If the Canadian dollar is too strong, we cannot sell our resources. Of course, there is a cost and an opportunity to everything. I agree that some sectors in the Canadian economy will feel the competitive forces of their wages at one point. I say it will be the stronger sector of the Canadian economy that will suffer. It will be those workers who already do very well who will suffer the competition. I do not mind that happening for the benefit of creating jobs in those regions of the country which benefit from exports where unemployment is always chronically higher.

• (1650)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There being no further questions or comments, we will proceed to debate. The Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling).

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, I could not bring myself to ask any questions of the Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau). I looked up in the gallery and I noticed some people holding their mouths. I thought they were going to throw up. Perhaps it might be an idea to have sick sacks in the gallery to take care of people who cannot abide speeches such as the one the Hon. Member made on economics. I have never in my life in all the time I have been here listened to such economic gibberish as I heard from him. I do not think he could run a hot dog stand and lose money. He is just a disaster.

There is not much time left this afternoon, Mr. Speaker. I might say that much has been said about the Budget introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) on February 15. Some say it should have this measure or that measure of relief, or some favoured provision that has been promoted by a lobby. But the reality is that it is not just the February 15 Budget that is at the root of our problems. It is really the last four Budgets. The damage done by the three previous Budgets could not be reversed in the last Budget because governments do not advertise their mistakes or admit to errors in judgement. This is evident from the twisted and tangled rhetoric of the Member who just spoke. Clearly what we need is a period of stability to allow many of our businesses to restructure their finances. They simply cannot expand and employ more people, raise the GNP and help reduce the deficit if they are debt-financed. That is the problem being faced.

Many businesses are operating with a sizeable loss carried forward. This was recognized to some extent in the Budget and the carryforward term was extended to seven years. But if you think about it for a few moments, Mr. Speaker, a profit applied against a loss carried forward means that that business will pay no taxes to the federal Treasury, or at least it will pay very much reduced taxes. It means that government expenditures must be cut to accommodate the shortfall in revenue, or taxes must be raised in other areas to pick up the revenue shortfall, or additional borrowing must be made. We can see what has happened here. The Government is using a combination of the last two: borrowing more money and in some areas raising taxes.

Clearly some measures to increase and encourage equity investment beyond that which is presently in place must form part of the strategy for any budget.

Many of us thought we would have seen such a provision in the last Budget. Some even speculated that there would be a flow-through feature of losses carried forward to other income. That feature could have repaired the capital accounts of many businesses if, say, 50 per cent of the flow-through benefit were required to be reinvested in businesses. Some people may have difficulty in following that thought but, in simple terms, many businesses have been stung by high interest rates and are reluctant to finance an expansion program on borrowed funds, especially in a volatile money market.

Somehow we must break out of the mould into which the last four disastrous Budgets have cast us. Let us say you operate a small to medium sized business, Mr. Speaker, and you want to expand to capture a larger market outside of Canada. Say you need new productive machinery to enhance your gross profit but you are reluctant to place the order because you must borrow the money on a term loan with a floating rate. You look at your cash flow for a period ahead and you are aware that the capital cost allowance for the first year on that new piece of machinery will be 50 per cent of what it was two years ago. You find yourself having to seek a larger line of credit at the bank with a floating rate in a volatile money market. There, in simplified terms, lies the dilemma facing many business people in Canada who are being urged by the Government to venture and increase markets, and to expand employment, to add more people to the payroll and reduce unemployment.

It is obvious to anyone who thinks seriously about business that the only way you can undertake new markets, purchase new productive machinery and hire new people is by finding new sources of equity. An equally important problem is that so many governments and business gurus worship at the high technology altar, and the Government's actions to encourage equity investments are directed almost exclusively at high-tech. What it does not realize is that even at the turn of the century the bulk of the people employed in this country will be employed in low technology industries. We have to have a window on the world, and high technology certainly has a place in our economy. Anyone would be foolish not to acknowledge that. But it is not the end-all to everything, and that we have to recognize. Some investors will not look at you if you do not say magic words such as robot, transistor, third, fourth or generation mode. One businessman told me he is so tired of hearing about word-processors that he is developing a bias against them.

We have to move above and beyond this level of thinking and begin to look at markets, market size, and market accessibility and ask how we are going to capture those markets. The Hon. gentleman for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) talked about the fish problem in Newfoundland. It is a serious problem. But there is an answer and a solution to it. I just wish we could take some of the marketing brains that I see in central Canada at whom he takes a kick once in a while and put them in Newfoundland. I want to tell the Hon. Member that there are ways to move that fish, but the way they are going about it, it will not be done. We have to determine how we are going to capture that market. Our products must be the best in the world, and we must look at that. The quality of the product one produces has to be second to none. If it is, you will sell it. I suggest to the Hon. Member that what is being produced now may not be the best there is. Excellence has to be our goal in production. Good value for our money must be our philosophy in trade. That is the area in which we have to move. If you adopted those principles in the marketing of fish and you had the best possible product available packaged in an attractive way, and you aimed toward excellence and gave value for money, not the lowest price, not beating foreign competition, which devalues currency, I say to the Hon. Member he would have competition beating a path to his door to buy fish. I can assure the Hon. Member of that, because that philosophy works in all business, not just the fish industry.

I get tired of the bureaucratic games that are played with fiscal and tax policy. The bureaucrat seizes on a policy and his main concern is that a sum of money is moved equal to that set forward in the Budget document. Some of them, I think, would rather have half a dozen megaprojects going consuming several billion dollars than 400 projects that consume several hundred million dollars. A judgment error on megaprojects can spell disaster to an industry sector. We only need to look at the National Energy Program as an example.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I may conclude because it is almost five o'clock. If I do not, I will get into another area which will seem irrelevant to Hansard. May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADA HEALTH ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Thursday, March 29, consideration of the motion of Miss Bégin that Bill C-3, an Act relating to cash contributions by Canada in respect of insured health services provided under provincial health care insurance plans and amounts payable by Canada in respect of extended health care services and to amend and repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, at the point at which I was interrupted last week, I was beginning to say what I thought was significant about the Canada Health Act in terms of the history of medicare. I was saying why we feel it is important to support the Bill, regardless of its many flaws and the many things it does not do. The main reason for this, and this was said well by one particular witness, Dr. Robert Evans, is that this national consensus against extra billing and user fees has the possibility of finally putting behind us the debate about extra billing and user fees.

Something I have regretted for the last four years as health critic for my Party is that so much time had to be spent on the subject of extra billing and user fees when there are many other questions which have to be faced with regard to the future of our health care system. These two issues, extra billing and user fees, have dominated the political debate vis-à-vis medicare, and rightfully so. I am not complaining about that. I am saying that we are now at a point where hopefully we can go beyond arguing about extra billing and user fees and accept that these are practices which are regarded as unacceptable by all three political Parties. We should begin to face some of the other questions that remain as far as the future of our health care system is concerned.

I acknowledge that this issue has existed since the beginning of medicare. The question of whether or not extra billing and user fees were or were not anomalies or violations of the spirit of medicare is an issue which has been ambivalent since the beginning of medicare. Now when we come so near to the end of the debate on the Canada Health Act, we are saying that that ambivalence and ambiguity are finally resolved and we as the Parliament of Canada declare that extra billing and user fees are violations of the principle of medicare and that, as far as we are concerned, the debate on that issue is over.

I call on the provinces, particularly those provinces which have indicated opposition to the Canada Health Act, to respect the decision of Parliament and seek ways of eliminating extra billing and user fees in the provinces where these practices exist, and not to seek ways of getting around the Canada Health Act or making political hay out of whatever the provinces will argue will be the result of the Canada Health Act. It is important as well, not just federally but provincially, to go beyond the debate about extra billing and user fees and turn to some of the other questions.

There are two other things about this Bill which I think are important. Both of them are in the nature of what I would call conceptual victories or breakthroughs. These breakthroughs will not have any impact the day after the Act is passed but are important in the sense of reshaping our view of the health care system. The first one deals with the amendment to Clause 9 which uses the phrase "health care practitioner" and in particular talks about health care practitioners as being a group to which doctors, nurses and other health care practitioners belong. In this way, all of the health care professionals in the health care system are equal. They have different tasks but they are all health care practitioners, and that is the significance of the language in Clause 9 as amended.

Clause 9 as amended reads "other health care practitioners". This is the kind of wording for which the Canadian Nurses Association and others lobbied strenuously. I would like to take this opportunity to say how important a role those associations played in making sure that this kind of amendment was actually achieved. Their members would not stand for anything less and would not be satisfied with any token wording. They wanted it made clear that "health care practitioner" was a concept which, if it were to be included, must include everyone, and that is what they finally got from the Government. I am happy to see that the Government finally came around to that point of view and found a way to include wording such as that which is permissive in nature. It allows the provinces to begin to see the health care system in that way but does not require the provinces to do so. I think that that is a very important conceptual breakthrough in the Canada Health Act.

The second breakthrough has to do with an amendment which we proposed to the preamble to the Act. To the paragraph which indicated how we could expect to achieve further improvements in the well-being of Canadians, we had added the notion of "collective action against the social, environmental and occupational causes of disease". It seems to me that the next big success that we will achieve with respect to health care in the country will not come so much from advanced technology, although that will be important. The next big success we as a society will see will come when we begin to address collectively the social, environmental and occupational causes of disease. That will have the same effect as did the earlier massive success when, in this country at least, we addressed the questions of clean water and sanitary conditions and the various other ways in which we wiped out the threat of infectious disease such as it existed at one time.

I wanted to call that amendment to the attention of the House because I think we have now begun to admit that we need to go beyond the curative physician-dominated system that exists in terms of the health care delivery system, and even beyond the individual, preventive, lifestyle kinds of approaches which are now popular with respect to health care. Those approaches are crucial but they will not do the trick for the millions and millions of Canadians whose health is being threatened by the things that only we as a society can do something about. I think the amendment to the preamble is particularly important in that respect.

Another amendment that I should like to call to the attention of the House and which we were responsible for implementing, is the amendment to Clause 10 which deals with universality. It calls for the provision of all services on uniform terms and conditions. This would go some way toward preventing the development of a multi-tier health care delivery system in provinces which, for instance, collect health care premiums and where there might have been some inclination in the future to stream health care consumers into various forms of health care delivery according to whether they had paid their premiums or were on premium assistance. I believe this was at least being contemplated and probably is still being contemplated in the Province of Ontario. In these circumstances, certain kinds of health care consumers might be streamed into community clinics on the basis of the fact that they are receiving premium assistance or whatever, and others who have paid the premiums would be eligible for fee for service and more individualized service. It is not that we have anything against community health clinics, Mr. Speaker, quite the contrary, but we do not want to see them turn into a form of ghettoization for certain Canadians. We want the concept to be broadened and used effectively for the well-being of all Canadians. That was the intent of the amendment to Clause 10.

We suggested some other amendments which were not accepted. We moved an amendment regarding the setting up of a national health council to provide continuing attention to the future of medicare. We called for stronger penalties because we have our doubts about the effectiveness of the penalties as they now stand. We hope, as I said earlier, however, that the provinces will respond to this national consensus against extra billing and user fees.

We moved an amendment regarding the acceptable ratio of ward beds as against private and semi-private beds. We were concerned that with increasing emphasis on hospitals having to generate more and more of their own revenue, accessibility might be threatened, not through extra billing and user fees but through the availability of beds that could be afforded through the provincial plan and not through extra insurance. That was rejected also.

We moved an amendment regarding parliamentary accountability because we felt that, with respect to other program conditions for which the Act gives the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) discretion, too much discretion was being given to the Minister. We felt that there should have been a way of involving the House of Commons, and particularly the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, in adjudicating whether provinces were actually in violation of the principles of medicare. That was rejected.

We moved an amendment about positive incentives for provinces that move quickly to clean up their act with respect to extra billing and user fees. We felt that the Act as it stands is too punitive in nature and does not include enough positive incentives for provinces that want to act in this respect. That was rejected.

In committee I moved the amendment that was suggested by the Canadian Association of Interns and Residents. That was rejected, although the Government brought forward an amendment which it claims meets those needs. Opposition Parties, however, are not satisfied with that amendment nor are the residents and interns, and only time will tell whether it actually meets the needs.

At this point in the life of medicare, Mr. Speaker, it will take some political will, some imagination, some going beyond the traditional positions that everyone cherishes with regard to his or her own approach to medicare in order to address some of the very difficult questions facing us in the years ahead. We will feel very soon the impact of important demographic trends with respect to the aging of our society. I believe we should be laying the infrastructure, the planning and concepts to deal with that problem now, not wait until it hits us like a two-ton truck. There is a lack of foresight, I believe, on the part of governments which do not want to face up to the need for long-term investment to be able to meet those needs. So we have that demographic problem, Mr. Speaker. We have a technological problem as well. We have more and more life-saving, diagnostic and therapeutic advanced technology which uses up more and more of the finite source of funds. Unless we can find a way to get unlimited funds, we are going to have some very difficult questions to answer down the road as to the allocation of health care dollars. I am aware that whenever this matter is brought up, particularly by the doctors, there is a great deal of criticism, and justly so in that doctors often bring it up in the wrong context. They often bring it up as a way of trying to win an argument on another point, Mr. Speaker.

There are questions having to do with the allocation of health care dollars because there is not an infinite amount of money, and there will be difficult decisions to be made. They may not be made in the way in which the medical community would like, and, as I say, I believe it is often brought up in a misleading way by the medical community. Nevertheless, there are difficult decisions to be made about the allocation of health care resources. Canadians will have to pay more attention to how their health care dollars are being spent. We will have to find a way, as we did through medicare when we found a way to go beyond the allocation of health care resources by the marketplace, and we will have to find a way to go beyond the present system which lays itself open more and more to the charge that bureaucrats are allocating health care resources by political and fiscal imperatives instead of health care imperatives.

The answer is not, Mr. Speaker, as so many in the CMA and others would have us believe, to return to allocation by the marketplace. The answer is to find the political will to go beyond both the marketplace and fiscal and political imperatives and find a third way in which we can face up to those difficult decisions about the allocation of health care dollars. At the same time as we want to go beyond the present system, we must resist the temptation, as we do in so many other areas of our economic and political life, to see, in the inadequacy of the present state of affairs, a reason to go back rather than ahead. I believe that is something, Mr. Speaker, which we should keep in mind.

There will have to be on the part of the federal Government a willingness to reopen the whole question of the funding relationship with the provinces. There must be a willingness to go back to the table and say, "We have all these other problems we have to meet, how can we meet them together?", rather than having the stubborn attitude that, "We provide a certain amount of money through block funding and that is it. We will put conditions on that money"—which I support—"but that is all we are going to do".

I believe the Minister of National Health and Welfare and future Ministers of National Health and Welfare, will have to be willing to sit down with the provinces and renegotiate that funding relationship so we can have a full-fledged financial partnership with respect to medicare.

There are many other questions we will have to face but I do not have the time to go into them. There will be the question of transportation in northern Ontario, for instance, and other remote parts of the country where people do not, in a sense, have equal access to hospital care. They must spend a lot more money than people living in urban centres to provide their families with the kind of hospital care which may be recommended by their physicians. These are all questions and conditions which impede the realization of the original vision of medicare. There are things which are still on the agenda, Mr. Speaker. Hopefully, with the passage of this Act, we can put the debate about extra billing and user fees behind us and trust that provinces will see the wisdom of this and act in the very near future to eliminate extra billing and user fees so that the spirit in which we in this House approach this Act will be infectious and we will see that kind of co-operative attention paid to our health care system from here on.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I was wondering if the Member would advise the House whether this Bill in any way prevents doctors from practising outside the system? In other words, can they practise outside the provincial medical system and send their bills directly to their patients?

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, let me repeat the question just to make sure I have it correct. Can doctors opt out, bill their patients and then have their patients bill the plan? Is that what you are saying?

Mr. Blenkarn: Can doctors opt out?

Mr. Blaikie: Doctors can do anything they like so long as they do not extra-bill their patients. That is my view and that of the parliamentary task force, on which my friend and I both sat, of what constitutes extra billing. Extra billing is when patients are charged more than the plan will pay them.

Mr. Blenkarn: Will the Member advise me where in this Bill a province is prevented from reimbursing a patient for money he may have paid to a doctor? Let us say that a doctor practised medicine in California and the patient saw him there, or an Ontario patient went to Quebec and saw a doctor and paid him directly. Could the patient be reimbursed? If the patient went to the Mayo Clinic in New York, could he be reimbursed? Indeed, could he be reimbursed if he saw a specialist in Ontario and the specialist said he did not practise state medicine, "If you want to collect from the province and the province does not pay you, fine, I do not care. You pay me".

Would the province be prevented from paying that patient something toward the bill?

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Hon. Member understands the Bill.

Miss Bégin: No, that is obvious.

Mr. Blaikie: The Bill does not prevent anything. It simply says that if extra billing occurs, there will be a dollar for dollar penalty. I have explained what constitutes extra billing. What the Bill does is to provide for a penalty for extra billing to the extent that it exists in any particular province. How particular provinces decide to regulate, eliminate or control, or whatever they decide to do with extra billing, will be the business of the provinces. I am sure the Hon. Member would not want me to make recommendations on how individual provinces make judgements in the particular cases he brings up.

Mr. Hudecki: Mr. Speaker, I just want to express my concern at one aspect of the Bill which has not been addressed as it should be. The Hon. Member who has just spoken is an expert in various aspects of the Bill and I would like to hear his opinion.

As he well knows, medical advances are so rapid that it is essential to develop a system of training to give extra attention to these various advances, which will reflect themselves in better care. That aspect has not been addressed in this Bill. We think in terms of quantity, geographical distribution and universality, yet we do not think in terms of quality of care. This requires an extra effort on the part of the graduate physicians and doctors who have spent x-number of years in conventional and in specialized training, often at their own expense. The Bill does not address itself to supporting these people, giving them the extra help they need to get that training and practise it efficiently. Without that category of physician there will be a deterioration of medical services in this country. In the various speeches I have heard the Hon. Member make, I have not heard him address himself to that particular issue.

● (1130)

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, the nature and quality of the training that physicians receive is not something over which the federal Government has a great deal of say. The Hon. Member is a physician himself and knows that, to a great extent, physicians are a self-regulating monopoly. However, there is a lot of public money spent on them. There is a great investment made by the public in medical schools. I do not have the numbers at hand, but I am sure it is a phenomenal amount of public money which is spent to train physicians. Some of them then turn around, in their own peculiar way of saying how grateful they are, and say that they do not feel they can make enough money here, and so they go to Houston or some place else.

I think great improvements could be made in the quality of care, Mr. Speaker. We must first identify more clearly what we mean by care. Care is not only the precision and insight with which physicians make judgements. Care has to do with how many nurses are on the ward, the conditions in which patients live out their days in hospitals, what kind of services are available in the home, and how humane the total health care system is. We have to consider those areas in addressing quality of care. It seems to me that physicians have some way to go in order to catch up with that view. They must begin to treat a person more as a whole person and less as a case study.

Mr. Hudecki: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is showing a little bit of ignorance toward what constitutes quality care. First and foremost, a great deal of the training that physicians and surgeons must take is not taken in Canada and is not taken with the help of public funds. That type of training is not available in this country. Most of these people will go offshore or to the United States and will spend years of their time in training. They will do it at considerable personal expense. There is a tendency for breakdowns in their families as a result of being separated from them.

With regard to the quality of care, the humane aspect does not show itself in some of the procedures which are practised. Time and again the essential part of the treatment is the skill of the physician in acquiring the new techniques and approaches. The follow-up care is in the hands of the rest of the team.

Therefore, there are two factors here. The first is that the quality of care is achieved without financial assistance from the federal Government, at the expense of the individual doctors. Second, in most situations the doctor must be the person in charge who must take the overall responsibility, something which cannot be done by other members of the health care team.

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on third reading on Bill C-3, the Canada Health Act, it is important to state at the outset that our contribution to this debate, both at this stage and throughout the study of this Bill, is based on the principle that the Progressive Conservative Party, from the very beginning of the debate on a national health care system, has supported just such a system, namely a national health care system. It is important to remind the House and the Canadian public that this is the case. It dates back to 1956 when at a national convention the Party in fact moved a policy principle in which the Party committed itself to a national health care system to be achieved in co-operation with the provinces. That system was to be one of which Canadians could be proud and which it was within the resources of Canadians to afford. Those principles established by the Party in 1956, Mr. Speaker, are the principles on which this Party stands today. It is from that basis that we complete the debate on the health care system.

It is interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that it was only a few years after that conclusion of the Party in 1956, during the Government of the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker, that the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act of 1957 was passed. In 1962, the medicare system came into Saskatchewan. This was done through the co-operation of the Saskatchewan Government of Mr. Tommy Douglas as well as of Prime Minister Diefenbaker. These two gentlemen both gave tribute to the contribution that was made at that time.

I make those statements at the outset, Mr. Speaker, to allay the suggestions made by some people that the Progressive Conservative Party is not in favour of a universal national health care system. The record not only supports that, it substantiates it. Having made those comments, I hope we can go on to real issues rather than continue to address issues which in fact are not issues at all.

Before us we have a Bill which has been largely amended through the committee process. It has seen a number of amendments brought forward by the Government, by our Party, as well as by the New Democratic Party. I believe the Bill before us is more realistic in terms of the health care system than the Bill which we addressed at second reading. When I use the word realistic, that is the sense in which I use it.

The Minister is in the House today. I would like to thank her for the kind comments she made during her participation in third reading. Even the preamble of the Bill was changed after second reading. This remains in front of the national agenda on health care. I will quote in part the amendment to the preamble. It reads:

—that it is not the intention of the government of Canada that any of the powers, rights, privileges or authorities vested in Canada or the provinces under the provisions of the Constitution Act, 1867 (formerly named the British North America Act, 1867), or any amendments thereto, or otherwise, be by reason of this Act abrogated or derogated from or in any way impaired;

That simply means that the Government is concerned that the Bill in part could be seen to be moving into or at least affecting the constitutional jurisdiction of the health field which is within provincial rights. I do not have the right to speak for the provinces. I do not know if the provinces will take this Bill or provisions of this Bill to the courts. It is important to note in the House today that that amendment was brought in by the Government, I suggest, because of the Government's own concern and fear that parts of this Bill could be seen by the courts to be involving the federal Government in provincial jurisdictions. The reason I raise this matter is that it is at the very heart and nub of what I believe the health care system should be. It should be a system based on co-operation and recognition that the provinces have the primary responsibility for health care delivery systems. It should be based on the recognition that the federal Government has a responsibility to maintain that the five principles of medicare which we support are not only kept intact but that the system does not violate them in any way. As we look at the action of the provinces, it will be very interesting to see whether or not Bill C-3, the Canada Health Act, will be challenged in court.

What is of greater significance is the amendments to Clause 3 and Clause 4. Clause 3 is entitled "Canada Health Care Policy" and there were substantial sections of Clause 3 removed by the Government through amendment. In fact, the words that it removed were, "It is hereby declared that the Canadian health care policy should be designed and administered: (a) to encourage effective allocation of the nation's health resources: (b), to facilitate the provision of adequate health services throughout Canada".

Surely no one could quarrel with the statement that the health care system should facilitate the provision of adequate health services throughout Canada. One must raise the question as to why the federal Government feels it necessary to remove those words from the Bill which is called the Canada Health Act. I think the answer is quite straightforward. I stated earlier that although the Bill does not address the Canada health system as I would have liked it to, I believe that the amendment that the Government then moved is more significant and makes the Bill more realistic because Clause 3 states that:

—the primary objective of Canadian health care policy is to protect, promote and restore the physical and mental well-being of residents of Canada and to facilitate reasonable access to health services without financial or other barriers.

Let us go to Clause 4, which describes the purpose of the Bill. It reads:

The purpose of this Act is to establish criteria and conditions that must be met before full payment may be made under the Act of 1977—

Those words are significant in the sense that the Minister had to recognize, through the amendment procedure, that what the Canada Health Act was really addressing was not so much the future of health care as what she was going to put forward in the Act, that is, financial penalties for extra billing and user fees. The national agenda should have been to consider the question of what we see in national health care services in the future; what those services should be; what model should best be brought into being through co-operation with the provinces while keeping in mind the provinces' primary responsibility; and finally addressing the question, difficult though it may be, of how we allocate resources both human and financial to meet the health care system of the future.

I suggest that, unfortunately, the opportunity to do that was greatly restricted by the scope of the Bill and, in fact, the amendments restricted the Bill even further. Members present in the House today who sat on the committee would agree with me, I believe, that there was hardly an exception to the fact that as witnesses appeared before the committee they would address the matter of extra billing and user fees and then go on to say what they thought should be the national agenda. The national agenda was: What do we do about an aging population; what do we do about technology; what do we do about preventive health care; what do we do about co-operation with the provinces, and what do we do about resources. Those are the issues with which the House must deal. Unfortunately, this Bill does not do so.

Having said that, while amendments which we brought forward were rejected by the Government in many cases, the principle of our amendment was accepted by the Government in other amendments. I mention only a few to make the point. One concerns the health care practitioner. I want to point out that the concept of the health care practitioner is now part of the Canada Health Act in Clause 9 and the definition clause. I also want to state very clearly to the public and the provinces that this does not impose an extra financial burden on the provinces. I suggest that it is no different from Section 4(3) of the Medical Care Act of 1966 in which, for example, there were services not covered through the insured services, such as optometrical services, which the province could in fact provide in part through an insured service with the province only. They were never covered through the federal-provincial financial transfer system.

Since we have flagged that the health care system is a system consisting totally of health care practitioners, it is important to note that the Canadian Medical Association, the Canadian Nurses' Association and other professionals who are familiar with the health care system realize that we must move toward a more holistic approach both to medicine and to the health care professional. When talking about a holistic system, we must consciously put forward the fact that the health care system should address the other concepts of preventive health care. While I believe it will always have illness as its primary orientation, since the health care system obviously must address illness, it should not be restricted only to the concept of addressing illness.

I believe that the amendment respecting the health care practitioner does give the provinces and health care practitioners an opportunity to take an approach to health care resources, that is professionals, finances and the philosophy of holistic medicine, without imposition on the provinces themselves.

I am sure that members of the committee and the House would agree that in terms of the Canadian Medical Association and amendments to Clause 12(2), I have spoken on it as much possibly as anyone. I should point out that the wording in that clause in the original draft Bill was that medical professionals had the right to reasonable compensation. What does reasonable compensation mean and how does one approach the question of reasonable compensation? I go back to Mr. Justice Emmet Hall who said in his report in 1980 that the health care system in fact could be eroded in the future if extra billing and user fees were allowed to continue or to expand. However, he never made those statements in isolation. He always added that if that were to take place through legislation there had to be a system whereby medical professionals would be entitled to reasonable compensation. Those two views were always tied together.

Those were his words in his report, and he reiterated the statement at the committee hearing of February 14, as can be found on page 510. He said, "Accepting that physicians have a right to be fairly and adequately compensated can be stated this way; no more, no less, and the state has a right to be concerned with the problem." I agree with the principles he stated, that there must be fairness and there must be a balance between recognizing professional independence and recognizing the fact that the public which finances the system has the right to services for which they have paid. There must also be recognition of the fact that the health care professional not only feels that he or she has been adequately compensated financially but also that psychologically and professionally society recognizes their contribution and their role.

Mr. Justice Hall goes even further in a press article, which appeared as recently as today, in which he states very clearly that medical doctors cannot dictate fees because, in a sense, as we get a national health system they give up in part a certain freedom in exchange for a health care system. But that is the dilemma and the conundrum.

I say to the provinces that the amendment which we brought forward is not binding on the provinces but it is at least a model, or they can now develop models whereby fee structures and fee disputes can be resolved. It is not my purpose, nor is it my right, to dictate to the provinces how this should be done. I simply put forward the principles once again. If the system is to work and if the people within it are to feel that they are making a valid contribution which is recognized by society, I commend that amendment to the provinces for further study.

The toughest question in health care is the question of cost containment. How do we address that question? It is clear that we have to state again that it is not within federal jurisdiction to address this question in isolation. I want to say to all Members of the House and to the Canadian public that when we talk about cost containment, we are not talking in the sense that we want to erode in any way the principles of medicare. It is for the reason that we want to preserve medicare that we must address the question of cost containment.

Let us take a look at the last two years. If one takes a look at the recession, one finds that the Gross National Product used for health care has risen dramatically. If one takes a look at the national deficit, 25 cents of every dollar collected from the taxpayers of Canada is used to service the debt. If we add that 25 cents of every dollar to service the debt, and if we take a look at our safety nets of health care insurance and unemployment insurance, systems which we want to maintain, the real question becomes: when will we get our economic house in order so that the systems and services Canadians want to have maintained can be paid for? That is the issue.

I would like to give a very practical example. I know the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) will make the case more strongly on the economic side, but if we were able to reduce the 25 cents by 5 cents to 20 cents for the servicing of the national debt, it would give us roughly $7 billion to $8 billion. The expenditures of the federal Government in terms of national health care are between $9 billion and $10 billion.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Every time you get up you ask the Government to spend more.

Mr. Epp: We are getting the traditional catcalls from the Liberals. When a person wants to address these questions, he has to address them, no matter what catcalls he gets and no matter what the difficulty. Additionally, we have to look at the cost of technology and demography. How do we do this? That is the question. I will put it to the House very bluntly and in a very straightforward way. We cannot do it in the federal House by imposition. The only way to do it, when we talk about a health care system which is a national plan and in which the provinces have primary responsibility, is to sit down with the provinces and look at the issues.

If there has been anything lacking over the last few years in the health care system, it has been co-operation. We have to return to co-operative federalism because we cannot impose from here, nor will we have a better system because we impose. The best way to do it is to get back to economic principles and increase economic activity. If we look at the statistics, as the economic recession deepened we got into more and more difficulty in the health care system. Surely the global answer is once again to establish an economic climate where people who are risk takers are able to invest and feel that their investment and their return will be seen as their right to invest in the economy. We must not look at the question from a reductions point of view. We cannot take an ever increasing piece of the pie from the general paying public, but we should increase the size of the economic activity of Canada.

Those are very difficult issues. I would like to give another example. National voluntary agencies want to become involved in the health care system. Let us get them involved. Let us get them around the table to see how it can be done. I am referring to agencies such as the Victorian Order of Nurses. There are many suggestions one could make in this field, but my greatest suggestion would be to get on with some of the positive aspects rather than always to raise the question of how we do it.

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member, my official critic in the Official Opposition, a question concerning the alleged underfunding of the system. I am sure the Hon. Member will excuse me if I do not have the details, but the figures are well known to all of us who worked on medicare in committee. In the years which followed block funding, years in which the federal funding went up to a national average of 58 per cent of the so-called medicare, extra billing and user fees started to grow instead of remaining at a low level as they had done for years, and thus the crisis we are in was created. How does he reconcile the fact that when we gave the most money extra charges were placed upon the patients? I do not understand his reasoning.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, this debate has been going on for some time. If the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) goes back to the previous Budgets of her Government, she will note very clearly that in those Budget statements the Minister of Finance said that through reductions of the EPF the Government over the next period of the EPF would reduce its funding by $5.7 billion, that is $5.7 billion over what had been projected. If she goes to the last Budget, she will see that the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) said that through the rejigging of the system or because the inflation rate was lower, he found an additional amount of money. Then it came out that it was not only $269 million; there was an additional sum of money, in the area of $700 million, which was part of the system.

Miss Bégin: What does that have to do with my question?

Mr. Epp: I will get to your question. When we look at block funding, what the Minister had said for so long, which was rejected, was that the provinces were diverting money that they were receiving either for health care or for post-secondary education. They were diverting it into other fields of provincial responsibility. Mr. Justice Emmett Hall very clearly stated that there was no evidence to that effect at all.

If one takes a look at the manner in which health care systems developed in the 1960s and onward, for example, one finds that the average inflation rate during that decade was approximately 4.5 per cent, but health care costs were rising at an average of 12.2 per cent. That built-in cost is now within the system. Additionally, there have been without any question other factors which have added to the cost of the health care system well beyond any escalation of cost sharing from the federal Government or, as we now call it, block funding.

The question the Minister has to relate more directly is, what percentage of their provincial budgets the provinces are now expending for health care as against previous years? If we take a province such as Alberta, it pays more to date per capita for health care than any other province. If we take a look at provinces in Atlantic Canada, over 50 per cent of their total provincial budget is now transfer payments. The point I am making to the Minister is that in each case those provinces are spending between 25 cents and 30 cents of their total budget on health care, and that is rising. The ability to afford more is the serious question which those provinces and we in the House have to address.

Miss Bégin: The Hon. Member has not answered my question. In fact, he used a completely irrelevant standard of measurement; he offered it without explaining it. It has no relationship to the portion of a budget which the province puts to medicare. By the way. the Hon. Member never spoke of medicare; he kept referring to the total health Bill. That is not what the feds are in, and it is not the purpose of this Act. That is why I referred him to medicare. He did not answer my question. Why is it that extra billing and user fees rose at the very moment that the federal share was well above 50 per cent? Second, does the Member not know that in the case of Alberta the share of its budget is larger for medicare because it decided to build small hospitals in every town and village? That is their responsibility. Unfortunately, it is a problem.

• (1200)

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, here again is the philosophical difference between the Minister and myself. The provinces have a responsibility and a constitutional right to set up a health care system which they feel is the best model for their province. That is their constitutional right and responsibility. Having said that, this is the other part of the debate where the Minister and I are at fundamental odds; she likes to keep on restricting her version of health care.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Answer her question.

Mr. Epp: That is the best speech you have ever made. Too bad it was so limited. The Minister says we should only discuss medicare, only discuss doctors' fees and active care hospitals. There is the whole point. Do we want a health care system restricted in that way? I thought I made the point about looking at the matter in the larger context. What have we done for mental hospitals?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order. I hate to cut off the Hon. Member, but questions and comments should be relatively short to give everyone a chance to participate. The Hon. Member has had a good time for response. He will have another opportunity.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hope that I can at least answer the question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order. The ten-minute period for questions and comments is to allow all Members to participate. The questions and comments should be relatively short. The Hon. Member for Provencher has had two interventions during this period which have been relatively long in proportion to the time spent on the questions. I just draw this to his attention. He will have a chance to respond to another question in a minute.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) mentioned in his most recent intervention the question of philosophical differences. He has talked about co-operative federalism. What do you do in the case of the Minister of Health in Alberta who makes it quite clear that there is nothing to negotiate? His view of extra billing and user fees is an ideological one. For him extra billing and user fees is part and parcel of a free enterprise view of reality. You have ideological choices. They choose to have user fees and tax the sick rather than have a gasoline or sales tax. That is not a question of economic necessity but a question of philosophical preference. How do you sit down and negotiate philosophical preferences? It seems to be a political question that the Member is avoiding.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I just want to say to the Minister of National Health and Welfare that if she wants to restrict her narrow vision to health care she can say yes, she is at 50.3 per cent. When you look at the total health care Bill, she is at best at 40 per cent. If she had sat down and discussed both issues from that point of view, rather than just hung on to that one narrow aspect, which she has always done, we would have a better health care system.

With regard to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), I thought he himself answered his question best. When he was asked earlier by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South whether the Bill outlaws extra billing, he said no, it does not. What the Bill does is to use the federal spending power to withhold certain sums against the matter of extra billing and user fees. He recognized in committee, and I believe he recognized it in his speech today as well, that while there are political differences, the provinces have a right to set up the health care system. What the federal Government and we through this Bill have responsibility for is to maintain the principles in order that that universal system is maintained.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order. The ten-minute period for questions and comments has expired.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I join late in the debate on this Bill. Unfortunately, it was not possible for me to participate on second reading or in committee. I regret that. However, I believe that the committee did a first-class job. This Bill by and large fulfills the requirements that the parliamentary task force on fiscal arrangements set out with respect to the medicare and health care system and the federal Government's responsibility in that system.

You, Mr. Speaker, will personally remember being a part of that task force and our considerations on the various criteria, in which the federal Government participated, in health care programs in Canada. I refer again to Clause 7 of the Bill where the five criteria of public administration, comprehensiveness, universality, portability and accessability are set out. A number of people have suggested that it is not the federal obligation to look after and ensure that there are these criteria, but I asked my constituents that question. I asked: "Do you believe that the federal Government has an obligation to ensure the existence of a national medicare and hospitalization system and insist on specific national standards, and does it have the right to penalize provinces that do not comply with national standards?" My constituents answered 72 per cent yes and 21 per cent no. Despite what Colin Brown has indicated in the large advertisements of the National Citizens' Coalition, the Act has a good deal of public support. This Party supports this Bill.

It is very important that matters such as user fees be banned. In the task force we studied the question of user fees and how hospitals, in order to discourage people from using their facilities, charged a fee. That fee either had to be so large as to be punitive and therefore hurt the poor and the sick, or be so small as to be negligible and, therefore, a fee that would not deter anybody, and one that would be used up in administration. When we were in Whitehorse, we found that the hospitals, under the auspices of this Minister, were directed to have a user fee for emergency services. The study of that user fee indicated that the entire fee was used up in the administration of trying to collect it. That was a rather foolish type of fee which, thank goodness, no longer exists. This Bill bans that class of fee.

A great deal has been said with respect to extra billing. In our tours of the country, we found certain situations in certain provinces, particularly in Saskatchewan which at that time was under a New Democratic government. That province not only allowed its doctors to collect from the medicare system, but to charge extra to the patients. The doctor had it both ways. He could bill the system and bill the patient. That was an extra type of fee. The same situation existed in a number of the maritime provinces. That kind of billing is improper. To rely on the system, to look after all your credit headaches, all of your problems, and then charge the patient an extra $2, $5 or $10, whatever the patient can afford, is to set up a double system of medical care.

I referred earlier to the activities of the National Citizens' Coalition, which had the temerity to ask, "How would you like your open-heart surgery done by a civil servant?", or, "How would you like your baby delivered by someone who delivers the mail?" It suggested that this Act would somehow destroy the ability of persons to see a doctor. I say, nonsense, Sir.

• (1210)

Earlier on in today's debate, I asked if this Bill in any way required that a doctor sign up or be committed to the medicare system. In fact, it does not. Nowhere in this Bill does it say that a medical practitioner must practise within the provincial medical system. He is entitled, if he can qualify, to practise any way he wants and to practice within the hospital system in the way he already practises. He is entitled to send his bills to his patient in the normal course of events. He is not recruited, conscripted or forced to belong to the Ontario system, the Manitoba system or any other system.

Having said that, Sir, there is nothing within this Bill that in any way prevents the provinces from reimbursing to the level of the medicare fees in that province the patients who go to see doctors who do not belong to the system. Nothing in this Bill prevents that from happening. It may be said by some that that is a form of extra billing, but how in the world can it be extra billing if the doctors do not even belong to the system? How can a doctor extra-bill the system if he is not even part of the system, any more than a doctor who works at the Mayo Clinic or a doctor who practises in Florida or a doctor who practises in another province is part of the system? Indeed, as far as the other provinces are concerned and as far as doctors practising out of the jurisdiction are concerned, the concept of universality and portability contemplates the reimbursement of fees paid out by patients to doctors by the provincial system.

Doctors who do not belong to the system do not bill the system. Therefore, their bills can in no way be treated as extra billing. That billing is not extra to anything if the doctor is not part of that system. The real political question is whether or not this Minister would try to say that if a province reimburses a patient for seeing a doctor who does not belong to a system, that province was in some way evading the provisions of the Canada Health Act.

Before I discuss that, Mr. Speaker, I would like to discuss a question which I put to my own constituents. I will read into the record the question I put to my constituents. The question was: "About 14 per cent of Ontario doctors are opted out of medicare. These doctors bill their patients directly. Do you believe that patients of opted-out doctors should be able to collect from the provincial Government that portion of the fee billed to them by their doctor that would normally be paid directly to the doctor if the doctor had not opted out?"

In answer to that question, 67 per cent of my constituents said yes and 26 per cent said no. I suggest to the Minister and to any provincial Minister who might be involved that they might have a very difficult time saying to someone who went to the Mayo Clinic or to a specialist who was not interested in medicare that he could not be reimbursed for his expenses. Any government which indicated that would be in serious trouble indeed.

However, the Act does go a long way toward making sure that universality exists. The provisions of the Act specifically indicate that the service must be comprehensive. That means that people should be able to find medical service that is in accordance with a provincial universal system anywhere in the province. To that extent, if a province would not operate on the basis of having medical service generally available, then, in my view, it would be in default of its conditions. It would not be in default by opting out or by imposing extra billing but by not making sure that there were medical practitioners generally able to offer services to those who are entitled to rely on medical service without the payment of an extra bill.

In that sense, Sir, I think the committee did an excellent job by introducing the concept of reasonable compensation through the amendments which require a type of arbitration to determine the fair fees medical practitioners should charge for their work. The arbitration of fees as conceived by Mr. Justice Emmett Hall is a kind of arbitration that protects not only the practitioner but also protects the public. I think that the committee, in introducing that concept of arbitration, has provided a worthwhile service to medicare.

One of the major concerns we all have is about the rising cost of health care. That cost is rising because of a number of factors. The first factor is the enormous amount of new technology that is coming on stream. The Minister has indicated that she pays for 50 per cent of the medicare system, but does she pay for 50 per cent of the health care system in the broad sense? The answer is no. In the Province of Ontario she pays for perhaps 38 per cent or 40 per cent of the health care system.

A good part of the payments for the health care system are for technology and for making people healthier in non-traditional ways. This is part of the health care technology that exists, and as that technology carries on and as people, because of that technology, live longer, the cost of health care will rise dramatically. We must come to grips, either federally, provincially or as a nation, with the cost of health care. Obviously, if we carry on as we do, we could well reach the point where health care takes a far greater percentage of our income and our national productivity than might be appropriate for a growing country.

One of the suggestions I received to deal with that issue was to take a look at some of the tort liability concerns of doctors. The Minister will know that following what has happened in the United States, medical practitioners are gravely concerned about being sued for malpractice. Often lawsuits are brought even though the doctor has probably done almost everything conceivably possible required to do a first-class job. Whether it was a first-class effort or not, it can be seen in a considerably different way in hindsight than it was seen in foresight.

Second, we must deal with the whole question of the tort liability of a doctor for negligence. I hope that the Minister will do something in terms of negotiations with her provincial counterparts. Perhaps she could have the provinces pass some sort of legislation that would restrict the liability of doctors to cases in which there is absolute gross negligence. This is the kind of step that might seriously reduce some of the costs of the health care system. When doctors pay enormous fees for medical malpractice insurance, those fees must be passed on as one of their costs of doing business. It must obviously be passed on somewhere in their fee structure.

Third, the payment system itself under medicare tends to encourage medical practitioners to perform more services than they might otherwise perform if the medicare system were different. There is a fee for attendance at a doctor's office and that fee is minimal. However, patients seem to have the feeling that doctors are cramming in more people per hour in order to receive a reasonable hourly return. The same thing applies with respect to extra tests and procedures. Doctors tell me I can be sued if I do not take all the tests they order. There seems to be a feeling that the present payment system militates in favour of more services and therefore more fees—the more services rendered, the more fees collected and the higher the doctor's income.

A constituent suggested to me that provincial governments could reward people who did not see their doctor. At the present time, in the course of a year most of us see a doctor. If a rebate or some sort of benefit were paid for not using the system or only using it in a minimal way, the number of usages could be cut down. Perhaps there could be a tax rebate or a medical fees rebate or, in Ontario, an Ontario hospital insurance premium rebate or even a rebate to those who do not pay premiums. The Minister knows that there has been an enormous explosion in the use of the system and that that has created overcrowding in hospitals and in doctors' offices. It is part of the cost we face in making medical services more or less free.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to address the question of portability. One thing has been omitted from the Bill that I had hoped to find there, and that is, some type of clearing system organized by the federal Government for the payment of interprovincial medical charges. For instance, if I go to British Columbia and need to see a doctor or go to a hospital, there is the possibility that I might not pay or that the Ontario Government might not pay or that the Ontario Government would only pay an Ontario fee, which is not necessarily a British Columbia fee. The system should provide that a doctor in British Columbia would bill a central system and be reimbursed directly. The central system would then collect from the province. This problem was mentioned to us by doctors when we were on tour. I hope that the Minister will be able to work out a type of central clearing system for interprovincial billings for medical and hospital services with provincial Health Ministers. Doctors or hospitals who render service to a tourist should not feel that they may not be paid, and that has been the perception in the past.

On balance, we believe that this is a very good Bill and we are prepared to support it. We believe that efforts by the National Citizens' Coalition to castigate the Bill are wrong. If people read the Bill and understand it, they will appreciate that it is an attempt by the Government to come to grips with the concept of universal health care. That is not an easy concept and it will have to be worked on. Anything that is perceived as being free is abused, as we all know very well, but surely this Bill will not result in my gall-bladder being removed by a bureaucrat.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, when I first heard the Hon. Member talking about his support for universality in the Bill, I thought that after he had taken a survey of his constituents he had also taken a trip to Damascus. As I listened, however, I discovered that he stopped in Beirut and was shell-shocked.

I have a couple of questions for the Minister. His colleague, the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) has indicated that his view of medicare is that it is constitutionally a provincial responsibility and that the provinces should be able to build whatever hospitals they want wherever they want them and provide whatever services they want and that automatically the federal Government should pay 50 per cent of the cost. I should like to know whether that is the Hon. Member's view as well.

The Hon. Member commented about doctors making unnecessary tests. I should like to ask him who should decide which tests a doctor should order. Does he suggest that some citizens are entitled only to second or third class medical care? Who is going to make that decision? Will it be the doctor or some bureaucrat, as he said?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I certainly hope it is not the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) who makes the decision about who gets second-class treatment. I am sure we would all get second-class treatment according to his analysis.

The Hon. Member knows that the provinces are jurisdictionally responsible for the delivery of health care. He knows that as part of the Established Programs Financing Act, going back for many, many years, the federal Government has spent money, originally up to 50 per cent, on the cost of supporting certain services.

The Hon. Member knows that the present Bill provides for a formula for paying block funds to provinces. He knows that, in the broad sense of health care, it is not 50 per cent, but that when we impose conditions we may have to look at the extent of that funding. I suggest that the Hon. Member ought to be hearing from his own constituents. If more conditions are imposed on the Province of New Brunswick than they presently have, then New Brunswick is probably going to need more funding in order to meet those conditions.

I do not know very much about Damascus and I do not know very much about Beirut, and I certainly do not know what they have to do with medicare. Surely the Hon. Member is not suggesting that it is Liberal policy that the Liberal Government will step in and run every hospital and clinic in the country.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin by commending the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) for making the remarks he did about the inadequate, to say the least, nature of the arguments put forward recently by the National Citizens' Coalition. I think that criticism of their views by the Hon. Member will have more credibility with that group than any criticisms I might make as a New Democrat. I commend him for having set the record straight for all those who are in the habit of giving the views of the National Citizens' Coalition more credibility than I am. The Act does not do what they claim it does.

The Hon. Member mentioned the fact that extra billing has existed in Saskatchewan from the very beginning. That is true, Mr. Speaker. I would ask him to recall, however, that the provision for extra billing was worked out in the middle of one of the hottest political debates that Canada has ever seen—it happened in the middle of a strike by doctors in Saskatchewan.

The government of the day did not do it willingly or because it believed in extra billing; it is something that was worked out in the heat of the moment. It is too often used in a spurious political way to suggest that even New Democrats, or at that time the CCF, are in favour of extra billing. They are not and I should like the Hon. Member to set the record straight.

I am glad to see that the Hon. Member is consistent on other matters. He was a member of the parliamentary task force on federal-provincial fiscal arrangements which made a lot of the recommendations which appeared in the Canada Health Act. I think that is one of the reasons why he can speak so favourably about the Bill. It is one of the few instances in this place when recommendations have actually appeared in legislation.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the argument is that the Government of Saskatchewan allowed extra billing because it was in the middle of a strike and in the heat of the moment. I did not know that Members of the New Democratic Party or the CCF settled their principles that easily, gave away their principles that easily, but they certainly remained in that fashion in Saskatchewan because it made sense to them in that province, that is why. It made sense because they knew that if they did not allow some way in which those specialists with extra skills could get something more for their extra skills, they would have problems in their system. Therefore, they went for this extra billing system. I believe their system was wrong. The Ontario system makes a doctor who decides not to belong to the system opt out completely and take the total credit risk for all his patients. He does not know whether his patients will pay him or not but he cannot bill mother province, if he opts out, for any patient. He opts out for all. That makes, in my view, much more economic sense, and I was surprised that Saskatchewan did not go for that. It went for the system of just letting people charge extra on top of what is already a good fee paid to the doctor by the province.

• (1230)

Mr. Hudecki: Mr. Speaker, through you I would like to raise two issues with the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). One issue has to do with his concept of opting out. There is one province, the Province of Quebec, which will not allow a physician to opt out and collect money from the insurance plan. A non-participating physician in that province expects to receive full pay from the patient without being reimbursed in any way. Second, inasmuch as the Hon. Member is a member of the legal profession, I wonder what his thoughts are of the concept which was brought forward by one of his judicial experts. That instead of having malpractice insurance, which is a growth industry among lawyers, there would be a system of medical injury compensation in which a central board would adjudicate as to whether or not there actually was malpractice and definite damage to the individual.

Malpractice insurance, as the Hon. Member pointed out, is a very serious problem. The costs of it have been escalating dramatically. Currently, there are three risk groups: neurosurgeons, orthopaedic surgeons and obstetricians and gynaecologists, and they are now paying $2,000 a year. In the next two or three years it is expected to be as much as $5,000 a year. That matter must be considered and I would like to hear the Hon. Member's thoughts on the credibility and the suitable utilization of a system somewhat similar to a compensation board.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I do not feel competent to comment on the Quebec system. There are many other sociological differences between the Province of Quebec and the Province of Ontario, and to comment on how doctors operate in Quebec would perhaps be unfair. I might have my thoughts on it, and the Hon. Member, perhaps, has some thoughts on it as well.

With respect to medical injury compensation, I believe it is a bad move. I believe that what we ought to encourage provinces to do is to restrict the tort liability to gross negligence. I feel that when a person goes to a doctor and has an operation, if there is a mistake in that operation, well, that is the way it is. Unless one can prove the doctor is absolutely grossly negligent, there should be no liability. The same applies when you see a doctor on a consultative basis. Surely to goodness you cannot judge these things after the event. If one wants to go into a compensation scheme, one is going to find that the malpractice insurance was cheap because the news cost will involve a whole series of bureaucrats, a great big office, some type of a board system. All one has to do is to look at what it costs employers today in our Province of Ontario to pay workmens' compensation. The medical malpractice insurance is cheap compared to that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The period for questions and comments has expired. Debate.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak in this debate in, I suppose, a kind of mixed mood. For two years I was responsible as the spokesperson for the Conservative Party on the issue of health care. I travelled the country and attended committee meetings and over the two years I learned a great deal which I had not previously known about the health care system in this country. One of the first things I learned, Mr. Speaker, is that in some sense we have never had a health care system in the country. In reality, we have 12 different systems, one in each of the ten provinces, the Yukon and the Northwest Territories.

Something which bothered me about the thought pattern of the Minister, as I listened to her in the House of Commons and in committee, is what I believe to be a fairly deeply held conviction on the Minister's part that there should be a single health care system in the country. I find that bothersome, Mr.

Speaker, perhaps because of my scientific background. It seems to me that when you have a single system for something as important as health, you increase the likelihood of making major mistakes. If everyone is going to be treated in the same way, then you must pick the way to treat them. If you pick the wrong way, Mr. Speaker, the mistake can be a real beaut. When you have 12 systems, perhaps dedicated to similar principles and going at problems in slightly different ways, you have in reality an opportunity system. In an opportunity system, you can learn from each other. In that kind of diversity, Mr. Speaker, I believe that over time you will find more wisdom. You are free to use your best judgement about something. Someone else's judgement from time to time may be better than your own and you can learn from that and build a stronger system.

Today we are debating something called the Canada Health Act. I really feel that a patient out there, an ordinary Canadian, would be hard pressed to read this piece of legislation and come to the conclusion in any sensible way that it is going to do a great deal for the health of Canadians. In reality it is misnamed. It is a health financing act. It is something which could have come from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and been defended in the House from that quarter. Perhaps that is the part which makes me feel the saddest, because we are really not dealing in this Act with the health care system problems of this country. Will any patient in this country be better off the day after this Act is proclaimed? Will their treatment be any better? I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the answer is no. Does the Act guarantee better treatment for our patients in the future? Does it make a major contribution to better health care for patients in the future? I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that we would be hard pressed to find in this piece of legislation that kind of direction and change. Why is that, Mr. Speaker? Patients care about health care. It has been my experience that health care professionals care about health care. I believe that provincial politicians care about health care. Hospital boards and federal politicians care. Everyone in the system cares. They would like to work together, I believe, to produce a better system in the longer term.

We are not dealing today with comprehensive legislation which has been dedicated to the improvement of health care in Canada, and I believe the blame for that must lie with the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin). It is owing to her personal inability to work co-operatively with the players in the system. This legislation, dealing essentially with provincial jurisdiction, has not been agreed to by the provincial governments, the major players in the system. I believe this legislation was conceived, developed and brought forward to this Chamber primarily to assist the Liberal Party of Canada in gathering the votes of Canadians. That was its motivation, Mr. Speaker.

We all know that out of motivation which we might consider less than adequate we sometimes get good things. There is some good in this legislation because there has been a great deal of fear created in the minds not only of senior citizens particularly, but of low income people generally, that they were going to be denied access to the health care system because of financial charges of one kind or another. However, I believe the Minister, in part, deliberately created that fear. Now we have legislation which should reduce that fear. If we as Members of this Chamber create a problem, then we have the responsibility to take whatever action we can to reduce the problem.

Earlier this day, Mr. Speaker, we heard about increased costs of the health care system. I have just come from a weekend convention in a province where there is a great deal of concern about that and a sense of bewilderment about where those increased costs are coming from. Each of us who studies the issue can find reasons.

I can remember standing in this House in 1980 and 1981 and asking questions of Ministers along the following lines. It is pretty well a demonstrated fact that for every 1 per cent increase in unemployment you get about a 5 per cent increase in stress related diseases. That manifests itself in the form of wife battering, alcoholism, heart attacks and so on. Through this Government's policies we have increased unemployment by over 4 per cent. It therefore follows that through those same economic policies we have increased stress related diseases by 20 per cent. In our health care system those diseases are expensive. That, I believe, is where a large part of the increases in health care costs in this country are coming from. They come directly out of the Minister of Finance's portfolio in the federal Government.

We should not be surprised at the increase in stress-related diseases, Mr. Speaker; it was predictable. I stood in this Chamber and predicted it on more than one occasion. I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the former Minister of Labour, now Minister of the Environment (Mr. Caccia), the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts), in one form or another, what they were going to do about the increased costs. The most common answer was that the prediction would not come true. There was no relationship between increased unemployment and increased incidence of stress-related diseases. It is 1984, Mr. Speaker, and it is now demonstrable that in fact these increases have been occurring. There is increased utilization of the health care system, which correlates well with the increased unemployment and increased economic hardship.

If the federal Government, and in particular the Minister of National Health and Welfare, want to take credit for doing something about the health care of Canadians, I do not think it will wash. We had the predictions going back to 1980, and we now have the record to look at. There has been no increased federal commitment to paying the bill for those increased health care costs. The federal Government, through its economic policies, has increased those costs but not its contribution. That leaves the Government in the best possible political position, because it does not have to take the political heat in meeting the increased need for services. It will push it off on the provinces.

The provinces have the responsibility to deliver the service and they have been scrambling the best they know how to handle those increased costs. Then the federal Government comes along and says that they have been doing it wrong. It does not tell them how to do it, it does not provide useful and positive suggestions for the future. It just tells them they have been doing it wrong. This issue, perhaps more than any other in the four years of this Parliament, should bring maximum concern to federal voters.

Any time you deal with health care, you deal with issues of life and death. Education and health care are two very large service delivery areas which the Canadian Constitution puts in the hands of the provinces. Unemployment increases the incidence of stress-related diseases and therefore increases costs in the health care system. But it also increases pressure on the educational system. Unemployed people choose to spend their time, if they can afford it, going to school instead of sitting around looking at the television set. Given that, the provinces have to face increased demand on the two largest budgetary items because of federal Government policies.

In that climate and over that period of time, what has the federal Government's response to those increased responsibilities and demands been? Cut back the funding! Make the formulas less generous. Make the transfer payments less adequate.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, in the closing stages of our debate on Bill C-3, it is time to put on record some information which may be useful to the new Members of Parliament who will be coming to the Chamber after the next election.

• (1250)

Mr. Fisher: Liberals all.

Mr. Hawkes: Liberals all, says a backbencher on the other side. Hopefully, if it is Liberals, Mr. Speaker, it will be a different bunch with minds of their own, a willingness to learn about the issues and an ability to hold the Cabinet accountable. That would be a major change.

I would like to put on the record some of the things we must be concerned about in the future when we get a Cabinet which cares about something more than politics, which really cares about the health care of Canadians. Let us remember the concern with charges. Canadians are concerned that money may stand between them and their access to this system. That is what extra billing and user fees are about. A great many doctors tell us that the system is underfunded. That is variable from place to place, but there is evidence that there are not enough hospital beds. There are parts of the country where there are not enough well trained professional people. There are problems of underfunding. The nurses tell us there are some problems with the models we use and that we might be more effective and more efficient if we changed some of the models. Let us not forget that piece of advice and many others.

The provinces tell us we are going to go bankrupt unless we find better ways of controlling the costs. They may not be totally accurate, but there is a concern there to which politicians of the future should pay attention and about which they could learn more. There is a common sense concern of patients as well as of medical professionals. They tell us that one of the reasons the system is having increased financial difficulty relates to administration. In so many fields of endeavour in Canada we put bigger and bigger proportions of expenditures into administration. Health care and education are two major examples. A smaller proportion of the dollars go into direct service and a larger portion goes into administration. Let us look at some of those issues.

If we really care about the issue of accessibility, let us tackle the problem of geography in this country. The quality of health care in a major Canadian city is of a different order than it is in some of our far-flung geographic regions. The quality of medical care which my children and family have enjoyed is a great deal different from the quality of health care on most Indian reservations even today. We have differences in accessibility which relate to geography, Mr. Speaker.

We have differences in accessibility which relate to consumer knowledge of how and when to purchase and when to go to a hospital. We can do a great deal more to educate our population in basic understanding of their own health so they know when and how best to access the health care system. We have a basic accessibility problem every time someone has to go on a waiting list. The more serious the concern and the longer the waiting list, the bigger the problem. That is a priority problem if we really care about accessibility.

I know my time is running out and the last problem I would like to speak about is the issue I raised a week ago, that is, the issue of the availability of well trained, committed professional people. We do not have as many as we need in 1984 in some places but, by and large, we have them. I suggest to the House that we had better be careful with the legislation we pass because we may not have them tomorrow. So long as we as a society tell our best, our brightest and our most educated that we value their choosing a profession in the health care field, we will continue to have them. If, in a legislative sense, we tell them that we do not value that choice, then the best, the brightest and the most committed will make another choice. That is the long-term danger in the inability of this Chamber and this Cabinet member to work with the provinces and with the profession to produce the kind of system we all need, want and should have.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, after having listened to the last three Tory speakers, I am not sure whether or not they support this Bill. I would like to put a very direct question to the Hon. Member who just finished speaking. Does he know what the Bill does? Does he know what the intent of the Bill is? Does his Party support this Bill or does it not? If it supports it, why is it delaying its passage?

Mr. Blenkarn: What do you mean by delaying the passage? What a turkey.

Mr. Epp: Oh, come on.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure I can remember all three of the questions. Let me begin with the last one. I do not think we are delaying the passage of the Bill. In the four years I have been in this Chamber this is the third or fourth day that we have discussed health care in this country. I think that speaks volumes about the Liberal Party's concern about health care in this country. They control the public agenda. I hope we go to a fifth day because I think it is an important issue.

The Hon. Member started by asking me if I knew what this Bill does. Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is a Member in this Chamber who knows what this Bill does. I do not know if there is a Canadian alive who knows what this Bill does. We have made the decision to support this Bill, imperfect as it may be. We will support it because we think it may do more good than harm. I suggest to the Hon. Member that if he has confidence that in the long term it will do more good than harm, then he has overstepped reality and gone into some kind of Alice in Wonderland wishful thinking. We hope it will do more good than harm. We believe it will probably do more good than harm. We will be standing up and supporting it. However, Mr. Speaker, we wish it dealt with the health care problems of Canadians.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I would like to give a word of advice to the Government. It would be well advised to muzzle the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) who coming in is very late in the game and making submissions in this debate which are completely unwarranted.

I would like to ask a question of the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes). He pointed out the health consequences of unemployment. I assume that is the reason his Party chose to support the amendment to the preamble moved by the NDP which calls for recognition of the social, environmental and occupational causes of disease. It seems to me that there is something curious or ironic in the Member's argument. The position of his Party is traditionally that economic activity ought to be unfettered and that what it causes is simply there and must be dealt with separately. Our position has been that economic activity must always be made accountable for the social, environmental and occupational dimensions of whatever that activity may be. In the interests of intellectual consistency I ask him to consider whether the argument he has just made is an argument against the kind of marketplace economics which his Party so frequently advocates.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Hon. Member for Calgary West has 30 seconds in which to answer.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, in both of our lifetimes we have never seen a free market. We have a market continually fettered by government. That is our basic quarrel with much of what has been going wrong in the country. We believe that the social costs, including unemployment and stress-related diseases, have been caused by politicians who reach for too much control. It is the move of the Liberal Party in the direction of the New Democratic Party philosophy that has caused most of the social consequences in this country. That is the tragedy, Mr. Speaker.

CITIZENSHIP

POSSIBLE CONSEQUENCES OF WAR CRIMES PUBLICITY CAMPAIGN

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, once again, and for reasons best known to the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Kaplan), it is considered timely to launch a public campaign designed to draw attention to the fact that Canada may be harboring a number of Nazi war criminals and their collaborators.

Our legal statutes are not designed to deal with such crimes, particularly if they were committed in other countries, and, according to the Minister, no foreign country can be persuaded to request extradition in connection with a number of cases presently under investigation.

The Minister announced that deportation is being considered, a process which would have to be preceded by stripping the accused of their Canadian citizenship. This implies that we have two types of citizenship in this country, one that is inherited by birth, and another less valuable class which is obtained by choice.

As always, such public campaigns cast dark shadows of doubt and suspicion on the entire ethnic community in whose country of origin war crimes were committed. No one should ever permit memories of these hideous acts to be erased, but at the same time we cannot permit ourselves to be reminded of these events by acts of revenge directed against entire ethnic communities, many more members of which were victims of these crimes than were perpetrators.

I call on the Solicitor General of Canada and the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) to examine the role that Canada can play in dispensing justice with regard to these crimes, but I also call on them to dispense only such justice which is in our tradition. This would require that police inquiries be discreet, and that any persons against whom allegations are made be considered innocent until proven guilty in a court of law.

HOUSING

NON PROFIT HOUSING ALLOCATIONS IN ONTARIO

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this Liberal Government has demonstrated its strong commitment to meeting the needs of low and moderate income households through its funding of municipal and non profit housing programs. Unfortunately the Ontario Progressive Conservative Government does not share this commitment to assisting needy Canadians.

This year, with no warning, Ontario's Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing slashed the number of new non profit housing allocations from 250 in 1983 to 25 in 1984. This occurs at a time when the Ottawa Non-Profit Housing Corporation has a waiting list of 1,600 households requiring suitable and affordable housing.

The refusal of the Ontario Government to consult with the CMHC or municipalities over allocation of social housing units has played havoc with municipal budgets and has adversely affected the planning and staffing of Ottawa's Non-Profit Housing Corporation.

In light of this irresponsible use of federal housing assistance, I join with Mayor Dewar of Ottawa and the Association of Municipalities of Ontario in calling for increased municipal consultation and control over the distribution of federal social housing units.

The municipalities of Ontario are better served by a Government committed to housing the low and moderate income earners not served by the private market in Ottawa. The present federal Government will maintain its commitment to providing affordable, suitable housing to these groups. To this end, I believe we should revert to a system whereby each municipal non profit housing corporation deals directly with the CMHC and a responsible and responsive federal Government.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

CALL FOR ELIMINATION OF LOCKAGE FEES

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, in April of 1959 the St. Lawrence Seaway opened with considerable fanfare and much expectation. Its opening marked the realization of a 400 year old dream. Over the years the canals were dug and the locks were built, overcoming the natural obstacles to navigation. Construction was spurred on by the desire to make this waterway the most economical route to move goods to and from the very heart of the North American continent.

The area affected by the St. Lawrence Seaway is larger than all of free Europe, and contains nearly one-third of the combined population of Canada and the United States. It is a tremendous market and a dream worthy of our earlier generation. Now, 25 years later, that foresight and spirit of enterprise are lacking.

In the earlier years traffic growth on the Seaway exceeded predictions. Seaway tolls kept increasing, and to force carriers to build larger ships, lockage fees were imposed.

In 1982 traffic declined to its lowest level since 1974. Twenty per cent of the cargo carriers did not even leave port in 1983. Traffic forecasts for this anniversary year are even less encouraging.

The economical advantage of this great waterway has slipped away. The key to long term improvement in the Seaway will be the elimination of the lockage fees and a substantial reduction in the tolls that are charged. Only then will we be able to look forward to a happy fiftieth anniversary.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

PROPOSED RETAIL BUSINESS PROJECT

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, the Canada Post Corporation's current plan to act as middleman in the retail trade is, to me, perhaps the most vicious attack ever made in this country against free enterprise. The Canada Post Corporation will never be able to realize its high-sounding objectives which include making the Corporation a profitable concern. Has a business ever been able to make its main line of business viable by depending on sidelines? Take Hydro-Quebec, for instance. If it were not able to make a profit on its main line of business, which is to sell electric power, could it keep its business viable by selling french fries on the street, Mr. Speaker?

I am just trying to say that the Canada Post Corporation will never succeed in making a profit by trying to set up sidelines and especially ones that are going to help destroy small businesses and small businessmen. Mr. Speaker, I hope this plan will be roundly criticized in the House, because most Members on this side of the House are opposed to this brilliant plan by the Canada Post Corporation.

I hope that on this side of the House and across Canada, in Chambers of Commerce, for instance, people will denounce this plan.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REMOVAL OF ENTERPRISES FROM ONE PROVINCE TO ANOTHER

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, Menasco Canada Limited deserves to be ostracized if it opens a new factory in Oakville after laying off 365 workers at its Ville Saint-Laurent plant last October. The employees of this multinational branch worked under a collective agreement from May 1979 to February 1982. When negotiations to renew their contract failed, employees signed a service contract with the CSN in order to receive technical assistance. Despite the presence of a mediator, negotiations could not continue because management went back on several points that had already been conceded. On July 11, 1982, Menasco locked out 365 workers, while admitting that there was no dispute with the union. Management then decided to move outside the province to show its opposition to the new provincial anti-scab law. Menasco is showing contempt for the interests of its employees, many of whom have between thirty and forty years of seniority, and it is doing so while taking advantage of interprovincial rivalry.

There is no financial incentive for transferring the activities of this factory to Ontario. Menasco is simply blackmailing both workers and governments. Once again, a multinational branch is showing its complete lack of interest in problems that affect the lives of its workers—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired.

EDUCATION

ONTARIO PROPOSAL TO ALTER UNIVERSITY CURRICULA

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the role of the university in society has always been to provide the milieu and the environment for learning, exploring, and creating. Another function is to provide the manpower to meet the spiritual and material demands of an ever-changing and complex world. Modern universities must also adapt to accommodate an increasing enrolment and adjust their curricula to the needs of the time in order to provide a balanced educational experience.

Currently the Province of Ontario is contemplating, through a commission set up by the province's Minister of Education, to exercise greater control over its universities, to reform them administratively, and to alter the format of a wide based general education.

I am very concerned that the Government of Ontario might be tempted to push most students, through alterations in university curricula, into specialized careers at the expense of a more generalized type of education. We do need specialists, there is no doubt about that, but we also need generalists with a broad based education, who can amalgamate the basic knowledge of many specialties.

Our society will be relying more and more on generalists with a background in critical thought to act as co-ordinators and leaders in our society. The Government of Ontario must recognize this, and not sacrifice the quality of the humanities and social science courses in our universities.

NATIONAL SOVEREIGNTY

RECOGNITION OF MARITIME BOUNDARIES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, today's appearance by the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) before the panel of judges of the International Court of Justice in The Hague, where he will present Canada's case in the Gulf of Maine boundary dispute with the United States, focuses our attention on the dismal record of the Liberal Government in achieving internationally recognized and secure maritime boundaries for Canada. The Government has not only failed to establish agreed upon boundaries between Canada and the U.S.A. in the Gulf of Maine, but has also failed to resolve the Juan de Fuca Strait, Dixon Entrance, and Beaufort Sea disputes between the two countries.

Failure is not confined to negotiations with the U.S.A., but also is apparent in our relationships with Denmark over the Lincoln Sea, and with France over the St. Pierre-Miquelon area. Inconsistency of stance is apparent. For instance, the Government argues in favour of an equidistant line in the Gulf of Maine, but rejects it in the Beaufort Sea.

The effort to date has not been good enough. We must resolve these disputes so that Canada's borders will no longer be open to question, and fishermen and offshore resource developers can be sure of their rights and obligations.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CENTRAL AMERICA—VISIT BY SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, today the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) is beginning a trip to Central America. I wish him well. At the same time there is a possibility of military operations sponsored by the United States consisting of maybe 35,000 men. When the Secretary of State goes to that particular area I would like him to be conscious of the historical, cultural, economic and religious realities. They are very different from those we know in Canada. I would like him to remember that each country is unique and has a personality of its own. Also, I would like him to know that the situation in each country is different.

I believe Canada can have a great deal of good influence in that part of the world. This was what the subcommittee studying the question of Latin America brought forward, that Canada can be a good neighbour, and that just and peaceful solutions to the problems of that area will be worked out so that there will be self-determination, not intervention in the lives of those countries.

I hope the Secretary of State for External Affairs will denounce in clear terms that there can be no military solution. While he is there I hope he will see not only political people but church people at all levels of life, and refugees, and that he will talk to non-governmental groups. I wish him well. His is a difficult mission. As the first Canadian Secretary of State for External Affairs to visit that part of the world, I wish him all success. May each step on the way be marked by clear and concrete initiatives in support of justice, development, and peace.

THE LATE LUIGI BARZINI

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say something about Luigi Barzini who died over the weekend in Rome at the age of 75. Mr. Barzini was in many ways a modern renaissance figure. He was an author, journalist, and a playwright. He was an urbane, witty, intellectual member of the Italian Parliament. His books include the world-famous The Italians, a controversial portrait of his fellow countrymen; Nuova York; Evasione in Mongolia; Americans are Alone in the World; The Europeans, a 1983 study of the nations making up the Common Market; The Communists Have Not Won; and Moscow, Moscow. In my view Mr. Barzini was a major world figure whose passing diminishes us all.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

EMPLOYMENT PREDICTIONS MADE BY MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I am sure he realizes that the unemployment rate today is 11.3 per cent and that 1,476,000 Canadians are unemployed, compared with when he came to office four years ago when there were 967,000 unemployed, or an unemployment rate of 7.5 per cent. We are 509,000 worse off today. The Budget predicts that we will have an unemployment rate of 10.9 per cent for this year, 10.1 per cent for next year, and so on.

In view of these facts, can the Minister of Justice be believed when he says that there will be full employment in Canada in five years or less if he is elected Liberal Leader and Prime Minister? Can that be believed? Has the Minister of Justice outlined to the Prime Minister his new policies and approaches which would bring about full employment? If he has done that, why has the Government not followed those approaches and policies? Why is the Prime Minister so stupid when the Minister of Justice is so bright? Should the Prime Minister not change the Minister of Justice to the portfolio of finance if he has the answer to these employment problems? What is holding up his promotion?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it would seem to me that the stupidity is in the question of the Hon. Member. He has heard repeatedly the facts stated by the Minister of Finance, that we have been creating jobs in Canada at a rate in excess of all our competitors, particularly the United States. That record is there to be examined. I notice that the Hon. Member always goes on to other questions when the Minister of Finance makes these points. The Hon. Member from St. John's should use what little intelligence he has left to look at those figures and see if there is something wrong with them. If, in fact, we are creating jobs at a faster rate, then he should see that the policies advocated by the Minister of Finance are not in conflict with what apparently the Minister of Justice is proposing. He will want to continue the good record of the Trudeau years and create ever-increasing jobs.

Mr. Crosbie: The Prime Minister has not answered the question. He has a brilliant Minister of Justice who can bring about full employment, but he refuses to use him. It does not take much intelligence to use a genius if you have one in Cabinet.

UNEMPLOYMENT FORECASTS—MINISTER'S ALLEGED STATEMENT

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Minister of Justice has said that he does not accept the Government's forecasts of 10 per cent unemployment for years to come. He does not accept them. He thinks they are incorrect. He thinks they are stupid, or he does not accept them, in any event. How can the Minister of Justice continue to stay in the Prime Minister's Government when he does not accept the forecasts of the Department of Finance? Is the Prime Minister going to accept him when he does not accept the Prime Minister, his Minister of Finance, and his forecasts? How long can this kind of chaos continue in the Government of the country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should not show such emotion about forecasts. We know that the ones he made when he was Minister of Finance were considerably off base. Our Minister of Finance has said repeatedly that forecasts are only that, forecasts, and they have to be readjusted from time to time. The Minister of Finance, the Hon. Member for Outremont, has not pretended that his forecasts are infallible. On the contrary, I have heard him repeatedly in the House tell that Member over there with his obtuse mind that forecasts are not infallible. But his mind is so obtuse that he tried to put two Ministers in contradiction when there is no contradiction.

Mr. Crosbie: The lame duck Prime Minister cannot even quack any longer.

• (1420)

1980 ELECTION STATEMENT

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I have a final supplementary question. The Minister of Justice said: "Everyone who wants to work should be able to find a job." That is what he said on Saturday. The Prime Minister said on January 12, 1980, when he was seeking election: "We endorse the right of every Canadian to have a job." There are 1,476,000 Canadians who know how the Prime Minister meets his promises. They are without jobs. Does the Prime Minister think that his Minister of Justice is doing exactly as he did, promising anything to get elected to a certain position? Is that what he is doing, or is the Minister of Justice going to be required to tell the Prime Minister how to meet the promise he made four years ago, completely ignored, and has not carried out yet? Which is he going to do, if either, or are they both doing exactly the same thing, fooling the electorate, showing their contempt for the 1.5 million Canadians who are unemployed? Which is it going to be?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure if the indignation of the Hon. Member is not a little bit synthetic, as is his whole person. I did not read the speech, but apparently we have a Minister who is promising to create jobs. This creates indignation in the heart and mind of the Hon. Member opposite. I have repeatedly heard him criticize the Minister of Finance. I have heard him weep crocodile tears about the unemployed. I have not heard one single constructive suggestion from that Member. All he does is stand on his feet and wax indignant about what other people say and do, and does not do a darn thing about it himself.

NATIONAL REVENUE

STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO MEMBER FOR KITCHENER

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. In The Globe and Mail of Saturday last the Hon. Member for Kitchener is quoted as making certain serious charges concerning the reputation and character of Mr. Bruce MacDonald. He said that Mr. MacDonald abused his power by circumventing the Cabinet and ministerial control. He went on further to charge that the abuse occurred as a result of making major policy decisions without consulting the Minister of National Revenue and the Cabinet. Is the thrust of what the Hon. Member for Kitchener said correct? If it is, why has he been put into the Privy Council Office? If it is not, will he repudiate the Member for Kitchener?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to dissociate myself from these comments altogether, and I would like to point out to the Hon. Member, as the Right Hon. Prime Minister said last week, that Mr. MacDonald was a very sound and very efficient man who has shown a great deal of competence in directing a very difficult Department.

[English]

QUOTA SYSTEM STATEMENT

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for his answer. There was a further allegation made by the Hon. Member for Kitchener in the same interview in which he said:

> Mr. Bussières was not aware of quotas being used. The Government was not aware. Then, after all the facts were provided and Mr. Bussières ordered a halt to the use of the quota system, the Department apparently carried on and just decided to "call it something else." This was disregard for a Cabinet order.

Is that also incorrect? Was the statement made by the Member for Kitchener incorrect?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I suggest the Hon. Member read the many answers I have given to these questions, and he will be able to judge for himself.

INCOME TAX ACT

TREATMENT OF CORPORATIONS—USE OF DEFERRED TAXES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Like most Canadians he is probably sitting up, night after night, filling out his tax return. He is probably asking the same question—what are Canadians getting for their tax money?

The Prime Minister will know that billions of dollars of taxpayers' money each year is given to corporations in the hope that that will create jobs. However, our figures indicate clearly that in spite of the billions of dollars in tax concessions, and billions of dollars in additional tax deferrals, the corporate sector is not producing jobs any longer. By and large, that is being done by small business in the private sector, as well as public sector job creation. Will the Prime Minister explain how he knows that the billions of dollars being spent on concessions to the corporations are being well spent and are resulting in job creation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is a judgment that is made from year to year when the Minister of Finance examines the tax base and the use to which it is put. I recall that the Minister of Finance of this Government in the fall of 1981 had proposed a lot of reforms that would close loopholes and ensure that higher, or fairer, taxes were paid by those at the upper end of the income bracket. Unfortunately, we did not have the support of the NDP. They are, as usual, always against the Government, even when it is proposing progressive legislation.

INCREASE IN PERSONAL TAXES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary to the Prime Minister reflects on those Budgets that were introduced which resulted in increased taxes to the average Canadian taxpayer. At a time when our recovery is very much in need of more consumer spending in order to enable corporations to make the necessary investments in new plant and equipment, would the Prime Minister explain how increasing taxes to the average Canadian family by a range of $200-$300 this year, as a result of the Budgets he referred to, will assist in the recovery?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member heard the budget speech and the debate around it. We know that the NDP would not accept that we attach a certain importance to the size of the deficit, but when the Minister of Finance introduced his Budget last year he said that we would tend, over a period of years, to bring the deficit down incrementally. That is the decision that was taken in last year's Budget, and it is being carried out now.

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER JOBS FOR STUDENTS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister, having three sons, will be well aware that in the next few weeks hundreds of thousands of young Canadians will be coming out of secondary schools, colleges, technical schools, universities and trade schools, seeking summer employment. The corporate sector, by and large, has told us that there will be very little summer hiring this year. The federal Government's programs for job creation will provide jobs for 2 per cent or 3 per cent of those young people seeking employment to enable them to continue with their studies.

Does the Prime Minister not consider this to be a most serious issue facing Canadians, especially young Canadians today, and would he do as he did with his peace initiative, for which we are very appreciative, and provide that same kind of initiative to finding ways and means of providing for Canada's young people?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that was done when the figure of over $1 billion was allocated to create jobs and employment and retraining for young people. In addition, when we established the Minister of State for Youth, the Budget allocated another $150 million in order to place increased emphasis on the need to create jobs in the youth area.

PENITENTIARIES

ARCHAMBAULT RIOT—REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. Since the release of the Amnesty International Report on Archambault, a dark cloud of suspicion hangs over Canada's international reputation as a protector of basic human rights. The Minister's response to two questions ever since this occurred has been what can only be described as a cover-up. In view of the fact that his correctional investigator has still not reported with respect to his in-house investigation, are we to assume that the Solicitor General simply wants to put this matter out of sight and out of mind, hoping that the whole question will go away, or, after giving the matter serious consideration, will he agree to the proposition of having a full and public judicial inquiry to determine exactly what transpired at Archambault, in the interest of penal institutions in this country?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will recall that the Amnesty International Report called for a full, impartial, independent inquiry. The office of the correctional investigator appears to fulfil the requirement of Amnesty International's conditions. That officer is now engaged in a full, independent, and impartial inquiry. If I were to take the suggestions of the Hon. Member, or some of the other suggestions I have been reading, and put pressure on the correctional investigator to produce his report when I want it, or when the Hon. Member wants it, we might have had it a very long time ago. However, he is working at his own pace. He is working without pressure from me as to time, content, or direction of his report. I would urge the Hon. Member, and all Hon. Members interested in this very important question, to let this independent servant of the inmates do his job at his own pace.

• (1430)

ALLEGATIONS OF INHUMANE TREATMENT

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General has already drawn the conclusion that there was nothing wrong with what happened after the Archambault riot. He has made that conclusion and stated it on the floor of the House of Commons. He justifies it by saying that since charges of torture did not arise until months after the riot, it is indicative that such charges were fabrications.

How does the Solicitor General account for the items in the Amnesty International Report which pointed out that in a press conference on August 5, 1982, four lawyers were in contact with prisoners who brought forward allegations of serious and inhumane treatment? In fact, how does the Minister justify the situation when Professor Lebel has indicated that there were allegations of torture taking place within the institution? How can the Minister draw the conclusion that nothing is wrong? Will he now change his mind and hold that public inquiry so that the people of Canada can make the right decision?

[Translation]

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am very much aware of the contents of the testimony given by the inmates' lawyers a few weeks ago, after the riot and murders at Archambault. I am aware of those allegations, and they were accepted by Correctional Service Canada. The allegations I referred to as being hard to believe were those that were made since then and which have become increasingly serious as a start was made with visits to the prison and establishing commissions of inquiry. Those are the allegations I referred to as being very improbable.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REPORTED ACCEPTANCE OF DIRECTORSHIP BY FORMER PRIVY COUNCIL OFFICIAL

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, I have a serious matter which I would like to raise with the Prime Minister, who is returning to his seat. A report published in the Halifax Mail-Star indicates that Michael Kirby, the former clerk of the Privy Council, has accepted a nomination to the Board of Directors of National Sea Products Limited, a company that has obtained and will receive millions of dollars in public funds under a contract with the Government of Canada. Whatever laws this may contravene, there appears to be a clear violation of the Prime Minister's own rules prohibiting former office holders from acting for commercial corporations in relation to matters with which they were involved which, in the case of Mr. Kirby was the restructuring of the Atlantic fishery.

Is the Prime Minister aware of the activity of Mr. Kirby, who is now a member of the other place? Will the Prime Minister see that the rules respecting conflicts of interest that apply to former office holders are enforced? Surely we do not want to see another act of moral bankruptcy committed by a former officer of the Crown.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is no, I was not aware of that. I will look into the facts. I would imagine that the facts have been slightly and no doubt unintentionally distorted by the Hon. Member. I understood him to say that Mr. Kirby had been Secretary to the Privy Council. That is not the case, Mr. Speaker. He was for a time involved in federal-provincial relations and, I believe, in the Prime Minister's Office, but I will inquire about the facts.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of record that on April 28, 1982, in response to a question put by me in the House, it was reported that Mr. Kirby was Secretary to the Cabinet for federal-provincial relations at that time. That was less than two years ago. The guidelines to which I refer clearly apply to office holders who have been out of office for less than two years.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister to give serious consideration to the guidelines to which I have referred. I would like him to give serious consideration to the fact that former office holders must avoid any indication that they are giving access to privileged government material arising from their past employment. I would ask the Prime Minister to undertake to enter into an immediate investigation now. If the guidelines are being violated, or if any of the provisions of the Senate and House of Commons Act or other statutes are being violated, will he take immediate action to stop this nefarious activity?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is prejudging the answer when he describes the activity as being nefarious. I think I am a little more objective than the Hon. Member. I will take notice of the question and seek the answer.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DENIAL OF ENTRY VISA TO GREEK CATHOLIC ARCHBISHOP OF JERUSALEM

Mr. Ian Watson (Châteauguay): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is my understanding that the Greek Catholic Archbishop of Jerusalem, Monsignor Cappucci, was scheduled to begin a speaking tour in Canada this week but has been denied an entry visa to Canada on the grounds that his questionable Israeli conviction for arms smuggling categorizes him as a terrorist.

The Government should be aware that the Archbishop's outspoken criticism of Israeli harassment of both the Christian and Muslim populations of Jerusalem, harassment which has seen the Christian population of Jerusalem diminish from 45,000 to 8,000, made him a prime target for a possible frameup by the Mossad, the Israeli intelligence organization.

I would ask the Minister to determine how the Department of External Affairs can justify this visa refusal when it interferes with the rights of Canadians to the free flow of information, and when, last year, the Government allowed into Canada General Sharon, the architect of a grotesque act of international terrorism, the invasion of Lebanon, and the man who was personally responsible for several flagrant and well documented breaches of the Geneva Convention?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member's question, I would like to say that the refusal of the visa for the Archbishop is consistent with the longstanding policy of refusing to admit to Canada those who have been associated with acts which are directly related to the perpetuation of violence, regardless of their political views.

With reference to other people, I would like to make it quite clear, and the Hon. Member may be aware of the fact, that the PLO representative at the United Nations has been admitted to Canada on four occasions that I know of, but, on the other hand, we have consistently refused to admit to Canada members of the Jewish Defence League who have been associated with acts of violence from the point of view of the other side. I think I would have to say that the court conviction on a matter relating to an act of violence is the key factor in the refusal of the visa.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

TREATMENT OF JAPANESE CANADIANS DURING SECOND WORLD WAR

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister who will, no doubt, be aware that the Canadian public and the media are becoming increasingly favourable to an acknowledgment on the part of Parliament of the wrongdoings inflicted on Japanese Canadians in the course of the last War and after the War, notably expropriation and forced relocation. The Prime Minister will no doubt also be aware that the Special Committee on Visible Minorities just last week made unanimous recommendations with regard to an acknowledgment of the wrongdoings, a look at the War Measures Act, which was the Act that allowed those wrongdoings to occur, and the beginning of negotiations for compensation.

Will the Prime Minister undertake to introduce a resolution with regard to the acknowledgment of the wrongdoings, the re-examination of the War Measures Act, and the beginning of negotiations with representatives of the Japanese-Canadian community?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot make that undertaking because I have not yet read the report of the committee which was tabled just last week. Knowing the people who worked on it, I know it is a serious report and I would certainly want to read it before making any decision. It would be a decision of Cabinet, and the matter has not been raised there.

If the Hon. Member is interested in my personal opinion, which is open to the possibility of change after reading the report and hearing the arguments, I am not inclined to envisage questions of compensation for acts which have perhaps discoloured our history in the past, if other means of redress are possible. I am not quite sure where we could stop the compensating. I know that we would have to go back a great length of time in history and look at all of the injustices which have occurred, perhaps beginning with the deportation of the Acadians and going on to the treatment of the Chinese Canadians in the late 19th century. I do not believe in attempting to rewrite history in this way.

On other occasions I have personally expressed to Japanese Canadians the regret that I feel about the terrible acts which happened to them. There is no justification for them after the fact.

• (1440)

To me this is in the category of those who want to rehabilitate Riel. Riel stands as he stands. I do not see that there is much to gain by trying to apologize for acts of our great-grandfathers and their great-grandfathers.

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF RESOLUTION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I wonder if we could at least have a commitment to an early date to get a resolution, if Cabinet does agree to it. We are concerned when we hear that there cannot be any discussion of a particular injustice until all injustices are dealt with. This certainly would take time that we would not want to contemplate. People are concerned that this not go on and on. If the Prime Minister has not discussed it in Cabinet, certainly the recommendation has been made over the years. My Party has raised this issue.

I wonder if we could at least have a commitment that we will get a resolution on the matters with which we can proceed. It is true that compensation is a matter that would have to be discussed, as to amount and kind, collective or individual. The community itself is not agreed on that. We could go ahead, however, with an acknowledgment on the part of Parliament, which we have not yet had, and we could go ahead on an agreement to re-examine the War Measures Act—that is within our power—to see that the Act is within the spirit of the Charter of Rights.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, insofar as the War Measures Act is concerned, the Charter of Rights does supersede it in its own language. I am certain that the kind of actions that we regret would not be justified or condoned by the courts in the future. Therefore, we have brought in redress, for our time and for the future, to the most unacceptable type of acts which have happened in the past.

Returning to the question of compensation, as the Hon. Member knows, we are going back to the earliest part of our historic times in Canada and we are beginning to look at the question of treaties with the aboriginal peoples. We are negotiating settlement of those treaties. I do not know if the next step will be to jump over a few centuries to the Japanese Canadians, or if we should not stop at the deportation of the Acadians on the way, and realize that there is not too much to gain in Canada by trying once again to correct the economic consequences of unjust acts committed in the past to whole groups, rather than trying to be just in our time. I find it more important to be just in our time, for instance, by giving jobs with the money to the people who are unemployed now, rather than trying to use that money to compensate people whose ancestors in some way have been deprived.

NATIONAL REVENUE

DEPARTMENT'S ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue. The Department of National Revenue has started an advertising campaign which is costing the taxpayers $300,000. It is called "Tax Tips". He admitted last week that over half the returns are already in. Does he think that it is a wise expenditure of taxpayers' money to have 10 separate ads in one day in a 14-page newspaper like the Brampton The Daily Times?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Yes, Mr. Speaker, it is worthwhile, even if, as the Hon. Member pointed out, many taxpayers have already filed their returns. It is worth it because we want to ensure that taxpayers have as much information as possible, information that it easy to understand and that is relevant to cases they may encounter. All this is to help them complete their tax returns satisfactorily and obtain the maximum refunds to which they may be entitled.

[English]

GUIDES TO INCOME TAX FORMS

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister admit that this is the first time in six years that the Department has advertised. Will he also admit that if simple explanations were put on the tax forms sent out to every taxpayer who pays taxes, this kind of waste of the taxpayers' money—10 advertisements in a 14-page newspaper for Revenue Canada twice this week—would be unnecessary?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I disagree with the Hon. Member when he says it is a waste of money. I am sure that to the Progressive Conservatives, especially considering the comments we have heard in recent months, helping the Canadian taxpayer is certainly a waste of time.

That is not the policy of this Government, however. On the contrary, we are of the opinion that helping taxpayers file their returns correctly and obtain as much money as they are entitled to receive under the Income Tax Act is something that is worthwhile and that should be done.

Now the Hon. Member has suggested we could have another form for taxpayers whose financial situation is not as complex as that of other groups. It is an interesting suggestion that deserves further consideration.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE—THEATRE OF WAR ELIGIBILITY CRITERION

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. He knows that one of the prerequisites for the War Veterans Allowance is to have served in a theatre of actual war. For many years Newfoundland has been accepted as a theatre of war for the purposes of the Act. I understand that the Minister has now added Prince Edward Island to this select list. I wonder in what way he feels that Prince Edward Island is a theatre of war, and if he intends to extend that classification to other islands.

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, may I correct the Hon. Member's assumption. The Minister did not extend it to Prince Edward Island. There was an appeal under the War Veterans Allowance Act and the War Veterans Allowance Board found in favour of veterans who enlisted in Prince Edward Island, served in Prince Edward Island, and who had to travel over dangerous waters.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, my reading of the Act is that when changes are made to such things as entitlement, they have to be approved by Cabinet.

REQUEST FOR INCLUSION OF VANCOUVER ISLAND

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I should like to quote from a letter that the Minister sent out recently, in which he made the following statement:

> —service during World War II in areas beyond the territorial limits of North America is considered to be service in a theatre of war. The distance between Prince Edward Island and mainland Canada at its narrowest point is over six miles. During World War II, a person who in the line of duty following enlistment proceeded beyond the three-mile limit, would have for a portion of his journey been in an area that is considered to be a theatre of war.

Why is Vancouver Island not included as a theatre of war? It is an island that was actually shelled during World War II, and it has been in a war.

Would the Minister promise to get in touch with all veterans' organizations and advise them of this change so that they will know that the regulations are not going to be as strictly enforced as they have been in the past? Will he review the applications onthis matter that have been turned down?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: And remember Yorath Island near Saskatoon.

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, certainly a veteran who served on Vancouver Island is entitled to make application under the War Veterans Allowance Act on an appeal if the case has been turned down. To date the findings of the War Veterans Allowance Board on those types of cases have already been conveyed to the district offices all across the country.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

PROPOSED RETAIL BUSINESS PROJECT

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Canada

Post Corporation. Can the Minister inform the House whether he has had any explanations from the Corporation regarding its plan to act as middleman for a private business in the retail trade?

Since elected representatives are often blamed for crimes they did not commit, would the Minister consent to senior officials of the Canada Post Corporation giving explanations to the people's elected representatives regarding this plan to do business through the Corporation?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, actually, tomorrow I shall be meeting the President of the Canada Post Corporation who will report on this new experiment.

As for the possibility of Corporation officials testifying before a Parliamentary Committee, I believe the Corporation's estimates are regularly referred to a Standing Committee and that the President and the Chairman of the Board will be appearing next month.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

INTRODUCTION OF WORKER SAFETY AMENDMENTS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Labour. It deals again with the matter of changes to the Canada Labour Code. On January 29, 1982, I asked his predecessor, the Minister of the Environment, when changes to the Canada Labour Code affecting worker safety and occupational health would finally be introduced. I was told at that time that it would be very soon. I wonder if this Minister can give us a definition of "very soon"? Two years and two months have passed by since that question was asked and we still have not seen any legislation in this House. When is the Government finally going to act to protect the lives and safety of workers under the federal regime?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I intend to table a Bill as soon as possible, and I can assure the Hon. Member that "soon" means a much shorter period of time than the one to which he was referring.

[English]

GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Well, Mr. Speaker, I am not really sure of the definition of the word "soon", because on January 29, 1982, it was "very soon". On June 16, 1983, it was "soon". What does "soon" mean this time?

While the Minister is on his feet, could he assure the people who work for the Government itself, the federal government workers, that they will finally be given equal legislative protection under the Canada Labour Code as is given to those workers who are under the private sector? In other words, will the Government give its own workers the same legislative protection which exists for workers in the private sector?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, to me "soon" means "a few weeks".

As for the assurance the Hon. Member is requesting, I may refer him to the solemn commitment made by the Government in the last Throne Speech and to information that has already been given in the House by my colleague, the President of the Treasury Board.

PENITENTIARIES

AGASSIZ MOUNTAIN PRISON—USE OF SEX PICTURES DURING THERAPY

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. The Solicitor General may not know that it was reported in the Vernon Daily News on March 29 that convicts in one British Columbia prison would soon be allowed to watch kiddy porn and other sexual material. This "arousal" therapy is part of an ambitious new treatment scheme Ottawa is planning for offenders at Agassiz Mountain Prison. It was reported that federal consultant, J. Campbell, said, and I quote:

> If their sexual preference is little girls, we show them pictures of little girls.

Will the Minister tell the House whether this is really a policy and program of his Department?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): I can tell the Hon. Member, Mr. Speaker, that with respect to general viewing of material inside institutions the same rules apply which apply in the surrounding community. The standards of censorship which apply in a province, apply also in the institutions. However, I believe the Hon. Member may be referring to a sex therapy program called "Sexual Aversion Therapy", which is a type of treatment being developed in some of our institutions under carefully controlled circumstances, and only in our psychiatric penitentiaries, to try to straighten out inmates who have criminal sexual behaviour.

The Hon. Member may find that program amusing, or he may become indignant about it, but I would urge him to look into it and consider the options which are available for straightening out inmates who are in danger, on release, of committing criminal sex acts.

Oral Questions

CANADA LABOUR CODE

INTRODUCTION OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Mr. Speaker, my question, directed to the Minister of Labour, is supplementary to the question asked by the Hon. Member for Churchill. When the Minister indicates that the amendments to the Canada Labour Code, long promised by him, will come forward within a couple of weeks, may I interpret that to be an undertaking that first reading will be given to that Bill before the Easter recess?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give that guarantee. If it is not done before the Easter recess, I hope it will be soon afterwards.

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

PRICE OF GASOLINE IN OTTAWA-CARLETON AREA

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Broadcast News reported in March that the National Automotive Trade Association, which represents 5,000 gas station owners, says that Canadian motorists are paying 6 cents a litre, or 27 cents a gallon, too much.

My question stems from the fact that I believe people in the Ottawa-Carleton area are getting a hosing on the price of gasoline. Can the Minister tell us why gasoline in this area costs 47 cents to 51 cents a litre, when one can drive to Toronto, Hamilton, or Peterborough and buy it for as low as 29 cents a litre? Is the price being held up by the combines in this area in order to be closer to the inflated price of gasoline in Quebec?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that is quite an outrageous charge which the Hon. Member makes. But then I am accustomed to his outrageous charges. I have told him, time and time again, that the question of the price of gasoline is being looked into very thoroughly by the oil inquiry. While I also regret very much that the inquiry is taking such a lengthy time, the Hon. Member must appreciate that it is a very complex issue. When the inquiry is complete, we will get to the bottom of the situation and, hopefully, have recommendations upon which we can act.

Mr. Domm: The people out there buying gas do not have as much patience as the Minister, who can wait eight years to table a report from the Prices Commission.

PRICE CHARGED TO DEALERS BY PETRO-CANADA

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): My supplementary question is this: while Petro-Canada is selling gasoline to its dealers, its company-owned operations, at as low as 29 cents a litre, why is it selling to the independents in Peterborough at 40 cents a litre?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that particular question should be better addressed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I would remind the Hon. Member that I expect to be tabling new competition legislation this afternoon which I hope he will support, which will very effectively deal with some of the practices which he describes.

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

APPOINTMENT OF PAYMENTS COMMITTEE

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture in his capacity as Acting Minister of Transport. The Minister will be aware, I am sure, that under the provisions of Bill C-155, the Governor in Council was to have appointed, on or before April 1, 1984, a committee of not less than three and not more than five people, to examine all matters relevant to the method of payment under the provisions of the legislation. In checking with the office of the Minister of Transport this morning, I found that that announcement has not been made. Could the Minister of Agriculture enlighten the House why the announcement has not been made, and when we might expect an announcement with respect to the naming of those people?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I cannot say why they were not announced by that date. I do know that discussions have taken place about the appointments, so I would believe they would be made very soon.

PROVISIONS OF LEGISLATION

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as this is a serious breach of the legislation, would the Minister take that into consideration and appeal to his colleague and, indeed, to the Prime Minister, to obey the law?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I will take the question as noted and talk to my colleague about it.

POSSIBLE IMPORTATION OF PRODUCT FROM PLANT RELOCATED IN MEXICO

Will he determine whether it is the intention of Allen Industries to export that product from Mexico to Canada and, if so, will he take steps to put an end to this?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I will investigate for the Hon. Member the situation which he describes and determine the extent to which it falls under the jurisdiction of my Department as compared to that of the Department of Industry. I will give an answer to him when I obtain it.

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

COMMERCIAL DISCOUNTERS OF CHILD TAX CREDITS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The Minister will know that the child tax credit, $343 to a woman for a child if she is in need, is the kind of payment which is the subject of the tax discounters, Bentax and H. & R. Block. It is the women who are in need who are selling off their child tax credits. What representations has the Minister made to the Minister of Revenue to cease that practice? What legislation is she prepared to introduce to the House to make sure that that child tax credit is spread over 12 months, or perhaps paid quarterly to these women, so they will not be induced into selling off their right to support for their children, a situation which is now taking place to the extent of at least a half a million women in this country alone?

• (1500)

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this matter is under active consideration. I have consulted with the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of National Revenue, and we are currently looking at ways in which we can improve the system so that people can receive their child tax credits quickly, thereby bypassing the tax discount rebaters. We are also looking at a number of other measures so that, by the next taxation year, the matter should be well under control.

NATIONAL REVENUE

TIME TAKEN TO PAY CHILD TAX CREDIT REBATES

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Will the Minister tell this House why it takes from three to four months for women to receive their child tax credit, which represents the basis of all the money coming to them or their families?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Hon. Member can generalize, because in the vast majority of cases, tax returns from people who can claim the child tax credit are received very early and processed as quickly as possible, so that people who are entitled to the child tax credit can receive their money as soon as possible.

NATIONAL REVENUE—GUIDELINES FOR CHARITABLE ORGANIZATIONS

Question No. 324—Mr. Skelly:

1. Did the Department of National Revenue have any guidelines for defining (a) "charitable organization" (b) "non-profit organization" for the purposes of administering the Income Tax Act and, if so, in each case, what are they and did these guidelines suggest or require the appraisal of an organization's activities as well as its stated purposes (i) before an organization was granted (ii) during the period in which the organization enjoyed charitable or non-profit status?

2. Did the Department review the application of these guidelines and, if so, what did this review entail and was it continual?

Order Paper Questions

3. Did the Department review the charitable status of the Fraser Institute, registration number 0438911-59-27 and (a) if so (i) when was the review begun (ii) what was its scope (iii) was the review completed and, if so, on what date and, if not, when will it be completed (iv) will the findings be made public and, if so, on what date (b) if not, will the Department review the charitable status of the Fraser Institute and, if so (i) on what date (ii) what will be the scope of the review (iii) will the findings be made public and, if so, on what date?

4. Did the Department review the charitable status of the Fraser Institute in the past and, if so, in each case, (a) on what date (b) what was the scope of the review (c) what were the findings?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): 1. (a) A "charitable organization", is defined in paragraph 149.1(1)(b) of the Income Tax Act. Guidelines on charitable purposes and objects can be found in Part 1 of the Department's Information Circular 80-10 on the subject of registered charities.

(i) When considering an application for charitable registration, the officials in the Department are required to determine if both the organization's constituted purposes and its activities are charitable.

(ii) Registered charities are required to file, annually, both an information return and a public information return, each in prescribed form and containing prescribed information. This information is subject to review by the officials in the Department to determine if the organization continues to meet the requirements of registration.

(b)(i) and (ii) (As it applies to non-profit organizations). A non-profit organization is defined in paragraph 149(1)(L) of the Income Tax Act. Guidelines have been issued by the Department of National Revenue in Interpretation Bulletin IT-496 dated February 18, 1983.

2. (As it applies to non-profit organizations). The appraisal of a non-profit organization's activities as well as its stated purposes cannot be made in advance of or during a particular year but only after the end of the year. (see paragraph 10 of IT-496)

(As it applies to charitable organizations.) Continual review measures are carried on by the Department to ensure the guidelines are applied consistently and equitably. To this end, determinations with respect to all applications for registered charitable status are carefully reviewed on an ongoing basis by senior officials before being finalized. Also, the annual returns are subject to review each year to ensure that registered charities continue to comply with the requirements of the Income Tax Act.

3 and 4. Due to the confidentiality provisions of the Income Tax Act, no information may be divulged concerning the Department's actions in respect of any taxpayer, including those exempt as registered charities, nor may any information obtained by or on behalf of the Department for the purposes of administration of the Act be communicated. The Act provides for an exception to those provisions in the case of a registered charity only in that the Department may release to any interested person a copy of the organization's Public Information Return.

CANADA HEALTH ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss Bégin that Bill C-3, an Act relating to cash contributions by Canada in respect of insured health services provided under provincial health care insurance plans and amounts payable by Canada in respect of extended health care services and to amend and repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the third time and do pass.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the Canada Health Act will accomplish a number of things. As the traditional supporters of medicare, indeed as the originators through our predecessors, the CCF, we are very glad to see the improvements brought about in this Bill. It will address the crisis in medicare of extra billing and user fees.

It is true that medicare has been under threat, partly because of federal expenditure cutbacks on medicare, partly on account of provincial cutbacks, and partly on account of ideological reluctance to deal with medicare issues on the part of some of the provinces. We have seen the threat of moving to a two-tier system with specialized, quality care and a range of services available to those who can pay for them and for basic services for those who are not able to pay user fees and extra billing. In other words, we are moving to a system entirely contrary to what was originally envisaged, that of quality care for all in a truly universal system.

This two-tier system, which we are trying to correct with the legislation before us, is an inefficient and expensive system. What will happen is that people who are unable to pay the extra bills will have to go to a system of private insurance to do so. Unions will negotiate private insurance schemes to cover the services for which a person has to pay extra. Then we would have a system in the public sector covering the basic services and one in the private sector, with its additional layer of administrative costs as well as the costs reflected in profits, because this would be run by the private sector on the basis of whatever money they could get out of the system.

The United States has this kind of two-tier system with a very large profit-oriented private sector, and we know the results are that health care services are expensive. They pay a higher proportion of their GNP for medical costs than we do and fewer people are covered. Therefore, the system we have developed in Canada is one that we can really be proud of. It is an excellent system which stands up very well in international comparisons and which is a relatively efficient and cost-effective system. Naturally we think it can be improved and we have introduced amendments, some of which have been accepted and some of which have not. We want to have it even more cost-effective and responsive to people's needs. But, by and large, it is a good, efficient and effective system. We have a good system, we want to face the crisis, confront the two-tier system, address the crisis and solve it.

This is a better Bill, Mr. Speaker, as a result of a number of amendments introduced by the NDP caucus. We fought for them, and some of them were accepted. We did not get all we wanted but we brought a couple of extremely important provisions into the legislation at committee stage. We want to see our medicare system become a truly health care system. It should not just provide treatment after the fact, but also should include preventive services, including the services of paraprofessionals for the quality care they can offer.

In light of that we asked for a number of amendments, and let me quote one. The door has been opened with the following improvement in the wording:

The health care insurance plan of a province must insure all insured health services provided by hospitals, medical practitioners or dentists, and—

● (1510)

This is the addition:

—where the law of the province so permits, similar or additional services rendered by other health care practitioners.

In other words, the provinces may bring into their system additional health care professionals and they may have expenses covered by our new Canada Health Act when it is passed. It will encourage a province to make use of other health care professionals. This means that we will be getting better care and a better range of options for people to enable them to make decisions about the kind of care they want. Health care professionals other than doctors usually provide their services at a somewhat lower fee, so we will end up with the best of both worlds. We will have more cost-efficient medical care and care which people want. They will be able to choose what they want and will get savings in costs in the overall system.

We hope that paramedical services, nurse practitioners and other professionals will come in as well. The nurses have lobbied very extensively for this and the New Democratic Party has supported their endeavours and will continue to support endeavours to include these health care professionals in our system. We had hoped to get general inclusion of these practitioners, but at least we have the door open so that we will be ready to accept them when the provinces allow them to come in.

We have a broader concept of health accepted in the legislation by an amendment to the preamble, which reads as follows:

—that Canadians can achieve further improvements in their well-being through combining individual lifestyles that emphasize fitness, prevention and health promotion with collective action against the social, environmental and occupational causes of disease, and that they desire a system of health services that will promote such physical, and mental health and such protection against disease;

That is a good philosophical statement which tries to show where we want to go and that health care is not only the avoidance of disease but also the promotion of health through prevention good nutrition, better lifestyles, exercise and cleaning up of occupational health hazards. All of these things are part of it. This is something to which a whole community can contribute by taking collective action to improve the environment, the air we breathe and the working environment.

The New Democratic Party continued to press for other amendments, which I am sorry to say were not accepted. I would like to mention a few of these to show the direction in which we would like the Canada Health Act to go. One of the most important of these is a provision for the escalation of penalties. One of the most important functions of this Act is to provide for penalties so that the federal Government can respond to extra billing and user fees of a province, not just by cutting them off completely, which would not be acceptable to the Canadian public and which would make too many people suffer as a result, but to give greater flexibility. The New Democratic Party is concerned that the dollar for dollar withholding of subsidies for health care would not be adequate to discourage extra billing and user fees on the part of a province. We proposed that the withholding of dollar for dollar hold only for the first year of the penalty, that it go up to $2 for every dollar allowed in extra billing and user fees in the second year, and in the third year that it escalate to $3 for every dollar misused in health care expenditures. Our feeling is that these more adequate penalties would give the federal Government more clout in dealing with the provinces and would still give it adequate flexibility.

An important amendment, which was unfortunately ruled out of order, is that moneys which are withheld as penalties, apart from those that would be returned if the province cleaned up its act, got rid of extra billing and got the money back, should be redirected to provinces which are complying with the Act. These moneys would be used to facilitate research, innovation and service development in areas of alternative health care, delivery systems and preventive and medical health promotions. The idea is that if provinces are not living up to the spirit and letter of the Canada Health Act they should be penalized and lose this money. We do not want this money to go just anywhere. This money is supposed to be devoted to health care. Let us put it where it would do some good. Let us give it to the provinces that are complying with the Act and that would put that money into special innovative programs that would be of benefit to all Canadians. Let us allow the provinces that are living up to the spirit and terms of the Canada Health Act to get some benefit from that. That benefit would not be confined to their own citizens but would have effects throughout the country. People in other provinces would see the good things that happen as a result of these innovative programs.

Another amendment on which the Conservatives voted with us, but which was unfortunately defeated by the Government, was that no penalty would come into force until passed by Parliament. This would provide for public debate before any penalties were actually meted out. Therefore, it would not be a matter of Cabinet discretion only, a matter which would be dealt with privately and secretly, but it would be a matter for open, public debate. When the Canada Health Act is being violated by a province we certainly need public debate. That would perhaps be an effective way of dealing with it. It would certainly help to get the issue before the public so that people in the provinces concerned would know very clearly what was happening.

We lost an amendment to ensure an acceptable ratio of ward to private and semi-private accommodation in hospitals. We are very concerned that there be quality care in our hospitals and that this quality care be available not only to those who can pay extra to get semi-private or private care. Good quality care ought to be available to all Canadians, even if they cannot afford the extra costs to get private or semi-private care. Unfortunately that amendment was not passed.

We are at a very important juncture in our health care system. I would like, therefore, to spend a few minutes looking back as well as forward to see the unfolding and how the different ideas were brought into medicare in Canada to give us some idea of what are the next steps we should be taking. I am proud to do this because it was my colleagues in the old CCF, and later in the NDP, who pioneered most of the elements of the medicare system. In 1945, with a very new CCF Government, Saskatchewan was the first to introduce medical and dental care for all old age pensioners and for mothers' allowance recipients and their families. That was a very small beginning for the people most in need, but is was a noticeable beginning for our system. In 1945, a federal-provincial discussion on tax arrangements to facilitate an extension of this program was unsuccessful. It was not until very much later that there was another important and comprehensive amendment to medicare.

In 1948, the Saskatchewan CCF Government introduced an experimental government-sponsored medical care plan in one region of the province. This included a full range of medical services and dental care for children under 16. The following year, again under the CCF Government, Saskatchewan became the first province to introduce comprehensive government-sponsored hospital insurance. This is one of the most costly items in our health care system. In 1957, the federal Government passed the Hospital and Diagnostic Services Act, which provides for federal cost sharing of hospital services. It was only a few years later that all provinces took advantage of this.

In one province we can see the pioneer work being done beginning in the 1940s. It took quite a long time before other provinces and the federal Government became convinced to act. In 1961, Mr. Justice Emmett Hall was appointed to chair the Royal Commission on Health Services. This, of course, was the commission that recommended our full medicare system. In 1962, Saskatchewan became the first province to introduce a comprehensive provincially sponsored medical prepayment plan and fought it out with a doctors' strike. If it had not been for the courage of the CCF Government in Saskatchewan we would not have medicare today. In 1964, the Hall Commission reported, recommending a comprehensive medical insurance plan. In 1966, with a minority Government, the Medical Care Act was passed providing for 50 per cent federal cost sharing. By 1971, the last province, New Brunswick, joined the medical care plan. We can see the beginning of medicare in 1945 in a CCF province, and finally in a Conservative province in 1971. While the last province with a Conservative regime joined medicare in 1971, in 1973 the NDP provincial government were introducing more innovations. In 1973, Manitoba introduced Canada's first universal pharmacare program for seniors and universal nursing home care. In 1974, Manitoba with an NDP government became the first province to introduce a government dental care plan for children. Also in 1974, Saskatchewan with an NDP government became the first province to offer no cost aids to the handicapped.

Again we can see that Conservative provinces have come along rather more reluctantly while CCF and NDP provinces were very much in the forefront in bringing in innovations.

There is much discussions now of a national consensus on medicare. I am certainly pleased to see that all three Parties support the current Canada Health Act, but it is very clear in this national consensus that some are active members and leaders in fighting for medicare while others are rather slow converts to the cause and are rather reluctant in seeing the benefits of having a comprehensive medical care system. While the Conservatives are not in the forefront of supporting medicare, they are not fighting it. Unfortunately, there is some backlash against medicare on the part of the National Citizens' Coalition.

I suppose all Members of the House have been receiving, as well as seeing in the newspapers, a lot of nonsense on the issue of medicare. They are very misleading statements on the part of this so called National Citizens' Coalition. I want to mention a few of them and point out what is so ludicrously wrong with the kind of propaganda they are putting out. For instance, they ask, "Do you really want someone who has been forced into adopting a civil servant mentality doing open heart surgery on you or delivering your baby?" They state:

> Waiting lines for surgery are going to get much longer and because literally thousands of highly educated and talented specialists will be reluctantly driven out of our country there will be fewer doctors. Those who are left will be eventually reduced to clock watching.
> More Canadians will die because they can't get the life-saving health care they need, when they need it.

When they say that doctors will be turned into a bunch of civil servants, I would like to point out to anyone who is interested in this kind of claptrap that this is simply untrue. How a person is paid does not determine whether that person is qualified, experienced, able, dedicated or conscientious. People can be all of these things and indeed even be civil servants. It is quite possible.

I have lived in other countries where there are actually civil servants who are doctors and where health care is indeed of extremely high quality. It depends on their training, experience and dedication, which is quite independent from how they are paid.

I am sorry to hear statements like this being made because it is a scare tactic which might give people the wrong impression. I know that this body is not dealing with the real problems before us concerning the health care system, which is extending it to include paraprofessionals, the issue of midwifery and home births, and the issue of community health care clinics. These are all ways of improving our health care system.

This group also seems to be very reluctant to note that having a profit motive in medicine can be a danger as well. They say that people would not want a civil servant operating on them, but I would not want somebody operating on me who is in it strictly for profits and will recommend the most expensive intervention because it is the most profitable. Therefore, there are dangers as well in having too much of a profit motive in the medicare system. We have seen evidence of this in other countries. There are many useless operations being done in the United States where there is too much of a profit motive.

To conclude let me just say that we have gone a long way to get to this Canada Health Act. I am pleased to see it and will certainly vote for it. I want to assure the House that the NDP caucus will continue to work and be in the forefront of reform in Canada's health services to see that Canadians get the kind of health care they want.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten minute period for questions or comments. If there are no questions or comments, the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) on debate.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to review Bill C-3, which enacts the new Canada Health Act, in the context of all the history that has preceded the introduction of this legislation in the House of Commons. Let me begin by characterizing the new Canada Health Act in this way; if a government has many crises relating to unemployment, such as rising interest rates and all those matters which affect Canadians in their day-to-day lives, and it cannot solve any of those crises, then it may be advisable to create a crisis that affects each and every Canadian that it can then pretend or purport to solve.

Essentially, that is what the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) and the Government have done in bringing in Bill C-3, the Canada Health Act. The Government has said that there is a problem with health care across Canada, that we are losing universality of our health care system. But the Government tells Canadians not to worry because it will save them from this threat.

I have talked to members of the medical profession, including surgeons, nurses and everyone involved in the health care system. They never saw the problem in that way. No one ever asked me to go back to Ottawa to try to preserve the universality of our health care system. What I was told time and again was to go back to Ottawa and make sure that the Government of Canada fulfills its commitment to Canada's health care system by providing adequate funds to preserve and advance the health care system that we now have in place.

There is not a professional in the health care system who does not see the problem of medical care as involving funding. In other words, the problems that exist in the health care system are the result of underfunding. It is as simple as that.

But what happened? The Government wants to forget about the facts and deal with the perception. It wants to deal with the idea, which it has built up over a period of time, that there is a problem. This has been done particularly by the Minister of National Health and Welfare with the little pamphlets she has sent out in the mail to innocent Canadians. These pamphlets, which they read while opening their cheques or waiting in long line-ups at the banks, tell them that there is a problem. If people are told about it long enough and read about it long enough they will eventually believe that there is a problem and believe that a piece of legislation is necessary to solve that problem.

That is what we are doing here. We are dealing with a myth, a ghost. We are trying to deal with a piece of legislation that purports to solve a problem that does not exist. While the Government is not very smart, it is not totally stupid and has introduced a couple of concepts to help create this myth which it has developed over a period of years. It used two words that have become anathema to many Canadians. The two terms which it has developed are extra billing and user fees. Those great evils of the health system, extra billing and user fees, are used as though extra billing and user fees were totally unconnected to the problem of underfunding of the health care system.

I do not believe that anyone on either side of the House of Commons or in any of the provincial chambers across the country wants to have user fees or extra billing for patients who are the consumers of the health care services. We all want a totally free system, but the problem is how to pay for it. Where will the money come from to pay for the system? Those provinces that do not have the wealth and resources that are required to pay for the system must, in some cases, resort to user fees or some other method of collecting medical fees. The common method is extra billing.

To make the claim that extra billing and user fees are evils in themselves, unconnected with the government funding of Canada's medical health services, is a pretence. It is a worse than a pretence, it is a fraud because there is an illicit motive behind it. The Minister of National Health and Welfare who presides over this massive health system knows better. She must know that the only reason for having user fees and extra billing in any of the provinces in Canada is to raise money to help provide the health care services that are part of the system. Yet she isolates them and says that they are evil and an attack upon universality. Nothing could be further from the truth.

In this House of Commons we are constantly fighting the Government's attempt to create perceptions instead of presenting the facts. This is one more case, and we have to fight it. However, the trouble and the difficulty is that we, like everyone else in Canada, want the health care system preserved in its entirety and improved. We all want that. What is this pretense of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) that there are people out to attack Canada's health care system and that we on this side of the House want sick Canadians, not well Canadians? That is as ridiculous in reality as it is in the speaking. There is not a grain of truth in that, and the Minister of National Health and Welfare knows it, as does every Member of the House.

The problem is with the quality of health care in Canada. It is as simple as that. What kind of a health care system do we want? What kind of medical personnel do we want in our hospitals? What kind of equipment do we want in operating rooms when we go in for surgery? What kind of hospital beds do we want? Do we want automatic hospital beds or ones that crank up? All these things are part of the system. They have to be decided in each and every instance. But what has to be taken as the general guide is: Do we want a health care system which is the equal of any of the advanced nations in the western world or, for that matter, in the eastern world or in the whole world? If we ask that question of thinking Canadians, they will respond immediately by saying, "We want the best possible health care system. Give us the best possible health care system in the circumstances and then we as Canadians will find ways to pay for it".

I happen to have a long exposure to the matter of health care in Canada. I was a junior solicitor in the Department of the Attorney General in Nova Scotia in the late fifties when hospital care was introduced. I can tell the House that that was a traumatic experience for the then Stanfield Government of Nova Scotia, because Mr. Stanfield and his colleagues in his Cabinet knew that hospital care would be an enormous expense for the Province of Nova Scotia. In 1984-85 that is proven by the fact that the Province of Nova Scotia spends 24.5 per cent of its total budget on health. One quarter in every dollar spent by the Government of Nova Scotia is in health services. Mr. Stanfield knew in the late fifties what a burden hospital care would be on the people and taxpayers of Nova Scotia. He thought long and hard about it, but Nova Scotia opted in because it was recognized that there was nothing more important than the health of its citizens. There is nothing more important to Nova Scotia than that the province have healthy citizens. That can be said of every part of Canada. There is nothing more important than the personal health of individuals.

As you get to my age, Mr. Speaker, you realize more and more every day that you value among everything you might possess your own personal health. Once again let me underline the fact that nobody is here to hurt in any way, shape or form our health care system. The problem is: How do we finance it and at what level do we operate, that is to say, at what level of patient care?

Notwithstanding the statistics presented, there has been in fact a decrease in funding emanating from the Government of Canada to the provinces. That is simply stated in the table provided by the Province of Nova Scotia which shows very clearly that the transfer payments from the Government of Canada in 1984-85 were 40.6 per cent of the revenues, that is the total recoveries of the Province of Nova Scotia. In 1983-84 that figure was 43.5 per cent. It is going down. They can come up with whatever numbers they want in the House of Commons and elsewhere, but the fact of the matter is that federal contributions to the provinces, particularly the Province of Nova Scotia, are going down.

Let us not fool around and juggle statistics around trying to fool people. It comes out at the other end. There is a bottom line. The bottom line is in the hospitals, the doctors' offices and everywhere else where we have to pay for health care. The dollar bills are not there. We can see it in the cracked walls, in the rusty equipment and everywhere we go. I have to say to members of the Liberal Party who insist in the House that the Canada Health Act is an improvement that they should travel to the hospitals and to the outlets of health care, and they will see that there is no improvement. The evidence is very clear and cogent that the health care service in Canada is degenerating. It is going down. There is not a professional medical person practising in Nova Scotia who would argue against that.

Someone said that this is really a matter of political power, that this has nothing to do with health or health care services, that it is simply the Government of Canada exercising its pre-eminence in the health care field, as it has pushed people and provinces out of the energy field, the resource field and every other field which it seeks to occupy. Under the British North America Act there is a theory of occupied field. The Parliament of Canada can come in and occupy a particular field in the interests of all Canadians. But our Government is not doing it that way, directly, and saying, "We want the health care field totally under the control of the federal Government". It is just doing it in this almost nefarious way, saying, "We have the dollar bills. We have the strength. We are the ones who do not have to provide health care". The federal Government does not have to treat a patient. It does not have to provide a hospital bed, but if it is to do it, it wants total control. The only way to do that is through legislation of the purse-strings, and that is why we have this Bill before us. If the provinces give up in this fight—and they are apparently giving up for reasons I will mention—then the federal Government is in complete control.

Let me tell the House about one of the saddest features of the Canada Health Act. I have some 25 years of personal experience in this behind me. Do you know who that is? It is the so-called hero of Canadian medical care, Dr. Emmett Hall, in his older age. I have the greatest respect for our senior citizens, but the fact of the matter is that Judge Hall is a retired judge of the Supreme Court, retired because of reaching the mandatory age limit. Does that mean his judgment is suspect? No, not in all cases, because some of our citizens of that age have keener minds than many of us. But in the case of Judge Hall you have to suspect something, and I want to put that right on the floor of the House of Commons. Judge Hall has said—

Mr. Fisher: We are starting to suspect you.

Mr. Crosby: —that time goes by for all of us, as younger Members will find out. He says that the medical profession in Canada cannot become a law unto itself. Judge Hall said, and listen to this—

Miss Bégin: Why did you mention his age? What does that have to do with it?

Mr. Crosby: —that the medical profession has been granted a monopoly to practise medicine to the exclusion of all others. Thank God the Minister of National Health and Welfare cannot practise medicine. Thank God somebody has said that medical practitioners are the only ones permitted to practise medicine. What kind of nonsense is that from the father of medical care, that the medical profession has been granted a monopoly?

It reminds me of a cartoon which I saw—and I address this particularly to the Minister of National Health and Welfare—of a sick lady lying in bed and an obvious witch-doctor standing at the end of the bed, and the husband saying, "It is the only person who would take housecalls". That is what is happening here when you pretend that the medical profession has some kind of monopoly. Oh, they are going to take us, just because I cannot practise medicine, just because the Minister of National Health and Welfare cannot practise medicine! This group which has been granted an exclusive privilege will take advantage of us! What nonsense. What an utter sham. It is totally ridiculous. I cannot believe that it is happening.

The medical profession has not been granted any monopoly. The medical profession is made up of the people who by training over a long period of time have proved their capability and capacity to perform certain acts connected with what we call the practise of medicine. There is no mystery to it. If one wants to be a doctor, one goes to medical school. One qualifies, obtains a diploma and certification and becomes a doctor.

Judge Hall is a doctor too, but not that kind of doctor, thank God. I want to say that I think this is one of the worst things in this whole debate. Somebody at the level of Mr. Justice Hall, the father of medical care, so-called in Canada, said that the medical profession has a monopoly to practice and they are using it against the people of Canada. Enough of that nonsense. Some of my best friends and close associates are medical doctors.

Miss Bégin: Nobody would have thought of that.

Mr. Crosby: There is a remark from the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I am supposed to feel embarrassed because I know some people in the medical profession. Why would I feel embarrassed? That is one of the proudest claims I can make. I have a great many friends in the medical profession. I see them socially and otherwise. I am proud of them. I do not think there is any higher calling in our society. How do you like that, Mrs. Minister or whatever you are called.

Miss Bégin: It is Madam.

Mr. Crosby: One of those medical doctors, who happens to be a provincial public servant of many years' standing, the head of one of our best medical institutions in Nova Scotia, has written this speech for me. It is a personal message from him to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. He said in his letter:

I want you to express these views in the House of Commons.

His views are so well expressed that I will simply quote what he said. He said:

As proposed, I am concerned that Bill C-3, the Canada Health Act, will threaten the availability and quality of medical care in Canada, that it will cripple a health care system that has been recognized as one of the best in the world and will interfere with the economic professional freedom of the medical profession.

This is from a medical doctor in Nova Scotia who has been an employee of the Province of Nova Scotia for years. He goes on to say:

The Canada Health Act is supposed to amalgamate, update and more clearly redefine the conditions of current federal legislation and the Medical Care Act of 1966. These have been legislative instruments by which Ottawa has provided funding for provincial health care programs, but if the Minister of National Health and Welfare's proposal is accepted, it will do more than that.

Here are the specific points that he lists. He said the Bill will:

Convert Canada's high quality health care insurance program into state medicine,

Make the serious under-funding of the situation even worse,

Reduce the ability of hospitals to meet the needs of communities they serve,

Reduce the financial flexibility of provincial governments and their ability to finance health care,

Widen the disparities and the availability and quality of health care service that exists between provinces and communities,

Deny patients the democratic right to buy health care services that they need or want beyond those provided by the state,

Interfere with patients' rights to obtain health services from physicians and hospitals of their choice—

Deny physicians the right to deal directly with their patients to establish the value of our service and thus reduce our economic freedom.

In short, what he says and what I agree with is that the Act is a sham. It is a device to get federal control. It is a device to contend that the Government of Canada, under the Minister of National Health and Welfare, is solving the health care problems of Canada.

Everybody is put in a difficult position. We support the health care system in Canada. We support medicare. We support hospital care for all Canadians. Only a few months ago I had occasion to require care in hospital. I told the Minister of National Health and Welfare about that. I wanted, as all Canadians do when they enter hospital, the best care possible; otherwise you will pay for it afterwards. That is what Canadians want. They want the highest quality of health care. Our duty is to provide the opportunity for all Canadians to get the best possible health care that the system can deliver. That is our purpose. We cannot do that if we simply obstruct the Canada Health Act before this Parliament. We cannot do that by just blocking it. We can expose the errors of the ways of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. We can expose her attitude and the contempt that she shows for the deliverers of health care services. However, to vote against the Bill that provides health care for Canadians is another matter.

I want to end on one note in the case of Nova Scotia just to show everybody in this Parliament and elsewhere what kind of a person we are dealing with in the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Nova Scotia medical practitioners receive 85 per cent of the approved fee. They have received that fee since medical health care was introduced. It is part of an agreement they made with the province and with the Government of Canada. The Minister of National Health and Welfare is simply revoking that and saying that that historic fact goes out the window, "you get whatever you get and that's it". She calls that extra billing. She is wrong about that and she is wrong about most everything else she says about medical care in Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There is a ten-minute period for questions and comments.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member could give us the name of the doctor he quoted so freely in his speech? If he is not prepared to do that, under the Standing Orders of this House, because he quoted the letter almost verbatim, he should be required to table that letter.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, I make no apologies. You put me on a rack and I will not give you the name of the doctor who wrote to me. If there is a rule in this House of Commons that can require you to deliver confidential material, I tell you that I am not going to obey that rule. I made it clear that I have received a communication. I believe I have the right to refer to it and speak about it. I will make this concession to the Hon. Member. I will ask the doctor if he has any objection to providing a copy of his letter to the Parliamentary Secretary. If the doctor consents, I will be glad to do that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I should tell the Hon. Member that there is no such rule, so he will not be called upon to disobey the rules.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, will the Hon. Member tell us why in referring to Mr. Justice Emmett Hall, before his derogatory comments concerning Mr. Justice Hall, he prefaced them by saying he was retired and somewhat up in years? I do not quote him exactly, but I think the reference is clear.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, I think the references are clear. I do not believe that anybody has given medical practitioners a monopoly. That is not the nature of the law at all. If Mr. Justice Hall thinks they have been given a monopoly, all I can say is that he is wrong.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member made an unwarranted attack on Mr. Justice Emmett Hall. I submit he took out of context what Mr. Justice Hall had to say about a monopoly. Mr. Justice Emmett Hall was talking about expanding our present medical and hospital services. He talked about paramedics, home nursing, midwives, nurses, a whole host of things in the area of preventive medicine. Up until now, the medical profession has had a monopoly on most of that. The Hon. Member could not carry water for Mr. Justice Emmett Hall, who is the father of medicare and hospitalization in Canada. He brought in the royal commission report; it was him, Tommy Douglas and Woodrow Lloyd. By the way, it was not the Hon. Member's Party, although Mr. Justice Hall was a supporter of that Party. He was never a supporter of our Party. It was Mr. Justice Hall who helped father this program in Canada and who calls for the expansion of it. The medical profession does have a monopoly. They have too damned much say. They have a monopoly licensing authority and a monopoly union. The Hon. Member owes an apology to Mr. Justice Emmett Hall, and he had better make it now.

• (1550)

Mr. Crosby: If I owe anyone an apology, I will apologize. However, I will start with the allegation that I quoted out of context. I quoted from a newspaper which was delivered just one week ago. I will now quote from a newspaper report dated December 10, 1983, in which Mr. Justice Emmett Hall was reported as having spoken before the Health Coalition of Nova Scotia, a group financed by the Minister of National Health and Welfare to lobby for her Canada Health Act. That report quoted Mr. Justice Hall as saying:

A physician is not only a medical person . . . he said.

"He has moral and social obligations as well as self-interest . . . the medical profession is a monopoly created by the state . . . the state will prosecute anyone who is not licensed to act in that field"—

Let me ask the Hon. Member what that means.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Just to be clear, I will recognize the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) but questions are supposed to be directed to the person who made the speech.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member if it was not correct that the former Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), appointed Mr. Justice Emmett Hall to do a review of our medicare and hospitalization system, as a result of which Mr. Justice Emmett Hall made a certain number of recommendations to do away with what he calls the monopoly of the medical profession over the other services that can be provided which are presently governed by, ordered by, prescribed by or requested by a member of the medical profession. That is what Mr. Justice Hall was talking about. Is that not correct?

Mr. Crosby: How do you know what he was talking about?

Mr. Benjamin: I ask the Hon. Member if it is not correct that Mr. Justice Emmett Hall, in the context of his remarks about the monopoly, was perfectly correct and that he is calling for an expansion of the kinds of people who provide medical and health services. Is that not what Mr. Justice Emmett Hall recommended to the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead?

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, I think I could make my position very clear without the distortions of the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) or any other Member in the House. Mr. Justice Hall, as I said very clearly in my speech, is the so-called father of medical care. I walked around Nova Scotia with Mr. Justice Emmett Hall when he went there to study medical care and to write the report that he eventually published. No one has to tell me about Mr. Justice Hall.

I am trying to point out that over a period of time, Mr. Justice Hall changed his view. He suddenly got the idea that the enemy of medical care was the medical profession. This is a very hurtful view. He said that the medical profession has a monopoly. The medical profession does not have a monopoly. That is not what a monopoly is. He has repeated it time and time again and fostered the whole idea that the medical profession is doing this or is doing that. In the newspaper article to which I referred before, Mr. Justice Hall is quoted as saying:

"When the state gives a monopoly of that kind . . . gives the right to deliver an essential service, the state becomes automatically involved."

That is simply not true, Mr. Speaker. I cannot help it if Mr. Justice Emmett Hall said it, or a prince or a pauper said it; it is simply not true. I am trying to say that that kind of mistaken attitude leads to a great many other false conclusions, the most important of which is that the medical profession does not have certain rights. Those rights, if taken away, must be taken away in a fair manner. A provision of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms is that if one takes something away, one must give something in return.

In the case of the medical health profession in Nova Scotia, the Canada Health Act has taken away the medical practitioner's privilege that existed under the law of Nova Scotia to bill for the difference between the 85 per cent of the approved fee and the approved fee. That privilege may be wiped out because of the Canada Health Act. It may be wiped out by a recommendation of Mr. Justice Hall who said that these doctors had a monopoly and that the state was involved so the state could take it away.

I do not accept that kind of philosophy. I do not accept it and I am sorry to run into conflict with the father of medical care, but I stated my position very clearly. I will argue it before any group. I do not agree that the medical profession has the kind of monopoly suggested by Mr. Justice Hall, and I think that that is the cause of a huge problem in Canada, a problem that will plague us for decades to come.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): That is the conclusion of the 10-minute period for questions and comments.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, as I was listening to the interchange between the last two speakers, I was reminded of the fact that, indeed, the medical profession cannot be a monopoly because there are so many fast operators in other areas of Canadian life. I think the point of view expressed by some Hon. Members of the NDP and, indeed, of the Government Party is testimony to the fact that one can operate in several ways. One can operate from a level of political concern and a sense of justice, or one can operate from a position of trying to gain political advantage.

I have several major points I would like to make. Before beginning, I would like to confirm, as have all members of the Conservative Opposition, the fact that I will be voting for this Bill because there are many principles embodied in this Bill which we feel are important. As described by the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), medical care is a sacred trust which first began in the days of John Diefenbaker and Mr. Justice Emmett Hall, something that we as a Party very firmly believe is important to the mainstream of Canadian life, and something which is the responsibility of all governments to provide to Canadian citizens.

I am certainly not a disinterested party in this debate. Indeed, I can remember in my first days of medical practice the great relief that existed when it was made clear that a patient who required hospitalization had hospital insurance, and the frustration and difficulties that were encountered when a patient was not able to be brought into hospital for what in many cases was necessary treatment because he could not afford to pay a hospital bill. These are things for which we have a responsibility as a Government across Canada.

There are two main issues that arise. We have established the principles of universality, reasonable accessibility, comprehensiveness, portability of benefits and non-profit administration. These principles have been established, but they have been added to by the Act we are seeing now, and this identifies one of my major areas of concern.

This morning when questioning the Hon. Member for Provencher who entered into debate on this Bill, the Minister indicated that the provincial Governments had created additional health care costs for themselves because they were providing medical care facilities to small communities they administer throughout the provinces. I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, that this identifies very clearly something all of us should pay attention to, and something all of us should take note of for the future. If this indicates that the Minister of Health feels that that is not an appropriate expenditure, then she indeed is the one who is threatening the type of health care that we in Canada have come to expect and would like to see in the future.

We are not dealing with downtown Toronto, downtown Montreal or downtown Quebec City. We are dealing with the small rural areas of Canada where Canadian people are employed in areas of low population density, or in the farthest reaches of our territories. It is those people for whom we must provide care of the highest level possible. The Minister indicates that she would be critical of a provincial Government that was attempting to provide that level of care, and she has clearly indicated that where it is her repsonsibility she has not provided that care.

● (1600)

The visibility factor as it is dealt with in the Bill indicates in general the Minister's approach to the health care scene. She has included in the Act a requirement that the federal Government be more visible. For the most part, if we are able to do good deeds it would be nice to be recognized for them. But if we require recognition in anticipation of good deeds, and if that becomes a premise for bringing forward legislation, then that is a sad testimony to the type of government we have in Canada.

The Minister has spent $3 million to advertise the Canada Health Act. We understand that it takes between $25,000 and $50,000 to support one life, and beyond that it strains the level of care that we are able to provide. Indeed, we lose lives because we cannot provide the necessary support systems. Mr. Speaker, $3 million would potentially have maintained 60 Canadian lives. Yet that is what the Minister has spent on advertising this program, separate from anything to do with the actual delivery, administration and provision of health care to Canadians. That is the style of government we have in Canada. It is a style of government which is geared to maintaining power; it is a style of government that is non-productive and does not get to the heart of many issues that need to be dealt with.

The second major point I should like to make is one that I probably feel more strongly about than do many other Members. That is not to say that I feel I can explain or understand it completely, or that I will be an expert on it; it is only to say that I speak from probably a perspective that is important to consider at this stage of the debate. This concerns the future of the medical care system in Canada.

A mentality is developing that concerns me greatly, Mr. Speaker. If the Minister has any interest in the health care system in Canada she will be interested in it as well. A mentality is developing in the medical profession based on the insecurity, the concerns and the grievances it has with the Minister and with governments at all levels when they do not maintain contracts, when they impose settlements, when they arrive at conclusions separate and apart from the considerations that have been brought forward, when they put the profession in the position where it feels it no longer has the rights and freedoms it needs—the professional freedom, the freedom as Canadians to live and practise medicine in Canada in a way that they believe to be in the best interests of their patients and their country.

I do not offer this lightly, Mr. Speaker. Hon. Members opposite may smile and I know I can be accused of self-interest, but it is a mentality that is growing. It is a type of mentality that prompts my colleagues to say to me "Why don't you provide us with full state medicine? Why should I get up at five o'clock in the afternoon—we all know that government offices usually close between four and four-thirty in the afternoon, so why should I go on a call at five o'clock, or six or seven or eight o'clock at night if I am going to be managed by a bureaucracy, with all the obligations and none of the benefits?" That is the mentality that is spreading in the profession. It will be expensive for Canadians in future in terms of the type of medical care they can expect and will receive. I have not got an answer for that because I cannot answer for the Minister's intentions in the Bill or how she intends to operate the system across Canada from a central bureaucracy, when the Government cannot even meet the requirements of individual communities. I do not know how the Minister is going to manage that, but I can understand the concern of the professionals.

This is not really a concern for politicians, Mr. Speaker, and certainly not for the Minister who will always get the level of health care that she wants. It is not a concern for me either because I can look after myself. It is a concern for Canadian citizens. Their destiny may well be integrated into a system that is being run by people who do not have personal involvement and whose dedication has been struck away because of abuse and the level of control that may be exercised by this or some other Minister. We all hope that will not happen. But I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that it is a growing mentality in the medical profession in Canada today. It is the sum and substance of the letters I have received, and the personal conversations I have had.

Those are the two major points I would like to contribute to the debate, Mr. Speaker. Other Members have spoken of the broad general concerns and major issues of financing, and attitudes which they can describe much better than I can. I will close with a specific question I asked some of the Minister's constituents in the Province of Quebec when they appeared before the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. We have seen the Quebec medical system evolve, and I have worked with people in the system and some of my colleagues have trained in the system. At the Committee hearings I asked this question: "Is the medical care system in Quebec better or worse than the one in Ontario?" The answer is on the records of the Committee, Mr. Speaker; it is worse in Quebec than in Ontario.

Miss Bégin: That is another discrimination. Can you explain?

Mr. Gurbin: That is testimony to the system as it has evolved in the Province of Quebec compared to the way it has evolved in Ontario. That comment was made with obvious regret by the physician who represented a group of physicians from that Province at the Committee.

I again offer my support to those principles of the Bill which I think are important to all Canadians, Mr. Speaker. I shall work with my Party to overcome in the future those problems about which I have expressed general concern.

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin). He is the second Tory to accuse the health system of Quebec of being worse in quality than the one in Ontario. I should like to ask him if he could back up with facts and references, that unacceptable and untrue statement. For example, does he know of the Montreal General Hospital, the Royal Vic, McGill University Faculty of Medicine, the University of Laval, the University of Montreal et cetera. Does he not know of the existence of these top institutions of health, and they are top in Canada? There is nothing dirty because they are in Quebec. The Hon. Member should learn about his country—

Mr. McDermid: That is not what he said.

Miss Bégin: —instead of throwing these accusations—

Mr. McDermid: That is not what he said.

Miss Bégin: —which are of the greatest dishonesty and of course which are totally false.

Mr. McDermid: Stop twisting what he said.

Miss Bégin: This is serious business.

Mr. McDermid: Start telling the truth.

Mr. Gurbin: Mr. Speaker, that was not my comment; that was my question. If the Minister can read—I do not know if she can read or if she can understand, but if she can she should refer to the evidence before the Committee meeting where the question was asked. I will undertake to send her a copy so that she may read it. However, I do not think she will understand, Mr. Speaker. As I came into political life, one of my colleagues became head of surgery at St. Mary's Hospital in Montreal, but he left Quebec, because of the system there, to practise in Ontario.

• (1610)

Miss Bégin: Because of the language or the system?

Mr. Gurbin: Because of the system. My colleague is originally from the Caribbean and was the head of surgery at St. Mary's Hospital. He left because of the system which he was doomed to failure because of the way it was being practised in Quebec. That has been emphasized time and again by people within the system. It is not the doctors who suffer, it is the patients. That is what the Minister fails to see, Mr. Speaker. Inevitably, the level of patient care deteriorates because of the lack of ability of those people working within the system to provide the level of care which those patients should have. That is the potential for all of Canada if the Minister continues on in her attitude, and that is too bad.

Mr. Blaikie: I would like to make a brief comment, Mr. Speaker. It is difficult to listen to the Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin) and not get the impression that there is a kind of schizophrenia in the approach of the Conservatives to this Bill. The Bill is designed to create in all provinces of Canada a similarity with the Province of Quebec, as in the Province of Quebec there is no extra billing. On the one hand, how can the Hon. Member try to make the point—

Mr. McDermid: He quoted.

Mr. Blaikie: I understand that, but you quote things for a purpose. He quoted the contention of the witness before the committee who said that the health care system in Quebec was worse than in Ontario, presumably because of some characteristic of the health care system in Quebec which distinguishes it from other provinces. One of the few things which does that is that there is no extra billing. Therefore, I ask the Hon. Member how he can on the one hand quote something which indicates that the health care system, which has the very characteristics the Canada Health Act is designed to bring about in all provinces, is in a bad situation, and at the same time indicate that he is going to vote for the Bill? I do not understand how he can say one thing and do another, or perhaps I misunderstand the Hon. Member.

Mr. Gurbin: Mr. Speaker, I suppose the implication of "schizophrenia" implies there are two possibilities when, indeed, I do not know whether there is any philosophical consistency in any of the approaches of the New Democratic Party. What I would like to clarify, first of all, is that I never even mentioned extra billing. What I am talking about is a level of bureaucracy which is trying, from its vantage point, to tell a doctor where he can practise or how he should practise and under what constraints. It is trying to say how the system will work. For instance, as a very specific example, if a consultation were required under the system as it was practised—I do not know if it is the same way now in Quebec—this might mean that a patient could well be exposed to radiation through an entirely new set of x-rays just so an additional consultation could be undertaken on behalf of that patient. That is the only way that a specialist would be able to be considered financially, if you will, for a consultation on behalf of a patient. Those are the types of things which happen.

Those impositions, such as telling a doctor where he can or cannot practise, are every bit as important as anything like extra billing. If the Hon. Member wants to talk about extra billing, I can talk about that as well. However, I suggest to every Hon. Member in this House that the biggest example of extra billing we have anywhere is taxation, because all we are doing is taking it with one hand and laying it out with the other hand to get elected.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I believe if the Hon. Member is concerned about allegations with respect to credibility, he has no one to blame but himself. I would ask the Hon. Member to clarify the record by indicating where he got the $3 million figure he used for advertising, because the Department's records indicate $1.1 million, none of which was not used for television or radio advertising. It was used for posters and commercial health forms and inserts.

I would also like to have the Hon. Member refer to the blues of this morning. He will find that the Minister did not refer to a general over-abundance of facilities in the country. She was referring to one province, Alberta, and not the country as a whole.

I would also like to ask the Hon. Member to tell us which Hon. Members on this side of the House were smiling when he, in his opinion, was making an important point in his speech. I do not recall any Hon. Members smiling in any kind of fashion at the Hon. Member, certainly not with pleasure.

Mr. Gurbin: If the figure of $3 million was wrong, then I will easily apologize. If the $1.1 million is correct, then that only indicates a level required to support 22 Canadian lives rather than 60. I do not believe it changes the basic point I was trying to make. However, I will apologize for the inaccuracy of the figure.

In terms of whether it is the Province of Alberta or any other province, the province has the responsibility to the citizens—

Miss Bégin: That is not the point.

Mr. Gurbin: That is very much the point. The people in my area of Bruce-Grey who are living in a certain environment and who are involved in activities as Canadians in a province of Canada, have every right to expect to receive health care at levels which are the same, as far as possible, as those in high density downtown urban areas. That is a principle which I fear is jeopardized by the attitude of the Minister because, I believe, the sensitivity, to start with, is certainly not there. It is hard enough at the provincial level to relate to the individual concerns of a small community, let alone try to do that at the federal level, and we are talking about countless communities across Canada. We cannot manage what we are doing here now.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a factual question. Could the Hon. Member tell us if, in his riding, the people have unfettered access to general family practice and to specialist services without extra billing? In other words, if someone becomes sick, can that person be admitted to a hospital in his area, and be given anaesthetist services without having to sign forms saying that he realizes there is extra billing involved? Can a woman find an obstetrician and gynaecologist quite easily who offers these services? Are there choices or do people have to drive great distances to find doctors who are opted in? I would like to know the answer to that question, because I have heard that people in rural areas sometimes have limited choices. I wonder if the Hon. Member could give us some background on that?

Mr. Gurbin: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to respond to the question because I believe it goes right to the heart of the whole issue. I believe the short answer, which I would like to clarify at some other time, is that in the community I personally lived in, yes, indeed, to a level which is beyond most other communities in that area, and that is the second part of the answer. There is no extra billing. I did not extra bill as a physician. In fact, when I started practice we often got paid in kind. So I know where the beef is sometimes. I do not believe that is really what the Hon. Member wanted to ask, with all due respect. There is no extra billing there but there are many physicians who would rather, because of the professional comfort—forgetting for the moment about their personal lives—have the security of working in an area where they have the backup of specialists. Those are things which we are evolving in the smaller communities as much as possible. When we can support the infrastructure which is important in a local hospital, and when the community at large feels that that is something we should work for, we do that. We have been able to do that, but we have done it with some difficulty because we have a bureaucracy which has its own level of control, whether in putting in an operating room, or providing another anaesthetic machine, a capital expenditure program, or whatever it is. At one more level, with the lack of sensitivity which comes when you have to do that, there are increased dangers, Mr. Speaker.

• (1620)

Mr. Fisher: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. We have here a rare opportunity to get some insight on this Bill from a practicing physician. Therefore, would you ask the House for unanimous consent to continue this discussion a little longer.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I do not think the rules allow for an extension of the ten-minute question period. Of course, the House can do whatever it wishes with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent for continuation of this ten-minue question period?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Then before I recognize the next speaker—

Mr. McDermid: The socialists do not want to be informed.

Miss Bégin: Misinformed, you mean.

Mr. McDermid: They never listen to the doctors.

CANADA HEALTH ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss Bégin that Bill C-3, an Act relating to cash contributions by Canada in respect of insured health services provided under provincial health care insurance plans and amounts payable by Canada in respect of extended health care services and to amend and repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, the debate on this much trumpeted Bill, the Canada Health Act, is about to come to a close. I rise with rather mixed emotions to participate in third reading. There have been questions and answers with respect to the Quebec model and whether or not it is desirable. I agree that Bill C-3 appears to adopt the Quebec model as the national model. But I suggest that there is more to that Quebec model when the medical practioners in Quebec come before our committee and say, "Please do not adopt that model as the national model". There is more to it, they say, than user fees and extra billing.

As Hon. Members know, the Bill before us bears little resemblance to the Bill we debated at second reading. The great Canada Health Act in its preamble and in its objects and purposes has really been stripped to the bare bones. Witness after witness appeared before us in committee and quickly passed over the reference to user fees and extra billing. They went on to comment about those things which concerned them the most. They suggested numerous changes and improvements which could be and should be made to our medicare system, which has been said by both sides of the House to be the best medicare system in the world. But those witnesses had read the preamble and the original draft of Clause 3 and Clause 4. They were certain that although this particular Bill, Bill C-3, concerned itself with extra billing and user fees, there would surely be a second phase or a second Bill coming along to remedy the wrongs they wanted to put right. The amendments will clearly dispel the illusion they carried through the earlier readings and at committee.

Really, Mr. Speaker, one would have thought that before this Government embarked on medicare reform it would have entered into negotiations and discussions at length with both the medical profession and the provinces, whose responsibility it is to deliver the services and find the money to pay for them.

But what about the doctors? Much has been said at the outset of medicare about the fact that doctors would not become functionaries of the state. That was clearly stated. That great man, Mr. Justice Hall, said a few weeks ago that there was no present crisis and that it was still not the intention of the system as we know it today that doctors become functionaries of the state. There was a possible concern about an erosion down the line if, for instance, extra billing and user fees were to continue to grow. But whenever Mr. Justice Hall spoke of user fees and extra billing, he kept it in balance because he was concerned with the professionalism of the medical practitioners and about continuing the adequacy, or, as some people call it, the reasonableness, of compensation.

I am not sure, Mr. Speaker, whether there still is, but there was earlier, the time to carry out the kind of consultation necessary to ensure the continued availability of the best medicare system available to Canadians. But no, this fixation on user fees, this Minister's abhorrence of extra billing, has moved the Bill forward until we see it before us on third reading gutted to the point where nothing is left save penalties to be imposed on provinces which might permit extra billing or user fees. What is left in its place is a shallow piece of legislation which ignores the pressing concerns those witnesses brought before us for our consideration.

At the heart of any discussion of medicare is funding, that is, cost containment in relation to the quality of medicine delivered to Canadians. Canadians want and expect the best medicare system their Government can provide. But, as I pointed out at the time of second reading, what can Canadians really afford to pay with respect to this social assistance program, the most desirable one perhaps of all social assistance programs in this Government's legislation? The cost of our health care system is running today at about $30 billion a year, $22 billion of which comes from the public sector. This would put each taxpayer's annual medicare tab—check it out, Mr. Parliamentary Secretary—at $2,200. Drugs, for the most part, dental bills, eye glasses and so on, will be added to that amount.

Staggering though these costs may be, it is still not enough to support the kind of medicare system that we would like to have and that we are asking for from day to day. Therefore, alternate sources of financing are being sought. The Minister of National Health and Welfare has rejected altogether the use of extra billing and user fees to close that gap. Well, we on this side agree and we will support the Bill. We agree that extra billing and user fees are not desirable, nor are they generally acceptable. Nonetheless, now that the Minister has said she will not accept user fees or extra billing, what will she accept? The Minister has little to say with respect to assisting the provinces as they are faced with a cost of increasing needs for health care. It is a long time since 1977 when we entered into block funding. Times have not stopped and we are not stagnant at the level of medicare of 1977. Province bashing by the Minister or anyone else does not serve our national interest when it comes to Canada's medicare system. A Government committed to the best possible health care system cannot be helped when it gets into province bashing or bullying everyone around the block. One is left to ask what the commitment of the Government to medicare is.

I remember participating in the sports pool debate and Bill C-95. The Government wanted the necessary legislation passed so that it would get the necessary funds to conduct medical research and so that the beneficiaries of fitness and amateur sport and the arts and cultural council would receive the millions of dollars which would follow therefrom. There is a commitment by Government to the welfare of Canadians. That was a real commitment for medical research. I hardly need to emphasize the importance of medical research and the promotion of physical activity among Canadians. Over the long term these two aspects represent perhaps the best chance of reducing health care costs. Huge benefits would also follow from an emphasis on medical research and on an improved medical fitness improvement program. Those benefits would flow through to our economic side when the record spending of this Government is considered. Yet consider the contrast in pouring the billions and billions of dollars into medicare and the less than $8 million spent on fitness programs under the Fitness Canada umbrella. That has been the legacy of not one but four Ministers of Fitness and Amateur Sport since 1980.

Additional funding for medical research and fitness and amateur sport is not only necessary but should be a priority. Even if the sports pool ever gets off the ground, this is no way to respond to that need. Quite frankly, it is an insult to those who have a real concern for the future of the health of Canadians. That the Government can continue to tell Canadians that health care is a priority when medical research and fitness and amateur sport programs such as these are left to the whims of the lottery buying public is simply a continuation of the Government's fiction. No one can plan on a secure or long-term basis what number of Canadians will purchase what number of tickets in the next draw, nor should anyone have to. From the standpoint of those directly concerned with the success or otherwise of the sports pool, the ineptitude displayed by the Government in establishing a sports pool corporation is even worse. It has been quite a spectacle, Mr. Speaker. The Government wants to establish a betting pool on professional sporting events, so no effort is made to reach an agreement with the sporting groups regarding scheduling of baseball or hockey. No contact has been made. Their own advisers tell them they should be able to go ahead, and there is no one to stop them. They are going to face litigation in that respect.

The Government wants to maintain the existing lottery agreement with the provinces, so no effort is made to negotiate a settlement by which the sports pool could complement rather than destroy that agreement. Now the provinces are entering into a court case with the federal Government on the sports pool. Finally, the Government claims to want to operate a sports pool, but it absolutely refuses to enter into an agreement undertaking that it will not go back into lotteries or will not enter some electronic get rich quick scheme tomorrow, the day after, or next year. Meanwhile, medical research and the other sports pool beneficiaries go begging. As I mentioned earlier, it is a rather nebulous commitment to the health and well-being of Canadians when you consider the development of that piece of legislation.

The debate on Bill C-3 could easily have led to a reappraisal of medicare if the Government had entered into negotiations, discussion and co-operation rather than heading into a confrontation with respect to Bill C-95 and now Bill C-3. The new Canada Health Act should be addressing the future. The emphasis should be on prevention, research and physical fitness. There is no foresight or direction in this new Bill, just as there is none in the Government across the aisle. That, Mr. Speaker, is the tragedy confronting the House at third reading of Bill C-3. An opportunity has been lost. An opportunity has been thrown away. Bill C-3 looks backward rather than forward.

I would like to see, as would all Canadians, a commitment by the Government to address the funding problems which have led to the symptoms of extra billing and user fees. Unless those funding shortages are met, we will truly have a medicare crisis. Crisis is not too strong a word to use. Medicare must be as good as we can make it for all Canadians, and it must also be fair and equitable for the medical profession. Physicians' incomes have not kept pace with inflation nor with salary increases in other professions. Dentists, lawyers and accountants have all seen their incomes rise much more quickly than those of doctors. Comparative shopping will soon demonstrate the degree of latitude available to those professionals. Physicians, on the other hand, have not such latitude. Their fees are established by schedules negotiated with the provinces. When a doctor was dissatisfied with the fee schedule, extra billing was allowed to him or her, as the case may be, and an adjustment could be made. Medicare was available to Canadians and was not yet eroded or in a state of crisis. Bill C-3 puts an end to extra billing but is not clear on the matter of how physicians will be compensated, as Bill C-3 Clause 12(1)(c) states. In fact, doctors will have no alternative but to work for their schedule of fees. This is easier said than done. Pressure from many sides, especially from the taxpayers, will be exerted to trim costs or to hold the line. With extra billing gone, doctors have lost the mechanism for registering dissatisfaction with the schedule of fees. In our opinion, it was incumbent upon the Government to find some means of adequately assuring medical practitioners of that reasonable compensation.

So it is with user fees. Like extra billing, user fees rose to a position of concern when costs began to increase in the daily operation of facilities. Public funds have now been stretched to the limit. How is a hospital to pay its bills? We in Ontario have already experienced the option of cutbacks in the number of hospital beds and holdups in expansion plans. Indeed, some of those expansion plans have been shelved. Each cost-cutting option reduces the quality and availability of medical health care. Has the Minister fixed levels of care beyond which the provinces might not slip, and, if they do, what does the Government propose to do and how will it intervene?

I see that you are signalling to me to finish, Mr. Speaker, but let me say that the Government has been careful to point out that Bill C-3 is merely a consolidation of those two earlier health Acts. It is no wonder that one is left to question the medical commitment of the Government. In its concern for accessibility, the Association of Interns and Residents wanted to receive the assurance in the legislation that they would be able to opt in in the provinces that licence them so that accessibility to medicare would continue to be guaranteed to them.

I will close by saying that the Minister had hoped to make an election issue out of this piece of legislation. That plan has backfired rather badly. I hoped that the Minister would be in her seat because I could ask her at this point why she is continuing to use preserved medicare as an envelope stuffer when the time for representation has long since passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten minute period for questions and comments. There are only a couple of minutes left, if the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacLellan) wishes to ask a short question.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, in his remarks, the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) referred to the per capita cost of $2,000 per person if all the benefits are provided. I would like to know how he arrived at that figure. If we provided everything that one could expect under medicare, it would still be only $1,200 per person. How did he arrive at the figure of $2,000?

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): The Parliamentary Secretary was not listening. I said there was $2,200 for every taxpayer. When one considers the number of taxpayers and divides the costs in the blue book Estimates, it results in a figure of $2,200 per taxpayer.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order. It being 4:45 p.m., pursuant to Order made Friday, March 30, 1984, it is my duty to interrupt any proceedings now before the House and to put forthwith every question necessary for the disposal of all stages of Bill C-21, an Act respecting Borrowing Authority.

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1984-85

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed from March 28, 1984, consideration of the motion of Mr. MacLaren that Bill C-21, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and the amendment of Mr. Darling (p. 2292).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Mr. Darling, seconded by Mr. Blenkarn, moved:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"this House holds the opinion that the granting of an authority for the borrowing of a sum greater than the amount required to meet the government's needs to the end of the current fiscal year is objectionable in principle and this House therefore declines to give second reading to Bill C-21, An Act to provide borrowing authority."

The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Darling) which was negatived on the following division:

The question is now on the main motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion?

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. On this division, there might be a disposition of the House, should you seek consent, to have the same votes apply as though they had been taken and so recorded in Hansard.

Mr. Pinard: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we agree provided it is made very clear that the motion will carry.

Mr. Speaker: In other words, the vote will be exactly the reverse of the vote on the amendment and will be applied to the motion, is that correct?

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, Sir.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, I was not present for the first vote but I wonder if my vote could be included on the second vote.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the vote of the Hon. Member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan) to be added?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. MacLaren) which was agreed to on the following division.

UNITED GRAIN GROWERS LIMITED

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State) moved that Bill S-10, to amend the Act of incorporation of United Grain Growers Limited, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders.

He said: Mr. Speaker, United Grain Growers Limited was incorporated under a general act of incorporation passed by the Government of Canada. This Act has been amended eight times since 1911, as need was demonstrated, the more recent amendments being passed in 1967 and in 1976. Due to its uniqueness, this association must apply to Parliament each time it requires an amendment. The United Grain Growers has a membership of 93,540 persons. There are 79,052 membership shareholders and 14,458 Class "A" shareholders.

The purpose of S-10 is to increase the authorized share capital by $20 million, from $25 million to $45 million in shares. It is also to increase Class "A" shares which one individual may hold from 5,000 to 15,000. The United Grain Growers wishes to have the authority to pay additional share dividends, raised from 3 per cent to 5 per cent. It wishes also to have the authority to declare dividends on a quarterly or semi-annual basis instead of on an annual basis only.

This company is unique and does not come under blanket corporations. It has 36,947 members in Alberta, 32,921 members in Saskatchewan and 19,499 members in Manitoba. This amendment is to allow the company to take care of expansion, provide working capital and to provide greater dividends to the grain growers of the western provinces. I urge the House, therefore, to approve the passage of Bill S-10, which was approved in the Senate.

United Grain Growers Limited

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my Party, I support the Bill which has just been introduced by my good friend, the Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Bockstael). My understanding was that this Bill was going to come up a little later this week, and there are a number of our Members who wanted to participate in this debate. However, having regard to the fact that there is some urgency, we certainly would not want to delay the passage of this Bill, although we want to ensure that it is properly considered.

I share the view of my hon. friend that the United Grain Growers has a very outstanding record of service and performance to the grain industry, the agricultural industry and, indeed, to the producers. United Grain Growers is the oldest farmer-owned commercial organization in Canada. It was established in 1906 and it has for more than 75 years been part of the western agricultural scene. It has moreover, Mr. Speaker, been accredited as a very objective spokesman for the agricultural industry, not only for the grain producers but for agriculture as a whole. I believe although it is primarily interested in the grain handling, purchasing and transportation aspect of agriculture, its operations and its interest extend far beyond those perimeters.

It was very interesting during the course of the Crow debate to note the position taken by the United Grain Growers on behalf of agriculture as a whole. I believe we all recognize that it approached this subject with a broader point of view that simply from the standpoint of the grain producing sector, recognizing that the livestock and processing industries are all integral and vital parts of the total agricultural scene. I believe that when we look at the organization as a whole, we must recognize that it is very much a part of the western Canadian agricultural scene. I feel it is also fair to say that it really is bound up in the economic, social and rural fabric of western Canada.

The Hon. Member has pointed out that there are some 96,000 members owning some 500 licensed elevators. Something which I think has to be noted is that this company has pioneered in providing service in the areas of the north, for example, the Peace River district and the northern parts of the provinces. It has clearly provided a service where previously the service had not been all that good. As an organization, it has seen fit to move into those areas where others have not been quite as prominent.

I believe when one looks at the fact that it is an organization which covers very broadly the three Prairie Provinces, and when one looks at the membership as provided by a document given to me by the Hon. Member for St. Boniface, one sees some 36,000 of the shareholders reside in Alberta, 32,900 in Saskatchewan and 19,499 in the Province of Manitoba, with some 4,000 other members. This clearly reflects the western agricultural scene.

I am not sure, Mr. Speaker, whether it is the intention of the House to proceed with this Bill.

Mr. Evans: We could defer it to Thursday if you want, and go to another Bill right now.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Parliamentary Secretary has suggested that we could defer this Bill until Thursday. I certainly have no objection to that. As far as I am concerned, we are into the Bill. If it is the disposition of the House to continue, we have Hon. Members on this side who want to speak on it. On the other hand, if the Parliamentary Secretary is suggesting it would be more appropriate to leave it to Thursday, I certainly have no objections in that regard. If there have been some consultations and an understanding between the House Leaders, I could discontinue my remarks and we could go on to some other matters. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that this is a rather strange way to be negotiating House business. I thought that is the reason we had House Leaders' meeting. I would like to have given a little more thought to my comments, but I will certainly accede to what I understand to be an informal agreement, as long as I have the right to continue my remarks if and when we resume the debate.

• (1740)

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I believe there would be unanimous consent to defer further debate on this matter until Thursday, during which time negotiations can take place to see if Bill S-10 could not be dealt with expeditiously. If there is unanimous consent, we could move directly to Bill C-224, which I believe Members are prepared to debate at this time.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, as far as we are concerned the Bill could pass now. If it is preferred that it go until Thursday, we are agreeable to that. I had the pleasure and honour of the House accepting a private Bill of mine a few years ago, and this is one of the few occasions on which it might happen. We are ready to do it today or Thursday.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): There is a request that consideration of this Bill be deferred until Thursday. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Agreed and so ordered.

Shall all orders and items preceding Order No. 73 be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

SENIOR CITIZENS ADVISORY ASSEMBLY ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine) moved that Bill C-224, an Act to contitute a senior citizens advisory assembly, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to have the opportunity to discuss my Private Members' Bill C-224. In listening to the remarks of the Parliamentary Secretary, he said we would extend the hour "if necessary". When he says that, I hope that is an agreement for at least the subject matter to be referred to the appropriate Standing Committee.

First of all I would like to thank Harold Brown, a fine outstanding senior citizen of Winnipeg, who informed me of the silver haired legislature in Florida. This assembly debates bills affecting senior citizens, making recommendations and amendments before a bill is considered in its final stages by the Florida State legislature. This has proven to be an efficient and effective means by which senior citizens are able to more directly form and reform the legislation which constitutes their standard of living. Because of Harold Brown's knowledge of this senior's parliament, I was, with his input, able to draft the Bill based along the same lines as the Florida silver haired legislature, and similar to the popular Canadian Youth Parliament.

The Bill has received a great deal of support from all, including, I am pleased to say, the federal Liberal Government and the NDP. I would like to thank everyone who has endorsed this proposal, and I would like to make special mention of the Speaker of the House, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Lang), the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) and the Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller) all of whom have made known their support for my Bill.

I am exceptionally thankful and grateful for the support I received from the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin). She stated in a recent letter to Harold Brown that she wanted him to know that her Department will, as it has in the past, give priority to any attempts which will enable older Canadians to voice their concern.

It has been made apparent that all Members of Parliament from all Parties are aware that communication between the federal Government and senior citizens leaves much to be desired. Because of the possible all-Party agreement to be given to this Bill, I am optimistic that we as a concerned united group will today provide Canada's older population with a clear avenue to increased participation in the future development of policies affecting their welfare. I believe all Members of Parliament, through their close contacts with seniors in their constituencies and through regular visits at senior citizens' homes, realize that a large number of our older population are not living at an acceptable standard and there is an urgent and immediate need for improvement.

There are today well over two million senior citizens in Canada. In the year 2031, roughly 21 per cent of the population will be senior citizens. Currently a prime problem is senior citizen housing, more specifically affordable senior citizen housing. Other major difficulties include the rate of pensions as opposed to the cost of living, increased health care needs, facing and dealing with fast-paced technological changes, confusing and complex new government regulations and available programs, and of course the old problem of cutting through government red tape. With the seniors' population increasing at approximately 3 per cent a year, the need for a direct line to the federal Government has never been greater.

Bill C-224, an Act to constitute a senior citizens' advisory assembly, could, with the support of all Members of this House, become this open and direct line of communication. It would be made up, naturally, of senior citizens who could collectively make representations to the federal Government on a regular basis, sharing with us their experience and judgment, which would no doubt enable us to deal more effectively with the issues affecting them. The following goals reflect the intent of my Bill to form a seniors assembly:

(a) to provide an educational opportunity for the elderly to learn through participation in legislative activities;

(b) to increase the level of participation and involvement of retired professionals that may have no prior or continuing contact with older adult programs;

(c) to develop a collective awareness among older persons with regard to needs, issues and policies that are of concern to themselves and their cohorts;

(d) to stimulate community organization involvement with groups of older adults; and

(e) to provide a stronger base for influencing policy which reflects the self perceived needs of the older population.

Should this Bill be implemented, the Minister would establish a board for the purpose of constituting the assembly. This board would be responsible for recognizing senior citizen's organizations and allocating membership in the assembly. Procedures would be prepared to call and conduct national meetings. No remuneration will be received from the Crown for either the services of the members of the assembly or the board as they relate to the seniors advisory assembly.

Similar to the workings of the Youth Parliament, the seniors assembly would meet annually in Ottawa during the recess, in the House of Commons or Senate Chamber. Here debate could take place and recommendations made. Unfortunately it appears that there is a definite lack of interest and concern for the thoughts and feelings of senior citizens, particularly by the federal Government. Their views are all too often ignored and their recommendations are disregarded. We have before us a great wealth of wisdom being overlooked. However, I believe that if tapped, all Canadians, as well as the federal Government, can benefit from this opulence of experience.

I can accurately state that many of the residents of personal care homes in Winnipeg-Assiniboine are ready, willing and able to offer their services. The Heritage Nursing Home, Holiday Haven, Oakview Place, Manitoba Odd Fellow's Home, Tuxedo Villa and West Park Manor, to name a few, are occupied by people who know what the problems are, and can offer expert advice and solutions if only given the opportunity. Bill C-224 is that opportunity, Mr. Speaker.

• (1750)

In the spring of 1983 Harold Brown circulated a questionnaire through the Manitoba Seniors' Journal in an effort to determine the view of seniors regarding different aspects of the seniors' Parliament. For example, one question asked whether the basis for a seniors' Parliament should be provincial or federal. The results were very close to a tie, indicating 46 per cent provincial and 54 per cent federal. Two answers suggested both. Another question had answers showing that seniors are overwhelmingly against seniors' nominees having political affiliation. Eighty-four per cent were against, feeling that seniors would fare better as seniors rather than as Party representatives. Regarding election procedures for the seniors assembly, 66 per cent were for using federal or provincial election procedures.

The most controversial question showed 60 per cent suggested an elected member should receive a nominal sum plus expenses, while a very positive 40 per cent suggested that members should receive out of pocket expenses only. A major fear is that the pay would reach large figures resulting in appointments to the body, thereby lessening the strength of the entire assembly. In addition to this, 84 per cent felt that Government grants should cover the cost of the seniors' Parliament, as is the case with youth and women's Parliament. It is believed that an assembly of this nature would gradually evolve into being the authentic voice of seniors, fully representative of all of them from all of Canada. It would be of benefit to all Canadians, Mr. Speaker.

As every Member here is aware, there are a number of organizations representing seniors citizens across Canada and all are attempting to do one thing. That is to improve the condition for seniors. I have heard from organizations such as the United Elders Association of B.C., the Senior Citizens Action Now Association of Saskatchewan, the many seniors' organizations of Manitoba including the Manitoba Society of Seniors, the St. Andrews over 60 Group and the 1600 Recreation Club. As well I have heard from the Quebec Provincial Executive Council for the Rights of the Retired and the National Pensioners and Senior Citizens Federation. Each organization has the common objective of assisting senior citizens in Canada.

We hear of far too many instances where senior citizens are treated as second class citizens and are barely able to make ends meet. These people have made great contributions to this country over the years and are now entitled to much more than we are giving. However, to be able to meet their needs, it is essential that we know their needs. Because of the tremendous support I have received from the Members of this House, Liberals, NDP and of course, Conservatives alike, I am very hopeful that this will receive the endorsement of every Member in this House who is genuinely concerned about the plight of senior citizens. Many Members have already supported this proposal in writing. I would like to express my thanks for that. However, it is my desire that on behalf of the senior citizens of this country every Member will confirm their endorsement of Bill C-224 today, or at least have the subject matter referred to the appropriate standing committee.

With an issue of this magnitude, affecting thousands upon thousands of individuals, it is only right that Members put their political affiliation out of mind for one moment and bring to mind the urgent requirement for a seniors' Parliament. It is the responsibility of every Member of this House to represent to the best of their ability the interests of their constituents. In adopting this Bill or its subject matter the people of Canada will realize that their individual needs are being recognized and, most importantly, being acted upon. All senior citizens in Canada join me today in requesting the support of the House in its entirety to enable them the opportunity to collectively represent themselves to this Government.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to spend too much time speaking to this Bill because the merit of the Bill itself speak quite eloquently to the need for such a measure proposed by the Hon. Member. It gives me some pleasure to have the opportunity to speak to Bill C-224, an Act to Constitute a Senior Citizens Advisory Assembly.

Anyone who has examined or paid any attention to the problems senior citizens have in our society would be quite willing, and indeed enthusiastic, to give their support to this particular measure. It is quite true that there are numerous organizations in the country which represent seniors' groups and which, to one degree or another, are quite vocal in their advocacy on behalf of seniors and their rights in society. One real need which exists is that seniors to be involved in the process of decision making which affects their lives directly, rather than the simple paternalistic approach that has been used toward seniors by people in authority, people in Government and politicians in the past. This particular Bill provides a unique mechanism to provide for that kind of input.

I thought the need was spelled out very well in the Canadian non-governmental organization's report on aging which was presented to the Minister of Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) in preparation for the world assembly on aging held in Vienna in Autumn of 1982. I would like to quote in part from that particular report because I think it says it all. It said that a prime target emerged during the discussions that took place on this report itself. It said:

> It is the matter of involvement of senior citizens in affairs in which they have a stake. Seniors must be involved in the development of policies and programs which affect them. This applies to all levels of government, social agencies and senior centers. The past and present relationships, in general, consider older persons to be consumers rather than partners in the action.
> Acceptance of seniors as partners in the decision-making process requires a re-educating of politicians, officials, professionals and older persons themselves.
>
> Our discussion-participants say this partnership must be a goal if the status of older persons in Canadian society, is of importance.
> No government has the right to decide on the lifestyle or way of thinking of older persons, but it must help them improve their quality of life.

If this Bill were to be accepted and the provisions within the Bill made a reality it would go a long way to accomplishing what seniors obviously desire in this country, that is to have real input into the decisions being made which affect their lives. As I said previously, I think the mechanisms provided in this Bill would go a long way towards accomplishing that.

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity today to speak on Bill C-224. This Bill would establish an advisory assembly of senior citizens to assist the federal Government in developing policies and providing services for Canada's ever increasing number in this segment of the population.

I would first like to say I am in complete agreement with the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) concerning the need for input from older Canadians with respect to the development of policies and programs which affect them. However, let me hasten to add that the Government has always made a concerted effort to obtain the opinions of seniors concerning their own needs and the development of policies and programs which address those needs. Thus, I am proud of the many initiatives taken by the federal Government over the years to help our older citizens.

One of the most dramatic examples of public participation, including that of the elderly, has been the process of reforming Canada's retirement income system, sometimes referred to as the "Great Pension Debate". Since the early 1970s, when several reports identified major shortcomings in both public and private pensions, there have been inumerable briefs, reports, conferences, seminars, workshops and task forces to discuss these problems and recommend changes to alleviate them.

Briefly, Canada's public pension system consists of the Old Age Security Program which currently provides a pension of $266.28 per month to everyone aged 65 and over who meet residency requirements. An additional pension, the Guaranteed Income Supplement, is payable to OAS recipients who have little or no income from private sources. Currently, the maximum GIS is $267.33 per month at a single rate and $206.11 per month at the married rate. If the spouse of an OAS recipient is over age 60 but not yet 65, she or he may be entitled to a spouses allowance, an income tested benefit which is equivalent to OAS plus GIS at the married rate, currently $472.39 per month. Thus, a single elderly person is currently guaranteed an income of at least $533.61 per month. A couple, one of whom is aged 65 or over and the other at least 60, is guaranteed $944.78 per month. These guarantees are increased quarterly to increases in the consumer price index. Also, several provinces have income tested programs which would provide additional guarantees to many GIS and spouses allowance recipients.

The other major public pension programs are the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans. These are earnings related plans to which virtually all employed persons in Canada contribute. Benefits from these two plans are fully indexed annually to increases in the CPI. They provide for retirement pensions as well as protection against death and disability. Currently, the maximum retirement pension is $387.50 per month.

Governments also provide assistance with respect to employers sponsored pension plans, which cover roughly one-half of Canada's work force, by allowing the employee and employer each to deduct up to $3,500 per year in contributions from taxable income. Finally, for those who do not belong to an employee pension, a deduction of up to $5,500 per year is allowed for contributions to a Registered Retirement Savings Plan.

During the last six years the federal Government has provided three major forums for Canadians of all ages to express their views concerning problems in the pension system and to suggest ways in which it could be improved. These forums were the Special Senate Committee on Retirement Age Policies in 1978, The National Pensions Conference in 1981 and the Special Parliamentary Committee on Pension Reform in 1983. In addition, the National Conference on Aging was staged in 1983 to examine and provide advice in respect of the many interrelated problems of aging, including retirement income.

I am happy to be able to inform the House that Canada's seniors responded enthusiastically in all of these forums. In addition, many briefs and letters were sent to various Ministers of the federal Government describing the retirement income problems faced by senior citizens and proposing a wide variety of solutions. In short, the participation of our older citizens in defining and solving our pension problems has been extensive and was invaluable in helping to reach the significant degree of consensus which has been achieved in respect of reforming our current system.

Major reforms now appear to be at hand but I would remind you that not all of the recommendations received were held in abeyance pending development of a comprehensive package of reforms. For example, many of the briefs and letters from seniors, organizations, as well as individuals, pointed to the inadequacy of income guarantees for those with little or no private income, particularly those living alone.

• (1805)

The federal Government responded to these recommendations by twice increasing the amount of the Guaranteed Income Supplement, in 1979 by $20 per month per household and in 1980 by $35 per month per household over and above regular indexing. In addition, two more increases in GIS are now scheduled as part of the pension reform package announced in the recent Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). On July 1 this year, GIS for singles and one-pensioner couples is to be increased by $25 per month. A second $25 increase will take effect on December 1, 1984.

More than 750,000 pensioners, three-quarters of whom are women, are expected to benefit from these increases. These increases plus regular cost-of-living increases in July, October and January are expected to raise the OAS-GIS income guarantee for singles and one-pensioner families from its current level of $533.61 per month to more than $600 per month by January 1, 1985.

Another important change to GIS will provide for additional benefits for pensioners who qualify for only a partial Old Age Security pension in order to guarantee them the same minimum income as other elderly Canadians. Initially some 3,000 pensioners will benefit from this change, nearly all of whom immigrated to Canada as adults. By 1990 about 25,000 pensioners will be receiving these additional GIS benefits.

Many of the problems which were identified during the pension debate were related to the inadequacy of the benefits which women by and large were receiving from the system. Moreover, while most of the problems in respect of inadequate benefits related to employee pension plan, several CPP shortcomings which adversely affected women were also identified. I am pleased to say that the Budget presented on February 15, 1984 proposed a number of changes which will result in women being treated more fairly under GPP in the future. In particular, survivor benefits will no longer be terminated upon remarriage, and credit splitting, currently available in the case of divorce, will also become automatic when the younger spouse reaches age 65.

The Budget also announced the Government's intention to begin discussions with the provinces this year on other CPP changes, including the provisions of a homemaker's pension, an increase in the drop-out period and greater flexibility in the age of retirement. However, as I mentioned earlier, the most serious problems in the retirement income system are seen by most to be in the private pension plan. In particular, private plans cover only about one-half of the labour force, leaving most of the remainder with inadequate arrangements to ensure that they have enough income in retirement. Private pensions are seldom adjusted fully to reflect increases in the cost of living, so their purchasing power usually declines dramatically during periods of inflation. Often it requires ten years or more of service before a worker who leaves a job prior to retirement can become eligible for a deferred pension. The spouses of plan members often are left with no benefits at all in the event that they become widowed or divorced.

The Budget proposes a number of changes to private pension plans in respect of these problems. To meet the widespread concern that coverage by employer-sponsored pension plans is inadequate, plan membership will be made compulsory for full-time and part-time employees where pension plans exist for a particular occupational group. Regular part-time employees may no longer be excluded because of their part-time status. In addition, I am confident that many of the smaller employers who do not currently sponsor pension plans will take advantage of the opportunity to make direct contributions on behalf of their employees to the new Registered Pension Accounts.

With respect to the declining purchasing power of pensions, proposed amendments to pension legislation will ensure substantial protection against inflation for employees under federal jurisdiction by requiring pensions-in-pay and deferred benefits to be adjusted annually by at least 60 per cent of the CPI increases.

However, to ensure that this does not place too onerous a burden on plan sponsors, mandatory increases are limited to a maximum of 8 per cent and will be applicable only to benefits earned after the effective date of legislation. Of course, I am also confident that many employers will extend these increases voluntarily to benefits earned prior to the legislation coming into force.

Workers who for one reason or another change jobs will be assured fair treatment by improvements in vesting in portability of private pensions. That is, employees will have a right to benefits arising from employer's contributions as well as their own after two years of participation in the plan. Terminating employees will be able to transfer the value of these vested benefits into a new retirement saving mechanism called a registered pension account or an RPA. The RPA will be like a Registered Retirement Savings Plan except that there will be a penalty for cashing it in before retirement. Vested credits may also be left in the previous employer's plan or transferred to the plan of a new employer.

All of the changes which I have mentioned will increase the amount of benefit which women can expect to receive from private pension plans. However, additional changes are planned to ensure that women will also be treated more fairly in the future by increasing the proportion of private pension income which they receive. In that regard, all plans will be required to provide pre-retirement and post-retirement survivors' benefits. Survivor benefits will no longer be terminated on remarriage. Pension credits accumulated during a marriage will be split equally on marriage breakdown. Pension benefits will have to be equal for males and females retiring under identical circumstances.

Problems were also identified during the debate with respect to the provision of tax assistance to save for retirement. In particular, it was found that the amount of tax assistance received depended on both regular lifelong contributions and upon the type of plan to which contributions were made. That is, those unable to contribute in certain years because of other family responsibilities would not be able to make up those contributions later and persons contributing to defined-benefit plans were able to save much more than those whose only choice was to use RRSP's.

The proposals announced in the Budget will correct both of these problems. Tax filers will be able to carry forward any unused deductions and virtually the same amount of assistance will be available irrespective of the type of plan or whether or not the employer contributes. These reforms to public and private pension plans are expected, in the long-run, to increase retirement income by up to 20 per cent and to distribute benefits much more fairly than the current system.

In addition to the examples of pension reform and income security, there are many other programs, sponsored by the federal Government, which open the lines of communication and involvement between the federal Government and Canada's elderly citizens. One example of a highly successful initiative is the New Horizons Program which helps seniors to define their own needs and to develop and implement activities to address these. New Horizons was established to help reduce loneliness among the elderly by encouraging participation in group activities. During the 12 years this program has been in operation, it has financed nearly 25,000 projects involving the participation of perhaps three quarters of a million retired Canadians.

In addition to meeting the primary objective, that is of reducing loneliness, the activities funded under New Horizons have addressed many previously unmet needs of both older and younger segments of our population. For example, many projects such as meals-on-wheels or the undertaking of home repairs for other seniors or the disabled have been of a service nature. By the way, this has been done in my own riding. The New Horizons program has also done a great deal to increase communications between seniors and the Governments through the development of seniors' networks, the establishment of headquarters and organizational structures, the provision of leadership training and the undertaking of membership drives.

Another example of a successful federal initiative to increase the involvement of seniors in identifying the problems of the aged was the establishment in 1980 of the National Advisory Council on Aging. During the four years which this body has been in operation, it has also had impressive results. For example, it undertook the preparation of the report on non-governmental organizations to the World Assembly on Aging in Vienna, an undertaking which involved several months of extensive consultations across Canada. It has also prepared several other briefs and publications, participated in national and international meetings and established a reference centre which makes information on aging very much more widely available.

While the council has made an impressive start, it recognizes that much remains to be done. Consequently, its members have set for themselves an ambitious program for the future. Included in that program is the establishment of a plan to ensure that the concerns of seniors are adequately voiced and reach the ears of those who can do something about them. The issues of health, income, housing, education and communication and the followup to the second Canadian Conference on Aging are five issues which have been selected for immediate action by the council.

In summary, I would like to reiterate that the participation of seniors in developing and implementing the policies which affect them is a matter of the highest priority for the Government. Moreover, the committee of the federal Government to the objective of listening to the concerns of seniors has not only been met, but the Government continues to act to respond to these concerns through program changes such as GIS increases and pension reform as well as other initiatives such as New Horizons. Finally, the National Advisory Council on Aging performs very much the same function as the proposed assembly would have performed.

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, it is with great interest that I read Bill C-224, presented today in the House by the Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie), since in my riding, I represent a large population of senior citizens. There are at least ten senior citizens homes in Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic, and since I often have an opportunity to meet the elderly, I am well aware of their needs.

Bill C-224 is aimed at improving communications between senior citizens and the federal Government. I would like to point out to the Members of this House that we already have two mechanisms within the federal Government through which we keep informed of the needs of our senior citizens. I am referring to the National Advisory Council on the Aged and the New Horizons Program. The latter, as Hon. Members will recall, was established in July 1972, to help Canadian pensioners set up their own organizations to provide for planned activities in their own environment. The primary objective of the program is to reduce the loneliness of many senior citizens and the problems that are so often a consequence of that loneliness.

Since no other country had ever attempted to set up a program of this kind, Canada has been a world leader in research in this field and in creating mechanisms aimed at helping senior citizens to deal with their own problems.

Although no one could anticipate to what extent senior citizens would take part in this kind of undertaking, their reaction has been more than positive. During the twelve years that New Horizons has been in existence, nearly 10,000 groups of senior citizens, representing about one-third of Canadian pensioners, have set up more than 23,000 projects. For thousands of these people, taking part in these projects has been an opportunity to acquire new knowledge and skills and to develop new interests. Participation has been a source of enrichment for many of our elderly fellow citizens, and it has enhanced their relationships with one another and with Canadians as a whole. Because of its success, the New Horizons Program is now being used as a model throughout the world. It has been studied by delegations from a number of foreign countries. Furthermore, it has given Canadians a new perspective on their retirement years. The projects set up by senior citizens within the framework of the New Horizons Program are as varied as they are numerous. However, most of these projects fall into one of the following general categories: service-oriented projects, educational projects, recreational projects, and finally, general development projects.

• (1820)

I would like to give Hon. Members a summary of the kind of activities existing in each of these areas. Across Canada, senior citizens have tried to define certain needs they found were not being met satisfactorily, and it was to meet these needs that New Horizons grants were used to launch their various activities. That is how some projects came to be, including day care centres for adults, home visits, home delivery of meals and renovations of housing for the elderly or the handicapped.

A good many of our senior citizens were unable to attend school during the years when they raised their family, and yet, given an opportunity, they become quite eager to learn. The New Horizons Program acknowledges these facts by funding many courses, symposiums and more or less structured workshops on a wide-ranging series of subjects. In addition, the New Horizons Program is the perfect vehicle to make the elderly increasingly aware of the importance of physical fitness. They are encouraged to get together and attend gymnastic sessions and engage in every kind of sporting activities such as swimming and dancing.

Thanks to funds provided under the New Horizons Program, our senior citizens have published over 400 books on the history of Canada. They have founded museums and restored machinery, tools, antiques, buildings, cemeteries, manufactured objects, paths and historic sites. They have retraced documents and historic etchings, turned out replicas of costumes worn at the beginning of the colony and, through such activities, they have given renewed significance to legends, languages, traditions and various forms of craftsmanship.

Mr. Speaker, the other organization which plays a key role in promoting consultation between the elderly and the federal Government is the National Advisory Council on Aging. We now have two programs which keep the various Departments up to date on the needs of senior citizens. The National Advisory Council on Aging is an independent organization funded by the Department of National Health and Welfare which is relatively new as compared to the New Horizons Program, since it was created by order in council only four years ago, on May 1, 1980. Still, the 18-member council—mostly retired people from every region of Canada—already has a great number of achievements to its credit. The National Advisory Council on Aging has very broad terms of reference, as expected in such an organization, to the extent that it is responsible for helping and advising the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) with respect to all topics related to elderly Canadians. That includes such activities as examining the needs and problems of older people, recommending ways to meet and solve them, consulting national, provincial and local associations concerned with aging, publishing reports and maintaining public debate on aging.

In her speech to inaugurate the Council, the Hon. Monique Bégin, Minister of National Health and Welfare, emphasized the importance of extensive publicity to bring about a change in public attitude towards senior citizens and to enhance government policy on aging. The Minister also urged the Council to make every effort to identify and popularize the results of research on aging and to establish a central information office on aging. In a relatively short time, the National Advisory Council on Aging, with a staff of only five employees, has already published four major publications, set up an information centre which offers a great variety of books on aging to all Canadians, taken part in several international conferences and had extensive consultations with senior citizens' associations throughout the country.

Mr. Speaker, here is the list of the Council's publications. Its first report entitled "Action Priorities" draws the attention of the various Government Departments and agencies, senior citizens' associations and the general public to the most urgent problems which now beset Canadian senior citizens. The second report entitled "Aspects of Aging in the Canadian Population—A Collection of Graphs" is a book on demography published in co-operation with Statistics Canada. The third report on Canadian non-governmental organizations on aging was prepared for the World Assembly on Aging and presents the views of Canadian senior citizens and non-governmental agencies working for the welfare of older Canadians. The most recent report, the fourth one, deals with gerontology. It is a collection of original writings of national interest reprinted and adapted for the study of the aging phenomenon.

The report written for the World Assembly on Aging is particularly important. It resulted from intensive consultations throughout Canada ending with a three-day meeting here in Ottawa in February, 1982. Over 100 people from the ten provinces and the Territories attended this meeting. These participants included senior citizens, professionals and academics working in the field of aging. The views expressed in this report were considered an important aspect of Canada's participation in the World Assembly on Aging held in Vienna. In addition, they provided a good basis for discussion at the Second National Conference on Aging held in Ottawa in the fall of 1983.

As far as the future is concerned, Mr. Speaker, the Council has recently announced its intention to develop an action plan which would include involvement strategies in the fields of health, income, housing, education and communication, as well as the monitoring of its initiatives following the Second Canadian Conference on Aging.

In short, the National Advisory Council has in my opinion already clearly shown its ability to hold consultations and develop policies to meet the concerns of older Canadians. In addition, based on its achievements to date and its ambitious projects for the future, I am convinced that its role as an agency to promote better communications and make recommendations for the development of policies will continue to expand in years to come. Mr. Speaker, I am proud of what our Government has done to set up organizations responsible for improving its communications with senior citizens. In conclusion, the New Horizons Program and the National Advisory Council already play a significant role and would make the creation of a senior citizens advisory assembly as proposed in Bill C-224 redundant.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

BILINGUALISM—MINORITY RIGHTS IN MANITOBA—INQUIRY RESPECTING INTRODUCTION OF RESOLUTIONS IN PARLIAMENT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, on March 6 of this year, I asked the Right Hon. Prime Minister a question concerning the rights of the Franco-Manitoban minority. The House will recall that as a result of the political defeat of the provincial Bill to amend the Constitution of Manitoba, we have a constitutional deadlock today.

The turn of events in Manitoba was caused by, among other things, the refusal of the Progressive Conservative Party of that province to enshrine in the Constitution of Manitoba the right to have access, in both English and French, to the Legislature, the Courts, to parliamentary and judicial institutions, if you prefer and to certain government services.

The Progressive Conservative Opposition in Manitoba, using an approach that could be qualified as parliamentary terrorism, refused to come to the Legislature to vote on the Government's Bill. The result was that the Government was forced to prorogue the Legislature, and the language rights legislation died on the Order Paper.

Mr. Speaker, to many Canadians, both observers and interested parties, there was no doubt that the political solution proposed by the Manitoba NDP Government in May 1983 could have gained acceptance in a spirit of compromise and understanding. A number of reasons relating to political and electoral expendiency are responsible for this political defeat. For a whole year, the Government and the Franco-Manitoban population worked very hard to reach a political settlement. A number of those involved in this issue have tried to destroy instead of build, to retreat instead of advance, so that today, we have suffered a political defeat on this language question, and we now have a linguistic deadlock.

• (1830)

[English]

The hornet's nest stirred up by the Manitoba language dispute exemplifies the degree to which a minority group is obliged to fight for its rights. An outside observer, with little understanding of Canada, or the law of this country, may be forgiven for shaking his head in disbelief that the Supreme Court of Canada should be seized with the problem of a parking ticket. Evidently something more serious and fundamental is at stake in this case.

What this appellant and the other Francophones in Manitoba are seeking is the right to be treated as equals with their English speaking fellow citizens in the legislature and courts of that province which, as we all know, was founded in 1870 on the basis of equality of the English and French speaking population. In so doing, Mr. Speaker, the Franco-Manitobans are seeking no more than what is rightfully theirs. In no way are they tampering with the rights of any other citizen of that province. No one will be harmed, not the English, the Germans, the Ukrainians, the Indians or the Métis. No one will be harmed by extension of these rights to that minority.

A great deal of ink has been spilled over this affair in recent months. Journalists have argued the pros and cons. Our own Liberal leadership candidates have become directly embroiled in it, and politicians of all stripes in the three national Parties are busily patching wounds, plastering over gaps and shifting positions. Never before has a parking ticket received such rapt attention. Never before, Mr. Speaker, has so small a scrap of paper been so savaged by so many. Yet that scrap of paper, innocuous though it may be, symbolizes for many of us the status of the French-speaking minority in a province of Canada. Even if no one can argue the fact that the legislation in question, that is those two statutes, are indeed provincial, the issue at stake is beyond doubt of national importance and significance to Canada.

• (1835)

I have said this before, Mr. Speaker, and I am going to say it again. I am squarely in the camp of those who favour a reference by the federal Government to the Supreme Court of Canada. I do not want to see just the one or two laws which I have mentioned—the Highway Traffic Act, directly related to the parking ticket—declared unconstitutional. Rather, I want to see a judicial decision which resolves the larger issue of the validity of Manitoba's entire body of law. In response to those who say that a Supreme Court decision against Manitoba would result in legal chaos, I say rubbish. Various legal means are at the disposal of the Government to prevent such chaos from occurring. It is of supreme importance to see the principle established that our founding peoples, the English and the French, receive what is their due in this country.

When I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) those questions on March 6 and March 22 I was seeking to get information on two questions. The first question was whether the federal Government was going to intervene in the Bilodeau case, and if it was going to intervene, would it change its factum to reflect a reality. The present situation is that the federal Government is absolutely contradictory in its factum. On the one hand it says in its points of issue that it is the position of the Attorney General of Canada that the Acts of the legislature of Manitoba should be printed and published in both those languages, that is French and English, as a mandatory requirement. The paragraph which follows says that, however, it is also the position of the Attorney General of Canada that because of the doctrine of necessity, the Statutes printed and published in English only prior to 1979 are nonetheless valid. That contradicts the first paragraph.

I am asking the Parliamentary Secretary, who I know is a reasonable man and a good Parliamentary Secretary, if the Government will change that doctrine of necessities approach and eliminate that from its factum. I also want to know if a reference will be made from the federal Government to the Supreme Court on the whole question of the constitutionality of Manitoba's Statutes since 1870. I know there are certain consultations which have been taking place. I also know a decision is forthcoming. The Prime Minister told me that the Cabinet accepted it in principle. However, I would like to know the dates and what questions will be asked. Finally, in that same reference, will there be a question to the courts asking for—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Al MacBain (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for the continued interest he is showing for minority language rights across Canada. I would like to assure him that the federal Government is strongly committed to the protection and enhancement of such rights.

In 1870 the Parliament of Canada enacted the Manitoba Act to establish the Province of Manitoba. This Act is part of the constitution of Canada. Special constitutional protection was provided in that Act for the use of the English and French languages in the courts and legislature of Manitoba. In particular it was provided in Section 23 of the Manitoba Act that the Acts of the legislature of Manitoba shall be printed and published in both English and French. However, in 1890 the Manitoba legislature purported to abolish this constitutional protection and its laws were thereafter passed in English only. On December 13 of 1979 the Supreme Court of Canada reaffirmed the constitutional protection under Section 23 of the Manitoba Act in holding that the 1890 law was invalid.

• (1840)

The Hon. Member will also remember that an agreement was reached on May 16, 1983 by the Government of Canada and the Government of Manitoba to modify the Manitoba Act so that the Government and Legislative Assembly of Manitoba could fulfil their constitutional obligations in an orderly way.

The democratically elected Government of Manitoba has made all possible efforts to secure the adoption of the required constitutional resolution. Unfortunately, we are all aware of the political deadlock which led to the prorogation of the Manitoba Legislature.

In light of these events, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has already stated that the federal Government is exploring the avenues that are open to it and that he is discussing the matter with his Ministers. As indicated by the Prime Minister, a serious option is to go before the Supreme Court. I can assure the Hon. Member that this matter is under active consideration and that a decision should be announced very shortly.

FISHERIES—GREAT LAKES SPORTS FISHING—IMPORTANCE TO TOURIST INDUSTRY. (B) MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, I rose in the House a few days ago to pose a question to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) concerning the subject of enhancement of our fisheries resource in the Great Lakes. The Minister is aware, as I am, that this is only part of a larger question, the protection of our environment and conservation of our natural resources.

In my speech today I would like to touch briefly on the broader themes mentioned above and try to relate the enhancement of sports fishing to those themes. The Minister will know that Canada's reputation as a tourist attraction rests with its beautiful scenery, sparkling lakes and its clean air. It is becoming increasingly difficult to protect those resources. The dictates of economics are threatening to overwhelm the careful judgments of environmentalists. For example, the lower Niagara River is indeed a disgrace. This adversely affects the sports fishing which is the topic of my speech today.

We certainly do not wish to develop the reputation in the eyes of potential tourists as a country which is polluting itself to death. It goes without saying that environmental questions are very much linked to the tourism industry. Tourism is the largest single employer in Canada, providing jobs for over one million people in this country. Those jobs are on the line if our clean air and water are lost.

What about the acid rain question? Fish cannot live in water that is acidic. When the fish die a whole chapter of Canadian history dies with them, along with a host of companies which produce the equipment used by fishermen. For example, in Fort Erie, in my riding a fine line of fishing lures are turned out by Williams Gold Ltd. The Minister is aware of the problem, no doubt. He knows that our fisheries are being destroyed by overly acidic lakes and rivers. I would expect that he will make the appropriate representations on behalf of Canadians to ensure that the problem is looked after.

Sports fishing is a subject which deserves, in my opinion, much more attention on the national level. In fact, there are individuals and groups in this country who are lobbying very strongly for more positive ways of enhancing this very important sport, and I say more power to them. I just received a letter today on this very subject. The writer informed me that 95 per cent of the sports fishing stocking is done by the United States states bordering on the Great Lakes.

I am a fisherman myself and believe that there certainly are many ways to go about enhancing our sports fishing industry in this country, thereby indirectly improving our potential for attracting those very elusive tourist dollars which we need in our country and indeed which seem to be slipping away into the United States because of the higher costs of vacationing in Canada. For example, gasoline is almost double the price here. Therefore, our fishing will have to be pretty good. We must make a concerted effort to publicize the fact that the Great Lakes sports fishery is a resource representing excellent recreational facilities.

With regard to the onshore facilities, provisions must be made to accommodate boats, trailers, and recreational vehicles in areas close to lakes and rivers with good sports fishing potential. Breakwaters must be built to protect marinas and appropriate markings placed for navigation. The onshore facilities are all for nought if a varied and healthy fishery is not present to attract anglers to the improved and expanded facilities which I have described. This should include hatchery facilities and equipment and manpower to undertake comprehensive stocking and restocking of our lakes. The federal Government should work with the provinces to encourage and assist in the restocking which is so imperative. All this takes money, but most of all it takes the political will of committed people at all levels of government.

I will be interested in hearing the response to my question in which I asked the Minister to identify any new programs which would enhance sports fishing on the Great Lakes. I would hope that any new programs would contain the elements I have mentioned. If not, I trust that he would give my suggestions serious thought, given that we are dealing with a resource of tremendous potential, if wisely used.

In conclusion, I call upon the Government to consider seriously means to improve the situation for Canadians and visiting fishermen alike. Briefly, such measures should include monitoring and preserving the quality of our air and water, expansion of facilities to accommodate tourists and tax cuts to ensure that prices are reasonable, and improved conservation and enhancement of our fisheries resources. By actively pursuing these goals, we can improve the quality of life not only for visitors but for those of us who are fortunate enough to live in this beautiful country, to enjoy the outdoors and to enjoy fishing.

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to respond to the question of the Hon. Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz). He has always struck me as being a Member who is sincere about his work. He has not disappointed me at all this evening. Personally, I share his concerns about sports fishing because of its great importance in the Atlantic area, certainly up in the Restigouche area which I have the honour to represent. The mighty Restigouche River and the Atlantic salmon which come up it to spawn and other activities which include sports fishing have been of a personal interest to me for years.

I am delighted to see that the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker), is present in the House. I know he supports me in what I will have to say. Hon. Members will know that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) is keenly interested in the total sports fishery questions across Canada. The Minister has been involved in an active dialogue with sports fishermen and recently sponsored a national conference on the subject. The sports fishery is recognized as an important element of the nation's tourist industry and has a great effect upon the economy. The Department is most interested in taking steps to ensure and nurture its growth.

The Department of Fisheries already has in place in Ontario programs of major significance to the sports fishery. Over 400 small craft harbour facilities are operated in Ontario. In fiscal year 1983-84, over $17 million have been invested in new and improved facilities. The Sea Lamprey Control Program operated out of Sault Ste. Marie is fundamental to the continued existence of the sports fishery in the Great Lakes. Finally, our Great Lakes Research Branch provides much of the information used in identifying fisheries resource problems and developing solutions to them.

Hon. Members will also understand that the nature of the Department's activities in Ontario is different from coastal fisheries, since the responsibility for day to day management of the fishery has been delegated to the province. Thus, there may be considerable interest among members of the sports fishing public in activities similar to our Salmonid Enhancement Program in British Columbia which has been very successful, as is witnessed by the submission to which the Hon. Member referred.

• (1850)

However, the first move along these lines must come from the provinces. We know from past experience in the West Coast Salmonid Enhancement Program that it must continue and go forward. Much has been accomplished in rehabilitating fish stocks with the assistance and co-operation of the public at large. There is an important word in all of these matters facing the fishery today, co-operation. Such involvement has paid big dividends in British Columbia over the past years in terms of the awareness of the resource and support for action to deal with these urgent problems. As a direct consequence, all fisheries, including the sport fishery, will reap significant benefits in the long term. We would be pleased at any time to discuss with the Province of Ontario the very subject that has been raised by the Hon. Member here today, means with which we can move similar initiatives in Ontario.

LABOUR CONDITIONS—UNEMPLOYMENT IN BURNABY, B.C.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, on December 20 last, I raised a question with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) concerning the very high levels of unemployment in my constituency of Burnaby, B.C. I pointed out to the Prime Minister at that time that the latest figures showed that over 5,000 people were collecting unemployment insurance, and that many more were on welfare, their unemployment insurance having run out.

For the past six months, I have taken the opportunity to canvass door to door in my constituency and listen to the concerns of the people I represent. There is no question, both as a result of that door to door canvass and as a result of mail I have received from my constituents and telephone calls to my constituency office, that by far the most important issue which faces the people of Burnaby at the present time is the question of unemployment, specifically jobs and job security.

I recently spoke at a high school in my riding to a group of about 100 students in Grades 11 and 12. I asked how many of them had a parent or older brother or sister who was presently out of work and looking for a job. Over half the students in that group raised their hands.

This issue is the overwhelming concern of the people I represent, and the response of the prime Minister to that question on December 20 was completely unsatisfactory. The Prime Minister said that we have short-term make-work projects such as Canada Works or Summer Canada Works. My constituents want meaningful permanent jobs. They do not want unemployment insurance, welfare or stop-gap employment. Instead of creating such permanent jobs, this Government's policies in many instances have the opposite effect, and destroy those jobs. For example, grants to assist large corporations in replacing labour with capital will effectively throw people out of work.

Comparatively, Canadians have an incredibly wealthy country. We have rich resources, energy and a skilled labour force. Many people ask what on earth has gone wrong that we cannot put this all together to ensure that we have a full employment economy. Instead, we have been de-industrializing in this nation. The manufacturing sector has shrunk. We are increasingly dependent on our resources as hewers of wood and drawers of water. We continue the madness of exporting unprocessed raw materials. The export of raw logs from British Columbia has increased dramatically. Coal and other raw materials are not being processed in Canada.

We continue to rely very heavily on imports of manufactured goods, mining, agricultural and logging machinery, instead of creating jobs by manufacturing that machinery here in Canada. We continue to ship our goods abroad on foreign bottoms instead of shipping them on Canadian ships. Not only do we have to begin the process of creating a strong and viable manufacturing sector in this country, we have to take a tough look at the structure of work itself.

• (1855)

Just last week a woman told me on her doorstep that she was 54 years old and had a number of friends whose children would love to be working right now but could not find work. She said she had been working for 30 years and would be quite prepared to give up her job as long as she had the security of a proper pension. We must look at creative possibilities for the creation of jobs such as early retirement of full pension, the question of the length of the work week itself and effective retraining programs.

There are some who ask how we are going to finance all of those programs. We must effectively declare war on unemployment and make it our number one priority. In the short term, that means capital works projects, putting more money into reforestation, and the acceleration of municipal works projects, energy conservation projects and housing construction. It means putting people to work now. In the longer term, it means reindustrializing and the creation of a manufacturing sector.

The Prime Minister took the commendable initiative of promoting peace worldwide. I suggest that he and his Government now have an obligation to make their number one priority the creation of jobs. The people of Burnaby whom I have the honour to represent are demanding that the Government make meaningful job creation its number one priority. Until then, the Government is effectively condemning literally thousands of people to the economic scrap heap. As the Catholic bishops so eloquently noted in their report of a little over a year ago, that, Mr. Speaker, is fundamentally immoral. My constituents and the people of Canada deserve better.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): On behalf of the Minister, Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer the question raised by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) on December 20, 1983 concerning measures taken by the Government to offer permanent and worthwhile jobs to Canadians.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, I might say that even during this period of financial restraint, the Government has earmarked an unprecedented share of its budget for job creation. Total funds allocated this fiscal year are over $1.2 billion and they will exceed $1.1 billion next year, enabling us to find employment for more than 600,000 Canadians.

The creation of permanent jobs is an objective of the Government, but that cannot be achieved overnight. The Hon. Member has said that young people swell the ranks of the unemployed; unfortunately, it is true that they have a higher unemployment rate because they lack job experience and training. Some employers are reluctant to hire workers without experience, and young people have few opportunities to benefit from on-the-job training.

To put a stop to this vicious circle, the Government has decided to combine its job creation programs so that its human resources initiatives would be united under one or two action strategies, and we now have two programs, Career Access and the Youth Job Corps, which meet this purpose.

The Job Corps, under which each project can be financed for up to three years, offers to those who suffer from any employment handicap the possibility of acquiring basic skills, of getting job counselling and of gaining actual job experience.

The Career Access Program complements the first one by offering employers subsidies so that they may hire people without experience and give them the opportunity to receive on the job training and acquire work experience. While both programs are not specifically aimed at young people, it is expected that they will make up the majority of participants during the next two years.

Two more job-creation programs, Canada Works, and the Local Employment Assistance and Development Program, as well as summer jobs for students will provide our young people with valuable work experience which should increase their employability in the eyes of future employers. During this financial year and the next, we expect that almost 344,000 young people will take advantage of direct job-creation programs.

Mr. Speaker, the government is strongly committed to helping the unemployed find the full-time jobs they deserve. The enormous funds earmarked for direct job creation and training under the Occupational Training Act, the numerous schemes announced in the April budget and the appointment of a Minister of State (Youth), in this case Mrs. Céline Hervieux-Payette, show that the government is determined to create jobs. I would ask the Hon. Member to advise his electors to go to the Canada Employment Centre and apply to the Career Access program aimed at young people and other groups at a disadvantage on the labour market.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order please! The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted.

Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

At 7 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—NEED FOR GOVERNMENT POLICY ON VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo) moved:

That this House condemns the Government for its failure to honour the commitment made both in 1974 and 1981 by Canada's Secretary of State to develop, in co-operation with the voluntary sector, a comprehensive government action policy with respect to the voluntary sector and urges the Government to provide an immediate incentive to Canada's 40,000 registered charities by implementing the give and take tax credit proposal.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in introducing this motion on behalf of the Official Opposition, on behalf of my Party, I do so more in sorrow than in anger. I say sorrow because, after 10 years of promises, of suggestions, of the development of a comprehensive working relationship between Canada's voluntary groups, we are at a stage at which gathering in Ottawa today and yesterday are representatives from 125 of Canada's major national voluntary groups and organizations. They are meeting in a state of frustration and a state of disillusionment about any appreciation on the part of the Government of Canada of their role and their potential for the future of our country. Happily they are meeting with their eye on the future, continuing to try to interpret and advocate to the Government their concerns, their potential and their outlook.

Among the senior executives and leaders of groups from across the country are Canadians with experience in the health care area, the cultural areas of Canada, areas of amateur sports, areas of international voluntary agencies, the religious community, environmental groups and others. They are from what we have come to call a sector of Canadian life, the voluntary groups, the non-profit sector which represents some 40,000 groups and is larger than the number of manufacturing units in Canada.

It is not my intention merely to beat the wind in negative terms, Mr. Speaker. I believe that rather than curse the darkness it is better to light a candle. Therefore, our motion today suggests that the Government enact a proposal which has been before it for nearly a decade—a proposal to provide tax credit. This proposal has its roots in the life of the voluntary agencies of Canada.

For those who are entering into the spirit of today's debate and may wonder just who is involved in this voluntary coalition, let me remind Members of the House and the public that, beginning alphabetically, the list of 125 agencies include the Anglican Church of Canada, the Arthritis Society, Association Canadienne D'Éducation de Langue Française, and Association Canadienne pour la Santé Mentale. It goes on through the Boy Scouts, the Canadian 4-H Council, the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association, the Canadian Cancer Society, Learning Opportunities for Women, the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews, the Canadian Council on Children and Youth, the Red Cross, the Council for Business and the Arts in Canada, Girl Guides, UNICEF and the United Way of Canada.

That will give some idea of the fact that there is no Canadian community without the presence of a voluntary group providing a unique contribution to our way of life. We are trying today to encourage public understanding and to encourage the Government to take this sector seriously. We are asking a fundamental question for Canadian public policy. How can we support, enable and encourage Canada's voluntary sector to play its full role in the development of the Canadian community?

It is ironic that after ten years, leaders of the voluntary agencies should be meeting at this very time, on this very day, in Ottawa, with representatives of the Macdonald Commission. On this morning's agenda the topics for discussion are: the future delivery of human services; the role and domain of the voluntary sector; government and voluntary sectors; nation building and the political process; future role of voluntary sector in Canadian unity; the recognition that society should give for voluntary work; the view and role of the voluntary sector in the redefinition of work for the long-term future; the mechanisms required to provide adequate funding, financial management and accountability. These are all subjects which were first introduced for public discussion more than a decade ago by the report entitled People in Action. I have looked through this report, Mr. Speaker, and I find the recommendations for 1976 are the same ones which are being presented today as if somehow they were new.

I want to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that as we begin our debate today, my colleagues will reflect in their comments upon the input of national voluntary organizations with respect to health care, culture and youth, showing that Canada's voluntary sector operates in the setting of a world community. The Secretary General of the Commonwealth, Shridath Ramphal, in speaking to the coalition leaders at the Conference of National Voluntary Organizations, pointed out on Sunday evening that our world has become demoralized, that hope has diminished. He said that internationalism is in decline and a new militarism is in ascendancy. He struck a note of urgency about today's world and a note of pleading about Canada facing it with a sense of purpose and moral commitment.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, today's question is one which all Hon. Members of the House will want to face. It is a question, unfortunately, that the present Government has not been preoccupied with. The first meeting of this coalition of voluntary agencies ten years ago heard the then Secretary of State announce that he was seeking a whole new relationship between the Government of Canada and the voluntary sector. He announced the establishment of a national advisory council on voluntary action to undertake a full study in government and voluntary sector relations. The report, People in Action, is now a distant memory. Five Secretaries of State have followed and, with the exception of the Hon. David MacDonald, the current Government has placed responsibility for voluntary action in the hands of four Secretaries of State.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that there is a recurring trend in government's approach to this concern, in its approach to the fundamental question I have posed. That trend is a complete dissonance between words and deeds, between rhetoric and action.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche), has raised in the House the issue of voluntary action since 1974. Hon. Members will recall that my Private Members' Bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs in order that it look at incentive tax proposals. However, that reference has not been called before the committee and, therefore, representatives of the voluntary sector and voluntary groups across the country cannot come to testify before it and give of their expertise.

Let me give you another example, Mr. Speaker. At the Coalition of National Voluntary Organizations' most recent plenary conference, Consultation 81, which was held three years ago, the then Secretary of State, now Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox), pledged to the voluntary leaders from across Canada, and I quote from his published statement:

> I am committed to the development of a comprehensive federal Government action policy developed jointly with the voluntary sector.

The current Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) latched on to this rhetoric early in his incumbency. At a conference of the Canadian Centre for Philanthropy in Toronto in November, 1982, he announced this:

> With this in mind I intend to place this matter before cabinet. My plan of action has five objectives.

His first objective was:

> To determine the legal and fiscal framework within which Government and the voluntary sector can work together.

What has happened as a result of these words? Thirteen months later, in December of 1983, the Throne Speech picked up the same rhetoric, speaking of, "Canada's massive, diverse and vital voluntary sector". The speech went on to promise, and I quote:

> The definition of a registered charity under the Income Tax Act and related matters will be referred to a joint parliamentary task force.

● (1120)

I note, Mr. Speaker, that the Secretary of State has tabled today a motion regarding a joint committee of the Senate and House. However, I believe, to be consistent with his own words, that the frame of reference of this joint committee must be broadened to address not only the legal framework but also the fiscal framework. A tax credit proposal should be part of this reference. It should be studied by this committee, not just the definition of charity. The Coalition of National Voluntary Organizations' brief to the Macdonald Commission had a number of comments to make. It spoke about the mood of Canada's voluntary leaders. Here is what they said to him a few weeks ago:

> The voluntary sector displays imagination, initiative and drive, and is full of ideas for improvement of the Canadian community in the future. This sector is threatened, not by change, but rather by neglect, misunderstanding, ignorance and a consequent absence of consistent and supportive behaviour on the part of government.
> The immense contribution of voluntary action to the economy and democracy is often merely assumed, is taken for granted, and is thereby largely invisible in quantifiable terms. Government has demonstrated all possible support short of actual help. Key structural changes, which will enable the voluntary movement to respond to the challenges of the coming decades are important, not only to the tens of thousands of voluntary groups in all parts of Canada, but is fundamentally important for the future of Canada.

In the choice, Mr. Speaker, of futures that the voluntary leadership of our country placed before the Macdonald Commission, they contrasted two alternative scenarios for Canada in the year 2000, a polarized Canada or an integrated Canada. They said that the voluntary sector is a key player in an effort to build an integrated Canada. I support their contention. My Party is committed to strengthening the voluntary sector because we also see voluntary groups as key players in the Canada of tomorrow. We see the role of government as creating the conditions whereby groups in the community can play their full role in the country's future. We have to create incentives and eliminate barriers to full participation in national development by each of the social partners. It is for this reason that we believe in incentives to the private sector to do the job it can do best, that is, to create jobs and innovate with technology so that more wealth can be created and distributed within Canada.

In my Party, Mr. Speaker, we do not have to be persuaded that the voluntary groups across Canada are large employers of lower and middle-income Canadians. We do not have to be persuaded that they offer many less advantaged Canadians a bridge to employment, to participation. We do not have to be persuaded that they are a tremendous engine for training, learning and for citizenship in Canada. Voluntary groups are also the most highly labour intensive part of Canada's service sector. We are now at long last beginning to get the statistics. This is a tribute to the leaders of the Coalition of National Voluntary Organizations who have continued to dig away and press the Government to have Statistics Canada begin to collate information about the impact of these groups on Canadian life.

● (1125)

In terms of the commitment of my Party, Mr. Speaker, during the leadership convention my Leader said:

A complete review of the Government's social programs, with a view to saving money wherever possible, will be a major priority of my Government. Encouraging greater participation of the voluntary sector in delivering our social programs is one way of doing just that.

—Canada's voluntary sector is an untapped resource that not only can reduce government spending, but can actually create jobs in the process.

—most of us in this room are volunteers. Our Party could not survive without them and neither could any other political Party. Let's have Canadians do things for ourselves, instead of having governments and bureaucracies do it for us.

In our Party we want to encourage a balance between the three sectors in Canadian life; government, the private sector and the voluntary sector. This is the balance which the current Government has allowed to erode and which we are committed to restore. This is why we are committed to a fundamental realignment of the tax treatment of charitable giving. We are committed to the principle of a charitable tax credit. We are committed to creating a tax environment which will offer equitable incentives to all taxpayers to support their charities. We want more funds to flow into that sector from taxpayers to whom, as members and supporters, these tens of thousands of organizations will be properly accountable.

Fundamentally, Mr. Speaker, we want to place government in the role of silent partner through the creation of a fair tax regime in which all Canadian taxpayers will enjoy similar incentives. This applies to the corporate taxpayer as well. The voluntary leaders of Canada have noted in their Macdonald Commission brief that small business does not have the same incentive to support charities as does big business. We will change that. Our goal in this reform is simple; to enhance the capacity of the voluntary sector without increasing its dependency on government.

In their proposal and submission to the Macdonald Commission, the coalition leaders have outlined what they have termed the give and take tax proposal, which is based on this incentive principle. They have said that the fundamental problem for individual charitable giving is that the current tax treatment of charitable gifts by individuals is highly inequitable because it is based upon a deduction principle. The cost to taxpayers of their charitable gifts varies inversely with their taxable incomes. They have reminded the Commission that, typically, a taxpayer paying $15,000 in tax who makes a $200 gift to a charity will be able to reduce his tax payment by only $60, whereas a taxpayer paying $60,000 in tax may reduce his tax payment by $100 or more, depending on his province of residence. The cost of the same gift to one of these taxpayers is almost twice as large as the cost to the other.

This must not be allowed to continue, Mr. Speaker. The situation is inequitable, unjust and unfair. In the proposals that the NVO have outlined they have suggested a way of bringing equality in giving and also a mechanism which will encourage support to this vital part of our national life. Therefore, in moving this motion of condemnation of the Government for failing to put in place a comprehensive policy, may I also place before the House a motion which allows a positive action to encourage Canadian volunteers and the groups in which they participate.

Mr. Bockstael: One of the proposals made by these charitable organizations was that the standard $100 deduction that is applicable to all taxpayers should be abolished. Is the Hon. Member in favour of that? I understand that in the most recent Budget this $100 deduction will be eliminated for the year applicable to the 1984 tax year. Is that part of the proposition that the Member was making?

Mr. McLean: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Bockstael) for his question. He may recall that in a publication outlining that give and take tax proposal, which was circulated to all Members, there was an acceptance that the $100 tax deduction be appropriately removed as part of the package of encouragement. When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) introduced the Budget, the leadership in the voluntary sector were aghast to discover that there was take but no give. In other words, removing the tax deductible $100, was really the equivalent of an $80 million tax grab. There were no incentives.

There was general agreement that the $100 tax deduction was not serving the purpose for which it was originally intended, but since no new incentive was put into the system for small voluntary organizations, each donation must now be receipted. Given rising postal costs with no offset for special postal rates by the Government as part of a comprehensive program, and given this increased bureaucratic implication with no new incentives for additional giving, this has been seen as a negative action. There would have been no disagreement if it had been part of the total package.

Mr. Bockstael: Mr. Speaker, the proposal made by these charitable organizations was that 50 per cent of any amount a corporation or individual would donate would be deductible from income tax. It seems that this would remove a great deal of revenue from the federal Government. Does the Hon. Member not believe that this could lead to an imbalance if large corporations or individuals with high incomes were to decide to donate all of their charitable funds to one organization, such as the United Appeal, while donating nothing to the cancer society, for example? It could create great imbalances for these various organizations. That is the way it strikes me, and I wonder if he could comment on that.

Mr. McLean: Mr. Speaker, it would be important for the Hon. Member to study in some depth the information which Canada's National Voluntary Organizations have documented. For example, they have a full discussion paper dating back to May, 1980, entitled "Tax Incentives for Charitable Giving". In their outline, they never suggest that there would not be a base limit and that it would be wide open. The suggestion is to bring some equality.

I believe the Hon. Member was referring to the estimating of costs. In their estimates the voluntary agencies felt that in fact for the first two to three years the Government would actually benefit, just as we have seen it happen with the political tax credit where it has taken a number of years for people to begin to make those changes. This is, of course, in relation to the removal of the $100 standard deduction from which the Government would actually benefit for the first two or three years.

While there are some risks involved in moving into a new system, the question is whether more self-reliance can be encouraged through the strengthening of these groups. For example, let us consider the cost to Government of producing training and retraining programs. The Ross report, which was commissioned by the Secretary of State, indicates that the cost of training and retraining in the voluntary sector is approximately one-third the cost of training under government programs. If we are looking at the outlay from the public purse for youth programs, training and retraining programs, there is a cost effectiveness built right into the system. There is a large amount of public funds for training being channelled into special targeted areas encompassing an entire network of groups. For example, the YMCA and the YWCA have been training youth for years. I believe that allowing them to take the risk of obtaining more corporate and private donations through some incentives in this area must surely be, in the long run, cost effective in terms of the public purse and in terms of the stability of our country.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, my question does not concern the core of the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean) but is a side consideration. At one point in his remarks he compared the role of a Member of Parliament to that of a voluntary worker. I was intrigued by that comparison because I always thought that Members come here because they are forced to do so by their electorates and not on a voluntary basis! I was also intrigued because I thought that when Members who come here do not behave like professionals, they are punished by being relieved of their income, which is not a characteristic of voluntary work. While recognizing the attractiveness of the comparison, I ask the Hon. Member if he would care to expand on it.

Mr. McLean: Mr. Speaker, I believe my comments were related to political Parties and to the role of Parliament as being an extension of the political Party process, which is a voluntary activity. When we examine our Canadian citizenship and the exercise of Parliament and elections, they are dependent upon the participation of Canadians in the process. Behind each Member in the House there are people who will give of themselves to their country as an expression of their citizenship.

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, first, I would certainly like to thank the Hon. Member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean) for raising this important issue today. I think it is of interest not only to Members of Parliament sitting in the House but in fact to all Canadians.

Canada is experiencing a transition in its economy and social structure, whose signs surround us. Some segments of our population find themselves disadvantaged by the current combination of transient factors and must take action to make known their needs, views and possible contributions to society.

Women, youth, the handicapped, the ethnic and language groups, the elderly and natives, all have their particular problems when each seeks, in the concept of Canada, a welcoming reflection of themselves.

It has been a Canadian ideal to accept and respect differences while providing all with equitable access to the social, economic and political institutions and systems of Canada. Although the current economic and social realities put strains on this ideal, I believe we will be able to overcome them and mutually accommodate each other, adapt and move forward together.

The Coalition of National Voluntary Organizations is to be congratulated, especially today when it is having a conference in Ottawa at this very moment that we are debating the issue of voluntary sectors in Canada, in its continuing efforts to bring representatives from all sectors together in order to better understand voluntary action, to exchange ideas and stimulate the thinking on future possibilities for voluntary groups and voluntary action. It is that kind of discussion which I appreciate as it can make an essential contribution to the evaluation of progress on voluntary action and the identification of emerging issues and solutions for consideration.

The Coalition of National Voluntary Organizations in fact, has come into its own as a national voluntary organization helping us all to focus more clearly on certain issues. It is with great pride that the Department of the Secretary of State of Canada, since 1975, since the inception of the coalition, has contributed largely to its annual financing. In fact, more than two-thirds of the annual budget of the coalition is provided through a contribution of the Department of the Secretary of State of Canada. The meeting of the coalition at this very moment in Ottawa is financed through contribution of this Department.

This is the fifth major conference of this type organized by the coalition since its inception in 1975. Along with other national voluntary organizations, the coalition has constantly stressed the importance of voluntary action in a variety of formats, including more recently presentations to the Macdonald Commission, as the Hon. Member referred to previously.

As Secretary of State and the lead Minister for voluntary action, I can appreciate the importance of these efforts. Voluntary action is central to my mandate in two ways. It is a means for various groups with which I deal to organize themselves and thus better communicate their views to the government and to the public. It is also a basic phenomenon of our democracy and an essential manifestation of citizenship.

Although I am partly preaching to the converted, Mr. Speaker, it is useful to recall the value of voluntary action if only to have my words reported to others for whom voluntary action is a new or unfamiliar concept. In doing so, I hope at the same time to indicate the importance of the role which the Government of Canada sees for voluntary action and voluntary groups in our society. Voluntary action by individuals and the work of voluntary associations combine to form that part of our socio-economic life referred to as the voluntary sector. The scope and impact of the voluntary sector in Canada is highlighted when one considers that it includes the efforts of millions of individuals and thousands of groups and organizations. The spirit of voluntary action provides the impetus for creativity and interventions in all aspects of our social, cultural, political and economic life.

As I have noted elsewhere, in 1979 about 2.7 million Canadian volunteers donated the equivalent of approximately 200,000 person years of work, which is more than all the forest industries in Canada provide on an annual basis. In 1980, the revenues of voluntary organizations, which were registered under the Income Tax Act as charities, equal 11 per cent of federal government revenues. Approximately 175,000 jobs were generated directly. These and many other interesting perspectives can be found in the 1983 report by Mr. David Ross, which was published by my Department and released in January, 1983. The impact of voluntary action goes beyond what mere numbers can convey. Volunteers also play a critical role in identifying needs, advising on plans, and interpreting and evaluating programs and services of both the public and the private sectors.

Voluntary associations advocate for and present the views of minorities, communities and public interest in the legislative and regulatory and policy-making processes. Voluntary associations serve as a buffer against the impact of unemployment and social dislocation. They enhance the individual self-worth and improve citizens' capacity for self-reliance. Voluntary groups mobilize community resources to provide facilities and services not generally available from Government programs. They provide meaningful and satisfying work for both paid staff and unpaid volunteers. Voluntary organizations play a significant role in improving Canada's international relations through the provisions of international aid and technical assistance to developing countries. Through structures, such as community development, corporate groups in communities undertake innovative activities which enhance their socio-economic life without heavy dependence on Government funding.

In recognition of the intrinsic value of voluntary action to Canadian society, I and my colleagues have decided to reaffirm our commitment to encourage, facilitate and promote such action. To this end, I have put forward a set of guiding principles that have now been adopted by Cabinet. I would like these principles to be well noted, Mr. Speaker, as they will form the basis of Government policies of encouragement to voluntary action and will guide its actions in this area.

These four principles are as follows: First, respect for the autonomy and independence of voluntary action. Voluntary action is characterized by freedom of action and self-management. Its activities and priorities should be self-determined and freely undertaken.

Second, encouragement for self-reliant development and self-sustaining growth of individual—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, you have made a point a number of times during debates that Members were not allowed to read prepared texts but were to speak in the debates as debates are supposed to be spoken to. I have waited with a great deal of patience, but it would appear that the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) is reading from a text. Perhaps instead of reading from a text he should pass the speech around and we can all read it.

[Translation]

Mr. Tousignant: Mr. Speaker, it irks me to see how the Member opposite is behaving. There have been several occurrences where, as soon as a Member on the Government side reads from a prepared text, Members opposite rise to express their indignation and ask the Chair to put a stop to this practice. On the opposite side of the House, there have been a number of times when we saw Hon. Members reading their speeches. We could intervene as well. Mr. Speaker, we shall have to decide once and for all what attitude should be taken in this House. We on this side of the House have had the courtesy to let Members opposite read their speeches, and I saw this happen several times. Mr. Speaker, I fail to understand how Hon. Members opposite have the nerve to rise so often in the House to apply the Standing Order in question to Members on this side, when we at least have the courtesy to refrain from doing likewise.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The decision is not very hard for the Chair to make. If Hon. Members would refer to Citation 310 in Beauchesne, they would see that it clearly indicates that a Minister of the Crown who is making a statement of policy is allowed to read from a text.

Mr. Joyal: Mr. Speaker, thank you for the interpretation. I was essentially reading a policy statement containing four principles which the Cabinet has adopted following a recommendation that I made in recent months. I can understand the point made by the Hon. Member, but there is no doubt that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Waterloo read from notes. I listened to him very carefully, even though I was in another room because I had to deal with an urgent matter. But with the indulgence of the Chair, I will read the second, third, and fourth principles, and then speak extemporaneously because I know the subject and I can quote at length. However, I thought it was in the public interest for people to know the principles of the Government. If they agree, they could go ahead and continue with their good work.

The second principle to which I was referring, Mr. Speaker, is encouragement for self-reliant development and self-sustaining growth of individuals, communities and voluntary organizations whereby they take the initiative to find and maintain the resources necessary for their own survival and development.

The third principle is co-operation as a basis of a relationship between government and those involved in voluntary action in common pursuit of Canadian societal goals.

Fourth, and last, is mutual accountability of Government and those involved in voluntary action for the efficient use of public funds. These are the four principles which have been recently adopted by the Cabinet.

The next initiative which we had taken following the concern expressed in the Throne Speech of last December was to give notice yesterday in the Order Paper of a motion to appoint a special joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons to examine and report upon the legal framework of voluntary actions, with particular reference to the following. I am happy to quote the three objectives of the new proposals of the Government so that Hon. Members can discuss those points of concern in their further discussions. The objectives are: The adequacy of the definition of charity under the Income Tax Act to reflect current societal realities, the limits to be set for advocacy activities of charities registered under the Income Tax Act, and the appropriate nature of public support for groups which have as a primary object the advocacy of public interest.

This Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons will serve as a forum where various voluntary agencies in Canada can express their views on changes that are necessary. As the Hon. Member pointed out, it is extremely difficult to give a definition of a charitable organization, and I know whereof I speak, because of a study I am very happy to release today, a study we had done by Mr. Neil Brook of York University, in which Mr. Brook gives an exhaustive assessment of the manner in which legislation in Great Britain and the United States has addressed itself to the problem of defining what is meant by charitable organizations. I am releasing the study today so that the voluntary agencies can prepare their briefs and submissions to the Special Joint Committee, notice of which is given in today's Order Paper.

I am also announcing today the new criteria for grants and contributions approved by Treasury Board last Thursday, March 28, further to a recommendation made by the Coalition of National Voluntary Organizations in its previous briefs.

I am also releasing today a study by Arthur Drache—

[English]

—on the tax status and tax treatment of non-profit organizations in order that a Bill be put before this House on the status of non-profit corporations. Those studies have been financed through grants by the Department of the Secretary of State. The various organizations will be able to avoid a waste of money and time trying to put together that information. Those two studies are essential for the work of the special joint task force that will be established, I hope, with the co-operation of all Parties of this House.

I can announce today that the Government of Canada has approved $200,000 more for the budget to further promote voluntary action in Canada. The criteria for the use of that additional money will be announced later today when I have the opportunity to address the Coalition of National Voluntary Organizations in Canada.

Moreover, in the last year, we have been working, with the co-operation of the voluntary sector, in assisting Statistics Canada to develop a basis for data essential to understand and have a better view of the impact of the voluntary sector in Canada. A study was released last January on the economic impact, but that must be further implemented if we are to know more of the kinds of avenues, approaches and initiatives that should be taken.

[Translation]

Thus, Mr. Speaker, the Government initiatives I have just described illustrate the Government's efforts to establish a mechanism that will make it easier to define fiscal policies, that will give all voluntary agencies in Canada a chance to be heard by this Parliament, a chance to take the measures that are necessary to adjust Canada's tax structure to the need for voluntary agencies to remain autonomous and to develop, and to the general needs this country will have to cope with as a growing and prosperous society.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) mentioned the fact that he wished to release documents. Does he intend to table them now?

Mr. Joyal: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): If he does, it will require the unanimous consent of the House. Does the House give its unanimous consent to the documents enumerated by the Secretary of State being tabled now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Agreed.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) whether the special task force on the voluntary sector will also be mandated to look at the whole question of what is legitimate advocacy activity for a registered charity. In response to a recent presentation that I made to the House, the Parliamentary Secretary acknowledged that the system the Government is using does not only leave many grey areas, but in fact so much confusion and doubt exist that we are hurting the registered charities very badly. Can the Minister give us some information on that as well?

Mr. Joyal: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) for his question because it goes to the core of the difficulty of defining charitable organizations under the present Income Tax Act. There is no doubt that if we are to give way to the objective of addressing this issue, one of the first priorities the task force will have to address will be essentially to look into the kind of balance that should be achieved between the advocacy initiatives and the other initiatives that pertain to the nature of the voluntary associations involved. That question is very difficult, as I referred to briefly in my remarks.

In Great Britain many studies have been made on that particular aspect in the last 30 years. To my knowledge, there have been four studies in Britain in the last 20 years. There has been exactly the same kind of concern in the United States, how to achieve a balance between the advocacy initiative and the whole concept or notion of charity.

As the Hon. Member knows, in the last years, we have seen the development of new kinds of voluntary associations which have as a primary purpose the advocacy of special lobby initiatives of government on general public opinion, advocacy for public interest as such. That has very little relationship with the old definition of charity. The definition of charities in Great Britain dates back to the 16th century. That is a primary focus for the special task force in order to help Parliament make a decision on the new phenomenon that we have confronted with Revenue Canada. There are presently some court actions because of some refusals due to the difficulty of addressing that phenomenon. That is why today's Order Paper bears a special notice of a motion to establish a task force to help us achieve that kind of balance.

I hope that the Hon. Member, who has experience in this area, will be a member of the task force so that significant recommendations can be made.

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, I find it extraordinary that the Minister would announce in his speech that an extra $200,000 will be devoted to voluntary organizations and tell us that this day, perhaps in a few minutes, he will make another speech outside the House in which he will state how that money is to be used and what the criteria are. I find it quite extraordinary that the Minister would not inform the House first of the criteria for the $200,000 and the areas within the voluntary organizations that will receive it.

Mr. Joyal: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I was reading some principles and criteria a moment ago when I was interrupted by one of the Hon. Member's colleagues. Therefore, I do not know where the Members opposite stand on that. Do they want the criteria or not? I do not want to play politics on that issue because it is an important issue. I know the Hon. Member's genuine concern for voluntary action in Canada as well as for many issues at the international level, for which I commend him. I made reference to that in my speech.

As I said briefly in my speech, the Government of Canada is concerned about the importance of the development of that sector and the perception that Canadians should have of their own involvement in voluntary organizations.

As has been shown through reports and public statements of many groups, after a certain period of time one finds that it is always the same individuals who volunteer. There is a need to attract a great number of citizens to volunteer work. The essential purpose of the new money is to ensure that voluntary groups will have an opportunity to attract a larger membership and make a greater appeal for contributions. The areas of concern are those that meet with the priorities of our society, especially the social needs of Canadians. There is no doubt that we are going through a difficult economic time. Organizations which appeal particularly to social needs of Canadians will certainly be among the first ones to be considered. On the other hand, there are other organizations which try to foster better understanding among Canadians and a greater level of tolerance.

• (1200)

In his own province, the Hon. Member has seen difficult situations arise in past months and years. We must address those issues and make Canadians more aware of the differences that exist among groups and regions in Canada to make sure that tolerance and respect for human rights is a Canadian objective. Those are a very few of the objectives which will be open to groups to follow according to their own genius, philosophy and objectives. However, we will try to do our utmost to bring to the attention of as many Canadians as possible the need for voluntary action, their roles as individuals in that movement and their capacity to build upon our society.

Mr. McLean: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Minister for the information which he has tabled. I know that all of us who are concerned about the issue will find it helpful. However, I would like to echo the reservations of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche). While there is no voluntary group in Canada which is not short of funds, I would like to suggest to the Minister that the fundamental request of voluntary leaders as I hear it is for fiscal independence. I would suggest to the Minister that despite the fact that the money will be welcome, it is a move in the wrong direction.

As I mentioned in my intervention to the Canadian Centre for philanthropy, the Minister in his speech spoke eloquently on the subject of the legal definition, of a charitable organization, one with which we agree, and also spoke about the question of fiscal incentives. I regret that because of his other responsibilities, we did not have a chance to discuss my question to the Minister in terms of the draft notice, but through the House Leaders it was suggested to him that not only the legal framework but the word "fiscal" should also appear in the preamble so that the tax incentive proposals can clearly appear on the agenda of the joint committee.

Second, I would like to suggest to the Minister that in an amendment to number three which I proposed through the House Leaders, the suggestion with regard to primary objects of advocacy was to make two classes of voluntary agencies in Canada. From my own years in the voluntary sector I know, for example, that one day we may be required to advocate a change in policy and the next day we may be raising funds to meet a need. If the committee indicates that we must have a tier system in Canada, so be it, but why should that be stated in the terms of reference for the task force?

I have one other question to ask in relation to the task force, and it is an important question in terms of the legal framework. Will the Minister speak to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) and ask for a moratorium on the pursuit of voluntary agencies by officials from Revenue Canada under the definition of charity until such time as the committee reports? As the Minister knows, at the moment many cases are being brought to public attention of voluntary agencies being told to change their charters, definitions and purposes. Until this matter is solved, it seems to me that there ought to be a moratorium on that.

Mr. Joyal: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his three questions. I will deal with the last question first. I will certainly pass on the Hon. Member's points to the Hon. Minister who is responsible for Revenue Canada.

There is no doubt that the Minister is aware of the intention of the Government to establish a new definition that will take into account the reality in Canada, and there is no doubt that the Department of National Revenue officers are well aware that Parliament, in the forthcoming days and weeks, will try to achieve a better definition to help guide Canadians in that regard. There is no doubt that the parliamentary committee will have an opportunity to hear not only from voluntary-sector representatives but from government officials as well. It will call upon the Department of the Secretary of State and other Departments which are interested.

I see that my hon. colleague, the Minister of State for External Relations (Mr. Pepin), is present in the House today. An important report is published yearly by his Department dealing with that issue. I am quite sure that Revenue Canada will have an opportunity to state its views in that parliamentary forum.

The second of the Hon. Member's questions dealt with the terms of reference of the special joint committee. I have taken note of his concern—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The Chair regrets to interrupt the Hon. Minister but the time for the question period has expired.

Mr. McLean: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if Members of the House would permit the Minister to complete his comments and permit him to receive a question from a member of the NDP. I think it is important to have this exchange.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is there unanimous consent for the Minister to complete his remarks?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Joyal: In his second question, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member referred to the terms of reference of the special joint committee. I would like to reassure him that there is no doubt that there is a direct relationship in fact between the definition of charity, which of course bears its own consequences in terms of fiscal treatment, and the general kind of public support that should be allowed to charities or voluntary organizations in Canada. In fact, if he would read the third paragraph of the terms of reference which deals with the appropriate nature of public support for groups, I think he would see that it is very clear that it will encompass the overall framework within which the voluntary sector is acting in Canada.

It is impossible to define charities according to the phenomenon of today and the impact on the financial status of those national organizations or according to their capacity for self-reliance. There is no doubt in my mind that they are very closely related. Voluntary groups which will have an opportunity to appear before the special joint committee will certainly have an opportunity to stress that direct relationship.

Dealing with his first question, I do not disagree with the Hon. Member that the objective should be self-reliance. That is the overall policy that we would like to achieve. By its very nature, the voluntary sector is a self-sustaining kind of——activity supported by the members of the community or by the individual.

[English]

However, I think there is room for government support in specific areas where in fact additional help from public sources could give a wider perspective. In my mind, seed money will in fact always remain necessary in order for groups to try to achieve their objectives. There is no doubt that groups will certainly have an opportunity to raise additional money and be self-autonomous. However, in my mind there will always be room in Canada for seed money to help those groups and associations meet their objectives. Many of those groups are national in their scope.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister a question. He has said some very good things about the Government regarding the independence of voluntary organizations. That sounds very good, but in fact, Mr. Speaker, since 1978—and I will go into some detail on this a little later—Revenue Canada has been picking and choosing among voluntary organizations. It has been telling a number of voluntary organizations that when they advocate something as part of their overall program, they are jeopardizing their tax credit position. I will not go into detail, but the Planned Parenthood organization has had such difficulties. Oxfam is now having difficulties and some of the church organizations are having difficulties.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, we have seen some very strange choices in some of the economic think tanks. The Fraser Institute is one of the most partisan institutes. I am not suggesting that it does not have a right to its opinion but it is one of the most partisan think tanks in the country. It is able to give tax receipts to people who make contributions, but other organizations such as the alternative policies groups and Canadian Dimensions, which are not nearly as partisan as the Fraser Institute, have been turned down. I would like the Minister to be able to tell us that not only will they talk about organizations being independent but they will deal with organizations and let them be independent.

Mr. Joyal: Mr. Speaker, I share the Hon. Member's concern about the need for very clear guidelines for the definition within our legislation of what a charitable organization is, especially one that would be or is registered under Revenue Canada. There is no doubt that that is the very basis of the Government's decision to establish a special joint committee.

• (1210)

As the Hon. Member said, in the last year, we have seen a grey zone arising out of that new phenomenon where, besides some initiatives to lobby on grounds of public interest, other groups have continued to perform their usual functions for which they were first established. That is a new phenomenon and it is part of the kind of society that we have to address. There is no doubt that until that new phenomenon finds its way into legislation with clear guidelines more adapted to the present situation, the difficulties that the Hon. Member has mentioned will remain. That is why I call upon him and his Party to join us in this House to establish this special joint committee as soon as possible. In that way, we will open clear and fruitful discussions on the necessity of defining charitable organizations within fiscal legislation and the kind of guidelines that should follow from those changes to the Income Tax Act.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Debate. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I want to associate our Party, the NDP, with the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean). We have always made it clear that we believe that the basic needs of the people of Canada, whether they be health, social services or the arts and culture, should be met through funding by governments at the federal, provincial and municipal levels. At the same time we realize and accept the plain fact that no government, no matter what its philosophy, could provide all the support which worth-while programs deserve. We have always given strong support to the voluntary sector for the wide range of extremely worth-while and necessary activities and services it has provided to large and small communities in the country.

Voluntary groups in Canada, which include churches, associations and foundations, have historically played an historic role in providing badly needed services to the sick, the poor, the disabled and the uneducated. They were doing that 40 and 50 years before governments accepted their responsibility for providing those services. Today, federal, provincial and municipal governments have established a good record of support in such fields as scientific research, the arts, sports and music. All of these groups have support from government but could not have accomplished as much as they have without the financial support and without the time given by hundreds of thousands of Canadian citizens.

Let me illustrate what I am talking about. In the field of health important contributions have been made to research into cancer, multiple sclerosis, heart disease and kidney research. For the arts, voluntary organizations and their members have provided thousands of hours of assistance and hundreds of thousands of dollars for activities in the fields of music, ballet and theatre. Programs for hockey, baseball, track and swimming could not exist or progress as they have done without the financial support and the time given to them by hundreds of thousands of Canadian citizens.

Coming from a multi-ethnic constituency as I do, I realize the contribution made by the ethnic organizations in maintaining and promoting the cultures which they, their parents and grandparents brought to this country and all of which go to making it a better country in which people of all races and religions can live.

The voluntary organizations have been concerned about the treatment they have received from the federal Government for a number of years. They have been calling on the Government to change the Income Tax Act so that in respect of contributions given for charitable purposes, the Act would not be slanted, as it is now, to benefit most those on higher incomes, those who need the benefits the least. They have called on the Government to change the laws in regard to charitable contributions in order to help people on lower incomes who make those contributions, to give them an incentive and an opportunity to contributions, to give them an incentive and an opportunity to contribute as they would like to and are able to.

Two suggestions were made by the voluntary organisations to the Government and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). First, that the automatic $100 deduction for charitable donations, for which no accounting needs to be given, be eliminated from the Income Tax Act; and second, to permit a 50 per cent deduction from income tax for all contributions made for charitable purposes.

In response to that very reasonable proposal made by representatives of all charitable organizations, the kind-hearted Minister of Finance took away the $100 automatic deduction. That meant that people, particularly those in the lower income bracket, had to pay more income tax and it gave the Government something in the neighbourhood of $80 billion in extra revenue. It continued the present system where the person in the lower or middle income person gets a lower deduction than the person on a higher income. The Hon. Member for Waterloo gave the example of a taxpayer earning $15,000 per year who gives $200 to charity and gets a $60 reduction in his income tax and the $50,000 income earner who gives $20 to charity and gets a $100 deduction. That is typical of the so-called just society that the Liberal Government has always espoused.

We support the proposals which the voluntary organizations have made. We are worried, however, because in this period of financial stringency we see governments at various levels opting out of the kind of support they have given for necessary universal programs and leaving them to the private sector. For those of us who believe in a more equitable society and who believe that it is the responsibility of government to meet the needs of the people, this is a horrible lesson taken from President Reagan. It is bringing into Canada some aspects of what has been termed Reaganomics.

Let me illustrate, Mr. Speaker. In many cases voluntary agencies are being asked, urged and used by right-wing provincial governments to substitute for government-provided professional services which, up to now, have been paid for by government and provided by unionized and relatively well paid employees. I will give a couple of examples from the Province of British Columbia. In Kamloops, British Columbia, Tranquil Home, which formerly employed 600 staff, has now been shut down by the Social Credit Government of British Columbia. The Government has given the role of caring for young retarded adults and children, which was the job of Tranquil Home, to the Kamloops Association for the Mentally Retarded, with large responsibility for handling cash payment given to homes taking in children.

There are dangerous implications in this, Mr. Speaker, for the patients in that and other facilities who need special services. Also in British Columbia, Mr. Speaker, there have been similar cuts in daycare funding by the Social Credit Government. A contract was given to the YWCA, which tried to run the daycare program as best it could. That meant it used non-union help, who were paid very little more than the minimum wage. This attempt failed but marks the direction in which voluntary agencies are being pushed in replacing the jobs of full-time social agency workers.

In the few moments I have left I would like to come back to a question which I raised with the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) and point out the difficulties which have arisen in the somewhat mysterious—and I will use no stronger language—interpretations which Revenue Canada has been giving in respect of the rights and abilities of voluntary organizations to issue tax receipts which can be used in calculating income tax. This is not something which has just happened recently. It started in 1978, and I quote from the NVO report entitled Charity Today and Tomorrow. It reads:

> In 1978 Revenue Canada, the Ministry responsible for regulating charitable status, issued Information Circular 78-3, entitled Registered Charities; Political Objects and Activities. The circular outlined examples of activities that Revenue Canada considered 'political' in nature, thereby giving grounds for the loss of denial of charitable status. The circular was widely criticized by charitable organizations as limiting their ability to carry out their charitable objects, particularly in the area of advocacy.
> In the circular, for example, the object or action of inducing the Government to take a stand, change a policy or enact legislation for a purpose particular to the interest of the organization was defined as "political activity."
> —charitable organizations pointed out that it is impossible incontemporary society to work for the attainment of charitable goals without addressing government policy that may hinder or enhance these objectives.

There are all sorts of questions, such as abortion and capital punishment, which can lead to difficulties. The Elizabeth Fry Society, for example, might issue a statement urging continued abolition of capital punishment. Suppose there was a Bill before Parliament, as there have been Private Members' Bills, calling for government to bring back capital punishment. The Elizabeth Fry Society could be in difficulties with Revenue Canada. Churches which support various opposition groups to military dictatorships in some of the Central and South American countries could be in difficulty. OXFAM, for example, Mr. Speaker, is being questioned.

This subject is not something which has just come before us in recent months. It has been before the Government since 1978. The Government has refused to take action and has refused to bring forth a policy which meets present needs. Not only that, Mr. Speaker, the Government has refused to explain some of the decisions which have been made, hiding behind a section of the Income Tax Act which says that income tax matters must be kept private between the person or organization making a claim and the Department. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we had the ridiculous situation several years ago where I and another Hon. Member of the New Democratic Party tried to question the Minister with respect to the Estimates of the Department of National Revenue. We asked how the Fraser Institute could get permission to issue receipts for contributions which could be used for income tax purposes while other organizations, which have other points of view and in fact are much less strenuous in their advocacy than the Fraser Institute, have not been able to get the same status. We were told by the Minister that he could not answer the question because these matters were privileged.

That is just not good enough, Mr. Speaker. When this committee meets, and I am happy we are going to have a committee, some of us are going to try to find out who made these decisions. Were these decisions made by some bureaucrats who were interpreting laws which, in my view, they had no right to do? Or were they receiving advice and recommendations from the Ministers concerned? These questions strike at the very root of the problem. The Minister has enunciated some very fine sentiments, but we have not seen any action. We want to know whether charitable organizations are going to have the real independence which they ought to have or whether the Department or the Minister, whoever it is, is going to be able to pick and choose as they have been doing until recently.

We in this Party support this motion. However, we want to say to the Hon. Minister and to the Government, we are going to have some pretty tough questions to put when that committee meets.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Questions, comments? Debate.

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, I believe it would be appropriate from now on to call the Hon. Member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean) the "two hundred thousand dollar man" because he put a motion on the Order Paper today on behalf of voluntary organizations in Canada and, lo and behold, the Minister made a speech in which he announced he is going to provide an extra $200,000. I do not know where this extra $200,000 came from. It has not been explained. There is supposed to be a shortage of money. However, I congratulate the Hon. Member for Waterloo for his motion. If he would only do this five days in a row, he would have a million dollars for the voluntary organizations in Canada. It just shows you, Mr. Speaker, the power of Parliament.

I want to remind you, Sir, that this motion in the name of the Hon. Member for Waterloo calls for:

—the Government to provide an immediate incentive to Canada's 40,000 registered charities by implementing the give and take tax credit proposal.

The Hon. Member for Waterloo is not asking for a handout. He is asking for an incentive in order that voluntary organizations may be enabled to grow in the fullness of their potential for service to Canada. That is a very important distinction, Mr. Speaker, and I believe that what the Government has done in responding is a sort of cover-up operation. The $200,000 is going to get the headlines and then there is going to be a committee set up, a joint committee of both Houses, to study the question of how far voluntary organizations can go in advocating government policies.

That, of course, is a very controversial question and does need to be studied. However, the Minister knows perfectly well that our Party has been calling for a committee study, a task force study by Parliament, by the Government, not just on the question of advocacy, as important as that is, but a study which would include an examination of tax credit proposals. The Government has rejected that tax credit proposal, and I think this committee is probably going to have a very difficult time in following the terms of reference laid down in the Government motion. It is going to have a very difficult time in opening up the question of whether or not the give and take proposal of the Coalition of National Voluntary Organizations is financially credible.

The Government has shirked its duty, Mr. Speaker, in bringing in a Budget last year which took one half of the give and take tax proposal. It removed the $100 tax deduction without bringing in the tax credit. Then it refused to have a study carried out of the tax credit proposal in setting up this committee. And now it adds insult to injury by saying to the voluntary organizations—and the Minister has probably gone to them right now to make a speech at their luncheon in order to get another headline—that we are going to give you $200,000; aren't we wonderful people? I submit, Sir, that this is a totally inadequate response to the needs of voluntary organizations.

I refer you, Mr. Speaker, and Members of the House to Hansard of June 9, 1980, pages 1898 to 1901, where I am reported to have moved a Private Member's Motion calling for the Government to apply the give and take proposal. The heart of my contention was that the Government would come out ahead financially if it implemented the elimination of the $100 standing deduction and gave a 50 per cent tax credit for donations to registered charities, of whom there are in excess of 40,000 in Canada. I gave figures, which to this day have never been refuted, which show that over a period of four to eight years the Government would come out ahead.

This proposal is serious, it is affordable, yet the Government's financial experts have been telling people in the Department, who, I am led to believe, are in favour of the implementation of this proposal, that we cannot afford it. I submit again that it is an affordable proposal when everything is taken into consideration.

We have to consider the jobs created by voluntary organizations as they expand their community service. The Minister said today that there are 175,000 jobs directly related to their work. There would be a lot more jobs if voluntary organizations achieved their full potential. I say to you, Sir, that implementation of this proposal, as called for in the motion, would provide an incentive for charitable giving to all taxpayers, many of whom have no incentive at all. In addition, it would make the tax incentives as equitable as possible among all income groups. Currently, higher income taxpayers have a greater incentive than lower income taxpayers. The Hon. Member for Waterloo gave many examples of that, and there are many other examples which could be used to buttress the point. Finally, increased tax incentives would strengthen voluntary organizations.

Who are these people we are talking about Mr. Speaker? Is it some little sideline of Canadian life? Not at all. We are talking about people who go right to the heart of the quality of life, a quality of life that no government of any political stripe can ever hope to foster. As I said in 1980:

There are organizations for the disadvantaged within Canada, the poor, the sick and the needy. There are organizations for all groups, from children to the aged. There are health organizations for research and heart and lung disease, cancer, diabetes, muscular dystrophy, health services for the mentally or physically handicapped. There are religious organizations sustaining and preserving our spiritual values, be they Christian, Jewish, Hindu, Islamic or Buddhist. There are international development organizations providing basic needs to people in the developing countries. There are educational organizations for universities, colleges, adult education, child education, future studies. There are environmental organizations for the preservation and beautification of our air, land, water and cities. There are cultural organizations for native and ethnic groups for art, music and dance. Some voluntary organizations serve national needs, others serve local communities. Many of these needs cannot be met by government or business.

The benefits of voluntary activity extend to the participants, recipients and the community as a whole. For the participant, voluntary activity is a means to become involved in his or her community at a time when other community ties such as the family and the work place are being eroded. Voluntary activity helps a person to develop into a better, happier human being with a greater sense of purpose and understanding.

That was the heart of my submission almost four years ago in urging the Government to implement the give and take tax proposal, Mr. Speaker. I want to emphasize again my sense of real concern that the Government did not do that in the Budget of last year. I am concerned that the Government, in setting the criteria for the terms of reference for the joint committee on voluntary organizations, is not going to study this financial question. I am concerned about the Minister attempting to cover up on this through his $200,000 donation, which has nothing whatever to do with increasing the capacity of voluntary organizations to increase their own incentives to raise money.

Therefore, I believe that the committee, as imperfect as it will be for the reasons I have outlined, must get at the question of advocacy. Too many organizations today are impeded from reflecting their own expertise and contribution to policy formulation in this country. They are inhibited by a Revenue Canada which has been following an old fashioned definition of charitable activities which precludes any sort of political activity, when we know that today political activity has many diverse elements to it.

• (1240)

I submit that it is wholly appropriate for a voluntary organization with tax status to advocate policies to the Government of Canada and to submit briefs and write letters to Members of Parliament. It is appropriate for them to take those steps which are necessary to put forward their belief in the construction of public policy that meets the needs of society, as distinct from just coping with the problems with more band-aids. Of course, we are not in favour of charitable organizations conducting any activities which are criminal in nature. The law of Canada which permits you and we to demonstrate should be applied to charitable organizations too. They cannot break the law, just as you and I cannot break the law.

Charitable organizations cannot support any political Party or any candidate for office at the time of an election. That should be obvious. Voluntary organizations which have tax status cannot be involved in the political electioneering process which brings Members to this House. They certainly cannot be involved in activities which will benefit the members of the charities or boards in areas having to do with conflict of interest. Those are questions for separate consideration. However, there is a whole field of activity which I submit is legitimate. I hope that the committee will examine this field of legitimate expression of concern about existing policies and the advocacy of new ones.

In the few moments I have left, Sir, I speak about the international side of voluntary organizations. I have had the experience of travelling around the world studying Canadian non-governmental organizations engaged in development projects. There are many such Canadian organizations. Dollar for dollar, they are doing the best human work of serving and delivering development projects at the community level in health, education and marketing services that I have seen in fairly extensive studies of Canada's foreign aid program around the world. I am in no sense diminishing the bilateral projects that build infrastructure. I am not speaking against the major multilateral projects of the international financial institutions, the United Nations systems programs, the UNDP and Unicef, that provide relief and development on massive scales. I urge the Government of Canada to maintain a proper balance in its aid projects to keep the multilateral ones at an even pace with the bilateral.

There is a special area called Special Programs into which voluntary organizations come. I have been in 17 developing countries in the last five years studying this question quite extensively. It is my belief that on a dollar for dollar basis there is no better return to the Canadian taxpayer than from that money which is spent by voluntary organizations at the local level of human services to which I refer.

Last year the people of Canada, even in a time of economic recession, in supporting voluntary organizations working in the international field, provided $150 million. Those are official figures. There used to be a program called CIDA's Matching Program through which CIDA would match donations dollar for dollar. Yet last year, by CIDA's own figures, it matched only $133 million. It is my submission to you today that the Government of Canada is responding inadequately through the CIDA Special Programs Branch to the outpouring of support by the Canadian people for the voluntary organizations. I would like to see something done about that.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz) and I were members of the Parliamentary Committee on North South Relations. That committee made about 38 recommendations following an 18 month study. The very first recommendation was lifted out into a special position in our report, which was filed in this House under the chairmanship of the Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) in the fall of 1981. We lifted it into a special place to show that our first recommendation was for increased development education in our country. This was not done so that there would be an advertising program for government programs. We were not thinking about that at all. We were thinking about the need to help the Canadian people under the diversities of development today and about why Canada needs to participate fully. There is a double track need. One might call it the humanitarian need. We will not be able to hold our heads up in the world today if we dare to reduce the elementary programs which we have. We are still only contributing .48 per cent of our GNP. That is a long way from the .7 per cent which the Government has pledged to reach by 1990.

The second track of development education would help Canadians to understand that there is a return to Canada for it. In this year, official development assistance in the Estimates before the House is going up to $2.1 billion. We have exceeded $2 billion for the first time. Of that money spent, $1 billion is returned to the Canadian economy through the purchase of goods and services and other ways through which aid is dispensed. Right across the board, including bilateral, multilateral and special programs, there is a $1 return for every $2 that the Canadian Government spends. That is an important fact for Canadians to understand.

I submit, Sir, that Canadians do not yet understand that there is a return to Canada from our involvement in international development. More particularly, in this time of crises in our country, of which we certainly have several, the crises which have impacted on the developing countries as a result of cutting back development projects in those countries is absolutely catastrophic from a human point of view. Despite the progress that has been made by the aid programs of Canada and other nations within the U.N. system, at present 800 million people, almost one-quarter of humanity, are living on the margins of society. Therefore, I submit again, there is a double track reason. All of that is at the heart of development education. In the parliamentary task force we recommended that one per cent of official development assistance be given to development education. The Government has not responded affirmatively at all. The Government has stalled on this question. The CIDA Estimates indicate that less than half of one per cent of ODA is going into development education. Why is that? Members of this House supported the report and that recommendation. I think the Government really has to—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

Mr. Bockstael: Mr. Speaker, some of the earlier speakers drew attention to the fact that there was some difficulty in determining the category of non profit organizations and charitable organizations. Others highlighted the legitimacy of the advocacy of certain groups. The Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) indicated this morning that he was establishing a joint task force of the Senate and the House of Commons whose mandate will be related to the study of the definition of a registered charity under the Income Tax Act. This task force has been the subject of numerous conferences prior to this year. It was the subject at the third annual conference of the Canadian Centre for Philanthropy. I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche) if he agrees that this is the proper approach in his view. Does he feel we should have a task force to clarify this and establish a basis on which charitable organizations would be eligible for tax deduction purposes?

● (1250)

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, as I have said, I have a very serious reservation about the terms of reference for this new joint committee that are to be found on the Order Paper. They certainly do not include a mandate for the committee to study tax credit proposals. That is not in the motion.

Indeed, it is not just a question of simple omission; it is a question of the Government rejecting the submission of the Progressive Conservative Party. I am not sure if the NDP members were consulted, and I would be interested to hear their views on this, but there was a rejection by the Government of the request by the Official Opposition that the task force be empowered to study the tax credit proposals to get finally at the question of finances.

In answer to the Hon. Member, many people are very much offended in our country by a system that we have in our society according to which, if someone gives money to a political Party, a tax credit is given for it. All Members of the House are familiar with that system. If people give $100 to a political Party, they get a $75 tax credit straight from their income tax.

A legitimate question being asked by some is, if such a system is in place for political Parties why is it not in place for registered charities that, in their submission, are doing as much for the country as are political Parties? That is an interesting debatable point which I will not go into now.

The voluntary organizations are not asking for 75 per cent off the $100; they are asking for a 50 per cent tax credit. Of course, that would be affected by the scale of the contributions. It is a much more equitable system.

I say to the Hon. Member that I believe the joint committee that is about to be established as a result of the notice on the Order Paper is inadequate to the total problem that voluntary organizations are facing today, which is not just a question of advocacy and the terms of reference of advocacy and how far one can go in espousing public policy. The committee must also study the ways in which we increase incentives to raise money from the private sector as it has shown the ability to do. Canadians are standing behind these voluntary organisations because they recognize the value of those services.

I believe that the tax credit proposal that the volunteer organizations have put forward for several years, and for which I argued at length in 1980, at least deserves the study by this formal task force now.

Mr. Bockstael: The Hon. Secretary of State, in listing the guidelines of encouragement for voluntary action, stressed co-operation between government and voluntary agencies. It has been the case in my constituency that organizations which would be part of this group seeking a new commitment that 50 per cent of donations would be exempt from income tax, are also organizations that apply for Canada Works, Summer Works and various schemes that the federal Government puts forward.

Is it the Hon. Member's belief that giving these voluntary organizations a larger share of donations and contributions would obviate the need for them to make further demands on the Government in other areas?

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, it certainly might do that. I think that many charitable organizations are sort of being forced into this job-creation program, which is supposed to be set up on an emergency basis, because of their shortage of funds and the needs in their own community. To the extent that we enhance the capacity of voluntary organizations to respond to local needs in the ways in which they are set up, I believe there is a reduced need for the Government to pour money into special job-creation programs. I think the permanent jobs can be created by voluntary organizations.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I want to single out another part of the speech made by the Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche). I think he should be complimented and thanked for what he said about external aid.

He emphasized the tremendous growth which has taken place, which people do not sufficiently realize. He mentioned that we have just passed the $2 billion mark. If growth continues in Canada with GNP at a level of 4 per cent in the next years, we should reach the $5 billion mark by 1990. Too few people realize that.

The second point he made about the return of these expenditures to the Canadian economy is a good one indeed. Unfortunately, I have found that a number of people seem to feel that it is regrettable that so much of it comes back to Canada. Regrettably, there is an ambivalence in the minds of people on that subject. When people like ourselves travel abroad, we find that the receiving countries accept this as a normal and desirable fact, that we will do more when there is something in it for us too. However, again some Canadians do not accept that.

I also want to emphasize what the Hon. Member said about the balance between different types of aid. He was most constructive about this. There are unnecessary debates about it, such as bilateral as opposed to multilateral or different forms of aid, and the Member refused to engage in that theological debate. I compliment him on that.

I wish to give him an opportunity to elaborate on another point. He said that he believed there was still not enough done by CIDA for non governmental organizations of all types. Of course, I am on the other side of this question since what I see being done I find quite considerable. We should all realize that there will be much more available for NGOs if we reach the $5 billion mark. Obviously, to put it quite bluntly, CIDA does not have the personnel to spend all that money, so the agency will have to use more voluntary organizations. Can the Hon. Member expand on this? Does he know of so many non governmental agencies that are waiting to receive money to do some good work? If that is his opinion, would he please illustrate it?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Chair would like to point out that there is one minute left in this question period.

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, how can I do justice to such a question in one minute? I will try, and if you have a blind eye for an extra minute, it might help. With regard to the $5 billion that the official government assistance will reach by 1990 there is a point that is extremely important today. I quite agree with the Minister that it has not yet sunk in with the Canadian public in the same way it might have sunk in with the Government. Much more money will become available.

With respect to some Canadians believing that they do not want to emphasize this return to Canada, I would say that it is perhaps the purest position which I can understand. However, experience has taught me, at least, that we are human beings here and it is public money that we are talking about. Therefore, we must understand that in a time of constraint in our own country, it is not wrong for us to show that by participating in development projects around the world there is a legitimate return to Canada. I think that is a legitimate point to make.

However, I would not want that to be the sole basis of public policy in Canada. The first motivation must be the humanitarian approach. Why are we in this? We are in it because we are part of the world and we cannot sit idly by as Canadians, in our country of tremendous resources, space and technology, if we are not prepared to do something to help our world become a better place. I am not only talking about a better place in terms of spirituality and humanity, but a better place in terms of political safety and security, because many of the local wars being fought around the world, and I am afraid some wars still to come, are caused by the sense of deprivation that is endemic in the Third World countries. The Secretary General of the Commonwealth spoke in Ottawa two days ago and he reminded his audience that by 1990, 80 per cent of humanity will live in the developing countries. That is where the need is and that is where our future markets are. Surely the Government of Canada should be responding in positive terms. In my view, going to .7 per cent of ODA should not cause that much concern.

The Minister asked me specifically to name some voluntary organizations. I do not think there are some who are just waiting for more money, and I would not want my remarks to be interpreted by the Minister as asking him to simply throw the money at the NGOs, not at all. I believe there must be a rational process established whereby organizations such as as CUSO are able to grow and can do so in a systematic way.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

RAILWAYS

SEVEN LIVES LOST AT MILTON RAILWAY CROSSING—IMPROVED SAFEGUARDS DEMANDED

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Mr. Speaker, on March 3, 1978, a train-car accident on Derry Road in Milton, Ontario, took the life of a young woman. At that time the Town of Milton and the Region of Halton requested the Canadian Transport Commission, by way of a resolution, to improve safeguards at the CNR railway crossing. The CTC did not act, and as a result last weekend six teenagers lost their lives at this same railway crossing due to what appears to be a lack of substantial safeguards.

Last night Milton Council unanimously adopted a resolution urging the CTC to reconsider its 1978 rejection. I now call upon the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) to use his offices to arrange forthwith for the erection of cross gates, improved lighting, and additional warning signs at this crossing, before yet another tragedy takes place.

I further call upon the Minister to expand his proposed investigation, by his Ministry's Inspector General of Safety into a full-fledged inquiry, not only concerning the Town of Milton but also with regard to similarly dangerous crossings throughout the country.

Safety provisions must keep up with perpetually changing variables in a community, such as population growth, increased traffic flow, improved road conditions, and subsequent speed limit increases.

Before more needless tragedies such as this one occur again, I urge the Minister once and for all to implement measures to ensure these provisions are current and in the best interests of the safety of all Canadians.

MINING INDUSTRY

ASBESTOS CONTROVERSY

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, in recent months, asbestos has been the subject of a number of controversies in the United States. Controversies of this kind are having, and will continue to have, a disastrous impact on this very important market.

I am from a region that produces this important natural resource, and I believe it is imperative and, in fact, very urgent that our Government should take a firm and unambiguous stand on this issue by making its position public and thus providing irrefutable proof that asbestos can be used without risk.

At the last international symposium in Montreal, experts pointed out the possibility of, and the need for, using asbestos safely. In fact, a number of Departments have since then agreed, in a Memorandum of Agreement, that asbestos could be used without risk.

Asbestos workers are very upset about the rhetoric on this issue. The people of Asbestos are very concerned and they hope our Government will do everything it can to clarify the situation at the international level, especially among our neighbours to the south. Living and working conditions in asbestos mines are comparable to those in other industries, and I even believe they are better in several ways.

As for using asbestos-based products, I would like to point out to the House and to the Canadian people that we have a medical clinic in Asbestos that was built only a few years ago, using a number of asbestos-based materials. I was born in Asbestos, I live there with my family, and believe me, Mr. Speaker, the air is healthy, pure and good to breathe.

CRIMINAL CODE

CALL FOR STRICTER LAWS AGAINST PORNOGRAPHY

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, we are told to tolerate pornography because one man's trash is another man's Shakespeare. I strongly disagree, because a form of behaviour or a social ill is either discouraged or blindly condoned and affirmed by Government.

We have laws forbidding the use and selling of drugs that alter Canadians' minds. So, too, we must also prevent the altering of Canadian minds through pornography.

In Canada today liberal attitudes that tolerate pornography are hiding behind a mask of neutrality. Pornography teaches contempt for, abuse of, and hatred of women and children. There is no place for pornography in Canada today. We in this House cannot be neutral to this assault on men, women, and children.

As I have mentioned before in this House, as a peace officer I have witnessed the violence and degeneration pornography brings to society.

As the Fraser committee on pornography and prostitution meets today in Vancouver, a vast majority of Canadians are calling out for stricter laws against pornography. Yet pornographic video shops continue to open all across our country, including one that opened in my riding just last month.

Let us remember that freedom of speech means freedom of truth, not freedom to slander; freedom from censorship means freedom of art, not freedom of pornography and smut.

This Parliament must quickly pass strict anti-pornography laws.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

CELEBRATION OF 25TH ANNIVERSARY

Mrs. Éva Côté (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, April 2, in the presence of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy), the St. Lawrence Seaway started a new shipping season. This year, the Seaway will be celebrating its twenty-fifth birthday. In June 1954, after more than fifty years of study, debate and negotiations, there was a ceremony to mark the signing of the Canada-U.S. Agreement providing for the joint development of a navigable waterway and an electric power station. The work was finished on schedule in the incredibly short time of five years. The Seaway proved to be a vital part of the North American transport system and has enormously benefited Canada's economy. Traffic on the deep water section of the St. Lawrence was more than 45 million tonnes last year, and the estimated value of the cargo was approximately $10 billion. The savings to users was particularly advantageous for the iron ore mining industry in Quebec and Labrador and for massive shipping of Canadian grain to international markets. During the last season alone, nearly 18 million tonnes of western grain were shipped through the Seaway. Altogether, more than one billion tonnes of commodities have been shipped on the St. Lawrence Seaway since 1959.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to mention that the Canadian St. Lawrence Seaway Authority is a Crown Corporation that is self-financing, acquiring its revenue from toll paid by users. The long term forecast indicates—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Unfortunately, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary's time has expired.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

INVITATION TO CHILEAN NAVAL ATTACHÉ

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, last week Chile's military Government started the week by imposing a curfew and press censorship, and ended it by brutally putting down opposition demonstrations, leaving in its wake 38 people wounded and five dead, one of them a 13 year old boy gunned down on his doorstep by Chilean security forces.

Since it overthrew Chile's last elected Government, the military Government has attacked domestic opposition with torture, detention, assassination, and disappearance. Last week's events only show the world the most recent example of the contempt for democracy held by Chile's military Government, and the lack of professionalism of its military forces.

Next weekend the College Militaire Royal, in St. Jean, Quebec, is holding its assault at arms exercices. I was very disappointed to learn that, despite Chile's dreadful record, the College plans to honour Chile's military attaché to Canada, Col. Jorge Lucar, by inviting him to attend the exercises as a special guest.

The Canadian Armed Forces pride themselves on their commitment to democracy and on their professionalism. Since the world has been shown yet again that Chile's military has nothing but contempt for democracy, and none of the military professionalism to which our officer cadets aspire, the Government should direct those in charge of the College to cancel their invitation to the Chilean military attaché.

FISHING AND HUNTING

OPPOSITION TO CAMPAIGNS LAUNCHED BY PSEUDO-CONSERVATIONIST GROUPS

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, I wish to comment on the disastrous effects that the pseudo-conservationist groups are having on all Canadians. These preservationists, as I call them for a lack of suitable words available in this House, tamper and toy with our international markets, and are reducing the quality of life for millions of Canadians. It is we taxpayers and consumers who are footing the bill for these preservationists to galavant around the world on their ridiculous and asinine crusades to save all that is cute.

Anyone who suggests that we succumb to this blackmail is being shortsighted in thinking that they will go away. Trapping, hunting, sport fishing, commercial fishing, forestry and tourism will all be targets of their propaganda. How many billions of dollars and lives does that represent? We must understand that these people are only interested in maintaining a cash flow, and they will not go away until they have sapped every last sentimental dollar from the public and converted mankind into a herbivore, or possibly worse, a herb.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

SUPPORT FOR YOUTH TRAINING AND EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, many young people in my riding are receiving job skills training and work experience at Canadian Forces Base, Shilo, through the Youth Training and Employment Program. YTEP has been well received in Shilo, and I am sure the Program is also well regarded at other Canadian Forces bases where it is offered.

Unlike many of the ineffective, costly programs which came out of last April's federal Budget, YTEP has met a very real need. It is a cost-effective way to provide employment training and experience to many of Canada's young people. It uses existing facilities and, by teaching job skills, the Program prepares young people to compete in an exceedingly tough job market. It would be a shame, therefore, if the Program did not continue for at least another year.

About 5,000 young people are now benefiting from YTEP. If an extension were to be approved by Cabinet, thousands more young people would benefit. The Program could be even more effective if the young people finishing the Program were given the option of entering the Reserves.

The Government's record on unemployment is certainly nothing to brag about, so I would think that Cabinet would want to seize every opportunity to improve its record. I therefore urge the Government to approve the funds necessary for the extension of the Youth Training and Employment Program.

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY'S POSITION

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, here is the attitude of Progressive Conservative Members towards the development of advanced technology in Quebec. To hear and read what Progressive Conservative Members have been saying during the debate on Bill C-21, an Act to provide borrowing authority, there seems to be an entirely negative attitude towards the development of the aviation industry. Just read the speeches about Bell Helicopter locating in Mirabel, about biotechnology in Montreal and look at their position on Canadair and the Mirabel International Airport. This Party seems to want to restrict Quebecers to the soft sectors such as textiles, footwear and furniture.

The Liberal Party has shown its firm intention of developing this key sector of the industry by spending $2 billion in the greater Montreal area over the last ten months. That shows faith in the future! This means jobs for graduates from the twenty CEGEPs in the Montreal area and the universities in Montreal itself.

THE LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago the Leader of the Conservative Party, the Hon. Member for Central Nova (Mr. Mulroney), said that his Party was "asleep at the switch" when Bill C-169 was passed with all-Party support. The Conservative Leader also said with reference to the legislation:

> I didn't see it, and I don't think anyone in our caucus saw it.

That is not true. The facts are the following.

Conservative Party representatives, including at least one Member of Parliament, the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker), were involved in all-Party meetings with the Chief Electoral Officer where these proposals were agreed to. The Conservative Party endorsed these changes after the election of the new Conservative Leader last summer. Hansard also contradicts the Leader of the Opposition. During debate on the Bill, the Conservative spokesperson, the Hon. Member for North Vancouver-Burnaby (Mr. Cook), said:

> These amendments to the Canada Elections Act have been discussed, gone over and looked at in meetings I have attended for at least a couple of years now. All Parties were involved in open discussion.

The Conservative MP also said:

> This amendment is more severe than is realized . . . but we agreed to it . . . I endorse the changes on behalf of our Party . . . We are delighted to see this legislation go through—

This was said by the Chief Conservative Whip on behalf of his Party and the Leader who appointed him. The words of the Leader of the Opposition can only be understood when we realize that the National Citizens' Coalition claims that scores of letters have been sent to the Chief Tory fund raiser, David Angus, and that the Conservatives are losing financial donations because of their support for the Bill. Perhaps the Conservative Leader prefers dollars over facts.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

IRAN—PERSECUTION OF BAHA'I COMMUNITY

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, concern is still being expressed around the world, except in Iran, about the vicious—

Mr. Fisher: Where's your Leader?

Mr. Nielsen: In your riding.

Mr. Fisher: The poll should go up—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Name him. He is a Fisher, not after souls either.

Mr. Speaker, concern is still being expressed around the world, except in Iran, about the vicious and unprovoked genocidal treatment being meted out by the Government of Iran to the defenceless, law-abiding Baha'i community in that country, during which thousands have lost their lives. I spoke out in protest against this uncivilized conduct in this House as long ago as October, 1981. Persecution persists.

Those of the Baha'i faith are models in any community. Their very faith requires them to love mankind, just as Baha'i means brotherhood. I think this House would support me in urging the Canadian Government to gather support for a motion at the United Nations in protest of this inhuman conduct by Iran, conduct which cries out for condemnation by the civilized countries of the world.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

CANADAIR—ARRANGEMENT WITH GENERAL DYNAMICS LTD.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Did the President of the Treasury Board know, when he approved advances to increase the capital of Canadair, that part of the operation of Canadair involves an arrangement whereby General Dynamics Ltd. produces certain defence products in the Canadair facilities, and that the Canadair financial statement improperly includes the General Dynamics volume in the Canadair sales volume and Canadair gross margins? The effect of including the General Dynamics business in the Canadair statement is to over-estimate grossly the profit of Canadair.

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the amounts in question had been approved not only by Cabinet, but if we are talking about supplementary Estimates, also by this House. We are talking about something that has been a matter of decision by Parliament. With respect to the level of detail my friend is seeking, I will be glad to consult with the Minister responsible for the Canada Development Investment Corporation and Canadair, and get back to him.

NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN GENERAL DYNAMICS AND CANADAIR

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, when the President of the Treasury Board is consulting, will he determine whether it is true that General Dynamics has been trying to re-purchase the facilities it occupies at Plant 4 at Canadair or, in the alternative, have a modified or changed rental agreement with new equipment supplied by Canadair or it will move its entire production to Texas? Will the Minister find out whether Joel Bell or Senator Austin have done anything on this matter? Will he report to the House what effort is being made by the Government to retain these jobs at Canadair? Why has there been no response to the demand by General Dynamics since May, 1983, for a renegotiation of this transaction? With that transaction outstanding, why did he, as President of the Treasury Board, approve these massive estimates and grants to Canadair?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as I just said, this support for Canadair is not only a decision of Cabinet, but a decision that has now been confirmed by the House of Commons. I will be very happy to have the responsible Minister provide the kind of information that my hon. friend is seeking.

I am sure that the public generally, not to mention the workers of Canadair, are pleased to see further evidence of the greatest conversion since St. Paul on the road to Damascus, with my hon. friend, on behalf of his Party, now talking positively, for a change, about the future of Canadair and its workers. What a change! I hope it lasts!

• (1420)

GENERAL DYNAMICS INVOLVEMENT INQUIRY

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): My final supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister advise the House why Senator Austin failed to advise the committees dealing with Estimates for Canadair that a good portion of the activities of Canadair involved activities owned, controlled, and operated by General Dynamics? Can he advise the House why the General Dynamics profits in connection with its Canadian operation are shown as Canadair profits, and why indeed the whole of the General Dynamics-Canadair organization was merged and hidden? Will the Prime Minister give us that information, or is this a secret which we were not supposed to find out?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if it is a secret, I can be excused for not having the answer to the question. I would be happy to take the question as notice, or the insinuation as notice, and try to find an answer.

EFFECT OF AGREEMENT ON JOBS

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Five weeks ago an agreement was reached between the Ministry of State for Economic and Regional Development, Regional Industrial Expansion, a Ministry in the Quebec Government, the Canadair officials, and General Dynamics officials, which will run out on Friday. General Dynamics made the decision that, unless the agreement could be changed, it would shut down Plant 4 of Canadair, and the country would lose 250 jobs. Can the President of the Treasury Board confirm that an agreement will be reached before Friday of this week?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that my hon. friend is also part of this massive conversion. There must have been some mass sprinkling, or baptism, on that side of the House which affected their attitude on this subject.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray: I will be very happy to bring this matter to the attention of the Minister responsible. I am very glad to hear the people on the other side finally talking about saving jobs at Canadair, a commitment we made a long time ago, which they should have made a long time ago as well.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, our concern is for jobs in the country. Our further concern is for equity for taxpayers.

PURCHASE OF CANADAIR

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have a further question to direct to the President of the Treasury Board. It is interesting that General Dynamics is still operating under the umbrella of Canadair. Was Canadair sold by General Dynamics on a voluntary basis, or was it a forced sale by the Government of Canada which was anxious to enter into the aerospace industry and General Dynamics was interested in defence aircraft as opposed to civilian aircraft?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, again I would have to ask the Minister responsible to respond in detail to my friend's question. But I think it is a matter of general knowledge that if the federal Government had not purchased Canadair in 1976, there would be no company today, and there would be no jobs either.

EMPLOYMENT

COST OF BROCHURES ADVERTISING DEPARTMENT'S PROGRAMS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. During the past few days glossy brochures have arrived at the doorsteps of millions of households all across the country. These brochures ostensibly refer to women and to youth. However, in reality each brochure contains on page 1 a very glossy photograph of the Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I would like to ask the Minister to confirm that the cost to the taxpayers of Canada for these two brochures comes to approximately a million and a half dollars. Does he think it appropriate for a Minister who is seeking the leadership of his Party to use the taxpayers' money to finance his campaign?

Some Hon. Members: Leader!

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman used the word "ostensibly". The fact is that the substance of those two publications is informative and offers real information which is of use to the taxpayers of the country when taking advantage of the programs of our Department. At the same time as Members opposite complain that we are not vigorous enough in ensuring that the Canadian public is aware of the services and programs we have, they complain when we indeed undertake programs to do exactly that.

If the Hon. Member had looked at the brochures carefully he would have seen that they contain messages from two other Ministers who are not leadership candidates. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, if I had been tempted to try to use the publication to advance my own interests, I certainly would not have chosen the photograph which is contained within the publications, because it is a rather unflattering picture of me.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Minister is accurate about at least two things. He has mentioned the photograph of himself, and I will not elaborate on that. He is also right in saying that the brochure includes photographs of other Ministers, although they are much smaller in size than the photograph of the Minister and are deeply buried within the publications.

POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Considering that the Minister who is responsible for this brochure is running for the leadership of the Liberal Party, and is the same Minister who brought before Parliament the sleazy creation of a slush fund for jobs for Liberal constituencies, I would like to ask the Prime Minister if he thinks it is appropriate that the people of Canada, on an involuntary basis, should be financing one Minister's leadership campaign.

Mr. Crosbie: Slush pump Roberts.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is the intention of any of the leadership candidates to have the people of Canada finance their campaigns. However, it is the duty of every Member of the House, Minister or not, to discharge his duties as a Minister or as a back-bencher as the case may be. If the Ministers who are running for the leadership are also operating their Departments, they are doing what I asked them to do.

TIMING OF PUBLICATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, there are two aspects to this situation. One is that a Minister of the Crown, just by sheer coincidence, is running for the leadership of the Liberal Party and is using public funds to obtain additional publicity at this time. The other aspect is that we are in a pre-election period, as the Prime Minister knows, and some parties in the House think it appropriate to collect money from their own members and supporters to spend on themselves. I would like to ask the Prime Minister if he thinks it is appropriate to send out glossy brochures containing very little factual information in a pre-election period. This amounts to the people of Canada putting up money, either for one Minister's leadership campaign, or for the intentions of the Liberal Party of Canada in the federal election campaign.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member seems to base his case on the fact that this is a pre-election period. It is always a pre-election period, Mr. Speaker. Under our system of government, an election can be called at any time.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Trudeau: I hear cries of shame from the Tory ranks.

Some Hon. Members: Please! Please!

Mr. Trudeau: Now they are saying please. Just a few days ago the Leader of the Conservative Party was begging me not to try to have an election in the summer. As usual, the Tory Party is badly divided and confused.

MINES AND MINING

LAYOFFS BY INCO AT PORT COLBORNE

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could direct a question to the Minister of Finance. He and the Government will have learned of the very painful decision which had to be made by Incoto lay off close to 500 people at Port Colborne. This is demonstrative of the fact that the mining industry is not participating in what the Minister calls a recovery of our economy, and also demonstrative of the fact that the industry is desperately trying to rationalize its operations and to adjust to dramatically changing world markets. I would ask the Government what it is doing to rationalize its policies and adjust to the circumstances faced by that particular industry.

What is the Government doing, particularly in terms of more innovative tax ideas which would take an inordinate social burden that had been assigned to the industry off of its shoulders, especially in connection with the so-called non-profit taxes, and so on?

• (1430)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows, and is indeed correct in saying, that some sectors of the mining industry, not all of them, have been facing more severe difficulties and have known some lag in benefiting from the recovery in prices and in world demand. Some sectors of the mining industry, however, have been doing much better lately. This will obviously depend on the pick-up in the world demand for their particular products.

The Hon. Member knows that the taxation legislation in this country having to do with mining is one of the most generous of any of the industrialized countries. We are trying to keep our tax legislation very competitive with what is happening in the rest of the world. As a matter of fact, measures taken by both the provincial Governments and the federal Government are extremely generous in some provinces. I am not in the position to comment specifically on the situation in British Columbia in particular, compared to the situation in some other provinces. The fact is that there is a limit on how much we can do in terms of tax incentives in that regard. As the Hon. Member knows, we have other programs having to do with manpower adjustments which are also available to help industries or firms facing particular difficulties.

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF TAX ASSISTANCE LEGISLATION

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, the experience has been that all of the productivity and efficiency gains which have been achieved by industries through these painful decisions have been negated by the Government's heavy tax appetite. I am not so much speaking of the direct taxation which may well compare favourably with their competitors in world markets, but the indirect taxation, the so-called "non-profit" taxes, heavy taxes on energy, fuel and northern living allowances. These kinds of taxes which are such painful impositions on the industry make it exceedingly difficult for it to compete in world markets and to keep its operations going.

Is it the Minister's intention to introduce legislation which would permit the deduction from taxable income of the northern benefits which have been earned? And perhaps the federal Government, instead of using energy as a cash cow, can give our domestic industry a break with respect to the energy taxes which are imposed on it by the federal Government?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I believe if there is one area where a break could be given it is more in the area of royalties imposed by the provinces, which are imposed right at the source. This is a sector where provinces can have a lot of flexibility, if they so desire. These are taxes which are taken right at the beginning of the level of production and would have a beneficial impact if they were to be reduced.

As far as the specific taxes to which my friend referred are concerned, they are taxes of a general nature which are reviewed at the time of every Budget. I had a Budget in the middle of February, and this is the posture I intend to follow for this year.

As far as the taxation of northern allowances is concerned, the Hon. Member knows that I have not changed the legislation vis-à-vis northern allowances. We have not increased taxes in that regard. I have indicated that we would continue with the current remission order.

REQUEST FOR REDUCTION OF ROYALTIES IN YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have one brief supplementary question to direct to the Minister of Finance on his response concerning provincial jurisdiction and royalties.. Will he follow his own advice and have the federal Government, which has sole jurisdiction over royalties in Yukon and the Northwest Territories, reduce those royalties and put mining back on its feet in those two northern Territories?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member looks at the federal taxation levels on northern mines he will find that they compare very favourably altogether with what is happening in every single province in Canada. As a matter of fact the federal Government is extremely generous in its treatment of the mining industry in the North as compared to any other area in the country. There is no doubt about that.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

LAYOFFS BY INCO AT PORT COLBORNE

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): My question is supplementary to the questions asked by the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River, and is directed to the Minister responsible for employment and unemployment. Four hundred and ninety jobs will be lost in my riding, and in particular in the City of Port Colborne, in an area where we presently have 17 per cent unemployment. Surely the people in government having to do with the industry were aware that the market for this particular product was drying up. Why then was no research done to determine a new use for this material, or to determine if a new product could be manufactured in the plant at Port Colborne?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Although it was not clear, Mr. Speaker, from the Hon. Member's misuse of title, I believe he meant to direct the question to me.

The fact is that we have been in touch on a longer term basis, but also as recently as last Friday, to discuss this situation with the company and to use the services which we have under the Employment and Immigration Commission to assist the company in finding both work for workers and transitional arrangements which will try to respond to the problem.

JOB RETRAINING INQUIRY

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. There has been a lack of initiative by this Government. In the western industrialized world, only Ireland and Iceland invest less than we do in research and development. What will the Government now do, and when will job retraining be available for these unemployed workers in the City of Port Colborne?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there does seem to be a certain lack of knowledge on the part of the Hon. Member. I am not responsible for the entire industrialized world with the exception of Ireland. If the Hon. Member is interested in questions about research and development, they would be more appropriately directed to one of my colleagues. I have already given the Hon. Member the answer to the second question he asked. We were in touch with the company as of last Friday. We are discussing with them, and with the unions, programs which we mount to try to respond to the situation there.

SPACE WEAPONRY

ANTI-SATELLITE WEAPONS—CANADIAN POSITION

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister who will know that the United States plans to move quickly ahead on anti-satellite and other space based weapon development and deployment, thereby projecting earthly folly into outer space. In light of the Prime Minister's stated concern about anti-satellite and other space weapons, and his call for a ban on the testing and development of such weapons, will the Prime Minister assure the House that Canada will not only continue to press for such a ban, but also that we will not participate in any way in the testing or development of anti-satellite or other "Star Wars" weapons or technologies?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, without completely endorsing the premise to the question, because in the proposal which the Government has made we do make a distinction between high altitude and low altitude anti-satellite systems—well, I see the hon. lady shaking her head. If she wants to know what the Government's policy is, I will tell her that is what it is. There are obvious reasons for that. If she does not understand it, I will tell her sometime.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Cool off. Just walk around the block, Pierre.

Mr. Trudeau: I think I will do that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, I have not the time to tell the Prime Minister that everyone is laughing at his attempt to differentiate between high altitude and low altitude testing. He only has to talk to some of the experts in the field. However, may I pursue the question with him since I did address it to him in a serious manner, and I would hope that he would reply in a serious manner.

REQUEST THAT CANADA REFUSE TO TEST ANTI-SATELLITE WEAPONS

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Will Canada now—not tomorrow, not next month, not next year—say we will not participate in any way, given our abhorrence of the development of "Star Wars" in outer space? Will the Prime Minister give us his assurance we will not participate in any way in the testing or development of anti-satellite or comparable weapons?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have stated to the Hon. Member what the Government's policy was. She can accept it, or not accept it. However, our policy is, and will continue to be, to oppose any form of development of anti-satellite systems in high altitudes. That is our position at the beginning. Whether we can move on to—I see her guffaw, Mr. Speaker, and I really do not understand. She should know that there are anti-satellite systems now at low altitudes. Therefore, it is not a matter of preventing them from happening, as she suggests. They exist now. That is why we are starting with what does not exist so that it not be brought into existence. When she begins to understand that, then I will continue the dialogue with her.

YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT LEVELS

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In view of recent statements made by the Minister of Finance in Montreal that he does not feel there is a youth unemployment crisis, or a lost generation, when considering all aspects of youth unemployment, will the Minister tell the House whether he concurs with the Minister of Finance's acceptance of an 18 per cent to 20 per cent or higher level of youth unemployment?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the comment of my colleague, the Minister of Finance, when he said that such levels of unemployment were not acceptable.

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, I find it deplorable that the Minister concurs with the Minister of Finance when we have 45 per cent unemployment in ridings in western Canada where affluence used to exist.

CRITERIA APPLICABLE TO YOUTH EMPLOYMENT FUNDS

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary concerns the $150 million allocated to youth in the last Budget. Would the Minister please tell this House how that money will be distributed and what criteria are to be used in applying for these funds? We would like to know now.

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): The Hon. Member cannot know right now, Mr. Speaker, because not all of the decisions relating to that $150 million have been taken. However, he will know all the details very soon.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

INITIAL PRICE FOR WHEAT

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport, who answers for the Wheat Board, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Prairie grain farmers face a substantial drop in wheat prices for two main reasons, the soft world grain price and, of course, a highly competitive market. Will it be government policy to maintain the initial price at or very near to the present level for the 1984-85 crop year, thereby possibly having the Government assume some of the risk by putting some money into the pool at the end of the year? If not, would the Government be prepared to implement offsetting deficiency payments to compensate for what appears to be a disastrous pricing situation facing western farmers this particular year?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, first of all the Hon. Member has a very pessimistic attitude about the price for grain. I know, and he knows, that at this time of the year no crop is created or lost. All of these things have to be taken into consideration. Some of my advisers are telling me that prices are going to increase because of world conditions, et cetera. Of the things he has suggested, the last one in particular is not being considered, but the other two are.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Wheat Board said there could be as much as a $17 a tonne Canadian price drop this coming year. The Minister responsible for the Wheat Board echoes those concerns. Perhaps the two Ministers can get their act together.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, the Government obviously cannot allow western grain agriculture to collapse. The fact that farmers have to bear substantially higher transportation costs this year, along with increases in other input costs, on top of the fact that they have had two poor crop years on the Prairies, will force a lot of farmers into bankruptcy. Will the Government live up to its obligation and make sure that the initial prices for the coming year are maintained at not less than the present prices?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the record will show that initial prices have always been set in a realistic fashion which is satisfactory to the farmers, maybe not 100 per cent satisfactory, but at least 90 per cent.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION LEGISLATION—REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Agriculture. I think he knows that prairie farm income is down and bankruptcies are up. Can he tell the House whether he is willing to make the necessary changes to the western grain stabilization legislation which would trigger a payout to prairie grain farmers for the crop year 1983? A lot of grain farmers are asking for this.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, first of all I am sure the Hon. Member knows that every grain farmer in western Canada does not belong to the Western Grain Stabilization Program. About 76 per cent or 77 per cent belong, so about 23 per cent do not. When he says "farmers", he should say those farmers who belong to the plan.

The Hon. Member knows that we have a report, and I am sure he knows that we are already working on that plan, and we hope to have his co-operation and that of the rest of the House when we present the plan to the House.

TIMING OF INTRODUCTION OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, that is the same answer we have been getting now for weeks from the Minister of Agriculture, and also from the Senator in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. I want to know when we are going to see the changes in that plan. They were promised in the Throne Speech. I suggest he do it now, otherwise all those green hats for the leadership campaign will go to waste.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I put the welfare of farmers ahead of any kind of a campaign.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: As long as the agricultural economy is healthy, the rest of the country goes that way.

Mr. Nystrom: When?

Mr. Whelan: He keeps asking when, Mr. Speaker. Soon.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—PROPOSALS ADVANCED BY UNITED NATIONS SECRETARY GENERAL

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. Does the Government of Canada support the recent proposals of UN Secretary General Perez de Cuellar for gradual steps toward the reunification of Cyprus, including the return of privately-owned properties near Famagusta, at Varosha, to their rightful owners in the Republic of Cyprus?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the position of the Government of Canada has consistently been that the taking of territory in Cyprus is not subject to recognition. The present situation is not based on international recognition or acceptance. It therefore follows that efforts by the UN to bring about a restoration to the conditions and structure on the island, as it previously existed, would be a positive step in that direction. We are watching the Secretary General's initiatives with great interest.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I hope the Minister will do more than watch that initiative.

PRESENCE OF TURKISH TROOPS ON CYPRUS

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, recognizing that the continued partition of Cyprus represents a serious threat to relations between Greece and Turkey, which could lead to a dangerous impairment of the NATO Alliance in the northern Mediterranean, what representation is the Canadian Government making in Ankara and Washington to facilitate the early withdrawal of 30,000 Turkish troops from Cyprus?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is aware of the fact that Canada's commitment to peace and stability in Cyprus is a rather considerable one. We have had a peace-keeping force there for some 20 years. Our position is well known in Ankara and Washington concerning the destabilization of the previous situation in Cyprus by the military action of a number of years ago. Certainly in Ankara and Washington it is known exactly what is our position.

SITUATION OF YOUNG FARMERS IN MANITOBA

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Agriculture. In response to a recent question he said he was going to take action soon to bring in a payout plan under the Western Grain Stabilization Program. I have spent much of this past weekend meeting and talking with farmers. Young farmers are being forced off the land. Since this last weekend two of those young farmers are no longer farming. They have been forced off within the last 24 hours. Is the Minister's Government unable or unwilling to do anything to prevent the loss of an entire generation of younger farmers?

• (1450)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is very easy to say that it is one Minister's or one government's fault, when the previous Government of Manitoba did not do very much either. Agriculture is a joint responsibility. The Hon. Member should consider the amount of money we have loaned people in Manitoba to assist them with advance payments, et cetera. To say that the Government can be the saviour of everyone in that area is not correct. That is what the Member seems to be suggesting in his question.

I met with the Farm Credit people yesterday. I received letters from the Hon. Member's constituency and I also spoke to him. If he has any suggestion on how to save these people, would he please come forward with them? The people from Manitoba are now suggesting by letter that the Government assume ownership of the land, rent it back to the farmers, and then, if the farms become economically viable entities, they be allowed to purchase them. That is what the farmers themselves are writing. I received several letters yesterday suggesting that.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION INTEREST LEVELS

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, trying to pass the buck to the Government of Manitoba in this case is no answer. The farmers want action, and they want it now.

The Minister asked for suggestions. There are two specific things he can do. First of all, if he is willing, he can persuade the Minister of Finance, who for some reason seems very unconcerned about the plight of western Canadian farmers, to abolish the present system of charging 16 per cent and 16.75 per cent on long term Farm Credit Corporation loans. The second thing he can do, if he is willing and able, is persuade the Minister of Finance to abolish the tax on farm fuels.

Mr. Speaker: Will the Hon. Member ask his supplementary question?

Mr. Clark (Brandon-Souris): Will the Minister make those presentations to the Minister of Finance?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member would like, I am sure we can have a briefing arranged for him by the Farm Credit people who are in touch with these people all the time. We gave some of these people reduced interest rates as low as 9 per cent and 10 per cent. These subsidized interest rates cost us, I believe, $36 million over a period of two years. Some of these people have not made a payment in two years.

What is the Hon. Member suggesting we do? These people are involved in production entities that are not giving a proper return. These production entities have not allowed them to make payments even with the reduced interest rates. In some instances, Mr. Speaker, if we gave them free money they would not be able to make ends meet under the production entities in which they are involved. That is only in some instances, not in all. I have made suggestions to the Minister of Finance. We are concerned about these people.

The letters that I received from Macgregor, Manitoba, and some other areas suggest that the Farm Credit Corporation take ownership, lease the land back to the farmers and let them stay on the land for three years, with the right to buy it back if it becomes economically viable. His constituents are suggesting that, Mr. Speaker. If the Hon. Member has any different views from his constituents, let him tell me them.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SRI LANKA—PLIGHT OF TAMIL POPULATION

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade, if he will return to his seat. Tamil speaking Canadians are most concerned about what has happened today and yesterday in Sri Lanka. What can the Minister tell the House about that situation? What, if anything, does he feel the Government of Canada can do to stabilize the situation in Sri Lanka?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am unable to report to the Hon. Member on the happenings in Sri Lanka yesterday and today, to which he refers. There has been an ongoing difficult situation in relation to the Tamil population with regard to certain isolated, and some not so isolated, incidents of violence. We have excellent representation in Colombo. Canadian interests are well taken care of. We are confident that the Government of Sri Lanka is doing all it can to deal with the situation.

GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING

SALARY OF CABINET COMMITTEE CHAIRMAN

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It is with regard to the advertising management group, the Cabinet Committee on Communications. Mr. P. T. Zarry, the Chairman, has been allotted $14 million to advertise 50 Government programs which the public does not know exist. Mr. Zarry is receiving a salary of $2,000 per day, plus expenses. Can the Prime Minister justify an exorbitant salary like that?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge of this. If the Hon. Member had sent me notice, I might have inquired. I will be happy to take notice of the question.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member may have a supplementary question. However, if the Hon. Member is asking for specific details, a question on the Order Paper is usual.

REPORTING AUTHORITY

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Prime Minister can take this as notice as well. Can he also explain why Mr. Zarry reports on his duties to Senator Keith Davey in the other place?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will take notice of that also.

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport). What authority did the Minister have to borrow $12.9 million from the Crown corporation, Loto Canada, to start up his sports lottery?

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, as far as I know, we have not borrowed money from Loto Canada. Certainly not. We are continuing discussions in accordance with our agreement, which is to return to the Consolidated Fund the sums of money that remain in the Loto Canada account.

POSSIBLE USE OF POST OFFICES AS LOCATIONS FOR SPORTS POOL TERMINALS

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister responsible for the Post Office, if he would come into the House. Are you allowing—

Mr. Speaker: Please address the Chair.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, through you, to the Minister responsible for the Post Office, is he going to allow 8,300 of his postal terminals to be betting houses for the new sports pool?

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I may remind the Hon. Member that this Bill was passed by Parliament and that, therefore, it is not an illegal operation. The Parliament of Canada passed a Bill authorizing the establishment of sports pools in Canada.

About the issue whether the Canada Post Corporation will become associated with the new Sports Pool Corporation, discussions are currently taking place between the two agencies, and I can give the House the assurance that the respective authorities of the two corporations will be publishing the results of their discussions very shortly.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplemental to those asked of the Minister of Agriculture with regard to the grain stabilization fund. When is this payout going to be made?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member knows that the legislation has to be changed, et cetera. The formula has to be approved by the House through the necessary procedures. Unless we have speedy concurrence of the House we would be very lucky to make one in 1984. However, we want to do it in 1984.

FISHERIES

NATIONAL SEA PRODUCTS LIMITED—APPOINTMENT OF DIRECTOR

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Mr. David Mann, who was a member of the Kirby task force, is a lawyer in Halifax. He is one of the group known as Regan's raiders, by the way. He is doing all the legal work on the amalgamation and negotiation with shareholders for Fishery Products International Limited, the Newfoundland company in which the Government is a heavy shareholder. He has now been appointed to the Board of Directors of National Sea Products Limited, their prime competitor. The gentleman is also the campaign manager for Mr. John Turner in the Atlantic Provinces. I do not know how he does all this.

This is an obvious conflict of interest. Would the Minister give instructions to Mr. Mann that he must either leave the Board of National Sea or give up his lucrative legal business for the government owned company, Fishery Products International Limited?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I think this is the most eloquent example of double standards.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1500)

Mr. De Bané: The Member who just asked me a question is the brother of one of the directors that the Government of Canada has appointed on Fishery Products.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: So what?

Mr. De Bané: When the Government of Canada appoints his brother, this is not a conflict of interest. When the private sector appoints a lawyer who has worked in the past for the federal Government as an adviser to me, then he criticizes the private sector for having confirmed the choice that I had made years ago.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary. The Hon. Member for St. John's West.

Mr. Tobin: Resign!

Mr. Crosbie: The fact that the hon. gentleman—

Some Hon. Members: Resign!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for St. John's West has the floor.

Some Hon. Members: Resign!

Mr. Crosbie: When you are finished all your excitement that somebody honest got in on one of those companies of yours, just relax.

Mr. Trudeau: You mean your brother is not honest?

CONFLICT OF INTEREST INQUIRY

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. David Mann is a lawyer and his firm is acting for Fishery Products International Limited, owned by the Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland, and doing all of the legal work. He has now been appointed a director of National Sea Products Limited.

Mr. Trudeau: But he is not a Crosbie. What's your problem?

Mr. Crosbie: He is not a Trudeau either, but that doesn't make him an ass.

Mr. Trudeau: Precisely.

Mr. Crosbie: He knows a good thing when he sees it. He knows patronage when he sees it.

Mr. Trudeau: If he were a Crosbie he would be an ass; that is what you mean.

Mr. Crosbie: These two firms are in competition. Is the Minister going to stop the conflict of interest? I am not on the board of National Sea nor Fishery Products. I am here trying to keep you honest. Will you keep your appointees honest?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the Hon. Member that for those companies in which the federal Government has made some commercial investments, some of the board members have been appointed by the federal Government and, of course, particularly with respect to National Sea, the majority is in the hands of the private sector. Of course I can do nothing if the private sector wants to appoint Mr. So-and-So.

Second, I would like to remind the Hon. Member that—

Mr. Crosbie: How can he be the lawyer of Fishery Products?

Mr. De Bané: —due to the insistence of his own Party, we have decided that those commercial investments by the federal Government will be reporting, not to me as Minister of Fisheries and Oceans but to the Minister in charge of CDIC.

Again, if he would reflect on it, he would see that there is no problem whatsoever and Fishery Products is absolutely, totally free to appoint whomever it wants as the legal adviser. Hopefully they will be appointing lawyers from Newfoundland, and maybe some brothers and cousins of the Hon. Member.

Mr. Crosbie: That would be an improvement.

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—NEED FOR GOVERNMENT POLICY ON VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. McLean:

That this House condemns the Government for its failure to honour the commitment made both in 1974 and 1981 by Canada's Secretary of State to develop, in co-operation with the voluntary sector, a comprehensive government action policy with respect to the voluntary sector and urges the Government to provide an immediate incentive to Canada's 40,000 registered charities by implementing the give and take tax credit proposal.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, today's motion deals with the dealings between the voluntary sector and the federal Government. I am pleased to rise once again to talk about this topic. I am proud of the partnership that has developed between our Government and the community groups, particularly those in Mississauga.

I would like to spend a few minutes reflecting on the creativity and the value of that partnership. In my view, there is a major policy thrust, particularly in areas like housing, the arts and multiculturalism, that creates a deliberate partnership between the private sector and the federal Government. There is also a second way that we work with the private sector, that is, by creating new jobs and new opportunities in community development. Third, we have undertaken a program that seeks accountability, flexibility and community growth.

Therefore, I want to talk about these parts of the Government's efforts to strengthen and encourage the private voluntary sector in my riding. I intend to use the Mississauga area volunteer and charity groups as the focus of my discussion. I would like to relate our programs to these specific community efforts because I must admit at the outset that I am very, very proud of the efforts that we are undertaking in Mississauga.

For example, on Saturday night the Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) and I had a great opportunity to join the South Asian Community when they held a fund raising dinner to help raise moneys for our new Credit Valley Hospital. It would be remiss of me not to extend my congratulations to them for the great effort they made.

I also want to extend my congratulations to the Streetville Lioness Club which held a dance on that same Saturday night, again to raise funds for our local hospitals.

We have seen many community groups across Mississauga use this hospital as a focal point to raise moneys to help develop our community. They have made a vital contribution that has been good not only for themselves but also for our city at large. It would take me far too long to list all of these different groups here and now.

I said at the beginning that there is a deliberate partnership between the voluntary sector and the federal Government in housing, particularly social housing. I would like to make a reference here to Russett Co-Op and to Tecumseh Co-op, both of which are new social housing development projects in Mississauga. In addition, I would like to refer to the Sampaguito Philippino Seniors home, which is another private non profit social housing development. As part of those three projects we see over 300 new homes being developed across my city. The two co-operatives are open now and looking forward to their official ceremonies later in June. The Philippino senior citizen's home is currently under construction, and of course we wish them well.

These three projects came about because a particular volunteer had the vision and willingness to undertake the hard work necessary to make these projects happen. These projects reflect the dedication and the community spirit that is so typical of voluntary action. They reflect a willingness to struggle, to spend long hours late into the night, year after year to see a dream turned into concrete and new homes. Then, on the other side, the people of Canada form the other half of the partnership through our willingness to fund these projects through CMHC's social housing program. We provide financial help and management advice to match the voluntary spirit.

I would like to salute the founding members, the founding board of directors and the initial residents in those three housing projects. When those housing projects are opened in my city, the whole city will be far better for it. When those housing projects offer their facilities to the citizens of Mississauga, then all of Mississauga will benefit. This is the kind of creative partnership that we have developed in housing.

As I mentioned to you a moment ago, Mr. Speaker, over 300 new homes were developed in Mississauga in 1983 alone. Over 1,500 new homes have been built across our city since 1980 when I was elected, and over 100,000 new homes have been built under this program across Canada since 1980. This is a partnership, Sir, between people in our city who have vision and determination and the federal Government that is prepared to join with the voluntary sector and make those dreams come true. That is the way the private sector, the voluntary sector, finds help and friendship with the Liberal Government.

There is a similar equal partnership happening in multiculturalism. Again I am going to use examples from my own riding because I have seen our multiculturalism policy work so very well in my city. There are several heritage language schools open every Saturday morning across Mississauga. I see the Hon. Member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis) here. One of his children is enrolled in the Copernicus Polish school. There is also the St. Sophia Ukrainian school, the Frederick Schiller German school, and the Mississauga Croatian school. Do you know, Mr. Speaker, that the parents in those schools spend hours of their own time making sure those schools are properly established, that proper teachers are hired and finances are arranged properly? In short, this is typical of the kind of dedication and hard work that people put into all our voluntary activities. Again, the federal Government is there as a partner. We offer them some financial assistance to keep the doors open. They have their own private fund raising and God bless everybody, they are great at it. But we are there also to provide some additional help. I remember just the other week going to the Chinese Language school in my city. Six teachers are looking through available text books in Chinese dialects to see if they are suitable for teaching in similar schools coast to coast. The federal Government is helping with some of the research costs. I gave them a cheque on behalf of the people of Canada to encourage them. That project will help Chinese parents and children, not just in Mississauga, not just in that one school, but from coast to coast, from Miramichi right to Vancouver Island. In Mississauga we are proud to be a sparkplug in that partnership between the voluntary sector and the federal Government. Let us remember this is the type of voluntary self-sacrificing activity that is typical of so many groups.

Other multicultural programs are relying on the same willingness of people to give their time unstingtingly and to use their imagination to develop ways to help our community and our country. I think, for example, of the Malton Black Development Association. Early in June that association will be holding a seminar on the family's role in Canadian society. That seminar will help immigrant parents to develop ways of dealing with the great stresses between their traditional societies and the new society in which they and their children are living. Here is a group that saw a need. Here is a group that did not want to stay simply as a social group. They wanted to reach into families and into personal lives to make an improvement. Again the voluntary sector was encouraged and supported by a federal Liberal program. I am proud of the help that we extended to them. I want to wish them well in all the efforts which they undertake in preparation for their seminar next June.

I think of other multicultural groups that have done the same sort of thing. The Malton Catholic Community, for example, is a case where the church, community groups, and individual citizens have joined together to help new Canadians who have not yet achieved Canadian citizenship. They are offering classes and telling people how to fill out forms. They are helping people to anticipate the struggles ahead. Above all, they are helping fellow Canadians to assume the vital role of Canadian citizenship. They are doing this as volunteers. We in the federal Government have provided a small grant to help them with their costs.

Take a look at the Sao Salvadore Centre which is helping Portuguese immigrants integrate into Canadian society in Mississauga. Last summer, the Summer Canada grant program was used by several Portuguese Canadians to develop a film strip that will explain to the rest of us how immigrants feel and what difficulties they have when they first come to this country. Service clubs, churches, schools, and other volunteer groups across Mississauga can now get that film strip and see life as a new immigrant sees it, to experience life as new immigrants experience it, all because of students and the people at the Sao Salvadore Centre which had the imagination and sensitivity to develop such a fine program. We were able to help and to be a partner through our Summer Canada grant program.

I am reminded today as well of the Mississauga Canadian-Italian Association. A year ago I met with people from that association. At that time it was a social group. People had dances and enjoyed themselves together as a community, but they wanted to go beyond that. They were worried about the way some people were having difficulty integrating into Mississauga. They were worried about drugs. They were worried about family services and about filling in official government forms. They set up a referral service. Today that referral service is launched, thanks to a grant from the federal Government. It is another partnership. It is an extended hand between the community and the federal Government. Today it is a service that is widely applauded. The mayor, the provincial MPP, other volunteers, representatives from the Italian services across Toronto have all said that the Mississauga Canadian-Italian Association has indeed done a good job. I am proud to have been there helping out as a partner on behalf of the federal Government.

I believe that in housing and in multiculturalism we have two outstanding examples of how the federal Government works hand in hand with volunteer activities to build new institutions, to create new aspects to our social safety net across Canada. But there is a third area, and that is where we join the private sector, the volunteer sector, to be a partner in jobs and community development. Every Member in this House knows about the Summer Canada program and the Canada Works program. Personally I prefer to see those job-creation projects go to the private voluntary sector. It is a constant temptation in my city to extend the moneys to the City of Mississauga and to the region of Peel. I try to avoid that temptation because I do not like just to pass tax dollars from one level of government to another. Frankly, I find that the City of Mississauga has great ideas. If I do not give them a grant through our system, they will find the money in another way. Volunteer groups do not have that kind of flexibility. They do not have that kind of partnership.

Let me point out some of the people who worked with us last summer to create jobs for students. Listen to this list. Listen to the broad representation across Mississauga. Here is an honour roll of voluntarism in my city: Theatre Malton, Malton Social Planning Centre, the Volunteer Centre of Peel, the ACFO-Nottawasaga Branch, the Midwich Co-op Housing Project, the Victorian Order of Nurses, the Canadian National Institute for the Blind, and the Credit Valley Treatment Centre. Those are all volunteer groups in my city. All of them offer opportunities to help my city grow and become stronger.

In their Summer Canada projects, they left permanent benefits for our community. They provided our students with useful jobs and training and left us with projects that are responsible. We are now able to measure the benefits because they are accountable groups which are ready to stand up and tell us what they did with great pride. I see us working through volunteer groups to create short-term jobs. I like that process. It is a very valuable way to operate. We need more of this activity, not less.

In conclusion, I want to say that I salute the people from Erindale College, the Mississauga Board of Trade and the Mississauga News. Today they are preparing the Citizen of the Year Dinner. This is held annually to salute one person who has done a really outstanding job. They are currently going through the community picking the nominees. In the next days they will boil down the long list into a short list and pick a winner. They do not really pick one winner. In this process, all of Mississauga is a winner. We are picking someone who represents the kind of community spirit that is typical of my city. When that community spirit raises its head, I am proud that the federal Government has been there to help them out in a few small ways.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I may have missed the first few moments of the Hon. Member's speech. I wonder whether he dealt with the issue of the give and take tax proposal. If the Hon. Member did not deal with it, he has missed the essence of a large part of the concern in the voluntary community.

I have noted in the House over a considerable period of time that he has voted for budgets which provide the $100 standard deduction without making charitable donations, and that has been one of the causes why the voluntary sector has fallen behind in a financial sense. Has he had a change of heart and can he assure the House that he is now in favour of the give and take tax proposal and the fact that people must donate to charities before getting tax credits for having done so?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question. I have to confess that I did not go right to the motion. The Hon. Member has pinned me down. He has found my true strategy. I did not go directly to the motion because I found the motion wrong. I found it too negative. The motion attempts to say that the federal Government does not do anything for the charitable or voluntary sector.

Far be it for the Hon. Member to introduce politics into the House of Commons, but I believe the motion may have had some political overtones. I think his speech may have had some political overtones. It is necessary to balance out that sort of negative motion with a reference to a few positive matters. There has been positive action in housing with 100,000 units across Canada in the social housing program, most of them through a partnership with the voluntary sector. That is not something we should condemn. It is something we should applaud. If we go to examples of other programs, we find the Government hand in hand with the private sector constantly. If the Hon. Member has a particular tax measure that he wants to promote, that is fine, but he should not condemn all Government activity through this motion just because he is trying to promote one particular tax deduction.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Mississauga North describes himself as a sparkplug. On reflection, I do see certain resemblances. Both of them have occasional flashes of brilliance and both of them are possessed of gaps, in one case between the electrodes and in the other case between the ears. I take it from the Hon. Member's speech that he is in favour of the general Liberal Party approach to this problem where, instead of allowing people to donate to the charity of their choice through the tax system, he would tax all that money away from the taxpayers. It would then be up to politicians, bureaucrats or somebody associated with the government of the day to redistribute those tax dollars to a charity or cause of its choosing. That is supporting charities or causes of the Government's choosing and not necessarily those of the individual's choosing.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member always has enjoyable interventions to make which spice up life around here. I must say that his descriptions of me personally are quite accurate and very generous. I thank him for that. Typically he has asked the key question, and I congratulate him for that. Yes, I believe that generally we should use a grant system. He has described ills that really have not occurred. What happens is a general building of a list of criteria. Any group which meets those criteria applies and receives the grant, not a politically attractive group but any group can get the grant provided it meets the criteria. That is the first important point.

Second, once it has the grant, it is accountable for the spending of the money. It cannot spend the money in ways that are unacceptable or beyond the criteria. The Hon. Member knows that because he has seen how our officials screen the activities of Summer Canada projects in his riding. They want to know what is going on. They want to make sure the money is spent in ways that Parliament has approved. There is nothing wrong with that.

Third, these grant systems are measurable. The Government can make a proposal to the House of Commons, have it debated and approved in this Chamber, and then it applies evenly across the country. It is not open-ended and beyond the capacity of the people to afford.

I remind the Hon. Member that his motion makes reference to 40,000 registered charities. He wants half of the donations to those charities to be a tax credit. That is an enormous burden on the public purse. It is an open-ended one where the spending is not accountable, where the people are not responsible in any way to the general public. I offer him a contrast. Grants are measurable, responsible and accountable, but tax breaks are general, open-ended and very expensive. He should consider that.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I must be sitting in a different House of Commons. Earlier this day in Question Period the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts) was asked simply to make public the criteria for the $150 million worth of granting proposals, but he refused. This very day he refused to make public the criteria for spending the $150 million. We have discovered historically that $300 million was spent before anybody saw the criteria. To make that kind of defence of the Government's granting record is to come from outer space.

• (1530)

I would like to ask the Member if he does or does not agree with the position of the national voluntary organizations that voluntary organizations which care about the quality of life in the country, whether it be the social quality, cultural quality or whatever, and which are entitled to a Revenue Canada tax number, should in fact be allowed to advocate for public policy. The present policy of his Government is that they cannot advocate. Is he changing his position and is the Government changing its position to say yes, groups of that kind should be allowed to advocate?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I would not be at all surprised if the Hon. Member found himself out of touch with the debate of the day. If I were him, I would not stand up in the House and admit it.

Mr. Epp: You admitted it for 20 minutes.

Mr. Fisher: Every government grant program which is undertaken has attached to it regular standards. For example, Summer Canada programs indicate quite frequently that there will be priorities for handicapped people. Last year, the Canada Works Program had as a high priority women who were re-entering the work force after a period of time at home.

We know where the priorities exist and we know the kinds of people who are intended to be the beneficiaries of particular grants from year to year. All of us in this Chamber know that, or we should know that, because the employment development people tell us about those standards before the grants are issued. If the Hon. Member does not go through that process, he cannot blame the Government. He is supposed to do so but he may not always undertake the fulfilment of his responsibilities. That is up to him.

Mr. Bosley: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Member one simple question. He is making an eloquent defence of grants as opposed to tax credits. Would he apply the same view to people with child tax credits? Would he apply the same view to political Parties? Would he argue that a political Party, which represents Canadians who on a voluntary basis work for party they want to represent the people, should have their activities controlled through government grants?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I think there is a considerable difference between a political Party and a voluntary or charitable group. I think anyone who cannot see that is having difficulties. The Hon. Member's political Party, the political Party of the NDP and our political Party deal regularly with public decisions, with power and with influence. The Hon. Member knows that the tax grant system was set up to encourage a lot of small donors and to encourage the political Parties to get away from big power blocks which were donating huge amounts of money. In my riding today, I have, I hope, almost enough money to participate in the next election campaign. Every one of those donations has come from small businessmen and individual donors. That is what the system was set up to do. It was not set up to create a parallel with charity.

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to commend my colleague, the Hon. Member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean), not only for the motion that he has put before the House this day, but for the work that he has undertaken prior to this motion in support of the the Coalition of National Voluntary Organizations. It is one thing for a Member of the House of Commons to stand up in his or her place and make a case when a motion is before the House. The Hon. Member for Waterloo has done so on behalf of the National Voluntary Organizations in committee, and I can tell the House that he has done so in our discussions within the Party and has been very active in developing policy. Most important, much of his life has been dedicated to serving National Voluntary Organizations. I hope I am not out of place when I say that I know of some of the work that he and his family have undertaken, often at a financial loss to themselves as a family, I am sure. The motion that is before us is not only valid but is structured and placed before us by one who has given of himself to National Voluntary Organizations.

I would also like to make mention of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Patterson) with whom I spoke just the other day. He has given 50 years of his adult life to this place, to the churches of Canada and to the people of Canada. When we talk about voluntary organizations, these are the kinds of people and the kinds of donations that we have in mind. This is the kind of dedication that I believe should be mentioned from time to time and put on the public record. I believe it is because of these people and their contributions that Canada is a better place. I think that that is what is important about this debate today. That takes me to the issue that is before us, Mr. Speaker.

In Canada today, there are approximately 47,000 so-called registered charities under the Income Tax Act. Those charities are registered on the basis that they have the right to accept donations from the Canadian public, both individually and corporately, and can give tax receipts for the donations they have received. However, I would suggest that this is only a means to an end and is not the central issue. We must look at what these organizations do. They motivate people not only to serving Canadians but to serving others throughout the world who might be less fortunate than we are.

Let us return to the beginnings of our nation. It was the charitable organizations then, and possibly even today, which have given most to the cultural heritage of the country. They were then and are today instrumental in giving spiritual leadership to the people. They were the first to understand the need for an educational foundation for our young people and to sacrifice unstintingly to develop social services in the country. It is important to note that most of our social services were first provided entirely by the voluntary sector. We know that this is the case in the areas of health and education. Even today, the board of directors and many of the supporters of voluntary organizations are volunteers.

I would suggest it is important to note as well that as society has moved toward the greater development of the social welfare state, there has been a shift, and not a subtle shift, from services provided by voluntary organizations and churches to services that the state now provides. While I am not decrying that in total, I do suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that there is a danger in that kind of a shift. I am talking about balance. Much of the criticisms of today's society are based upon the feeling that the Government is not doing enough in one area or another. However, I would suggest that too often the schools, churches, families and individuals have been very quick to remove themselves from their own responsibilities in these areas. That is why I think that the motion before us today is so important.

As I see it, the motion does two things. First, it recognizes the National Voluntary Organizations and second, it attempts to address how these organizations can better give service to the Canadian public while retaining their independence as voluntary organizations. It is most interesting to note that when speaking to people at the Department of External Affairs regarding the question of our responsibility as Canadians to citizens in other countries, we find that while there are many bilateral agreements between countries, the better use of public funds has come from the non-governmental organizations, almost without exception. It has come from organizations which place Canadians in other countries, not only to give the aid which is immediately necessary but, more importantly, to give direction to development. That is why it is so important to differentiate between what government can do and what volunteers can do.

Frankly, I found the comments of the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher) astounding. He chuckles about that, Mr. Speaker, but I thought he was very serious. His whole philosophy is based on the concept that government should take a certain amount of tax money, develope criteria and give grants, and that the National Voluntary Organizations could then function. But is the Government the best agency to set the criteria? I could give the Hon. Member a lot of evidence, although I do not have time today, of instances where the Government's handling of public funds has been wasteful and where there has been economic mismanagement. I could show him cases in development, and I am sure other Members of the House could as well, where voluntary organizations have been much more responsible and frugal in the use of the moneys available to them.

The question comes down to this, Mr. Speaker. Are these organizations more independent and can they function in terms of their duties and obligations more fully through a grant system or a tax credit system? With the grant system they must constantly go to the Government cap in hand and often must adjust their priorities and criteria to meet those of the Government. That is natural. The bureaucratic system will always demand that the criteria be those which the bureaucracy has established rather than those the National Voluntary Organizations feel are valid.

What was so astounding about the Hon. Member's comments was his statement that voluntary organizations were not as accountable as government for money spent. I wonder if he really believes that. I have in front of me a list of some of the National Voluntary Organizations in Canada. Is he saying that in its expenditure of moneys the Government of Canada is more responsible than the Canadian Council of Christian Charities? Is he saying that the Government of Canada is more responsible in spending money than the Canadian Heart Foundation, the Canadian Mental Health Association, the Canadian Red Cross, the YMCA or the YWCA? The list goes on and on. Is that what he is trying to convey to the House? If so, I would ask him to rethink his proposition very carefully.

The Government's record of support for National Voluntary Organizations through words and statements is good. The intentions are noble—and so was the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) today. In the Speech from the Throne on December 7, 1983, the Government again commended "the vital voluntary sector". It was interesting to note that in response to a task force led by Ruth Hinkley, which looked at the future of voluntary organizations and issued a report entitled "Charity Today and Tomorrow", the Government said "The definition of a registered charity under the Income Tax Act and related matters will be referred to a joint parliamentary task force". And that is what the Secretary of State announced today, Mr. Speaker, a joint parliamentary task force to look at the whole question of charities.

The point I make is this. We now have in place many registered charities that have functioned in this country for a long time. In this House I have raised questions, and as recently as March 26, in the adjournment debate, about what is a legitimate activity of a registered charity. Is a registered charity to be defined only in the narrow 16th century concept of British common law? That is that basically a charity's only function is to give charity to those in need. Should we look at the definition in a broader sense and say that registered charities not only have a function but have an additional or equal function.

I am absolutely convinced that our society is a better society today because of the voluntary organizations. I am absolutely convinced of that, Mr. Speaker; I know that our communities are better for them. But in so doing, these organizations have been putting forward moral views, ideas on how society should function, concepts of where government is wrong, and have been pointing out that certain legislation will be detrimental to our society. So I ask the Government if that is a legitimate activity of a registered charity. You see the problem we run into, Mr. Speaker, when the Government has the responsibility for setting the criteria. That is the philosophical difference that I have with the Hon. Member for Mississauga North.

Let us look at a practical example of what happens when the Government sets all the criteria. A church has a certain reason for its existence; it has a group of adherents, they have a certain statement of faith and it is because of that statement of faith that people voluntarily join it. Now let us suggest that there is a piece of legislation that absolutely violates the statement of faith of that church and its adherents, and that the church is a registered charity. That church comes out very strongly and publicly against the legislation, saying it is wrong and pointing out that it will have a detrimental effect on society. Is that a legitimate activity of a registered charity? I would say yes.

Let me go back to a letter written by Miss A. A. Conway on behalf of Revenue Canada dated March 1, 1984. I have already put this on the record at page 2447 of Hansard as follows:

> We would comment that in our view while it would be acceptable for a religious organization to take a public stand on a moral issue, it would not be acceptable for that organization to engage in a campaign designed to bring pressure to bear upon a government to implement legislative changes or adopt a policy which the organization advocates.

Just listen to that, Mr. Speaker. Are we saying that when these national organizations, some of which I have mentioned such as the churches of Canada, feel that legislation is wrong, then the minute they say so they are in jeopardy of being decertified or deregistered? That is why this debate is so important.

To his credit the Parliamentary Secretary admitted that this was at best a grey area and that the Government does not have a handle on it. I suggest that the task force will not get a handle on it either if the Government does not first accept the fundamental principle that registered charities have a moral role to play within society. What about the give and take proposal? I find it very interesting. The Hon. Member for Mississauga North, who also was at one time the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance, said that it is a costly program. Let us examine the details.

First of all, the Government did take 50 per cent of the proposal, namely, it removed the $100 deduction which previously a taxpayer could deduct without the submission of receipts. That will come into force this year, 1984. It is interesting to note that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) when he announced this measure said that he had now accepted 50 per cent of the proposal. Well, Mr. Speaker, it never was the intention of the National Voluntary Organizations to have 50 per cent of the proposal accepted, and that somehow it was better than the system which was in place before. The question then is, if a tax credit of 50 per cent is introduced, what effect will it have on the national treasury? That is a valid question which the Hon. Member for Mississauga North raised as well.

At the present time in Canada, at least from the last records I have, approximately $900 million is now taken from the tax system by registered charities through receipts. The cost of the tax provision previously was approximately $500 million to $550 million, in that order. Therefore, donations would have to rise—if you look at a 50 per cent tax credit—somewhere in the order of $1 billion to $1.1 billion to meet the same costs to the Treasury as the old system which was in place. There is no question that, if we adopted the system, we could go above the $1.1 billion. I fully admit that. And possibly there should be some kind of provision in terms of capping or limiting. I am willing to look at that.

However, what concerns me more is the principle. I believe that when voluntary organizations raise their own money, they give a better service. Whether it is a Liberal or a Conservative Government, I do not believe we can run their organizations, either through the bureaucratic system or the political system, as well as they can. What I am saying to Hon. Members opposite is that in all my discussions with the voluntary organizations, and from my discussions with the Hon. Member for Waterloo, I have never heard from them that they are not willing to look at these questions, that they are not willing to look at some kind of adjustment. However, I believe their philosophical basis is correct, and that is why I make the point. Their philosophical basis is that whatever money is raised and whatever money will be allowed for tax purposes, let them do it themselves, and let them control the agenda. That is what we are asking.

The Secretary of State again today mentioned the task force. I look forward to the report of that task force because I believe that has to be the central question.

As well, Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned earlier to you, virtually every part of our society has been touched by the voluntary organizations. On the question of health care, in my responsibilities as health care spokesman for our Party there are organizations which come to me and say, "We are willing to give it a try, but give us the opportunity." What I feel is important, Mr. Speaker, as we look at the further development of safety nets and the social welfare state, is that we must come back to fundamentals. The fundamental fact is that the best service Canadians can give to each other is when they give service of themselves unstintingly without the criteria which governments are always so quick to place on these systems.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I believe there are a couple of points which are somewhat confusing in what the Hon. Member has said. First of all, there are two questions here, the first is whether or not an institution is taxable. A voluntary non-profit organization is not taxable. Second, whether contributions to that organization should be tax deductible on the part of those who make the contributions. Those are two very distinct and separate issues. A charitable organization is not only not taxable but contributions to it are tax deductible. The reason they are tax deductible is because the public good is being served by the functions which they perform, the broad public good. That is the issue.

The next question is, should contributions to a voluntary non-profit organization, which in many cases pursues a very narrow private and special interest, receive broad public tax deductibility? In other words, should it be supported in part by all Canadian taxpayers even though it is not serving the broad public good but serving a narrow special interest? Those are the issues at heart before us. We talk about give and take because give and take would expand the concept of "charitable" to include non-profit voluntary organizations. That question is not one, Sir, which deals with a matter of the philosophy of voluntarism.

Voluntarism is a very good principle but it may not be in the interests of the broad public. The question is should the broad public be asked to subsidize the activities of voluntary non-profit groups whose interests are to pursue a special purpose for a narrow group of Canadian citizens. That is the question, and I do not believe the debate today has addressed it in a way which would convince me that the kinds of changes which the Hon. Member put forward should be addressed. I would like to put that issue to him and ask him if he had thought about it in that way?

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Parliamentary Secretary for the question. It is a valid one and without any doubt, one which has to be addressed—and I am not trying to dodge the question—through the task force system. However, I put this point to the Hon. Member. He asked whether it is valid for us to consider or to set into train a system whereby the general public would, in part, help finance a special interest group. I do not believe we are ever going to get a totally clear answer to that, and I will give you the reasons why.

We do that now. For example, do we have a saw-off between the services a registered charity gives at a cost less than it would cost the general public if it was done through government agencies? That is one issue which has to be brought into that mix. The other issue which must surely be addressed is that we do that now as well, for instance, through municipal taxation. For example, a registered charity which has property, in most cases, is exempted in whole or in part from municipal taxation as well. So you could argue that we subsidize the charity as well in that sense. However, I do think the philosophy behind it is correct, that the public is better served by giving these charitable organizations not only tax incentives, but also an opportunity whereby they do not have to face tax regimes, which the general public and the corporate world have to face, because the question we then would have to address is whether they could, in fact, exist if that kind of regime were placed on them. Then the question which becomes the most difficult to evaluate is, would the replacement cost of the service we would then lose be not higher both in dollars and in terms of the manner in which society functions?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I am going to make just a short comment. I know the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) wants to ask a supplementary question. The Hon. Member asked whether I think reputable groups like the Heart Foundation and so on are responsible. Of course I do. In asking that question he has avoided the issue. He knows that when we use the phrase "responsible and accountable" in a tax context we mean something that can be explained in advance and measured afterwards. He knows the great advantage of a grant system is that criteria can be set which the whole world can see and follow; the criteria and the grants can be debated in this Chamber and approved or rejected; finally, the Minister has to account for the way the money is spent. Each of us, when we approve a grant or agree to one, we sign a piece of paper and are accountable as well. That is what I mean by "responsible and accountable". It is not what he is describing and twisting, and I take objection to that description.

● (1600)

The Hon. Member knows we are talking about a balance, that much of the access he describes exists through the tax deduction system and Revenue Canada's extension of tax deduction numbers. We are both talking about expanding that program and how to extend additional aid into the private sector. I ask him to bear in mind that concept of the words "responsible and accountable"; it is an important one.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I agree with both concepts. However, I want to put this in a very practical sense. The Hon. Member took almost his whole 20 minutes to describe various charitable organizations in his riding. He can use his time that way, but let me give you a very specific case; service to the mentally retarded of Canada. This was largely started by volunteer organizations, including Kinsmen or Kinettes, in my area of rural Manitoba in places like Steinbach, Beauséjour, and St. Malo. They are all voluntary, registered charities. They would like to expand their facilities, programs and service to people. But the only way they can expand is if they go back through the system, for instance with Canada Works student programs and so forth. While those programs are welcome, they then start running into the dependency factor. The Government says you cannot have programs one after another because you are becoming dependent on the Government. That is the catch 22 situation we have created. If they were able to raise certain funds which could be used as tax credits beyond what they are doing, then they could expand. I suggest, with all due respect to the Hon. Member, that they would be accountable for those funds every bit as much as the Government of Canada, and I suggest a lot more. They would also be responsible for those funds. Government, by its nature, likes to create dependency. I say leave them independent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would be prepared to recognize the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, but I must inform the House that the time for questions and comments is over. Is there unanimous consent for a question from the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I understand what the Hon. Member is saying, but I do not think he addressed the fundamental points I tried to put forward. I hope we can have a chance to discuss it further because I think they are very fundamental. Certainly they have been central to my thinking on this whole issue, and I have given this particular proposal a great deal of thought.

The other issue I would put to him is that when we start talking about the difference between charitable functions, doing good for society generally, and the tax deductibility of funds expended for that purpose by charitable organizations, and then move to the question of political advocacy, it seems to me we have crossed a very dangerous line. You then run the very great risk of setting up an extra-parliamentary special interest lobby funded by all taxpayers, even though the issues and interests they may be promoting are very narrow and contrary to the broader public interest.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that in a democratic society legislatures are the institutions whereby the public makes its views known. Voluntary organizations can make their views known to the people and try and persuade them to influence their political representatives to make changes in policy. However, I do not think it is appropriate for charitable organizations funded through tax deductible moneys to be going directly to Members of Parliament and lobbying on behalf of narrow interests which are not and cannot be said to be in the broad public interest for which they received their charitable status.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that it is not a black and white issue. I think I said that. However, I prefer to err on the side of Canadians. Right now I have a petition in my office through which a number of churches across the country indicate that they will oppose Bill C-10, the Divorce Act. Surely that is legitimate, but it is also political activity. They want to influence the legislation. I do not see why that should give any cause for concern to the Government, yet it might cause them to lose their status as charities. I think we in this House are sometimes too careful. I know why the amendments in Bill C-169 concerning elections were brought forward.

Mr. Evans: Your Leader does not.

Mr. Epp: Let me finish. But I do not think the Canadian public and Parliament are well served by bringing in amendments which restrict the activity of groups who want to put their viewpoint forward during an election campaign. We in this House must always err on the side of freedom rather than follow what is so often the case in a parliamentary system, that of bringing in another regulation, another law to restrict the activities of Canadians. the vast majority of Canadians do not want to violate the natural and decent principles on which democracy is based; let us take a chance on them.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—NEED FOR GOVERNMENT POLICY ON VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. McLean:

That this House condemns the Government for its failure to honour the commitment made both in 1974 and 1981 by Canada's Secretary of State to develop, in co-operation with the voluntary sector, a comprehensive government action policy with respect to the voluntary sector and urges the Government to provide an immediate incentive to Canada's 40,000 registered charities by implementing the give and take tax credit proposal.

● (1610)

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think today's debate on the issue of tax credits for non-profit organizations and, especially, for registered charities is most interesting. I also think it is an issue that has evolved in the course of time. If we look at the matter of non-profit organizations, we should remember that initially, these organizations were declared to be charitable organizations and often had a distinctly religious base. I believe that when discussing the issue now, in 1984, we must look at all aspects of the problem, since many groups, formed for many purposes, are seeking to be defined as charitable organizations. Often these are research groups or groups that have sprung up spontaneously to look into environmental issues. I agree with the Minister that we must be careful in our assessment of so-called charitable organizations. Mr. Speaker, the motion presented today is a motion condemning the Government for its failure to honour the commitment made both in 1974 and 1981 to develop, in co-operation with the voluntary sector, a comprehensive Government action policy with respect to the voluntary sector.

Mr. Speaker, I think the time may be ripe to get together all these people who are working in the voluntary sector. Earlier, the Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) made a very significant comment when he said that we must ensure that governments, whether they are municipal, provincial or federal, will support the voluntary sector. I believe that Members on both sides of the House agree with the notion of putting more and more committed people in the voluntary sector, because motivation is needed to launch a cause and give a really profound sense of commitment.

Mr. Speaker, when we look at the history of charitable organizations, it is clear that at the time, these organizations fulfilled a role that was often not fulfilled by governments. For instance, I am thinking of the matter of cancer research. At the time, research was often carried out by private organizations, frequently by religious orders, and in that case the Government paid practically nothing. So it was normal that if we wanted to encourage this form of research or support these communities or the work of these communities, that people investing money should be entitled to certain deductions. Today, however, these factors have changed. How much money do governments spend on research alone? Whether it is medical research or research on nutrition or education—Mr. Speaker, research is being done everywhere—it is directly subsidized out of the public purse. Thus, when you get organizations that are lining up to do research on heart disease or other kinds of disease, then we are no longer in the purely "charitable" sphere. These are organizations that obviously want to give even more than what the public authorities are doing. In that case, their work is complementary. And here I think we could consider a form of tax deduction. However, when you get groups that do research on the environment, can this really be considered charitable work? Does it qualify as research? I think there are grey areas that are very substantial and it would, perhaps, be only fair and reasonable to form a committee of the Senate or the House of Commons to meet the people working in this sector. Mr. Speaker, travelling in our own ridings and indeed across the country, we realize how many agencies are doing remarkable work in the voluntary sector. However, I am quite sure that all 282 Members of this House would be hard put to determine accurately whether each of these agencies is really a research organization, a charitable organization or an organization for voluntary action.

Mr. Speaker, after the historical aspect, I would like to consider the issue of the autonomy of these organizations vis-à-vis the public authorities. Nowadays, it is very hard to talk about a private business when we look at the number of grants governments give to businesses that are "private". It is also very difficult to talk about voluntary or autonomous organizations if we look at the subsidies granted by the Departments to various associations.

Mr. Speaker, I think that some kind of balance has to be restored with respect to organizations which consider themselves as being non-profitable and which normally, and I mean normally, should be supported to the same extent as their membership commitments. In my opinion, that is an important point. Perhaps the danger right now is that some non-profit organizations almost act as if they were Government Departments. Since they do not have enough patrons to support their charities—obviously commendable from the start—they come to rely on public authorities. There is a major distinction here. I think that non-profit organizations must be operationally independent from public authorities, otherwise they might be well advised to become direct adjuncts of certain Departments. I think that an information campaign ought to be directed at people who participate actively in so-called non-profit organizations so that they will do their work and make sure that the public at large is kept informed and makes generous donations.

How can those people be encouraged to contribute financially so that an organization will have enough money to operate? I think that all kinds of formulas are available. The give-and-take formula was mentioned a moment ago. It may be a good formula, but it needs to be put to the test. As to the tax credit, Mr. Speaker, we would want to know just how much credit. I imagine that anyone who gives money to an organization does not expect a full tax credit for that amount. The underlying principle has to be that a donor must not wonder whether he will get something in return. So it becomes a question of evaluation and proportion.

Mr. Speaker, if Canadians are told that 40,000 organizations are registered as being charitable or non-profitable, it is imperative that they be classified so that people will have a much better idea of the value of those organizations and of the limits on tax deductible donations. For instance, I know that some churches in my riding—and the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) spoke clearly to that issue earlier today—have received assistance through various job creation programs. Indeed, we have helped many religious congregations and parish communities to modernize or at least repair and improve rectories and churches. Invariably, some people bring up the question of separation between the powers of the State and those of the Church. Still, we have helped them with public funds. Under normal circumstances, Mr. Speaker, it would be up to the parish to make sure that the parishioners or the community members pay for materials or services. For all sorts of economic or historic reasons or because of factors which must be taken into consideration, the State occasionally steps in to help them. How else could we help those communities if we did not give them grants? Is the deduction now allowed for charitable donations too low? Should it be higher? If it were higher, would the communities find it easier to get organized, Mr. Speaker? In the light of current events, we have to admit that the social and economic reality has undergone a drastic change over the past ten years. Allow me another example. In larger cities, people move so often nowadays that many of them no longer feel responsible for their parish or community or even for the organizations working in their own neighbourhood.

Those are new sociological phenomena which we must face. We would be deluding ourselves, Mr. Speaker, if we believed that a debate such as this one could provide any answer to these problems. In my opinion, the best way to come to a realistic solution, especially one which may be applicable in the long run, would be to let individuals and organizations involved in voluntary work, charitable or research activities to come to us and explain their own position. Indeed, when we confer with officials from various Departments or even with people in charge of organizations, we find it very difficult to find any common ground because many aspects are hard to assess at the present time as we do not have all the components of the problem in hand.

I am happy to see that, basically, everyone taking part in this debate today is aware of the importance of non-profit organizations and of the need for voluntary work and that both sides of the House agree that concrete action must be taken in the short term to guarantee that we will help those who are involved in voluntary work and who take care of other people.

I gave the historical background a while ago. In the early days, non-profit or charitable organizations were dealing directly with individuals. They were not necessarily doing any research work; they were taking care of people because governments were not doing it. However, many services are now provided by the governments. We would have to determine whether there is any duplication of efforts. Perhaps we should also look at whether existing organizations still have an efficient and positive role to play. I believe that these are important questions which should be asked from the people working within these organizations.

Another question which must be asked when dealing with these organizations is this, Mr. Speaker: Is the word "charitable" still acceptable where all these committees or groups are concerned? I believe that the word should be changed because it is now hard to identify all the organizations using this term. Instead, I believe that we should refer to voluntary action. The expression "voluntary action" is much more accurate and appropriate, and if we were to use it, it would be much easier to come to a consensus as to the various provisions that should apply so that we would be sure of actually helping those organizations.

The Hon. Member for Provencher raised a major point when he noted the importance of not over-regulating the voluntary sector. If we really want to review this whole issue of non-profit organizations effectively, we should set up a joint committee of both Houses capable of doing its work speedily. I believe that the time has come to look for a consensus among the various non-profit organizations. I think that a six-month period could be set for a joint committee to listen expeditiously to the comments or wishes of the various organizations, after which the committee could very rapidly, at the government level, find extremely simple methods to meet the needs of these organizations.

Someone was saying earlier that the difficulty is that we do not want to recognize all the organizations and that we are removing one additional motivation for those who do voluntary work. Mr. Speaker, I think that for those who really believe in what they are doing and who truly want support for agencies or research work, the important thing is not just the financial aspect, but also the structures which can be provided by certain Departments.

I believe that all these aspects should be examined. Often, when people speak about non-profit or charitable organizations, they are only concerned with donations. I think that it could be appropriate to reflect on what the various Departments provide year after year either in terms of money or of human resources.

Often, Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of human resources. And there are needs in this area. Departments could make available part of their human resources to these non-profit and voluntary organizations, thereby avoiding useless expenditures. These organizations could then better reach their goals. There are a great many opportunities, Mr. Speaker, and the best way to find them is to communicate with the people themselves. Then, through a debate free of partisan considerations aimed at helping quickly the registered organizations, we could find a short term solution which would meet the needs of everybody.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, it would be important for the Secretary of State to hurry with this matter for Hon. Members from both sides of the House are receiving an increasing number of letters and petitions from organizations which are seeking not only recognition but a voice. I suggest it would be a great opportunity for us to invite to come forward all those who would like to be heard and appear before a joint committee which would patiently listen to their ideas, for Hon. Members from both sides of the House have solutions to propose, Mr. Speaker. I think that both the government and the opposition have solutions to propose, except that they must be discussed before being implemented. I also think that the points raised by the government as well as the Official Opposition are basically very interesting, but they need to be improved upon if we want them really to meet the needs of voluntary organizations.

Coming back to the motion, Mr. Speaker, I think that blaming the government at this stage might mot be the best policy. Personnally, I would rewrite the motion and urge the government to appoint immediately a joint committee to hear the views of the various groups for the purpose of meeting their respective needs. As my time is about to expire, I should like to say that I do not support the motion as moved by the Hon. Member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean), although I recognize the necessity of meeting the various interested groups and find a formula which would satisfy everybody.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order! Questions or comments? Debate. The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Calgary West.

[English]

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by complimenting the Hon. Member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean) for moving the motion. I would point out to the House and Canadians generally that this is the first day of debate on the national voluntary sector in the life of this Parliament, which is approximately four years and six weeks old. That is a curious commentary on the priorities of the Government as they relate to what I think is a very important sector.

In straight economic terms, the voluntary sector, excluding hospitals and educational institutions, accounts for approximately 2 per cent of our Gross National Product. That is just its economic contribution to Canadian society. Its contributions in terms of the inculcation of values which I am sure most people in this Chamber would value is incalculable. It is the national voluntary sector that gives us much of what we enjoy in terms of quality of life in this country.

I think it is a sad statement that the Government has allowed four years and six weeks to pass without bringing forward anything of substance for us to debate in this Chamber relative to this sector. I am disappointed that members of the Liberal Party stand up one after the other to indicate that they are not really willing to support this motion.

I believe this motion is a condemnation of the Cabinet and, as members accountable to their constituents, I think we should condemn the Cabinet from time to time. The Cabinet does not always do a good job; we on this side of the House believe they seldom do a good job. Certainly in relation to the voluntary sector I think it is clear they have not done a good job.

• (1630)

I was particularly struck by some of the questions posed by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Evans) who was at one point Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance. What he said in this Chamber today, Mr. Speaker, is that any large corporation, IBM, Imperial Oil, or whatever, is free to lobby, to come to Government and propose changes. When you look at the tax system you find lobbyists from any major corporation lobbying Members of Parliament using 50 cent dollars. The corporate tax rate on profits is 50 per cent. When those lobbyists come to lobby MPs from Toronto, Calgary, Vancouver, Montreal Canadian taxpayers pay 50 per cent of their salary, travel and sustenance costs.

Members opposite, in particular the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council, told us today that, first they do not agree that people should be able to donate to charities with 50-cent dollars and, second, if a group wants to retain its status as a charity and get any relief out of the tax system, then beware. In other words if you are a voluntary organization you do not have the same rights as Imperial Oil, IBM or a thousand and one other companies. You do not have the right to suggest changes in legislation to Members of Parliament, nor do you have the right to suggest improvements in the quality of life. That is an astonishing statement.

Before the Parliamentary Secretary spoke, the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher) told us that grants were better than tax relief. Sitting in the front row is the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) who is prepared to give grant money from her department to groups who support her personal view of problems in the Canadian health care system, but not to give grant money to groups who disagree, nor to give grant money to groups with an oppositie point of view. That shades of totalitarian states, countries like Russia with one political party. Those who would like to destroy Canadian democracy, would have a state owning all the means of production and a small group of people would decide who got what. That is what a grant system is all about; a small group of people, whoever they are and however described, imposing their will on a community.

Mr. Evans: Including grants to municipalities?

Mr. Hawkes: That includes municipal grants, provincial grants, any granting system of any kind. Some small group of people make the decisions.

Then the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council stood in the House proposing that Imperial Oil should be allowed to lobby with 50-cent dollars and that charitable organizations should not. Now he sits in his place and heckles. He wants to make sure that his constituents understand his philosophy and perspective, that churches should not be allowed to lobby, YMCAs should not be allowed to lobby, boys' and girls' clubs should not be allowed to lobby, and environmental groups should not be allowed to lobby if they are going to use taxpayers' dollars, but major corporations shall be allowed to lobby.

Mr. Evans: I didn't say that.

Mr. Hawkes: Yes, the Hon. Member did. He said, "I did not say that." The Hon. Member might not have understood, as sometimes happens—

Mr. Evans: Don't put words in my mouth.

Mr. Hawkes: But that is what he said, Mr. Speaker.

The fault lies with the tax system, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Evans: I don't disagree with that.

Mr. Hawkes: Some 25 years ago the Canadian tax system was revised and people were given a standard charitable donation deduction. They could claim they had made a donation to charity and thus reduce their taxable income without providing proof of such a donation. But what happened over a period of 25 years? Let us go back 25 years. Twenty-five per cent of Canadian taxpayers were forwarding receipts for charitable donations to the taxman. One-quarter of the people were making charitable donations. But in 1982, 25 years later, only 9 per cent of the people were making charitable donations. That is a drop from 25 per cent to 9 per cent. And what have we left in place? We have said to the richest Member of Parliament that if he or she wants to donate $10 to a charity it will cost the person only $5. Yet we have said to the poorest person that if he or she wants to donate $10 it will cost that person $10. If you are rich it will cost you $5 to donate $10, but if you are poor it will cost you $10 to donate $10. That is the system we have in place. First, a system where you do not have to donate a dime but you can claim you had donated $100. If you exceeded the $100 donation amount and you chose to produce receipts, if you are rich it cost you 50 cents for every $1 donation. But if you are poor the cost is $1 for every $1 donation.

I suggest to Members of this Chamber, from whatever political party, that that practice is obscene. Why should the poor be allowed only to donate dollar dollars and why should the rich be allowed to donate 50-cent dollars? Large companies in Canada which make charitable donations donate 50-cent dollars because of their 50 per cent tax rate. Small companies donate 79-cent dollars because they have a 21 per cent tax rate. That is the principle, Mr. Speaker. The rich shall be allowed to direct Canadian charities is really the consequence. It is not very democratic.

It is not very democratic when you have a principle in Canadian tax law that says the wealthiest group shall really be allowed to decide which charities shall survive and prosper. But what we on this side propose, and what the voluntary organizations themselves propose and have proposed year after year after year, what this Government agrees prior to elections and never implements after elections, is a democratic principle of allowing communities to decide equitably which organizations in their communities shall survive and prosper in a financial sense. What Members opposite seek to do is to continue a process where a small group of people decide.

Let me give you two or three examples from my own experience, Mr. Speaker. I have tried since the day I was first elected to bring to the attention of Minister after Minister the issue of chess. Chess is an activity engaged in by four to five million Canadians at least once a year. Chess is an activity in which a number of Canadians, young and some not so young, have established world-wide reputations. Chess players are not allowed by this Government to receive funding through charitable donations or any kind of tax break. They are told instead to apply for grants. Lo and behold they can apply to the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) and they can apply to the Minister of State for Sport (Mr. Olivier), but the reply every time is that chess does not fit the definition for granting activity. They can go to every department of Government and it will not fit somebody's definition.

• (1640)

Look at highly commercialized activities. A not dissimilar activity like skiing is highly commercialized in Canadian society. Lo and behold, the best Canadian skiers fit the definition for grants. That is a highly commercialized area of activity not engaged in by nearly as many people as those engaged in an activity called chess. You have to wonder which is the more important activity in terms of the public good. Given the nature of the world of the future, is the activity called chess more beneficial to society in terms of the way it conditions the minds of young people, prepares them for a computer age and employment activity in the production of software? Is that activity more important to the public good than the activity called skiing?

That is a subject worthy of debate by Members of the Liberal Party, who tell us that the purpose of a granting mechanism is to allow a small group of people to decide what is in the public good. They will make infallible, perfect, wonderful decisions time after time. I throw that dilemma out to them. Which activity is more in the interest of the public good, skiing or chess? Skiing gets infinitely larger grants from the Government of Canada, whereas chess does not get a dime.

What would happen if these voluntary activities were treated equally in the tax laws of Canada? What would happen if the proposal put forward by this motion and the National Voluntary Organizations was adopted into law? I will tell you what would happen. The broad mass of Canadians could vote on which activities were in their mind in the public good. The way the vote would be through the process of donating.

If you adopt the 50 per cent tax proposal, then when a dollar is donated, in essence the public would pay out of tax revenue 50 per cent of that. There would really be a truly democratic matching situation where individuals collectively decide what is in the public good instead of a Cabinet Minister, committee or Parliament? We would have a much stronger voluntary sector. We would have a voluntary sector that better meets the needs of local communities and Canadians. We should take Government out of the middle, take these granting committees out of the picture for the most part and return the voting principle to the taxpayers of the country. Let them decide which parts of the voluntary sector are doing the job that needs to be done. Let them decide through the use of their pocketbooks, and let us encourage them to do so through the use of the pocketbook.

I was really disturbed today when I heard the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts) say in this House that we have $150 million for grants for young people, but he will not tell us what the criteria are. Somebody is deciding. Those criteria are not out. We caught the same Minister with his fingers in the cookie jar to the tune of $300 million under the Special Employment Initiatives Program. The money was spent before Members of Parliament knew what the criteria were.

That is the danger of a granting system, a danger that we do not have and should not have to face. All we have to do is adopt the recommendations put forward by the National Voluntary Organizations. If a 50 per cent tax credit is too rich, maybe 40 per cent is not. Maybe 50 per cent is not rich enough and it should be 60 per cent, but the principle should be non-negotiable. There should be no temptation on the part of any Cabinet Minister or any elected Member of Parliament to use public funds to secure votes for themselves personally through some kind of granting mechanism, giving money to this group instead of that group. The temptation is great for some Members. We caught the Minister of Employment and Immigration, who seeks to become the Leader of the Liberal Party, with his fist in the cookie jar, passing out grants in a fashion that is not accountable, not responsible, not any of those things that Members opposite stood up and told us were desirable.

I had a bias when I began this speech. That bias comes from my first ten professional years which I spent as an employee in voluntary organizations. From there I moved to public sector organizations. I had a small business, I dealt with large business. When you talk about productivity, the biggest bang for your buck in terms of good consequences, I state unequivocally, is in the voluntary sector. A dollar spent in the voluntary sector will give much more back to society than a dollar spent in any other way. The difference is immeasurable.

Next to that comes small business. Most small business owners really volunteer a huge part of their hours. A huge part of their talent is voluntarily put into their small business activity. That is the nature of a true small business. Where the waste comes in is with big business and with big government. When funds are free, when an organization gets grants instead of having to convince its friends and neighbours to make donations, there is waste. When you have civil servants in charge of large organizations, you get even more waste. I suggest to the Members of this House that $1 million spent to facilitate voluntary sector organizations in the provision of recreational services will produce five to ten times as much activity of good quality as the same $1 million spent for a city recreation service.

One of the things in the background of my life that convinced me to run for office ultimately was when my own daughter as a teenager went down to the city recreation program and volunteered to teach gymnastics. She was told to fill out an employment form. She had to be paid because of the insurance regulations. That is not the kind of world in which I grew up. In my day we were looking for volunteers for the YMCA. We went out, recruited and trained them. They provided really first-rate service. It was not a job, it was a labour of love. There is something very special about the quality of an activity in which people voluntarily place their money, time and effort. Anything that exists in legislation that can be changed which goes against the maximal utilization of that is wrong and should be changed as quickly as possible.

The Hon. Member for Waterloo is on the right track and I would hope that the Government is listening. I would hope that we will see quick action that will move in that direction.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) reminded all of us in the Chamber that we have not debated the topic of the voluntary sector for four years. I would remind the Hon. Member that members of the Official Opposition and the NDP also have a role to play when deciding what is debated in the House. We do have an Oral Question Period. How many questions have been asked over the past four years about charitable and non-profit organizations?

Mr. Hawkes: Quite a few.

Mr. Flis: Members of the Opposition may take advantage of Opposition Days. How many full Opposition Days have been devoted to debating this topic?

We in the House hear quite often from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) that business, labour and Government must work together to build a future for the young people of the country. I am very pleased that the voluntary sector was recognized in the last Speech from the Throne. I am pleased that in the last Budget, the Minister of Finance recognized the important contribution of the voluntary sector. It is the voluntary sector which also provides jobs, affordable housing, important cultural centres in which young people meet, scholarships and education to those who might not be able to afford it.

I am very pleased that we are debating this topic, and I am also very pleased that the Hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) announced this morning the establishment of the parliamentary task force to examine the question of fiscal incentives for charitable giving and the definition of charities under the Income Tax Act.

In debate today, we heard many questions. What is a charitable organization? What is a non-profit organization? How should contributions be recognized and rewarded? Should they be rewarded through the tax credit system, through deductions from income tax, through the 50 per cent proposal which we just heard, through the grant system? I think the job of this task force will be to explore questions such as those.

An important question was asked by the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp); what the legitimate activity of a recognized charity was. I think this question will have to be explored. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) reminded us, and rightly so, that we must ask what the role of a charitable organization is. Is it serving the broad public good or is it simply that of a non-profit organization which serves a very narrow group of citizens? These will not be easy questions for the combined Senate and House of Commons task force to answer.

When the topic of the voluntary sector arose today, I asked my parliamentary assistant to send to the Chamber a list of all such organizations in Parkdale-High Park. We all have such organizations on our mailing lists and keep in touch with them. It is when one puts them all together that one realizes the impact of voluntary organizations on our ridings.

I was sent a list of the ethno-cultural groups in Parkdale-High Park. There are 35 such groups in a little community like Parkdale-High Park. These groups range all the way from the Council of National Ethnocultural Organizations of Canada, which represents 26 different ethno-cultural groups, to the Chinese National League, the Czechoslovak National Association of Canada, the United Croats of Canada, the Greek Community Metro Toronto Incorporated, the Italian Canadian Association, the Japanese Canadian Citizens' Association, the Baltic Federation in Canada, the Lithuanian Canadian Community, the Latvian National Federation in Canada, the Estonian Central Council of Canada to the Maltese-Canadian Society. The list goes on and on. I have not even mentioned the largest ethno-cultural groups in the Riding of Parkdale-High Park which include the Filipino, Ukrainian and Polish organizations.

I am very fortunate, Mr. Speaker, in that the head offices of many of these organizations are located in the Riding of Parkdale-High Park. I am very pleased that, for example, the Ukrainian Canadian Committee of Ontario has its head office in Parkdale-High Park. I am very pleased that the Canadian Polish Congress has its head office right in the centre of my constituency. The Polish Alliance of Canada has its head office right in the heart of my riding.

This brings us to the question of what is a national organization. After listening to some Hon. Members this afternoon, I would think that they would define these organizations as being ones which did not serve the general good across Canada. These organizations have representation right across Canada and most of them follow a democratic process. The presidents of these organizations must be elected at either annual or biannual conventions. They are responsible to their electorate just as we are responsible to ours. That means that national organizations are very democratic organizations. They account for every penny they spend. I think other institutions could learn from these organizations.

My assistant sent over lists of other organizations. For example, she sent over a list of all the senior citizens' groups in my riding. There are 10 different senior citizens' groups in the riding of Parkdale-High Park. These include the Sampaguita senior citizens' club, the Parkdale Golden Age Club, the Over 50 Club and the Golden Years Club. Again, each of the ethno-cultural groups I have already mentioned have senior citizens' clubs.

My assistant sent me a list of the business and ratepayers' groups. These groups are non-profit, but are they charitable groups? Some of the business improvement associations such as the Parkdale Business Improvement Association, are trying to improve the environment along Queen Street. This will hopefully bring in more business, boost the economy of the area and create more jobs. However, these organizations do more than that. They provide scholarships in the neighbourhood schools. They make donations to help those who need help most.

How do we define these organizations? Are they strictly non-profit commercial organizations or are they charitable institutions? The Bloor West Village Businessmen's Association which is located in my riding does all of these things. What about the churches? There are close to 40 churches in the riding of Parkdale-High Park, most of which have a parish council of one form or another. These churches have helped to bring refugees to Canada in general and to Toronto in particular. They have helped the boat people, the Polish refugees, refugees from Guyana and refugees from other parts of the world. How do we define organizations which are connected with the churches? It is easy to define a church but how does one define the voluntary organizations connected with churches?

My assistant sent over a list containing 40 other groups which do not fit in with the groups I have already mentioned. Again, those groups provide jobs, affordable housing, scholarships for students who cannot afford to go on to higher education and other services.

Before entering politics I had the good fortune to be a farmer in Saskatchewan, the good fortune to run a family business in Ontario, and the good fortune to work on the assembly line in the Goodyear Tire Factory. Of all my jobs the most rewarding was bringing heritage languages under the Toronto Board of Education, together with the Province of Ontario. I had the good fortune to be supervising principal of 12 different heritage language programs, including Punjabi, Urdi Gujarati, Hindi, Greek, Urkrainian, Polish, Serbian, Croatian, Macedonian, the languages of the Baltic States, Greek, and Portuguese. None of these heritage languages would have been brought into the regular school system if it were not for the co-operation of the various volunteer associations, and the various ethno-cultural groups which helped the Toronto Board of Education and the Province of Ontario in the organization. Rather than children learning these languages in cold basements somewhere, they were taught in a classroom setting. What a rich resource we have in Canada in the 75 different heritage languages that are spoken here.

This House has debated how to increase productivity, and that competition for world trade is becoming greater, Mr. Speaker. What an excellent resource Canada has in people who speak 75 different languages, thanks to the help of all these voluntary organizations. How can we ever reimburse them? What would we have to pay these organizations if they charged the going rate? The country could not afford the programs if it were not for the voluntary sector. Those organizations do not want compensation, they are happy to do this and feel that they are better Canadians because they have made a contribution to the growth of the country.

We have heard various proposals about how Canadians who make contributions to those organizations might be reimbursed and how the Government could assist those organizations. But there has been no mention of a proposal that has been made to me in the 20 years that I have been working with ethno-cultural groups, Mr. Speaker. Those groups do not want a hand-out from the Government, they want to pay their own way, but they would welcome something like long-term low interest loans so they could build their ethno-cultural centres and not be in debt up to their ears with all their energies going into raising money rather than into programs for young people and senior citizens. This is where we as legislators could be of assistance to a lot of service clubs such as the Parkdale Lions Club, Rotary clubs, and Kiwanis clubs.

Ethno-cultural organizations are national, not local, with national networks and duly held conventions where executives are elected and are responsible to the electorate. What would be wrong with giving a loan for 20, 30 or 40 years at 5 per cent interest so that the organizations could provide programs to senior citizens in the cultural centres, could provide heritage language classes, and space for people to practise their heritage cultures? Where do the various Boy Scouts and Girl Guides in our country meet? Some meet in schools, but the Ukrainian Boy Scouts and Girl Guides have their own cultural centres. They have their own camps, built with their own money. Where do the Polish Boy Scouts and Polish Girl Guides meet? They have camps at Barrys Bay, as the Hon. Member for Renfrew knows very well. He is very proud of the work the Polish Canadians are doing in his area. They take children out of the hot cities in the summer and give them a fresh air experience, teaching them leadership and self-confidence and how to preserve their language and heritage. In that way they preserve their identity and become better Canadians.

I would recommend that the task force look into the possibility of giving low interest or interest free loans, if we can afford it, to these organizations. That would not be a hand-out; they would be paying their own way.

I should like to close by tossing out four guidelines that the task force might keep in mind and that we as legislators might keep in mind to help the voluntary sector. I think we have all made a great contribution today. If we could offer some guidelines that the task force could follow that would be helpful.

First, the incentive should be an effective one. It does not make sense if the cost of the incentive exceeds the additional amount of "giving" that results from it.

Second, any tax incentive should provide equitable treatment to taxpayers; this is the essential basis for any tax system.

Third, the cost to the Treasury Board should not be unreasonable. I think we all admit that we are running a very high deficit. We should not increase it but should try to bring it down. The task force should keep in mind that the cost to the Treasury Board should not be unreasonable.

Fourth, administrative and compliance costs should be reasonable.

With those four guidelines and with our discussion of what constitutes voluntary organizations and non-profit organizations highlighting the contribution that all these local and national voluntary organizations have made to the growth of Canada, this Chamber may finally include the voluntary sector when it speaks about co-operation.

Mr. Bosley: Mr. Speaker, I have just a couple of quick questions for the Hon. Member. The first requires only a short answer. Am I correct in believing that he advocates that the joint House and Senate Committee should have the capacity to look at his proposals with regard to low-interest long-term loans and fiscal incentives? Is it his view that the task force should have that right?

Mr. Flis: Mr. Speaker, I think they should explore that and consult with the various organizations to get their input. I believe it is a proposal that I as the Member for Parkdale-High Park can toss out for the task force to consider.

Mr. Bosley: Is the Hon. Member aware that the Minister's notice of motion tabled yesterday establishing the committee, excludes all questions of fiscal incentive and financing matters from its deliberations?

• (1710)

Mr. Flis: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am aware of that. As the Hon. Member knows, by unanimous consent in this House we can do whatever we have the will to do.

Mr. Bosley: Mr. Speaker, would the Member care to tell the House whether, as opposed to unanimous consent, if an amendment were moved to the terms of reference to include fiscal incentives and considerations by any Hon. Member of this House, no matter of what Party, he would support such an amendment to the terms of reference so that his matters may be studied, whether or not that amendment is adopted unanimously?

Mr. Flis: Mr. Speaker, that is a hypothetical question. I believe I would first like to see the amendment and the implications of it before I would make any decision on it.

Mr. McLean: This morning when the Minister was in the House, Mr. Speaker, I asked him if the question of tax incentives might be clearly in the frame of reference. At the time he was tabling background documents relating to it. He said he would take the matter under consideration. Today at lunch, as the Minister spoke to the leaders of the national voluntary coalition who are gathered here in conference, they reiterated to the Minister that they felt the task force would be seriously jeopardized in its mandate without the mandate calling for testimony in relation to tax incentives.

Will the Hon. Member join with the members of the national voluntary coalition in Canada and with other Hon. Members in the House with respect to both the question which has already been outlined relating to the definition of "charity", and the question of tax incentives, which we are pressing, and which representatives and leaders are requesting? I sensed, as the Hon. Member said, "We do not want handouts", that the question of tax incentives is consistent with what he was indicating to us in the House. Therefore, will he speak in support of these representations to the Minister?

Mr. Flis: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows me very well. We have worked on many committees together. I always support any reasonable suggestion or recommendation. However, I was not here this morning. I was at the meeting of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence so I did not hear the debate. I did not hear what the Minister said on the national voluntary organizations. I would like to read what the Minister actually said, what the exchange was, before answering more fully.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I have just a short comment and question. Earlier, I noted the way in which our housing program and multicultural program have created a partnership between volunteers and the federal Government. The Hon. Member has hinted at the programs for seniors. I see the Minister for National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) in the House. I would like to tell her that the New Horizons Program extends these principles to senior citizens and gives them a chance to be partners in community projects with the federal Government. I wonder if the Hon. Member could reflect on some of the experiences in his riding.

Mr. Flis: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I did not have time to go into it so I am happy the Hon. Member has given me some time now.

On Saturday of this last weekend I met in St. Joan of Arc Church in my riding the UMAT Katolik Indonesia, which is an Indonesian senior citizens club. There were 300 senior citizens present. One of the things they are actively pursuing is the building, together with assistance from CMHC, of a senior citizens centre. Because we have no land left to build on in Parkdale-High Park they want to build it somewhere in Mississauga.

We have other excellent examples, Mr. Speaker. We have the Copernicus Lodge in our riding. That was built, thanks to the co-operation of the federal Government, through CMHC, and the Polish community. We have two phases now. The first phase is where senior citizens can live and look after themselves. They have apartments in which they cook and look after themselves. Once they become older they can move into phase two of Copernicus Lodge where there is nursing care and all sorts of assistance for these seniors. Here again is an excellent example of what the community can do in partnership with the Government.

The Lithuanian people have built a senior citizens home right on Bloor Street in Parkdale-High Park. It was filled before it was completed, again, thanks to the assistance of the federal Government through CMHC with respect to Section 56.1. I would urge the Minister responsible for CMHC to give priority to funding for these kinds of senior citizens homes because there is an established organization there. They know what the needs are for their senior citizens. In that centre, they can hear their heritage language and see their own culture. They have a taste for different foods, and so on. However, they do not exclude other Canadians. They welcome all Canadians who want to come and live in that home. The Ukrainians have similar homes, and other groups.

Yes, in response to the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher), if anyone would like to come and see and study these excellent models, and I mean this sincerely, so that perhaps they can promote this in their ridings, we would welcome them in Parkdale-High Park. They exist because of the dedication and contributions of these voluntary ethnic culture groups working hand in hand with the federal Government. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, I must say that the provincial government, which is responsible for affordable housing, is not doing much to help.

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy today to be able to say a few words to the motion before the House. I compliment my friend, the Hon. Member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean) on the motion. I believe we are discussing something today which is of great importance to Canadian life and to every Canadian. The Hon. Member for Waterloo has proposed:

That this House condemns the Government for its failure to honour the commitment made both in 1974 and 1981 by Canada's Secretary of State to develop, in co-operation with the voluntary sector, a comprehensive government action policy with respect to the voluntary sector and urges the Government to provide an immediate incentive to Canada's 40,000 registered charities by implementing the give and take tax credit proposal.

I feel that we have had a good day in the House, Mr. Speaker. I have not been here for all of the debate, but I believe the mood which has been demonstrated by the Hon. Members of all three Parties indicates that we are moving ahead with something which I personally feel is very important, that is, the whole question of voluntary associations and how they operate within our country.

Basically, what the Hon. Member for Waterloo is proposing is that this very valuable work in Canadian society be rewarded, more or less, and those who are taking part, by having a very clearly defined tax break. Those who give to voluntary organizations will have an immediate return, not unlike the return to persons who give to political parties today, which I believe has been a great advance in the whole political system of Canada. I would like to say a little about the historical development of this whole notion of voluntarism, the notion that our Canadian life runs and has run on the idea that people are ready to volunteer to help each other prepare and make a better society. I would like to reflect for a few moments on my own life history.

I was born in western Canada on the Prairies in Rosetown, Saskatchewan. My father was a pioneer. He came to the west early in the 1900s, as thousands of other people came from eastern Canada, from Europe and from the United States. They came to a literally barren land in which there was nothing but open space and lots of sky. There was land, and they were able to take out a quarter section of land, 160 acres, in their own names. Some of them made a success of it and some did not. Some of them were farmers and some were not. However, when the peoples of the world arrived, established and set up the communities of western Canada, they did it basically through their voluntary organizations. If you drive through western Canada now you can see what happened. When people arrived there they did not know each other but they knew they could not survive unless they helped each other. You see the churches and the schools on the Prairies, although most of the schools established in the early days on a voluntary basis are now gone. I went to one of those little one-room schools, as have thousands of others. They were the beginnings of Canadian life in that part of the country. When you talk to the pioneers, it was a rich life even though they had great hardships. It was rich because they worked together in these voluntary organizations. They had their music and drama clubs and other things four or five years after they arrived. My life, and that of many others in the House of Commons, has been shaped and formed by the voluntary sector of our land.

Today we are talking about specific areas in which the voluntary sector can be improved. I have a feeling from listening to what has been going on today that that is going to happen. It may not be perfect and immediate, but it is moving. I think that is very positive because everyone here knows from personal experience that what we are talking about is extremely important.

I am a Catholic Priest and I have lived most of my life in the voluntary sector, the church. The same is true of the Hon. Member who moved the motion. He is a Protestant Minister and he has lived in that part of society. This is part and parcel of what I am all about, it is a way of doing what I am going to put simply as loving your neighbour. That is a simple mandate, given to everyone. The whole world knows that is what we are supposed to do. How do you love your neighbour today in this complicated society? The motion talks about that and it helps us to do it better.

The voluntary sector has to be financed, Mr. Speaker. We all know there was a period of time when everyone in Canada could get a standard $100 deduction for purposes of their taxes. The Department simply found it too complicated, I suppose, to take every little donation and add it up; it just said let us take it for granted that every Canadian is that interested and given at least $100. Well, the last Budget eliminated that deduction. The voluntary sector said that it should be taken out, it was not true that every Canadian gave $100. On the other hand, they asked that for every dollar given to a voluntary organization, there be a tax benefit of 50 cents. When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) produced his last Budget he was quick to take out the $100 but he did not give the tax credit. Today the Hon. Member for Waterloo is asking that the second part be respected, and I hope the task force looks at this seriously. If that is done, the whole process of the voluntary sector will improve. The Government will not suffer because more money will flow into that sector. This will be a saving in the end for the Government itself.

Going back to the question of why I believe what we are doing today is so important, Mr. Speaker, I want to refer again to the idea of love your neighbour. By good fortune we have agencies who are doing that. We can become part and parcel of that work by stretching out our hands and helping other people, loving other people, by helping the organizations who are doing just that in the modern world. On the Prairies where I grew up it was easy to know your neighbour; he was a half a mile down the road. Everyone knew the people in small towns in the district, they knew who was sick, who did not have food. But today it is not so easy.

The question today is, who is my neighbour? Who is my neighbour where I live, who is my neighbour in my province, my country or in the international community? That is the question we have to address. Being active in the church at one level or another all my life, that was where I really came to terms with how that worked, why people were willing to do that through a church or another organization. It is a natural way to respond to the demand to love other people. I could talk of hundreds of thousands of people who are able to do that. Today we are trying to improve what is already in place. As I said, I think from what I have heard in the House today that that is going to happen. It may not be tomorrow or next week, but it is going to happen because the goodwill is present in this House today.

Some things are going to have to be discussed which are not easy. One question is, when does an activity become political? When does this or that particular group become political? It is not an easy question to answer. Some people will consider an action to be political, while someone else will consider it to be very charitable. They can see that the only possible response to a particular thing at a particular time has to be this activity. But two people see it two different ways.

Last Sunday, in a church in which I had never been before, following Mass I went around to a little alcove in which the local community had set up a development project. It was something to do with Lent, showing how this particular parish had responsibility to people in other parts of the world. There was a picture there of a good friend of mine, Dom Helder Camara, the Archbishop for Recife in Brazil. He retired from office in the last few weeks because he is 75 years old. He has visited Canada many times, and many people in this House, as well as those watching on television, have publicly heard him speak. Under the picture of Dom Helder Camara was written: "When I give food to the hungry, people call me a Saint; but when I ask why the poor do not have food, they call me a communist." Through that little expression we come to the question which will be difficult for that task force to answer. Where does religion stop and politics start, or politics stop and religion start? That is going to be difficult.

Dom Helder Camara has worked with many of the volunteer organizations I have worked with in international development. The Canadian Catholic Organization for Development of Peace, for instance, is a volunteer organization that uses the donations of Canadians to help development projects around the world. Dom Helder Camara has frequently come to Canada to speak to that group. I know from my own experience in working with him that much of the funding given by Canadian people has gone to work in his section of northeast Brazil where there is massive poverty, hunger, health problems and so on. I believe that the person who gives what he can to any organization is loving his neighbour. That is one of the ways in which Canadian people, who live in a rich part of the world, can help those less privileged in other parts of the world.

I believe that the income tax law should be changed so that when a person gives a donation to a particular organization which they believe is loving their neighbour they should in turn receive a something themselves; that is, they will get a tax break. This will make it possible for them to extend their own personal income to help someone else.

I think there is strong motivation in what has been proposed by my colleague from Waterloo which will benefit the volunteer sector of our country and will not be a burden imposed on the taxpayers. This type of activity will make funds more readily available. Grants from the Government will not be necessary. The people themselves will take greater responsibility in the local, national and international areas. The responsibilities which are part and parcel of being a human being will be more easily addressed because people will have more say in how their charity is being used in the world.

The National Volunteer Organizations are meeting here today. It is a very good day to have this debate. It is fitting that it should be today. There must be a lot of clarification of words. In the volunteer sector definitions of many things are not clear. There is a lot of vagueness with regard to religion and politics. The information which has been supplied by the National Volunteer Organizations to members and anyone who is interested indicates that a charitable organization has to be defined by the tradition of the common law. A charitable organization can be one of four things. It can be for the relief of poverty, for the advancement of religion, for the advancement of education or for other purposes beneficial to the community. That gives us an idea of what charitable organizations are. In whatever new legislation is proposed there must be clear a understanding of what those particular areas are. When the common law was being established I am sure that the word community referred to a very small group. Today most people have a much bigger vision of what community is. It refers not only to down the road, but to the whole global village.

Another reason I think the debate today is so important is that I suspect what we are talking about today in the House of Commons will touch more people than any other single Bill or motion to which I have spoken. Probably every Canadian is involved in one or more of these voluntary groups. It could be in sports, music, health, with the Red Cross, with the local YMCA or with any one of the church groups I am talking about. Many people are involved with many of these organizations. What we are talking about today is important because it is going to touch every single Canadian directly one way or another. Something will happen so that that person will be affected. Something will happen that will make that person more able to act the way I was speaking about a little earlier; the whole way of how to love your neighbour. We are discussing something today which is of intense interest to every Canadian.

I see that my time is up. I am happy to have had these minutes to propose a few ideas about how I hope the task force will begin its work. I hope it will have direction in its work which will reflect some of the things we have talked about today. I will close by saying that I feel we have had a good and profitable debate, and I am very happy to have been part of it.

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief, since I have been asked to share the last few minutes with my Opposition colleagues.

I am glad the subject was put on the agenda by the Official Opposition. I must admit that in the five years I have been sitting in the House, it is the first time I have seen the Official Opposition move such a constructive motion, and they ask to be congratulated.

If we really take the trouble to give the subject the attention it deserves, it could have a tremendous impact on this country, and the economic benefits will be very substantial indeed.

Have we ever stopped to think what a country would be if it did not have the voluntary sector? It would be unthinkable. So if we can bring this debate, which has been conducted with very little show of partisanship—it must not be a partisan debate in any case—to a satisfactory end, I am sure the entire country will benefit. Why? Because if we stop and think for a minute, this debate and I think we should realize this will help us make all the Members of this House and Canadians who are watching us more aware of what the voluntary sector represents for a country.

If we have the sense to try and harmonize all these efforts and all the potential that exists in our country, if we take the trouble to use these resources intelligently, Mr. Speaker, there are people out there who need only the slightest encouragement to get on board and serve their community.

We see this constantly in our communities, and when we visit our ridings, we see all these groups, these service clubs consisting of men and women, some of whom spend as much as one-third of their time on volunteer work. If that work could be quantified, I think that we could demonstrate that the voluntary sector makes a considerable contribution to the gross national product. If we were wise enough to recognize that contribution in some way or other, either through a tax deduction or otherwise, I would favourably consider the setting up of a House committee. I hope that such a committee would apply itself to the task at hand in order to achieve tangible results. We would thus be able to tap that potential of voluntary work.

There are so many Canadians throughout the country doing voluntary work at present and still more would be ready to do so. There are many retired individuals who are well off; the wives of tradesmen, for example, or other professionals who live at home or have raised their family. They have great qualifications and would be ready to make them available to their community. But first the Government of Canada should ask them to come forward and show them its interest and gratitude?

Mr. Speaker, I realize that some members of the official opposition would like to speak. To conclude my remarks, I hope that the debate will remain non-partisan, that it will continue in committee and that we will be intelligent enough as managers of this country to take advantage of that enormous potential in Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Questions, comments, debate. The Hon. Member for Don Valley West.

• (1740)

[English]

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I gather that it may fall to me to close this debate today. If there are others who wish to speak, I would be happy to reduce the length of my comments.

I accept the good will and the sentiments of the words of the previous speaker. Perhaps he will understand and even forgive me if I become to some degree what he might regard as slightly partisan. However, I will not be partisan on the question of voluntary associations or voluntary work. We all derive benefits from that work of hundreds of thousands of Canadians who do whatever they can to help their fellow Canadians. That is not a partisan matter. I believe everyone in the House from all parties believes it is absolutely essential.

There is a distinction which must be made between the activities of associations and their members and the frustration that the leaders of those associations feel about what is truthfully significant inactivity on the part of the federal Government to resolve the problems which their institutions have been dealing with, as members trying to help others, for ten years. Let me give an example in order to help members opposite understand.

In 1978, the Department of Revenue issued a circular, later withdrawn, which attempted to come to grips with the issue of what is an activity by a registered charity that is prohibited by law. Let me quote one of the issues raised in this circular. It states that written or oral representations to the involved Minister of the Crown are also looked upon as an acceptable activity on the condition that such representations are limited to presenting the organization's interests and points of view, and otherwise do not attempt to influence legislation.

According to the common law and language of this circular, attempting to influence legislation is illegal for the institutions we are talking about. In other words, the document entitled "Charity Today and Tomorrow", which has sat on the desks of Ministers of the Crown for some years now, is conceivably an illegal document and the presentation of that document is illegal.

In the context of what is not or should not be acceptable activity in terms of public purpose or benefit, the organizations themselves do not know whether they are in fact at risk of losing their charitable registration when they make a representation. While members may say that this has never happened and does not happen, we were told by the Civil Liberties Association last week that they thought they were taking reasonably sensible action in raising some money to defend a person before the courts on a human rights issue, which is their purpose and objective, but were told that they could not do that. They could not issue charitable receipts for those funds, and if they proceeded they were at risk of losing their registration for doing precisely what their objectives say they should do.

Mr. McLean: Ask the Mental Health Association.

Mr. Bosley: Ask the Mental Health Association of Canada whether it is clear if one is in violation of the law.

Just as a simple administrative matter, that same Civil Liberties Association for some reason did not file a return in 1978 or 1979. The computer system used by Revenue Canada has no capacity to notify a known charity of its failure to file a return and simply deems it to have disappeared. When this association raised its funds for the next year, it discovered that it had no right to issue receipts. These organizations do not know what their rights are.

Hon. Members opposite have tried to see this issue in terms of the good work that is done, but they have missed the issue as it is seen by the institutions. The issue facing organizations who are attempting to do something useful in this country today is that they have no way of knowing whether they are acting illegally or at risk of losing registration. They have no way of determining this because it is still a common law matter.

Since 1974, those institutions have sought a collective definition in the law to clarify their circumstances. Since 1974, the Government has been promising over and over again to do that. Here we are, on April 3, 1984, discussing a motion on the Order Paper asking the Minister to create a joint committee to look at the question of what charitable objects are and what the legal rights should be.

This is not a new issue. This same document from the National Voluntary Organizations, now in their tenth year, shows that in 1981 they submitted proposals to the Minister of Finance to resolve the issue. The key phrase in this document is, "That following three years of consultations the Coalition of National Voluntary Organizations submitted a proposal to the Minister of Finance in December, 1981". How long will it take parliamentarians—I mean all of us—to recognize that we have a special obligation to clear these matters up quickly for people who are put into a position by our inactivity of potentially being illegal if they call us or write to us to tell us their problems. They do not have the same rights to lobby us or raise their own issues with us. They responded to consultations over three years by submitting a document in 1981. What did they get? They got three more years of non-action and another motion before the House, presumably well-intentioned. We all hope it produces action to resolve this question.

● (1750)

What have various Ministers said, Mr. Speaker? In 1981 the then Secretary of State at a conference entitled "Consultation '81" said:

> I am committed to the development of a comprehensive federal government action policy developed jointly with the voluntary sector.

The Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) at the Conference of the Canadian Centre for Philanthropy in Toronto On November 10, 1982, said:

> With this in mind, I intend to place this matter before Cabinet. My plan of action has five objectives . . .
> 1. To determine the legal and fiscal framework within which the Government and the voluntary sector can work together.

In 1983 and 1984, what do we have? We have a motion that takes precisely that line, to determine the legal and fiscal framework within which the Government and the voluntary sector can work together, and it strikes out half of them. The motion before the House leaves out the words "and fiscal". It would not be surprising to me if leaders of the National Voluntary Associations were a little skeptical about the purposes behind the motion tabled on the Order Paper. It says:

> That a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons be appointed to examine and report upon the legal framework for voluntary actions with particular reference to the following:

There have been two issues facing the volunteer world: one, definition of status; and two, an attempt to get a better fiscal support mechanism for their activities. It is not as though Members of the House do not know this. Members of the House have heard the debate about give and take for at least four years. Members of the House know full well that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) took half of give and take. He kicked out the $100 charitable donation deduction. He did not put back the proposal to allow charitable institutions and voluntary associations to get at the tax credit, which was the second leg of that proposal.

Mr. McLean: An $80 million tax grab.

Mr. Bosley: The Minister of Finance could have tabled in the House at the time what he expected the tax expenditure saving to be, which is that wonderful technical phrase which means how much money he was going to get in extra—what he was going to get in extra. In fact, if you work it out in his documents, it is $80 million. The Minister of Finance could have said that this issue of support for those who are trying to help others has been around long enough; I am taking the take part of give and take and I am going to give only $80 million worth of the give proposal. But no, we get into more of the language, Mr. Speaker, that says let us have a Parliamentary committee some day. Let us look at the proposal somewhere else some day. In fairness, many of us expected that the new Secretary of State meant what he said 13 months ago and before that, that there would be a joint committee to look at these questions and try to resolve them.

It is frustrating to recognize that all Members of the House—and let us keep this as best we can non-partisan—who believe that the issue of the way people raise money is an important part of understanding the issue of the charitable institutions, and we are now going to have to lobby, I hope with the help of those on the other side who have raised the issue themselves. We still must persuade the Minister, it would appear, to include that issue in the joint committee study. It should not be surprising if many Members of this House believe that the words of the motion put by the Hon. Member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean) are absolutely correct. It states:

That this House condemns the Government for its failure to honour the commitment made both in 1974 and in 1981—

And it goes on to urge the Government to do, in effect, what it has been saying all along it was going to do. I repeat, we can go on and on forever talking about the reasons there may be difficulties with definitions or difficulties with certain proposals, but we miss the fundamental point if we do that.

The fundamental point is, and I say this particularly for those who have raised several issues today, can we reverse our thinking on the issue? Can we stop finding ways to say no to people who are trying to help others, and find ways to say yes to them? They have not asked for very much. If we want, we can get hung up on questions of whether we should treat non-profit institutions differently from charitable institutions. We can get hung up on the questions of what shall be acceptable activity and what should not. Why not do the sensible thing and say "we will define what you may not do"; we will tell you what activities, presumably to use their own definition, such as the support of a political party. Those will not be activities acceptable for people who have tax exempt status. Why do we not give them the freedom that they should have to be able to make representations to us, as every other Canadian can make on issues that are matters of public policy?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bosley: Why should that be a surprising idea? Somehow we have invented some mindset that says if an organization has a view about public policy, it is all right for it to raise a lot of money, conduct a public education policy and run ads about that issue, which presumably would have an indirect effect on us through the voting public, but if we were able to prove that its purpose was to influence the legislation, we would declare it illegal. Or as one Member opposite told us recently in his view it is all right if they educate the public because the public are the people who elect us, and then the public can respond. In other words, if they can influence us indirectly, that is fine, but they shall have no right to influence us directly, to make their views known to us. Surely that is lunacy; surely it is self-evident lunacy, that we would say that to the National Cancer Society, the opera society, or others, for example the cultural organizations who we asked to tell us through the Appelbaum Hébert process, through parliamentary committees for a year and a half what policies there should be. We paid many of them some expense money to come here to tell us, because they are the practitioners, what cultural policies should be. Does it not sound absurd to have a law that says Revenue Canada might then be able to go after them for appearing before a Parliamentary committee because they had now violated the law, were illegal and could lose their charitable registration for telling what public policy should be in the area of arts and culture? Surely it is self-evident lunacy. What justification can there be for the delay?

Before I sit down, I want to say something about some of the responses made today to the give and take proposals in the area of the policy distinction that must be made between grants and tax credits. According to some, notably the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher), the issue is more than simply grants and tax credits. It is whether we accept the principle that people should be encouraged to give of themselves voluntarily for public purposes and objects about which they care.

The grant systems of government are designed to find vehicles, whether they be in or out of government—notably out of government—to do things, projects, programs, be it for the Minister of State for Sport (Mr. Olivier) or the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), and which the government has decided should be done. The Minister of State for Sport provides funds for the ski team if he chooses because he believes it is important. That is a grant. What if somebody on the ski team, in the association or someone in the health programs or in culture believes there is a program their organization should mount that is within their purposes as a charitable organization? Surely it is equally self-evident that the purpose of a tax credit system is to assist people doing work within the public arena of purpose, to do projects they believe are important within those objects, within the registration and within what is permitted activity.

If we ever were to get to a situation, as the Hon. Member from Mississauga was suggesting, not only would we define a charity for the purposes of the law, but we would then define, restrict and control the programs they could get into by administering them through a grant system as opposed to a system of encouraging people to give to them. Then we really would be crazy.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

LOTTERIES—SPORTS POOL CORPORATION. (B) REQUEST FOR FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL MEETING

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I did not get a chance to speak in the debate today. I would have contributed more impetus in so far as the voluntary sector with regard to the different sporting fraternities is concerned. It would have been a great little bit of debate. I know my friend the Sports Minister would like to have taken part in the debate.

The question I asked on March 27, as reported at page 2472 of Hansard, was directed to the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Olivier). There have been three such Ministers prior to this Minister. One is in the other place. He is now going to lose a baseball franchise, along with another Senator. They are very worried because of the sports pool. The other one was a sports broadcaster. I thought he would, without making unilateral decisions, sit down with some of his provincial counterparts. Then there was the Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette) who was looking for Canadian unity so that she could get as much publicity as she could in her portfolio but she really did not do very much.

I am delighted that the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport is here today to answer my question. I want to bring to the attention of the House the current unilateral action of the Liberal Government, which in effect abrogates the 1979 federal-provincial lottery agreement. It is a direct assault on co-operative federalism. The Chairman of the ILC shareholders' committee has twice made specific invitations to the federal authorities to discuss federal-provincial differences over lotteries.

The new sports pool could result in a tremendous proliferation of sports pool/lottery games as the Canadian Sports Pool Corporation tries to meet its heavy start-up costs. The poor results of Loto Quebec's Hockey Select suggests that the federal Sports Pool will fail if they do not create a number of lottery-type games. Since there is a limit to the lottery market, the resulting competition could result in higher administrative, advertising and commission costs, resulting in lower profits to distribute to culture, amateur sport, fitness, recreation, health and environmental research.

As well as treating a legal federal-provincial agreement with disdain and thereby threatening all federal-provincial agreements, the Liberal Government seems to be reneging on the 1979 agreement since it was agreed to by the Clark P.C. Government. That could set a particularly bad precedent, putting into question whether a new Brian Mulroney Government could likewise unilaterally terminate any or all legal agreements which the former Liberal Government had entered into.

It should be recalled that the 1979 agreement was a good agreement. It established in Canada a practice common to most other federal jurisdictions, such as the United States and West Germany, wherein lotteries/sports pools are left to the provincial level of jurisdiction. Even economically, the 1979 agreement was beneficial for the federal Government. For doing nothing, except vacating the lottery field, the federal treasury has received to date $124 million or $125 million from the ILC, and could receive approximately $35 million this year. I am sure the Minister would agree.

While the provinces have done well in the four years they have managed exclusively the lottery field, the true comparison of what the federal Government has gained is when you compare what the federal Loto Canada turned over to the federal treasury compared to the ILC payments. In 1977, 1978, 1979 and 1980, four years, the total profits in Loto Canada were $210 million. The federal treasury received $10.5 million and 5 per cent of the total profits were supposedly earmarked for physical fitness, amateur sport and recreation. I say supposedly since, unlike Ontario where lottery profits are designated by legislation, the federal Government has put the ILC payments it receives directly into the general revenue. I plan to check over the last four years to see whether both the federal Department of Multiculturalism and the Department of Fitness and Amateur Sport each received their full 50 per cent share of the ILC payments for the last four years, or whether they were shortchanged, and whether any of these lottery moneys were used to replace basic funding.

There is also a potentially embarrassing issue pertaining to some $3.2 million in unclaimed Loto Canada prizes. Loto Çanada retained this money instead of ensuring that the Canadian public was able to win it through some kind of bonus draw like Loto 649 or proportioning it according to the distribution of its profits.

I will not deal with this now, but today I raised a question referring to the fact that there was $12.8 million in the kitty initially, and I asked how the Minister transferred those funds into the other fund. I know that the Minister will at least ask his counterparts to discuss this matter because, if he does not he will lose the baseball franchise and get himself into more trouble.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for having given me this opportunity to speak on this subject. The House will recall that the provinces have shown their intentions, and what is more, they have gone already to Court. I shall therefore be careful what I say. Where my hon. friend opposite claims that we broke an agreement he himself signed in 1979. My answer is, simply, that we did not break this agreement because we have no intention of administering a lottery.

What we intend to do is to administer a sports pool, which is entirely different from a lottery. In a lottery, you take a number at random and you have a chance of winning. A sports pool is mainly a test of a person's intelligence and the individual's knowledge of sports, all of which must be used in determining who the winner or loser will be.

My hon. friend opposite says that we did not hold consultations. I am sorry, but my senior officials have held consultations with lottery authorities across the country to advise them that we did not intend to break this agreement. The best proof is, Mr. Speaker, that only today, I heard through the media that people who signed the 1979 agreement sent us a cheque for $8 million. So, when you have a party who says he is not observing the agreement, he is not paying, and who says the next day that you did not observe the agreement, I think this is very strange indeed. However, we do have a very serious problem, which is that the Government of Canada needs money to make the Calgary Games the best Olympic Games ever in this country, we need $200 million. Amateur sport needs money, medical research needs money; and the taxpayer can no longer pay taxes and this is a perfectly normal and easy way to raise money without unduly taxing Canadians and it gives sports enthusiasts a chance to participate indirectly in the Canada Games, the Commonwealth Games and the Pan American Games. That is what we had in mind when we set up these sports pools. My honourable friend opposite signed an agreement in which he substituted $35 million for a potential $200 million. I do not know of many people in this House who would sign this kind of agreement. We intend to abide by these terms because, for the time being, we do not intend to get involved in lotteries. Our purpose is strictly to get into the sports pool area, and I think that is quite clear. This was explained when Parliament passed the Bill last June, authorizing the Government to get involved in sports pools. Since the matter is now before the courts, I would rather not elaborate on the subject much longer.

Regarding the franchise, I had a meeting this morning with the president of the baseball leagues, and he said very clearly that to him, these were two different matters. He felt it was morally questionable and said that, as a matter of principle baseball disagreed with the sports pool concept. Regarding the Vancouver franchise, this is a matter of—

GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING—RAIL EXPANSION ADVERTISEMENT. (B) REQUEST THAT ADVERTISEMENT BE STOPPED

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise during the adjournment debate to elaborate on a question I put to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) on March 26. It referred to the misleading and self-serving advertising by his Department, paid for with Canadian taxpayers, which appeared in the Financial Post of March 8. In this misleading and self-serving piece of government propaganda, paid for by the taxpayers in Canada, entitled "Canada's Rail Expansion to Meet the Demands of a Growing World", there was a statement that there would be 375,000 jobs for Canadians and a $16.5 billion investment in our rail transportation system.

On February 8, 1983 when the then Minister of Transport presented proposals for the change in the statutory rate for the movement of grain, he did not refer to 375,000 jobs, he referred to 375,000 person years. So in February of 1983, we have reference to 375,000 person years. When I questioned the President of the Canadian National Railways at the Standing Committee on Transport about the investments that would take place in all the railroad industry and about the creation of jobs, he said that approximately 50,000 person years would be created. Using a multiplier effect of three, that means 150,000 jobs to be created between now and 1991.

The Minister of Transport gave another figure. He said that $1.1 billion of new capital investment will be going into the Canadian economy this year. I hope that when the Parliamentary Secretary answers my question she will be able to tell me where that $1.1 billion is being invested. I hope she will be able to tell me the reason for this advertising.

In February, 1983, we were given the figure of 375,000 person years. Then in the March, 1984 advertisement 375,000 jobs are mentioned. Next, in Maclean's magazine of April 2, 1984 there is another ad, paid for by the people of Canada, produced for some self-serving reason, which states that more than 300,000 jobs will be created. We have come down from 375,000 person years to 375,000 jobs and now we have only 300,000 jobs. All the time the people who will develop the rail network in western Canada, the railroads, are saying 150,000 jobs will be created between now and 1991.

Let us come now to the matter of expenditures. In February 1983, the former Minister of Transport said that $16.5 billion would be invested in the rail network by the year 1991. The officials of that Department are now saying that it will be closer to $12.5 billion. The Minister says that is because of inflation, that inflation has gone down. When the Bill was passed, Mr. Speaker, we were in the second year of the six and five program. The Government was so sure that inflation would come down to 4 per cent that it said the farmers would have to bear all the inflation over 4 per cent—everything would be borne by the producer.

The reason that investment has gone down can be found in one of the Minister's in which he that we do not have to invest that money at this time because the movement of coal has decreased by 13 per cent and, therefore, we do not have to invest in coal cars. Apparently the reason the statutory rate for the movement of grain was removed and this substituted was for the movement of coal; it did not have anything to do with the movement of grain.

The April 2, 1984, issue of Maclean's carries an advertisement that mentions 300,000 jobs. The Minister does not even have the courage to estimate the investment that the railroads will make even in the next few years. He just says that there will be billions of dollars of new investment. He has corrected it a little bit but the rational is self-serving, erroneous, and it is paid for by the taxpayers.

• (1815)

There is one thing we have to know, Mr. Speaker. The Minister says these ads were placed to show Canadian businessmen the opportunities available to them over the next number of years. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will be able to tell me the number of tenders which have been called, which was the reason for these businessmen and women being alerted to the opportunities, because, Mr. Speaker, I am sure the tenders which have been called fall far, far short of the $1.1 billion which the Minister said would be invested this year.

[Translation]

Mrs. Éva Côté (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think that the controversy concerning the western grain transportation issue has not been laid to rest. I am somewhat surprised to hear so many comments about the advertising campaign to tell people that Western Canada's transport facilities will be upgraded for all users, regardless of the type of freight transported. We are now witnessing a "war of figures", as some people are wont to say.

Mr. Speaker, if we keep in mind the interest rates and the costly inflation of 1981, the figures then provided by the railway companies concerning the investments that the Government of Canada had asked them to make to meet market conditions still seem fair and realistic, today in the context of the economic conditions prevailing at that time.

In case anyone should be in doubt, today is April 3, 1984 and the inflation rate is less than 4 per cent. Current interest rates are not running at 21, 22 or 23 per cent, but at 10.5 or 11 per cent. We have now been told that if the two railway companies were to slash their total investments to the tune of $4 million, the number of jobs created would be reduced by about 50,000 person-years. I have no idea whether that is true or not. One thing for sure, Mr. Speaker, is that the commitments made through Bill C-155 to upgrade considerably and almost spectacularly Western freight transport, in either direction, mean that those projects will be carried out at current costs. The one undeniable fact is that the annual investments which will be made by the railway companies and the Government—with taxpayers' dollars, I agree—will be in excess of $1 billion. I am being asked whether interest rates in 1990 will be 25 per cent, what the costs will be and how many jobs will be created. I cannot answer that today, Mr. Speaker. However, one thing is true, and the Members opposite should stop annoying the public with that: the fact is that the work has started and will be completed. The movement of all Western products, including the movement of grain, which will increase substantially, will become much more efficient, and thus less costly for the users, because there will be fewer delays and because our objective, which will certainly be met, is to have in Western Canada an efficient railway system which will benefit the whole country.

Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with those who think only in terms of so many person-years and of so many jobs created in relation with the amounts of money invested, without taking into account the evolution of the economy itself and of world markets, or what we can produce ourselves to be marketed and to meet future requirements. The 1981 forecasts were made at a time when interest and inflation rates were very high, but the situation has changed. I hope that I have answered the Hon. Member's question, Mr. Speaker.

RAILWAYS—TRANSPORTATION OF DANGEROUS GOODS. (B) DISTRIBUTION OF DEPARTMENTAL DOCUMENT

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to rise concerning a question I posed on March 5 having to do with the transportation of dangerous goods. I am particularly pleased to rise following the presentation of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight). After listening to the Parliamentary Secretary and watching the expressions on my colleague's face, I sense that he is not better informed than before he posed the elaboration of his question.

This occasion, Mr. Speaker, gives me an opportunity to say that I believe the current Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) is the most elusive and shifty Minister we have had in this Chamber in the last 15 years. He is ready to agree to almost anything politically advantageous or attractive. He is prepared to promise almost anything. But when it comes to delivering on those promises, he fizzles. He finds that he lacks Cabinet support or it is not desirable. In some cases he fails to act because his critics find his initiatives foolish. Such is the case with respect to the matter of the transportation of dangerous goods.

I asked the Minister what progress he was making in fulfilling a statement he made in the course of his speech to the Council of Transport Ministers in Hull on December 5, 1983, when he said that he had a firm resolve to make progress in improving the transportation of dangerous goods. He talked about limiting the speed of trains carrying dangerous goods through densely populated areas. He talked about labelling empty cars which had carried dangerous goods because they should be treated as though they were full. He talked about a whole host of things he was going to initiate. Three or four months have now passed, Mr. Speaker, and there is really little in the way of action. So it is with VIA Rail, grain transportation investment, air safety and deregulation. We are really not sure where the Minister stands. He is interested in short-term political gain rather than real improvements in the transportation industry.

This is a very dangerous approach, Mr. Speaker, when it deals with a matter so important as dangerous goods. We have to recognize that this not only affects the workers directly involved in the movement of dangerous goods, but indeed Canadians who are domiciled near the corridors through which these dangerous goods move.

It is rather interesting that the Minister came out swinging, saying he was going to get tough with the railroads, plan tighter regulations concerning the rate of speed, treat empty tanker cars as if they were full, and a whole host of other things. But low and behold the railways fired back and said his plan was foolish. So his get-tough stance really evaporated very quickly when the railways stood up to him. That is rather strange because just the other day he made a speech in which he said any overhaul of passenger rail service in Canada should address the needs of the traveller first and the railways second. He said we have to move away from a preoccupation with the corporate interests supplying the services and put the onus back on the people. He also said that decisions to close community rail lines or make other changes in service cannot be dictated from on high. Well, glory hallelujah is all I can say. What a great day has arisen.

It is this same Minister, Mr. Speaker, who sat on the major Cabinet committees which authorized the dismantlement of 20 per cent of the rail passenger service in this country. I wonder in whose interest he was acting at that time. That is the kind of double standard and hypocrisy we hear from this Minister. The transportation of dangerous goods is too important to be used as a political volleyball. It became very prominent in this country following the Mississauga incident and the action that we as a Government took back in 1979 in calling for a full-scale inquiry, the Grange Commission, which was really the most objective and thorough way in which we could have dealt with that matter.

There is an Act in place covering the transportation of dangerous goods. There are regulations flowing that are very voluminous in nature, very complex, very expensive to comply with and excessively bureaucratic. There are differences of opinion between the industry and those who are domiciled along the corridor. There is a genuine fear, and this matter has to be dealt with in a realistic and practical fashion. There is a question of reciprocity with the United States of America and the regulations that apply there.

• (1825)

The fact of the matter is that we have a growing number of accidents involving the use of dangerous goods. In 1982 there were 170 major rail accidents involving hazardous products. In 1983 there were 159 major accidents. In 1982 there were 91 minor accidents and 323 minor accidents in 1983. Those are CTC figures, Mr. Speaker. The matter is not improving, it is getting worse. This Minister is failing to act. He is making political speeches, grandstanding and jockeying. He is on the bandstand of anything that is politically attractive. However, he has not delivered. The fact of the matter is that he can take some very positive and definitive initiatives with respect to reduction of speed. He can take some very positive initiatives with respect to the treatment of empty tank cars. He can take a positive initiative with respect to the proper identification of cars that carry dangerous goods. So far he has failed to do anything. I call upon the Minister to live up to his commitments. I call upon the Minister to put the railways on the spot and make them deliver. This issue is far too important for the Minister to engage in this kind of political jockeying.

[Translation]

Mrs. Éva Côté (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say very briefly that I do not agree with the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), who said that the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) is elusive and shifty. I would rather say that he has taken very good decisions that are in the best interests of all Canadians.

As to the question put by the Hon. Member for Vegreville regarding the transportation of dangerous goods, the document referred to by the Hon. Member was prepared by the Department's service of transport of dangerous goods and includes recommendations made by M-Trac as well as the reply by the railroads. Lack of time prevented the Department from checking or controlling the data contained in this report. Only 40 copies of the report were printed and it has had a very limited distribution. However, a copy was sent to the office of the Hon. Member for Vegreville.

The Office of the Inspector General of Security in Transport was given the mandate to review the whole matter of the transportation of dangerous goods, and this review is already under way. The Inspector General has undertaken a study of all documentation in this field and he also attended a recent meeting between the Minister and the M-Trac group to hear representations on some aspects of the matter.

Discussions were also held in Toronto with representatives of CP Rail who provided a guided tour of the rail facilities in the Metropolitan Toronto area. As soon as the review is completed, Mr. Speaker, and when all concerned groups have made representations, this information will be assessed and a report with recommendations will be submitted to the Minister.

As regards the very strict measures taken concerning an incident at the McMillan Station in north-west Toronto, involving a rail car containing either butane, propane or anhydrous ammoniac, the Railway Transport Committee of the Canadian Transport Commission has just ordered today that 26 tank cars be taken out of service due to possible defects. However, an inquiry has been launched concerning this incident which happened in Toronto; this inquiry is continuing and will be pursued until all details are known about these cars which have been taken out of service because of possible manufacturing defects.

Mr. Speaker, I believe, that these comments should provide a satisfactory answer to the question put by my colleague from Vegreville.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At 6.30 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HUMAN RIGHTS

U.S.S.R.—PLIGHT OF YURIJ SHUKHEVYCH

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Mr. Speaker, Yurij Shukhevych, aged 50, is a Ukrainian political prisoner whose history of persecution has come to span three decades. Currently serving his thirty-first year of imprisonment, he has been free for only four years since the age of 15. His case serves as a tragic example of Soviet persecution of minors who are held responsible for their parents' political beliefs and activities. They suffer the consequences of a Soviet legal system that punishes their refusal to denounce or disassociate themselves from their parents and their cause. Shukhevych can in fact personify the cruel fate of thousands of Ukrainians, Poles, Latvians, Lithuanians and Czechs who have maintained, against great odds, a determination to realize their goal of a self determined national state.

We appeal to you, Sir, as the first Commoner, to intervene on behalf of Yurij Shukhevych and on behalf of humanity. Pressure must be brought to bear on the Soviet Union to stop the insidious practice of persecuting minors for their parents' political beliefs and activities.

THE ECONOMY

ALLEGATIONS APPEARING IN THE MEDIA

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, last week I read an article published in an Ontario newspaper which said that the riding of Chicoutimi had the lowest per capita income and the worst economic problems in this country.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to point out that last Monday I announced the appointment of the professionals who are going to renovate harbour facilities at Chicoutimi for the sum of $9 million. I may add that construction on the harbour at Chicoutimi has started, involving an investment of $50 million. In addition, since it has been recognized that the base at Bagotville is very important to the air defence of our country, NATO and the United States, the Liberal Government has agreed to invest $54 million, and, Mr. Speaker, I should mention that, although the newspaper article was somewhat negative about my riding, the Canadian Government, as part of its energy policy, has just announced the construction of a pipeline for $240 million in the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean area.

Mr. Speaker, you will agree that as far as infrastructures are concerned, we have a region that is becoming very attractive as a place for foreign industry to locate, and furthermore, this region has exceptional human resources.

THE ECONOMY

NEED FOR RETRAINING, RESEARCH, AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, despite all the claims by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) that the economy is recovering and business is booming, the reality of the situation is that things are much worse than they appear. Just ask any of the 500 workers laid off at the Port Colborne Inco plant, or the 50 workers for Hart and Cooley in Fort Erie, almost all of whom are being let go and the Fort Erie plant shut down. To what can we attribute this? Two things: the lack of a comprehensive retraining plan, and the need for more research and development.

If this economy were really buzzing as it should, any workers who were laid off from one industry would be quickly retrained to take up work in another area. We should be training the people who used to make chrome auto bumpers, and put them into programs designed to prepare them for the high-tech world of the future. They should be learning now how to build computers and satellites, instead of being at a dead end and subsisting on UIC and welfare.

R and D must not be forgotten either. It is indeed amazing to note that one company in West Germany employs 30,000 people in industrial research and development alone. This is more than the entire Canadian Government spends on that item. IBM in the U.S. also employs more people in this field than our federal Government.

Why then does the Government not invest more in research and development, as an investment in the future? The Government, despite its brave rhetoric about meeting the challenges of the 80s, is nevertheless spending only 1.1 per cent of GNP on R and D, while back in 1968, in the rookie year of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), we spent 1.4 per cent of GNP.

Perhaps the Liberal leadership candidates, who are so eager to criticize the record of the Leader—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time unfortunately has expired.

PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION

SENATE COMMITTEE DECISION TO HEAR WITNESS

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, it is with great regret that I heard about the recent decision of the Senate Committee to hear as a witness the PLO's official observer at the United Nations. This terrorist organization has never done anything to advance the cause of peace and has constantly resorted to terrorism and violence to further its objectives. Since 1968, thousands of moderate Palestinians who were prepared to talk with Israel have been assassinated by the PLO. In fact, to date, the PLO has killed more Palestinians than Israelis. We were all shocked by the senseless attack on forty-eight civilians in Jerusalem earlier this week. Responsibility for the attack was claimed by the Democratic Palestine Liberation Front, one of the component organizations of the PLO, and which was not condemned by the PLO.

The witness the Senate will hear tomorrow belongs to the same organization. It is an insult to the democratic traditions and institutions of our country to be having talks with representatives of a terrorist organization.

When I was elected to Parliament, I thought that it was to serve the law and not terrorism and violence.

MEDICAL CARE

TRAVELLING COSTS OF SICK PEOPLE IN REMOTE REGIONS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to address a health care problem experienced by thousands of Canadians living in remote regions of the country, notably the high cost of travelling to an urban area for medical care that is unavailable in isolated communities.

In recent days I have received hundreds of messages from the Thunder Bay area alone, pointing out the magnitude of this problem in the Lakehead region where some 1,000 residents a year must travel to Toronto and Winnipeg to get specialized treatment. For the period 1976 to 1982, this represents a 50 per cent increase in patients going to Toronto, and a 98 per cent increase in patients going to Winnipeg. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, many of these people must pay out of their own pockets for medically necessary trips to large urban centres or, worse, they are forced to rely on charity.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, such a situation does not represent reasonable access as defined in the Canada Health Act, nor does it meet the Act's universality requirement that insured services be provided to all residents on uniform terms and conditions.

● (1410)

The accessibility problem I am referring to, Mr. Speaker, is by no means peculiar to the Lakehead region of Ontario. Similar problems exist throughout Canada. I call on the Government to live up to the spirit of the new Canada Health Act and co-operate with the provinces to ensure that all Canadians, in both urban and rural areas, have truly reasonable and universal access to quality health care.

INDUSTRY

FOOTWEAR QUOTAS

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, in November this year, import quotas on footwear will be lifted. Since the Canadian footwear industry employs nearly 20,000 workers, I think it is essential that our Government should support this industry. To do so, we absolutely must extend the quotas, otherwise thousands of jobs will be lost, especially in regions whether the unemployment rate is extremely high, including my riding.

In 1981, this Government took the excellent initiative of setting up a remarkable program referred to as the CIRB Program. A specific portion of this program was designed for the footwear industry. Several dynamic businesses, including H.H. Brown Shoes in Richmond, took advantage of substantial grants under the program. These businesses wish to continue the trend towards modernization and are prepared to invest in order to protect existing jobs and create new ones. We must react positively to the request being made by the manufacturers, a request that is both realistic and reasonable. They want a five-year quota extension and fifty per cent of the Canadian market. Fifty per cent of the market and five additional years would consolidate existing jobs and create hundreds more. Contrary to certain claims, the interests of the Canadian consumer would be protected in such a way that they would benefit, since consumers have always benefited from a competitive market.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

TORONTO SICK CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL INQUIRY—
CROSS-EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I rise this afternoon to register my deepest sense of concern and unease with respect to what I view to be the abridgement of rights accorded to Susan Nelles and Phyllis Trayner. My chief concern focuses on the judgment which was rendered this morning by Mr. Justice Grange to the effect that counsel for the police and counsel for the Attorney General of Ontario were entitled to cross-examine Susan Nelles.

It is my view that it is one thing to allow Mr. Lamek, who is a neutral counsel acting on behalf of the Commission, to cross-examine these nurses. It is quite another thing to allow counsel for the police, and counsel for the Attorney General of Ontario, to cross-examine in circumstances where they have a vested interest and where they may very well have an axe to grind. To recall the facts of this particular case—

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has some concern. This is a proceeding in provincial jurisdiction before a semi-judicial body—

Mr. Speyer: There was a decision this morning.

Mr. Speaker: There is a decision rendered by the body?

Mr. Speyer: This is a matter, Sir, of criminal law and the criminal law power.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will let the Hon. Member continue but must express some concern.

Mr. Speyer: This is a matter which affects the rights of all people and deals with the criminal law power, Mr. Speaker. My sense of concern, as I say, stems for these facts. There was a preliminary inquiry and there was not sufficient evidence at that preliminary inquiry to put Miss Nelles to a trial. There was not sufficient evidence. A law suit was then commenced by Miss Nelles with respect to the propriety of the police action and the action of the Attorney General of Ontario.

It is my view that they are not getting to the issue of the inquiry, which is what happened to the babies, how did they die? What we have is vested interest in the police defending their own conduct, and Miss Nelles does not have the safeguards she should have to protect her own interests.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SENATE REFORM

LENGTH OF SENATORIAL TENURE

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, one year after I introduced a resolution in this House, the Government established a joint committee of Parliament to consider Senate structural reform. That committee's commendable report now rests neglected. The initial excitement has died down, but the need for action remains. The committee recommended a nine-year non-renewable term, an elected Senate, and more equitable provincial and regional representation in a reformed Senate of 144 members.

All recommended changes are subject to the new constitutional amending formula requiring the agreement of seven provinces having at least 50 per cent of the Canadian population, with one exception. Constitutional change affecting the tenure of existing, newly appointed, or newly elected Senators, requires only the approval of Parliament. Therefore, this House should act now to adjust senatorial tenure.

• (1415)

Today, Mr. Speaker, I will introduce in this House a Bill to provide for a nine-year maximum non-renewable term for all Senators, both existing and new appointments, so that only one class of Senators will prevail. The Hon. Member for York Scarborough (Mr. Cosgrove), who was joint chairman of that committee, has agreed to second and support that Bill. Such a constitutional change will be a signal to western Canada, in fact to all of Canada, that Parliament is serious about Senate reform. It would be another major step on the road to national unity.

AGRICULTURE

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Members opposite for the warmth of their welcome. I was in their constituencies, saying good-bye for them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: You are paid to be here.

Mr. Mulroney: The Prime Minister is aware of the growing concern of western grain farmers because of the Government's delay in carrying out its commitment to amend the Grain Stabilization Act to permit desperately needed cash payments this spring. Will the Prime Minister prod his lethargic Ministers to bring down the legislation so that hard-pressed grain farmers in western Canada can have the assurance right now of desperately needed cash flow at this time?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would be in a better position to give that assurance to the Hon. Leader of the Opposition if he were to assure me that his Party would co-operate with the Government House Leader in getting through that and many other pieces of legislation which the country needs.

Some Hon. Members: Bring it on!

INTRODUCTION OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister will undertake to bring that legislation in immediately, I guarantee we will give it quick passage in this House so that western farmers can benefit from the cash to which they are entitled.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: May I take the Prime Minister's earlier comment as an assurance that, no later than tomorrow, that legislation will be before the House so we can pass it within hours?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we would have to have the assurance that the Hon. Leader's Party would not be ringing the bells and delaying the Government and the House all the time.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: The difficulty in running Parliament is well known to the Hon. Leader of the Opposition. There are many Bills of great importance to all Canadians which have to be moved forward.

Mr. Mazankowski: Don't weasel now.

Mr. Trudeau: I can certainly give an undertaking concerning that particular Bill if the Hon. Leader of the Opposition, speaking for his Party, will give us an equal undertaking on several other Bills which I will give—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Oh, well, Mr. Speaker! The Leader of the Opposition has just come back from the West and he has discovered that the western farmers have some requirements.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: He is asking for one Bill. Why does he not ask for a Bill to pass the Guaranteed Income Supplement for the elderly? Why does he not ask us to pass the Bill to give rights to the Indians?

Some Hon. Members: Bring them on.

Mr. Trudeau: They are there, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lalonde: The budget Bill.

• (1420)

Mr. Trudeau: There are budget Bills before the House to give relief to Canadians. His Party has been ringing bells, goofing around, wasting time.

Mr. McDermid: Give it up.

An Hon. Member: You are the goofy one.

Mr. Trudeau: Suddenly he discovers one constituency that needs assistance and he stands up on that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Shame! Shame!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, they have discovered one constituency—

Some Hon. Members: More! More!

Mr. McDermid: Keep it going.

Mr. Trudeau: They ask me for more, Mr. Speaker. I hope you will recognize that I have a long answer to give. Give me the Order Paper.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: With all due respect to the Right Hon. the Prime Minister, the Chair could call to the attention of Members of the House the Order Paper and the items on it. I wonder if it is essential to read it.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I will heed your admonition and I will not read the five pages of the Order Paper. When they ask for more over there, we agree. Let us have more action from the Opposition and more time seriously spent on legislation, instead of goofing off with ringing bells.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, no wonder the Liberal Party and all of its putative Members are dead as doornails in western Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: And that is where they are going to stay.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR IMMEDIATE INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): I asked a question on behalf of western farmers, whose bankruptcies were up 110 per cent last year, and all you get is a jokester hamming around with a piece of paper. We want answers on behalf of western farmers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: For 16 years the Prime Minister has been sitting around talking about pieces of legislation that he refers to on the Order Paper. I am asking a specific question on behalf of thousands and thousands of western producers. Will the Government bring that piece of legislation in immediately?

I give the Government the assurance that when it does it will pass this House to the benefit of thousands of western farmers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Leader of the Opposition is showing contempt for the House when he refers to the Order Paper as "goofing around with a piece of paper".

Mr. Mulroney: You goof around with it.

An Hon. Member: It is you goofing around with it.

Mr. Trudeau: It is not a piece of paper, Mr. Speaker. It is a serious program of action for the Government. Yes, I will give an undertaking to pass that Bill.

Mr. Mazankowski: Bring it in.

Mr. Trudeau: And he will give me an undertaking to pass—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: Just give your undertaking.

Mr. Trudeau: —relief for the taxpayer, Mr. Speaker, the budget Bills, the Bill of the Minister of National Health and Welfare on Medicare. Can he do that in five hours?

Mr. Nielsen: Bring it in.

Mr. McDermid: Bring it in.

Mr. Epp: Let us have it.

Mr. Trudeau: Will they give second reading and reference to the Standing Committee of Bill C-4? Will he give me that undertaking?

Mr. McDermid: Be careful.

Mr. Trudeau: Will he give me an undertaking to pass the Crown corporations legislation?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: He is laughing, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Epp: It has not had second reading.

An Hon. Member: He is a joker.

Mr. Trudeau: Who is the joker, Mr. Speaker? Sure, we have the partisan Tories—

An Hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Trudeau: —echoing their Leader about who is a joker. However, that Party has been ringing bells, the way it has, preventing Parliament from functioning—

Mr. McDermid: Who rang the bells two weeks ago?

Mr. Trudeau: —keeping this legislation from proceeding. Our House Leader has been trying to make a deal with the Opposition House Leader in order to have orderly process in discharge of this legislation. The Leader of the Opposition has just discovered one constituency and he pleads for them. There are thousands and millions of Canadians in Canada who want this legislation.

An Hon. Member: And who are in trouble.

Mr. Trudeau: Why does his Party not help Parliament function?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1425)

ANNOUNCEMENT IN SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): It is typical of the Government that when the interests of western Canada are involved, it is always tied to something else. You can't get a straight answer from the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: No wonder you are all going down the shute, and no wonder western Canada won't trust them as far as they can throw them.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: My question is simple. Everyday we raise questions on behalf of groups of Canadians who have been trod upon by the Government.

There was an undertaking in the Throne Speech that amendments will be introduced to the Western Grain Stabilization Act to make it more responsive to the needs of producers. When will the Government bring that in? If it does bring it in, we will pass it in the interests of western farmers. Stop fooling around and bring it in now.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I gave a serious undertaking. I said that we would bring it in and pass it.

Mr. Mulroney: Bring it in now.

Mr. Trudeau: He has not given a like undertaking. He wants to pass one Bill because he just discovered the West.

Mr. Mazankowski: There are no conditions in the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Trudeau: No, of course not, but there are many measures in the Speech from the Throne, and when you are the Government—you will never learn this because you will never be the Government—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: There are about 40 days left of parliamentary time before the end of June. Out of that one must take into account Opposition days, special motions, and so on. But if the Hon. Member Leader of the Opposition will ask his House Leader to sit down with our House Leader to decide how this time will be allocated in a reasonable, sensible way, so that the Opposition can debate the motions and debate second reading, but seriously consider this legislation, I can guarantee to him that this legislation, which is of importance to the western farmer, will be passed expeditiously. Can he give me that guarantee that this House Leader will bring allocation of time?

Mr. Mazankowski: Bring it on.

REQUEST THAT FARM FUEL TAX BE REDUCED

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister might remember that in 1980 he promised the western farmers that he would not forget about them, since there was no representation from western Canada. For two years we have been calling for a western grain stabilization payment.

Some Hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Gustafson: My question is directed to the Minister of Finance. He will know that the farmers have very serious cash flow problems this spring. This is why we have addressed the Western Grain Stabilization Program as a priority. Furthermore, the high fuel costs to farmers are bankrupting them, as well as high interest rates, and their cost of production is exorbitant. Will the Minister of Finance do the right thing and reduce the fuel costs by reducing the federal tax on farm fuels?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, some Conservative Members have discovered that there are problems amongst the farming community, and their answer is to do something about the Western Grain Stabilization Act. Our answer has been to try to introduce measures that affect farmers all across the country, not only western farmers.

We have implemented a number of measures which are of service to all farmers across the country, and that is what we intend to do. As to the specific question raised by the Hon. Member, I stand by my Budget of last February 15.

EFFECT OF INTEREST RATES ON FARMERS

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): The Minister will know that when his Government took power in 1980 fuel costs to farmers were 92 cents a gallon. I just got word by telephone that fuel costs today are $1.80 a gallon. They are double. You will remember some of the promises that Government made, Mr. Speaker.

• (1430)

Mr. McKnight: On farm fuel.

Mr. McMillan: Phony promises.

Mr. McDermid: Where is Allan MacEachen?

Mr. Gustafson: Another problem facing farmers is the high interest rates.

Mr. Speaker: Will the Hon. Member please ask his question?

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture has again and again promised reduction of high interest rates. Will the Minister of Finance consider and bring in a program, which the Minister of Agriculture cannot bring in seemingly, and alleviate the problems of high interest rates for farmers?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member talks about fuel costs. What he should also mention is that if the Tory plan had been put into effect—

Mr. Mazankowski: Nonsense.

Mr. Lalonde: —and if we had not defeated the Tory Budget in 1979, fuel costs today would be at international price levels for farmers.

Mr. Mazankowski: Nonsense.

Mr. Epp: No way.

Mr. Lalonde: And this would have meant even higher prices than the price farmers are called upon to pay at the present time.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: These are the facts which the Hon. Member should know.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: I understand Hon. Members over there shouting, because they are afraid of the facts. They are afraid of recognizing what their policy would have meant for this country, and that is why their policy was rejected wisely by Canadians in 1980.

As far as the interest rates are concerned, we have taken steps to reduce interest rates. Interest rates have come down quite significantly over the last two years, as the Hon. Member knows. They have been cut by half, approximately. In addition, we have introduced measures to take care of farmers in difficulties. Over $25 million in support has been put into such a program to help farmers in difficulty, in addition to the increased funding provided to the Farm Credit Corporation. My friend should at least bother to examine the facts, get briefed, and he will realize that this Government has delivered in terms of its concerns for the farmers of this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

VISIBLE MINORITIES

INJUSTICES DONE TO JAPANESE CANADIANS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by saying that I listened with interest to the Leader of the Opposition's question concerning the West. I am pleased he read the questions asked by three members of the New Democratic Party as recently as yesterday.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: My question to the Prime Minister concerns a matter which is not on the Order Paper, but which thousands of Canadians wish were there.

Mr. Epp: He does not know where Yorkton is, and they do not know where he is.

Mr. Broadbent: It concerns the important redress of the injustice which was inflicted upon more than 20,000 Japanese Canadians during the Second World War. On Monday a Member of the House asked the Prime Minister if the Government would commit itself to redressing these terrible wrongs, to use the words of the Prime Minister himself, that were inflicted upon Japanese Canadians. On Monday the Prime Minister said, I hope in a premature way, that he was expressing the personal view that it would be inappropriate to redress wrongs that were inflicted upon our ancestors.

Considering the people who are being discussed are not simply ancestors—more than one-half of them are still alive today, considering the injustices are real and that the Government of Canada should do something about them, I would now like to ask the Prime Minister if he would, not personally, but on behalf of the Government, say, first, that there were injustices inflicted upon Japanese Canadians, and we ought to acknowledge that wrong-doing, and second, will he commit the Government to some compensation for such past injustices.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asks two questions, Mr. Speaker—first whether there were injustices and, second, would there be compensation. I believe my answer the day before yesterday indicated quite clearly that, in my view, there were injustices. I have said that in the House. I have said that publicly. I have said it in writings. I have said it even in Japan when I was there on an—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Injustices.

Mr. Trudeau: I understand. But I also said it in Japan. Did the Hon. Member say Japan?

An Hon. Member: What for?

Mr. Trudeau: Because, Mr. Speaker, I think it is important in order that the people over there realize that the Government of Canada, today's Government of Canada, has regret, and expresses regret about what has happened in the past when it is unjust. And also, as I answered, we had taken specific measures in the Constitution to ensure that there would be a Charter of Rights to prevent this kind of thing in the present and in the future.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: There is no question that justice has been denied, Mr. Speaker. But what I went on to add on the question of compensation is that I did not feel it necessarily followed that compensation should necessarily be promised and paid to all those who, in the course of our history, have suffered some form of injustice. That is all I said.

There is a report of a parliamentary committee. It will come before Cabinet in the usual way, and we have an undertaking to state the Government's view on it and to table it in Parliament, in a specified time. I believe it is three months. Obviously we are going to have to state views on it.

But I repeat my personal view, which I will argue in and out of the House and in and out of Cabinet, that Government's main function is to be just in its time. It is not to try and correct the injustices that have been done to everybody in the past. If it is possible, well, that is fine. But as I said to a colleague of the Hon. Member from Oshawa, if we have, say, millions of dollars or hundreds of millions of dollars of compensation to pay to all those who have been somehow unjustly treated in the past, we should begin by perhaps using those hundreds of millions of dollars to help those who are below the poverty line, to help those who are on unemployment insurance. Those are the kinds of priorities that we have, Mr. Speaker. If the Hon. Member wants to go back once again to the deportation of the Acadians, I will make a case that they should have better lands in Nova Scotia and in New Brunswick than they have now—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: —because when they came back from deportation they were given the rotten land.

Mr. Nowlan: It is a different situation totally. Tell them the history, Gerry.

Mr. Trudeau: What about the NDP standing up for that justice? I know the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead does not like this because he is always interested in politics.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Order.

Mr. Trudeau: If he were more interested in thinking, he might be sitting here instead of over there.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CORRECTION OF INJUSTICES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has said, and I believe I heard him correctly, that he was interested in having justice in our time. I agree with that, and that is why we stood up in this House to make sure that justice was restored to Franco-Manitobans, even if it was taken away in 1890. That is why we stood up in this House and fought for constitutional rights for native Canadians, even if they were denied in the past.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I ask the Prime Minister if it is right to redress past wrongs for living Franco-Manitobans, if it is right to redress past wrongs inflicted upon native Canadians, because those native Canadians are still living today, why is it not right to redress the past wrongs of living Japanese Canadians today?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member gives an interesting example. He is going to redress the past wrongs of Franco-Manitobans. I would like to know how he is going to operate that redress. Since 1890, as he correctly points out, they have been suffering injustice because they have been legislated in a language by laws which were ultra vires because, according to the Supreme Court in 1979, the laws passed since then were ultra vires. I would like to hear the Hon. Member say how he is going to redress that.

Mr. Lalonde: And compensation.

Mr. Trudeau: And how he would compensate for that suffering and how he would also deal—he talks of the Japanese—with Chinese Canadians, of whom we heard not so long ago, who were asked to pay head taxes to get into the country, and who were certainly treated in a way which was not compatible with equal justice to everyone.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I hear the heckling back there, Mr. Speaker. I think the Leader of the New Democratic Party can think for himself. He does not need the backbenchers to give him the next answers.

Mr. Regan: I do not know about that.

Mr. Trudeau: There may be some doubt about that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I am just trying to state the principle.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Order.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Clark is disturbed again. I will sit down.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1440)

Mr. Broadbent: The Prime Minister has dropped from being merely disagreeable to being somewhat pathetic, and I say that directly to him.

METHOD OF REDRESS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister knows that we tried to redress past injustices to Franco-Manitobans by bringing forward a Constitution in the House, in which some of us believed, to make sure those rights would be entrenched. That is the way we dealt with that. There is a different way now to deal with the rights of Japanese Canadians, that is, to provide some compensation through financial measures here in the House.

Does the Prime Minister not see that there is a connection between Franco-Manitoban rights, if those Franco-Manitoban rights were destroyed in the past but had to be restored in the present for the living, and the rights of native Canadians which were denied in the past but were restored for the present and for the future? If he agrees, does he not also agree the Japanese Canadians who had their rights denied, who were cruelly and inhumanely treated in the past, ought in the name of simple justice have those grievances dealt with in a straightforward and compassionate way by the House of Commons?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member makes a parallel, and I suggest he is then departing from it himself. He says that Franco-Manitobans were unjustly treated and we brought in redress in the House will a Bill of Rights and with resolutions before the House. He does not talk of compensation. He talks of making sure in the future— and God help us that we succeed—that they will not be treated unjustly. In an exact parallel we did the same thing with the Japanese Canadians. They were unjustly treated in the past. This Party brought in a Bill of Rights to ensure that there would be no more of that kind of discrimination in the future.

The parallel is perfect, but when we get to the financial compensation—and I take it he is talking about financial compensation, not apologies, because there have been apologies which I made personally on behalf of the Government of Canada—let him, perhaps not today but maybe by way of correspondence, tell me how much he thinks we should compensate not only the Japanese but the Chinese who have been unjustly treated, other Canadians who suffered from immigration practices, and let us go back as far as the Acadians. Then we will see if it is a reasonable request that he stands up in the House and tries to increase his favour with a particular lobby in the country, as the Leader of the Conservatives was doing at the beginning of this Question Period, by standing up for one group. The Government has to govern for all of Canada; it has to take everything into account.

GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING

MANAGEMENT GROUP CHAIRMAN

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: En français.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKenzie: The Prime Minister took notice of a question of mine yesterday regarding the advertising management group and the function of Mr. P. T. Zarry, the chairman. I wonder whether he could provide us with an answer today on what are his functions, whether he is receiving this $2,000 per day salary, and does he report to Senator Davey?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, yes, I did take notice of it. In effect the Hon. Member was right that Mr. Zarry is chairman of the advertising management group which does co-ordinate all the advertising of the Government of Canada. He, and the group which he chairs, the management group, do not report to Senator Davey. It reports to the Chairman of the Cabinet Committee on Communications, who is a Minister, not a Senator.

SALARY INQUIRY

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, could the Prime Minister inform us as to what is Mr. Zarry's salary? Is it $1,500 or $2,000 per day?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member is willing to put that on the Order Paper, I will ensure that he gets an answer. I do not have the answer here.

Mr. McDermid: He asked you yesterday.

Mr. Trudeau: I am sure he is receiving a salary which is in the market range, and I do not know what it is.

TOURISM

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES ON ADVERTISING

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism. As the Minister knows, we on this side of the House, and the tourist industry, have been calling upon the Government for over a year to take the initiative or to take the lead by attacking tourism's No. 1 problem, namely, overtaxation. In response, the Liberal Government dipped into its slush fund for $22 million for government advertising through Liberal agencies. As the Minister well knows, this ploy has not worked in other countries promoting tourism. Germany is a typical example.

Can the Minister justify this blatant porkbarrelling by the Liberal Government as far as government advertising is concerned? Second, and perhaps more important, when will the Government attack the underlying problem facing the tourist industry, which was responsible for a $2.1 billion deficit last year, namely, overtaxation?

Hon. David Smith (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to hear the question, because it seems to me that the Opposition wants to have it both ways. We have been accused of not doing enough to promote Canada. People have pointed to the fact that our tourism deficit with the United States reached $2 billion this year. What have we done? We are doubling our advertising efforts in the United States in 1984 to bring Americans up here to spend dollars, so that those in the tourism industry in this country will benefit. That is exactly what we should be doing, and that is exactly what we are doing.

With regard to taxation, let us take one specific example. In the alcoholic industry, which is related to tourism—

Mr. Stevens: The alcoholic industry?

Mr. Smith: —ten years ago the federal Government took 40 per cent of the tax revenues. That is now down to 31 per cent, whereas the provinces have increased their share from 60 per cent to 69 per cent. I think the Hon. Member ought to talk to a few of the Tory premiers in the country.

REDUCTION OF ALCOHOL TAX IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): I am glad that the Minister referred to the provincial premiers and talked about alcohol overtaxation. The provinces have been asking the Government to take the lead over the last year and a half. As a matter of fact the Government of New Brunswick earlier this week, in case the Minister does not know, reduced the provincial tax on alcohol in that province because the federal Government did not take the lead. Will the Government, if it is not prepared to lead, at least follow the positive example set by the Government of New Brunswick? If not, why not?

Hon. David Smith (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, we have taken an initiative. The Minister of Finance some months ago, in response to a request from that industry, established a task force to review that issue and to report to him. I understand that task force is under way.

PUBLIC WORKS

USE OF MUNICIPAL WASTES TO GENERATE STEAM

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. For several years now, the federal Government, the Ontario Government, and the Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton have been studying the feasibility of using municipal wastes generated within the region as a fuel to produce steam to heat and cool federal buildings. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre opposed that when it was proposed in the LeBreton Flats area, and I took a strong stand against it in the Overbrook area.

My question to the Minister relates to the financing and the possible participation of Public Works Canada in this project. Given the environmental difficulties and the high costs of this project, will the Minister's Department take a position of instigating, promoting, or supporting this steam plant in the near future?

[Translation]

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, strong representations from all Members in the Ottawa area led me to make the decision I communicated to the main parties concerned—the Province and the region's municipal governments—in a letter I signed this morning.

[English]

Four years ago when there was an appearance of a shortage of steam energy in the centretown area, we agreed to participate in the feasibility study of this project. However, conservation measures have worked even better than we had expected. For this reason, I have informed the province and the municipal authorities that the Department of Public Works and the National Capital Commission will not be proponents of this project.

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

MONITORING OF EFFICIENCY GAINS FOLLOWING CORPORATE MERGERS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The Minister is well aware that in Canada in the past couple of years there has been a record number of mergers and takeovers, particularly foreign takeovers, which have often squeezed out smaller businesses. Under the Minister's proposed competition legislation there are absolutely no guarantees whatsoever that the efficiency gains which are promised by large corporations in exchange for allowing mergers will be passed on to consumers and effectively implemented. I would like to ask the Minister to explain why she has effectively knuckled under to the big business community in this important respect, and failed to protect consumers adequately by providing for assurances that efficiency gains will in fact be monitored and enforced.

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, frankly I am amused that the Hon. Member has asked this question in view of the fact that he has not himself had time to study the legislation. We have made some attempts to brief him about it, and he is basing his judgment on a very superficial press release.

I would suggest to the Hon. Member that he take some time to examine the Bill thoroughly. He would find that the Bill has indeed been strengthened. The conspiracy section has been strengthened. Indeed, we are calling for mandatory pre-notification in case of mergers. All of that never existed before. It is a much stronger Bill, and I suggest to the Hon. Member that he examine it thoroughly before he makes such statements.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have seen the Bill and I have read the Bill. Given the whoops of joy from the business community, it is quite clear that the Bill was in fact ghost-written by John Turner's Bay Street buddies.

UNITED STATES AND CANADIAN LEGISLATION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows very well that the United States' trust-busting legislation is much tougher than the Minister's proposed Bill. Given the fact that there is no maximum ceiling whatsoever on market share before a merger can be effectively reviewed and presumed to be against the interests of consumers, how can the Minister explain to consumers, and particularly to small business, why this legislation is so much weaker than the equivalent American anti-trust legislation?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, again I suggest to the Hon. Member that he does not understand the Bill. Otherwise he would not be making the outrageous statements that he is making in the House. This Bill is far stronger than previous legislation, and it is a Bill that faces the economic realities of Canada and of world markets in general. I suggest to the Hon. Member that he see that this Bill is brought to committee very quickly so that we can all have a good look at it. When he asks about guarantees, is he suggesting a performance review and direct regulation? If so, I think that he would find himself in serious difficulty.

NATIONAL REVENUE

STATUS OF NATIONAL VOLUNTARY GROUPS

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. The Minister will know that yesterday leaders of Canada's national voluntary agencies were gathered here in Ottawa and were alarmed by reports that the Minister's Department has engaged 12 new lawyers to investigate systematically Canada's national voluntary groups. The Minister is also aware that his officials are at this time threatening to remove the charitable status of the Canadian Mental Health Association. The charter of that Association has always included the aim of urging Governments at all levels to take legislative and financial action to further its objectives.

Why has the Minister chosen this particular time when his colleague, the Secretary of State, is introducing a Joint Committee to look at this very matter of charitable activity? Why has he chosen this particular time to turn his guns on the Canadian Mental Health Association?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to correct the impression given by the Hon. Member. I would like to tell him that we have not added person-years to the charitable organizations division of the Department in order to look after the charitable organizations. We have added person-years because there was a large backlog of requests by charitable organizations and we wanted to speed up the processing of those requests in order to have charitable organizations recognized more rapidly. That is what we have done with those added person-years.

Mr. McLean: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the leaders of the voluntary agencies will be reassured by the Minister's comment.

REQUEST THAT CHARITABLE ORGANIZATION STATUS BE MAINTAINED

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, in the spirit of the Minister's comment, will he then follow the recommendation made by the Secretary of State during yesterday's debate, which was that until the Special Joint Committee has completed its report there will be no further removals of charitable status from voluntary agencies?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I have a great deal of trouble understanding the Hon. Member's suggestion. The Hon. Member is asking that when there is an obvious case of abuse of the provisions of the Act with respect to charitable organizations, I, as Minister of National Revenue, should ignore the fact and refrain from enforcing the law. I hardly think the Hon. Member would want us to administer the laws of this country in that way.

However, I may point out to the Hon. Member, as my colleague, the Secretary of State, said previously, that a committee has been established, further to a proposal made in the Throne Speech, for the purpose of examining the status of charitable organizations and what their status should be in relation to the tax system. Any charitable organizations that wish to submit their complaints to this committee will be welcome. This will not be considered to be political activity on their part, since they have a formal invitation from the Government and the House of Commons to come and submit their comments with respect to the status of charitable organizations.

WAR MEASURES ACT

REASONS FOR INVOCATION IN 1970

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice and concerns the War Measures Act. He will recall that his predecessor Minister of Justice, Mr. Turner, said on October 16, 1970, as reported on page 215 of that day's Hansard:

> It is my hope that some day the full details of the intelligence upon which the government acted can be made public, because until that day comes the people of Canada will not be able fully to appraise the course of action which has been taken by the government.

I wonder if the Minister of Justice would tell us whether it is his intention to continue to keep secret the information which Mr. Turner kept secret 14 years ago?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, this is certainly a day for the Opposition to try to rake up the past. I have not had an opportunity to consider that question. My hon. friend is aware of the fact that there is a rule that, after 30 years, information becomes available. However, I will certainly have another look at that file to see whether there is any public interest to justify having the information released now.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, there has also been a rule that Canadians do not get thrown into jail without charge. This Government, this Prime Minister, and Mr. Turner as Minister of Justice, threw hundreds of Canadians into jail without charge under the War Measures Act, and they solemnly promised in this House that they would tell the people of Canada why they took that extraordinary action. It is not a question of the past, it is very much a question of today.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL UNDERTAKING

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Justice give us an undertaking that he will be back in the House within a week to give us a full answer to the question of whether or not he will reveal the information kept secret by John Turner, so that Canadians can judge for themselves whether or not the Government was justified in throwing Canadians into jail without charge in 1970?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has his history a bit askew. First of all, his Party supported the legislation that was passed by the House at that time. Second, those prosecutions which occurred took place in a province and were not under federal authority. Third, I believe that all of this was looked at by the McDonald Commission and has been discussed by the Canadian public. There is nothing at all of the sinister character that my hon. friend would wish to impute to this past history.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice is now getting briefed by the Prime Minister. Perhaps now he has an answer.

● (1500)

We consider it sinister when Canadian citizens may be thrown into jail without charge. We consider it sinister when the House of Commons is promised that it will receive an explanation about why those actions took place, yet never receives that kind of explanation.

What I am asking the Minister of Justice is quite clear. Will he now give us an undertaking to come into the House within a week to tell Parliament whether he is going to honour the undertaking given by Mr. Turner and ignored by Mr. Turner? Will he also tell us whether he is going to reveal to Parliament the reasons the Government introduced the War Measures Act, an Act that was supported in part by this Parliament because the information was not given and because we took it on faith? We have had enough of taking things on faith. Now we want to know the facts. I want to know if the Minister will come into the House within a week and give us those facts.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, essentially all of the facts on which Parliament and the Government acted at that time are in the public domain. They have been much written about and much talked about. The Hon. Member's Party voted for the actions of the federal Parliament at that time. All of the abuses, if any, which took place at that time have been opened to investigation subsequently, either by the courts of appeal or by the McDonald Commission. There is nothing to be added to that file. At some time in the future it may be that there will be some small fact that is shown by the revelation of documents, but there is no substantial fact of any kind which is not known to the Canadian people and has not been known for many years.

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition to the House this afternoon. It is signed by more than 6,000 Canadians from every province and territory. Now that Bill C-10 will be before the House shortly, these Canadians are availing themselves of their opportunity to indicate to the House their strong objection to the provisions of Bill C-10.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. ELZINGA—LENGTH OF RESPONSES DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of a number of Members in the Chamber I wish to share with you a concern and a reservation that we have. I do so with no criticism whatsoever directed at the Chair. As a Member of the House of Commons who wishes to put questions to government Ministers about their accountability, I share with you my deep concern at the time it takes for the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and Cabinet Ministers to respond to legitimate questions.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Elzinga: I stand to be corrected, but I believe that during the entire Question Period only 10 questions were put to Cabinet Ministers. We all have equal responsibilities as Members of Parliament from all across the country. I share with you my deep concern and I make a plea and a request to you to examine how long it takes these individuals to answer questions which could be answered in a much shorter time. They could be much more curt in their reply.

I make that plea to you, recognizing the responsibilities that we all have as Members of Parliament.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is happy to respond to the statement of the Hon. Member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga). For some time the Chair has been concerned about the change in Question Period. It is no longer a period of question and answer; it is debate and counter-debate without a length of time being assigned to answers or even to questions. Under these circumstances, a very provocative question will bring a provocative and lengthy reply.

The Chair is as concerned as any Hon. Member. Today there were 9 questions, not 10. Yesterday there were 17. The Chair does its best to call Hon. Members, including Members of the Cabinet and senior Members on both sides, to account and to call to their attention what it does to Members on the back benches when the questions and answers and supplementary questions that are not supplementary questions but supplementary speeches, take place in the House.

The Chair is the servant of the House and is as anxious as anyone else to bring in more rules governing the length of time in which questions can be asked and answers given. I suggest that this is a matter for the House Leaders to consider, or perhaps the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization.

The Hon. Member for Pembina on a supplementary observation.

Mr. Elzinga: Mr. Speaker, when I share my concerns with you that does not affect my high regard and high respect for the Chair and the high respect and high regard I have for you as an individual, Sir. I say that very sincerely. I realize the difficult role that you have to play, but I just ask for some acknowledgement and respect for the role that we have to play as well.

Mr. Speaker: No previous incumbent of the Chair in recent times spent more time on the back benches than the present incumbent.

MR. McDERMID—CAMPING ON PARLIAMENT HILL

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder how a Member would go about addressing the problem of camping on the front lawn of this beautiful House of Commons or how we might remove the unsightly camping that is going on at the present time. It is a disgrace to the grounds of the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is aware of the Hon. Member's views. The Chair would again invite the Hon. Member to make use of a Standing Order 21 statement on the matter.

Mr. McDermid: That has been done many times.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is as concerned as is the Hon. Member and has raised it in appropriate places.

Mr. McDermid: Where are the appropriate places?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon).

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if you might give consideration to the possibility of inviting all Canadians to camp on the front lawn of the Parliament Buildings this summer?

Mr. Speaker: We are stretching petitions a little far at this point. The Chair has made note of this, but the Chair would also hope that other very senior Members of the House who carry responsibility would make note of the views expressed.

CONSTITUTION ACTS, 1867-1984

MEASURE RESPECTING TENURE OF SENATORS

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-231, an Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 (tenure of Senators).

He said: Mr. Speaker, the recommendations of the Special Joint Committee on Senate Reform would create three classes of Senators; in contrast this Bill would create one class of Senators by making all existing appointments subject to a nine-year term or retirement at 75 years of age, whichever occurred first. Because this amendment would not affect the powers of the Senate and the method of selecting Senators, it could be passed by Parliament exclusively without recourse to the general procedure for amendment requiring provincial approval.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS AND ESTABLISHED PROGRAMS FINANCING ACT, 1977

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-12, an Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: As Hon. Members are aware, there are 9 motions standing on the Notice Paper at the report stage of Bill C-12, an Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977.

Motions Nos. 1, 2, 3, 6, 7, 8 and 9 give the Chair some concern as to their procedural acceptability, in that they infringe on the financial initiative of the Crown and, in some cases, are contrary to the Royal Recommendation attached to the Bill.

It would seem that Motion No. 4 is proposing to impose a condition on the expenditure of each cash contribution by the provinces. While the Chair has some concerns about the procedural acceptability of the motion, I am prepared to give the Hon. Member the benefit of the doubt and will, therefore, put the motion to the House, that is, Motion No. 4.

Motion No. 5 seeks to add a new element to the Bill and is therefore beyond the scope of the Bill.

If either the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) or the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) wishes to put forward procedural argument, I am prepared to hear them when each motion is numerically called by the Chair. Since the first three motions are in the name of the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam, perhaps the Chair can recognize her first in order for the Hon. Member to present her arguments.

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, Motions Nos. 1 and 2 address the retroactivity of this Bill as do subsequent Motions Nos. 6, 7, 8 and 9. Motion No. 3 addresses the six and fiving of post-secondary educational transfers.

Speaking first then on Motion No. 1, and the subsequent motions which also address retroactivity, my argument, Mr. Speaker, would be that this legislation is retroactive to April 1, 1983. That is to say that the six and fiving goes back to April 1, 1983, a full year ago. A full year has passed. We are now into the second year covered by the Bill, namely, 1984-85. The argument, surely, Mr. Speaker, is that the supreme authority of Parliament is totally denied when we are asked to impose restrictions on post-secondary educational transfers for a year which is now finished and over.

There was an opportunity, Mr. Speaker, for the Government to have done this six and fiving on time. As you will recall, Mr. Speaker, it did indeed introduce a Bill last year to cover the 1983-1984 part of the two-year program. That Bill sat on the Order Paper and actually the Government allowed it to die. The Government, in other words, knew itself by introducing it that the correct procedure would have been to have the Bill passed during the year in which it would take effect.

It seems to me that it is utterly disdainful of the authority of Parliament to ask this House now to place limits on fiscal transfers for a year which has already expired. That would be my main argument, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has indicated her desire to interpret the intent of the Bill and, in her opinion, her motion is a logical interpretation of the implications of the Bill. However, in the opinion of the Chair, Motions Nos. 1 and 2 propose to change the base year for calculations of cash contributions and entitlements. In the opinion of the Chair, they call for greater expenditures than provided for in the Royal Recommendation and, therefore, are out of order.

Motion No. 3, if adopted, would change the basis for calculation of the escalator which is used in determining the level of an entitlement. In the Chair's opinion, such a change in the escalator would increase post-secondary education entitlements and hence be an added charge on the public purse which, lacking the Royal Recommendation, is out of order. As well, the motion proposes to eliminate a phase-in formula which is contrary to the purpose of the Bill.

So, regretfully, I will have to rule Motions Nos. 1, 2 and 3 out of order. However, I will put Motion No. 4 to the House for debate.

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, I did not give my arguments for Motion No. 3. I thought you only wanted to hear my arguments for Motions Nos. 1 and 2 on retroactivity. I wonder if I could make my argument for Motion No. 3?

Mr. Speaker: The Chair was very specific in inviting the Hon. Member to make her observations on Motions Nos. 1, 2 and 3. It could not have been more specific. The Hon. Member was invited to so comment and the Chair has made a ruling.

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam) moved:

That Bill C-12 be amended in Clause 8 by adding immediately after line 25 at page 7 the following:

"(3) Any such cash contribution for hospital insurance and medical care programs and post-secondary education program shall be expended by the province for the purposes of those programs only."

She said: Mr. Speaker, one of the problems of the transfer of funds under the post-secondary education provisions of the fiscal arrangements Act is that the funds do not need to be expended by the provinces for the purposes for which they were intended. The provinces can take these moneys and spend them in any fashion they please and, indeed, many provinces have been doing so. It was quite apparent that all members of the committee from all three Parties felt that the time had come when the federal Government's contributions to the financing of post-secondary education should be earmarked and used by the provinces for the purposes intended.

We realize that this Motion No. 4, which reads with respect to post-secondary education transfers:

Any such cash contribution for hospital insurance and medical care programs and post-secondary education program shall be expended by the province for the purposes of those programs only.

This motion, we realize, is in some way symbolic rather than real because, in fact, these are relatively limited amounts of money. They are only a drop in the bucket compared with the total amount which the federal Government makes possible for post-secondary education, either through transfers or tax points. Therefore, with this amendment we are only getting at a tiny part of the problem in cash terms. Indeed, one could probably argue, and others will, that most provinces will undoubtedly be spending or have already spent the money embodied in the six and five increases provided by this Bill. We understand that the whole operation of fiscal transfers and tax points is not covered, indeed it cannot be, under this particular Bill. That will have to await a complete re-examination by the federal and provincial Governments of the financing of post-secondary education.

● (1520)

There was much concern expressed on all sides about the absence of accountability in the field of post-secondary education funding. Everyone on the committee—and I think I can speak for everyone on the standing committee—argued quite strongly that the provinces should not be able to spend the federal contributions in any fashion they pleased, such as on highways or put it into their general revenue fund, or whatever. Some signal should be given to the provinces from the federal Parliament of Canada that their practices were contrary to the spirit of the federal contribution to post-secondary education.

We found, at least in the course of all my discussions with the experts in the field, that the way we could get that message across would be through this kind of amendment. It would be a very clear signal to the provinces that the Parliament of Canada felt that it had a responsibility to the taxpayers of Canada to ensure that the moneys being transferred would be spent in the way that Parliament and the taxpayers intended them to be spent.

I may say that we in this Party opposed block funding at the time it was first introduced in 1977 because we feared that exactly what has happened would happen, that the provinces would not in all cases spend the money on post-secondary education. But we cannot repair that now. I think every Member of this House is hopeful that in the course of the next six or eight months we will, however, together with the provinces find a new formula in which the provinces are accountable for the spending of federal transfers on post-secondary education. In the meantime, surely all would agree with the spirit of Motion No. 4.

This is an extremely important message to get across, namely, that we want to have some degree of accountability for the spending by the provinces of money that this Parliament allocates for post-secondary education. Until we get a new formula and an adequate system of accountability, which as I say will come within the next few months, we should proceed with this motion in the interval.

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in favour of Motion No. 4 which reads:

That Bill C-12 be amended in Clause 8 by adding immediately after line 25 at page 7 the following:

"(3) Any such cash contribution for hospital insurance and medical care programs and postsecondary education program shall be expended by the province for the purposes of those programs only."

While there is a great concern right across the country, particularly in the student and academic community, I believe it is fair to say that nowhere is this feeling as strong and universal as it is in my own constituency of Kootenay West, and more particularly in my own home of Nelson, British Columbia. In dealing with this Bill, both inside and outside this House, I have outlined the situation in that province and in my own community. For the second time in seven years a provincial Government has closed the post-secondary institution in that community. These are the only times that a university facility has been closed in Canada, to my knowledge, and both of them were in the same community, a community of only 10,000 souls.

Mr. MacLaren: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but it seems to me that we are now having a discussion on substance rather than a discussion, which I understood the Speaker to introduce, of whether Motion No. 4 is in order.

Ms. Jewett: It is in order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. We are debating Motion No. 4.

Mr. McDermid: Where have you been?

Mr. Kristiansen: I can only say to that, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member opposite seems to be as confused on this issue as his whole Government was confused in 1977 when it decided it was going to believe in the goodwill and good faith of provincial governments across this country, whether they be Tory or whatever—

Mr. McDermid: Or NDP.

Mr. Kristiansen: —that they would somehow respect the intent of the legislation and that the money would be spent for either medical or post-secondary educational purposes. It shows exactly the same ignorance, if I may say so, and naivety of which, astoundingly enough, the federal Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) suggested the critics of Bill C-12 were guilty when he spoke to the Faculty Association of the University of British Columbia in Vancouver just last Thursday. He suggested that we in the Opposition who criticize the application of six and five to post-secondary education were the ones who were naive. One way to correct the problem, which he seemed to think existed for us now, is to make clear in this legislation that if this parliament authorizes the transfer of funds to the provinces for post-secondary education, we ought to be able to demand in law that those provinces act in good faith and spend the money for those purposes.

What the Conservative Government in British Columbia has done in the last few months has been an absolute disgrace. It has impacted not only on the students and faculty, but on the life of the community of Nelson, B.C., as well as on the rest of the province. That Government has reneged on its commitment to the people of Canada who provided most of these funds. We have large-scale fee increases of 23 per cent, 25 per cent and up to 30 per cent, being levied on students in post-secondary education in our province. They are denying accessibility not only on the grounds of how much money you have in the bank, but they are also denying equal access to students simply because they do not reside and earn their living in the major metropolitan communities of that province. That is wrong.

The Government across the way, Mr. Speaker, if it refuses to adopt this amendment or something very much like it, is equally responsible. It invites people such as those who now inhabit and misgovern the Government of the Province of British Columbia to do exactly what they are doing, that is, to ignore the principle of equality of access to education. That is wrong. If anyone, they are the ones who were naive. In 1977, other Members of the House moved from unconditional funding to block funding. Members of this Party were not among them, I am glad to say. The other Parties are thus equally culpable of the actions we are now seeing in British Columbia and elsewhere, which this amendment is designed to correct, at least in part.

● (1530)

In my own community there is a mass meeting taking place today at the David Thompson University Centre. The citizens of that community are talking about setting up picket lines. Negotiations are going on between representatives of that community and representatives of the federal Secretary of State. Negotiations are still going on between that community and representatives of the provincial Government in Victoria with regard to whether we shall continue to have access to our facility so that if we can find the funds and co-operation to ensure continued programs in the future, that this will be possible. While those negotiations are under way we are being threatened by the provincial Government in Victoria with having agents move in in the middle of the night to steal library facilities and books which belong to that institution. By the law of the Province of British Columbia, which has not yet been repealed, those books and facilities are guaranteed to the people of that city. Citizens of that community are meeting today to talk about setting up picket lines to enforce with their bodies their right under law to equal access to education and their right to defend their private or community property from a government which has acted so rudely and crudely. I am talking about the Government of British Columbia. At least the federal Government has had the courtesy to talk to people and negotiate in some good faith with us about the ongoing chances for the delivery of some educational programs in our community.

While I am being critical in other areas, I would like to congratulate and thank the federal Secretary of State who met with me, the mayor of my home town, consultants for the City of Nelson and representatives of the David Thompson University Action Committee last Thursday. In response to our requests, he agreed at least to fund the cost of the research and development which is now taking place and being paid for by the citizens of the City of Nelson. Other communities in that area had also volunteered funds to assist my home community to bear the costs of investigating and negotiating with other institutions which may agree to locate there. He thus agreed to help with the cost of negotiations and of the delegations to Victoria and Ottawa to pursue the rights of our young people and our community. When the federal Secretary of State realized the economic hardships which our community is going through, he immediately agreed to provide at least a token amount of money to assist with those costs. That action was most welcome.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. I have to remind the Hon. Member that the motion before the House is Motion No. 4. The rule of relevance applies. He should be speaking to Motion No. 4.

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, to make the point of relevance clear, I think it is wrong that we should have to meet in a hit and miss way with the federal Secretary of State or any other Minister in order to have some chance of access to those post-secondary education facilities which should be ours as a matter of right. The federal Parliament of Canada has, over the years, allocated certain significant funds for post-secondary education to the Province of British Columbia, as it has to other provinces. No provincial government in the country has been so callous in the disregard of its duties as has the Government of British Columbia. Even though the increases are going to be cut back by the six and five program in the Bill before us, there have at least been some increases. In our province they have not been passed on and the province has even taken away from what had previously been accorded to the province for the purpose of post-secondary education.

Mr. Speaker, I know that in dealing with specific amendments it is not always normal to talk about specific instances that are having an impact. However, I do not think that is because it is not proper to do so. Surely it is correct to talk about the impact which the absence of such an amendment as we propose here is having on a particular community, on 500 full-time and part-time students and on their families. Surely it is proper to talk about the devastating economic impact as well as the impact on the careers of these students and faculty members. The impact is absolutely horrific.

I would ask the federal Secretary of State to recall some of the conversations which took place last Thursday. I would ask him to recall what gave rise to those complaints and to those very serious problems for those hundreds of young people and for an entire community which now has some 24 per cent to 30 per cent unemployment. I ask him to realize that if he were to agree to such an amendment as we propose today we would not in future have the type of serious problems we are now facing. I would again appeal to the Minister, to the Government, and to all Hon. Members of the House to move in this direction.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. I am sorry to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, it is very important in the life of man to have a philosophy. It is obviously the responsibility of any political Party also to have a philosophy. However, when you start to mix your personal politics with your philosophy, you denounce your philosophy and second rate yourself. Then you mean nothing to anyone.

I would like to say that I admire the philosophy which suggests that there is a federal responsibility for education, particularly as it relates to post-secondary education. However, I do not think we should exert our politics to the extent of pointing the finger of blame at the wrong place totally. I cannot speak for all the provinces of Canada. I can speak from some knowledge of things in Atlantic Canada. It is no wonder the NDP does not have any seats in Atlantic Canada. It is attacking the wrong people in the House.

The Atlantic provinces of Canada have negotiated for years and years with the federal Government to be able to sustain the programs recommended by the federal Government, whether they be hospital care, welfare, medicare or post-secondary education. It was hoped by many that when the block funding system was adopted at long last, after four decades of negotiation and cost shared programs, the Government of Canada would in fact honour what was perceived to be its commitment and intentions. The failure to honour those commitments and apparent intentions has been expressed by the Minister of Finance of New Brunswick in the shortage of $234 million in the budget which he is about to bring down. What can a province of limited means do?

I am rather amazed that the lady who moved this motion, who has knowledge of the Province of New Brunswick, would not have attacked the Government of Canada first, and only later the provinces if she so wished, for the shortage of $234 million to the province from which she hails. That is a very serious thing.

Ms. Jewett: It is not in the motion.

Mr. McCain: I only said that the Hon. Member was a descendant of New Brunswick people.

Ms. Jewett: And proud of it.

Mr. McCain: I hope that the Hon. Member would be.

Mr. Kristiansen: So is the Premier of British Columbia.

Mr. McCain: There is no better stock in Canada. I do not like the failure to recognize that with its block funding system the federal Government has again avoided the intent and the perceived commitment of the Government of Canada to do what needed to be done and not to shortchange it. I say unequivocally that Atlantic Canada has had the proudest history in education of any province in Canada. We have dedicated ourselves to better the education of our people. However, this cannot be done when the money is not available. While the Government has shortchanged every province in Canada, I am more knowledgeable about the situation in my province and its neighbouring provinces in Atlantic Canada. If we are going to mix our philosophy about this amendment, which I suppose is not objectionable, and overlook the fact that money is needed to meet the objectives of this amendment, then I think the credibility of the proponents of this amendment will be perceived by Atlantic Canada as lacking.

• (1540)

I must say that the Government has been remiss in its duty because in its attempt to take credit for itself it has shortchanged the provinces. It has tried to take action in other forms to appear as if it were taking action since the provinces will not do so. It has done this through medicare and post-secondary education, to the point even of putting a note in old age pension cheques saying that the Government of Canada is in favour of people getting all their health and medical services free. That is a blatant political exploitation of the senior citizens of this country at public expense. It implies that other Parties in the House do not support the same concept. But we have supported that concept. It is a blatant, contemptible trick to pull, but it was done.

Here we are again, with the supposed friends of Canada to our left and the supposed friends of universality, criticizing the provinces that have been shortchanged for not doing a job for which the federal Government had essentially committed the provision of funds.

Mr. Parker: Our record is clear.

Mr. McCain: Your record is contemptible at this time. They do not recognize the realities or the reason for this amendment.

Mr. Kristiansen: Look at the other amendments.

Mr. McCain: Until such time as the New Democratic Party is prepared to recognize the total picture rather than the narrow conceptual picture of colloquial politics, about which they have spoken in this House and have illustrated—

Mr. Kristiansen: Do you know how to read?

Mr. McCain: Those fellows must believe that everyone in the House is deaf. I did not have to read. All I had to do was to listen and to isolate the colloquialism of the last two speakers. They do not give two hoots about Canada.

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Could I bring the Hon. Member to order? He is speaking on Motion No. 3, not Motion No. 4. Motion No. 3 was the one which blames the federal Government for imposing six and five on these transfers and suggested going back to the 11 per cent at which they should have been. That concerned Motion No. 3 and is what the Hon. Member is addressing. It was my motion that, unfortunately, was declared out of order.

He is wrong to be speaking totally to Motion No. 3, which is the one I wanted to have discussed in the House. If he had attended the committee he would have known that we are on record as opposing the imposition of six and five on post-secondary educational transfers.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I will draw the remarks of the Hon. Member to the attention of the Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) and ask him to address his remarks of the last few minutes to Motion No. 4.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, I was asked if I could read. May I just read the motion to you. It reads:

> Any such cash contribution for hospital insurance and medical care programs and post-secondary education program shall be expended by the province for the purposes of those programs only.

Have I addressed any other subject than these programs? I leave it to you to rule on, Mr. Speaker. While I discussed the source of those moneys and the obligation of the federal Government in respect of them, as well as the distortion of the facts by the members of the NDP, the Hon. Member did debate that subject somewhat and I do not begrudge her that opportunity. It is one of the privileges of the House which she should exercise.

On the other hand, I believe there should be somewhat more resemblance to the truth and the basic problem as it exists in Canada. Let us not address this on a carte blanche basis, speaking against every Premier in Canada for not spending enough money on these programs. The fact is that since they do not have the money, they cannot spend what they do not have.

Ms. Jewett: They do not spend what they get from us.

Mr. Epp: They do, Mr. Justice Hall said they did.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, I have heard this accusation from Members on my left and Members on your right. Not one speaker has documented the fact that the Province of New Brunswick has not spent all of its grants or the equivalent of those grants for the purposes for which the money was granted. While slimy accusations have been made against the Premiers of Canada, not one Member has documented any facts to show that a province in Canada has misspent or misappropriated the money. Mr. Justice Hall supported the provinces in spite of all the accusations of those who would say otherwise.

When one gets one's tail caught in a trap one screams, and that is why they are screaming.

Ms. Jewett: You should have listened to the committee.

Mr. Kristiansen: You are deaf and blind.

Mr. McCain: I attend the committee as regularly as the screaming Member on my left attends the Fisheries Committee. We each have our interests and responsibilities. When she begins to attend the Fisheries Committee, the Agricultural Committee or the Forestry Committee, then I will start to attend the committee to which she refers, that is, if my Party has room for me on that committee. However, in view of the expertise from our Party that is already on that committee, I recognize that I am not needed in that sphere. We all have our own interests, and I suggest that she attend to hers. I will look after my constituency and I will try to look after the integrity of the provinces of Canada.

I want to deflect the accusations which have been made against those provinces and which have been alleged without any foundation by any Minister or backbencher since the subject matter has come before us.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, let me first deal with the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain). I recall that he began his speech by admonishing the House that we ought not be too political in our remarks. He charged us with overexerting, I believe he said, politics in our analysis. After making that self-righteous comment, he went on to be obviously political in his very selective interpretation of what our criticism of this Bill has been.

As the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) pointed out, we are debating Motion No. 4, which admittedly implies a criticism of some provincial governments and is symbolic of our desire that the money transferred from the federal Government to provincial governments for the purposes of education should be spent on education. We make no apologies for that. If that provokes a defensive attitude toward the provinces on the part of that Hon. Member or any other Member, so be it.

However, to be fair, the Hon. Member neglected to say that we had another amendment which, had it been ruled in order and debated, would have acknowledged that we also view the federal Government as being culpable in the confusion which surrounds the whole question of post-secondary education.

Therefore, I suggest it is evident that we are not playing politics with this issue because we moved a number of amendments which, taken together, provide an equitable approach to the question. The Hon. Member, who accused us of playing politics, is the one who, with his incredibly select interpretation of our criticism of Bill C-12, gave a very adverse political analysis of our position and thus contradicted himself.

• (1550)

Speaking to the substance of the amendment, I would have thought it would go without saying that all Members would want to indicate that any money transferred to the province for a particular purpose should be spent on that purpose. It may not be the case with the Province of New Brunswick. I do not have the most current figures, but I know it has been the case that certain provinces have spent less in total on post-secondary education than what was transferred to them by the federal Government for that purpose. In other words, the federal contribution in a couple of provinces has sometimes been over 100 per cent of what has been spent by those provinces on post-secondary education. Again, to be fair, lest I lapse into a purely political analysis, that has something to do with the arbitrary nature of the division of the transfers into one-third for post-secondary education and two-thirds for hospital and medical care. It is the case that there are some provinces in which the federal Government always paid more than 50 per cent, in which the federal government always carried, right from the beginning of the serious development of post-secondary education facilities in those provinces, a heavier burden than it carried in some other provinces.

There has been some confusion as to who is living up to what expectation as a result of the arbitrary division, which was made in 1977, but of the total EPF transfer, two-thirds seem to be allocated for health care and one-third seems to be allocated for post-secondary education. That confusion and what arises from it was acknowledged in the special parliamentary task force report on federal-provincial fiscal arrangements entitled Fiscal Federalism, a committee on which I sat in 1981. But one of the things to which everyone was agreeable was the idea that there ought to be more accountability. The amendment which the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam has moved on behalf of the NDP makes that point. That is the only point trying to be made by this amendment. There was absolutely no good reason, except obvious partisan reasons or perhaps confusion on the part of the Hon. Member from New Brunswick, to imply either that this was the only criticism that was ever made of Bill C-12 and, therefore, it was completely unbalanced, which is not true, and, as I said, it is part and parcel of a number of amendments and criticisms, or to imply that we somehow view the provincial governments as the only ones to be blamed for the crisis in post-secondary education. We hold neither of the views which the Hon. Member attributed to us.

I hope that in future if the Hon. Member wants to get up and accuse others of simply playing politics with the issue, he will take more care to be even-handed, to be well informed, to read our speeches and to know what we have said. Then he can comment on what we have actually said. We are quite prepared to defend what we have said. If there is something he does not like about what we have moved and what we have said about Bill C-12, then let him get up and say so. Let him not just comfort himself with being able to get up and be eloquent about things that are not there, knock down straw men and use that wonderful voice of his to criticize things that are not there.

Mr. McLean: There's the birds nest of Birds Hill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Ms. Jewett, seconded by Mr. Blaikie moves:

That Bill C-12 be amended in clause 8 by adding immediately after line 25 at page 7 the following:

any such cash contribution for hospital insurance and medical care programs and post-secondary program shall be expended by the province for the purposes of those programs only.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 79, a recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. You will know that Motion No. 5 which stands in the name of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), was ruled not acceptable by the Chair earlier this afternoon.

If you can find consent in the House, and I believe there is consent, there have been discussions and negotiations, I would be willing to move an amendment which covers the subject matter of Motion No. 5. This amendment has found favour, I believe, with the Government as well as with the New Democratic Party. I would like to move the motion, if the rules of the House will allow me to do that at this time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Hon. Member can move the motion only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank Members of the House for the courtesy extended to us.

Therefore, I move:

That Bill C-12 be amended

(a) by adding, immediately after line 25 on page 7, the following:

"9. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 24 thereof, the following section:

"24.1 (1) The Secretary of State shall cause to be laid before each House of Parliament, not later than the fifth sitting day of that House after the 31st day of January next following the end of each fiscal year that begins after March 31, 1984, a report for that fiscal year on

(a) cash contributions and total equalized tax transfers in respect of the post-secondary education financing program applicable to each province;

(b) expenditures by each province on post-secondary education;

(c) any other federal programs of support to or involvement in post-secondary education;

(d) the relationship between such federal contributions, transfers and programs and Canada's educational and economic goals; and

(e) the results of any consultations by or on behalf of the Secretary of State with the Council of Ministers of Education, Canada relating to the definition of national purposes to be served by post-secondary education and the means by which the governments of Canada and the provinces will achieve those purposes.

(2) Every report laid before Parliament under subsection (1) shall be referred for review to such standing committee of the House of Commons, of the Senate or of both Houses of Parliament as is designated by Parliament for that purpose."

(b) by renumbering the subsequent clauses accordingly.

There would also be a subsequent re-numbering of Clause 13. If you want me to move that at this time, I would be willing to do that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Yes.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I move:

That clause 13 (renumbered as 14) of Bill C-12 be amended

(a) by striking out line 28 on page 9 and substituting the following:

"14. (1) Sections 1 to 9 shall be deemed to"

(b) by striking out line 30 on page 9 and substituting the following:

"(2) Sections 10 to 13 shallcome into force"

That is in both languages, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Hon. Members have heard the reading of the motions proposed by the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp). Can I dispense with re-reading the motions?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Is the House ready for the question?

To speak on the debate, the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett).

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, initially we supported the motion which is now before the House in the final report of the parliamentary task force on fiscal arrangements, the fiscal federalism task force which the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) mentioned a moment ago. Hon. Members may not all realize that the 1981 report of that parliamentary task force made the identical recommendation to the Government. Why the Government, which is now prepared to accept this recommendation, was not prepared to accept it over the last two years is difficult to know. Perhaps I should not dwell on the past. Perhaps I should congratulate government Members for having now adopted an all-Party agreed resolution identical to the one we are now discussing.

I should point out that, excellent though this recommendation is, it does not yet address the question which we in this Party were doing our best to address in the previous motion. Perhaps it has not been fully understood by some Hon. Members. As I say, this motion is very useful. It requires that the Secretary of State every year will have to provide to Parliament, to the House of Commons and to the other place, a full report on the cash contributions and total equalized tax transfers in respect of post-secondary education to each province. It is very interesting that in that report will have to be provided a breakdown of expenditures by each province on post-secondary education. Also in the report a listing will have to be provided of any other federal programs of support to or involvement in post-secondary education and so on.

That kind of report will be a real first for the House in the subject of the funding for post-secondary education. It will then be sent to the appropriate committee of the House, of the other place or of both, for review. Therefore, until we have a system of real accountability, it seems to me this is an excellent intermediate step. That is exactly what it is, an intermediate step. At least we will be in a position to know, as the Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) was not because he was not a member of the particular committee, what is being spent on what and by which level of government. At least we will have information at our disposal under this amendment which we do not have today, except by doing an enormous amount of digging around, ferreting out and listening to contradictory statements by provincial Cabinet Ministers and the federal Ministers involved in post-secondary education. That confusion or that lack of knowledge, unless we really dig to get it out, will be overcome by this amendment.

When we take a vote later this day I urge all Hon. Members to support Motion No. 4 standing in my name. This in itself does not require what we used to have prior to 1977 and that we could have again, namely, a full system of accountability of all federal dollars which are being spent by the provinces in post-secondary education. We still will not have that, and we still want to have that. I thought I spoke for members of the Conservative Party as well. I have talked to many of them on this. However, the Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte did not seem to approve of that concept of accountability. Those to whom I have spoken have certainly said that they approved it. Many on the other side have told me that they approved it. While supporting very strongly this particular motion, we should not kid ourselves. It is an interim motion. It is there because unless we pass Motion No. 4 later today we do not have a genuine signal going out to all concerned that what we want and what we owe to the taxpayers of the country is accountability for the spending of federal funds on post-secondary education. We still have to get that. I hope Hon. Members on all sides will support the efforts of my colleagues and myself to bring this about through Motion No. 4.

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to give support to the amendment of the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp). I simply say again that while we believe the amendment will help those of us who are currently being hurt, whether by Ottawa or by a provincial capital—and I most certainly know that students in post-secondary institutions in my own province are being hurt—to know whether we are being shafted, by how much and by whom—at least according to the federal Government and according to the Minister responsible—the amendment will not really tell us any more than what we know today. We will still not know whom we can believe or which level of government we can believe. We get different stories on that today. Even if the Minister tabled such reports in the House, there would still be issue taken with the findings of the reports by various provincial governments. It will not tell us whom we can believe or, with any degree of verifiability, who is shafting us and by how much. It certainly will not save our institutions from being destroyed and our students from being hurt.

Recently British Columbia was accused of not passing on federal funds by cutting provincial aid to post-secondary education by 6 per cent. The B.C. Minister of Education denied it and said that B.C. only cut the funds to universities by 5 per cent and to other post-secondary institutions by 3.5 per cent. We thus have an admission that the Government of British Columbia is not passing on the funds received from Ottawa, inadequate as they may be. We believe they are inadequate. We have a further admission from that Government that it has cut past levels of provincial funding to universities by 5 per cent and to other post-secondary institutions by 3.5 per cent respectively.

While the information which will arise from the amendment before us will be welcome, we really do not need it in order to find out what is happening in British Columbia at this point. At least we already know that that provincial Government is not passing on the money received from Ottawa for post-secondary education and in fact is cutting back on its own expenditures for those purposes from previous levels of funding.
