We will support this amendment. Hopefully we will then be seen to have recognized, even to the satisfaction of the Conservative Party, that there is more to this issue than just the fact that some provincial governments—and none of us have suggested all of them—are denying access to students to education to a greater amount than is necessitated by the level of federal funding made available. Hopefully, even the Conservatives will now recognize that we recognize the issue is broader. Perhaps they will look at it themselves and decide, despite their protestations on another amendment a few moments ago, to reconsider their view of that previous amendment and give it, as well as their own, some support.

We not only need to know what is happening to post-secondary education across Canada, we actually have to do something about it. It is not enough to know if we refuse to act. What I gather from statements made by representatives of the Conservative Party in the last few moments is, that just because some of the provincial governments in Canada may be doing an adequate job, that they will deny my constituents and the people who live in my province the right to equal access to education, because they only want to have a talk shop and know what the facts are, but do not actually want to do anything with the facts that are already admitted. To me, Mr. Speaker, that is totally irresponsible.

If Conservative Members want to have any hope of being able to speak for the people of British Columbia in any good conscience, they should not only support this amendment but also support the amendment which we dealt with just a few moments ago.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have a few words to say about this amendment. As has already been pointed out, it will not have the same effect as the amendment moved by the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett). That amendment would have had the effect of requiring that we make sure that the money transferred to provinces for the purposes of post-seondary education would actually be spent for those purposes. In the absence of the political will to accept that amendment—

Ms. Jewett: It has not been voted on yet.

Mr. Blaikie: It has not been voted on yet but I am making the assumption that the Government is not likely to change its mind between now and some time later this afternoon, although I hope that I am wrong. If that were to happen, government Members would need to have open minds, and I have not seen that demonstrated up until now.

As I think has been said before, this amendment as it stands comes very close to what was recommended by the special parliamentary task force on federal-provincial fiscal arrangements. Again, as on a couple of other occasions, I note with pleasure that recommendations which I had a hand in formulating as a member of that task force are coming into legislative form. I think this is one of the rare delights for a Member of Parliament. So many recommendations in which one participates collect dust and never see the light of day or are rejected by the Government.

It is always worthy of note when one can say that something that was recommended by a parliamentary task force is now being incorporated into legislation. Indeed, the separating out of post-secondary education transfers from transfers for the purposes of hospital care and medical care was another recommendation of the committee. I would like to take this opportunity to recall that you yourself, Mr. Speaker, sat on that committee that made these recommendations, and I hope that you will be taking equal pleasure in the fact that one of our recommendations which we made some three years ago is being adopted.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on this amendment and its relevance to the past amendment. In 1977, the Government made a wrong decision, and it has squirmed underneath that decision ever since. It has been unable to protect, in the eyes of the people of Canada, the universality and accessibility of guaranteed medicare to all of the people of Canada. The provinces have made various interpretations of the decision which was made in 1977, and these interpretations have varied considerably from the one-third two-thirds decision which was made at that time.

Today, Mr. Speaker, we are talking about the accountability of the provinces and to some extent the accountability of the federal Government to let the people of Canada and Parliament particularly know how that money is being spent. This motion asks that there at least be a reporting to Parliament so that Parliament and the people of Canada can make a judgement about how the provinces spend the moneys which are transferred to them under the transfers which are allowed for in this Act.

The previous motion required the spending of the money in a particular way. This motion only requires the reporting of how that money is spent. The dollar-for-dollar suggestion still makes more sense. We said that in 1977 and we say it again now. The Government seems unwilling to back up its continuing suggestion that it is the champion of the universality and accessibility of expanding medicare and of providing job training and university training to the people of Canada. It has been unwilling to back that up with dollars and, consequently, has backed away from the dollar-for-dollar position it took up until 1977.

We support this motion which allows the knowledge of how funds are spent to be given to Parliament and the people of Canada. That in itself might eventually convince the Government that it should perhaps back up its plans with money to the provinces so that the provinces can fulfil the requirements of good medicare and good education as fully as possible with the help of the federal Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Chair has had the opportunity to read the motion and has some reservations. In fact, the Chair finds the motion somewhat similar to the motion that has already been ruled out of order. However, there appears to be unanimous consent of the House to accept the motion despite the reservations of the Chair.

If I get an indication that there is unanimous consent to accept the motion, I shall deem the motion to be in order and put the motion as presented. Is there unanimous consent to accept the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Epp) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The House will proceed to the division on Motion No. 4. The House has already indicated that it is the wish that the bells be rung on this motion. Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Ms. Jewett), which was negatived on the following division:

DIVORCE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Friday, February 24, consideration of the motion of Mr. MacGuigan that Bill C-10, to amend the Divorce Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, in what I have to say this afternoon, whether it is heard or not—I do wish that those who have conversations would carry them on behind the curtain—in what I have to say in continuance of my intervention in this debate on February 24, 1984, as recorded at page 1731 of Hansard, I want it clearly understood that—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order in the House.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I want it clearly understood that although I am opposed to this Bill, I am not opposed to it on the grounds that it introduces the notion of what is called no fault divorce. That I can live with, as a notion. It is perhaps time that an element of that sort was introduced into legislation, if only to eliminate some of the fraud and/or fictitiousness that I am told surrounded many divorces under the present legislation. A no fault provision may well put an end to that fraud and/or fictitiousness and some of the pain and anger that has gone with it for the partners and for the children. Pain and anger may even be putting it mildly. It may well be worse, it may be agony and psychological trauma. If we can avoid that by introducing a no fault provision into the divorce proceedings, perhaps we will be doing well.

● (1710)

Not all divorce should have to rest on the no-fault provision. In some marriages there is fault. If there is, that fault should be revealed honestly in the clear light of day, assessed, and settlements determined accordingly. That is one point. The Bill is too restrictive in the grounds it recognizes and in the instructions it gives to judges who sit on divorce cases. They are being instructed to disregard fault where real fault can be established. Also, the provisions in the Bill with respect to ensuring that support costs are paid do not satisfy me and should not satisfy any Canadian. They are not strong enough.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, there has been no real attempt so far as I can see to enforce the payment of support costs when one or other of the partners moves beyond the provincial jurisdiction in which the decree is granted. A central registry is essential if we are to manage the payments to the injured party in any divorce procedure. On these grounds alone I am opposed to the Bill. The grounds are too limited and there is inadequate provision for enforcing payment of support costs even within the jurisdiction of the court granting the divorce. As well there is no central registry and inadequate consultation with the provinces to assist with the payment and collection of support costs.

I would go further and suggest that Canada ought to begin by entering into bilateral arrangements to ensure support costs; even a multilateral or UN move to ensure that if one of the partners should leave the jurisdiction of Canada there is still a possibility of collecting support costs and ensuring that they are paid. That sort of thing should be put in place. I came to this conclusion after looking at the provisions of the Bill. I think it well that we should look at it again. Let us understand how the Bill proposes to deal with divorce.

First, a husband or a wife may individually petition for divorce on the grounds of a breakdown of marriage. Second, a husband and/or wife may jointly petition for divorce on the same grounds of breakdown of marriage. That is all, no other grounds. No other grounds can be accepted by the court. We must, therefore, ask what constitutes a breakdown of a marriage.

Here a breakdown is established under clause 3 of the Bill if the husband and the wife assert, or if the husband and the wife have lived apart for one year or more. One of these provisions calls for an "or" and an "and". The other calls for two "ands", Mr. Speaker. Something is wrong with the drafting of this Bill. The nonsense and the double "and" provision lies in this: How can a woman, let us say, who is not in a no-fault situation but in a real fault situation, be it wife-beating or child-beating or some other child abuse situation, who has no other means of support except what is begrudged by her husband? How could such a woman live apart for a year, especially if child abuse is involved and she wants to protect the child and take that child out of the household during that period. It is pure nonsense to suggest you have to build a case for a breakdown of marriage by saying a husband and wife have to live apart for a year, completely disregarding the fact that one person who is trying to protect—perhaps herself, perhaps herself and a child—has no means of living apart.

How do we determine under clause 2(4) on page 2 the deeming provision? This is extraordinary wording. They shall be deemed, says the clause, to have lived separate, and here I would suggest that the word is "separately" and not "separate", Mr. Speaker. The word "separate" is more usually considered as an adjective. The word "separately" is the adverb. Let me continue they shall be deemed to have lived apart if for that period either of them had the intention to live apart. That is in the legislation. How is intention to be determined? Who is to determine intention?

But to return to the main theme, politically I agree. I mentioned this in my earlier intervention. It looks to me as though this Bill and several other Bills that are due to appear in the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs have been put forward by Ministers as political Bills, not with any real intention of solving social problems. One of the Bills, of course, is this Bill, one is the Security Bill, and the other one contains reforms to the Criminal Code. Those three Bills are presumably intended, all of them, to land in the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs between now and an election.

I suggest, with all due respect, Mr. Speaker, that these Bills have been brought forward by a Government which is seeking some means of saying "well, we had to do something" in order to indicate when we got into an election that it brought forward a Bill, the Opposition dragged its feet and did not put its back into the matter. Therefore, the Government can say "it is not our fault that these particular Bills could not become law."

The family unit in my mind is so important to the community that to play with it politically, as I have suggested this Bill does, is an insult to the Canadian people and to their beliefs. Bring in no-fault divorce if you must, but remember there are other causes for divorce. There is also a fault divorce. The guilty party, be it husband or wife, should have to pay under the law for having failed to live up the marriage vows and also to the vows taken during the baptism ceremony.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a couple of questions to the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich. (Mr. Munro). One is on the question of fault. He mentioned that judges should determine according to fault. I understand him to mean with regard to maintenance. Would the Hon. Member clarify that? Is he suggesting in cases where there is fault that the economically dependent spouse should therefore get a lower maintenance order because of the fault, or similarly that a faulty provider spouse should pay a higher amount of maintenance on grounds of the fault?

Second, will the Hon. Member give a little more information as to what he would consider adequate by way of support provisions? The mechanisms for ensuring support payments are made in this Bill. Specifically, would the Hon. Member agree to equal splitting of all pensions in federal jurisdiction? Does he think this should be in the Bill? Would he agree that there should be access to all federal data sources, such as income tax and unemployment insurance for the location of defaulters of court order maintenance and interception of any funds under federal jurisdiction, such as unemployment insurance or pensions for the payment of court order maintenance?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the first question asked by the Hon. Member having to do with a higher payment situation, I had thought I had made it quite clear in my comments that fault has got to play a role. If there is a fault that can be determined and assessed, obviously the person who is at fault ought to pay more than if there was a general agreement in a no-fault situation, particularly when there are children involved.

As to the splitting of resources, I do not know whether the Bill makes adequate provision for the judge to determine the role of the two spouses in the accumulation of savings and assets of a particular marriage and how they can be divided. I do not think the law as now drafted really takes that into account. Actually the judge is barred from looking at fault, as I understand the Bill. While I agree that the greater the fault the greater the settlement, I do not think the Bill makes any provision for that, and I think it ought to.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, in participating in the debate on Bill C-10 one could start off by labelling it as creeping progressivism. It is creeping because the divorce proposals in Bill C-10 were really recommended by both the Anglican and the United churches in 1968. I know in the New Democratic Party we have a resolution on record from the 1967 federal convention urging that divorce be granted on a no-fault basis. The Bill gives the appearance of being progressive. Most Canadians and most Members of the House agree that granting divorce on a no-fault basis is long overdue.

One can enumerate many reasons in favour of the Bill. Many Members on both sides of the House have dealt with some of its positive aspects. Making marriage breakdown the sole ground for divorce is a welcome aspect. It can help eliminate many of the problems which couples now face when going into court to obtain divorce in marriages which have obviously been broken down for some time. Now it will not become necessary for one of the partners to commit adultery or for other people to start lying and playing all sorts of games. With the present provisions it will become cleaner and more direct. Hopefully they will help create an atmosphere in which amicable settlements in terms of property, maintenance and child custody occur.

I would like to introduce two quotations if I may supporting the concept of no fault. The National Action Committee on the Status of Women in a brief to the Minister in October 1983 indicated:

> Marriage must be recognized as an equal partnership entered into voluntary by a woman and a man. Once one of the parties has decided that the partnership is not working, the relationship is clearly ended and no legal rule will make it work. That spouse should be able to declare that the marriage has broken down, and that declaration should be regarded as sufficient to prove the breakdown. Proof of separation or fault should not be required.

The other quotation to which I should like to refer is from a brief of The Catholic Women's League of Canada presented to the Minister in May 1983. In part it reads:

> —the accusations and counter-accusations of the present adversarial system seem to do a great deal of harm to the familial relationship which oftentimes must survive the dissolution of a marriage because of children. Accordingly it is our submission that the best interests of all parties concerned, including children would be best served if the only ground for divorce were permanent breakdown of the marriage.

As I mentioned before, all Members of the House admit to the positive aspects of the Bill. What distresses us is that which the Bill does not address, considering how long it has taken in Canada to bring our divorce legislation into the 20th century or into modern reality. This is a rare opportunity for Parliament to deal with the question of divorce. The last time we dealt with it was in 1968, or almost 16 years ago. Perhaps the next time we will deal with it will be some 16 years down the road. We can only regret that in this rare opportunity the Government failed to deal with some of the more pressing problems confronting dozens of Canadians in marriages which are no longer functional and have broken down.

The major problems confronting Canadians involved in divorce are maintenance, and the court order in terms of financial and property settlement between the two parties. The Minister has indicated in the past, "I am sorry, this is not our responsibility; this is a provincial responsibility". In part he is right, but a contemporary law or an attempt by government to create a contemporary law would recognize that federal-provincial co-operation is needed, and that in order to bring the Divorce Act into the 20th century it will have to deal with the questions of property settlement and maintenance. Before introducing the Bill, the Government should have held meetings with the provinces to determine to what extent it could obtain co-operation on these vital issues. It failed to do that. It failed to come to Parliament with a Bill which had the co-operation and blessings of provincial jurisdictions. It failed to bring forward a co-operative approach. A party who is responsible for maintenance payments can skip into another province and sort of disappear, very often leaving—in fact in most cases—a woman with dependants in the lurch with no real means of enforcing the court order.

The Government speaks about creating a central registry and being in contact with the provinces in an attempt to set up such a registry. It is a great move, but surely it is a little late. If that is an indication of where the Government is at, it is also an indication that reform in the Divorce Act will continue to be the slow and arduous process it has been in the past. That is just not good enough.

There are other aspects of the Bill which certainly displease us. The suggestion of time limitations on maintenance orders could certainly create much hardship in the future. It is a provision which would allow a maintenance order to expire and there would be no recourse to extend maintenance unless one of the parties went to court and asked for an extension. Another aspect which I find mischievous, and mischievous is the best way to describe it, is the notion of self-sufficiency. In terms of property settlements or maintenance orders, the court will encourage the notion that both parties become self-sufficient. Indeed theoretically this is an ideal solution. Neither of the two parties will be dependent upon each other and they can each go their merry way in life in a self-sufficient manner. However, that defies contemporary reality.

The reality for women in the work force is that the chance of getting a good job is very minimal, given the present economic situation. I do not think that the present economic situation will change radically in the next number of years.

The other reality is that in most cases, women have been the housekeepers. The woman has forgone and sacrificed her educational opportunities in order to raise a family and keep the home while the husband has secured his education, often supported by the wife's part-time job, and then secured himself a decent income. They are now in a divorce situation and the wife is expected at mid-age or in old-age to become self-sufficient and establish a career on her own while still being responsible for several youngsters in the home. This is not very realistic at all, Mr. Speaker. If this is an indication of the thinking of government lawyers and of the Minister, I am suggesting that they are still out of touch with contemporary reality.

There is the case of the older woman who is in her fifties or sixties and has been the homemaker and raised a family. Perhaps the husband or the wife has decided that their relationship is no longer a workable one. Very often in these situations the husband and wife decided to stay together in order to maintain a family home for the children. When the children have left the home and established their own careers, the husband and wife feel that their union is not in each other's best interests and decide to get a divorce. To expect women who find themselves in that situation to all at once establish a new career, to go to university or technical training schools and acquire skills is just ludicrous. These women do not stand a chance at all. It is a cruel joke that the courts are suggesting that women should become self-sufficient.

The Bill dramatically fails in addressing itself to the question of enforcement. As I mentioned before, all too often husbands will skip the province and forget about making maintenance payments. In fact, statistics show that some 70 per cent of court settlements are in arrears. On the one hand we have a Bill which proclaims itself as one which deals with the contemporary problems and concerns of Canadian society. However, when looking at the Bill, one sees what is not included in it and one must realize and admit that the Bill fails to address the real concerns of Canadians who are caught in the situation of marriage breakdown.

This is not an easy topic to deal with. It is difficult for the House to address itself totally to this question. There is a sharing of jurisdictions between family courts, provincial courts and federal courts. Somebody described this as being like a Rubic's cube. Indeed, the present situation does not set the Rubic's cube straight and does not provide a coherent overall policy. Such a policy can only be provided with the co-operation of the provinces. Before this Bill was introduced, there should have been major consultations with the provinces, during the latter part of the 1970s, so that there would have been a coherent policy the Minister could have presented to the House. However, he has failed to do so and in fact has only addressed himself to a small part of the problem.

Like the previous speaker, who is a member of the Conservative Party, I wonder if this is indeed simply a political ploy. If this is the case, the Minister stands condemned and someday, when he faces his maker, he will have to answer to a great many questions. Playing with people's lives for political appearances simply will not work. I for one believe in the notion of karma and karma will get that Minister.

My own experience with divorce is not personal, but some good friends of mine have been suffering through the process of divorce. I can think of one case in particular, Mr. Speaker, and these people are very close to me. There are three young children in this family. Obviously the marriage has not been working for a number of years and finally a decision was reached that someone should make the effort to end the marriage. In order to do that in this particular case the husband took the initiative and entered into what, in terms of court consideration, became an adulterous relationship which then became the grounds for divorce. I think that there would have been a mutual consent between the two parties in terms of a no-fault divorce had this Act been in effect at the time. I think both parties would have agreed that their union was not working out. However, the real bone of contention is the question of property and maintenance costs.

During the divorce trial of the couple to whom I have referred, I heard the judge direct the woman to become self-sufficient. She has three youngsters at home. She does not have the opportunity to send the children to daycare so she can receive technical training or go back to university to establish a career. In this particular case, one of the youngsters has some learning disabilities and needs some special attention. This woman needs to function as a homemaker for a number of years yet. It will not be easy for her to get a job.

At the same time, it is not an easy situation for the man either. He is a middle-income earner and is all at once faced with maintaining two residences, two cars and double expenditures. A good chunk of his income must go to the woman. At the same time he must maintain himself. Perhaps at some stage, like most Canadians who have divorced, he will remarry and will have obligations to his second family. It is not easy for either party, Mr. Speaker. Certainly this Bill will not help them. This Bill alone cannot solve some of the fundamental problems faced by this young couple.

We need social programs, adequate daycare and income support programs for single parents, and particularly women if they are to be able to provide their children with a good and wholesome environment so that children who come from broken homes can have an equal chance and a secure future in Canadian society. We will need a host of social programs in order to support those families. This Bill does not address those problems and concerns either.

This Bill is lacking a great deal. If it were easier to have Parliament deal with divorce legislation, I do not think that either of the two Opposition Parties would have opposed this Bill. None of us is opposed to the principle of no-fault divorce. However, it took some 16 years to make this change. This Bill is simply not good enough for 16 years of waiting. It simply is not good enough and that is why I believe that both Opposition Parties will stand opposed to this legislation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, the legislation before us this afternoon is important, and it is timely. However, I regret to say, as so many of my colleagues on this side of the House have already said, as an Act of divorce reform it falls far short of the expectations of most Canadians.

The Lincoln County Law Association, of which I have the privilege of being a member, wrote to me saying that after giving the matter serious and extensive consideration they feel very strongly that further changes should be made. We in this House are well aware of the fact that society is anything but static. Society is constantly undergoing change and public opinion moves with that move in society. Parliamentarians who fail to keep in touch with the changing mores of our society do so at their own risk.

As has been mentioned by the previous speaker, the Divorce Act has not been subject to amendment for some 15 or 16 years, although there is no doubt that society has changed in those 15 or 16 years. Divorce and divorce reform must then be given in depth priority consideration.

Much as I dislike relating divorce statistics in the House, they are a fact of life. Four out of 10 marriages in Canada are ending in divorce. In 1982 some 140,000 people found themselves divorced and thousands more were directly affected by those divorces. The financial cost of divorce is grim and it is not all measured in dollars. It has been estimated that some $500 million has been spent in legal fees alone relating to divorce proceedings in the last 10 years. The legal cost is nothing compared to the trauma of divorce and the dissolution of marriage. Divorce is a cruel and hard experience for anyone and everyone involved. Children especially find their lives torn apart by the tension and struggles between their divorcing parents.

The law as it now stands virtually assures acrimony. From start to finish divorce pits one spouse against the other because of the adversarial nature of our present process. The sole escape is a three-year waiting period for an uncontested divorce—three years of family life held in limbo. Like other Hon. Members, I have received the argument from constituents that the state should not make divorce easier because it leads to the increased breakdown of marriage and a breakdown in society. I am rather sympathetic to that argument because I am a strong believer in the institution of marriage as is perhaps every Member. Nonetheless, the state already regulates our way of life, perhaps to a greater extent than most people would approve.

Despite the toughness of the present law, despite the tremendous financial and psychological cost of divorce and despite the continued overwhelming support for the institution of marriage, 40 per cent of marriages end in the divorce courts. Parliament cannot ignore what is happening to divorce, and that does not reflect the law as Canadians see it today.

This leads me directly to the legislation before us for consideration, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) deserves credit for taking the action he has, but he deserves much criticism for not taking it further than he has. He should have taken advantage of the public momentum available to him, and he might have taken greater advantage of the time allocated in the House.

Comment has already been made on the fact that there was a real lack of negotiation and discussion with the provinces, so that when the Bill was brought forward it could be rather comprehensive on divorce reform. An editorial in The Province of Vancouver reads as follows:

> After all the preening and advance promotion of its divorce law changes, the federal Government has brought forward a mouse—The end product is the work of a tired administration sapped of political courage.

Purely and simply, the Minister has taken the easy way out. He has thrown away the opportunity that is his and might have been that of the House to consider divorce reform after that lapse of 15 years. Issues like custody and maintenance orders are pressing today, but they are ignored. I want to return to those items later, Mr. Speaker.

Bill C-10 offers a significant lessening of the time a divorce action takes and the toll it imposes upon those involved. I am rather cognizant of the exchange that took place a moment ago regarding the fact that as a result of this Bill marriage breakdown will be the sole grounds for the dissolution of marriage. A one-year separation period would replace the present three-year waiting period. That marriage breakdown issue will replace the different causes and reasons for dissolution of marriage, thus ending the adversarial approach to divorce proceedings. We on this side heartily accept that aspect of the Bill. We want to make divorce proceedings less acrimonious and less difficult to bear. Nonetheless, the Minister has opted for flash and little substance.

Bill C-10 will reward the deadbeat and punish the innocent. I can think of no other way to describe a situation where fault goes totally by the boards while maintenance and custody orders are left hanging in limbo. All Hon. Members have often enough received letters from constituents who have been left with inadequate support settlements; either that or court orders made but not carried through. Those writing have one simple question and they want an answer; when will the law take the side of the innocent? We know that Bill C-10 will not come to their assistance, and worse yet, we fear that women particularly will be worse off than before as a result of the legislation.

If we consider the case of older women that point becomes exceedingly clear. A woman married for 20 or 30 years may well have spent her whole time and effort in the occupation of homemaking. She may not have any marketable skills and her age may add to her disadvantage when it comes to seeking gainful employment. To become self-sufficient, retraining is a must and that requires support and an extra, special effort. Even after retraining, will the opportunity be given to her to make a meaningful contribution to society?

Bill C-10 does not even begin to address the situation. Even if the woman receives a sympathetic hearing in court there is no guarantee that the settlement will be adequate or equitable. The absence of any assessment of fault makes it even more likely that maintenance and custody orders will become weaker, not stronger, as has been suggested. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, it comes down to this: The Minister of Justice must do better before this Bill comes back to this House for third reading.

Of equal concern is the issue of enforcement. In the Province of Ontario for the year 1978, $25 million was collected in support payments. Under half a million dollars came from outside the province. This emphasizes the mobility of people, one or the other of the spouses, from province to province. It is a fact of life that some people will do what they can to avoid their responsibility under such maintenance orders. The law should not assist them to avoid their responsibilities. Let us be honest, Mr. Speaker, a maintenance order is of no use whatsoever if it can be ignored by the person responsible for the making of payments under that maintenance order.

At present, an estimated 75 per cent of those maintenance orders are in default. Just think of it, Mr. Speaker. This year, 1984, 75 per cent of the existing maintenance orders are in default. By and large, those maintenance orders are against the male spouse. This is an appalling situation. Not only is the spouse, usually the wife, left to fend for herself, but the whole judicial system is undermined by its inability to respond. Bill C-10 again falls very short of addressing this problem. For women in particular, the legislation is a disaster.

So that these comments may not be seen by those on the government side as simply obstructionist, may I put on the record that the Lincoln County Law Association has submitted to me a number of recommendations for the consideration of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. This association shares the concern expressed by so many that the enforcement of custody and maintenance awards must be both efficient and uniform across the country.

The first recommendation is that there be a requirement that federal government agencies provide the last known address of the parties, and more particularly that favourable consideration be given to a central registry for this purpose. Second, it recommends the power to attach wages, RRSPs, RHOSPs, salary, commissions, pensions, life insurance benefits and income from all sources, coupled with the third recommendation, the elimination of all exemptions from attachment. Fourth, it recommends the power for the court to transfer property in satisfaction of a lump sum maintenance award; fifth, the power for the court to grant exclusive possession of real and personal property; sixth, the power to create trusts for the benefit of spouse or children of the marriage; seventh, the power of the court to bind an estate subject to maintenance payments; eighth, the power to charge property with an obligation to make payments under a maintenance order; ninth, the power to designate a beneficiary or beneficiaries of life assurance; and tenth, the power to designate responsibility for the payment of personal debts. I trust, Mr. Speaker, that these recommendations will be given full consideration by that standing committee.

If the failure of Bill C-10 to address enforcement is its worst failing, a second flaw is equally as fuzzy and difficult. That is the question of mediation and counselling services. Quite simply, the state should not place itself in a position of aiding and abetting the demise of a salvageable marriage. The institution of marriage is a good one. Most of those divorces which take place are fouled up by a second marriage, so why ruin the first one? If it is a salvageable marriage, then there should be some consideration given to saving it. Counselling and mediation are not a waste of time, but this Bill does not address that particular subject.

The Province of Ontario has already legislated a procedure for mediation of custody disputes. I would urge the Minister of Justice to give consideration to amending Bill C-10 so as to include provisions similar, if not identical, to those found in Section 30 and Section 31 of the Children's Law Reform Amendment Act, 1980, of the Province of Ontario. Consideration might be given as well, Mr. Speaker, to federal assistance for the expansion of mediation and counselling services now available and to assist in the cost of those services through legal aid.

Time does not permit me to add comments of a more technical nature. However, let me say that some sections of Bill C-10, notably the new sections, Sections 3 and 12 of the Divorce Act, need to be given careful consideration by the committee. These are concerns which will have to be properly addressed. I trust that opportunity will be given to the members of the committee and that the Minister of Justice might concern himself with a rereading of those particular clauses.

I said at the outset, Mr. Speaker, that this legislation falls short of expectations. The opportunity is present today for the Minister to right the wrongs in the Divorce Act. The Minister is turning his back on that opportunity. He can do better. Canadians expect him to do more.

I would like to indicate, Mr. Speaker, that the opportunity is here for Hon. Members of this House. We are all agreed that reform of the Divorce Act must take place. We are all agreed as well that no-fault divorce is acceptable to Hon. Members of this House so long as we keep the no-fault to the question of the dissolution of the marriage. It seems to me an abuse of the privileges of the court when we attempt now to tell it that there is no alternative for the court, no discretion for the court to dispose of these very material matters of maintenance orders with a consideration of right and wrong. It is too simple. Mr. Speaker, to make them divide the assets between them and not take into consideration whose fault it was that the marriage is to be dissolved.

I had a most unusual experience last Saturday in my constituency office. A person came to see me who was handicapped in several different ways. First of all, he was totally blind. He was an amputee and the subject of a kidney transplant which worked. Less than one year ago he married another person who was suffering from some disability of her own. They are now separated. The question arises as to whether or not she should have advantage of the home which was provided for this handicapped person. The legislation is so written that she will be refused welfare or mothers' allowance unless she goes after her husband for one-half of the value of that house. This is a house which was practically built for him because of his special handicaps.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I, of course, must inform the Hon. Member that his speaking time has expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pinard: I would just like to confirm to the House that since we have voted the report stage of Bill C-12 today, as I indicated last week, tomorrow we will be dealing with Bill C-12 again for third reading. There might have been some confusion since I had said that the backup legislation was Bill C-10, which was the backup legislation for today. Tomorrow we come back to Bill C-12 for third reading. I suppose for some of us it was very clear, but it was suggested to me that I clarify the situation.

● (1800)

Mr. Lawrence: Can the Government House Leader confirm that Bill C-10 will be the back-up legislation for C-12 tomorrow as well?

Mr. Pinard: That was the intent of the answer I gave last week, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Roche: I would like to call it six o'clock in relation to the debate on Bill C-10, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 6 p.m., this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock a.m., in accordance with the provisions of Standing Order 2(1).

At 6.02, the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS AND ESTABLISHED PROGRAMS FINANCING ACT, 1977

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-12, an Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Ms. Jewett: No.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett).

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, it is extraordinary that a member of the Government would not want to speak first on third reading. I can only conclude, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister responsible for capping post-secondary education funding to the provinces—

Mr. Manly: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) on a point of order.

Mr. Manly: I just noticed the Minister responsible for the Bill walking directly in front of the Speaker, on his own Bill, between you and the speaker for our Party on that Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands has a valid point of order. The Chair did notice the incident as well. The Chair takes the opportunity once again to plead with all Hon. Members to respect the rules of decorum. May I draw Hon. Members' attention to Standing Order 15 and the various paragraphs thereunder.

Ms. Jewett: Now the Minister responsible is sitting close and talking in a loud manner, Mr. Speaker. He obviously wants to interrupt my speech as well as cross the floor in front of me.

• (1110)

Mr. Cousineau: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I just want to tell the Hon. Member not to worry; I am listening.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Chair feels it should intervene at this point. The Standing Orders are clear. When a Member has the floor, no Member should interrupt him or her or cause any commotion which would put the Member who has been recognized in an uncomfortable position. Custom does not preclude discussions in a very low voice, but surely to have a discussion going on next to the Hon. Member who has the floor is, I would think, a discourtesy.

Ms. Jewett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill C-12, as we all know, caps post-secondary educational transfers at six and five rather than allowing the normal increase to take place. One of the most serious things about the Bill, indicating how clearly the Government derogates from the authority of Parliament, is that it is retroactive for a full year. Some $118 million has already been taken out of post-secondary educational transfers in the fiscal year just ended; we are now passing the Bill to authorize that capping. We tried our best, of course, to pass an amendment which would have required the restoration of the $118 million. Unfortunately, we were not able to get that amendment through.

I would also like to point out the seriousness of this Bill in that in other areas, for example, medicare, the federal Government has not applied six and five to its transfers to the provinces, only in post-secondary education. The Government intends to continue an even more serious withdrawal of funds in 1984-85.

It is rather odd, too, that the federal Government says that the six and five capping is going to cease, I believe in June, just at the very moment it is no longer going to be part of the federal Government's policy to enforce six and five in the public sector. It is saying, however, that for last year and for the whole of the fiscal year we are now beginning, we will continue limiting our post-secondary educational transfers to the provinces. It seems to me that it is very difficult, therefore, for the Government to have any credibility at all when it says, as it does, and as the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts) said only yesterday, that it is concerned about the future of post-secondary education in this country.

One of the difficulties with the way we presently fund post-secondary education is that there is no accountability. Whether the money is in tax points or equalized transfers, there is no way the Parliament of Canada, representing the taxpayers, can know how that money is going to be spent. It is not earmarked. The provinces can spend that money any way they please. Some of them indeed have been doing so and have not been directing these moneys intended for post-secondary education to post-secondary education. Ever since block funding was started in 1977, we in this Party have argued that it was a mistake and was financially irresponsible.

Yesterday we argued, through an amendment to this Bill which was debated in the House, that there should be accountability, at least for the portion of the funding for post-secondary education that is derived from the increase in federal transfers, the six and five that this Bill authorizes. We should be able to direct the money to be spent for the purposes intended. By that amendment yesterday we were striving for fiscal accountability. Yet when we voted on that amendment, neither the Liberals nor the Conservatives supported it. I am especially puzzled that the Conservatives did not support it. They have argued time and again for fiscal accountability and responsibility with the taxpayers' money. It is the federal taxpayers' money which is going to the provinces for post-secondary educational funding. Surely if we have any sense of responsibility and accountability in the system we should have a requirement, as we could and as we did before 1977, that money allocated for post-secondary education should be spent on post-secondary education.

The amendment yesterday would have been a clear signal to everyone that those provinces which have not been spending money for the purposes intended should be doing so. Had the other two Parties voted for the amendment, it would have been a clear signal to the people of the country that we represent the taxpayers of Canada in a responsible fashion. It would have been a clear signal that the federal Government of Canada cares about the future of post-secondary education on behalf of all Canadians. Perhaps a speaker from the Conservative Party will explain to us all why they voted against fiscal accountability. I do not expect anyone from the Liberal Party to try to explain it because they did not even put up a speaker to introduce third reading of this Bill.

In debating Bill C-12, this Party particularly has been trying to bring to the attention of the House and the Government the real crisis in our post-secondary educational institutions. The institutions themselves, the students who attend them and the faculties which teach and do research in them are experiencing crises of major dimensions. In the United States they have been restraining and cutting back with regard to Government services. They have not been cutting back on education. Indeed, they have been dramatically increasing their expenditures on post-secondary education at the federal level. They know that if they are going to have and sustain an economic recovery in the United States, there must be an educated society to sustain it. They know, as we should know, that we have already moved into the post-industrial society and into the information-based society. The prime criterion of survival, let alone of flourishing in such a society, is knowledgeable and informed people. While manual skills are still important, mental skills are, more than in any other society, absolutely vital to the survival of a post-industrial way of life.

Indeed, Canada has taken the lead in the past, but rather than follow this example of taking the lead in recognizing what are the needs of the future, it is continuing to underfund seriously its post-secondary educational institutions. It is making it impossible for this society to respond adequately to a changing economic climate. The Government is putting a cap on post-secondary educational spending at the very moment when the United States, our closest neighbour, is substantially and, some would say, dramatically increasing its spending on post-secondary educational institutions.

There are innumerable horror stories being told now about what is happening in our post-secondary educational institutions. Just last week, the President of the University of British Columbia, George Pederson, declared that the university is in a state of financial exigency, in the legal sense of that word, which means that people will have to be laid off, both faculty and staff, and many programs dismantled.

Just a few days ago there was a story that headhunters are already raiding a faculty that has taken years to build up. The commerce and business faculty is one of the most vulnerable at UBC because it has such an excellent reputation, as has been noted by the Wall Street Journal and by many educational institutions across the country and in the United States. The Dean of Business and Commerce, Peter Lusztig, says that the place could be cleaned out in 10 or 12 months. This is not just idle talk, this is what is foreseen within 10 or 12 months.

I recently reviewed what is happening at Cariboo College in Kamloops. The college has cut its continuing educational program, which has effectively disenfranchised some 6,000 students. Three satellite campuses of Cariboo College, which were previously funded directly by the provincial Government, are now required to obtain their funding from their college operating grants which, in turn, are being capped or substantially reduced as a result of federal Government action. It is likely that these satellite campuses will be forced to close, making rural accessibility an even greater problem than it is now.

In an effort to generate funds, Cariboo College is launching a program to recruit groups of 20 students from Hong Kong to travel to Kamloops for eight months at a cost of $7,500 per student in order to take a type of correspondence course at the college. There is even talk among the college's board members about building a hotel next to the college to accommodate the students. Is this what post-secondary education in Canada is all about? Is it about making a profit from foreign students while denying education to Canadian students who cannot afford the unreasonable costs?

The costs are becoming unreasonable. In my province, the Government has decided that no more grants will be given to students. There will be no grants whatsoever. I agree that other provinces, with one exception, have not gone that far. But the Province of British Columbia has decided that only loans will be available from now on. There will be no grants for those in financial need, only loans.

Last year a student at Douglas College in my riding had received a $1,000 loan and a $1,000 grant. This year his loan has to be $2,000 because his grant is only $90. He can look forward next year, if he is still able to attend the college, to receiving no grant at all. He says he will probably not be able to continue at University when he must operate solely on loans which increase every year.

I was talking to another person at Douglas College who has been declared ineligible even for a loan. The lady is in her thirties. She is a single mother, recently separated from her husband. In the separation agreement she was allowed the car. Because she was allowed the car, she has been denied the loan and she has ended up on welfare. I give these examples and there are thousands more one can give. The underfunding of research in our communities is another area we can talk about, and some of our members will be talking about it in the course of this third reading debate.

We are arriving at a situation at which our colleges and universities will become second-class institutions, at which they will no longer be able to do the kind of research they have done in the past. An example of that is the university from which I graduated, Queen's University, which used to be among the top ten in North America in terms of the quality of its library. A library is one of the most important things a university has, but the Queen's University library is now, I think, ranked 87th, right in there with the University of Connecticut.

I wonder whether Members of the House realize what a crisis we are in. I wonder whether Members of the Cabinet realize what a crisis we are in. The Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal), who is not here today but who is generally available when we discuss in committee matters concerning post-secondary education, apparently has no clout in Cabinet whatsoever. One of the reasons for that is that he has not yet got a handle on the problems facing our institutions. He does not know, for example, where the $118 million went that should have gone to post-secondary education funding in 1983-84. I asked him about this in committee, as some Hon. Members here will recall. He did not know. He threw out all kinds of ideas about where that $118 million might have gone, because it has been spent, it was not saved. It was spent in 1983-84. He threw out a variety of ideas about where it might have gone, and then said the bulk of it went into the Canada Student Loans Program. He did not even know that that is a loan program, and not a grant program. I wish it were a grant program. But he talked as if it were a grant program, and said that that is where a lot of the $118 million had gone. That is ridiculous. He did not know, although he announced the creation of a task force to look into post-secondary educational funding. He announced that Al Johnson, a very excellent choice in my view, would be heading the task force. He announced that in committee, but when I asked who were the members of the task force, he did not know. When I asked for the terms of reference of the task force, he could not provide them. When I telephoned just yesterday to get the terms of reference, they were still not available.

How can a Minister who does not know where the $118 million went—and it should have gone to the provinces for post-secondary educational funding—have very much influence? How can a Minister, who sets up a task force without being able to say what are its terms of reference, have very much influence with other Ministers in the Cabinet of Canada?

We have been inundated with telegrams and letters from the post-secondary educational sector. In the last few days I have received letters and telegrams from the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada, the Canadian Federation of Students, the Canadian Association of University Teachers, and from many other groups. In its telegram, the Canadian Federation of Students expressed its continuing opposition to the passage of Bill C-12. It reads:

> This Bill will result in the loss of $378 million over a two-year period. GFS urges that the six and five limitation clause be eliminated, that funds for education . . . be earmarked, and that a national dialogue on the funding and direction of post-secondary education in Canada commence immediately.

The Canadian Association of University Teachers, in its telegram to the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren), who undoubtedly has not read it, wrote:

> The Canadian Association of University Teachers deplores federal Government's action restricting funds for post-secondary education through Bill C-12. All Canadian governments should be increasing, not decreasing, accessibility to higher education so that young people of our country may receive education that will equip them for life in the remaining decades of this century and in the 21st century. CAUT calls upon the federal Government to reconsider its position, particularly since it has decided to restrict only the area of post-secondary education among the transfer programs to the provinces.

A letter from the Executive Director of the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada pointed out that transfers for post-secondary education have been singled out for application of the six and five program at the very moment when enrolment demands have continued to increase. In his letter, Dr. Gillmore wrote:

> Universities desperately need additional support to maintain standards of excellence and to respond to increasing needs of a broad spectrum of Canadian society.
> The continued imposition of six and five on higher education as proposed in Bill C-12 will not serve the best interests of the country at this time.

As I said at the beginning of my remarks, unfortunately the Conservative Party supported the six and fiving as a general principle in the original legislation. Perhaps, if it had not supported that general principle, we would not be fighting this battle today for the removal of the six and five limitation on post-secondary educational transfers. In more recent days its Members have realized the crisis of the universities and colleges in our society. I repeat, it is a crisis of the institutions themselves, of the potential research which can and should be done in those institutions, of the teaching programs which should be made available to our young people and, perhaps above all, a crisis for our society that we will not be able to bring young people and older people into the post-secondary educational stream.

It is a complete denial of what the Government did in the post-World War II period for veterans. It was one of the most outstanding programs a Canadian government has ever implemented. What the Government is doing now is a complete denial of that. That was a program of making post-secondary education accessible to every veteran who wanted it. They did not keep jacking up entrance standards. They said everyone who was qualified—50 per cent in those days—could attend university or college. They came in flocks and enriched society; indeed they made post-war society what it was. Now the Government turns its back on the principle then established.

The Governments of many of the provinces turned their backs as well on the principle of accessibility to higher education. Ontario and British Columbia are perhaps the two most serious cases in point. Both are Tory governments. One is called a Socred government, but it is a Tory government. In less than a year in my province we will see this crisis in our post-secondary educational institutions so deepened that it may be too late to get out of it. Surely the federal Government and Parliament, by withdrawing this Bill and by allowing the natural increase, which is still a very modest increase, in post-secondary educational funding to take place, could show that they understand the nature of the crisis in post-secondary education, that they are not prepared to wait until tomorrow to do something about the crisis and that they are prepared to act now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for—

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, he has been around here for a while.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Just one moment, please. I am checking something with the Table. Questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly).

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Hon. Member who just spoke. She referred to decreasing enrolments and possible cutbacks in enrolments. I have a clipping from the Sunday Star of February 12, 1984, in which the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette) was reported as speaking at a conference in Victoria. She said:

—a study of national educational standards is needed, in consultation with the provinces and industry.

She said that, if such a review found there were too many university applicants, then perhaps entrance standards should be raised.

"I don't think there is a birthright to complete a university degree if you're a mediocre student.

"I have the feeling that you should reserve university, especially the way our funding is structured—"

Also the Minister said that she favoured a European model that stresses academic competence. The article continued:

"In order to enter university there, you have to go through a competition and be the best."

Could the Hon. Member give her comments on this story, especially on what she feels this kind of restricted entrance and the raising of entrance requirements would do to students who came from small towns and rural areas, as well as young people from some of the cultural minorities?

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette) does not know what the situation is in Europe. Indeed, there has been a greater degree of accessibility for students in lower income groups than we have seen in this country. The Minister of State for Youth apparently is not aware of the program for veterans that I was speaking of earlier. In those days you did not need to have some terrifically high marks in order to get into university. On the contrary, everyone was encouraged to go. If they could not make it, somewhere along the line they would stop and do something else with their lives, but everyone was given the opportunity. The Government has gone back on that principle.

There is no question in my mind that if you restrict university and college only to students who have a very high grade, you are restricting a very large number of students, many from communities that have not had opportunities in high school or in their home background to develop the kinds of skills that are required to get those very high grades. You are restricting entrance on a class basis the minute you pursue the course of action that the Minister of State for Youth is suggesting.

In my view that is not the course of action Canadians want to see followed. Nor has it been the actual course of action that most Canadian Governments have followed until the past two years. What we are trying to do and trying to persuade the Minister of State for Youth, if she is going to continue in that portfolio for any length of time, is to understand that Canadians do not want a return to the really old days, which is what she apparently wants, of an educational system for the elite only.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) referred to the cuts in universities. I would like her to be more specific. I understand, for example, that there is a projection that the budget of UBC may be cut a total of about 24 per cent over the next four years, beginning now. It is suggested that that will be made up largely by an increase in student fees. Does the Hon. Member have any information as to how that may reduce the student enrolment, whether it will be possible to make up that 24 per cent through student fees if the students simply do not come, and whether there is a danger that functions of the university that are very important to the culture and economy of British Columbia may simply have to be closed?

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, there is already at UBC a cutback in the number of students that they will take in the fall of this year. Many, many qualified students will be denied the right to come to the university, many more because fees are being raised by 33⅓ per cent. The Government has now taken away all of the grant system and is only providing loans. Many will not be able to come because of that.

Likely the increase in fees and the smaller number of students will not be of all that much help in reducing the enormous deficit faced by the University of British Columbia. Probably it will not help that much. That is why the university is saying that it will have to cut back drastically on programs. That is why head-hunters are already on the campus trying to pick up the good faculty members and persuade them to go elsewhere in the country. In other words, the excellence of the university is very seriously threatened. The university will not be able to keep its best programs and faculty. It is going to be a vicious circle. There will be fewer students because the students cannot afford to go. There will be higher and higher tuition fees which students will not be able to pay. That will cut back on the number of students attending. In order to make up this incredible deficit, they will have to cut programs.

That is why the president of that university—its position is not dissimilar from that of other universities in the province by the way—has been speaking so forcibly against Bills such as we are now debating.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity that the House has provided for me to join my colleague, the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett), in denouncing the Bill before us. I had not expected to follow her, expecting some speakers from the Official Opposition and perhaps even the odd Government spokesman to stand up and attempt to justify the Government's position on Bill C-12. Apparently both major Parties in this House are lacking proper and appropriate words to enter into the debate. The rather low turnout in the House right now and the fact that most government Members are busy with their newspapers indicate the total insensitivity to what is happening in this country with our universities.

Mr. Cosgrove: Where are the 30 Members from the NDP?

Mr. de Jong: It is shameful and unbelievable how a Government that claims to be committed to higher education, to bringing this country into the 20th century, to attempting to achieve 1.5 per cent of Gross National Product through research and development, a Government that claims to be enlightened, brings in measures that knocks the support away from one of our major institutions, our universities.

By knocking away the support that has been diligently built up over the years in terms of the funding of our university system, with this and previous Bills that have been introduced, especially by the present Government, it is destroying our universities in Canada. This is being done at a time when our young people are in desperate straits. Statistics show that one of every five is unemployed; some 20 per cent of our young people are unemployed. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has said that this is a marvellous thing because it shows that four or five young people are able to find some form of employment. He is willing to write off 20 per cent of this generation. Even though some have been able to find some form of employment, many are not able to find meaningful employment.

At the same time that this is occurring, the doors to our universities are slowly creaking shut on them. Normally, when there has been high unemployment among young people, they tend to go to university to better their education in order to be in a better position to get a job, a career, and to live their lives. This opportunity is now being shut off.

It is amazing to those of us in this part of the House who see how the Government continues with Bill C-12. Surely the Government has heard from the university community, the students and administrators. When I was in committee, we heard of the drastic effects this will have on the universities and the opportunities for young Canadians to acquire a decent education to enable them to be competitive in the 20th century. It is having a drastic effect.

I am the critic for my Party in the area of science and technology. In terms of the natural sciences, we know that the equipment at the universities is in a deplorable state. Very often the computers in high schools are of better quality and are more up to date than those in the universities where the equipment is outdated. Students who graduate and go into the private market are not capable of dealing with the new and better equipment that they find, so they have to be retrained. Because the universities lack the finances to get the up to date equipment, the graduates are not capable of dealing with the equipment that is in the workplace. This is one example of the inadequacy and underfunding of our university system.

As well, we see that the natural sciences have been lucky in some ways that their funding has kept pace with the real increase in the cost to universities. The inflation rate for books and scientific equipment is much higher than the general inflationary increase. The increase in funding to organizations like NSERC has kept pace with the real increased costs of scientific equipment and books. The social sciences have suffered, however. The Government has totally ignored them and has cut back very significantly on the granting of funds to the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council. They have a deplorable background.

We have cuts in payments to universities at both the provincial and federal level. We have increased unemployment among young people and, therefore, an increased demand for university places and further cuts for the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council. That is one of the areas of major funding for university people in the social sciences and in the humanities.

There are three different attacks on young people in the university system. In continues to amaze us how the Government, in its ignorance, can continue with these attacks. Is it not concerned with the future? Is it not concerned that these young people have the education to get meaningful employment in the 20th century? It is something that I cannot understand.

Let me go back to the question of research and development, Mr. Speaker. A recent report on technologies in Ontario was dealt with in an article in the Globe and Mail on Tuesday, April 3, 1984, and states as follows:

"Canadian managers have tended to be older and less educated than their counterparts in the United States and this has been suggested as a reason for the poor rates of technology diffusion in Canada," says the budget paper.

It goes on to say:

The budget paper notes that in 1980 41.4 per cent of Ontario's 20- to 24-year olds were attending post-secondary institutions while 57.1 per cent of Americans in the same age group were attending colleges or universities.

That is a dismal record for Canada. It is no wonder we are lagging behind in research and development in this country. It is no wonder we are having great difficulty achieving the Governments' objective of allocating 1.5 per cent of the Gross National Product to research and development. One of the reasons for our difficulties is that we do not have the trained manpower to enable us to reach that goal. And we do not have the trained manpower because the universities are not in a position to produce trained manpower. Do the Government thinkers and planners not realize the simple fact that they cannot, like King Canute, demand that the tides flow back or demand that all at once we have trained personnel to enable us to reach our national goal in research and development? Do they not know that these things must be planned for and that there must be institutions that would allow people to be trained so that they can reach that goal? Am I missing something here, Mr. Speaker? Do the government planners not recognize this fact? It seems that they do not.

The Government is proudly touting the centres of excellence it is developing. In fact, it is hoping that some of our researchers in the social sciences and humanities and the natural sciences will be able to find employment in these centres of excellence. I have no objection to the funding and the efforts that have gone into creating centres of excellence, but surely not at the expense of the centres of excellence we already have—our universities.

What is the sense of destroying our universities in order to build something else? If we are to have centres of excellence in new areas, then I think all Canadians would welcome that, but surely not at the expense of the centres of excellence we already have. Canadian universities are internationally known. They have produced outstanding graduates in all fields, but our ability to do that in the future has been seriously hampered by the efforts of the Government.

Just to reiterate and strengthen the claim of the universities and the role they play, I should like to place on the record a comment by Dr. George Keyworth, the science adviser to the President of the United States who said:

—no other research institutions give as much return on investment as universities in the long term—not federal labs, nor non-profit organizations, not industry. No other institutions produce both knowledge and people.

I am afraid our mad hatters on the other side of the aisle have no recognition of that basic fact and no appreciation of the contributions the universities have made.

The federal Government claims that it is not responsible for the bad state the universities are in; it blames the provinces, and the provinces of course blame the federal Government. The two are blaming each other, and in the meantime our universities are going down the tube because neither of them is willing to take responsibility for this deplorable state. That is just not good enough. Obviously both levels of Government are to blame; obviously the funding arrangement does not ensure that federal moneys going to higher education are in fact spent on higher education. That is something that this Party deplored when block funding was introduced in the seventies, and we continue to deplore it.

What is needed is a national co-operative effort to ensure that our universities do not go down the drain. That means co-operation between the federal Government and the provinces. It must be recognized that the provinces have a historic responsibility to education and higher education and, on the other hand, it must also be recognized that there is a national interest in maintaining a university system across the country which will allow mobility of knowledge and of students and will ensure a high degree of technical, social and humanistic excellence. There are both federal and provincial interests, but we are finding that those interests are being used as an excuse to avoid responsibility for the deplorable situation.

I am afraid our universities are falling between the slats, so to speak. They are suffering, young Canadians are suffering, and Canada as a whole will suffer as we enter the 20th century.

• (1200)

I sat in committee and listened to the students present their brief. They rightly pointed out that the federal Government is not entirely innocent in the matter of the decrease of university funding by the provinces. If I may, Mr. Speaker, I will quote directly from their brief. It reads:

Unfortunately, this Bill does nothing to ensure that even the limited funds will be used for the purpose for which they are being allotted.

And they mean federal funds going toward higher education. The brief continues:

Moreover, it is somewhat hypocritical of the federal Government to scapegoat the provinces, when limiting provincial spending was part of the original strategy behind the 1976 EPF negotiations. Prime Minister Trudeau stated at the time, that the 1976 fiscal arrangements proposal—

And the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is quoted as saying:

—suits the current and future imperative, namely fiscal restraint, in that the provinces will have a greater incentive to implement what are admittedly difficult measures designed to restrain spending in these fields.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. May I simply draw to the attention of the Hon. Member that when he quotes an article, or whatever, which refers to an Hon. Member of this House, he must refer to that Hon. Member by his riding or his office, the principle being that an Hon. Member quoting makes the quote his own words.

Mr. de Jong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for that reminder as to proper form in the House.

The brief continues:

Later in the same year, he added—

Meaning the Prime Minister:

—"If they, the provinces, save on costs, the savings will be wholly theirs".

As the students pointed out in their brief, here we have the original reason why the federal Government changed its attitude during the 1976 EPF negotiations. It was to allow the provinces to do the cuts and get some of the benefits. Afterwards, the federal Government, in turn, cut the funding to the provinces.

It reminds me a little, Mr. Speaker, of some of the things which are happening in Saskatchewan. It is called the "rats". What you do is to get an employee in a Department to squeal on all the other employees, get them fired, and the last person fired by the present Tory Government in Saskatchewan is the rat itself. That is what the federal Government has done with the provinces, Mr. Speaker. It made the provinces the rats in charge of cutting back on university funding, and then the federal Government went after the big rats themselves, the provinces, and in turn cut them. What a way to deal with post-secondary education in this country. It is just bloody shameful!

What is the future of research and development in this country? What is the future of technological change, given the deplorable situation in our universities and the inability of the federal Government to live up to its responsibility and become an activist partner in changing that situation? The universities, the teaching associations, the student association and we in this Party as well, have called upon the federal Government to initiate a conference with the provinces in order to work out the question of funding so that the universities can be assured of a steady and stable form of funding so they can make plans for the future.

I have sat on committees and have questioned representatives from the scientific community and from the Ministry of State for Science and Technology, and they all admit to the importance of stabilizing funding to the universities. Why does the federal Government not do this, Mr. Speaker, before it introduces a Bill like Bill C-12? Why does it not give some hope and sense of direction to the university communities so that they can continue to play an important role in the future of Canada? But we just hear silence from the government Members and from the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren).

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote from a letter which the Canadian Association of University Teachers sent to the Minister of State for Finance. They were kind enough to supply some of us with copies of the letter. I quote:

We will need many more highly educated individuals, not merely to keep Canada's economy productive, but to ensure that the needs and objectives of a technological society can be adequately met.

The Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren) is quoted, and it is a direct quote from Hansard of January 27, 1984, at page 816. He said:

Finally, let me point out that these changes will not result in any diminution of the federal commitment to Canadian youth through the many federal programs of assistance to students and young people.

I know, Mr. Speaker, it is unparliamentary to call the Minister a liar, therefore I will not call him a liar. I will call him irresponsible. I will call him dumb. I will call him stupid. I will call the whole Government, Mr. Speaker, by those adjectives—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. de Jong: —because it is not true what the Minister stated.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

Mr. de Jong: I would ask for the unanimous consent of the House to continue with my remarks.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the House give unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member to continue his speech?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

Ms. Jewett: The Tories said no.

Mr. Epp: That's right, you had better believe we did.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member who just spoke was dealing with some very important issues. I wonder if he could further enlighten the House as to his views on those issues?

[Translation]

Mr. Cousineau: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Gatineau, on a point of order.

Mr. Cousineau: Mr. Speaker, I believe the new Standing Orders allow a Member to either comment on or ask specific questions regarding a speech that has just been pronounced. In this case, the speech is being repeated, and I think that is against the Standing Orders of the House.

[English]

Mr. Manly: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker. In no way was I asking the Hon. Member to repeat his speech. I believe what he has already said is very germane to the topic, and I believe he has some further remarks and I, for my part, would like to hear them. I do not know about Hon. Members of the Conservative or Liberal Parties. They do not seem to have very much interest in the debate. In our Party we do have an interest in this debate and we would like to hear what the Hon. Member—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Chair certainly is not in a position to prejudge what the response will be to the question. I have to listen to it.

The Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong).

Mr. de Jong: I just wanted to follow up on the point, Mr. Speaker, of the conflict between the provinces and the federal Government in terms of jurisdiction and responsibility, and how the universities and institutions of higher education fall in between the slats.

In answer to the question raised by the Hon. Member with respect to the point I wanted to make, let me say that what we have here are the Tories protecting the interests of provincial Tory Governments and the federal Government protecting the interest of the federal Government, at the expense of universities. Yesterday we in this Party attempted to move an amendment which would create some responsibility and accountability by the provinces for the federal money designated for higher education. It was so obvious, Mr. Speaker, how the two Parties came together to vote down that amendment, because the Official Opposition was acting in the interests of the provincial Tory Governments which are not interested in accountability, and the federal Government was acting in its own self-interest because it has been using provincial cutbacks as an excuse to make their own cuts. It was in the vested interest of both Parties to deny fiscal responsibility and accountability by the provinces of federal moneys being spent on post-secondary education.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, the previous speaker referred in his remarks to the necessity of having a large number of educated people to continue, among other things, the technological development and expansion of Canada. He also referred to the centres of excellence in the Government's proposals. I would like the Hon. Member to comment on whether he thinks the new or untried centres of excellence will be able to do better because they are more flexible, or will they do worse because they have no background in developing the new kinds of technology which this country needs? Or have the universities shown themselves capable of offering the kinds of programs that we need in technology?

Mr. de Jong: It is an excellent question, Mr. Speaker. Many of us are trying to understand what the Government is attempting to do with its centres of excellence. On the surface they sound like good ideas. You bring together trained and specialized people and focus on the specific subject area. However, as I quoted, the scientific adviser to the President of the United States said that federal Government, private and non-profit labs, are no substitute for excellence as far as university labs are concerned. These centres of excellence should not replace the existing ones, our universities.

Another concern I have is whether the federal Government is attempting to mould higher education and learning in this country so that only those projects politically more interesting or rewarding get funding, whereas the mundane administration, the brick and mortar of universities, the buildings and so on, receive less and less funding. This was expressed by the Canadian association of University Teachers in December of last year in its brief to the Royal Commission on the Economic Union and Development Prospects for Canada. It states:

> Recently the response of some governments has been to try to select particular parts of the university for funding, e.g. medical research. The temptation is to pick politically glamorous parts of the university program. However such political considerations are likely to lead to distortions.

What I am concerned about, Mr. Speaker, is that the centres of excellence are really picking up certain parts of science and technology for development, and leaving all sorts of other areas aside. That would distort research and development in Canada which would be a great detriment to our society.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There being no further questions or comments, the House will proceed to debate.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member mentioned a certain amendment put forward by the NDP. We of course voted against that amendment because it made absolutely no sense. There was really no point in demanding an accounting of the federal cash contributions to the provincial Governments because those amounts are far less than what is actually spent in every province. What is the point in putting the bureaucracy to that wasted time and effort?

You will recall, Sir, that a very proper amendment was put forward by the Hon. Member for Kingston and The Islands (Miss MacDonald) and moved in this House by the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp). It was accepted by all sides of the House. That amendment represents probably the only worth-while thing in the Bill at all. It required the following:

> (3) Beginning in the 1983-84 fiscal year the Minister shall report annually to Parliament on:
> (a) cash transfers to each province for post-secondary education under Established Programs Financing;
> (b) expenditures by each province on post-secondary education;
> (c) to the extent appropriate, other programs of federal support to or involvement in post-secondary education;
> (d) the effectiveness of these federal expenditures and programs in moving towards Canada's educational and economic goals; and
> (e) the results of any consultations with the Council of Ministers of Education of Canada—

That makes a lot of sense, Mr. Speaker.

I want to talk about the positive things in this Bill before I tell you why this Party cannot accept the Bill in its form and intent. This amendment for the first time gives Members of Parliament an accounting of the cash and tax transfers allotted to post-secondary education. When we have an accounting of the money the federal Government spends through its manpower programs, assistance to training and education and research and development at universities, we can properly determine whether the block funding arrangement we presently have in the established programs financing system is working.

Accusations go back and forth, Sir. The provinces accuse the federal Government of not carrying its weight. The federal Government says that the provinces get tax transfers and use the money to build roads, bridges and to look after welfare, but do not use it where it should be used, that is, for post-secondary education. Well, Sir, we will find out in the reports made to this House every year. The first report is for the fiscal year beginning April 1. Therefore, in 1986 we will get the report for the 1984-85 year on what has been spent.

That brings me to the basic principles of this Party in dealing with education and training. We have said that there are four basic pillars on which we would form the Government of this country and attempt to rebuild the economy. The first principle, of course, is one that we have been dealing with through the month of March, the methods that must be used to reduce interest rates and improve the credit worthiness of businesses. The other three pillars are technology, training and trade. Concerning technology and training, the transfers to post-secondary education are vital. We are living in an age when the hewers of wood and drawers of water are not going to have jobs. Just look at this morning's paper, Sir, and you will see that one in five persons in British Columbia lives on welfare or unemployment insurance. Why?

Mr. Kristiansen: Good Tory Government in B.C.

Mr. Blenkarn: Because the economy of that province is closely tied to natural resource exports and those resources are not hot on the world market today. The figures from British Columbia are disastrous. The newspaper article compares them with those for the Province of Ontario. That province has a population close to four times as large as that of B.C., and its unemployment and welfare problems are considerably smaller. The answer is this: we must have a society which exports not just coal, lumber and copper. We must have a society that exports high technology, the manufactured goods which make the world turn around better. We can only do this if we as a nation are prepared to invest in higher technology and more technology. It may be the robotics in the factories; it may be new methods of processing raw materials; it may be new methods of transporting goods. However, it must be in the high technology field so that we can be productive enough, and therefore competitive enough, to keep our people working and have the kind of life which we want and expect to have. We will not do that if we cut back on transfers to post-secondary education.

This Bill cuts back on cash transfers. It cuts back on the money imputed to come from other transfers as well. It cuts back $118 million in the past fiscal year. It cuts back a further $260 million in the fiscal year just starting, for a total cutback of $378 million. I would like to read into the record the types of things that are happening.

If this Bill is passed, the cash which my Province of Ontario will receive will be reduced by $41.7 million in 1983-84 and by a further $92 million in 1984-85, for a total reduction of $133.7 million. That is going to come out of the money available to train young people. That is going to come out of the money available to do something about the problems at Queen's University, the University of Toronto, the University of Western Ontario and the other universities in Ontario. That is going to make the enrolment crunch even worse. Young people coming out of Grade 13 in Ontario must have at least an 80 per cent average to get into some courses in some of the universities. Our young people do not just have to be competent; they have to be exceptionally brilliant, highly trained and highly successful in getting the required marks. That is going to be very, very hard on them. All sorts of aggressive young people will not have the opportunity of furthering their education.

Yesterday I spent some time at the University of Western Ontario. I did some work on tax simplification with the graduate students of the business school there. In the morning I was in my constituency office and had two young people visit me there. They wanted to take a course at Sheridon College in connection with computer programming. The Government was going to help finance that course, but because of bureaucratic red tape these young people will perhaps not be able to get into the course. They have been waiting for six months doing temporary part-time work while waiting to get into this course. Many courses are not available because $41 million is being taken out of the Province of Ontario this year and an additional $90 million next year.

The Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren) can say that these cutbacks come as a result of the six and five program and are part of reducing inflation. Reducing the transfers from one government's spending ability to another government's spending ability does not reduce inflation. If that $118 million had been left in the hands of the taxpayers of Canada, that may have helped them. It was taken anyway. The only result is that the money is not transferred to the provincial government, therefore the federal Government has money to spend on other more apparent, but not necessarily more important, programs. Sir, that money should not be spent in other fields. That money should have been transferred to the provinces. The Government should follow through on the amendment to this Bill and make sure that the money goes where it is supposed to go, to building and maintaining libraries and laboratories. It should go to making sure that classrooms have competent instructors and professors.

This Bill is a bad Bill. It hurts Canada. I call as my witness to that a candidate for the leadership of the Liberal Party, the present Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts). I quote from the Montreal Gazette as follows:

> During his speech and talking to reporters later, Roberts said there is a crisis in post-secondary education and there must be stronger federal participation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I would like to draw to the attention of the Hon. Member that he may quote and cite his source. However, by reading a quotation he makes that quotation his own words. Therefore, he should respect the rule that we can only refer to Hon. Members in the House by their riding or office and not by their proper names. I would invite the Hon. Member to do so.

Mr. Blenkarn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. He is quoted as saying:

> But I am referring to post-secondary education and development.
> New Liberalism is not just a slogan, it is the building of a new economic and education strength and environmental sensitivity.

If that is new Liberalism, and if the Minister of Employment and Immigration believes that, then he should either resign from the Cabinet or recant when this Bill comes to a final vote. He can still do that. He can show us by his attitude in voting whether he really means there is a new Liberalism, or whether the new Liberalism he speaks of is so much hot air and desire for power. I suspect that is all it is. If the Minister has any backbone, any sense of credibility or any sense of being a man who stands on principle, we know what he should do. I suspect, Sir, that he will not do that.

I would like to call to your attention, Mr. Speaker, a letter which was written by the Canadian Association of University Teachers to the Minister supporting this Bill, the Minister of State for Finance. The University Teachers say:

> This underfunding is in part due to provincial actions, but this recent action by the federal government—

They are referring, of course, to this Bill:

> —will serve only to exacerbate the already serious financial situation of universities. Each level of government continues to reduce its financial commitments, while at the same time accusing the other of not meeting commitments. In this financial and jurisdictional competition it is post-secondary education that is the victim.

They go on to say:

● (1230)

> In your presentation—

Referring to the Minister:

> —of Bill C-12, on January 27, 1984, you failed to mention how higher education would be affected. You discussed the complexities of the EPF legislation; but did not discuss the problems of a society plagued by unemployment of this country's youth. We will need many more highly educated individuals, not merely to keep Canada's economy productive, but to ensure that the needs and objectives of a technological society can be adequately met.

They go on to say:

> This cut by the federal government will clearly constitute evidence of the diminution of the government's commitment to the youth of Canada. Universities have contributed in large measure to the social mobility of Canada's youth. The EPF transfers are at the heart of the federal role in higher education. To undercut this basic core funding is to undercut the general operation of the post-secondary education system. It will provide encouragement to those who wish to return our universities to the days of economic elitism.

The lack of funds for the universities and colleges of this country may not result just in economic elitism, it will indeed be elitism of the worst order because education then will only look after the needs of very few young people.

The system does not have enough classrooms, libraries or campus buildings. There are not enough professors. The system does not have enough facilities to do the job which Canada needs to accomplish now and throughout the eighties.

Unless we do something about training and technological development, we will be hewers of wood and drawers of water, except that the world does not want that kind of wood and water. Today these goods can be moved untouched by the human hand and with very few people. The remaining people in this country will end up perhaps working part time at a McDonald's or clerking at a dress shop. Most of them will be on welfare or unemployment insurance. Canada cannot grow that way.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments?

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) a question for clarification. Did I understand him to say that the Party on whose behalf he is speaking, the Conservative Party, is in favour of a system whereby we in this Parliament can be guaranteed that the moneys transferred to the provinces for post-secondary education will in fact be spent by the provinces on post-secondary education?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, one of the big advantages of the amendment that was moved and passed yesterday is that it is an amendment of disclosure. While amendments of disclosure do not guarantee anything, they can become exceptionally embarrassing for those who do not spend what they receive. Therefore, they tend to force a national policy on education.

Obviously this Parliament has no direct ability to deal with the problems of education. While it may be argued that we can talk about manpower training or that the economic powers of the country involve training, which they certainly do, it is quite clear in terms of the institutional spending of money in educational facilities that, according to our Canada Act, we do not have that power.

When money is being paid from the federal Treasury to the provinces and the disclosure provisions in this statute make it clear that the provinces are not doing their share and are using the money for something other than post-secondary education, then it would behoove us as Members of Parliament to say that the transfers will have to be reduced and we will have to find another way of solving the problem.

I suggest to the Hon. Member that the great advantage of this amendment is that it gives us, for the first time, an idea of where the money is going, on what it is being spent, and whether it is being spent on its intended use.

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, of course, all Parties have agreed to this amendment to which the Hon. Member has just referred at the meeting of the task force on fiscal federalism in 1981. As the Hon. Member said, it is an amendment requiring disclosure.

I gather that what he is saying is that his Party will not take any action now to ensure that the provinces are spending federal moneys for which the moneys were designed. It seems to me that he is denying the authority of the federal Parliament to ensure that the federal taxpayers' money that is going to the provinces is spent for its intended purpose. He is going to wait until after the first year when the disclosure amendment that was passed yesterday becomes effective. This brings me to my second question.

The Hon. Member knows that if we do enough digging, which I and I am sure he has done, we can get a picture now of what the different provinces are doing with the tax points and cash transfers that they receive. Indeed, we have done enough digging to know that his province and mine have not kept up their share of the spending on post-secondary education to anything like what it was in the pre 1977 period.

That being the case, why does he say that his Party will just wait until the amendment that was passed yesterday takes effect? That will be a long time from now. Would he not wish to put the position of his Party on the whole question of accountability on the record now?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member suggests that we know what the provinces are doing. Well, we do not know. We know what the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal), through his officials, thinks they are doing. However, the question of what in fact they are doing depends, to a large extent, on the interpretation of what is properly post-secondary education.

Let me give an example. In the Province of Ontario the secondary school system is designed to go to Grade 13. That is one year longer than in other provinces. The question is whether the work, even in Grade 12 in Ontario, is not partially post-secondary.

In the Province of Quebec we see the CEGEP system, and in Newfoundland there are some instances when young people attend university after Grade 11. There are varying opinions as to what is post-secondary education, which makes it difficult to determine from province to province, without some real input and agreed method of determination, whether the provinces are in fact spending what they should spend.

Furthermore, there was a question about whether the transfer, which was a total transfer until the introduction of this Bill, was properly divided at roughly 33 per cent and 67 per cent. In its appropriations, the Government has always said that the transfer for post-secondary education is 32.1 per cent, I believe, of the total EPF transfer, and the balance is for medical care. However, that position has not generally been accepted by the provinces.

If one accepts that it is 32 per cent of the transfer, we may find that some of the provinces are only spending 35 per cent or 40 per cent of the education money, with the balance coming in tax transfers and cash from the federal government. The problem has been that until this Bill, it has not been determined that legislatively that is the correct percentage in the transfer system. Until the passage of this Bill, the provinces could easily say, "Well, it is a block fund. We are using the block fund for medicare concerns, for hospital concerns, for this and that concern, and, of course, for post-secondary education". One of the other advantages of this Bill is that at least it divides the fund and it divides it legislatively.

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Speaker, I thought I heard the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) state that the federal Government has been cutting back in the amount of funding for post-secondary school education. I think I should draw to his attention the fact that the federal contribution back in 1974-75 amounted to 49.19 per cent and the provincial contribution was 31.12 per cent. Yet by 1981-82 the federal contribution rose to 56.89 per cent and the provincial contribution declined to 21 per cent.

I would further like to point out to the Hon. Member that at the present time in Ontario the Government of Canada provides over 56 per cent and the province 21 per cent, and other contributions, such as for tuition, amount to 21.80 per cent. I suggest that his statement that the federal Government is cutting back is not factual. In fact, the federal Government has increased its share over the years. It has been the provincial government of Ontario that has been cutting back.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, if the Parliamentary Secretary had been listening to me he would have known that when the Established Programs Financing Act was first passed, a block fund was created. It was the federal Government that decided, for its own convenience, to determine the proportions between education and health. This Bill finally creates those definite proportions. Any figures the Hon. Member gives us at this point, whether the figures are 58 per cent, 56 per cent, or 41 per cent, are really meaningless. They are concocted figures based on Ottawa's assumption of truth, or on something that is questionable.

The next issue is, where do you put tuition fees, bursaries and other matters of that nature, such as loans, grants and so on that come from estates? Are they not a part of the provincial contribution? I would think that certainly that would always be treated as part of the provincial contribution because, in a sense, a fee is a tax on the student for taking advantage of a provincial institution.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Debate. The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap).

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry that, after the debate over this past several weeks in and out of the House and in and out of committee, we still have to face the Government's determination to cut $378 million from the funding for post-secondary institutions in Canada over the next two years. It is becoming typical of this Government to be carrying it out in an arrogant way, a way that would be illegal for any other body, namely, to make the cuts retroactive. Of course, a government that can rule that Tuesday is Monday can rule that 1984 is 1983 when it wants to. I am mainly sorry because it is a very untimely block and constriction on Canada's development.

A previous speaker has referred to the arrangement at the end of World War II when many of us coming out of the forces benefited from the program of the Department of Veterans Affairs. We were very grateful for it. I want to make the comparison. What that program did in part, and perhaps the most important part of it, was to enable a whole section of Canadians to attend university who otherwise would never have been able to do so, although some of us would have. Some of us came from families with the financial means to assist us and others of us had been sufficiently trained to enable us to compete for scholarships and things like that. But many did not have that advantage. Many who had the same native intelligence as we did, or perhaps more, and many who had just as much motivation and just as much self-discipline as we did would not have got to university. For example, during the 1930s people did not get there. I knew some who did not get there. But because the Government, even though it was a Liberal Government at that time, chose to give generous support and allowances to the students, we have a whole generation of people who have been a vital part of the development of Canada during the past 40 years.

It is very sad that this Government, although not alone but it has been leading, has decided to turn its back on that sort of ideal. Of course, the DVA funding is long past. There have been ups and downs in the rate at which governments would lend or grant allowances to students. At no time was there any suggestion that these grants or loans were just a form of babysitting, teen sitting, or welfare. They were based on performance. A student had to be able to achieve a certain agreed level if he was to continue receiving those grants and loans. But now those grants and loans are being seriously cut back right across the country. They are being cut back not only because of the federal Government's policy but, as I say, with the federal Government leading.

The Hon. Member across the way would like to use percentages to pretend there has not been a cut, but in fact, as everybody who looks at figures knows, there has been a cut. I agree with the Hon. Member from Mississauga that the reduction is in the range of over $41 million in the past year and $92 million in the coming year for the Province of Ontario. I also agree with the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) that this will have a very bad effect on Canada. He claims it will make us hewers of water and drawers of wood. I am not quite sure what that means, but I am familiar with the danger of being hewers of wood and drawers of water. Perhaps he has not come out of the ice age and thinks we will have to hew ice. Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, I agree with him that there is a bleak future for Ontario and for the rest of Canada when we cut back on education funding in the age which has been called the age of the information revolution. The number of students in Ontario will be reduced through the action of that province primarily.

They make excuses that it is this federal cut, but the Ontario Government has taken its own cuts as well. It will be reducing the grants, raising the fees, or forcing universities to raise fees and, as a result, the number of students will be reduced. Access to universities will be restricted, but not to the intellectual elite and not to those with high marks. Although that is being talked about, and there is some gesture in that direction, that would be too harsh an action to take. Primarily access to university will be given to students whose parents have money.

The Government of Ontario will also alter fundamentally the structures of Ontario universities through what it calls a program of specialization. Universities will be told to close departments. If a person wants to study a certain discipline, perhaps he will have to leave the city in which he resides with his parents. Instead of travelling by foot, by bicycle or by public transit to university, attending courses and returning home at night, he will have to move to another city to study certain disciplines. That will restrict access, but worse than that, it will change the nature of universities. It will change the nature of what was once and for a thousand years held as the ideal, that university is a place in which people develop a kind of wholeness, a kind of universality. In fact, once it was not called "a" university but "the" university. It was part of the universe of knowledge.

However, the Government is promoting, by redirecting money away from universities and established colleges into short-term and narrow training projects, the destruction of any sense of universality in education. It is directing people to narrow training which will lock them into certain occupations. Also the Government is encouraging a situation in which the faculties of universities such as the University of Toronto are aging. They are simply not able to hire younger faculty members who have acquired the more recent and up to date techniques of any discipline, whether it is in the natural sciences, the social sciences or the arts. This means that the faculty is doomed to become less and less relevant to the present needs of the country.

The Government is also causing certain teams to be eroded or even dismantled. Certain universities will be closed. Other universities will have to cut programs or even cut departments. A team of academics built up over some years will be dispersed. A few years ago we experienced the destruction of the Avro Arrow and the destruction of a whole team of skilled people who had learned to work together in the production of what was then one of the most advanced pieces of technology in the aviation industry. Once that was destroyed, once those specialists or members of the team were dispersed, it was impossible to put them back together again, at least in Canada. We are seeing the same thing happening to our universities.

I want to refer to a few examples from the University of Toronto. In effect, that university is being penalized because it has served the country for a long time and its buildings were erected a long time ago. The physical plant of the university is not young. It is not new, some of it is not modern. At present, over $24 million of deferred maintenance is needed at the University of Toronto. Some of that is for simple repairs and some is for updating and renovation. The maintenance staff has been reduced. Some of the work is being contracted out, which does not lend itself to quality work. The buildings are deteriorating. The library is deteriorating. Since 1979 about 160 staff positions in the library have been lost. That is about one-quarter of the original staff. Yet student enrolment continues to grow. The need for books, not only by the students but by other users in the city, continues to grow. Yet the staff has been cut and hours have been cut. One of the most expensive libraries on the continent, the Robarts Library, is forced to reduce the hours at which it makes itself available to students or the public. What a waste of past money to build such an expensive library and then shut it down for parts of the week! That is what is being done through these cuts.

In Toronto there has been a great increase in the number of Spanish-speaking and Portuguese-speaking people. There is a department of Spanish and Portuguese languages, but during the last five years seven members of the faculty retired, one died, and there have been no replacements. For some of us who are of British origin that may not seem very serious. Perhaps we did not want to study Spanish or Portuguese anyway. However, I am pointing out that we have a new kind of Canada. The Portuguese people in Toronto number probably 100,000; the Spanish, probably 50,000 people. That is a considerable part of the life of that city. Those people are having their culture cut back. Their opportunity to grow in the language and literature of their forebears is being cut back as this department is cut back.

These cuts do not favour any particular country. The Italian Department is being cut back in the same way. Enrolment has doubled over the last 11 years while the number of staff has remained exactly the same. No one denies that teaching quality drops when classes are forced to enlarge, but for people of Italian heritage, the quality of university education in their heritage has now been cut in the sense that they are forced to attend classes that are twice the size. Specialists in fields such as the Renaissance, which is perhaps of greater importance to Italy than to any other country, have left the department and have not been replaced.

Slavic studies in the same way have been cut back. The department of slavic studies serves Polish, Ukranian, Czechoslovakian, Russian and Hungarian students, that is students in those languages. Sometimes there is only one faculty person left in each of those languages. In other words, a bare minimum. If for any reason that person should leave, it is not clear that there will be a replacement.

It might be argued that Canada cannot afford the luxury of things like literature, poetry, history and so on. I would not agree with the argument, but some people may want to argue that we have to get on with the new physical sciences, the new natural sciences, the new kinds of mathematics and computer work. In fact, universities are cutting those back too. It is all the more remarkable that they should be cutting back on computer science, industrial engineering, general mathematics, engineering science and mechanical engineering, because the Government, like the governments of the provinces, has been making much of those needs—that we need to develop high-tech and that we need to develop engineering for megaprojects up North. They have been making much of the fact that we will have a great boom in Canada because of the development of new technologies.

Mr. Speaker, with your leave, may I call it one o'clock and resume at three o'clock?

OLYMPIC GAMES

FINANCIAL PARTICIPATION OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. Raymond Savard (Verdun-Saint Paul): Mr. Speaker, last week, the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) (Mr. Olivier) signed an agreement by which $200 million will be transferred by the federal Government to the Organizing Committee for the Calgary Games between now and 1988. The Chairman of the Committee, Mr. Frank King, saw this as a historic agreement. The federal Government's contribution represents about 40 per cent of the anticipated cost of the Games. It is the largest sum of money ever spent by the Canadian Government on a sports event. As the Minister indicated, the main source of financing will be revenue from the sports pools that are to be launched officially sometime this month.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Government has not only kept its promise to help ensure the Games will be a success, it has also demonstrated its commitment to promoting, encouraging and developing amateur sports in Canada, and we Canadians say: Thank you.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

LAY-OFFS AT SAINT JOHN, N. B.

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, Canadian Pacific Railway is trimming its operations and lopping five employees off its Saint John payroll. The job losses cannot be justified because of technological improvements or a decrease in traffic, because this is not the case.

S.O. 21

Last April I spoke before this House in defence of CP employees in Saint John. At that time I told the House that in the previous 15 months some 32 CP clerical jobs had been lost and that eight more were on the chopping block. Again, five more jobs are to be lost between now and April 15.

If I were to ask the Minister what he intends to do to protect the jobs of the Saint John railway employees, I have little doubt that he would boast about the 375,000 jobs that will be created as a result of Canada's rail expansion. This employment is indeed welcomed. However, there is little evidence to indicate that it will benefit the rail employees in Saint John, New Brunswick. The men and women in the Saint John facilities want to keep their jobs. They want to be able to do meaningful work and to support their families. They want to live with dignity. They are not impressed with the razzmatazz of rail expansion in the West. Service in the East is being cut to the bone as jobs are being terminated. I ask the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) to turn his eyes eastward and press Canadian Pacific to stop its lay-offs. Maritime employees deserve the same employment potential as their western counterparts.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

NEWFOUNDLAND GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Mr. Speaker, on several occasions I have mentioned the problems facing Indians in Labrador, Newfoundland, and the fact that they cannot go fishing and hunting in that area. Considering that once again, a Conservative provincial government is opposed to letting the Indians live according to their traditional ways, I would ask my hon. friend from Central Nova (Mr. Mulroney), the Leader of the Official Opposition, to get in touch with Mr. Brian Peckford and find a solution to this problem. Last week it was announced that Iron Ore wanted to shut down its railway route from Schefferville to Sept-Iles, and considering the fact that the Indians will no longer be able to go hunting and fishing in Labrador, Mr. Speaker, I think the Leader of the Official Opposition should intervene and speak to the provincial Conservative Party because at the present time, the whole problem of hunting and fishing rights in this region has been caused by the Provincial Conservative Party of Newfoundland. I would therefore urge the Leader of the Opposition to make a very positive gesture on behalf of the native people, because after all, Mr. Speaker, it is rather embarrassing that a provincial Conservative Party, like the one in Manitoba which is preventing Franco-Manitobans from exercising their rights, is now preventing Indians from living according to their traditional ways in Labrador, Newfoundland.

"MAKE-A-WISH" FOUNDATION

HELP FOR TERMINALLY ILL CHILDREN

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, on this day of the National Prayer Breakfast let me share with you and all Hon. Members an idea which originated in Phoenix, Arizona, but which could spread like wildfire here in Canada, thanks to the Ancaster Optimist Club in my riding. The non-profit "Make-a-wish" Foundation deals with terminally ill children. It seeks to transfer a little person's fantasy into an actual experience. Let me give just two of many examples.

One little girl's last wish was to help light the Christmas tree on the White House front lawn. The Foundation flew her to Washington, she helped President Reagan light the tree, and she died a few days later.

A ten-year old Phoenix boy had dreamed of being a fireman. When the "Make-a-wish" Foundation was notified, the little guy was made honorary firefighter for the day. He was wheeled around on the hook and ladder rig, and he tried out the high-pressure hose on unsuspecting customers in a supermarket parking lot. The Phoenix Fire Department became attached to the little boy. He went into a relapse and off-duty firemen erected an aerial ladder to his eighth-floor hospital room to enter through the window to visit the boy until the day he died.

I want to see the "Make-a-wish" Foundation take root in Canada. I am proud that the Ancaster Optimists are taking the lead to be first in Canada in wanting to help terminally ill kids make their fondest wishes come true. Hon. Members can get in touch with me for further information on the "Make-a-wish" Foundation.

THE STANLEY KNOWLES STROKE REHABILITATION RESEARCH FUND

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am extremely grateful to those who attended the dinner that was held in my honour last evening at the Chateau Laurier. I am conscious of the fact that so many people were there. There were Liberals, Conservatives and New Democrats, Senators, friends, teachers, trade unionists, doctors, nurses, and so on. It meant a great deal to me. Indeed, it helps me with life to have so many considerate friends.

I was grateful that I was given the opportunity to emphasize the important part of our cause, which was to give credit to something that has been recently been organized, namely, the Stanley Knowles Stroke Rehabilitation Research Fund. A considerable amount of money was raised last evening. The hope is that throughout the years that organizations will develop research into the whole question of strokes and brain damage.

Strokes happen to thousands of people every year. The hope is that the research will result in their prevention. It will mean a great deal if that can be done. I had the great privilege of being able to stress this last evening. To me it was the most important part of the evening.

It was not just a tribute to me, but to further the cause to increase the attack against brain problems. I hope that all of us here will work for this Foundation and give it all the support we can.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PENSIONS

REQUEST FOR EARLY RETIREMENT FOR PENITENTIARY EMPLOYEES

Mr. André Bachand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the House that some of my constituents are asking to have the Public Service Superannuation Act amended, adding a provision that will allow employees who work in federal penitentiaries to retire early, that is, after twenty years of service instead of twenty-five. In April 1977, a sub-committee of the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs recommended the option of early retirement for such employees. The present Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) and his predecessors have given the matter careful thought, but to date, the employees concerned have been unsuccessful in their efforts to have an amendment to the Public Service Superannuation Act tabled in the House. As one of my constituents said, and I quote: "Since my colleagues and I work in an environment like the one described in connection with the recent incidents at Archambault, and do so to protect the public, is it unreasonable to ask, as a special favour, to be released from that environment a little sooner, in recognition of our many years of dedicated service? The mental and physical tension is far more debilitating in penitentiaries than in most other departments. We feel we should be able to leave the service with dignity and perhaps embark on a second career or at least enjoy our retirement during the years we have left. The average age of inmates during incarceration remains constant, but we get older, and sometimes we have the impression that our sentence is worse than theirs."

Mr. Speaker, there would certainly be a case for the Solicitor General, once studies and consultations have been completed, to table a Bill to amend the Public Service Superannuation Act and provide for early retirement for employees in federal penitentiaries.

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF EXISTING FOOTWEAR IMPORT QUOTAS

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a few important comments to add regarding our footwear industry. The House is aware, and other Members have already pointed this out, that the Minister has been keeping the footwear industry waiting for an answer for some time. The Association has been asking for an extension of present quotas. The Government has made grants available to the footwear industry to modernize its facilities but just the same, we feel that a reasonable extension would ensure the long-term survival of the industry. In the circumstances, since the Minister responsible still refuses to respond to the urgings of the footwear industry, I would like to say, on behalf of thousands of workers, that I am convinced many Members of the House will agree that the Government should safeguard this industry, considering the many jobs involved, and instead of promising us new jobs, the Government should first try to save our traditional jobs.

Mr. Speaker, we still have a chance to save this vital industry, and we hope that the Minister will soon give his answer and that it will be a positive response to the footwear industry.

INDUSTRY

CANADIAN INDUSTRIAL RENEWAL BOARD

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, regarding the situation in the footwear industry, I would like to say to my colleague from Joliette (Mr. La Salle) that there have already been many representations by Government Members. Nevertheless, I would like to mention that in connection with the footwear, textile and clothing industries, there has been an extension of the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board's program. An additional $90 million have been earmarked for this extension over the next two years, which will go to help footwear, textile and clothing manufacturers.

In the riding of Lotbinière, the Bois-Franc region has many textile and clothing factories. The extension of the CIRB program is very important to my region, and in this connection I wish to thank and congratulate Cabinet, and especially the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Lumley), who agreed to the extension, which will also make it possible for footwear manufacturers in other regions to benefit from the services and financial assistance provided under this program. In this way, the Canadian Government is able to do something for the textile, clothing and footwear industry, and with the Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) and other Members on this side of the House, I hope that footwear quotas will be set within the next few weeks, and that we will be able to continue, thanks to the CIRB headed by Mr. Desmarais, to provide assistance to an industry that is very important to our workers and also to all Canadians. I am sure the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) agrees with my views in this respect.

PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION

APPEARANCE OF REPRESENTATIVE BEFORE SENATE COMMITTEE

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, Zehdi Terzi of the PLO appeared this morning at a committee in the other place. I understand that he confirmed that the PLO remains committed to the non-recognition of Israel, and also to terrorism.

Why is today's meeting necessary? A sub-committee of the Senate met with several officials of the PLO last November in the Middle East, including the Chairman of the Palestine National Council. In May of last year a number of Arab ambassadors, including a representative of the PLO, met with the full committee in an off the record meeting in Ottawa. Why is the third meeting necessary today?

It is inaccurate to say that inviting Mr. Terzi to Ottawa to a public meeting of the committee is the same treatment as that afforded to the Government of Israel. The Israeli ambassador was invited only after the meeting of last May, to meet with the committee on an informal, in camera, and off the record basis. He declined.

In short, Mr. Speaker, this visit has contributed nothing to the vital cause of peace in the Middle East and has provided new status to a group two factions of which have claimed the dubious credit of attacking 48 innocent people in Jerusalem earlier this week.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

CUTS IN FUNDING FOR WOMEN'S CRISIS CENTRES IN MANITOBA

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, during this time of high unemployment many Canadian families are feeling economic hardship and the resultant emotional and social upheaval as well. Alcoholism, family breakup, and physical abuse are all results of the frustration and depression felt by many Canadians.

Now, more than ever, Canadians need social agencies such as crisis and rehabilitation centres. Throughout Manitoba a number of women's crisis centres, including the Flin Flon Committee for Women and Children in Crisis, and the Aurora House in The Pas, have this year had their funding eliminated or severely cut back under the Canada Works Program. Muriel Smith, the Manitoba minister responsible for community services, has offered her assistance. It is also the responsibility of the federal Government to continue funding for the social agencies that it helped to create in the first place. In our present economic conditions, the number of people needing these services is increasing.

If the Government is willing to see unemployment levels remain at the present high levels, it should also be willing to take responsibility for the consequences, for the endangered mental and physical health of victims of the recession. The federal Government must also be willing to provide the necessary funding to help both the victims and those agencies that are willing to offer a helping hand.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

NATIONAL REVENUE

MINISTER'S LETTER TO DEPUTY MINISTER

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions. The Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to go away and come back again if Hon. Members can guarantee the same sort of reception.

My question is for the Minister of National Revenue. Those of us who believe in the reformation of sinners will be delighted to receive a copy of the letter that he sent to his Deputy Minister last night. As recently as January 19 the Minister responded to allegations in the house of unfairness on the part of his Department by saying "—it is my profound conviction that this accusation has no basis in reality—".

To what do we owe this profound conversion by the Minister so that he now writes a six-page letter to his Deputy Minister, having discovered courtesy, good judgment, fairness, and better communications as being goals toward which his Department should strive?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I have always said in answering questions in the House that those were the principles which applied in the Department when looking at the problems brought forward by Members of Parliament and by particular taxpayers. We were looking at the criticism of the Department of National Revenue.

I just want to tell the Hon. Member that I took the opportunity, with a New Deputy Minister coming into office, to outline to him the principles on which the Department bases its actions.

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT OF INCOME TAX ACT

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, for six months the Minister systematically denied that there were problems. For six months he said that this was all a figment of our imaginations. Now we find that with the new Deputy Minister he has discovered the need for reform.

In his letter the Minister makes reference to the fact that Canadians are concerned about the powers given to the Department under the Income Tax Act, yet his sole remedy is to suggest that those powers should be used with discretion.

Instead of simply offering blandishments to Canadians, is the Minister prepared to recommend amendments to the Act that would contain the powers of the Department in the fields of collection, and search and seizure? This would ensure that, while the Department has all the powers it needs to enforce the law, none of those powers would conflict with the basic civil liberties of Canadians and we would restore once again the principle that Canadians have the right to be presumed innocent until proven guilty, including by his Department.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's question covers several aspects. The first point I would like to deal with, which concerns the preamble to the Hon. Member's question, is where he says that I always denied there were any problems. I think the Hon. Member is mistaken, and wilfully so, because it always was my position that we should be open to criticism and look into complaints, but that we were dealing with these problems on a regular basis. The Hon. Member is also referring to powers contained in the Act which are extremely important. I think the Hon. Member, who is our self-styled expert on the Canadian tax system, should remember the basis of our system which is self-assessment, and that if in all fairness to the majority of the taxpayers, we want to maintain the integrity of that system, we must have certain powers. In a letter I wrote to the Deputy Minister, I did, in fact, refer to the use of these powers in the specific circumstances provided in our legislation as passed by Parliament, and I pointed out that those powers should never be abused. As I have already had occasion to say in the House, a single case of abuse would be too many for the Department of National Revenue!

• (1420)

[English]

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, the Minister claims I am suggesting I am an expert in income tax law. I am not claiming that. All I am claiming is that I know more about how his Department should be run than he does.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: You certainly do not have to be an expert for that, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Questions

COMPENSATION SOUGHT FOR TAXPAYERS ACTING ON ADVICE GIVEN BY OFFICIALS

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I want to draw to the Minister's attention another aspect of his letter. He talks about the need for improved communications and improved training. Is the Minister prepared to propose a change in the Department's procedures, and in the future, if taxpayers act on the advice given by officials in the Department which later proves to be wrong and find themselves suffering financially as a result of this bad advice, will the Minister be prepared to offer compensation to those taxpayers to ensure that they do not suffer as a result of bad advice given by the Department?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I reached the conclusion long ago, Mr. Speaker, after watching the Hon. Member and listening to his questions, that I was far better equipped than he to run the Department of National Revenue. However, my innate modesty has always prevented me from saying so.

I would like to remind the Hon. Member that the basis of our system is self-assessment. According to this fundamental principle, the taxpayer is responsible for determining and declaring the full amount of tax owing and for paying those taxes. Of course, the Government, in this case the Department of National Revenue, should help taxpayers as much as possible in filing their returns, and it should provide the necessary information to help them understand fully the various provisions of the Income Tax Act.

However, the Hon. Member will understand that, because of the nature of the system, in the final instance not the Department, but the taxpayer is responsible for filing his income tax return. In the final instance, taxpayers are responsible and have a duty to file their returns and to sign them as being correct.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. Today in committee in the other place, Mr. Zehdi Terzi, who describes himself as a member of the executive branch of the Palestine Liberation Organization, literally shocked members of that committee by confirming his support for terrorism under certain circumstances.

Would the Minister indicate why the Government in this case, knowing the PLO's support for terrorist activities, so casually issued a visa to Mr. Terzi, bearing in mind Mr. Terzi felt this visit so important, gave such honour and recognition to his cause, that he first went to Chairman Arafat to seek clearance before he would come to Parliament Hill? Why did the Minister treat the visit so lightly when Mr. Terzi treated it with such importance?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I would think that the Hon. Member would be able to assess the quality of the testimony given by Mr. Terzi, and I believe that he would be able to recognize what is not acceptable to Canada, what is contrary to Canadian policy in his statement.

With respect to the issuing of a visa, the answer has been given repeatedly, for example, in a letter, addressed yesterday, I understand, by the Secretary of State for External Affairs to the Hon. Member for York Peel. The Senate Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence had made a decision that the representative of the PLO would be invited. It made a decision on that. I was intrigued by the statement made by the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona a moment ago that the committee had already listened to similar people abroad. What is the difference between listening to them here and listening to them abroad? Be that as it may, the Department of External Affairs issued the visa simply because the gentleman had been invited by a parliamentary institution to come and give testimony. It did so in the usual practice of extending to the greatest possible extent free discussion in this country.

GOVERNMENT POLICY INQUIRY

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, my question is again directed to the same Minister, who surely must realize that Canadians are shocked at the insensitivity of his Government.

Some Hon. Members: Come on!

Mr. Trudeau: Your own leader is not shocked.

Mr. Stevens: Would the Minister, further to the letter I did receive this morning, explain to the House how you can say in the final line of that letter:

> The Government does not, however, permit the entry to Canada of individuals who have been involved in perpetrating or assisting acts of violence.

How can you say that is government policy—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Lalonde: Order.

Mr. Stevens: —when you gave a visa—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member should address his remarks to the Chair.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, the reason for the Secretary of State saying that was to establish a difference between his attitude with respect to the representative of the PLO to the UN and a similar or comparative instance recently with respect to Bishop Capucci, who was refused a visa because he had been involved in acts of violence or leading to same. He wanted, presumably, to establish the difference between the two, and, presumably thinking that the Hon. Member might not be able to do so, he decided to put it in the letter which he addressed to the Hon. Member.

With respect to what is public opinion with regard to the testimony given this morning by the PLO representative, I would not presume, the way the Hon. Member does, that the country is going to be shocked, hurt, annoyed, embarrassed, angered, and so on. I would think some people might be annoyed, but I would think the majority of them will think it is nice to be able, in a country like ours, to hear both sides of all issues and to make judgments on our own as to what is acceptable and what is not.

SOCIAL SECURITY

PLIGHT OF UNEMPLOYED IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. There is a report out today that in the Province of British Columbia one person out of five is either collecting unemployment insurance or welfare. In fact the situation has gotten so bad that hundreds are being turned away from food banks in the City of Vancouver. When the Government has been asked about this in the past, the answer has always been either a reference to some kind of safety net program, or the issue has been dismissed as one involving another jurisdiction. Given the reality that we now have an emergency in British Columbia with people not even being able to find food to eat, what does the Government of Canada plan to do about it?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has in good part given the answer to his own question. We have, indeed, a number of social programs which the federal Government is providing. One of them is unemployment insurance. The others are old age security payments, and support for families through child tax credits and family allowances. There is, in addition, the social assistance program for which the federal Government pays 50 per cent and which is administered by the provinces.

The Government of British Columbia is the Government administering the social assistance program. The Government of British Columbia is determining who is eligible for those programs. And the Government of British Columbia is deciding how much should be paid to these particular individuals. We are paying 50 per cent of the bill, but the criteria to which I referred are determined by the Government of British Columbia.

My friend may be unhappy with the Constitution we live under in this country. He may feel that we should change the constitutional arrangements with regard to social security and social programs. However, as long as we have a federation in this country, there are a number of programs which are under provincial responsibility and which the federal Government participates in financing.

The cases the Hon. Member refers to particularly, whether it is in terms of food support or social assistance, are totally under provincial government responsibility. The Hon. Member knows of a number of events which have occurred arising out of decisions by that provincial Government in the last few months which have not helped the economic situation in British Columbia.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I have heard that recorded announcement before. I want to say to the Minister that just because the Government of British Columbia is uncaring about what happens to some of its less fortunate citizens, that is no reason that the Government of Canada has to show the same lack of concern.

REQUEST FOR ACCELERATED REFORESTATION PROGRAM IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, every expert in the country has acknowledged that the survival of our forests is endangered. The former federal Minister of the Environment has said the federal Government should be spending millions of dollars more in reforestation. Many of the people collecting welfare and unemployment insurance in British Columbia would like to be working. Considering all those facts, why does the federal Government not introduce a crash reforestation program, put up the millions of dollars, and put people back to work in British Columbia?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Again, Mr. Speaker, my friend has given the answer to his own question. He knows, or certainly should know, that of all the provinces British Columbia is probably the one which has all the forest resources under its own control, direction, and ownership. Those forests are the property of the provincial Crown. It is the responsibility of the provincial Government to decide whether it wants a large, small, or no reforestation program. The Minister has indicated that we were ready and willing to talk with them to see whether there was the possibility of an agreement on expanded reforestation programs, but the federal Government cannot just barge in and tell the provinces to abandon their responsibilities. The federal Government cannot just move in and do what the provinces are not only entitled to do but are responsible for doing.

My friend is raising a red herring in that regard. He has the answer in his own question.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MAKE OFFER OF ASSISTANCE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I say in all seriousness that I am not raising a red herring. If the federal Government wants to take some initiative and show some concern, it could do so. However, put aside the fact that the provincial Government has not reached an agreement on reforestation at this point. What is to stop the Minister responsible from announcing that he is going to Victoria, requesting a meeting with the appropriate Minister, and that he is taking with him a certain number of millions of dollars he would like to put to work immediately on reforestation to create jobs in British Columbia? If he did that, I suggest that suddenly the Government of British Columbia would have to say yes.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that my friend is suggesting that we treat provinces like they were really junior, irresponsible Governments. Our attitude has been to try to work by convincing provincial Governments on common policy. I do not think the gun-to-the-head approach that my friend suggests would be very productive.

DEPARTMENT'S TREATMENT OF ARTISTS, WRITERS, AND SCHOLARS

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue regarding his letter yesterday which said: "We must apply judgment and common sense in administering the tax system. We must remember that we are dealing with people and their interests must be respected and their needs considered." Will the Minister finally admit that judgment and common sense have not been shown regarding Canada's artists, writers, and scholars during his period as Minister, and that the decision to apply aggressively the "expectation of profit" test as narrowly and unrealistically as possible, with the result that dozens of serious professional award winning artists have been deemed by the Minister to be hobbyists, showed a scandalous lack of judgment?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the conclusion of the Hon. Member. We have already taken decisions in the Department with respect to the particular situation of artists. The Member knows very well that we have accepted the first recommendation of three presented by the Canada Council, which was the major one, dealing with the tax department. I want to remind him that there is a committee of this House studying that whole question, and if there are policy decisions with respect to taxation which have to be taken, they will be taken by the Minister of Finance.

INTERPRETATION OF LEGISLATION—REQUEST FOR MORATORIUM ON REASSESSMENTS

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister can go on forever trying to pretend that it is entirely a finance issue; the artists know better. Surely he can admit that the whole "business" of art is so different, so uncertain, that it is virtually impossible for an artist, let alone an assessor, to predict reasonably whether a profit will or will not be made.

Will the Minister now demonstrate judgment and common sense, not just talk about it, and either revert to the realistic interpretation of the law applied to artists by his predecessors, or at least direct that a moratorium be placed immediately on further reassessments of artists' incomes in Canada until the subcommittee has made its report?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I wish the Hon. Member would be more realistic and spare us his empty rhetoric. Ever since this whole argument was launched about the taxation of artists, four specific cases have been submitted to me. In those four cases, two artists took the time to write and tell me: "We followed your advice, we met with the district office officials, and we are fully satisfied with the way our cases have been reviewed". Out of four cases brought to our attention, two people have already said that they had been treated in all fairness and equity and that they were satisfied with the settlement.

Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that the other two people involved will have exactly the same opinion about the approach of the Department.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin.

Mr. Greenaway: Mr. Speaker, that is absolute nonsense. You are destroying the artists and cultural community in this country, you and your Government.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member should address his remarks to the Chair.

FARLINGER INQUIRY REPORT

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, on March 16 an article in the Montreal Gazette quoted the Minister as saying that any significant change to the Income Tax Act and the operation of the Department would have to wait for the report of Toronto consultant William Farlinger. In view of the many major changes set out in the Minister's letter of April 2 to his new Deputy Minister, can we assume the Minister has received a report from Mr. Farlinger? If so, will it be made public, or will it be hidden away as was the Rowe report on the Newfoundland fishermen?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I refer the Hon. Member to the first paragraph of my letter in which I made a specific reference to the report that Mr. Farlinger will make to me later this year. I just want to assure him that those are interim measures flowing from the assessment we made of the situation, and the assessments we make on a daily basis. So I think it is not a major revolution. It is only the continuation of the human attitude we have in the Department toward criticism and cases which are brought to our attention.

COST OF FARLINGER INQUIRY

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister has just woken up to the fact that there are all kinds of things wrong in his Department. Mr. Farlinger has indicated that he is able to hire up to 50 high priced people to work as long as one year in preparing this so called one-man report. Can the Minister tell this House and the taxpayers of this country how much it is going to cost to have it confirmed that there are all kinds of things wrong with Revenue Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I must point out to the Hon. Member that he, several of his colleagues and many Canadian taxpayers admit that the Income Tax Act is very complicated and that it is not easy to implement and administer that kind of legislation. Why did we ask an independent group of qualified tax and management experts to examine our whole tax structure? Precisely because of the complexity of the problem. Surely the Hon. Member cannot take us to task for asking highly qualified experts to assess the situation, since the recommendations we will receive will reflect the competence of those people.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST FOR INITIATIVE BY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Across Canada one out of five young people is unemployed. In British Columbia the number if one out of four. Of course the real rate of unemployment is much higher since many young people have not been registered in the labour force. In the next few months hundreds of thousands of young people are going to be coming out of our schools and colleges, and there is very little chance that many of them will get jobs.

Would the Prime Minister be prepared to treat youth unemployment in the same serious way that he did disarmament when he carried out his peace initiative? As one of his final acts in office would he be prepared to launch a youth initiative, travel to our provincial capitals and meet with our Premiers, business and labour leaders, and with young people themselves, to mount a crash program of job creation for young people?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has not referred in any way to the very considerable efforts that have already been taken. He seems to have forgotten that the Government has established a youth opportunity fund of approximately $1.3 billion to focus on the problem of youth employment. The basis of that approach is to build particularly upon the successful Career Access Program which gives first time entrants into the labour force an opportunity for work by providing a subsidy to employers for from six to 12 months. There is already an extraordinary effort being made by the Government of Canada. We all realize that the situation is a difficult one to deal with. Short term measures are needed, and over the longer term we need more effective training and retraining programs.

I am sure all Members on this side of the House would welcome a continued, vigorous intervention on the part of the Prime Minister in these matters. The Hon. Member should at least recognize that extraordinary and largely successful steps are already being taken by the Government.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MEET BRITISH COLUMBIA PREMIER

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I do hope the Prime Minister will answer this question. While we recognize some of the initiatives that the federal Government has taken, only a co-ordinated approach by the federal Government, provincial Governments, and business can really deal with the problem of youth unemployment. The amount of $1.3 billion is a beginning, but it is only a beginning.

The Prime Minister has travelled to world capitals to meet with the leaders of Russia, China, the United States, and Great Britain. Why does he not travel to Victoria to meet with Premier Bennett? Does he not acknowledge that only a massive approach will meet the needs of our young people? Will he be prepared to give that kind of political energy to the number one issue facing the Canadian people today?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we did recognize that when in the Speech from the Throne in December, we announced the appointment of a Minister of State to deal with that problem precisely. That Minister has been acting. In the immediate future that Minister will be announcing programs to deal with the problem of youth unemployment.

Any further travels on my part, Mr. Speaker, are always envisaged with happiness. However, I would have to be assured that I would have the co-operation of the provinces and that, in fact, we could do something rather than just make motions. As I said, in the Speech from the Throne, in the announcement of $1.5 million recently and $1.3 billion before that, the federal Government has taken very positive steps, and we are acting in so far as the federal Government is concerned.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER HOLD PUBLIC MEETINGS

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue, if I could have his attention for a moment please. Now that the Minister has joined the real world and discovered the need for common sense, fairness, impartiality, and six pages of other important matters, has he also discovered the importance of listening to Canadians? Will he provide an ongoing opportunity for Canadians to speak to him and his senior officials in public meetings across Canada as my Party has done? Does the Minister not finally agree that he should establish clearly that the Minister is the public's representative to the Department and not simply the Department's spokesperson to the public?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to reiterate to the Hon. Member what I already said to his colleague. I took the opportunity of having my new Deputy Minister outline principles which we already use to administer the tax Department. They are not new. There are specific measures, but the principles were the principles we used to administer the Department.

I would also like to tell him that I meet on a frequent basis with taxpayers, tax practitioners, and Members of Parliament. I receive a lot of comments from those groups with respect to the concerns of taxpayers in this country.

Mr. Howie: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Minister does meet with a lot of people. I am positive he gets a heck of a lot of literature. However, he does not do it in public as we did. I suggest to him that it would be a real good experience for him.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INVESTIGATION OF COMPLAINTS

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question relates to one of the few specifics in this rather long letter to his Deputy which he chose to make public. I am referring to his direction to his Deputy that "complaints should be fully investigated and satisfactorily resolved by"—, now get this—"an independent group within Revenue Canada".

The Minister is very good on answers today. What is the independent group? What measures does the Minister propose to guarantee its independence?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I must remind the Hon. Member that my meetings are always public rather than private, except at the request of individuals. I can keep him better informed about my trips and the various meetings I have, and I am sure he will be satisfied with the kind of public meetings I have. In another paragraph, I referred to the Department's appeals division which makes an impartial review of cases for which taxpayers file notices of objection. In an effort to stress impartiality, I established a direct link between that division of the district office and the director general of appeals in Ottawa and separated the regional management from the appeals division so there would be a direct link with the director of appeals. The appeals division will thus be more independent to make impartial reviews of objections filed by the taxpayers.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR NEW MECHANISM TO ESTABLISH BANK RATE

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Today we had our usual weekly increase in interest rates, to 10.81 per cent, for the new bank rate. Canadians cannot take the jolt of an increase in interest rates every week. Will the Minister use his good offices to change the plan for establishing the bank rate, rather than tying it to an auction which is supposed to take place at the Bank of Canada offices every week? Will he make an interest rate that is appropriate for the growth of the country?

He can interfere with the exchange rate by using all sorts of reserves to prop up or prop down the dollar as the case may be. Why can he not use the Bank of Canada and establish a bank rate for the chartered banks to borrow from the Bank of Canada, to establish some consistency and stability in interest rates in our country?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, my friend seems to be worrying very much about an increase of three one-hundredths of one per cent today. In the United States on the same day most banks have been increasing their prime rates by .5 per cent. I would be much more concerned about the evolution of the interest rate in the United States. The change that took place in the Bank of Canada tender today was very minimal.

My friend is suggesting an alternative policy of artificially setting an interest rate in this country. The Bank of Canada rate has been set on the basis of tenders for a very long time, indeed many, many years. I suggest that if he really wants to help the situation he should come every Thursday and bid and lower the rate. Let him bid below the market and it will help bring the bid down. Otherwise, the bid is determined by the market and very much by what is happening in the United States.

I would like it to be different, but the fact is that this is the real world in which we are living, and the Hon. Member knows it.

Mr. Blenkarn: The Minister will know that when this Party was the Government, the proposal to float the bank rate every week was made and the Bank of Canada refused to do it. It was his predecessor who changed the system and started us on the Chinese water torture treatment of interest rates.

INTEREST RATES CHARGED BY CHARTERED BANKS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, we know that the American prime rate has gone up to 12 per cent in the Bank of America and Mellon Bank, and so on. What arrangements has the Minister made, and what conversations has he had with leading bankers in Canada to advise them that government policy in Canada is low interest rates, that they are not to follow the American prime rate up, and not to use this further water torture this week as an excuse to raise their prime?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, my friend probably forgot to mention that in the short time they were in office they did not change the current practice that has been in operation for many, many years. They endorsed and pursued the policy that had been followed in the previous years under Liberal governments and that served this country well.

As far as the government policy of having the lowest possible interest rates in this country is concerned, the banks are very much aware of the Government's position and my position as Minister of Finance, and that this is very much what we are trying to ensure by every possible means.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

TELEPHONE RATES—PARTICIPATION IN CONFERENCE STUDY

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Communications. The CRTC is the agency that has been given the authority and responsibility for ruling on the requests for increases in telephone rates by Bell Telephone and B.C. Telephone. One method by which the telephone companies are trying to get increases in rates is switching from the standard monthly rental rate for consumers to what they call local measured service, which means that people would pay on the basis of the number of calls they make.

Bell Telephone and other telephone companies have, to a large extent, funded a Centre for Study of regulated Industries. That Centre and the CRTC are sponsoring a conference to study the question of local measured service. Does the Minister think it is proper for the CRTC, which should be in a position of judging on the merits of all applications,, to be involved in something funded by Bell Telephone?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I should indicate that the application for a rate increase which has been made by Bell Canada is presently in front of the CRTC. I should also indicate that the Government has an over-all policy, as enunciated by the Minister of Finance, with respect to the percentage amount of increase that could be granted during the course of the next year. The Minister of Finance has already indicated quite clearly that these increases cannot exceed the rate of 4 per cent.

Finally, the CRTC sponsoring or being involved in examinations of alternative systems is an area of exploration that is indeed quite proper for the CRTC to be involved in. It does not imply in any way that the CRTC is in a position of wanting to give approval in principle to the concept of local measured service. As a matter of fact there is no application before the CRTC for the concept of local measured service, but it is indeed appropriate that Canadians as a whole should be willing to re-examine, from to time, the ways that the CRTC should impose tariffs on the telephone system in Canada.

COMMISSION'S ROLE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, we have no objection to the CRTC looking at all the possibilities. But I suggest to the Minister that when the CRTC co-sponsors a conference in which 11 of the 17 speakers come from the telephone industry, and when there are virtually no consumers represented, or no representatives from labour, it is virtually tying its hands in advance. I suggest to the Minister that the CRTC not only has to be fair, it must appear to be fair. When it sponsors this kind of conference it is not doing that.

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I will tell the hon. gentleman that I agree that the CRTC must not only be fair, it must also in fact appear to be fair. I will be pleased to transmit the Hon. Member's suggestions to the CRTC that representatives from various groups ought to be included.

I have not had the opportunity to looking at the list of guests who have been invited, but I would indeed be surprised if there were no representatives from the fields the Hon. Member has indicated.

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION ACT

PROTECTION OF LONG-TERM DEPOSITS

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. As the Minister knows, according to the Canada Deposit Insurance Act, financial institutions, banks, and trust companies are protected against such institutions going out of business or bankrupt for up to $60,000 on deposit. However, upon reviewing for up to $60,000 on deposit. However, upon reviewing the Act, it is my understanding that there is no such protection if funds are locked in for longer than five years. For example, there are funds that are presently locked in for as long as ten years. Will the Minister be prepared to make the necessary changes to correct this inequity, which I believe must be just an oversight?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, there is a distinction to be made between short term deposits and investments and the period of time that the Member has in mind is, in fact, such a distinction. The question was reviewed at the time the changes were made in the insurable amount when we moved to the $60,000 level. It is not the Government's intention to reopen that question.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ADVERTISE PROVISIONS OF ACT

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, under those circumstances there are people who have funds on deposit for ten years and they are not aware of this provision in the Act. Would it be possible for the Government to advertise this fact so that they will not be under any delusion if something did go wrong and they lost their money?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the Member opposite is advocating that the Government should engage in more advertising, but the fact remains that the terms of the changes that were made some time ago were given to the public fully. I do not see that there can be any confusion in lending institutions about the CDIC legislation and the terms upon which that insurance is provided.

Those who are placing their money, either in short term deposits or longer term investments, need only to seek the information from the institution involved. It is readily available.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

AMOUNT OF GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. As Statistics Canada reports, this country spends only 1.4 per cent of its GNP on research and development while among our chief competitors, the United States spends 2.6 per cent; West Germany, 2.3 per cent; and the United Kingdom and Japan each spend 2.2 per cent. Would the Prime Minister explain to the House why his Government is not even willing to match the efforts of our chief competitors in this regard and in that way bring to Canada many thousands of additional orders and many thousands of additional jobs for Canadians?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thought the Hon. Member would preface his question by referring again to productivity because it is a subject for which he has always shown justifiable concern. He might have read yesterday that Canadian productivity is at the highest point it has reached since 1971 and that it is outperforming all of our competitors. I would have thought that he would have lent credit to this Government since, during the past many years, he has been asking the Government to ensure that productivity be given attention. That is the preface that I know the Hon.

Member would have made to his question had he the time to do his research.

With respect to the GNP, I suggest that he do a little more research because, when he gives the global figures as a percentage of GNP, he forgets that that is composed of federal moneys in research, provincial moneys in research, and private moneys in research. Therefore, the figures he gave us are completely irrelevant. The federal Government is much more generous and farseeing in its participation in funding of research than, unfortunately, the provinces and the private sector. If the Hon. Member compares to Germany, to Japan, and so on, he would end up congratulating this Government for its actions and asking the question of the private sector and of the provinces.

• (1500)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, there is a very good reason why I have not found it necessary to ask the Prime Minister recently about productivity. For years I rubbed his and his Government's nose in the fact that this country in productivity was sixteenth of 16 industrial countries around the world. It was so bad that we should have been completely ashamed of ourselves and, as a result, the Government did start to take some action in this regard. I take quite a bit of the credit for the action that has been taken.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

IMPORTANT DOMESTIC ISSUE

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the fatuous answer which the Prime Minister scraped together to my very sensible and far-reaching question—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Would the Hon. Member please ask his question?

Mr. Hees: It looks like I am cut off there, Mr. Speaker, and I had a very good one.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: I would say to the Prime Minister that as he obviously could not care less about important matters of this kind, does he not think it would be a good thing, as he prepares to step ashore from the ship of state, to pay some attention to important domestic matters, such as the one I have brought to his attention, and the figures I have quoted are on exactly the same basis on which—

Mr. Speaker: There is a limit in terms of how far supplementary questions can go and debates take over.

Some Hon. Members: More.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: If I were addressing my question to a normal Minister, it would have been over by now, but the Prime Minister is rather obtuse. It takes a little longer; he is a slow learner.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Does he not think it about time that he paid some attention studying important domestic matters, so that his fellow Canadians will remember him in a kindly way, instead of quite the reverse, as it appears it will be?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I always wondered who the author was of this phrase: "The ship of State is sailing over a volcano".

Now I know.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, on the usual Thursday point of order, Sir, I would like to direct a question to the Government House Leader. We had a House Leaders' meeting this morning at which he requested certain actions with respect to legislation on the Order Paper. I apologize for not getting back to him before this. This is the first opportunity I have had to tell him that his request concerning passage of Bill C-7 and C-8 with one speaker per Party at second reading and one day in committee is acceptable, subject to a proviso that I will be coming to in a moment.

On Bill C-11, the Government House Leader has requested that it be passed in all stages in the House with one speaker per Party. That, too, is acceptable, subject to the proviso that I will come to.

Bill C-14 would pass through all stages in the House with one or two speakers per Party. The Government would likely be putting up only one speaker. That is acceptable also, subject to the proviso that I will come to.

On Bill C-16, the Government House Leader has requested that it pass through all stages in the House with one speaker per Party. That is acceptable, subject to the proviso that I will be coming to.

That deals with five pieces of legislation. Let me throw in another two, Bill C-5 and Bill C-6, which we will pass through all stages, making a total of seven pieces of legislation we are prepared to deal with, seriatim, as quickly as we can through the various stages in the House, to completion. All that I am asking in return from the Government House Leader is an undertaking by the Government that it will bring in immediately the amendments to the Western Grain Stabilization Act in order to provide much needed cash flow to Western farmers at this time of the year at seeding time.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow will be an Opposition day, and Monday the House will consider Bill C-3. Tuesday will be an Opposition day, and Wednesday and Thursday we shall be considering Bill C-24.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, surely the Government House Leader is going to respond to an offer which I do not think he can refuse, namely, seven Bills for one. We are ready to pass these through seriatim.

Mr. McDermid: The Prime Minister asked for that.

Mr. Nielsen: We have thrown in another two. It is exactly what the Prime Minister was asking for yesterday. We are prepared to do this in return for one piece of legislation to help Western farmers. Will the Government House Leader do that?

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I do not negotiate on the floor of the House. I thought it was understood that the offer was being made without a proviso. I am surprised one is being added now. In any case, I announced the business of the House a moment ago. If the Hon. Member has further provisos to add, we will then add a few more bills to the ones on his list.

In the circumstances, the list of business has been announced. If I may report to the House as well, Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that the New Democratic Party gave its consent to having one speaker per party and one day in Committee for Bill C-7 and Bill C-8, and one speaker per party at all stages of Bill C-11 and C-16, and that it did so without setting provisos.

As long as this House is led by the present Government and by a Liberal Government, and that will be the case for many years to come, the Government will be responsible for establishing the order of business in the House. And negotiations will be held in my office, as long as I am House Leader, or in the office of my successor, and not on the floor of the House.

[English]

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I guess that shows the Prime Minister was all huff and puff yesterday. I have a question for—

Message from the Senate

Mr. Speaker: On what point does the Hon. Member rise?

Mr. McDermid: I rise on House business, Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Government House Leader when we might expect the amendments to the Indian Act regarding discrimination against Indian women. It is long overdue. This legislation has been promised so many times by the Prime Minister at the First Ministers' Conference. When might we expect those amendments? We are ready to pass those as well.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I have taken note of the Hon. Member's suggestion for co-operation.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway. I believe the practice of the House is for a limited number of questions. I will recognize one more.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, since there was a discussion of many Bills, is the Government House Leader going to bring in legislation to deal with the Asia-Pacific Foundation? I have a report of the Government's own founding committee. I wonder whether the Government is prepared to bring in legislation. I know that on this side of the House we would probably be prepared to give the Bill speedy passage before the end of this session.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the offer made by the Hon. Member. If we ever introduce such legislation, I will remind him of his offer.

Mr. Speaker: A short intervention. The Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, on February 9 the Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni asked the Minister about travel to B.C. The Minister said it was not his intention to dictate the agenda of the Fisheries and Forestry Committee. Now I understand the Fisheries and Forestry Committee is not able to get permission to travel to B.C. Could the Government House Leader indicate why the committee is not able to go and hear first-hand the problems of fishermen? I would like to know whether the Government is prepared to change its mind on this issue.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I will reflect on the observations made by the Hon. Member.

PETITION

MR. EPP—OPPOSITION TO BILL C-10

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) on Wednesday, April 4, 1984, meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

WAYS AND MEANS

TABLING OF NOTICE

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with Standing Order 64(1), I wish to table in both official languages a notice of a Ways and Means motion with respect to the interpretation of Canada's international conventions relating to income tax and the Acts implementing such conventions.

In accordance with Standing Order 64(2), I also ask you to designate the order of the day necessary for the consideration of this Ways and Means motion.

PETITIONS

AMNESTY FOR PRISONERS OF CONSCIENCE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of approximately 1,800 Saskatchewan residents under the auspices of Amnesty International who call for a universal amnesty for all prisoners of conscience. They feel that such an amnesty, backed by the United Nations and declared by all governments, is indeed possible. If enacted, indeed it would be an unparalleled act in the building of international confidence and the promotion of fundamental freedoms.

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour to present a petition from Amnesty International of almost 1,800 names of people who live in the City of Saskatoon, in the Province of Saskatchewan and in other provinces of Canada. The petition humbly sheweth that thousands of men and women are imprisoned throughout the world solely because of their political and religious beliefs, that others are held because of their colour or ethnic origin, that these are prisoners of conscience and none have used or advocated violence, that none of these people should be imprisoned, that the fact they have been arrested and punished because of their beliefs or origins is an affront to humanity, and that they should be freed unconditionally.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon the Parliament of Canada to support and call for universal amnesty for all prisoners of conscience. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

PARITY PRICES FOR FARM PRODUCTS ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-232, an Act respecting Parity Prices for Farm Products.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I want to introduce a Bill entitled: "An Act Respecting Parity Prices for Farm Products" which contains a very short explanatory note as follows:

The purpose of this Bill is to provide parity prices to farmers based on a cost-of-production formula for wheat, oats and barley for human consumption within Canada and to establish voluntary marketing Commissions for pork and beef. This is to lay the groundwork for parity prices for producers.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

ESTABLISHMENT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE OF THE HOUSE

On the Order: Government Notices of Motions:

April 2, 1984—The Secretary of State of Canada:

That a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons be appointed to examine and report upon the legal framework for voluntary actions with particular reference to the following:

1. the adequacy of the definition of charity under the Income Tax Act to reflect current social realities;

2. the limits to be set for advocacy activities by charities registered under the Income Tax Act; and

3. the appropriate nature of public support for groups which have as a primary object the advocacy of public interest;

That 7 members of the House of Commons, to be designated at a later date, be members of the joint committee on the part of the House;

That the Committee have power to sit during sittings and adjournments of the House;

That the Committee have power to report from time to time and to send for persons, papers and records, and to print such papers and records, and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee;

That the Committee have power to adjourn from place to place inside Canada provided that the locations to be visited and the estimated expenses for such travel are defined in advance;

That the Committee have the power to retain the services of expert, professional, technical and clerical staff as may be deemed necessary;

That the Committee be instructed to make its report no later than twelve months after its establishment;

That changes in membership on the part of the House of Commons be made only pursuant to Standing Order 69(4)(b);

And that a Message be sent to the Senate requesting that House to unite with this House for the above purpose, and to select, if the Senate deems it advisable, some of its Members to act on the proposed Special Joint Committee.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Section (2) of Standing Order 25, this government notice of motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under Government Orders later this day or at the next sitting of the House.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 261, 342 and 661.

[Text]

NORTHERN TRANSPORTATION CO. LTD.

Question No. 261—Mr. Schellenberger:

1. Does the Northern Transportation Company Limited prohibit the directors and officers of the company from ownership, in whole or in part, of any company that does business with NTCL?

2. Does NTCL company policy forbid immediate relatives of directors and officers of the company from such ownership of any assets or companies that are directly involved in NTCL operations?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): The Northern Transportation Company Limited advises as follows:

Order Paper Questions

1. Northern Transportation's directors and officers are bound by the "Guidelines to be Observed by Public Servants Concerning Conflict of Interest Situations" (P.C. 1973-4065, December 18, 1973) and, upon election or appointment receive a copy of the Public Service Personnel Management Manual Subchapter 2 which contains these guidelines as well as the "Standard of Conduct for Public Services Employees" (Circular No. 1973-183, Secretary of the Treasury Board, December 31, 1973). The guidelines and standards of conduct have been formally adopted as company policy and copies have been distributed to all directors and officers.

2. See above.

FEDERAL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BANK BOARD OF DIRECTORS

NATIVE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

Question No. 661—Mr. Schellenberger:

1. Did the Treasury Board approve the release of $345 million for the Native Economic Development Program and (a) if so, since October 1, 1983, what amount was expended for administrative costs (b) if not, how is the program financed?

2. Were criteria established for granting financial assistance under the program and, if so (a) on what date (b) what are they?

3. Were any assistance applications received under the program and, if so (a) how many (b) did any applicants receive any assistance and, if so, what is a list of their names?

4. Was any amount specifically aimed at a particular target-group and, if not, will each application be judged on its own merits?

5. Does the Government plan to disperse a specific amount under the program by March 31, 1984 and, if so, what amount?

6. To the knowledge of the Government, what percentage of the program's administrators are of native origin?

Hon. David Smith (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): 1. No. (a) Not applicable. (b) Start up costs are being funded on an interim basis by the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion.

2. No. Investments strategies are under review by the advisory board, which oversees the program.

3. Yes. (a) 94. (b) No.

4. No. Each investment opportunity to be considered for funding by the program will be dealt with on its own merits as they relate to program objectives.

5. No fixed amount has been determined for expenditures by March 31, 1984.

6. Fifty-five per cent. Including the advisory board and support personnel, 20 of a total of 36 persons are of native origin.

[English]

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Parliamentary Secretary could turn his attention to Question No. 679 on the Order Paper in my name. It concerns the standards, if any, which were exercised by the Prime Minister in the appointment of Ministers, the answer to which would indicate whether the Prime Minister cast an eye to see whether any of his Ministers were in trouble with the tax department or with the law before he named them to Cabinet. I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary not just when we might expect an answer to that question, but whether it will be answered before the present Prime Minister retires from his present responsibilities.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, that question is so loaded with barbs that not even a blind fish would come up after it. I will certainly tell the Hon. Member that it is our intention to answer every question on the Order Paper. I will do my very best to see that he gets an answer to his question which is in the same spirit as the question he just asked me.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacLaren, that Bill C-12, an Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I want to conclude what I was saying before lunch by pointing out that the Government's lack of drive for the education of the whole person matches its lack of drive for the development of Canada as a whole. The Government's policy is to sell off Canada piece by piece—some coal to Japan, some gas to the United States, some timber to anyone who will take it, and so on. It is a piecemeal policy, a very short-ranged and short-sighted policy. It does not have in it any concept of serving the people of Canada or any concept of providing essentially for the needs of the people of Canada, including the needs of Canadians to grow, to develop, to have jobs and to participate in the Government of the country.

This is the way the Government is treating universities through the cut this year and the one last year. The result is that there will be a decrease in the development of the independent mind and spirit, which has been the hallmark of the university. There will be more narrow training which locks people into limited occupations. There will be more limited service to the multinational corporations which are buying up our country and shipping it out. There will be damage to Canadian culture. There will be damage to Canadian industry through the loss of what the universities contribute to research and development. There will be damage to a whole generation of young people in Canada, the young people who are now told there are no jobs for them and nowhere for them to study. They will be told in a few years that they are not fit for jobs because they are not trained. They did not train because we will not have given them the means of training, let alone the means of education.

There will be damage to women who at this time for several reasons are capable of moving into the work force, are wanted in the workforce and want to be in the workforce. They will be hindered severely from getting the education they need. Worst of all, there will be damage to the morale of the country because when the Government says there is no future for our universities, that is a way of saying there is no future for Canada. Therefore, it is a sad day that this Bill has now come to third reading. It will be a sad day if the Government forces this Bill through Parliament.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions and comments.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I would like, if I may, to ask a question or two of the Hon. Member who just spoke, or maybe lead with a comment. I agree with him that the Bill before the House will be very restrictive in terms of what it is doing to young people, our colleges and universities. I can certainly see that problem in my Province of Saskatchewan in terms of Regina and Saskatoon. I want to ask the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) whether he could personalize the subject a little more. Does he have in his riding, for example, some personal examples of people who will be really hurt by this kind of greed or Scrooge-like action on the part of the Government when it comes to funding of post-secondary institutions? Has he run into people in his riding who have problems?

. . . Young people in the riding of Spadina. Students will have a problem, because the federal Government is too restrictive in its approach to economic problems. Do you have any examples?

[English]

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I would like to give three types of examples of the damage being done by these cuts, the different kind of cuts, to the people of Spadina and, as far as I know, to all people in Ontario. First, I have, as perhaps other Members have, a number of people who come to me because they borrowed money in good faith and completed their education. They cannot find work in the line for which they studied and prepared themselves at university. They are being hounded by collection agencies to pay the Government money they do not have.

The Government claims that sometimes it is moving money from one part of the budget to another to have money for grants, but that it does not have any more money for grants, instead, it has a loan policy. That loan policy is causing great hardship, discouragement and a loss of self-respect for a number of people who in good faith in recent years undertook to borrow money in the expectation that they would be able to use their education.

That is no way to run a country or a university. It is not the way we did it 40 years ago. In DVA we were not told we had to borrow money and become debtors in order to get an education. We were told that if we worked as students, we would get a living allowance for it. Hundreds of thousands of Canadians did that and have since been using the education they received to build this country. There is no reason to destroy these people by telling them they are debtors when, because of other Government policies, there are no jobs.

Second, I spoke to a young student who had been studying physics and must use a physics lab at the University of Toronto. She took a year out to work in industry. When she went looking for a job in industry, she was told, "You studied physics at U of T.? That lab is 20 years out of date. We would like somebody who was trained in an up to date lab". When I inquired about this, other people gave me the same opinion, that the lab is out of date for modern training in physical engineering, but that the department head is ashamed to admit it. That may mean that students will not register to study there. This Government as well as the Ontario Government, by cutting back the money that is needed to keep these labs up to date, is turning department heads into con men who deceive students to come to study there by not telling them that the lab is out of date, that it does not meet the condition of the 1980s.

The third example I have given to some extent on some points. It is simply what is happening to one of the major and basic departments of university. The mathematics department of the largest university in the British Commonwealth, certainly one of the outstanding universities of the world, has 4,200 undergraduates—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. The response to a question should be relatively short in order to allow other Members to put questions, if they have any. The Hon. Member would then get a chance to speak.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) could enlighten us on the situation regarding mathematics at the University of Toronto?

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, it just happens that I do have some information about the mathematics department. There are 4,200 undergraduates and 40 graduate students, 63 full-time professors and 73 courses. Most professors teach two full courses. It is a very large department. A few years ago they began cutting back on tutorial time. Professors are having lectures added on and students are having their tutorials cut down. Tutorials have been cut to one hour in two weeks. You cannot do proper mathematics if it is all done in large mass classes without tutorials. The number of student attending tutorial increased 50 per cent. In other words, the professor is just not able to give his time to the students.

This is the kind of thing that is happening in a basic course. The same is happening in other courses such as psychology. There are over 1,000 students in the first year class in Convocation Hall. That is a ridiculous way to teach.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): If there are no further questions or comments, I recognize the Hon. Member for Kingston and The Islands on debate.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to take part in the third reading debate on Bill C-12, an Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act of 1977. This Bill, as we know, deals particularly with the funding of post-secondary education across this country.

I noticed, in going back over the earlier stages of debate on this Bill, that we had discussed it at second reading on January 27 of this year. I mention that date because only a few days previously, Bill C-3, the Canada Health Act, had also been in the House for second reading. In many ways there are similarities between these two Bills. Shortly after the date I mentioned, about the end of January, both these Bills were sent to committee for detailed study. The Canada Health Act was sent to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs for the hearing of witnesses and clause by clause study.

Similarly, Bill C-12 dealing with post-secondary funding went to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs where witnesses were called and it received detailed study. It was a matter of great regret to me, not that the Bills came into the House at the same time but that they went to committee at the same time. While I could participate in both debates in the House because the Bills were called one after the other, because I was deeply involved in the detailed study of the Canada Health Act in Committee for two months, I was not able to go to the Finance Committee which was meeting at the same time. I regret that I was not able to participate in both committees and did not have the opportunity to attend the hearings on this particular Bill. From time to time, however, I tried to follow the printed journals to keep abreast of what took place.

I mentioned that this Bill in a sense has many similarities to Bill C-3, the Canada Health Act. Those similarities are by no means beneficial when one compares the two Bills. The huge funding programs show the inadequacy of the Bills in dealing with the provinces and the lack of consultation between the federal Government and provincial Governments in the fields of post-secondary education and health care. What we have seen with both Bills is conflict, not co-operation, and not consultation.

The two Bills are similar in this way as well, Mr. Speaker. They both show the lack of foresight on behalf of the federal Government in that it missed the opportunity to do something substantial about health care and post-secondary education. We are addressing only very narrow aspects of both major subjects. That is shown in another similarity in that both Bills tinker with hundreds of millions of dollars when billions of dollars are at stake. More than billions of dollars, the whole thrust of what post-secondary education and health care can and should do in this country, is at stake.

When I think of the progress of the Bill since it was introduced for second reading, having gone through committee stage, report stage and now at final reading, I have to say that unfortunately many of the criticisms I levelled against the Bill on second reading are still apparent and have not been dealt with.

First and foremost, Bill C-12 is still a tax grab by the Government. In the 1983-84 fiscal year the Government is able to reduce its projected transfers to the provinces for post-secondary education by almost $120 million, and next year that reduction will amount to $260 million. That is the kind of tax grab the Government is getting into with this Bill.

The criticism I made at second reading is even more applicable today. I suggest that the Government had its priorities all wrong when it comes to those things it considers important for funding or important for rescuing or important for bailing out. For instance, the Government considers it is important to write-off or fund the losses of Canadair, which amounted to $330 million in 1984 and $1.4 billion for 1982. Altogether, some $3 billion will have been invested by the Government in that company before it is able to sell it off. It grabs $380 million out of post-secondary education, some of which it is willing to put into Canadair or if not Canadair, de Havilland to which it directed $226 million last year. The same is forecast for this year. VIA Rail lost $440 million in 1982-83 and Canada Post lost $300 million in 1982-83. The Government thought it was necessary to change those situations, to rescue those enterprises, but it does not feel the same way about post-secondary education.

The criticism I levelled on second reading that post-secondary education is in a period of crisis is all too real, Mr. Speaker. We have seen that funding has declined by 20 per cent in the past 10 years; that is over-all funding to post-secondary institutions, to colleges and universities for young people in the educational system. But, during the same period enrolment has increased by 4 per cent. This 4 per cent increase over the past 10 years is the most dramatic increase since this country went into recession in 1981. Furthermore, it is estimated that enrolment will increase by something like 6.6 per cent over the next four years. We have declining funding and substantially increasing enrolment.

We have to ask then, why enrolment is going up in the universities at this time? Is it because of population? The main reason for increased enrolment in universities and colleges is the fact that there are no jobs for young people, Mr. Speaker. They are either staying in university longer or returning to university and college for additional training, hoping that when they graduate there may be some place where they can find the security of a job.

There is another reason enrolment has increased, and that is the changing technology with which we must come to grips. Not only young people are affected. Twenty-five percent of enrolments in universities is for people over 35 years of age. People are returning to university or going for the first time because they hope they will be able to improve their lifestyle.

The situation is one of declining funding and increasing enrolment. One of the fall-outs is that we see increased tuition fees all across the country. It is projected that they will go up by 30 per cent in British Columbia, 25 per cent in Saskatchewan and the same to a lesser degree is going to happen in every province. In order to make up that short-fall, in part the universities and colleges are turning to the individual students and asking them to bear the higher cost. Many young people are unable to get summer jobs or part-time work and so simply will not have the funds to meet the increased tuition if the present situation continues and if a bill such as this is allowed to pass.

I have known from personal experience how universities are trying to cope with the reduction in funding. They have been forced to cut back services at all levels, and that in turn reduces the quality of education which is being given to people across the country. That is a very serious issue, Mr. Speaker. Once our standards begin to go down so will our standing in every other area that we try to reach in the world. Whether it is sales promotion, trade, diplomatic arrangements, whatever it may be, they will all be affected domestically and internationally once we allow our educational standards to slip.

I have noticed that this is already having an impact on Queen's University. The inadequacy of funding is very much having an impact on the day to day life of the university and, obviously, on its students and staff. For instance, the volume of library acquisitions is half of what it was ten years ago. There are still just as many books, just as many important pieces being written, but there is not the funding to acquire them. Ten years ago 19,000 journals and 50,000 books were purchased by Queen's University in Kingston. This year it purchased 7,000 journals and 24,000 new books. Yet, the output has increased. I hear comments all the time that laboratory equipment is now out of date and is becoming more so compared, for instance, with what private industry is able to acquire.

One of the most serious of situations, because it affects everyone and everything, is that routine upkeep of the buildings is not being done to the same extent; less than half of what was done ten years ago. Perhaps most important of all, the student-teacher ratio keeps increasing. In 1973 the ratio was 14 students to one professor or teacher. Today that ratio is 20 students to one professor or teacher, and it is growing. It makes it more difficult for the student to receive the individual attention which he or she requires in order to be able to handle the courses and absorb the knowledge which is necessary to graduate.

There is a very real crisis, Sir, in our post-secondary system, and at the very time when there is so much evidence of what is happening, what does the federal Government do? It brings forward a bill such as Bill C-12 which is going to reduce the funding that would otherwise be available to our post-secondary institutions. There have been many organizations and associations, groups of students and of staff and people involved with universities and community colleges across the country who have protested what is going on. When the Canadian Association of University Teachers appeared before the Macdonald Royal Commission, it very eloquently outlined its concerns. It said then, as it has said many times since, that there is a funding crisis in the universities. Why will the Government not listen?

Just the other day I received a letter from the Canadian Association of University Teachers which commented on this very bill. The CAUT said this, and I quote:

> The CAUT has opposed and continues to oppose this misguided legislative action. We do not feel Bill C-12 is in any way the answer to the current and sizeable problems of the university system of Canada.
> The CAUT has urged all levels of government to begin real discussions on the serious problems of higher education, but until now, we continue to be caught in the federal-provincial battles.

Enclosed with the letter for my reading was an editorial which it had received recently. It was taken from the Chronicle of Higher Education of February 22, 1984. It outlined the way in which funding is being increased in United States colleges and universities at the present time. It said that Governors budget more money for colleges to spur the economy and make up for past reductions. There is this difference in the situation of our great neighbour to the south, our great competitor. Here we are turning our back on the very step which it is taking. The CAUT raises the concerns of the teaching staff across the country.

As I mentioned, these bills, the Canada Health Act and this one dealing with post-secondary education, are going through the House at the same time. I have had people speak to me about the concerns they have about the funding of medical schools in particular. Both bills affect the funding of medical schools, whether it is through post-secondary education or lack of research moneys coming to teaching hospitals and medical schools through the Canada Health Act. They are being hit doubly.

Yesterday I was glad to see the Government did accept pretty well the same amendment which I had initially put forward on accountability. We will now enhance the accountability of the funding which is transferred from the federal Government to the provincial levels and then on, one would hasten to add, to the colleges and universities.

We introduced an amendment to this bill which will make certain things more possible than they were in the past. For instance, the amendment which was accepted in the field of accountability will provide a more precise record of expenditures. We will be able to see where the money is going and if it is being used efficiently by the provinces, at least more so than we were in the past.

Second, federal politicians will be able to see if the federal Government is making any real effort to encourage innovation in the area of education through high technology retraining, for instance, or in the field of health through preventive care.

Third, that amendment will provide public visability of expenditures which will perhaps lead to a better understanding of the role of Ottawa in the field of health care and education, thereby, I would hope, legitimizing in the public's eye the need for a strong federal presence in these fields.

Those are things, Sir, which I felt the amendment addressed. It will certainly make this bill better than it was. However, Sir, I say, even knowing that the amendment will help, there is not enough in this bill to merit my support because in the long run it really does cut back on what is the very most basic and important part of this bill. It cuts back on funding by the federal Government to post-secondary education. It ignores much of the need which we are seeing not only now, but will see in the next five years and ten years. It adds to the crisis which is here now in post-secondary education and which this Government simply will not face up to. Regardless of what we have done to improve the bill, which the Government will drive through this House because of its majority, and only because of its majority, the bill is a very backward step in trying to fund the most critical need in the country today, the education and training of our young people.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten minute period for questions or comments.

[Translation]

Mr. Garant: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) is talking about cuts in federal financing for post-secondary education programs. Bearing in mind that in her province, the Province of Ontario, total transfers per student were $4,394 in 1980, $4,600 in 1981, $4,950 in 1982 and $5,063 in 1983, and that for 1984, transfers per student in Ontario are estimated at $5,345, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands whether this progression is any indication of cuts in federal financing for post-secondary education programs.

● (1550)

[English]

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons the Liberal Party keeps falling in the Gallup Poll is that it keeps trying to mislead the Canadian public with statistics. Quite frankly, the Canadian public is fed up with it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: The figures the Hon. Member cited may be real, but he knows as well as I do that had this Bill not been introduced, transfer payments to the provinces would be $118 million higher this year, and $260 million higher next year. That is where the deception comes in. We know what the payments would have been this year and next year had this Bill not been introduced. That is where the reduction comes in.

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Hon. Member a question concerning a federal responsibility and who should have it. I really want her opinion on this. I have often said, and I think she has too, that one of the difficulties with post-secondary education as opposed to hospital insurance and medical care, is that for the latter there is one Minister, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin). She takes the responsibility in Cabinet. She has some clout, maybe because of her personality, but also because she has a lot of responsibility and there is one Department looking after the subject matter. Perhaps for that reason the Government did not apply six and five to transfers in that field. In the case of post-secondary education, there are about seven Ministers who have a baby finger in the pie. There is no one who has even a co-ordinating responsibility. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) is concerned with purely the financial point of view. The Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren), who is supposed to be introducing this Bill but does not even speak, he has a very tiny finger in the pie. The Minister responsible for social development has some involvement in post-secondary education, as do the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development (Mr. Johnston), and the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) because of the granting councils. Then of course there is the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal). There is also the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette), I guess, because she was talking about how we should restrict educational opportunity to those who have money and means.

Does the Hon. Member agree that this is one of the reasons this program was subject to six and five, and has she thought about what might be a co-ordinating mechanism or a more satisfactory way of allocating responsibility for the federal role in higher education?

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I wish we could have this kind of debate much more often in the House. Individual Members should be able to voice their concern to the Government about the structure and workings of government as much as about the legislation presented to us. I feel very strongly that there should be a lead minister with a very strong co-ordinating role in this field. It would bring all of these areas under his or her jurisdiction at the federal level. He or she would be able, with some degree of responsibility and assurance in the Cabinet, to go out and negotiate with the provincial Ministers a much more meaningful role. That may not sound the way I want it to, but there has to be a much more meaningful role than we see at the present time for the federal Government in the field of research and development and technological change. It has to be co-ordinated with a new way of looking at education. I see that as a major federal responsibility, and it has to be the responsibility of one person. Once it is dispersed, then it is weakened and it is not dealt with in the way it should be.

I might also say to the Hon. Member that I get equally upset and disturbed when I see the dispersement of effort on behalf of the status of women through a plethora of departments which are not properly co-ordinated within the Government structure.

Ms. Jewett: And therefore nothing done.

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, I sympathize with the Hon. Member's desire to transfer more money to provinces for certain purposes. However, I have real difficulty with, perhaps not her, but with her Party, in coming to a conclusion on how to reduce the deficit. This has not been my line but it is her Party leader's line. How are you going to significantly reduce the deficit when probably 75 per cent of the money spent by this Government is in transfers to people, provinces and corporations and to service the public debt? The operation of the Government is responsible for only about 25 per cent of the Budget. I am not one of those who think the deficit is the big problem in this country, but if the Hon. Member's Party wants to spend more money on defence and in other areas and at the same time cut back, where are they going to find the money? What are you prepared to cut? I gather the Hon. Member may be very different from her Party in that she does not want to cut some of the areas of social benefit.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, it is very true that the statutory payments, whether to individuals or provinces, are pretty well set in stone. The Government is moving to change that by cutting back on post-secondary education, but I do not agree with that. However, the Hon. Member has asked where changes would be made. We know that we have to operate within a fiscal framework which demands responsibility. I am not sure whether the Hon. Member was here, but I began by listing a half dozen places where the Government had put priority on spending where we would not. I looked at the figures on enterprises like Canadair, de Havilland, VIA Rail and Canada Post, and all the bail-outs which took place, including Maislin and others, and added them up, and they come to some $4 billion. If you have $4 billion to play with you can do an awful lot in the way of social programs where inequities still exist. That is where I would begin to look.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): That is the conclusion of the ten-minute period for questions and comments.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacLaren that Bill C-12, an Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, this is the second occasion on which I have had the opportunity to speak in debate on Bill C-12, an Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977. The first occasion was at second reading on February 7 when I discussed the problems with the Bill in principle. Today at third reading stage I wish to deal with the Bill in greater depth, this time focusing on the problems of underfunding of post-secondary education from the point of view specifically of the Maritime Provinces.

Among other things, Bill C-12 provides that in the fiscal years 1983-84 and 1984-85 the increase in the federal Government's per capita contribution to the cost of post-secondary education will not exceed 6 per cent in the first year and 5 per cent in the second year. Thus, the Government, as the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) said so eloquently, is imposing a strict limit on expenditures for universities and colleges of Canada.

It is true, Mr. Speaker, that the inflation rate in Canada has been easing down a bit. It was at 12 per cent and 11.5 per cent and has slowly eased down to about 5 per cent or 5.5 per cent this past year. Some may ask, as Members on the Government side do, what the problem is. There are several problems. First, current trends suggest that the inflation rate will likely far exceed 5 per cent in the coming months. Last month the figure was 5.5 per cent, a rather sharp increase from the month before. Almost all reliable forecasts indicate that the problem could get worse.

Second, the rate of increase in university and college expenditures is much higher than in the economy as a whole as a result of conditions that are peculiar to educational institutions. One need only cite the burgeoning costs of laboratory equipment and library books to make that point. Such rate increases, which have been almost exponential in recent years, are well beyond those reflected in the so-called consumer price index. Although the national CPI figure for Canada last month was 5.5 per cent, universities have been faced with cost hikes of 35 per cent and higher for much of their specialized equipment, especially in the natural sciences. Because capital budgets have been all but frozen at many campuses for the past five, six or seven years, their physical plants are becoming antiquated. Consequently, even routine maintenance and operating costs are skyrocketing well in excess of any CPI figures that could be cited.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, for other reasons universities and community colleges are forced to do more with less. They are being compelled to provide more education with less money. Nowhere is that point clearer or more true than in the area of student enrolment. In the Maritime region, for example, the student population has been expanding at a dramatic rate over the last four years. The total increase in full-time enrolment since 1979-80 is over 25 per cent. That increase is equivalent to the total student population of the two campuses of the University of New Brunswick. Yet Government funding for universities throughout the region, and I would argue throughout Canada, has ignored such changes. Certainly there has been nothing like a 25 per cent increase in funding in real dollar terms. In 1983-84 we will see the seventh year in a row in which government operating grants for full-time students have declined in constant dollars. The Maritime universities are being compelled to manage this year with government grants, the actual value of which on a per student basis, given inflation, is 30 per cent less than it was in 1976-77.

In the face of the funding crisis—and I use the word "crisis" advisedly because it is a crisis—the institutions have been slashing expenditures to the bone through every possible cost efficiency. Unfortunately, there remains little fat to be cut, and now even the bone itself is being sliced into. The consequences of this development are dire indeed, Mr. Speaker.

Professor Reginald Stuart is the chairman of history at the University of Prince Edward Island. He expressed the point graphically in recent correspondence to me. As he put it, it takes many years to construct a quality university. In five years of funding neglect one can erode what will require another 15 years of effort to rebuild to comparable levels. He argues that it takes one to three years to develop a new program, a year to put it in place, and an additional one to two years before it produces graduates. I quote Professor Stuart as follows:

> A focus on dollars and percentages will obscure the complexity of the issue. Universities, however, cannot adjust rapidly to shifting conditions without damaging their stability, a part of their social value.

There can be no question at all that underfunding has affected the quality of education not only in the Maritimes and in the Atlantic region generally, but in other regions right across the country.

Dr. Elizabeth Hall, Director of Research and Development at the University of Prince Edward Island, illustrated how this can happen at the practical level. With your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, and with that of others in the House, let me quote Dr. Hall's excellent point in this respect. She said:

> The reduction in funding has affected the level of laboratory assistants the university has been able to employ to set up laboratories for undergraduate students. The result is that professors very often spend a considerable amount of time setting up routine labs for themselves. This cuts down on the amount of time they are available for discussion with students regarding their particular problems and it also cuts down on the professor's time for research.

Dr. Hall went on to say:

> In a sense then, we are getting less dollar value for professors' work than would otherwise be the case.

Yes, we are getting less dollar value for professors' work than would otherwise be possible. Yet the Government, in the name of restraint and austerity, is arguing that it is economic to impose such a heavy handed restraint on the universities. Not only teaching, but research also is suffering for lack of funding.

Dr. Regis Duffy, a chemistry professor at my old Alma Mater, who is now in the private sector and a noted chemist by international standards, once said, "Love may make the world go around but research makes it go forward". One wonders how far our world is advancing as a result of Canada's effort in respect to research and development. Doubtless we have sacrificed much of our contribution on the high altar of so called restraint; false restraint, false austerity and false economy.

As a country we invest much less as a percentage of our Gross National Product in research than do most other industrialized countries in the world. It is less than one per cent of GNP, compared to well over 2 per cent in the case of Japan, for example.

The Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council is one of the major sources of Canada's research funds, but it has been compelled to cut back its funding of worthwhile projects because of government restraint on its own budget. Small universities, such as those in the Maritimes, have been particularly hard hit. I sympathize with the points made so eloquently by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands, especially with respect to Queen's University, which is my own Alma Mater. I agree with everything she has said in that context. In turn, I think she would agree that such heavy handed restraint affects worst of all the smaller universities, including ones in the Maritime provinces, because the relevant provincial governemnts do not have the fiscal capacity or resource base to make up the difference created by restraint.

The tragedy is that the younger generation will pay the price, for it is they whose employment prospects are being sacrificed in the process.

Dr. Cirill Schmidt, Chairman of the Department of Chemistry at the University of PEI, put the point beautifully in a recent letter to me. Incidentally, I have been conducting rather active correspondence with the professors at the University of Prince Edward Island. I want to share something of what they are telling me and, through me, what they are telling the students and the population at large in Canada. Professor Schmidt said:

> Canada as a nation can alleviate the unemployment of masses of young people only if we develop a degree of technical competence in all fields.

How true! But it is not good enough for the country's research to be conducted only at the elephantine universities of the country, in metropolitan centres like Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver. The smaller universities also have a crucial role to play. Some of the most innovative research in the country is, in fact, being conducted at small universities like the University of PEI in my own riding. Too often, their research budgets are the first to be compromised as a result of restraint at the national level, while the mega universities seem to be able to cope more effectively.

Of course, the quality of education is affected in additional ways by budget cut-backs. The University of Prince Edward Island Dean of Science, J. Ivan Dowling, made the point to me that morale is particularly influenced by funding. During the process of restraint, he argued:

> Morale is undermined as faculty and staff get frustrated from budget-driven limitations on personnel, equipment, supplies, etc. In the meantime, the fixed costs of vital services such as heating, lighting, security, and maintenance remain.

When all is said and done, the problem is the future of a whole generation of Canadians. By imposing narrow-minded, narrowly viewed restraint in this area of public policy, the federal Government is compromising the quality of education and training available to our young people. For example, in my own Province of Prince Edward Island, where I am most familiar with the problem, government funding at the University of PEI in 1980-81 amounted to $5,638 per full time student. That is reduced to only $4,386 in 1983-84. That drop is very substantial.

At a time when per full time student grants are being slashed by approximately $1,100 in real terms, student enrolment is actually increasing throughout the Maritimes by about 25 per cent. Therefore, universities are being required to extend their resources well beyond capacity. The result of this underfunding is that the quality of education is fast deteriorating.

The University of PEI is no longer hiring new staff, although there is a serious need for staff in several areas. In fact, the overall staff at the University of Prince Edward Island in recent years has been reduced. Given such staff shortages, classes must be made bigger and students have been given less access to the personal counselling so important to a quality education.

The same considerations that apply to teaching staff also apply to resource and support staff. A case in point is the library staff at the University of PEI which has been slashed from 32 to 23 full time personnel since 1974-75, at a time when demands on library resources have increased. As a result of cut-backs in funding, there is less money available to make the system work. The library is also being forced to reduce substantially its purchase of volumes.

The universities in the Maritimes have calculated that from 1976-1977 to 1981-1982, they needed an increase in government funding in the range of 71 per cent merely to maintain services at the level at which they were operating. Instead, during that same period they received only approximately 50 per cent more. This year they will require about a 12 per cent increase just to stay where they are, let alone improve the quality of education in light of the knowledge explosion and manpower requirements. The legislation under debate now, however, will restrict increases in federal contributions to 6 per cent.

To their credit, the Maritime provincial governments are coughing up an increase of approximately 7.3 per cent in the current fiscal year to help pick up the slack. But those governments, as I said before, are badly strapped. They are not in the position to make up the total difference following restraint imposed on higher education spending under this Bill.

In any event, an entirely new approach to university funding is required. First, we need to realize that money spent wisely but generously on education is not a waste of taxpayers' money but rather an essential investment in the education and training of a new generation of Canadians. Seen in that light, undue restraint is not frugality; it is waste. In this case it is a waste of opportunity, including opportunity for job creation, increased productivity, and enhanced research, in fact, enhanced wealth for the country as a whole.

Second, there remains an urgent need for a long-term agreement between federal and provincial governments on the funding of post-secondary education. The current on-again-off-again restraint approach to funding makes it nearly impossible, certainly very difficult, for the institutions to plan ahead with any degree of certainty or effectiveness. Needed especially are: a clarification of all relevant issues, a clear national education policy to override if need be the hodge podge of provincial policies, and imaginative planning by the institutions themselves. As much as anything, Mr. Speaker, the Government must stop using universities as scapegoats for their own waste of taxpayers' money and for their own unplanned and uncoordinated and profligate ways. For their part universities should stop crying foul every time an institution does not get all it needs or thinks it needs from government, though doubtless most universities, including the one in my own riding, have genuine cause to cry foul.

Finally, the public is going to have to get used to the idea that educational institutions require adequate expenditures of money in order to produce the kinds of dividends, social and economic of which they are capable and without which our country will continue to fall further and further behind our competitors. Only then will our universities be a total credit to themselves, to their government benefactors and, indeed, to the country as a whole.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo).

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, would the Hon. Member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan) give us some insight into what he considers the long-term effects of the cuts that are being made now in his province? What kind of effects can we look forward to five or ten years down the road.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, that is a first-class question and I hope I can do justice to it. Very recently the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada published a sterling document called Some Question of Balance. It was the third volume of the report of the Commission on Canadian Studies sponsored by the AUCC. The Commissioners for the third volume just released were Dr. T. H. B. Symons, the founding president of Trent University, and James Page, who was a teacher at Seneca College until recently and now is in the employ of the Government of Canada in the Department of the Secretary of State.

To address the question in particular, I refer to that superb study, Some Question of Balance. The Commissioners argued that it may well have been true in the 1950s and 1960s that we needed to go outside Canada to recruit highly qualified manpower to teach our students, to conduct research and to help build up our own incipient graduate schools which at the time were not strong enough to produce the faculty required. Nevertheless, though we have strong graduate schools now, well capable of producing the highly qualified manpower we need for teaching and research, we are still going outside Canada to recruit in large numbers faculty, often in the very fields where we ourselves have a surplus of qualified manpower. There are all kinds of Canadian PhD holders who are being passed over in favour of faculty from outside the country who are being actively recruited with the acquiescence of the federal Government.

To get to the long-term implications to which the Hon. Member refers, Dr. Symons and Mr. Page have documented in great detail that because of restraint and budgetary cutbacks and the retrenchment being forced upon universities there is a danger that we may in Canada have a shortage of qualified manpower before long. As a result we may have to go outside Canada again, just as we did in the 1950s and 1960s, to recruit faculty. But this time it will be with justification because we will have starved our own universities and our graduate schools in particular. The Commissioners predict, and they have documented in some detail, that we could have another manpower crisis by 1990. We could have a shortage of qualified manpower in various fields that will require us to go outside the country to recruit personnel.

To address the question more specifically, and to bring it to a point, I want to say that in the Maritime Provinces, for example, we have seen growing evidence—

An Hon. Member: The Symons-Page study is an excellent report.

Mr. McMillan: Yes, it is an excellent report. In the Maritime Provinces we have all kinds of areas—environmental studies, regional studies, and ethnic studies, for example—that go begging for qualified manpower. We should be pumping a great deal of money into those fields rather than being stingy and preoccupied with a false sense of restraint so that our post-secondary educational institutions can meet the manpower and the employment needs and opportunities of the 1980s and the 1990s.

Those are some of the long-term implications. Restraint is being heavy-handed. It is ill-conceived. It is not real frugality, it is false economy because the investments that we need for the future are simply not being made. We will be paying the cost for a long, long time. As Professor Symons and Jim Page said, "the crisis may come sooner than later."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Are there any further questions or comments?

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I have one more question on a little different tack. We are paying something like a billion dollars a month in UIC right now. In the Hon. Member's mind, what portion of that could be transferred or should be transferred, maybe this is an unfair question, to this grant to develop the schools needed to be developed for the future?

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, I do not think one red cent should be transferred from unemployment insurance, from welfare or from the so-called safety net to education at this point. That is not the way you make up the difference, by stealing from Paul to pay Peter—or is it the other way around? We can, however, save the economy, governments, and taxpayers an awful lot of money if we could invest money wisely in the post-secondary education system. We are creating a whole generation of unemployed because we are not making that kind of investment. We need to invest in the skills, in the talent, and in the latent creativity of our young people. If we do, more and more of them will qualify for jobs in the workplace and fewer and fewer of them will be unemployed in future. Therefore, there will be less of a burden on the unemployment insurance funds. That is how we can save money with respect to UIC. We do not save money by robbing that fund now and putting the money into post-secondary institutions instead. We should find money in other areas and invest it in post-secondary education so as to make sure that in the future fewer of our young people are unemployed, and that fewer will be dependent on unemployment insurance, thereby draining the system. It is an entirely different approach. Even though it might be a longer-term one, I think, nevertheless, it would make more sense.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Any further questions or comments? On debate, the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen).

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on Bill C-12, an Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977. In commencing my remarks on third reading of the Bill, I would like to begin by saying that this is the worst possible time for any government, particularly a federal government whose members have gone on in the last few weeks about the importance of post-secondary education and how the provinces are doing such a rotten job, to bring forward a Bill for passage which will cut whatever increases are currently provided for the post-secondary educational system across the country. It is the worst of times.

In the Province of British Columbia, in the constituency of Kootenay West and in the City of Nelson, aid to post-secondary education is not an academic subject. On numerous occasions during the consideration of this Bill, and at other times over the last one or two months, I have outlined some of the history of what is happening to post-secondary education in my own area and in my own province, particularly as it relates to the closure of the David Thompson University Centre in Nelson, B.C. In demonstrating that this is not an academic subject to us, I want to illustrate to Hon. Members of the House, particularly to the Government which pretends to care, just what kind of impact these cuts are having on students, teachers, instructors, professors, on jobs, on communities and on people. The cuts are continued to be allowed and, it could be argued, are being further encouraged by the consideration and passage of this legislation.

I would like to begin illustrating these impacts by reading a letter signed by Dennis Bannert, Co-ordinator, Unemployment Action Centre, Nelson, B.C., dated March 27, 1984. This letter was addressed to the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal), with whom I, the mayor of my city and representatives of the David Thompson University Centre Action Committee in Vancouver just last Thursday. It reads:

Dear Sir:

Re: Impending Closure of David Thompson University Centre

In our capacity as a volunteer organization with a mandate to assist unemployed people in a variety of ways, we are very distressed about the impact the above closure will have on our area. During the past year of operation this centre has had numerous contacts with young people and unemployed people experiencing severe difficulties related to access to higher education. These difficulties are manifest on two levels:

1. The major degree granting universities are located on the coast hence the extra financial burden for interior students is much higher. In many cases the burden is prohibitive, particularly for students of unemployed parents.

2. Financial assistance for students has become excessively restricted. The B.C. Ministry of Human Resources now provides no measurable assistance to students. We also have experienced a number of UIC appeals involving denial of U.I. benefits on grounds of lack of availability for work due to attendance at courses of instruction. With our unemployment rate regionally of 25 per cent plus, it appears to us ludicrous to cite a question of availability since job offers are virtually non-existent.

On March 20, 1984 a young French Canadian was found hanged in his small apartment. He ended his life due primarily to severe depression related to unemployment and lack of opportunities. We know that this young man was desperately trying to get access to English language upgrading through the local manpower office to no avail.

The above case, of course, is an extreme example however it does indicate the degree of desperation in our region. To close a post-secondary, degree-granting facility such as D.T.U.C. at a time when so many young people in the interior of this province are in such need is in our opinion nothing short of a denial of human rights.

Mr. Minister anything you are able to do to assist this community and region in maintaining the historic delivery of post-secondary education at D.T.U.C. would be a very humane and progressive step. We implore you to give very serious consideration to ways and means of assisting this region in its plight.

Yours in Hope,

Dennis Bannert
Co-ordinator
Unemployment Action Centre

This is just one illustration of the impact of the actions taken by our provincial government as a result of the absence of any teeth in the federal fiscal arrangements which allow for millions upon millions of dollars of unconditional funds collected by the federal Government to be sent to the provincial government, only to see them diverted by that government to build dome stadiums or to subsidize the export of non-renewable resources, as with Northeast coal. Those actions are inexcusable.

It is not for want of knowing in what direction they ought to move. The Secretary of State said as much in Vancouver the other day. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans), speaking outside the committee meeting dealing with this Bill a few weeks ago said the same sort of thing, that there had to be controls to ensure that funds directed to the provinces for post-secondary education were spent on that. The new Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette) just a few days ago made a speech in which she said exactly the same thing. That is also what my Party attempted to put to the House in an amendment just yesterday. I am referring to Motion No. 4 which read:

> That Bill C-12 be amended in Clause 8 by adding immediately after line 25 at page 7 the following:
> "(3) Any such cash contribution for hospital insurance and medical care programs and post-secondary education program shall be expended by the province for the purposes of those programs only."

That amendment was moved in the House of Commons yesterday. It was debated and we voted on it. What happened? The result of the vote was 182 to 19, against. All Liberal and Conservative members voted against that amendment which would have at least begun the path toward making provinces accountable for the funds of federal taxpayers which they receive.

We get a lot of lip service to accountability. This is a classic example of the old phrase that people and politicians can be divided into three categories, those who make things happen, those who watch things happen and those who say "what happened". As I said, yesterday the NDP proposed an amendment to make something happen. Liberal and Conservative members, including the 16 of the 17 British Columbia Conservatives who were in the House, all voted against the amendment. They ought to know what is happening in their own province. Do they not care?

The Conservatives also proposed an amendment; an amendment to watch things happen. That amendment had the support of the Liberals, of the Conservatives and of members of the New Democratic Party. We all agreed to watch things happen, but when it came to an NDP amendment which would have put some teeth into the legislation, all Liberal and Conservative members in the House, including those 16 of 17 B.C. Conservatives, voted against it. Of course the people of Canada, including students, university teachers and instructors are left to wonder what happened.

I think that their action was absolutely inexcusable, particularly on the part of Members from British Columbia who ought to know what is happening in our province.

I would like now to refer to the bulletin of the Canadian Association of University Teachers dated February 1984, entitled "B.C. to slash universities' budgets". It reads:

● (1640)

> The Government of British Columbia is out to cut university budgets by 24.5 per cent in real dollar terms over three years. Already the government has announced that there will be no increase for this year and a 6 per cent decrease for next year. Informed sources say that this will be followed by another 6 per cent decrease. These decreases are on top of the $12 million cut from the universities in 1982-83. Assuming inflation rates of 4.5 per cent for this year and 4 per cent for the next two years, this will likely produce a decline in real terms of about 24.5 per cent.
> The President of UBC, George Pederson, says that one of the most significant consequences of the cuts will be a substantial increase in tuition fees . . . Dr. Pederson released figures showing that prior to the Government's budget, per student support shrivelled by 24 per cent since 1972 in real terms. According to Dr. Pederson, B.C., despite its relative wealth, ranked ninth among the ten provinces in university operating grants, sixth in the share of 18 to 24-year olds attending universities, colleges and institutes, and ninth in terms of university enrolments alone. The result will be that fewer and fewer qualified students from British Columbia will be able to attend universities.

More than in any part of Canada, the students, teachers and others in British Columbia are being victimized by a regime which allows Conservative provincial governments, and they are the ones doing it primarily, to divert funds, funds that ought to be used for the training of our young people—to their prestige megaprojects, whether it be a fair in downtown Vancouver, a domed football stadium or a project to subsdize the export of non-renewable resources as with Northeast coal. We have important priorities that we ought to be addressing. Surely students needs are one of them.

Referring again to the situation in my community, we have set standards in terms of the kind of people we are training there that are or ought to be beacons for other parts of Canada. Of the students attending the David Thompson University Centre in Nelson this year, 66 per cent are women students and 40 per cent are mature students. These are goals for which other institutions strive. Ours was the only institution offering university courses outside the Lower Mainland and metropolitan areas of British Columbia. This is the institution that has been decapitated.

It is these kinds of values that the provincial government of B.C. is destroying. The Liberal Government lets them get away with it by introducing and passing legislation such as we have before us. It encourages that kind of attitude. It is wrong. It is disgusting. It does little good for the Secretary of State to meet with us in Vancouver, even though he offered some assistance for which we are thankful. It is assistance the provincial government should have offered as it is that government which decided to close our institution in Nelson.

The Secretary of State offered some immediate assistance in seeking alternatives in terms of funding, programming and in financing consultants to look for other institutions which could offer courses at our local facility. But, he also made a speech to the Faculty Association of the University of British Columbia on Thursday last, March 29 in which he said then, and I quote:

It has been suggested, naively—

I wonder who is naive.

—that the Government of Canada itself is restricting accessibility by applying the six and five restraint measures to its transfers in support of post-secondary education.

He thinks we are naive. It is his Members, Liberals, and the Conservatives to our right who voted against the amendment which would have moved toward a solution of this problem when proposed by my Party yesterday.

Mr. Malone: Tell us about the polls.

Mr. Kristiansen: Do you want to talk about the Czechs, too? It is typical that the Conservatives want to play Trivial Pursuit when we are talking about the life and death of people and their livelihood from one end of this country to the other. No wonder they want to go off on their fancy diversions. People are losing their jobs, their livelihood. People are losing their lives because of the kind of policies that this Liberal Government is now pursuing and which the Conservative Opposition keeps urging upon them—cut back, cut back, cut back, and restrain them around the neck until dead. All the nice words in the world will not help them and the people we represent. They had the opportunity to vote for something of substance that would have moved us part-way toward a solution. They simply threw it aside, for whatever reasons. What the Conservatives did when voting against the amendment which my Party proposed was to put their Party loyalty to their colleagues in the British Columbia government ahead of the interests of the people they represent. That is a despicable action. I have no other word for it.

Mr. Malone: You have no other words.

Mr. Kristiansen: There we get a great contribution from the Conservative Member again.

Yesterday we debated the report stage of this Bill, a Bill which will impact severely and encourage more regressive policies such as we have seen in British Columbia and many other Conservative-dominated provinces. At the report stage of that Bill yesterday there were four NDP Members and only one Conservative who took part in the debate, while they outnumber us in this House of Commons by three to one.

Mr. Malone: Any one of us would.

Mr. Kristiansen: When they have an opportunity to say or do something, they are either silent or vote with their friends, the Liberals, to continue the status quo and see university students, teachers and communities continue to wither and die on the vine. Why is it? I am not in a position to answer. Perhaps some of them will.

We have opportunities to move forward in an attempt to provide better conditions for learning in this country. We will not further those ends and the welfare of the young people whom we represent and their communities by passing a Bill such as C-12 which is now before us. It moves in completely the wrong direction. It is no use for the Liberals to say that because the Government of British Columbia is punishing the people of B.C.—including the students of that province—that they will get even and punish the people of B.C. as well. That is not of much comfort to the people there. It is perhaps too late to appeal to the Government to change its mind in order to do in a reasonable and structured way what it ought to have done long ago, namely, attempt to insist that those we represent get a return that they can see and feel for the dollars that we expend on their behalf through this Parliament.

Provincial governments are being encouraged to get away with the murder of institutions and communities. It is time that a regime which allows and encourages that should end. We ask all Members of this House to search their conscience and decide whether six and five, that magnificent PR term that some flack dreamed up, is a proper direction for this Parliament to move. For the future of our country, I ask them to look at the facts. If they will but see what government after government is doing to the future of our young people and the existence of our communities, I am confident that they will join with us in voting against this inequitable and unfair piece of legislation. More than just an impact upon students and teachers is at stake; the impact on my home community has been devastating in broad economic terms. More than a dozen conferences scheduled for my community of 10,000 people this summer have been cancelled because the provincial Government has closed the institution where they would have taken place. We cannot afford that, Mr. Speaker. It is but one of the other effects on our communities of the measures taken by provincial Governments as a result of the negative encouragement they are receiving from the federal Government.

I ask all Hon. Members to vote against this unwise Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions and comments. If there are no questions, I recognize the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) for debate.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak on Bill C-12 which deals with federal-provincial fiscal arrangements, federal post-secondary education and the federal health contributions.

In the course of this debate we have argued, and continue to argue, that at a time when it is apparent to everyone except the federal and provincial Governments that there is a need in the country to expand what we are doing in post-secondary education, the federal and provincial government are actually cutting back on funding for those institutions.

The Government has also ignored our pleas for improved educational opportunities for women. Two-thirds of all new entrants to the labour force this decade will be women. Two-thirds of working women are concentrated in support type occupations, in the clerical and service sectors, occupations which are the most vulnerable to technological change.

Federal and provincial government cutbacks to the post-secondary education system disproportionately affect women who accounted for over 95 per cent of the increase in full-time enrolment over the last decade and whose enrolment in post-secondary education continues to increase at a higher rate than that of men.

My colleagues and I in the NDP caucus have been fighting the Bill now before Parliament that would limit federal funding increases to provinces for post-secondary education to the six and five formula. Just as women are attempting, through education, to pull themselves out of the low-wage job ghettos that entrap them, institutions are being forced by government cutbacks to further restrict women's accessibility to education.

The Canadian Council for Learning Opportunities for Women recently pointed out to a House of Commons committee studying the Bill that the education system in this country is badly out of sync with women's educational needs. In 1981-82, enrolments in high tech courses at Canadian community colleges were 95 per cent male and less then 5 per cent female. In 1982 fewer than 3 per cent of women university graduates had degrees in engineering, computer sciences or any of the sciences. Many of the math and science programs are inhospitable to women because of the way they are taught and the culture associated with them.

Another accessibility problem exists for part-time learners, the growth student group of the 1980s. It is estimated that over half the students at colleges and universities will be part-time students by the year 2000. The enrolment of women in part-time study increased by a startling 250 per cent over the last decade. In 1981-82, 66 per cent of all part-time students were women. It has been found that women are making career decisions at about the age of 30; that is when they are going back to school. But the part-time student is still perceived by both governments and institutions as not being serious. The result is that many courses and programs are not open to them, child care is almost non-existent and where it exists, faculty and support staff are given preference. The costs incurred by part-time students are the same, per course, as full-time students, but part-time students are not eligible for the $50 a month educational allowance deduction for books and transportation, and the tuition fee deduction is not transferable from the non-working spouse to the working spouse.

The federal Government recently extended loan assistance to part-time students, but in a manner that further entrenches the misconception that part-time students are not serious and are not in financial need. The federal Government merely puts up collateral for a loan to the part-time student whose only difficulty is a temporary cash-flow problem. Repayments on the loan must begin one month after it is received, with interest accruing immediately and eligibility based on a more stringent means test than that of full-time students. The use of family income criteria for loans deters the participation of married women and works to maintain their dependency on the family.

A few weeks ago, during International Women's Week the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) asked the Minister responsible for the Status of Women if she was aware of the difficulties faced by part-time learners, the majority of whom are women, and what she was doing to eliminate discrimination from the federal Loan Assistance Program. The Minister's response clearly indicated to me that she was totally unaware of this problem and had never seriously considered one of the most crucial issues facing women today—accessibility to education. She said:

> —I am painfully aware of that fact, as my sister suffers under those consequences. I reiterate that my concern is her concern, and it is something that I believe we should do something about. But again, I state very clearly that the law is not there to discriminate specifically against women. It does discriminate against part-time students and unfortunately women are the ones who suffer most. But 'twas ever thus in our society.

So much for the federal Government's concern about women in the post-secondary educational system. That concern, I suggest, is clearly seen in what the Government is attempting to do in this Bill.

Mr. Speaker, may I have permission to call it five o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): By all means. It being five o'clock the House will now proceed to consideration of private Members' business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—PRIVATE BILLS

UNITED GRAIN GROWERS LIMITED

The House resumed consideration from Monday, April 2, of the motion of Mr. Bockstael that Bill S-10, to amend the Act of incorporation of United Grain Growers Limited, be read the second time and be referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is the House ready for the question.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The question as follows: Mr. Bockstael seconded by Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi) moved that Bill S-10, an Act to amend the Act of incorporation of United Grain Growers Limited be now read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think if you would seek unanimous consent you will find that there agreement to move Bill S-10 on to Committee of the Whole and through third reading stage at this time, rather than sending it to the standing committee. There have been discussions with all Parties. The House Leader for the Official Opposition has apparently agreed to this and the House Leader for the New Democratic Party has also agreed. If you would care to proceed, Mr. Speaker, to Committee of the Whole and third reading stages at this time, I believe you will find there is consent to do that.

• (1700)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): At this time it makes it a little more difficult, because we just passed a motion to refer it to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders. However, if that is the disposition, we can reverse the decision. Is this agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, indeed there have been discussions which have taken place between the three House Leaders. There is a disposition, at least from our standpoint, that this Bill move through Committee of the Whole and be passed in all stages today.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in Committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

PUBLIC BILLS

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Shall all orders and items preceding Motion No. 62 be allowed to stand by unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot) moved that Bill C-229, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (drunk driving) be read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, of all our nation's serious problems, the issue of drinking while driving must be considered as one most needing attention. The fact that drunk driving is a serious problem is well known. The extent, however, of that seriousness is not as well appreciated. During the night-time hours a full 25 per cent of all drivers have been reported to have had alcohol in their bodies. On weekends between the hours of midnight and 3.00 a.m., 40 per cent of all drivers have been reported to have alcohol in their bodies. In terms of medical costs, property damage and loss of work or education, the total national cost every year is estimated to be some $2.5 billion. Some of these people, so drunk that they cannot speak coherently and cannot walk in a co-ordinated fashion, all to frequently climb into 5000 pounds of metal and hurl that object at some 60 miles per hour down a public throughway presenting great danger to all persons who are nearby.

What is at stake for the innocent men, women and children who become the victims of drinking drivers? Every day in Canada, Sir, some 400 persons are convicted of driving while having an intoxicating level of alcohol in their bodies. In this country 14 million persons are driving automobiles every year for a total of some 9 million miles. It is noted that in that number of 14 million drivers, 850,000 of them are involved in accidents every year.

More importantly, Sir, of those accidents in which there are fatalities, a full 50 per cent are reported to have been caused by people under the influence of alcohol. It is for those reasons we have to bring this situation to a national focus and attention. Drunk drivers, Mr. Speaker, are killing 2,500 Canadians annually. That number ought to shock us all into recognizing that the problem is of great concern.

It is not just a Canadian problem, but a North American problem. The statistics of Canada, with one-tenth of the population of the United States, interestingly enough, parallel American statistics. In effect, what these figures underline is the fact that we are culturally bound to its patterns of alcohol consumption and involvement in accidents. In the United States there has been a social cost of between $21 billion and $24 billion because of drunk drivers over the past decade. In the same period 250,000 persons lost their lives to reckless carnage or drunk driving.

In order to bring to light the seriousness of this problem I will give this example. Between 1973 and 1978 as many Canadians died from drinking and driving as Canadian soldiers were killed in the total of the Second World War. In the United States in any two-year period of this decade, there are as many people who are killed as were killed in all of the Vietnam war. That is the extent to which drinking and driving has become a social problem in North America.

In the United States somewhere between one of 500 to one of 2,000 of impaired drivers are arrested and convicted of impaired driving. More than one half of all drunk drivers involved in fatal accidents in the U.S. had blood alcohol levels of more than twice the legal limit. In a study in British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, it was pointed out that between 1973 and 1978 some 11,500 persons were killed in automobile accidents, and in 42.5 per cent of those cases one driver had been drinking. Stop and think, Sir, about what I have just said. In 42.5 per cent of the accidents which killed 500 persons, one driver had been drinking. Those statistics underline that the situation needs real action, and my Bill proposes to take that action.

We know it is incumbent upon our society to start a war against persons who drink and drive. We need to heighten the level of awareness of those who think there is something socially cute about crawling into an automobile light in spirit—no pun intended—but in a totally irresponsible way, attempting to handle a machine they cannot handle. Drunk driving must become socially unacceptable, Mr. Speaker.

Interestingly enough, Sir, research in California and Washington indicates that when we take the licence away from a person it does act as an effective deterrent. More importantly, Sir, the research also demonstrates that when there is a large amount of publicity to the taking away of a licence, the deterrent value is greatly increased. That, also, is what my Bill would do. It would mean suspending licences automatically, in a harsh way. But, Sir, that harshness must be balanced against the dangers and damage to society as a result of drinking and driving.

I note, Mr. Speaker, that the Gentleman of the Black Rod will be arriving. I would only ask that my time be extended as necessary. I will continue until the knock draws your attention.

Drunk drivers must be held responsible for their actions. Drinking and driving should not be socially acceptable. The drunk driver must be viewed more as a turkey than as a man. The John Wayne syndrome of heavy drinking in North America is too dangerous and too expensive.

Some will argue, Mr. Speaker, that my Bill is harsh. They will argue that people need to drive their cars for reasons of work or care of their family, or to attend church. However, the fact that 2,600 Canadians died in 1980 because of drunk drivers is reason enough to bring an abrupt halt to this "socially acceptable" murder. Criminal law treats those who cause death and injury as having committed a felony. It should be no less serious an offence to kill or maim while under the influence of alcohol. If we are to be our brother's keeper, then it is best that we act with all the preventive measures we can. The prevention of drinking and driving is a matter of the deterrent.

I want to set before you, Mr. Speaker, an example of what has happened in some of the Norse countries where it is a very serious offence to be found driving a car while under the influence of alcohol. In some cases it can mean a suspension of a driver's licence for life. In those countries it is very common to find one person at a party who drinks coffee or soda pop and takes the responsibility for making sure that the others are delivered home safely. We need similar penalties to accomplish the same thing in this country. We cannot afford, neither in human life nor property damage, to allow persons to irresponsibly get behind the wheel of an automobile and aim it like a ballistic missile at innocent men, women and children. We need to bring this issue to the attention of all Canadians, and that can best be done when the penalties are severe enough and the deterrent is strong enough that it is imprinted on their minds.

For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I have a bill before the House which calls for a penalty, for the first offence of drinking and driving, of suspension of a driver's licence for one year. A second offence would mean licence suspension for three years. Subsequent offences would mean five years' suspension. In those cases where there has been death or maiming as a result of a person driving while drinking, then the suspension in the first offence would be for ten years and in a subsequent offence for life. While that may at first blush seem harsh, we have to remember the fact that between 1973 and 1979 more Canadians died from drunk driving accidents than were killed in action during World War II. In the past two years there were more people killed by drunk drivers in the U.S. than the total number of Americans killed during the entire Vietnam War.

We have had in North America a sort of culture of slapping leather and drinking hard on a Saturday night at the square dance, drinking until one finds he can no longer stand. Then along came a European culture of drinking while we eat, of having wine with meals, and drinking socially in the evening. It did not come into North America and replace the first culture. It came and added to the first culture. Now we have a continent which does both, rather than having selected one or the other. The result is that on one side of the ledger we have situations of maiming, disfiguration, ruined careers, ruined relationships, the loss of self-confidence and the loss of life itself. We have the loss of $2.4 billion in Canada annually from automobile accidents. On the other side of the ledger we have the question of the right to drive.

It is upon that concept that I wish to focus for a moment. Largely because of the great diverseness of our land, which is the second largest nation in the world, we have come to believe that transportation is a right, that being able to drive a car is a right. I submit it must be viewed as a privilege. It ought always to be viewed as a privilege because every province requires that we become licensed before we can drive. Every province requires that you pass a driver's test before you can drive. Since it is the rule of the provinces that you must pass a test to drive, surely we ought not allow persons to drive on the basis that they are too drunk to walk. Yet in so many instances, after having passed the test initially, in later years persons climb into automobiles while inebriated and without ability to drive. Somehow in a cultural context they still presume it to be a right rather than a privilege.

My next submission is not in my Bill, but I would recommend that it become a part of our thinking towards driving. In recognition of the fact that to drive is a privilege rather than a right, before any person is given a driver's license they should sign a form giving consent for persons arriving on the scene of an accident to take a blood sample for the measurement of alcohol. Consider all the media attention which was given to the Vietnam War in the 1960s and 1970s. Then recognize that in any two year period in the United States there are as many people killed by drunk drivers as there were in the whole Vietnam War. That ought to underscore the seriousness of the problem.

I do not think we are being too harsh at all when we submit that we need stiffer penalties. Although it is not in my Bill, I would advocate that upon receipt of a driver's license we sign consent for blood samples to be taken. It can work both ways. If we are sober it will prove that alcohol was not a factor. If we are not sober, society ought to have the right to know that.

I would like to read one headline which I could have spent my entire allotted time reading from different papers across Canada. "Drunk driver gets 30 days for crash in which man died". Is not law something that should parallel the extent and seriousness of the crime? We climb irresponsibly into automobiles while inebriated. All across North America people are being killed at rates equal to or greater than that of war. We need another war, Sir. We need a war against drunken drivers. We need a war which will place a real deterrent against drunken driving. We need a war which will change our cultural mindset so that children attending high school dances will learn that they can have a good time without bragging later about how much they drank. We must learn that people can go to social events without alcohol being an essential ingredient. More importantly, we must recognize that we all have limits. We must realize that the laws are such that if we are inebriated we had best seek alternative transportation.

I brought this Bill to the House of Commons in hopes of raising the level of consciousness of this serious problem. I hope that Government Members and Members of the NDP will give it their full support. I can assure Members of all Parties that this issue is rising very much in the Canadian consciousness. In communities all across Canada there are growing concerns that something be done to curtail the extent of the use of alcohol while driving an automobile.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I rise this afternoon to speak on Bill C-229. I would like to commend the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) for putting this Bill forward. In his speech he outlined the tremendous carnage, hardship, death and destruction which takes place on our highways every night due to alcohol and impaired driving. On February 7 the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) tabled Bill C-19 which deals with the same topic. There can be no doubt that those families that have lost children and loved ones dues to impaired driving on our highways are more conscious of this serious social problem.

I will stand down for Royal Assent, Mr. Speaker.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable Deputy to the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that when the House went up to the Senate Chamber, the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give in Her Majesty's name the Royal Assent to the following Bills:

Bill C-21, an Act to provide borrowing authority;

Bill S-10, an Act to amend the Act of incorporation of United Grain Growers Limited.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING PENALTIES FOR DRUNK DRIVERS

The House resumed consideration of the Motion of Mr. Malone, that Bill C-229, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (drunk driving), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. A few moments ago you were kind enough to give us a good tour down the hallway to the Senate. I wonder if you might also seek unanimous consent that the amount of time that was lost in so doing might be extended to Private Members' hour. I know that government Members certainly would not want to talk my Bill out, and I am sure the Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) and the Members of the NDP would agree it is a good Bill and one that is needed.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to extend Private Members' hour to 11 minutes past six?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There does not appear to be unanimous consent.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member spoke to his Bill C-229, he said that there really needs to be an increased awareness of the problem of drinking and driving in this country. I believe that is very true. I believe that debating this Bill before the House this afternoon will strengthen that awareness and hopefully will result in legislation being implemented by the House.

He pointed out in his speech that the cost in human terms of alcohol related deaths was some 2,500 a year and $2.5 billion in property loss.

I believe that the Department of National Health and Welfare pointed out a few years ago that 60 per cent to 65 per cent of the deaths in this country were related to lifestyles, such as smoking, being overweight, eating and drinking habits. Perhaps we are most conscious of the young life that is snuffed out by a drunken driver.

• (1740)

I am pleased the Hon. Member brought this Bill before the House. I think it is an issue that needs to be ventilated and discussed. It is not just a legal problem, as the Hon. Member pointed out, it is a huge social problem. This Bill proposes that everyone convicted of an impaired driving or related offence be automatically prohibited from driving a motor vehicle for a specific period of time. In the case of a first offence, the prohibition is a minimum of one year; for a second offence a minimum of three years; and, for a third or subsequent offence a minimum of five years. An offence of driving while disqualified, with a minimum term of imprisonment for five years is also proposed. Bill C-229 is indicative of the search for single-factor solutions to a complex, multi-faceted problem. It represents the view that a single legal counter measure will have a significant impact on the impaired driving problem.

Research in the area of impaired driving indicates that impaired drivers are not a totally homogeneous group. Some are deterred by the usual sanctions such as fines, others will not be deterred no matter how severe the sanction.

The fact that the impaired drivers range from drivers whose impaired driving was an isolated incident to those drivers who possess deviant drinking and driving attitudes, to those drivers who suffer from alcohol dependency, dictates that impaired drivers be treated differently according to the purpose of the sanction—whether it be deterrence, rehabilitation or medical treatment—for that particular offender, rather than applying a single penalty to all offenders, as has been done in the past.

The "high-risk" alcoholic impaired driver may respond to treatment and the court should be empowered to order it, rather than imposing an excessively harsh penalty which may not be effective. By the same token it may, in some instances, be beneficial to prohibit an offender from driving for a lengthy period of time, or to immobilize his vehicle, impound it. These alternatives should be available to the court. A single mandatory penalty to be applied to all offenders without alternatives where appropriate will not reduce the incidence of impaired driving. The availability of a range of sentencing alternatives such as fines, jail terms, immobilization orders, prohibition orders, treatment programs and driver education or improvement progams will allow a judge to tailor a sentence to the specific needs of the offender. Given the nature of the problem and the results of research in this area, such a policy is essential if we are to combat and overcome this terrible social and legal problem.

As I am sure the Hon. Member is aware, these sentencing alternative measures, and other measures concerning the improved enforcement of the impaired driving laws through the acquisition of blood samples, and a clearer definition and presentation of all driving-related offences, are presented as a clear, concise, cohesive package in Bill C-19, presented to the House on February 7, 1984.

In addition to the above-mentioned measures, research indicates that increased law enforcement which accordingly increases the public's perceived risk of apprehension and punishment may be a more effective deterrent than simply increasing penalties as are suggested in the Bill.

In addition, research indicates that changing the prevalent social acceptability of drinking and driving may offer a greater preventive effect than any changes in the law or the degree to which it is enforced. For instance, when we host parties at homes in the evenings should we allow someone to leave the home after consuming alcohol and drive a car? Surely there is some public responsibility on the host. The responsibility should not all be left to the driver, although ultimately he will pay the penalty for his actions. This is a social problem, and we should all work toward ultimate solution. Thus, a non-legal approach appears to offer a great potential for effectiveness, and should be stressed and combined with the legal approach, as is indicated in Bill C-19.

Bill C-229 is presented on the prevalent belief that a single legal amendment will have a long-term impact on what is essentially a social problem. Research from around the world has indicated that this in fact is not likely to happen. The solution lies in a commitment to a long-term integrated approach designed to effect attitudinal and behavioural changes.

Clearly no one drunk-driving counter measure on its own will be effective to solve this problem. The solution, if there is one, is to be found in the combination and integration of all measures—ranging from legislation, education and media campaigns to rehabilitation of the detected drunk-driver and the inducement of discussion and general concern in the community as a whole.

The authors emphasize the need for community involvement to effect social attitude change through education and other intervention techniques. They note that:

"—if we are to have a meaningful impact on drunk-driving, we must convince not merely convicted drunk-drivers and a significant proportion of potential drunk-drivers to refrain from this practice, but also the community at large to minimize those social factors contributing to the problem. This requires a wide repertoire of intervention techniques, including educating the public about drinking and driving, about the relevant laws and sanctions, and about the costs associated with being charged and convicted of a drunk-driving offence; increasing subjective and objective probabilities of apprehension; highly visible and consistent enforcement of the relevant laws; rehabilitation of convicted drivers; and, finally, the adoption of new techniques as they are developed."

What we found on the Ontario highways last December when there was a massive enforcement of the laws, spot-checks, and so on, was that the actual number of convicted and apprehended drinking drivers dropped dramatically because people were made more conscious of the danger of drinking and driving. People talked about it at parties and they were conscious and very careful of the problem.

In the past, governments in all countries have relied primarily on the legal approach—steadily increasing and stiffening the penalties—based on deterring persons from driving after drinking by the threat of arrest and punishment. It has become apparent, however, that the impaired driver will not be deterred simply by increasing penalties. More thought must be given to the problem of impaired driving; the simplistic view that excessive penalties is the only solution to this problem is probably not the only one.

I propose that this has been a very worthwhile Bill put before the House. I hope the Government's Bill, Bill C-19, which is designed to deal with this problem as well, will receive passage in the House, because it deals with this serious problem. It is one for all sectors of our society and one to which we must, working together, find the solution.

• (1750)

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-229, an Act to amend the Criminal Code with respect to drunk driving, is a very commendable attempt to deal with a very serious problem. The problem of drunk driving is one which is responsible for the death of thousands of people on our highways every year. This Bill was brought about as a result of a loophole which has been found in our current laws, and a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in Boggs. The proposed amendment to the Criminal Code would make it possible for suspension of driving licenses on conviction of impaired driving and would increase the time of suspension very considerably.

The Hon. Member who introduced the Bill pointed out the very serious toll on the highways resulting from drunk driving. For 1981, 5,379 people in Canada were killed in traffic collisions. Estimates are that roughly half of these were caused by drunk driving.

If we look at the question as to how best to meet this issue and to what extent we can use our criminal law to deter drunk driving, we have to look at the question of certainty of conviction and punishment, and the severity which has been proposed. Unfortunately we have no evidence that increasing severity, within the bounds that would be permissible, has actually helped in reducing drunk driving. Scandinavian studies of incarceration show no reduction in convictions after the introduction of the mandatory jail sentences, nor were persons sentenced to prison any less likely to repeat the offence than those who were only fined. The certainty of being convicted and the certainty of being arrested and charged for drunk driving in Canada, as elsewhere, is unfortunately very low. Estimates are that there are only 1 in 2,000 incidents of impaired driving resulting in arrest.

In Canada after the introduction of the breathalyser test there was a lot of publicity. People were more aware of the possibility of conviction and there was for awhile a reduction in drunk driving. However, people then began to realize that their chances of being caught were frankly not very great, and the rates went up again. The Canadian Addictions Foundation recommends very strongly that we increase the possibility or probability of being convicted rather than deal with severity of sentence. The probability of apprehension has to go up. People have to know that. People have to be aware that they have a good chance of being caught.

The best way of doing this of course is through spot checks. I might point out that a study done by Transport Canada showed that 77 per cent of regular drivers want more spot checks, that they want to increase the probability of being caught. A survey of 237 experts on drunk driving recommended increased detection. They rated increased severity of sentencing as minimal in having an effect. They also recommended lowering the amount of blood alcohol allowed before a conviction of drunk driving would be registered to .04 or .05, rather than the .08 which we have now.

The problem of merely suspending drivers is that people unfortunately continue to drive after they have been suspended and drive impaired. Passing a law does not necessarily change behaviour. In fact, it seldom changes behaviour. The solutions will not be easy ones. Alcoholism treatment is very difficult. We have enormous research literature on alcoholism treatment. We do not have any reliable methods. There is no way that we can say that, if only society invested in a certain kind of treatment centre or a certain treatment method, we could deal with problem drinkers and once their alcoholism problem has been dealt with they would not go out and drive while drunk again. We do not have any such obvious methods to turn to. Therefore, since we cannot effectively treat the problem after it happens, we have to deal more with preventing it in the first place, that is preventing excessive drunkenness and excessive drinking.

We have to address the whole issue of levels of consumption. Drunkenness is related to levels of consumption. If we increase consumption in our society, we will increase the number of people who consume excessively, and of that number a certain proportion will go out and drive after having consumed too much alcohol. It is naive to believe that we can increase consumption, and that all this increase will simply be by the people who will drink very moderately and then stay home.

Let me quote the Canadian Addictions Foundation expert:

> A person can drive home safely hundreds of times after drinking. This conflicts with messages about thousands of people being killed and injured and about the tremendous risks involved, including arrest and punishment. We tend to rely on our own experience and conclude that we are not part of the drunk driving problem.

If we are to deal with this consumption problem, we must deal with the factors that stimulate consumption. One of them is the price of alcohol. Much as we hate to think that higher taxes are any good, higher taxes mean higher prices and actually succeed in reducing consumption. I say this for the benefit of people who participated in the debate on the tourist industry last week. Many Hon. Members recommended reduced prices of alcohol. They cannot have it both ways. If they want reduced prices of alcohol we will have increased consumption, some of which will result in increased deaths on the highways.

Advertising is another issue. It is legal to advertise alcohol in Canada. Enormous amounts of money are spent on advertising. Advertising of alcohol links alcohol with sexual attractiveness, sexual success, sports, fitness, the outdoor life, good wholesome fun, things which are desirable. Of course we should not be surprised if people then go out and increase their consumption accordingly.

I am not a prohibitionist. It is not feasible to prohibit alcohol. That experiment has been tried, and we know its result was an increase in organized crime. However, I am a prohibitionist in regard to advertising. We certainly should not allow the encouragement of consumption. Legal consumption, yes, but let us not encourage it. Of course free booze encourages consumption. We have all kinds of institutions which provide free booze. That is a policy that ought to be considered.

Our society sends out mixed messages—social drinking is all right. We serve booze on Parliament Hill and we let people drive after the fact. On the one hand it is a criminal offence to drive after drinking a certain amount and, on the other hand, we make it socially acceptable to do it. We pay lip service by saying what a terrible problem this is, but sometimes we turn around and become part of the problem ourselves. If we were serious about it, one thing we could do even on Parliament Hill would be to provide a breathalyser test and allow people to find out what level they had consumed and to see whether it was too much for them to be driving.

If we want to improve the problem of enforcement, we have to change enforcement methods. We have to get after people before they are out on the highways and before they are killing people. Policing parking lots around drinking establishments is one method. There are various kinds of practical methods. Since I do not have time to deal with them all, I suggest that instead of merely trying to address the problem of punishment through Bill C-19, the federal Government should have a conference involving federal and provincial Solicitors General, Attorneys General, Ministers of National Health and Welfare and bring these people together to deal with this question.

Since my time is running out, I wonder if I could have unanimous consent to spend another five minutes on this subject. Failing that, I think this is an important Bill. I am sorry the Liberals have not extended the full amount of time so that it could be discussed. I certainly plan to sit down before six o'clock if I do not obtain unanimous consent to continue for a few more minutes. I think we should have the Bill passed. It should go to committee. It is too important a problem to have the Liberals say that the Government is dealing with it adequately in another Bill, because that other Bill does nothing more than deal with the question of penalties as well. Do I have unanimous consent to continue, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The practice is that Private Members' Hour terminates at six o'clock according to the rules. The Hon. Member is correct in asking for unanimous consent, because this is what would be required. Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. Member to continue?

An Hon. Member: No.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Unfortunately there is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Mazankowski: A Liberal member said, "no".

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

FINANCE—FINANCIAL DEFICITS OF ATLANTIC PROVINCES. (B) REQUEST THAT MINISTER INITIATE NEW GRANTS PROGRAM

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, the Atlantic Provinces are going in the red to the tune of $640 million this year, despite a severe austerity program which features a freeze on staff and strict restraint on wages and expenditures. To the credit of employees of the provincial governments, everyone has co-operated to the limit. Indeed, an agreement between a very responsible group, the New Brunswick Teachers' Association, and the Provincial Government of New Brunswick provides no wage increase for the first year of a new contract. In addition, provincial governments have increased taxes to the limit of their potential. Any further increase would be counter-productive. Taxes have reached the point of diminishing returns.

Forty-eight per cent of the revenues of the Atlantic Provinces comes from Ottawa. This dependency has been built up over many years, and it is a worthy goal of regional development to put in place a strong secondary manufacturing base that would increase the private sector component of the Atlantic economies and increase the tax field by providing more corporate and personal taxpayers so that ultimately the Atlantic Provinces can stand on their own feet, throw off the bond of dependency and eliminate the dependence on transfer and equalization payments.

An investment of this nature in the Atlantic provinces is the long-term solution to the problem and it is an investment that will pay the federal Government great dividends by eventually eliminating the need for financial assistance. In the Atlantic Provinces today, wage earners receive two-thirds of the wages paid in other parts of Canada and the unemployment rate is the highest in the nation.

In facing the short-term need for money, the Atlantic Provinces are very limited in the areas they can look to. Clearly taxes have reached their limit and borrowing is not an attractive possibility because any further borrowing may see a decline in the credit rating for provincial bonds from A to B, and it is common knowledge that the largest purchases of bonds from the Atlantic Provinces are pension funds which are not allowed to purchase B bonds.

With the passage of Bill C-12, New Brunswick will receive $3.3 million less for post-secondary entitlement than the current fiscal year; Nova Scotia will receive $4.1 million less; Newfoundland will receive $2.7 million less; and Prince Edward Island will receive $.6 million less. Clearly, it is in the area of federal transfers that we have to look for assistance in the short term.

When I asked him about this in the House, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) indicated that he was just not sure where he could look to find the funds because he, too, was facing a tight budget restriction. In this regard I have some suggestions, and I refer to the Auditor General's report. The Auditor General suggests that the inadequacy of existing control is illustrated by Canadair's reported loss of $1.4 billion for 1982. This is at page 18 of the Auditor General's 1983 report.

The Auditor General points out that to create an appearance of reduced operating losses, Crown corporations have been taking more money than needed from Government, investing it and spending the interest against an operating loss or to purchase assets. He points to Devco, $57 million; Canada Ports Corporation; $20.4 million; and VIA Rail has more than $129 million in surplus funds invested. Loto Canada, which ceased its lottery operations in 1979, but remained in operation until 1983, owes the Government $14.4 million.

Canadians will have paid about $4.6 billion to oil companies through the Petroleum Incentives Program by 1985 with no adequate review of such matters as security of oil supply, the effect on the level of exploration, the success rate in finding more oil and success in attracting Canadian investment.

At page 535, the Auditor General notes that the Department of Transport made payments of $282 million to railways without enabling legislation, and the Department of Transport paid $46.8 million in a double payment to CN which was not recovered. This is at page 536.

These are some areas to which the Minister of Finance might direct his attention if he is serious about a program to help the Atlantic Provinces in the short term. In the long term, as I have indicated, we have to develop common goals and objectives with the provinces and work together to create a climate attractive to industry and provide incentives—real incentives—for industrial development and expansion.

Other areas where we might look for assistance are in the bail-outs of some of our Canadian corporations. Surely if we have billions of dollars to spend bailing out our Canadian corporations, we should have some funds available to assist provinces that are trying desperately to help themselves.

Maislin has cost the Government about $33.4 million and Massey-Ferguson received a loan guarantee of $125 million for non-voting preferred shares. In July 1982, Ottawa ended up with 62 per cent of the share issue.

The Government's financial commitment to Canadair even last month was $1,836 million. This figure includes the $46 million purchase price, loan guarantees of $1.35 billion and equity infusions of $440 million. It is more now.

The Government's financial commitment to de Havilland to date totals $751 million, composed of a $41 million purchase price, loan guarantees of $456 million and equity infusions of $260 million. It is no secret that the Minister can find money when he wants to and I want to identify these areas as some possibilities to assist the Minister in his search.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Hon. Member's time is up.

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest and sympathy to the remarks of the Hon. Member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie) concerning the financial problems confronting the Atlantic Provinces in general and the Province of New Brunswick in particular. As the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) indicated to Members on January 25, he has recently met with the New Brunswick Minister of Finance on this subject and the Minister's request for special assistance, over and above that already given, is being examined.

In the course of this examination, the position of New Brunswick is being compared with that of other provinces to ascertain how levels of debt compare, how levels of taxation compare and how the capacities of the various provinces to raise revenues compare. Officials of the two Governments will be meeting in the course of this review, following which the Minister will look at it again.

During this examination, the Minister will have to consider his own fiscal position and deficit, neither of which leaves much room for meeting the numerous requests for assistance that he is receiving.

I would like to call attention to the very large assistance that the federal Government already gives to the Atlantic Provinces. This is provided in three principal ways: through transfers to provincial and local governments; through transfers to persons; and through direct employment and other direct expenditures. In all three cases the share of federal assistance and expenditures going to the Atlantic Provinces is well above the average for all provinces.

Transfers to the Governments of the Atlantic Provinces will be nearly $3.5 billion in the present fiscal year. Almost $1.9 billion of this amount will be in the form of unconditional equalization payments. Contributions through cash and tax transfers for the support of hospital insurance, medical care insurance and post-secondary education will be well in excess of $1.1 billion. These are statutory programs and Members will be aware that the Atlantic Provinces recently received a windfall increase of about $60 million as a result of a mid-year change in the estimate of the nation's gross national product by Statistics Canada.

Federal support for the Atlantic Provinces is also very large through transfers to persons, oil import subsidies, salaries and wages and other direct expenditures. As a consequence, total federal expenditures in New Brunswick in 1981 amounted to almost 50 per cent of the Province's gross domestic product. The percentages for the other Atlantic Provinces are also very high. This leaves little doubt about the commitment of the Government to support and assist New Brunswick and the other Atlantic Provinces.

NATIONAL REVENUE—REPORTED CONFISCATION OF CHILDREN'S BANK ACCOUNTS. (B) TAXPAYERS' MEETING AT ALDERGROVE, B.C.

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, it is inevitable that this Parliament seems to carry on; and there are a couple of other inevitabilities. One day we shall all die, and throughout our existence on this earth we shall all pay taxes. The problem is facing taxes. We cannot change death, and there are a number of things we cannot change. We probably cannot change the fact that we have to pay taxes, but we certainly can change the fact that when we pay them it should be with equity and justice. Throughout history there have been references to tax collectors. There have been biblical references, and references in the doomsday book; everything you have is recorded and the Government takes its share. It does not matter what the "ism" is, whether it is totalitarianism on the right side or the left, there is always the extraction of taxes from the individual for what is presumed to be the common good.

Theoretically, we live in a better system. We live in a system of democracy and that system provides justice and equity. The Government has a special role to play in the balance between the taxpayer on one side and the tax collector on the other. Government should be more than just the tax collector. It should, in fact, be the fulcrum in the balance which assures equity and justice.

Obviously, the tax collector must have power to collect the taxes and the taxpayer must have the ability to produce taxes. I do not object to the power of the tax collector. However, I expect the Government to stand in the middle and provide the balance which assures equity. This is not happening in the case of this particular Minister. He has moved away from this role. He has passed over this role and the scales of justice have tipped. The Minister does not stand with control in the centre, being fair to both sides. He has tilted that fairness to the side of the tax collector who has been allowed more freedom and right under the revenue collection act than in fact he should have. The power vacuum has been filled by the tax collector in a very unjust and unconscionable manner.

The person who is responsible for this is the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières). He can make a scapegoat of his Deputy Minister. He can fire him and let him take the blame. However, although the advice may have come from the Deputy Minister, the Minister in fact was the one who took the advice and implemented it. His ministerial responsibility is what is at stake here, and that has not been resolved adequately. The wrong Minister has resigned. It should have been the Minister, not the Deputy Minister. The Minister should give his resignation to this House of Commons.

He tells us he has figured it all out, he has had an education, but his education has been at the expense of not just the strong in our society, but of the the weak and poor who are not able to protect their own rights. And then we have the collection of money from children; the collection of money from the parents through the children as in the case I raised. It does not matter that in the end the money was paid back into the child's bank account. That has nothing to do with it.

The fact is that Revenue Canada did place the order, the order went to the bank and the bank did take $34 out of this young child's account in the name of Revenue Canada, which is under the orders of the Minister. The Minister stole that money from the bank account of that child. Even if it was done in error and was corrected, the fact that it could occur indicates something is very wrong. The Minister can say it is the bank's fault but the bank is regulated by the Government of Canada. It is not the bank's fault if the Government of Canada allows that power to be abused in that manner. The Minister of Revenue caused the action to begin and it went too far.

Did he make a recommendation that the Bank Act be changed to make sure that a person needs a warrant if he is going to dip into the bank account of any child or third party of any kind? It is not just a child's account that is in jeopardy, but the parents' or anyone they can tie in in any way with the person they are trying to claim the taxes from.

I am very concerned at the hurt I have seen in my community. It is not the big guy, the guy who can buy the lawyers and accountants to protect him, it is the little guy who is being forced into bankruptcy. It is the little guy who has suffered unfortunate incident upon unfortunate incident, and the most unfortunate of all, they all tell you, is the way they have been treated and victimized by this Department.

I also raised the question of a meeting which had been held where people said that someone from Revenue Canada was out in the parking lot taking down licence plate numbers. Everyone believed that. Whether or not they took down licence plate numbers, whether it was Revenue Canada or whoever does not matter. What is wrong is that the people who attended that meeting were in such a state of fear of Revenue Canada that they would believe this to be so. That kind of power, that kind of terrorism, by a Minister, by the Government, must stop now.

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, it is with regret that I find myself in a position of answering accusations which barely merit a reply, since they are based on a mistake. It continue to astound me how quickly the news media reports proliferate and how long they take to die, regardless of their accuracy. The Hon. Member's question on whether it is true that Revenue Canada has confiscated bank accounts of children to pay the tax assessments of the parents should not even be raised in this House, because it is so unthinkable, a reply only gives it dignity. As the Minister has already made clear in his reply, the mistake was made by banking officials. However, reporting of that mistake did not equal in coverage the reporting of the orginal story.

It is most unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, that some of the practices of Revenue Canada have been so maligned in recent months, and not for the benefit of the taxpayers, but for very narrow interests which are basically political in nature and to some extent self-serving. In this case it is unfortunate that the mistake was made, not by the Revenue officials but by the banking officials. Yet the Department is being blamed.

I have been invited in recent weeks to discuss some of the grievances raised in public meetings. I have no hesitation in admitting that in the collection of tax, which is never going to be regarded as a popular occupation, mistakes or errors of judgment do occur. However, the wholesale condemnation of the system is a very great disservice to the Canadian taxpaying public. In a country which has until now been able to boast one of the most efficient and honest tax systems in the world, such wholesale condemnation harms not the Government so much as those of us whose taxes run this country.

The Hon. Member referred to another question he raised, and I just want to touch on that very briefly. I feel he has fallen into the trap of distinguishing a bit of gossip, and unsubstantiated and completely false rumour by bringing it to the attention of the House of Commons. The suggestion was made that tax officials, after agreeing to attend the meeting of farmers, went to the parking lot with flashlights to take down licence plate numbers of those attending the meeting. That suggestion obtained the reply it deserved from the Minister on February 6, that the conclusions the Hon. Member was trying to draw were, and I quote, "too ridiculous to even be considered".

According to the information I received, the meeting in question was attended by three officials from the Vancouver district office. They were there at the request of organizers of a group of farmers protesting audit action in the area. The tax officials were there to answer questions, trying to interpret the tax law, and to explain the routes available to taxpayers who disagreed with the position of the Department. They were there to be open and available to the taxpayers. To turn around and accuse them of such low tactics is not only ludicrous, it is unfair and unworthy of any Member of this House. To talk about unsubstantiated rumours in a place which is known as the rumour mill of Canada, is grossly unfair.

PUBLIC WORKS—USE OF MUNICIPAL WASTES TO GENERATE STEAM

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, in 1980 the Ontario Ministry of Energy, Public Works Canada, the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton and Ontario Hydro agreed to study the feasibility of using municipal wastes in the national capital area to generate, within the steam plant, heat and cooling materials for federal buildings. Such a project was of course of interest to the federal and provincial governments as it would replace a non-renewable fossil fuel, natural gas, which is used now, with a renewable fuel, municipal waste. Consequently it would have an important impact in that it would replace a scarce resource with a renewable one.

Consultants' reports on the feasibility of this energy-from-waste project indicated it was technically and economically viable at either the Le Breton Flats in the riding of Ottawa-Centre, or the Overbrook Coventry Road site in my riding. Strong opposition to this project was voiced by quite a few people at public meetings which I attended. Many people came out to indicate to all levels of Government how they felt about this project.

I was present at one meeting where there were about 800 people in the Overbrook area. I must recognize the work of the citizens' groups to bring this matter to public attention. I think it was quite important. I remember addressing the meeting and saying, in certain terms, that as far as I was concerned, amongst other things, it was very bad urban planning to thrust an energy waste plant into a residential downtown area. We were told at that meeting that 100 garbage trucks an hour would be going through the community at peak periods. You can well imagine the pollution, the noise, and the odour caused by all these trucks going through a neighbourhood. Without getting into the technical and environmental impact of the plant itself, you can imagine how this would affect the quality of life in one's neighbourhood.

Early this week I received a letter from a Mrs. Fern Casey, Chairperson representing the citizens against the incinerator plant in Overbrook, advising me that the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton would seek an early meeting with the appropriate federal and provincial Ministers to review the recommendations of these reports which had been ordered with a view to arriving at a decision regarding the project.

On April 4 I asked the Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc) if his Department had taken a position relating to the financing and possible participation of his Department in this project. I specifically asked the Minister:

> Given the environmental difficulties and the high costs of this project, will the Minister's Department take a position of instigating, promoting, or supporting this steam plant in the near future?

I purposely utilized the word "instigate, promote and support" because in my view that covered any possible involvement of Public Works Canada in this project.

The Minister answered that on the one hand he had sent a letter that morning to the Province of Ontario and to the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton informing them that: "—the Department of Public Works and the National Capital Commission will not be proponents of this project".

The purpose of this debate tonight, Mr. Speaker, is to find out what the Minister meant by this Shakespearian term "proponent". Oxford dictionary defines it as "to put forward a motion, theory or proposal". I admit, with all those trying to understand the Minister's choice of words, that it would be appreciated if he could be more specific and clear as to his Department's intention in the incinerator project. This debate allows the Minister to explain the Government's position.

I take it that the Parliamentary Secretary can confirm that indeed this $110 million steam garbage incinerator has been dumped. I also expect the Parliamentary Secretary to explain why the federal government is now withdrawing its support from the project so that the other partners, the Ontario Government and the Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton, will better understand the decision. As a matter of fact, if we do not have a client for the steam, why build the plant?

In closing, I would like to remind my colleagues that nothing prevents the Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton, the Province of Ontario or Ontario Hydro, for that matter, to go ahead with this project if they can finance it and find a site in the periphery of Ottawa. I can well understand that they would like to deal with garbage disposal in the Ottawa area. I can also understand that they would like to put it to use in creating steam which could be turned into electricity that can be fed into Ontario Hydro's power grid and eventually bring in enough money to warrant the cost efficiency of building this plant.

I said before that I thought it was wrong to put this plant either in LeBreton Flats or in the Overbrook community. I think it is bad urban planning and I wish the Parliamentary Secretary would confirm to me that indeed the federal government is getting out of this project.

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I would like to start by congratulating the Hon. Member on his constant dedication to the interests of his constituents.

He is right in saying that in 1980, the Ontario Ministry of Energy invited Public Works Canada, together with the Ottawa-Carleton Regional Municipality, to participate in a major feasibility study for an energy-from-waste steam plant in the Ottawa-Carleton region. The decision was made on the basis of an initial study made in the seventies, according to which there might be a shortage of energy to provide for heating and cooling in the central zone and the central heating system on Cliff Street might not be adequate.

After the study was carried out in co-operation with the Ontario Ministry of Energy, the Department of Public Works had meanwhile launched an intensive energy conservation program. The program was so successful that total energy demand dropped considerably, including demand for energy produced by the plant on Cliff Street. As the study started by the Minister of Energy was completed, Public Works Canada found that the demand for steam over and above existing capacity no longer existed.

That is why the Department will no longer be promoting the installation of an energy-from-waste plant in the Ottawa-Carleton Regional Municipality.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

OIL COMPANIES' PRICING POLICIES

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, the Thursday, April 5, edition of The Globe and Mail has revealed the court decision which found Imperial Oil Limited guilty of unfair dealings with independent retailers of gasoline in its efforts to keep the price of gasoline artificially high. It reported: "Judge James Trotter had reserved his decision following Imperial's recent one-week trial on a charge under the Combines Investigations Act of discriminating against the company because of its low pricing policies."

This is no different from the case in Peterborough, Ontario, where the Crown corporation, Petro-Canada, has literally forced an independent retailer to sell off eight service stations because of Petro-Canada's refusal to sell him petroleum products at the same discounted figure it sells to its company-operated service stations in the same market area.

Petro-Canada was selling gas during the week of March 26 at 37.9 cents a litre, yet it was charging Mr. Grant Seabrooke, President of Seabrooke Motors Limited, 40 cents a litre wholesale. The result was to cut off supply by allowing its own company operations to sell for less than it was willing to sell to Mr. Seabrooke. Grant Seabrooke's retail outlets are now being sold because they can no longer compete against Canada's own state-owned oil company, Petro-Canada.

ATTITUDE OF OPPOSITION PARTIES

Mr. Pierre Deniger (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, for some time now the Opposition has been expressing its indignation about certain practices of Revenue Canada. It seems my hon. friends opposite have nothing better to do than dig up a thousand and one things our tax employees have done wrong. This little exercise in denunciation, which is running out of steam and has failed to come up with any new ideas, has always been partial, in every sense of the word. The Progressive Conservative Party, blinkered by its extreme partisanship, has a very twisted view of the facts.

Mr. Speaker, the real situation is quite different. A constituent of mine in Greenfield Park wrote to me recently that officers at the St. Hubert and Shawinigan office had been extremely polite and very helpful, and that they had no trouble finding a solution that turned out to be very satisfactory.

Mr. Speaker, this proves one must always look at the other side of the facts, a side the Members opposite may not always be anxious to see.

THE ADMINISTRATION

CONDEMNATION OF POLICIES AFFECTING WESTERN CANADA

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Government does not represent Canada. In 1968, when the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) first came to power, there were 27 Liberal MPs from the four western provinces; today there are two. In one year the Prime Minister spent 38 days in the eastern hemisphere. During the same time he spent five days in western Canada, three of which were to go skiing.

There are four major issues which highlight western concerns: energy, agriculture, transportation, and tourism. The Liberal attack on western transportation has yielded a system farmers cannot afford. Their attack on energy was to lay central claim to a provincial resource. Their removal of VIA Rail service from Winnipeg, Saskatoon, Edmonton, Jasper, and Vancouver has negatively impacted on our tourist industry.

What was left to be abused? Only agriculture. So the Prime Minister denies western farmers the opportunity to get back $1 billion of their own money from the western grain stabilization plan. To get the farmers' money back, the Opposition Parties would have to agree to close their eyes to democracy and pass, without question, a doubtful list of legislation.

There are 21 Members of Parliament from the Province of Alberta. Today there are 20 Liberal members of Parliament from eight Provinces and two Territories. All the rest come from Quebec and Ontario. This is not a national Government. It is a regional Government. The Prime Minister insults, aggravates, and pirouettes with his silly Order Paper.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN MANITOBA—TRIBUTE TO NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY'S ECONOMIC POLICY

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, when the NDP Government in Manitoba was elected in 1981 the rate of unemployment in Manitoba was higher than that of Saskatchewan and Alberta, thanks to the Tory economic policies of the provincial Government that was defeated in that election. Thanks to continuing Tory economic policy in Alberta, and thanks to the policies of the new Conservative Government in Saskatchewan, we note today that the province with the lowest rate of unemployment in the country is the Province of Manitoba, thanks to NDP economic policy in that province.

Mr. McDermid: Tell us how many left the province.

Mr. Blaikie: Many are coming back, now that we have an NDP Government. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) is fond of saying that we in the NDP are in fairyland when we admonish him to make unemployment the first priority of his Government. Perhaps it is the Minister of Finance who is really in fairyland. Perhaps he should take a lesson from the Government of Manitoba which has made job creation and fighting unemployment a number one priority, and is being successful at it.

INCREASE IN UNEMPLOYMENT—PLIGHT OF WOMEN

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, statistics released this morning confirm the worst fears of Canadians. There are an additional 64,000 persons out of work, most of whom reside in Ontario and the Prairies. Instead of improving, the jobless rate is falling into a dark abyss paved by the Liberal Government. Something has gone seriously awry when a country this size has 1.3 million registered unemployed and another .5 million who are not counted.

Long term unemployment has become a way of life, to the point where many people have given up looking for work. More heads of households are without jobs than ever before, and the suffering is no doubt felt by each member of a family. There is now more unemployment per capita here than in the United States. As a result, housing starts are down, and manufacturing is reeling from the blow.

What about the huge influx of students hitting the work force within weeks? The meagre attempts at job creation and employer perks offered by the Government are mere band-aid treatment for a malady which requires major surgery. Job availability for women is also finding its way into the abyss. In a time when we strive for equality, women cannot find non traditional work. Instead, many talented woman are forced into traditional female postings, that is if they can find work at all.

The Government is forgetting the people it represents. Ministers are so caught up in preparing for an election they are going to lose—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

PUBLIC SERVICE

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES—APPLICATION TO FORMER OFFICIALS

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, this week Canadians witnessed the crass spectacle of a highly placed public servant, Michael Kirby, caught in the act of violating the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) conflict of interest guidelines governing post-employment activity. Canadians should ask whether parliamentarians and public officials observe any standards of conduct beyond the criminal laws imposed on all citizens. The sad part of the Kirby fiasco is that he claimed not to know the substance of the guiding rules nor the terms of their application. That is a poor commentary on his former superior, the Prime Minister. We had better look at other senior and well placed public officials who now fish in other waters for monetary rewards.

Does Jim Coutts know about the conflict rules and their application? Is Michael Pitfield now imparting privileged information and knowledge as he practises the fine art of consulting? It is reported that Senator Perrault is mixing sports pools and baseball franchises. We all remember—

Mr. Speaker: It is not usual to permit references to individual members of the other place by name in that manner.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PLEA ON BEHALF OF LUBICON BAND IN ALBERTA

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, last fall the World Council of Churches, under its Program to Combat Racism, wrote to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and warned him of the "genocidal consequences" of oil exploration practices in the Lubicon Lake area of northern Alberta. The 300 Crees of the Lubicon Band have never had a reserve set aside for them, although this has been promised for years.

Now, instead of recognizing their aboriginal rights to their traditional land base, the Alberta Government treats them like squatters. In an attempt to subvert their land claim, the Conservative Government there has tried to persuade Indians to sign up for two-acre plots of land.

Exploration and drilling rights have been given to oil companies and these activities have totally disrupted the traditional hunting and trapping economy.

Last week a group of prominent Canadian church leaders, led by Archbishop Ted Scott of the Anglican Church, visited the Lubicon Lake area and confirmed findings of human rights violations. Meanwhile, the Liberal Government in Ottawa does nothing, although it has constitutional responsibility for Indian people. When Indian people are under threat from provincial Governments or large companies, the federal Government cannot stand by. We call on the federal Government to live up to its responsibilities and defend the rights of the Lubicon people.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

INCREASE IN UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Last month, when the unemployment figures stood at 11.3 per cent, the Minister said, as reported at page 2368 of Hansard:

> I suggest that he should wait for the Statistics Canada figures for next month. He might be surprised. What will he say if unemployment comes down next month?

Today we have had the news, and it is all bad. Housing starts are down by 18 per cent, the dollar is down, interest rates are up, and unemployment has risen another full point. What does the Minister say to that?

An Hon. Member: Wait until next month.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am obviously disappointed by the figures on unemployment this morning. However, I want to point out to the Hon. Member that all the signs in the economy show that the economy is keeping a strong rate of growth.

He refers to housing, for instance. I invite him to look at the figures for the first quarter, the first three months, because he will find that they are 10 per cent over what they were in the last quarter of 1983.

As I said, the results on the unemployment side are a disappointment to me and, I am sure, to a lot of Canadians. But again, if we look at the figures in detail we see that full time employment has not gone down, which means that the basic trend of the economy is indeed toward growth and consolidation of the recovery that we have known, and that all the losses in employment have taken place in part time work.

I expect that the situation in the economy will continue to improve in terms of growth.

We have had good figures in terms of productivity improvement in Canada in the last several months, and I expect that these productivity improvements will show themselves in terms of unemployment reduction in the months to come.

Mr. McGrath: It is incredible how the Minister can ignore the facts. He continues to ignore the facts, because they are that there has been no growth in employment in this country since September, unless he calls two-tenths of a percentage point growth. In terms of full time jobs, we are 349,000 behind the pre recession level. How can he call that growth?

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): What does the Minister of Finance have to say to the 1.4 million unemployed people out there who have no jobs and who get no hope from the Minister? What does he say to the half million young people who are now going to be joined by thousands of students coming out of universities who will be looking for jobs to finance their education? Will the Minister please be credible for once, if he wants to have any credibility in terms of finding himself a job at the OECD?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that since the depth of the recession we have created 444,000 jobs. Our record in terms of job creation compares very favourably with most other countries. In terms of productivity, I remind my friend also that we have known a very high increase in productivity. For the month of January, the latest statistics on growth in the economy showed a 1.3 per cent increase in Canada, which would indicate a very strong basic growth in the economy in 1984.

As far as students and young people are concerned, the Hon. Member knows that the Government has set aside over $1.3 billion this year to help young people, to try to alleviate the problem of unemployment among young people. Part of that money will obviously be allocated specifically and specially to help students during the course of this summer as the academic year terminates. The Minister of Employment and Immigration and the Minister of State for Youth will be able to make appropriate announcements in that regard.

COMPARISON WITH SITUATION IN UNITED STATES

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister. Today U.S. labour force figures were released coincidentally with ours. They show an alarming comparison. For example, the U.S. labour force is up by 0.6 per cent and the Canadian labour force is up by 0.4 per cent. Yet, during the same period, the U.S. unemployment rate dropped 1.4 per cent while ours increased. The U.S. unemployment rate went from 9.2 per cent to 7.8 per cent, while the Canadian unemployment rate continues to increase. Obviously there is something drastically wrong with the economic course which the Minister has set for the country. I will ask him, now before his Budget is in total shatters, will he at least make an economic statement to this House?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I said before, the unemployment figures released today were a disappointment, but they must be seen in perspective and we must not forget that in recent months, we have created a large number of jobs in Canada and also that, basically, Canada's economic growth is strong. The figures released for January, for instance, which are the latest figures, indicate a substantial growth rate for Canada. A growth rate of 1.3 per cent over a period of one month means one of the highest rates we have ever had.

I may remind him as well that, as far as comparison with the United States is concerned, Canada in recent months has experienced a higher growth in productivity per hour worked than the United States. However, this gain in productivity also means we were unable to increase the number of jobs created. As I said before, I hope that in addition to our increased productivity, we shall also see expanding employment and a reduction in unemployment over the next few months. There is reason to believe that this year, there will be a reduction in unemployment, not an increase.

[English]

UNEMPLOYMENT AFFECTING HEADS OF FAMILIES

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. On two occasions recently I have raised the plight of unemployed heads of families with the Minister, and he has just shrugged off their difficulties. This morning we learn there are another 23,000 heads of families who are without work, bringing the total of unemployed heads of families to over half a million. When you take into consideration the number of dependants, the number of children in these families, that brings the total to over two million people who are living solely on unemployment insurance benefits or welfare.

In view of the significant increase this month in unemployment among heads of families, some 23,000 of them, is the Minister content once again to shrug off their concerns, knowing of course that he and his family will be well looked after if the Prime Minister can land him a job with the OECD?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is making statements which the record will show are completely unfounded. This Government has indeed shown a great deal of concern toward those who faced with unemployment during recent years. This has been quite clearly stated in a number of statistics that have come out showing that this country, for instance, has maintained its social safety net much better than just about any other industrialized nation during the last recession and the last several years. For instance, while in the United States something like 35 per cent of the unemployed were covered by unemployment insurance during the recent recession, we have something like 85 per cent of Canadians who were protected during that particular period. I could mention a number of other figures. The actual figures, for instance, are that during 1982 more than 80 per cent of the unemployed were covered by unemployment insurance benefits. As I said, in the United States the figure was 35 per cent.

We have shown our concern, and continue to show our concern for these people who are facing those difficulties. I must say that I do not think we have any lesson to take from the Tory Party in terms of compassion for those who are in difficulty. One only has to refer to the statements made by a number of them in the last several months to know where their heart is.

Miss MacDonald: If that is the concern and compassion which the Minister of Finance can show for those who are in real difficulty, and if that is his understanding of what it is all about, then sending him off to Paris is a small price to pay for what might come to help out these people.

PLIGHT OF UNEMPLOYED FEMALE HEADS OF FAMILIES

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister could come to grips with the issue more clearly if I focus it for him. I refer him to the fact that there are 100,000 women who are heads of single-parent families and are out of work today. That is the highest level ever in that category. I say to the Minister that a woman in a situation like that, with two children dependent upon her, probably has a total income of $7,000 per year.

How can the Minister be satisfied, as he said over and over again, with the economic recovery when there are 100,000 women and their children living on that amount of salary, or that amount of income, which is so far below the poverty line?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, here again, I need only refer to certain statements, made by supporters of the Progressive Conservative Party regarding the attitude of that Party towards women, to conclude without hesitation that the Liberal Party and the Liberal Government do not have to be told by the Progressive Conservative Party how to protect women's rights in this country. The Hon. Member knows perfectly well that some very influential people within her Party have recognized this fact and admitted that the Progressive Conservative Party is lagging behind the other Parties in the House in this respect.

I may also remind the Hon. Member that regarding unemployment, and especially unemployment among women, the latest figures for last month show that compared to all other categories, women had experienced the highest growth in employment. Unemployment has not increased among women. Last month, the number of employed women increased, while in other groups, employment dropped.

Furthermore, the Hon. Member will also recall that since the recession bottomed out, women were the group that experienced the fastest growth in employment and rose beyond the level where they were during the recession. The latest figures I read indicated that women have recovered about 120 per cent of the jobs they had lost in the recession. Thus, the Government's economic policy has been more effective for women than for any other groups in our society, since employment among women rose more substantially than in any other group in recent months.

ALLOCATION OF FOOD PROVIDED BY VANCOUVER FOOD BANK

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to pose some questions to the Minister of Finance regarding these devastating and continuing unemployment figures. I would like to try to bring it down to some level of reality and humanity. I have passed to the Minister a list I received from one of my constituents in Vancouver, who went to the food bank. He is an unemployed construction worker, head of a family, and it is a list of food to support a family of five for one week. I want to ask the Minister what I should tell this particular person.

• (1130)

Could the Minister live on the following short list: two loaves of bread, eight muffins, six carrots, two onions, one box of Kraft dinner, one can of tuna, one of chicken noodle soup, one can of pork and beans, one small jar of peanut butter, two packages of Japanese noodle soup, one can of pears, one can of creamed corn, and one package of instant potatoes? Will the Minister tell me what I am supposed to say to my constituent about his job prospects? Also, could the Minister live on this diet for one week?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend should tell his constituent that this is the result of the policy of the Social Credit Government of that province, which is very close of the policy of the Conservatives in this House. As the Hon. Member knows, the provision of support for people under the Canada Assistance Plan, and for people on welfare, is determined by the provincial Governments in this country, under our Constitution. We pay 50 per cent of whatever level of support is provided by the provincial Governments in that regard. This is their responsibility. Under the Constitution, we do not have a direct responsibility in this regard. We are paying 50 per cent of that support.

If my friend can convince the provincial Government of British Columbia to improve significantly both its welfare payments and the type of program that is mentioned here, the federal Government will pay 50 per cent of whatever is provided. Unfortunately, the federal Government does not have authority in that regard, as the Hon. Member knows.

BENEFITS OF ECONOMIC RECOVERY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I want to tell the Minister that that is a pathetic answer. People are looking for jobs, not welfare. They do not care which Government has jurisdiction.

This is the Minister of Finance for Canada. He has told this House on past occasions that things are getting better. In answer to a question from the Conservatives today he said there was a consolidation of the recovery. Who is getting the benefit of this recovery? Where is the recovery going? When he told the House two months ago that things were improving, was he just stupid, or was he lying?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I vote for stupidity.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, my friend is certainly getting carried away with his own rhetoric. I will not fly at his low level. I repeat to him that my first concern is to create as many jobs as we can for the people of Canada. As I indicated, we have to ensure that we are competitive, that we have a strong base whereby we can be efficient, productive, and competitive in a very tough world market. That has been the objective of this Government's policy in my last two Budgets, to build the base upon which this country will be able to provide Canadians with full-time, well-paying jobs, and the stability of employment that we wish for them. My friend has to realize that this takes time and that we cannot expect to cut employment very rapidly in this country if we want to be serious about it.

We have been improving significantly in terms of inflation and increasing productivity. The Canadian economy is growing as strongly as practically any other industrial country at the present time. As I said, I expect this will show up in reduced unemployment during the course of this year.

PRODUCTIVITY INCREASE—EFFECT ON EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I must say to the Minister that my constituent cannot go to Paris. He has to live on the food bank in Vancouver.

The Minister said that productivity is increasing. Twice he has said in the House today that productivity is increasing, and that he is expecting a reduction in unemployment. I ask the Minister, on behalf of the unemployed construction worker in my constituency, when is that going to happen, when will this man be able to get a job? If productivity is increasing so much, why is it not being translated in terms of jobs, instead of peanut butter and half a dozen carrots for people at food banks?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will explain to my friend the meaning of productivity. Increased productivity means that, for a lower cost in this country, we will be able to produce the same goods. Even better, we will produce more goods cheaper than before. We will have more efficient manufacturing plants, both in terms of production and equipment, and also in terms of labour production. This is taking place at the present time. It means that we are better able to compete in the world to sell our goods, both in Canada and abroad. If we were not more productive, we would even have more unemployment than at present. That is the first result of greater productivity. It shows in the record exports that we have at the present time. In Canada it shows that we are competing well in terms of other countries.

If you are going to be more productive and efficient, it will take some time before the plants expand and additional jobs are created. They are generated by increasing efficiency, effectiveness, and competitiveness. This is what we are doing. I regret that it takes time. I would like to be able to guarantee to my friend's constituents that they can have a job tomorrow morning, but I cannot guarantee that.

We have in place a set of policies which ensure that this country is becoming more efficient and productive. We are on the right track, and we will see a gradual reduction in unemployment. We are going to be able to compete in the world.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, while the Minister of Finance is hobnobbing with the can-can girls in Place Pigalle, I want him to know he goes with our blessing if he promises never to come back and touch the Canadian economy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: After the damage that he has inflicted on hundreds and hundreds of thousands of Canadian families, I hope he has the decency to stay there in his golden retirement.

DISASTERS

GLACE BAY MINING TRAGEDY

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): My question is for the smiling Acting Prime Minister whose smile mystifies me given the results of the poll today. Can the Minister bring us up to date on the current situation with regard to the Glace Bay mining disaster where a man is trapped and the slopes, I understand, are presently being sealed to contain the fire? Can the Acting Prime Minister bring us up to date and give a full report in that regard?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, the reason I was smiling was simply that, having heard so often about civility from my hon. friend, I realized how rapidly he is becoming uncivil.

The Acting Minister of Mines will have a report on Glace Bay. I am sorry I do not have it now. If he does not have it, I will obtain it very rapidly. The Minister of Labour may have it.

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to say that I have never changed my mind with regard to the Acting Prime Minister. He was, and is, a civil gentleman, but he must be as shocked and dismayed as I am at the lack of principle when the Minister of Finance, and that Government, have put 1.5 million people out of work, and he has the indecency to scurry off to Paris at the expense of the Canadian taxpayer. There is the indecency that causes me, Mr. Acting Prime Minister, to lose some of my civility, and I think you will understand that.

With regard to the matter I have raised, is it the intention of—

Oh, I hit a sore spot! You might as well get a job in Paris too, because you will not have any jobs left in Quebec. The Quebecers have had it up to here with you lot! You are finished in Quebec!

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would invite the Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition to speak to the Chair.

Mr. Mulroney: Quebecers and Canadians have had it up to here with the hypocrisy of people who inflict unemployment on Canadians and then go off to a cushy job in Paris. Quebecers have had enough.

• (1140)

[English]

Regarding the question I was asking the Acting Prime Minister, is it the intention of the Government, given the serious nature of this matter, to proceed with a public inquiry into the disaster involving loss of life? The question of mine safety regulations has been long studied but not acted upon.

Will the public inquiry also be given a mandate to consider the serious unemployment situation in the Glace Bay area, which now exceeds 20 per cent? In that area people are urgently crying out for help and employment possibilities, notwithstanding their abandonment by the Minister of Finance who is scurrying off to Europe to hide from the sad realities of the Canadian economy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I understand that one of my colleagues will answer the question about Glace Bay.

Before sitting down, I would like to inform the Leader of the Official Opposition that the position of Secretary General of the OECD, which is being mentioned as a possibility for the Minister of Finance of Canada, is a position that carries a great deal of distinction and is very sought after. It is an honour for him and an honour for Canada that he has been approached for this position.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: That is ridiculous, when we realize we have a million people out of work!

Mr. Pepin: Yes indeed, Canada has one million people out of work and there are millions of people who are unemployed throughout the western world at this time.

Mr. Mulroney: And he is going to help them!

Mr. Pepin: Yes, yes, yes!

Mr. Mulroney: Come on! Is he really going to help them?

Mr. Pepin: Yes, yes.

Mr. Mulroney: Come on! This is outrageous!

Mr. Pepin: Most people in Canada realize that the unemployment problem we have in the world today is not exclusive to Canada. It is a problem that exists in all western countries.

The fact that the Minister of Finance of Canada was approached for this position, without having applied for it, reflects honourably on Canada, and I think it is an excellent opportunity for him to demonstrate his competence again, but in a much broader field.

Mr. Mulroney: It is like manna from heaven!

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ADJUST POLICY

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration who, for three months in a row, has not been present in the House when the unemployment figures have come down. He has been running off to hide somewhere else.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, in his Budget of April 17 a year ago, the Minister of Finance said that his dominant concern was to help the more than 1.5 million Canadians who want to work but cannot find jobs. Today there are 1,541,000 people out of work. The Minister himself hopes that he will find a job with the OECD. Apparently his concern has now narrowed to one person, himself.

Given that the Minister said a week ago that there are adjustments he could make but he was satisfied with his basic policy, is he now dissatisfed with his basic policy? Will he make the adjustments he said he could make? Will he consult with the Minister of Justice, who says that he knows how to bring about full employment?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I might first mention that it is strange to hear the Leader of the Official Opposition speak as he does because, if there is a man who knows about unemployment in this country, he should be the one, having turned Schefferville into a ghost town and closed about half of the North Shore in Quebec.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: What about Uranium City?

Mr. Lalonde: There is probably no other business person who has created more unemployment and misery in the country than the Leader of the Conservative Party.

Mr. Ouellet: Just to protect a rich American firm.

Mr. Lalonde: I have indicated to previous questioners that the Canadian economy is growing and that we expect the unemployment rate to fall during the course of this year. I still expect this to happen, and I am not considering at the present time making any changes to the Budget that I introduced on February 15.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the theme song of the Government is: "Thrown out the lifeline; someone is coming to take me away". The Minister wants to be taken away to the OECD in Paris.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ACTION

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): I would like to ask the Minister if he realizes that there are eight economic regions in the country in which the unemployment rate remains above 20 per cent? Does he realize that we now have 170,000 fewer jobs than we had at the pre-recession peak? When will he do what he says he will do? He said he could make the necessary adjustments if need be. What is the need? Do 1,541,000 unemployed people not create a need? Will the Minister not take steps to do something now, in view of the fact that the figures have risen this month and not fallen, as he said they would a month ago? It is time for this lame-duck Government to stop giving us lame-duck excuses.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the measures that the Government has taken are contained in the last two Budgets. These measures have led to significant recovery and growth in the Canadian economy. Canada has known a rate of growth which is comparable to that of the United States, and higher than practically every other industrialized country. In effect, this has meant that we have been able to compete around the world. It has meant that we have been able to have a record export surplus and a record trade balance, and it has meant that we have been able to create over 400,000 jobs since the depth of the recession.

Obviously I would have liked to have seen more jobs created faster, and I still hope that that will be the case. We are doing everything we can in that regard. Again, I am encouraged by the fact that we have become more productive, more efficient, and we have been building a broader and stronger base of growth in our country and this will lead to a further decline in unemployment in the rest of this year.

THE ECONOMY

INTEREST RATE LEVELS—COMPARISON WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister said yesterday that Canadians should be worried about the increase in interest rates in the United States. He is correct, of course, because the Liberal Government follows American interest rates as slavishly as it follows Conservative interest rate policies here. However, there are substantial differences between the situation in the United States and that in Canada. The American unemployment rate is at 7.8 per cent, while today the Canadian unemployment rate is up to 11.4 per cent. There are over one and a half million individual unemployed Canadians.

Will the Finance Minister give some hope to Canadians? Will he now give unemployed Canadians as well as home owners, small business people, and farmers, some hope that he will show some degree of independence, and prevent the Bank of Canada from following the latest one-half per cent rise in American interest rates?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have answered that question many times. It is extremely difficult to have a completely different and autonomous monetary policy from that of the United States. When an economy as strong and as powerful as that of the United States lives next door to ours, we cannot live in our own world as if that economy did not exist.

I have indicated that we have taken steps to reduce, and over the last couple of years, practically eliminate the difference between the United States interest rates and the Canadian interest rates which were higher previously. At the present time, if my friend were to look for instance at short-term interest rates for 30-day and 90-day paper, he would find that the Canadian rates are below the American rates. He would also realize that today one can still borrow from a bank at a lower prime rate than that of the United States. Consumer loans in Canada are still at a lower rate of interest than in the United States.

We have been exploiting to the maximum the room that we have, in order to have the lowest possible interest rates. That will continue to be our policy and objective, and if there is any way that we can achieve even lower rates as compared to those in the United States, I would like to assure my friend that we would not hesitate to take the necessary steps in that regard. One must be realistic in terms of the situation we are facing.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN CONSTRUCTION AND FORESTRY INDUSTRIES

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister likes to talk about fairy tales. If we wanted a grim fairy tale all we would need to do is look at "Puff, the Magic Dragon" over there, who manages to burn thousands of carpenters and loggers with a single blow.

• (1150)

Despite his predictions in reply to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands, on March 26, that housing starts would improve, housing starts are in fact down in Canada again. The drop in housing starts is very much connected to the fact that we have 36 per cent unemployment in construction in Canada, 70 per cent in my own riding. We have 35 per cent national unemployment in forestry. In New Brunswick, unemployment in these two industries is over 50 per cent.

Will the Minister of Finance make some effort to take some control over our own economy, or should we tell the Canadian people, if they want to know where their economy is going, they would be better off to watch the American primaries than the Canadian Liberal leadership race?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is referring to the number of housing starts last month. Again I would urge him not to confine himself to last month's statistics, but to look at the statistics for the last quarter. He will find out that housing starts in Canada during the first quarter of this year were 10 per cent more than the output for the last quarter of 1983. In other words, the rising trend in home building in 1984 is confirmed by the overall progression in the first quarter. Fluctuations can be expected from one month to the next, of course, but the significant factor to bear in mind is the basic trend over several months. We will be keeping a close watch on the changing situation in the coming months and, on the basis of prospects over a few months, we will be in a better position to predict what the future has in store for us.

REQUEST FOR NEW INITIATIVES TO ASSIST UNEMPLOYED IN MINING INDUSTRY

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The last time the Minister raised the matter of the shutdown of Schefferville, he had to stand up shortly thereafter and apologize for his actions, as well as the actions of his Department, for misleading the House.

I want to ask the Minister, who, when he was Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, not only shut down a mine but shut down the whole town of Uranium City by his actions, in terms of the unemployment which has been caused by the policies of this Government, not only in Glace Bay but in the Yukon, and in Saskatchewan, what initiatives will the Minister take—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —to help these people who are suffering unemployment because of policies of the Government?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair can only apply the rules of the House. It is a well established rule of the House that a question must relate to a Minister in his present portfolio. It cannot relate to the function of a Minister in a previous portfolio.

Today we apparently are going to set a record with the fewest number of questioners on deck. I invite Hon. Members to reflect on how long a preamble should be, and whether there are any rules at all left for Question Period. I invite the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West to direct the question, if he wishes, to the Minister of Finance, within the rules, bearing in mind his present capacity in the Government.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate your references. I simply ask the Minister this question. His Government is responsible for putting literally thousands of Canadians out of work in the mining industry. What is the Minister going to do in terms of a new economic statement, or new initiatives which are going to assist these people who have been deceived and let down by this Government? I ask the Minister that simple question.

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if I may repeat some of my earlier statements, it is strange indeed to hear the Leader of the Opposition complaining about unemployment, particularly since there is probably nobody in Canada who has thrown so many people out of work as he did when he was president of a well-known company. As a matter of fact, the community of Schefferville has been turned into a ghost town and half the North Shore is deserted thanks to the efforts of my colleague who is now the Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party. He knows that!

Now that I see his new House leader bite his nail because of the situation in the mining industry, I would suggest that he turn to his leader and ask him what he did or did not do when he was in charge of the Iron Ore Company. I remind him that, when it comes to the Canadian mining industry, ours is practically the most generous tax structure in terms of assistance to that industry.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I again invite Hon. Members to remember that this was originally intended as a Question Period in which questions could be asked and answers given. It is becoming more and more difficult for the Chair. The questions are long from both sides, and sometimes I can barely distinguish a question. In fairness, if the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West wants to put a supplementary question, I invite him to do so.

An Hon. Member: I have a nice short one.

Mr. Speaker: No? The Hon. Member for Joliette.

UNEMPLOYMENT

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance, given the deplorable situation in which Canadians find themselves now. The Minister of Finance may be "disappointed", but Canadians are discouraged.

Under the circumstances, once again the Minister of Finance stands up in the House and promises Canadians that unemployment will go down. In his Budget speech, however, he did commit himself to keep at least 10 per cent of Canadians unemployed in the next five years.

In what context and when will the Minister of Finance be honest enough to tell Canadians that the Government they have today has pledged to keep unemployment at 10 per cent, a level which we think is indecently high in Canada today?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the best solution to the problems raised by the Hon. Member would be to begin by reading the Budget papers, for he will realize that his allegation is completely unfounded, just like the statements made by several Conservative Members who claim that the Government grabs 90 per cent of the savings of Canadians through borrowing. The Government takes about 25 per cent, not 90 per cent.

With respect to the projections, the Hon. Member ought to look them up in the Fiscal Plan which was tabled on Budget day, if only to confirm that we expect Canada's unemployment rate to decline sharply in the next five years, to less than 10 per cent. Indeed, we expect unemployment to dip down to about 8 per cent by the end of that time, not 10 per cent. If my colleague should at least go to the trouble of reading those documents, perhaps he might be better informed.

Secondly, I may very well be "disappointed", but unlike the Hon. Member I am not discouraged by the economic trend, quite the contrary. While he is reading the Fiscal Plan, he should also read what the Chairman of the Economic Council of Canada had to say in a recent speech in which he stated that Canadians, and particularly Members opposite, I must add, were unduly pessimistic about the Canadian economic outlook.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER CONFIRM NEWS OF POLITICAL FUTURE

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Since the Minister of Finance is saying that my comments are without foundation, Mr. Speaker, I shall have to repeat that, a month ago, he derided the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) for saying that the unemployment rate would now be 13.3 per cent. The Minister of Finance made fun of the Hon. Member for Simcoe North and said that his figures were absolutely wrong.

This morning, it was announced that we have an unemployment figure of 13.4 per cent. In Quebec, unemployment exceeds 22 per cent in some regions. There is the case of Schefferville, where jobs have long been lost because of a Liberal policy—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. La Salle: And the Minister fails to realize or is incapable of understanding—

Mr. Mulroney: How true!

Mr. La Salle: —not only that the Liberal policies have resulted in the Schefferville shut-down, but also that thousands of other businesses have had to close because of the lack of appropriate policies.

In view of the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I will ask the Minister of Finance whether it is true, and this could be the best bit of news that Canadians will be hearing today, that he is considering taking on new responsibilities. Obviously, we would be most happy if this country were to get rid of the present Minister of Finance, who has made the Canadian people suffer for too long already.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): I hope this weekend the Hon. Member will take the trouble to read not just the financial program I tabled with the budget, but also the figures published today by Statistics Canada. He said that the unemployment figure published this morning was 13.4 per cent. He made his big emotional statement saying that the unemployment rate was now 13.4 per cent.

Mr. La Salle: 11.4!

Mr. Lalonde: The unemployment rate is now 11.4 per cent and not 13.4 per cent, but even this is too high.

Mr. La Salle: 11.4!

Mr. Lalonde: The Hon. Member should at least stick to the truth and not state in the House that the unemployment rate has reached 13.4 per cent.

Concerning the Government's unemployment projections for this year and the following years, we expect that the unemployment figures will go down gradually, and this forecast was made when the budget was brought down. Contrary to the statements made by the Hon. Member and others among his colleagues who seem to know as little as he does on this matter, it is expected that unemployment in Canada will fall below 10 per cent within the next five years.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SITUATION OF CANADIANS IN CAMEROON

Mr. Pierre Deniger (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. The Minister is surely aware that Cameroon was the scene of a coup d'État yesterday and that hundreds of Canadians, including many residents of the riding of La Prairie, are now in that country. Would the Minister tell the House whether he is aware of the situation, whether he has been in touch with our embassy and what is the situation of Canadians who are now in Cameroon?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the current situation in the Republic of Cameroon is not clear, but we do not think that the Canadians who are there are facing an immediate danger. There are 280 Canadians in that republic—

[English]

We hope to have more information on the development of the coup, in the next few hours. Our present information is that there is no reason for concern regarding the Canadians who are there.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) has served notice to the Chair of a point of order.

Mr. Paproski: Privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Halifax West has served notice to the Chair.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CROSBY—STATEMENT UNDER S.O. 21

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, it is a question of privilege that I want to raise and I can state it very briefly. If necessary, I can put it in the form of a motion. I am a Member of Parliament, Mr. Speaker, but I am also a Canadian. In April of 1982 the Parliament of Canada, with the endorsement of Her Majesty the Queen, passed the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. One of those freedoms is the freedom of speech, and it is clearly set out in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I cannot believe that any rule of this House, past or present, with respect to references to Members of the other Chamber can affect my right of free speech as guaranteed to me under the Charter.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to look at the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and determine whether it does not overrule any precedent built up over a period of years with respect to matters like that, which would allow you to interrupt proceedings in this House, specifically statements made on important matters, simply to say that we should not refer to a certain person in a certain way. That surely is not excluded under the Charter.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member, under Standing Order 21, made specific reference by name to two Members of the other place. The Chair is guided by the rules adopted by the House. When Standing Order 21 was adopted, and the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) has on a number of occasions brought this to the attention of the Chair, it precluded personal attacks either on Members of this House or of the other place, which is part of Parliament. I cite again from the guidelines issued by my predecessor, Madam Speaker Sauvé. She said: "The opportunity is not intended to be used for making personal attacks, conveying congratulatory messages, or reciting poetry for anything other than serious purposes".

Again, there are a number of instances where the Chair has interrupted personal attacks. Until such a time as I receive guidelines from this House indicating otherwise, the Chair will do its best to observe the Standing Orders as the Chair interprets them to be. The Hon. Member has made reference to a motion; he certainly has that privilege. He knows exactly what he can do if he feels the Chair is not serving the House within the rules given to the Chair. However, as long as the present incumbent has the responsibility, personal attacks, either on other Members of this House or by name on members of the other place, will not be permitted.

The Hon. Member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski) on a matter of privilege.

MR. PAPROSKI—STATEMENT BY MR. JOHNSTON

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Mr. Speaker, it has just been brought to my attention by Canadian Press that the Economic Development Minister, Donald Johnston, differed sharply today with federal policy—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Paproski: —by criticizing government involvement in sports pools and lotteries.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Paproski: Just a minute.

Mr. Speaker: Will the Hon. Member please indicate how his personal privilege as a Member is affected?

Mr. Paproski: The Minister differs with government policy. He said that the proposed sports pool and the lotteries are little more than a tax which preys upon the poor and disheartened.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Paproski: He differs with government policy, and he should resign.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A statement outside of the House can hardly be a matter of privilege in the circumstances. The Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark).

POINT OF ORDER

MR. CLARK (YELLOWHEAD)—DURATION OF QUESTION PERIOD

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a point of order having to do with Question Period, and I will not recite any poetry. I noted that Question Period today began at 17 minutes after 11, not at a quarter after 11, yet it stopped precisely at noon. I do not challenge the right of the Chair to terminate Question Period at noon, as the Standing Orders indicate, but I was simply wondering whether the Chair had noted the hour at the end of Question Period, and if we were to allow that extra two minutes, that deserved two minutes, to be added to Question Period, there are a number of us here with questions to ask.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has very high regard for the Right Hon. Member, whose observance of parliamentary rules has been exemplary. However, the Chair would point out that, by the clock I was watching, it was two minutes past 12.

My second comment is simply that the Chair at that point was in difficulty in terms of rotation. In the normal rotation the Chair would have to go to the third Party. That again opens up a question and a supplementary. Hon. Members seem quite unwilling to accept the Chair's cutting off a supplementary, even when it goes past 12 o'clock.

May I suggest that an examination of the record will show that the Chair has allowed an Hon. Member who has been recognized just before or even just after 12, to have the full supplementary, if it was required. The Chair has gone as much as five minutes past the hour at least twice in the last week. It is difficult to administer perfect equity and justice, and it was a difficult call for the Chair because today was not the easiest of Question Periods.

DISASTERS

GLACE BAY MINING TRAGEDY

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, during Question Period a question was raised with respect to the fire in Glace Bay. As the Minister responsible for Devco, I was wondering if I could just respond to that question. I have the very sad duty to inform the House of Commons that a fire started at about seven o'clock yesterday morning at the 2000 foot level of No. 26 colliery. Over 350 dedicated miners from Devco escaped, but unfortunately one of those miners is still missing and is presumed dead.

The mine was sealed off last night, the fire is still blazing and we are hoping to put it out as soon as possible. I have not as yet had discussions with the management of Devco with respect to the 1,100 plus miners who work in No. 26 colliery. That obviously will be our first priority as soon as the fire is out, but I thought Hon. Members would like to have this information.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, thank you for recognizing me. I want to comment regarding this tragedy in Glace Bay. The Minister has a major inquiry under way regarding the affairs of Devco. I simply recommend to the Minister that the safety regulations which the federal Government is responsible for administering be a part of this inquiry. The Minister will also take into account the plans the company has to open up two new mines and to decommission permanently No. 26 colliery, which has caused such incredible hardship, injury and deprivation to so many people since it was commissioned in 1943.

I would like to think that the Minister will make a statement in the House as soon as he is apprised of all the circumstances which led to this new disaster. I sincerely hope he will also be able to announce that, in connection with this particular accident, there will be a public inquiry, something which we have been deprived of in the past in connection with that particular mine.

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to express my concern to the Minister. A task force of ours has visited this mine. We have also been in touch with the Minister of Labour (Mr. Ouellet) urging changes to the Canada Labour Code for stronger and stricter health and safety producers. When is the Minister of Labour going to bring in that legislation so that we can deal with this very, very urgent legislation which he knows needs upgrading?

MR. BLAIKIE—OPPORTUNITY FOR MORE QUESTIONS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order which arises out of Question Period. A week ago today, Mr. Speaker, you chose to share your thoughts with the House on the question of bell ringing. I would simply ask you, Mr. Speaker, to consider formulating your thoughts on Question Period. I have the same concern which I think you have, Mr. Speaker, about what is happening to Question Period, particularly in the last week.

Question Period has always been a series of mini debates, but they are becoming maxi debates. It seemed to begin the other day when the Prime Minister almost filibustered Question Period. We are seeing more and more of that now. Fewer and fewer back-benchers in this Parliament are having an opportunity to ask questions, which is what Question Period is all about.

I do not know, Mr. Speaker, whether you are simply letting us slide until we muster the will to discipline ourselves. That may be a legitimate strategy. However, I, for one, Mr. Speaker, would urge you to use your role as Speaker to discipline the Question Period. If you do not feel people should be allowed supplementary questions, do not allow them. If you think the answers are too long, just get up and call for order. I was here briefly when Speaker Jerome was in the Chair. I remember that is what he used to do. People get used to it and discipline themselves. That is what we need if we are going to continue to have a Question Period worthy of the name.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The record will speak for itself, but I think there is some misunderstanding, almost a Kafka-like situation. When you interrupted me during my presentation under Standing Order 21, I understood that your complaint was that I had mentioned a Senator by name and that it was a violation of the rules of the House to mention a Senator by name. My point is that—

Mr. Speaker: Let us get it perfectly straight. It was an attack on an individual Senator by name. And two Hon. Members of the other place were mentioned. That is what is irregular, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. Crosby: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member cannot reflect on a decision of the Chair. I would be pleased to meet with him privately and have a discussion.

With regard to the matter raised by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), it seems to me this is now a matter for the Procedure and Organization Committee to consider. The Chair again would be at the disposal of Hon. Members and the committee to attempt to improve the situation. The Chair is in the hands of Hon. Members and a servant of Hon. Members. It is anxious to do its best in that capacity, but there have been difficulties with regard to Question Period which I think most Members observe.

Mr. Blaikie: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill.

Mr. Blaikie: With respect, Mr. Speaker, you have plenty of precedents at your disposal to do something about what has happened in the last week or so. I do not think you need to be instructed by Members in order at least to return Question Period to what it was even a couple of weeks ago—

Mr. Nielsen: Or by you.

Mr. Blaikie: —as opposed to what it has been this last week. I think you have that authority, Mr. Speaker, and I would urge you to use it.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 14, 645 and 689. I believe question No. 268 is also being answered.

[Text]

DAYCARE CENTRES

Question No. 14—Mr. Herbert:

1. Is it the intention of the Government to have legal corporations assume the complete administrative and financial responsibility for the operation of daycare centres in the Public Service?

2. Will such corporations be subsidized by the Government and (a) if so, on what basis will such subsidies be assessed (b) if not, did the Government consider direct assistance for those parents unable to afford the scale of fees established by the corporations?

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): 1. The management of the pilot project daycare centres is the responsibility of parent-users, who form a legal corporation and assume complete administrative and financial responsibility for their operation.

2. (a) The Government provides space, fit-up and maintenance, but does not assume legal, financial or other responsibility connected with the operation of any centres.

(b) For purposes of the pilot projects, the Government has not considered direct assistance for parents regarding the payment of fees. Parents who need financial help can obtain it under provincial and municipal programs which are cost-shared under the Canada Assistance Plan.

EMPLOYER PARTICIPATION IN NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL TRAINING PROGRAM

Question No. 645—Mr. Young:

1. Does the Government spend any amount for high-technology training programs and, if so (a) in 1983, what amount was spent (b) is there any regular liaison with business and industry to determine the skills employers will require in one or two years (c) in 1983, how many people (i) took advantage of these programs (ii) graduated from these programs (iii) found employment in the field for which they were trained?

2. Does the Government encourage employers to hire graduates from the programs and, if so, in what manner?

3. To the knowledge of the government during what average period must graduates wait to find employment in their field?

4. In 1983, did any companies take advantage of Government on-the-job training grants and, if so, how many?

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. (a) Yes, the Government spent the following amounts for training in high technology occupations during 1983:

Institutional training programs	$46.4 million
Industrial training programs	12.4 million

(b) Yes, there is regular liaison with business and industry to determine their skill requirements.

(c)(i) The following number of people took advantage of the training in high technology occupations during 1983:

Institutional training programs	6,363
Industrial training programs	3,237

(c)(ii) The following number graduated during 1983:

Institutional training programs	3,127

(c)(iii) In respect of the graduates from the institutional training programs in high technology, short-term follow-up survey taken during the 1982-1983 fiscal year indicates that, even within about 13 weeks of graduation, 47.6 per cent of the course completers found employment and, of that, 51.4 per cent were employed in jobs related to their training. A 24-month survey indicated that the training improved the employability of participating trainees by 40 per cent; this supports the expectation that more of the graduates will find employment in the months following the 13-week survey. Graduates from industrial training programs are assumed to be employed by the training firm.

2. Yes, the Government encourages employers to hire graduates from the programs through its employer services function at official points of service, advertising materials, and the referral of clients to identified job openings.

3. The results of the trainee follow-up survey indicated that, in 1982-1983, persons who had found a job within 13 weeks of graduation averaged 10 weeks of waiting time before starting to work. A general average is not available.

Order Paper Questions

4. In 1982-1983, there were 20,411 training contracts with employers under the National Industrial Training Program. Some companies may, however, have had more than one contract, therefore the exact number of companies participating in the Program is not available. In 1983-1984, there are an estimated 25,850 contracts under this Program. It is estimated that 2,300 of those will be concerned with training in high technology occupations.

SPECIAL EMPLOYMENT INITIATIVE PROGRAM

Question No. 689—Mr. Gilchrist:

Were any funds provided under the Special Employment Initiatives Program in the constituencies of (a) Scarborough West (b) Scarborough Centre (c) Scarborough East (d) York—Scarborough and, if so, in each case (i) what total amount was allocated to the constituency (ii) what total amount was applied for (iii) what date(s) was the funding for the projects announced (iv) what total amount was approved to date?

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Please refer to the list of Job Creation projects tabled in the House of Commons on Tuesday, February 21, 1984.

Funding for the Special Employment Initiative was not allocated on a constituency basis. As of February 16, 1984, $207,000,000 was approved in all provinces and territories by some 16 federal government departments and agencies.

[English]

Mr. Hopkins: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the acting Parliamentary Secretary or his replacement about question No. 368 which is on the Order Paper. It shows the date of January 16. That is because we started a new session. The question has actually been on the Order Paper for three years. It is a simple question addressed to the Department of National Defence about the amount that it has increased the defence budget over the years. The question could not be simpler. I do not think it would take more than 10 minutes of staff work to answer it. I think the problem is that the answer the Department is willing to provide will be a truthful, honest answer and will not be in agreement with some of the flatulent statements that have been made by the last two Ministers of National Defence on the amount by which they increased the defence budget.

I ask once again that the Parliamentary Secretary get after that Department to try to get an answer to a three year old question.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, I will undertake to bring this question to the attention of the Minister of National Defence and also to that of the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council.

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 62—TRANSPORTATION SYSTEM

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville) moved:

That whereas a sound national transportation system is essential for economic growth in Canada, this House condemns the Minister of Transport for issuing contradictory statements which have created uncertainty and confusion in the transportation industry and amongst users of the transportation system, and for his failure to fulfill his promises and commitments relating to the creation of jobs and investment and the improvement of rail service under the Western Grain Transportation Act; the modernization and upgrading of passenger rail service; the reduction of domestic air fares in 1984; the improvement of transportation safety in all modes; and the revitalization of Canada's marine industries.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is indeed a very important motion because it calls upon the Minister to account for his actions since his appointment to the Ministry of Transport some seven months ago. This motion zeros in on the ad hoc and short-term political approach he has followed. It calls upon him to account for his incoherence in the pronouncement of Government policies with statements which have been contradictory, misleading, ill-conceived, sometimes destructive, sometimes foolish but, above all, inconsistent. It calls upon the Minister to account for his credibility as a spokesman for transportation matters in the country and for his competence.

It has become clear and obvious during the course of the last seven months that this Minister has been consistent in one aspect, that is, he has always put the political interests of his Party and himself ahead of the interests of the people who rely upon transportation and the transportation industry itself. That is unfortunate, Mr. Speaker. He will say or do anything as long as it looks good politically. In summary, that is really the short legacy of this Minister's stewardship since he assumed this very important portfolio.

That is the Minister's number one guideline. The second is that he does not worry about fulfilling the promises or raised expectations as a result of his political musings. He just tells people what they want to hear and does not worry about past statements or actions. He just uses the same old Liberal ballyhoo, deceit and manipulation that his colleague, the former Minister of State for Multiculturalism, alluded to when he left that Cabinet portfolio.

In the course of an adjournment debate the other day I said that the Minister has to be the most shifty, elusive and perhaps the most devious Minister of Transport that I have seen in the House in the last 15 years. The tragedy is that he is using the transportation system as a political vehicle to help save his own political hide and the hide of the Liberal Government.

Mr. Axworthy: That is the nicest thing you have ever said about me.

Mr. Foster: Ask him if he is running for the leadership of the P.C. Party in Alberta.

Mr. Mazankowski: I know that the Minister is somewhat perturbed and annoyed over the fact that he would rather be campaigning for his friend, John Turner, than defending his stewardship here today in the House of Commons. But he has responsibilities in the House and he must account for his actions and inactions, and we regret that very much.

In any event, he has not put the best interests of the Canadian people and the best interests of the transportation industry ahead of his own political motivations and the political motivations of his Party.

In this motion we are trying to expose and document that evidence. Throughout the course of this debate I hope that we will be able to demonstrate the examples of his hypocrisy, contradiction, inconsistencies and, yes, even his incompetence and lack of credibility, because he has been carrying on in a rather reckless manner.

Let me begin by referring to a statement that he made last Saturday when he spoke to the Transport 2000 meeting in Toronto. This is what he said—

Mr. Axworthy: They gave me a standing ovation.

Mr. Mazankowski: Yes, very interesting. More deceit, manipulation and ballyhoo.

Mr. Axworthy: When is the last time you had one?

Mr. Mazankowski: Every weekend when I go home I get a standing ovation.

I am quoting from the Ottawa Citizen as follows:

> Any overhaul of passenger rail service in Canada should address the needs of the traveller first and the railways second, Transport Minister Lloyd Axworthy said Saturday.

The article goes on to say:

> He also said decisions to close community rail lines or make other changes in service cannot be 'dictated from on high.' Those affected should have a say.

What ballyhoo! What hypocrisy! I say to the Minister, "Glory Alleluia". But who can believe him? It was the same Minister who stoutly defended the unilateral cut-back of 20 per cent of the rail passenger service in 1981. I might say that this was done without public hearings, without public input and without even a reference to a parliamentary debate. And in that, some 3,000 to 4,000 Canadians lost their jobs directly and indirectly and service was dismantled for 1.2 million Canadians. There were horrific losses in tourist revenue. They have been estimated to be at $40 million annually, $10 million annually for the community of Jasper. That Minister was the key person and crucial in the decision-making process. It appears that the former Minister is going to defend him.

Mr. Pepin: I am defending myself. I made these decisions.

Mr. Mazankowski: My intelligence tells me that the current Minister wanted to see a cut-back of 50 per cent of the rail passenger service. He was serving on three crucial Cabinet committees which rendered this decision. He was a member of the Committee on Economic and Regional Development. He was the Chairman of the Western Affairs Cabinet Committee. Incidentally, the west lost 50 per cent of the rail passenger service under that cut-back. He was a member of the powerful Priorities and Planning Committee.

He is now promenading around the country as a white knight in shining armour promising that he will restore rail passenger service. He is pledging now to listen to the public. What balderdash! What phony, political backtracking. That is all that it can be called. If one ever wanted to see a classic manipulation of words and actions, the Minister is the champion at it.

Let us look at some specifics. In his musings, he said that there would be new equipment by 1986. Mr. Pierre Franche came before the committee and said that we will be lucky to have a prototype by 1989. So much for that!

Mr. Axworthy: Who do you believe?

Mr. Mazankowski: On the record of the Minister, we certainly do not believe him.

Mr. Axworthy: I run my Department.

Mr. Mazankowski: He even recognizes that he is in trouble. The Vancouver service—

Mr. Axworthy: Where were you for nine months? What were you doing?

Mr. Mazankowski: I will defend my record against yours any day, any day at all.

Mr. Axworthy: Nine months of a big zero.

Mr. Mazankowski: What about the Vancouver service? He said he will put in the service to Vancouver. But Pierre Franche said that it is getting only cursory attention. The Minister goes to Edmonton to hold hands with Mayor Decore and have a few photo opportunities. He says that he will put that service back.

What about the service from Moncton to Edmundston? There were no conditions in the announcement. He said that in the fall of 1984 service would be restored to Moncton and Edmundston. He is now saying it will be restored for a two-year trial period.

The VIA Rail promises are indeed a sham. If the Minister is going to put people first, before the trains, then let him move now to restore the rail passenger service to Jasper and Vancouver. Let him move now to restore the Atlantic service and to restore the Toronto to Peterborough service. Let him do that if he really wants to put people first. Then we will believe him.

However, he has demonstrated previously that he cannot be believed and that he does not really mean what he says. Let us look at another example, again bearing in mind his commitment that he will put people before trains. In Hull last December, he made a speech to the Council of Transport Ministers in which he made a firm commitment to propose tighter and more firm regulations with respect to the movement of dangerous goods in highly populated areas. He resolved to limit speeds in those densely populated areas. He resolved to treat the empty tank cars which are used for hauling dangerous goods as if they were full. He proposed special identification for cars carrying dangerous goods. But what happened? When he made this announcement, the railways announced that his plan was foolish and would not work. His tough stance wilted. He cut and run. So much for the tough stance and so much for putting people before the trains.

I can go on to give other examples. Let us look at the investment arising out of the passage of the Western Grain Transportation Act. The Minister said that his Government will hold the railways accountable. The amount of $16.5 billion was to be invested in the rail transportation system in western Canada over the next ten years, creating 375,000 jobs. Of course, he has engaged in what has now become a $4.5 million advertising and promotional campaign, $3.2 million for last year and $1.2 million for this year.

Mr. Axworthy: Is that all?

Mr. Mazankowski: That's all. What's a million? They cannot find money to create jobs for the unemployed.

It was confirmed in committee yesterday that the railways will reduce their investment by $4 billion, to make it $12.5 billion. The Minister's surface administrator alluded to that yesterday.

The Minister plays footloose and fancy free with figures. The other day he remarked in the House that $1.1 billion of new investment will take place in western Canada this year. Upon verifying that figure, we discovered that it is $646 million. That is the way he misleads us. I do not know whether he does it deliberately, I just do not think he knows any better.

Even a Toronto Star editorial states that the Minister is spending a boxcar's worth of taxpayer's money on a pointless newspaper ad campaign. It goes on to say:

> In other words, these particular ads are nothing but fluff. They look very much like a use of public tax dollars for partisan electioneering.

That is what it is all about. Let us look at some other examples. What about the $204 million agricultural adjustment fund? He said that it is still in the Budget. Let me quote what he said at the Transport Committee hearing when he first assumed the Ministry. He said:

● (1230)

> I can assure you that for my part no Canadian will be a victim of the progress this Bill brings, not the Western grain farmer, nor the livestock producer in either the West or the East in Canada.

Gary Jones, President of the Canadian Cattlemen's Association, said that on the passage of this Bill with a payment of the benefit to the railroads it will cost livestock production by 50 per cent on the ferries.

Well, the $204 million agricultural adjustment fund is still in the Minister's envelope, but it is frozen until 1986. Even with respect to the method of payment inquiry, he did not obey the law, Mr. Speaker. The law clearly says that the committee shall be in place on April 1, 1984. It is not in place. It will not be in place for a couple of weeks. That is absolute contempt for the law.

With reference to the minimum compensatory rate issue, back in February the Minister said we would have a decision in two weeks. That matter is still under consideration. What about the branch line rehabilitation program? He said to my friend, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin): "I want to inform Mr. Benjamin that I am presently negotiating with the railroads and others to develop a revised branchline program, one that will allow us to virtually complete the network. I would hope to be able to bring this forward in three to four weeks." It is still not there. As a matter of fact the Estimates show that the branchline rehabilitation program in Western Canda is being slashed by some $26.6 million.

Finally, on this issue, what about the Western Development Fund?

Mr. McDermid: Where is it?

Mr. Mazankowski: Remember October 28, 1980 Mr. Speaker? Just to refresh the memories of Hon. Members, I will quote from the Budget at page 11: It reads:

> We have, therefore, allocated $4 billion to a Western Development Fund, of which we expect to spend $2 billion over the next three years.

Do you know how much has been spent, Mr. Speaker? The fund has vanished and evaporated. The Government took $82 million out of it to pay for the embargo; $60 million to pay for the Vancouver LRT; and $6 million to grant more tax concessions to the railroads. There was to have been $345 million for economic development. That money has vanished as well. So much for the Western Development Fund. That was a trade-off. That was a quid pro quo for the generosity of Western Canadian provinces that diverted huge sums of money earned from their resources which were to be transferred back for economic development opportunities. What a sham!

Let me now turn to deregulation of air services, Mr. Speaker. I realize that I am fast approaching my time limit, but I want to speak about deregulation. There is nothing that has been more confused, more convoluted and more amateurish than this Minister's approach to deregulating the airline industry. The Minister goes to the United States. He meets with a couple of people. He takes a public opinion poll. Then he says, "Ah, deregulation of the airline industry. That's what we have to do". The Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) basically believes he can deregulate Canada's airline industry by importing the total system from the United States. For him it is a new phenomenon. But in the course of his approach, he has raised expectations on which he cannot deliver. For example, on March 2 the Minister said that Canadians could save the $300 million a year on air travel costs and a less regulated system. When asked him in committee to substantiate those figures, but the Minister could not do so. He said it was just an estimate. He then went through the exercise of setting up three different processes. He has the CTC examining the issue; he has a task force composed of bureaucrats and members of the industry; and then he has his own little group within his own office. They are the ones who are going to make the decision. Why is the Minister doing this? It is part of his political mentality and it is part of his penchant for deception. His mind will be made up within his own office, and the rest of it is really just window dressing.

The Financial Post really put this thing into perspective in an editorial on March 10, 1984, which reads:

> Trailed by a gaggle of high-priced legal talent hired to represent their air carriers, government departments and other interest groups, the Air Transport Committee of the Canadian Transport Committee is on a month-long coast-to-coast tour to solicit public opinion on reducing the regulation of air fares within Canada. At the same time, federal Transport Minister Lloyd Axworthy has a group of bureaucrats working at breakneck pace to prepare new domestic air carrier policy proposals for cabinet consideration within a month.
> Axworthy's pre-emptive push makes the travelling committee's work look like a particularly futile exercise. What can be achieved by having both groups operating concurrently? For instance, there's little point in the ATC allowing individual route fares to float at carrier prerogative between ceiling and a floor price, as the airlines proposed last month at the opening round of hearings in Ottawa, if only one or two airlines are allowed to fly any particular route.

It goes on to say:

> The move to airline deregulation in Canada is an issue whose time has come. However, the mad rush now under way seems to owe its momentum more to the political attractiveness of cheaper air fares when an election is in the offing than any rational attempt to forge a long-term, workable policy.

That is precisely what is happening. There can be no question in my mind. My Party agrees that deregulation is inevitable. The debate is over the extent to which we are going to deregulate and the speed with which we are going to deregulate.

I remind the Minister that he has a responsibility and an obligation to enunciate that policy. He cannot expect the CTC to outline the policy. It is up to him to outline the policy and ensure that whatever regulations are left in place are fair and equitable and administered in this way. I do not believe, and my Party does not believe for one minute, that you can simply transplant or import the U.S. deregulation system. Yes, we can certainly learn from the American experience. But we must in this country tailor a deregulation policy to suit our own needs. We must recognize that we have quite a different structure in Canada. We have a different climate. We have a different economy. I am glad my friend across the way has flashed the booklet entitled "Domestic Air Policy". That is evidence of the very excellent work done by the parliamentary committee.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: I would say in passing that this work would be the basis of a good starting point toward a planned, orderly and thoughtful deregulation process. There is no question about that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: We must recognize that this has to be done in a thoughtful and orderly fashion.

I see my time is up, Mr. Speaker. This morning I delivered a letter to the Minister in which I pointed out a number of areas I consider to be of major importance. Having regard to it, I plead with and urge the Minister not to opt for a simplistic political solution. I urge him to proceed in a planned and orderly fashion and not simply on the basis of what is best politically for him. The quick fix, in my view, would clearly discredit the necessity for a more efficient and less regulated system.

There is no doubt that this issue is very complicated. It certainly involves much more than simply deregulating the entry and exit of carriers or controls over fares. It really boils down to a matter of costs. What really is at issue here is that high fares are definitely the unwanted symptom, but the disease is high airline costs. Quite frankly, it boils down to a matter of costs in: the airport system including the taxes, the user fees, the landing costs, and the very structure of the Canadian industry that has emerged in a tightly regulated environment.

Let me remind the Minister that over the last 25 years we have developed an environment that was, under successive Liberal administrations, a tightly controlled and regulated environment. For him to come in as a knight in shining armour and dismantle everything without considering the matter in a thoughtful and workable way would not be doing a service to Canada. In one minute I will conclude. I plead with the Minister—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. I regret to advise the Hon. Member but his time has already expired. There follows a ten-minute period for questions and comments. The Hon. Member will have a chance to speak again. The Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson).

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). It is really a question which producers and farmers are asking. Producers and farmers are facing increased freight rates. There now seems to be a clear indication that investment is being drawn back considerably toward improving freight lines. This has to be done. It is most important that producers get their grain to the international marketplace, given the fact that they are 1,500 miles from open water at many points. Does the Hon. Member think that what the Government has done has fairly considered the position of the producers with regard to freight rates and to what is happening?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, that is a very good question. I see it drove the Minister of Transport out of the House with laughter. That just goes to show how much consideration or concern he has for western producers.

The fact of the matter is that farmers were told during the course of the debate that they would get more if they paid more. We now see a dramatic reduction in the railway investment plans of 25 per cent. If that is fair, then it should be fair that the freight rate increases of farmers should be reduced proportionately. I think that is a very clear and simple answer.

Farmers in western Canada are not price setters; they are price takers. Any increase in input costs, whether it be gasoline, diesel fuel, fertilizer, chemicals or freight rates, will undermine their ability to compete in the international marketplace. Increased freight rates will further impair their ability to compete in the international marketplace and have a realistic return.

What is really happening here is that increased freight rates will have a very major effect upon the competitive ability of producers of western Canada. It comes at a time when other major exporting countries are increasing their support for their producers, and we in Canada are reducing our support for our grain producers.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my colleague a question on deregulation. He started to touch upon it and his time ran out. While the philosophy and principle of deregulation is there and is invoking much interest, in the latter parts of the comments of the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) he talked about input costs. In terms of input costs, the taxes on gasoline, landing fees and labour costs, after all those costs the structure would really have to be assessed, reviewed and possibly reduced. If we are able to have controlled deregulation, in the experience of the Hon. Member and from the studies he has made or from the American experience, what is the situation in terms of jobs in the aircraft industry? Would those also come down?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, there is a whole series of questions wrapped up in that. However, first I want to make the point that we have a very extravagant and elaborate airport system in the country which must be paid for by the travelling public, by the person who buys the ticket. As a matter of fact, our calculations show that in fuel taxes, user fees and in ticket head tax, there are something like $450 million in direct and indirect taxes. We have many Taj Mahals, as the Minister himself alluded to, in the aborted Pickering project and the white elephant at Mirabel which is losing some $50 million per year. These are all costs which have to be absorbed by the Canadian travelling public. We have more excessive landing fees, more excessive taxes and user fees in Canada than there are in the United States. When the Minister considers his whole approach to deregulation, we implore him not simply to load the whole mess on to the backs of the air carriers. He should look at his own shop. He has to do some cost reduction and reducing of bureaucracy and control within his own shop. There is certainly a lot of red tape and many bureaucratic nightmares going on in terms of making a decision. Those are very important points.

The other matter is the role of Air Canada in this whole exercise. That is what is so different about the structure in Canada vis-à-vis the structure in the United States. Air Canada controls 60 per cent of the market. It is a Crown corporation. The Minister has a two-pronged duty. He is custodian for the shareholders in terms of Air Canada, so he has to represent their best interests, but he also has to represent the best interests of the travelling public. How will he square that issue? These are the complex issues.

The other matter is that when the Minister goes around comparing lower air fares in the United States, he is really talking about the lower air fares of the new entrants whose labour component is 50 per cent of that of the established carriers and whose equipment component also is roughly 50 per cent of that of the established carriers because they bought planes on the used market at a time of recession. Their unit costs are much, much cheaper. When the Minister talks about People's Express and the new entrants in the system, he certainly should not suggest to Canadian travellers that they will have the same advantages as they have down there. Then we have the population and the hub and spoke system which works so effectively there. It will only work on a limited course here.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment and a question. Mirabel is costing us almost $50 million a year. I noticed a week ago that it probably had the biggest crowd since the Liberals threw the opening cocktail party of that white elephant when a rock star by the name of Boy George arrived. Maybe the Minister—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. In the questions and comments period, Members are allowed to put questions or to make comments upon the speech that has been made. I cannot find the relevance at the moment to the remarks of the Hon. Member. He should direct his remarks, either comments or question, to the speech of the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski).

Mr. McDermid: I was talking about Mirabel Airport which he mentioned in his speech.It was a comment on that and it is going to be a question on that as well, if I may finish my train of thought. I suggest to the Minister that he might throw the odd rock concert out there and maybe the airport will start paying for itself.

The Minister has made the statement that deregulation would improve the deficit position at Mirabel Airport. He has not explained how that would happen. I cannot imagine how deregulation would improve Mirabel Airport, because nobody wants to fly in there. Could the Hon. Member shed any light on that statement?

Mr. Mazankowski: I cannot imagine how that could happen either. Perhaps the Hon. Member might more properly address that question to the Minister. If it were a totally free and unregulated market, all air carriers would refuse to go there and the airport would have to be closed down.

Mr. McDermid: Exactly.

Mr. Mazankowski: That might be the best thing that could happen.

Mr. Parker: Mr. Speaker, I have several questions for the Minister—for the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski).

Mr. McDermid: You were right the first time.

Mr. Parker: My first question to the former Minister of Transport, concerns a matter we were discussing in the debate on Bill C-155. We put forward a proposal, which possibly would have avoided this Opposition Day discussion, in which we called for the separation of that Bill. We wanted the Bill to be separated so that we would have a separate one dealing with rail transportation and the railways could live up to their commitments. We could have tried to deal with that in a separate vote. We also wanted the matter of the releasing of the coal lands dealt with in a separate vote and we wanted the grain freight rates dealt with separately. We could have dealt with that in a very serious way. The Conservatives did not allow that or would not support it.

With regard to VIA Rail, the Hon. Member mentioned its upgrading from Edmonton to Jasper to Kamloops. Would he see that as seriously affecting the Transcontinental train which runs from Calgary to Vancouver? It would have very serious effects if it were not maintained as a railway transportation system across Canada.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, to answer the first part of the question, there were so many rather frivolous and phoney amendments introduced to Bill C-155 by the NDP that most of them could not be taken seriously. I am not sure whether the Hon. Member would categorize that particular amendment as one of the package of serious amendments or one which was frivolous. What disappointed Members of this Party very much was that we were unable to debate the Bill fully. We had a whole host of other amendments with which we wanted to proceed.

Mr. Dion: There were two years of obstruction in committee.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Hon. Member referred to two years of obstruction.

Mr. Dion: One year.

Mr. Mazankowski: That is absolute nonsense. He knows not of what he speaks. The Bill was introduced in May and it passed the House in November. That was the only period of time in which the issue was really dealt with by the House of Commons. The fact of the matter is that there were many frivolous amendments. I can tell you that our purpose from day one—

Mr. Dion: Was to do nothing.

Mr. Mazankowski: —was to improve and protect the interests of the farmers.

Mr. Dion: You were doing nothing. I was there.

Mr. Mazankowski: If we were doing nothing, how come Hon. Members across the way accepted 55 amendments proposed by the Conservative Party?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Even the back-benchers are engaged in this political manipulation and ballyhoo. They do not speak from facts; they speak from political instinct.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I regret to advise the Hon. Member that the time for questions and comments has expired. For debate—

Mr. Malone: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone).

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, would you seek unanimous consent to extend the time for questioning so that more of us will have a chance to get good wisdom from the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski)?

Mr. Dion: No.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I clearly heard a "no", but I could put it again.

An Hon. Member: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The answer is no. For debate, the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. If the Minister of Transport will excuse me, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Hopkins) is rising on a point of order.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, when I listed the questions that would be answered today, I believe I included Question No. 268. I want to correct that statement because Question No. 268 has not been answered today. I would repeat that those that were answered today were Nos. 14, 645 and 689.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski:

That whereas a sound national transportation system is essential for economic growth in Canada, this House condemns the Minister of Transport for issuing contradictory statements which have created uncertainty and confusion in the transportation industry and amongst users of the transportation system, and for his failure to fulfill his promises and commitments relating to the creation of jobs and investment and the improvement of rail service under the Western Grain Transportation Act; the modernization and upgrading of passenger rail service; the reduction of domestic air fares in 1984; the improvement of transportation safety in all modes; and the revitalization of Canada's marine industries.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I rise to comment and discuss some of the interesting proposals that have been put forward. First I want to thank the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) for having listed so eloquently the number of accomplishments we have been able to bring forward in the last six or seven months. We do, of course, have some quarrel with the interpretation that he puts upon those various initiatives. He seems to interpret them purely as matters of political response as opposed to what they clearly are, that is, responding to the clear public requirement for change.

I do not expect Tories to understand reform and change. We know full well that it is not in their mentality to understand how to go about changing something and bring about an improvement. As we know, they are defenders of the status quo, the established interest of the people who are simply digging their heels into the trenches and unable to make any judgement as to where we should go to bring about improvement in this country. It is understandable that they would be just a trifle vexed when a Minister or a government comes along with some ideas, energy and enthusiasm to make changes in the very important transportation system.

I can understand the frustration of the Hon. Member for Vegreville. If we add up the list of what has happened in the last six months and compare it to the absolute zero of what happened in his nine months, the comparison is slightly odious. I understand his personal pique, his sense of frustration that he does not find himself in a position of being able to make those kinds of complimentary comparisons. I appreciate the fact that he has been awake long enough to know what we are doing. He is now trying to ride the coattails and attach himself to those initiatives.

Now the Hon. Member is saying, "Me too". He is beginning to sound like his Leader. All of a sudden he is finding that there are policies out there. Just like the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney), he is going around saying, "We have policies", not that we have seen them. The Member for Vegreville is now properly saying that they believe in better prices for air travel. Why did he not do something about it? He says they believe in doing something about passenger rail service. Why did he not do something about it when he had the opportunity? All that we hear from the other side is a confession, the fact that they wish they had tried to adopt what we are doing. They are trying to piggyback and coattail on the very important developments in which we are engaged.

It is important in describing those developments to clear up some of the confusion. If I can make one small criticism of the Hon. Member for Vegreville, it is that he is ignorant. He does not really relate the facts as they are. If you do not mind, Mr. Speaker, I wish to use a moment or two to clear up those problems. I am sure the Hon. Member would like to know a little more about our transportation system. This is the opportunity to tell him about it.

First, let us talk about the impact of the grain transportation Bill. The major initiative to provide for a competitive, productive transportation system is the single most important development in western Canada and in the economic life in this country in this decade. Who was opposed to it? Who did not have the guts to recognize that change was required? The Member for Vegreville and his colleagues. They say we should have an improved transportation system, but they opposed what everyone acknowledged had to take place, namely, a change in the system to allow us to compete for markets abroad.

I read recently in the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix a comment made by a high official in the U.S. Department of Agriculture. He said that in the 1970s they were able to take markets away from the Canadian producer because of the poor quality of our delivery system, but in the 1980s we are going to take markets away from them because we are now making the changes that we recognize have to be made. That shows that we have the guts, the will and the motivation to make the necessary change, not to hide behind some reactionary cloak of "It's not time", not to find excuses for not making change. Those changes are now going ahead.

The railways have committed $1.1 billion in new investment. We are buying hopper cars in Trenton, Nova Scotia in the constituency of the Member's Leader. We are buying locomotives in London. The Beaver Tunnel tenders are now out for call. It will be the single largest construction project going on in North America. That system is being brought up to capacity right now because this Government had the motivation and purpose to make a decision, which the Conservative Party did not have, and never will have because they do not know how to make decisions. They do not know how to make change or reform.

We are now prepared to look at the new forecasts for that railway system. This morning in Winnipeg, and unfortunately I was prevented from attending, the Senior Grain Transportation Committee is looking at the railways' investment plans, reviewing them to see how adequate they are. We believe that that judgement should be made by all the participants in the system. The railways, producers and grain companies are all there this morning to review those investment plans and to give advice to the Government as to whether they are adequate. We do not rely on the fantasies of the Hon. Member for Vegreville. We go to the people who are affected by the program. Unfortunately, because of his introduction today, I was not able to share in that discussion, but I hope to join them later.

Let us talk for a moment about rail passenger services. What have we tried to do in the last six months? First, we put a five-year capital program together so that VIA Rail has a clear certainty as to investments and modernization. They are now making those investments; $300 million for new maintenance bases and the beginning of a new prototype car and wagon for the Atlantic and western regions. In the meantime, they are modernizing present equipment to bring it up to standard during that period of time. There is the introduction of a new discount program for senior citizens and young people to get more people travelling on our passenger rail.

We are providing the kind of incentive and encouragement to our rail passenger system that people will respond to. The Hon. Member was kind enough to quote from a speech I gave on Saturday. He was not prepared to quote from that article the part about how Transportation 2000, a group deeply interested in the consumer interests of this country, applauded that performance. They realize we are now making the changes that the Tories never even thought about and will never be able to introduce because they do not have the guts to make changes. They do not know how to reform the structure.

Let us talk for a moment about the air system. I was glad to see that the Hon. Member rapidly hopped on his bicycle, trying to catch up to the new policy that we are bringing in. He is now trying to capture lost ground. We are not importing any kind of policy from another country. We are devising our own policy here. The CTC is listening to Canadians across Canada to get their points of view so that we will have a policy that reflects the unique characteristics of Canada.

We are also looking at some of the other basic questions relating to the financing and the role of Air Canada, and labour relations which are not part of that study. We will bring those two channels of communication and policy development together and go to Cabinet this spring. We will have a new policy that is and has been based on a large-scale public debate. We believe in the public fora. We believe the debate among Canadians should be taking place and it is taking place now.

In his resolution, the Hon. Member for Vegreville asks what is the result of it. I point out to the Hon. Member, who has been in a long 20-year sleep, that in the last three months the airlines have brought in major discount fares, cutting prices on seat sales by 50 per cent or 60 per cent. They have brought in a discount program for senior citizens and young people. They have brought in programs where the CTC is now making decisions, opening new routes into the United States and other areas, something which they did not do in years past.

The debate has already created a climate of reform, a climate of change, a climate in which the consuming public in this country is going to get the deal that we promised them they would get.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. When the House adjourned at one o'clock, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) had the floor. Following the Minister of Transport's speech, there was to be a period of 10 minutes allowed for questions and comments. I would suggest that in the circumstances, because the Minister of Transport cannot reply, any questions posed should be rhetorical. Nevertheless, Hon. Members may make comments if they wish.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, during the course of the Minister's remarks, he made reference to the fact that this Party was getting on the deregulatory bandwagon. Quite frankly, as I indicated in my remarks earlier, deregulation is a phenomenon that the Minsiter had just discovered. He went to the United States for a weekend, met with a few people and learned that air fares were a little cheaper there. He had a briefing session, and so he came back and took a public opinion poll and realized that it would be politically right to get on the deregulatory bandwagon.

Just to set the record straight, Mr. Speaker, I would like to talk about the nine months that we were in office. I am very pleased that the Hon. Member for Laprairie (Mr. Deniger) is here. He has acknowledged the steps the Conservative Government took at that time in terms of scaling down the regulatory burden and opening up the opportunity for increased competition and innovation through cheaper air fares.

For example, we took steps to relax the restrictions on the licensing of routes with respect to entry and exit. We took action to provide greater flexibility to allow for more competition. We took steps to increase the utilization and efficiency of the total system. We took a very important step, Mr. Speaker, when we relaxed very dramatically the domestic air charters, because the regulations had been very strict. The country's major air charter company, Wardair, was really impotent in terms of penetrating the domestic air charter service. We took steps to relax those regulations very dramatically.

The fact of the matter is that prior to our being in office, only 15 per cent of air travellers in Canada flew at discount rates. Some of the initiatives we took were in terms of the relaxation of the restrictions on routes and on the seat sales. We encouraged people to travel in Canada. We also reduced the pre-booking deadline and the minimum stop requirements. We even encouraged the utilization of the belly-hold for cargo on domestic ABCs. Again, the objective was to increase the efficiency not only of the airplanes but indeed of the airport system.

As I said, prior to our relaxing those regulations, only 15 per cent of Canadian air travellers travelled at discount rates. This really went into effect in February, 1980, and as a result, today 50 per cent of the Canadian air travellers travel at domestic rates. So we really laid the groundwork.

• (1410)

I should say as well that in terms of expanding competition from a regional perspective, we laid the groundwork—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order.

Mr. Mazankowski: —for Pacific Western Airlines to service Brandon and to service Toronto. Those are a few examples —

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Hold it, please. I am prepared to allow the Hon. Member to continue provided no other Hon. Members want to use part of this time. However, I must try as best I can to give everyone an opportunity to participate.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, York-Scarborough is the largest riding in Canada. I represent over 200,000 residents with approximately 130,000 voters.

Mr. Mazankowski: Is this your maiden speech?

Mr. Cosgrove: It is not my maiden speech. I was merely setting the groundwork, Mr. Speaker, to explain that geographically, in the centre of the riding, is Canada's largest railway yard operation by CP Rail.

I wanted to comment that the presentation made by the Minister this morning is indicative of the vigour and sensitivity which was reflected in his response to a problem which I, as a Member of Parliament, encountered in the operation of that yard. I wanted to indicate, Mr. Speaker, once again that the Minister's leadership in a number of areas, for example, last touched upon by the previous speaker, was reflected in the success I had in resolving the problem with the noise created by what is referred to as the "hump" operation, the making up and breaking up of large train sections coming into that area which, as I say, is in a built up section of Metropolitan Toronto.

It was with the assistance of the Minister and the officials of the City of Metropolitan Toronto, and even of the provincial Minister of the Environment, that we were able to work out co-operatively a plan to solve an irritant which caused great trouble in the community. I, for one, am appreciative of the vigour which the Minister brought not only to that problem but to the issues he talked about in his presentation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Are there any other comments?

Mr. Hargrave: Mr. Speaker, I presume I will have an opportunity now to make a brief comment at least, if not ask a question, on the Minister's remarks just before we broke for lunch. My comment is with respect to a very specific item which occurred during the committee stage of Bill C-155, dealing with alfalfa and alfalfa products, whether or not they should be allowed to be covered by, shall we say, the new process under the terms of Bill C-155.

The Minister will remember this instance very well. I wanted to address the question to him personally. I have addressed the question to him in the House. I have written to him about it, and so on. We produce a lot of alfalfa products in my constituency and they consist of cubes, meal and pellets. These three items are now in reasonably strong demand in the export market, especially to Japan. Under the terms of the new Crow legislation they should be able to be shipped by rail to the seaboard and then, of course, by boat all the way to Japan, and this should help the total operation. Unfortunately, the railways appear to be able to make their own interpretation of the new ruling and have been finding ways to charge if not higher freight rates, at least higher surcharges or some extra kinds of charges, which has made it exceedingly difficult for one of my businesses, namely, Tirol Dehydrators, operating in the towns of Tilley and Rolling Hills, Alberta. This company has been in operation for eight years.

The interpretation by both railways of how this new freight structure is to work seems to be entirely their own, even though they have been instructed by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy), through the Canadian Transport Commission, to operate according to the new process.

I want to draw this situation to the attention of the House. It is a hardship. It seems there is no way that these products can be shipped to Japan by using hopper cars to ship them to the port of departure on the West Coast, Vancouver or Seattle, because it is just too costly. However, shipping by containers which are sealed and moved by special transport to a railway point of departure, either at Calgary, Lethbridge or Medicine Hat, then being hauled to Vancouver or Seattle by rail, then transshipped to the decks of ocean freighters, is a viable operation. If they must ship by hopper cars, which it seems the railways feel they must do, then it is almost impossible. I hope the Minister will give some attention to this matter.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): That is the end of the ten-minute period for comments. Debate.

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to speak on the Opposition motion presented by the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). The motion reads in part:

> That whereas a sound national transportation system is essential for economic growth in Canada, this House condemns the Minister of Transport for issuing contradictory statements which have created uncertainty and confusion in the transportation industry.

This is exactly what the New Democratic Party said during the debate on Bill C-155. Everyone in this House knew that we needed changes to our transportation system. We on this side knew that it must be upgraded, but we wanted a transportation Bill which would deal with transportation issues separately, to be voted on separately, with some guarantees by the railways as to how the system was going to be advanced, and so on. We wanted another separate Bill with respect to the release of the coal lands which had been tied up for over 80 years. We wanted to know how they were going to be released and how the Government was going to develop them. However, that matter had to be voted on in the same Bill.

We also wanted to be able to deal with grain freight rates separately so we could identify what the costs were going to be. We said that on May 19. We requested that the Conservative Party support us on the issue of having the Bill divided, but we could not get that support. And here we are today debating the problems relating to this omnibus Bill.

The Government has guaranteed $560 million a year for the next three years in railway upgrading. There is no guarantee that the railways are going to carry out these kinds of programs. Much of the work mentioned by the Minister will be taking place in my riding of Kootenay East-Revelstoke, such as the Beaver Tunnel, the new shops in Golden, and the doubletracking, all very worthwhile and needed projects. But there is no guarantee, Mr. Speaker, that the work is going to be available to the people in my riding. At this time, 96 per cent of the people in the building trades are unemployed, yet when they try to get work on these projects, they cannot. The Department of Transport will spend $4.5 million this year in advertising and programs dealing with these kinds of projects, and the people are told about all the employment which is going to be created. I want to see some of that employment. The workers in my riding want to see some of that employment. There is a great deal of concern regarding these mega-projects. Some $560 million a year and a new diesel shop in Golden—I welcome that kind of project which is needed to repair and maintain this equipment in good order. But while that is being done, what is going to happen to the repair shop in Revelstoke which has been there for over 100 years? What is going to happen to the repair shops in Cranbrook and Field? Anyone with any knowledge of railways knows that those workers are going to have to move from Revelstoke, Cranbrook and Field to Golden when the project is completed. There will be some very serious ramifications for these communities. While we agree that these projects must take place, the companies have a responsibility to those communities.

Mr. Pepin: Change must take place but without change.

Mr. Parker: Let us have change, but orderly change. Perhaps a part of the company's pension department or billing department could be moved there to offset those changes. When the trains can cross that system in three or four hours instead of ten or eleven hours, will the company come forward and say it would like to move the terminal from Revelstoke to Golden, completely destroying the viability of that community? The only thing they have left is their position as a divisional point of CP Rail. They must have some assurance that if this company is going to make technological changes of that nature, it will use some other part of this large company to offset the changes. If that is not done, there will be serious ramifications and the whole community will wither away. I for one will not allow that to happen without making some effort to get commitments from the railway company and from this Government to ensure that it does not happen.

We spoke for a few moments about passenger rail service, Mr. Speaker. Passenger rail service is something other than rail service in the corridor from Windsor to Toronto to Montreal. VIA Rail goes across this country, and we have seen a deterioration of that system in western Canada, especially from Winnipeg west. There is supposed to be new equipment coming on stream by the year 1986. But they have done nothing but allow the equipment to deteriorate.

We used to have what they called "the Canadian" when CP Rail operated it. It was a crack train across Canada. After VIA Rail took over, they took the better part of that equipment off, amalgamated it with old CNR equipment, upgraded it and said, "That is good enough for the West; we will build all the new equipment for the Atlantic Provinces and central Canada". Well, I say it is not good enough, Mr. Speaker. At this very time up in Jasper hearings are being held to look at the possibility of reinstating the train from Jasper to Kamloops. I question that also. Are we now going to lose the passenger train from Calgary to Vancouver? Are we going to lose the only other link we have with the Transcontinental train? I say to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy): Not on your life! Not without a fight from the people of my riding and those of western Canada. We need an updated transportation system which is going to serve the people and not turn them away.

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, in the Standing Committee on Transport we questioned the $4.5 million being used to brag about the Government's changes to the transportation system. This $4.5 million advertising and display program is nothing more than a political platform for the Liberal Party in order to try to convince the people about this scam they have created. When the west joined Confederation the Crow rate was part of that agreement. We have been sold down the river by a Government which has forced this change through legislation which was opposed by virtually every Member of Parliament from Winnipeg west, except for the two Liberals from Manitoba. Yet the Government forced it through, and now we are beginning to see some of the ramifications.

When I first came into this House, Mr. Speaker, there was a Bill called the Western Development Fund. There was supposed to have been $4 billion in that fund for development of the west. What has happened to that fund? I know what the Government is going to say. Well, we have changed that. We have the Western Grain Transportation Bill in its place. Well, that is not good enough, Mr. Speaker. There is no guarantee regarding what is going to take place or where the money is going to be spent. We were told in committee yesterday that the railway's contribution to the fund will be $90 million this year. There is $560 million of federal money and $90 million of railway money. It is not good enough, Mr. Speaker. Where are the guarantees that the transportation system is going to receive this money? Where is the guarantee that the grain producers are going to benefit from this?

The transportation of dangerous goods was also mentioned by the Hon. Member for Vegreville, Mr. Speaker. I, too, want to express concern about that. We have had a serious accident in Mississauga, a near accident in Medicine Hat, trains 120 cars long handling dangerous goods, and at this very moment CP Rail has put in an application for the testing of trains with a view to removing the caboose. How in heaven's name, Mr. Speaker, can we even be considering such a move? We have communities all along the rail line and trains of that length handling these dangerous commodities and the railways have the audacity to come forward and say that on such and such a date we are going to be testing trains with a view to taking the caboose off. It has to be madness, Mr. Speaker, and the Minister and his Department ought to be ashamed of themselves for even considering it at this time.

Regarding the $2.5 million agriculture adjustment fund, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport was to have set up the committee by April 1, according to Bill C-155. To this date we have seen no part of that committee. We in the NDP find that deplorable. That was a commitment made when the Bill was passed, and yet the Minister has not even seen fit to set up the committee to deal with the adjustment fund regarding the prairie producers.

The abandonment of rail lines on the Prairies was also discussed. The Member for Vegreville questioned the administrator of the Transport Committee with regard to the abandonment of rail lines. We were told that those moneys are not at this time in the Budget but there will be changes made to ensure that they are there. That is not good enough. It shows the kind of attitude the Government has. The Government meets with the railway companies, makes decisions, and then comes here and rubberstamps them. Mr. Speaker, when is the Government going to start to govern in a way that is in the best interests of the people of Canada?

I would like to speak for a moment about the deregulation of airlines. I have a great deal of concern about that. While it may sound interesting and inviting, I am worried about the small airlines such as PWA that come into Cranbrook and the schedules that are set. Those issues are important to those communities. If we bring about deregulation and allow those companies to fly only in areas where the fares are inviting and encouraging, smaller communities could be very seriously affected. That is not good enough for a transportation policy of this country.

I commend the Hon. Member for bringing forward this motion on an Opposition day. I only wish we had had the opportunity to have this Bill separated. The Minister said this was a frivolous motion. I believe that was one of the most important motions put forward during the debate on the Crow. We could have discussed the very issues I have outlined and have had guarantees that the company would do certain things. We wanted certain conditions in that piece of legislation so that workers would feel they could contribute to those discussions.

There are some very serious matters that must be addressed here, Mr. Speaker. I hope the Government will ensure that some of these things are protected. CP Rail has set up a separate entity called CP Special Projects. They put their contracts out to tender to non union contract companies. These companies are coming into the Province of British Columbia mainly from the Province of Alberta. This denies the people in the Kootenay East-Revelstoke area the opportunity to work. It is believed that many of these companies are being assisted by the federal Government issuing work permits in violation of the Fair Wages Act. Mr. Speaker, this is not good enough. It is something we cannot accept.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a 10 minute period for questions or comments.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I have one question for the Hon. Member who just spoke. It deals with his closing comments. It seemed to me he was very much against people from Alberta and other provinces of Canada going into British Columbia and taking jobs in that province. In my opinion, Sir, we are all Canadians. We ought to be able to find work anywhere in this country without hindrance.

Why is the Hon. Member of the opinion that Canadians should not be free to travel between provinces to seek work wherever they can find it?

Mr. Parker: Mr. Speaker, in no way would I suggest that people from Alberta or any other part of Canada should not be able to travel freely from province to province. However, the Conservative Government of British Columbia has created such hardships in that province that our people are finding themselves in lineups for soup kitchens, as we heard this morning. They have been told in $4.5 million advertisements that they will have work on these projects. Naturally they feel a great deal of resentment when the contracts are awarded in other places while 96 per cent of their workforce is unemployed. I share that resentment, as much as I would like to be able to see people from other parts of Canada come to our beautiful province. We in the Kootenay East-Revelstoke area want some recognition and some part of that action. I do not think that is too much to ask, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Are there any other persons rising to make comments or to put questions? If there are no further Members with questions or comments, I recognize the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Deniger) for debate.

Mr. Pierre Deniger (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the comments of my hon. friend from Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker), and my conclusion must be that his speech was full of contradictions, because while he spoke out against everything the Government is trying to do in the West to upgrade the railway system, he was also insisting that the jobs go only to the people in his riding. When the Transport Committee was out West, the Member for Portneuf (Mr. Dion) told me that the industrial commissioner in his home town was not very pleased with his Member's record. However, Mr. Speaker, today, I would like to concentrate on regulation and our domestic air policy. First, I would like to thank the Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) for moving a motion that gives me a chance to talk about transport.

Mr. Speaker, obviously, I cannot agree with the wording of the motion of the Member for Vegreville, because it condemns the Government for taking initiatives which the Minister says are popular. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that anyone who accuses us of wooing the voters is entirely wrong. I think it is clear that if a policy is god, it will also be politically acceptable. Mr. Speaker, I remember, and my interest in transport goes back a number of years, that my former boss, the former Minister of Transport, Otto Lang, was always reminding me, although he was a Member from the West, that we first had to make sure that what we were doing was right, and if it was, it would be politically right as well. The Member for Vegreville, who was Minister of Transport for nine months, seems to hold the view that we should do nothing, in case it might be politically right and acceptable to the Canadian people. Mr. Speaker, the changes in the Crow rate, the jobs that have been created and the abundance in wealth this will bring to farmers and workers out West and to western ports, will benefit not only the local population but the entire country. I can hear the Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell), right in the centre of the Province, speaking like an expert on the Crow policy. Imagine! This Member whom I see often enough already on the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs and who is a self-styled expert in certain areas, is certainly not an expert on this subject. I would even say it is doubtful he is an expert on anything, but I will get back to that later.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear, and despite these interruptions, and in fact, I am not surprised at these interruptions by my hon. friend, because he seems to be imitating the lack of civility of his Leader, who ignored the House of Commons for several months and has now come back to life, launching insults and behaving himself in a way that is unworthy of a politician. However, enough of the lack of civility of the Leader of the Opposition, and on to our domestic air policy. The Committee on Transport examined our domestic air policy for nearly four months, and as the former Minister of Transport mentioned earlier, has produced a report of which all members are very proud. And I want to point out with respect to that report that it was prepared rather quickly, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) who was then the Progressive Conservative spokesman on that committee was exceptionally co-operative. Our order of reference came on December 15, 1981, and the hearings began in January and were concluded in February. Our report was submitted in March 1982. Three months after we received our order of reference, the members of the committee were ready to release a report.

This report is the result of the joint efforts of parliamentarians who realized that the conditions prevailing in our country were simply not good. What was our domestic air policy like when we held those hearings and what is the situation today? Let me give a brief summary, Mr. Speaker. There was in western Canada a company called Pacific Western Airlines Limited which, for important reasons I do not support, was sold to Alberta. There was also Transair which went bankrupt. Its assets were bought by Pacific Western. There was also Nordair, a company which had lost its sense of purpose and was sold to Air Canada, and Québecair, a company experiencing serious financial troubles that had to be bought by Quebec. Finally, there is EPA which admittedly has some problems. It had to move from Gander to Halifax and once again, there are some rumblings . . . It is in a difficult situation.

When we examined the domestic air policy, Mr. Speaker, we noted the failure of countries who have tried to strictly regulate their domestic air carriers. La Presse mentioned in an editorial on February 20, 1984, that we had to find a way out of this chaos. Well, the solution is clear, and it is not to leave things as they are, for the statu quo is a complete failure. The current policy is a failure. Why is it a failure? Because this is an entirely new generation of aircrafts. We are no longer dealing with propeller aircrafts, but with long range jet aircrafts which can transport a great many travellers over very long distances. To limit a Canadian carrier to a single province, therefore, would be to sign its death warrant.

If we take for granted that the statu quo is no longer unacceptable, we have to choose between two alternatives. Either allow the state, through Air Canada, to purchase and own all these companies, which means that there would be only one airline, an alternative which I oppose very strongly, or increase the territory of our carriers—this is the solution which is proposed in the report, which I support, and about which we have received so far no response from Transport Canada officials—to provide those which have similar equipment with comparable routes, thereby allowing Canadian carriers and businessmen willing to risk their own money to fly routes of their own choosing, and allowing also consumers to select their airline and to decide at what time and how often they want to fly, and at the price they are willing to pay. Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is proper for Transport Canada officials to decide when and how air travellers should fly. Air travellers can decide that on their own, and market forces should determine which companies will survive, the types of aircrafts used and the flight frequency.

As to prices, the former minister of transport suggests that they might not decrease if our carriers are deregulated.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to emphasize, as did the former Minister of Transport, that we have fixed costs in Canada, such as fuel costs, landing fees, airport user fees and transportation taxes. Since all companies have to face those costs, Mr. Speaker, we have to look elsewhere.

If those fixed costs do not change and if people want lower fares, we will have to look elsewhere. Now then, Mr. Speaker, any profitable airline company has to meet a payroll and operating expenses before making a profit, which should amount to about 30 per cent of its expenditures. A good example would be to compare People's Express in the United States with payroll expenses and fringe benefits of 20 per cent, and Air Canada whose payroll and fringe benefits take up 38 per cent of revenues.

Mr. Speaker, if people really expect lower fares in the future, the various groups—management and unions—will have to get their act together and cooperate to restore some form of equity in salaries paid by the airlines. Let us take the United States as an example, Mr. Speaker. Before deregulation, or before the consumer market was really thrown wide open, it was not unusual for instance to find that a secretary working for an airline company was earning 40 per cent more than a secretary with similar skills in another industry, that a programmer was getting 35 per cent more than if he had been working for another employer, and so on down the line. It stands to reason that the customer has to make up the difference if salaries are way out of line with those prevailing on the existing market.

Who are the customers, Mr. Speaker? People like you and I who have to travel or who go on vacation once a year. The situation being what it is, what with protected routes where competition is banned, why should the airlines even try to lower costs if they can eventually pass those inflated costs on to their paying passengers? That is exactly what I want, Mr. Speaker. I want strong competition between airline companies so that the passenger will stand to gain something from sound company management. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, we have another very serious problem in Canada, in the sense that the Canadian consumer is increasingly wary of the price of his airline ticket. Here is an example: Air Canada flights are often practically empty, so the company sells tickets at reduced prices and fills its aircraft because management has come to the conclusion that lower fares and full planes are more profitable than high fares and empty planes. The second thing they found out, Mr. Speaker—and the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) knows that as well as the Hon. Member for (Mr. Olivier) or I—is that more and more Canadians prefer going first to an airport south of the American border and take off from there for New York, Las Vegas or Los Angeles, because it is much cheaper. Even a blind man can see that, Mr. Speaker. These are the facts which compel us, as Canadians, to reconsider our domestic air transport policy.

The former minister of transport referred a while ago to Wardair. The Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) is a Wardair fan and so am I, because that company is managed by a man all Canadians should be proud of. What is happening to that company, Mr. Speaker? The former minister knows quite well, and I commend him for the action he took in 1979 and 1980 to ease the regulations, thereby making it possible for Wardair to make more money and to survive. Why, Mr. Speaker? Because the current regulations stop Wardair from competing with Air Canada and compel it to charge only charter rates, while over the same routes, Air Canada or any other carrier have two rates, namely, the regular fares and the charter fares. Mr. Speaker, we have to put back a bit of common sense into the system, and it seems to me that our starting point should be the unanimous report drafted by a committee after a serious examination of the problem. This is why I do not share the opinion of the former Minister of Transport in this regard, and why the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) should be congratulated, because he is now looking at that problem and considering our report. As far as I am concerned, the Minister of Transport did not have to wait until the Canadian Transport Commission had completed its study before considering the issue himself. In my opinion, the Minister already had a document to work on, and we should congratulate him. I do not understand why the former Minister of Transport refuses to do so. I do not understand him!

It seems quite clear to me that he deserves our congratulations. Besides, what did the former Minister of Transport say? He said that air transport deregulation was inevitable. This is true! It is inevitable, Mr. Speaker, because the present situation is unrealistic. In my opinion, if we succeed in liberalizing air rates, we will see an increase in the number of passengers, of users. Costs will go down and rates should follow suit.

Let us now look at another aspect of our air carrier industry, namely international service. In Canada, international carriers are regulated by bilateral treaties. There is a bilateral agreement between Canada and the United States, another between Canada and London, another between Canada and India, another between Canada and Germany, and so on. I do not like the fact that the negotiations should take that long. Important bilateral agreements between Canada and the United States which could be extremely useful to Canadian travellers are being negotiated. However, for reasons I find difficult to understand, these negotiations are dragging on, and I would urge the Minister concerned to try and settle the matter as quickly as possible.

Let us now consider another aspect in our transport policy, namely VIA Rail. The former minister often criticized the government for having unilaterally eliminate some Canadian services. I think that it was a hard decision that to be taken for the very survival of VIA Rail. I should explain that. It is obvious, with the obsession of the opposition about deficits, it is essential for Via Rail to rationalize its services. When I use such terms, it reminds me of Mr. Bussières, but VIA Rail would have experienced some troubles if it had not done it. And what does the rationalization of services more specifically means? It means that we had to purchase immediately from the Bombardier company in Canada the cars needed to modernize the equipment of VIA Rail.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think that it was quite easy to criticize the very difficult decision taken by the Minister for External Relations (Mr. Pepin) to eliminate VIA Rail services. However I have the vague impression, Mr. Speaker, that if the roles had been reversed, that rationalization, although slightly different at first sight, would have been substantially the same. However, the present Minister of Transport is keeping his commitment. What has he done? He has stated that he will review the services which have been eliminated. The former Minister of Transport said of such statements that they are vote-catching manoeuvres. Once again, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that doing the right thing cannot be considered electioneering. I think, Mr. Speaker, that it would be more advisable to alter a questionable decision than to leave it to another government.

Of course, I should like to thank in the first place the member for Vegreville for having given me the opportunity to deal with transport. I think the present Minister of Transport is a rather dynamic minister; his action should be encouraged so that he remains dynamic. He has his department well in hand. He puts forward rigorous user-oriented policies and, in my opinion, Mr. Speaker, that minister deserves our encouragement; I applaud him unequivocally.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): A ten-minute period is allotted to questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski).

[English]

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I always appreciate the Hon. Member's contribution to a transportation debate, unlike the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy). I could never make the charge that he was incompetent or lacked knowledge in the field of transportation because he demonstrates that every time he rises in the House to make a speech or whenever he participates in committee.

I can be very objective when I say complimentary things about the report of the Standing Committee on Transport with respect to domestic air policy in Canada because I was not a member of that committee. I want to echo the words that I have heard in this Chamber before and words that I have uttered earlier stating that the report was a piece of excellent work. Having regard to that, and given the fact that this was such an excellent report, which drew together the opinions and the recommendations not only of the industry but the users and a whole host of other interests, and that it does lay the groundwork for a practical and orderly form of deregulation, could the Hon. Member explain to the House why the present Minister and the former Minister of Transport showed such total disrespect for this report? They ignored it. They did not acknowledge it. They did not meet with the Transport Committee nor did they take any positive initiative toward accepting or adopting any of the recommendations. I say that applies both within the confines of the Transport Committee and publicly. The report was totally ignored. As a matter of fact, when the present Minister first started his campaign for deregulation, I do not know whether he realized that this report was in existence. It seems he has just discovered it in the last day or so. But I think it is totally disrespectful of this Minister and of the former Minister to have ignored so blatantly such an excellent piece of work.

Mr. Deniger: Mr. Speaker, I think it is quite clear that the former Minister of Transport, the Minister for External Relations (Mr. Pepin), discussed our report with several Members in camera and publicly. I think it is pretty safe for me to say that he did not agree with the principal recommendations. To say that he ignored the report is not accurate. What is important is that the present Minister made a commitment in the Transport Committee to come before us—

Mr. Mazankowski: When did he discover the report?

Mr. Deniger: He must have discovered it quite shortly after he was appointed, Mr. Speaker, because I brought it to his attention within a week or so. I know he discovered it quite quickly. Again, knowing the firm and sad opposition of the civil servants in the Department, it is not strange that the Minister had to appoint his own task force to look into this report and to report back to the committee in May. Again, we should applaud the Minister.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to reply and I want to make a few comments. I was interested in a part of the speech made by the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Deniger), the part that was non-political. But the only people listening to him were those on this side of the House. His own colleagues buried themselves in papers, looked around and talked to each other. At times during our Finance Committee meetings, a committee of which we are both members, the Hon. Member confused me, because I believe he really is a Conservative.

I would like to correct one thing the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Deniger) said. He referred to my lack of knowledge on the Crowsnest Pass. He may be right, but I would like to point out that I have far better facilities on this side, along with my colleagues, than he has on that side to find the good and the bad of the Crowsnest Pass. I did some research, and I was able to talk on the Bill. As I said to my wife, I know far more about the Crowsnest Pass than I ever intended to know.

Mr. Deniger: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his kind words. However, I have to remind him that for the first four years of my life in Ottawa, two years with the Canadian Transport Commission and two years with Otto Lang all I heard about was the Crow. For those four years the main and almost sole topic was the Crow.

Indeed, when the Hon. Member associates my way of thinking on this issue with that of the Conservatives, I would beg to put it another way. I brought this topic forward; they agreed with it.

I would like to refer to another dimension which I think is important. Before we started talking about liberalizing or deregulating air fares in the country, air fares were high. It is more than a coincidence now that we have discussed it that major carriers have come out with super seat sales for the elderly, youth and students. Were it not for the work of this House, and the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan), and were it not for the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport, the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne), I doubt that the super seat sales would now be available.

It started with Otto Lang. He was the Minister of Transport who originally opened the charter rules, followed by the Conservative Minister of Transport and then the present Minister. What is important is that if we had not talked about these issues, I firmly believe we would not have the discount fares we now have, and consumers would be the losers.

[Translation]

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, just like my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Deniger) for his speech. In the course of his remarks—

[English]

The Hon. Member mentioned the present Minister, and of course I understand the realities of that reference. However, I do not want to be provocative here and I commend the Hon. Member for expressing a real interest in transport here in the House, in his own area and certainly in committee. I would like to ask him a very serious question, and it is the same as the question asked by the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) in a very non-partisan way, since he was not a member of the committee.

That committee report, to which we have all referred is, as far as I am concerned is the basis for any type of reconsideration or reassessment of this question of deregulation. I would like to refer to an area which is strictly within the competence and discretion of the Minister, and ask a question of the Hon. Member. We have talked about the committee report, and we agree that something has to be done. At least there should be a formal response of some kind to that committee report. It was a unanimous report, with one disclaimer on the part of the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) who found a little disfavour with it because CPA was there. Basically the report was unanimous. There are other areas within the competence of the Minister such as gas tax, landing fees, and others.

Does the Hon. Member for La Prairie believe honestly, in his heart of hearts, that in order that the Canadian public can believe that the present Minister is serious about deregulation so that consumers will have lower fares there must not only be reference of the Commons report, but a real downward move in taxes on fuels, landing fees, and the bureaucracy which affects the price of the tickets? Unless we see some movement within the Ministry and within the Government on these areas, we have every right to wonder whether the Minister is being political or is being practical.

Mr. Deniger: The point raised by the Hon. Member is a very serious one and one which has to be looked into as part of the total package. As he knows, the building of major capital projects, whether they be ports, harbours or airports, is based upon a cost recovery aspect. That cost recovery can only be done through the user fee for that present airport. Whether or not one agrees with it, that is the reality.

Indeed, if we want to promote domestic travel in the country, if we want to ensure that our tourism dollar remains in the country, that is a way to do it. I would not remove the airport tax on international flights, nor would I necessarily remove the gasoline tax. The gasoline tax in the Province of Quebec, and I am not familiar with the others, is much higher. The provincial tax is much higher than the federal tax. Regardless of that, the question is a serious one. I would like to see measures taken to enhance domestic travel. If the removal of airport tax is one way to do that, then I would favour it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): That is the end of the ten-minute period allowed for questions and comments. For debate, the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby).

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by underlining the importance of the substance of the motion presented to the House by the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). His motion indicates very clearly that a sound national transportation system is essential for economic growth in Canada. I think that statement has to be the basis of this debate. We have to recognize the importance of the transportation system not only to economic growth in Canada but, indeed, to national unity. The tie that binds us throughout the breadth of this land is not simply language and culture, but the method and means of transportation across this great country. I associate the matter of transportation and the industries involved in transportation as important elements in our national process and our national unity.

One of the great features we have in Canada is our ability and capacity to travel to all parts of the nation. That is not so in all parts of the world. Recently I was on a tour of the Middle East and found that one of the things lacking in that ancient culture is an effective transportation system, notwithstanding that the peoples who inhabit that area of the world have a history which goes back over many, many centuries, and have proved their engineering capability in everything from the structures in Egypt to the old cities which exist in Babylon, Jerash in Jordan and other parts of the Middle East. They have proven their engineering capacity, yet they do not have an effective transportation system. Even a journey of 40 miles or 50 miles is fraught with difficulty.

We are wise to consider our transportation system, not only in its economic sense but in what it does for all Canadians and for the strength of Canada as a nation. Having said that, I want to point out that that is not an original thought. The purpose behind the modern transportation system is evidenced in the National Transportation Act enacted in 1967. In fact, that National Transportation Act, unlike a great many statutes of Canada, contains a statement of policy. I think it is wise to read it in the context of this debate. The statement of policy is contained in Section 3 of the National Transportation Act and reads:

It is hereby declared that an economic, efficient and adequate transportation system making the best use of all available modes of transportation at the lowest total cost is essential to protect the interests of the users of transportation and to maintain the economic well-being and growth of Canada—

That was a laudable expression of purpose, one which I am sure all Members of Parliament of the day endorsed. That National Transportation Act set up at the same time the Canadian Transport Commission, which had the duty and responsibility to enforce and implement that statement of transportation purpose. The Canadian Transport Commission was endowed with sufficient powers to carry out that mandate under the Act, but there the laudatory part of the exercise stopped.

What happened is that the governments of the day, in 1967 and in subsequent years, allowed the transportation system as supported by the National Transportation Act to become politicized. In short, there was a resort to the old system of patronage in implementing the high purpose of the transportation system. It started on day one. The Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) reviewed for me the activity that transpired at that time.

As I said, we have this laudatory statement of purpose with relation to the national transportation system. We have the setting up of an elaborate commission, the Canadian Transport Commission, to implement that purpose. What do we do? Right away the politicizing and patronage sets in. A former Minister of Transport, Jack Pickersgill, was made the first Chairman of the CTC.

As my colleague from Annapolis-Valley-Hants pointed out, he was the father of the Bill. One wonders whether he was just setting himself up to take care of his ongoing career once he retired from strict politics. That was not enough. When it came time for him to pass on, he was replaced by another former Liberal Cabinet Minister, Mr. Benson. Today at the head of the Canadian Transport Commission we have another former Liberal Minister of Transport, Mr. Marchand. We have a continuing resort to politicization and patronage in our transportation system.

Unfortunately it goes right down the line. It does not stop at the make-up of the CTC. That is why in the late 1970s the Law Reform Commission made an intensive study of the Canadian Transport Commission. I will read their conclusion into the record:

Like many other regulatory agencies, the Commission has tended to deal with its broad mandate in a piecemeal fashion. It has discharged its responsibilities almost exclusively on a case by case basis, and has, as a result, often allowed itself to lose sight of broader concerns. This along with the allied question of the appropriate relationship between Commission and Ministry appear to be the central weaknesses in the present system.

That statement is as valid in 1984 as it was in 1978. That is the problem with our system. We have a politicized transportation system, aided and abetted by the Canadian Transport Commission and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy). They have completely diluted and diverted the laudable statement of purpose in the National Transportation Act, and turned the system into one that benefits the needs of the Liberal Government. It is not directed at the interest and needs of the Canadian economic system, the people of Canada and the regions of this country. That is what we have to fight today. We are not just fighting a system that is outdated and obsolete. We are fighting the operators of that system. Unfortunately, until we get rid of the people who are managing and operating the system, we can have no real hope of change in the system.

The people on the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, like the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants, worked hard and long to make improvements in the system. They tried to change the legislation and give direction to the system. Their efforts are fruitless as long as the people in charge of the Canadian Transport Commission and the Ministry of Transport are not willing to recognize the great national purpose that has to be embedded in our transportation policy, but simply use it for the Government's own ends on a short-term basis. Quick fixes to solve problems, quick fixes to get support in various areas of the country is what is wrong with our system. It will not change until we are able to change the personnel involved in directing the transportation system.

There are a number of matters I would like to bring to the attention of the House with respect to the motion proposed by the Hon. Member for Vegreville. He makes particular reference to marine transportation and marine industries in his motion. I want to talk about that.

First let me say a word about the Maritime Freight Rates Subsidization Program. That program is as vital to the Atlantic area which I represent as the assistance that was given to western Canadian farmers in the agriculture and wheat-growing industry of Canada. Without freight rate subsidization in Atlantic Canada, manufacturers and others dependent upon the transportation system to market their products cannot exist. There was an erosion of that subsidization a couple of years ago. Allegedly there was a tradeoff for road strengthening payments in return for a reduction of the freight rates subsidization. Fortunately that stopped. It has to remain stopped. We have to be vigilant and on guard to ensure there is no more erosion of the freight rate subsidization for the Maritime area. It is of vital importance to manufacturers and shippers in the area to maintain any kind of competitiveness in the national and international markets. We have to be on guard to see that it stays in place. That is exactly the type of thing the Ministry of Transport is capable of doing through Canadian National and other Crown agencies, forcing higher costs on a particular area of the country without regard to the economic difficulties that can cause.

There is no field of activity in transportation where you see the disastrous effect of Government policies and programs more than in the marine transportation industry. On the face of it, there have been very substantial efforts made by the Government over the past number of years to deal with problems in the marine transportation sector, particularly the switch to Ports Canada, from the National Harbours Board. We have seen other activities related to the National Harbours Board and Ports Canada. Again we have had that misdirection and failure to carry out the national purpose. The move, which we in this Party strongly supported, to have independent national ports across Canada has been weakened in its very inception. Let me explain what transpired leading up to the switch from the National Harbours Board to the Ports Canada setup.

We are not sure even today that this is not just a change in name with the same old personalities remaining in place. I have brought it to the attention of the House on other occasions that the Government started with a debt write-off program. It came forward with $475 million for the write-off of debts. Here is how it was handled. The Port of Montreal wrote off $231 million, almost half the total, in debts. The Port of Halifax, a very important player in the international marine transport deal, wrote off $30 million in debts. This was just prior to the big changeover from the National Harbours Board to the Ports Canada system; $231 million versus $30 million.

We now have Ports Canada. We have independent ports in Montreal, Halifax and in other parts of Canada. Some of those independent ports are a little more independent than others because they do not have the burden of a $230 million debt, yet they have all the facilities that were paid for by that expenditure. The Government told Montreal it had better pile in a lot of facilities, even facilities it did not need and build up debts because it would write them off. It said it would be an independent port in a year or two with no debts, but all kinds of facilities. Poor little second cousins like the Port of Halifax have to go out and build their container piers, charge them up to their own operations and pay for them. That is exactly what is happening today.

In its great generosity, Ports Canada approved the extension of the Fairview Container Pier, to the extent of $25 million—$30 million. Had we had that extension two years ago when we knew it was necessary, we would have received the debt write-off to go with it. We would not have to pay all that money.

There is another important part of marine transportation which is often neglected, and that is shipbuilding. I say you cannot separate the operative transportation side of the marine industry from the shipbuilding side. That is the big mistake we have made in Canada. It has been said that marine transportation is simply ships coming and going. That is wrong. We have very substantial shipbuilding facilities in Canada. It is a large industry in which we can create 15,000 to 28,000 jobs overnight by simply building our own ships for our own transportation needs. That has been totally neglected, not only by the Ministry of Transport and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, which established policies through which ships are permitted to enter into national trade, but by all other aspects of Government. For example, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, with the co-operation of these other Departments I have mentioned, could easily exclude non-Canadian ships from activity in our offshore waters. This alone would create massive activity for Canadian shipyards and would create many thousands of jobs.

We are concerned with the lack of any cohesive policy in marine transportation to provide and ensure activity and jobs on the transport side, on the shipbuilding side and on the side of all of the activities related to shipbuilding and marine transport. What do we get, Mr. Speaker? We get the same old patronage and the same old desire to feed at the public trough. What does the new Minister of Transport do? He looks at the new Ports Canada and the other emanations of Ports Canada and local port corporations and sees another opportunity for patronage.

How do you like this, Mr. Speaker? Since 1936, the Auditor General has checked the books of the National Harbours Board. Canada Ports Corporation more than anything else needs a new auditor. Where can we find an auditor to check the books of a corporation that deals with marine matters? We find him in Winnipeg. That is the logical place to find a person who really knows the marine scene. Winnipeg, Manitoba, happens to be the home city of the Minister of Transport. I wonder if there is any connection. So Walter Dubowec—

Mr. Nowlan: He is the official agent of the Liberal Party in Manitoba.

Mr. Crosby: My colleagues have told me that Walter Dubowec, the man who has been appointed auditor for Ports Canada, is the official agent of the Liberal Party. However, as the official agent of the Liberal Party of Manitoba he has very little to do with this situation, so he should not have any problem taking over these duties. I have a problem with regard to getting rid of the Auditor General.

Mr. Ouellet: What is the name of the firm?

Mr. Crosby: Never mind the name of the firm. We got rid of the Auditor General because we are trying to set up Ports Canada, not to run the ports of Canada, not to provide a service, but to be an outlet for more Liberal patronage. That is how shameless the Minister of Transport is. He begins to bring patronage into the one area in which we must have total independence. He attacks that area and appoints a Liberal partisan as Auditor General. How can we complain about any other appointment after that? They just flow like water over Niagara Falls. We are not going to complain about the make up of the Board of Directors of Ports Canada. We are not going to complain when the Minister puts Otto Lang on the Board of Directors of Ports Canada. Otto Lang said: "If you want me, you must have my former assistant as well." So the former assistant was hired as well. The porkbarreling has started.

I would like the porkbarreling to stop in Ottawa; but it comes all the way to Halifax. In Halifax, everyone is interested in this situation. The port is vital to the city. It has been the guardian of the North for 200 years. Halifax has performed that function for 200 years and we finally have an independent port corporation with local autonomy in the management of the port. After 117 years of being classed as a public harbour, since Confederation, we get our own port authority. So who do government Members put on the board of directors of the corporation? Do they put people from each sector of marine transportation on the board? Do they get somebody from the shipping side, somebody from the marine workers, somebody from the ship's chandlers? No, that is not what they do. They get a defeated federal Liberal candidate, a defeated provincial Liberal candidate and a former Member of Parliament who has been retired for many years. This conglomerate of people have only one thing in common. They are partisan supporters of the Liberal Party. They are the ones who are going to manage the Port of Halifax. No wonder we will be in trouble.

I wanted to speak of the real challenge to our transportation system of the future. That challenge is deregulation. As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vegreville has pointed out, the question of deregulation has arisen in respect of the air transportation industry. I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, that that is one area in which we will not stand for any quick fixes by the Minister of Transport. We will not let him pretend to the airline consumers of Canada that they will get a lower ticket price if they follow his deregulation policy, because we know what that will cost. It will cost thousands of jobs. Air Canada has 20,000 employees and I know that some Air Canada flight attendants have already lost their jobs right across Canada. In the Riding of Halifax West alone, 80 such jobs have been lost. I would like to point out to the Minister of Transport that when he is talking about deregulation, he is talking about lost jobs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired. A 10-minute question or comment period will be allowed.

[Translation]

Mr. Deniger: I listened with interest to the speech delivered by my colleague. When dealing with air transport deregulation, he contended that jobs will be lost. I do not see how he can come to such a conclusion since in the United States where drastic deregulation is now taking place, the number of jobs in the air transportation industry has gone up from 292,000 to 307,000. Then how can he make such a statement?

[English]

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, I have no difficulty explaining that. We have an entirely different airline transportation system in Canada. In the first place, our immense major carrier is an agency of the Government of Canada. Air Canada is simply a Crown corporation. It does not have to worry about profits because its financial future is ensured. It may be that the President of Air Canada, Mr. Taylor, takes it upon himself to try to show a profit, but we do not know if he shows a profit in private industry terms. He can charge, or not charge, or do what he wants. He has no investors and is not involved in the stock exchange. He has no outside auditors so he does what he wants.

The point is that Air Canada accounts for a large percentage of the entire Canadian airline activity nationally and internationally. The reason for that, of course, is that it has a mandate and obligation to provide air services at various points and frequencies. That sets the stage for our entire airline industry. In Canada, we have an airline industry that is not only in business but is in business with a duty and a responsilitity. When we talk about deregulation, we cannot abandon the duty and responsibility that exists. We cannot simply say that it is not profitable to fly an aircraft between Halifax and Fredericton or between Saint John, New Brunswick, and Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island.

The Hon. Member has given himself away because Montreal, Toronto and areas like that are not affected by a potential deregulation process, as are remote areas like the Maritimes and some parts of western Canada. My point is that whereas deregulation in highly populated areas like New York and Chicago may result in greater airline activity between those points, with increasing employment following on that, we are dealing with an entirely different concept in Canada. We have a different quality of passenger and, indeed, other different airline services, and we must maintain those services.

If the Minister of Transport is suggesting a deregulation which would allow Air Canada or Eastern Provincial Airways to abandon routes between Halifax and Saint John, New Brunswick, then I am entirely opposed to it. Even if the deregulation is simply a process that will allow for one less flight attendant, one less pilot, one less safety inspector, one less ground maintenance person and one less agent at the counter, I am not in favour of it unless it can be demonstrated that there is a clear advantage in terms of passenger rates to justify that loss of jobs and activity. If I am able to pay less for an airline ticket but have to pay more in taxes to provide welfare and other payments, I do not see where I as a consumer, or where any other Canadian has gained one thing.

Mr. Deniger: Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear that the Hon. Member opposite does not know at all what deregulation is. First of all, I would like to make it quite clear that when we talk about deregulation, we never talk about safety. Safety will not be deregulated. What we are talking of is a lessening of the rules of entry, exist and setting fares. Sefety will never be deregulated because in itself safety has to be regulated.

Second, I am surprised when the Hon. Member says that Air Canada does not have to worry about profits. If he had been present at the Transport Committee which considered the Air Canada Act, he would know that, I believe Clause 2, or Clause 3 says specifically that Air Canada has to worry about profit and must conduct itself as if it were a company involved in business.

Mr. Crosby: How come it lost $65 million?

Mr. Mazankowski: I moved the amendment.

Mr. Deniger: It was the amendment of the Tory Party, which was logical. The third point I want to raise with the Hon. Member, Mr. Speaker, is that if I was from Halifax and I am from Montreal—I would not want decisions involving the aircraft I use, the fares I pay, and the service I receive, to be imposed by a regulatory agency in Ottawa or in Hull. I would like the people in my province to have some say in the matter. That is precisely what we are offering and precisely what our domestic air policy is saying. We are saying that the consumer, the user, will have more say in the policy. I trust the consumers a lot more than I trust people who do not live in the area, in my region, making decisions for me. I am especially surprised at the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby). We sat together on the regulatory reform committee where we unanimously presented a paper which dealt with reforms of regulations. He seems to have forgotten that report.

Mr. Crosby: No, Mr. Speaker, I have not forgotten the report. However, I believe there is a great deal of confusion present in the House in relation to the remarks made by my colleague. We are talking, I believe, about different kinds of deregulation. The Hon. Member, as I understand his last intervention, is talking about the domestic air carrier policy approved by the Standing Committee on Transport. I would like to ask the Hon. Member very simply, does the Minister of Transport endorse that report? Is he prepared to put it into operation? Because on the advice of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vegreville, and on the advice of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants, I would endorse that, plain and simply. That is the way to do it. But from the information I have, and I do not have the time or opportunity to go through it in detail, that is not the kind of deregulation the Minister of Transport is talking about.

We had a meeting which was graced by the presence of the Hon. Member for Vegreville the other day in which we discussed statements made by the Minister of Transport on deregulation. They bear no relationship to this report. He has never endorsed this report. He has never said he is prepared to implement, as part of deregulation or other policy, the recommendations of this report. He has just got a quick fix attitude, take the controls off air fares and the first airline approaching bankruptcy will knock down its air fares in order to buoy itself up, get some cash flow going, then the next outfit will start to go bankrupt. That is what happened in the States.

Braniff Airlines was one of the most effective airlines in the United States. The airlines got into a price war and now it is out of business. Braniff is gone today. That is what will happen. EPA will go, then Quebecair will go, under the proposals of the Minister of Transport. And most importantly, jobs will go. That is what I am saying.

Yes, I am in favour of deregulation. The Hon. Member knows that because, as he said, we sat together on the regulatory reform committee. It is important for the Canadian economy. However, it is more important to proceed in an orderly fashion in determining just what are the elements in the regulation policy which can be changed effectively, and changing those elements. We should not simply take the controls off the ticket prices and let the market prevail, because what we will end up is a lot of people flying back and forth for a few months and then a lot of bankrupt airlines. We already know what happened in the United States and we do not want that to happen in Canada.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I have one question for the Hon. Member. It concerns shipbuilding in Canada. It is one of my favourite subjects and I understand it is also one of his. It just so happens, Sir, that I was having supper with a ship owner last night. He was having a ship building offshore. The price of this vessel will be some $8 million. Being a good patriotic Canadian he wanted to have this vessel built in Canada. But I believe the cheapest price he could get in Canada was nearly double, some $15 million.

From my conversation with him it appeared that one of the reasons he could get the ship built a lot cheaper offshore was that foreign governments extend credit at low rates and perhaps even subsidize their own shipyards. It seems to me that if the price is doubled in Canada, you are not going to sell very many ships out of Canadian shipyards to Canadians. I wonder if the Hon. Member has any solutions to this very difficult problem faced by our shipyards?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. Unfortunately, this puts an end to the ten-minute question period and we are resuming debate at this point.

Mr. Crosby: I do not have an opportunity to respond?

Mr. Nickerson: On unanimous consent?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. Member to complete his answer?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

An Hon. Member: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): I heard no. Debate.

• (1540)

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, today I find it very difficult to understand why the Opposition moved this motion. After listening to my hon. friends on the opposite side of the House this morning and after reading several times over the motion that was moved, which mentions contradictory statements which have created uncertainty and confusion in the transportation industry, I really wonder what possessed the Official Opposition to present such a motion. Earlier, I was even more surprised when I heard the Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) say that the present Government was appointing Liberals to a number of positions within the Canadian Transport Commission and the Government itself. Mr. Speaker, I realize they are upset, but what is the alternative if all the competent people who are best suited for these duties happen to be in the Liberal Party? We are certainly not going to avoid appointing them because they are Liberals. The Government has always insisted on selecting the best candidates and the best people available when filling vacancies in the Federal Public Service. I realize this may upset our friends opposite, but they cannot expect us to penalize people who are suitable for these positions just because they are Liberals. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, I think it is too bad that the Official Opposition feels that our present Minister of Transport has created confusion in the transportation industry in Canada. In the few moments I have left, I shall try to tell the House that in one sector in particular, and I am referring to the railway transport sector contrary to what our hon. friends opposite would have us believe, the Minister, since his appointment, has taken some very brave decisions aimed at avoiding any confusion that might exist and at proving the Canadian Government's commitment to a transport mode that is both indispensable and very convenient for many of our fellow citizens across this country.

Mr. Speaker, we must realize that with respect to the railway transport system, the Government has made commitments and has promised to meet them. It will make this kind of transportation safer and more efficient across this country. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, while meeting this commitment, the Minister of Transport has also informed Canadians that we would have more and better quality service. I think we have every reason to be pleased that the new Minister of Transport has made this commitment.

I can assure you that people in regions of the country where there are no means of transport other than the railway will be the first to admit that the decisions made in the past and those which will be made in the coming months serve the best interests of all Canadians.

If we really want to talk about the rail transportation system, Mr. Speaker, I think we should turn back the pages of history to have an overview of what happened in that field. I think that we have been witnessing tremendous changes within our transportation system since 1977. Still, one must admit that the Canadian railway network was not built overnight. I am convinced that in the next few years, people will come to realize that, in a large country such as ours and with all the regions we want to have rail service, it is extremely difficult to improve everything in one day or even in one year.

We have to take into consideration the regional disparities and the land irregularities of our country, and remember that the railway represent a link in the history of Canada. That is indeed what prompted Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and British Columbia to join the Canadian Confederation. All those facts prove that people across Canada are very fond of that transportation system and that many Canadians are looking forward to improvements.

Today, Mr. Speaker, a delegation from my own riding of Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine arrived here in Ottawa to attend an important conference and, of course, they came by train. Mr. Speaker, those are some of the people who know very well that the Government has to upgrade the system. I have had an opportunity to discuss that issue with them and to work with them on the various changes we want to make in the system.

Of course, the railroads have had enormous problems since 1885, but we certainly chose the right solution in 1976 when we created VIA Rail and made it responsible for all passenger rail service. We must also remember, Mr. Speaker, that, in 1958, automobiles accounted for 87 per cent of all passenger transportation in Canada. We must therefore take some action to convince the public that automobiles may not be the safest and the most economical means of travel.

After creating VIA Rail in 1976, the Government had to deal with many problems. The Government decided to rationalize railway passenger service and minimize the costs in that area. This is why, in 1983, the total operating subsidies allotted to VIA Rail amounted to just $451 million, a mere 4.5 per cent increase over the previous year, which was far less than the rate of inflation.

In my opinion, those figures clearly show that the decision made by the Canadian Government in 1976 was the right one and that we are really on the way to improving this transportation service.

As I was saying earlier, Mr. Speaker, we also had to provide a dependable service all across Canada. This is why, as my colleague for La Prairie (Mr. Deniger) was saying a while ago, the Minister of Transport has decided to rehabilitate certain lines and, most importantly, to develop the Quebec-Windsor corridor. Of course, VIA Rail is making a major effort to provide a good serivce in this corridor, without however neglecting other lines and other areas in Canada. As I was saying, the railroad helped to unite this country, and we must now make sure that the service will continue to exist in 1984 and in future years. In addition, Mr. Speaker, the railways must serve the public, not just the business sector. This is the direction this Government wants to take and this is what the Minister of Transport has done to improve our transportation services and make train travel more attractive to the Canadian public in all our regions.

Finally, I believe that we have to realize that the social and political factor plays a very important role in the way people choose their means of travel. I also believe, Mr. Speaker, that it is extremely difficult to assess the efficiency or the performance of a transportation service if we look only at the figures. As I was saying earlier, we have to convince the people that this is an effective and safe means of travel. This is of course what the Government and the Minister of Transport want to do.

As I have already said, the Minister has also indicated in recent months that service on some lines will have to be restored because people have found out how much they miss it since it has been discontinued. As you know, it is often very difficult to realize the usefulness of something we have. This is why the Winnipeg-Edmonton line will be restored as well as the Edmundston-Moncton line. In my own region, the Gaspé peninsula, there have been many changes in recent years and certain lines had been abandoned or replaced by others, but wherever we have maintained our railway service we want to continue such operations since our region is vast and sparsely populated.

Mr. Speaker, as we can see, some progress has been made, but much remains to be done. I believe that the key factor is the modernization of VIA Rail facilities and equipment. If we want to have some credibility, we must first of all have rolling stock which will meet our needs, and adequate tracks over which this rolling stock may be used as it should.

I would like to recall a few of this Government's major achievements. As far as capital investment is concerned, we have to remember that, since 1977, the Government has invested $785 million across Canada. Another $307 million were invested recently in maintenance facilities in Halifax, Montreal, Toronto and Winnipeg. These facilities will help us save $50 million by 1988. In addition, the Federal Government has approved and developed a new type of train at a cost of $32 million. This new material will be tested within the next two years. This demonstrates again that we should look to the future as far as this mode of transport is concerned and that we should adjust to the new technologies.

The federal and Ontario governments have announced that they are co-operating on the design, development and construction of a two-storey train which should be ready for Expo 1986. Moreover, a plan for the development of a bus-on-rail prototype is at the final stage of certification. This new vehicle will be tested in northern Manitoba in 1984-85. A second contract for the purchase of ten locomotives and 50 LRC wagons was signed recently. These vehicles will be put into service sometime next year.

VIA Rail is planning to invest over $800 million in various new projects before the end of this decade. Of that amount, about half will be used to update the rolling stock, the rest being spent to improve the infrastructure. This demonstrates once more that this government is unreservedly committed to making rail passenger transport a service which is viable, reliable and which will meet the needs of tomorrow.

Also, Mr. Speaker, VIA Rail has agreed to improve its services. It is doing more than just trying to improve the infrastructure and update the material. It is taking the necessary steps to shorten the travelling time on a number of lines, so as to prevent the repetition of unfortunate incidents which occurred this winter in our region as a result of heavy snow storms and very bad weather. It is also trying to streamline its railway stations, because it is when travellers enter a railway station that they have their first contact with this mode of transport. For instance, in 1983, the federal government committed itself to renovating the Quebec City's "Gare du Palais". It will allow a direct service between downtown Quebec City and downtown Montreal. This project has met with the approval of numerous organisations and the general public. Also, work will be done on the Union Station, in Toronto, as well as on many other stations throughout the country. I would like to mention as well the stations located in my own area of Gaspésie. There are now 26 stations on the Québec-Gaspé route, hence 26 stops. For the last four years, elected representatives together with various regional organisations have been working to rationalize the transportation network. A fair amount of work has already been done in this regard, mostly in Gaspésie but not in the Lower St. Lawrence area. The number of stations will be reduced from 22 to 13, thus eliminating stops and improving the average speed of the trains.

Many improvements have also been brought forward in the quality of services on the train. This work will be pursued and I am confident that within the next decade, we will all be able to enjoy the new interior design of railway cars, the improved service to travellers both in the trains and in the stations, the improved telephone service; in fact, every aspect of the service will be enhanced.

These improvements, Mr. Speaker, will enable VIA Rail to experience a 36 per cent increase in the number of passengers and a 72 per cent increase in its revenue between 1984 and 1989. So it is obvious that VIA Rail is determined to take necessary measures in order to give the travelling public a meaningful choice, to enable Canadians who must travel to choose a means of transportation which is affordable and meets all their needs.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I would like to mention another important fact, that is the extremely interesting initiative taken by the Minister of Transport in February. I am thinking about the lower rail rates for young people and senior citizens. This new program will enable young people to buy rail passes valid for various periods of time.

The rate for senior citizens is valid for all VIA routes without any exception or time restriction. Again, these new programs fulfill the commitments taken by this Government in the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that since VIA Rail has been established in 1976, we have gone a long way. Of course, we still have a long way to go; however, the initiatives that have been taken both by VIA and by this Government demonstrate that we are going in the right direction.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any questions or comments on the Hon. Member's speech?

● (1550)

[English]

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I noticed that the Hon. Member was reading his speech. I did not want to interrupt him to bring this to your attention. On February 5 you insisted on bringing to order the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall). It would seem to me that what is right for this side of the House should also be right for the other side of the House. I hope you would enforce the rules of the House with a reasonable degree of consistency. However, my question—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The Chair is grateful to the Hon. Member for trying to bring to the attention of any presiding officer what is happening in the House. However, it is probably more worthwhile to do this while it is happening. To do it after the fact is not of great use.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, sometimes it is not a great deal of use to bring it to the attention of the presiding officer even in the course of the occurence.

My question to the Hon. Member is in regard to the Quebec City-Windsor corridor, and perhaps more particularly to the Toronto-Montreal section of that corridor. I listened with a great deal of interest to what the Hon. Member had to say about the amount of money that is being spent by VIA Rail on upgraded facilities. Most of it appeas to be for fairly minor modifications to existing facilities.

Does the Hon. Member think that putting a high speed electrified train between Toronto and Montreal, may be passing through Ottawa, with a dedicated track along the lines of what they have in Japan and France, is a good idea in this area of dense population with a great number of travelling members of the public? Has the Government ever looked at the economic feasibility and the cost of that idea?

Mr. Bujold: Mr. Speaker, I would like, first of all, to tell the Hon. Member who said that I was reading from notes that when it comes to statistics, we can hardly be expected to know all the figures off hand, and I would like to tell the Hon. Member that when he has travelled by train in his riding as often as I did in mine, then maybe we will be able to compare our statistics in this regard.

As to his proposal of an electrically powered train, obviously, any possibility can be considered. However, I suggest it is not realistic to compare passenger trains in Canada and in Japan or in Europe. If one looks at the size of our territory and the size and location of our population and draws comparisons with what can be found in Japan or even in European countries, it is like comparing apples and oranges. There is no possible comparison in this regard since our respective population and territory are so different. A minute ago, I was making a brief history of railways in Canada; well, one would have to examine also the history of railways in Europe and consider the notion people have in these countries in the area of transport. That is the main difference and the conclusion we would reach as to the possibility of having an electrically powered railway connecting Toronto and Montreal and possibly Ottawa as well. This shows, once again, that we are ready to upgrade the rail transportation services, and I read press clippings on that just this week. Surely the government is ready to consider all the possibilities but, as I said, I would like that extreme caution be taken when comparing rail services in Canada with those in other countries because we are definitely not talking about the same thing.

[English]

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Hon. Member if the Government which he represents has discussed deregulation as it pertains to the use of airports? I heard the Minister saying how deregulation will help airports that are having financial problems such as Mirabel, for which projections in the Budget indicate it will lose $50 million.

Have discussions taken place within Government and has consideration been given to deregulating an airport? For example, could there be a toll-free type of airport which might encourage carriers to use that airport as opposed to any other airport in order to attract airlines, such as People's Express, that are reaping the benefits of Canadian travellers who leave from Burlington, Vermount, to other areas in the United States at very reduced airfares? Have any discussions taken place? When I hear the Minister talking about deregulation helping Mirabel, I am suspicious that this may be what he is referring to. Would the Hon. Member comment on that?

[Translation]

Mr. Bujold: Mr. Speaker, obviously, as far as regulation is concerned, the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) is discussing all the possibilities with his colleagues to the South. As for deregulating the airports, it could obviously be a solution in a sense. What he just said is true, some of our fellow Canadians go to Burlington to catch a plane. Today at noon, some people from my own riding told me that they had done just that. If that is a solution that could be considered because it could solve a number of problems in some of our airports, we will surely be pleased to discuss it. As for this matter of deregulation, we should keep in mind that what we want is to allow the greatest number of Canadians to have access to air travel, at more reasonable rates than those charged in my area; indeed to fly from Magdalen Islands to Montreal you have to pay an outrageous $600 for a return fare.

[English]

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): The subject of transportation in the Opposition motion which we are debating this afternoon is very important for consideration by Canadians in terms of air transportation, rail grain transportation, VIA Rail and Marine transportation. I suggest it is significant to note the past actions of the Government and how the Minister in charge has been dealing with transportation in Canada.

It seems that the pattern of the Liberal Goverment in the past 15 years has been that just before an election it makes great promises of rebuilding, restructuring and job creation. However, once the election is over the next thing that happens is that the Government begins to impose cuts. The records will show that this has been the case. In 1981 the Minister promised action but then imposed a cut of $1 billion and then another of $2 billion. This situation has been repeated several times. The fact is that the present Government makes promises and then breaks them. I am sorry that there are so few Liberals in the House.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Minister is not here.

Mr. Gustafson: And the Minister is not here. I believe that the public is fed up with this kind of cheap politics. I can give examples of this, one of which occurred just two days ago. Our Leader stood in the House to ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) whether he would put into place a formula in the Western Grain Stabilization, for which we have been asking for two years and which the Government has been promising for two years. Mark my words, the Liberal Government will play politics with the Western Grain Stabilization Program just as it has been playing politics with the transportation system.

I can give another example. Fuel is very important to transportation in agriculture. In as many elections as I can remember the Liberals have promised tax cuts on fuel before an election, but we know what happens after an election. To the contrary, the provincial government in Saskatchewan promised tax cuts on fuel for farmers and for the province as a whole. The day after Mr. Grant Devine was elected in the Province of Saskatchewan the provincial fuel tax was removed completely. That is just as he promised. That is the type of government responsibility that the taxpayers, the producers and other Canadians are looking for.

My main area of concern is Western Grain Transportation as it relates to the promises that were made just recently in Bill C-155. The Minister took it upon himself to remove one of the traditions of this country and bring in a new program. It is becoming quite evident that the Government's promise to deliver the goods for this program are not being met.

Let me quote from the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). Before doing so, I might say that the House of Canadians will remember, as western farmers do, that in a short period he put into place certain measures in grain transportation and rail development across western Canada that were absolutely remarkable, especially in the limited time he had to accomplish that. Let there be no suggestion that the job cannot be done.

Let me point out something else. The Conservative Party, which understands very well the plight of the western farmer and the importance of transportation, is dedicated to upgrading the system. Make no mistake about that. While the Minister rose earlier today and said that the Conservatives are always dragging their feet in these areas, the absolute opposite is true. We want the upgrading and we want the direction, but we do not want false promises that are not kept. Politicking with this very important matter of grain transportation is unacceptable.

A news release of March 27, stated:

'The $16.5 billion of investment and 375,000 jobs promised by the Liberal Government as a result of the Western Rail Expansion Program will not fully materialize' said Don Mazankowski, P.C. Spokesman on Transportation.

● (1610)

—the Minister of Transport and the railroads have admitted that the level of investment will be reduced.

Yesterday, April 5, the Hon. Member for Vegreville issued a press release indicating exactly what happened in committee that day. Let me read it into the record:

The federal government is betraying western farmers by permitting a $4 billion drop in western rail investment—

Transport Canada officials appearing before the transport committee today confirmed that the railway investment will drop to $12.5 billion over the next ten years, a 25 per cent reduction—

It would appear to me that the Government has made a move to increase freight rates to farmers and now makes a move to renege on its responsibilities concerning upgrading. Again and again in the House we heard about all the jobs this was going to create. I want to clarify once more that we on this side of the House are in favour of creating jobs.

With unemployment at the rate it is today we are absolutely against mismanagement and irresponsible spending on the part of the Government, such as the Government spending $4 million advertising programs that are not taking place. Jobs certainly should be put in place. Production should go up. Something should happen as a result of those jobs and rail lines should be rehabilitated. But does this happen? No. I call this irresponsibility to a great degree. The producers, the farmers, are certainly concerned about the transportation of their grain. But freight rates are being increased. The Government has cut back and reneged on its promises, and it would only be fair to say, "let's cut freight rates". But we know such is not the case. What we have in transportation are more promises, more promises, and more promises, and neglect of obligations that many times seem written in stone. I suppose I am a novice Member having been here such a few years.

Mr. Deniger: Too long.

Mr. Gustafson: Someone says "too long". Maybe that is possible.

Before being elected to the House of Commons I sat on a rural council. When something was written into the minutes of that rural council you could pretty well count on it. There were no open envelopes for expenditure. A budget was brought down and when it came down the amount of money contained in it was the amount of money you spent. The amount was not doubled, nor was it tripled. What kind of responsibility would it be on the part of any rural or urban councillor to increase spending to the taxpayers of a community? You could depend on them.

I thought the level of responsibility in this senior place of government would be much more efficient. But I found out, much to my dismay, that because of the direction of 16 years of Liberal Government there is very little responsibility with regard to commitments, either made to the people or even written in stone, as it were.

Rehabilitation of rail lines should go ahead. Nothing is more important. In terms of grain and grain transportation some $6 billion were added to the balance of payments. That is important to the welfare of farmers, but it is more important to the welfare of the whole country to do something positive. The Government should do something positive instead of picking up broken pieces of bad business obligations with which it gets encumbered from time to time.

I would like to speak for a moment about the area of rail line abandonment, particularly as it relates to my riding. It is only fair to say that farms in other areas experience the same type of problem. We had hearings at Rockglen, concerning the Big Beaver-Coronach line, some over a year ago. At that time we raised with the CTC the issue of the lines involving Big Beaver to Coronach, the Avonlea-Parry line and other lines. I raised in writing with the Minister the importance of maintaining the Big Beaver-Coronach line. On two occasions I raised the matter with him in committee. When Mr. Marchand, the President of the Canadian Transportation Commission, appeared I raised once more the concern of this rail line. I must say good attention was paid. I even think the letters were read, but I must say we have not been getting any answers.

Consider yourself, Mr. Speaker, living in Big Beaver, Saskatchewan. From Big Beaver to Coronach is 20 miles and it is up-hill all the way. Let me suggest you had a three-ton truck, a 1957 Chevy and its motor was not too good.

Mr. Mazankowski: And you have a blow-out.

Mr. Gustafson: You are heading for town, up hill at 30 miles an hour in second gear, and you have a blow-out.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gustafson: It is no laughing matter, Mr. Speaker. It is so serious it is laughable. I want to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the farmers along that line are very concerned.

We have been getting the same kind of answers from a very neglectful Government and Minister. The transport portfolio is probably one of the most important in the Parliament of Canada. Transportation is very important to a Canada that stretches thousands of miles from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the 49th parallel to the Arctic. It is most important to the survival of a people who have to compete in international markets, especially when you have the type of irresponsible approach that we have seen in past days. I am absolutely astounded that this is beginning to happen so quickly and that the Government should renege on its responsibilities with regard to rail line rehabilitation and rebuilding. Certainly it is a most important matter which should be dealt with.

What situations are created by abandoning a rail line such as the Big Beaver-Coronach line? I think we have to take several matters into consideration. First, it devalues the land. Certainly that is important to farmers who have to compete in an economic sense with other farmers. In addition there are fuel costs. We cannot look at transportation unless we look at fuel costs.

Mr. Mazankowski: They have doubled.

Mr. Gustafson: This is significant because if we go back to December 13, 1979 we were defeated on an 18-cent gasoline tax. Our government made the mistake of being honest; that is the only way I can put it. At that time we said that the gasoline tax would be increased by 18 cents. After being defeated I returned home and I must say I was somewhat disappointed. We were in for eight or nine months and then we were out. I drove into a filling station in the little Town of Macoun and I asked what was the price of gas. I filled up my tank at a cost of 92 cents per gallon. Just the other day I telephoned that same filling station in that little town and was told that the cost of fuel was $1.80 per gallon. Do Hon. Members remember the promise of the Liberals? They said they would not increase it more than the 18 cents the Conservatives had suggested. Gasoline prices and fuel costs to farmers have doubled in four years. It is just another example.

How does this relate to transportation? Its relationship is very simply, because it costs twice as much today to fill up a truck with gas to haul grain to the elevator so that it can be put on world markets. Certainly fuel costs are of concern. The cost of the gas moving from the City of Regina down to Plentywood, Montana—and there are semi-truckloads of gas going down there every day—is 78 cents per gallon. That tells us how much federal tax we have on fuel in this country.

I see Mr. Speaker signalling that my time is up. No subject is more important to Canada, especially to our farmers, than western grain transportation. If anyone honestly looks at the facts as they exist, he will realize that the Government has been very neglectful in its responsibilities and in keeping its promises to the people of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there questions or comments related to the remarks of the hon. gentleman? The Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson).

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I just want to get this entirely straight in my mind. Did I gather from the speech of the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) that he still has one or two small doubts about the Liberal western grain transportation policy?

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, in answering that question let me say I really wish that I had only one or two small doubts. I have some grave concerns about the Liberal program for western Canadian transportation. It has become very clear that the Liberal Government has no intention of keeping its election promises, promises of jobs which will not come about, promises of moneys to be spent that will not be spent, and promises in terms of rehabilitating the lines which we will never see come to fruition.

I would like to add with your permission, Mr. Speaker, that in my riding during the 1980 election campaign the Prime Minister announced in Fillmore, Saskatchewan, assisted by Ralph Goodale who was then running for office, that he would doubletrack the line all the way from Winnipeg to Vancouver. As any farm boy or as anyone who lives in the Prairies can tell us, years ago there used to be a train every 20 minutes on that track. Certainly there are areas where we need doubletrack through the mountains and through congested areas. We have received these promises but we have not seen them fulfilled. I have some grave doubts.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Any further questions or comments? We are resuming debate.

[Translation]

Mrs. Éva Côté (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me as Parliamentary Secretary, to be speaking for the very first time to a motion by the Official Opposition, which would have the Canadian people believe that the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy), has failed to fulfil his commitments to Canadians. The Minister, however, is a worthy successor to previous Liberal Ministers, and I am referring to the Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin and the Hon. Otto Lang. I also wish to congratulate the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Manzankowski), who was Minister of Transport for a short nine months and who decided that he would have to maintain, extend and even safeguard certain measures that had been initiated by his predecessor, the Hon. Otto Lang, and I am referring especially to the deregulation of air transport.

Mr. Speaker, since the beginning of the day, we have heard about various types of transportation in Canada, and as was said by the previous speaker on the opposite side, air transport in Canada is a very broad issue that affects all of us at some time in our lives, and not only air transport but also railway and marine transport, and also the entire network of safeguards provided by the Canadian Government for each of these modes of transport.

I may remind the House that at the beginning of the day, in replying to the Hon. Member for Vegreville, the Minister of Transport stressed his responsibilities and how he dealt with them, whether they were in the field of job creation or developing a transportation policy.

We also heard, on the Government side, the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Deniger), who spoke more specifically about air transport, which he did very ably, I must say, and I wish to thank him. I feel his contribution to the debate was very constructive and very informative for those of us and those of the general public who had the privilege of listening to him.

More particularly, I would like to point out that the Member for La Prairie tried to clarify the need for the deregulation policy which the Government would like to see implemented and which is now being studied by the Canadian Transport Commission, following a report produced by the Standing Committee on Transport which did a very thorough job.

During committee sittings I had the privilege of attending several meetings with witnesses from all over North America, that is, both in Canada and the United States, who told us about their experience in this area.

I think that the Hon. Member for La Prairie has been quite clear on this matter, when he said that the deregulation being considered by the Canadian Transport Commission, that is the Air Transport Committee, during its present hearings means some form of deregulation with regard to the routes served by airlines and to air transportation rates.

Deregulation has nothing to do with air safety. As the Hon. Member for La Prairie so rightly said, safety must obviously be very strictly regulated for the protection of air passengers. The importance of this matter has been clearly demonstrated. The Hon. Member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Bujold) has dealt with rail transportation. In this regard, there are two separate areas, namely passenger service, to which the Hon. Member for Bonaventure referred at length, as well as the improvements that have been made and that will be made in future. There is as well freight transportation and as you know, Mr. Speaker, the main problem relates to the upgrading of rail service now under way in Western Canada for the transportation of grain and freight in general.

After all the discussions on this matter and the many assurances that have been given, and in view of the fact that some major projects have already undertaken in that part of Canada, I do not understand that my hon. friends of the Official Opposition have not realized yet that this is a serious matter and certainly not some election promise. Work has already started and should be completed on schedule within about ten years, that is around 1992. At that time, there will be a second tunnel through the Rocky Mountains and most railways will be double-tracked. Therefore, as I already said and I want to repeat it, this is not some election promise, because these developments were promised when the Crow's Nest rates were under consideration. Work has begun, and the two railway companies involved, CN and CP, are fulfilling the commitments they made, and each year, under the legislation, those commitments will be reviewed by the Canadian Transport Commission which will see to it that the promised subsidies are paid, provided that the commitments made are honoured and that the planned development of rail transportation in the western part of the country is carried out.

A Tory colleague, the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby), has dealt with another point. It had to do with marine transportation, the maritime services that are available to Canadians, more particularly shipbuilding activities in Canadian shipyards. With respect to the works in the larger ports, my colleague from Halifax West has referred more specifically to his own area, something I can understand and for which I am grateful to him, because that made me realize that the improvements that are being done in the port of Halifax, more particularly on grain elevators, at a cost of $5.1 million, will be completed in 1984, apart from the extension of the port of Halifax, at a cost of a little more than $25 million. But I do not think he mentioned the important project involving the construction of a potash terminal in Kootenay Bay, in Saint John, New Brunswick. This work will require outlays of about $28.4 millions.

He did speak about the shipbuilding industry in Canada, but he claimed that nothing much was being done. It is wrong, Mr. Speaker, to leave the Canadian people under the impression that shipyards are getting no help whatsoever from the Federal Government which could not care less about the shipbuilding industry. In fact, the Canadian Government will pay close to $700 million, over four years, for the building of 11 new ships, the upgrading of three others, and the acquisition of some smaller crafts built in Canada of course.

This program will both enhance the fleet and create quite a number of jobs, close to 20,000 person-years in Canada during that period and above all, it will allow the upgrading of the Coast Guard, fishing and marine fleets. Obviously, some of these boats will be used also for exploration and development of offshore resources.

Moreover, a very extensive program has been created requiring about $185 million in investments, in order for the Coast Guard to better discharge its duties relative to icebreaking and navigation assistance and to continue more efficiently with its search and rescue activities, when required.

I just want to come back for one minute, Mr. Speaker and I hope that you will allow me to read my text because of the very difficult names of these shipyards to the contracts awarded up until now, for the building of the ships I mentioned earlier. Marine Industries Limited, in Quebec, will build two class 1100 ships. Burrard Yarrow Corporation, in British Columbia, will also build two ships of that category; Collingwood Shipyards in Ontario will build one, Halifax Industries Limited in Nova Scotia one also besides updating the Sir Humphrey Gilbert. Vito of Vancouver, British Columbia, will build a class 1050 ship. Port Arthur Shipbuilding in Ontario will build five barges. Chedabucto Shipwrights Limited, in Nova Scotia, will build three LCM class barges and Hurum Marine Limited, in Quebec, which, Mr. Speaker, is better known in our area as Verrault Navigation, will build three working vessels. To this list must be added all ship updating and maintenance contracts to be granted to Canadian shipyards.

Mr. Speaker, it would take until tomorrow to deal with the services offered by Transport Canada and the efforts that are made to try to improve quality. But it is impossible and I should like to correct some statements made by members of the Official Opposition in particular about certain services supposedly neglected. And I also wish to deal briefly again with the issue of railway transportation. The Hon. Member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine mentioned some problems arising only in one part of the Province of Quebec where the train, for instance, must stop in 26 stations, placing VIA Rail in the position of having to provide maintenance services in those communities, and he also told us about the modernization program which has been implemented by the stations and railways to improve and speed up services.

If I remember well, he then said when emphasizing up the quality of the development program for VIA Rail services: "we shall do a good job but that will require a lot of our time". I think he added very appropriately that Paris was not built in one day.

The same is true for all transport needs and services in Canada, both for air and maritime services. If I were willing to be less responsible, I could say, as was done by the official Opposition, that the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) is rather negligent in carrying his responsibilities. If I were negligent or irresponsible, I could try to make Canadians believe everything can be done in one day. But I would not dare, because that has been proven impossible. Furthermore, I would never dare make the Canadian people believe that it does not take time to do those things, because they must be done well, because changes must be brought after consultation, as the Minister of Transport said this morning, and as I am rather a responsible member on the government side, I would never dare promise the moon when I could not even give the first quarter. It appears to me today that, according to the comments of the official Opposition, Mr. Speaker, to a large extent, they tried to promise the moon to the Canadian people, knowing that they could not even give the first quarter. It was demonstrated in the few months they were in power that the official Opposition party did not understand, certainly not as well as this government, the needs of the Canadian people. It is grossly unfair to state here that all the proposed changes to our air transportation service and all improvements made to our railway system are electoral or irresponsible promises.

I have been here for four years now and I have been on important committees such as the Agriculture and Transport committees and we did, indeed, discuss the very matters that concern us today, that is the transportation of grain in Western Canada and the commitments and responsibilities of the Government of Canada to the people of that part of our country. Our commitments will be fulfilled, our transportation system will be improved but any reduction in the financing of these programs which had been discussed at length two days ago, could jeopardize the government plans. I thought that matter was settled once for all but it cropped up again today even though the situation now is quite different from what it was in 1981-82. However, Mr. Speaker, that exercise did serve a useful purpose because Canadians will be aware, from what has been said today on the government and the official Opposition sides that there is quite a gap between a responsible government and opposite members who would readily promise all sorts of goodies without being able to give any. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any questions or comments on the remarks of the Hon. Member?

We shall resume debate.

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, this is an extremely important issue and I commend the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) for having brought it to the attention of the House today, and hence to the attention of the people of Canada. I wish to speak to the issue as a westerner, as a Manitoban and as someone who is an historian and very familiar with the history of the West and with the neglect of western Canadians during the many years the Liberal Party has been in power.

You will know, Mr. Speaker, and perhaps some of those on the other side of the House will, deep in their hearts, even regret the fact that one Party has been in power for 51 of the last 63 years. That is unfortunate because the results of that are evident in the neglect of transportation and the neglect of agriculture.

However, the issue before us today is the history of the neglect by the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) of the transportation needs of western Canada. In the few moments which are remaining, Mr. Speaker, I plan to address some of the most important areas in which this Minister of Transport has failed western Canadians.

I must begin by noting the Minister's absence during the course of this extremely important debate. I regret that very much. I would like to compliment my friend, the Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Bockstael), who himself represents 50 per cent of the Liberal caucus from western Canada, for his attendance because his presence suggests that he cares about western Canadians. I can only assume that the absence of the Minister of Transport implies the opposite. Perhaps he is seeking support for his favourite candidate, Mr. John "Deficit" Turner, as I think he should be known.

Mr. Mazankowski: Would you buy a used Government from that man?

Mr. Clark (Brandon-Souris): I am sure that Canadians will not buy a used Government from either one of those two men. However, the issue before us is a history of neglect. Unfortunately, that is so evident today with the declining economy in western Canada. Many western Canadians hoped that when the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry became Minister of Transport, replacing the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Pepin), the new Minister would be more sensitive to the needs of western Canadians. Unfortunately, that does not seem to have been the case. In fact, western Canadians are discovering already that some of the promises made to them during the course of the Crow debate in the fall are being broken.

Part of the package which was offered to western Canadian farmers in return for losing the Crow rate, one of their few privileges in Canadian history, was the fact that the railways would pump a great deal of money into the improvement of the railway transportation system. It has become painfully evident now that the railways are breaking that promise and it would appear as if this Government, and particularly the Minister of Transport, is doing nothing to force the railways into maintaining the pledge which it made. Therefore, the credibility of the Government is at stake.

The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary who has just spoken is doing her best, and I commend her for trying to make the best of a very bad situation. She is disappointed that the people of Canada are skeptical of promises made by the Government at this point in time. I am afraid it is perfectly understandable why that skepticism remains and is so strong. Promises made in the past have not materialized.

There are two or three things which are extremely important at this point. One, of course, is the question of deregulation. This question has already been addressed at some length today, but I would simply like to make two or three comments about the problems of deregulation as they affect smaller communities, particularly those in western Canada.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, I represent the constituency of Brandon-Souris. It is only recently and thanks in large part to the efforts of the Hon. Member for Vegreville who held responsibilities in a previous administration and was very familiar with and sensitive to the plight of western Canadians that we in western Manitoba received jet air service.

As a result of those efforts in the past, PWA established a service between Calgary, Brandon and Toronto. That service is much appreciated by the people of western Manitoba. It is well utilized by the people of western Manitoba and the people of eastern Saskatchewan. However, the people in those communities recognize that if we move to a system of irresponsible deregulation, smaller communities like theirs may well lose the services which they already receive. In fact, the industrial commissioner for Brandon, Mr. Reg Forbes, made a representation to the committee just a few days ago arguing very effectively the concerns of smaller communities. We realize that deregulation will work to the advantage of the large metropolitan communities and will often work to the disadvantage of the small communities where the level of traffic is not sufficient to attract more than one carrier.

As you may well know, Mr. Speaker, the history of transportation in western Canada has often suffered from monopoly service. The essence of competition, of course, and of the so-called free enterprise system, is that it works to the advantage of the consumer. However, that system applies effectively only when there is, in fact, competition. So often that has not been the case in the west where one is dealing with a lesser populated area. I must express therefore, Mr. Speaker, some very real reservations, as the Hon. Member for Brandon-Souris about the future of our community in terms of air service if we move irresponsibly into the area of complete deregulation.

I have also some very real concerns about what is happening in the area of the transportation system with respect to the movement of grain. Nothing is more vital to the economy of western Canada than the movement of grain. The very well being of our farmers, and of the communities and businesses which serve them, depends first of all upon the quantity and quality of the crop and, second, upon our ability to move our grain to market in an efficient, prompt and economical manner.

Unfortunately, the record of this Government is such that that criteria has not been fulfilled as often as the people of western Canada would want. I think particularly of the farmers in my community who are served by the Canadian National Railways, and the extreme frustration which they have felt by virtue of the fact that grain movement in those communities has not been equal to that of other communities. I state this for the record in order to bring this to the attention of the Minister, and I hope that he will address himself to this problem.

I am also concerned about particular communities in my constituency, and many others of a similar nature, which are suffering from a lack of adequate rail line maintenance. I think specifically of a line which may not seem very important to this Parliament, but which is very important to the people who count, the ordinary Canadians who are served by the Deloraine Waskada Line. Promises were made in the past that this line would be rehabilitated. However, despite the urgent requests of Jim Downey of the MLA, a mayor and a reeve from those communities, so far nothing has been done. It seems to be the case of promises made and promises broken.

Unfortunately, in 51 of the last 63 years there has been felt in western Canada a sense of cynicism and alienation. This is very distressing to me because I am a Canadian who worries about the future of Canada should the west as a region become too dissatisfied. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, that cynicism, alienation and dissatisfaction is so genuine and so much a product of the accumulation of years and years that it will take more than one or two years, or even four years of a new government which is sensitive to and aware of the needs of western Canada before the damage of the past can be undone.

There is a tremendous crisis in western Canada today, as you know from discussions we have had in the House. Farm prices are declining. Farm bankruptcies are accelerating at an almost unbelievable and, certainly, an unforgiveable rate. What is needed in the west is a Minister and a government which is committed to persuading western Canadians that they are, indeed, a vital part of this nation. Unfortunately, the neglect of the past has caused many western Canadians to fear for their very future. I had hoped, Mr. Speaker, that the appointment of one of the two Liberal Members of Parliament from the west to this very important portfolio would have done something to rectify the grievances which we feel. But that has not been the case.

What we have instead is a Minister who participated over the demise of the Crow, who participated over the destruction of what in fact is part of the western Canadian birthright. In fact, many farmers say to me that the Crow was the only thing they received from Government which made them in any way feel they were the beneficiaries of Government. That, of course, was destroyed despite the pleas of Hon. Members on this side of the House. Even now when we move into the period of re-examination of the Crow there seems to be little urgency on the part of those on the opposite side of the House. As the Hon. Member for Vegreville said in the House the other day, a very important commission should have been appointed by April 1 and, in fact, nothing has been done. Again, to many Hon. Members of this House, Mr. Speaker, that may seem like a small point. However, it is not a small point to the people of western Canada, the farmers, the businessmen who are dependent on those farmers, who simply see, in an accumulation of a number of instances, that in the minds of this Government they do not matter.

In the history of the west transportation has been, second to agriculture, the most vital part of our economy. In fact, Mr. Speaker, if you are familiar with the history of western Canada you will remember that settlers came to the west, to the Red River, as early as 1812, the famous Selkirk settlers. They realized when they settled in the Red River that this was an area which had tremendous potential for agriculture productivity. Many of those farmers were successful, but were discouraged because of their inability to move their product to market.

In fact, it was not until we moved into the period of Confederation, the period of John A. Macdonald, the Conservative Government of that day, that in central Canada the Government began to develop the national transportation framework which linked the west to the east. Since that time, the economy of the west has been dependent upon that very fragile but all important transportation link. I do not believe eastern Canadians have any appreciation of the importance of the railway, or of the importance of the transportation system, because in eastern Canada there are so many alternatives. In western Canada, however, all too often there are virtually no alternatives. In fact, many novelists writing about the history of the west have talked about the rail lines as an essential part of the life of the communities. They realized that in many ways the be-all and end-all of those communities was, in fact, the rail line. Without it they were severed from central Canada and from the all important markets, and they were severed from any sense of belonging.

Something which sticks in my mind, Mr. Speaker, as an historian, is an incident which occurred in 1885 at the time of the second Riel Rebellion. The people of Calgary at that point in time were fearful for their future. Perhaps looking back on that time their fears were exaggerated, but nevertheless they were fearful because of the uprising which had occurred in the west.

During the midst of that crisis in the summer of 1885, troops from central Canada came into the west by the yet uncompleted CPR. Troops were able to move from central Canada to western Canada and the people of Calgary, it is recorded, believed at that point that they became a part of Canada for the first time. They felt they were Canadians. There is a real danger in western Canada, Mr. Speaker, of these western Canadians losing that feeling of belonging.

We faced a crisis in this country a few years ago in the Province of Quebec. We would be naive and foolish if we believed that the sense of alienation which exists in Canada has existed in only one region. It can be equally true of western Canada.

The way to deal with that alienation is to have a government in place which is aware of and is sensitive to the concerns of western Canada. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has a special responsibility in making western Canadians feel a part of Canada. The Minister of Transport has an equally important responsibility. I hope and trust he accepts that and recognizes the importance of his administration.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): It being five o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that, pursuant to Standing Order 62(11), proceedings on the motion have expired.

This House stands adjourned until Monday at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 5 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I would like to indicate a few changes in House business for this week. Since we did not complete debate on the third reading stage of Bill C-12 last week, rather than having an opposition day tomorrow we will be dealing with the third reading stage of Bill C-12. The allotted opposition day will be on Wednesday. Therefore, I designate Wednesday of this week as an opposition day and on Thursday we will most likely debate Bill C-24. The back-up legislation for today is the Divorce Act.

CANADA HEALTH ACT

The House resumed from Monday, April 2, consideration of the motion of Miss Bégin that Bill C-3, an Act relating to cash contributions by Canada in respect of insured health services provided under provincial health care insurance plans and amounts payable by Canada in respect of extended health care services and to amend and repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in the debate on third reading of Bill C-3, the Canada Health Act. I would like to begin by saying how proud I am of the history of my province in the area of health care. The history goes back many years. In the 1920s we had free treatment for tuberculosis. In the worst of the hungry thirties we had municipal doctor plans, many of which started out at the request of the doctors because the people had no money. In the mid-1940s we had provisions for the complete care of the mentally ill. In the area I am from in Saskatchewan we started the Swift Current health region No. 1 which covered the entire southwest corner of the province. Through this program doctor and hospital services were provided starting in 1948. This served as a model for the entire medicare program in Saskatchewan which followed in 1962. We started our province-wide hospitalization plan on January 1, 1947.

Those were turbulent times, Mr. Speaker. Bringing those programs in caused great political battles and debate among the entire population of the province from the 1940s up to and including 1962. However, we proceeded to implement programs that led the entire country for many years. Anyone who would tamper with those programs now would do so at their political and economic peril.

We have a right to be proud of that pioneering history because we were one of the poorest provinces in the country when we started those programs. In the 1940s the province was bankrupt as a result of a terrible debt going back over many years, especially during the Depression years. Yet the people of that province decided that the health of the people and the care of the ill took priority over money that was owing to banks or bondholders and other things that were not as urgent. The great majority made that decision willingly. Over a period of 20 years, people like Tommy Douglas, Woodrow Lloyd, Tom Bentley, Allan Blakeney, Bill Davies and others like them brought about a growth of health services that was unprecedented in any province in the country. I should also have mentioned that Saskatchewan established the first air ambulance service on this continent.

With that kind of background, those of us from Saskatchewan naturally support legislation concerning the health care of the ill and preventive medicine in all of Canada. It is the right of every citizen to have access to health care, whether it be curative or preventive. People will have beds available to them when they are sick. That access to health care must not be restricted. People must not have their access inhibited or prevented due to financial barriers.

For almost 40 years I have listened to the Liberals talk a good fight about health care. Long before I was born, beginning in 1919, they were promising a national health plan. They spoke much about it and again talked a good fight. Throughout the 1920s, 1930s, 1940s and 1950s, we have known mostly Liberal federal governments and Liberal provincial governments. Besides talking a good fight they set a record for foot dragging. While we feel that this legislation can be supported, it is still insufficient. It is a further example of half-hearted Liberal Government efforts. The Government is still talking a good fight.

I am pleased that the Conservatives in the House are prepared to support the legislation, as I believe they are. However, we see that Party working on both sides of the street. While the federal Conservatives support the Bill in the House of Commons, they are against it in the provinces. Provinces like British Columbia, Alberta, Ontario, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland, which all have Tory governments—although it is a different name in British Columbia where that Party is trying to outdo the Tories—have medical premiums, or deterrent fees, extra charges or extra billings to various degrees. The shameful irony of it is that the three wealthiest provinces in the country charge premiums. In Ontario, the fee is almost $700 a year per family. But the dear Tory Government in Toronto is magnanimous. A person earning less than $6,000 a year qualifies for premium assistance. If that is not abysmal, the actual practice and experience is that those people either do not know about this assistance or will not apply because they do not want to go through means tests for their health services, nor should they. No one, rich or poor, wherever they live in this country, should have to go through any kind of examination concerning their financial wherewithal. Many years ago Canadians decided that the nation as a whole through the national and provincial governments would cover the costs of health care and the citizens of the nation would share in those costs. Surely that is right, proper, decent and civilized.

I said this legislation is insufficient because we do not believe the dollar for dollar penalty will work. Provinces will find no hardship on a dollar for dollar basis. For every dollar collected in deterrent fees, extra billing, or medical premiums, will mean they are penalized a dollar in federal contributions. That same dollar will have already been collected from the patient and put into the treasury of the hospital or the doctor's pocket. That is not much of a penalty. I think the penalty could be a dollar for a dollar for the first year in any province that still allows extra billing, extra charges and premiums and then it should increase to two dollars for every one dollar. If provinces were still allowing extra billing after two years, then in the third year the penalty should go to three dollars for every one dollar. I know there will be those who will say this is coercion by the federal Government, forcing the provinces and whatnot, but as long as you have that many Tory Governments in Canada, they will have to be pushed, coerced, and if necessary financially forced.

A dollar for dollar operation is not in itself only insufficient but something should be done on the opposite side of the coin which would then alleviate or head off any possibility of force or coercion, or whatever you want to call it, from Ottawa. There should be a provision in the Health Act for incentives for provinces. There are many other things needed, including home care, some nursing, special nursing, chronic care beds, level three and four care beds, midwives, paramedics and ambulance services, both air and ground. If provinces expand and move into all these other areas which are by and large unavailable to many people, as well as into preventive medicine, the federal Government can and should be saying to the provinces: "When you do that, instead of getting 50 per cent of the costs you will get 51 per cent; and if you do more, you will get 52 per cent". This sort of thing should apply to at least the poorer provinces, the have-not provinces. In fact, it should apply all the time. The wealthier provinces would not need to be treated as generously, although they could be.

Surely it is some kind of social tragedy that in every city across this land there are waiting lists as long as your arm for beds for the chronically ill and the elderly. All of us have experienced constituents who call, write and plead to get into a senior citizens' home. We hear particularly from families of people who need level three and four care as well as from those who need chronic care.

Even in Saskatchewan, to our shame, we have some extra billing. I spoke to a good friend of mine the other day, Allan Brown, who is over 65 years of age. He said he did not mind if I used his name. He was a member of the Saskatchewan legislature for 16 years, until 1960. He is a severe diabetic. He is now blind in one eye. He is due for an operation tomorrow on the other eye; they hope they can save it. It is an operation for cataracts. He has the old age pension and he has a small MLA's pension for which he did not become eligible until 1970, when he reached the appropriate age. That is all he has. He has to stay with another couple. He goes to see the eye specialist. He is in there 20 minutes or 30 minutes and he has to pay $55. That is what happened last week. He will get back $20 or $25 of that from the Saskatchewan medical services plan, but the other $30 or $35 or whatever it is comes out of his meagre income.

People should not be treated that way. No government with any kind of conscience, no Parliament with any kind of conscience, would allow any citizen in those circumstances to be treated that way. There is no excuse for it. If it meant raising the budget $1 billion per year, so what? It is money we owe ourselves. There are thousands of families in the country who have to raise as much as $10,000 per year for special and private nursing. There are thousands of families every year who have to find up to $1,500, $2,000 or $2,500 a month to keep a parent or a grandparent in a home for the elderly at level three or level four. If those kinds of costs were shared by all Canadians, surely it would be the right and proper thing to do. In a nation such as ours, while we have done well and made great advances in health care, we have much more to do. Many thousands of beds are taken up when they could be used by people who are much more severely ill.

I will never forget the royal commission on health care in Saskatchewan. Members of the commission went to Europe back in the mid and late 1950s. They found that home care and midwife services were available to everyone in a little country like Holland. We could be doing that. It would take some of the pressure off the hospitals.

What about paramedics and ambulance services? An ambulance driver who is a friend of mine told me that in many instances in the City of Regina it would be safer and quicker to take a taxi because the paramedics are not well enough trained. Many procedures for which they are trained they are not allowed to do. Surely that is inadequate.

We could relieve some of the pressures on hospitals and medical practitioners if these kinds of services were in place and in most instances operating under the supervision of medical practitioners, and if the costs were shared by all people through their taxes at the provincial and federal levels. That is the kind of national Health Act we in this Party would like to see; that is the kind of Act this Parliament should be passing.

It is strange that in the Province of British Columbia, the government is proposing to amend its services, so that it can coerce or restrict the numbers of doctors it will pay under the medical care plan. Their reasoning is that this would encourage more doctors to go to isolated and rural areas. That is a backwards way of doing it. Extra payment could be made to those who have to establish in rural and isolated areas. They could even be provided with interest-free loans for offices and office equipment until they get established.

These are the kinds of things that need to be in a national Health Act. That is what this Parliament and this Government should be dealing with. There is no doubt that the people of this nation would support it en masse. They would be willing to contribute through the income tax system, if it were a little more fair. At least to some degree it is tax based on ability to pay. No one who is financially handicapped would have any barrier to access to the best curative and preventive health treatment available in this country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions or comments.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, when the NDP was in power in Saskatchewan, there was a system whereby doctors would collect from the patients at the door, sort of a gatekeeper, and then bill the balance, or whatever they could collect, directly to the plan. The doctor was able to collect not only from the plan but could extra-bill the patient if he thought that was appropriate. Why did Saskatchewan allow that to exist? Is this particular statute necessary to correct that defect in Saskatchewan?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, the practice of extra billing was just getting nicely started in 1981. Discussions and meetings were going on between the government of that day and the medical profession of that province. Unfortunately, extra billing is still in place by some but not all doctors. Some try to make a rough guesstimate of the financial wherewithal of their patients. If a doctor thinks a patient is poor, he does not charge extra. I know my doctor does that. He does not charge the extra amount, but he is guessing.

It is getting worse. More and more are doing it. It was the intention of the then government of Saskatchewan to try and negotiate and put an end to extra billing. You can bet that if we were still in power and the negotiations had not succeeded, we would have ended it. We never had any doubt about the wrongness of extra billing. There was a debate in my Party in 1981. We demanded of our Party and the government of that day to try to negotiate a settlement so that there would be no extra billing and, if that was not successful, to bring in legislation to prevent it. Unfortunately we were defeated, but we will be back again and then we will prevent it.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I am not so sure they will get back in again. Actually it is a disappearing act they are following. After 20 years' experience in running the Province of Saskatchewan, why did the NDP Government there allow the kind of extra billing that took place in Saskatchewan? It was a rather peculiar system whereby a doctor could collect both from the plan and the patient. He had two sources of funding. Why was that allowed to exist? It still exists in Saskatchewan. Indeed, that is where extra billing was founded. Does the Hon. Member think it important that we have this Act passed in order to stop that practice in Saskatchewan, this being the only way to stop the kind of extra billing which occurs in that province?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I do not think this Bill will stop that from happening. I hope it will but I doubt that it will.

I just had a note handed to me, Mr. Speaker, which indicated that perhaps I made an error in my speech. Premiums are not subject to the dollar for dollar penalty. Only the user fees and extra billing are. I made a mistake by saying that. However, we want premiums to be abandoned.

I would like to say to my friend, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), that in order to put an end to things like the disgraceful and outrageous doctors' strike of 1962 of which I was just reminded and during which I was present, included in the Saskatoon agreement of July, 1962, at the behest of Lord Taylor was a provision to allow a doctor to extra-bill. Up until 1981, it was very rare for a doctor to extra-bill.

From 1964 to 1971, the then Liberal-Conservative Government of Saskatchewan imposed deterrent fees and raised the hospital and medicare premiums. In 1971 when our Party returned to power, medical and hospital premiums were abolished and deterrent and user charges were abolished. We were very proud of that. There are no premiums in Saskatchewan and I am sure that the present Conservative Government would not dare to reinstate them.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) to elaborate on why provinces such as British Columbia, Alberta and Ontario are the provinces which are in a sense leading the way in the imposition of user fees, extra billing and premiums as well. I ask that question because it seems peculiar to me that in terms of making a case of funding, the three richest provinces in Canada would lead this particular initiative. I wonder if the Hon. Member has some observations to make about this point.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I did mention those provinces early on in my speech. I can only conclude that the reason those governments do these things is that they do not really believe in universal health care. If those provincial governments did believe in it, they would not be doing those things.

While I say that they do not really believe in it, they do not dare do away with universal health care because it would be so politically unpopular that those governments would be thrown out on their ears. Therefore, they try to get away with as much as they can by way of premiums, extra billing and user fees.

Another reason for this is that those provincial governments have a typical Liberal-Conservative-Reagan-California syndrome. It is called restraint, cutting back and holding down the deficit. That is the main reason for this, Mr. Speaker. Those provincial governments will tax the sick and impose extra charges even on those who can least afford it if they think they can hold down expenditures, cut back on the deficit and show restraint. It is the "buy them a shovel" syndrome. Liberals and Tories have always been like that. Some Liberal and Tory members even think that the old age pension is destroying our incentive to work.

I have lived through too many Grit and Tory operations, both federally and provincially.

Mr. Blenkarn: And you will live through more.

Mr. Benjamin: I know what Liberal and Tory members are like. When they stand up in this House, Mr. Speaker, they are the great defenders and supporters of health care. Their arguments would wring tears from a jury full of bankers. However, take a look at the Tory Governments in seven provinces, Mr. Speaker. They are all the same breed of cat. I do not care whether they are in the federal House or whether they are in the provincial legislatures: a Tory is a Tory is a Tory, is a Tory.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I shall recognize the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) on a very short question.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, if the penalties on the provinces as per the Act were to be enacted, will that not be double taxation or in fact double billing, and is that not just as bad as the double billing against which the Member speaks so loudly?

Mr. Benjamin: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the beginning of the Hon. Member's question. Would he be good enough to repeat it?

Mr. Taylor: I will be glad to repeat it, Mr. Speaker. If penalties are enacted against provinces and additional taxation must then be secured from the people, is that not double taxation and double billing, and is that not equally as bad as a doctor double billing patients? Is it not even worse when a government does it?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I do not know how that could be considered double billing or double taxation if the costs of those physicians or hospital services or services outside the hospital were entirely borne by the revenues of the province and the federal Government and user charges were not allowed. I would be perfectly willing to pay a portion of my federal income tax and a portion of my provincial income tax to the hospital, medicare and other health services in Saskatchewan. I and all of the other citizens of the province are perfectly willing to do so because if we keep the people healthy, they keep on working and they keep on paying taxes. For those who cannot work, society owes them the best of health care.

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, it is with somewhat less than pride and pleasure that I rise today to speak on third reading of Bill C-3, the Canada Health Act. I think one must acknowledge that any Bill which has succeeded in further dividing and separating the federal Parliament and the provincial legislatures is indeed to be deplored. We have seen nothing but increasing separation of the two levels of government because of this Bill. In addition to that, it has caused an alienation and separation between governments and physicians, members of one of the most revered professions in the country. I think that kind of effect is most undesirable.

The Bill has been called the Canada Health Act but that is somewhat of a misnomer because it has little if anything at all to do with health care other than the fact that it imposes certain penalties if provinces do not comply in certain ways with respect to the banning of extra billing and user fees. I recently received a most interesting treatise from an obstetrician-gynecologist in Stratford, Ontario, whom I know reasonably well. He is anything but a politician. He is a very serious person who thinks very deeply and whose position on a political issue is based entirely upon his convictions regarding the issue as a whole.

He has likened debate that he has heard occurring here in the last couple of months to a chess game. He said that it is a game and a struggle between the forces of a collectivist society and those of a free society. He continues the analogy by suggesting that physicians, patients and indeed even the federal Minister responsible are nothing but pawns in this game and struggle between the forces of collectivism and the forces of a free society. He suggests further that Canadians are being manipulated by forces they do not understand and that this will have unforeseen consequences. I think we can all agree, as we reflect over the last three or four months, that the Bill was introduced following a very well orchestrated public information campaign conducted by the Government.

Mr. Blenkarn: Propaganda!

Mr. Halliday: Yes, propaganda. The Government spent funds on that propaganda even before the Bill was tabled in the House. It was attempting to influence people to suit its own wishes, long before it had the courage to bring the Bill in.

The Government was really using the opportunity to build up a relatively insignificant problem in the country. Actually, the problem of extra billing was decreasing, not increasing, but the Government built that problem up and then brought in the Minister as the proverbial white knight in shining armour to take care of the situation and try to correct it.

The Government obviously saw this as a political opportunity that it could not miss. It was seen as a chance to enhance its prospects at the next election. We do not know whether the Government's failure to consult the professions or the provinces was deliberate, although I suspect it was. The Government thought that would serve its purpose in the long run because this failure to consult was expected to offend the provinces, and it has. Knowing that eight of the provinces have Conservative Governments, the federal Government thought this would entice the Official Opposition to vote against Bill C-3. The Bill is nothing but an encroachment on the powers of the provinces and the Government thought that the Official Opposition would rush to the aid of the provinces as a result. Such was not the case; as some of my colleagues explained earlier in the debate, we on this side have been more committed over the years than have the Liberals to the issue of medicare.

We have no difficulty supporting the five basic principles of medicare. Indeed, we have been supporting them since the mid-1950s when the Diefenbaker Government introduced the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Service Act. We have no difficulty with the principles of the Bill but we have difficulty with the way it was put together initially, the way it has been implemented and with the lack of consultation in general.

The basic purpose of the Bill is to remove all financial barriers blocking accessibility to medical care by Canadians. We all agree with that. It has been done by removing the direct private billing features, and the direct funding that came from the private sector whether by way of extra billing or by way of user charges.

It is interesting to go back and see how the Act was written when it was introduced on first reading. The purpose of the Bill was described as being "to advance to objectives of Canadian health care policy". It went on to give the penalties that would be invoked if necessary. Originally the Bill said that the Government was going "to advance the objectives of Canadian health care policy". On the basis of that, dozens and dozens of witnesses who appeared at the committee expressed a desire to enhance the health care policy of the country. They were sent away completely depressed and dejected because when they got here they learned that the Government was trying to change its mind. It was not interested in the future of health care in the country but was only concerned about the narrow issue of invoking penalties if a province did not conform to a federal Government request. It had no interest at all in improving the health care status of Canadians.

I have listened with some bewilderment as the debate has unfolded. When the Bill was given second reading on January 16, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) said, as reported at page 427 of Hansard, that parliamentarians should pay great attention to it "because we are fixing the rules of the game of medicare for years to come". However, when appearing before the standing committee, she repeated again and again that she did not intend to change the basic rules of medicare. On September 7 in Halifax she told the provincial Health Ministers that the object of the federal proposals remains the same—to protect, renew and improve medicare. At the same time, however, she has insisted that she does not want to change it.

With this Bill, have we changed medicare? Have we changed the rules? What exactly have we changed? It is evident that something has been changed, as proven by the acrimony from the profession and the provincial governments surrounding the Bill that has been heard recently.

Doctors say that the Act will change the basic rules governing their professionalism; that it will have the effect of diminishing their professionalism and eating away at their independence. They generally regard it as being another step in the direction of state control, toward what has been termed by some people as state medicine, which one cannot blame them for despising. Their arguments are well known and do not have to be repeated at this time. Suffice it to say that the change is not a welcome one. Indeed, for them it represents a decline in the greatness of what has been perhaps the world's most envied health care system.

What about the point of view of the provinces? How do they view the Canada Health Act? Certainly they see it as more than what the Minister calls "a consolidation of the previous Bills" and "a clarification of the rules of the game". While this sounds innocuous enough at first glance, it has been clear from the beginning that each and every province has expressed either its outright opposition to or its serious skepticism and reservations about the Bill.

This has not been due to any great desire or predilection for extra billing and user fees or to an ideological opposition to universal health care. Generally speaking, the provinces find opposition to the Canada Health Act not so much in its substance as in its more subtle implications. In the Canada Health Act they see yet another example of federal usurpation of their constitutional and jurisdictional responsibilities.

Our Constitution clearly gives the provinces responsibility for health care in Canada. There was a good reason for this and it pertains today: the health care system, in order to help the people for whom it is intended, must reflect those people's cultures, their customs, their needs, their priorities and their economies. Thus, as the Minister recognized in her third reading speech last week, in Canada there have evolved 10 or perhaps 12 different health care systems, each reflecting the particular needs and priorities in any given province or territory.

One of the most interesting things we have noted in the debate, particularly in the representation from witnesses at committee stage, was the appearance of provincial Health Ministers at committee. They showed a genuine pride in the health care plan of their particular provinces. They were rather reluctant to see these draconian measures being forced upon them by the federal Government. In the health care field as in almost any field of endeavour, one has to recognize the important fact that people must have pride in their work. Those Ministers have pride in the plans in their provinces and the professionals who appeared before the committee have pride in the work they are trying to do on behalf of their profession. Yet we saw this all being challenged by Bill C-3.

There is no doubt that pride in what one or one's group does is one of our most valuable resources. As legislators we must take very great care not to diminish this pride either through legislation or the way it is being imposed—such as in the case of the Canada Health Act, without consultation.

While we can all accept the basic aim of the Canada Health Act to promote more fully health care accessibility, universality, portability, comprehensiveness and so on, a great deal needs to be said about how the Act was brought about in terms of the way it is being imposed on the provinces and the professions. As a result of this we have seen an alienation of the physicians of the country and the adverse reaction of the provinces to what the Government is trying to do. As a result of that, Mr. Speaker, we are going to be able to predict some difficulties as we move ahead into future plans for the health care system in Canada. We are going to see difficulties with the provinces and the physicians as we, at this level, attempt to improve the status of health care in Canada. It is difficult to sustain pride in what one is doing, from either a provincial or professional basis, if rules and policies are being imposed from another level of government, namely from Ottawa.

One must also admit another very important point, Mr. Speaker. If we are going to have a functioning, successful, high quality health care system, it is mandatory that there be acceptance of the plan offered to the country as well as enthusiasm for that plan by the provinces, the physicians and the health care deliverers of all sorts. There are two basic components to a health care delivery system. There are the receivers of the services, whose perceived needs we have addressed as best we can. We have forgotten the providers, namely the provinces and the health care practitioners. The federal Government has completely forgotten those people in the way it has imposed this Bill.

There are a number of matters of concern which this Bill does not address, Mr. Speaker. As legislators we must look a little further down the road than is the case in Bill C-3, the Canada Health Act. All that is being addressed in this Bill is penalties. We must look at the fact that Canada is faced with demographic trends of horrendous size in terms of the changes in the proportion of older people in the community and the fact that that automatically involves many times more of a burden on our health care system than we have had heretofore.

In addition to these demographic trends, Mr. Speaker, there is also the very expensive trend of new technology. There is probably no field in our day to day existence now which is growing more rapidly than the technology field in medical care. Yet there is nothing in this Bill to address that. If anything, Mr. Speaker, they have done the very opposite in this Bill. This Bill actually takes about $100 million away from the medicare pie that has existed up until now. It takes that away by banning the infusion into the system of about $100 million in extra billing and user charges. If the Bill is adopted by the provinces, that will have to stop.

We are in an era in our society where medical technology is moving ahead in leaps and bounds, yet we have nothing in this Bill which signifies a willingness on the part of the federal Government to help support those extra costs. We heard from nearly all the witnesses that came before the committee that underfunding was one of the major shortcomings of our health care policy at the present time. We see nothing in Bill C-3 that is going to improve this problem of underfunding in any way.

We must look ahead in a few other ways as well with respect to the health care system. We must acknowledge the fact that while underfunding is a significant problem it also ultimately deals with accessibility to medical care or health care in general. The Minister has argued that she wants health care to be accessible to all Canadians. We all agree with her on that. She has picked out the small area of extra billing as one which she feels has obstructed that accessibility in some cases. She forgets to realize that underfunding is also causing a lack of accessibility by virtue of long waiting periods for, and the unavailability of, beds. There are still geographic barriers in existence in the country. We have antiquated equipment in our hospitals. We have insufficient money to fund residency training programs and so on. All of these problems are going to affect the accessibility of Canadians to health care in the future.

I would like to conclude with a couple of thoughts about the future of medicare in Canada as I see it as a result of Bill C-3. We have destroyed our relationships with the provinces. We have further destroyed relationships with professional groups. We have taken away the professionalism that existed with professionals heretofore. The Government has refused to accept Justice Hall's recommendation for compulsory arbitration. It has put in a watered down version of the amendment we proposed. The amendment will not be appropriate to guarantee physicians the rights they deserve vis-à-vis appropriate remuneration. It is obvious to me, Mr. Speaker, that if we do not adopt a different route than the Minister has been taking, the day will eventually come in Canada when we will have to have two-tiered health care in the country. The Minister herself said she will go off to the United States if she has to to get hers. Others will have to do the same thing.

I believe I can best conclude by reminding the House of an old saying: "Only a fool cannot learn by his own mistakes, but a wise man learns by other people's mistakes". Mistakes have been made around the world. The United Kingdom is one of the best examples. In fact it was a British statesman who said: "We must have a safety net below which we will allow none to fall, but above which there shall be no limits to the height to which a man may rise".

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we in Canada are embarking on a program in our health care system that is going to deny Canadians their right to advance to that height which they want to achieve in the health care system.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions or comments.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) is a doctor in Ontario. Can doctors in Ontario who belong to the Ontario medicare system extra-bill, or are they required to submit their bills to the system and get paid only what the system allows? Are they allowed to extra-bill over and above what the system allows?

Mr. Halliday: Mr. Speaker, if you belong to the medical care plan in Ontario you may not bill extra. You have to be outside the plan as a practising physician in order to be allowed to extra-bill.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, if you are not in the plan, how do you extra bill the plan? You are not allowed to bill the plan, so how in fact do you extra-bill? Obviously you send your patients a bill, but do you extra-bill at all? Is there anything in this Bill that describes the Ontario system with doctors who are not in the plan extra-billing? Is this in fact just a great charade by the Minister with regard to Ontario? Does the system really affect Ontario at all? Is this system only a pretence by the Minister? Does it affect Ontario doctors who are not in the plan? Are they not entitled to continue to bill what they want to bill in Ontario? I suppose the Government can compensate patients if it wants to.

Mr. Halliday: Mr. Speaker, there are a lot of misconceptions about the concept of extra billing. In actual fact there are two types of schedules in existence in Ontario and indeed across the country. One is a schedule of fees which is arrived at by a professional group. It is traditional for all professionals to arrive at a schedule of fees. Then there is a schedule of benefits which is payable by the plan. A schedule of benefits and a schedule of fees are two different things.

Extra billing only exists, by definition, if the charge is above the schedule of fees. Balance billing is a term that is used if there is a billing above the schedule of benefits but below the schedule of fees. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that there are very few occasions on which physicians truly extra-bill. There are about 3 or 4 per cent of billings in Ontario in which physicians bill somewhere between the schedule of fees and the schedule of benefits. That is not extra billing. There are only about 14 per cent of Ontario doctors who even bill in that area. Of that 14 per cent, they only bill for a small proportion of the total services they render. It is approximately 2 per cent to 4 per cent.

Therefore, the point being made by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South is well taken indeed. It is not a problem. As I said at the beginning of my comments, the Government has built it up as problem so that it could have what it believes to be a legitimate plank upon which to go before the electorate in the next election.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I have a simple question for the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday). I must say that I appreciated his comments very much. However, it was not clear whether he was speaking against the concept of introducing premiums and extra billing or user fees. I apologize for that vague interpretation on my part. Would he just clarify that for us?

Mr. Halliday: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question. I presume it was in one of my earlier presentations to the House during the debate on this Bill that I made it very clear that I, like the Minister and I believe everyone in the House, object very strongly to anything in the health care system that will be an obstacle to patients getting appropriate health care. I deplore any instances of patients being unable to get health care because of financial obstacles. If this Bill will correct that, it will be one good measure. However, we must not forget that for every good effect there are bad effects as well. I am afraid that the bad effects of this Bill will impose far more obstacles and a far greater lack of accessibility to health care than had ever existed with the few people who have had some difficulties because of financial obstacles.

I know that the quality of health care is already declining. I know that the hospital waiting lists are becoming longer and that we will lose good physicians in this country. They have already left some provinces, particularly Quebec.

We are in a situation where high quality and readily accessible health care is disappearing from Canada. I do not want to see that happen as a result of this Bill, even if it has one good feature. While I deplore the possibility of someone not getting health care because of financial obstacles, I think we are lowering health care to the lowest common denominator in this country.

An example of this is what happened in Great Britain. People used to go there 50 years ago because it had high quality care. After the introduction of the National Health Service, we never hear of people going to Great Britain for that superb care. They come to London, Ontario, for treatment of cerebral aneurysms or to Montreal or the United States for cardiovascular surgery. People no longer go to Britain because the quality has dropped. That is what I am worried about in this instance and that is the answer to the Hon. Member's question.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I wish to pose a question to the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) whom, I may say, was one of the most effective and hardworking members during the many sessions conducted by the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. He made a tremendous contribution to the deliberations of that Committee.

This morning he raised a point which caused me a great deal of concern. He referred to the fact that we heard from innumerable witnesses who came to speak on the principle of the Bill based on the objectives and purposes of the Bill as stated at second reading and elaborated upon by the Minister. The two key areas that most of the witnesses addressed were the objectives stated in Clause 3, "to encourage effective allocation of the nation's health resources", and Clause 4, "to advance the objectives of Canadian health care policy". In other words, to look beyond the immediate needs or problems, whether they are great or small. In this case, the Bill only addresses some $150 million out of a $22 billion expenditure. They wanted to look into the future as to what must be done to reform the health care system in this country.

Those were the policies and objectives that were stated at the outset. After all the witnesses had made their presentations based on those objectives, they were then withdrawn. I believe this was indeed cheating those witnesses and misleading them as to what the Bill was all about.

Would the Member address a problem which I now believe exists in the country, that somehow Parliament and the committees of the Parliament of Canada are seen in a light where we have not acted properly toward the people who came before us as witnesses? The Minister invited them to appear to speak on certain principles and then later changed the criteria to which they were speaking. How can we help redress the feeling which must exist that somehow these witnesses were misled? They were asked to address the long-term problem and then we were told that it can only concern a short-term matter. It is the long-term needs that are crying for attention.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I am afraid that the lengthy comments of the Hon. Member have used up the ten minutes for comments and questions. Debate.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, in listening to the comments by the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) and some other Conservatives, one is confused about whether they are supporting the Bill or opposing it. On the one hand they say they support it, but on the other hand many of their comments show that they are extremely critical of the Bill and many of its provisions.

As one of the few Members in the House who voted for the original medicare Act in 1966, I am pleased to support this Bill, not because it is perfect or because it deals with all health care problems—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: The Opposition is a little sensitive to honesty. The Bill is essential to halt the erosion of one of the most important social programs ever adopted in Canada.

I consider my votes and other measures in support of medicare in 1966 as one of the most significant acts I have performed here in my 19 years as a Member of Parliament. If we speak to those older Canadians who tried to cope with medical costs before medicare, many of whom went bankrupt or lost their homes because of high bills, they will tell us what it was like before we had a medicare system and what a great relief it is to have this program since they no longer have to worry about their bills for medical care.

As many others have pointed out, the principal purpose of this Bill is to discourage or deter extra billing and user fees. Extra billing relates to those fees charged by doctors in addition to what is charged by the medicare system. This can be carried out in different ways. User fees are the fees charged by hospitals and other medical institutions in addition to what is provided by the medicare system.

We are told that last year these extra billings and user fees added up to approximately $120 million to $130 million, up approximately 20 per cent in the last two years. That is still a small percentage to the total costs of the medicare system but it is extremely important to ordinary Canadians because it will serve as a barrier to health care services.

As Justice Emmett Hall said before the Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, the burden of illness, of accident and death is heavy enough without adding the extra burden of medical and hospital bills at that time. Medical care is no place for any kind of means test. No matter how prudent a citizen is in this country, he or she can never predict the seriousness or length of illness or illness resulting from accidents that might happen.

Of course, I believe our doctors and professionals must be compensated fairly and equitably. We owe a lot to our medical practitioners and institutions. There must be a system to assure proper compensation.

For this reason I welcomed the Government amendment in committee adding Clause 12(2) which sets out a system for conciliation and arbitration for medical practitioners under provincial jurisdiction. It is true that this clause is not obligatory, as some members of the committee wanted, but that is principally because that area is under provincial jurisdiction and none of the provinces would accept that type of amendment. On the other hand, they are ready to accept the type of amendment which sets out a process for consultation and arbitration for medical doctors and other practitioners which is not compulsory. It is my firm hope that most if not all the provinces will adopt such a system so our doctors can be fairly compensated.

As I think most Canadians realize, the delivery of health service in Canada is a provincial matter. The federal Government, through its spending power under the Constitution, is able to help finance medical care and hospital systems. They do that to approximately 50 per cent of the cost, and have been doing that for several years now.

My principal frustration with this Bill, Mr. Speaker, and with the present system, as I mentioned in committee on several occasions, is the deplorable situation in Canada with respect to chronic and long-term care, especially for the aged, which is a growing segment of the population. Not only is the provision of proper chronic care inadequate and in short supply, but some of it is a shame for a country as rich as Canada. As a Quebecer I must point out that it is as bad or worse in that province as in other provinces. Quebec has boasted that it does not allow extra billing and user fees, but this is not so for chronic care.

In committee, Mr. Speaker, I put on the record a letter I received from a constituent in Montreal. It is a good example of the type of user charges we are getting in Quebec and I want to put it on the record here. The constituent is a woman, now a widow. Her husband, prior to his death, was a patient in the Centre Hospitalier Thoracique de Montréal; that is the Montreal Chest Hospital. In November, 1983 her husband received a bill for $850 for one month; in December, a bill for $383.88; for January, $797.02. It goes on, Mr. Speaker. I know of other cases where old people requiring medical care—they are not just those who have no one to care for them—are in overcrowded, poorly staffed nursing homes and certain chronic care hospitals. They must pay fees, and I have seen some bills amounting to $900 to $1,000 per month.

Miss MacDonald: This Bill does not address that.

Mr. Allmand: I know it does not address it because it deals with specific user charges and extra billing. She had no solution either, and that is why I am raising it in the House. This House and all the provinces must do something about it. It is interesting to note that the hon. lady is a Conservative from Ontario. The situation is just as shameful in Ontario under a provincial Conservative Government which has been in power for years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: These provincial governments try to justify these charges—

Mr. McDermid: There was a Liberal Government in Quebec, too.

Mr. Allmand: Well, there is fault in many places and we have to correct it. These provincial governments try to justify these extra charges by saying they are necessary to cover meal and room costs. Well, that is a ridiculous argument. Most people in these chronic care institutions have an elderly spouse at home. They must still pay their rent, utilities and taxes at home. To say that they are being charged in the hospital or institution for food and lodging is like pretending they are on some sort of holiday at a hotel. It is a ridiculous argument. We do not take that approach with people in ordinary hospitals. We do not charge them for the food and room because we know it would be impossible for them to pay. Here we have a situation where people are paying $800, $700, $1,000 per month for longterm chronic care. That we should allow this situation to exist in Canada in 1984 is a national shame. It is basically a provincial responsibility but the federal Government must do more to encourage improvement.

I was pleased to note that the Minister, after discussions in committee, announced that soon after this Bill is passed she would seek talks with the provinces to discuss the wide range of matters not covered by this Bill. She assures me that chronic care is high on that list. I hope those discussions will be meaningful and lead to improvement. In the meantime, Mr. Speaker, we are confronted with certain very specific problems right now—the erosion of our medicare system by extra billing and user charges. Let us deal with this immediately and pass this Bill.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I listened to what the Hon. Member had to say here and in committee. I was glad he joined the committee because we were both arguing about the great need for chronic care facilities to come under insured services. One of the ways that might have been done was to take the term "health care practitioner" and give it a much more definitive backing than appears in the Bill. It is true we got the term introduced as an amendment, but not in the original amendment put forward in committee. The original amendment said that "health care practioner" means a person lawfully entitled to practise a health care profession in the place in which the practice is carried on by that person.

Had that amendment not been defeated by the Liberal members of the committee, it would have been much more possible for insured services to be directed to chronic care hospitals and the people who operate nursing homes and chronic care hospitals. Given that, why would the Hon. Member not have voted for that amendment in the first place?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I did not vote for or against the amendment because I was one of the five alternate members on the committee. But let me say that I listened to the discussion and I was not convinced that the amendment would have accomplished what both I and the Hon. Member wanted. She is very concerned about the same problem and she gave some very good examples before the committee as well. However, I am afraid most of the amendments I heard before the committee would only deal with the problem in a peripheral way. The problem is so great that for the federal Government, at this stage of the Bill, to accept certain peripheral amendments would have been very difficult with respect to the provinces because they would have to pick up about 50 per cent of the cost.

I am glad that the Hon. Member and others raised this in committee because it is a growing and serious problem which will require a special federal-provincial conference to deal with it. I hope there will be reason on all sides so we can deal with it. But I do not think the amendments put forward in the committee would have really solved the problem even though I did not have a chance to vote for or against them.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the comments of the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) on the erosion of medicare. I was in the provincial government when the federal Government approached the provincial government and offered to pay 50 per cent of the cost of medicare; I think that was back in 1966. For some time the federal Government paid 50 per cent of those costs. Later on the federal Government introduced a block system and suggested to the provinces that it would be better, instead of paying for isolated items, that the federal Government give a block sum of money, still understanding it would be 50 per cent of the costs. But later we found it was well below 50 per cent. In this Bill we come to the point where the federal Government is paying as little as 32 per cent of the costs of medicare. That is in my province; I do not know what the percentages are in the other provinces. Is this not an erosion of the plan?

Second, would the Hon. Member foresee a provincial government, since the provinces are getting far less than 50 per cent, passing legislation authorizing the province in question to deduct from taxation going from that province to the federal Government the difference between what the provincial government is getting from the federal Government in medicare and the 50 per cent cost of medicare? Provinces may have to introduce such legislation. Could I have the Hon. Member's comments?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, since I am from Quebec I am not that familiar with Alberta, but I am familiar with the Quebec system and with the national system. I cannot comment on the Member's allegation that in Alberta the federal Government is only paying 38 per cent or some such figure. I am surprised at that because on a national basis, despite the changes in the funding between the federal Government and the provinces, the federal Government is still paying approximately 50 per cent. In Quebec it is paying more. The system last year cost approximately $22 billion, and the federal Government was paying around $11 billion. There are variations with different provinces. I am surprised and doubtful that the variation with respect to Alberta is that great.

By the way, if we include a lot of other costs that are not included in the system that some provinces decide to fund, then the cost of the system—and this includes dentists, in some cases osteopaths and others—would be $30 billion, with the federal contribution about one-third if you use those figures. But if you use all the moneys included under medicare in the agreement, the federal Government, according to my information, is still paying approximately 50 per cent across the country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): If there are no further questions or comments we will move to debate. The Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro).

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I was not a member of the committee. We cannot all be members of all committees, but I have been concerned about a number of the matters that have entered into this debate, not the least of which is the further erosion of federal-provincial relations caused by the abrasive methods used by the federal Government throughout this particular piece of legislation.

However, I would like to begin my contribution to the debate, bearing in mind I was not a member of the committee, by stating quite categorically that I have yet to hear of a doctor in Canada refusing his services as a doctor to anyone requiring his services whether the person requesting them could pay or not. This, I think, is the underlying matter that we must not overlook in all of this battle about user fees and so on. Doctors do not refuse services to those who want them. I think we should pay tribute to the fraternity, those to whom we owe so much, that they take their oath as doctors as seriously as they do. The Hippocratic oath means something to a doctor, Mr. Speaker. I sometimes wonder whether the oath of a Privy Councillor is just as meaningful to some Ministers.

The whole object of this exercise seems to be another method of getting conflict going between the federal authorities and the provincial authorities. I hope time will permit me to make a proposal to resolve this matter, not just in this Bill but in other Bills where it is acknowledged, as it is acknowledged in the preamble of this Bill. I do not know whether you have noticed, Mr. Speaker, that this Bill is somewhat unusual in the manner in which it is drafted. It begins with a preambular set of three or four paragraphs. At the very opening of the preamble it says that the Parliament of Canada is called upon to recognize:

—that it is not the intention of the Government of Canada that any of the powers, rights, privileges or authorities vested in Canada or the provinces under the provisions of the Constitution Act, 1867 (formerly named the British North America Act, 1867), or any amendments thereto, or otherwise, be by reason of this Act abrogated or derogated from or in any way impaired;—

That is a noble sentiment. It is not carried out either in this Bill or in the conduct of the Government with relation to the provinces, and that is what I find so deplorable.

To take one example, the Ministers of Health for the provinces, who are charged under the Constitution Act and all of the amendments, met in Halifax a year or so ago. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) went to one meeting. She came out after one hour and said that there was no point in the world trying to talk to these Ministers; they were set on a course, a course which the Constitution provides for them to follow. They are set on a course, she said, that makes it impossible to talk to them. When, in the last fortnight, those same Ministers from the provinces met here in this city while this matter was before the House of Commons or the committee, the Minister refused to attend any of the conferences. This is what I find so deplorable about the manner in which this Bill is being pushed forward by this Government.

This is a Bill of confrontation, and that attitude is followed up by something which I find absolutely unacceptable in any federation. I do not know what happened in other provinces. Mark you, I am not arguing in favour of what the legislature of my province is doing, Mr. Speaker. What I deplore is the circulation of an insert in the old age pension cheques of a thing like this. It sends a message out for all those who receive old age pensions in B.C. It is a message which is designed specifically to set the people of British Columbia against the Government of British Columbia on this issue.

That is not the role of the federal Government. Its role surely is to try to meet with the provincial Ministers of Health and resolve the differences which may exist between them in open conference. It should not use this deplorable, abominable device for circulating a message of this sort. I am not talking about the substance of the message. I am talking about the method used. It is beneath contempt that any federal Government should do it. What would happen if any provincial Government were to try to reciprocate and get a message to all Canadians to undermine the federal authority? What would the federal Government do? It would probably incarcerate the whole lot of them under the War Measures Act or something like that. This is no way to conduct a federal Government.

My attention was drawn to the fact that there was a change to the purpose of this particular Bill during the discussions in committee. I think it would be worth while to put the two versions on the record—the purpose as originally presented to the House and the purpose as it came out in committee. I have a copy of the original Bill here. I think it is worth reading the purpose in its entirety. Clause 4 of the Bill originally tabled on December 12, 1983—perhaps it is not available to everyone and everyone does not necessarily read it—reads:

> The purpose of this Act is to advance the objectives of Canadian health care policy, while recognizing the primary responsibility of the provinces for the provision of health care services, by establishing criteria and conditions that must be met before full payment may be made under the Act of 1977 in respect of insured health services and extended health care services provided under provincial law.

That was the original purpose. Also I notice that the objectives of the policy as provided in Clause 3 are extended in the original version and somewhat reduced in the final version. The purpose which is in the amended version now before us is somewhat shorter and reads:

> The purpose of this Act is to establish criteria and conditions that must be met before full payment may be made under the Act of 1977 in respect of insured health services and extended health care services provided under provincial law.

There is quite a distinction, but what I find a little worrisome—and this goes back to my earlier worry—is the use of the word "must". A number of speakers, including the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), suggested that Hon. Members of this Party are opposed to medicare. Nothing could be further from the truth. This Party has supported medicare from the beginning. It wants medicare provided within the means of Canadians. It wants the same medicare system provided across the country. It is not opposed to medicare. I regret any Member rising and even by implication suggesting the contrary. But the use of the word "must" in this instance I find a denial of the true meaning of federalism. It is demonstrable that the centralizing propensities of the federal Government have been at the base of many of our problems. This is another example.

Regardless of the provisions of the Constitution, it is almost as though the federal Government is deciding on its own what provincial governments must do in respect to a matter under provincial jurisdiction before there can be any possibility of a cost-sharing formula—"you had better do this or you will get no help from us". I find this wrong in terms of the federal principle despite the acknowledgement in the preamble that we are dealing with a provincial matter. No one has questioned that. Even the Government has not questioned it, but it has had the effrontery, without consultation and even turning its back on consultation when it is offered, to try to lay down the conditions for the fulfilment of a constitutional responsibility within the provinces.

The propaganda campaign mentioned by earlier speakers was launched even before the Bill was presented to Parliament without consultation with the provinces as a means of creating an issue, not reducing the differences which may exist because of monetary restraints. I just do not understand why the Government seems so intent on creating federal-provincial confrontation. That has marked its passage from its inception under the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). Perhaps therein lies the problem. Perhaps the Prime Minister feels that he has done his work of instilling confrontation as a means of getting the country into debt and preventing it from working. Perhaps he finds that the future is bleak because of the confrontational tactics and has decided that it is about time to watch the process from afar without assuming any responsibility, I do not really know. However, I deplore the notion that the federal Government should draw up a Bill which will penalize the provinces for not doing what they want to do and what they will do within their fiscal powers or the means they have of producing health services.

Like the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East, I too worry about the provisions of long-term care. It is a growing problem in Canada. The demographics are telling us this. The tax base is going to be lower. Those who pay taxes will be fewer in number. Those who rely on the services which the taxes provide will be more numerous. In 15, 20 or 30 years from now there will be a heavy burden, not just because of the debt that has been created by this Government but because of its promises. The country is being weakened by this confrontational procedure.

The need for chronic care in Canada is mounting, there is no question about that. When one of my predecessor colleagues entered politics in British Columbia, the former leader of the PC Party, Dr. Scott Wallace, his main objective was to get extended care extended. Unfortunately, out of sheer frustration, he felt he could no longer pursue this objective because he seemed to be getting nowhere. At one time I thought it was the local provincial government that was causing the frustration for Doctor Wallace. Having now examined this Bill and the whip hand which the federal Government has over the provincial governments with their narrow tax base, the cause of the frustration of Doctor Scott Wallace is obvious. I now know what caused him to throw up his hands in absolute frustration.

I have just a minute remaining to make a proposal. This Bill acknowledges where the constitutional responsibility lies on this matter, and that is with the provinces. I throw this proposal out; it came to me only a few minutes ago. It has not been discussed with anyone in my Party so I do not throw it out as a Party notion. I bring it forward as one who is concerned about Canada and about health care.

In matters of this sort where there is need for a federal financial input to assist the fulfilment of a provincial responsibility, should there not be some mechanism such as the joint resolution notion which is used in other fields under the Constitution? A Bill or a resolution covering these matters could be produced by the federal Parliament and then ratified by the provincial legislatures. It would show the agreement of the two levels of government in an area where there is not shared responsibility in terms of provision of the service, but a shared responsibility in terms of the financial contribution to it.

I put that forward as a notion which might be valuable in future cases where the federal Government is expected to contribute financially so that the provinces can fulfil their constitutional responsibility.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions and comments. If there are no questions or comments, I recognize the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) for debate.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to say a few words on third reading of Bill C-3, the Canada Health Act. The assumption is that all three political Parties will be supporting this Bill when it comes to the final vote. I suspect it is clear to anyone who has paid attention to the debate surrounding the issue of medicare over the last number of months and years that medicare was being eroded, drastically in some provinces, and under attack in virtually all provinces with two or three exceptions. Most notably those exceptions were governments that were part of the movement that founded medicare in the 1940s, namely the NDP.

It is my plan today in the few minutes before we break to outline some of the aspects of the Bill that I feel need to be emphasized and perhaps in some cases to be re-emphasized. The Bill will obviously attempt to remove extra billing and user fees because universality was being eliminated as a result of these two areas. The assumption was that people were not receiving appropriate medical care.

A number of speakers have questioned whether user fees, extra billing and charging premiums was hindering the access of groups of people to appropriate and proper health care. In the last two or three weeks in my constituency in British Columbia, I have noticed a number of occasions where people have made it perfectly clear that they were not receiving the health care to which they were entitled.

My own parents were in need of an injection before going on a vacation. They chose to go to their physician for their injection and then went happily on their way. They could have received the same injections at the community health clinic where there would have been no cost to the system. As a result of my parents' visit, the doctor is now going to bill the provincial system for a visit and these two injections.

Mr. McDermid: Why shouldn't he?

Mr. Riis: The Conservative Member says why shouldn't he? I agree he should. The point is that we are very concerned about the costs of medical care today. We are concerned about the future viability of the present system as a result of the increased costs. My point is that had my parents used the community clinic the cost would have been a few cents for the time of the nurse on duty and the cost of the injection. However, the medicare system was charged for two visits to a physician. That same service could have been provided much more cheaply had my parents been a bit more alert to the role that the community health clinic plays in our community. It brought to mind the fact that we could be organizing our health care system in a more cost-effective way when it comes to something as simple as a straightforward injection.

I was also visited by a young woman. She has a particular problem and occasionally has to go to the emergency ward or visit her physician to have an injection. On that particular day, a Sunday, a doctor was not available so she went to the local hospital. As she walked up to the admission desk in the emergency ward, she was told she had to pay $10 before she could see a physician. She left at that point and came to see me in my home. She asked for advice as to how she could receive this injection. She did not know she could have had her injection, that the physician would have seen her. When she was told there was an extra fee that she was required to pay, having no money with her at the time she was under the impression that that care was not available to her.

A few weeks ago, I had occasion to be visited by a young woman who had recently had a child and was breast-feeding that child. She told me that she was on her way to see her doctor for the third time in order to see how things were going with her breast-feeding. Again, the thought occurred to me that perhaps there might be a more cost-effective way to provide advice to young mothers who are breast-feeding rather than requiring a number of visits to her physician. I thought of this in terms of the cost of the health care clinic as compared to the cost billed to the medicare system.

It really came home to me, Mr. Speaker, when I visited a senior citizens' home and took part in a general discussion over lunch. A number of senior citizens indicated their concern about the availability of health care and they indicated that they were now reluctant to use the hospital system in the way they felt they ought to because of the extra fees they would be required to pay.

Whether or not all of these things which I have mentioned are true in fact, the point I would like to make is that there is a certain mind-set in the country. People who are elderly, ill or poor are, to a certain extent, of the impression that health care is no longer available to them. When it comes to having to pay premiums and extra fees to one's physician, one could say that there is certainly some truth to that in some of the cases I have mentioned. As a matter of fact, when we tally up the amount of money being set aside in user fees and extra billing, we are talking about an amount of money in the $120 million to $130 million range.

In the whole scheme of health care costs in Canada, $120 million to $130 million is not a significant amount of money. However, one could consider that this is an amount of money which is really nothing more than a special tax on the sick with a particularly hard impact upon the poor and the elderly. Bill C-3 has come before the House for third reading today in an effort to do something to end these extra costs.

I shall refer to a study which was done recently in the Province of Saskatchewan. In that study, people were asked the question: "Would a $2 increase in user fees have any adverse impact on the community that uses the health care facilities?" It was found that a $2 increase in user fees would adversely impact upon approximately 19 per cent of the clientele. Again, that 19 per cent of the clientele is composed by and large of the elderly and of people with chronic illnesses. From what I can gather, this was the result of a very unbiased study that attempted to indicate to what extent a simple $2 increase in user fees would impact on a community.

When we speak about a tax on the sick and the elderly, we are reminded of the words of Mr. Justice Emmett Hall who had so much to say about the need for medicare in the country and about the extra charges that are being levied today. He said: "The trauma of illness, the pain of surgery, the slow decline to death are burdens enough for the human being to bear without the added burden of medical or hospital bills penalizing the patient at the moment of vulnerability". This is why we in this Party are so concerned about what we see as the present erosion of the medicare system.

We in this Party are particularly concerned because of the role that we as a political Party have played in the introduction of medicare in Canada. I remember the state of the hospital system in the country at the time that I graduated from high school. I remember the confusing hodge-podge of private and public insurance schemes for health care. From my readings at that time, I recall that at least seven million Canadians did not have any kind of health insurance at all. At least half the population of Canada certainly did not have any comprehensive health coverage at that time.

In 1945, the Saskatchewan CCF Government, a forerunner to the NDP, decided that it was time to take action. I am sure that most Canadians today are under the impression that medicare has existed for as long as anything has and that medicare has always been a fact of life in Canada. Many people have grown up understanding that they could have access to a hospital and a doctor at any time at a cost that would not prohibit their treatment, and presumably at no cost at all because it was funded through the taxation system. However, I think it is important for Canadians to realize that this was not always the case.

Before we break, Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few moments to outline the evolution of medicare in Canada. To find the origins of medicare, we must go back to 1945 because it was in that year that under the Saskatchewan CCF Government, Saskatchewan was the first province to introduce medical and dental care for all old age pensioners and for mother's allowance recipients and their families. This was the beginning of the idea that we could indeed take action using our relatively progressive comprehensive tax system to provide health and dental care for old age pensioners and those receiving mother's allowance.

In 1946, the Saskatchewan CCF Government introduced an experimental, comprehensive, Government-sponsored medicare plan in the Swift Current region of the province. In this case, the program provided a full range of medical services including a dental program for young people under the age of 16. The Government was testing the situation in an effort to demonstrate to Canadians in all provinces and territories that comprehensive medical care was available there and could be available to all.

In 1947, Saskatchewan, under the CCF Government, became the first province to introduce a comprehensive, Government-sponsored hospital insurance program. By 1961, many Canadians were beginning to feel that if there could be comprehensive medicare available to everyone in the Province of Saskatchewan, why could it not be available to those in other provinces? In 1961, Mr. Justice Emmett Hall was appointed to chair a royal commission on health services which was created to "inquire into and report on the existing facilities and the future needs for health services for the people of Canada".

Mr. McDermid: Who appointed Mr. Justice Hall?

Mr. Riis: In 1962, Saskatchewan, again under the CCF-NDP Government, became the first province to introduce a comprehensive, provincially-sponsored medical prepayment plan, or medicare. This, of course, resulted in the kind of knee-jerk response one might have expected because challenging the system in which appropriate health care was available to select groups of the society and not to everyone resulted in a 25-day strike of Saskatchewan physicians.

In 1964, the Hall Commission reported and recommended, among other things, the creation of comprehensive medical insurance plans in each province which would be available to all Canadians, with cost-sharing by the federal Government. In 1966, a big year for Canadians, the minority federal Government of that time passed the Medical Care Act providing for 50 per cent federal cost-sharing in proven provincial medicare plans.

One could go on to make the point very clearly that, as a result of the CCF-NDP Government which laid the groundwork and convinced Canadians that this was indeed a possibility, we have moved toward the point where today we see once again the need for the federal Government to take action to ensure that proper medical care is available to all Canadians.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order. I think there is a general agreement that if there are to be no further speakers, the vote on third reading would be deferred until 4.45 p.m.

Miss MacDonald: That is agreeable to us.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, you will call the vote at that time. I just want to make it clear for the record that it is intended that there be a recorded vote at that time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): In that case I shall put the question now and as there appears to be unanimous consent, the vote could be deferred until 4.45 p.m. Is that correct?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The question is as follows:

[Translation]

Miss Bégin, seconded by Mr. LeBlanc, moved:

That Bill C-3, an Act relating to cash contributions by Canada in respect of insured health services provided under provincial health care insurance plans and amounts payable by Canada in respect of extended health care services and to amend and repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the third time and do pass.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

[English]

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Then by the unanimous agreement of the House the vote will stand deferred until 4.45 p.m.

An Hon. Member: Call for the yeas and nays.

[Translation]

All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): All those opposed will please say nay.

[English]

In my opinion the motion is carried.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I should point out to the House that to have a recorded vote more than five Members would have to rise to oppose the motion.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. McDermid: The motion was unanimous.

Mr. Ellis: There were no nays.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The House has put the Chair in somewhat of a difficult position. There was a clear indication of unanimous consent of the House prior to putting the question that there be a recorded division at 4.45 p.m. The House then, as a formality, went through the process of putting the question and called the yeas and nays. Since there were no nays heard by the Chair, it is very difficult to do other than record that the motion was carried. However, there were more than five Members who subsequently rose. I would suggest that was a clear indication that there was to be a recorded division of the House at 4.45 p.m. this afternoon and I so rule.

[Translation]

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock later this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p. m.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

POSITION ADVOCATED BY MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, in Regina over the weekend the Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) stated that, if he becomes Prime Minister, one of his priorities will be to try to persuade NATO to de-emphasize the deterrent aspect of nuclear weapons. He stated: "I think we should place greater reliance on conventional arms. It would be expensive, but that is a small price to pay to reduce the balance of terror."

Where has the Minister been for the last 15 years, Mr. Speaker? Where was he when his Party and Government unilaterally reduced our commitment to NATO by half? Where was he when the Armed Forces budget was frozen for three years, thus crippling critically needed re-equipment programs? Where was he when our men and women in uniform left in the thousands because of his Party's policies?

The Minister said that if a strengthened commitment means increasing the size and budget of Canada's Armed Forces, he would be willing to do so as long as other NATO countries would do the same. Our NATO partners are doing just that, and have been doing so.

The Progressive Conservative Party has consistently stood for a strong commitment to NATO, a strengthening of our forces, and greater emphasis on equipment replacement. I welcome the Minister's support of our policies, although I would rather have him express these views here in the House of Commons and in cabinet meetings. Recently we have witnessed public repudiation of government policies by many Liberal leadership hopefuls. Now, along with repudiation we have hypocrisy.

STATEMENTS MADE BY LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Mr. Speaker, I was flabbergasted, as were many North Shore residents, to learn about the remarks made last week by the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) concerning Canada's unemployment rate. I should think that the Leader of the Official Opposition is hardly in a position to take anybody to task after what happened on the North Shore and given the unduly high unemployment rate in Schefferville, Gagnon, Fermont, Sept-Îles and Port-Cartier.

Mr. Speaker, I was all the more disappointed as the charge was levelled at the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) who has done a lot for the North Shore and spent millions of dollars to create jobs and to launch the Pointe-Noire construction project which will guarantee the economic revival of the North Shore. Had the Minister of Finance not intervened directly, Mr. Speaker, we could not think and hope to restore the North Shore on a sound economic footing.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Official Opposition got his letters mixed up when he made rather unworthy allegations concerning the OECD Secretary General and the accepted procedure in diplomatic circles. The OECD is not the IOC—the Iron Ore Company—and the former President of the Iron Ore may have been confused about what he could do himself in Paris when he was President of the IOC.

Mr. Speaker, I think that he was ill-advised to make derogatory comments concerning people who work with the OECD.

POLICIES ADVOCATED BY MINISTERS DURING LIBERAL PARTY LEADERSHIP CAMPAIGN

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I would like briefly to voice my strong concern over the serious contradiction currently prevailing in the Liberal Cabinet. To quote the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) from a Liberal Party Biennial Policy Convention:

> The Government is wasting millions of dollars by sending monthly pension cheques to wealthy senior citizens and baby bonuses to families who do not need the money. Such funds should be redirected to help the most needy.

In addition, the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development (Mr. Johnston) was recently asked: "Would you move out of the Government's involvement in businesses like aircraft production and fisheries?" He replied: "Well, indeed, I would. If we can sell Canadair and if we can sell de Havilland, let's do it as quickly as possible."

On the subject of Petro-Canada, the same Minister was asked if Petro-Canada should be in the service station business. He responded by saying: "Well, frankly, I don't see any need for Petro-Canada in the service station business."

Asked whether his statements contradict policy and whether he should resign, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) said: "I don't have to comment on that. It's a problem for the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), not for me."

THE LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in 1968, George Romney, presidential hopeful, visited Vietnam on a fact finding mission. When he came back he made some statements that were subsequently proven to be false, and he indicated that he had been brainwashed. We all know what happened to his presidential candidacy after that. The same thing is happening in Canada today, Mr. Speaker.

The Leader of the Opposition's (Mr. Mulroney) statement recently in Calgary with regard to Bill C-169, modifications to the Election Expenses Act, was, and I quote: "We were asleep at the switch. I didn't see it and I don't think anyone in our Caucus saw it." That is just not correct, Mr. Speaker, because members of the Tory Caucus have denied that is correct. This is how the Leader of the Opposition dances around an issue. Their Caucus, our Caucus, and the NDP Caucus all saw those changes, and saw the change we are talking about here in particular.

When the going gets tough, Mr. Speaker, it seems like the Tory Leader denies he knew anything about it. That is a clear and absolute deception of the public. You do not claim to have been asleep at the switch if you want to be Prime Minister of this country or, in another context, claim to have been brainwashed in the House of Commons.

PARLIAMENT

SPEECH MADE BY HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSIONER

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I want to repeat the words of Mr. Gordon Fairweather, Chief Commissioner of the Canadian Human Rights Commission and a former Conservative Member of this House, in a speech he made in Manitoba last Thursday. He spoke about democratic institutions and how they should be preserved. He said "the reason we are not in a totalitarian society, the reason why we have freedom and respect for human rights, is that we have institutions like Parliament and Legislatures where issues can be debated in full public view. We have elections so that people can know where their prospective representatives stand, and vote accordingly. Anything that erodes these processes and institutions brings us a step closer to totalitarianism, a step closer to the dark world that Orwell warned us about . . . I am speaking against the undermining of the institutions that guarantee our freedom. Canadians look around the world and see other societies which are torn apart by tragic sectarian violence and bloodshed, and are thankful that our democratic institutions give us the means to live in peace and harmony with our neighbours. They give us the means to live with one another even when we disagree, and disagree strongly. Sadly, there are people in Manitoba who are urging on Members of the Legislative Assembly who have subverted democracy by walking out, rather than standing up and voting on a resolution introduced by a duly elected Government."

What Gordon Fairweather said of that House, Mr. Speaker, applies—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

NATIONAL REVENUE

POSITION OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, during the weekend, the Conservatives went into a retreat in Mont Sainte-Marie to hatch posthaste, it must be said, policies designed to attract the voters. Mr. Speaker, it is not too soon for them to start thinking about what they plan to put before the Canadian public during the next election campaign. The weekend's biggest find was the suggestion that the methods used to collect taxes will be changed. Without wanting to endorse blindly the present methods used by the Department of National Revenue, I believe that the Conservatives are forgetting that, throughout Canada excepting Quebec, the Canadian Government is responsible for collecting taxes on behalf of the Provinces. As we all know, these governments are for the most part Conservative and they do not seem to have any complaints about the federal Government's performance with respect to collecting these taxes. I therefore wonder about the seriousness of this proposal, Mr. Speaker. It would be interesting to know what the Premiers might have to say about this bright idea the basic purpose of which is to seduce and deceive the Canadian businessman.

What they failed to mention is the workers's own views on this as they have not opportunity whatsoever to avoid paying their taxes which are deducted at the source. In any case, no matter who collects the taxes, these have to be collected one way or another.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

TORONTO SICK CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL INQUIRY—RIGHTS OF NURSES

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a matter that I raised in the House last week, that is, the massive intrusion on the rights of the nurses at the Sick Children's Hospital. I am thinking specifically of Susan Nelles and Miss Trayner. If Mr. Justice Grange should find that the deaths were intentional, if he should name names, as is his ability under the terms of reference now, and should the police officers decide as a result to lay charges, how can anyone possibly think that any of these nurses could possibly have a fair trial? Under Section 11(d) of the Charter of Rights every Canadian is entitled to be presumed innocent until proven guilty according to law, in a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal.

I invite Members of the House to speak on this issue because it is an important issue. I believe this is the most massive encroachment on rights that I have witnessed.

Let us assume, on the other hand, that there is not sufficient admissible evidence to warrant a trial and yet the finding of the commission is that the deaths were deliberate, and names are named. The stigma, as a result of the publicity, could not be overcome by these nurses or anyone else named. This is totally unfair.

I believe the House should request that the Attorney General restrict the terms of inquiry, or that Mr. Justice Grange personally—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

ADULT PROFESSIONAL TRAINING

PROPOSALS MADE BY PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, at first glance, the Progressive Conservative Party's proposals for adult occupational training seem progressive. A closer examination, however, reveals that on the contrary they are disappointing and regressive. Disappointing since there is no mention of paid educational leave, one of the major issues which must be examined.

[English]

It is disappointing also, Mr. Speaker, because the Progressive Conservative Party does not address the free rider syndrome. Businesses on the whole are in favour of more industrial training, but are reluctant to do more as they often lose skilled employees to other firms which do not train their own employees. The tax incentives alone which the PCs propose will not solve this problem. Regressive, Mr. Speaker? Totally so.

The proposals do not address the problem of equal access and opportunity. The Tories suggest that we allow persons to receive unemployment insurance while training. What of those who have no unemployment insurance benefits, such as the 500,000 unemployed youth and women re-entering the labour force?

The Tories also suggest a tax sheltered savings plan which will benefit those with high incomes and a good education. It seems to me that the Tories are trying to promote a scheme such as their 1979 mortgage interest deductibility plan which will do little to solve the needs of the poor and the unemployed.

PLIGHT OF WOMEN FACING WELFARE

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, there are scores and perhaps hundreds of Canadian women who, in the silence of their own homes each night, wet their pillows with tears. Here is a typical case. A woman came to me to ask if the Government could help her. She said:

> I am 63 . . . my husband died when our son was seven. I resolved to give my boy a good education. I scrubbed floors, washed clothes, made bread . . . I did everything I could to make a dollar. I was proud when Tommy entered college . . . soon he would help me . . . I worked harder than ever . . . my arthritis bothered me but I forced myself . . . I must get him through college . . . and . . . then, just before his graduation he was killed in an automobile accident . . . it tore the heart out of me . . . all my hopes were dashed to the ground . . . that was three years ago . . . I have continued to wash clothes and scrub floors, but now every part of my body aches day and night . . . my doctor tells me I must stop working . . . can the Government help me?

She did not have Canada Pension , UIC, or a bank account. I hated to tell her, but finally I swallowed hard and I said: "I'm sorry, but there is only welfare." "Welfare" she echoed. She was proud, and I saw the tear that she tried to hold back while she thanked me for listening, and hobbled out of the room.

Could we not take a few of the thousands of dollars we give to Crown corporations to provide a pension for our heroic Canadian women who have given their all and have taken nothing for themselves, Mr. Speaker? Welfare should not be their reward.

SOCIAL SCIENCES AND HUMANITIES RESEARCH COUNCIL

SIZE OF GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Communications has announced that the budget for the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council will only be increased by $2 million, and that the $5.9 million of supplementary funds provided in the three previous years will not be renewed. Even the Government's own guideline of 5 per cent increases was not adhered to. In fact the Council will get less this year.

What astound me are the crazy priorities of the Government. On the one hand it can pour in well over $1 billion to support Canadair, but cut back and slash support for the social sciences and humanities. It seems to be okay to lose vast sums of money building executive jets, but our universities can do without. Why is the Government attacking our universities? With Bill C-12 it will deprive the universities of several hundreds of millions of dollars. With the cutback to the SSHRC it is making the situation even worse.

Does the Government feel we do not need as much research into our economic conditions, the human displacement due to technological change, or the problems facing native people? Does the Government believe that our artists, writers, and musicians need less assistance in their efforts to maintain a Canadian cultural identity? Does the Government not realize that Canada is in the midst of major social, economic, and cultural changes, and that we need more, not less, effort by organizations like the SSHRC, to help us successfully through these changes?

Mr. Minister, please wake up, get your priorities straight, and restore the funding to the social sciences and humanities.

THE ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT STATISTICS—STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER OF EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. He is wearing the red badge of shame, because 16 years ago 360,000 Canadians were unemployed and today 1,541,000 are unemployed on the anniversary of the Prime Minister's accession to leadership.

While the Minister of Employment and Immigration was campaigning for the Liberal leadership in Calgary on Friday he was asked about the latest unemployment figures, which of course went up last Friday. He said this: "They are a bad guide to the state of the economy".

If the unemployment figures are a good guide to the state of the economy when they go down, why are they a bad guide to the state of the economy when they go up? Is this the new Liberalism? Is this the new Orwellian newspeak? Is it Government policy that unemployment figures are no longer a good guide to the state of the economy?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to show appreciation for the fact that my colleague has noted that today is the sixteenth anniversary of the election of the Prime Minister as the Leader of our Party.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: I got the list for you, Pierre, of those who did not clap.

Mr. Lalonde: I would like to remind the Hon. Member that this has been a period during which the economy in Canada has grown at an average of 3.3 per cent a year. This is more than every other industrialized country except Japan. During this time the average for the other countries was about 3 per cent. That means that the rate of growth of Canada has been 10 per cent above the average of all other industrialized countries since 1968.

Since my friend has talked about unemployment I would like to remind him that during this period three million jobs have been created in this country. Today there are 40 per cent more Canadians employed than there were in 1968.

During this time we have had two million more women in the workforce than in 1968.

This country has created more jobs than practically every other industrialized country during that period, and we have succeeded in doing this while preserving our social security system, which the Tories would be the first to attack, like they did when they came into office in 1979.

If my friend wants to talk about unemployment and leadership, he should first ask questions of his Leader who has destroyed the economy of the North Shore, turned Schefferville into a ghost town, and closed down half of the North Shore of Quebec.

SIZE OF LABOUR FORCE

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I asked the Minister a question about a statement made by the Minister of Employment and Immigration, who has stated that unemployment figures are a bad guide to the state of the economy. There are 1,541,000 Canadians who are not applauding the elevation of the Prime Minister to office 16 years ago. They are out of work, and they do not care for your specious recital of false statistics that we just heard.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: When the donkeys stop braying, I will ask my question.

Last Friday the Minister of Employment and Immigration said: "The economic recovery is drawing more people into the labour force causing an increase in the number of people looking for work and inflating the unemployment rate". He is blaming people coming into the labour force for inflating the unemployment rate. As a matter of fact his statement is completely false, because the labour force declined last month by 27,000 people.

How does the Minister account for this amazing misinformation by the Minister of Employment and Immigration? Is it deliberate? Is he deliberately trying to fool the Canadian people, or is he witless and stupid? Which is it? When will he be removed from his post if he does not even know that the labour force declined, not increased, last month?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that my friend has such a corner on stupidity that there is not much left for anybody else. He knows that the labour force in Canada has increased quite significantly over the last few years, particularly last year. There is practically no other industrialized country that has known a greater growth in labour force than Canada. He knows that, or should know that.

I have already told him that the labour force in Canada last year increased by some 40 per cent more than the United States. Indeed, I was wrong, because the latest final figures that have come out show that the labour force in Canada increased by some 58 per cent more than the United States in 1983.

It may be true that, indeed, there was a decline in the labour force last month of 0.2 per cent, but my friend should try to take a little broader perspective and examine the figures for several months to realize what is really happening in this country.

Mr. McKnight: Fifty-four per cent of the people already realize that.

Mr. Lalonde: If he took a little more trouble to examine the facts he would be able to discover for himself that, indeed, we have created over 400,000 jobs last year since the depression—since the recession—in 1982.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: Yes, we had a very deep recession. We have created over 424,000 jobs, and we have created as many jobs comparatively as any other industrialized country—as a matter of fact, more than most of these countries.

The Canadian record is good, and it is not by knocking Canada and knocking Canadians—

Mr. McDermid: We are not knocking Canada; we are knocking you.

Mr. Lalonde: —that we will inspire confidence in this country. I leave my friend to his pessimism.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has a colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, who said on Friday: "Unemployment figures are a bad guide to the state of the economy." We want to know if that is now the Government's position, that they are a bad guide to the state of the economy? He also said that the labour force went up, when in fact the labour force in the last month went down. Is down now the same as up in the Liberal lexicon? Or is up, down? Is in, out?

Are the views of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, the little Lord Fauntleroy of the new Liberalism, the economic views of the Government, or is he to be asked to tender his resignation for the foolish and deceitful statements he made last Friday in Calgary?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member could at least listen. I told him that the labour force had gone down two-tenths of one per cent last month.

Mr. Crosbie: Your colleague said it went up.

Mr. Lalonde: I also told him that the labour force in Canada in 1983 grew by some 58 per cent more compared to the United States. These are facts that my friend can check.

Again, it is true that you cannot simply judge a performance of the economy by the results of the unemployment figures for one month. You also have to look at the results in terms of productivity, the results in terms of growth of the economy, results in terms of the reduction of inflation, results in terms of the trade balance of this country and our record exports that we know at the present time.

Mr. Crosbie: Answer the question.

Mr. Lalonde: These are all factors that one must look at when one wants to look at the performance of the Canadian economy. You cannot just take one figure for one month—

Mr. Crosbie: Are they a bad guide?

Mr. Lalonde: — and try to extrapolate this for the whole economy. If you have any knowledge of this area, you know that you have to bear in mind all of the factors that I have mentioned.

Mr. Crosbie: Are they a bad guide?

GOVERNMENT POLICY—STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER OF STATE FOR ECONOMIC AND REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian public have looked at the results of the Government's economic policy, which is why they will throw the Government out in the next election.

My question is directed to the Prime Minister. His Minister responsible for economic development is openly criticizing the Government's energy policy, including the National Energy Program, and now the Minister is advocating the sale of Petro-Canada service stations. He may not be aware that Petro-Canada only owns 116 of the 3,000 service stations, the rest of which are leased or are independents.

My question is about Cabinet solidarity. In view of the long established parliamentary tradition that when a Minister is openly critical of Cabinet policy, that Minister resigns, has the Prime Minister asked for this Minister's resignation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Ministers who are running for the leadership of the Liberal Party are talking about the future and things that they would do if they became Prime Minister, which one of them certainly will, one of the leadership candidates will become Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: It will be very brief.

Mr. Trudeau: I find it normal that those Ministers would indicate how they intend to govern in the future when they are Prime Minister. They are setting out their views for the delegates to hear, and they are permitting the Canadian people to know their position, which is more than the Conservative Party is doing. We are out in front with our policies and we are looking at the future. I see nothing wrong with that.

Miss Carney: We are being aided in our attacks on the Government's policy by the Prime Minister's own Ministers, and we have lots of time to review our policy.

MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON PETRO-CANADA GASOLINE STATIONS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. I would like to quote the exact statement made by the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development. It has nothing to do with the future; it concerns basic Party philosophy. He said:

> I don't see that the Government needs to retail gas any more than it needs to retail chocolates.

If that is not an example of abandoning Cabinet solidarity, what is? Why does the Prime Minister tolerate this open criticism of his own Government's policy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the Minister made it quite clear that he had supported the purchase of multinational corporations, including some which were retailing gas, and he was looking at problems he would examine in the future. He was indicating that he would consider what he would do with retailing of gas. I see nothing wrong with that. If the Minister and a future Prime Minister want to say that they will differ in some way from policies they adopted, it will be up to the delegates and the Canadian people to judge them.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PLIGHT OF WORKERS EXHAUSTING BENEFITS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. It has to do with an individual who is 56 years of age. He has worked for 33 years for Kimberley-Clark at Kapuskasing. He was laid off last year when the plant was closed. This individual is not entitled to any pension. His UIC runs out in a little less than three weeks. His savings have gone supporting his family while he has been on UIC for the past year. The case is not unique, Mr. Speaker. It is the same situation you will find for more than 300,000 Canadians today.

While welfare is the only option left in three weeks' time, has the Minister of Finance anything to tell the more than 300,000 people in a similar situation as to what they can expect in future action from this Government as quickly as possible?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we are trying to create jobs as much as we can. Second, we have training programs, retraining programs for workers young and old. These programs at the present time have been allocated more funds than at any time in the past and are available to Canadian citizens. There are Manpower centres in this country to which people can address themselves and where they can discuss with officials ways whereby they could receive additional training which would allow them to take jobs which would become available in the labour market, and make themselves more competent and able to fill the needs that open in the labour market.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, through you I want to inform the Minister of Finance that this individual has three children who are all attempting to develop their education in one form or another. This individual has tried on many many occasions to find access to retraining programs. They simply do not exist for him. He is not qualified for most programs, and the programs for which he does qualify are offered 2,000 miles away.

REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S ADVICE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. Regarding the individual in Kapuskasing, what advice would the Minister have if the individual had access to a retraining program as to what he should train for? In terms of the direction which this country is taking, what advice would the Minister of Finance have for this individual?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, obviously this is not an answer that I can give, not knowing the individual, not knowing his past experience, not knowing the opportunities there would be for training, and not knowing the opportunities available in the area where he lives. My friend says the opportunity for job training is 2,000 miles away. I am very surprised and, frankly, I do not believe that statement. I just cannot accept such a statement as representing the realities. If my friend wants to send the Minister of employment and Immigration the specifics about this individual, I am sure the Minister will ask his officials to examine the case and see whether anything can be done in that regard. Again, I just do not believe that facts are as stated by my friend.

LABOUR

SUCCESSOR TO ILAP PROGRAM

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary question is for the Minister of Labour. He was informed of this case in some detail just before Christmas. He responded two months later saying that he and his colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, were developing a successor to ILAP, which would build on the lessons learned from the program and that it was a high priority for both of them. This came as welcome news four months after the first letter of inquiry, Mr. Speaker. Having waited not in excess of four months, and knowing that it is a high priority, can the Minister tell us where the successor to ILAP stands? How soon will an announcement be made?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, this document is now being considered by Cabinet and a decision should be reached at an early date.

LAW REFORM

DELEGATES INVITED TO PEOPLE'S LAW CONFERENCE

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. The second annual People's Law Conference is taking place today and tomorrow. The Justice Minister will know that at the first such conference last May, in addition to many distinguished members of the Bench and Bar and other organizations with a legitimate interest in law reform, a spot check of the delegate list revealed that over 40 Liberal candidates, relatives of Liberal MPs, and members of the executives of Liberal organizations, were also invited by the Minister at public expense to attend that conference. What explanation does this Minister have for their presence? And how can he justify using his position and public money to build up a campaign organization for his run at the Liberal leadership?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the participants in the first People's Law Conference, as with respect to those in the second People's Law Conference, were chosen on the basis of their participation in communities. We wrote at that time to all Members of Parliament asking them for proposals to invite people. Most people, members of all Parties, were accepted. If my hon. friend finds there were a number of Liberals present, that should hardly surprise him considering the activity of Liberals in building up this country.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO PRESIDENT OF LIBERAL WOMEN'S COMMISSION IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Minister of Justice. My office has contacted a number of the people invited by the Minister's office. No doubt they were invited because of their Liberal connections. For example, Lauris Talmey of Richmond, B.C., said:

> I guess I was invited because I'm now President of the Liberal Women's Commission in B.C.

Can the Minister account for such a statement by any other explanation than that the legitimate work of this Conference was used as a cover to build his leadership campaign organization well before the Prime Minister's resignation?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is both hard of hearing and understanding. There were people at that Conference last year who were nominees of all Parties in this House, some of them very active. The person my hon. friend mentions is one of the most active people in women's circles in Canada. There are many people who have that kind of national status who were at the Conference. It would have been a poor Conference if they were not.

DISTRIBUTION OF CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Justice. The edited proceedings of the People's Law Conference in May were published at government expense and distributed by the Minister's leadership campaign committee, as campaign literature, at the recent meeting of the Ontario wing of the Liberal Party of Canada. The publication is highlighted with such immortal phrases as:

> Mr. MacGuigan has a vision of democracy in action . . . At the People's Law Conference he proved that it does work in the highest practical sense.

In light of what my colleague just said, and in light of this palpable pap, would the Minister rise to his feet and admit to Parliament, and through Parliament to the people of Canada, that he is using taxpayers' money to further the campaign of himself for the Liberal leadership of this country?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for reading my qualifications into the record. I am sure he does it with great sincerity.

Mr. McDermid: That brought the House down.

Mr. MacGuigan: In fact the publication to which he refers is a literal reproduction of the proceedings of the Conference.

Mr. Crosbie: The only one laughing is Chrétien.

Mr. MacGuigan: There were some people there who, I am happy to say, had that opinion of my work. There were people there who spoke about all aspects of the law that was under consideration.

Mr. Nielsen: Name one.

Mr. MacGuigan: I am glad my hon. friend has a copy of the book, and I hope he reads it and learns something from it.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Minister of Justice. We are not doubting that some qualified people were invited to attend the People's Law Conference. Nor are we doubting the potential usefulness of such a Conference in principle. But how can the Minister so shamelessly use taxpayers' money to advance his leadership campaign when many of the participants in the Conference in question had no qualifications whatever other than as potential delegates to the Liberal leadership convention in June?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I can tell that my hon. friend has not yet read very far in that book. A minority of the people at last year's Conference represented the legal profession. The majority represented the people of Canada. That is why it was the People's Law Conference, and there were people drawn from their communities. This was not a specialist conference. This was a conference of people who were community involved—

Mr. Crosbie: They were Liberals pretending to be people.

Mr. MacGuigan: —and who were interested in the way in which the law impinged on their society, their groups, and themselves. I think that is why the Conference has had the kind of impact it has had upon the development of law in Canada, because those who participated were so well chosen and participated so well.

THE PRESS

EFFECT OF COMPETITION BILL ON MAJOR NEWSPAPER CHAINS

Hon. Jim Fleming (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. While the new Competition Bill will obviously discourage, and probably stop, either of Canada's two giant daily newspaper chains from taking over each other, could the Minister assure the House, as a Member of a Cabinet which agreed these two chains should not increase their daily newspaper holdings in Canada, that the Bill will stop the two chains from acquiring more Canadian daily newspapers, when they already control almost two-thirds of English-language daily newspaper circulation? Does the Minister not agree that too much in the hands of too few is dangerous?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, of course I agree that too much in the hands of too few is dangerous. That is why the new Competition Bill is so vitally needed. I can assure the Hon. Member that the prenotification clause in the new Competition Bill will serve us well in those kinds of mergers which he describes.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MINE LAYING OFF COAST OF NICARAGUA

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the three Ministers who preside over external affairs, and also in the absence of the Parliamentary Secretary, I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. He will know that in recent weeks U.S.-backed contras have been laying mines off the coast of Nicaragua and that five foreign ships, including British and Dutch ships, have struck mines in the Port of Corinto, leading to an offer from France to help clear the mines. Could the Prime Minister tell the House whether the Government has investigated the possible danger to Canadian aid on board ships bound for Corinto, the results of that investigation, if there has been one, and also if the Government will join the initiative of France and offer a Canadian minesweeper to Nicaragua to help clear Nicaraguan ports?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I cannot assist the Hon. Member. I do not know whether action has been taken by the Department, but I will gladly take the question as notice.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT OFFER MINESWEEPER TO ASSIST IN CLEARANCE OPERATIONS

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Prime Minister can answer the latter part of my question as to whether the Government will offer a Canadian minesweeper, or at least consider offering one to go to Nicaragua to help clear the ports. Given the Prime Minister's opposition, stated on many occasions, to the growing militarization of the region, particularly the very much increased militarization with U.S. troops and bases in Honduras, could he assure the House that Honduras, which is Canada's country target in Central America for aid assistance, will be told that that assistance will have to be reviewed very carefully if it continues to host U.S. militarization of the region?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the last question is hypothetical in its nature. I know the Hon. Member's interest in the subject. She will know that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has been visiting Central America. When he returns, I am sure these questions will be examined by the Government.

As to the Hon. Member's suggestion of sending a Canadian minesweeper into those waters, it surprises me, coming as it does from the Hon. Member who generally opposes the use of Canadian forces in war zones or that type of conflict. Certainly this Government has a pretty clear practice of not sending its ships, planes, or men into any conflict, or area of conflict, unless that expedition is under the United Nations' banner. I repeat, the Hon. Member seems to be coming in conflict with the long-stated policy of her own Party.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ALLEGED CONTRIBUTION BY TRIBAL COUNCIL TO MINISTER'S LEADERSHIP CAMPAIGN

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. He knows that Indian tribal councils receive their funding from the federal Government. As a matter of fact the Minister is now after a doubling of those funds. Is the Prime Minister aware that one of these tribal councils presented a cheque for $9,000 to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development for his leadership campaign? Does he approve of taxpayer's dollars being spent to fund Ministers' leadership runs?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, no, I am not aware of that. I do not know the basis in fact of the question of the Hon. Member. I will look into it.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister conduct a complete investigation into this matter and, if he finds that it is true, will he remove the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development from office immediately?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member wants me to conduct a complete investigation, I would appreciate it if he could submit to me the allegations and the origin of them, and I will conduct that investigation. As to the question which followed, the Hon. Member realizes that it is hypothetical, very hypothetical.

GOVERNMENT POLICY—RESPONSIBILITY OF MINISTERS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Prime Minister could tell us if it is the position of the Government that when a Minister of the Crown speaks on public issues in public, that Minister is speaking for the Government.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, if he is stating government policy.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, if he is stating government policy. If he is discussing the time of day, he is not speaking for the Government.

IDENTIFICATION OF MINISTERS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, the question of course is: how do we know when a Minister of the Crown is stating government policy? I remember years ago a former Minister distinguished between bears that lived in national parks and those that did not, by painting red the posteriors of the bears that did not live in national parks. Is it the suggestion of the Prime Minister that we distinguish when Ministers are speaking for the Government by painting the posteriors of Ministers, perhaps red, when they are speaking for themselves?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: It would be a pleasant change from the red faces over there.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is making an ungracious allusion to the red Tories in his own Party.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF INITIAL GRAIN PRICES

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, Senator Hazen Argue in the other place, has failed to announce to farmers the initial price of grain for the coming year. Farmers cannot stand the financial strain of falling grain prices, nor can farmers tolerate the Government playing politics with the important announcement of the initial price of grain. Will the Minister immediately announce the initial price of grain for the coming crop year so that farmers can plan their seeding operations?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that Senator Argue in the other place has already made a statement concerning the initial payments for grain. He indicated that he will be making that announcement before seeding begins so that farmers will have that initial advantage. I cannot give the Hon. Member the specific date, but I believe the commitment of the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board will be fulfilled in a very short period of time.

REQUEST FOR IMMEDIATE ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Senator in the other place has been making several announcements and several statements. What we are asking for is an announcement of the initial price of grain for farmers who are beginning their operations in the fields, and who need to know the direction for planting their crops in this coming year. Will he make an announcement immediately so that farmers can plan their planting operations?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I could only once again repeat my earlier answer. The other place is a useful, legitimate forum in which government policy is announced. The Minister responsible for the Wheat Board is a member of that particular Chamber. He will be making an announcement at the earliest possible date in order to allow farmers to undertake the advanced planning that is required. I will take notice of the Hon. Member's representations so that the Hon. Senator will be able to respond in a very short period of time.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PLIGHT OF LUBICON BAND IN ALBERTA

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Last Fall Doctor Anwar Barkat of the World Council of Churches' Program to Combat Racism wrote to the Prime Minister concerning the Lubicon Lake Indian band in northern Alberta. He wrote that the Alberta Government and multinational oil companies "have taken actions which could have genocidal consequences" for the band. After detailing these actions, he said that the Lubicon people "cannot be expected to survive as a people unless they receive immediate financial, political and legal help". Was the Prime Minister made aware of the contents of this letter? Did he answer it? What action did he take in response to this urgent plea for justice?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it escapes me at the time as to whether I have seen that letter, but I will take notice of the question and give the Hon. Member an answer.

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO MEET LEGAL COSTS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, this question has been a front page story in the news for the last week, although the letter was written six months ago. It was an urgent plea for justice.

The report on Indian self-government said that one of the most distressing problems noted by the committee was the problem faced by bands like the Lubicon band and the Conne River band, which have no land base, and urged immediate action to give them a land base. Considering the threat to their traditional land base in Alberta, will the Prime Minister urge the Minister of Indian Affairs to give money to the Lubicon band for legal costs in their fight to preserve their traditional land against encroachment by the Government of Alberta and multinational oil companies? Will he urge the Minister of Indian Affairs to quit stalling and to take action to validate a comprehensive claim for these people who have never signed a treaty with the Canadian Government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is asking to me urge the Minister to do such and so. I cannot discuss that particular case. I just told the Hon. Member I did not recall the letter to which he referred. The Minister's actions since he has been Minister of Indian Affairs have been very consistent and persistent in attempting to solve the land claims issue. He has been successful in some cases. Certainly on the whole area of self-government with a land base, the Minister has been very forward looking and progressive. His statements—

Mr. Manly: Read the letter.

Mr. Trudeau: Now the Hon. Member is going back to his first question. I thought he wanted an answer to his second one.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

NORTHERN TRANSPORTATION COMPANY LIMITED—DATE OF DECISION TO SELL

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Will the Minister inform the House when the decision was taken to sell Northern Transportation Company Limited? Was it advance knowledge of that decision that caused management of NTCL to charge to the Athabasca operation expenses incurred by other parts of NTCL to make it appear unprofitable? Will the Minister answer that?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I believe I answered a question in the House some ten days ago where we did announce that we were beginning measures to privatize the Crown corporation, Northern Transportation Company Limited. However, the first step we will take is to have a full, independent evaluation before we put out the offers for private purchase, so we will be securing the services of an outside investment firm to give us that kind of financial analysis. Any actions taken by management are relative to that process because they will be done by an independent group.

DISPOSAL OF ATHABASCA ASSETS

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, because the Athabasca assets are now surplus to NTCL operations, will the Minister make a commitment that the dead assets of the Athabasca area no longer being operated by NTCL will be disposed of through Crown Assets Disposal Corporation, to allow residents of the Athabasca area to purchase them or, more particularly, that the City of Fort McMurray be given an opportunity to purchase the 35 acres of prime property contained within its borders?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, that is not really the kind of question I can answer during Question Period. I will take the Hon. Member's representation and examine it. I would point out that we took a position on the Fort McMurray alternative almost a year ago. There is a private development taking place in that area under agreements with other federal Departments. In terms of a specific request, I will refer to the proper authorities and get an answer for the Hon. Member.

INCOME TAX ACT

PROVISIONS AFFECTING ARTISTS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Tax Act that he has given to the Minister of National Revenue to administer enables him to treat bona fide Canadian artists as hobbyists and tax them accordingly. Meanwhile, Canadians can go across the line or to any other country and bring back good art duty free, which has the effect of enabling Canadians to boycott Canadian art and thereby have Canadian artists subsidize foreign artists. Does the Minister have any intention of changing the Income Tax Act so that Canadian artists will not be prejudiced by the Income Tax Act?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that the whole issue of the taxation system as it applies to artists is now being examined by a Parliamentary Committee. I am confident that the Committee will do an excellent job and make the necessary recommendations.

Concerning the specific aspect mentioned by the Hon. Member, namely the establishment or the absence of tariffs on the importing of artwork or paintings from the United States to Canada, I am not too sure, but I believe that the reverse is also true. What I mean is that the United States does not have any tariffs applying to the exporting of artwork by Canadian artists to the United States.

However, I believe that the question asked by the Hon. Member goes beyond the general concept of the taxation system as applied to artists.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

MILITIA DEATHS INQUIRY—TRAINING OF DRIVER

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence concerning the inquiry into the deaths of Privates Krosney and Laurendeau last August. The Minister will know that I received a copy of the transcript of the inquiry through Access to Information. Subsequent to that, the Minister provided me with a copy of the recommendations which had been left out of what had been released by Access to Information. I commend the Minister for providing me and, through me, the family, with those recommendations.

Having had a look at the recommendations, and I hope the Minister has had that opportunity, we are concerned that the recommendations do not deal with what we consider to be the fundamental concern raised by that accident, namely, the qualifications and experience of Private Krosney to drive the vehicle in the context in which he was driving it, that is, with a gun on top, a trailer, and so on. Has the Minister had an opportunity to look at those recommendations? If so, is he satisfied that they deal with that fundamental problem? I do not believe they do. If he has not had a chance to look at the recommendations, will he do so? Will he ensure that the Militia addresses that particular concern? In my view, the recommendations do not do that.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have had an opportunity of reviewing the recommendations. The hon. gentleman has had an ongoing interest in this matter. If there are matters that he would like to see addressed, or if there is additional information that he wants to solicit, I will be pleased to receive any requests for that information and see what effort can be made in order to provide the information requested.

SEIZURE OF TAXPAYER'S BANK ACCOUNT

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. On March 28 the Minister assured my colleague from Crowfoot, and all Canadian taxpayers, when responding to a question regarding the matter of third party demand notes, "that we do have a lot of respect for both the law and the taxpayer and that any action we might take is in keeping with the utmost fairness and justice for everyone." How can the Minister justify this statement when, last January, his departmental officials proceeded through a third party demand note to seize over $5,400 from a constituent's bank account seven days after a bank draft had been sent to pay the entire amount of taxes owing?

● (1500)

As of today, Mr. Speaker, Revenue Canada has yet to return fully the money that has in effect been stolen from my constituent's bank account. I would ask where are the justice and fairness in a despicable action of this kind?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, if the incident referred to by the Hon. Member really happened as she has indicated, I would like to apologize on behalf of the Department for what has occurred. However, I want to remind her that on the one hand, there are over 19,000 employees in the Department and that on the other hand tax returns are processed and updated by computers and that there can occasionally be a breakdown in communications between the Taxation Data Centre and the District Tax Office. If the facts are as reported by the Hon. Member, I must say on behalf of the Department that I am sorry about it. However, the Hon. Member will admit that mistakes can happen because of the human factor involved.

[English]

Mrs. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Minister that the facts are as presented. I would say that it will certainly take a lot more than his six-page letter addressed to a new Deputy Minister to outline the corrective action that is necessary to put a human face on the tax Department.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I would say that it would take the resignation of a Minister who is incapable of giving responsible directives to his officials.

REQUEST FOR AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Mr. Speaker, my short supplementary question is also directed to the same Minister. Will he take steps to introduce immediately legislation based on the proposals contained in the PC task force on taxation which, if implemented, would take a giant step toward humanizing Revenue Canada, so that Canadian people will no longer have to fear "Big Brother"?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Order Paper Questions

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I must point out to the Hon. Member that most Canadians do not stand in awe of the Department of Revenue because the vast majority of them pay all their taxes through payroll deductions, and do so every week, every two weeks, or every month. This is the case for most Canadians.

I also want to remind the Hon. Member that I have just received the report from the Task Force, and I have found the little I have seen of it quite encouraging since many of the instructions I put down in my letter last week to the Deputy Minister are recommended in the report. Therefore, the decisions I had already made and implemented in the Department as ad hoc policies are in agreement with the objectives set by the Progressive Conservative Party Task Force. I shall be very happy to have further discussions for the purpose of examining more fully the other recommendations contained in this report.

MR. RIIS—TELEPHONES FOR HEARING IMPAIRED

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition on behalf of a number of individuals from the constituency of Kamloops-Shuswap who feel that the telephone is a central communications tool vital to work, safety, recreation and family life, who believe that hearing-impaired individuals should have access to the greatest possible communications and who know that a simple and inexpensive part called a fluxcoil can make telephones compatible with hearing aids. They request that the Government of Canada order that all new telephones be compatible with hearing aids as quickly as possible.

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 356 and 586.

[Text]

TORONTO BROADCAST CENTRE

Question No. 356—Mr. St. Germain:

Did the (a) Government (b) CBC incur any expenses to announce the CBC's plans to construct a new Toronto Broadcast Centre, and, if so, what was the cost of (i) staging of the news conference (ii) preparation and distribution of press information kits (iii) consultants' fees and what was the total cost?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): In so far as the Department of Communications is concerned, the reply to the above question is as follows: (a) Yes. (i) Nil. (ii) $198.77. (iii) Nil. Total cost: $198.77. (b) Not applicable.

I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: (a) Not applicable. (b) Yes. (i) $393.15. (ii) $3,433.15. (iii) Nil. Total cost: $3,826.30.

INTERNATIONAL BANKING PROJECT DECISIONS

Question No. 586—Mr. McLean:

Does the Government give criteria to Canadian-appointed officials of development oriented financial institutions such as the World Bank and the Inter-American Development Bank for their use in making development project decisions and, if so, what are they?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Government provides its views to its executive directors at multilateral development banks on general policy issues such as the mobilization of financial resources and broad guidelines for lending. With respect to criteria for specific projects, the Government seeks to ensure that decisions are based on sound economic development grounds, including the conformity of the project with the over-all development plan of the beneficiary country, a positive financial and economic rate of return, and the technical and organizational merits of the proposal. In certain development banks, such as the World Bank, the Canadian executive director represents a constituency comprising a number of countries, whose views are also taken into account.

Mr. Evans: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

DIVORCE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Wednesday, April 4, consideration of the motion of Mr. MacGuigan that Bill C-10, an Act to amend the Divorce Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen).

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am rising to make a comment and ask a question with regard to the speech of the previous Member. When we finished debate the last time, it came right to the hour and there was no time left for a ten-minute question and comment period.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) was the previous speaker. The Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) is perfectly right, there was no provision at that time for a ten-minute question and comment period. The Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood has the floor.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in the speech made by the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) and I appreciated his attention to the practical measures of providing means for collecting maintenance orders. However, I would like to ask him a question regarding a couple of other points. He said rather clearly and forcefully that he did not want to see no-fault principles applied to maintenance but that he wished the fault principle applied. Let me quote the Hon. Member's speech from page 2737 of Hansard of April 4, 1984:

> It seems to me an abuse of the privileges of the court when we attempt now to tell it that there is no alternative for the court, no discretion for the court to dispose of these very material matters of maintenance orders with a consideration of right and wrong . . . to make them divide the assets between them and not take into consideration whose fault it was that the marriage is to be dissolved.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member to comment on how this can be done in any fair way. The publication of the Department of Justice called Divorce Law in Canada, Proposals for Change points out precisely this problem. It points out that where the faulty person is the dependent spouse, it is easy to make that person pay for the fault by reducing the maintenance order. However, if the faulty person is the breadwinner spouse, it does not mean that more money will go into the maintenance payments. In effect, with the rare exception of breadwinner spouses who happen to have a lot of money and can pay more maintenance, the only way to make this principle work for most people is by deducting maintenance in cases where the dependent spouse has been the so-called guilty partner. In other words, there is a double standard here and a principle which only applies to cause suffering to the dependent spouse. I wonder if the Hon. Member would comment on the fairness of that proposal.

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I do not have any objection to answering the question. However, I thought the question was put earlier today and the Bill carried, or at least that the question was reserved for deferred vote. If it is the feeling of the Chair that I should respond, I will.

The position of this Party is clearly one of supporting no fault with respect to the dissolution of marriage. I do not believe in the philosophy of NDP members who try to put everything in a codified form or have everything divided equally without consideration of the many other aspects of a marital situation. I was suggesting that there was and should be a discretion in the hands of the judge who is trying the matter. Obviously, when we come to the matter of disposition of the assets of the estate, differences do apply to contributions or to whatever else.

For the people on my left, it might be said that everything should be divided equally. We got into that question a little bit with the task force on pensions and with some other legislation when considering the position of the legal wife compared to that of the common-law wife. I can see no justification for legislation providing that a common-law wife who has lived with someone for three years should be the recipient of all the benefits of the estate as well as the pension benefits, while the legal wife who stood by and raised a family is left with nought. That is just one simple example.

There is another example. If a woman should happen to have equal assets and to have made an equal contribution to the marriage, if she is the person who contributes her efforts to maintaining the social benefit of that marriage, then why should she be prejudiced in the division of the assets of the family? Why should she be limited to an equal division of the assets? If fault has any bearing on the case at all, it should be based on the financial aspect so that the innocent party is not hurt. I distinguish that completely from there being no fault in the dissolution of marriage.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): If there are no further questions or comments I will recognize the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) for debate.

Divorce Act

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, this morning we debated the third and final reading of the Canada Health Act which focused attention on the health of the nation. The Bill before us, the Divorce Act, also deals with the health of the nation although in a different sense. With this Bill we are dealing with anxiety, with hurt, with people in conflict. It may be the spouses who are in conflict or there may be a conflict between parents and children. In any case, we are dealing with people who are hurting. In the course of debate we should not lose sight of the fact that the Bill involves concepts that affect clients who are hurting.

As society moves into a much more congested era and we become compressed into urban areas, as people are squeezed closer and closer together, social tension is going to increase. As society is imbued with and adopts an egocentric philosophy where most attention focuses on the rights of the individual, we are going to move into more and more conflict because all of our individual rights are going to come into collision. When we bring together those two ingredients, the squeezing of society so that people are in closer juxtaposition, together with the egocentric philosophy of people, more and more pressure will be put on the family.

There is a hunger within all of us that cries for permanence, Mr. Speaker. In spite of the cry for individual rights and, many times, the justice of that cry, and as much as we want to focus on the rights of the individual, we must realize that the rights of the community also come into play. The health of the whole organism comes into play. One of the overriding hungers that we have is the hunger for permanence, for security.

As we debate the Bill we must keep in mind that the forces that are coming into play in society are setting us on a collision course which puts the family unit in jeopardy. On the other hand we must keep our ears open to the still sad music of humanity, and on the other hand we must listen to the victims of divorce.

We must also acknowledge that there is no such thing as creative divorce. There is a book on the newsstands which would have us believe that you can have creative conflict. In a divorce proceeding everyone loses, everyone hurts. There is no such thing as creative divorce. I am not denying that there are circumstances where divorce is necessary; I am not saying that divorce should never happen; I am simply saying that as we debate this measure we must take a long, hard, compassionate look at the consequences of the legislation and how it will impact on society.

This is a difficult Bill to debate for several reasons. There is a tendency on the part of all of us in the Chamber to closet ourselves into fixed positions and thereby isolate and automatically reject the views of others because we have already assigned them to vested positions. When we get a stated position from the Council of Catholic Bishops, for instance, it is all too easy to say that it will be opposed to divorce and to reject categorically and without examination what that position is. Because it stands at some distance, however, it may have an attitude of objectivity to the social aspect of this question that some of us may not have. Is it not true that sometimes we increase our objectivity the further we stand back, that the closer we get to the problem and involved in the tensions of it, we lose our objectivity and our focus? We must be careful lest we reject categorically the views of those people whom we think have an iron-cald, vested position which we believe ought to be rejected because those people are already in a box.

It is also easy to reject the position of people who have a happy marriage. Several weeks ago I received a letter on this subject from a constituent. He wrote: "I cannot offer you any advice on this divorce Bill because I have been married to the same sweet person for 52 years". With all respect, Mr. Speaker, I would turn that around and say that perhaps this person, who has found the secret of happiness in marriage, has more to say to us than the person who is in tension and conflict. There is possibly some objectivity in his position. We need to be careful in this Chamber lest we disenfranchise those people we have already assigned to a fixed position.

It is difficult to speak to this Bill because we have to weigh the total effect of it on society, keeping in mind the individual cases that all of us know about and have been involved in. While we look at cases where families are being torn apart, realizing that there may be just and reasonable cause for the participants to enter into divorce proceedings, while we are debating a Bill that would loosen the restrictions on divorce proceedings, we must keep in mind the effect on society as a whole. As I said earlier, we must look at the total organism and not only at some members of society. All of us know of people who are in pain over divorce and all of us will acknowledge that there are people who are suffering as a result of faulty marriages.

Without any attitude of pomposity on our part, without adopting the attitude that we are absolutely right and that we have a reserved position, we need to keep in mind that while we want to help individuals we must also preserve the health and unity of the whole. We have a choice between the appearance of immediate relief to individuals as against the total health of the emotional and the humanitarian aspect of the whole.

This is a difficult Bill to debate, Sir, because of the unrelenting and unforgiving aspect of universal laws. They are very precise and very demanding. They make no exceptions because of personality or social strata. As the name infers, universal laws apply to all. Just because after you fall off a building you change your mind because you made a mistake, that does not mean the law of gravity is going to change its mind and forgive you. The law of gravity is going to have a total impact whether we made a mistake or not. The law of combustion is a very unforgiving law. If you play with matches around paper, you will cause a fire. The law of combustion is not going to say: "Oh, I think you made a mistake; maybe we can impose a no-fault provision on playing with fire". The law of combustion is very unforgiving and, in that sense, very narrow minded.

I suggest, Sir, that social laws, the laws of human relations, are just as relentless. The only choice we have is to harness them. The law of gravity is a great law if we harness it and use it properly. The law of combustion is a great law if we understand it and harness it. Society's laws, the laws of human relations, are tremendous laws if we understand and accept them and learn to harness them. They are also unbending and if we obey them, we will flourish. If we harness these laws, we will prosper. If we violate them, we do so at our peril and the peril of society.

There is a tendency on our part, Sir, in order to be compassionate to the individual, to overlook the universal laws or reject them on behalf of an individual. Therefore, we must pay the consequences of this legislation, indeed any legislation. Where will it take us? What will happen if we invoke these laws? As we look at the consequences, I would point out that there is a total contradiction between the principle in this law and the law we passed 18 months ago in this House, the Young Offenders Act. Provisions of that Act have just been applied in one of our provinces, and I want to quote from Section 3 under the heading "Declaration of Principle":

> It is hereby recognized and declared that (a) while young persons should not in all instances be held accountable in the same manner or suffer the same consequences for their behaviour as adults, young persons who commit offences should nonetheless bear responsibility for their contraventions;—

There we have a principle enunciated in legislation. We are saying to young people that young people have to be responsible, although perhaps in not quite the same way as adults, and adults have to be responsible for their behaviour and decisions. But in this Bill we say just the opposite. We say you can have circumstances where there is no fault. You do not have to assume fault. I suggest to you, Sir, and to all of my colleagues here, that if we start enunciating one principle to the young people on accountability and another principle to adults where the adults share less accountability than young people, we are invoking a duality that we are going to come to regret. If the trumpet give an uncertain sound, what is going to happen to future generations? Are we not teaching young people through this legislation that there is a law for adults and another one for young people? We are going to rue that day.

We are now 15 minutes into my speech and I am only half way through, Mr. Speaker. That is one of the faults of a 20-minute debate when it comes to a subject like this.

We are training people to look to alternatives rather than to commitment, resolution and reconciliation. We are already teaching people to look at alternatives so that when they enter the threshold of a major decision like marriage, they are already able to say: "Hey, I can cop out of this in a year". That, Sir, leads us to tension which our society cannot handle.

In 1969, after the provisions of the previous Divorce Act came into focus, 19.3 per cent of dissolving marriage lasted 25 years or more. In 1979, ten years later, it was 11.3 per cent. You see, Mr. Speaker, once we opened the door we did not make divorce simply easier, we made marriage considerations include the consideration of opting out later on. We made it easy. Aside from that, our income tax laws make it cheaper to cohabit rather than get married. There is a prejudice in our income tax laws against marriage.

I suggest that the people who will suffer most if we destroy the commitment to permanence will be the children in those families involved in a divorce. For children the best hope of continuing relationships and for a sense of security is the home. It is not school, church, the local McDonald's, the baseball league or the hockey league. The best hope for security for young people is still the home, imperfect as it is. There is no study which shows or proves that it "is better for the kids if we separate". The fact is that if they are given a choice, they would rather the parents stay together in most cases, even in conflict, than have them separate.

We also have to look at the effect on the oath which this Bill has, whether it is before judge or before God in church. What does it do to the law of the land, our system of jurisprudence, if before a judge we swear permanent loyalty and commitment and one year later we can back out? What does it do to an oath before God? What does it do to the concept of His character? If we say before God that we are going to be true to each other, and then, in a year's time, we say forget it, what does that do to our concept of God and the integrity of His character?

Finally, Sir, the no-fault provisions of this Bill will lead us to an era, and I say this carefully and cautiously, of a kind of incipient mental illness. It leads to a world of illusion when we say there is no fault. Both parties know there was a fault and you cannot have mental health if you deny there is a problem. The first rule of mental health is if we accept reality. If we try to escape from reality by saying there is no fault, we pertuate an illusion. That will lead us to a kind of national illness in the home. It also involves a denial of justice. What do we do for the person who knows there is fault and is denied a court of appeal? One of the marriage partners was injured but is denied the right to be heard by the courts. I thought all of our jurisprudence rested on the right of the accused or of both parties to be heard by a forum. If we are going to invoke the principle of no fault, presumably in order to take away the tension, we will increase, postpone and put forward the tension that is already there and magnify it for future years. That is not a route to health, Sir.

As I said at the outset, we are dealing with a Bill that is focusing on national health. The national health of our families is at stake here. We need to preserve it. As we look at the provisions of this legislation we must consider its impact on our children and on future generations in order to maintain the health of families and of the nation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a 10-minute period for questions or comments.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief comment and then a question for the previous speaker. I was very puzzled by his discussion of the no fault principle. I do not know of anyone who is claiming that there is no fault in the ordinary, common sense use of the term. The idea of the legislation is that it will be a better marriage-divorce regime not to have fault proved in the courts. My Party and I certainly support this part of the legislation. It is difficult for the children to be dragged into court to give evidence against one parent or the other. It is more difficult for arrangements with regard to maintenance, visiting and custody if this hostility between the partners, which undoubtedly exists, is exacerbated by the proving of fault. Therefore, it is not a denial of fault, but, rather, it is saying that we build whole communities by being forgiving, by overlooking the past, and by trying to be reasonable and practical in developing relationships for the future.

Is the Hon. Member saying that there should be no divorce under any circumstances? It seemed that he was implying that divorce ought not to be allowed under any circumstances. He said that under no circumstances would children prefer the marriage to be broken up. Does he hold this belief when there is physical or emotional abuse in the home? Statistics indicate that one in ten Canadian wives is beaten by her spouse in any year. Is a woman who is beaten by her husband supposed to stay in that relationship? What about the children? We do know that women and children are beaten and indeed murdered in situations of this sort. Is he saying that this vow of permanence should hold even when there is a risk to life and limb?

Mr. McDermid: Never come in in the middle of a speech.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I do not know where the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) was when I was speaking. She can check Hansard tomorrow. I made a deliberate statement that there are circumstances under which divorce is going to happen. I understand that. I am not going to rule out the fact that divorce will, and in some cases must, take place. I can understand this in cases where there is incest or aggravated wife beating. Ther are all kinds of—

Ms. McDonald: How aggravated?

Mr. Friesen: Well, you define aggravated, or we will let the courts define it.

Ms. McDonald: How much does someone have to accept?

Mr. Friesen: I am not going to get into a definition of terms in the debate. I am pointing out to the Member that I understand fully the need for divorce. I can envisage circumstances where I would not only understand this, but I would counsel it. I would ask the Member not to distort what I said when I was speaking to principle.

I would like to make a second point. In most legislation the lawyers who draft the legislation make the Bill as precise as possible. This is why legislation becomes complicated. In making it as precise as possible they tend to make it as complicated as possible. Rather than precision in this Bill, we have generality in no fault divorce. That creates a problem in the divorce proceedings. As soon as you have those generalities you are going to get into problems because the courts must have precise definitions.

I urge the Hon. Member to take a look at the division between divorce and settlement. I think the Hon. Member understands that the anxiety does not come during the divorce proceedings. It comes while trying to decide where the children will go and how the assets will be disposed of.

The Hon. Member has been in social work. She understands some of the dynamics that enter into social relations. She has taken courses in psychology, I am sure many more than I have. I think she ought to understand that you cannot have health if you do not have reality. I think she will accept that. And you cannot have reality if you pretend there is no fault. It is a chain reaction. We will not have a healthy society if we encourage illusion. It is as simple as that.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I would be interested in hearing my friend's comments on his concept of justice. I practised divorce litigation for some 11 years. The vast bulk of cases which I saw were of women who had married a man young and had often financed the advancement of his education. She then stayed with that man and raised three, four, or five children only to find, at age 45 or 50, that the man hooked up with a younger woman and abandoned his wife. He would then come in and expect a divorce on the basis of no fault. He would wonder why this woman was upset with him, because he was prepared to provide well for her. I would be interested to hear the Member's thinking in terms of justice and what is fair for a society in the long run.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) has focused on one of the great problems that we face in this legislation. First of all, we must realize that what is an applied sense of justice in one case is not necessarily the same in another. It is one thing to talk about a just settlement for someone who has been married two or three years, where there are no children and no property involved, and another, as the Member points out, for someone who has spent half of his or her life with a partner and has shared and accumulated property and so forth. It is quite a different thing. That is why I am concerned about this legislation. It seems to me that we jeopardize the justice, usually on behalf of the wife, by shortening the time of possibility of litigation. That is my fear. I think that is the fear of some of the women's organizations. If you hurry the divorce proceedings you are going to get into a situation where there is no time to have an equitable and just settlement of the accumulated assets. I understand that. That is why I believe we need to be careful to preserve a domain where both parties can be heard in the fullest without any pressure of time constraints.

I am not a lawyer and I do not understand all of the legal proceedings. My friend is a lawyer and he may understand aspects of this that I do not. However, that is my understanding of it at this point.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): This is the end of the period for questions and comments. Debate.

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-10, has had a rather "on again, off again" history in the House. I am pleased that we are debating it again, although it is a bit of a surprise to us today. Fortunately, certain references were attached to the Bill, such as the document "Divorce Law in Canada: Proposals for Change", which have been quite useful. I found working paper No. 13 even more useful. It is from the Law Reform Commission which also had something to say on this subject.

The Bill does not live up to the promises of the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan). It neglects many of the key proposals that were spelled out in "Divorce Law in Canada" and Working Paper No. 13. Bill C-10, which was accompanied by this document, reviews very selectively some of the need for reform in divorce legislation.

It seems that the Government never understands some of the ancillary effects of legislation that it passes. A good example of this was when it cut off the capital cost allowance of apartment buildings. When it did this, the Government was surprised when people stopped building apartment buildings, because it did not think that capital cost allowance was connected to construction.

This Bill has some side effects which must be addressed before it is passed by the House. I listened with great interest to my colleague who just spoke when he gave statistics of the broken marriages and divorces that are occurring and stated that only 11 per cent of current marriages are what we call long-lasting marriages. I do not know whether it is the divorce laws that are causing an increase in divorce or if it is the attitude toward marriage. I suspect it is the latter because young people get married without any real sense of commitment toward the vows they are taking. When they get bored a year or so later, they opt for an easy divorce.

Some time ago I attended the wedding of a friend's son. While I thought I gave a pretty poor response to the toast to my bride, his was even worse. While mine was short and bumbling, he said, "So we are getting married, no big deal". Somehow, those words have stuck in my mind over the years. Of course, it was no big deal because they are now divorced after some three years of marriage.

I do not know if this attitude can be changed, but people who enter marriage with the idea that it is no big deal will face an early boredom with marriage and will want to walk out of it. They will miss a great deal in life by doing so.

I believe some people divorce for financial reasons. I have not had that experience but I have heard from knowledgeable people that no one can afford to get divorced. It is always expensive for both the man and the woman.

To show that the Government does not understand the effects of its legislation on the public, one needs to look only at the increase to GIS. I see that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) is here. Increasing the GIS for single people only means that for a person living in my constituency who is getting older and is thinking of getting married again, there is an inducement not to get married again because it will not be possible to get the increase in the GIS since he or she will no longer be single. However, it is possible to cohabit and receive $100 extra per couple by next Christmas. Consequently, people in lower income brackets who are considering marriage decide not to marry because they cannot afford the $100 a month it will cost them.

However, to show how the Government is even-handed, it now grants a continuation of pension benefits upon remarriage. If a widow is drawing a pension benefit, she can now get remarried and continue drawing the pension. This shows that, on the one hand, marriage is discouraged while, on the other hand, it is encouraged. I suggest this uncertain attitude toward marriage has had the result which has been mentioned by my colleague so eloquently this afternoon. The reason that people are not staying married can often be found outside of the fault—no fault arrangement. It is essentially a lack of faith when marriage is entered into.

When the Minister of Justice introduced the Bill and wrote about it, he said, "I encourage groups and individuals to let me know their views on the proposals for changes to the Divorce Act". We on this side are expressing rather wide-ranging views because we do not believe that this is a subject to which a Party should adhere rigidly in terms of being in favour of the entire Bill or certain parts of it, particularly at this early stage of its reading. We are stating our views in the confidence that the Minister is sincere and prepared to revise this rather unsatisfactory piece of legislation.

One of the great controversies is that Bill C-10 introduces grounds of no fault and that marriage breakdown can be the only reason for divorce, with one year of separation being considered a sufficient condition to prove that there has been a marriage breakdown. It is no longer possible to sue for immediate relief or divorce on the grounds of marital misconduct.

My colleague said that this delay was not long enough. There are others, particularly among women's action groups, who believe that one year is too long. I would suspect that it is far too long for a wife who is being physically mistreated and whose husband is guilty of very aggravated misconduct. I suggest that making her wait a year with very little means at her disposal is adding insult to injury.

No fault eliminates the idea of one partner being more responsible for marriage breakdown than the other. The idea of no fault marriage breakdowns and no fault divorces is a purely semantic exercise. I find it difficult to understand how there can be no fault when a wife has been beaten up by her husband who has run off with another woman or when a wife has abandoned her husband for some other man and left two children. The husband has every right to believe that it was not his fault. He may be difficult to live with, but there is clear evidence of fault.

Of course, the Government uses semantics well. We heard a good example recently when one of that Party's leadership aspirants made a crystal clear statement of his opinion about the language question in Manitoba. The following week, he clarified it in a way that was totally incomprehensible to anyone. We have a new meaning of the word "clarify" which is to muddify whatever you are talking about. I see that the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) agrees entirely with me about that particular case.

We believe that the fault grounds should be retained in order to protect the interests of the innocent spouses in cases of marital misconduct. The National Action Committee on the Status of Women expressed its concern about the elimination of fault grounds as they relate to maintenance. Previously, in the case of a spouse divorcing a husband who is at fault, the injured party was able to bargain by granting him an early divorce in return for a suitable settlement. That way they would dream up false grounds or something like that to get a quicker divorce. This will not be possible now. It will have, according to the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, a bad effect on the wife's bargaining position, as far as having a quick divorce is concerned, which the husband might well want.

Judges are explicitly instructed to consider conduct when they establish awards under the present law. In Bill C-10 they are prohibited from including this consideration. It is rather difficult, as I mentioned in the two cases, the one where the woman was at fault and the other where the husband was at fault, to believe that there should always be an even division of property and income. I can understand the Minister's difficulty in writing a piece of legislation that would be fair both to young women and to much older women. Say a woman is in her mid-fifties and her husband runs off with his secretary, or a friend in some other trade or profession, abandoning his wife. It is pretty hard for a woman at that age to find another occupation to sustain her in any degree comparable to the life to which she was accustomed. They tell the famous story here in Ottawa of a senior official in government whose wife was reduced to working as a scullery maid because she had been a homemaker. That is what she was qualified for at age 55. She knew nothing about Micoms, computers, and things like that, which would be difficult for her to learn.

I think the Government was moving in the right direction with Bill C-38, which I was pleased to help along in this House as best I could. I thought Bill C-38 was one of the best pieces of legislation produced by the Government. As most people know, it has to do with the garnishment of salaries of civil servants, armed forces, Members of Parliament, judges and Governors General. In fact, it covered the salaries of quite a variety of people. But the final part of that particular Bill enabled a diversion of pensions to fulfil a court order for maintenance. This was done fairly simply and easily. I think it was done by the intention of the Government to set an example for the rest of the country that its employees were not going to be able to dodge maintenance orders any longer. If a person has a proper maintenance order from the proper judicial authority, the recipient of family maintenance would simply have to register with the appropriate Minister of the Crown. There would be a pension diversion which would see that the one who was not the wage earner should receive a fair proportion of the combined income. I am happy that after a long legal difficulty pension diversion is now the law of the land.

Perhaps the Minister of Justice could tell us if he could get the word across to judges that they should stop allotting maintenance orders in dollar terms. If inflation continues, and there is not much indication it will slow down, especially with this spendthrift Government, it will become quite unfair for a person with an $800 pension to have $200 allotted as maintenance to the spouse who has been faulted in the marriage. Then, after a few years of indexation, the wage earner is getting, say, $1,200 a month and the abandoned wife, we will say, is still getting the same $200. These awards have to be granted on a percentage basis so that when an allocation is made at 50 per cent, 60 per cent, 40 per cent, or whatever, the percentage holds, and, as inflation goes on, the pension cheque goes up accordingly. I think that is only fair.

There was a recommendation on page 25 of the discussion paper which stated that recommendations not included in the Bill are:

> —being considered by both federal and provincial governments, including the possibility of creating a central registry in which all maintenance and custody orders would be filed and the possibility of allowing access to information contained in Government files relevant to location of a debtor.

There is a variety of statistics to tell us how many of these maintenance orders are being ignored. The figures I usually hear run from around 65 per cent to 85 per cent. Indeed, many settlements are made in divorces with, let us say, the husband—it could be the other way around—agreeing that he will pay a certain amount. He bargains to keep that amount low on threat of leaving the province, in which case the spouse will never collect a cent. Therefore, the wronged one will say, "I will take it if you will pay it", if the husband stays in the province and the wife has some hope of collecting. However, if the husband decides he will live in another province, the possibility of collecting becomes exceedingly remote.

I spoke to the Attorney General of British Columbia about this matter who said that he would certainly extend his co-operation to having this kind of legislation enacted with a central registry established in which these maintenance orders would be filed and the money collected. That would be done federally. However, you would need the co-operation of all the provinces. I hope the Minister of Justice will do his best to get that co-operation, which I believe is there. I do not think any country can be happy with the fact that in the judicial system, of which we are quite proud, 84 per cent, even if it is 65 per cent of the people who are ordered by a judge to make payments, laugh at the court order and go off to another province and leave their former partner behind.

I do not propose to go on any further in debating this Bill. I hope there will be an opportunity to amend it in committee. As one final note, let me point out that working paper No. 13 of the Law Reform Commission, whose reports I believe received acclaim and support in all corners of the House, had this to say at page 34 regarding matrimonial offences:

—serious hardship would be suffered if matrimonial offences were abolished as grounds for divorce and no petition could be entertained unless the spouses had been separated for a lengthy period of time.

This recommendation is one totally ignored by the Minister of Justice. I feel that the Law Reform Commission had a good case to make, as did the National Women's Association, about the incompetence of the drafters of this Bill, who, I suppose, were not adverse, in an attempt to make fine points, to muddifying the entire proceedings of it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten minute period for questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald).

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to clarify one misunderstanding and then ask a couple of questions. The Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) mentioned the position of the National Action Committee on the Status of Women and its criticism of the Bill, particularly with regard to maintenance. That has been the main criticism. He mentioned the elimination of fault as harming a woman's bargaining power. However, the National Action Committee did not recommend that fault be introduced; indeed, it supports marriage breakdown as the sole cause for divorce. What the National Action Committee did advocate is that there be very effective collection machinery for maintenance orders and that there be very clear criteria setting out the equal financial responsibity and other responsibilities for child care and support.

The Hon. Member showed a great deal of sympathy for the situation of women who do not get their maintenance orders paid. Would he be very specific and advocate equal splitting of pensions on marriage and divorce? Specifically, would he advocate the use of federal data banks for the location of defaulters on maintenance, going into a central registry which we know he supports? Does he support the interception of federal moneys for the collection of maintenance orders?

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) stopped where she did, because I lost track of the first two or three questions. In brief, I have the same feeling as the National Action Committee on the Status of Women. According to my records, it is concerned about the elimination of fault grounds. I would not say that the committee wanted it to be changed from the legalistic viewpoint. As far as maintenance orders being satisfied by pension deductions are concerned, I certainly indicated by my attitude during the debate on Bill C-38 that I was very strongly in favour of that. In fact, I do not know how often I raised it in the House. I expect that it was half a dozen times. The Minister of Justice could certify as to the delay there was on the diversion of pensions to satisfy court orders.

I do not think we should say to judges that they must divide it 50-50. Indeed a judge might want to divide it 75-25, with 75 going to the female spouse. It is up to the judges to decide what proportion it should be. I am in agreement with satisfying court orders. It is judges not parliamentarians who listen to individual cases. I suppose there is an infinite number of different cases, different blames and different incomes.

It is reasonable to add up the income a person has or is likely to have, add the two totals together and divide it in half. Unless someone can think of a better scheme, that would be very rough justice, I assume. It is the role of judges in matters such as that to try to come up with an equitable solution.

I have no hang-ups about having it collected from their pay, but getting into data banks to trace them would mean that we would get into a sensitive area where people do not want to have their incomes registered, their tax returns made public or anyone else having access to the information. If we could do it and still manage to stay within the Privacy Act, I would not mind particularly. I do not have strong feelings on that particular question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): For questions, the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker).

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I would be interested in having my colleague's comments on the broad question of justice in the situation where the wife has oftentimes educated her husband, stayed home, raised four or five children and then finds herself at the age of 50 years with her husband having left for another woman, invariably a younger woman. The current Bill on no fault lets that man, after one year, get out of the marriage with no adequate provisions with respect to maintenance. Indeed, the current formation of the Bill would indicate that the judge has to insist that the woman become self-sufficient within three years. That somehow seems unjust to me. Why cannot there be a provision in the Bill where fault can be raised in legitimate cases as opposed to the total no fault position? Would the Hon. Member give me his sense of what is just as between men and women in that circumstance?

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I am sure we all have experience from constituents who have written to us with problems. For example, there is the woman who has educated her husband and then he wants to run off with a younger woman. Of course he has missed something in his education and does not appreciate older women the way he should, but I suppose it is a fact of life that often happens. In cases like that, particularly if the woman is at an age at which it would be difficult for her to learn any technological trade or skill, she should not have placed on her a three-year limit to be re-educated to do something she never expected to do in her life. The man who takes off for the attraction of some other woman and leaves behind his responsibilities is not acting in a fair manner at all. I believe that in such circumstances the woman has a good case to make for the fact that she will probably be at a low-income level without maintenance for the rest of her days.

As I said earlier in my remarks, no one is better off as a result of a divorce. It simply costs far more for a threesome to be involved than it does for a twosome, particularly if a home has been established with all the ancillary things which go along with it. It is a tragedy that the old standards seem to have been ignored or forgotten. Often those who think they are getting away with something by living a new life or a new lifestyle find out that they have missed something pretty precious.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): For questions, the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen).

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, one of the difficulties I have had in coping with legislation in this place has been the whole area of the language of legislation. It tends to get more complicated as the years go by and therefore more undiscernible and undecipherable to most people. I can accept that every Bill with which we deal always comes before us at the outset with a list of definitions of terms. The purpose of that is to make the legislation as precise as possible so that those affected by the legislation, the practitioners and the lawyers who deal with it, can be as precise as possible in narrowing it down to the finest point so that nothing is left to the imagination. It is the opposite of generalization. It is precision. Yet, in this bill we have the term "marriage breakdown", which is about as encompassing a term as can be. Lawyers who practise the art of precision in most cases want the language to be as precise as possible so that there is no opportunity for elaboration, misconstruction or misapplication. In this Bill the term is as general as possible, with an umbrella definition as to why it is possible. What does the Hon. Member think about this digression from the principle of precision in this legislation to one of generalization?

Mr. MacGuigan: Marriage breakdown is defined by one year's separation.

Mr. McKinnon: The Minister of Justice just said, "Marriage breakdown is defined by one year's separation." He is just showing the idiocy of that attitude. He would have been much wiser to say nothing, and we would not have known that he held that opinion of marriage breakdown in the English language.

Mr. MacGuigan: It is in the Act.

Mr. McKinnon: Marriage breakdown can happen for a dozen different reasons, or maybe a thousand different reasons, one being that the personalities clash day in and day out, another being a misdemeanour of one or the other parties. A group of lawyers say that marriage breakdown means living separately for one year; of course during World War II we would have lost 700,000 marriages. They would have gone down the tube with this legislation because couples were separated.

Mr. MacGuigan: That is not separate and apart—

Mr. McKinnon: That is separated for one year and that is how a marriage breakdown is defined.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. I am sorry to advise the Hon. Member that the ten minutes for questions and answers has expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain)—Labour Conditions (a) Youth unemployment levels. (b) Criteria applicable to youth employment fund; the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper)—Employment—Program expenditures made by Canada Post Corporation; the Hon. Member for Dauphin-Swan River (Mr. Lewycky)—Income Tax (a) Expense deductions for volunteer firemen. (b) Increase sought.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

DIVORCE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacGuigan that Bill C-10, an Act to amend the Divorce Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to speak on Bill C-10, an Act to amend the Divorce Act. This Act is important both to thousands of individuals and to society as a whole. Perhaps it would be helpful if I clarified the perspective from which I speak. It might illustrate the evolution of the views in our society.

As a small child, I remember hearing whispered comments about a certain woman being divorced, implying that divorce was not something people talked about, at least not out loud. There was a whiff of scandal about it.

During the 1950s, I remember divorce becoming a subject for farce. About the only way people could obtain a divorce was to prove adultery. On one hand, there was the situation where aggrieved spouses hired private detectives to follow their partners, break in on them with flashbulbs and witnesses in an attempt to get evidence that the partners were having an illicit relationship. On the other hand, there were couples who very much wanted a divorce. Therefore, they had to obtain the necessary grounds. They would hire professional correspondents to go to a hotel room with one or the other. They would get partially undressed and wait patiently for the private detective, hired in advance, to burst in and take a picture. That picture provided the necessary evidence of adultery so that a divorce could be obtained.

In the late 1950s and early 1960s, two Members of our Party, Frank Howard and Arnold Peters, forced changes in the Quebec divorce law by insisting on debating every single divorce that came before this House. Quebec divorces at that time could be gained only through an Act of Parliament.

As a United Church clergyman, I have officiated at hundreds of weddings. I must admit that I do not always feel very good when I look back on my performance and participation. I see young people and some not so young rushing into marriage with little or no understanding of what was involved. Counselling did not always seem to help very much. I explained to them that the wedding service takes place on at least four levels.

First, the wedding service is a legal procedure involving a marriage licence issued by the province, official witnesses and a clergyman who is licensed by the province. There is a formal registration and a full body of law attached to marriage so that after the wedding service people have a different legal status than before. On the second level, it is a social affair. People usually have some kind of reception. They invite their family, friends and sometimes the community, in recognition of the fact that society as a whole is involved in the wedding. Third, because they come to a clergyman, the wedding service is also a worship service. The couple acknowledge the presence of God as they make their vows, asking God's blessing upon their marriage. Finally, and most important, the wedding service is a very personal affair where two people make vows and a commitment to each other.

When this personal dimension changes, we have divorce. When we try to undo the legal entanglement from the first level, we have all the problems. The American writer Peter DeVries talked about some churches which he said were so modern that they made divorce almost a sacrament. The United Church is not like that, but we do recognize situations where the marriage relationship has broken down to such an extent that divorce becomes the most creative possibility. The Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) said that there is no such thing as creative divorce. He might have to admit that in some situations divorce would be the most creative possibility that a couple could face.

I am reminded of the situation in which a traditional set of parents were confronted by one of their children who wanted to obtain a divorce. The parents asked why he wanted a divorce. He said "Because we are not happy". The parents asked, "Who is happy? Do you think your mother and I have been happy all these years? Yet we stayed together".

I am not sure that that attitude toward marriage and divorce is very helpful. It is good that we have moved beyond the hyprocrisy of talking about divorce in hushed terms of scandal. It is good that we have moved beyond the fifties farce of private eyes and make-believe adultery. It is good that this Government has brought in legislation making marriage breakdown the only grounds for divorce.

The March, 1984 Canadian Churchman contained an editorial pointing out some of the problems with the present situation. It said, and I quote:

> And the procedure now laid down by the Divorce Act is a legalistic, expensive and often humiliating experience for the couple and children involved. It is grounded upon an adversarial stance, presents grounds for divorce in the worst possible way and gives new light to old hurts.
> Children often become pawns at the hands of one parent or another . . . Routine, uncontested divorce proceedings now cost between $700 and $1,000.
> These costs should be cut by one-third to one-half if the proposed reforms are approved.
> However, their value should extend far beyond the economic saving to the parties concerned.
> They should eliminate the need for a child to go into a courtroom to testify against one or other of the parents. Such cases are traumatic for children, but sometimes necessary under the current law.

Most divorces are painful enough without one partner having to prove that the other was at fault. There are probably situations where one partner is clearly at fault, but it has been my experience that in most relationships fault or blame is not a helpful concept. The New Democratic Party has been calling for no-fault divorce since 1967 when it passed a resolution to that effect.

After divorce, most couples have to find some modus operandi. If there are children, there are visiting rights and access. The less hurt, the better. To focus on the whole idea of where blame should be assigned or who is at fault is not helpful in this context. Consequently, we support the provisions of this Bill that make no-fault divorce possible, even though the Conservative Party seems to stumble over that phrase.

Unfortunately, the failure of this Bill to deal with the question of maintenance makes it impossible for us to support the Bill. The Bill ignores the complex nature of marriage and suggests that divorce is simply a matter of two people cutting their losses while the band plays thanks for the memories, no tears, no fuss, hurrah for us.

There is the matter of maintenance payments, which cannot be ignored. More than one-half of all divorces involve children, and in 85 per cent of divorces involving children, the mother gets custody. Mothering traditionally takes the woman out of the labour force for a number of years. As a result, a divorced woman with children either has no outside job or one with a very limited income. It is known to all Members of the House that, on average, women earn only 60 per cent of the average male income. This has a direct relationship to divorce because 45 per cent of all single-parent families headed by women live under the poverty line. For women with children, divorce is too often a shortcut to poverty. This is also the case with the 10 per cent of divorced women over 50 who have been homemakers most of their lives and have no skills, no jobs and very few prospects.

At various times the House has been concerned about the situation of Indian women who marry non-Indian men. This situation becomes particularly acute in the case of divorce because, under Section 12(1)(b) of the Act, these women have lost their status as Indians and do not even have the right to go back to their traditional home.

It is important that the House recognize the fact that no-fault divorce does not mean divorce without consequences. It does not mean divorce without economic consequences. At present, women must bear a very disproportionate share of those consequences. Maintenance orders are widely disregarded and more than 70 per cent of such orders are in arrears.

There may be some cases in which a man's economic circumstances make it impossible for him to make support payments that have been ordered, but in most cases I suspect that it is a matter of attitude. Many people making support payments wonder why they should go on paying after a relationship has been terminated. They have new lives to live and new expenses and obligations. Because society does not insist upon the enforcement of maintenance payments, 70 per cent of maintenance orders simply go by the wayside. This attitude on the part of many divorced men may be understandable, but it is not acceptable. However, this Bill does nothing to deal with that problem. Bill C-10 walks away from the problem and lacks adequate provisions to ensure support payments.

Clause 10 of Bill C-10 adds a new Section 12.1(1) to the Divorce Act. It sets out the objectives for maintenance orders. That clause reads in part that these orders should:

—be designed, in so far as is practicable, to

—(c) relieve any economic hardship that the court exercising jurisdiction to make or vary the order determines to be grave;—

What does relieving grave economic hardship mean? If, for example, a woman had been married to a well-paid professional and is forced to take a job at the lower end of the pay scale, would her situation be one of grave economic hardship or would it simply be another factor to which she had to adjust? Part (d) of the clause indicates that an order should be designed to:

—assist adjustment to economic self-sufficiency by either of the spouses within a reasonable time of the making of any such order for maintenance of the spouse.

What is a reasonable time, Mr. Speaker? We do not know, and of course it varies from situation to situation. In many cases the economic climate of a country or province can vary over a period of two or three years. If a court order was made to provide for maintenance payments over a three-year period, as has been suggested, and then the economic climate changed so that prospects for economic self-sufficiency that previously existed were no longer possible, then there would be no recourse but to go back to the court to get a new court order. The Act contains very inadequate provisions to enforce maintenance payments.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, while our Party supports and likes the no-fault provisions within this Act, we are completely unsatisfied with its shortcomings regarding maintenance. On that basis, we are asking the Minister to withdraw the Bill and bring it back with adequate provisions for the enforcement of maintenance payments.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I listened with care to the speech of the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) because I have known him intermittently over many years. I was glad that he focused on the matter of maintenance and the problems that this Bill creates for those people who would be at an incredible disadvantage as a result of this legislation. Therefore, I am happy for small mercies and am glad that members of the NDP are fighting this Bill, even if it is only on that one point. It is a very important point and I do not mean to diminish its importance.

I also noted with great interest that the Hon. Member referred to himself as being an ordained minister. I suspect that at the many weddings at which he has officiated over the years, if he has used the traditional service, he has usually ended with the statement: "What God hath joined together, let no man put asunder". Now he is saying that he, as a member of his caucus, supports no-fault divorce. I am interested in the tension that that creates between the absolute statement he has made in those vows and the relative position that he has adopted in the law. I am wondering if the law takes precedence over what he said in marriage ceremonies.

I am even more fascinated by a statement of his which I wrote down very carefully. If I am wrong, I hope he corrects me but I think he said: "Fault or blame is not an interesting concept". I did not know that whether or not fault or blame is interesting was a matter of discussion. I thought we were dealing with whether it is fact or not. If the Hon. Member, in his application of social, emotional, psychological or spiritual principles, wishes to avoid the discussion of fault or blame so that people could go on to build their lives, how does he see reconciliation taking place if there is not a discussion and acknowledgement of fault or blame?

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, my friend, the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta, brought up a number of interesting points. First, he referred to the marriage service statement: "What God hath joined together, let no man put asunder". We in the United Church usually use non-sexist language wherever possible.

Mr. Friesen: You are marrying two sexes.

Mr. Manly: Yes, that is true. We are marrying two sexes. However, if we are going to get into a theological debate, I believe that the Scriptures themselves talk about divorce as being something that is related to human failures. I suppose that in every divorce there is a human failure of some kind. I think the Hon. Member himself admits the need at times for divorce. How is this put asunder in his mind? I think he takes a much more rigid view of the Scriptures than I do, and I would be interested to see how he reconciles that particular view. I see this question as being one of dealing with the fact of the failure of relationships.

I intended to say that fault or blame is not a helpful concept. If I said that fault or blame is not an interesting concept, of course I was quite wrong. It is a very interesting concept. Whenever I counselled a couple with problems, I was very interested in the whole question of who was at fault and who was to blame. However, that was not helpful. It was helpful for the couple to see that their relationship had reached a certain point. Perhaps it had not reached the point of absolute breakdown but it had reached a point where certain actions had to be taken. Maybe the action taken would be one of reconciliation, but maybe the point had been reached where the most helpful solution would be to simply acknowledge that they had reached the point of complete breakdown and the most helpful action would be to separate and indeed to have a divorce. It is on that basis that I say it is not helpful to assign blame.

• (1630)

I do not think that as a general rule assigning blame has ever led to reconciliation. Sometimes it is helpful if I, as one of the people involved, accept blame that attaches to me. If I go into a situation where there is a dispute between myself and another person, however, I do not think it is helpful for me to try to put blame on that person, nor do I think it is helpful for the law to try to put blame or fault or another person.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I want to point out to the Hon. Member that I did not invoke the Scriptures; I could easily have done so but I did not. I was referring to his own statement that he had officiated at many marriages.

I would like the Hon. Member to define the second point more clearly. I am not talking about blame, I am talking about fault. I make distinction between blame and fault. Talking about blame brings us into a pejorative and accusatory atmosphere, and it is not my intention to invoke that kind of pejorative atmosphere. My concern is that we have a health-giving atmosphere. If we talk about blame we will get into that kind of atmosphere, but if we talk about fault then we can examine it. Surely the emotions are not involved with fault as they are with blame.

I should like the Hon. Member to make the distinction. I thought he was using terms very loosely and I should like him to clarify whether he sees a distinction between fault and blame.

Mr. Manly: Obviously, Mr. Speaker, there is a distinction, but in the way I was using the words I think they both apply. I would ask how the courts can determine fault if they do not have some process? Very often that process become pejorative where one person blames another. The court also assigns blame along with assigning fault.

The whole history of our divorce courts is one where people try to assign blame to one another. If the Hon. Member wants to quibble with the word "fault" or have a no-blame divorce, that is fine with me. I would be glad if he would accept a no-blame divorce.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): If there are no further questions or comments, I will recognize the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) to continue debate.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I consider this to be one of the most important debates in which we have engaged in the House of Commons, one which certainly involves some long overdue reform. On the other hand, we are faced with a Bill that raises some very, very major reservations on the part of many of us on this side of the House.

When the Bill has been before the House, a number of Members have commented that it is a sad fact that in Canada today over 40 per cent of marriages end in divorce. This figure represents something like 70,000 divorces per year. That figure is growing and is twice the number of 10 years ago.

Perhaps more important, however, than the increasing number of divorces is the fact that 50 per cent of divorcing couples have dependent children, many of whom are put to unnecessary suffering due to the adversarial or confrontational nature of divorce.

That there is a pressing need to reform and humanize the current divorce law cannot be denied. What has to be highlighted and brought to the attention of every Member of the House is that what is unacceptable is the very superficial and simplistic approach to divorce that Bill C-10 brings to the subject.

One cannot really expect legislation to be accepted on the basis of slogans or popular headlines. It is great to see something like "No Fault Divorce" in headlines, but beyond the headlines and slogans one has to consider the heartache and frustration and pain that accompanies the breakdown of marriage.

The press release that accompanied the Bill when it was introduced in the House by the Minister said that the Bill would "—revise Canada's divorce law to make it more consistent with current social needs and realities". That would be a laudable goal. That is the way the present Bill has been sold, particularly to the media, and it has been conveyed to the people of Canada in that vein. Does that necessarily accord with the facts? Perhaps someone will stand up and say, "We took a Gallup poll on the subject across the country and 62 per cent of those polled agreed that no fault divorce was welcome. A shorter time period and fewer reasons for divorce are acceptable because 62 per cent of the Canadian public said so".

Mr. MacGuigan: It was 64 per cent.

Miss MacDonald: I stand corrected; the Minister says 64 per cent. I should like to know whether 64 per cent of the people who replied have actually read the Bill. Have they looked beyond the headlines and the slogans to what is actually in the Bill? I suggest that the other 36 per cent, those who did not accept it so easily, are the people who have probably read the Bill and looked at the fine print, the clauses and the deficiencies of the Bill.

Let me give some examples of people who have objected to the legislation. The National Action Committee on the Status of Women, as I am sure the Minister will be aware, is an umbrella organization which encompasses 260 women's organizations from coast to coast and represents millions of women. It responded to the new legislation as follows:

Instead of improving the terrible situation of the victims of divorce such as mothers of young children and older housewives, it would worsen it by reducing their already meagre bargaining power while giving them nothing at all in exchange.

That is the reaction of the spokespersons for the National Action Committee on the Status of Women.

Other groups looked at the Bill and almost immediately after studying it voiced their objection. One such group was the Government's own Advisory Council on the Status of Women. It complained about the Bill, saying that it poses a threat to women and children involved in divorce proceedings. The council talked about a threat, and I think it is to this threat that we should address our remarks. We should determine why the council considered certain parts of the Bill a threat to wives and children. I hope that if we look at it from that point of view, we may get members of the Government to see that the need for divorce reform has to be examined through the eyes of the victims and not through the eyes of a Minister. He may think this is a very progressive piece of legislation which he can perhaps use to further his leadership drive. It is the people involved in divorce who should be able to offer some comment. That is the reason that many people who have already been through that traumatic situation object to this Bill.

I want to go further and illustrate why it is that so many women's organizations have in fact been so critical of this Bill and have labelled it as doing great injustice to women and children. Let me provide a few vital background statistics which point out just how badly the present system works. Only when the current danger is known do the difficulties this Bill presents become even clearer.

Sir, today, in 85 per cent of all cases of divorce, the mother is granted custody of the children. Not only has she the responsiblity of raising the children, she also has the responsibility of providing for them financially as well as supporting them morally, since in most cases child support is rarely paid, if at all. That is one of the greatest tragedies in the many divorces which have taken place. In fact, five years after divorce, only one in four families gets child support. That is all. I have said that in 85 per cent of divorces the mother has the responsibility for her children; only one of four of those cases receives any kind of support after five years. In Ontario alone an incredible $85 million is in arrears at the present time. Overall, 75 per cent of all maintenance orders do not get paid. Ten per cent of all divorcing wives, Sir, are over the age of 50 years. That is the figure for last year. These are people who, by and large, have spent most of their adult lives working full time in the home. As a result of their assumption of the primary responsibility for the household and child rearing, these women have become financially dependent upon their husbands and they have lost career opportunities which they might otherwise have had. In other words, what happens is that these women—and I am speaking now of those who have been divorced at over the age of 50—are left with very little, and they are probably the most vulnerable group in society in the case of a divorce.

In the face of these very sobering statistics, Mr. Speaker, what do we have? We have the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) proposing this Bill to the House of Commons and encouraging all Members to support it. Well, some of these proposals he puts forward are long overdue, and I can list a number of them that I want to see passed. But there are other aspects of the Bill which are only going to worsen an already bad situation. That is the last thing we should want to do, make matters worse for those who are indeed most vulnerable.

Much of the problem we have in this regard, at least I have myself, is to give a concept of a blanket approach to no-fault divorce. In an effort to streamline legal proceedings, the only grounds for divorce would be a one-year separation period. This may be acceptable in uncontested cases, and I do not have any difficulty with that whatsoever. But by no means at all am I sure that fault should be entirely eliminated. In the case of cruelty or desertion, a 12-month waiting period could be quite undesirable. One might want to have a divorce brought about sooner than that. Fault would also play a crucial role in the establishment of property and financial settlements.

I see you are about to rise, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member.

CANADA HEALTH ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss Bégin that Bill C-3, an Act relating to cash contributions by Canada in respect of insured health services provided under provincial health care insurance plans and amounts payable by Canada in respect of extended health care services and to amend and repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the third time and do pass.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. It being 4.45 p.m., pursuant to the order made earlier today, the House will now proceed to the deferred division of Bill C-3, an Act relating to cash contributions by Canada in respect of insured health services provided under provincial health care insurance plans and amounts payable by Canada in respect of extended health care services and to amend and repeal certain Acts in consequence thereof.

Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Miss Bégin), which was agreed to on the following division:

PUBLIC SERVICE

MEASURE RESPECTING APPOINTMENT AND TENURE OF SENIOR OFFICERS

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin) moved that Bill C-230, an Act respecting the appointment of deputy, associate deputy and assistant deputy minister, be now read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

He said: with the little time left, I know there will be a lot of approval for this legislation that I am putting before the House. I recognize that it may not be necessary for Private Member's Business to take up the full hour allowed, and I am anticipating that there will be a chance for this Bill to go on to Committee for further study. I think it is necessary for the House to legitimize what is happening by practice with deputy ministers at this time. It is also essential that we take a long look at what is happening in the Public Service with the appointments of associate and assistant deputy ministers.

Miss MacDonald: Order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please, the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) has the floor.

Mr. Schellenberger: The purpose of this Bill, Mr. Speaker, is to standardize the method of appointment and tenure of senior officers of the Public Service and to tie their appointments to the duration of a Parliament. The Public Service would thereby be more accountable to the Government of the day and to the electorate. That, in effect, is saying that we should make sure that senior public servants hold the same political beliefs as the government in power and as the Ministers. If governments were to change more often than they have in the past, you would find that the principles on which the government is elected and the policies by which it has come into office would be the same as those of the senior public servants whom it has appointed. Those senior public servants would then be in charge of making sure that the Bills and other pieces of legislation that have passed this House are put into practice by the Public Service.

If one looks at what has happened in the last number of years, one will find that legislation is now being passed that gives more and more discretion to the Public Service and to the Governor in Council. No Minister can keep up with making sure that everything that is passed by this House is being put in place by the Public Service in the method in which this House or the government wishes. It is important that Ministers have the chief people in the public service using the same methodology as those people who have been put into power.

We now have the problem of having permanent political public servants at top levels of government. Because we have had in effect one-Party rule since 1963, elected officials and appointed senior bureaucrats play a similar role. I use as an example the deputy minister of national revenue who was on television defending the Government for practices which it had put in place. Also we have the deputy minister of agriculture making a speech on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and in effect assuming his role. Therefore, the political effect of those at senior levels is the same as that of Ministers. There are approximately 45 deputy ministers and between 250 and 300 assistant deputy ministers. The Minister's office has become a back door for higher public servants. They are not appointed on the merit system. Rather than doing what is being done now and saying that it is not in effect, we ought to legitimize the process.

The Minister needs a small loyal staff who can administer his Department along with him. That is what we ought to provide. Bureaucracy at the highest level is being eroded of its objectivity and its professional neutrality by a tired political executive or one that does not care and is on to other things. We must acknowledge this fact. It reminds me of a book written by Hugh Heclos entitled A Government of Strangers. He wrote, and I agree with it:

> —a political appointment need not be unfilled to be functionally vacant; career officials can be found in charge where the supposed political leadership is uninterested or inept. As a former supergrade who had moved up to a presidential appointment said: In a department where there is a vacuum and only a series of transients, then the bureaucrats try to fill the vacuum. Without malice, with the best intentions in the world, people trying to fill a political vacuum can adopt some pretty unique strategies . . . arranging special trips for congressmen or upgrading their own and other people's jobs.

In effect that can happen when we ask a supposedly unpolitical Public Service to take over the job of a Minister who does not have time to administer his Department properly or is not capable of doing it. There is a need in Canada for major reform at senior levels of bureaucracy in order to facilitate the greatest degree of responsiveness between senior levels of the Public Service and newly-elected political leaders.

In some cases the transition can be smooth, Ministers and their senior deputies and assistant deputies get along well and are of the same philosophical background. In other cases there are barriers. There can be structural barriers to transition or a situation wherein a senior deputy minister has a completely different philosophy from that of his Minister and finds it very difficult to abide by what he should in fact be putting in place.

There are many things deputy ministers can do to see to it that policy is not effected. They can start by having many briefing sessions with the Minister to say that this or that is not possible. In effect, they slow down the process. They can ensure that all correspondence going through the Department is routed through the Minister's office. They can exaggerate the time frames within which things can or cannot be done. They can see to it that there is a lack of money in the budget to adopt new approaches which the Minister or the Government wishes to put in place. In effect, they can indicate that there are certain ramifications as to why on a political basis something should or should not be done. There are many examples of this in history, for example, in the Province of Saskatchewan when the political change from the Liberal Party to the CCF occurred. This can be documented as actually having taken place. When political policymakers come head to head with bureaucratic personnel who can influence policy, they simply withhold information or ideas, change them or forcefully present conflicting proposals to the Minister.

When government is growing there is a greater amount of decision-making conferred on departmental management. This really raises the question of who has the power—who is the master and who is the servant. We see a majority of Bills which are now conferring discretion on departmental management. They are attributable to present government philosophy. The Government has remained in power for a long period of time. Effectively there has not been a change since 1963. Because of this fact, the executive and legislative functions of Government have become very closely meshed.

At the present time deputy ministers are appointed at the pleasure of the Government, so they can be removed. When a deputy minister has held his position for a long time, it is very difficult to fire him. When there is a change and a new government is in place, the resignations of all deputy ministers should follow. The legislation says that it is at the pleasure of Parliament. Then there are some 300 assistant deputy ministers who simply cannot be removed. Even if they do not agree with the philosophy of government, they remain in place. Their position in government is that they are supposed to offer continued advice and guidance on matters of high policy. They are to be program specialists and technical people. They are to be very efficient in allowing the Minister to make decisions. Ministers, deputy ministers and assistant deputy ministers who have been working together for a long period of time often find that they ask those people to come forward with public policy. When a person has brought forward a policy position which his Minister has put in place, and then a new government comes into power and wants to throw out that policy, that public servant will be very reluctant to allow it to happen and perhaps will put various obstacles in the way so that it cannot come about. This Bill would allow a government coming into office to make changes at the most senior levels.

Some concern has been expressed that if that were the case there would be no office within the Public Service toward which public servants could work to attain. That office now is that of assistant deputy minister. We should make the top job in the Public Service that of director general. The salary of that person should be elevated to a level that would encourage public servants moving through the system to attain it. The difference in salary should be such that persons would try to move up to the top job. As well we would find that technical people trying to get information to their Minister would not have to run the gamble of going through the assistant deputy minister and then the deputy minister. Often it is the case that people say it is impossible to get information through their deputy ministers to their Ministers because deputy ministers or assistant deputy ministers do not want their Ministers to feel they are not in touch with everything that is going on in the Department. If those people were political appointments at the top level, they would be searching for that information. They would be political people who would want to get the information out which supported the Ministers or the Government's political philosophy.

I suggest that there are six reasons why the Bill should pass. The officials, namely the deputy ministers and assistant deputy ministers, and Ministers would share the same basic philosophy and, therefore, the options presented for the Minister's consideration would be consistent with his own. They would bring to the Public Service new expertise in given areas with fresh ideas and approaches.

I went to the United States to see how the system worked there. I talked to some public servants under political appointments. The chief public servant in the United States Department of the Interior said there was no difficulty with the system. As under-secretaries changed, they brought expertise from the outside sector. He said one under-secretary was an expert in information flows, another in computers and another in efficiencies. They brought that expertise to the Department. It was of great assistance.

He also said that when there was a particularly serious problem, they could pick the best expert in the general work area and bring him in for a period of a year or a year and a half to assist the Public Service and the Government in putting a policy in place. This would be of assistance to our Public Service in Canada. There would be new enthusiasm for ideas and approaches. It would allow the experts and technical people in the Public Service to bring their ideas forward to the Minister and to the political people in the Department. They could be analysed and possibly put into place.

Third, it would facilitate the implementation of the program on which the Party had been elected to office. In my experience in the very short period of time we were in government, this was a serious problem. This Bill would assist a government coming into power by allowing it to implement its program.

Fourth, it would reduce substantially Public Service resistance to a change in government programs or direction. One can imagine how a deputy minister or assistant deputy minister would react to the abolition of a major program they had developed. An example is the National Energy Program. If a new government wanted to abandon that program and put in place a policy that was the exact opposite, the person who developed the program might find reasons why he should not implement that quickly.

Fifth, it would provide a greater degree and recognition of the accountability that senior officials should accept for their administrative actions. When deputy or assistant deputy ministers come before a committee, Members often cannot get answers as to why policies are in place, why policies have not been put into place or why they are in place in the manner in which they are. The deputy or assistant deputy minister constantly say that you can only ask the Minister. It is the deputy and assistant deputy ministers who often put the policies in place and it should be they who answer the questions. If this Bill were accepted, they could answer for the Minister. They would be an extension of the political arm of the Party.

Last, it would reduce to a minimum clashes between the administrative and legislative arms of Government. When a government is elected by the people with its program, it should be allowed to put that program in place as quickly as possible. Allowing the Government to choose its senior public servants would enhance that ability.

Some may ask how we could implement this program with what is now in place. They say it would put possibly 300 people out of a job. I do not suggest that would happen. Many assistant deputy ministers would stay on because they are very capable and helpful. There are ways of doing this. We now have in place the executive interchange program. It allows people to come into the Public Service through sponsors. We have the use of service contracts and options such as term employment. It is essential to ensure that people who come into the Public Service can bring their pensions with them and take them when they leave. That may mean more use of the Registered Retirement Savings Programs.

These are some reasons why I believe this legislation has a lot of merit. It should be considered and discussed. A government coming into being would have a lot less difficulty dealing with the senior managers in the Public Service with this kind of legislation in place. The problem of not being able to get along with a deputy or assistant deputy minister would not exist. At present the cannot be fired or asked to leave. What happens is that he is shuffled aside and given mediocre tasks. He still receives the same salary, a salary not comparable to the duties he is asked to perform. That is not fair to the taxpayers of this country. With this legislation in place, those coming into the senior levels of the Public Service would know that they would have a duration of office of four years or less, and there would be no difficulty with a change of government.

This House should seriously discuss the pros and cons of a Bill such as this. I commend the Bill to Members of this House for debate and I ask them to look seriously at what it offers.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the Bill under consideration is somewhat of a surprise to me. The purpose of Bill C-230 introduced by the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) can be surprising to anyone who has been working with federal public servants for 12 years and who wants to understand the importance and especially the difficulties inherent in so large and complex a system as that of the Public Service of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I am very much in favour of making our Public Service accountable. I am convinced that Members on both sides of the House are prepared to support any new and worthwhile measure designed to make the Public Service of Canada more responsible. What amazes me, however, is the suggestion made in Bill C-230 as to the means deemed appropriate to achieve accountability.

The purpose of Bill C-230 introduced by the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin is, and I quote the explanatory note:

> The purpose of this Bill is to standardize the method of appointment and tenure of the senior officers of the Public Service and to tie their appointments to the duration of a parliament. The public service would thereby be more accountable to the government of the day and to the electorate.

Mr. Speaker, I said at the outset that this Bill is somewhat of a surprise to me. I should have said that it is a big surprise to me. First, here is the way to standardize the method of appointment, as proposed: all appointments of senior officials would be made by order in council, in other words, by the Cabinet. The Bill does not refer to regular staff; it refers to deputy heads, more commonly known as deputy ministers, associate deputy ministers and assistant deputy ministers. It refers as well to the deputy head and the chief executive officer of organizations, boards, agencies and other bodies, since this Bill, as explained in Clause 1, applies to any organization listed in Schedule I of the Public Service Staff Relations Act of Canada.

What we are talking about here, Mr. Speaker, is the entire senior management of the main body responsible for the administration and the policies of most of the Government. Before going any further, Mr. Speaker, let us consider more closely the current situation and the practical consequences of the suggestion made by the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin.

First, the deputy ministers—about 40 of them—are now appointed by the Governor in Council, which means the Cabinet, and their responsibilities, powers and authority are implicitly and explicitly defined in agreements and legislation such as the Acts to establish the Departments, the Interpretation Act, the Financial Administration Act, the Public Service Employment Act of Canada and the Official Languages Act. Their responsibilities are clearly defined. As to the associate deputy ministers, at least nine, the situation is somewhat different since there are two categories: those who are appointed pursuant to the Acts to establish the Departments and whose responsibilities, powers and attributions are set forth in those Acts—there are four now, only four that . . . And I will name them: the Department of Justice Act, the Department of Labour Act, the National Defence Act, and the Employment and Immigration Department Act. In those cases, appointments are made by the Governor in Council. The appointments of the other associate deputy ministers are made differently, mostly under the Public Service Employment Act by the Commission itself, that is the Public Service Commission of Canada. It should be noted that the appointments of deputy ministers and associate deputy ministers are made by the Governor in Council and revocable at pleasure. Let us consider the status of associate deputy ministers. There are many of them, exactly 282. The assistant deputy ministers make up the largest group and are appointed under the provisions of the Public Service Employment Act and, of course, according to the merit principle. In practice, what does that proposal mean? With respect to the deputy ministers and some associate deputy ministers, it means that from now on their appointment will not be revocable at pleasure but that their term of office will be set. Under the bill, such a term of office would coincide with the duration of a Parliament. Secondly, with respect to the appointment of associate and assistant deputy ministers under the Public Service Employment Act, it is suggested not only that their type of appointment should be changed but that they also be subjected to a set term of office; they would therefore become term employees.

Mr. Speaker, the bill which was introduced today by the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin is aimed above all at standardizing the appointment procedures and the terms of office of those officials so that the Public Service of Canada would not have to be more accountable to the government and the electorate. It would provide for a term of office which would have nothing to do with the efficiency of the individual.

Mr. Speaker, I do not see many advantages but some serious implications in such a simplification. Firstly, let us deal with the serious implications. What will happen when, all of a sudden, the senior executives, the administrators who make the wheels of the organization turn, all leave at the same time because their term of office has come to an end? The Government is anything but a small business. It is a major system which needs some continuity and stability, and when there is a change of Government, it is the senior public servants who must provide the continuity required for an effective and healthy management of the country's business.

We just have to recall the criticism to be found in the Lambert Report, this famous report on accountability and financial management, to the effect that Deputy Ministers are changed much too frequently, a fact which affects efficiency and is of course reflected on the organization itself. What the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) is suggesting is not a change in Deputy Ministers with each new Parliament, but a change which would affect all senior public servants, all the heads of the Government organization. This could do serious damage, Mr. Speaker. I find it difficult to believe that such action would make the Canadian Public Service more accountable to the Government and the Canadian public, when all the agencies and services serving the public would be seriously affected during the period of transition at the end of each Parliament.

If we were to implement such a legislation, Mr. Speaker, we would not be more accountable to the voting public, but we would be acting irresponsibly and neglecting the voters. The public would be the first to suffer. These periods of hesitation and uncertainty will only affect the quality of the services provided to the public. In addition, the Hon. Member seems to forget that, at the level of the individuals themselves, whose terms of office would end with each change of government, such a system could and certainly would affect the morale, the motivation, the commitment and the work of these senior public servants, because they would no longer be in a position to guarantee the effectiveness of Government programs and policies. I am not speaking about partisan policies, but about policies and objectives set by the Government in the interests of the Canadian public.

I also believe that this proposal would be a serious hindrance to the career of these senior public servants.

Mr. Speaker, we must not delude ourselves, and I want to point out in passing, that it is because Deputy Ministers were appointed by the Governor-in-Council that the public service has often been accused of political bias. What is now being suggested is that the list of politically-oriented public servants should also include the Assistant Deputy Ministers and all the senior public servants who are responsible for Government management and policies.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that this would be going a bit too far. Apparently, Bill C-230 tends to make Canadian public servants more accountable to the Government and the voting public. Mr. Speaker, I find it very difficult to see how these changes could make the Canadian Public Service more accountable. These last few years, I have seen many initiatives taken by this Government to make the Canadian Public Service more accountable. I have supported them as their purpose really was to bring about improvements. Their objectives were valid and practical. I am afraid that the purpose of this Bill might be somewhat fictitious.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words about this concept of accountability and ask my colleagues to ponder over it. I ask them to muse over this basic principle with which you are yourself quite familiar, Mr. Speaker, because you sat with me on the Special Committee in 1977 and 1978, when we considered this matter. All these systems tend to be more effective and require greater efficiency on the part of our public servants.

Mr. Speaker, in our parliamentary system in Canada, and this cannot be compared with the American system as the two are quite different, the concept of accountability to the public, the Government and Parliament, within the law, has been the subject of much attention for many years. First, there was the Glassco Commission, then, more recently, the Royal Commission on Financial Management and Accountability, better known as the Lambert Commission. This was only four or five years ago. We received the report of this Commission in the House in 1979, four years ago. All the Hon. Members will recall that enormous efforts were made by the Government to implement the recommendations contained in this report. The managerial practices have been reviewed and amended to ensure that the highest level of government assumes its responsibilities on all fronts, in terms of operational, fiscal or human resources activities, to mention just a few.

Several reforms were implemented along the lines of the recommendations formulated by the Royal Commission on Financial Management and Accountability. I should like to deal briefly with the changes proposed by the President of the Treasury Board around 1981, only just two years ago, based on the recommendations of the Lambert Report. According to this document, the government's proposals concerning managerial accountability were divided into seven categories, which I should like to read for the information of Hon. Members.

First, the fiscal plan; second, an orderly distribution of resources based on the fiscal plan; third, the government's accountability to Parliament; fourth, the accountability within the government; fifth, the accountability and effectiveness of financial system management; sixth, the accountability and effectiveness of human resources management; and seventh, a permanent reform strategy.

The Government has implemented the major recommendations of the Lambert Commission. I should like to give some concrete examples of these reforms.

To begin with, a new policy and expense management system which starts planning expenses from the top down by using functional envelopes and which allows a closer integration of government priorities to decision-making mechanisms which decentralize the decision-making process while taking into account the complexity of government responsibilities, and which increases the minister's input in the decisions concerning the state's planning policies and expenses.

The yearly presentation to Parliament of a Government multi-year financial plan is the basis for a healthy government management and parliamentary control over public funds. Cabinet is regaining its ability to set a ceiling on public expenditures and ensure that hundreds of departments and agencies manage their operations efficiently to make the best possible use of taxpayers' money.

These initiatives have enhanced accountability to Parliament by providing us with more useful and more specific information which allows us to better judge the importance of programs and expenditures and puts us in a better position to reach responsible decisions. In this regard, Mr. Speaker, the committees of the House can examine the specific expenditures of each Department and agency as set out in Part III of the Estimates.

I admit that we still have a long way to go. I admit, as everyone knows in the Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates which I have the honour to chair, that there is still room for improvement. But we will work towards our common goal, that is to ensure a better accountability of public expenditures to Parliament, by making those books easier to understand.

In the area of personnel management accountability, there are also many substantial improvements. Thanks to a new policy on personnel management planning which integrates the development of human resources objectives in the financial plan, requirements are more easily determined and a clearly established responsibility channel is provided. This matter was also given much attention to ensure that managers themselves better understand their responsibilities. Through the development of a new management category, managers are now more aware of their duties and therefore in a better position to assume their responsibilities. In addition, these past few years, the Government has strengthened its policy on performance rating of public servants and senior officials in particular so as to ensure that the systems have not only been improved and the managers' roles clarified, but that the latter fulfill their responsibilities, account for their work, in a word, that they are accountable.

Accountability, Mr. Speaker, is an important and even vital principle within an organization such as the Government of Canada. Let us keep in mind that it involves a professional and non-partisan commitment by senior officials. On the Government's service, senior officials and managers must, on the one hand, be aware of the various aspects of the political process and, on the other hand, remember that under the law and by tradition in this country, the Public Service must not take any political stand. If public servants are required to support and implement the policies put forward by the Government in office, they must perform their work so as to avoid being accused of partisanship neither in favour of the party in power nor against those who might disagree with the Government of the day. They must avoid any action that would deliberately favour one part at the expense of another. God knows, Mr. Speaker, that Section 32 of the Public Service Employment Act is causing problems! The matter of the political involvement acceptable for public servants will have to be resolved. I call upon my colleagues to come and sit on the Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates. We shall discuss the matter during two hours and a half. Mr. Speaker, I see that you are about to rise, which means that I do not have time to conclude my remarks. I am sorry, I wish I could complete my speech, but I shall do it some other time.

[English]

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the time available to me is very short but I should like to put a few things on the record. First of all, it seems that the kinds of problems the Hon. Member referred to would be better dealt with—if his opinion is correct, and I do not think it is—by strengthening Parliament rather than attacking a Public Service that I think gives us the best service in the world today. It is an excellent Public Service. We have an excellent structure with very good, dedicated people at the senior levels. I have always found, as I think all Ministers have, that if the Government is sure about its policy and knows where it wants to go, it will get excellent service from the Public Service. If it does not provide direction to the Public Service, however, the policy development starts to take place elsewhere—in many cases at the request of Ministers. Perhaps that service is not what Hon. Members opposite would like to see—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member but it is now six o'clock.

LABOUR CONDITIONS—YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT LEVELS. (B) CRITERIA APPLICABLE TO YOUTH EMPLOYMENT FUNDS

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I rise in this House to speak on what is likely the most important issue facing young Canadians, old Canadians, all Canadians: unemployment. Last Tuesday the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts) skilfully denied the statements made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) in Montreal when he said that the problem of youth unemployment is not a crisis and there is no danger of losing the present generation. That attitude, Mr. Speaker, ignores the stark, cold fact of youth unemployment.

Some 18.7 per cent of our youth are unemployed and that is not acceptable. Over one third of the total number of unemployed and on unemployment insurance are youth. Statistics Canada lists 536,000 Canadian youth as unemployed and another 40,000 have given up looking for jobs. Since 1980 the number of young unemployed for a year or more has risen from 42,000 to 102,000.

In the same period the number of Canadians in the 20 to 24 years age group increased by 73,000, but the number of jobs held by youth in that age bracket decreased by 96,000. The unemployment rate among youth with secondary school certificates and university degrees has almost doubled; 13 per cent in 1983 as compared to 7.8 per cent in 1981. Why send your children to university, Mr. Speaker—to join the unemployment roles?

Across Canada the youth unemployment rates are 24 per cent in B.C., over 39 per cent in Newfoundland, 26 per cent in P.E.I., 24.9 per cent in Nova Scotia, 31.2 per cent in New Brunswick, 21.6 per cent in Quebec, 17.7 per cent in Ontario, 14.7 per cent in Manitoba, 18.4 per cent in Saskatchewan and 18.4 per cent in Alberta. This is a disaster.

As was pointed out in this House, Mr. Speaker, the statistics clearly indicate a crisis and a generation adrift. If the Minister of Finance cannot see that, his vision is lacking. This all results from the chaos of Liberal economic policies. It started several years ago, but in the West we have seen policies like the National Energy Program virtually annihilate an economy. The Minister of Finance, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, and the Government opposite, are ignoring the statistics. They are not talking of the youth and their parents who would be telling them what the real crisis of youth unemployment is. It is characteristic of the Government opposite to ignore the problems, to ignore the Canadian people, while it fixates on the Gallup polls.

The Government tries to divert our attention from the fact that it has run out of ideas. What the Liberal Party of Canada is, is a Liberal with Canadian tax dollars which he gives only to Liberals. The Minister of Employment and Immigration talks of new Liberalism. Where is his credibility? He was the Minister who personally administered the largest slush fund this country has ever seen, the Special Employment Initiatives Program. It is a disgrace that all Canadians were not allowed to share in those funds. I would like to read this quotation by the Hon. Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette) in her maiden address to this House as Minister:

> What is more, young people have suffered a loss of purpose and social contact . . . all this has been at a huge social and financial loss to all Canadians. And the result, I am afraid, is that too many young people have lowered their expectations, have stoppped searching for the future they want and have begun to settle for less.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, is that not a crisis? Is that not a lost generation, a generation adrift? This was said by a Minister in this House in contradiction to the Minister of Finance. I agree with the Minister of State for Youth. She knows of the alcoholism, crime and the suicide that afflict our youth. She understands the problems that are facing our youth. Yet she gets a paltry $150 million for youth unemployment, whereas Canadair squanders $2.1 billion.

The story of the Government, Mr. Speaker, is total devastation to our youth and they will not recognize it. We have pleaded with them. We have suggested ideas. Mr. Speaker, I plead through you that they do something about this very crucial situation.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as the minister has already indicated, he agrees with his colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), that such high unemployment rates among young people are entirely unacceptable.

The federal Budget of February 1984 takes into account the fact that young people are facing serious unemployment problems in spite of improved economic conditions. Consequently, the estimates for the Youth Opportunities Fund have been increased by $150 million, which raises the total amount earmarked for employment projects intended for young people to $1.3 billion for 1984-85.

An integrated and comprehensive concept of education, proper professional training, a working experience and a balanced combination of those elements will greatly contribute to increase the labour force participation rate of young people. Moreover, the Cabinet has recently approved an additional amount of $30 million for the Summer Canada Program.

At present, the Department of Employment and Immigration has some $457.9 million for youth training, $550.3 million for the funding of direct job creation and some $150 million for youth services such as job counselling, the Outreach Program, mobility and placing.

Employment problems are particularly serious for young dropouts with inadequate schooling.

In addition, there are considerable challenges to take up in order to prepare students to enter the labour force, to restructure the educational system and put emphasis on innovative agreements with the private sector to ease the transition between school and the labour force.

During the 1983-1984 fiscal year, more than 2.5 millions young Canadians participated in training and job creation programs of the CEIC, and this number should increase during the coming year. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, there is a program called Skill Grouth Fund jointly administered by the Federal Government and the provinces, whereby students can enrol in training courses in a great variety of new fields.

I must also indicate to my colleague that, when his Party was in power, how ever briefly, in 1979, they wanted to put an end to the job creation program for youth, and that when the Liberal Party came back to power, in February 1980, this program was offered again. So, I think that this Government has done more than any other as far as job creation is concerned, and we did it again lately, by increasing the budget of Summer-Canada for youth.

EMPLOYMENT—PROGRAM EXPENDITURES MADE BY CANADA POST CORPORATION

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, the matter that I particularly wanted to raise today relates to a question I posed in the House on February 22 to the Minister responsible for the Special Employment Initiatives Program, specifically regarding Canada Post.

Under this program the Minister, through Canada Post, had budgeted some $5,575,640. Essentially what happened is that 95.7 per cent of that money ended up being spent in Liberal ridings. Only 4.3 per cent of that money was spent in ridings held by the Conservatives and absolutely nothing was spent in the ridings held by the NDP. Of course, it was not an isolated incident. The same thing happened in the Department of Communications where 64.6 per cent of the money was spent in Liberal ridings and only 28 per cent in P.C. ridings. With respect to CMHC, 89.5 per cent of that money was spent in Liberal ridings.

What made people so angry is that as one went through that program it became more and more apparent it was nothing more than a Liberal slush fund being used in the most partisan way.

The concern I have is that Canada Post has recently deferred some $35 million in capital projects right across Canada. Of course, the reason is that it is trying to save money and ensure that it does not go too far into debt. Supposedly it is trying to be austere and look after the situation. We suddenly found that this $5 million was available and was all spent in Liberal ridings. Immediately one becomes very suspicious.

I am particularly suspicious because in my riding we have a number of very serious postal concerns. The City of Grande Prairie was promised a new post office over two years ago. It was the No. 2 priority, and in fact has moved up to the No. 1 priority in Alberta. Now there is no action. Suddenly, when funds become available, they are all spent in Liberal ridings.

How can the Minister justify that kind of action? Clearly it is an abuse of Canada Post for partisan purposes. It is an abuse of the power of the Government. It is certainly something that aggravates Canadians very much. If we look at the whole program we find that there was $184 million in the program. A mere $1.3 million of that ended up being spent in the Province of Alberta. Clearly, the Government has been very partisan in its administration of the program. It is no wonder that Albertans have not bothered to return a Liberal to the House. I doubt that they will for a very long time to come. They are sick and tired of this kind of partisan approach which the Government has used in handling government programs that are supposedly meant for the benefit of all Canadians.

I want to close my remarks by saying that we on this side of the House are extremely angered with the Government for doing that. We do not think the Minister can justify it in any honest or sincere way. The only thing we are left to believe is that it was done for partisan purposes and not in the best interests of the country, that it was an abuse of taxpayers' money to use it in such a partisan fashion.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper) rose in this House on February 22, the day after the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts) tabled an exhaustive list of the 50,000 job-creation projects funded by this government during the last two years. On this occasion, the Hon. Member raised the matter of the money spent by Canada Post under the Special Employment Initiatives Program, attempting to demonstrate that post office capital projects had been poorly distributed.

However, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Peace River carefully omitted to make any serious analysis of this government's huge job-creation efforts and especially of the 50,000 projects that were implemented in all parts of this country.

Since the Hon. Member chose not to talk about it I would like to remind him that this government spent $2.5 billion for job creation in a two-year period through the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission, that is, more than $1.2 billion in 1983-84 and almost $1.3 billion in 1984-85. Moreover, within the special recovery projects aimed at stimulating the economy and creating jobs, which are funded by several departments, and within various existing government programs, this government will spend another $2.4 billion during fiscal years 1983-84 and 1984-85.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to clarify a few points regarding the questions raised by the Hon. Member for Peace River concerning the so-called huge sums spent in Liberal ridings through the Canada Post Corporation. Canada Post was advised as to the money available to stimulate the economy and create jobs through various programs, one of which being the Special Employment Initiatives Program. The Corporation prepared more than 70 projects aimed at upgrading or building post offices where needed around the country. Forty of these projects were approved and funded for a total of $5.57 million.

I should point out that this represents a small portion of the Corporation's capital expenditure projects which will amount to between $20 and $30 million in 1984-85.

Mr. Speaker, concerning the Special Employment Initiative Program, I should like to say that in the Joliette riding and in others, some special recovery programs have been implemented. Some have even been implemented in the Yukon riding. What can you say to that, Mr. Speaker? But Hon. Members disregard this information and fail to mention these projects. However, when they had a look at the list of 50,000 job creation projects which the Liberal government in Ottawa has implemented over the past few years, the Canadian people realized the moment it was tabled that the Canadian government had done a lot to create jobs.

As far as Post Canada is concerned, there are certainly a number of Conservative ridings which have received funds, including the Sunbury, Fundy Royal and Timiskaming ridings.

Although these three ridings are represented by PC members in the House, they have all received funds however, none of them has risen in the House to criticize the government for the money which Canada Post has invested in their respective ridings.

INCOME TAX—EXPENSE DEDUCTIONS FOR VOLUNTEER FIREMEN. (B) INCREASE SOUGHT

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, I rise this afternoon to pursue further the question I raised in the House on March 28, 1984, with regard to income tax, specifically expense deductions for volunteer firemen.

I think if you were to review the response I received from the Minister in the House at that time, you will find he indicated that he was aware on March 27 that we had debated a private member's motion, which the Liberals talked out, concerning an increase to the maximum deduction allowed to volunteer firemen. The Minister indicated he would consider increasing the present limit. Then he said he would give it the same sort of consideration he gives all representations regarding future budgets.

In response to my supplementary question, the Minister indicated he would give consideration to the fact that all volunteer firemen would be covered, including those who might receive some sort of token remuneration for the work they had done. I was not really satisfied with the Minister's response on that particular occasion.

I want to draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, that this issue has really been kicking around for quite some time. I know that after being elected on February 18, 1980, four years ago, a Mr. Charlie McKean came into my Dauphin office on March 9, 1980, to make representation that this expense deduction be increased to $1,000. His particular representation went back a bit further, he drew my attention to the fact that the Manitoba Association of Fire Chiefs at their annual meeting on March 31, 1979, had made a request that the income tax deduction be increased to $1,000. What we are talking about is something that has dragged on for five years, almost half a decade. It is not really a very recent issue.

If you consider the types of increases in expenses that have risen over the last half a decade I think you can see the reason I am rising again to urge the Government to act on the representation I have made, and make again. Again, I just want to point out my disappointment with regard to talking out the issue by various parliamentary secretaries on the other side of the House.

In addition to speaking in the House on various occasions, I have written to the Minister. Just to give you an indication of how longstanding this issue is, Mr. Speaker, on January 26, 1983, as a follow-up to what I said in the House some two weeks previously, I asked the Minister to consider increasing the income tax deduction allowed to $1,000. He replied that because this issue was under consideration for the forthcoming Budget, that is the one of February 1983, he was not at liberty to elaborate in any great detail upon my representation. When he indicated that he was prepared to give it some further consideration in future Budgets, I was somewhat concerned, to put it mildly, with his response. In the last two weeks I have experienced further consternation simply because I have received no letter subsequent to his statement in the House. For that reason I wanted to raise the matter again today.

I think this issue is important to small communities, especially rural and northern ones. In my own constituency there are 27 such volunteer firemen groups working in various communities. I urge the Government to take my representation seriously and to act upon it. It is extremely important. Otherwise, we will be forced to assume that the Minister will not be giving attention to this matter until the next Budget. We will then have to ask ourselves when will be the next Budget, and will he be the Finance Minister? Here is an opportunity for him to act immediately to meet a need which exists. It is something for which firemen have been awaiting a long time. This issue needs the Minister's immediate, and favourable consideration and attention now. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will indicate that they are prepared to consider it.

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the federal Government fully supports the volunteer movement in Canada and recognizes the important role it plays in providing or supplementing various services in the community. The question of volunteer service has become an important issue, and many advocate the use of the income tax system to provide incentives to encourage volunteer services in Canada. However, the effectiveness of the tax system depends upon its integrity and fairness.

Contributions of money and time in volunteer service is basically personal and undertaken at a taxpayer's discretion. The related expenses of providing the service are therefore personal expenses. Because of the possibility of the misdirection of tax incentives for personal gains, tax concessions are not generally provided in respect of personal expenses, even when they are expended to earn income; for example the cost of transportation to and from work. Given this general tax principle, it would be very difficult to introduce tax benefits for volunteer services which would be fair to the taxpaying public who must ultimately finance these benefits.

An exception has already been provided in the Income Tax Act by way of the $500 exemption in respect of allowances received by volunteer firemen from a government, municipality or other public authority. This exemption is in addition to the 20 per cent employement expense deduction, to a maximum of $500, available to all employees including volunteer firemen. The $500 exemption differs from the provision which is proposed in that under current law the authority which grants the allowance serves as an independent control to ensure that the expenses incurred are reasonable and valid. Permitting a deduction of these expenses would clearly increase the administrative cost of ensuring that expenses are reasonable. It would also further aggravate the disparity between volunteer firemen and other volunteer workers, such as St. John's Ambulance drivers who constantly point out the inequity of a tax concession for firemen with no similar treatment for themselves.

At this time of budgetary constraint it would be difficult to justify to the tax-paying public further exemptions. This is so especially in light of the fact that the responsibility for providing municipal services, such as protection against fire, is not properly the responsibility of the federal Government, but that of local and provincial governments.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Thursday, April 5, consideration of the motion of Mr. MacLaren (for Mr. Lalonde) that Bill C-12, an Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, in speaking previously to this Bill, I was arguing that the Government should be expanding funding for post-secondary education rather than reducing the amount of funds that are available. I have also argued that these reductions in the amount of money that the federal Government is prepared to spend on post-secondary education will have a more serious effect, I believe, on both deaf and hard of hearing Canadians. At the present time access to higher education is limited for deaf and hard of hearing students. There is a lack of program services and facilities. Among other problems, there are insufficient notetakers, interpretative services, special preparatory programs, sound amplification systems and other facilities to give them equal access to post-secondary educational opportunities.

The need for greater access to advanced technical programs for the deaf and hard of hearing is critical. Modern technology and computer sciences will have an enormous impact on our society. Our hearing impaired population can stand to benefit greatly from extensive training. It is estimated that there are between 30 and 40 deaf students in Canadian universities. Statistics are not available as to the enrolment of hard of hearing students in Canadian universities. The universities and colleges with hearing impaired students have attempted to provide some support services. Such services may take the form of notetakers or sign language interpreters but these services are not structured into an ongoing program.

In the past and until as recently as the fall of 1982, deaf students capable of progressing to a higher education had the limited options of attempting to compete with their hearing peers to gain access to a regular university or community college and then struggle through the program with or without support services, depending on the availability of such services.

Another option is to seek access to an existing institution which has initiated some form of support services or even the Gallaudet College entrance examination for acceptance into a program specifically designed to meet the needs of the hearing impaired. There are about 120 Canadian citizens currently attending Gallaudet College in the United States.

The third option is no longer available to deaf Canadians at the preparatory level because the rubella epidemic in the United States in 1963-64 created an unusually high number of college-age American deaf students seeking admission to Gallaudet College. It is worth while pointing out, as I did previously in this debate, Mr. Speaker, that there is absolutely no Canadian institution for deaf or hard of hearing students. If a deaf or hard of hearing Canadian wants to be educated or even gain access to post-secondary education, he or she has to go to the United States.

In addition to the problem of admittance, Canadian students are encountering other difficulties at Gallaudet College. Tuition fees have been increased and on-campus housing is limited. This has resulted in additional expenses for students as well as possibly increasing difficulties in finding suitable housing in the vicinity of the campus.

Given American statistics which show that 30 per cent of U.S. graduates of residential schools for the deaf will attend post-secondary institutions, it is expected that a similar percentage of Canadian deaf students would also want to pursue higher education. At this point it is crucial to indicate that even if the facilities of Gallaudet College are available to Canadian hearing impaired students, this College provides services only in English and is not accessible to deaf Francophones.

It is evident from the situation I have described that the time is long past when Canadians can safely rely on American institutions in order to educate their deaf youth at the university level. American Government-supported facilities must, by definition, give priority to their own citizens and should not be expected to compensate for the shortcomings of the educational system of another country, in this case Canada. Furthermore, it is highly questionable whether it is justifiable, both morally and financially, to deprive young people who will become the leaders of Canada's deaf community of a large part of their Canadian heritage by forcing them to be educated in a foreign country. To be effective Canadian leaders, they must be given the opportunity to grow in a Canadian environment, learning about Canadian society, politics, institutions and culture.

Hard of hearing students have special needs of their own which are usually not recognized unless specifically brought to the attention of the educational institutions. Usually these students are left to struggle through university or college with little or no support services. A hard of hearing student may need some simple and inexpensive sound amplification to supplement the personal hearing aid, the assistance of a note-taker or an overhead projector or some other appropriate device which could be provided if the facilities of universities and colleges were sensitized to the needs of hard of hearing students. Such sensitization will only come into being when formally structured, subsidized support services are made available as a matter of course.

More often than not a Canadian hard of hearing student would choose to continue to study in this country rather than in the United States—in this case in Washington—thus avoiding a move to another country and another culture. Gallaudet College is primarily intended for the deaf and the environment is rich in deaf culture.

This lack of opportunity about which I have spoken exists because post-secondary education of the deaf and hard of hearing has never been addressed on a national scale. Until the problem is addressed by way of a federally-funded study, then this problem will remain with us and will continue to squander a facet of one of our most important resources—Canadian hearing impaired youth.

In my view—and it is shared by my colleagues—the Government of Canada should fund a national study of post-secondary education of the deaf and hard of hearing. The national study group should include representatives from various organizations, institutions, as well as appropriate individuals. The purpose of the committee should be to focus on studying the development of multi-disciplinary facilities with emphasis on technical training, with full access to deaf and hard of hearing students. These facilities should encompass applied research and human resource development and should act as resource centres for the purpose of networking with other existing universities and colleges where there is an overlap of interest. I would hope that the recommendations of the proposed study committee would be supported by federal funding, which would then result in a solution of the difficulties confronting deaf and hard of hearing Canadians in their attempts to seek higher education.

The urgency of this matter cannot be over-emphasized. For too long the post-secondary educational needs of the deaf and hard of hearing have lacked attention. As 1985, the International Year of Youth, approaches, it is particularly timely that action be taken on this important issue. The Canadian Co-ordinating Council on Deafness presented a brief to the Minister of State responsible for the disabled on this very important issue of access to the hearing impaired and deaf in the country.

Provincial and federal governments have been cutting back on post-secondary education for young people, but not because of any lack of resources, as has been argued by the federal Government and provincial governments, in particular in my case the Government of Ontario.

An Hon. Member: A Conservative Government.

Mr. Young: As my colleague indicates, it is a Conservative Government, as is the case of all governments of the provinces, in effect, with the exception of Manitoba.

What will this mean to the Canadian student population? It will mean a denial of access to post-secondary education because of a lack of personal financial resources on the one hand. On the other hand, for those who can afford it, it will mean an increase in tuition fees. In fact, I was talking to some of the pages who serve us so diligently in the House, and in Ontario many of these students are being asked to spend something like $1,200 a year just to gain access to the university system. That is all right if the student manages to obtain a job, which is extremely unlikely in today's economic environment. It may be helpful if their parents happen to be in the upper income levels of society and can afford to provide the necessary tuition fee. However, for may people, particularly those at the low or middle part of the income scale, it will be practically impossible for them to see their children enter the university and college system. As I mentioned previously in this debate, and as my colleague from New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) pointed out ad nauseam in this House—

• (1120)

Ms. Jewett: Me, ad nauseam?

Mr. Young: Yes, ad nauseam in this House. She has done a very effective job attempting to persuade this Government that what is needed in this rapidly expanding technological society is that rather than cutting back on funding for necessary educational purposes at the post-secondary level, this Government should be expanding those facilities, making entrance into those facilities and institutions more accessible rather than restricting access, as will be the case with this Bill. I see my time has run out, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): At this stage in our proceedings a ten-minute period is provided for questions or comments relative to the Hon. Member's remarks. Are there any such comments and questions?

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to comment and question the use of a particular Latin phrase. I wonder whether the Hon. Member intended to say that my concern about this matter led me to debate ad infinitum.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, ad nauseam; he was right the first time.

Mr. Young: I stand corrected, Mr. Speaker. It was ad infinitum, but with this Government you have to repeat an argument ad nauseam in order to have it penetrate their little ears.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member mentioned with some frequency, and attached some considerable importance to, educational services for the hearing impaired. Since I sit beside the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), I wonder if he could advise where I might find one of these institutions that can help my left ear a little bit.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether the Hon. Member asks the question in a light vein or not. As my colleague and friend from Don Valley East (Mr. Smith) mentioned, it would be rather difficult for that particular Member to receive education in any facility in Canada.

The important point that has to be made is that for those who are hard of hearing or deaf, there is absolutely no facility in Canada which provides that individual with access to post-secondary education. That individual must go to the United States in order to receive an education. In a country as rich in resources as Canada, it is a national shame, if not a national disgrace, that that kind of situation is allowed to continue to exist. Surely we have a responsibility to all Canadians, whether they be the hearing impaired, hearing individuals or children with physical disabilities other than a hearing impairment, to ensure that, regardless of their physical disability, they have equal access to education, no matter where they live in this country, or whether they need extra assistance in order to gain access to education within Canada.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my colleague. He spoke very movingly about the problem of the hard of hearing getting an education. I reckon the situation is bad. Could he give me some information on the problems of some of the other handicapped, such as the blind and the physically handicapped? Are the facilities and opportunities for them as bad as they are for the hard of hearing?

• (1125)

Mr. Young: There is absolutely no question about that, Mr. Speaker. Shortly after the last Parliament convened, I along with other Members of the House served on the Special Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped. The Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Smith), by the way, was the Chairman of that particular committee. I would be remiss if I did not take this opportunity to mention that one of the hardest working members on that committee was the late Hon. Walter Dinsdale who had devoted much of his adult life to the concerns of the disabled in the country.

The testimony that we on that committee heard from witness after witness concerned access to education. Access to education for a person who happens to be disabled is extremely limited for a number of reasons. We cannot talk about access to education for someone who is disabled in isolation because it is so integral to the participation of the handicapped in the mainstream of Canadian life.

If we are not prepared to provide a disabled person with adequate access to education, then we are denying that disabled person the opportunity to find gainful employment, access to transportation, access to recreational facilities and access to all kinds of things that we able-bodied Canadians take for granted. That is why education is so crucial to a person who happens to be disabled. We must recognize that individuals such as blind Canadians who are attempting to gain access to the university education system or even to junior school require additional assistance that able-bodied Canadians do not need. Very often the family resources cannot provide for that and I would strongly argue, as our committee strongly argued, that the Government must play a role in allowing the handicapped and disabled to gain access to the various institutions in the country that we as able-bodied Canadians take for granted.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member another question. In the studies done by the committee of which my hon. friend was a member, was there any indication that if people who are blind, deaf or in any other way physically handicapped were given an opportunity to get an education, then they can indeed find employment? If they can find employment, it means that they will no longer be a burden on their families or, when they become adults and their families cannot support them, on the state. I am trying to ask the Hon. Member if we are not being penny wise and pound foolish.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, there is absolutely no question that that is so in a number of ways. First, the individuals I have encountered since I came to this place and since I was a member of that committee clearly indicated to me that the old stereotype of a disabled person being locked up in an institution and kept away from the mainstream of society no longer holds true at all. A person with disabilities is quite capable of being educated in the same way as anyone else. In fact, the stereotyping has got to the point where anyone with a disability has been considered to be somehow mentally deficient, and that is the worst kind of stereotyping I have ever encountered.

We should take a look at the straight economics of the situation, Mr. Speaker. Let me refer to figures based on estimates that are three or four years old; I am sure the figures are quite different today. However, if society continues to institutionalize individuals simply because of a disability or a handicap, it is not economical on a straight cost basis. It costs something like $35,000 and probably more like $40,000 or $50,000 a year to maintain a person in an institutional setting. If you provide them with the means to live within the community and with adequate community support services, the comparative cost is around $8,000 per year. Even on a straight economic basis it is much more effective for society to provide those individuals with the means to live within Canadian society as able-bodied Canadians, and to give them the opportunity to reach their own level in society.

• (1130)

Disabled Canadians have an expression for the able-bodied. They call them "tab" persons—that is, "temporarily able-bodied". Even while we enjoy good health and physical attributes, at some point in our life either through accident, illness or aging the possibilities of becoming disabled are extremely good.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity to say a few words on Bill C-12. The first point I should like to make refers to statements made by the Hon. Minister when he moved second reading of the Bill on January 27. As reported at page 814 of Hansard he said:

—federal assistance to each province for post-secondary education will be increased by 6 per cent in 1983-84 and by an additional 5 per cent in 1984-85.

He emphasized the word "increased". A little later he said:

The purpose of this change is to clarify the fact that the federal Government contributes huge amounts to the provinces. Over $13.5 billion was contributed for 1983-84 to assist the provinces in financing post-secondary education and health programs.

The Hon. Minister continually used the word "increase", but when I look at the Bill I do not see anything in it about increases. As a matter of fact, on the first page of the Bill Clause 3 reads as follows:

"the fiscal equalization payment to each province for a fiscal year shall be reduced to the amount obtained—"

Not "increased", Mr. Speaker, but "reduced". On page 5a of the Bill a very tricky formula is set out under which the numerator is the per capita Gross National Product for the calendar year ending immediately preceding the calendar year ending in the fiscal year, and the denominator is the per capita Gross National Product of the fourth calendar year. It also refers to the cube root of the fraction, not the square root or result but the cube root. Anyone who knows anything about mathematics knows that the cube root is much smaller than the square root and much smaller than the actual result. This is another way of reducing the amount. As everybody knows, the cube root of 64 is 4 and the cube root of 27 is 3. The square root of 64 is 8. Here we have the cube root taken to find the amount of money going to the provinces.

An explanatory note to Clause 7 reads in part as follows:

—would provide for a 6 per cent limitation in the growth of the per capita entitlement applicable in respect of the education program to a province for the 1983-84 fiscal year and a 5 per cent limitation in the growth of that entitlement for the 1984-85 fiscal year.

Why did the Hon. Minister leave the impression with all those who heard his address but who have not had access to the Bill that the funds are going to be increased by the Bill? That is a pretty sneaky way of trying to fool the public. I do not think it is proper for a Minister to mislead the people.

Just recently a teacher said to me: "I heard we got an increase because I heard the Minister". I said: "How do you get an increase when you take the cube root of something?" She looked at me very oddly. I said: "Do you get an increase when you reduce the amount of money that is going to be paid to the provinces?" She said: "I do not know what you mean". I showed her the Bill and told her what has been happening. She said: "I was completely misled". When qualified teachers are misled, what about the general rank and file of the public? This is no way for the Government to act, Mr. Speaker. I deplore the method used by the Hon. Minister to make people think we are getting an increase when there is actually a decrease.

Let us examine the figures that are being applied. The Minister also applied the tax transfer agreement. That simply moved percentage points of the income tax from the federal Government to provincial governments. The same tax is applicable to the people of each province. Instead of the federal Government collecting the money the provincial government does so; then it is provincial money and not federal. Yet the Bill continually refers to the money being collected under a transfer agreement. If the federal Government wanted to use that figure as part of its contribution, then why did it transfer the percentage points in the first place? There is no reason for it, but once it has transferred the percentage points it becomes provincial money and the federal Government should not try to make people believe it is part and parcel of the program.

The Bill reduces the cash going to the provinces. Throughout the Minister's speech I do not think the word "reduction" was used once but the word "increase" was frequently used. That is very misleading.

The Bill applies different growth rates to education taxes for 1983-84 and limits the amount for 1983-84. In other words, it is retroactive legislation. This is 1984 and it is limiting the grants for 1983-84.

Another thing that I do not like about the Bill is that it is a unilateral change, not a change negotiated with the provinces but a change forced on the provinces whether they like it or not. That is not the way Canadians are used to doing business.

It seems to me that there is about $100 million that should be going to the provinces for education. But where is that money going? We have received no explanation from members of the Government. Where is the money going and what is it being used for? I think people are entitled to know that. As a member of this Party mentioned just the other day, the total tax grab is about $380 million. In 1983 it was $118 million and in 1984 $260 million. That money is being taken away from a proper allocation to the provinces.

When the Minister mentioned the 6 per cent and the 5 per cent that he is now going to use, in effect he is saying that the Government is going to chisel the provinces out of more than 2 per cent under the former Act. Actually the increase should be over 8 per cent instead of 6 per cent and 5 per cent. In other words, the Government is again chiselling the provinces out of money that the former Act gave to them.

Something which has become very commonplace throughout the years during which I have been watching the present Government in action is the encouragement given to the provinces to expand programs, to introduce new programs. Then when they introduce them, the federal Government withdraws its support and leaves them up to the provinces to continue. It has done this in many cases. This is a bad way for the Government of Canada to operate. If the federal Government wants to inject itself into the educational facilities, then once it does that, it should stay there and not continuously change its plans and programs unilaterally as it has been doing.

This Bill not only reduces the amount of money to the provinces but will actually lower the quality of education in this country. I realize that that is a serious charge and I make it only after reflecting on it carefully and studying the Bill. It cannot help but lower the quality of education in Canada and let me tell the House why. The cost of education is not going down. It is going up. Salaries of teachers and professors are going up. These salaries have to go up; otherwise the teachers and professors would not be able to meet the cost of living because the cost of living is going up. The cost of equipment for our universities is going up. Almost every type of equipment purchased by our high schools and universities today costs more than it did three or four years ago and much more than it did in 1977. Books are costing our libraries more money today, excessively more, and they have to be purchased; but there are going to be fewer books purchased and consequently our students will have less access to the wisdom of the world.

What is very serious, as far as I am concerned, is the quality of education for the people generally. It is not right and proper today to provide education only for the rich of this country. Some of the highest positions in Canada today are held by many who were born into poor homes; some of them were in my classrooms in school. They hardly had enough to eat through the Depression years but their parents sacrificed and worked so they could get an education. They went out and found jobs and by dint of hard work they were able to get an education. Some of them today are holding the highest positions of reponsibility in this country, in our churches, our economic life and our political life. They were able to do that because they were able to get an education. However, those men and women, had they not secured that education, would be on our relief rolls today or standing in a bread line, as many young people are doing today.

I quote from a recent article in Maclean's magazine:

> In 1981, according to Statistics Canada, 3.5 million Canadians were living within its definition of poverty. In 1982 the number jumped to 4.1 million. The 1983 figure, which will not be available until Fall, will probably be roughly 4.4 million.

There are 4.4 million people living within the Government's own definition of poverty, and that is something of which no country can be proud. Yet when we reduce the amount of money for our universities and educational facilities, we will aggravate that figure. There is no way we can do other than aggravate it because, in the first place, more and more of our young people will not be able to go to university. I know what that means. I would have liked to be a doctor. When I was a young man I yearned to be a doctor. But I came from a family of 10. My father was a hard-working man but he could not find work in the Depression years. My brothers worked hard in the coal mines and by dint of sacrifice they managed to send me to normal school and to university for one year so I could teach school. That was all they could do. My father passed away, some of my brothers married and had responsibilities of their own, and I took on the responsibility, along with other brothers, of looking after our mother and younger members of the family. In my case, university was out of the question because of economics.

I went to school with scores of other young people who could not afford to go to university and so the contribution they could have made to this country was lost. They had great ability, much greater than some of the rich boys in our class, and much greater than even I thought of having, but they were denied their opportunity. Their potential was lost because they were unable to get to university, not because of a lack of ability but because of a lack of money. It should not be so hard for our young people to get into university.

The federal Government started a program of assisting post-secondary education but now it is going to withdraw to a degree and leave it up to the provinces. That will be hard enough on the rich provinces but it will be very tough indeed on the poorer provinces. That is not fair to young Canadians. We talk about a standard in this country that we want no Canadian to live under, but what will happen to the maritime provinces which have little resources compared to Alberta, British Columbia or Ontario? We are simply telling the young people in the maritime provinces that they are going to be handicapped for life because they cannot go to their own excellent universities. That is not right. This Bill is wrong in principle because it is denying our young people the right to an education.

I enjoyed the comments made by the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) regarding the deaf and I could not help but think about the blind and the handicapped, those in wheel chairs and those who were born as slow learners, not stupid but slow learners. What are we going to do about these people? It takes extra money to teach the handicapped. I was proud one day to step into an office in the City of Calgary where I was greeted by a lady in a wheel chair. She had gone through university and was holding her own with everyone in that office. I felt glad to be a Canadian. But we are condemning people who are slow learners, who are blind, who are deaf, who are handicapped, to a life perhaps of poverty. Perhaps they will be part of the 4.4 million people below the poverty line which Maclean's magazine spoke about. That should not happen just because they were not born to parents who have a million dollars, although I do not begrudge these people their money. They probably earned it. But I certainly do not appreciate the fact that those who come from poor homes are going to be condemned to poverty for all their lives because we deny them an education.

When I was just a kid I talked to a preacher from a foreign country. I was complaining about having to go to school. He said to me that I was a very lucky young man. I could learn to read and write. I could reach almost any apex I wanted to reach if I had the ability and worked hard enough. In the country where he was a missionary, very few boys and girls learned how to read and write. They would give their right arm just to be able to read. Yet here in this country, this rich country with all its resources, we are saying to our young people: "You are condemned to poverty because we will not provide the facilities for education. In fact, we are cutting them down". We are applying the "cube root". How can we face our young people and tell them we are going to help them get work and then refuse them access to education?

The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts) has been advertising courses in newspapers, but when young people go to apply the employment office does not know anything about it. I was at a meeting in a place called Brogg Creek. Someone told me he was interested in improving his education and he saw this advertisement in the newspaper, which must have cost the Government a considerable amount of money, but when he went to the employment office they knew nothing about this program. I wrote to the Minister asking about this but have not yet received a reply. Maybe there is an explanation. However, we spend money advertising and building up the hopes of people. It is the same with programs under UIC. How many scores of those who want to cannot get into the training classes because the quotas are used up?

The Hon. Speaker is showing me one finger. That means I have one minute left. I had wanted to speak in detail about the native people of this country. In Gleichen there is a school called the Old Sun College. It is a wonderful college. It is fighting to get enough money to keep its head above water. It is a college that will give Indian boys and girls an opportunity to compete. In Drumheller there is the Votex Training school for the subnormal. I was in that school the other day. Eighteen people aged 12 or 13 up to 50 are learning to make things. I was proud of the fact that they are no longer on welfare, as they would have been. Now they are making toys, benches and tables. They can do it if we give them the opportunity. We have a tremendous country. We have tremendous resources and tremendous people. Let us make sure that every one of them has an opportunity to reach his or her greatest potential.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any questions or comments? Resuming debate, the Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain).

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, it would appear to me that the Government is very conscious of biblical obligations. It looks as if it were establishing in perpetuity a memorial to the statement: "To him that hath shall be given and from him that hath not it shall be taken away". That is exactly what we have in the Bill before this House at this moment in time.

I would first like to address in general the remarks made by the Member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau). He was the Chairman of the parliamentary task force in federal-provincial fiscal arrangements. In response to what he has said I would say that that task force made recommendations across the board which have been ignored and denied in section after section of this Bill. Any attempt to justify this Bill by any remarks of the former Chairman of that committee seems to me to abdicate the responsibility which he and I both have with respect to our province and to other provinces in a like position.

For instance, he has continued to follow the Government's policy of pulling blindfolds over the Canadian people in respect of the $190 million which appeared to be a windfall at one moment in time in Atlantic history. That $190 million which he has described in his remarks, the details of which I shall not go into, was as a result of, and has been repeatedly stated to be as a result of, a miscalculation of federal statistical authorities. As a result of that miscalculation the Atlantic provinces were short-changed in payment in the years concerned. The $190 million has not been advertised by the Government and its speakers as a statistical error at the federal level, but rather it has been trying to expand upon the great largess of the Government of Canada as it relates to the Atlantic provinces. That is misleading, inaccurate, inappropriate and inexcusable.

No matter how the Member for Gloucester wishes to dabble in extraneous statistical material to arrive at the conclusions which he expressed in his remarks, it just does not wash with reality. This Bill is contradictory to the total principle of federal assistance which has been necessary for those have-not provinces of Canada as described by Justice Emmett Hall in his study. The established programs financing was introduced as a block fund and the financial data are reported in this manner. The expenditures include all spending on health-related and post-secondary education programs as agreed to by a joint federal-provincial committee.

Federal contributions include the cash transfer of established programs financing plus federal contributions for health care received under the cost sharing arrangements. The established programs financing tax transfer is not reported as a federal contribution because these taxes are collected under provincial law. It is the provincial government and not the Government of Canada which takes responsibility for raising these revenues.

I would like to give you some statistics, Mr. Speaker, in respect to the impact of the block funding structure and the funding arrangements agreed to in 1977. Provincial expenditures on health care and post-secondary education in 1977 were $345.3 million in New Brunswick. In 1982-83 they reached $712.2 million. When the cost was $345.3 million the federal contribution was $123 million or 35 per cent. This escalated until eventually in 1979-80, under the agreement of 1977, the federal Government had reached a level of 41.1 per cent of the cost of the cost-shared programs in New Brunswick. This was up not quite 6 per cent.

Since the new trend has taken place in federal budgeting and since we have decided that we are going to save money, the decline has amounted to exactly 12 per cent of provincial expenditures supplied by the federal Government. The total expenditures for the province have more than doubled, from $345 million to $712 million. The federal contribution has not quite doubled. It was $123.7 million and is now $207.6 million. At one point in time it was 41 per cent of the cost of those provincial expenditures. It is now 29.1 per cent. No matter how you cut this cake, when you cut 12 per cent of the expenditures of the province from federal allocations to the province you have dealt it a crippling financial blow.

This does not deal totally with post-secondary education as this Bill is supposed to, but that is only part of the pie. The first major federal-provincial cost-shared program was hospital services. This program, introduced in 1958, provided for the federal Government to cover about one-half of the cost of approved federal services with the provinces covering the other half. In the late 1960s the medicare program was introduced. Here again the federal Government agreed to cover on average—please note the phrase "on average"—half the costs of provincial medicare programs. The average implied that there should be recognition of those provinces with less economic capability than others.

I was a member of the provincial legislature of the Province of New Brunswick when hospitalization was introduced. At that time it was agreed that the federal Government should accept something in excess of 60 per cent of the total cost of hospitalization for the Province of New Brunswick. Likewise, when medicare came in the federal Government shared in excess of 50 per cent of the cost of that program. I guess the provinces were smarter than the feds; they estimated more accurately the needs of the provinces than the federal Government estimated its expenses for the programs which it had structured.

Having underestimated the cost of these programs, in Bill C-12 the federal Government is now trying to transfer to the provinces that are beleaguered by financial problems, as is the federal structure, more of that expense. Those provinces cannot afford that. While the suit can be cut to fit the cloth year after year, eventually some part of the financial body will be naked. That is what will happen if this Bill begins a perpetual trend in the fiscal responsibilities of the federal Government as they relate to the provinces.

The third major cost-shared program involved federal grants for post-secondary education. In 1967 the federal Government offered to pay the provinces 50 per cent of the operating costs of post-secondary educational institutions, or $15 per capita. New Brunwsick opted for the $15 per capita.

The original arrangement worked quite well through the 1960s but the problem began to emerge in the 1970s. The provinces were having difficulty coping with the rigid program and spending guidelines laid down by the federal Government. Those guidelines that were set by the federal Government displayed an effort to influence provincial politics by federal expenditure through the power of the purse. It is a betrayal of the relationships which should exist between the Parliament of Canada and the provinces.

The provinces were having difficulty coping with the rigid program and spending guidelines laid down by the federal Government which, in many cases, directed provincial spending to high-cost rather than less expensive program areas. The federal Government was concerned about the open-ended nature of its financial involvement in which it had to match provincial spending. However, the Government still wanted to guide how that spending should take place.

Beginning in 1972, the Government began to take steps to reduce its financial commitments when it placed a cap on its contributions for post-secondary education. The introduction of caps and ceilings was absolutely contrary to the intention of the original agreement.

In 1977, federal arrangements replaced federal conditional grants to the provinces in support of medicare, hospital services and post-secondary education with a new program called Established Programs Financing. Again, that worked favourably for the provinces until there was a 6 per cent increase in the share borne by the federal Government. The provinces out-foxed the federal Government because they knew more about their needs and anticipated requirements than the federal Government.

Once that plateau was reached the program at the federal level started to go downhill again. We cannot afford to let this happen. Once a standard in any social sphere is established, one must be very cognizant of the fact that someone will be embarrassed if that standard is cut. The intent was to embarrass the provinces and it is unacceptable for the Government of this day not to fulfil its responsibilities by backing away from the costs of a program which it prescribed.

The Established Programs Financing was set up. According to this program a single cash grant and a transfer of personal and corporate tax points replaced the cost-sharing arrangements under which the federal Government helped to finance medicare, hospital services and post-secondary education. With EPF, the federal contributions were no longer determined by the provincial program expenditures, as they were before. It was no longer the set percentage of provincial expenditures; they were tied to the rate of growth in Canada's economy. This gave the federal Government greater certainty about its financial commitments. Of equal importance, it placed upper limits on its financial obligations. This less attractive financial arrangement was made acceptable to the provinces because the federal Government assured them that EPF would give provincial governments more flexibility in program decisions.

I have sat in the House and listened to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) in particular, enraged in her ideology, demean the provinces about their expenditures in a contemptible way. Yet the intent of this program was to get the finger out of the pie of provincial management. That was the understanding.

The provinces were asked to seek ways and means to gain more effective control of the expenditure of provincial and federal money. Let me quote the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). He said:

(EPF) . . . suits the current and future imperative, namely fiscal restraint, in that provinces will have a greater incentive to implement what are admittedly difficult measures designed to restrain spending in these fields to reasonable levels.

That is a statement by the Prime Minister. This meant that the provinces were free to manage their own affairs without political or financial interference by the Government of Canada. They were able to govern themselves under their own circumstances. For the most part, the provinces favoured the move to EPF, although it was recognized that, particularly after EPF was phased in, provincial costs for medicare, hospital services and post-secondary education would grow more rapidly than federal contributions. The provinces recognized this from the beginning.

One of the key features of the EPF arrangement was that it was designed to produce long-term certainty for both the federal and provincial governments. The federal Government obtained certainty that no matter how much the provinces spent on these programs, its contributions would not exceed the growth in the national economy. The provinces obtained certainty that the federal Government would refrain from applying arbitrary caps and limits to its contributions, and so could plan accordingly.

This Bill is in absolute contradiction of the federal-provincial negotiations which were presumably carried on in good faith. In fact, limitations are now being imposed as a result of withdrawing funds from the field to which we were so committed and which the Prime Minister addressed in such a very positive fashion.

Established Programs Financing worked fairly well from 1977 to 1982. However, over that period and within the last year, the federal Government has done much to destroy the principles upon which EPF was based. It has launched counter-productive quarrels with the provinces and caused serious distrust between the provinces and the national Government.

Less than two years after it convinced the provinces to accept the EPF arrangement, the federal Government wanted to change its terms and thereby reduce EPF payments to the provinces. On this occasion the provinces successfully resisted those attempts but the federal Government responded by cutting other transfer programs and terminating discussions for a new block funding arrangement for social services. It terminated those discussions and applied other financial pressures.

In the 1981 federal Budget, the Government announced that it planned to cut over $5 billion from EPF funding over the period 1982 to 1987. This cut was implemented in the spring of 1982, contrary to the recommendations of all the provinces, the Economic Council of Canada and an all-Party parliamentary task force chaired by the Hon. Member for Gloucester from New Brunswick. In 1983, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) announced that federal EPF contributions would be arbitrarily capped in so far as post-secondary education was concerned.

In view of the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), we must consider the consequences of capping post-secondary education expenditures, especially at a time when virtually every Minister of the Crown is saying that the Government will promote more training. However, this legislation will ensure that it is not done at the post-secondary education level, since its financing will be capped. That is precisely what this legislation will do.

The Province of New Brunswick spent over $700 million on these programs in 1982-83, or approximately 29 per cent of its total Budget. Against this, the province received about $200 million from the federal Government for health care and post-secondary education.

Mr. Evans: I thought it was post-secondary education alone.

Mr. McCain: I challenge any Member of the House to look at the statistics in Atlantic Canada to determine how much money was spent on post-secondary education. I suggest that the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) will find they exceeded that. If the figures are distorted by the measurements made by the Member for Gloucester in his speech, the Member for Ottawa Centre has grounds for shaking his head; but when the distortions are removed, my statement will be unequivocally substantiated.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that my time is almost up. May I have unanimous consent for some extra time?

• (1210)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Does the Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) have unanimous consent to continue?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, I thank the House for its generosity.

I mentioned once before, and this was contradicted also by the Hon. Member for Gloucester, that the Province of New Brunswick was labouring under the highest tax rate of virtually every province in Canada. Virtually, not all; Newfoundland is higher.

Mr. Evans: Try Quebec.

Mr. McCain: Yes, Quebec in some instances is higher, but not in all.

Mr. Evans: Sixty-five per cent.

Mr. McCain: That means a province which has 70 per cent plus or minus the national average income of this country has to impose nearly the highest taxes of any province in Canada to support post-secondary education and other policies in that province. The people of New Brunswick may not pay as many dollars per capita as people do in Ontario, British Columbia, or in Ottawa Centre, but a bigger portion of their income is going in provincial taxes, no matter how you try to cut the pie. It is a bigger proportion. The burden on the people of New Brunswick is relatively heavier than in other provinces.

Let me come to the Province of Newfoundland. A Cabinet Minister in Newfoundland stated on television this morning that Newfoundland's average income was 52 per cent of the average national income. That means that in the Province of Newfoundland people are labouring even harder and sharing the widow's mite even more than the people in New Brunswick. These things are not recognized. If I had one reason to criticize the federal-provincial task force, it would be because the task force was made up in its total not with the Member for Bow River, who has provincial experience, not with the Premier of Prince Edward Island with his provincial experience, but it was made up of a group of people who had never participated in and were not, with all due respect, as familiar with the problems of provincial budgeting as were other Members of this House. No Party appointed a single Member to that committee with that background. I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that the conclusions of the report, though very very firm and definite, were coloured by the lack of knowledge, experience and understanding of the difficulties which Atlantic Canada perceive, and which are real.

This Bill is in contradiction of Emmett Hall. It is in contradiction of the task force. It is in contradiction of the statements made by the Prime Minister of Canada when the EPF block funding program was brought in. I want to point out to you, Sir, that it is a ceiling on how much the federal Government will pay post-secondary education. Regrettably it is not the floor; there is a variable which makes it possible for an application of less than the six and five ratio of increment and expenditure, which is mentioned, but the little dog-eared section down there states that under certain statistical conditions we do not have to increase that payment even by 5 per cent. We might increase it by 2 per cent, 3 per cent, or 4 per cent on an annual basis. All this is contradictory to the means of the provinces of Canada, particularly Atlantic Canada.

I wish I had time to quote, but I will not abuse the unanimous consent I received. I refer Members of this House, including the sarcastic Member from Ottawa Centre, to Emmett Hall's statement about the need for additional federal help for post-secondary education rather than make cut-backs in the extension of federal grants for health, education, and welfare. His statement unequivocally says that if and when this happens there will be a reduction in the quality of services in an area of Canada which, even at the time of the Emmett Hall report, could not meet the standards of Canada. Instead of less, Mr. Justice Hall was recommending more.

Bill C-150 was in this House. It never reached second reading. In the interests of humanity, of education, and of the taxation incapabilities of Atlantic Canada, I pray that this Bill will never come to third reading and a vote in this House of Commons.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there comments or questions concerning the speech of the Hon. Member?

[English]

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) referred to the "sarcastic Member for Ottawa Centre", apparently referring to myself.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Evans: I was not at all being sarcastic when I asked questions of the Hon. Member across the floor. The Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) was Chairman of the task force which looked into federal-provincial fiscal arrangements. He came into this House not more than a week ago and in his speech indicated that the Province of New Brunswick is now receiving for post-secondary education funding 109 per cent of its total expenditures. That means the federal Government is not only paying the entire cost of post-secondary education in New Brunswick, it is paying 9 per cent more than the total cost.

How can the Hon. Member sit there and say that the federal Government should, without limit continue to send funds to the Province of New Brunswick for the express purpose of post-secondary education funding when the province is not spending the money we send it now for the purpose of post-secondary education? When will Members on that side of the House learn that you simply cannot push on a string?

Members on this side of the House, in the leadership campaign and from other parts of the Cabinet are talking about finding ways to improve post-secondary education and training, which may involve a more direct role for the federal Government in ensuring that the young people in this country receive the education being paid for by taxpayers' dollars. I support them 100 per cent, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Blenkarn: Are you going to speak today?

Mr. Evans: —and it is time people on that side of the House started to take their responsibilities seriously.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Why wait for spring? Do it now.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, may I draw to your attention that when the Hon. Member for Gloucester made his comments he included in arriving at that figure tuition fees paid by students—

Mr. Evans: Of course.

Mr. McCain: Wait a minute; that is not a provincial nor is it a federal expenditure. The Hon. Member for Gloucester included the grants made by private individuals through alumni funds and other grants in that expenditure. That is not what they are talking about because there is absolutely no relationship between what the province spends for education, the private grants to universities and the tuition fees paid by students. That is an absolute and utter distortion of what we are talking about today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCain: We are talking about the payment of taxpayers' dollars, not private dollars or tuition fees. So the Hon. Member should remove that figure. I challenge the Member for Ottawa Centre to say that of taxpayers' dollars New Brunswick is not spending its share.

Mr. Evans: Nonsense.

Mr. McCain: It is. The university structure education council got its increment in funds from the provinces of Atlantic Canada on an annual basis and they are well in proportion to or in excess of the moneys which are contributed by the Government of Canada.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, obviously the Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) wants to contribute to this debate. I certainly think he should. However, could the Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) confirm that the effect of this Bill is to reduce the amount of cash the federal Government transferred to New Brunswick—amounting to $3.3 million in the year 1983-84, and another $7.4 million in the year 1984-85—by $10.7 million? Those figures are escalated forever. Could the Hon. Member tell us how he thinks a federal Government that is concerned about training, about the new technological age which we are entering, could conceivably take away from the Province of New Brunswick $10.7 million—not tax points or anything of that nature, not fluff—that is needed to finance the education of young people and indeed people who need retraining?

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, the federal Government did not have a political profile in the block funding structure. Its effort to save between $5 billion and $6 billion on an annual basis projected was in order to obtain a political profile and to put money into post-secondary education and health care. The intention was to reduce the federal commitment and at the same time raise the profile of the politics of the contribution. New Brunswick, I may say in response to the Hon. Member, cannot afford a drop of $10.3 million in post-secondary moneys which are granted for two reasons. If we examine the student population in Atlantic Canada, we find that there are more people in college per capita than there are in other parts of the Dominion of Canada. This is because a great many people go from other parts of Canada to the Atlantic provinces for college education, at least to the bachelor level. This is fact.

At no time in the negotiations between the provinces and the federal Government was the federal Government ever prepared to accept the idea of a student per capita grant to Atlantic Canada, because it would federally distort the picture to the extent that it would be giving more money to Atlantic Canada, particularly to the Maritimes, than it would be to any other area of Canada for that purpose.

We cannot afford to lose $10.3 million. I say again that no matter how we wish to cut the pie, no matter how we wish to criticize the general stance of the Government in respect of EPF grants, we cannot get around the fact that in total—and for the moment let us not consider education—federal cost-sharing declined from 41.1 per cent ot 29.1 per cent, for a 12 per cent cut in the budget of the province as far as federal contributions are concerned. No matter what other arguments we may want to use, what other measures we may wish to apply or whatever justifications we may suggest for this Act, we have to justify cutting 12 per cent from costsharing programs.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, this Bill does not cut anything. It reduces the increase that will be transferred to the provinces.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Evans: Let us get some basic arithmetic on the table. If the Province of New Brunswick spends $100 million—and let us use that just as a figure—on post-secondary education, and students and contributors in the form of donors, alumni and so on, as well as the federal Government, give the province $109 million to spend on post-secondary education, and if the province only spends $100 million of it on post-secondary education, how much does the province pay out of its coffers for post-secondary education? It would be minus $9 million. In other words, it has taken $9 million given to it by the federal Government, by the students in tuition or by contributors in the form of alumni and so on, for the purpose of post-secondary education and has used it for something else. Does that sound like the province is making a contribution to post-secondary education in the Province of New Brunswick? It sure doesn't to me.

Mr. McCain: That is utter nonsense. That is like asking the nation of Canada how much wood can a woodchuck chuck. It is just about the same. We are talking about federal and provincial tax dollars.

Mr. Evans: How many provincial tax dollars went into it? It was minus $9 million, that is how much it was.

Mr. Blenkarn: You could make a speech, John.

Mr. Evans: I have already spoken.

Mr. McCain: We are talking about what should have been a sacred and trustworthy commitment by the Government of Canada to cost-share programs up to a percentage level.

Mr. Taylor: Right on.

Mr. McCain: Any effort to try to draw in the tuition fees is ridiculous. It is a tax dollar deal at which we are looking. Not only does the Bill limit it to the six and five. If we look at it again, we will see that they do not have to honour either the six or five because there is a little codicil in there that the Bureau of Statistics can reduce it if it wishes. They are putting on a ceiling, not a floor. As long as I speak on this subject matter I will not try to defend the Government. I will not try to mix fire with gasoline. I will talk about tax dollars paid and raised in the Province of New Brunswick, paid and raised by the federal Government and pooled for post-secondary education.

Mr. Evans: None was spent by the province.

Mr. McCain: Private contributions to universities, to scholarship funds and from tuitions have never been mentioned in any educational debate which I have ever heard, except in the fashion which the Hon. Member for Bow River might mention it—it is pretty heavy for students Canada-wide. That is the only relationship which tuition and private contributions have to this Bill. The Government should forget it and not try to blindfold the people of Canada with false information any longer. We cannot afford to lose $10.3 million, nor can any Atlantic province.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please! This brings us to the end of the question and comment period. Debate. The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone).

[English]

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, the subject matter about which we are talking today is of extreme importance if for no other reason than the period of time in which we are living. We are in a period of time in which there is a greater need rather than a lesser need for education because the nature of the world in which we live is rapidly changing. Unlike the period of our forefathers and foremothers, we are in a situation today where there is an inconsistency.

Mr. Evans: Oh.

Mr. Malone: I note that the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) likes to give a speech when every other Member makes a speech, but does not have the courage to rise and do so when he ought to.

Mr. Evans: I have already spoken.

Mr. Malone: He likes to speak while others are making their comments. I invite him to rise in his place when I sit down and perhaps the Speaker will recognize him. Then we will have a chance to test whether or not he can participate for 20 minutes.

Mr. Friesen: They will not recognize him in the next election.

Mr. Evans: Do you want to bet?

Mr. Malone: We are talking about the need for more education and the need for the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre to listen so that he might be further educated.

Mr. Evans: Not by you.

Mr. Malone: It is important to recognize that the period of change today is so rapid that no longer can grandfather teach grandson.

Ms. Mitchell: Or grandmother teach granddaughter.

Mr. Malone: As my good friend reminds me, or grandmother teach granddaughter. From year to year the nature of what we need to know changes rapidly, and change in education demands a much greater commitment to education.

There was a period of time in our history when I was but a young boy starting school and the local vernacular in that rural farming community was that one needed grade 9. Somewhere during the early periods of my schooling, I heard parents discussing around farm kitchen tables that grade 9 was not good enough any longer and that one needed grade 12. Unfortunately, about the time I reached that grade it should have been utopia but people were saying that it was no good any longer and that one needed university education.

We are into a new age today where there is no such concept as termination of education. One does not reach a certain level and say that is it for life. One does not train to become a doctor and say: "Now I am a doctor for life". At least, I do not want any medical treatment from a person who graduated ten years ago and that was the last he ever read about medicine. Today education is continuous and ongoing. There should be no end to it, even for our senior citizens. I have been thrilled in my constituency on many occasions when I witnessed persons over the age of 70 years who had less than a grade 12 education but through extension programs had the opportunity to attend university.

We are talking about an enormous range of importance. On the other hand, the Government of Canada is cutting back from the federal domain payments to the provinces for 1983-84 of $118 million and for 1984-85 an additional $260 million. What is important is that it establishes a new base by which the Government can say in future years that from that original platform it makes its calculations into the future. The federal Government, which established a program of block funding to the provinces, has taken the position of establishing a new lower base. We will either have a situation of poor education forever, a greater burden on the provinces or a greater burden on individuals.

This is the age of the microchip. It is an age where education ought to be continuous. In one country at least, Japan, the view is that education is continuous. We have entered into a Liberal age of slogans—the land is strong; the just society; six and five. They have not demonstrated to Canadians, certainly not to the two Opposition Parties, that there is six and five less need for education. I have seen no studies, research or material to indicate that we should spend $118 million less this year and $260 million next.

We are living in the age of the slogan. We have the slogan of six and five. This Government has bankrupted itself with PetroCan, Canadair, Mirabel and Pickering and other wasteful spending, and is now cutting out education. It is too simple to recognize and realize that education is an investment in the future. If you look at any advanced society, you see a society that is educated. Therefore, slogans such as the just society and six and five do not meet our needs.

We need an in-depth analysis of what our optimum education ought to be and at what levels we ought to expand. Had some commission made an in-depth study of that requirement, we could then accept the numbers more readily. Not only do we not have any research indicating what the levels of expenditure ought to be; we have unilateral action taken by the federal Government. The federal Government entered into an agreement with the ten provinces. It is unilaterally breaking that agreement. It is decreasing the amount of block funding. On the basis of that decrease, it tries through speeches by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to pretend that we in this country will have participatory democracy and renewed federalism. How can you have renewed federalism when you have a dictatorial attitude on the part of one of the 11 partners, telling the other ten that it has decided they will get less and there is to be no discussion? There have been no federal-provincial discussions on this matter. The Minister in charge has not travelled about the country to determine what the burden on the provinces will be if the funds are decreased. The Government simply writes out new legislation saying the provinces will receive $118 million less next year and $260 million less the next. It presumes there will be some gratification because when speaking to the Bill the Minister said that less was more.

This is all part of the double-speak of the Government; silk cloth, smoke and mirrors, the magic show of felt hats and rabbits, trying to make less look like more. The Government says that 6 per cent is more than zero per cent, but fails to recognize that it is less than the traditional commitment. It describes it as more when in fact it turns out to be less. The Minister knows that the provinces are not happy. He has not had any agreement with the provinces with regard to this legislation.

More important is what this Bill does. It freezes the ratios into an inflexible straitjacket. We have before us a presumption that the calculations of the federal Government as laid before us today are accurate, that 50.5 per cent should go to hospital insurance, 17.4 per cent to medicare and 32.1 per cent to post-secondary education. If we could make the presumption that the federal Government was correct in those ratios, I challenge any Member on the Government side to stand and argue that they will be the correct ratios for Canada for all of our foreseeable future.

Is it not possible that somehow down the road there may be a breakthrough in preventive medicine and this will result in decreased costs? Therefore, we could shift our ratio to greater needs for education. Is it not possible with the advancement of the microchip that society might advance so quickly that, in order to get into the mainstream of whatever point the world is at at that time in history, the ratios may need to change?

In 1984 the federal Government would freeze forever a ratio system. It does that on the basis of the national average. That challenges the other presumption. Are we to presume that the ratio needs of Prince Edward Island are the same ratio needs of Alberta? Is Quebec to be presumed to have exactly the same needs in health as that of Saskatchewan?

I challenge one partner in this federation coming up with a set of numbers. It fails on two presumptions; first, in its future implications and, second, in its regional differences. We are in a situation where the amounts of money granted are such that we need to separate those ratios into at least having input on a continuing basis from each and all of the provinces. It was not the prerogative of the Government unilaterally to make the choices, to establish its brand, to claim its need.

In the past, the federal Government issued block funding for a number of social services. It is now running this magic show by us, changing the title of the Bill and breaking that block funding into prescribed measures. The more the feds prescribe, regulate, define and dictate how block funding is to be broken down and spent, the more they intrude into provincial jurisdiction.

The Government may feel comfortable in its heart and soul defining that block funding will not go as a block, but as all of the parts of the block. By the power of the dollar, it will become the administrator of the provinces. If it can control that block in all of its parts and define how each individual part is to be spent, it takes away the flexibility of the provinces to shift ratios toward health or away from education, regardless of whatever the individual provinces may feel is their need.

The federal Government today not only shortchanges education but damages federalism and provincial jurisdictions. It lords itself over the provinces as a powerful central Government which the country ought not to experience.

I do not speak against central governments or unitary governments simply as an automatic reflex. A unitary government may well be a satisfactory form of government in England, Belgium or Holland. However, it is not a satisfactory form of government in a country that is the second largest in the world, stretching from Vancouver Island to St. John's, Newfoundland, some four and a half thousand miles. This is a country that, by its very breadth ahd scope, requires regional input. When block funding is broken into all of its component parts and its spending is prescribed, the result is a federal Government which intrudes in a very direct way in what ought to be and is prescribed by our Constitution as being the jurisdiction of the provinces.

There are those two faults, the federalism concept and the fact that the Government tries to apply a national average to all parts of the country as if all needs were equal. The people who form the Liberal Government are trying to pretend to us that averaging is somehow a satisfactory way to go in terms of a Canadian objective. I will say through you, Sir, to a Liberal:

"If you had your head on a firebox and your feet on a block of ice, on average you would feel pretty good". I submit that Liberal members have not recognized the uniqueness of the north, the Atlantic provinces, the western prairie provinces or the West Coast. They have not recognized the different cultural milieux that exist in the big cities and various regions of the country.

To lower funding for post-secondary education is quite literally to lower our income expectations. It is no new fact to anyone in the House that those nations which have a lower standard of education have a lower standard of living. They not only have a lower standard of living in terms of dollars but they have a lower standard of living in terms of the soul of the person. Education provides us with an opportunity to discover our outer limits. It is a chance to find out who we are and what we can become. When we in a society like Canada deny a person, young or old, the opportunity to say yes to the challenges that come his or her way and the ability to say yes to an opportunity to grow and expand, we end up with restricted people with restricted souls. Education is the key that unlocks the universe. It is there for us to discover.

I dare any person to say yes to the challenges that come his or her way. People who say no to challenges, who say they cannot and do not dare to discover new things, live in a rut. A rut is simply a grave with both ends kicked out. Education opens up a new universe and allows us to bombard our own outer limits.

The federal Government's response to the age of the microchip is to say that it will cut back funds for education. I can tell you, Sir, that nothing could be more out of concert with the needs of our time. We are in an age today when the new information that comes to the fore year after year makes obsolete that which we were taught only a short time ago. In a time when there should be an enormous expansion of education, we find that the federal Government is cutting back by literally millions of dollars on its federal obligation.

I ask Members opposite how they justify that perspective when members of their Party are going around the country attesting to their leadership qualities and some of them are saying that there will be zero unemployment within five years. How can there be a zero unemployment rate without giving more funding to education? Surely a look at the world tells us that it is the educated nations which have the opportunities for more jobs. Education must first of all be broad-based. It cannot become elitist. It must not be something only for the privileged.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The Chair regrets to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time is up. We will now have a ten-minute question and comment period. Are there any questions?

We will resume debate.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it seems incredible to me that we are spending so much time on this particular subject when it is so obvious that the Government should be looking at withdrawing the Bill or withdrawing the portion of the Bill which will affect post-secondary education across the country. This Bill amends the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act. This amendment gives to that Act a new name but it is still the same old Act with only a few variations.

The main purpose of the Bill which is before us is to apply the six and five principle to post-secondary education transfers from the federal Government to provincial governments. The Bill has to some extent taken into consideration the federal-provincial fiscal arrangements task force report, though it has taken very little of that report into consideration. It has considered only those parts of that task force report which it thought would reduce the amount of cash it would have to pay out.

The Bill does follow one of the recommendations of the federal-provincial fiscal arrangements task force report by separating health care funding and secondary education funding from the other block funding. It provides also for a minimum of accountability. I say a minimum of accountability because it only requires that information on the manner in which transfer moneys are spent be tabled in the House. It does not particularly require that all of the transfer moneys which are to go to secondary education or health care be spent in that particular way.

We in the New Democratic Party thought that that amendment should have been incorporated into the Bill. However, the amendment which did pass was taken almost directly from the federal-provincial fiscal arrangements task force report and does require the kind of accountability by provincial governments which would require them to put before the House information about the manner in which the money was spent. In that case, some of the arguments which we heard this morning of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) and the previous speaker who comes from New Brunswick should not have taken place. That kind of information would have been before the House.

I must go back to the real purpose of the Bill, Mr. Speaker. I do not understand why the Government would make a move like this at this particular time. The significance of the move itself is obvious; it will take approximately $378 million from post-secondary institutions across Canada in the next two years. Part of that reduction is retroactive; it is money that the institutions have already committed or have spent. What is probably more important is that the $260 million being taken from 1984-85 will establish a base for future payments to secondary education. Surely there has not been a reduction in the need for education. If anything, the need has been increased by the recession, the downturn in employment. People are looking for new ways to make a living and education can help them find new directions.

The amount of money the Bill establishes will govern the kind of education which post-secondary institutions are able to put before the people who need it so badly, the people without work. If we do not give the money to the institutions—I do not speak only of universities but community colleges and technical institutions, which also come under the Bill—then people's ability to find a job will be affected.

The costs of education are increasing, therefore the funds provided by government must also increase. Reducing the money that the federal Government pays forces the institutions to cut back on existing programs and not create new ones which would provide the kind of education required to make people feel a little more secure in the future.

It is all a question of priorities. The Government has decided to save money in the area where it is easiest to do so, and that is the transfer of funds to the provinces for post-secondary education. If that money is cut off the effects will be felt this year, next year, the year after and for many years to come, but it could be done immediately without drastic effects. A few thousand students would not get into the programs they choose and for another few thousand the programs that would equip them for jobs in the future would not be available. This result will be felt three or five years from now.

For a long time the Government has been saying that its priority is employment and that it is going to spend millions of dollars to provide jobs for the youth of the country. Then almost in the same sentence it suggests the kind of restraint which would not allow youth to train for those jobs.

Training programs will be important for youth during the next few years. It is not as if the federal Government had accepted the idea that it does not have some responsibility in education—which many of the provinces would argue is the correct decision—that it does not have responsibility to provide training. Over the years the federal Government has accepted the responsibility and has made many incursions into the training field. That started with training for World War II. A lot of training was necessary at that time and the Government undertook it. After the war, with the huge development that took place after 1945 and in the early 1950s, the federal Government developed institutions and provided per capita grants for training which was directly related to the jobs that were available.

After the war we had to go to the European countries and even to South American countries to find people with the skills that we wanted and which were necessary to help us develop as a country. Because there was a great need for training at that time the federal Government took its responsibility and got into the training field. It did so through direct capital grants to help build the institutions that were necessary and through per capita grants for the number of students actually in training. It made changes and put the money where it was needed. Later it backed off that decision and instead of paying a per capita grant in 1977 moved to block funding which would allow it to operate on a formula. The basis of that formula was that it should be able to give the provinces and the federal Government some idea of the amount of money available for education in the next year or the year after. That was a base which everyone recognized.

What has happened is that the federal Government has changed the base and will not increase funding as it has in the past. It will reduce the base from that of two years ago, the percentage increase will be reduced and will not be that which was agreed upon. Instead of taking into consideration the need for training and the need for flexibility among people, the Government decided to reduce the amount of money available for education. That will make it less possible for our youth and older people looking for jobs to get the training they need.

It is easy to reduce the money paid to colleges and universities. It seems that in the process you are not making some kind of priority decision, but in the long run that is exactly what you are doing.

May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please! It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair to return at 2 p.m.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

IMMIGRATION

FUNDING OF OTTAWA MULTICULTURAL WOMEN'S CENTRE

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I am at a loss to understand the actions of the Department of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts) in deleting $45,000 from the funds of the Ottawa Multicultural Women's Centre. This money, Mr. Speaker, is needed to rehire badly needed co-ordinators for the Centre in order to maintain and improve programs to assist immigrant women in the important task of adjusting to the Canadian way of life. As is well known, Mr. Speaker, immigrant women do have special problems in this area and badly need this assistance.

To cut off a program which is needed and is proving successful, is another example of the total absence of common sense. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I call upon the Minister of Employment and Immigration to reconsider this decision and restore the cutback to the Multicultural Women's Centre. Failing this, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Collenette) to take a serious look at this problem with the view to filling in the possible void if no action is taken by the Deparment of Employment and Immigration.

EMPLOYMENT

ALLEGATIONS MADE BY QUEBEC MINISTER OF EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, speaking before the National Assembly recently, Quebec's Minister of Employment referred to the pilot project designed to help able-bodied young people under 30 and stated that, if such a project is not really worthwhile, it is due to the federal yoke and that independence is the solution.

Mr. Speaker, that is a false and misleading allegation. Indeed, the Quebec Minister of Employment came to Ottawa to discuss this program with the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin). With enthusiasm, we accepted to share the costs of that program for which, incidentally, we will be paying $59 million over two years. This is in addition to the $924 million given to Quebec for 1983-84 under the shared cost social assistance program.

Mr. Speaker, it is utterly ridiculous to make the people of Quebec believe that, if they foot the bill by themselves it will cost them less than it does now when we are paying 50 per cent of the cost. If anyone is forcing Quebecers to carry a yoke, it has to be their provincial Government which is driving them towards independence against their will.

U.S.S.R.—CONDEMNATION OF OFFICIAL'S PRAISE FOR DOWNING OF KOREAN AIRLINER

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, through their many barbaric acts the Communists have made clear their utter disrespect for human life. During the first 30 years of Soviet dictatorship, 83 million people were murdered. In Afghanistan, communist troops have slaughtered entire tribes and have gassed innocent civilians. And, of course, we can never forget, nor forgive, the downing of Korean Airlines Flight 007, in which 269 innocent passengers were thoughtlessly massacred by the Soviets.

These murders are only an example of their savagery. Their pride in their repulsive violence is even more indicative of their cruel nature. In the Soviet Union, Sunday, April 8, marked the official "Day of Anti-Aircraft Defences", hailing the downing of the Korean jetliner. A senior Soviet military official stated the destruction of the plane was a feat of arms comparable to the shooting down of the American U-2 spy plane in 1960.

For these reasons, we will never be able to disarm unilaterally, nor can we ever trust the murdering Communists in disarmament, or even disarmament negotiations.

MINORITY RIGHTS

ATTITUDE OF LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION TO FRENCH MINORITIES

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) proves what we have been saying for months. His address in support of the linguistic minorities is nothing more than an attempt to put Canadians to sleep. His actions contradict his words. First, he has never denounced the anti-French Members for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie)and for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart). Second, he has never told the Manitoba Members who refused to be associated with the motion in support of francophones in that Province to toe the line. Third, far from throwing out dissenters, the Progressive Conservative Party rewards those who undermine the French fact in Canada. As we will find out at three o'clock, he stands behind the candidacy of Bud Sherman, a Manitoba Conservative who has been one of the most uncompromising opponents of the Pawley project. He has just given more important responsibilities to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine as critic in the shadow Cabinet.

Mr. Speaker, like a Mafia leader who advocates-virtue, the Conservative Leader shamelessly lies to Canadians and, back home, anyone who lies is a liar.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

CALL FOR ACTION ON COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, the New Democrats call upon the Government to act quickly and positively upon the 80 recommendations listed in the parliamentary report, Equality Now. In recent public briefing sessions held by members of the Special Committee on the Participation of Visible Minorities in Canadian society, we often had comments raised about the injustices done to Chinese immigrants who had to pay head taxes of up to $500 per individual.

The first Chinese immigrants to Canada arrived in 1858. From 1885 to 1947, along with several other discriminatory measures imposed against them, they had to pay a head tax. Historical documents estimate that between 1886 and 1923 the federal Treasury was enriched by $22 million from the head tax levied only on Chinese immigrants.

We in the New Democratic Party call upon the Government to recognize this injustice and see that those who suffered in this disgusting manner are duly compensated.

In the report, Equality Now, considerable concern was expressed about the lack of advertising by the Government in the ethnic media and the visible minority media. Advertising is the life blood of the ethnic press. We urge the Government to respond to these concerns instead of basically using the Main Street dailies to communicate with the various ethnic cultural groups.

AGRICULTURE

MEETING WITH MEMBERS OF THE UPA

Mr. Rolland Dion (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, UPA representatives met with several members from Quebec and the Minister of Agriculture this morning. The UPA representatives hailed from various areas in Quebec and the discussions dealt mostly with the disastrous spring of 1983.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture confirmed to the UPA representatives that he was willing to consider their requests for compensation for the losses they suffered provided these request are channelled through the Quebec Government as required by the rules of the game. In other words, the Minister is willing to consider the requests for compensation, but not under any condition. Requests must be made through the Quebec Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Garon, and I urge him to listen and to meet with the federal Minister of Agriculture as soon as possible to discuss this serious problem in Quebec.

PUBLIC SERVICE

TREATMENT OF FEMALE CANDIDATE BY COMPETITION BOARD

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Mr. Speaker, despite the introduction last fall of another phase of the affirmative action program which was to ensure that discrimination against hiring women for middle and upper level positions within the Public Service would be abolished, the Government is still only paying lip service to recognizing and fully appreciating the abilities of Canadian women.

An example of how well this affirmative action program is working was vividly brought to my attention. A well qualified, competent woman was insulted and degraded during an interview for a rather unconventional job opportunity in the Public Service. She was told by a member of the interviewing board that she was only there as the token female candidate to satisfy Treasury Board's affirmative action post board scrutiny.

This woman knows she has the right to take her case to the Human Rights Commission, but will not do so for fear of jeopardizing any chance she has with future competitions for which she has applied. How many more women are there in this same position?

When confronted with this kind of neanderthal attitude toward hiring women, how can the women of this country believe they will be employed as a direct result of their ability and professionalism, and not because they are required to fulfil an insulting and degrading quantitative goal the Government opposite hopes will secure the feminist vote? Mr. Speaker, we in the Conservative Party know full well the meaning of affirmative action for women—that merit and not tokenism should be the only factor considered in the assessment of a woman's ability to fill a position. When will the Government opposite stop treating 52 per cent of Canadians like second class citizens and a minority?

EXPRESSION OF THANKS TO MINISTER FOR MEETING WITH UPA DELEGATION

Mr. Michel Veillette (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, like my colleague for Portneuf (Mr. Dion) has just said, we had a meeting this morning with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). I would like to thank him for accepting to meet with the UPA delegates from the Saint-Maurice, Portneuf, Lac-Saint-Jean and Quebec City areas. This meeting was arranged with barely 24 hours' notice.

I should also thank the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture, the Hon. Member for Brome-Missisquoi, as well as my colleagues from Berthier-Maskinongé-Lanaudière, Trois-Rivières, Portneuf, Roberval, Jonquière, Chicoutimi and Richelieu, who were willing to attend this meeting to listen to the demands voiced by farm producers from the Saint-Maurice area and other areas in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, as mentioned by my colleague from Portneuf, the Minister accepted this morning to consider the claims submitted by the farmers and he also responded to the rumour which seems to be going around in Quebec to the effect that the provincial authorities are delaying its crop insurance payments because, according to them, the federal Government is also delaying payment of an amount of $18.5 million. True enough the federal Government is putting off payment of these $18.5 million, but it is also true that the Quebec Government has refused to meet the requirements to which the other Canadian provinces have agreed. In addition, when the Quebec Government says that, without these $18.5 million, they cannot afford to pay the producers, it is not true because the Quebec Government already has paid this amount—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The time allotted to the Hon. Member has expired. The Hon. Member for Joliette.

NATIONAL REVENUE

INCOME TAX RETURNS OF WORKERS RECEIVING GRATUITY INCOME

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Needless to say, Mr. Speaker, I also share the interest voiced by my colleagues concerning the importance of agriculture in Quebec. Still, I would urge my Quebec colleagues to consider the case of tip earners in Quebec. For the third time, Mr. Speaker, I am asking this Government to restore equity and justice for tip earners who are being forced to pay income tax on their total income. Under the circumstances, knowing that the Minister of Employment and Immigration is very busy—and I can understand that—I would suggest that it may have become necessary for him to delegate his authority to someone else who would look into this situation. I therefore invite and urge the Government to remedy that long-standing injustice. The Minister of National Revenue is aware of it. I asked him a few questions on that subject and he told me that it was not his responsibility, but that of the Minister of Finance. Whether from the Minister of Finance or from the Minister of Employment and Immigration, no solution is forthcoming, Mr. Speaker. That being the case, I draw this issue to the attention of my Quebec colleagues—I emphasize the fact that, unless changes are made to the provincial legislation, they may be victim of the injustice which has been tolerated by this Government for two years. I would hope that this time all Members of the House will agree with me and that the Minister will be as concerned about tip earners as he is about his own ambitions concerning—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The time of the Hon. Member has expired. The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand).

EMPLOYMENT

CALL FOR COMMITMENT TO FULL EMPLOYMENT POLICY

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, it appears that the Conservatives are giving some attention to the report of the task force on employment opportunities. At their seminar last weekend at Mont Ste. Marie they proposed, among other things, that there be tax deductions for educational and training savings. That was recommendation No. 88 of the task force report. Most of the other reported proposals on employment training were likewise taken from the task force report.

While the Conservative action is welcome, I would be even more enthused if they and the Liberal leadership candidates supported recommendation No. 1, to implement a full employment policy, and recommendation No. 2, to establish an industrial strategy linked to employment and training policies.

Full employment is possible, Mr. Speaker, if there is a political will to achieve it. On the two occasions since World War II when Liberal Governments made the commitment, in 1945 and in 1964, unemployment was reduced to 3 per cent between 1946 and 1953, and to 3.8 per cent between 1965 and 1967. Mr. Speaker, let us have a six and five program for unemployment to reduce unemployment to 5 per cent by 1986.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ACHIEVEMENT OF BARGAINING RIGHTS FOR EMPLOYEES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to comment on the fact that the House of Commons has just been invited to take another small step into the twentieth century. Members of Parliament will be aware that 15 years ago the parliamentary committee on employer-employee relations in the public service recommended that employees on Parliament Hill be granted bargaining rights similar to other public servants. Many Members will also be aware that Governments since that day have refused to grant those rights to the employees of Parliament. Unfortunately, it is not to the credit of Parliament that these rights are now becoming a reality.

Great credit, on the other hand, must be given to the Public Service Alliance and to the Canada Labour Relations Board. The Labour Relations Board has issued a ruling that employees of Parliament fall under the Canada Labour Code, as we have suggested they did for years, and that Parliament cannot prevent this by harking back to the centuries-old tradition of parliamentary privilege.

This is indeed a great day for the employees of Parliament who have now been granted the rights other Canadians have taken for granted. It is a great day for all Canadians when a black mark such as this, which has interfered with the rights of individuals to have representation through the democratic processes, will finally be eliminated.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

DE HAVILLAND—DEPUTY MINISTERS' REPORT—RATIONALE FOR GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance, in the absence of the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development. I am sure the Minister is aware of The Globe and Mail article of today reporting on a February 2 meeting of 12 Deputy Ministers. A report of this meeting was prepared for the Minister of State for Economic Developement on the future of de Havilland.

The key statement in this report is that the time to make a decision on whether to keep going on the Dash-8 program—which is the key program for de Havilland—was last month, earlier this year when the extra $240 million was put into the program.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, the Government hid from Members of Parliament the crucial nature of the decision to put that $240 million into the company. Why did the Government cover up on this report? Why did the Government keep that information from Members of Parliament when the House was asked to approve that amount of money?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there was no attempt to keep information from Members of Parliament. Senator Austin, the Minister responsible for CDIC, had planned to release this report on Friday of this week, I believe. It was done in anticipation by some other means. However, he does intend to answer questions in the other place. He does intend to meet the press on the subject later this afternoon. I will attempt either to answer or take notice of any questions. I have not read the report myself yet. I am sure Senator Austin will make himself available to the Hon. Member if he wants to ask some specific questions.

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, it is this type of misrepresentations that occurred in December of 1982, and it happened earlier this year. The information was not put in front of Members of Parliament at the time that they were asked to make the decision on spending that additional $240 million.

DEPUTY MINISTER'S FINDINGS

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make three references to that report. The first is that benefits flowing to the Canadian economy, which, while substantial, are "not sufficient to offset the cost of government support" under their market assumptions. The second reference is, the company "will not become commercially viable" for another 10 years at least. The third reference is: "in the absence of a further analysis of such considerations, approval is premature".

Would the Prime Minister tell the House why Members of Parliament were asked to proceed to approve that amount of money without having this information available? Why the coverup?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I repeat that there was no coverup, nor was there any attempt to conceal that information. The amounts discussed in the committee, some $240 million, I believe, were to pay past debts. That money would have had to have been paid whether the company went into receivership or not. There was no misrepresentation as to those amounts.

As to the commercial viability of de Havilland, Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that there has been no attempt to pretend that de Havilland will be commercially viable in the next few years. That has been stated publicly by the Minister. It is something known to the committee members, as opposed to Canadair where the Minister has argued that that was a commercially viable operation as of now with the restructuring and the debt refinancing. The de Havilland decision was made by the Government in the knowledge that there would be no profit from that corporation over the next several years, but the Government made a decision to keep it operating in order to maintain the expertise, know-how, and technology in Canada. There are no hidden facts on that.

Mr. Wilson: The Prime Minister is not going to get away with that one. This is the first time that it has been indicated that this company will not make money for 10 more years. If people went back 10 years and heard anyone say that the Government would have a deficit of $30 billion at this time, they would laugh. Those are the sorts of figures we are dealing with when trying to understand what is behind the Government's motives.

TIMING OF REPORT'S RELEASE

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, there are many people whose jobs and businesses depend on the viability of de Havilland. Will the Prime Minister explain why this information was not given to us at the time, and why Members of Parliament were asked to make a decision two months ago under false pretences? Would he explain why this report was not made available at that time, or why it is being rushed into the public sector now just because of a Globe and Mail report?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is repeating himself. Much of that question was asked in the first question. I repeat that the $240 million which was in the Supplementary Estimates was given in order to pay past debts. That is an amount that would have been necessary even if we had not decided to keep de Havilland alive. The Hon. Member seems to say that had he known that de Havilland was not immediately commercially viable—

Mr. Wilson: You knew something we didn't know.

Mr. Trudeau: Would the Hon. Member listen to my answer? If he wants to ask the questions, the least he can do is have the courtesy to listen to the answers. Now he is asking for a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Let us hear the supplementary, but will the Hon. Member please listen to my answer?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has had two supplementaries. The Chair is trying to recognize as many Members as possible. The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West.

GOVERNMENT POLICY—STATEMENTS MADE BY MINISTERS SEEKING LIBERAL LEADERSHIP

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister who, I am sure, at lunchtime today had an opportunity to discuss with some of the Cabinet Ministers who are seeking the leadership of the Liberal Party some of his thoughts with respect to their statements across Canada. Those statements, which were going off in all directions, were basically opposed to the fundamental cornerstone policies of the Government, such as the National Energy Policy, Employment Policy, universality of social programs, lotteries, and Crown corporation policies. That is just part of the list of areas where members of his Cabinet are attacking the fundamental principles for which his Government stands.

Has the Prime Minister in fact set down guidelines for Cabinet Ministers seeking leadership, about their public pronouncements on government policy and, if not, has he asked for the resignation of these people so that they can speak freely and not contradict the policy of his Government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I stated my view on that yesterday in the House of Commons. Perhaps the Hon. Member would refer to Hansard.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I think the Prime Minister must have thought his answer inadequate because he felt he had to have lunch today, and it is obvious that he is suffering from dyspepsia after that experience.

SOURCES OF FUNDING FOR MINISTERS' LEADERSHIP CAMPAIGNS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister's Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development said of the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development that the policies being put forward by the latter Minister "strike at the heart of our economic recovery program". How can the Prime Minister tolerate the activities of his Ministers, going off in all directions with respect to the policies they are putting forward, which are in contradiction to the policies put forward by the Prime Minister as head of the Government?

Second, one of his own guidelines that he has promulgated with respect to the activities of his ministry and his Ministers deals with gifts and provides that:

> Ministers shall disclose in the Public Registry any personal gift or other benefit of a value exceeding two hundred dollars which they receive from any person not connected with them by blood relationship . . .

In light of that, is he insisting that all donations to Cabinet Ministers who are seeking the leadership have to be disclosed and published in the Public Registry, so that all Canadians can see the sources of their donations for their leadership campaigns?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, first I want to tell the Hon. Member that I have lunch most every day, and today was no different. It had nothing to do with the answers that I gave in the House yesterday.

The second point is that I am grateful for the Hon. Member's concern about policy positions in this Party, and I think that somehow he is taking—

Mr. McGrath: Government.

Mr. Trudeau —the Government's policies, and I will take to heart his sympathy for views held over here and for my position. I do not really feel as exercised about it as he seems to be. Perhaps he should be more concerned about policies or lack thereof on his own side, and spend less time looking at the policies put forward here.

As I said yesterday, we have people who are hoping to become Prime Minister of this country and I think that they are perfectly justified in telling the people how they will govern this country. If that means stating new policies or new points of view, I see nothing but commendation to give to them.

I would hope that after the Mont Ste Marie caucus meeting his Party would learn to state policies for the future. However, since they came back from Mont Ste. Marie they have only been concerned with Liberal policies. Why do they not state some of their own?

With respect to gifts, I think everyone must be smiling about the concern about gifts on our side. I know that the Liberal Federation is planning to enunciate some guidelines as to candidates for the leadership and the receipt of gifts, but it did not happen on their side. Why does the Hon. Member not ask his seat mate—

Mr. Nielsen: They were not Cabinet Ministers.

Mr. Trudeau: I know, but they are presuming they never will be.

Mr. Nielsen: They are, over there.

Mr. Trudeau: We have a Leader of the Opposition who has been laying some claim to becoming Prime Minister, but we do not know what money he received. We do not know what money the giant corporations have given him. Maybe we should hear about it.

Mr. Mulroney: What about your swimming pool?

Mr. Trudeau: I seem to have unnerved the Leader of the Opposition who is now talking about the swimming pool. I would like him to ask a question about the swimming pool and I will gladly answer it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

CROWN CORPORATIONS

DE HAVILLAND—REASONS FOR ADVANCING PUBLIC FUNDING

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to welcome the Prime Minister back from his combination lunch and judo session. I wish to ask him a question about this Crown corporation bail-out. After all, this is the second billion dollar bail-out in approximately two months. People who really care about workable Crown corporations like Saskatchewan Potash and the hydro corporations of the provinces really wonder what is happening.

Does the Prime Minister subscribe to what his Minister of Regional and Economic Dvelopment told The Toronto Star in an interview this weekend, that the Minister did not like the rich uncle syndrome of these Crown corporations? If the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development did not like the rich uncle syndrome, why has the Government, of which both the Prime Minister and the Minister are a part, advanced this money to de Havilland of Toronto without a real plan for making money in the Crown corporation in the future?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Hon. Member to elaborate on the rich uncle syndrome? I did not follow the implication of that question.

Mr. Waddell: Perhaps he can ask his Minister, who appears to be against giving money to Crown corporations but voted in Cabinet to give money to this corporation.

• (1430)

SIZE OF CORPORATION'S WORK FORCE—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question about this report on exactly what is going to happen with de Havilland. The report in The Globe and Mail said the Deputy Ministers had considered a number of cost-cutting measures, which included a substantial reduction in de Havilland's work force. Is the Government's policy that it is going to grant $250 million, as well as some other tax credits, and at the same time lay off workers in de Havilland?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, either we let de Havilland go under or we do not. If we let it go under there will obviously be a major lay-off of workers. If we do not let it go under, if we make the judgment, as we have, that in spite of the fact that it will not be making profits, as we can see in the next few years, if we think it useful to keep it alive, to keep the technology in Canada, to keep those highly skilled workers employed in Canada rather than letting them go to the United States, then the Hon. Member will be on the Government's side and say that indeed we must keep it alive and that we must have a plan for the future, which the Senator responsible for CDIC and de Havilland explained to the parliamentary committee, and which he is prepared to talk about again today when the report is released. But the Hon. Member must make up his mind. On the one hand, he cannot complain about some workers losing their jobs, and then argue that they should have all lost their jobs because we should cut loose from de Havilland.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, with respect to those jobs, these are pretty expensive jobs.

GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Prime Minister, since I cannot ask his Minister, who is like the Crown corporation—he is not accountable to this House, he is not in this House, and so I cannot ask Senator Austin—has there been an advance of money to this corporation at the same time there is a plan to cut jobs in the corporation? Which is it? Is the Government going to continue the jobs in the corporation with a gameplan for the future profitability of the corporation? Or is the Government going to give money away and take jobs away, and not even plan for making any money from the corporation in the future? Which is it?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot believe the Hon. Member is either sincere or reflective in asking that question. Surely if he wants de Havilland to be kept alive and to keep that technology in the country, he is justified in asking for a plan for the future. I have answered the Hon. Member that that plan is there; it has been shown and it has been discussed with Members of Parliament in the committee. But when he says some workers are going to be fired, Mr. Speaker, I imagine that if the company is going to be profitable there will have to be constant rearrangements. And if it means hiring some people and firing others, it is not something the Government will oversee on a day-to-day basis.

What the Government does, and what Members of Parliament will want to do, is make sure that the options are all explored and we attempt to make the corporation profitable as soon as possible. But there is a recognition on the part of the Government that it will not be profitable in the immediate future. Therefore, the choice remains for all of us, Conservatives as well as New Democrats and Liberals—do we keep it alive with moneys from the public purse, or do we let it go under right away and let all the workers lose their jobs and all that technology leave the country? The Hon. Member is not in the position to make up his mind because he wants to argue both sides of the question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SIZE OF LABOUR FORCE—STATEMENT MADE BY MINISTER OF EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration, who had to be dragged back into the House by the Prime Minister. The Minister of Employment and Immigration last Friday in Calgary, when the unemployment statistics were brought down, said:

> The economic recovery is drawing more people into the labour force, causing an increase in the number of people looking for work and inflating the unemployment rate—

He was saying that, Mr. Speaker, at a time when Statistics Canada figures showed that the labour force participation rate had declined by two points from that of December, over the three month period. During that same three month period, unemployment had gone up consistently. Either the Minister was misled, or he was deliberately misleading the Canadian people. The Minister owes it to this House and the unemployed of this country to own up with the truth.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member had the care and concern to look at the matter dispassionately he would see that over the past year the reason for the high levels of unemployment which we have in this country, and which we all regret, is not that we have been failing to create jobs in the Canadian economy, because we have been creating jobs at a very high rate compared to almost every other developed country. The reason for those high unemployment figures is because we have, in comparison to almost all other countries the extremely high entry into the labour force, coming from the young people entering the labour force for the first time, and women entering or re-entering the labour force. If he were to get off his rather pompous and sanctimonious high hat and look accurately at the figures, then he would be able to say that with some truthfulness.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, when it comes to pomposity, the Minister takes second place to no one.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: If the Minister would get off his pompous horse and get himself back into this House and address the problems of the unemployed—that is his responsibility—we would all be better off.

USE OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE FUNDS TO RETRAIN WORKERS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. How can he reconcile the fact—

An Hon. Member: What about Schefferville?

Mr. McGrath: —that the labour force participation rate went from 64.5 per cent in December to 64.3 per cent in March? During that same period unemployment was going up.

While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, let me also ask the same Minister, who said in Calgary that unemployment insurance should be channelled into retraining as opposed to maintenance income—the Minister is responsible for UI—why does he not do that? Why does he not do it now instead of talking about it?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately increasing the decibel range of the Hon. Member's question does nothing to increase either its accuracy or its perception. The fact of the matter is that if he wants to look at the statistics over the last year he will see that my comments are accurate about entry into the labour force.

He asks with great pomposity and great vigour: "why are we not using unemployment insurance now to provide training for people?" The answer is, of course, that we are. That is exactly what Section 38 and Section 39 of the Unemployment Insurance Act now permit.

Mr. McGrath: That is not what you said in Calgary.

Mr. Roberts: That is what we are doing to the extent of something like $1 billion a year. Once again the Hon. Member has shown his profound lack of knowledge of what the facts of the situation are.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INDIAN AFFAIRS

TRIBAL COUNCIL FUNDS DONATED TO MINISTER'S LEADERSHIP CAMPAIGN

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Yesterday he gave a commitment to me and to Members of the House of Commons that he would investigate the situation regarding the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development receiving funds from Indian Bands and Tribal Councils throughout this country, which the Minister yesterday admitted receiving. Has the Prime Minister completed that investigation? Would he report his findings to the House?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I did ask people in the Privy Council Office who are concerned with conflict of interest guidelines. Their finding is that none of these funds which were given to the campaign fund of the Minister were provided from public moneys. They were given by a private corporation—

Mr. McDermid: That is outrageous.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): You keep quiet, you asshole.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: They were given by a private corporation which is owned and managed by the natives, and which operates various commercial enterprises like restaurants and other such operations.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, does the Prime Minister feel that it is morally correct for a Minister of Indian Affairs, who, as late as yesterday in Winnipeg, said that Indian people suffer the highest infant mortality rate, have the greatest poverty in the country—

Mr. LeBlanc: You demagogue.

Mr. McDermid: Never mind.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: —that have the highest suicide rate in this country, that need a half billion dollars in funds to eradicate their problems—that he is morally bankrupt in accepting money from these people for his own leadership campaign? It is sleazy. He is a morally bankrupt minister.

Mr. Cook: Government funds, too.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know of no guidelines that would only authorize white people or rich people to give money to political purposes.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: And if the Hon. Member disagrees with that, I think the implications of the Hon. Member's question is that somehow native people should not be involved in the political process.

Mr. McDermid: Not at all.

• (1440)

Mr. Trudeau: The Hon. Member says, "Not at all." He should know that native people, those who live on reserves in particular, have some benefits from the Government of Canada, of a tax nature and others. Is he saying that they should not engage in commercial interests? Is he saying that if they do they should not be free as directors of that commercial interest to give money to political parties? I think that is an untenable position. Should we return again to the Tory leadership campaign when we know that giant corporations have given money to prospective leaders of the Party and eventually, as they think, of the Government, without even revealing the source of these funds?

Mr. McDermid: Will he reveal the source of all his?

Mr. Trudeau: He wants to attack some 6,000 or 7,000 Ojibways. I think that is tremendous hypocrisy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Oshawa.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has recognized the Hon. Member for Oshawa and will recognize the Hon. Member for Yukon subsequently.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—MINING OF HARBOURS—REQUEST FOR CONDEMNATION OF UNITED STATES ACTIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It concerns the participation of a United States agency in the mining of harbours in Nicaragua. In the past the Prime Minister has rightly expressed deep concern about superpower involvement in military affairs in this region. Yesterday the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives said the following of this action:

It is clear that it is legally indefensible.

Will the Prime Minister condemn this activity and point out that it completely undermines efforts to achieve peace in the region?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Government is indeed concerned about these attacks which appear to represent a further escalation of the conflict between Nicaragua and the forces opposed to the current regime. Our concern about this issue has been conveyed to the United States Government. Any action to resolve the problems in this area must be taken within the context of the Contadora initiative. We support the rule of law, and we believe that the rule of international law should apply in relation to these matters.

CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask my supplementary question of the Prime Minister. In his peace initiative he closely identified with peace in the regions of the world, not simply with concern about nuclear weapons as such. Given the expression of deep concern about superpower involvement, given the reality that one ship recently damaged by mines in Nicaraguan waters was a ship of the Soviet Union and that if this should happen again we could have a direct superpower confrontation, will the Prime Minister join the Government of Great Britain—I say to my Tory friends on the right, the Conservative Government of Great Britain—and condemn this activity by the United States in that region?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who is currently in the Central American area, expressed Canada's concern, particularly that the requirements of international law be observed. I want to point out again that Canada is a country which has consistently opposed the use of military force and has taken the position that international law should be followed by all countries. I point out in relation to the support of the rule of law, the example that Canada—

Mr. Nielsen: Next page, turn the page.

Mr. Regan: —having a disagreement on the underwater boundary with the United States, is abiding by the decision which will be taken by the International Court at the Hague. This is consistent with Canada's approach to these matters. We again reiterate and have conveyed our position that military violence should not be involved and that the rule of law internationally should be adhered to.

Mr. Broadbent: I will try a third time to direct my question to the Prime Minister, who is always very good in lofty generalizations about peace but very short in making very specific criticism when criticism is warranted.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REFERENCE OF ISSUE TO WORLD COURT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question concerns the reference of this matter to the World Court at The Hague. The United States has already indicated, in clear violation of its own traditions, to which indication many other Americans have already objected, that it has no intention of abiding by a World Court decision. I ask the Prime Minister again to lend some credibility to his own expressed concern about the rule of law, in this case international law. Will he directly intervene and at least request the United States Government to accept the decision of the World Court on this important matter?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, again I say to the Hon. Member—

Mr. Crosbie: Where is the peacemaker?

Mr. Regan: —that our concern has been expressed to the United States Government in relation to this matter. It is our belief that military action will not bring lasting peace in Central America.

Mr. Speaker: A short supplementary to this question. The Hon. Member for Victoria.

PREPAREDNESS OF CANADIAN MINESWEEPERS

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, just yesterday the same subject was raised by the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam who asked the Prime Minister to send a minesweeper down to assist her friends in Nicaragua. I would like to ask the Minister of National Defence how many minesweepers the Canadian navy has which are ready to go to sea today and sweep mines.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member very well knows the answer to that question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: The answer is none.

Mr. Kempling: A big zero.

THE ARTS

OSCAR NIGHT IN LOS ANGELES

Mr. Robert Gourd (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. While the Opposition is doing all of its best to undermine Government policies, no one seems to have noticed the international event which took place yesterday and the fact that Canada won not one, but two Oscars. As I know quite well that the production which won the first Oscar for the National Film Board falls well within his jurisdiction, I would like to ask the Minister of Communications what role the Canadian Government did play in connection with the film for which Canada won its second Oscar last night?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, first, I believe that all the Members of this House will want to join me in offering our most sincere and warmest congratulations to the two National Film Board producers, Adam Symanski and Cynthia Scott, for their wonderful film Flamenco at 5:15 which won an Oscar last night.

[English]

I think all Hon. Members of the House would join with me in extending our most sincere congratulations to Janice L. Platt and Atlantis Films of Toronto who produced the film Boys and Girls for the CBC, as an independent production unit.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

PETRO-CANADA—GOVERNMENT POLICY ON GAZOLINE RETAIL OUTLETS

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development. As a Minister of the Crown, does the Minister believe that Crown owned gasoline retail outlets should be sold to the private sector?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Well—

Mr. Speaker: There is a well established rule of the House—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is economic development.

Mr. Speaker: —that Ministers may be asked questions in respect of their ministerial responsibility. Is the Minister responsible for Petro-Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Economic development.

Mr. Speaker: Such a question should be directed in terms of a Minister's ministerial responsibility.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to have to do this, but either we have rules or we do not have rules.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is within the rules, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Would you care to address a question to the Prime Minister?

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, may I say with respect that inasmuch as the Government has always contended that energy is a prime motor of its economic development plans, and that the Hon. gentleman is the Minister of State for Economic Development, it seems to me that the question is indeed entirely appropriate.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: And inasmuch as it has been clearly established that the Minister, for whom I have some respect, has clearly repudiated policy which he had been defending for four years, then there is someting wrong with the motor, apart from the Government.

• (1450)

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Leader of the Opposition can direct his question to the Prime Minister as the Leader of the Government.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, I will ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It is difficult to find anyone responsible over there.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I know I am being very presumptuous in assuming that this Minister will give an answer. But inasmuch as he has already given one to the press, I will ask him, as a Minister of the Crown, if it is the Government's policy in the area for which he is specifically responsible, that Crown assets such as retail gasoline outlets should be disposed of immediately to the private sector?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

IMPACT OF ACTIVITIES OF CROWN CORPORATIONS ON GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead on a supplementary.

Some Hon. Members: We want Joe! We want Joe!

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead has the floor.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): The candidates opposite will note that no one on their side wants them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, let me ask the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development whether it is among the responsibilities of his Department to assess the impact on federal economic development policy of the activities of federal Crown corporations?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Indeed it is, Mr. Speaker. Let me say, as part of that, that good management of taxpayers' assets has always been a policy of this Government, and I hope will always be a policy of all Governments. Good management suggests that assets should be well managed. That means in some instances in economic development policy that I believe certain assets can be disposed of and the funds invested in other areas of priority. We all know there are financial constraints that afflict all Governments. I do not believe that if I take the position that any particular asset acquired during the last four years by this Government, or by a Crown corporation, should never be sold, that the principle of Cabinet solidarity deals with that kind of issue in any manner whatsoever.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary. The Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead.

MINISTER'S POSITION ON SALE OF SERVICE STATIONS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, having established the generality of that question and his responsibility for Crown corporations in general, is it the position of the Minister that the Crown corporation, Petro-Canada, should, in the interests of Canadian economic development, sell its service stations? Is that the position of the Minister?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have already ruled that the Minister responsible for a specific Crown corporation can be asked questions in respect of his ministerial responsibility. I believe the Right Hon. Member has made his point. The Hon. Leader—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

POLICY INQUIRY

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, of course they do not want to sell the service stations. They are going to be working there after the election—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: —if they take advantage of our manpower retraining program.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Leader of the Opposition was rising to ask a question. The Hon. Member has been recognized to ask a question.

Mr. Mulroney: Inasmuch as the Prime Minister referred earlier to his consultations with Privy Councillors with regard to conflict of interest guidelines, and it seems that we have heard conflict between the Minister of Energy and the Minister of State for Economic Development, will the Prime Minister, in light of these seriously contradicting responses with regard to a policy that goes to the heart of the action he has proposed for four years, inform the House whether that which appears to be a major breach of Cabinet solidarity to the rest of the country is consistent with the view that he has been holding? Also, who speaks for the Government on such a fundamental policy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on matters of energy, apart from myself the Minister of Energy speaks for the Government. He will continue to speak for the Government on energy matters as long as he holds that portfolio.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Oops!

Mr. Trudeau: And even after.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: After someone else is sworn in as Prime Minister it will be up to that Prime Minister to decide what the policy is as regards energy and other matters, and up to the Minister he will name as Minister of Energy.

HEALTH

LICENSING OF FOREIGN TRAINED PHYSICIANS

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. As the Minister is already aware, there is a serious problem in our country in obtaining intern or residency training positions for foreign trained physicians who came to Canada as refugees, to qualify them for a licence to practise medicine in Canada. From a letter I received from the Canadian Medical Association, the problem appears to be caused by the fact that "the provincial Governments have been restricting and reducing the amount of money and the number—"

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the Hon. Member please ask his question?

Mr. Flis: Yes, Mr. Speaker. This is creating problems, even for the graduates of Canadian medical schools. Will the Minister assure this House that she will negotiate with the provinces as soon as possible to alleviate this problem, especially when Canadians in remote areas of Canada are begging for qualified doctors?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that the problem which exists is under provincial jurisdiction because it is part of manpower utilization. The licensing, training, and other components are provincial. We could undertake to have this put on the agenda of the next federal-provincial meeting, either of the Deputy Ministers or of the Ministers of Health.

However sympathetic we are to the problem of trained qualified doctors who cannot practise in Canada where we need them, in northern parts of Canada in particular, it remains that the general context is one of a country with too many doctors. We have opened our doors to refugees of different origins, and Polish doctors in particular are now practising all sorts of trades that do not have anything to do with their training. It is a waste of competence. We could undertake to place this on the next agenda of federal-provincial Health Ministers or Deputy Ministers.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

INTEREST RATES FOR LONG-TERM LOANS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture who handles Farm Credit Corporation policy. An increase was announced today in the rates of Farm Credit Corporation loans from the November rate of 13 per cent for long-term loans, to 15 per cent. This is putting a lot of pressure on the existence of the Farm Credit Corporation since interest rates on loans through banks and credit unions are considerably lower for three and five-year terms.

● (1500)

Given the problems farmers are facing when trying to get financing this year, I wonder if the Minister could tell us what he is going to do about farmers whose 4 per cent rebate has now run out? What is he going to do for the farmers who are facing financial difficulty? Is he going to continue that program? What happens to farmers whose eligibility has been dropped? Will they now be allowed to go broke?

Point of Order—Mr. Hnatyshyn

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asks me what I am going to do. He knows what we have done in the past to help farmers. We have assisted farmers more than any other nation in the world by providing low interest rates for those in difficulty.

Many of these farmers who are producing such things as beef and pork have not been able to make a payment on those low interest rate loans that were given for two years. We are reviewing that situation. If we can possibly save those people, we will.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. HNATYSHYN—QUESTIONS CONCERNING ACTIVITIES OF CROWN CORPORATIONS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, at the conclusion of Question Period, I wish to address two points of order. I think these points of order are important to the ability of the Official Opposition to question the Government properly and effectively with respect to its policies.

My first point of order, Mr. Speaker, deals with your interim observations with respect to the questioning of the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston) about a particular Crown corporation. I believe that two elements must be considered before we make any definitive decision about the ability of Members to address questions of an economic nature to the Minister of State for Economic Development. It may be that these questions related to a specific Crown corporation policy but you will have to understand, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister responsible for that Crown corporation is in the other place. The Minister responsible for the CIDC is in fact the person who would have prime responsibility for that Crown corporation. When asking direct questions relating to the administration of the Crown corporation, we are precluded from asking the Minister who has direct responsibility.

I would like to point out that on that basis alone, we should be given some reasonable latitude to deal with Ministers with economic portfolios who, I think it would be fair to say, have the responsibility of supervising and directing the activities of Crown corporations. Indeed, referring to Petro-Canada by way of example, it is a matter that is well known and has been stated by the Government that Petro-Canada is an instrument of government policy. It is a window on the industry but it is primarily an instrument of government policy. The Government has indicated to us over and over again that this Crown corporation in particular was, as my Leader has said, one of the engines of economic activity in our country.

I do not believe it is reasonable to attempt to restrict us when directing legitimate questions about the policy of the Government to the Minister who has specific responsibility for economic development. I believe it is reasonable for members of the Official Opposition to ask those kinds of questions.

There is another point of order which I would like to raise with you, Mr. Speaker. I do not want to waste the time of the House—

Mr. Speaker: May I comment on the Hon. Member's first point of order. The rule is quite clear. Questions may be directed to a Minister in respect of ministerial responsibility. This has been well established by precedent.

In this particular instance, questions were permitted to be asked of the Minister of State for Economic Development which were of a general nature and related to policy. Questions relating to a specific Crown corporation which is clearly not the Minister's responsibility were not permitted to be directed to him. The question asked was a very specific one relating to administrative responsibility for a named Crown corporation. Where the Minister responsible is in the other place, a question can be directed to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or, in this case, to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) who again has a direct involvement in the policy in that particular field.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: No, Sir.

Mr. Speaker: It was the decision of the Chair that a question cannot be directed to a Minister who cleary does not have administrative responsibility for a specific Crown corporation.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I think you will find that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) has no responsibility for Petro-Canada at all. He does have the responsibility for energy matters but the fact of the matter is that the responsibility for that Crown corporation was removed and put in the hands of the Minister responsible for CIDC.

MR. HNATYSHYN—QUESTIONS ASKED BY PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARIES

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, my second point of order relates to a practice of the House which I think has been well established by your predecessors, Madam Speaker Sauvé and Mr. Speaker Jerome. The practice was very simple and it was that Parliamentary Secretaries were not recognized for the purposes of asking questions of the Ministry. That precedent is well established and is one which has been followed without exception over the course of my parliamentary career.

Today, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Gourd) directed a question to the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox). Indeed, it was a reasonable question and dealt with the Academy Awards as they related to Canada. The question was a soft one and I am not objecting to its substance. However, the precedent is quite clear that Parliamentary Secretaries, in view of the fact that they carry some responsibility for answering on behalf of the Ministry, have no place in Question Period, which should be reserved for Opposition and—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has a valid point.

MR. DEANS—ALLEGED REFERENCE BY MR. REGAN TO OFFICIAL DOCUMENT DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I regret that the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Regan) has left the House but I feel it is important to raise the matter now in order that you may consider it, Mr. Speaker.

You are aware, Sir, that on page 115 of Beauchesne, Citation 327(1) reads as follows:

A Minister of the Crown is not at liberty to read or quote from a despatch or other state paper not before the House, unless he be prepared to lay it upon the Table.

Citation 327(5) reads as follows:

To be cited, a document must be quoted or specifically used to influence debate.

You will know, Sir, that during the Question Period my Leader asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) a question with regard to some actions that were being undertaken in Central America. The Prime Minister yielded to the Minister for International Trade for the purposes of answering. In the process of answering the first question asked, the Minister for International Trade made a direct reference to, and I believe cited from, a document which he claimed was a communication between the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States with regard to this very important matter.

I would ask you, Sir, carefully to review the record in Hansard to determine whether my understanding of what was said at the time is correct. If I am correct and the Minister did in fact make reference to and use that particular document in an effort to influence the proceedings at that particular point in time, I would ask that the Minister be required, as per the generally accepted practice not only in this House of Commons but in the House of Commons at Westminster, to table the document that he used to influence the conduct of the proceedings.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will take note of the observations of the Hon. Member and will consider them.

MR. HNATYSHYN—QUESTIONS ASKED BY PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARIES

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order raised by the Hon. House Leader of the Official Opposition which dealt with Parliamentary Secretaries asking questions in the House. You commented very briefly, Mr. Speaker, that he had a valid point. I would like to argue for a moment that it is a valid point only in a very limited sense.

While it is true that Mr. Speaker Jerome did not allow Parliamentary Secretaries to ask questions, it has always been my belief that Mr. Speaker Jerome was wrong in making such a blanket ruling because a Parliamentary Secretary has a very limited responsibility to the House and a very limited influence on Cabinet Ministers. In fact, that responsibility and influence pertains only to the particular Minister to whom he is Parliamentary Secretary.

It is my contention, Sir, that it is not proper to deny the right of a Parliamentary Secretary to ask questions of other Ministers. It should be taken for granted that he or she would not ask questions of the Minister to which the Parliamentary Secretary is assigned. However, to prevent a Parliamentary Secretary from asking questions of other Ministers of the Crown to whom he has no attachment and for whom he bears no responsibility whatsoever is, in my opinion, denying that Parliamentary Secretary a right which is provided to every other Hon. Member of the House except Ministers of the Crown.

I can see no justification for denying to a Parliamentary Secretary the right to ask a question pertaining to his constituency or to Government policy matters for which he bears no responsibility whatsoever.

Mr. Speaker: I have heard the Hon. Member's representation and the Chair, of course, will be guided by precedent.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MUNRO (HAMILTON EAST)—REFERENCE BY MR. McDERMID TO INDIAN PEOPLE

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege with reference to the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid). I listened carefully to his remarks. They were not only insulting remarks with reference to myself, but what I found even more disgusting were the demeaning references to the Indian people. The Hon. Member talked about them in the context of "these" people. He went on to suggest that it is okay for, I guess, unions and corporations, Mr. Speaker, and non-natives to contribute to the political process, but if it is an Indian corporation, somehow its contribution should be rejected because it is representative of "these" people.

He went on then, Mr. Speaker, to make a value judgment as to how "these" people should spend their own money—

Mr. Nielsen: Where is the privilege?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): —that non-native contributions are okay, but not the native people's contributions. This whole case by the Hon. Member is symbolic of the demeaning and disgusting paternalism which has been so—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You have gone too far.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the Hon. Minister please state how his privilege is affected? He appears to the Chair to be engaging in debate.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am hoping to prove, by the disgusting arguments and implicit insults to the Indian people themselves—

Some Hon. Members: Come on!

Mr. McDermid: You know better.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): —on grounds so baseless, how baseless are his slurs on my character.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Well, let me just say that, as I understand it, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member, and Hon. Members of the Official Opposition, espouse the cause of self-government for the Indian people yet when they make judicious choice as to how they will participate in the political process—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He would substitute his own judgment.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Speaker: Order. I can understand the emotion with which the Minister speaks. However, again the Chair must be very precise, and I would invite the Minister to state how his privilege is affected.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I am only suggesting, Mr. Speaker, that when one makes such disgusting insinuations and personal remarks it is an insult to this House and to the integrity of all Hon. Members and should be rebutted. All I can indicate, because of the baselessness of the remarks, and for which there was no justification, is that if there is anyone who symbolizes sort of a poverty in terms of any presence of any decency, it is the immoral and disgusting behaviour of the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have the honour to inform the House that the petition presented—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: There are other seats in this House, too.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Will the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) please be seated when I am on my feet.

The Chair has listened to the remarks of the Minister and in the opinion of the Chair there is no case of privilege established. If the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown wants to engage in further debate, and I can understand his desire—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: It is not debate, Sir, it is rebuttal.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is trying with considerable difficulty to determine whether or not the privileges of the Minister have been breached, and it has determined that the Minister has not made a case of privilege. On what grounds does the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown seek to be recognized?

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I have a new question of privilege. The Minister just made the statement in the House that I had made certain remarks, which I did not make at all. In fact, his own Leader, the Prime Minister of Canada, made the remarks, not me. I wish he would withdraw exactly what he said because it was the Prime Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order. In the opinion of the Chair, this is debate—in the opinion of the Chair.

MR. DOMM—NUCLEAR DISARMAMENT

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour today to table a petition on behalf of the 325 members of St. John's Baptist Parish, who are constituents of mine in the federal riding of Peterborough, regarding the very serious question of world peace and nuclear disarmament. Their petition is an urgent plea for increased dialogue and discussion on this most important question in order to facilitate an end to the nuclear arms race.

BLUE WATER BRIDGE AUTHORITY ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE BRIDGE AUTHORITY MEMBERSHIP

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-233, an Act to amend the Blue Water Bridge Authority Act.

Some Hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, when the Blue Water Bridge Committee was established it was assumed there would be an American and Canadian presence. As it turns out, the American Government has decided to absorb all of the costs of operating the Blue Water Bridge on its side. What we are simply asking for is to increase the membership of the Blue Water Bridge Committee from four to five. In that way it will be composed of an odd number and the Chairman can remain independent.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 483, 486, 708 and 718.

[Text]

LEPREAU II PROJECT

Question No. 483—Mr. Howie:

Did the Government authorize Atomic Energy of Canada Limited to spend up to $10 million to initiate preliminary studies to determine the economic viability of the Lepreau II project and, if so, on what date will a schedule for the calling of tenders for the study be established?

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Yes, the federal Government authorized AECL to spend up to $10 million to initiate preliminary studies to determine the economic viability of the Lepreau II project. Because of the nature of the studies (nuclear design activities and power sales marketing), they are being conducted by Maritime Nuclear, an organization established in Fredericton, New Brunswick for this purpose and staffed jointly by AECL and the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission. The studies will not be put out for tender.

DRIE—PAYMENTS TO NON-PROFIT ORGANIZATIONS

Question No. 486—Mr. Howie:

1. In the current fiscal year, did the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion make any payments to non-profit organizations to promote economic co-operation and development and, if so, in what amount?

2. Were any payments made to any such organization in the Province of New Brunswick and, if so, what are the names of the organizations and what amount was paid to each?

Order Paper Questions

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): 1. For the fiscal year 1983-84, a total amount of $6,989,381 was spent under Vote 10 of the Department's Main Estimates.

2. Yes.

Organization	Amount
CADMI Microelectronic/Microélectronique Inc.	$ 100,000
The Canadian Institute for Research on Regional Development	$1,000,000
Atlantic Provinces Economic Council	$ 100,000

EXEMPT STAFF—MINISTER OF COMMUNICATIONS

Question No. 708—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

1. Are any exempt staff employed by the Minister of Communications and, if so, what are their (a) titles (b) positions (c) names?

2. Do any of the staff mentioned in part I receive income, financial assistance or other benefits related to their employment from sources other than the ministerial budget and, if so (a) which members (b) what are the details of the income, financial assistance or other benefits?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): 1. The Minister of Communications currently employs six exempt staff as shown hereunder:

(a) & (b)	(c)
Executive Assistant	Jean-François Thibault
Special Assistant	Jean Bertrand
Special Assistant	Gilles Cloutier
Special Assistant	Johanne Duval
Special Assistant	Ewald R. Petershofer
Special Assistant (Policy Advisor)	Sandra Macdonald

2. No.

EXEMPT STAFF—MINISTRY OF STATE FOR SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

Question No. 718—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

1. Are any exempt staff employed by the Ministry of State for Science and Technology and, if so, what are their (a) titles (b) positions (c) names?

2. Do any of the staff mentioned in part I receive income, financial assistance or other benefits related to their employment from sources other than the ministerial budget and, if so (a) which members (b) what are the details of the income, financial assistance or other benefits?

Mr. Rolland Dion (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Economic and Regional Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): 1. No. 2. Not applicable.

[English]

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Is it the pleasure of the House that the remaining questions shall be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS AND ESTABLISHED PROGRAMS FINANCING ACT, 1977

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacLaren (for Mr. Lalonde) that Bill C-12, an Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I was commenting before lunch on the priorities of this Government as far as education is concerned. Basically, the point which we have been trying to get across to the Government in suggesting that it withdraw either the six and five clause from this Bill, or the Bill entirely, is that it recognize the effect its action is having on the educational system in the country.

It is easy to reduce the amount of money that is being given to colleges and universities. However, what is the effect of not having the funds available? How does it affect universities in the country? The youth are probably the most dependent upon post-secondary institutions—the technical schools, universities and other institutions—of education. They are going to be unable to get the kind of training they think is going to be necessary. It is going to affect the kind of medical research that is going on. It is going to affect the development programs of the country which are so important to Canada. It is going to affect research in agriculture. In the case of agriculture, Mr. Speaker, we need 100 new researchers for the next two years to replace those that are leaving the service and to bring the service up to standard.

All of these are the effects of the Bill that is before the House. It indicates a kind of short-sightedness, Mr. Speaker, which we are getting used to with the Government. However, we would expect that in this particular area the Government might have taken a second look.

What happens if we do not have funds to finance educational institutions? If we do have those funds available we are able to build a flexible work force which can fill the jobs which will become available during the next few years. Everyone knows and accepts the fact that almost all of the people in the major industries will have to be retrained in the next few years. If we have the funds we can guarantee that there will be a work force in the future that can fill the jobs that are available. People will also have the opportunity to expand their horizons. We have programs of continuing education and retirement education. You can name almost to no end the kind of programs that can be put forward if the money is available. Instead of that, the Government is reducing the amount of money that will be spent on post-secondary education or transferred to the provinces to be passed on.

What happens when funds from the provinces are not available for education? In that case we will have many less skilled workers available. We will have less people available to teach at universities. We will be forced to go overseas or south of the border for instructors at universities. If the cycle that took place in the 1950s and 1960s repeats itself, by 1990 we will be looking overseas for skilled labourers to fill the jobs available in Canada.

Right now we spend almost $1 billion per month on unemployment insurance payments. Part of the reason for that is that we do not have jobs. When we do not have the money to invest in education, it affects the whole standard of education across the country. The Government is inflicting an on-again-off-again restraint program on the educational system. We are never really certain what funds are going to be available next year. That makes it impossible to start programs because it is not known whether they will be completed.

Many other countries use the opportunity which comes from unemployment to upgrade the standard of skill of their workers. Sweden, for instance, has a very good system. It gives at least 4 per cent or 5 per cent of its unemployed people the training they need. We must realize, Mr. Speaker, that money spent for education is wisely spent. If we continue to spend it we will be making an investment in the future and guaranteeing a good future for many more people. It is not a waste of taxpayers' money. It is an investment which can train a whole new generation of Canadians. Undue restraint is a waste, Mr. Speaker. It reduces the opportunity for people to fulfil their potential.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald).

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have been listening to the remarks of the Hon. Member. I have great concern about this subject. One of the things that bothers me is that not only are we seeing moneys reduced from what they otherwise would have been, but we are seeing this practice extended into the future. I would like to have the Hon. Member's comments with regard to the projection for 1984-85. It is bad enough that funds are being taken out of this current fiscal year that would otherwise have been transferred to the provinces. However, that is also being projected forward so that next year there will be some $260 million less sent to the provinces for post-secondary education than otherwise would have been the case. This is happening at a time of crisis in the university situation.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member for his comments on whether that $260 million should at least be set to one side. The Government is going ahead with the current year, but surely it could consider the 5 per cent limitation it is putting on the next fiscal year and decide not to take that decision at the present time. The Government could let that part of the Bill go and change its mind about that. How could the Hon. Member react to that suggestion?

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Member's question. As the Member has mentioned, we recognize that the present reduction of $118 million is for the past year. The universities and post-secondary institutions are already missing that money because they had planned on spending it. Anything the government could do to replace that money or guarantee to provide the $260 million for 1984-85 would be very helpful. Of greater danger is the fact that we are projecting this base for later years. Therefore, we will be reducing the total amount of money that will be spent relative to what we are spending now. From past experience we know that by 1990 we will be looking overseas for people that we should be training now. If we do not get the money back very quickly we can expect that to happen and there is not very much we can do about it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There being no further questions or comments the House will proceed to debate. The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes).

• (1530)

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, for the first time since I have been elected to the House of Commons, I wish to make a speech in French today. It is a special occasion for me after the many lessons I took in that language.

Last weekend, the caucus of the Progressive Conservative Party had a challenging debate on technology. At the end of that debate, we issued a press release. In that release, we mentioned that the Progressive Conservative study group on labour technological reconversion and recycling had concluded that Canada does not have the tools required to come to grips with tomorrow's technological challenges with respect to training and recycling. According to the members of the study group, the problems of the last decade stemmed in part from the fact that the Government's investments in human resources fell short of the mark. That is the major problem in our country. I repeat the last sentence: the Government's investments in human resources fell short of the mark. It is a serious problem, and the subject under consideration today is along the same line, since we are talking about the country's human resources in secondary schools. The Government intends to cut down its investments in that sector and I think that, in this day and age, it does not augur well for Canada.

Mr. Speaker, it is also stated in the release that, unless there is a significant increase in resources earmarked for training, we will end up with far too few workers with the skills required to meet the future needs of the labour market. Therefore, the study group urged the Progressive Conservative Party to make major changes in current policies and programs so that workers will have better opportunities to improve themselves. Our young people need more challenging opportunities to better themselves, but in the present context, Mr. Speaker, the same thing applies to adults because they are the ones who ought to attend secondary level courses lest they be left behind in this rapidly changing world. All Canadians have a stake in this issue.

On that occasion, the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) said that the recommendations contained in the report would make training and recycling more readily accessible to those who need them, while at the same time providing for a better mix of private and public funds to achieve our goals with respect to training. I am referring to the release, Mr. Speaker, but the report itself contains 24 very important recommendations for the country.

We came to the conclusion that Canada is facing five major problems. We said that the first one is the need to make industry and labour more aware of the opportunities offered by new technology. The second problem is the urgency of redefining national policies with a view to promoting increased productivity in the public and private sectors. The third one is the need to upgrade and speed up our methods of gathering, processing and circulating statistics related to the labour market. The fourth and most important problem in my opinion is the need to increase financial and human investments in the field of education, to extend the training programs available in the private sector, to update the existing public educational facilities, to upgrade the teaching profession, and to look for new ways to provide the necessary training. There are many concepts to deal with in the area of education. Each and everyone in the public sector needs funding, and this is very important in today's debate. The fifth problem is the need to promote co-operation between governments, industry and labour.

Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative Party has suggested that for the well-being of all Canadians our national policies must be changed in five major areas. The first thing would be to change the taxation system so as to promote investments in the field of education by encouraging individuals and businesses to invest in the development of human resources.

The second change would be to provide better opportunities for welfare recipients to take part in programs which would help them acquire new skills for the future.

Mr. Speaker, the third change would be to increase the role played by the private sector, by businesses and non-profit organizations alike, in providing training services.

The fourth change would be to develop policies to promote the acquisition of new skills and their use to manufacture new products, and to make this approach the cornerstone of an industrial strategy directed toward the future. The fifth change would be to revamp some of the systems and institutions in our society in order to promote co-operation and reduce the conflicts between governments, labour and industry. These are the five major concepts related to policy changes in Canada. These are major concepts developed to solve major problems. In each case, they are very important concepts related to education in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, we have made 24 specific major recommendations. The first one is to provide financial assistance to people undergoing training. Among the types of assistance which could be available would be financial support provided by the employers and the Government. There would be various ways to provide this support, but the Task Force has suggested the following:

(i) All persons eligible under public assistance programs (including unemployment insurance, social welfare or Workmen's Compensation Board benefits) should be allowed to take training courses while receiving benefits, even under programs that are not sponsored by the Government. These programs should also be changed to establish clearly that the major purpose is to develop human potential first and foremost. They must therefore last as long as necessary to allow the trainees to acquire the skills which will make them less likely to find themselves in need of financial assistance in the future. It would be important to invest in the area of human resources.

(ii) The people concerned must be encouraged to invest in their own development. There would be many ways of making this easier for them:

(a) By authorizing the development of tax-free savings plans which could be used for educational purposes. If we provide tax savings for people who put money aside to buy a house, we should develop a similar investment plan for them to improve their skills. It would be the same as for housing plans.

(b) Tuition fees should be deductible from income, whatever its source. Education is an investment for the individual, and the Income Tax Act should be amended accordingly.

(c) Many individuals who are greatly in need of training have very little money and often hardly any assets.

For them to be able to invest in their own training, a sort of loan system would have to be set up. These loans would have to be guaranteed if they came from the private sector. The current student loan program could be considerably extended for this purpose. On the other hand, we could consider establishing an education mortgage plan, guaranteed or insured by the private sector.

It is suggested in paragraph (d) that the Unemployment Insurance Act should be thoroughly amended to emphasize employment instead of unemployment. Benefits should be paid to the people who are really trying to fit in the labour market, to develop their skills, increase their mobility, obtain the necessary counselling and training, if they lack the knowledge and experience they need to compete on the labour market. Amounts paid for unemployment insurance purposes should be considered not as expenses, but rather as tax credits aimed at compensating for current inequalities. People who have contributed to the scheme for long periods of time without ever applying for unemployment insurance benefits should be entitled to longer eligibility periods for re-training purposes.

Paragraph (e) states that the Income Tax Act should be amended to encourage employers willing to do so, to offer financial assistance to their employees who wish to seek full time or part time training. All relevant expenses should be considered as tax deductible items. Moreover, they should receive tax credits to compensate their costs.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the public school system needs teachers to teach adults: it is very important for the future. Today, we are dealing with a bill calling for the reduction of the amounts paid for secondary education. It is quite the opposite of what we propose. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-12 is very bad for this country.

In our report, Mr. Speaker, we deal with illiteracy, but its Section C is very relevant to this debate. We refer to extended educational opportunities. These are major policies for this country.

The first recommendation in this section is as follows: A new government should immediately commit itself to encouraging the purchase of the most sophisticated school material, by contributing a subsidy equal to any investment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please! I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but the time allotted to him has expired. Questions or comments. Debate. The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen).

● (1550)

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, it is not my custom to speak very often on debates of high finance or intricate economic measures. It is not my field of expertise. I do not pretend to be an expert on it. However, I have had a dozen years of experience in post-secondary education, so I have an interest in what is going on in this debate.

The first point I would like to make is that the debate in which we are now involved is probably the most eloquent statement we could make against the kind of regime we are experiencing in federal-provincial involvement in higher education. It is the experience of all of us that we represent communities and agencies in our constituencies which depend upon government grants for their existence as a way of life. That in itself is an excruciating experience for these agencies. They are dependent upon the whim or the caprice of the funding agency whether it be municipal, provincial or federal.

For any worth-while organization to have to predict the caprice of a funding body is a tortuous experience for it regardless of how well intentioned is the funding agency or the organization depending upon the grant.

Second, it points to the wisdom of our founding fathers that the federal Government has its area of major occupation and attention, that the provincial governments have theirs and that under the BNA Act the provinces are responsible for education because they are the most intensely affected by it and can most precisely represent their needs. There is a great deal of wisdom in that. However, some decades ago we moved into a new regime whereby we initiated federal-provincial transfer payments. The provinces under that agreement, because those transfer payments appeared to be very attractive and met the immediate need of all governments for funding, agreed with the new regime or the new system. It seems to me that it is an unfair balance because under the federal area of responsibility, there is a disproportionate amount of power when it comes to granting systems. The federal Government has taxation abilities which provincial and municipal governments do not have. Therefore, it has a capital pool which it can use to manipulate and manage its programs. Also it has the capacity to print money. Fortunately, there has been a tapering off in that activity recently, but it has the capacity to inflate the currency and, therefore, do an injury all the way down the line.

We have a situation where the federal Government can design a package and introduce it, as it did two decades ago, a package which is very attractive to the provinces in the funding of the medical and educational services and which the provinces like, particularly the have-not provinces which have a real need for funding if they are to maintain a level of medical or educational services that is equivalent to that in other provinces. It becomes very attractive and they go for the bait, but once they are hooked, they are hooked. Once they have taken some grants and get into a five-year program of funding, as this kind of legislation provides, what do they do at the end of five years if they decide it does not meet their needs? By that time a dependency has been created. It creates a dependency which, after a while, becomes unattractive as much as it becomes necessary to the provinces or to the institutions within the provinces. The provinces within their areas of jurisdiction are capable of retaliation or at least try to counterbalance what is going on in the federal Government. They are jealous of its powers.

The federal Government has begun to take an interest in education in the provinces over the past several decades and takes a very paternalistic view of the provinces when it says, "Obviously you cannot handle it; we will give you a hand". The provinces realize that constitutionally education is their prerogative. It is their right to design educational packages to meet the needs of their people. Therefore, they want to guard that power and that jurisdiction as carefully as possible, but they feel the squeeze because while they have fairly extensive taxation powers, they are not the same as those of the federal Government.

We are facing what many of us on this side of the House warned the Government about in 1977 when it decided to become involved in block funding. Originally the agreement with the provinces was that there would be an understanding on how the money would be spent. For some curious reason in 1977 the Government decided that it would move to a new system of grants—block funding. It was to give the money holus-bolus to the provinces and let them administer it. We on this side of the House said that we did not think it was a very good idea.

Mr. Kristiansen: But you voted for it.

Mr. Friesen: We argued against it. Were you here?

Mr. Kristiansen: I looked at the record yesterday.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. An opportunity will be provided later for questions and comments.

Mr. Friesen: Take your turn.

Mr. Kristiansen: I will.

Mr. Friesen: We argued and warned the Government at the time that block funding could lead to the kind of situation we face today. I see the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) laughing. She laughs very easily.

Ms. Mitchell: That is right, you are quite funny.

Mr. Friesen: Perhaps she will find the humour later on. Now we face a situation where block funding needs some accountability. I am glad to say that the Government has accepted our amendment which called for strict accounting on the part of provincial governments of the funding given to them by the federal Government.

When I was involved in college administration years ago, I attended a deans' conference in Vancouver. One of the departmental representatives described what had happened under a previous administration within the Province of British Columbia in the early days of student loans. At that time the federal Government would grant money to the provinces and add to it approximately a 5 per cent administration fee. The province turned the job of administering the student loans over to the universities. It made them do the work, but it got the 5 per cent. In this case the Province of British Columbia made 5 per cent on the entire operation. It made universities bear the cost of administering the loans, but it kept the 5 per cent. Those are reasons why there has to be an accounting for all of this funding.

Third, there are the post-secondary institutions. The institution has limited opportunity for funds. All it can do is to raise its funds by tuition fees, endowments, trusts, private gifts or government grants, really not a very wide range of opportunities. It is at this point that the universities are most vulnerable because they have very narrow opportunities.

The real dilemma for the post-secondary institution is in the need to maintain academic independence and preserve that academic independence and at the same time, the temptation to cater to the sources of money. What does the university do if, on one hand, it has to maintain its independence and, on the other hand, it is financially dependent? That is the dilemma.

Can the universities spend as they wish? Can they carry on with very expensive programs such as tenure for their professorial staff? Can they engage in certain kinds of academic pursuits and research projects, which may be flashy and interesting and have a lot of public awareness and, therefore, be public relations benefit? Can they do that and still maintain their funding and academic independence?

The real protection lies in the sense of honour that exists in the university, that it will conduct itself as it ought to as an academic institution, or the fear that, if it does not carry on the wishes of the granting body such as the provincial government, it will lose its funding. This is the major problem for the institutions. That is faced both in education and in health. Universities and medical agencies, because they have a unique relationship with the public, can engage in programs that are, on the one hand, very expensive and, on the other hand, have a very narrow consumption and limited clientele. How do you control an independent agency that can spend independently and still depend on the taxpayers for money? That is a problem.

We all want good health services. We do not know whether the equipment that a medical service wants to buy is necessary. We cannot make that judgement. Since we want the best health care, that agency can and will spend the money, and we have to pay. We have no capacity to make a judgement on that.

In many cases the same is true within the university community. How does the general public know whether the programs in which the universities engage themselves are really justified programs? Here you have the independence of the university allowing itself to spend, and the taxpayer, by way of the federal or provincial governments, having to pick up the tab. That is a problem that we face. We face these problems of pressure and we are going to be on collision course.

The ones who really pay are the young people. If there is intransigence, if we are on a collision course, if there is a block-headed attitude on the part of the various levels of government, the result will be that the young people who need the education will pay. They will not get the kind of training they need. The tragedy lies in the fact that we are now on the threshold of a new era of demands for technological training. There will be new jobs and new opportunities for leisure in the future.

We have to prepare our people for both the jobs and the down time. We want a quality of life for both areas. We want a quality of life for job training. We also want our people to be able to spend their time creatively when they are not in the workforce, when they are at leisure, when they are on vacation. If we do not give them the kind of cultural tools and broad interest in life to develop expansive minds in order that they can enter into all of life, we will rob them blind.

A constituent wrote to me and asked me to make the proposal in Parliament that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) change the regulations for those attending school. There are families all over Canada with children who would like to go to university but cannot afford it. I presented this proposal to the Minister of Finance about a week ago. There are children of majority age who would like to go to school. They cannot afford it. Their parents would like to help them. Because they cannot deduct the tuition fees as a tax deductible expense, it is an extra burden on the parents who should no longer be accountable and responsible for that educational training.

On the one hand we have students who would like to go to school. They are unemployed. They have time to go, but cannot afford it. We have parents who would like to help but cannot afford to help. They certainly are not responsible for that any longer. Some help could be given by the Government. For the next two or three years while we are in recession, the parents should be allowed to deduct the tuition expenses of their majority-age children as a tax deductible benefit. That seems to be an eminently sensible amendment that the Minister of Finance could bring forward. I have here a letter from a constituent who is attending Vancouver Community College, Langara Campus. It says in part:

> —I request that you raise the issue of student accessibility in the Province of British Columbia in the House of Commons, that you demand a full accounting of the federal transfer funds that are meant to be spent on education, and further that you urge all Members of Parliament to join forces in guaranteeing that all Canadians have an inalienable right to seek the finest education available.

I am glad to say to my constituent and Members of the House that I compliment the Government for accepting our amendment that requires governments to accept that kind of accountability so that when transfer payments are made to the provinces, we on the federal side will have that kind of accountability. For my colleague from the New Democratic Party who is chuckling behind the curtain, I will read the amendment:

> The Secretary of State shall cause to be laid before each House of Parliament, not later than the fifth sitting day of that House after the 31st day of January next following the end of each fiscal year that begins on March 31, 1984, a report on

> (a) cash contributions and total equalized tax transfers in respect of the post-secondary education financing program applicable to each province;
> (b) expenditures by each province on post-secondary education;
> (c) any other federal programs of support to or involvement in post-secondary education;
> (d) the relationship between such federal contributions, transfers and programs and Canada's educational and economic goals; and
> (e) the results of any consultations by or on behalf of the Secretary of State with the Council of Ministers of Education, Canada relating to the definition of national purposes to be served by post-secondary education and the means by which the governments of Canada and the provinces will achieve those purposes.
> (2) Every report laid before Parliament under subsection (1) shall be referred for review to such standing committee of the House of Commons, of the Senate or of both Houses of Parliament as is designated by Parliament for that purpose.

That is the amendment that our Party has made on behalf of the people across Canada. I compliment the Government for accepting that amendment so that we can have a full accounting by the provinces for the way in which moneys which are transferred to those provinces are spent.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the hon. gentleman who just spoke. I must say that I admire the hon. gentleman for being so honest in his statements to the House.

How does the Hon. Member think the provincial governments will react to the position of his Party that they must now become accountable for the block funding to which he referred? How will they react to, as he put it, strict accountability for use of the money? Usually his Party accuses the Liberal Government of using strong-arm tactics and of not treating the provinces fairly.

The hon. gentleman has just enunciated the position of his own Party which is that somehow and somewhere there is a mistrust of provincial governments regarding the manner in which they spend money. Is this an indication of what his party would do to these provincial governments, most of them Tory Governments, which the hon. gentleman claims, and perhaps rightly so, are not spending properly the money which was designated to go to education or health care? Is he indicating that since they are not doing so, they should now be accountable to the people of Canada?

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I would first remind the Hon. Member that I did not refer to any Tory Governments. If he listened carefully, as I am sure he did, he would know that I did refer to the province from which I come, but I did not refer to any Tory Governments. I think he will acknowledge that.

Second, while Hon. Members on that side of the House may not have the same hope as I do, they do have the sense of the reality that by the time this legislation comes into full force, a different government will be in office and there will be a radical change in attitude vis-à-vis federal-provincial relations. Many of the problems we face today are not created by legislative disagreements or disagreements regarding areas of jurisdiction or accountability. They are attitudinal problems. When a new government is in office representing the nation, there will be a new attitude in federal-provincial relations.

I can tell my friend, the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker), that at that time there will be no pejorative overtones when our federal Ministers go to the provinces to settle disagreements. Surely we must be mature enough federally to get over all the pejorative overtones to which sadly, we have become accustomed in our federal-provincial relations until now. We can recognize that mature federal and provincial jurisdictions can have areas of honest disagreement without resorting to paternalism, name calling or strong-arming.

I would like to tell my hon. friend that calling for accountability of the provinces to the federal Government is no different from the provinces calling for accountability of the municipalities. Provincial governments make grants to municipalities and other agencies within the provinces and they understand that when they grant money to other jurisdictions within the provinces, they have a right to know how that money is being spent. They are not calling those agencies dishonest but they are calling them to account. They are simply asking them how the money was spent. That is what bothers me about my friend's question. As soon as we ask for accountability, members of the Government want to turn it into something pejorative. It is not an accusatory request but simply a logical question of competent accounting.

Sometimes people make mistakes, a mistake is not necessarily a crime. If a provincial Government has misspent some money in the eyes of the federal Government, that is not criminal, but it does call for an accounting. I see nothing wrong with that.

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a comment followed by a question. My friend, the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen), seemed to suffer from what I would think could correctly be called a lapse of memory. He implied that he and his colleagues in the Conservative Party disagreed with the Government when the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, which was then known as Bill C-37, came before the House on February 24, and March 23, 1977. However, if they did in fact disagree with the Government, I would like to know why it is that on both second reading of that Bill, as recorded on pages 3397 and 3398 of Hansard, and on third and final reading of the Bill, as recorded on page 4275 of Hansard, only members of the NDP are listed as having voted against the Bill. That would certainly suggest to me and, I think, to most Canadians that in spite of some reservations, and surely we all have doubts from time to time, the Conservative Party was clearly on the record as having full confidence, faith and trust that the provincial administrations would in fact honour the spirit of that legislation.

Having refreshed his memory, I would like to ask the Hon. Member if he would now acknowledge that he and his colleagues did in fact vote, along with the Government and against the wishes of the NDP, in favour of the carte blanche given to the provinces to do whatever they wished with the moneys forwarded to them under the provisions of that Act. He would see that, as recorded in Hansard, his name appears along with those of the rest of his Conservative colleagues.

I would also like to take this opportunity to ask why it was that, in answer to the letter from a constituent which he read a while ago, the Hon. Member seemed to believe that the fact that he, his Party, our Party and the Government all agreed that we should have an annual report telling us whether the provinces were obeying the spirit of the legislation or not, answered the question. How does he consider that simply the fact that we are going to watch what happens in the future, no matter how bad it is—and certainly the situation today is very bad particularly in the Province of British Columbia—will help address the question asked by his constituent?

His constituent asked him what he was going to do to ensure that the funds the federal Government provides to the provinces for the purposes of post-secondary education are in fact used for those purposes. If he does agree that that is the proper course of action, why then, along with 181 of his colleagues, both Conservative and Liberal, did he vote against the NDP amendment which would have answered that request.

• (1620)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member took up so much time that there is only one minute left for the response.

Mr. Friesen: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is typical of that Hon. Member. First of all, I do not apologize for forgetting something in some instances. I am quite capable of doing that, although I do not attribute that to this particular occasion. Second, I agree on the record of the vote. The two Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party who were here at that time voted against it. I have no apology to make because we voted for the legislation even though we disagreed with a certain part of it. It seems to me that the New Democratic Party at certain times wants to see everything in black and white, that if you are against one thing you should vote against the whole measure. If you support something, you support it holus-bolus. I do not know how those Hon. Members can come to that conclusion.

Third, I would point out, in response to his question regarding my constituent's letter, that perhaps his centralist view of Canada is that if you grant funds to a province, you must walk along with every agent of the province to see how they are spending it. Perhaps the Hon. Member likes that kind of police network in terms of how the money is spent. That may be his mentality, but I prefer to operate on a basis of trust as long as we can. We can ask for accountability, and if it is not there, then we can do something about it. But we begin with trust, and I believe that is a much better way.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS AND ESTABLISHED PROGRAMS FINANCING ACT, 1977

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacLaren (for Mr. Lalonde) that Bill C-12, an Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate also in the debate on Bill C-12, an Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977. In my Province of British Columbia, Mr. Speaker, a lower emphasis is placed on universities than in any other province. Over the last ten years, spending in this area has fallen from 10 per cent to 3.5 per cent of the provincial budget. In this context the federal Government is pushing through a Bill which will retroactively limit to six and five federal contributions earmarked for post-secondary education. I can just imagine the glee with which the Government of British Columbia will point its finger at the federal Government with regard to the cutbacks in education in the province. However, the fact remains that there are serious problems in the Province of British Columbia and that that right wing conservative Government—and that is what it is—has struck out in these areas.

There has been a massive outcry against the closing of the David Thompson University Centre in Nelson, British Columbia, My colleague, the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen), has explained very accurately many of the implications of this move on our area of the country.

There is a further implication which I would like to spend some time discussing. That is the fate of the East Kootenay Community College. This college is a young institution and the only post-secondary educational institute in the East Kootenays. It was built because it was recognized in more progressive times that educating our young people is a laudable pursuit and also an investment with a substantial payback.

We have seen the outright attack on the David Thompson University Centre in Nelson, British Columbia, and I think it is appropriate at this time that we should identify what this Party has tried to do with respect to the implementation of funds from the federal and provincial Governments. The New Democratic Party placed an amendment which read in part that any such cash contributions for hospital insurance, medical care programs and post-secondary education programs should be expended in the provinces for the purposes of those programs only. And, Mr. Speaker, although the Conservative Party had brought forward a substitute amendment which it feels is satisfactory, we feel that this is the only way in which we can ensure that that money is going to be spent for education so that there is equality in education in British Columbia, Alberta, and right across Canada. We are not going to get this with the kind of frivolous amendment put forward by the Conservative and Liberal Parties.

Naturally, we must support this provision as second best, but the amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) would have addressed the problem in a very serious way and ensured that the moneys would only be spent in these areas.

We saw in the early 1950s when the Bennett Government, that right-wing conservative Government, brought forward a program of 3 per cent sales tax. That was supposed to help pay our medical and hospital costs in the Province of British Columbia. Not only has it been increased from 3 per cent to 5 per cent and as high as 7 per cent, they are now bringing in another tax of 8 per cent over and above that in our taxation system. That is the kind of policy which the right-wing conservative governments right across Canada are bringing about.

We heard the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) talk about his concern for education. Alberta has literally billions of dollars in the Heritage Fund. If it is really concerned about education, why does it not step out to the front and show us some programs for the blind, the elderly and the handicapped such as the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) spoke about?

A headline in one of the newspapers in British Columbia reads, "Students demand school before coal". An amount of $2.5 billion of federal-provincial money was poured into the northeast development of the coal fields in order to provide coal which we already have in the Kootenays and which we could have shipped to other countries. But $2.5 billion was spent in northeast British Columbia, and therefore 1,250 miners in southeastern British Columbia were laid off during peak times. That is not good enough. If we are going to make investments, let us make investments for the future of our country. Let us make an investment in our youth so that they are able to go to universities. What did the Minister for the Province of British Columbia say about the theme of northeast coal versus higher education? He said that more money for schooling would have to be borrowed. One of the students said, yes, the Government should borrow for education, pointing out it is doing exactly that for its other projects.

We must prepare ourselves for the realities of the 21st century. What happens in our post-secondary institutions, our vocational and technical schools, colleges and universities has never been more important. At a time when we should be investing more private and public money in training and education, what are we doing? Countries such as Sweden, Japan, West Germany, and Austria are investing more and more of their private and public money in post-secondary education and training. But if you look around the world you will find one country which stands out, in a sense, for cutting back on post-secondary education, and that is Canada. If that is not a step toward committing not only economic but social suicide, I do not know what it is.

It is reported, Mr. Speaker, that one of the most pressing and long-term problems which we in my riding will have to face is whether the East Kootenay Community College can continue to operate the satellite campuses which are considerably more expensive. Similar programs would have to be located at Cranbrook. I put it to the Liberal Government and its Tory friends that if this Bill is passed, satellite campuses operated in Kimberley, Golden, Creston and Invermere might have to be shut down. People in these communities are going to hear about it and the Tory and Liberal candidates are going to have a hell of a time defending their Parties' records on this matter. In the field of art and culture it is important that these community colleges be able to reach out to people in these rural areas to give them the opportunity to expand on their skills and programs.

There is another local issue which relates to this Bill. In Cranbrook we have a very innovative Energy Action Centre. This particular centre is well established. Its reputation is excellent. For a number of years the centre has provided many educational campaigns with respect to energy saving. The funding for the centre from the Department of Energy has ended. It was hoped that the program being offered at the Energy Action centre would be incorporated into the curriculum at East Kootenay College. The idea was well received. What better way to ensure the continuation of valuable community resources than by hooking up the centre with the community college? In fact this is the whole idea behind the flexibility of the curriculum of community colleges. The idea has been scuttled by the East Kootenay Community College board of directors for fear of funding cuts emanating out of Victoria and implicit in this Bill.

The Hon. Member for Beaches spoke about the needs of the handicapped, the underprivileged and the blind. In the Province of British Columbia the right wing conservative Government has cut one of the basic programs which was starting to recognize the needs of the blind. The Ministry of Education withdrew a $50,000 contract from the Crane Library at UBC to provide talking books for blind students. Shame on that right wing Government that, without any heart or feeling, decides not to carry on with such programs!

It is imperative, Mr. Speaker, that we have some form of mechanism in place to ensure that when federal moneys are made available to the provinces for post-secondary education, medicare or anything else, there are guarantees that the moneys are used in those areas. Sixteen of the seventeen Conservative Members of Parliament from British Columbia stood up in the House and voted against guarantees that those moneys be used for post-secondary education only. I can only say that people of British Columbia had better take a very serious look at what these Conservative Members are doing. We have a serious enough problem in British Columbia with that provincial Government without adding insult to injury on the federal-provincial scene.

I would like to speak a little bit more about what is happening with the David Thompson University Centre in Nelson, British Columbia. My colleague from Kootenay West, whose riding adjoins mine, has explained the ramifications of the shut-down of that university. The ramifications can have very serious effects on the funding that is made available to the East Kootenay Community College and the inability to accommodate the people of that area.

I would like to mention some of the good work that went on there. In Rossland they started a program especially for young women to enable them to learn to operate heavy machinery in the mining areas. It qualified them for employment in the coal fields near Sparwood. These kinds of programs were needed and were starting to take place. However, the province of British Columbia has turned its back on them. Young students coming out of high schools and wanting to attend UBC or Simon Fraser University are going to find that tuition fees and costs are so high that they will not have the same opportunities as people living in the urban areas. This is wrong, Mr. Speaker. It is outright discrimination by a Government that does not recognize its responsibilities. Unless the federal Government and this federal House ensures that there are some guarantees that the money will be spent on various programs, we are not going to have a universal education system across Canada. We are going to have a block of provinces deciding their own priorities for education. That is not good enough. People in all provinces should have the same opportunities. No province should have the right to use that money for something else because of economic hardship.

That is what this debate is all about, Mr. Speaker. We cannot accept that. We are opposed to what is happening here and what has already happened to British Columbia. This program is retroactive to March of 1983. Can you imagine what is going to happen to the educational system in B.C. when this Bill is passed? I welcome the opportunity to get on the election platform in British Columbia and debate this subject with the Conservatives as well as with the Liberals. They should be ashamed of themselves. In a country as rich in resources as ours is we should not be debating whether our youth are going to have an opportunity to have equal education across Canada. Mr. Speaker, this is not good enough. When I hear the rhetoric coming from the Conservative Party it almost makes me sick. It almost makes me sick to sit here and hear about their grandiose plans when I know full well what they are doing in each province. What they are doing in British Columbia should not happen anywhere in the field of education. If there was an ounce of gumption in these Members of Parliament they would be holding a task force on education in British Columbia and coming back here and demanding some rights, instead of going out to look at the procedures of the income tax department. Did their task force come back and say that CP Rail should pay all of its deficits? No way will they touch that.

We have a very serious problem in the field of education, Mr. Speaker. This Bill is not going to answer that problem. I for one am very opposed to, and not very proud of, what is happening with regard to this piece of legislation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen).

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, I would first of all like to thank my colleague from Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker) for joining with me and some of my other colleagues in bringing to the attention of the House once again the victimization of the region which I represent and of its institution by our conservative provincial Government in Victoria.

Mr. Blenkarn: Is it Conservative?

Mr. Kristiansen: It most certainly is conservative, my friend. There is a fair smattering of Liberals in that Government, but it is most certainly conservative. In fact, my opponent in the last federal election had a good big Social Credit lawn sign up last year, but, unfortunately for him, his address showed right behind it.

● (1640)

The Constitution of Canada deals with the question of jurisdiction over education. I believe the phrase is "education in and for the province". This means that the jurisdiction for public education generally falls clearly within the provinces.

However, with respect to university and post-secondary education, the line is much less clear. According to my information, no province has ever taken the federal Government to court on an issue remotely concerning the definition of responsibility for university and post-secondary education.

Why then does the Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke think that 16 out of 17 Conservative Members from British Columbia voted together with the Liberals on April 4 to stop the NDP amendment, which would have started us on the road toward an answer by demanding accountability for the money which the taxpayers of this country spend?

Mr. Parker: I thank the Hon. Member for Kootenay West for his question. This is exactly the problem. The fact is that the Conservatives introduced a substitute amendment in order to save face. Their amendment provides for some type of review at a later time with no responsibility remaining with the provinces. They are out to protect themselves provincially.

Mr. Kristiansen: Would they do that?

Mr. Parker: Definitely they are out to protect themselves and their own governments in their provincial seats.

Mr. Blenkarn: Why did you support the amendment, then?

Mr. Parker: To answer the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), who asked why we supported the amendment, the fact is that we had an amendment. But we are better off having something rather than nothing. Why did they not support ours? I heard the Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) say that he has a letter in which there is a request for guarantees that this money would be used for this purpose. However, we see that he came up with this watered down solution instead of answering his constituents by telling them that his Party supports our amendment. I suppose I should read the amendment again because evidently they do not know it. The NDP amendment read in part, "that any such cash contribution for hospital insurance, medical care programs and post-secondary education programs shall be expended by the provinces for the purposes of those programs only". If the Conservatives had supported that amendment, I suggest we would have been able to devise a mechanism to review post-secondary education.

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, is my colleague saying that while all Parties in the House agree that we should watch and be aware of what is happening so that it is on the record and, in view of how the Liberals and Conservatives voted together on the Act in 1977 and how they voted against the NDP amendment on April 4 of this year, it is clear that only the NDP wants to make something happen to correct the situation? Is that what the Hon. Member is saying? That is how I understood it.

Mr. Parker: Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what I am saying. The Conservative and Liberal Parties have conspired to protect each other. The federal Liberals are co-operating with the provincial Conservative Parties across Canada in hiding behind their cut-backs so as not to give a true picture of what is happening with federal fiscal arrangements. That is exactly what is happening and we will not stand for it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Any further questions or comments? If not, the Hon. Member for Edmonton West on debate.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I suspect that during the past ten minutes we have had inflicted upon us a type of 11 per cent Amos and Andy performance on matters that are really irrelevant to this particular Bill. The previous speakers were dealing with a local issue, which undoubtedly is very important to the people involved, but one might think that the Hon. Members from the Kootenays were playing prairie politics as far as this particular Bill is concerned.

This Bill is an extension of a philosophy which was imposed upon Parliament by a Liberal administration since 1977 and which has zapped the medical care programs in many provinces and placed the post-secondary educational budgets of a number of the provinces in grave difficulty. If the Hon. Members from the Kootenays think that their regions are particularly hard hit, I suggest that they should get their noses above the ground to see some of the other areas of the country that are equally affected by the suppression or limitation of educational institutions whose benefits to the community are marginal when compared to the cost of keeping them.

During boom times people are quite prepared to tolerate these additional expenses, but it is different when a budget must be slashed and costs must be cut. Those Hon. Members are the underwriters of the philosophy that if one borrows, begs or steals enough money to throw at a problem, it will go away. the Liberals have had the same philosophy in the last few years.

This Act has passed the second reading stage. No amendments may be put, other than a time consuming amendment to return the Bill to committee for the examination of a certain clause. We cannot even give it a six-month hoist. I believe I share the views not only of Canadian educational commentators but of those from abroad who have examined the current state of Canada's educational system. Quite frankly, I believe we suffer from over diversification. The Constitution provides that education shall be a provincial matter and goes so far as to provide a council of educational ministers. This council will not even let a Minister of the Government of Canada attend its conferences as an observor at the same table, even though the federal Government spends almost $7 billion a year on education in various forms.

When one considers education through the Armed Services, the payments that are made according to this Act and through other means, such as through the Secretary of State, these education oriented moneys mount up. However, the Government of Canada has no more to say about it in the national determination than does any one of the provinces. Consequently, we see the provincial authorities taking different approaches and adopting some rather odd standards. These policies stem either from tradition or from the current fashion, but there is no national goal for education. My colleagues in the New Democratic Party as well as other colleagues talk about the changing requirements of our educational standards, that these must fit in to prepare people not for today's requirements in industry, but five years, 15 years or 25 years down the line. It is notorious that the Canadian workforce, be it clerical, supportive, administrative or in various trades, is ill-equipped to meet the exacting standards of a competitive world. We stand there in many instances merely wringing our collective hands about what might be done, about what ought to have been done, instead of thinking about what we are going to do about it now. This particular Bill is a clear example.

• (1650)

I do not know what I can call the attitude here in Canada with regard to education. We have universities that maintain different levels of qualifications. We have different professional bodies that maintain the idea that the wheel was invented in their particular jurisdiction and that they must pass on it. We have trades-testing bodies in the various Departments of Labour in each of the provinces which must sit and examine each worker coming from another province to validate that person's work ticket. In French I would say:

[Translation]

—it sounds like the Tower of Babel!

[English]

—because you get these conflicts. But we get the same conflicts in school. Has anyone ever tried to transfer a post-secondary student from one of the western provinces into Quebec or Ontario? We will leave alone the PQ nonsense about language and so forth. That will go away—

[Translation]

—and as soon as possible, because this is another one of the complexities of the Canadian system. In any case, Mr. Speaker, we must create this atmosphere of co-operation between the Provinces, that have jurisdiction over educational matters under the Constitution, and the federal Government, that has a basic interest in providing a national purpose or philosophy for the educational system in Canada. The federal Government will have to come to terms with the Provinces. Then, it might be possible to eliminate some of the problems which this Bill will actually emphasize.

I do not like this Bill at all because it imposes increasing restrictions on the funds to which the Provinces are entitled. It is as if the federal Government owned all incomes in Canada as of right. We know that this is not true. The federal Government acts as a collecting agent and then distributes the money among the Provinces in accordance with a formula accepted by the governments concerned.

[English]

You know about these unilateral changing of agreements. It happened in 1977 and again now. The provinces have not been consulted and we are telling the provinces what they can do with their own money under the agreements and outside the agreements. But that is the arrogance of this over-centralized Government. It has been as clear as spring water as we go along that this is merely—if I may mix my metaphores—another slice of salami off that sausage, and before long we will see the Government of Canada laying claim to all revenues. In philosophy it does in the tax department, or shall we say the tax policy department of the Department of Finance—and I invite my hon. friend, the Parliamentary Secretary to examine it.

The basic theory under the Government's tax equity policy is a buck is a buck is a buck, and as soon as a dollar is earned, whether by an individual or a corporation, the Government of Canada is entitled to a certain percentage, and it wants it now. Whether the Government is entitled to it all is another question. It must share taxes with the provinces for which the Government collects a part. Some of the provinces collect all their own corporate taxes, and Quebec collects its own income tax, but not entirely. What had been a good practice in the past is now degenerating, again because of the over-centralized philosophy of the Government of Canada. Those provinces that feel strong enough to break away when they cannot get an agreement, some form of co-operation, naturally will pull out. And the reaction of federal Cabinet Ministers? Well, they fashion a new noose, put it on tighter, thanks to a supine majority that refuses to examine the implications of the law and what they are doing to their own provinces. I do not doubt for one moment that one of the reasons we have not experienced it as they have in the Province of Quebec is the attitude of the Quebec Members in this House who work against the interests of that province in supporting the Government without a word or a murmur of protest against policies which are contrary to what should be the best regional interests in the country.

We have the same thing here. The Canada Health Act is the other half. It imposes stringent limitations on the provinces where the provinces have the right under the Constitution to the administration of Canada's health services. But what does the federal Government do? It says: "You cannot do that." If the Government of Canada feels that it has insufficient power and the provinces have the right, along with their health care delivery people, to give the people of a particular region the best possible health care services, and the Government of Canada comes along and says—

Mr. Orlikow: You voted for the Act.

Mr. Lambert: That may be so. The House decided, but I personally may not agree with all of the philosophy. I reserve that right, and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

ADVISABILITY OF EXAMINING MEASURES TO PREVENT MARRIAGE BREAKDOWN

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury) moved:

That the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs be empowered to examine and enquire into the incidence and effect of marriage breakdown, its social and economic implications, its effect on government programs and policies, and, in particular, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, to recommend measures to prevent marriage breakdown and strengthen the institution of the family, and for such other measures in the same matter as the committee may consider desirable.

He said: Mr. Speaker, once upon a time young Canadians entertaining thoughts of marriage dreamed of the proverbial little white house surrounded by a picket fence and beautiful children, but as Bob Dylan said, "The times they are a-changing". The times have changed and so has marriage. This March, Statistics Canada told us that 40 per cent of Canadian marriages now end in divorce, and for young Canadians under the age 25 years, the shattering news is that nearly one of every two marriages ends in breakdown.

There are many lessons we can learn from the erosion of marriage and the human tragedies that are represented by the cold statistics. Eminent social philosophers like Erich Fromm point to the enhanced influence of material and commercial values in our culture, and suggest that they have begun to permeate our most intimate social relationships. Christopher Lasch sees the media fostering desire for novelty and instant satisfaction as a form of societal neurosis which undermines commitment at every level. Today, individuals no longer find it necessary to enter into a marriage to be sexually active, to have a social life or even to have children. As a corollary, many people no longer find it necessary to remain in an unsatisfactory marriage to achieve these same goals.

The strongest support for the institution of marriage, the family, and its preservation has traditionally been the church. To a considerable and regrettable extent, the influence of the church has diminished and, by the same token, a sacramental and covenantal view of marriage has diminished along with it and been succeeded by a more secular notion, with more marriages performed outside the church and more couple entering marriage with equally high ideals but without the guidance of the church or marital counselling.

The women's movement of the 1960s and the 1970s which stressed individual rights and human potential has often been scapegoated for some of the profound status changes in roles within the family. Critics point to the fact that in 1948 only 26 per cent of married women with school-aged children worked outside the home, while in March of 1976, 54 per cent worked outside the home, most of them full time. However, this ignores the economic facts of life, which in many cases mean that if junior is to have a good time, proper clothing, be well nourished and educated, both partners are required, not always by choice, to enter the world of work. Pursuit of separate careers has been a divisive force in some marriages, but in other cases where partners work at helping each other develop as persons, adjustments have been made and successful marriages have resulted.

Out of the upheaval and turmoil of changing times in the last two decades, it is becoming apparent that the role of the housewife and mother deserves special recognition and a new respect. Changes have taken place in marital property laws and pressure is finally mounting for long overdue improvements in tax and pension legislation as well as a measure of economic independence.

Clearly marriages between partners who regard each other as equals and work toward helping each other develop as persons is a positive attitude prevalent in successful marriages, particularly where the roles of the partners are determined by themselves before the knot is tied instead of by an unwritten code based upon what others before them have done.

While the technological revolution that has reawakened the reindustrialization of America has produced greater mobility and greater economic vistas for men, it has also presented an economic independence for women that has paralleled the attainment of greater sexual freedom. Effective birth control, acceptance of child-free marriages and marriage-free child raising have greatly altered expectations concerning possible life options. The very wealth of possibilities has introduced enormous challenges to traditional assumptions concerning marriage and family values. Spouses who find themselves taking opposite sides on value-related issues face great potential turmoil.

Many teenagers make the greatest decision of their lives, the decision to marry, with very little or no education in healthful living, interpersonal relationships or marriage itself. Lacking income stability and a mature sense of direction and goals, many teenage couples find themselves saddled with responsibilities and obligations for which they are not ready. Those who enter into marriage in the flush of romance without sufficient time to establish ties of genuine friendship and to ensure mutual values, expectations, habits, needs and goals, are particularly vulnerable to marital stresses. Often what was thought of as love vanishes quickly and resentment over having lost freedom or been denied a normal courtship, coupled with economic and social pressures, may contribute to marital tension and ultimately precipitate divorce action. In such cases the proximity of support of family and friends is often crucial in determining whether the marriage is able to survive and grow. Geographic mobility, often for advancement, has also removed partners in faltering marriages from the stabilizing influence of friends, parents and relatives to new communities and new stresses.

While it may be true that in temperamental terms opposites attract and that marital compativility is ideally complementary rather than merely supplementary, statistics tell us that extreme dissimilarities and background generally make for high-risk marriages. Attitudes, interests, habits and expectations are largely determined by background influences of family, culture, religion, education and social class. Even when those influences seem to have been rejected, they frequently re-emerge in later years. A person who enters marriage with someone of profoundly different orientation, secretly hoping that his or her spouse will change, is very often disappointed. On the other hand, couples who share strong goals and a mutual commitment in spiritual and moral values have statistically a much longer likelihood of marital success. Loving the same things would seem to be a positive goal.

A frequently cited cause of marriage breakdown is the feeling of dominance or control which one partner allegedly exercises over the other, such as the refusal to see each other as true partners. Women have complained that their husbands feel threatened by any expression of desire for personal growth such as working, taking educational courses, handling money or deciding when or where to spend the family vacation. On the other hand, men speak of feeling used or maniputaled by their wives' very dependency, being rules by weakness or in other instances of being undermined challenged or demeaned by suspicions. In many instances, these are illustrations of a lack of communication both before as well as after marriage, a failure to recognize character or personality faults in a mistaken belief that they could be changed. This same failure to communicate often prevents couples from profiting from potentially helpful intervention such as marriage counselling or therapy. Divorce petitions are often interspersed with allegations of suspicion, lack of interest, low self esteem, feelings of inadequacy and sexual dissatisfaction. These problems, like career immersion by one or both partners, are normally consistent with dissatisfaction at other levels and generally poor communications in all areas of marriage. As one petitioner put it, he had five years of marriage and three years of hell before the marriage was dissolved by divorce decree.

Clearly we must accept the inevitability of marriage breakdown as a social evil and work to decrease its incidence. Through education we must help people discover a vision of what marriage might be and develop an overall multifaceted program to foster and help the marriage relationship. This, however, is not as easy as it seems. In our western culture, we think of education in intellectual terms, that is the transmission of ideas or objective knowledge often removed from the experience from which it first came. In other words, we do not think of education in terms of values, feelings, visions and dreams, and yet it is in this broader sense of education that we might help young people make the greatest decision of their lives for which today many of them are eminently unprepared.

What do we have to do? First, we have to find a way to help people discover how to develop normal healthy relationships, and then find ways to help them have realistic expectations of a healthy marriage relationship. That means that we will have to develop some sort of personal values educational program so that people can fit their expectations in marriage to what they really want out of life.

Solid family life is important to society. If it is not there, society pays the price financially. There are no accurate measurements in dollar terms in the cost to employers, to the individuals involved or to taxpayers through social support programs, but with nearly one marriage in two going down the tubes, the figure would be mind-boggling. Clearly, our society would benefit greatly even if we did some seed things now to reduce the incidence of unhappy marriages. Recognition of the social value of a family in placing great value on the art of successful parenting is a major step in elevating the status of a family. While attempting to do something on its own, government and the media should discover what is being done to preserve good marriages and support fragile ones, support what is being done well and promote what is being done well.

A lot of what is being done is being done by our churches, but as society becomes more secularized, a large body of people are not able to avail themselves of these opportunities, and they, too, have a right to a happy marriage. Therefore, the Government and the media should publicize and attempt to encourage programs to support happy marriages within community organizations like university adult education programs, night school programs and programs put on by voluntary organizations. It is important that we do what we can to ensure that support for marriages is universally available. It is socially and financially to the advantage of Canada and Canadians to do everything possible to promote the dignity of marriage and happy families.

When marriage breaks down, the dignity of marriage is not served by trivializing divorce. On the other hand, the present adversarial style of divorce proceedings demeans marriage as well. It is no answer to merely redefine marriage so that it means nothing, like a non-binding commitment or, on the other hand, to enforce legal continuation of that which is already dead at the core. We need new constructive efforts to support marriage and the family in all its forms.

I have attempted to indicate a direction in which we can move to strengthen marriage and the Canadian family, which is the bedrock of our nation. There are other directions. There are programs and there are policies that can and must be developed. It is important that thinking Canadians from every walk of life put their heads together and collectively do the very best we can to strengthen and support the Canadian family.

That is why I proposed this vehicle in the motion now before the House. Whether my views or better ones are adopted is really not important. What is important is that we address the greatest social problem facing Canada today and provide the best solutions that we as Canadians working together can develop.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, we have before us a motion that the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs be empowered to examine and inquire into the incidence and effect of marriage breakdown, its social and economic implications, its effect on government programs and policies, and, to recommend measures to prevent marriage breakdown and strengthen the institution of the family.

I welcome the motion before us today. It addresses an extremely important problem. It is very timely that we should be discussing it at the same time as the Divorce Act is before the House. We are all acutely aware of the problem of the increasing divorce rate in Canada.

It is very clear that one of the effects on government programs and policies of family and marriage breakdown is the enormous cost that is put upon the state. As a result of families breaking down, there are two households, which cost more than one. We know the large number of maintenance orders which are not paid. There is a need for families to go on welfare. There are increased costs because of income tax deductions when maintenance and alimony are paid. There are increased costs to the state in social services, counselling and all of the intervention services to support people in need whose marriage is breaking down.

I want to look at the social and economic conditions that have probably contributed a great deal to the increase in marriage breakdown. We are in a period of recession. We like to think we are coming out of it, but we certainly have very high unemployment. This causes enormous strains for the family. There are reports from social workers of increased child abuse, wife beating and alcoholism as a result of people being out of work.

Work is extremely important to people, apart from the fact that it puts a pay cheque into the family income. It has a lot of psychological and social significance. People receive fulfilment through work. They find work interesting. People have social connections through work. It is an integral part of life. When people in the prime of life are denied that opportunity, it causes crises in families. It is unfortunate that people in the prime of life are denied work. It is unfortunate that people under stress take it out on those who are close to them and weaker than they are. For that reason, we have to look at very long-term solutions. It is not just counselling that will help people through a crisis, although we certainly need counselling.

Until we have full employment or something close to it, there will be people in crisis, and that will put a strain on marriage and the family. If we really want to put people first, we must have policies designed for full employment. That means a number of changes, which obviously I do not have time to go into now. My Party stresses them in terms of a long-term industrial strategy which puts people first and provides jobs. Jobs are important for dignity and self-fulfilment.

I welcome the role of the church in indicating the importance of jobs for people and full enjoyment of life. I am pleased to see that in the Catholic Bishops' statement and the Pope's recent encyclical on labour.

If we are not able to provide jobs for everybody, the state has a very important role to play in providing a safety net to see that those who are not able to work at a particular time and lose their jobs are not absolutely destitute, that they have unemployment insurance and, of course, once the unemployment insurance runs out, that they can turn to welfare. My Party advocates strengthening the other programs that we have such as support programs for the family, namely universal family allowance and the child tax credit, so that families have the economic means to care for children. Children are expensive, and family allowance has obviously not kept up with the cost. The child tax credit is an important reform and we would like to see it raised and paid on a regular basis so that families would have the economic supports that they need. Of course, these economic supports are part of the entire functioning of a family, and when these supports are lacking, there is stress in the family which can result in family breakdown.

• (1720)

A proposal which I would like to stress as being an important support to the family would be the shorter work week for parents of young children. I think it would be desirable for both parents to have the option of working shorter hours so that they could care for their young children themselves. My Party, of course, supports daycare programs. We think these programs are very important and often provide a very rich experience for children. These programs can be defended not only as a way of looking after children but as a way of providing education and cultural enrichment to children at a very young age. I would also like to stress that for many parents the preferable option is to look after their children themselves. If there were a shorter work week as a matter of right for parents of young children, that option could be exercised.

Of course, the state has an obligation to provide counselling services and crisis services in times of family breakdown to see if there can be a reconciliation. There is the possibility of teaching parenting skills that can improve the functioning of families.

As we are discussing marriage breakdown, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that it is important to understand that much of the burden of running a family and looking after the children is still borne by Canada's wives and mothers. Women put in a longer work week when both the paid work in the workforce and the unpaid work in the home are calculated. This, of course, puts an enormous strain on working mothers. Many mothers do need to work, and staying at home is not an option which is open to them. Women are putting in very, very long hours carrying the double burden of paid and unpaid work.

There are no adequate child care support services or daycare centres, and I must say as well that so far, Canadian husbands are still not performing their share of the unpaid work at home. I think that this matter must be raised as being one of the stresses that occurs in the family situation. In too many families, the father is a very distant disciplinarian in time of crisis and the provider of treats. He is not present nearly as often as the mother.

It has often been said that men need to be liberated from their sex roles as much as women do and that men have been too unexpressive, distant and that they have been part of the workforce and not part of the family unit. I expect that many men, if they were more closely involved with their children and did put in those hours of child care, would not only be relieving their wives of much of this heavy burden but would find as well that it is a very pleasurable experience. They would know their children better, their children would know them better and it would be a good experience both for the children and the father.

Rigid sex-role stereotyping harms men as much as it harms women and children. It is not simply a question of money and who pays for things, but a question of how people live, learn and use all of their talents. We would certainly like to see more child care talents developed in Canadian men.

There are a number of practical things that can be done by the state in times of crisis or family breakdown. We have seen indications that the state is beginning to provide various kinds of counselling services, particularly in the realm of conflict resolution. Part of the problem of sexual stereotyping is that men are not supposed to be expressive but are supposed to be strong, silent types. When conflicts arise, they do not know how to express themselves in any other way than through violence. Thus there is the unhappy and shocking statistic that one in 10 Canadian wives is beaten by her husband in any given year. The experts tell us that one way of addressing this problem is to help people learn how to express their difficulties and conflicts in non-violent ways. We could promote programs which teach conflict resolution through negotiation and compromise without resorting to violence.

One proposal for dealing with the increasing rate of marriage breakdown is to make marriage itself more difficult to enter into. This is one of the proposals made by the Catholic bishops in their opposition to the divorce Bill which is before us. It is not our business to deal with the requirements for marriage as those fall under provincial jurisdiction. We can note, however, that it is very easy to be married very quickly, and we can only wish that it were otherwise.

I think one thing that the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs could do would be to look into the situation of marriage counselling before marriage. Some churches are making it obligatory for couples to take marriage counselling before they are married in the church. There are plenty of examples of such counselling, and studies could be done to see if required marriage counselling before marriage has any beneficial effect. We could see if this makes for lasting marriages and prevents marriage breakdown. If so, the provincial governments, which are more directly involved in this, would have some idea of what to do. Perhaps they would then require marital counselling before marriage. That would certainly be something to consider if compulsory marriage counselling had very good results. If it did not, we could try other things.

I have heard very good things about marriage counselling programs. Obviously, anecdotal evidence is not sufficient. Simply an opinion here and there does not count. These programs should be properly and comprehensively studied. That is something which could be commissioned by a committee and something which our own National Health and Welfare Department could do.

I do not know that a comprehensive study in the sense of gathering more statistical information on marital breakdown needs to be done. I think we know that the statistics are very troubling. I do not think we need to have the statistics recited at any great length. However, I think we should be looking at the innovative programs which are being tried to improve the situation. We could encourage evaluation studies to see which of these programs are successful and which are not. We could promote further innovation and we could ensure that there is adequate evaluation so that we know where we stand. I have already mentioned that happening in the case of marriage counselling before marriage. It would be something to consider for conflict resolution projects which support the resolution of conflict without violence and with negotiation. There are a great many parenting skills programs around the country. Let us evaluate them and see if they help keep families together. That is certainly a very proper function for a federal Department to perform.

Further, I think that we as a Parliament need to be addressing measures to combine family and work responsibilities so that people can participate in both. We live in a certain time and we are not going to go back to a time in which women will not want to work. I think those times are past us. We are going to need adequate measures to combine family and work responsibilities in a reasonable way so that there will not be excessive stresses on the family. We know what the problem is. We need policies to address the problem in a way that suits the times in which we live.

It is primarily the children who suffer as a result of family breakdown. Some experts have spoken about the right of children to stability and to have the marriage of their parents last so that their childhood home will last. It is very difficult to talk in those terms because even if we acknowledge at an abstract level that that right exists, how can we ensure that it exists in reality? Clearly, we can never guarantee such a right. It is a moral concept and perhaps a very good guiding concept, but it is not one we can immediately realize. It seems to me that, rather than talking in those abstract terms, what we should be doing is addressing the economic context, the stresses which are put on the family as a result of unemployment. We should begin to improve the practical and support measures for the family, which we have begun to provide in our society, the safety net we already have partially in place. These are the kinds of contributions we can make as parliamentarians to the support of the most important institution, the family.

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity of addressing the House today on the motion of the Hon. Member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie) to have the problem of marriage breakdown referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. The Hon. Member proposes to study the institution of the family in Canadian society and the role of government in assisting families. He is expressing the view that the institution of the family is in trouble in Canadian society and that we have to find ways of preventing these problems.

Let me first say that I fully share the Hon. Member's interest in the effects of marriage breakdown on family life and on the children in our society. I would like to take this opportunity, however, to express my views on the continuing strength and importance of family life and the ways in which government programs assist the family. We are all aware that Canadian families are changing. I do not believe, however, that this is a completely negative phenomenon. The changes we see in Canadian families should not be interpreted as signalling the demise of the institution of the family in Canada. It is more the case that change is simply giving birth to new types of families and family units. The changes in Canadian families are due to many things, of which marital breakdown or divorce is only one element. There are also other factors, such as the postponement of the decision to have children by couples until their late twenties or thirties and the increasing participation of women in the labour force. All these factors are changing the patterns and demands of family life.

The importance of families to Canadians, however, continues to be very strong, as I can illustrate through some basic demographic data from the most recent census. The 1981 census tells us that over 80 per cent of the Canadian population continues to live in a family unit. In actual numbers there were over 6.3 million family units, out of over 8 million private households. Such figures lead me to think that the concept of the family is as strong today in Canadian society as it has ever been. Of course, the composition of these family units is not the same as it has been in the past. In the past we have always thought of the family as being composed of a husband, a wife and dependent children. Today, only one-half of the family units, roughly 3.5 million families, are these traditional families.

The definition of a family is now also normally thought of as including childless couples and single parents with children. The increase in the number of childless couples reflects the personal choices many couples now have in family planning. Couples may be career oriented and may wish to avoid or postpone childbirth for this reason. Many are also elderly couples whose children have grown and left home. With respect to single parent families, the changes have also been equally dramatic. The larger number of single parent families is due to marital separation or divorce. However, others are also formed through widowhood or as a result of births to unmarried mothers. We know that over 80 per cent of these single parent families are led by women.

I would also like to devote some attention to the topic of the "reconstituted" family. The reconstituted family results when previously divorced persons remarry and form new family units. It reflects the fact that as many as 75 per cent of divorced people remarry. This statistic in itself suggests that marriage remains popular even with those who have had a negative experience in a previous marriage. The reconstituted family effectively re-combines broken families into new units. They may bring together the children of one parent with new brothers and sisters from the new marriage. They obviously make a statement about the validity of marriage and family life, which we should not ignore. They also are likely to face a whole new set of problems with respect to child-rearing and responsibilities and adjustment of family members.

All these family types are different from the traditional nuclear family. But they are important in that they indicate that the institution of family remains very strong in Canadian society. The family unit, whether one has a single parent or remarried parents, remains very much the center and source of social, economic, and all other support for its members. Furthermore, I think we should fully expect that this diversity in family patterns will continue. Lifestyles and attitudes are continually undergoing change in our society, and I believe families will adapt to these new challenges.

It is true that some of today's families are more likely to have special circumstances or problems. The single parent family, for example, is very likely to be headed by a woman who may lack job skills sufficient to support her family for extended periods of time. Similarly, even when there are two parents in the family, it is now more likely that the mother may work, so that outside child care arrangements have to be made. Today's families are more flexible than we would have expected of a family unit twenty years ago. And, due to these circumstances, they have special needs and demands for government services.

I would like to turn now to how the government has in fact provided many of these needed services and programs. I think the government has been very responsive and has shown its awareness and concern for families and changing situations in many ways. To illustrate, I can draw on a number of government programs which show support and commitment to the family. The basis of federal support to families has existed since the mid 1940's. I am referring here to the family allowance program which provides monthly benefits to families with dependent children up to age 18.

Family allowances are a universal program which provides a regular monthly payment of $29.95 per child to all families maintaining and caring for children, regardless of the income or employment status of the parents. In 1984, it provides an annual benefit of $359 per child. The allowances are a taxable benefit, and are taxed according to our progressive personal income tax system. After taxes, they provide highest benefits to low-income families and lowest benefits to high income families. Some 3.5 million families receive these benefits on behalf of their children at a cost of $2.4 billion dollars each year.

Since 1979, the federal Government has also provided the child tax credit which delivers additional assistance to low and middle income families to help them meet the costs of raising children. The child tax credit is income-tested on the basis of family income. In addition, it is a refundable credit, and so either reduces the taxpayer's tax liability or, in cases where the family's income is too low to have any tax liability, it provides a direct cash payment. For the 1983 tax year, a benefit of up to $343 dollars per child is available to families with incomes that are less than $26,330.

In essence, these two programs are the cornerstones of the federal government's direct support for families. Taken together, the family allowance and child tax credit programs currently provide maximum annual cash benefits of over $700 per child to eligible low income families which dependent children. This is a substantial benefit and clearly shows the Government's commitment to the principle of the family in Canada. The family allowance and child tax credit are normally delivered directly to mothers, and in this way are particularly beneficial to single parent, low-income families. Other programs such as the child tax exemption in the tax system, and a deduction for child care expenses, are also designed to provide financial assistance to families.

Ever since the personal income tax system was introduced in 1917 some adjustment to the tax base has been allowed for the presence of dependent children. The exemption is currently $710 for a child under 18. Since this exemption provides higher benefits to those with highest incomes and no benefits to those with no taxable income, its value was de-indexed beginning in the 1984 tax year. Thus it will remain at $710 per child in the future.

The freezing of this exemption was one of a number of changes to the child benefits system which have been made over the last few years in order to improve the targeting of the child benefits system to families with low and moderate incomes.

Many women now participate in the paid labour force while maintaining their responsibilities for family and children at home. Women represent over 40 per cent of the workforce and their participation rates continue to rise. The existence of two earners is seen to be quite normal and important in today's families. Further, the result of this situation in which more women work outside the home is being felt in growing demands for related services such as child care and maternity benefits.

To assist working parents, the Income Tax Act allows a deduction for child care expenses for children under age 15. This deduction was first introduced in 1972, at a value of $500. Since then, however, progressive changes in the value and eligibility criteria for this deduction have taken place. These changes respond directly to the changing family structures and thus to the changing needs of families. Until 1983, the deduction had to be claimed by the working mother, except in special circumstances such as those in which the couple was legally separated, divorced, or the mother was infirm. In the 1983 Budget, the eligibility requirements were changed so that the lower income spouse is now required to claim the deduction, except under special circumstances. In this way, the deduction no longer discriminates between men and women. At the same time, the maximum value of the deduction was increased to $2,000 per child or two-thirds of earned income.

These changes respond to the increasing cost and use of child care. They ease the burden of child care expenses for families in which both parents work. In addition, the deduction is often particularly important for single parents who must work and support children.

I believe these changes demonstrate very well how government programs have recognized and accommodated the changing needs of families in Canada, both socially and economically. These programs are only part, however, of the network of programs which the Government effectively provides in response to the needs of Canadian families.

I would like to note a couple of other programs such as maternity benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Program and CEIC's Training Allowance Program both of which assist women and family in the labour force.

The Unemployment Insurance Act provides 15 weeks of paid maternity leave to eligible women who take time off work around the time of child birth. After a two-week waiting period, this program provides a paid benefit of 60 per cent of weekly insurable earnings, up to the maximum insurable earnings. In 1984, the maximum insurable earnings are set at $425, so UI maternity benefits will provide up to $255 per week for up to 15 weeks. Last year, there were about 121,000 allowable claims for UI maternity benefits at a cost of about $345 million.

As the Members of this House will recall, there were also certain changes in the Unemployment Insurance Act, which were passed last year and which came into effect at the beginning of 1984. These changes were designed to make it easier for mothers to take advantage of UI maternity benefits.

For example, the legislative changes eliminated the "magic 10" rule. This rule required that a woman must have worked at least 10 weeks around the time of conception. It was judged to be unfair to some women who may have had a long work history but could not satisfy the 10 week rule. Also, a change was made allowing maternity benefits to be paid at any time in the initial benefit period. Previously, maternity benefits had to be claimed only during the first 15 weeks of a claim period. This change eliminated an inconsistency in the treatment of sickness and maternity benefits and made the provision of benefits more flexible. The new legislation also removed Section 46, which prevented women, who did not qualify for maternity benfits, from drawing regular UI benefits around the time of birth. Taken together, these changes significantly enhance the income protection provided to mothers by UI maternity benefits around the time of childbirth. In addition, changes were made to extend benefits to adopting parents. Under the new legislation, benefits are payable to either a father or a mother who takes time off work to meet responsibilities after the adoption of a child.

Finally, I would like to comment on how the National Training Act affects women and provides for their participation in the labour market. Under the National Training Program women are encouraged to train for non-traditional occupations, as well as other institutional and industrial training courses. Under the program, women who cannot get unemployment insurance benefits while on training, receive a training allowance for personal and dependant care expenses. The dependant care allowance is of considerable benefit to those women who are the sole supporters of their families, such as single parents who need financial help for child care while they are undertaking training. The rates paid under the Training Allowance Program were also increased last September. Again, this program demonstrates the flexibility and commitment of government programs in meeting the needs of women and families in the labour market.

In conclusion I would like to say that I believe the Government has demonstrated its awareness of the changing problems of families in Canada and provides a full network of programs which are responsive to the social and economic needs of families. I know that the institution of the family is still strong in Canada, and I am sure that through its normal daily activities and programs the Government will continue to show its commitment and concern for the basic family structure in Canada.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by complimenting the Member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie) for bringing this topic to the floor of the Chamber. Members may recall that the Member for York-Sunbury previously brought to the attention of this Chamber, through the Private Member's route, the issue of spousal battering. That motion received endorsation from this Chamber and subsequently went to the Standing Committee on Health and Welfare and Social Affairs. It resulted in a report, which is having impact on Canadian society and which is making the world a better place. Surely, Mr. Speaker, that exemplifies the highest traditions of this Chamber. It exemplifies what this Chamber should be all about.

I am curious about what we are going to find out 10 or 12 minutes from now. I am wondering whether the Liberal Government is willing to let this reference go to the Health and Welfare and Social Affairs Committee, or whether some member of the Liberal Party of Canada is going to stand up and speak through the hour of adjournment at six o'clock, thus effectively denying other Members of this Chamber the opportunity to examine the institution of the family and its place in Canadian society. Are they going to stop us from exercising what is in the minds of Canadians when they vote for us to come to this Chamber? They would like to know that the Parliament of Canada examines situations which should be examined. I think it is time for a committee of Parliament to begin to look at the family and to draw some conclusions about whether it is in good or bad shape, whether it has changed dramatically, and what we need to do to strengthen the atmosphere in which children can grow, develop and prosper.

It was after World War II that an agency of the Government, the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, provided a great amount of money to Canadians to get mortgages to build homes. At that particular time that Crown corporation decided that much of that mortgage money should go to homes which met certain criteria. One of the criterion they decided was important to Canadian homes of the future was the provision of a dining room. The architectural consequence of that, Mr. Speaker, was small kitchens. It took what had been a large facility in the home and divided it into two spaces; one called the dining room and the other called the kitchen.

Standing in this Chamber close to 40 years later I recognize that we have a great deal more marriage breakdown in Canada than we had some 40 years ago. I ask myself, as a social scientist, whether that policy decision by Central Mortgage and Housing is at least in part responsible for the breakdown of the family. I can certainly remember my own childhood. The kitchen was a large room and all the kids were around the kitchen table doing homework in the evening. Mom and Dad were there, perhaps reading a book, perhaps listening to the radio. We did not have television in those days. The family was together. When it was cold outside, the family members were interacting together, getting to know each other and being supportive of each other.

An agency of the Government essentially decreed that this type of facility will not exist in Canadian homes in the future. This is done through lending policies and mortgage policies.

In speaking to this motion, I recall some questions that I have asked the Government in the past. I pointed out to Members of the House that if any one of them chose to get a divorce today and sign an agreement giving half of their income in support payments to their spouse, while continuing to live common law with that some spouse, they could save in excess of $2,000 in federal income tax. Is that a public policy direction that the Government has deliberately chosen? In economic terms it is a public policy which allows anyone who goes through the court procedure to have a formal marriage breakdown so as to have the tax system give them $200 a month in disposable income.

The former Minister of Finance, who is a bachelor, stood in the Chamber and told us in his Budget that every adult Canadian would be entitled to a piece of property that would be free of capital gains tax upon disposal except if he or she is married. That entitlement would be one-half on such a piece of property for married adult Canadians. This policy was formulated in the life of this Parliament. Is that a conscious public policy choice that was made by Cabinet Ministers and Members opposite? Are we getting signals from the Government that the traditional family shall be penalized in tax law and that the new forms of family structure will benefit from tax law?

I believe I am old enough to remember when a great many of my friends were in living arrangements that included grandparents, their children and grandchildren within the home. That does not happen very often any longer. Rather, public policy makes it economically better for all concerned to have the various parts of that extended family living in different places. The money that is available to Government is used to encourage a situation where senior citizens do not live with their children and grandchildren any longer. Is that a deliberate public policy choice by the Government? Is it a good choice?

The clearest demonstration of a fact that has bothered me during the life of this Parliament is that for over four years any significant Act affecting families that has been discussed in this Parliament has been under the responsibility of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and has been discussed by the Standing Committee on Finance along with other tax matters such as customs, excise tax and income tax. We have turned the Finance Committee of this Chamber into the primary screening body for social policy, particularly as that policy affects families. I suggest we have done a disservice to Canadian society and to families by doing that.

Marriage Breakdown

Earlier today, the only government Member to speak on this motion for referral of the issue of families to the standing comittee was the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ferguson). It was a Finance Minister's speech. It did not deal with the heart of the issue, which is, in the first instance, a definition of what constitutes a family. What is a family in Canadian society and how does public policy impact on that family? Are we, as legislators, responsible for the change in family patterns that we are experiencing as a result of our taxation and other policies? Are we doing an adequate job in meeting the needs of the people living in those different family patterns?

I defy any Member in this Chamber to stand up and indicate that he has enough knowledge and has had enough time to examine those issues in order to reach conclusions. We can reach conclusions based on our own biases and ideologies, but I suggest that the issue is more complex. We could all benefit by knowing more about this issue. If the eight members of the Government sitting on the opposite side were simply to stay seated for the next three minutes, the subject matter of the Canadian family could go to the Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. That committee could work hard to study the issue of the Canadian family and decide whether something needs to be done. It may conclude that little or nothing should be done, or it may decide that much needs to be done. One Member, by standing in the House in the next two minutes, can decide for the whole country that the issue is not worth studying. I hope that no Member will do that, because a study of this issue is long overdue. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) is sitting in the front row. A signal from her to her colleagues to remain seated will allow the House to discuss the issue of the family and the impact of public policy on it. I hope Hon. Members will stay in their place and allow that to happen.

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie) has raised an important subject which interests many of the Members of the House and the Government and I am pleased to be able to speak on this motion. The social and economic implications of marriage breakdown can be severe for many families, and I appreciate this opportunity to present my views on how families and government programs cope with these problems.

I am particularly concerned with the income problems that divorce causes for many families. For many women, divorce brings about a significant decline in the standard of living they can expect and increases the risk of poverty. This Government has always been concerned with Canadians in poverty and hardship and is committed to helping those Canadians who need help the most. I want to focus my remarks today on how the Government helps those who are most in need.

For many families, the departure, death or disability of its primary wage earner represent the greatest threat to its economic security. In the case of divorce, the departure of the major breadwinner can leave the spouse and dependent children, and particularly a spouse who has not worked outside the home, at considerable risk with respect to future income and economic hardship. I would like to speak briefly about these problems for divorced families and then return to the point of how these families currently get help and attention from government programs.

SPACE WEAPONRY—ANTI-SATELLITE WEAPONS—CANADIAN POSITION. (B) REQUEST THAT CANADA REFUSE TO TEST ANTI-SATELLITE WEAPONS

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, April 3, I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to press for a ban on anti-satellite and other space weapons. I also asked that Canada not participate in any way in the testing or development of anti-satellite or other "Star Wars" weapons or technologies. The Prime Minister did not answer my question. He said he would tell me some time about the Government's distinction between high and low altitude anti-satellite weapons. He did not address my question about anti-satellite weapons in general and space weapons in general. Not only was the Prime Minister's answer insufficient, it was also misleading.

At the present time neither the United States nor the Soviet Union possesses the capacity to pose a significant threat to the other's satellites. But developments are taking place for the first steps in this new-generation leap in the arms race and nuclear war fighting abilities. The Soviet Union has conducted 20 tests for anti-satellite weapons. Eleven of those tests have failed. Furthermore, the A-Sat is launched on an SS9 sized ICBM which has limited mobility and easy verification. In short, at the present state of development there is not yet a Soviet threat to deterrence or arms control.

The United States is now, this year, preparing to test its new generation anti-satellite known as the Prototype Miniature Air Launched System, PMALS. This small rocket will be launched from a high flying F-15 fighter aicraft. The Arms Control Association in Washington, D.C. says this new weapon:

—will constitute a significant improvement over the existing Soviet A-Sat.

Writing for the Association, John Pike of the Federation of American Scientists also says:

Because of its small size, the PMALS will pose potentially insurmountable verification problems.

As we know, Mr. Speaker, the ability to verify the nature, number and location of weapons is the basis for any hope of nuclear arms control and limitation.

Ineffective Soviet tests have taken place. The United States, only this week encouraged by President Reagan's report to Congress, is proceeding with the tests of its own anti-satellite weapons, this new generation of weapons. Deployment and the threat of use have not yet taken place, but the time to act, the window of opportunity, is now.

That is why the Prime Minister is so misleading in calling for an artificial differentiation between high and low altitude anti-satellite weapons. All anti-satellite weapons should be banned, and they should be banned now before there are any such weapons deployed at any altitude.

Grave problems would arise if Canada were to work toward and help achieve a ban on only one level, or altitude, of anti-satellite weapons. The two superpowers would be permitted, indeed encouraged, to proceed with the development and deployment of a new generation of weapons for nuclear war fighting in space at some supposed "low" altitude already conceded by the Prime Minister. The technological developments that we do not want for any purpose would take place. Testing would take place. Deployment would take place, and it would be difficult, if not impossible, to assess and verify the flexibility and potential purpose of such weapons. Who could guarantee that weapons allowed for "low" altitude would not be used for "high" altitude? Who could control how the technology could be used once developed?

In his division of the universe into high and low altitudes, how would the Prime Minister address the problem of the majority of Soviet satellites that are presently in eliptical orbits around the earth which bring them into very close proximity to earth as well as the farther reaches of space?

It is understandable that the Prime Minister was advised in preparing his peace initiative proposals to draw this false distinction, hoping to appease Washington and gain the ear of the White House for his peace initiative. He chose not to take on the Reagan fast-action plans for these weapons, and chose instead to propose a ban on something further down the road, so-called "high altitude" anti-satellite weapons. This might have been a useful negotiating tactic to interest the Americans in his own proposals for arms control and better East-West relations. However, as the Prime Minister knows, the Reagan Administration did not accept his peace initiative proposals. And the Prime Minister knows that what might have been an acceptable negotiating position for his peace initiative should not be the Canadian Government policy on the general question of anti-satellite weapons and the militarization of space, at any altitude. There should be a ban on these weapons and a treaty to create such a ban.

The Soviet Union has placed before the United Nations what Canadian experts in arms control describe as "a perfectly acceptable treaty" to ban such weapons. The Soviet Union has offered to destroy its anti-satellite developments to date. Canada should pressure the United States to respond in a positive and constructive way to this opening proposal.

The Union of Concerned Scientists in the United States has reported that verification of such a treaty is possible. Only the Reagan administration is dismissing the possibility of verification and a treaty. The Reagan administration is precluding negotiations before they can begin, instead of negotiating to come to a verification agreement.

The Prime Minister should commit Canada to promoting a complete ban on anti-satellite and space-based weapons. The Prime Minister should certainly make it clear that Canada will not agree to take part in any way in the development and testing of such anti-satellite and space weapons. Finally, he should cease making this artificial differentiation between low and high altitudes.

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, during the Second United Nations Special Session on Disarmament in 1982, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) drew attention to the urgency of coming to grips with the development of new weaponry for use in outer space. He noted how quickly in today's world science fiction had become reality and how inadequate the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space had become. There were loopholes in the Treaty which risked being highly destabilizing. He had in mind particularly anti-satellite weapons or anti-missile laser systems. As he pointed out then, "we cannot wait much longer if we are to be successful in foreclosing the prospect of space wars". He therefore proposed that an early start be made on a treaty to prohibit the development, testing and deployment of all weapons for use in outer space.

In the Committee on Disarmament in Geneva, now called the Conference on Disarmament, we have been working for the establishment of a working group to discuss outer space issues, including an anti-satellite treaty. We were close to reaching an agreement on setting up such a body at the 1983 session of the Conference on Disarmament, but the Soviet Union required time to refer the matter to Moscow. So far during the current session of the CD no agreement has been reached on this working group.

It is not surprising, in light of what I have already said, that in developing his initiative the Prime Minister focused on the question of outer space, and particularly anti-satellite weapons. We were aware that for some years the Soviet Union had been testing an anti-satellite system directed at low-flying satellites. By the beginning of this year the U.S.A. had also tested a comparable system. Neither superpower, however, has yet developed an anti-satellite system for high altitudes. It was our belief that an agreement not to do so was therefore still possible.

As part of his initiative, the Prime Minister proposed a ban on the testing and deployment of those anti-satellite systems designed to operate at high altitudes where the race has not yet begun. It was our view that such systems, by attacking global communications satellites which are located in high altitudes and which are of critical importance for crisis management, could be particularly destabilizing. It would leave an adversary blind and mute at the very moment when stability demands awareness and response. We are continuing our consultations with our NATO allies on this proposal.

Outer space is a subject to which we have been devoted and are continuing to devote a great deal of attention. Our whole approach to this question is governed by our concern about the possible militarization of outer space and its destabilizing effect on superpower relationships.

CROWN CORPORATIONS—CONFLICT OF INTEREST INQUIRY

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take part in the Adjournment Debate this evening as a result of a question I directed to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) on March 28 following a planted question by a member on the Government side. I asked him what intentions he may have with respect to the disposition of the Northern Transportation Company. To my surprise the Minister replied that the Government was to privatize this Crown corporation.

Also I asked at that time whether there was any reason for me to suspect that this undue haste in the privatization of the Northern Transportation Company came about as a result of an inquiry started by the United States air force over the use of a piece of United States military equipment by the Northern Transportation Company, this Crown corporation. The answer the Minister gave me was that that was not true, that the reason the Government chose at this time to privatize Northern Transportation Corporation was based upon a change of economic circumstances.

I draw to the attention of the House the December 31, 1982 Consolidated Statement and Financial Position of NTCL. The current assets were $26,269,000, current liabilities of $9,860,000, leaving retained earnings assets in the company of some $16 million. Therefore, the Minister's explanation that it was based on a change of economic circumstances is suspect.

On January 10, 1984, the chairman of Northern Transportation Company Limited, Mr. Montpetit, met with representatives of the United States Air Force and the United States Government to discuss the use of the ARD-31. In questioning Mr. Montpetit, there was no mention to the United States Air Force at that time that there would be any privatization of the Northern Transportation Company. That was on January 10.

On February 21 Mr. Montpetit and Mr. Cameron were before the Standing Committee on Transport. They were questioned as to the use of the ARD-31 and the relationship of that Crown corporation to the United States Air Force and, indeed, the Government of the United States on the use of United States military equipment. At that time Mr. Montpetit explained that over the past number of years they had made money using the ARD-31, but he did not explain it very fully. He said that in three years they lost money. We asked how the company managed to be on the profit side in five years. He replied that in the first two years they broke even, in the next two years they made money and in the last year they lost money. According to Mr. Montpetit, they lost money in the last three years.

That led us to delve a little deeper into the operation of the ARD-31 and the Northern Transportation Company. By charging rates of up to $40,000 a day, which is not unusual for the use of a floating drydock, and not being flexible in the changing of those rates, the year that Mr. Montpetit said they lost money happened to be a year when they had no business, when they were unrealistic in their charges. The companies they had serviced prior refused to bid on business for their ships. At the same time, one of those companies, Arctic Transportation Company, felt that this Crown corporation was so inflexible that it brought in its own floating drydock to service its ships.

Consider the dates of the February 21 meeting of the standing committee and the January 10 meeting with Mr. Montpetit and the United States Air Force. I find it strange that Mr. Montpetit said that the relationship between this corporation and the United States Air Force was most cordial. He was very defensive when I asked whether there were some negotiations taking place between Northern Transportation Company and the United States Air Force for the purchase of the ARD-31. He said they were negotiating to purchase it and he believed they were to purchase the vessel in the very near future. They were operating at that time as an ongoing company.

It is strange with all this good relationship and the forthrightness with which this Crown corporation treated the United States Government, that a letter was sent by Congresswoman Pat Schroeder to the Hon. Verne Orr, Secretary of the Air Force, Attention: Legislative Liaison (Major Wayne Christine), Pentagon, Washington, listing some 12 questions which the United States Air Force wanted answered regarding the operation of the ARD-31.

● (1815)

That brings us to February 21, 1984, at which time there was no indication from the Chairman of the Board and the Chief Executive Officer during an entire sitting of the Standing Committee on Transport that the business was going to be privatized. However, from February 21 to March 28, a rush occurred, after an inquiry by the United States Air Force. There was even a suggestion by the United States Air Force that it would like to have the Adjutant-General take a look at the operation of this vessel and the Canadian Crown corporation with which it has contracts.

At that time, the company began to proceed with undue haste. It was indicated that the company would be privatized and disposed of as quickly as possible. As a matter of fact, I would not be at all surprised if directions have been sent that it should be disposed of within a month and a half, within perhaps six weeks. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger), says that it is to be six weeks. The Minister has sent directions to the President of NTCL that he is to be ready to sell that company within six weeks.

There is now undue haste, Mr. Speaker. There should be a full public inquiry into the operation of the ARD-31 before that money which legally belongs to the people of Canada is transferred into private hands.

Mrs. Éva Côté (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take this opportunity to answer the Hon. Member's question about the taking over of the Northern Transportation Company Ltd. by a private concern.

In the question he asked on May 28 last, the Hon. Member suggested that there was some relation between the Government's decision to privatize Northern Transportation Company Ltd. and some concerns about the use of military equipment in the United States and conflicts of interests in which officials of the company might be involved. I would like to repeat the statement by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) that there was no relation between our decision and the Hon. Member's allegations. The decision to hand over the Northern Transportation Company Ltd. to private interests was taken after due consideration of several factors. As the Minister has mentioned, the company no longer needs to belong to the Crown to reach Government objectives. The decision has been taken because the Government is satisfied that the company will continue to provide Northerners with efficient, trustworthy and affordable services.

Some time ago, the board of directors had suggested to the Government that privatization should be considered on the basis of economic change and commercial opportunities through diversification. In addition, the Government wants to give northern natives a chance to develop their own resourcefulness.

The Northern Transportation Company Ltd. is important to the natives because it supplies the communities. The Canadian Government hopes the northern population will acquire a sense of belonging through active involvement in that company.

I should like to add a few comments in connection with the Hon. Member's concerns about the activities of the company. With respect to the use of American military equipment, I would like to reassure him that the company keeps close contacts with the military authorities in the United States who do not object to Northern Transportation using their military equipment. Relations between the company and the United States Air Force have been and remain excellent.

On the other hand, I am surprised that the Hon. Member raises the question of a possible conflict of interests involving company officials. As he knows, the matter was discussed at length at a sitting of the Standing Committee on Transport on February 21, 1984. The Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) directed several questions to the chairman of the Board and he seemed quite happy with the answers which he received; I would like once again to quote one of his colleagues, the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) who was interviewed by The Hub of Hay River newspaper, as reported in the newspaper on March 7:

"Some of my colleagues are engaging in a bit of a witch hunt, and I personally do not approve."

I would therefore suggest the Hon. Member should seek advice from his colleagues before making such statements.

PUBLIC SERVICE—REPORTED ACCEPTANCE OF DIRECTORSHIP BY FORMER PRIVY COUNCIL OFFICIAL. (B) CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, on April 2, 1984 I questioned the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) with respect to the announcement that one Michael J. L. Kirby had accepted an appointment to the Board of Directors of National Sea Products Ltd. It was my contention, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. Kirby's acceptance of such an appointment would be a violation of the conflict of interest guidelines for persons appointed to the Public Service.

• (1820)

Let me say for the record, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. Kirby is now a member of the other place with a designation of "South Shore". My concern and complaint relates to his capacity as a former public official, indeed an officer of the Privy Council. It was in that capacity that I raised my question and indicated my concern.

The proof of and the justification for my intervention is in the fact that a few days later, on April 5, 1984, Mr. Kirby announced that he had withdrawn from the process by which he would have been appointed to the Board of Directors of National Sea Products. Indeed, I take it that both the Prime Minister and Mr. Kirby would be prepared to admit that there was a potential violation, if not an actual violation, of the guidelines respecting conflict of interest.

My concern, as I rise in the House today, is not so much with the attitude of Mr. Kirby or the Prime Minister, but with the comments of the newspaper which originally reported the proposed appointment of Mr. Kirby to the Board of Directors of National Sea Products, that is the Halifax Chronicle-Herald. On April 7, 1984, the editorial writer for that newspaper indicated that National Sea Products in its desire to find the best possible people to serve on its Board of Directors had selected Mr. Kirby, but his withdrawal and, in the words of the article, the activity of his "quick-draw detractors" was not in the public interest. I would like to tell the editorial writers of The Chronicle-Herald, and the people of Canada, that I totally disagree with that position.

There is one thing the public demand from those in public office, whether the office be appointive or elective; that is honesty. By "honesty" I do not mean fair dealing in all transactions, but the avoidance of any suspicion that persons are not being fair in dealing with the duties and responsibilities placed upon them. The very purpose of conflict of interest rules is to avoid both the actual improper activity that might be perpetrated by holders of public office and, more importantly, even the suspicion of bad conduct on their part.

There is no question, Mr. Speaker, that the violation, or potential violation, was clear under the existing guidelines. One of the provisions of the guidelines states that an office holder must not, within the relevant time period, accept appointment to the board of directors of a commercial corporation which has as a matter of course a special relationship with the department or agency with which he was last employed.

There is no question that Mr. Kirby had a special relationship with National Sea Products Limited. In fact, the very newspaper which raised this matter contains a detailed report on the signing of an agreement between the Government of Canada, the Province of Nova Scotia, National Sea Products Limited and other parties interested in the restructuring of the Atlantic fishery. Mr. Kirby had been appointed specifically by the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development Mr. Johnston to head the negotiating committee for the federal Government, not in his previous public office as secretary to the cabinet for federal-provincial relations. According to the Montreal Gazette he held a position as Deputy Clerk of the Privy Council. In addition, he himself said he held the position of Deputy Minister of Fisheries. Here was a person who held various kinds of public offices, clearly an officer in the public domain charged with the responsibility for dealing not only with the restructuring of the Atlantic fishery but the direct dealings with National Sea Products Limited and other companies connected with the Atlantic fisheries. For that person to then offer his services directly to the same company, National Sea Products Limited, in its commercial activities, is a violation of the worst kind.

● (1825)

That is exactly the kind of activity the guidelines are designed to prevent. They are intended to prevent public servants from going into commercial activity in the private sector and utilizing, or appearing to utilize, or risking the possibility that they will utilize, the information that has come to them in their public capacity as officers of the Government of Canada.

If that were not enough, Mr. Speaker, the same person, as I said, holds a position in the Senate. The provisions of the Senate and House of Commons Act are even clearer than the guidelines that would apply to them as public servants. Section 22(1) of that Act says:

> No person, who is a member of the Senate, shall directly or indirectly, knowingly or wilfully be a party to or be concerned in any contract under which the public money of Canada is to be paid.

The whole point of the exercise of restructuring the Atlantic fisheries was to provide public funds for the companies engaged in the Atlantic fisheries. National Sea Products Limited would be the beneficiary of millions of dollars of public funds. Mr. Kirby was ready to deal with them in his private capacity. I have said that honesty is the most important element expected of public officers, public servants and elected politicians. We must do everything we can to protect the public from any possible dishonesty or any indication of dishonesty.

Recently Bruce MacDonald was taken away from Revenue Canada as the Deputy Minister. How would you like it if he went to work for H and R Block and told the citizens of Canada that he was now prepared to prepare their tax returns knowing all he had learned in Revenue Canada? Mr. Speaker, the editorial comment is nonsense, not acceptable—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired.

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in response to an allegation of conflict of interest raised by the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) on April 2, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) agreed to take notice of the question and to seek the facts. I am glad to have this occasion to lay the facts of this case before Hon. Members of the House. I particularly appreciate having the opportunity to correct the misguided notions and misguided statements just made by the Hon. Member for Halifax West.

It is a fact, Mr. Speaker, that Michael Kirby is not on the Board of Directors of National Sea Products Limited and that he never was on that Board. As a consequence, there is absolutely no basis to the allegation that Mr. Kirby is in a conflict of interest situation. The allegation is hypothetical and conjectural and is not founded in fact. The Hon. Member is taking a partisan approach by attacking the reputation of a respected Canadian who is committed to the economic revitilization of the Atlantic fisheries. Mr. Kirby is a man of established abilities and experience who has worked very hard to help bring about the successful restructuring of the Atlantic fisheries.

It is a touch of irony, Mr. Speaker, that the very newspaper which raised the matter of Mr. Kirby's nomination should, in a subsequent editorial, praise Mr. Kirby. I would like to quote from The Halifax Chronicle Herald of April 7, 1984, from which my friend from Halifax West also quoted. It said:

> It is a sad thing for the fisheries that he cannot answer—

Mr. Speaker, this is terribly important:

> —positively a request by the company that he became a member of the Board, although it is a mark of his integrity that he considered the issue and withdrew.

The point is, Mr. Speaker, that he was offered a position on the Board by the company. The Hon. Member for Halifax West implied that Mr. Kirby offered his services to National Sea Products. That is totally false. National Sea Products offered Mr. Kirby a place on the Board. Mr. Kirby considered and withdrew. He did the honourable thing. I wish I could say the same thing for the Hon. Member who raised the issue in the House.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

RIGHTS OF JAPANESE CANADIANS INTERNED DURING WORLD WAR II

Hon. Jim Fleming (York West): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my concern that something must be done to recognize formally the injustice suffered by Canadians of Japanese origin during World War II. I do it in the context of a Government which, over its current term, has made historic and exceptional moves to guarantee human rights and fight prejudice. We have the inclusion in our new Charter of Rights of fundamental laws basic to a nation like our own, built upon diversity. The Charter forbids discrimination on the basis of race, national, or ethnic origin.

This Government has for the first time added social responsibility and equity to its primary policy objectives in multiculturalism. It has established a race relations unit. It has added millions of dollars for new programs to fight racism. It has, with opposition Party concurrence, sponsored the first ever Canadian parliamentary inquiry into the problems faced by our visible minorities.

Having served as Minister of Multiculturalism when these and other first time initiatives on racial equity took place, I think it will be most regrettable if the Cabinet does not formally recognize the appalling consequences, fear, and hysteria brought to thousands of good and committed Canadians. It is not only for the sake of a single community, but by focusing on a tragedy and injustice of major proportions we can indicate to all that we can redress the wrongs of earlier times, especially when many of those who suffered are still here today, living with their nightmarish memories. A formal admission; the public dedication of some lasting symbol is surely the least we can provide. Otherwise a living shadow lies across the path of hope this Government has set.

INDUSTRY

SUPPORT FOR FOOTWEAR IMPORT QUOTAS

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, on October 19, 1983, the Canadian footwear industry, because of high import penetration, rightly asked for the extension of global quotas for five years so as to permit the industry to obtain 50 per cent of the domestic market. The Canadian footwear industry is still waiting for a reply from the Government. In the meantime, Mr. Speaker, because no decision has yet been taken, many more jobs that could have been created have not materialized.

Footwear imports do not benefit the consumer. Imported shoes may cost less to make than an equivalent domestic product, but when one examines the situation as I have, they sell for the same price on the retail market.

Imports, Mr. Speaker, mean fewer jobs for Canadians. For every 2,500 pair of shoes imported, one Canadian job is lost. Last year 56 million pairs of shoes were imported into Canada, which means that Canada has exported 22,000 jobs.

Does it make sense, Mr. Speaker, to export thousands of permanent footwear industry jobs to countries such as Brazil, Korea, Taiwan, and others, which do not even allow imports of Canadian shoes?

Therefore, I call upon the Government to do everything possible, and to do the right thing regarding the Canadian footwear industry, by agreeing to its request for the extension of global quotas so that thousands of additional badly needed jobs can be created as soon as possible.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT AID SAWMILL INDUSTRY

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, we are all aware of the existing conditions in the sawmill industry in Canada. The production capacity is increasing more quickly than the marketing opportunities.

Considering that many companies are now applying for federal grants in order to modernize or build plants, the Government must review those applications very carefully so as not to favour some at the expense of others.

However, care should also be taken not to lapse into an excessive and short-sighted protectionism, systematically suppressing within that industry a healthy competition which exists in other areas.

There is in my riding, Mr. Speaker, a remote village with almost no means of livelihood. The people there have decided to take charge, invest a good share of their welfare allowances and join forces with a responsible partner.

The decision of the Department of Regional Economic Development is a long time coming. I hope that the Government will consider that request not on the basis of the interests of cigar-smoking fat cats who haunt the boardrooms of giant multinationals, but on the basis of rationale and equity for people who will not let themselves go to pot and be eaten away by social welfare.

INPUT COSTS OF FARMERS—CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, Canada's food producers are travelling down the road toward dire straits. Farm bankruptcies have increased by 290 per cent in the past five years. Net farm income as a ratio of gross income has declined continuously from 1965. Farm operating expenses have increased 115 per cent between 1976 and 1982. They are projected to increase another 110 per cent by 1986, while farm commodity prices decline.

It is against that background that the federal Government refuses to pay farmers nearly $1 billion of their own money in the Western Grain Stabilization Fund. It is in light of these devastating economic facts that Governments have caused farm fuels to be taxed 75 per cent more than production costs. It is against these hard economic realities that the federal Government has now increased the long-term interest rates of the Farm Credit Corporation to a devastating 15 per cent. Farmers everywhere know the impact of these facts.

Today I appeal to urban Canada to rise up in anger against the federal Government. Your food security is threatened, and you are dangerously close to losing your world price advantage on low-cost foods. All Canadians must hear the message. The business of food production is seriously threatened.

FISHERIES

ATTITUDE OF QUEBEC MINISTER

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Mr. Speaker, I should like to call the attention of the House to a situation concerning the fisheries on Quebec's Middle and Lower North Shore. Last year, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans announced that the federal government would invest $30 million in that area, and now the whole operation has stopped because the Quebec Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food is preventing fishermen's committees from acquiring a site near the wharves where they could build processing plants or install an ice-house.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that it is important for the Quebec Minister to trust the fishermen from Middle and Lower North Shore, more specifically that part of the mainland between Kegaska and Blanc-Sablon facing Anticosti Island as far as Newfoundland in view of the forthcoming fishing season. Mr. Speaker, the Quebec Minister of Fisheries can certainly wait, but the fishing season will not, and the Canadian Saltfish Corporation would like to make sure that fishing facilities are available before entering into contract agreements with the various fishermen's associations of the Middle and Lower North Shore.

I therefore urge the Quebec minister without further delay to meet the requirements of the Middle and Lower North Shore fishermen.

HUMAN RIGHTS

U.S.S.R.—PLIGHT OF ANDREI SAKHAROV

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, Andrei Sakharov is a prominent Soviet physicist and well-known human rights activist who for years has been a respected critic of the violation of human rights in his native country, and has criticized the Soviet Union in respect of its stand on foreign relations and the immigration of some of its people. For this role Mr. Sakharov has been punished severely by the Soviet Government. He is now forced to live under constant surveillance in a remote and isolated area of the Soviet Union. He has been repeatedly refused permission to travel, and permission to receive hospital treatment for heart and kidney diseases.

Mr. Sakharov's wife, Elena Bonner, is currently in a state of badly deteriorating health and requires medical treatment for an eye ailment which is not available to her in the Soviet Union. Up to this point she has also been refused permission to travel outside the Soviet Union to receive treatment for her ailments.

Given Mr. Sakharov's stature as a crusader for the expansion of human rights in the Soviet Union, and the serious condition in which he and his wife find themselves as a direct result of their beliefs, I urge the Canadian Government to make an appeal on behalf of the Sakharovs to the Soviet Government asking that humanity be shown, that Mrs. Bonner be permitted to seek medical attention outside the Soviet Union, and that Mr. Sakharov be permitted hospital treatment. Also I would like to ask other Hon. Members of the House concerned with and supportive of the brave campaign the Sakharovs have waged, to appeal to the Soviet Government to show some compassion in this case.

MULTICULTURALISM

ETHNIC COMMUNITIES URGED TO SUPPORT BILINGUALISM

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, because of my ethnic background multiculturalism has been one of my top priorities for the last 15 years as an elected provincial and federal Member. During those 15 years multiculturalism has gained considerable provincial and federal prominence, with inclusion in the new Canadian Constitution. Permit me to state again in this Assembly what I said in my constitutional speech on March 10, 1981. I said:

> The extension of duality promotes and enhances our diversity. Oneness would accelerate homogenization and rapidly destroy our diversity, as it has with our neighbour to the South. The melting pot process would prevail with oneness. Multiculturalism lives because duality is alive. It is duality which promotes and enhances our diversity. Bilingualism kindles the desire for, and extension of, multiculturalism. It is the very essence of bilingualism and multiculturalism which provides diversity and gives us an exciting national fabric which makes for a new nationhood, even though some ferment must be endured.

• (1415)

All ethnic Canadians, and particularly those in Manitoba, should weigh seriously their support for duality and multiculturalism and their inter-relationship.

NATIONAL REVENUE

DEPARTMENT'S TRAINING FILM FOR AUDITORS—REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue. Members of Parliament have now had the opportunity to see the film that is used in training his auditors, the film which counsels his auditors to trap, mislead, catch taxpayers off guard, and how to manipulate taxpayers. Will the Minister order that film scrapped immediately?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the committee had an opportunity to discuss the nature of that film. It is unfortunate that the Hon. Member did not grasp the meaning of explanations on the true nature of the film. It is used to train a specific group of auditors and serves as a basis of discussion. I also indicated to the committee that an internal group within the Department is now making a review of all the training aids we use. I will receive a report from that committee in a few weeks.

[English]

FOREWORD TO FILM—"FISHING EXPEDITION" STATEMENT

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, the Minister says that film is targeted only to a certain group. Is he aware of the introductory film which is shown to auditors, which contains his former Deputy Minister saying this to the auditors:

> Though it concerns audit of a large corporation, the basic procedures for obtaining access to a taxpayers' records and documents should be pretty much the same regardless of the size of the business.

How does the Minister justify his statement with what Mr. MacDonald, his former Deputy Minister, has said? If the Minister has seen the film, does he agree with the statement in the film that auditors should treat every audit as if it were a fishing expedition? Does he agree that taxpayers should be manipulated and the Department should attempt to trap taxpayers in the way that is demonstrated in that film?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, this is not the first time that the House is given an opportunity to see that the Hon. Member himself is a professional manipulator. Since he seems to enjoy manipulating public opinion, he sees everything just as he wants things to be manipulated. This film does not show auditors how to manipulate people, it is designed to train auditors. It has been used to train only those auditors who deal with yearly business operations of at least $500 million.

The Hon. Member himself is a manipulator and he distorts reality in the same way as he would like others to do.

[English]

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I will stand my reputation up against the Minister's any day of the week.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: If Canadians have the truth on this issue, it has come from this side of the House, not like the half truths and evasions that have come from the other side.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DEPARMENT'S POWERS

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): One thing that the Minister will know that the film does do accurately is to portray the fact that the breadth of power of the Department is so broad that taxpayers are not given the rights that accused criminals are given. In view of that fact, is the Minister prepared to exercise his ministerial responsibility to seek amendments to his Act to constrain the powers of his Department so that they are consistent with basic civil liberties, and to ensure that ordinary taxpayers in Canada at least have the same rights that would be given to people charged with serious offences?

• (1420)

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, those are the exact words and principles that I repeated to my Deputy Minister when he assumed his responsibilities last week. Yesterday, the Hon. Member was able to see for himself to what extent the Department of National Revenue respects those principles which we kept reasserting throughout the proceedings all day yesterday before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Speaker, no wonder the Hon. Member does not understand anything! See him! Sly-looking, always turning around to seek the advice of his colleagues!

When it comes to reputation, I make my own! I do not feel the need to build it up through half-truths and misleading allegations.

[English]

FILM'S MESSAGE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of National Revenue and deals with the film in which the message is, unlike that in the United States and the United Kingdom, is that the taxpayer is not to be trusted, the taxpayer is guilty until proven innocent, and that heavy-handed inquisitorial methods are to be used on the average taxpayer. Since this message is just the contrary to the direction given by the Minister to his Deputy Minister in a recent letter, will the Minister not now agree to withdraw this odious film from the training program?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I would withdraw the film if its message were along the line of thought just expressed by the Hon. Member, but that is not the message.

[English]

REQUEST THAT MINISTER REVIEW TRAINING TECHNIQUES

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to point out to the Minister that, if he has seen the film, obviously he does not understand the implications of this very disturbing auditor training technique. For example, a taxpayer who questions the auditor's demands in the film is referred to as a nut. In light of the fact that the film contains the message: "Audits are not based on trust" of the taxpayer, I would like to know if the Minister will review all of the training techniques within his Department to ensure that these repulsive messages are not included in any other technique quite part from this film.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): In a previous answer, Mr. Speaker, I indicated to the Hon. Member that all training aids within the Department are under review. I should like to point out to him as well that his quotation—taken out of context—must be linked to the dynamism of the film. Secondly, the Hon. Member must keep in mind the fact that the film is used during discussions among auditors who are expected to share their enlightening experiences so as to improve their technique and their approach to make top-notch audits. The Hon. Member forgets to say that, at the beginning of the film—and his colleague noted that earlier—my former Deputy Minister points out that tact and diplomacy are the best approach to any kind of audit. That, Mr. Speaker, is the basic message of the film!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—MINING OF PORTS—ROLE OF UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister who has been nominated for the Nobel Peace Prize for his work on issues leading to world peace.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fulton: He is well known for his international remarks on the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, and on the topic of nuclear armaments and disarmament. I would ask the Prime Minister if he would not agree that the approval given in February by the President of the United States to the CIA to mine ports in Nicaragua is an intolerable act of international terrorism, and is an act of war which in reality is no different from the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. Would the Prime Minister, in responding to that question, not agree that he would expect the world community to respond in a similar way in support of Canada if terrorists mined the port of Montreal or Vancouver?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, in relation to the question of the Hon. Member, Canada has taken the position that it is a definite breach of international law for mines to be placed outside ports of countries which are at peace and where hostilities are not occurring. We believe that the placing of mines in the situation in Nicaragua does constitute an illegal international act. It is not clear who is responsible for the placing of those mines.

• (1425)

An Hon. Member: Baloney.

Mr. Regan: Canada has expressed its concern about this matter. It is clearly our position that it is an internationally illegal action.

Our position in general in Central America is well known. We abhor the use of violence and the intervention of outside power. At the present time the Secretary of State for External Affairs is in the Central American region. He has spoken on this subject as recently as this morning. Canada's position will continue to be that of disapproving of acts of violence and those who encourage violence in the area.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. I know he can hear, and I know he is listening. Yesterday Great Britain publicly condemned the mining of Nicaragua's ports. France has publicly offered minesweepers to go in and clean up the American mines put in the ports. Last night, in one of their strongest condemnations of this century, the United States Senate voted 84 to 12, opposing any further mining or any acts related to mining. Even Senator Barry Goldwater thinks the U.S. President is off the deep end.

These acts of terrorism conducted by the Reagan administration deserve the full condemnation of the Prime Minister and this House. Rather than sitting there silently and tacitly approving of these acts, would the Prime Minister at least tell the House what he thinks of this kind of international terrorism against a sister country in the Americas?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know why the Hon. Member suggests that I tacitly approve these acts. The Acting Secretary of State has answered on behalf of the Government. He obviously answered the questions the way I would have answered them. I do not know why the Hon. Member assumes I have the intention of condoning the mining in any way. The Minister has quite clearly condemned the mining. He has said that we have no evidence. The Hon. Member seems to have some that the President gave orders to the CIA in February. It would be interesting to find the source of this fact. We are trying to ascertain who is responsible for this act of terrorism which has been and will be condemned by us.

As the Minister said, the Secretary of State will be returning from the area at the end of this week. If we can ascertain that the acts are coming specifically from the U.S. administration, we will condemn them, as we have condemned the use of arms in the area by the United States and by Cuba. We have been very forceful in condemning the use of arms in that area by both sides. I think that is the difference between us and the NDP who want to condemn the Americans but not those who are supplying Soviet arms.

Mr. Speaker: Final Supplementary. The Hon. Member for Skeena.

MINISTER'S DESCRIPTION OF MINE LAYING

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister would take some time to follow these issues he would know that the U.S. Senate was informed last night that the President gave authorization to the CIA in writing to go ahead and mine those ports in Nicaragua. I am sure the Prime Minister is aware that yesterday, while in Nicaragua, his own hand-chosen Minister of External Affairs described the mining of the ports by the CIA as a "tension element". Perhaps the Prime Minister might decide to make the Minister of External Affairs the minister of sports. That sounds to me more like the description of a twisted jock strap than of the kinds of problems that there are going on in Central America right now. I would like to hear—

Mr. Speaker: Will the Member ask his question? It is his second supplementary.

Mr. Fulton: I would like to hear the Prime Minister's view about the issue of Georges Bank which is before the International World Court. The Government of Nicaragua took the invasion matters before the International World Court—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has not asked a supplementary question. The Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for York North.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATIONAL REVENUE

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT OF TAX LEGISLATION

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I would like a response from the Prime Minister on that.

Mr. Gamble: I, too, had an opportunity to witness the Revenue Canada training film which I felt was suitable as a training program for combat troops prior to a military engagement—

Mr. Fulton: Just because the Prime Minister is a coward, are you going to let him sit there?

Mr. Gamble: —in this case the enemy being the Canadian taxpayer.

● (1430)

One of the issues in the film which I had already drawn to the attention of the Minister on March 22 last—and in this case it is proudly proclaimed—is the absence of any right against self-incrimination specifically referred to in Section 231 of the Act, which is dealt with extensively in that film. Let me now ask the Minister, as I asked him on March 22—at which time he will recall he gave me an absolutely non sequitur response—in light of the revelations which are made in that film is the Minister prepared to recommend to his colleagues in Cabinet that Section 231 be amended to delete any provisions which would oblige the taxpayers of Canada to incriminate themselves under oath in the way in which the Section now provides?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I disagree totally with the Hon. Member's perception and indeed with his comprehension of the film. I invite him to go back to the discussion we had before the Standing Committee yesterday and to make an honest effort to understand firstly, the nature of the film, and secondly, the use that is to be made of it.

With respect to the powers contained in the Income Tax Act, especially in Section 231, the Hon. Member must remember that they arise from the very nature of our taxation system, which is based on self-assessment by the taxpayers themselves. This system is exceedingly demanding on the taxpayer since he is essentially responsible for making a comprehensive report of his income, assessing the taxes owed by him, and finally paying them. I think that if the Hon. Member subscribes to the basics of the system, he must also recognize that certain powers must be provided for in the Act to guarantee the soundness of the system.

[English]

Mr. Gamble: Mr. Speaker, if the Minister does not like my interpretation of that film, why does he not show it on national television and let the people of Canada decide for themselves?

PROVISION OF OFFICE SPACE AND PHOTOCOPYING SERVICES TO TAX ASSESSORS

Mr. John Gamble (York North): The Minister knows full well, Mr. Speaker, that the rules against self-incrimination are those which exist in other nations which have self-assessing principles. I want to ask him about one other very misleading provision of that film, and it relates—

Mr. Speaker: Will the Hon. Member ask his question, please?

Mr. Gamble: I am asking the question, Mr. Speaker. There is a provision in that film relating to an obligation of the taxpayer to provide office space for assessors, and copying machines which they can use for the purpose of making copies of materials. Can the Minister tell this House, and all Canadians, where does it say in the Income Tax Act that taxpayers are obliged to provide office space for assessors and where it says they are obliged to provide free photocopying services?

An Hon. Member: And filing cabinets?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is following the Conservative Party philosophy very closely which consists in completely distorting and misinterpreting the facts. The film is used to train a very specific group of auditors who deal with cases relating to an amoung of at least $500 million. That is not the average taxpayer, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

TRANSFER OF MINISTERIAL AUTHORITY TO DEPUTY MINISTER

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Yesterday the Minister, while conceding that he was not interfered with by any legal constraints within the Act in administering his Department, did concede that he had signed certain documents transferring some of his ministerial authority to his Deputy Minister. Would the Minister tell us what authority he transferred?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I have not reconsidered this whole issue since yesterday. There are certain provisions relating to the transfer of authority to deputy ministers which are applied in the normal way. I have kept certain powers and delegated others.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, this is a most astonishing thing. No wonder the Department is in chaos. The Minister has just admitted that he is not sure that he signed a piece of paper giving away his responsibility. That is why it is in such chaos.

In light of this, and on a different matter, may I go to the Prime Minister? Grain freight rates have increased—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Ouellet: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Speaker.

Mr. Mulroney: I am allowed to go.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: They don't want to hear it.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is trying to recognize supplementary questions, and the Chair was under the understanding that the Hon. Leader was asking a question supplementary to that of the Hon. Member for Vancouver South. The Chair has observed a certain order in those matters and is trying hard to be fair. It is normally the turn of the New Democratic Party. The Chair will then come back to the Hon. Leader of the Opposition for his turn.

The Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke.

Mr. Parker: Mr. Speaker my question is directed to the—

Mr. Speaker: Order. the Hon. Member for Vancouver South on a supplementary.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TABLE DOCUMENTS TRANSFERRING AUTHORITY

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue, who does not seem to know what he signed. Yesterday in high dudgeon at the tactics of this Party, he said that only a few days before he had written to the Leader of the Opposition saying that our objectives are the same with respect to reform of the problems. But he said this: "Criticism—"

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the Hon. Member ask his supplementary?

Mr. Fraser: I certainly shall, Mr. Speaker. The Minister said that "Criticism must be balanced, well considered, well documented and knowledgeable." In view of the fact that the Minister says that criticism should be knowledgeable, will the Minister table the documents transferring authority which he admits he signed? And will he table those documents immediately so we have some idea at least of what the Minister did?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): As a Member of the Privy Council and as a former Member of a Cabinet, the Hon. Member should be aware of the conditions under which transfers of ministerial authority occur within a department. Mr. Speaker, I certainly would not want him to impute motives as his colleague did. I have requested information on the nature of these documents and the policy concerning them, and as soon as it is available, I shall be in a position to answer the Hon. Member's question.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

LINGAN-PHELEN COAL MINE PROJECT IN NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for regional and industrial expansion. It arises from the tragic fire at Devco's No. 26 colliery in Cape Breton. As the Minister knows, one man is dead and 1,400 people are out of work because of the fire. The Leader of the New Democratic Party in Nova Scotia sent a telegram to the Minister yesterday calling on the Government to speed up development of the Lingan-Phelen coal mine, a move which would provide jobs and spare these people severe economic hardship.

We are not asking for anything new. We are asking the Minister to assist in getting on with the development and getting these people back to work. Will the Minister take immediate steps to assist these people and get them back to work?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I have already received representations, for example, from the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond as well as from the Leader of the Opposition and the Premier of Nova Scotia, and several other Members, who want us to fast-track a decision with respect to the opening of a new mine. My officials have been working since Friday with the Devco officials to bring this information to my attention. It is hoped that we can make a decision with respect to the new mine as soon as possible.

LACK OF EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, it is very important. Markets are at stake. There is 24 per cent unemployment in this area. An additional 1,400 people are out of work and there are other areas where they could go to work. Will the Minister tell us now when he will be able to get these people back to work?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I believe I answered that in my first response. We have been working on this thing for the last couple of months. It will cost a minimum of a quarter of a billion dollars to open up a new mine. Prior to the fire we have been working for the last two or three weeks extensively with respect to new capital projects for Devco. Hopefully we can make a decision as soon as we get all the necessary information as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

FEDERAL SALES TAX ON FARM FUEL

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Thank you for your courtesy, Mr. Speaker. My question is for the Prime Minister. Grain freight rates have already increased 18 per cent since the Crow legislation came into effect less than five months ago. They are projected to be up more than 400 per cent by the end of the decade. As the Prime Minister knows, western agricultural costs are projected to increase by another 31 per cent within the next two and a half years.

Given the enormous burden on the farmer and fisherman of the high cost of fuel, will the Prime Minister advise if, prior to his departure, the Government will give consideration to removing the 9 per cent federal sales tax on diesel fuel and gasoline used by farmers and fishermen? It would be of vital importance as a job creation component, and would be most appreciated by those charged with the responsibility of producing food in Canada.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, naturally the suggestion made by the Leader of the Opposition which he asked me to give consideration to, will receive that consideration from me. I cannot give an answer, of course, without looking into the cost of such relief. I am sure the Hon. Leader of the Opposition would not have asked this question if he did not have the exact figures, and perhaps he could tell me by how much the deficit would be increased if we were to give this tax relief?

Mr. Mulroney: I would be delighted to; he is badly in need of it. I want to tell the Prime Minister how dismayed I am that any time there is a request on behalf of farmers or fishermen there is a price tag—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Mulroney: —or condition attached to it by this Government. Western agriculture is where the biggest productivity gains have taken place in 15 years and it should be rewarded, not penalized.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

COST OF REMOVING TAX

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the cost is in the neighbourhood of $250 million a year. However, as the Government of Saskatchewan proved by removing that tax provincially, it need not add to the deficit because it is a tremendous impetus for growth. That is what we want. The Saskatchewan experience is there for the Government to examine and I urge the Prime Minister—I take encouragement from his attitude—that, prior to his departure, he will at least once do something good for western agriculture.

Mr. Lapointe (Beauce): What about Quebec, Mulroney?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am thankful to the Leader of the Opposition for educating me, as he says.

Mr. Mulroney: Any time.

Mr. Trudeau: He asked me a question of a statistical nature. He would know, if he is educated himself, that under the rules I cannot be expected to know the cost of every tax cut that he would propose to benefit all and sundry. I have told him that I will take notice of this question. I am at the present time trying to find out by how much the Leader of the Opposition would increase the deficit, not only to help the western grain farmers but also the fishermen, the Department of National Defence where he wants to increase spending, and also in the area of medicare where he wants to give more money to the provinces.

I will gladly add this quarter of a billion dollars a year to the deficit that the Hon. Leader of the Opposition is already increasing, but then I might come back and ask him how he can argue from the other side of his mouth that the Government should be cutting the deficit.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: No matter how hard any profligate bunch of people tried, they could never exceed the record of profligacy of this Government in terms of deficits.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: I hear the yelling. I tell you, that is confirmation of a pretty simple fact: hell hath no fury like a person spurned, or a Grit about whom someone has told the truth. However, I take encouragement from the Prime Minister's observation.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER EXAMINE ISSUE

Mr. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I in fairness construe this—

Mr. Speaker: Will the Hon. Leader of the Opposition ask a question, please?

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, may I take it as a commitment by the Prime Minister to examine this vital question on behalf of farmers and fishermen, and advise the House at the earliest possible moment that it is, hopefully, his intention to proceed in this vital area?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did undertake to examine the question. He does realize that cutting taxes is a budgetary matter and it would have been more in order if he had raised this in the budget debate which terminated not so long ago.

Some Hon. Members: We did.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You probably did not hear it.

Mr. Trudeau: I did hear, Mr. Speaker. I heard them over there accusing the Minister of Finance of having too high a deficit. But ever since I have heard proposals for increased spending from the Opposition. I would examine the question, but I must say I would listen with more sympathy if the Hon. Member had not been so injurious in phrasing his question.

He has asked what we did for the West. If he looks at the grain sales over the period which I have been in office, he will see that they have reached ever-increasing highs.

Mr. Epp: You said: "Why should I sell your wheat?"

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, from the words he used, the Leader of the Opposition seems to take the attitude that any bunch of fools could govern better than we can.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: They are laughing, Mr. Speaker. It is on that basis that they seek to be elected; they are, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Foster: Right on.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EMPLOYMENT

ALLEGED POLICY OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

[English]

Seeing that the Leader of the Opposition is so interested in truth, deficits, and profligacy, he might be interested in listening to this question.

[Translation]

The Minister of Employment and Immigration is aware that following a study which lasted many months, the Progressive Conservative Party released a professional training policy which did not "address" several major issues. This policy was described today by a Montreal editor as inconsistent, confusing, and without any indication as to who would foot the bill for this policy without increasing the deficit, let alone implement it.

[English]

My question to the Minister is this: In a recent report a national advisory panel made certain recommendations about educational leave, about which the Tories did not say a word.

Mr. Speaker: I invite the Hon. Member to ask his question.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, when will the Government be acting on these recommendations?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I cannot help but comment that with respect to the proposals of the Conservative Party which my colleague referred to, I have to say there are some good proposals in their document, as well as some startling proposals. The good ones are the ones we already have in operation; the startling ones are the ones which are regressive.

In response to the Hon. Member's question about the Skill Development Leave task force, the report has been made to me as well as the National Advisory Panel report. I have already discussed the issues raised by that report with my provincial counterparts in our meeting in Saint John, New Brunswick. They agreed with me about the urgency of our continued discussion of those proposals, and we intend to have a conference between the federal Government and my provincial counterparts as soon as possible. We hope to arrange that in June, but it may not now take place until July. However, the conference has already been scheduled because we believe joint action is required by the Governments involved to respond to the recommendation made by that very valuable task force.

THE ADMINISTRATION

USE OF GOVERNMENT TRANSPORT—RULES APPLICABLE TO MINISTERS IN LIBERAL LEADERSHIP CAMPAIGN

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Yesterday, presumably, the Prime Minister discussed with some of his Ministers certain questions of propriety relating to government-paid transportation and government-paid individuals being used for partisan political purposes. Could he indicate to the House what restrictions, if any, he has sugested to leadership candidates respecting the use in their campaigns of public servants, ministerial staff, consultants, and others who are on the public payroll?

● (1450)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did meet with some of the leadership candidates yesterday, and I plan to meet with the others in the next couple of days. We did essentially review the rules which apply in that area and I was satisfied to see that they were well understood by all the candiates with whom I talked.

They are well known rules. They have been stated in the House before. In essence they indicate that any flight that is strictly or essentially for partisan political purposes should not be taken at public expense. There are cases where Ministers will have to use government aircraft when they are essentially discharging governmental duties ad Ministers.

Mr. Lawrence: Of course the Prime Minister has neglected to mention the second part of the question relating to ministerial staff, consultants, public officials and others on the governmental payroll.

MINISTER OF JUSTICE'S CAMPAIGN MANAGER

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, press reports indicate that the campaign manager for the Minister of Justice's leadership campaign is one Jim McDonald who can be reached, now, in the Minister's own governmental ministerial office, and who is on a daily personal financial retainer being paid out of public funds. Has the Prime Minister made sure that that gentleman, among many more whom we could mention, has been given the choice of either doing one job or the other, but not both?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the rules concerning use of aircraft are a repetition of the rules which already exist. It is the same in the case of the ministerial exempt staff or, indeed, any staff. It is clear that any departmental staff should not be used in any political activity of any nature.

As to exempt staff, they are political by their nature. It is normal that they will discharge political functions for that Minister, as a Minister, and his constituency. It would be normal that they continue to do that. It would be like the exempt staff of the Leader of the Opposition which discharges essentially political activities. But of course there should be no active involvement of such staff in the leadership campaign in an overwhelming way, or any other important way, without that staff either resigning or asking for a leave of absence.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

ISSUANCE OF LAY-OFF NOTICES TO WORKERS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. He will remember that during the long debate in connection with amending the Crowsnest Pass agreements he argued repeatedly that passage of the bill would lead to the employment of hundreds and thousands of more workers by the railways and associated companies. In the last couple of weeks CPR has reassigned work in Montreal, Toronto, and Winnipeg, so that at least 57 workers in the diesel shop, wheel shop, and powerhouse have been given their lay-off notices in the last couple of days, and at least 16 workers in the car shop have been given their lay-off notices.

Would the Minister explain to Members of the House and to the laid-off railway workers why the CPR is laying off workers, when the railway and the Minister promised so many times that we would have a greatly expanded workforce rather than less people working?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to point out to the Hon. Member that what we talked about in terms of a major economic expansion is indeed taking place. The railways have committed, in 1984 alone, over $1.4 billion of new purchases and expenditures. This spring we will be initiating perhaps the largest single public works project in North America when the tenders are finally awarded for the Beaver Tunnel.

In Manitoba alone there is the application of a new $14 million diesel shop, the development of a new telecommunications system, and there is double tracking taking place on some 750 kilometres of track. In other words, I could spend all afternoon talking about the number of initiatives and projects that have been launched as a result of the act that the railways are now trying to improve substantially their capacity for moving the natural resources of western Canada. What we stated in the House is in fact coming true.

Mr. Orlikow: I would have thought that the Minister, who has a reputation of being progressive, would agree with me and other reasonable people that a large profitable corporation like the CPR could keep people working with very small effort because they will be expanding their facilities greatly in the next few months.

CONTRACTING PRACTICES—EFFECT ON RAILWAY EMPLOYEES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Both the CPR and CNR have, in recent years, been contracting out more work because they say it is more efficient. It means that union members, railway workers who negotiated pay rates which are fair and decent, are being replaced by non union workers at a substantially lower wage. Would the Minister take up with the railways this whole question of contracting out and what it means to the large number of people who have worked for the railways for years and who are now going to be laid off?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it so happens that I will be meeting with the representatives of CP Rail this afternoon to talk about a number of matters related to the operation of the grain expansion program. I will ask the questions that the Hon. Member has presented.

I want to point out that it is important to recognize that one of the objectives under the new Bill is to improve the efficiency and productivity of our transportation system to allow us to ship our grain to markets at a lower cost so that we can stay internationally competitive. We will be in a very tough competitive world of which transportation is a major component.

In terms of the adjustments that companies must make between workers, we have spoken to them about making sure that those adjustments are made in a tolerant and proper way. I do not think that the Hon. Member would want us in any way to impede the ability of the railways to provide a more productive system, because that would then rebound upon the ability of grain farmers in western Canada to sell their products.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

ELIGIBILITY OF MARRIED WOMEN

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Since the Leader of the Opposition has today apparently proposed an increase in the federal deficit on behalf of the farmers of Canada, would the Prime Minister accept the same proposal as a basis upon which to permit farmers' wives and wives of all other Canadian households to contribute to the Canada Pension Plan and thus help solve the problem of needy elderly women?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think that question illustrates the unthinking character of the Leader of the Opposition's question.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Come on, Pierre!

Mr. Trudeau: He thinks of the farmers but forgets half the Canadian population.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You're hurting on that issue and you know it. Just answer the question.

Mr. Mazankowski: We got him.

Mr. Trudeau: I am not surprised to see such anger on the other side. We know how vulnerable they are in that particular area, and they know how proactive the Government has been. I will discuss the Hon. Member's suggestion with the Minister of National Health and Welfare and attempt to supply her with an answer.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

NEGOTIATIONS ON JAPANESE PARTICIPATION IN CANADIAN INDUSTRY

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional and Industrial Expansion. On several occasions the Minister has made reference to negotiations he is having with Japanese manufacturers and investors regarding their participation in the manufacture of automobiles or component parts in Canada. Will the Minister advise the House on the progress he has made with these discussions, or are his statements mere rhetoric meant to cloud the discussions on quotas with Japanese automobile manufacturers and government officials?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member, who is a businessman, would not want me to divulge in the House the details of the negotiations that are taking place with individual companies. I would hope that we would have some positive announcements in a very short period of time with respect to these negotiations on investment, not only from foreign automotive companies but also North American automobile companies. I think it is important to note that at the present time there are on my desk about $2 billion of potential investments in the automotive industry in the Province of Ontario. I would think that the Hon. Member would consider that positive.

PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH AUTOMOTIVE COUNCIL

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Can the Minister advise if we now have in place an accurate statistical gathering system so that we can know the true figures on production and imports under the auto pact? When will we see the first annual report on the Canadian automobile industry? When is the Minister planning to establish the Automotive Council that he has suggested he would establish?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am planning to give a speech tomorrow to the auto parts industry, and the Automotive Council will be announced at that time.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. McDERMID—UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, I rise on two points of order regarding unparliamentary references made in this House of Commons yesterday. I understand it is a courtesy in the House of Commons if the individual who made the unparliamentary remarks is not in the House that we postpone the point of order until he is present. Is that correct, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Would the Hon. Member state his point of order. I think I know what he is talking about, but I think he should state his point of order.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: I am sure you do, Mr. Speaker.

The first point of order concerns remarks made by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. A famous Nova Scotia writer once said:

For when a man is wrong, and won't admit it, he gets angry.

Yesterday, here in this Chamber, during the exchange I had with the Prime Minister, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development displayed, for all to hear, his eloquent command of the English language when he requested that I keep quiet, and then made a very uncomplimentary observation. Now a learned man—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With regard to the Hon. Member's observation, the Speaker has had a chance to check the "blues". Obviously an unparliamentary term was used. There is no question that at the appropriate time the Chair is prepared to ask the Hon. Minister to withdraw such an unparliamentary reference.

Point of Order—Mr. McDermid

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I would like a chance to put on the record my disgust at what went on yesterday in this House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is engaging at this point in argument. On the point of order with regard to the unparliamentary language, the Chair has no problem coming to a decision. The Hon. Member says he has two points of order. Will he please state his second?

MR. McDERMID—ALLEGED UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, my second point of order also refers to unparliamentary references made to me by the Minister of Public Works during my supplementary question to the Prime Minister. The Minister of Public Works referred to me as "demagogue". This remark was ruled unparliamentary on June 16, 1963. Obviously, Mr. Speaker, my questions yesterday struck a nerve and the Government was reduced to name-calling. I would request that you ask for and receive the unequivocal withdrawal of this remark which is found on page 2,900 of Hansard for April 10, 1984, made by the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will take note of it. The Chair has one observation to make with regard to the matter. The use of unparliamentary language is a function of the context and the Chair is delighted to have the Hon. Member cite with approval the practices in 1963 in this House because I am sure in many respects they were an improvement over what we are following at the present time.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is a reflection on the House.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I have sat here for a number of years and I thought the term I used was rather a mild one compared to what I have seen published. But I am told it is unparliamentary.

An Hon. Member: You would have full understanding of the meaning of that word.

[Translation]

Mr. LeBlanc: To make sure that I am really saying what I mean I shall use a language of which I have a better command, as the Hon. Member seems to suggest. Having read the exchange in question, I am surprised that the Hon. Member raised this issue, for I found it as embarrassing to read today as it was to hear yesterday.

If the expression "demagogue" is deemed unparliamentary, I apologize to the House; having said that, however, I suggest that this exchange is far from being representative of what exchanges in the House ought to be.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister has indicated his apologies to the House for the use of the language. I hope that settles the incident.

An Hon. Member: He is his usual gracious self.

PETITION

PETITIONS

MR. MAYER—ALLEGED MISUSE OF DEAD CATTLE FOR BAIT—SPREAD OF DISEASE—COMPENSATION TO OWNER

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, the petition of the undersigned in the constituency of Portage-Marquette who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your Hon. House will therefore provide a remedy.

The petition points out that the federal authorities mishandled in a negligent way the situation involving the cattle of one of my constituents in Rossburn, Manitoba, and that he should be compensated immediately for the inconvenience caused as well as the loss of income that he suffered as a result of inaction by the federal Government. And that pertaining to the tuberculosis in Mr. Randy Checkowski's cattle, we feel that the federal Government should pressure the provincial government to stop the practice of using unfit bear bait, namely, dead livestock of the domestic type.

Wherefore we, the undersigned, our petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to recommend to the Government of Canada that steps be taken to control the threat of disease spreading to neighbouring herds and that proper compensation under the Animal Disease and Protection Act be granted to Mr. Checkowski.

MR. JELINEK—INSTALLATION OF SAFETY MEASURES AT RAILWAY CROSSINGS

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Mr. Speaker, following the tragic death of six teenagers at the railway crossing in Milton,

Ontario, where it appears that insufficient safety precautions may have caused this sad loss of life, I would like to take this opportunity to present to this House a petition signed by 2,765 residents of Halton supporting the request made to the Canadian Transport Commission by the Town of Milton and the Region of Halton recommending the installation of safety measures at railway crossings in the Halton County, specifically the Derry Road crossing in Milton where not only this tragic accident took place on March 30, 1984, but previous accidents took the lives of Canadians at that same crossing without any action being taken by the CTC.

MR. DOMM—OPPOSITION TO NO-FAULT DIVORCE LEGISLATION

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present the attached petition from the Church of the Open Bible in Peterborough, Ontario, which states that we the undersigned oppose any legislation or action permitting no-fault divorce, no-court divorce, or any other means of making divorce quick and easy.

MR. CULLEN—REINSTATEMENT OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition of the undersigned residents of the City of Sarnia who humbly showeth that the recent murder of two young Sarnia girls is a sad example of the violence that is prevalent and that this petition was brought about by a longstanding desire to curb violence in Canadian society. In the opinion of the undersigned capital punishment is a deterrent and wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to enact legislation reinstating capital punishment. As in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to make a clarification of the order of business for tomorrow. Yesterday the House Leader, the President of the Privy Council, referred to Bill C-24 as being the order of government business. At this time I would like to clarify for the House that tomorrow we will be resuming debate on Bill C-12 and that Bill C-14 will be the back-up Bill. Apart from that, all other business for coming days will be as stated by the Hon. President of the Privy Council.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Parliamentary Secretary giving me prior notice of the intention to change the order of business with respect to business for tomorrow. In elucidating what will be the business, would the Parliamentary Secretary tell me what will be the second back-up Bill in the event that deliberations on Bill C-12 and on Bill C-14 are finished tomorrow? Is there any other item of business as a back-up Bill?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, my information is that in addition to Bill C-12 we will have Bill C-14 as the back up. I will find out what will be the second back-up Bill and will inform the Hon. Member.

CMHC—ASSISTED RENTAL PROGRAM

Question No. 423—Mr. St. Germain:

1. How many housing projects did Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation originally assist under the Assistance Rental Program?

2. How many of these housing projects were terminated under this program because there was a violation of the original agreement signed with the representative contractors?

3. How many of these projects did CMHC, or other Crown corporations, take over as a result of the termination of the assistance program originally contracted for?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): I am informed by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows:

1. Two thousand, two hundred and eighty-seven.

2. CMHC acquired 220 projects as a result of borrower default, which constitutes a breach of the agreement. In addition, 26 accounts have been terminated because the projects were sold without CMHC approval. This is also a breach of the agreement.

3. None known. The assistance was normally terminated as a result of borrower default and such termination is therefore an effect of default rather than a cause.

REVENUE COLLECTED FROM CAPITAL GAINS TAX

Question No. 473—Mr. Howie:

In the fiscal year ending March 31, 1983 what was the total revenue collected from capital gains tax?

Order Paper Questions

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): There is no capital gains tax per se. Rather, under the personal income tax system one-half of total capital gains or losses are included in the calculation of income for taxation at normal personal tax rates. Effective October 1, 1983, the tax on the inflationary portion of capital gains earned on moneys invested in an Indexed Security Investment Plan (ISIP) was eliminated. Under the corporate tax system one-half of the excess of capital gains over losses accrued since 1971 and realized on the disposition of certain properties is included in income and taxed at normal tax rates. Although accurate data on both total personal and total corporate income tax revenues are available, the portion directly attributable to net capital gains can only be estimated. On the basis of the latest available published information for the 1981 taxation year, total federal and provincial revenues from the taxation of capital gains are estimated to be $1.6 billion.

DEVCO BOARD OF DIRECTORS

Question No. 573—Mr. Howie:

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, does the Parliamentary Secretary have any credible reason for questions Nos. 101, 102, 104 and 105, dealing with the trippings of the Prime Minister around the world, the expenses entailed in those trips and to what extent Canadian taxpayers are expected to pick up those costs, not being answered?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I will look into the matter for the Hon. Member and see whether I can find what would be the reason for any delay in ansering those questions. However, I can assure the Hon. Member that the Government is doing everything possible to answer these questions as expeditiously as possible.

Mr. Hnathyshyn: Before June 16.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Parliamentary Secretary would also check out the following questions. First, question No. 2 was originally placed on the Order Paper on October 24, 1983. It reads:

Does the Minister of Transport have a private parking stall at the Winnipeg International Airport?

I think Canadian taxpayers are entitled to know the cost of equipping this stall and how many employees are required to look after it for the Minister of Transport.

I also originally placed a question on the Order Paper on October 17, 1983 asking for the total amount budgeted for the Saanich renewal program of the Public Works Federal Identity Program. Almost a year ago I placed question No. 11 on the Order Paper, on May 24, 1983, asking the following:

What is the salary of the (a) President and Chief Executive Officer . . . of the Canada Post Corporation?

I also included a series of other executives in Canada Post and have asked for their salary ranges. I feel this is an exceptionally long period of time for this type of question to be on the Order Paper.

If you can believe this, Mr. Speaker, I also have a question which I originally placed on the Order Paper in November 1981. There is no excuse for this question being on the Order Paper for this length of time. It reads:

Could the Minister of Supply and Services and the Minister of Industry—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member does not need to repeat every question, if he could name the question and give a general indication of it.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, it is question No. 13. I want to know why three separate Ministers took three separate Jet-Stars to Winnipeg to fly in Liberal campaign workers to work in the last provincial election in Manitoba.

Mr. Evans: I will look into all those questions, but I think the last question to which the Hon. Member referred was also asked in the House of Commons at that time and explanations were given. If the Hon. Member will do his research, he will find that salary ranges for Crown corporation heads are a matter of public record.

Mr. McKenzie: Say that in the answer, then.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, in reply to my point of order, the Parliamentary Secretary used the words that the Government was answering my four questions as expeditiously as possible. This may well be a matter which will have to take up time in Parliament. Questions asked about trips approximately three years ago, questions which have been on the Order Paper for three years—

Mr. Speaker: With all due respect to the Hon. Member, a question relating to a specific question on the Order Paper certainly is in order at this point. However, the Hon. Member should not engage in debate in general terms regarding the policy applicable to answering questions. If the Hon. Member has a further specific question regarding a question on the Order Paper, the Chair would entertain his question. If not, I invite him to resume whatever action he considers appropriate at another stage in the proceedings.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I simply wanted to continue on my point of order which I originally raised with the Parliamentary Secretary to indicate—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has made his point with regard to the delay in the answering of questions. I believe that having made his point, that is his point. Does he have another point?

Mr. Stevens: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: I hope the Hon. Member really has another point. I will recognize him.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Having heard the reply of the Parliamentary Secretary that the Government was acting expeditiously, I am pointing out that the Prime Minister may well be gone from this Chamber in a couple of months and that we need the answers—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is not making a point of order in any respect, and he knows that. The Parliamentary Secretary has answered the questions. Does he have any further point of order? The Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I just want to assure you and the House that the Government is doing everything possible to answer these questions. However, if the Hon. Member would refer to Beauchesne's he will find that the Government is under no obligation to answer those questions, so it is not a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: We are not into debate at this point. Hon. Members have made inquiries about specific questions and the Parliamentary Secretary has undertaken to try to provide answers.

The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 62—INTEREST RATES FOR FARM CREDIT

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre) moved:

That this House condemns the Government for abandoning farmers who are having problems with credit costs and falling commodity prices as demonstrated

(1) by the higher interest rates and shortened terms imposed on Farm Credit Corporation loans;

(2) by the Government's lack of support for the agribond concept thereby denying farmers access to funds at lower costs; and

(3) by the failure of the Government to renew the 4 per cent interest rebate program offered by the Farm Credit Corporation to farmers in financial distress.

He said: Mr. Speaker, what we have before us today is a problem that is approaching crisis conditions for farmers across Canada. Yesterday the Minister of Agriculture, (Mr. Whelan), who is in charge of the Farm Credit Corporation, announced new credit terms and time periods for loans under the Farm Credit Corporation. It was a real shock to farmers who were expecting some relief from interest rates and an expansion of Farm Credit Corporation to meet the needs of many farmers who now have to refinance and re-group in order to meet this year's financing requirements to seed one more crop.

Yesterday the Minister proposed to increase the interest rate in existence before Christmas of 13 per cent to a long-term rate of 15 per cent. He gave us five sets of terms, five-year, ten-year and 20-year. The five-year term is at 14 per cent. Five-year term loans of some banks can be obtained for 13.25 per cent. At some credit unions the same loans can be obtained at 12.75 per cent. The larger loans just will not be acceptable for the needs of farmers at this moment.

Moving on quickly to the second point in the overall discussion of the motion before us before I begin to explain how I believe we got to where we are, and to propose some longer-term and shorter-term solutions, if we can believe what the Minister was saying in the House, in committee and on the hustings, the Government was to bring in some some sort of agri-bond program in the Budget brought down in February. There was no agri-bond announcement then, simply an announcement to submit the idea for further study. The Budget has been down for seven or eight years and so far no committee has been struck to do that job.

The third item for which we are condemning the Government today relates to the matter of farmers who two years ago were determined to have been in financial distress. The Minister, through FCC, initiated a special program to help farmers facing financial disaster. He proposed to rebate them 4 per cent of the cost of their loans, bringing down most of their loans to 12.75 per cent, close to 13 per cent. That program has run out. Several thousand farmers in that category now face bankruptcy and there has been no action on the part of the Government to deal with that problem.

I want to take a few moments to go back over the record of farm financing. As a sideline, we will be looking at the record of this Government and this Minister because that is one of the recurring themes throughout the period I will be covering. I want to give some idea of the numbers involved in farm credit and farm financing. I have chosen the years 1971 and 1981 so that we can get a handle on the changes that have occurred in agriculture over that time period. I regret that I cannot use numbers more current than 1981, but they are the latest numbers that we are able to get that are not just estimates.

Let us go back to 1971 and look at the amount of credit outstanding at that time. I have here a market commentary on the cost of farm inputs and finance put out by Agriculture Canada in 1983. The most up to date figures there show that in 1971 the total credit extended was $4.6 billion. By 1981, the amount of farm credit outstanding to farmers was $18.4 billion, an increase of just over four times within that decade. When you look at farm incomes within that period, there are some very revealing figures. Most people familiar with agriculture know that 1971 was a disastrous year for most commodities produced in Canada. Farmers had suffered a series of poor markets and net incomes were extremely low at that time. They got back to normal in 1974. For the first time in some years, net farm income in Canada was at $3.5 billion.

According to the estimates produced by Agriculture Canada at the Outlook Conference, ten years later, 1984 would show a net farm income in the neighbourhood of $3.5 billion. A decade has passed and net farm incomes stuck at that level. In between there were a couple of blips when it went to almost $4 billion and a few times when it dropped below $3.5 billion, down to $3.2 billion. Incomes have been extremely stable for Canadian farmers, but what would the dollar buy in that same period? There was a deterioration in the buying power of the Canadian agricultural dollar in that period of time. The 1974 dollar would buy almost two and one-half times as much as the 1984 dollar.

In real terms, farm incomes have been more than cut in half. No small wonder farmers have turned to the only source of funds they can find, debt. That is why the debt load increased four times from 1971 to 1981. If we had more up to date statistics, I am sure they would show that the debt load would have increased almost that much again between 1981 and the current year.

The effects on the farming community are fairly clearcut. I simply refer to some of the problems that the extra debt and the increase in interest rates have brought about. I refer to a recent brief sent to most Members of this House by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. They say that in 1971, 17.9 per cent of Farm Credit Corporation repayments due were in arrears. It will be recalled that 1971 ranks as one of the poorest years for Canadian farmers, almost ranking with the 1931-32 period.

What do we find in 1983? The repayments due to Farm Credit Corporation were 17.5 per cent, almost the same. There is a striking parallel between the poorest year in living memory and our recent experience.

There were a couple of interesting differences between 1971 and 1981 that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture was quick to point out. These should be on the record to show that to some extent the current crop of farmers are worse off than those who suffered through the 1971 period. The percentage of interest costs on returns to capital in self-employed and unpaid family labour in 1971 was 18 per cent. In 1982 that percentage had doubled to 36 per cent. Another way of expressing it is that a 3 per cent on total farmers' equity in 1971 represented 52 per cent of his net income. In other words, for half of his income he was living on his investment equity.

In 1982, the return on the farmer's investment equity represented 91 per cent of his net income. This means that that poor man earned very little after paying for labour, management and so on. He is simply living off of the equity he has in his farm.

Another way to put it is that of total farm capital, the interest bill in 1971 would have eaten up 82 per cent of the returns to capital in self-employed and unpaid family labour. What really hurts is that by 1982, that figure rose to 140 per cent of the farmer's income. That amount went to paid and unpaid family labour. It is small wonder that farmers are going broke. Operations are costing them 50 cents for every dollar of net income they once earned.

A heavy burden has been placed on Canadian farmers. This burden shows up when looking at the bankruptcy statistics. Raw data is available, but if we call the 1979 bankruptcy index 100—and there were many bankruptcies in 1979—in 1984, the same index would be 620. In a mere five years, farm bankruptcies have increased by 6.2 times.

We can dig those numbers out of the statistics but statistics are slow to respond to current affairs. Statistics are always two or three years behind the times as you know, Mr. Speaker. By looking at the statistics we can see the problems that have developed. But we do not need those statistics to illustrate what we see when we go to the farming communities. We only need look around the farming communities to see that farmers are in trouble, particularly the younger farmers who have started up in the last 10 or 12 years and those farmers who have expanded in an attempt to include the next generation.

This effect can be seen even in western Canada where the agricultural recession did not hit as hard. When land was for sale in the past, it was taken off the listings within a week or two. However, most of the small newspapers in my riding have advertised lands for sale throughout the winter. Apparently, those lands will still be for sale in the spring. People are not interested in buying land from farmers who want to unload their farms. People who are facing debts greater than they think they can manage are attempting to sell out but cannot find buyers.

What has the Minister's response been to that need? The interest rates have risen. When I and other members of my caucus tour the farming communities, we meet far more farmers who are complaining of credit problems than we did in previous years. We hear from fertilizer and fuel dealers who, last year, extended credit to farmers and have not yet collected the money owed them. Those dealers must make a decision, as must the farmers, about going on for another year.

We sometimes hear of fairly large farm operators who are no longer dealing for their fuel and fertilizer needs with their local community dealers because their credit is no longer good. They are shopping further afield with the hope that the size of their business needs will attract a supplier from communities 30, 40 or 50 miles away. In that way they can receive credit for one more year, with the hope that the prices of grain or livestock will rise so they will be able to pay their debts.

A crisis is occurring and government Members have not addressed that particular set of problems. Increasing the interest rate does not meet the needs of farmers. The whole attitude to the Farm Credit Corporation seems to have changed over the last decade. The Farm Credit Corporation was once the means of providing long-term credit to agriculture so that land could change hands from one generation to another. At the urging of the Minister responsible, the FCC has deliberately pulled itself back from that long-term market to make room for the banks. That was stated policy during the debate on the Bank Act. What the Government had in mind was even urged by the Official Opposition.

The only role that seems to be left open to the FCC is that of a financer of last resort. When all else fails, when private banking institutions will not provide any more funds to a farmer, he goes to the Farm Credit Corporation to try to consolidate his debts and get a longer term on his loan with a fixed rate of interest. The Minister, by increasing the interest rates of the FCC, has effectively taken away that option. The only option left for a great many of these farmers now is nothing short of going bankrupt or, in many cases, attempting unsuccessfully to sell their assets and try to find some other form of livelihood.

We know that the basic problem is one of farm income. We know that there has been no general recognition of longer-term programs that would keep farmers from getting into this mess. We know that there has been very little attention paid to improving the market so that farmers can recover a larger proportion of their costs from the marketplace. We know that there are no stabilization programs to respond quickly when incomes drop. We know that these things must be addressed in the House. However, we know that the solutions to those problems are medium and long-term solutions and, as John Maynard Keynes was fond of saying in the 1930s, in the long run, we are all dead. That, Mr. Speaker, will happen to several thousand operators in the country because of the inability of this Government and the previous Government to create a long-term and a medium-term policy.

We are left with only one source of hope for these people, and that is an immediate short-term policy to provide adequate amounts of farm credit, guaranteed prices and interest rates that are low enough to allow a farmer to get out of the mess in which he has found himself. However, this will not happen as long as the current attitude persists.

We in the NDP have presented an outline for an agri-bond program. We proposed that that would be a way of maintaining an increasing amount of money within the agricultural sector. We think that agriculture is still a growth sector which can provide a great deal of spin-off growth to the rest of the economy. We are concerned about the fact that the official agriculture spokesman for the Conservative Party, the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer), has been quite vocal in the press and has said that he does not think the agri-bond system will work. He has been quoted as saying that it may do more harm than good, particularly given the impact of such a program on land values. I regret that that is the attitude which has been taken. I hope that is not the reason the committee on agri-bonds has been delayed. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that this House—

• (1540)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The Chair regrets to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but his speaking time is up. At this time in our proceeding a 10-minute period is allowed for questions or comments on the subject of the Hon. Member's remarks. The Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer).

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a comment on the last statement made by the Member who just concluded speaking. He has been in politics, and has been around for a while. I am sure he does not believe everything he reads in the press. I think I am familiar with the quotes he is using. I am quoted entirely out of context and the meaning is totally wrong. This Party is on record as supporting agri-bonds and its concept for over 10 years. In fact, one of the first people to raise the issue in the House was the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger). I read some of the comments he made in the House before I had a chance to meet him and sit with him in the House.

Our position as a Party on agri-bonds is exactly as it is on the record in the House and elsewhere. We have also said that there are some concerns with the agri-bonds; when we do provide some long-term stable interest rates to farmers, we do not want that advantage to simply be recapitalized back into the value of the land. We recognize that there are some concerns.

The Government has the power to put agri-bonds into operation as a result of a Bill that was passed in the House well over a year ago. If agri-bonds were allowed, they would be of great assistance to Canadian agriculture at a time when it is sorely in need of some assistance and direction. Sadly, there has not been a lot of direction from the Government, Mr. Speaker. I hope that allays the concerns of the Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse). This Party, and specifically myself, are totally in support of the concept of agri-bonds.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Member has attempted to clarify his position. I simply point out that the report occurred on February 2, 1984 in The Manitoba Co-Operator. On March 13 there was the same kind of quotation in Town and Country magazine. In neither of those magazines did I see a letter pointing out the error of the report. I am glad the Member has attempted to clarify the position. I hope that those newspapers will report it accordingly.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, I hope that by my comments I have done more than attempt to clarify it. I think the article he referred to was written by Mr. Richard Gibbons. I have never met Mr. Gibbons or given him an interview on this matter. To my knowledge we have never had any discussion on agri-bonds or on any other similar concept. I do not know where he gets his information.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): For debate, the Hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan).

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make one comment about The Manitoba Co-Operator. I am written about at length at times in that magazine. I do not think I have ever been contacted by the reporter either. Some of the things he says are very inaccurate. Sometimes we do write letters to The Manitoba Co-Operator correcting them. I find it difficult to be criticised by a paper that maintains it is a supporter of farmers when some of the criticism is so unfair.

I would like to make it very clear that we all realize that we cannot finance people out of economic problems. There seems to be an idea that you can finance them out of their difficulty by lending them more money. In many instances the reason they are in difficulty is because of the way money was lent to them in the first place by other lending institutions. The Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) neglected to point out that if you check the financial statements of some of the farmers who are in arrears you will find they have been in economic trouble for as many as seven or eight years. Some of them have not been able to make payments on their loans for four years. Then these operations are put up for sale.

What can we do with farms in that position? Let us look at what we did last year. The Farm Credit Corporation loaned $750 million to people in Canada. Around 60 per cent of that went to the banks to refinance these people. Before last year I believe 18 per cent was the most that went to other lending institutions. We gave the banks approximately $500 million that they could have lent back to the agricultural community, but they did not.

Let us remember that the farmers have some say about what they get for their products. The poultry farmers produce broilers, eggs and turkeys. The dairy farmers produce industrial dairy products and fluid milk. The farmers in some provinces contract their crops for food processing. In the Province of Ontario there have been marketing boards for those commodities for 40 years. The day they sign the contract they know what they are going to receive for about 30 different commodities if they deliver a high quality product. In that agreement you get crop insurance and other things which are taken out of the contract. They do not have to advance any money at that time for those things. We must consider what these people do to help themselves.

I am going to try to be as quick as I can, Mr. Speaker. I am delighted to respond to the Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre. This gives me a chance to review the actions the Government has taken to help farmers and the Canadian agri-food industry in short term as well as in building a solid foundation for the future. I would like to make it clear to the Members that there are a lot of farmers in financial difficulty. I understand that. The figures show this. However, percentage-wise they are in less difficulty than small and big business in Canada. That means that in total they are probably a little bit better off.

Last year net farm income dropped by 2 percentage points after suffering a 9 per cent drop in 1982. This year we are hoping for an increase in net farm income of 5 per cent or 6 per cent. Even with that improvement we will continue to have about 5 per cent of Canadian farmers in serious financial difficulty and another 5 per cent to 10 per cent in some degree of difficulty. Some of the farmers will not make it. No Minister of Agriculture and no politician can guarantee that every farmer will stay in business. We cannot do that for any business person in Canada.

However, what I and the Government can and have done is to provide farmers with safety nets to cushion the falls in production and market prices and to help cope with the most severe aspects of the cost-price squeeze through emergency financial assistance programs. We have also provided ladders to help farmers improve their incomes through research and development programs, market assistance and so on. In total my Department will spend more than $1.2 billion this year.

I have a breakdown by province of my Department's expenditures. I ask the permission of the House to table these with my comments as I will not go over them at this time. These figures do not include the spending in the national capital area which benefits the agri-food industry across the great country of Canada.

As I said, the spending of my Department will amount to about $1.2 billion this year. Other federal departments also contribute to strengthening Canadian agriculture. Transport Canada spends about $700 million. When you add this all up, the federal Government is spending about $2.1 billion a year on agriculture. In addition, in the last fiscal year the provinces spent about $1.2 billion on agriculture. That is a grand total of about $3.3 billion between the two levels of government. That does not include the lending of money by the Farm Credit Corporation which amounted to $750 million last year and will rise to as much as $825 million this year.

In short, Mr. Speaker, we are talking about a very substantial contribution to Canadian agriculture. For the Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre to suggest we have abandoned the farmers is absurd. Let us look at some of the special programs we have initiated to help hard-pressed farmers in recent years.

In the June 1982 Budget we provided $200 million for the Farm Credit Corporation to administer a special lending program at rates 4 per cent below the prevailing rate.

I see some people from the CFA sitting in the gallery.

• (1550)

It is interesting how rapidly the requests change from $200 million to $1 billion, this type of thing. The requests are not very consistent in what they ask for, either. However, we did provide what we said we would. We provided $200 million extra.

The April, 1983 Budget provided a further $100 million in funds for that same special program, providing a special lending program of rates four point below the prevailing rate. Previous to this, Mr. Speaker, in 1981, the Budget provided for $45 million for debt refinancing by farmers with an interest rate of 5 percentage points for the first two years of the loan.

A lot of farmers use the small business bond with the special interest rate, which was approximately half of the current rate of interest at that time, providing low interest loans to qualifying farmers. I know a lot of people are aware of what that amounted to and what it did.

The Farm Credit Corporation in April 1982-1983 provided $145 million, I repeat, from its regular funds at a special reduced rate of interest. I am sure Hon. Members know that even though a lot of people received that reduced interest rate, it all depended on what production entity they were in. If they were producing for this open and free market system, which so many people talk about, hogs and beef or potatoes, and refused to get into any other crop and some kind of a marketing system where they have some say in the market, but depended on everyone else to look after them, they were the ones in the most financial difficulty.

The other farmers I mentioned, Mr. Speaker, who had some say in the marketplace, they are not the ones going broke. They are not the ones who are applying for the big loans either, because they can go to the banks and other lending institutions and get loans right away. Even if they only have a low equity in their operation, they know in time they can pay that off, whereas if you go with high equity into one of these other production entities like potatoes, red meat, pork or beef, there are statistics which show it disappears, because the sick marketplace is not giving you a return. The market is not being fair with you at all.

Further to the accusation that we have not done anything, the most recent Budget in February contained several items of benefit to the farming community, including the generous treatment of capital gains for retiring farmers. That is why we have again done some checking on farms which are advertised for sale, because these farmers will be able to have $250,000 tax free, if they are selling. A lot of them are waiting for that change in the legislation.

Further to the accusation that the Government has abandoned farmers, let us look at some of the regular programs of my Department, and some of our new initiatives. I mentioned that my Department is now spending just over $1.2 billion a year. I will give you a breakdown by major activity. Our research department is spending $237 million in the current fiscal year. You read so much lately about how we are cutting back on research. That is up by $35 million from the previous year. I would say it is significantly up. Our research program represents well over half of the agri-food research done in Canada. The private sector should be doing much more than it is. But some people in the private sector and in the other Parties, especially the Conservative Party, keep saying we should spend more public funds on research. I agree, but I hope they are saying the same thing to the food processing industry, the grocery products manufacturers, and so on, who do not even spend .1 per cent of their gross national product on research.

I should mention that our capital improvement program for the research branch over the coming ten years is close to $500 million. There is a false impression that we have reduced our spending on research. I hope these figures have cleared that up.

Our regional development program, which includes things like record of performance testing, as well as the sub-agreements and development programs we have in provinces and regions, amounts to about $55 million per year.

We have changed the Farm Credit Corporation to make it more realistic. For instance, the Chairman of the Farm Credit Corporation was a grain and beef farmer in Saskatchewan before he came here. Réal Lambert from Quebec is a dairy farmer. Claude Palmer from Prince Edward Island is a potato farmer. Irene Perlich from Alberta has a cow-calf operation and an auction mart. She knows agriculture. From Ontario we have a former bank manager of the Imperial Bank of Commerce. Doctor Trant is from the Stabilization Board and Paul Babey is from Alberta. So you can see, Mr. Speaker, that the Farm Credit Corporation represents people from all over Canada. It can be identified as truly an organization which understands Canadian farmers. These people will have a much better understanding of what is going on.

We are spending $215 million this year on regulation and inspection. This service is to help maintain quality and hence the premium attached to Canadian agri-food products.

Let us look at some of the safety nets provided by my Department's Farm Income Services Branch. We have been spending an average of about $350 million a year on stabilization payments for named and designated commodities in recent years. I was pleased to announce, as I am sure all Hon. Members are aware, the agreement we have reached in tri-party legislation for a new red meat stabilization plan. This should not only provide an improved level of support for participating farmers but also help to reduce the disparities which exist between provinces. We offered them an even better program in 1977 and they turned it down. Even farm organizations turned it down, saying it would be too rich and would cause all kinds of problems. Some of them have short memories.

With respect to the Western Grain Stabilization Plan, like the red meat program, the Speech from the Throne mentioned that the Western Grain Stabilization Plan would be improved, and I hope we will be able to make an announcement in that regard in the very near future. Coming up with a new formula has not been an easy task because, despite the individual problems that many western farmers are experiencing, their overall grain receipts last year, $6.15 billion, was second only to the record set in 1981 of $6.2 billion. Commodity prices were lower and costs were higher, but the sheer volume of sales, 36.7 million metric tonnes of grain kept the overall net income figure above the trigger level. So there was no payment.

A few other figures help to put the western grain stabilization issue into perspective. Since the program began in 1976, farmers have contributed just under $350 million to it. The federal Government contributed nearly $700 million and it has paid $204 million in interest on the funds. Last year alone the Government paid about $130 million into the fund. The total producer and government payments into the fund amount ot $1.25 billion, and when you subtract the pay-outs of $368 million, you are left with the current fund balance of $885 million. That is where it stood at the end of 1983. We are talking about a lot of money, Mr. Speaker.

With respect to crop insurance, let us not forget that the federal Government is contributing around $150 million a year towards this excellent co-operative program. We pay 50 per cent of the premiums, the producers pay the other 50 per cent, and the provinces administer the program, and if it is any good they try to take 95 per cent of the credit for it. Saskatchewan thought it was so good that it appointed a minister just to be in charge of crop insurance, looking after the producers' money and the money which the federal Government contributes to that plan, amounting to about $56 million a year. For instance, when you add up the interest free advance payments, and all of these other things, it amounts to nearly $900 million for the three prairie provinces.

Taking Saskatchewan alone, with interest free advance payments, both under the Wheat Board and the other program we have, and the money put into the Farm Credit Corporation, the actual expenditure on agriculture in Saskatchewan is nearly $500 million in one year. The Province of Saskatchewan, knowing full well its main industry is agriculture, spends about $86 million on agriculture. Last year our actual expenditure was some $130 million. That is one of the greatest provinces for agriculture production. But, again, the province shows that it does not think agriculture is so important, and I can show you in other provinces, Mr. Speaker, that things are the same.

We also guarantee farm improvement loans; more than $200 million a year under the program so that farmers can buy equipment. But, $500 million interest free, that is nothing; that is what the Members say. Well, those are programs we put into effect for all crops, not just those under the Canadian Wheat Board.

The Crowsnest Pass freight rates have been talked about, Mr. Speaker. They have an effect on farm income, especially prairie farm income, as everyone knows. Everyone talks about the rise in the cost of shipping grain, but few people mention that under the Western Grain Stabilization Act there have been reductions of about 75 per cent in the cost of shipping canola oil and meal, linseed oil and meal, sunflower seeds and oil, mustard see, triticale, dehydrated alfalfa and special crops. The rate has gone from a high of over $42 a ton to the current low of $7 or $8 per ton to ship that product to ports of export. But you never hear about that; all you hear about is the increase in costs. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) spoke today about this tremendous increase in costs. Well, the farmers producing those products will save about $34 a ton if it is passed on to them by the trade.

Another thing that I do not hear the Government getting much credit for is providing credit needed to sell grain on today's world market. You would think the Government was not even involved in that. The Hon. Member for Elgin (Mr. Wise), who was the Minister of Agriculture in a previous Government, knows. He had to sit and listen to how the Government had to guarantee the sales. That amounts to billions of dollars, and some of those sales are pretty risky. But if the Government did not do that those sales would not be made.

The Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) seems to think that we are oblivious to what is going on around us and in other countries. We cannot do that and we know it. They were attacking the Farm Credit Corporation interest rates. Well, they must not forget that no other lending institution is giving the same long-term rates, regardless of what the Members say. We have done a study on this and I challenge the Hon. Member to find the kind of long-term interest rates we provide in any other lending institution.

We know farmers are backing off from buying. We are still working very hard on the agri-bond sector and some of the other things which are so important. But I repeat: You cannot finance all the farmers out of the economic problems they are in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): A ten-minute question period is now provided.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, I had a very busy schedule this afternoon and a number of important meetings. I cancelled the meetings so I would have a chance to be here to listen to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) respond to the motion before us today. In view of the very serious economic conditions many Canadian farmers are facing, I was certain that he would utilize this opportunity to make some policy announcements and provide encouragement, to the effect that some additional dollars had been found to help those farmers who are locked into loans with interest rates in the neighbourhood of 16.75 per cent, and indeed those who qualify for the 4 per cent interest rate program.

The Minister has been telling us and the industry over the last six or eight months that he was about to announce some special program. We have seen some press reports recently that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has provided the Minister with the authority, I believe it was under Bill C-88, to borrow an additional $75 million. I believe there is a special fund in the neighbourhood of $275 million this year as compared to $200 million last year.

Let me simply ask the Minister if any portion of that money that the FCC will borrow from the private sector will be set aside to assist the people who are locked in at the 16.75 per cent interest rate level, and those who have qualified for the 4 per cent rebate? The special farm assistance program is now expiring on many of those loans and they are having to revert to the 16.75 per cent.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member knows that these loans vary from 15 per cent to 16.75 per cent. We are working on a program, and I wish I was able to announce it today because we want to do even better than the announcement I made the other day concerning 14 per cent for five years as we can borrow money on the long term market at a better interest rate for five years then we can for 10 or 20. We do not know what is going to happen in the private money market, but we are also working on programs which will amortize loans to farmers.

I am sure the Hon. Member is aware that in some instances farmers have been unable to make a payment even with the reduced interest rate. If we gave some of them the money free they would not even make a good living for themselves. Some farmers are suggesting that we take over the farm. That is not much different than giving them the money free. They say, put them under an operational management plan. Then, in three to five years, if they were in a financially sound condition, they would be given an opportunity to buy the farm back from us. I am getting a lot of letters from farmers in Manitoba suggesting this very thing. They cannot make their payments, they are three or four years in arrears, and please do something to let them continue on with their family farms.

I do not know what we are going to come up with, Mr. Speaker. As I said yesterday in the House, the opposition Members concern is great, but it is no greater than mine regarding what we can do to save these people and keep them in production, because they are generally good producers. Some of them have been farming all their lives. Some are new farmers. There is every kind of farmer you can think of, every age bracket, and a lot of them are young people who have maybe over-capitalized or over-spent.

Some of the farmers say to me, when I make a speech about how we might assist them, and I am sure the other Members hear this, do not help them because they got in that trouble themselves. In some instances this may be true, but we will need all these food producers for the future because the biggest challenge we face is food production.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, for some reason or other I sense the Minister has lost his resolve to go to bat for the farmers who are in serious difficulty. It is a crisis situation. Look at the record since his Government was returned to office. In 1979 there were some 125 farm bankruptcies recorded; in 1983 it was roughly 500. Those are the official statistics and they do not tell the whole story. In the first two months of this year farm bankruptcies were up 110 per cent in western Canada. The Minister seems to lay the blame on the managerial abilities of producers. The fact is that in most cases these producers are in trouble because of things beyond their control—high interest rates, high input costs; fuel prices have doubled under this Government's National Energy Program since 1980. All of these things put together have increased input costs by roughly 35 percent, while commodity prices are roughly at the 1972 and 1973 level.

The Minister can certainly offer more relief than simply the kind of flim-flam he gave us here today. I know that he said during the last election campaign that he did not believe that the producers of food should have an onerous tax regime on fuels used for farm production. Is he still of the same opinion? What will he do about facilitating and moving forward our motion, which has now been referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, to do away with the 9 per cent federal sales tax on fuel used for the production of food?

● (1610)

Mr. Whelan: First, I want to say that the province the Hon. Member comes from, which is a very rich province, I believe has five loan programs for farmers. A lot of them find themselves in real great financial difficulty.

Mr. Mazankowski: Do not talk about Alberta. You have a national responsibility. Do not weasel out of it.

Mr. Whelan: It is a giant responsibility and that is why his province has been involved in these lending programs. They have made loans to a lot of people to whom, they now admit, they should not have loaned money at preferred interest rates. Those loan programs are still in effect in Alberta. Some of them are coming to us now asking the Farm Credit Corporation to take over their loans, loans from the Alberta Treasury Bank, for example. That great free enterprise province has a bank which it owns itself. I must say that it did provide some services to the farmers.

When the Member talks about the energy program, it would even be worse than it is if we did everything that the Province of Alberta wanted. It wanted world prices for oil and wanted us to pay even higher prices for the energy.

Mr. Mazankowski: You charge world prices.

Mr. Whelan: I tried to get away from the fact that it had nothing to do with energy prices. It has a lot to do with energy prices.

I agree with the Hon. Member on one point. There should not be any fuel tax on any food production entity.

Mr. Mazankowski: What are you going to do about it?

Mr. Whelan: There should not be any fuel tax on any food production entity in Canada. I still say that, and still fight for that belief. But let us not be so unfair as to say that the total increase in energy cost is our fault, because the provinces that have the energy are the ones that created the main increase in the price for farmers in Canada as far as that goes. They were demanding what the OPEC countries had said was a realistic price, that they should have the same thing.

Mr. Bloomfield: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the stabilization plan and the red meat industry, I understand that four provinces are on side with that program. Could the Minister tell us when they hope to have the program in place, and how hopeful he is of the other provinces coming on side?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Hon. Minister has approximately one minute in which to answer.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I will be as brief as I can. We proposed a plan in 1977. They said they did not want that plan and told me almost two years ago that if I did not come forward with a plan they would come forward with one. They did not come forward with a plan last July. We worked with them to try to develop a plan. I do not know how many will accept the plan that we now have, but we are going ahead with the legislation. We will be presenting it to the provincial ministers, hopefully for signature, at their meeting in July.

They said that there were four provinces on side, which amounted to some 90 per cent of the red meat production in Canada. Now we find that maybe those four are not in full agreement. However, the producers across the land are in much greater agreement than are the provincial ministers or provincial governments are.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Resuming debate.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to enter into the debate on the motion which was put forward by the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse). When I read the motion, I suspected that the Member had found on his desk a copy of the ten-point agricultural program we proposed over a year ago and decided to put a few of our points into his motion. He has finally come on side respect to our agri-bond concept. It is good to see that the New Democratic Party is finally supporting that position.

The Hon. Member says that he is concerned about agriculture. We wish he had had the same concern when we were debating the Crow legislation, that Bill of great importance to western Canada. I will talk about that issue since it has increased the cost to western Farmers this year.

Before discussing that issue, I want to deal with some of the points raised by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) a few moments ago. The most important fact about farmers, who are in a high risk business, is that they are price takers, not price setters. They require positive indicators that show the markets will be there for them, that prices will be reasonable and their input costs will not be there for them, that prices will be reasonable and their input costs will not go out of line. The indication they have received form the Government during the last year and a half is that it has given up on them. The Minister of Agriculture is incapable of getting the concurrence from the national Cabinet that will allow him to assist the farmers in distress areas across the country.

The Minister is quick to point out that farmers who are involved in supply management are not in as great distress. He is correct. The reason they are not in as much distress is that they are producing for an internal market that is controlled and, therefore, allows them to set the price. However, I remember when the Minister recently chastised the American farmers for limiting control of production on grain. Is he now suggesting to grain farmers today that they limit the production of grain in this country? Is that a solution to the desperate plight that many of those farmers find themselves in? Since the Minister recently said that this was unChristian, I wonder whether he is talking out of both sides of his mouth on this question.

The Minister talks about the Agricultural Stabilization Act. The Government must pay out $350 million under the Agricultural Stabilization Act because farm prices for those farm products are less than the five-year average. That is a horrendous fact and something about which I would not want to brag.

I happen to have the statistics that were provided by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. It shows that farmers are receiving the same realized net income this year as they were in 1971. I remember 1971 very well, because that was the year we were selling barley in western Canada at three bushels for $1. It was the most depressed time in agricultural history since the 1930s. Farmers are experiencing the same depression today, because the realized net income this year is the same as it was in 1971.

Input costs have gone through the roof. Interest rates, as the motion points out, are a huge cost to farmers, plus the fact that the prices that farmers receive for their livestock, grains and other commodities they produce are not sufficient to meet the increased costs of production. Farmers simply cannot tolerate another period of high interest rates. Presently, the average farm carries a substantially greater proportion of debt than it did 10 or 20 years ago. Today, Canadian farmers are carrying $20 billion worth of debt, so that even an increase of one per cent in interest rates would put them in a distressed position.

When interest rates went up to 22 per cent two years ago, farmers began to live on their equity. At the same time, as land prices dropped and machinery prices went down because no one was buying, their equity decreased. Many farmers are now incapable of obtaining sufficient capital to put their crops in this year. This brings up another point. There was a time 20 years when most farmers had built up sufficient savings to be able to finance a crop from their bank accounts, in case of disaster. Today, most farmers borrow their money in order to plant their crops. If they lose a crop they are in serious trouble. Sure, we have farm insurance which should assist them, but it is generally not enough to keep them in business to give them the costs that are attached.

Farm Credit has put forward some very interesting statistics. The Minister says, and I think I quote him correctly, that ten per cent of the farmers are in financial difficulty and 5 per cent to 10 per cent are in some degree of difficulty. The statistics of the Farm Credit Corporation have just been put before the Agricultural Committee. They show that there were 86 Farm Credit foreclosures last year.

Then we have the statistics that are more revealing. The Minister says that farmers are doing better than other businesses. Farmers are experiencing less bankruptcies than both small and big businesses. But the difficult part and the reason you cannot relate the two is that many people are in and out of small and large businesses over their lifetimes. Very few businesses are family businesses that have continued for generation after generation.

In the case of agriculture that does not happen. A son generally takes over from a father who has taken over from his father. There is pride in continuing the family farm. When you push out a generation of farmers, you are not just pushing out one individual, you are pushing out a whole family that has built a farm over decades and generations. When we lose 86 people, we lose 86 people generally with a tremendous amount of farm experience.

As far as businesses are concerned, in most cases people are in and out of businesses. I know it is hard to lose a small business. Our family went through that. But it is not the same as if one were to lose the family farm. My grandfather came to this country, cut the trees, and began planting. That is part of my family. And so we hear 86 farmers are out. It does not seem like a lot but that tells a lot. Here is the more interesting statistics. Two hundred and sixty-six farmers who had a Farm Credit loans voluntarily went out of business. They did not wait until the sheriff came and seized their assets. They said with pride that they could not make it anymore. As the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) said, it was not because of their management, but because of outside forces, such as high costs of fuel, interest rates, fertilizer et cetera, together with low commodity prices. This is what put them out of business. With pride, they said, "We will shut down and get out before we lose everything". They did it voluntarily.

But here is another statistic that concerns me. As of January 1, 1984, 14,265 Farm Credit accounts were in arrears. That means farmers are having difficulty paying their bills this year. The Minister and that Government cannot get their act together to get the Western Grain Stabilization Bill passed. They cannot get their act together to get the advanced payments legislation passed through this House. We have said we would pass both Bills quickly. They have not been able to move on Farm Credit interest rates. I remember when we went to camp we had a song we called, "announcements, announcements". This activity happened at the beginning of each day. The Minister keeps telling farmers—we get the press releases, they come shuffling through our office—that he is going to announce, as he just said, some great thing for interest rates for farmers. The Minister is going to announce something on stabilization for red meats, that the Government will soon have a Bill on western grain stabilization to assist farmers. While the Minister is saying he is going to do something for farmers, every day another one bites the dust. That announcement will not do the Minister the good of a hill of beans. It will not do him any good at all.

What farmers are looking for is an indicator that this Minister will act quickly, because they are putting crops in the ground this spring. They are having to buy new cattle for their feed lots. They are having to keep their livelihood together and they are not getting the indicators that are essential to deciding whether to continue in production and continue to fight to hang on until something happens with commodity prices. Those are serious statistics.

If you say that Farm Credit lends approximately just under half the money in Canada to farmers, it means you have to double that to get the exact figures. If you look at the number of losses the Farm Credit Corporation has had, probably the statistics show there are less arrears and less bankruptcies than the banks experience. In actuality things are probably worse than that. A serious situation exists.

What happened yesterday? What indicator did we have to the farmers that this Government was concerned about one of their chief costs, namely interest rates? We had a press release that said interest rates were going up 1 per cent; not that interest rates were going to remain stable, not an announcement that would indicate the Government is concerned about farmers.

What about this new red meat proposal the Minister has just waved in front of us? We do not even know what it is. Do we hear that the Government is ready to act on it? No, Mr. Speaker, The indicator we have is that interest rates are going up 1 per cent. What does that say to a farm community?

The Hon. Member for Bruce Grey (Mr. Gurbin) brought forward a motion which was passed in this House. It passed in this House because all Members are concerned about this problem. The Hon. Member for Vegreville brought forward a motion on farm fuels. It was passed in this House during Private Members' Hour. This was a private members motion that said that all Members in this House are concerned about farmers. Members want these motions to go to the finance committee to be dealt with because there might be something here to assist farmers. But what does the Liberal majority in the finance committee do? They said "We can't deal with this. We must have a study. We have to hire a person in the Library of Parliament to do a study. We hope we will have it ready some time in May".

Mr. Mazankowski: Shame.

Mr. Schellenberger: After most farmers have put their crops in the ground, the Government might find some time to study this proposal that has been put forward. Not that the Government would act on it immediately because there is a serious problem in this country, or that we should sit day and night until we come up with a solution. No, that does not happen, Mr. Speaker. We hear that the Government does not have the time and it needs a further study.

It frustrates me as a Member representing farmers who I see selling their land, putting their land up for sale, or going bankrupt every day. Farmers are asking me what they ought to do. Other Members have put the horrendous statistics on the record about what is happening. Bankruptcies were up 300 per cent in Alberta between January and February this year over last year. There were 480 bankruptcies across Canada in 1983.

I want to talk a little bit about the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Humbolt-Lake Centre which says that farmers are in difficulty. I want to talk about what his Party suggested we do when the Crow Bill was put forward. Western farmers have serious difficulties because of interest rates, because of the costs of fertilizer sprays, seed, machinery and so forth. What is added to that this year is an increased freight bill because of the Crow legislation. The Hon. Member who put forward this motion today had a lot to say about the Crow. He is the deputy critic for transport in the New Democratic Party and he only managed to attend 68 per cent of the meetings. The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), who was the critic, managed to attend 61 of the 66 meetings. What about Members on this side? The Hon. Member for Vegreville who was heading our committee never missed one meeting. He attended all the meetings.

Mr. Althouse: What about Winnipeg?

Mr. Mazankowski: Check the record.

Mr. Schellenberger: Members from each of the provinces who represented our Party, the main representatives from Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta all attended 63 out of 66 meetings. That showed their concern for the western farmer. We changed that Bill substantially even though it was put forward in a manner not acceptable to this Party.

• (1630)

The more serious situation was that the Hon. Member put forward a motion which would amend the safety net. He was very concerned about farm costs. His motion was rather lengthy and concerned the shippers' share limitation. It was similar to the original motion moved by the Minister of Transport, with which I will deal in a minute. However, it had one basic difference, that it would put the price ratio limit per calendar year at 3 per cent.

If that motion had been passed, farmers this year would have been paying more for transportation than they are under the Government's Bill. It exposed producers to a substantial increase in freight rates. Under the NDP plan, their rates could have risen to $6 per tonne before the safety net limit was reached.

The safety net in the Crow legislation is all that farmers have as protection that their freight rates will not rise above what they can afford in transportation costs. If the six-grain limit of the Government which is now in effect remains without change, it could very well prohibit the shipping of barley, oats and rye by 1990 from western Canada to ports because it would cost more than the cost of production. The Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre never addressed that. He just addressed the levels. If he was as concerned about farmers in Saskatchewan as I am about the ones in Alberta, he would know that the six-grain level has to be addressed because it is unfair to coarse grain producers. If costs continue as they are and world prices do not escalate, they will be unable to ship their grains.

The Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board made a wonderful announcement for farmers! He said that farmers in western Canada had to expect a lower initial price from the Wheat Board this year for their production. That is another indicator of which the Government is proud.

An Hon. Member: You are kidding.

Mr. Schellenberger: No, that was the announcement. Just as farmers were prepared to put seed in the ground, the Government came forward in an attempt to prepare them for the problem and said that their initial prices this year will be less than they were last year. These are the indicators which the Government puts forward to farmers across the nation. They are unacceptable. They will not deal with the distressing situation faced by farmers today. The Government should burn the midnight oil. The Minister should have a distressed look on his face because of the difficulties faced by farmers today and he is the Minister responsible in a national sense for that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any questions or comments relating to the Hon. Member's remarks? The Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse).

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I think the record should be corrected. The latter part of the speech of the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) did not deal specifically with farm credit, but the Hon. Member became a little carried away with some of his interpretations of what had gone on in the Crow debate. Since it was allowed in the earlier part of his speech, Mr. Speaker, I hope you will permit me to make a short response.

The Hon. Member continues to misinterpret a very clear motion which we put forward concerning the rates that farmers would pay under the Crow Bill. Our proposal was that the Crow rate was and should continue to be an average of $4.89 per tonne and that the safety net clause, which was extremely clear and which everyone understood except the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin and two or three of his confreres, included the provision that the percentage of freight to the price of grain could never go beyond a certain percentage.

Mr. Mazankowski: What percentage?

Mr. Althouse: I think at the moment it was 6 per cent. That would have provided protection when grain prices dropped. As grain prices dropped, that safety net would have had the effect, had the Hon. Member done the mathematics and understood the motion, of pulling the actual freight rate down from $1.89 on average per tonne instead of providing the tremendous increase which he interpreted. People outside the committee and people in the press understood it. Only a few Hon. Members in the House pretended not to be able to understand it.

Mr. Schellenberger: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member puts forward a pretty weak defence of his plan. If he had followed the leadership of my Party, he would have put forward a much simpler plan to freeze rates at the Crow level for farmers until the review process.

We have made the calculations very carefully. If his amendment had been in place, this year the safety net would not have been triggered until the $6 per tonne level had been reached. That is a little better than the Government's proposal which was $8 per tonne, but it certainly was not as good as ours. If our suggestion to freeze rate increases had been accepted, farmers would have been in tremendous shape this year and would not be facing increased freight costs when they cannot afford them.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) helped to make the point which the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) was making. The fact of the matter is that freight rate costs were equal to 2.5 per cent of the weighted average of grains sold. He said that they were asking for a safety net of 6 per cent, so it is very obvious that those who claimed to stand in defence of the Crow really, by the presentation of their amendment, contributed to the dismantlement of the Crow.

I would like to ask my colleague a question. I know that he and his family are engaged in a farming operation.

Mr. Althouse: You cannot read, Don.

Mr. Mazankowski: I can certainly understand your line of logic.

Mr. Althouse: It was a frozen rate.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, he is stumbling over his own words. I cannot help it.

As I was saying, my colleague is engaged in a family farm operation. Could he explain to the House, on the basis of his experience in his own operation, the impact of high interest rates, high input costs and low commodity prices, over which he as an individual manager—I hapen to know that he is a good manager because he keeps an accurate set of books—has no control?

Mr. Schellenberger: Mr. Speaker, I hate to put this on the record. After farming for years, this year, as a result of interest rate costs, input costs and two years of relative drought in my area, we will have to cut the number of acres we seed in half just for the farming operation to stay alive. We have done everything according to the best research available. Even with two managing my family farm, we are incapable of continuing to farm the number of acres we have farmed in the past.

This is not unusual in our area. Almost all farmers in my region, given the situation and the climate in which they have been farming, are incapable of finding sufficient cash to put their crop in the ground this year. Ten per cent of them have been unable to pay the fuel bills for last year. The situation is serious. They are looking for an indication of some hope in the future, given reasonable weather conditions, that they will be able to continue to survive and to farm.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I have been listening carefully to the remarks made about the farming community by Members on the other side of the House. I am a little ill at ease to hear the many criticisms against the Government, especially that it is being unfair to farmers, who forever find themselves in a bad predicament. I am embarrassed for Canadian agricultural producers, and I think it must be said that their productivity is almost second to none. It is not true to say that Canada's farming community is in the doldrums and badly treated.

That is why I take this opportunity to tell the House about the many constructive measures the Government has been implementing for years on behalf of farmers, through the Farm Credit Corporation. Mr. Speaker, I cannot deny that the agricultural sector does experience serious difficulties, but the situation is not quite as desperate as some people would have us believe. The Canadian Government has given unfailing support to those Canadian farmers who have been hardest hit by the economic recession. This support is not just a fleeting trend since it dates back to 1929 when the Government established the Canadian Farm Loan Board to help farmers who were unable to secure the long-term credit they needed. The Board and its successor, the Farm Credit Corporation, have now been filling the void for 55 years. Just so Hon. Members will have an idea of the amount of money invested in agriculture by the Farm Credit Corporation, I point out that is has some 79,300 loans outstanding for a total investment of $4.7 billion right now.

Any way one looks at it, Mr. Speaker, that is a significant contribution to the economic well-being of Canadian farmers. During the year ended March 31, 1984, the Farm Credit Corporation authorized 5,736 loans under its regular credit program and the special agricultural financial assistance program, almost $758 million all told. That is $141 million more than the previous year. Mr. Speaker, it is a shame to claim that nothing is being done to meet the needs of Canadians farmers, and I wonder indeed what Hon. Members opposite would do.

Just recently, the Government approved a budget which increases to about $825 million the funds available through the Farm Credit Corporation for loans to Canada's farmers in 1984-85.

Pursuant to its terms of reference, the FCC helps young people and newcomers to farming, those whose equity falls short of the requirements of commercial lending institutions. The Farm Credit Corporation plays a key role. Neophyte farmers and owners of small farming operations in full expansion are much more vulnerable than long-time farmers. Since their assets are limited, they need quite a bit of capital to start and maintain profitable operations. That is why they must be able to borrow at preferential rates which commercial lenders cannot offer them.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but we have reached the end of the questions and comments period.

The Hon. Member for Chicoutimi on a question of privilege.

Mr. Dionne (Chicoutimi): I thought we were continuing the debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Debate.

[English]

The Chair thought we were in question period. If the Hon. Member is debating, he may continue, provided no other Member has a question.

[Translation]

Mr. Dionne (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry if I have misinterpreted what you said earlier, but I shall continue.

In the Canadian labour force, the only people genuinely able and willing to become farm producers are farmers' sons and daughters. They are the only ones who have the required knowledge and any practical experience in agriculture.

We must therefore encourage the transfer of farming operations to their generation if we want to keep these human resources in the field of agriculture and maintain or increase the productivity of the farming industry.

The only way this can happen is to offer these people reasonable interest rates and favourable credit terms, and this the commercial financial institutions do not normally do. In addition, a family farm is usually transferred on a step by step basis. The son or the daughter generally buy the operation step by step while they obtain the funds and the experience required, and eventually take over the whole business. As the land itself is the basic requirement for most farm producers, newcomers usually need credit to purchase land. Farm real estate represents an average of nearly 80 per cent of total investment requirements in agriculture. Credit requirements for land purchases are therefore very high. Even though parents generally want to help a son or a daughter take over their farm, they must recover the accumulated assets in the farm if they want to be in a position to retire or divide their property equitably between all the members of their family. Even young farmers who are getting started with the help of their family will therefore need credit at conditions not generally offered by the commercial sector.

This is what the Farm Credit Corporation is offering them. At the present time, it is offering farm operators loans of a maximum of $350,000 or $600,000, depending on whether the operation includes one or more eligible applicants. The loan limits of the Farm Credit Corporation have been increased twice during the last three years to meet the needs of farmers more adequately.

In view of the special financing requirements of farm operations, the federal Government has offered them, through the Farm Credit Corporation, long term farm credit programs on terms which are not generally available neither to them nor to small businesses, so as to promote farm production. Such terms include mortgages at interest rates frozen for five, ten and twenty years, repayment periods of up to thirty years, flexible repayment schedules, a recovery policy which takes into account temporary financial difficulties and the cyclical nature of farm income, loans of up to 100 per cent of the assets stated as security, as well as a financial advice and consultation service for farmers.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that these new initiatives come at a time when producers need them the most, and I understand that these innovations were introduced by our Minister and the Farm Credit Corporation.

The FCC puts loads of energy into its consultation services program because farmers need to have a sound understanding of financial management in order to succeed. It provides counselling at the preliminary stage, when the loan is approved and at various stages afterwards. While financial counselling is available to all farmers, the Corporation takes special care of new borrowers or other borrowers in need or those who ask for assistance. Its counselling is aimed at helping farmers to run their financial operations and eventually achieve their personal and economic goals.

Borrowers from the Farm Credit Corporation who need counselling are generally those with small assets or large debts, with a developing operation, without experience, with a high-risk business or financial problems. The Corporation's credit counsellor provides borrowers with the assistance they need to start a bookkeeping system, to interpret and analyze financial data, so that they can identify and solve problems as soon as they crop up.

• (1650)

Normally, borrowers also get involved in the program for two or three years. This is generally long enough for them to learn to manage their financial affairs efficiently. As of March 31, 1984, 4,800 FCC borrowers were involved in the consultation services program, which accounts for 30 per cent of all FCC borrowers.

In addition to offering this credit program, the FCC is co-operating with federal agencies and departments, provincial governments and private financial institutions in meeting the special needs of farmers. For several years, it has been co-operating with certain provinces, namely, Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Alberta, by sharing the costs of their interest rate subsidization programs. The FCC intensified its efforts in this area in 1982-83 by participating in the Saskatchewan farm purchase program as a financing agency.

Last year, the FCC also signed an agreement with the Province of Ontario to act as lender for the new farmers assistance program.

The FCC lends to farmers who represent high risks for the private sector. A survey carried out by the Corporation has indicated that the average Canadian farm had net assets of 85 per cent. On the other hand, those farmers who obtained a regular loan from the Canadian Farm Corporation had net assets of nearly 50 per cent during the last five years. The average net assets of farmers who obtained a loan under the special Farm Financial Assistance Program were even lower, namely 35 per cent during the 1983-84 fiscal year and 40 per cent the previous year.

The loan-to-equity ratio is also indicative of the risks taken. As the Farm Credit Corporation was authorized in 1975-76 to lend up to 100 per cent of the value of the property offered as equity the loan-to-security ratio is increasing. The Farm Credit Corporation has granted a greater proportion of its loans to farmers who offer less equity than in the past. This tendency to lend to farmers with lower net assets and a higher loan-to-equity ratio results from the fact that the Corporation is lending to younger farmers with limited resources and also from the difficult economic situation.

The special Farm Financial Assistance Program was re-introduced in the Budget of June 1982.

Loans to farmers under 35 continue to account for the larger part of the funds loaned by the Corporation making up 62 per cent of the total. Most of these farmers own little land and have few personal assets. Whether they want to get into farming or to extend their operations, these younger farmers must borrow large amounts for longer periods. Many of them, especially those who must consolidate their debts, cannot offer additional equity, which means an even higher loan-to-equity ratio.

As Hon. Members are certainly aware, the Farm Credit Corporation has administered the special financial assistance program for agriculture ever since it was implemented in November 1981. Under this program, farmers facing financial disaster have access for two years to a rebate on their loans to the Farm Credit Corporation. Parliament has allocated funds to the Farm Credit Corporation to cover the rebate on these special loans. When the program was set up in November 1981, the Government had allocated to it a total of $50 million, including $5 million to cover the 5 per cent interest rebate which was its key-element. The funds so earmarked were spent very quickly, and the program expired on March 31, 1982. This time, the new program allowed for a 4 per cent interest rebate. Moreover, a budget of $200 million was allocated to this program, with some $16 million earmarked for interest rebates. This program was extended again in the April 1983 budget. Then the Government came up with an additional $100 million. Between November 1981 and March 31, 1984, the Farm Credit Corporation has spent over $341.1 million on this program, and over 2,200 Canadian farmers have received or are still receiving benefits under this program. When the Government implemented this program, it expected an economic recovery within the next two years during which the rebate program would apply. We are aware that the recovery in agriculture has been slow. The Government is currently looking into a possible extension of the rebate period and other means to help farmers in financial distress. As the minister has indicated, a decision is forthcoming.

I should emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that the role of the Farm Credit Corporation is not to provide mortgage loans to all farmers, but only to high risk ones. The Farm Credit Corporation has not been established to discharge banks from their responsibilities or to provide credit to commercial farms. At the end of the seventies, at a time when the agricultural economy was at its best, commercial lenders asked for a larger share of that market. In spite of a slowdown in the farming sector, I expect that they will continue to lend to farmers.

The Government follows very closely the trend of the long-term farm credit market. It is looking into various options which would allow it to provide funds to the Farm Credit Corporation. The latter, on the other hand, is now considering the means of lowering the rates on those high-interest loans. The Government's commitment to agriculture is unequivocal and we are trying our best to give a new impetus to the industry while it is still emerging from the recession. I would like to remind Hon. Members that the Farm Credit Corporation is one of the few lending institutions to have a repayment policy based on the cyclical nature of farm revenues. As long as any undertaking stands a fair chance of pulling itself out of a precarious financial situation, the FCC will be there to help. The federal Government supports the agricultural sector through credit programs to help farmers maintain prosperous operations. Through the Farm Credit Corporation's long- and medium-term mortgage loan programs guaranteed under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the federal Government makes sure that Canada's agriculture ranks among the most efficient and most productive sectors of the Canadian economy.

Mr. Speaker, that is the message I wanted to convey today on behalf of the Canadian Government and the Farm Credit Corporation in answer to Hon. Members who keep saying that nothing has been done for the farming community. The truth is that the Farm Credit Corporation may just be the organization which on many occasions in the past two years has been prepared to come to the rescue of financially threatened agricultural operations. Mr. Speaker, that is why many laws were passed to help the most needy through every kind of low-interest program which kept those farmers active and productive.

More legislation is forthcoming to help farmers who are still experiencing hardship. I might say again that the Government and the private sector ought to share this role to support the farming community, particularly when it is going through hard times.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Huron-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity to join in this debate today to share the concerns of many of my colleagues about what we are debating today and to talk about the insensitivity and disregard of the Government for the agricultural sector of the country. This is not a very nice subject to have to talk about. The fact that we must remind the Government of its responsibility to an industry which overall employs about 18 per cent of the labour force, represents about 40 per cent of Canada's economy, accounts for 10 per cent of our exports, and generates $7 for every $1 spent, is, simply put, appalling.

While the Government appears to be willing to provide money, incentives such as rebates, tax credits and so on in large amounts to so many other sectors, it is completely unwilling to respond in a positive way to the demands of agriculture. When a positive step is taken, it is generally only as a result of years of complaint from the farmers themselves and from this side of the House. The Government appears to be unwilling to take the initiative to place agriculture high enough on its list of priorities. This is the root of the problem.

The biggest crisis is the unavailability of affordable credit. Interest rates now appear to be on the rise again; we are seeing that every day. We have just come out of a period of very high interest rates. They were as high as 21.24 per cent in August of 1981 and even higher for some first mortgages. According to the Conference Board of Canada, continuing high levels of interest rates are going to be one of the major factors in a projected slow down in the economy. This is occurring at a time when farmers can least afford an increase in the rates of credit. Unlike other sectors, agriculture is still hurting from the recent recession. Last year farm bankruptcies were up 16 per cent from 1982; they rose from 410 to 488. Ontario let the nation with a total of 165 declared bankruptcies. There were probably as many or even more, undeclared bankruptcies. Prairie farm failures doubled last year. By the end of February this year farm bankruptcies were up 58 per cent over the same period last year.

The main point that must be made, Mr. Speaker, is that farmers are still hurting very badly. They have not seen this recovery of which the Liberals boast. A very well respected financial constultant was quoted recently in the London Free Press as saying that many farmers continue to suffer the painful hangover of recession. Some may never get over it. If interest rates rise now many will be forced into the red and off the farm. He estimates about 40 per cent of farmers are in financial difficulty. If banks and governments keep hiding their heads in the sand, no solution is possible for farmers.

The outlook for farmers is not good, Mr. Speaker. Debt loads carried by agriculture will soon reach $20 billion. Farm input costs are high and have increased at a much higher rate than prices which farmers receive for their products. Many inputs which farmers have to buy are paid for on credit in anticipation of future harvests. With high levels of credit, high costs become almost unbearable. In most cases they become so unbearable that a farmer is forced into bankruptcy or into selling the farm at a reduced price.

Let us look for a minute at the cost of interest rates on the purchase of a used tractor. You cannot buy much of a tractor for $25,000. Anyone who knows anything about agriculture knows that is a very small tractor. Very often we are faced with prices of tractors anywhere from $45,000, $55,000 or $60,000 to $90,000 or $100,000. Many farmers require that size of a tractor, but we will use a $25,000 tractor as an example.

A $25,000 tractor purchased on a five-year credit would cost $31,860 in total at 10 per cent interest. At 15 per cent interest it would cost $35,700. At 20 per cent that $25,000 tractor would cost almost $40,000. I am not saying for a moment that farmers are the only ones who have this sort of problem. I am saying that farmers are often ignored in this country, especially by the Government which does not seem to realize the enormous costs which go into maintaining a farm to produce food for Canadians and for export.

At this point in time, after the cumulative effects of recession, inflation and high interest rates, as well as low commodity prices, there are 14,000 Farm Credit Corporation loans in arrears, or 18 per cent of all Farm Credit Corporation loans. I am saying that farmers already face a serious situation and they cannot afford higher interest rates and further insensitivity by the Government to their situation.

So what happens? Over the past few weeks we have watched as the Government continues to neglect the agricultural sector. Instead of responding to the situation and trying to implement serious policies which can take some of the burden off individual farmers, the Government turned it back on the very people who provide the food which feeds the nation.

On Monday we heard that the Farm Credit Corporation is restructuring its loan policy, apparently to make it more flexible. How can the Government claim that the program will be more flexible when it has, at the same time, increased the interest rate on Farm Credit Corporation loans from 13 per cent to between 14 per cent and 15 per cent? When the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) says that the new policy will give farmers more choice, maybe he means that they are now being given the choice of either paying high rates to the Farm Credit Corporation or going elsewhere for lower rates, such as to banks. Agriculture has a difficult time supporting interest rates of even 13 per cent at this time. We kept hoping that we could continue even if rates were going to be at the 13 per cent level. We hoped that commodity prices and world markets would change so that we could support those rates. However, that does not seem to be the case. An increase is very disturbing.

For a five-years term loan farmers can pay 14 per cent to the Farm Credit Corporation or they can pay 14 per cent to one of the major banks. The rates are just about the same right now. In some cases bank rates are as low as 13.5 per cent for beginning farmers. How can the Government justify charging the same, and in some cases higher, rates than the banks when the Farm Credit Corporation's very purpose is supposed to be to give farmers a break?

The Minister claimed that one reason for this increase was recent increases in domestic and international rates and increases in the level of anticipated loan losses for the past year. We know, Mr. Speaker, the budget deficit is high, we know that. The Government claims that it wants to reduce the deficit. So what does it do? It cuts the area of agriculture just where it is most needed.

We on this side of the House, Mr. Speaker, are in support of decreasing government expenditure in order to decrease the deficit. However, priorities must be established. There is a lot of wasted spending undertaken by the Government. Why can they not recognize the importance of agriculture not only to farmers themselves but to the Canadian economy in general? Why is Canadair more important than agriculture? Why are incentives to the energy sector a higher priority than incentives to the agricultural sector? How can the Government continue blatantly to ignore farmers by disregarding the effects which high interest rates will have on them?

The Government's complete lack of concern in this area again indicates that it really does not care that our agricultural base needs government assistance if it is going to recover from the last few years of hardship. Agriculture is the key to national prosperity but the Government has forgotten this. It has forgotten that for any nation to prosper new wealth must be created. Only agriculture and other primary sectors create new wealth. Not only do farmers create new wealth, but they play an important role in stimulating the economy through spending. Agriculture must be given the priority which it deserves in the Government's programs for the future.

In the past year the Farm Credit Corporation interest rate rebate program has been a very positive measure which has been of great help to farmers in financial distress. However, the program expired, which means that at least 1,245 farmers will again pay 16.75 per cent interest rates on their loans, if not higher. Both in this House and in many committee meetings we have asked the Minister of Agriculture to renew the 4 per cent interest rebate program offered by the Farm Credit Corporation to farmers in financial distress, and time after time our request is either ignored or brushed off. The fact that it was not even so much as mentioned in the Budget of February 15 seems to indicate to me that the Government has no intention of having anything to do with the extension of this program. So one really helpful program that the Government has implemented in the past is gone now with no hope of its reappearing.

The major stress of our Party, then, is to insist that the agricultural sector be provided with low and stable interest rates. We believe in providing the means by which farmers can continue to farm without being crippled by high interest rates and high costs of production, while at the same time being forced to survive with decreasing farm income.

Aside from the extension of the FCC rebate program, we have asked for the implementation of agribonds. Agribonds have been a long-standing policy of this Party, and the concept of abribonds has been endorsed by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. We believe that agribonds, which would provide the FCC with the ability to raise money at lower than alternative market rates, would provide a continuing availability of capital to be directed towards agriculture. This would guarantee farmers that there would be capital coming their way even if the Government's Budget cannot provide them with financial relief.

There were moments, Mr. Speaker, when we actually believed that the agribond would come into being. It was tabled in this House by one of my colleagues, the Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin), and was not simply ignored as usual; it was referred to the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. Well, we were fooled again, Mr. Speaker. We should have known that any move in a positive direction was simply an illusion. Not only did the committee refuse to refer the matter to a sub-committee—and it was because the majority of Liberals refused and not because we were inflexible—but they effectively delayed the matter by requesting that a library researcher prepare a study. The study will not be ready until May 1 and meanwhile we have many studies on the matter which are very complete.

As we all know in this House, when the matter returns from the Finance Committee we can be sure that it will not be examined very quickly because of the full schedule of that committee. The leadership convention will arrive and Parliament will likely be prorogued, and if not, we will arrive at summer recess and the House will prorogue in the fall for an election; so agribonds will again die on the Order Paper just like so many things before it. They will die in the same way Bill C-653, the Farm Creditors Arrangement Act, died and we will have to bring the matter up again. In the meantime, the legislation could be passed if a sub-committee was created. But again the Government has indicated its lack of interest in the agricultural sector.

We have seen so often in the past that a low priority is placed on agriculture by this Government and we are right now watching history repeat itself. Hon. Members opposite do not care about agriculture any more now than they have in past decades.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, we in this Party are often accused of having no policy. Well, we are discussing our policy today. The Government is well aware of our policy because we have been discussing these and other issues for many years. The problem is that the Government will not listen to our policies and implement them to the benefit not only of farmers but of the Canadian consumer who buys the products of farmers' labour. This is why we are cynical about the Government, especially with regard to agriculture. We have been driven to a strong sense of cynicism about what the future brings as a direct result of our observation of the way in which this Government abandons its responsibilities, particularly with regards to farmers.

We have alternatives, Mr. Speaker, simply because we care. We have not forgotten that it was farmers who built this country and made it strong. We know that things can be better for farmers with a series of measures, most importantly the maintenance of affordable credit for farmers. In part, this means that the Government must take responsibility for the economy in order to keep interest rates in general at affordable rates. We are not sure that the Government can do that either. It must, Mr. Speaker, look carefully at these issues, and more importantly at its own priorities, because farmers cannot bear a repeat of the last few years so soon. If farmers are in trouble, we are all in very serious trouble.

I have always maintained—I am sure many of my colleagues will agree—that if we have a strong agricultural base, we will have a very viable country. We know that farmers are great spenders. If they receive even an expectation of a good crop and a reasonable price, they will usually purchase machinery and in so doing stimulate the economy. I say everything starts with the soil in this country. If we can give some direction and offer of hope to these farmers who are producing the fine food, not only for us but for people in many parts of the world, I think we have a duty and obligation to do so in order to ensure we have a strong and viable agriculture industry.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Questions or comments?

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I believe a lot of what the Hon. Member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Cardiff) has said is basic to this country. I particularly agree with his strong statement that if we have a healthy agricultural sector in Canada we have the makings of a very strong base for our entire economy. I just wanted to stand up and tell him that I believe what he said is excellent and should be repeated. I also want to say that he is a person who has a great deal of credibility because of the work he has done in this House and on behalf of his constituents.

I certainly do not agree with all the Hon. Member's rhetoric to the extent that Liberal Members on this side do not care about farmers. However, if we can get away from political partisanship here, I believe that working constructively together we have to follow his line, which is to ensure that the farmers in this country do have a strong economic base for carrying on their activities. We look forward to continuing the constructive dialogue on the positive ways in which these types of things can be achieved.

I would also like to say that I know the Hon. Member is aware of the fact that it is really not true that the Government has done nothing for the farmers in this country. I am sure he will admit that. Even in his area, for example, CIDA, the Canadian International Development Agency, purchases an incredible number of edible beans for shipment to Third World countries. We have a foreign aid package which is among the best in the world in terms of food aid and which does directly help the farmers.

I have one question for the Hon. Member. He referred in the opening of his speech to a newspaper called the London Free Press. Is that the scurrilous Tory rag which is owned by Peter White?

Mr. McCain: You are like the cow that kicked the pail of milk over, are you not?

Mr. Cardiff: Mr. Speaker, I have no idea who owns the London Free Press. However, I thank the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) for his comments. I do not know if it is appropriate to ask him to be my campaign manager in the upcoming election or not!

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): He will not have anything else to do!

Mr. Cardiff: Well, I do not know. That could be a possibility.

The Hon. Member touched on many subjects, such as CIDA and foreign aid, and I believe we must congratulate our farmers in this country for producing this food. And yes, I do support the positions taken in the purchase of food, and not only white beans, because as the Hon. Member knows full well, there are many other commodities across this country which the food aid program purchases and sends to countries in distress or in need. As the Hon. Member said, if we work together we can do many of these things. I am sure that if there was an offer of co-operation, he would find a lot more co-operation coming from this side, such as on the agri-bond issue. That is an issue we would have liked to deal with very quickly. Perhaps the Hon. Member could encourage some of his colleagues to help us get that matter back to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs much faster.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any further comments or questions? Debate.

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should point out to my colleague across the floor that the previous Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance moved in this House on February 7 that the agri-bond issue be sent to the Finance Committee for study. I seconded the motion. The fact remains that the other items before the committee dragged on to the point where we had a first meeting on this last Thursday. However, I am somewhat disappointed in that we had to ask the researcher from the Finance Committee to bring forward a background paper on this issue because there are several variations which were put forward, generally that lenders would obtain a tax benefit for interest on eligible funds loaned. It was also suggested that the tax benefit be restructured as a credit rather than an exemption to improve the fairness of the measure. And, of course, this applies to eligible funds that we have loaned to farmers at presumably lower than market rates.

There are other areas which I know Hon. Members of Parliament, and particularly members of the Finance Committee, will want to look at in depth. The reason is that this is a tax measure which is important to the future financing of the agricultural industry. But no lending program is going to cure all the problems of the industry in Canada.

When we look at farm cash receipts of a few years ago, as well as the total investment, they increased from $24 billion in 1971 to $132 billion in 1982; a tremendous increase. During the same period production costs have increased sharply from $2.9 billion in 1971 to $12.8 billion in 1982. They are up again this year. Total farm credit increased from $2.2 billion in 1970 to $10.3 billion in 1981, dropping slightly in 1982. With greater amounts of credit being extended each year, total farm debt increased from $4.4 billion in 1970 to $20.2 billion in 1982. The debt-equity ratio in 1972 compared to 1982 deteriorated slightly and I expect it will deteriorate further as we get the figures in for 1983 and 1984. In 1983 total cash receipts amounted to $18.8 billion, and expenses to $15.5 billion, leaving a net income of about $3.6 billion. In 1984, realized net farm income is expected to increase to $3.9 billion, or about 6 per cent.

Today the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) stated that farmers are price takers, not price setters. I want to remind the Opposition that we have marketing legislation in Canada which will allow farm groups to organize so that they can set their own prices. This is available at both federal and provincial government levels. Those producers who have chosen to use this legislation have been able to pass on their increased costs and ride out the variables of input costs much better than those who have not taken advantage of it.

If we are to look at farming as a business, then we must have a counterbalance in the system to enable our farmers to obtain a reasonable return on their investment; a return for management and risk, a return which will allow them to live a life commensurate with that of the rest of society. They can take advantage of the provisions of the Budget of February 15 which will allow them to invest in RRSPs. They can defer the payment of capital gains tax.

Let us look at that in its total context. If a man had an operation that was worth $120,000 when capital gains tax first came in, and it increased to $360,000 in 1984, he would have a capital gain of $240,000, half of which is taxable. He could invest the other $120,000 in RRSPs. This has been a tremendous step forward for Canadian farmers and has been well accepted, certainly by the Canadian federation of Agriculture and other commodity groups.

I quite realize that opposition members today have not said much about improving cash flow in the farming sector and changing the position of farmers from that of price takers to that of price setters. Can they explain just what the price determination factor is in the futures market? Is it based on rumours which can set off speculative trading? Does it sometimes reflect the buying power of a few large multinational grain companies? This exemplifies the need for a countervailing force in the system. Canadian farmers have legislation which enables them to receive a domestic price for wheat and an export price. I fully realize that with the prices of the last few years the difference has not been significant, but the precedent has been set.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has reached an agreement with four of his provincial counterparts to proceed with the tripartite stabilization program to provide a measure of relief to some of our producers. But I maintain that we cannot stop there. We have to continue to seek out better mechanisms to ensure that the cash flow of our farmers is such that they can pay off their borrowings. They cannot borrow their way out of trouble. There has to be a cash flow and a system which ensures a return so they can expand their operation and take advantage of our position in export markets.

Look at what is happening in the European Common Market with their accumulated surpluses. We should encourage our producers to re-examine legislation at provincial and federal levels to ensure the cash flow of the efficient Canadian producer is maintained. The Minister is presently in his office meeting with the Deputy Minister of Agriculture from Thailand. They are seeking opportunities through Canadian technology to enhance their own operations. But I think Canadian farmers have a tremendous opportunity available to them.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) today asked a question regarding the tax on farm fuels. He gave a figure of about $250 million as the saving to farmers. This amounts to 1 per cent of farm input costs for 1983. Therefore, no one program will resolve the financial hardships we have in the Canadian agricultural industry at the present time. I maintain that we have to look at a series of programs which will not only provide for long-term stability, but also a series of programs which will allow them an adequate return on their investment, management and risk.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments? Debate.

● (1730)

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, the figures that have been tossed around this afternoon have sort of made one wonder what is the relative position of the farmer with respect to income on his equity invested. The Federation of Agriculture has provided us with some figures today. I would like to point out that in 1982 the net income of farmers was $3.696 billion. That net income arose from an equity position of the farmers of $111.853 billion. If you relate the net income of the farmer to his equity, you find that the farmer has made about 3.5 per cent on his equity.

If, on the other hand, you relate the farmer to any other form of business, you find the farmer on average has a very high percentage of his investment, relatively speaking, in land which is not depreciable. If the equity position of the farmer were totally depreciable, as many businesses are nearly totally depreciable, there would not be a net income for the farming community at all.

I think it is interesting to note also from these figures that from 1971 to 1984 there was an increment of income for the farmer in real dollars of $76 million. But there were 316,770 farmers which means the real increase in income of the farmer in that 14-year period was 250 real dollars per farmer.

When any Minister of the Crown can stand in this House and say that he has done well by agriculture, as he presided as Minister in 13 of those 14 years, I wonder what he would consider is a bad job. What would be a bad job in his estimation? I would like to point out to you, Mr. Speaker, that from 1971 to 1982 the indebtedness of farmers went up, according to my hasty calculations, something over 700 per cent. That is so the farmer can make an increment of income of 250 real dollars. If we carry that a little further, we find the interest load is up 700 per cent. If you go a little further, you will find that the net realized income for a self-employed farmer for man-years, not counting the free labour of the family on the farm, has increased by 25 per cent. The farmer has had a 25 per cent increase, with free labour, in net income but he has had a 700 per cent increase in interest and he has had maybe a 750 per cent increase in his indebtedness.

I want to tell you, Sir, that when you get an increment in terms of 700 per cent versus 3.5 per cent you are not very solid and your industry is in very very shaky shape. I want to tell you also that in the general structure of regulated industries, such as the public utilities of Canada, you are allowed something in the nature of 15 per cent return on your equity. You are also allowed, if you are an operator of a public utility, an increment on an annual basis which will approach that return of 15 per cent on your equity, and the farmer is getting 3.5 per cent.

Maybe farmers are as prosperous and as well off as the Minister stated they were today, but they are not as well off as the public utilities by any stretch of the imagination, and they are totally regulated by the governments of this land. If, and I want to emphasize this, the farmer could depreciate as much of his percentage of property which he has invested as Canada public utilities, it would be an interesting economic problem to study and I think you would find that he would then show a net loss. That is not very good.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that you are as interested as I am in the health of certain aspects of the agricultural industry, particularly potatoes. I want to ask the Minister why he has not at this time addressed the application of the Province of New Brunswick for price stabilization for the 1982-83 crop year. There was a point in time when there was reason for delay in consideration of that application. That reason has now gone by. The farmers have now planted a second crop since that crop was harvested and it is high time that that application for price stabilization is given favourable consideration by the Government in the generous terms which the industry requires and which you and I both, I am sure, Sir, want to see for our farmers. The application has been on the desk for quite some time and it has not been considered.

During the remarks of the Minister today he suggested that certain areas of agriculture should organize. I am going to ask him to address the same problem that I have asked him to address every time he has thrown that piece of slop across the floor. When he gets a task force to investigate the possibilities of supply management and price control in a product which is so variable in its annual yield that we have shortages and surpluses, perhaps he could get that task force to address also the vital necessity of international trade, whether it be maple syrup, white beans, apples, potatoes, carrots and onions. International trade is a vital part of the production of virtually all of the fruits and vegetables of the Dominion of Canada and if we can address the means by which we can retain our international markets, while at the same time introducing supply and price management, then I would be very happy.

This is a problem that has been addressed by agricultural organizations but they have not come up with the answer. I want it to be addressed in such a way that we do not upset our trade patterns. The Government on the one hand is preaching free trade for Canada in the world, but on the other hand it is asking for supply management and price controls on fruits and vegetables—if we are going to get price stabilization for any of those products anywhere in Canada.

This does not make sense, Mr. Speaker. By doing that we are breaking the GATT rules and regulations to which we have subscribed. We will be putting up trade barriers on other items because, in retribution for our violation of our agreement, they will certainly seek a price. It is not a simple thing. We did close our doors to international trade, except by permit in the poultry and egg industry. That did not make us any friends. We have closed the doors in the dairy industry. In these instances we have got away with supply management and price control. But if we expand this, the international price in trade will be more than Canada can bear. We have to realize that and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has to realize it.

I do not like to be scorned by the Minister, Mr. Speaker. I do not like my people to be scorned by him either. But that is precisely what he is doing. Because there is no supply management, he says we should not get price stabilization, although the Act entitled fruit and vegetable growers—organised or unorganised, it does not specify—to an element of assistance which approaches cost of production on a near automatic basis. That is what we have been denied.

I challenge the Minister as he was earlier challenged, I believe by the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger), on the basis of how can we on the one hand criticize the United States for constraining production and on the other hand proffer the idea that there should be supply management and price control in any agricultural product? It sort of looks to me as though we are standing in a glass house hurling stones, which is not a very good process to follow. The input costs have not become the proper factor to establish a base price for any assistance which would be given. This has been proven in western stabilization and in the approach of the Department of Agriculture to the fruit and vegetable side of our farm business. For instance, the fact that some costs such as interest rates have gone up as much as 700 per cent has not been taken into account, and whatever yearly average price the Minister may take does not necessarily approach the stock loss requirements that price stabilization has historically provided.

However, I hope that the Minister will soon address this problem and on behalf of the farmers of my constituency I hope he will address the removal of some of the tax on farm fuels. It involves a huge amount of money in our constituencies and it is a problem that must be addressed.

We must redefine what a farmer is for tax purposes. For example, a farmer may have had the misfortune to have a five-year loss. He might have to seek extra income to stay on his farm and retain his investment. There is no way that someone who has probably never turned a furrow in his life and has no conception of the inner thoughts of a man who is trying to farm should be able to assess and tax him as a part-time or hobby farmer. These cases must be assessed on individual facts and cannot be covered by blanket guidelines or the judgment of one person.

I see that Members from both sides of the House are in fact interested in agriculture. We must address this issue in a unified fashion in order to alleviate the difficulties in which our farmers presently find themselves. Indeed, they should be treated like small businessmen. When a small businessman takes outside employment it does not affect his income. He is taxed on his total net income and his business is not anticipated as being non-profit. The accumulation of his income is taxable, as it should be with so many of our farmers.

I could name a farmer in your constituency, Mr. Speaker, who certainly needs that kind of attention because he has been taxed unmercifully as a result of unknowledgeable people assessing him for what they thought he was rather than what he did in the community.

This is not a political question; it is a matter of discussing right and wrong, fairness and equity. This issue needs the support of the people to your right, Mr, Speaker, as well as the pleas from people to your left.

Today the Minister said that the tripartite principle of red meat programs was totally accepted by the producers. I talked to a producer from New Brunswick who does not accept the principle of the proposed formula as he understood it. In Atlantic Canada we are paying $50 per tonne more for corn or western barley or wheat. He tells me that if a farmer in our area must pay that much more for his grain than a farmer in another area of Canada, and if Atlantic Canada is to retain any segment of the red meat industry, then that program must be formulated in such a way that it will trigger a payment at a particular percentage of cost in a particular province or region. Until that problem is addressed, Atlantic Canada red meat producers are very concerned that they may be left out in the cold. They are not ready to support any tripartite Bill which may come to the House of Commons.

The Minister is absent while this subject matter is being discussed. I submit that that is disrespectful. While I accept the fact that all Members of Parliament have responsibilities, in view of the Minister's bragging I think he should at least be able to brag that he is in the House on days when subject matters concerning his ministry are discussed. He is not here today and I do not believe he was here when this subject was discussed previously. He should be here in view of the magnitude of interest in this subject that has been shown by farmers.

When the Minister introduces more legislation on any subject matter, I ask him to consider the representations made by the farmers of Canada on a regional basis, as they must be if the program is to be universally accepted. There is great room for improvement. A 3.5 per cent return on equity for a farmer with only a fraction of his investment being depreciable is not good enough. A 15 per cent return, such as it is for a public utility, is more likely to provide the profit which is needed. That is government approved. Let us address this as a real problem and not play games or brag any more. Let us produce.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments? Debate.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, I was hoping to have a little more time in this important debate on agriculture to share with the House some very exciting new technology that has been developed at the Agriculture Canada research station at Kapuskasing. I wanted to describe to the House the work that has been done in the development of forage fed grade A-beef.

I believe Agriculture Canada has recognized in its agri-food strategy that there is a growing importance for the role of agriculture in northern Canada. The work that has been done at Kapuskasing and Thunder Bay has made a very significant contribution to this strategy.

However, in developing this theme and sharing it with the House, I am cognizant of the tradition of the House of Commons that the political Party that presented the motion for debate is also the Party that should close the debate. Therefore, I will postpone to another day my opportunity to share this exciting new development with Hon. Members and at this time I would like to yield the floor to the NDP so that they can close today's debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) said that he was going to share an exciting new development with us, my friend from Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) was hoping that he was going to announce to the House that the research centre he was speaking of had developed a tree that grows money! I am sure many farmers would find something like that very attractive.

Mr. Penner: It is better than that. You can't eat money.

Mr. Sargeant: With respect to the motion and the concerns of the Farm Credit Corporation, I received a phone call yesterday morning from one of my constituents who just heard the happy news that the Farm Credit Corporation had increased its interest rates again from 13 per cent to 14 per cent, 14 and ⅝ths per cent and 15 per cent. Of course, I say he was happy somewhat facetiously. He was not happy at all. Indeed, toward the end of our brief conversation he was asking what he had to do to make the Government notice the fact that farmers could not afford any more increases in their interest rates at this time.

He concluded by asking if it is necessary for him to drive his tractor from Manitoba to Ottawa and then do something with it that I cannot say in the House since it would be unparliamentary. But it is an example of how frustrated many farmers have become with the increasing costs of operating a farm, the decreasing returns and the increasing difficulties they are facing in trying to simply stay alive.

I am fairly familiar with this person who phoned me. He is a good farmer who has quite good land and modern equipment. He has quite a bit of land. He is a good manager but he still has troubles in that there is so much stacked against him with all the increased costs.

• (1750)

In the past few months we have seen the changes in the Crow rate. Just by a fluke more than anything else, the area in which he lives was one of the latter blocks to be opened up for Wheat Board quotas, so his cash flow has been delayed. Also by a fluke of nature, in the last few years there have been problems with the weather. One year there was an early frost, another year there was too much rain and last summer there was serious drought. For those of us who are non-farmers, last year it was a beautiful summer in Manitoba. It was hot and dry. It was great for outdoor activities such as going to the beaches.

Mr. Crosby: I thought you did not have any beaches out there.

Mr. Sargeant: We have beautiful beaches in Manitoba, Howard. For most farmers in Manitoba, last year's weather was not at all good. I have talked with farmers in my home town and with farmers throughout my constituency who have told me about kernels of grain actually cooking in the head as they stood in the fields because of extreme temperatures.

Approximately six weeks ago when Parliament recessed, I spent all that time travelling around my constituency and holding public meetings with anyone who wanted to attend. At every one of the meetings there were at least one or two, a half dozen or in some cases quite a few farmers who came to discuss their general concerns. We also spent some time talking about their specific concerns. It was a bit of a lesson for me. We discussed things about which I heard a bit but I certainly had room to learn more. Some of their problems—and that is what a farmer who telephoned me told me yesterday—related to the cost of their loans and the increasing cost of fuels. In every community which I visited I was asked why the tax on farm fuels could not be reduced. I must admit that I agree with them on that. It would be very good for any government to give farmers a little break, at least in the cost of their fuels. Fuel costs have increased incredibly in recent years. It is a matter which we must address very soon. Coupled with these increased costs is the fact that their returns or the prices they are receiving for their products have either remained the same or in many cases have fallen in recent years.

In one such community, the Town of Riverton, there were some unique problems. For seven of the last eight years—I spoke about this matter in another debate in the House a few weeks ago, but certainly it is worth repeating because it highlights one critical situation in my constituency—farmers in the Riverton area have experienced crop failure. In normal times this is a fairly good farming area. They have good land and normally had good weather conditions until eight years ago. For some strange reason, in seven of the last eight years they have been hit by serious drought, then serious flooding and crop failures. Most businesses which have had failure for seven years out of eight would be lucky still to be in existence. However, these farmers have struggled. They have found money, they have scraped it together and have pulled in their belts a little tighter. They have mortgaged some of their property, but it is reaching a point where it is almost too much. They have gone to the banks and to credit unions in their community. They have gone to the Farm Credit Corporation looking for more money just to put in this year's crop. The ones who visited me—and there were a number of them—did not lead me to believe that it involved just a few farmers who were perhaps bad managers. I was told that probably 50 per cent of the farmers in the general area of Riverton were living under similar conditions.

A new crop season is starting any day now. Last weekend I spoke with a few farmers in my constituency who told me that with the very mild and dry spring in Manitoba this year they could be out in their fields as soon as next weekend. However, the farmers in Riverton may not be able to go into their fields because they do not have any money with which to put in this year's crop. They do not have any money to buy fuel, seed or fertilizer. What can they do? FCC will not give it to them nor any of the other lending agencies. They are leery to give them any more money because there is no guarantee that this year will be a good one for crops.

Last Friday night I talked to a gentleman who is somewhat renowned in Manitoba. His name is Anton Chorney and he is from East Selkirk. He is a weather prognosticator and he told me that his prediction for 1984 is another hot and dry summer like last year for Manitoba. Certainly that is not good news for any farmer in the province.

What do I tell these farmers who have experienced so many crop failures? They do not have any guarantee that this year will not be the same as seven of the last eight years. They are carrying large debt loads. They have been farmers all their lives. It is not easy for them to change occupations. Even at the best of times when there are lots of jobs in other sectors of the economy, it is not easy for farmers to change their way of life, let alone at times such as this with high unemployment rates. What do I tell them that their Government in Ottawa is doing for them? What do I tell them that the FCC is prepared to do for them?

About a month ago I spoke in the House about farm issues. I said at that time that the Government had to make a decision as to whether or not it wanted family farms to continue to exist. I grew up on the Prairies. I am not a farm boy. I had very little to do with farms other than visiting some in my community from time to time. However, I learned from growing up on the Prairies about the sanctity of the family farm, that the family farm was the basis of prairie life.

Not only are farmers faced with the costs about which I have spoken but they have been subjected to the despicable way in which Revenue Canada has picked on them in recent months. This matter has been highlighted by both Parties on this side of the House. The Government seems to be following policies which are not in favour of the continued existence of family farms. I am working on a case involving a couple of young brothers in my constituency who have taken over their father's farm. They are in their late twenties and are in serious trouble for the same reasons—crop failure in 1980, not a very good crop in 1981. They had to mortgage their house and then some of their property to keep the farm going. This farm has been in their family for 50 years as of this year. The FCC sent them a notice through its lawyer in Winnipeg on March 10 this year indicating that if they did not come up with $50,000—I cannot quite remember the figure—within 20 days, their farm would be taken away. How can they find this amount of money at the beginning of the crop year? They told me that if they use the money which they might have to put in this year's crop to pay FCC by April 1, they would be unable to plant and that would certainly scuttle their farm. They promised FCC that if it waited until the fall they would be able to make the payments. The matter is still being considered at this time by FCC. I have written to the Minister about this situation. I hope he will look at what is going on with these two young men who are starting out in life. They closed one of their letters by saying that they were disillusioned and disheartened. I do not think that is the kind of Canada we want.

I see that it is the end of the day. I thank the House for the opportunity to say a few words on this important motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being six o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that pursuant to Standing Order 62(11) proceedings on the motion have expired.

This House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS AND ESTABLISHED PROGRAMS FINANCING ACT, 1977

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Tuesday, April 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. MacLaren (for Mr. Lalonde) that Bill C-12, an Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I will just wait for the applause to die down a little before I have my chance for the last kick at the cat on Bill C-12. We have debated this matter at some length, and I suspect that the Bill will finally be dealt with today and hence go to the Senate for final approval and Royal Assent. After that the chickens will come home to roost, undoubtedly, in the educational community across Canada.

The Bill itself, as we have discovered during the course of debate, is extremely complex. It contains mathematical formulae which are unintelligible to me and I assume to most other people who have looked at it. If we look into what the Bill really does, it becomes quite apparent. Its objective is to cut down the amount of money being made available by the federal Government for institutions of higher learning, money which would have been funnelled through the provinces into universities and like institutions.

What is the quantity of funds which will be taken out of educational budgets? If we look at the Bill, we find that in the 1983-84 fiscal year the cutback is to be in the amount of $118 million. For the year thereafter, the 1984-85 fiscal year, the cutback will be even larger, some $260 million. The worst fears of the provinces are being realized.

Several years ago the provinces became trapped into these types of cost-shared programs with the federal Government. The federal Government, at that time flush with funds because the economy of Canada was in much better shape than it is today, gave the provinces an offer they could not refuse. They sucked them in. It said that for every dollar they spent on some kind of approved program, it would give them 50 cents. The provinces had been pretty happy before. They had funded things in their constitutional jurisdiction out of taxes they were able to impose. Along comes the federal Government with the objective of having a reasonable degree of standardization across the country and offers them these extra moneys. Of course, any province which did not take advantage of that program was unable to compete with the provinces that did. However, what they lost in this exercise was flexibility. Medical care expenses, hospital care expenses and higher education expenses were no longer subject to changes to be made at the provincial level. There was always this federal influence. They lost flexibility and they lost control over areas which under our Constitution were mainly within their domain. They just could not refuse to accept that money even if they would have liked to do so.

Then what happens when times get tough? Times are pretty tough right now. I suspect they will remain tough as long as we have a Liberal Government in office. The first area the federal Government looks to to cut back expenses is in the cost-shared areas, such as higher education, as we see in this Bill, medical care and hospital insurance, as we have seen previously. It says it will withdraw money from those areas. Then the provinces, who are the deliverers of the services, will get the political blame when students cannot enrol in universities, when people cannot get the medical care to which they feel in a country like Canada they should be entitled.

It is easy for the federal Government to cut back in these areas because it is not the deliverer of the services or the programs. It is the provinces which do that. The federal Government expects that the political flak, the distaste of the electorate, will be shown against the provinces rather than against it. The provinces in these matters have been left holding the bag.

Yesterday I was fortunate to participate in a very interesting meeting with representatives of the Canadian Association of University Teachers. It was a most worth-while exercise. I learned a great deal at that meeting talking with the representatives of the university teachers across this country. At the meeting we were told of the low morale that permeates universities and their teachers. Most of this can be attributed to the lack of funds for teachers. They told us that teaching in universities is suffering in many cases as a result of federal cutbacks. They told us that research efforts in Canadian universities are also suffering because money is not available for that purpose.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts) and other members of the Treasury benches tell us how excited they are about the new age in Canada. I believe they call it the new information age. They tell us that there is a need for a highly trained workforce in Canada. If we as a country are to survive in the forthcoming years, we have to be highly literate. When Canadians come out of schools and universities and take up some kind of profession, they should not in the future feel that they are in that one particular job indefinitely. There will be a need for continuous education, continuous training throughout their lives. As one job disappears and another comes on to the scene, it will be easy for people to transfer from one task to another.

We have to look at a different concept of the labour force in years to come. If we do not do these things, we will lose out on the modern world toward the end of this century and into the next. If we do not devote sufficient attention and resources—financial, human and otherwise—to these training needs, we will not survive as a trading nation. We will not be able to sustain the high standard of living which we previously enjoyed in Canada.

We asked the Canadian Association of University Teachers how much money we were talking about. We asked whether it was a billion dollars, which is not that much today. We wanted to know how much they were talking about, what level of funding would solve their problems. The answer was rather surprising, and it was really not all that much money. The answer was $280 million. That would seem to be a large amount of money to some people. However, it can be contrasted with the billion and a half dollars that went to bail out Canadair. It can be contrasted with the $350 million that was given to de Havilland the other day to save just a few jobs, and I do not think it will even do that because those jobs will be fast disappearing. The amount of money required is not that great.

From the more than $80 billion of federal expenditures, it would not, in my opinion, be too difficult to find $280 million to invest in higher education. That money does not have to be found by increasing taxation or increasing the deficit but can be found by priorizing expenditures. If we did not find ourselves in these bail-out schemes which get worse and worse as they go along and never seem to end, and if we did not have to devote the resources of Canada, through taxes on gasoline, to Petro-Canada so that it could buy out Petrofina but instead invested that money in higher education, we would be much better off down the road.

There was another point brought to our attention by the Canadian Association of University Teachers and I would like to touch upon it just briefly. The association mentioned the difficulty it has with governments, both provincial and federal, when universities wish to put their own houses in order. If those charged with the financial administration of a university, realizing the difficult straits in which they find themselves, wish to rationalize their own affairs and discover how they can put available moneys to better use, they find that because of complex funding arrangements with governments they are unable to put their plans into effect.

We were told, for instance, that a certain university might desire to close down a small department in which there is not a great deal of interest or a great many students. There would obviously be the need for training in that particular area but perhaps a university nearby would specialize in that field. If a university wished to close down a certain department and use some of the funds that were saved thereby in another department in which it has expertise and for which there is a great deal of demand, it is not possible to do so because of financial arrangements with the funding bodies. If the university cuts out that one department, then all of the funding that went to that department is taken away. The universities are not able to rationalize sensibly. I believe there is a greater need for flexible arrangements in the financial field between the provincial governments and universities so that this type of thing does not happen.

When we were dealing with second reading of this Bill, I gave a presentation which went into a fair amount of detail about the effect of the tax system in Canada on university financing. I do not wish to go into it again but, because I feel it is a very important point, I would like to mention it briefly in passing. In the past, a great deal of private money went to universities. People tended to endow things like chairs to universities or make donations. However, because the Canadian tax system almost forbids the accumulation of private wealth, that no longer takes place.

If one were to speak to financial administrators of universities, one would find that, by and large, most of their money, even a portion of that which comes by way of tuition fees, comes from the federal Government, the provincial governments and in the form of research grants. Invariably, it comes from government. They are becoming almost exclusively dependent on state financing. I continue to consider that to be a most dangerous trend. I do not think there is anything particularly wrong with government funding of universities, but they should also have operating funds coming from elsewhere. Otherwise, while I do not think it will be today since the Government, as bad as it is, has not yet tried directly to influence hiring and firing in universities and to tell university professors what to think, it should be kept in mind that eventually this could very well happen in future unless universities retain some degree of independence.

When it comes to the role of the state in university financing, I think it does have a role. There has always been a role. If one looks at it in a historical context, monarchs of old have secured for themselves everlasting fame and a place in the history books by their support of universities and institutes of higher learning. It has always been the case that the government of the day or, in past times, a particular queen or king has been remembered for their support in the founding of institutions of the nature we are talking about. They have been remembered for their continued support of them and for the bringing together of expertise into one establishment.

As well, when one looks at it in a historical context, it will be seen that something that might have been done in the year 1500 did not really pay dividends until 1595 or some 100 years down the road. It is the same in Canada today. We must continue to support our universities in order that 50 or 100 years from now Canada can still hold its head upright in the affairs of nations. I am afraid that the Government may well go down in the history books not as a body of people who have supported education to the end that things might improve 50 years hence, but as a group that has neglected that important field of human endeavour.

Now, in the brief minutes that remain to me I want to touch very quickly on three issues of local concern to me in the Northwest Territories. My first concern is the problem we are having with adult education in the communities. For some time, orginally as a government initiatives, we have tried to provide the opportunity for adults, many of whom have never gone to school or only to grade three, four or five, with the opportunity to become literate and take the jobs that are coming as economic development becomes more available in northern Canada. We are having some problems with the funding thereof. In my opinion, it is something that should get a high degree of priority if we are not, in northern Canada, to have a large proportion of our population put aside, unable to take advantage of the many opportunities that are coming forward, particularly in the resource exploitation field.

We have in the Territories one institution of higher learning, Thebacha College. It is having problems with the amount of money made available to it. I wanted to bring out one particular area of concern which it is experiencing now and that is with its library. There is a very nice college, with some excellent staff, but it is a little short on books. If any Hon. Members who are listening can think of a way that we can bring some books to our library at Thebacha College in Forth Smith, Northwest Territories, I can assure them that they would have the absolute support and gratitude of the staff and students attending that institution. Perhaps someone could find a university that has a collection of books since we do not have books and would like to become a university.

● (1125)

My final point deals with the teaching of the French language in the Northwest Territories. A Bill was introduced in this House, unilaterally, I might add, and I have some doubts about its value and worth, which I will not get into now. The effect of this Bill, if it goes through, will be to make the Yukon and Northwest Territories officially bilingual, whether or not that is a good idea. It will cost a lot of money to do this. All the Hansards of the legislature will have to be translated at great public expense. All the ordinances and regulations will have to be translated. The operation of the courts will become very difficult and expensive. There will be a lot of money needed for that.

But, believe it or not, students who want to learn French in the high schools are unable to do so because they cannot raise another $50,000 or so to hire a French teacher. There are a couple of high schools that have had this very problem. They have not been able to get French teachers to teach these students who want to learn French. Yet the Government can come into Parliament with a Bill prepared to spend millions and millions of dollars translating dry documents going back to the time of Rupert's Land. That, in my opinion, does not make any sense whatsoever.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments?

Mr. McMillan: I wonder if I could ask the Hon. Member who just spoke, Mr. Speaker, whether he believes that the establishment of a university of the north should be considered in light of his remarks about funding? If not, would the Hon. Member think it at least appropriate to beef up university opportunities available to northerners through, say, satellite courses, programs or even junior college facilities?

Mr. Nickerson: I am very pleased, Mr. Speaker, that that question was asked. The observations of the Hon. Member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan) are excellent, Sir. We should be working towards the establishment of a full university in Canada's north. It is not something which can be done overnight. We can use existing institutions such as Thebacha College which I have already mentioned, the college with no books, as a base. We can make arrangements with existing southern universities to come up to the north, perhaps have a university college there and work in association with territorial institutions. Perhaps the first year or first two years of a university course could be given in the north; then the students would again have to go south. However, we must work towards this idea of the establishment of a university in the north. It is not something which can be done overnight but it is something which we are and definitely should be working toward. I believe the opportunities there, both on the teaching side and the research side, are excellent and I would like to see this trend continue.

We have had some problems with southern universities which previously were most pleased to be able to take students from the north, particularly those universities in Alberta and some in Montreal and Quebec. Now, however, because of the cutbacks in funding, they are becoming much more parochial and are saying: "We only have so much money; we should concentrate on taking students from Alberta or Quebec", and so on. They are much more reluctant to allow territorial students who have no universities of their own to go to those southern institutions. So that is definitely a problem.

With respect to the final point of the question, the use of modern technology for educational purposes, this will come, probably not so much for university programs, but it will allow us to give a lot of basic literacy courses and vocational-type training in remote communities without the people having to go to a central institution. That again is something which should be encouraged.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there further questions or comments? If not, the House will now proceed to debate.

● (1130)

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak at the third reading stage of a Bill which, when implemented, will limit increases to 6 per cent for the first year and 5 per cent for this year in the amounts the federal Government contributes to post-secondary education. It is obvious that the Government is determined to implement this policy with no amendment, retraction or remorse for the damage it is inflicting on an educational system already in crisis.

This is not the only Bill which will accomplish that. A few weeks ago the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) announced what amounted to a reduction in funding to post-graduate programs administered through the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council. I am sure the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development will try to impose the same kind of limits on the education of young native people for which it is legally responsible. These limits come at a time when we have 1.5 million unemployed, probably 40 per cent of whom are young people.

As a result of this large scale unemployment, our universities and community colleges have been flooded with applications for enrolment. It had been assumed that, because of the declining birth rate which began some 20 years ago, the number of students wishing to attend universities and community colleges would decline. In fact, the number of those who want to attend is at an all-time high. At the same time the federal Government decides for purely financial reasons, not because it has looked at the need for education, to limit the amount of money it will provide to help fund post-secondary education. This Bill will have a very serious effect not only on post-secondarty education, but on all education. The provinces share in the cost of post-secondary education and they will now have to try to meet some of the shortfall in funding caused by these limitations. One way of doing that is to be very careful, cautious and hard on the elementary and high school systems for which they have the responsibility.

All of this comes at a time, Mr. Speaker, when, because of new technologies, our educational system has to be revamped to help those who have lost or will lose their jobs because of automation. That is the time that the federal Government picks to get tough. In addition to those people, Mr. Speaker, there are whole groups in our society who have been short-changed through our educational system's failure to meet their needs. Let me just indicate a few of the groups who have real trouble.

We have had hundreds of thousands of immigrants who have come to Canada in the last 15 or 20 years whose language is neither English nor French. They have been encouraged to come to this country because of the policies put forward by the federal Government, a Liberal Government for 19 of those 20 years. We find those people in big cities such as Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver. Our school systems have found that the children from these families where the first language is not English or French, in order to fit into our society and play a useful role, need more teachers and teaching aids, new kinds of text books. Special efforts have to be made and extra costs are incurred. But at the same time the federal and provincial governments are saying to them: "We cannot afford to help you".

According to a number of studies we have several million people who are functionally illiterate. Those people are not finding and will not be able to find good jobs. Even when the economy improves, they will not be able to find jobs in the new technological age. There are really no programs on the part of the federal of provincial governments, so far as I can tell, which deal with the problem of those people. When the federal Government says it is going to put a cap on the money it spends for education, Mr. Speaker, that means we are writing those people off.

The last group I want to speak about, Mr. Speaker, is our native people. The education of many of our native people, including those now attending school, is at about the level they would get in a Third World country. There has been some improvement; native children are attending schools longer and getting higher grades than they did 10 or 20 years ago. But the number of native children who graduate from our high schools can be numbered at a few thousand, I am sure. I have seen some studies which indicate that in many areas in Manitoba—and I am sure it is the same in many other provinces—not one single native student from a reserve will finish high school. What are we doing about that? Very little. When we put a cap on our spending on education, we are writing those people off. That is not acceptable to me and it should not be acceptable to any person who cares about people in this country.

In this rapidly changing environment of computerization and information technology, the pressure is on the primary and secondary school system to integrate with the new technology and prepare this generation of children for the implications of the changes taking place. What are we saying when we limit our contributions to post-secondary education? We are accepting that we are not going to face the problem. We say the Government should provide special capital grants to enable financially strapped school boards to consider offering computer-related programs which they do not now offer. We New Democrats, Mr. Speaker, are not noted for believing in tax concessions.

However, I would suggest a practical option is to change the tax system so that corporations could donate appropriate equipment to schools. That would be a practical way of helping the schools meet their problems. Both the above measures could apply equally to vocational and technical colleges, high schools and polytechnical facilities which, due to the recession and Bills such as the one we are dealing with today, are attempting to train for the future with obsolete, outdated equipment.

Originally the federal Government provided capital grants to assist in constructing and equipping these institutions. In a period of rapid technological change it is not unreasonable that the federal Government should show some leadership and concern and provide for the renewal of some of the equipment in these institutions, so that they can do the type of jobs they are supposed to do. They were set up to a large extent with federal funding. In order for them to do the job they are supposed to do, they must have the proper equipment, otherwise they can only fail.

It seems to me that the guiding principle of the Government in matters of education is to cut and slash. It wants to minimize its involvement and concern in order that the all-important deficit be reduced. Meanwhile federal budgets heap more and more tax breaks on the multinationals and conglomerates that the Government looks up to for leadership. The tax system permits the wealthiest individuals to pay little or no taxes. We know, Mr. Speaker, that more than 250 people who had incomes of more than $250,000 paid no income tax in the last year for which we have figures. We know there were over 7,000 people who had incomes of over $50,000 who paid no income tax in the last year for which we have figures. I suggest that an equitable tax system would do away with the necessity for the kinds of restrictions which the Government is proposing in this Bill.

The attack on educational and social programs by both the Liberal and Conservative Parties, both here in Ottawa and in the provinces, is going to have a disastrous effect on the lives of the people of this country. The Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) has attacked the Government for the deficit which we face. This comes at the same time as he and his colleagues are calling almost every day for the Government to inaugurate new programs to help the farmers, the fishermen and other groups. There is not much honesty in that type of approach as far as I am concerned. One of the candidates in the Liberal leadership race, Mr. Turner, is basing his candidacy on a pledge to further cut the deficit. I suggest that, in effect, means lowering the level of social and educational services which we have provided in the country.

The major problem with the Government is that it has lost touch with the people it is sworn to serve. In the City of Toronto, for instance, there are 55,000 young unemployed Canadians. A substantial number of them are skilled, but have the wrong skills to meet the demand for jobs that are available. Statistics Canada reports that there are some 540,000 young Canadians who are unemployed and looking for work. This is almost double the official unemployment rate for the nation. This represents a staggering cost of billions of dollars of lost productivity which we will never recover. Some estimates have indicated that the total number of unemployed youth is not the 540,000 young Canadians that Statistics Canada reports, but that in fact at least 200,000 more young people have given up their search for a job because there just are not any.

It does not make sense for the Government to be cutting back on federal funding for post-secondary education at a time when such a crisis of unemployment for young people has exploded across this country. Officials in the core areas of our cities where the poor and unemployed tend to live have noticed an increase in vandalism, petty crime, prostitution, shoplifting and breaking and entering. These officials feel that such events can only signal deeper social unrest in the months ahead. The apparent reaction of the Government is the Bill before the House today which cuts back on the services I have indicated. This will only accentuate the difficulties I have alluded to.

Why does the Government persist in this policy? I can only guess that the Liberal Government has lost sight of the effects which these cuts can and will have and has no strategy for implementing real solutions through the educational system, whether it be vocational training, skills retraining, secondary school orientation for career paths or post-secondary specialization and post-graduate support. Federal Government education support and manpower training are not now geared to any over-all strategy or vision of the future. Despite a number of studies which have been made that indicated clearly that the Department of Employment and Immigration should make a bigger effort to deal with the lack of education and the illiteracy which I referred to earlier, the Department has allocated less and less funds for training those kinds of people in recent years rather than making a bigger effort.

The effects of cuts such as will take place as a result of passage of this Bill will be evident if we examine what is happening in the provinces. I think all Members know the difficulties which are arising in the Province of Ontario. The universities and community colleges have been told that they must cut back on the expenditures, that they cannot meet the needs of their students and that they are going to have to limit the number of students they can accept for training and education. The clearest indication of what happens when the federal Government or the provinces decide to hold the line, or in fact to cut back on educational funding, can be seen in the Province of British Columbia. That province has used the cuts in federal funding for post-secondary education as a justification of its own efforts to slash support for universal access to education and diverse educational programs geared to meet the needs of the workforce. In British Columbia less than 10 per cent of the student age population is in university or other post-secondary institutions. The figure for all of Canada is 12.68 per cent while the Japanese rate is 40 per cent and the U.S. rate is 20 per cent.

Can we look forward to anything, Mr. Speaker, other than a situation in which Canada will fall further behind other modern industrialized countries in meeting the needs of the new technology? This Bill does exactly the wrong thing. This Bill will create a situation which will have adverse disastrous effects, and not just in 1984, 1985 and 1986. The tremendously serious effects of these cutbacks and reductions will be felt in this country for generations to come. It is for those reasons, Mr. Speaker, that we oppose this Bill.

• (1150)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions or comments?

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member said in his otherwise very thoughtful speech that the New Democratic Party did not in principle believe in tax incentives. Does that position indicate that the NDP is opposed to tax incentives for ordinary Canadians, for example with respect to registered retirement savings plans, contributions to charities and even donations to political parties, including the NDP itself?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the Hon. Member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan) asked that question. I suppose I was trying to keep in mind the fact that I had a limited period of time and I oversimplified our approach. Of course, we are not opposed to contributions and tax credits for charitable or educational purposes. We are very skeptical about many of the tax concessions and tax credits which are given to industries, particularly when many of those do not create any new jobs or increase productivity in this country. I was trying to say that we would want governments to look very carefully at any tax concessions or tax credits to make sure they benefit not just the company or the individual who is getting a tax credit or tax concession, but that they benefit all the people of this country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Debate. The Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell).

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, the debate on this Bill has gone on for some time. It brings out many of the problems in Canada today, namely lack of consultation between the federal Government and the provincial governments. This is a serious situation in which the Liberals have placed us. The Liberals have taken Bill C-12 and they have tried to say: "Because of our six and five program we have to reduce the expenditure for education". If the Liberals had made an honest attempt to work out the problem with the provinces—because education is a provincial responsibility—then they could have possibly stayed with the six and five. To me, Mr. Speaker, it is shocking that the Government can increase its own spending by in excess of 11 per cent on salaries and by many more per cent in different directions, yet on the most important subject in modern Canada, what do we have?

Education must be addressed. Many speakers have referred to higher education and specifically to universities. That is just one segment. There is another major segment and that is the retraining of Canadians—retraining and retraining. People will possibly go through a retraining program four or five times during their lives. Universities are not the only vehicle. We must develop more community colleges. We must develop more trade schools. We must get co-operation with industry. Today is the day we must encourage people to become more knowledgeable and more literate both in language and in computer technology.

I have spoken before on this Bill and I speak on it again because there are many more points to be made. For instance, I heard the red rump going on in the same direction about tax credits.

Mr. Keeper: You mean red Tories.

Mr. Fennell: The Government cannot afford what we are doing now under present circumstances. The only way this country can be turned around is to get the economy turned around. In that way, if the Government provided the same percentage of GNP and the GNP was higher, then the education program problem would not be serious. But we must address the importance of education in Canada today. Without co-operation with the provinces, that will never happen.

I would like to recommend to the Government that it sit down with each province individually and try to work out the needs of each province. If the Government works out the needs with each province and then holds a federal-provincial meeting to get consensus on the importance of education in Canada today, this would be helpful.

We brought down a task force report last weekend that was probably one of the most brilliant pieces of literature that I have had the opportunity to read. It brought forth the problems that Canada would face in the next 20 years. That first 20 years will move into 50 years. We are at a critical stage. We did not address this problem soon enough, as the Japanese did and as the Americans have. The Japanese, for example, were aware of the problem back in the 1960s. They built up their institutions and education to a level that could compensate for new technology and get people trained so they could fit into that requirement.

New technology is not the only criteria, Mr. Speaker. We have to deal with Canadians and give Canadians encouragement. Because of our deficit, there is little room for the Government to manoeuvre. I accept that. The only way out of that is by increasing the GNP.

I suggest that the Government bring in equity in taxation credits for education. An example that was recently brought to my attention was an article in the newspaper. The article was written about a young lady registered at McGill who took some of her courses at another university. She did that to fit into the program in which she wanted to become proficient. Because of that, Revenue Canada denied her the opportunity of deducting her expense against her income. I am not necessarily talking about deductions for students because students have such a hard time earning any income this day and age when there is such a shortage of work. I am talking about parents of students.

I recall that when I was young a life insurance salesman approached me when my first son was born and asked me if I would like to take out an insurance policy on him. My first reaction was that I did not want to benefit from my son's death. The salesman then explained to me it was an education program and that by putting so much money per month into this insurance program I could guarantee my son an education. That is forward thinking. We had that 30 years ago. Today we are looking from day to day, going from brink to brink, and we have to stop. We have to start dealing with the long-term problem.

I believe we should provide some form of a program, such as the RHOSP, whereby parents can put money aside after a child is born and during his lifetime in order to create a fund to provide education. But I would go beyond that and say that parents should also be allowed to put funds aside to create a program for retraining themselves. We are in a critical stage. We must address the problem of my peers and the younger people who will be getting into our peers' age group in a few years. They will have to put money aside and they cannot afford to do so after taxes. We must do something about this. If the Government cannot provide for proper funding, then the individual will have to provide more of the funding. In order for the individual to do that, he must be given the incentive to do so.

The key point I am trying to make is that we must encourage Canadians to be productive. We must encourage them to become involved in the voluntary sector and different industries. However, we are discouraging Canadians; the great master state is now looking after them from cradle to grave. We have to overcome this and encourage people to help themselves.

Grants are given for new buildings and new institutions. There are a number of churches across Canada with basements that are not fully utilized. Those basements could be used for computer training at night or during the day, but no, the state wants total control. On that subject alone, some churches and other bodies have voluntary organizations and charge a fee for people to learn a new trade. Under the Unemployment Insurance Act a man is denied taking a full-time course at one of these institutions unless he will commit himself to the fact that, if so required, he will drop his schooling and return to the job. It is far more valuable for a person, rather than taking a temporary, part-time job, to be retrained in something which will provide him with a life-long skill. If we put a deterrent in the way of that gentleman, we are being totally unfair to the Canadian public. It is things such as that in the Income Tax Act which are forcing the Government to be the big daddy who will look after us and do everything for us. We must create an incentive for Canadians to help themselves. The Government must lead the way but it has not done so.

Many times in committee NDP members stated that the provinces were not keeping up their contributions. There is a way of dealing with that, and that is consultation. If after consultation they still refuse to increase their expenditure in education, then we can deal with it and participate on an even basis with the provinces. If we do that, the provinces will get smart very quickly because it is important to them to have funding.

In these times when we have gone through tremendous deficits, all provinces have competed with the federal Government to see who could be the biggest spender. One province in particular has been attacked on this point, the Province of British Columbia. Perhaps some of the things it has done have been too radical, but its intention was to reduce expenditures and ultimately reduce the provincial deficit. Provinces cannot afford any more than the federal Government can afford.

Again I say that the problem is critical. If we do not provide funding through the federal Government for training and retraining, we will continue having 1.5 million people unemployed who, according to the information I have been given from many sources, are costing our economy $50 billion. If a portion of that $50 billion was put into training, retraining and education, we would not only solve the unemployment problem but the problem which was brought to my attention last week by Mr. Fred Pomeroy, Vice-President of the CLC. He stated that we had to go abroad to bring in personnel to work in areas of new technology because we were bankrupt in the field. He said that we have not properly trained people for the upcoming high technology. Labour is on our side on this point. It is concerned and sick of Canada always depending upon bringing new people into the country to solve problems. We have approximately 25 million Canadians. Surely to God we can provide the training required for the new technology. We are not doing it. The Government is not addressing it and this Bill does not address it.

I have spoken in the House many times against Government spending on Crown corporations, particularly de Havilland and Canadair, which has amounted to some $5 billion that could have been put into education and would have probably reduced unemployment by at least a third. It is a shocking situation. Something has to be done.

We have to call for a national strategy to deal with the post-secondary educational system. The Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada, in a report by Dr. Symons and Dr. James Page, indicated very clearly that this matter must be discussed because it is of critical importance. Furthermore, the universities are shocked because they must recruit teachers from overseas. Again, with 25 million people in the country, we cannot provide adequate teachers to teach our own students! Visiting professors from other countries is a great idea, but they should be just that, visiting professors to assist our own people to upgrade their teaching skills and their knowledge of the new technology. This report is of critical importance. It is totally non-partisan, but no one in the Party opposite has indicated that a meeting will take place to develop a national strategy to deal with post-secondary education.

Also I would like to point out the importance of communications with the provinces. There is a weakness in the system before the post-secondary education stage. Some of the present costs are for upgrading student skills in English and basic arithmetic. I have talked to people involved in the universities about this and they maintain that part of the trouble is that everything is based on the GPA—the average mark. Some people are experts in mathematics, some are experts in English. A young man who may want to go into physics and maths may obtain 100 per cent in those subjects, but he may be excluded from the course because of a weakness in language skills. We have to address this problem. We have to provide for such people. They are the geniuses, the brains and the inventors of new ideas for which there is a dire need in Canada.

Before sitting down I want to say that Canada is so far behind in education, as shown in the development of new technologies, that we do not have the choice of waiting to develop our own technology. We must buy technology from overseas and license it in Canada to get the country moving. This is a direct result of the lack of sufficient funds in the post-secondary educational stream. In order to turn around the economy and get it growing again, tax incentives must be put in place so that parents from the time their children are born receive tax deductions for saving money to educate the children and/or themselves. I plead with the Government to reconsider this. If it does not, I can promise that the next Government, which will be formed by the Progressive Conservative Party, will address this problem. We are aware that it is a critical problem. We hear words from different Members opposite, but we do not see any action. Through the polls, the Canadian public has told them very clearly that they are sick of their inaction and ready for a change of government. No matter who they put in charge, they still want us to take over, manage and run the economy in a proper way.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions and comments.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, I have both a question and a comment for the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell) who presented some very interesting thoughts on both the subject of post-secondary education and education in general, as well as expressing his concern in the health field in relation to financing. He touched on a subject that has been presented to me on many occasions, and that is that there is lacking in our system a body or group that can overview government policy before it comes into operation.

Specifically the need is for consultation between government and organizations and parties actually involved in fields of activity such as education and health. Does the Hon. Member think there is any specific way that there could be a vehicle for consultation, particularly in the area of education? It has been the complaint of all those in post-secondary education and other areas of education that they do not have the opportunity to input to government officers and departments their views and concerns on educational matters. The Hon. Member for Ontario expressed his concern that the Government did not pay sufficient attention to people in the field of education, that is, those with special knowledge. Even if they do not react to what they are saying, there should at least be an opportunity for presentation of views. Can the Hon. Member comment on that and perhaps indicate what specific steps might be taken? I know he has great knowledge of the matter.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that comment. It really comes into the view of our Party that our committee system is not working. If we had a proper committee system in this House, we could deal with a Bill like this in an intelligent way rather than by restriction in a committee where I must ask a question in five minutes and get an answer in five minutes. We could go into depth, bring in experts and bring in the provinces. If we were given that opportunity in this House, we could develop programs that are acceptable to Canadians, not only to those on the government side.

Another point is budgeting in this country. It is an absolute disaster. We are shown the Estimates a week before we have to approve them. A prime example is the $240 million for de Havilland. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) knew when he requested that $240 million that he would be back at the table within a month to ask for more.

We are not managing this country properly. We are not managing the Crown corporations. If we could have proper budgeting through a parliamentary committee and proper committee input into legislation, this country could be successful, Canadians would be employed and we would be turning on the economy at full speed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): If there are no other questions or comments, we will continue the debate.

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to Bill C-12, an Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977. When we observe the way the Government and the Minister have handled both education and health in terms of dealing with the problem, we see that the Government brings forward programs without enough negotiation with the provinces. In other words, they promote a political program, put it forward and then tell the provinces to pay for it.

In the area of health, our Party is dedicated to the universal medicare program. We believe it should be given high priority. However, this should be done through negotiation with the provinces. We should tell the provinces what it will cost, what will be the program and arrive at arrangements regarding the cost-shared programs. What do we have ? The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) takes a certain direction for political expediency and dumps it on the provinces. That is very unfair.

In terms of education, I have been particularly concerned about on-the-job training. There are steps the Government could take to strengthen the Canadian position and prepare people to pick up education on the job. This would strengthen our economy.

I want to deal with small businesses and farming in relation to education. How do we prepare our young people to take on these jobs? There is no educational program in the case of small business. Our young people receive book training. We send them to school for a number of years. However, we then throw them into the job market. They are not prepared to meet that challenge.

I have seen this happen in the construction business for years. There should be training programs for the various trades such as carpentry or construction in general. Are we preparing our young people? Do we have proper training programs to educate our young people to go out on a job? This is one area that the Government should take a close look at, and not only in terms of construction.

Let us take a look at the rural areas. One problem in this country is that we have become too centralized. We have had a program of centralization. The Liberal Government has poured too much into the large centres and this has created problems. We should now look at decentralization, possibly even in terms of education and preparing people for jobs. People must go where the jobs are. I will use a homely example. You may need someone to operate a tractor. If you want to hire a young person, you run into a number of government regulations, both provincial and federal. These regulations would, in fact, even preclude what I would call on-the-job training so that a person would be able to operate a machine in a proper way. This, of course, requires direct input from the person who operates the small business or farm so that that kind of an education program can be extended. The Government has done nothing to extend training in a practical way.

● (1220)

Unless we get down to a practical base at both the provincial and federal levels, we will not solve our problems. I think one of today's most overrated phrases is "high technology". There should certainly be emphasis on high-tech education, but I would like to express my opinion about this subject, Mr. Speaker. I do not presume to be an expert in the area of high technology but I have seen things work in a practical way in the small business and agricultural sectors and even on the assembly lines. It is my opinion that high technology will not solve all of the problems. We must become very practical and find out where the jobs are and where the productivity is. This will mean that our educational system will have to offer massive retraining programs, yet I believe that the system has not even begun to explore the various practical ideas and solutions that governments could implement.

Through the years, I have had the opportunity to employ many young students who were perhaps 16 or 17 years of age and were brought up in a small town. These students had no experience of operating construction or agricultural machines. Teaching these students takes a great deal of patience and costs a lot of money. Teaching a student to use a piece of equipment which costs $100,000 requires a great deal of responsibility. Someone must tutor a student by showing him how to check the oil in the morning and how to operate the machine in a variety of circumstances. If the Government were to offer tax benefits to operators in the construction and agricultural sectors to teach students, we could create some employment. I have heard of cases of young people who, because they were not working, got into trouble with the law. I think this is one area in which the Government can act in terms of practical education which will put people to work.

I shall now turn to the part of the Bill which deals with health. I think it is most unfair that the Government has used the issue of health for political expedience. It has become evident in the last few months that the Government has been mining for favourable subjects to use because the Government in front of us is bankrupt. It is most unfair of the Government to use the issue of health as a political issue. Health care is something to which we are all entitled.

It is unfair that the Government, instead od dealing with the provinces in a businesslike way and with the best interests of the Canadian people at heart, has used the issue of health as a political tool. I think that is very, very wrong, Mr. Speaker. If we are to have a country which is united in its strengths, we must remove from the political spectrum the type of thing we have seen demonstrated by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The Ministers responsible for health in the various provinces feel very strongly about the misuse of this type of issue. They feel very strongly about the fact that the Government has indicated that it is the only entity in Canada which is interested in the health and welfare of the Canadian people. We on this side of the House are certainly dedicated to the health, education and welfare of the Canadian people.

Per capita transfers to post-secondary education will escalate quite significantly. It will become important to look at the future and implement a program to address the problem of education. We must redirect people from one area of education to another area of employment. This is probably one of the greatest problems the country will face. Young people who spend many years educating themselves in their desired professions find out that the whole system has collapsed on them. One of the greatest problems facing young people in the days ahead will be that, after having chosen a profession and educating themselves in that profession and having spent time, money and effort, they find that there are no jobs. This Government or the next Conservative Government must face that great challenge.

We must explore the areas of high technology but that is not where the answer lies. High technology may answer the problems of a few people but it will also create some problems. We must explore the area of practical training so that our young people do not find themselves in the chaotic situation which exists today.

The unemployment rate is the highest it has been in the history of the country. I heard this morning that in the maritime provinces the unemployment rate is staggeringly high, as high as 30 per cent. This should not be happening in a country with such vast opportunities and so many natural resources. Canadians could be accused of over-emphasizing the natural resources of this great country. However, I think that when preparing our young people for the challenge ahead, we have missed the point and are not redirecting Canadians so that they may do the things which they do the best.

Without zeroing in on a great deal of expenditure and bad mismanagement on behalf of Canadians, we have seen some good examples of this in recent days. I believe the Minister responsible for education on the government side should be reconsidering this program and asking himself whether Canadians are being directed toward areas that will stimulate the country, productivity and ensure jobs for young people in the future. We need a new program for the redirection of funds and efforts so that young people are not trained or retrained in fields in which they will not be able to find a job.

Some may say that it is unfair to address this issue in those hard terms, but I suggest it is the Government's responsibility to be the vehicle for opening doors so that the private sector and the Government can study areas where this can be accomplished. We cannot accomplish the goals we set for this country when governments get caught up in political bickering.

When I consider the tremendous potential of this country, I cannot help but think of the situation in western Canada with regard to the National Energy Program. I have seen thousands of jobs lost when the markets of the world were there for us. The House will recall the period when we were importing oil from Mexico and losing jobs. Oil rigs were shut down and I believe as many as 275 went across the line. This meant the loss of thousands of jobs for our young people and thousands of dollars to our treasuries. As well, it cost us in terms of welfare payments. It was a terrible loss to the country and one from which we have not begun to recover at this point.

There must be long-term planning with a view to providing what we are asking of our young people. Is the Government asking them to go without jobs, to be ill-prepared and continue in technologies which we have not been prepared to deal with through our educational system? Furthermore, when government mismanagement is added to this, it results in a very serious situation. I suggest that it is important to look at this whole area of retraining and fiscal responsibility as it relates to the balance of payments between provincial and federal governments so that we can give young people the opportunity to prepare themselves and assure their future with stable jobs. This can be accomplished in this country with good management.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions or comments. If there are no questions, debate.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, the debate on Bill C-12 which relates to federal-provincial fiscal arrangements, having particular application to both secondary education and health, is drawing to a close. For that reason, I believe it is important to highlight some of the major features of Bill C-12 as it affects the legislative base for the federal-provincial arrangements that, in turn, govern the delivery of post-secondary education services and health services right across Canada.

First and foremost, we must recognize that federal-provincial relations have evolved over a long period of time. In more recent decades, federal-provincial relations have been formalized to a great extent with the result that the federal-provincial conference has become a kind of institution. In the last few years the process of institutionalizing federal-provincial relations has fallen into difficult straits. On several occasions, we have read in newspapers and other forms of media publications that federal-provincial relations are dying, that co-operative federalism is dead. That presents difficulties for governments at federal, provincial and indeed municipal levels. If there is one thing that is essential to the welfare of this country and the governing of all parts and aspects of our national life, it is co-operation among the various levels of government, particularly the federal and provincial governments.

In that context it is important to review Bill C-12 and its effect on post-secondary education and health programs across Canada. In order to illustrate my point, I would refer to a report published by the provincial Ministers of Finance in April of 1983. It is made very clear in that report that, in the opinion of the provincial Ministers, there are great and grave difficulties with the federal Government's policies with respect to the funding of post-secondary education and health.

One point made in that report is that the federal proposals with respect to funding bear no relationship to actual provincial spending on health and higher education. I suggest that the importance of that point escapes many Members of the House of Commons and possibly other Canadians. It is a terrible reflection on the policies of the federal Government when provincial Ministers say in a formal report that its policies with respect to funding of the important area of post-secondary education and health are not related to what is actually taking place in those fields and that the funding of education and health is an academic exercise, a national operation that bears no relationship to what is actually happening.

As a result, health and education expenses in the provinces can go up in order to meet the needs and challenges of people of each of the provinces, while the federal participation, in effect, can go down. That points out very clearly and concisely what the problem is. It is that the Government of Canada, in dealing with the important subjects of health and education, has escaped from reality into formulas that may protect the federal Treasury but do not provide the services which all Canadians have agreed must be provided.

The Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) mentioned in his speech earlier today that the federal Government takes advantage of the fact that the province is responsible for actually providing services in health and education so that any failure to provide an adequate service reflects immediately on the provincial government and officers while not affecting, in an immediate way, the Government and officers of Canada. That creates a very difficult situation because if the Government of Canada takes advantage of that type of insulation from the people of Canada in the important areas of health and education and in effect tries to deceive the people of Canada with respect to the role that the federal Government plays in these matters, it will undermine the confidence of Canadians not only in the federal Government but in government at all levels.

One might suspect my motives in making that statement, but in fact even more extreme statements have been made by responsible persons, such as the President of the Canadian Medical Association. In fact, I have a publication here dated March 20, 1984, in which the President of the Canadian Medical Association said this, and I quote:

● (1240)

The President of the Canadian Medical Association today accused the Minister of National Health and Welfare and members of the House of Commons Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs of perpetrating political fraud against the Canadian public.

When you put together the statement contained in the report of the provincial Ministers of Finance and the statement published by the Canadian Medical Association accusing the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) of political fraud against the Canadian public, you realize the state of federal-provincial relations and what a disastrous effect that must have on very important fields like health and higher education. I believe that is an important observation and one which should concern all Canadians with respect to Bill C-12 and its effect on federal-provincial fiscal arrangements, which in turn determine the services which will be provided in the fields of health and higher education. Health and education become the victims of difficulties in federal-provincial relations.

The death of co-operative federalism takes its toll in those important service areas of health and education. I believe it is a sad day for the House of Commons and for all Canadians when, as a result of the failure of the federal Government to deal properly with the provincial governments, those needed services in health and education suffer.

The pith and substance of this Bill and related legislation is that, in fact, it reduces the funding available to post-secondary educational institutions and to the deliverers of health services in Canada. One can present many statistics but the bottom line is that there will be less money available. When you are talking, Mr. Speaker, of education cost across Canada, you are talking of a total expenditure of $4.7 billion. Governments provide almost 72 per cent, 73 per cent of that amount, approximately $3.4 billion. The balance of the funds, which amounts to less than 27 per cent, 28 per cent, comes from the private sector and tuition fees. Therefore, if the federal Government reduces the amount it is willing to spend in the field of post-secondary education, it does not take much calculation to realize that the bottom line is increased tuition fees to the students of Canada to the extent that the private sector cannot make up the shortage of funds. Any dramatic increase in tuition fees of Canadian universities and post-secondary institutions immediately affects the accessibility of young Canadians to higher education. If there is one objective which most Canadians have, it is to acquire a higher education, if their abilities and capacities permit them to absorb that level of training and education.

We cannot divorce the problem from the realities of life. When we reduce the amount of federal funding to post-secondary education, it not only leads to reduced services at the universities, but affects in a very real way the accessibility of young Canadians to a university level education. I want to point out again, as I have in the past, the realities of this legislative measure as it affects Canadian university students. We are not talking about a small number of Canadians, Mr. Speaker. There are over 500,000 young Canadians enrolled in post-secondary institutions on a full-time or part-time basis. In addition, there are many more persons who are, in effect, students at Canadian universities and post-secondary institutions pursuing subjects of instruction which will not result in a university degree, but which, nonetheless, allows them to participate in the process of secondary education.

Finally, I would like to express my concern for Canadian university students by pointing out that in 1982-1983 there was a 15.9 per cent increase in tuition fees across Canada. With measures like those contained in Bill C-12, that increase is liable to escalate dramatically in the next years. The importance, I should note, of that average 15.9 per cent increase across Canada is that in some provinces it is quite extreme. In the Province of Newfoundland, the increase in tuition fees for 1982-1983 is estimated to be 37.1 per cent. Provinces which have delayed increasing tuition fees can expect even greater increases in the next time period. It is anticipated in the Province of British Columbia, for example, that tuition fees at the University of British Columbia could increasee by 33 per cent or more in the next few years.

We have a real, practical problem, Mr. Speaker. We are not talking in abstract about a cold and sterile process of government funding. We are talking about the ability of young Canadians to have access to higher education. We are talking about the level of the services provided to students at universities and post-secondary institutions, and other things of a very practical nature.

There are many other concerns, Mr. Speaker, in the educational field which I would like to bring to the attention of the House. However, I would like to deal now with the other part of Bill C-12 which affects the health field. In addition to Bill C-12, we have before us in this House Bill C-3 which enacts the new Canada Health Act. We know what difficulties that Bill has created for the health professions across Canada and for other persons and institutions involved in the delivery of health care services. I have already mentioned the accusation of political fraud which has been made by the Canadian Medical Association, but again we have the practical effect of a reduction in financing on the services provided by those persons and institutions who depend upon that government financing.

Provinces like the Province of Nova Scotia already expend over 25 per cent of their revenue dollars on health. It simply has no more funds to apply to health care services. I believe that is true of most provinces in Canada as we approach this lower level in the economic recession cycle. The unfortunate part, Mr. Speaker, is that it is very unlikely that the situation will improve even with an improvement in the economy, because all we can do in the next decade is reach the status we have enjoyed in past decades. There is very little opportunity and chance totally to revitalize the economy in such a way that funds will be generated from normal taxation sources to make up the deficits which have accrued, not only in the total national revenue picture, but in all the services which are involved in that picture, and health services, including medical care, is one of those services.

What I am saying, Mr. Speaker, is that it is unlikely that anything will happen in the next year by way of economic improvement which will generate any great amount of funds for a service like health care. We must, therefore, rely on the standard sources of funds. We must rely on the standard programs which have been provided to support health care.

This Bill, Mr. Speaker, is another example of reducing in a very insidious way the amount of funds which will actually flow through to the deliverers of health care services. Yet, Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding that reduction in funding available for health care, the Government pretends and purports to be improving health care in Canada. The Government purports to be helping Canadians in relation to health care. There should be little wonder that the Canadian Medical Association has accused the Minister of National Health and Welfare of political fraud.

One always likes to be positive, particularly when the subject is post-secondary education and health. However, there is an element of fraud in what the Government has been doing in the legislative field as represented by Bill C-12 and by other Bills in the House. There is ample evidence that a fraud is being perpetrated on the Canadian people. At the very time that the Government is withdrawing funds from important areas like health and education, it is pretending to assist and advance the services provided in those important fields.

The debate on Bill C-12 is drawing to an end. It may well be that my remarks will terminate the debate on third reading. I believe it is very unfortunate that as we terminate that debate it is on the note that not only are there difficulties now in the fields of health and higher education, but that those who are involved in those very important fields can look forward in the next few years to even greater difficulties. This lack of funding will have its effect on those who will now be required to pay for the services. In the case of post-secondary education it will be the students, in the case of health services it will be the provincial Governments, the alternative being a reduction in service. Either way it is going to be difficult for the people of Canada.

● (1250)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions and comments. If not, debate.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. Is it for a question or for debate?

Mr. Skelly: Just a short question. From watching the Conservatives perform in debate on this legislation and on the health Bill, it would appear that they are talking out of both sides of their mouth. They advocate support of, but vote against, in some cases, provisions which would improve post-secondary education.

I notice that most of their speakers failed to touch adequately on native education. The Hon. Member talks about the Government committing a fraud on the Canadian people. I wonder why we have not heard anything from the Official Opposition on this subject, which is clearly a federal responsibility. We should be insisting that provinces make an adequate contribution to the post-secondary education of native people. There should be a high spending priority on university education and technical and vocational training programs which could be funded at the post-secondary level. For example, native people on the coast of British Columbia could be obtaining forestry training for employment in the forest industry. There are some serious human resource deficiencies in band administration. One of the biggest problems for native people is developing a base of trained individuals who could take over band administration, develop new economic activities and carry them forward. There is certainly a deficiency on the part of the federal Government in special areas of native education.

I might add, Mr. Speaker, my concern about health care for native people. There are not enough doctors in the many remote native communities. There are not sufficient community health care clinics for native people. Would the Hon. Member be prepared to stand up and say why his Party has said absolutely nothing on these critical topics affecting native people?

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, there is a very short and simple answer I can give to my hon. friend. Members of the Progressive Conservative Party who address matters in the House of Commons abide by the rules in that their statements must be relevant to the matter before the House. Bill C-12 relates to Established Programs Financing, which applies to all Canadians. We might speak of Japanese Canadians, Chinese Canadians or Greek Canadians, but it applies to all Canadians. Therefore, there is no need to distinguish between native persons, aboriginals or people of other ethnic groups. We want the best possible health care and the best educational services for all Canadians.

My friend has referred to his interest in the problems of native persons, Mr. Speaker. I do not think these problems can be attacked in some silly, piecemeal way, as my hon. friend suggests. The difficulties which be set native persons across Canada, particularly in western Canada, have to be addressed in another way. I do not think we can tack on provisions with special application to native persons to Bills before the House which relate to all Canadians. We have to attack the real problem, which is the treatment native persons receive in Canada under the legislation affecting them.

I am proud to say, along with other Members of the House, that we have have had a special committee on Indian self-government. I know it was the mandate of that committee to consider all aspects of special concern to native persons. The report of that committee, of which the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) was a member, has been presented to the House. That is a step in the right direction. That is to say, if we can permit native persons to present in an organized way the special needs and solutions to their particular problems, that is the way to go.

If the Hon. Member is asking whether I would tack on to health legislation relating to all Canadians a special provision for native persons, would I tack on to general parliamentary legislation on education a special provision for native persons, my answer would be no, I would not want to do that. I do not want to isolate native persons as a group in that kind of demeaning way. To the extent that it is essential to provide special programs and special policies to assist native Canadians, then we should do it in a direct way.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Are there any further questions? Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The question is as follows:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The question is as follows: Mr. Lalonde, seconded by Mr. Roberts, moves:

That Bill C-12, an Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act, 1977, be now read the third time and do pass.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I declare the motion carried on division.

Motion agreed to on division and Bill read the third time and passed.

ROAD SAFETY

FATALITIES CAUSED BY DRUNKEN DRIVERS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I recently had the opportunity to bring to the attention of the House of Commons the seriousness of driving while impaired. In a Private Members' Bill I urged that something be done to end the terrible and needless tragedies which take place on our nation's highways. A recent news story gives cause to have the issue addressed with renewed urgency.

Last year a woman lost her 17-year-old son in a traffic accident caused by an impaired driver. Shortly after, she joined an organization called Mothers Against Drunk Drivers, in the hope that something would be done to end these terrible tragedies. Last summer the same woman lost her 25-year-old son, again because of a drunk driver.

There is a cry for action. In 1981 there were nearly 158,000 impaired driving convictions in Canada, or more than 400 per day. A study done by seven provinces from 1973 to 1978 shows that 11,500 Canadians were killed in automobile accidents. In over 42 per cent of those cases one of the drivers had been drinking. These statistics call for action. I beg that we respond in favour of the innocent. It is high time that innocent Canadians get a break from the law.

POLITICAL PARTIES

SUPPORT FOR PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY'S POLICIES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, when the Government finally screws up sufficient courage to call a general election, whether it be in August, November or, God forbid, even later, the people of Canada will be faced with a clear choice.

On the one hand they will have the Liberals, aided and abetted by their friends the NDP, who favour a policy of zero growth, continuing high unemployment alleviated, if at all, by expensive, stop-gap, temporary, make-work programs, oppressive taxation ruthlessly imposed, and ever-increasing intrusion by the state into the private affairs and business dealings of Canadians.

On the other hand, Sir, they will have the fresh ideas of the Progressive Conservative Party. Here we find policies designed to allow everyone to grow and prosper in an atmosphere of full employment, stable interest rates, and sound financial management with lower and simplified taxes. We find policies designed to release initiatives and enterprise which will astound Canada and astonish the world. I have made up my mind, Sir. So have most other Canadians. Therefore, let us bring on the election.

FISHERIES

EFFECT OF PROPOSED ALCAN PROJECT ON BRITISH COLUMBIA SALMON STOCKS

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, is the resolve of the Progressive Conservative Party to protect British Columbia's salmon industry weakening, now that one of its corporate friends in formally seeking access to salmon producing rivers for power generation? Apparently it is. The Kemano II project in northwestern British Columbia, proposed by Alcan, poses a serious threat to the future of our fragile salmon stocks which are already seriously impacted by the first Kemano project. Yet it is apparent that this project will have Conservative support.

The Department of Fisheries and Oceans recently held public meetings on this matter in British Columbia, but no one from the Tory caucus bothered to show up to register their concern. We can only assume that they are not concerned. Or, if they do have concerns, they are not prepared to stand up and publicly oppose Alcan's haste. Also, the Conservative Member for Vancouver Quadra, in a letter to the President of the Terrace Chamber of Commerce, states that:

> Bruce Rozenhart of Alcan has been keeping the British Columbia Caucus fully briefed on their expansion plans and I can see no problem to having such Federal approval as is necessary for such expansion.

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, When the crunch comes, the true Tory colours will show through and they will continue to put the welfare of their corporate friends ahead of the welfare of British Columbia's fishermen or of the salmon stocks upon which they depend.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Why do you never criticize the Liberals?

LANGUAGE RIGHTS

INQUIRY WHETHER LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION WILL AGREE TO RECORDED DIVISION

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency-Orléans): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) is so afraid that John Turner will become the Leader of the Liberal Party of Canada that he deliberately attempts to distort the comments made by the former Minister of Finance concerning the language issue, in order to gain political advantage.

In my opinion, intellectual decency requires that he should differentiate between the basic rights which are guaranteed by the Constitution and which the federal Government has the obligation to protect, before the courts, if need be, and entitlement to provincial government services in the minority language, which comes under the jurisdiction of each Province.

This is basically the distinction made once more by John Turner in Montreal yesterday. Therefore, it cannot be said that, by saying he respects the provincial jurisdiction in Quebec as far as linguistic matters are concerned, John Turner is accepting official unilinguism in Quebec. In fact, Quebec is one of just two Provinces in Canada—New Brunswick being the other one—where institutional bilinguism is officially recognized under Section 133 of the British North America Act, which provides for the equality of both French and English before the courts and in the National Assembly.

The fact that the Chairman of Alliance Quebec has stated that he was satisfied with John Turner's position as concerns the linguistic rights of the English-speaking minority in Quebec should urge the Conservative Leader not to be such a demagogue in the future.

By the way, if, as he has proclaimed, the Conservative caucus is now united behind its Leader in relation with the issue of French language rights in Manitoba, the Leader of the Official Opposition should say in the House whether he would accept a recorded vote on this issue.

NATIONAL REVENUE

COSTS OF INVESTIGATING DEPARTMENT'S ACTIVITIES

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, I never fail to be amazed by the extravagance of the Government. As Members will recall, certain Members of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition committed their time and energy to the formation of a task force charged with the investigation of certain activities of Revenue Canada's stormtroopers which were rumoured to be unacceptable. After a month and one half of travelling across the country and speaking to Canadians in all tax brackets, we have finished what I feel to be a complete and well documented report. The total cost of the venture was in the neighbourhood of $100,000, and the time spent was less than two months.

In light of the above, how can the Minister possibly justify the hiring of a private firm to do similar work at a cost of $1.5 million over a period of one and one half years, especially with the Liberal Government's deficit approaching $30 billion? This is a mammoth undertaking and will, no doubt, enrich some pockets at the taxpayers' expense. Mr. Speaker, this is indeed outrageous. It is extravagant. It is overblown, preposterous and disgusting. It is gross, revolting, unforgivable, sickening, wasteful, redundant, thoughtless, unpalatable, ridiculous, and does not make any sense. Why does the Government not just resign? It would be a lot cheaper.

ABORTION

PROTECTION URGED FOR UNBORN CHILDREN

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Ontario Supreme Court recently reversed a lower court decision in the Medhurst case and ruled that the father of an unborn child has no legal status to prevent the unborn child from being aborted.

The Supreme Court based its decision on previous court rulings which have declared that an unborn child is not a person. The decision thereby prohibits a father from acting legally as a "next friend" of the fetus which he and his wife created.

While the Criminal Code allows for abortions if an abortion committee in an accredited hospital finds that the woman's life or health would be endangered by the pregnancy or birth, the judge in the Medhurst case stated that even if there were reason to believe the abortion committee had not fulfilled its legal requirements, it would still not be for him or any other judge to decide whether or not a woman should have an abortion.

In light of the Medhurst case, and the undisputed scientific proof set out in the Borowski case in which Judge Matheson of the Queen's Bench of Saskatchewan acknowledged beyond question that a fetus is a human being, I urge the Government to initiate action under the amending formula to amend the Constitution so that the human fetus will be included under the protective provisions of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, as has already been done in West Germany.

VIA RAIL

TORONTO-PETERBOROUGH-HAVELOCK—CALL FOR MEETING ON RESTORATION OF SERVICE

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I rise today on an extremely urgent matter dealing with the restoration of the VIA Rail passenger service which formerly operated between Toronto-Peterborough-Havelock. When I first raised this important question on September 20, 1983, I received constant assurances from the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) that the decision-making process would be conducted on a basis of consultation with all those involved, including the Minister himself. Since that time I have worked with local politicians and passenger association representatives in an attempt to secure an audience with the Minister responsible for VIA Rail but, as yet, all our efforts have been in vain.

During a November, 1983, discussion with officials from his Department, we were promised a meeting with the Minister at his convenience, and we arranged for three tentative dates, all of which have long since expired. Therefore I strongly urge the Minister of Transport to honour a commitment to myself and to other Members of Parliament on this VIA Rail line so that the representatives from Peterborough and area, in order to facilitate a spirit of consultation and co-operation, might have this promised meeting.

Surely the new co-operative program as expounded by the Minister of Transport will not just apply to the riding which the Minister represents where that consultation process took place. Surely all Canadians in regions where 20 per cent of VIA Rail was cancelled are entitled to a hearing.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ALLEGATIONS MADE BY LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Robert Gourd (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Last week, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Official Opposition, who describes himself as a Quebecer, the petit gars from Baie-Comeau, hoisted his true colours: unaware of and incompetent in international niceties, he jeopardized Canada's efforts to promote good relations by implying that the OECD is a frivolous and dissolute organization.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, far from being proud of his country and his fellow citizens, the petit gars of the Opposition debased himself in the eyes of Canadians by suggesting that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) is not qualified to fill the prestigious position of OECD Secretary General.

On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, I would expect all Members of the House to be very proud of any Canadian who might be appointed to that prestigious post. I take the Leader of the Official Opposition to task for his petty remarks about a fellow French-Canadian.

FINANCE

REMOVAL OF SALES TAX ON FUEL USED BY FARMERS AND FISHERMEN REQUESTED

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to request today that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and the Government remove the 9 per cent sales tax on fuel used by farmers and by fishermen. This request has been made by numerous individuals in order to reduce the extremely high costs of fishermen and farmers. The Government has driven those costs up through high interest rates and through enormous price increases in gasoline and diesel oil and then imposed an additional burden in the form of a 9 per cent sales tax on fuel. If this were removed there would be an additional $250 million placed in the pockets of farmers and fishermen which might help them survive the other costs imposed and the dangers of bankruptcy as a result of the actions of the Government.

This House is today going to deal with an obscene Bill that will give a tax break, a major tax break, of that amount to oil companies. That Bill is going to do absolutely nothing for consumers. That money will wind up on the balance sheets of major multinational oil companies in this country. The Tories and the Liberals are going to wind up supporting that Bill. There is no real care or concern for consumers and no real concern for the moral aspects of this particular situation. The Government is going to feather the nests of the major oil compagnies at the expense of the consumers.

I appeal to the Government, Mr. Speaker, as do many other people—remove this unfair 9 per cent sales tax as soon as possible.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

DE HAVILLAND—VIABILITY OF DASH-8 AIRCRAFT CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM—DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my question to the Minister answering for de Havilland in the House. I believe it is the Minister of National Revenue.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson: On Tuesday the Minister responsible for de Havilland in the other place said that the Dash-8 program would not be viable for at least ten years. This is a program which is condemning a company that has been a Canadian success story to a bleak and uncertain future. Since taxpayers are being asked to support the company for a total of just short of a billion dollars, since workers are being asked to make concessions in their pay, and since other workers are being laid off, will the Minister explain why the Government did not tell the full story to Parliament, to taxpayers, or to the workers, at a time when the decision was being taken? Why the cover-up? Why the rush to make this decision that is going to condemn this company?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member talks of a cover-up and asks why hasn't the full story been told. I have argued that the full story has been told, but the Hon. Member in his question gives an example of a cover-up. He says that Canadair had been a success story until the Government took it over. Surely that is a gross distortion of the reality. de Havilland was taken over because its parent company in Great Britain wanted to get rid of it because it was not a success story, and the Government took it over in order to save that technology for Canada. The Hon. Member should not cover up on the truth.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister should be gone from this place if he is going to distort my words the way he has just done.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson: I said this company has been a success story. It was, with the Dash-7, which was after the Government took it over, and it still was up until the time that this decision was taken.

REQUEST FOR RELEASE OF COST BENEFIT ANALYSIS

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, taxpayers, as well as workers, and suppliers to de Havilland deserve some assurance that this decision was based on more than blatant political considerations. Will the Government release a detailed cost-benefit analysis which would outline in depth the social and the economic benefits that will offset the obvious negative aspects of the business decision that was just made?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the negative aspects come from people like the Hon. Member who try to put a poor image on de Havilland. The Minister has appeared before committee. He has appeared before the Canadian public. He has appeared before the press and he has answered the questions.

Mr. Wilson: No.

Mr. Trudeau: And he has been very frank in saying—

Mr. Wilson: No.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have noes on the other side, but it is a matter of record and of fact that he has appeared, that he has been asked questions and that he has answered them, and that if more questions are to be asked of him he will be prepared to answer them.

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, I invite the Prime Minister to read the transcripts of some of the statements made by the Senator in the finance committee. He has not answered the questions. He has hidden the truth until after the decisions had been made, and that is a fact.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, the decision by the Government to saddle de Havilland with the program which will probably never make money is creating great uncertainty for de Havilland employees, its suppliers, other people, and for taxpayers. Will the Government refer this whole matter to the finance committee or to an independent committee so that we can get a clear understanding of the future of de Havilland, so that those jobs can be saved, and so the company can be strengthened and preserved for the future of Canada?

● (1420)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it would be interesting to know what point of view the Hon. Member and his Party want to defend in front of the committee about which he is talking. I have heard Members on that side do all they could to prevent the continuance of Canadair and of de Havilland.

Mr. Wilson: No, Sir.

Mr. Trudeau: They are switching a little bit now. Let me say that the Senator made it quite clear that he envisaged de Havilland would not be making money over the next several years. He made that quite clear. The Government has accepted that. The Government has made a decision that, in spite of it, and rather than repeat the old scenario of the Arrow which the Diefenbaker Government let die with all its technology, we would keep it alive at public expense, at taxpayers' expense.

Mr. Stevens: At any cost.

Mr. Trudeau: That is a difficult decision. It would be in the short-term more tempting to say: "It is a loser, let's kill it". The Government did not do that. Ministers wanted to save the technology. They were gambling on the future improvement of the market for the Dash-8 and they took that chance. Is the Hon. Member telling me that he would say in committee we should let it die if it is costing taxpayers some money, or is he saying that even if it is costing taxpayers some money—

Mr. Wilson: Give us the information.

Mr. Trudeau: —it should be kept alive? For which of the two is his Party standing?

THE ADMINISTRATION

LIBERAL LEADERSHIP CAMPAIGN—ROLE OF MICHAEL RONAN

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, may I sincerely thank the Prime Minister for his statement in the House yesterday relating to the whole question of morality and the use of people who are on the government payroll and people who are playing an important part in various leadership campaigns for members of his Government.

For instance, is the Prime Minister aware that Mr. Michael Ronan is allegedly handling public relations and advertising for the leadership campaign of the Minister of Employment and Immigration and, at the same time, is under contract with the Privy Council Office, which I think must come under the Prime Minister, as part of a group acting as special advisers to the Cabinet Committee on Communications? Is the Prime Minister aware of this gentleman's dual role? If not, would he take steps to end either one position or the other?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure if the Hon. Member said that he was full-time on the leadership race and full-time on the Privy Council contract. If that is the case, obviously one of the two should be stopped. However, I am not sure what are the facts as he stated them.

Mr. Lawrence: Of course I think it does not matter whether he is full-time or part-time on either one or the other. The point is that if a person is on the government payroll in almost any guise, should he also be acting, in the Prime Minister's words of yesterday, "in an important way in a leadership campaign". That is why I wanted to congratulate the Prime Minister on his statement, but I will give him another example.

ROLE OF DAVID ZUSSMAN

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I am told that Mr. David Zussman is listed as a special policy adviser to the Minister of Energy, yet on the Minister's tour of both the Atlantic region last week and this week's western tour, I am told Mr. Zussman was very prominent in his political activities, not in his government advising activities nor in any departmental role. Will the Prime Minister insist upon some sort of an explanation from his Minister about this one?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to follow up on both those cases, but it would seem to me the Hon. Member's assumption that it does not matter or is of no relevance if he is full-time or half-time does not necessarily follow. I do not know the case, but if a gentleman is on half-time contract, or on contract for two days a week for the Government, I do not think prima facie it would preclude him from being involved in political activities the rest of the week. This obviously does not apply to full-time public servants, but he cites the case of a contract. It is worth looking into.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

PROVISION OF GOVERNMENT MONEYS FOR TECHNOLOGICAL CHANGE

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development. The Minister will know that we have lost one million jobs in Canada since 1981. I want to ask the Minister directly whether he is prepared to undertake to recommend a guarantee that any government moneys made available to companies in Canada for the purpose of technological change will be tied directly to those companies' undertakings to provide new employment?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, it would appear from the studies I have read, and from the general consensus of Ministers involved with economic development, in the OECD group of countries that technological change of the kind to which the Hon. Member refers would inevitably result in more better paying jobs for the citizens not only of Canada but of our trading partners as well.

Mr. Deans: Surely the Minister is not suggesting that as one undertakes technological change, which goes from the computer age to more highly sophisticated machinery this, will somehow or other create more jobs for people working in the plants.

EFFECT OF TECHNOLOGICAL CHANGE ON EMPLOYMENT OF WOMEN

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, given that the Minister acknowledged very little could be done for the very large numbers of women who would lose their jobs due to technological change, what kind of proposal does he have to put forward which will take up the slack in our economy as a result of the tech change having thrown over a million people out of work?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I do not think one can specifically assign a number in Canada to those who have lost their jobs because of technological change. However, the point the Hon. Member makes is an important one—how do we remove the anxiety of those people who are currently in the work force and may see themselves threatened by technological change?

That is the very purpose of the extensive training and retraining programs provided under the National Training Act. Moreover, that is the purpose of the centre for labour productivity—and I am sorry I keep forgetting its name—which was established by my colleagues, the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. As Hon. Members know, it is established in the sense that it is sponsored by the Government, but in fact it is the result of a consensus which was struck between the labour movement and the Business Council on National Issues. This forum is designed specifically to address the kinds of problems the Hon. Member is raising. We all hope that the recommendations coming from that group which, as I said, combines the interests of business and labour, will be recommendations upon which Governments, provincially and federally, will be able to act.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, surely the Minister knows that we have created no more than 350,000 jobs over the course of the last number of years, that we need 700,000 jobs per year just to meet the demand and that, with a million fewer jobs, any amount of retraining will be of no value because there are not jobs for retrained people.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT FUNDING BE TIED TO CREATION OF JOBS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, given that retraining is already paid for by workers mostly through unemployment insurance premiums, what kind of commitment can the Minister make that in fact a requirement will be placed upon those who take advantage of government subsidy, either through tax reduction or through direct subsidy for the purpose of technological change, to create jobs in Canada's economy?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is embarking upon a subject on which I could speak at great length this afternoon—the impact of technology on traditional sectors, the increase of productivity in those sectors, the job loss in those sectors as a result of technology, and the job creation in complementary sectors and in service sectors as a result of the introduction of that technology. These are complicated issues and ones which I am delighted to discuss at length with the hon. gentleman. The fact of the matter is that we know when—

Mr. Speaker: With all due respect to the Hon. Minister, they are hardly the kinds of questions which can be answered in Question Period.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

NORTHERN TRANSPORTATION COMPANY LIMITED—PROPOSED SALE OF COMPANY

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport perhaps I could direct my question to the Prime Minister. Would he explain why the Minister of Transport would send a telegram to NTCL, which they are proposing to privatize, informing of an independent evaluator and containing the words "maximum assistance to expedite", "must be no delays" and "would like to assure a sale in least possible time"? Does he believe that the Minister of Transport should be allowed to sell this company before replying to questions on the Order Paper which have been on the Order Paper for four months, before answering questions that the United States Air Force is asking the company, and before the Minister deals with conflict of interest regarding the Edmonton managers of the company? Is this reason for the proposed quick sale by the Minister?

● (1430)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we talked about privatization of some companies, I believe, in the Speech from the Throne in 1980. I have heard proposals from the Minister of Transport to privatize Northern Transportation for quite some time now. I do not know of the questions on the Order Paper. If they are there, they will obviously have to be answered. I do not think the move to privatize is something that the Hon. Member's Party should be scandalized about.

Mr. Schellenberger: I am not concerned about privatizing. I am concerned about questions in the public interest being answered before the company is privatized.

CASH ASSETS OF COMPANY

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, it is odd that a Crown corporation should have $20 million cash on hand at the time that it is being privatized, at the same time that it shut down its Athabasca operation, has slowed down its Churchill operation, and has not been as competitive as it could be in the North. Could the company be bought out with its own cash? Will the Prime Minister ensure that these questions are answered before this company is put up for sale to the general public?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. The company has not been put up for sale. It has been known that the company wanted to dispose of it for quite a while. It has been said on various occasions. Obviously if it is not sold for the right valuable considerations, $1 and other good and valuable considerations, the Opposition will have time to ask questions and will be entitled to have answers.

I wonder about the attitude of the Hon. Member. I think his Party is supporting some privatization. The Hon. Member nods his head in assent. Why does he want to delay this particular one? I just said that questions will have to be answered and should be answered if the sale is not proper. It sounds as though the Hon. Member would like to wait to privatize a little later when we have a new Liberal leader. I want to make it clear that I am all for privatization too.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT IN ATLANTIC CANADA—REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S ADVICE

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Last week we were treated to shocking statistics expounding on the unemployment situation which, in Atlantic Canada, can be described as nothing less than crushing. Moncton has the horrible distinction of having the highest unemployment rate of any city in Canada. Eighty per cent of the construction trades in Saint John, New Brunswick, are out of work. It is now the norm rather than the exception. Newfoundland fishermen are in a horrible state. What advice does the Minister have to give to labour officials in Saint John, New Brunswick, whom he met a few weeks ago, when he was perceived as being more concerned with getting himself a job rather than arranging for a job for anybody else?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is true that I was recently in Saint John, New Brunswick. The reason was that a conference was held in Saint John with my provincial counterparts. We had extensive and serious discussions about job-creation possibilities. As the Hon. Member should know, but I suspect does not, there have been continuing discussions between the Government of New Brunswick and our own on how to take advantage of the arrival of the frigate program to create jobs in his area. The discussions we held in Saint John were serious, as opposed to the rather frivolous nature of the question of the Hon. Member on a very serious subject.

PLIGHT OF JOBLESS

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, that is cold comfort for those in despair, with no jobs, shattered families, broken homes and worse. For the first time since the Great Depression, soup kitchens have become a way of life in Atlantic Canada. Will the Minister go there and break bread with those still proud people who are taking bread in those soup kitchens, in the hope that he will become motivated to help rather than to hinder?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member may want to wear his heart on his sleeve, but he is not the only person in this House who is concerned about the plight of the jobless. He should not arrogate to himself feelings about the people in his constituency. I have been there and I talked with the municipal authorities. I know about the problem. We are helping. If the Hon. Member had cared about it, he could have talked to me at any time in the past four years about these problems instead of waiting until today in the House of Commons.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

PLAN TO DUMP UNITED STATES POISONOUS WASTES NEAR SARNIA, ONT.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. Tricil Corporation plans to bury some 6.3 million kilograms of highly toxic cyanide-coated film chips from the Chicago area in a landfill site near Sarnia. This material was refused by three States in the United States. Will the Minister act to close the border and stop this dumping of poisonous waste?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member and other Liberal Members for having raised this matter so swiftly. I assure him that I have directed the officials in Environment Canada to get in touch with the U.S. Environmental Agency to establish, first, when this application will be made. I am told that 30 days would be required before permission for transportation can be granted. Second, they are to discuss alternative means of disposal of this product. In the end, I draw to the Hon. Member's attention that the control point will be whether or not there will be a site available in Ontario. That is a matter of decision under the jurisdiction of the Government of Ontario. I understand that Liberal Members there raised this issue in the provincial House yesterday.

REFUGEES

ADMISSION OF GUATEMALANS TO CANADA

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Since Canada joined most other nations at the United Nations in condemning the Guatemalan Government's human rights violations, the Minister knows that many Guatemalans have good reason to flee from their terrorist Government and often have no alternative country of refuge except Canada. Will the Minister tell the House why, in spite of the pleas of many churches and other responsible agencies, he decided to prohibit all Guatemalans from entering Canada except those with visas?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the application of the visa, which is not an extraordinary arrangement, is one which was designed to enable us to put in place a refugee program for Guatemalans. We, more than any other country, are giving assistance to refugees in Guatemala, as the Hon. Member recognized in his question, saying there were not other opportunities for potential refugees in relation to other countries. The reason is that Canada has been the most open and extensive in offering refugee assistance. In order to be able to do that, we put in a place a visa program so that we have some controls in order that there will not be a flood of people seeking to take advantage of those much more generous provisions which we have put in place. Indeed, there are considerable signs that the program which we have put in place is working and is of great assistance to those Guatemalans who need the program.

PROCEDURES FOLLOWED BY APPLICANTS FOR VISAS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's own departmental records show that at least 70 per cent of Guatemalans who came to Canada before the visa requirement were found to be bona fide refugees. That is a very high record, placing Guatemala in a very different situation from many other countries. The Minister knows that there is not a record of abuse in that case. Why has the Minister not only imposed this visa requirement but publicly announced that Guatemalans in Guatemala who want to come as refugees must apply to the embassy? Does he know that, by going to the embassy to apply to be refugees, they place their lives in great risk at the hands of the Guatemalan security forces? Is the Minister aware of what he is doing to cut off the possibility of genuine refugees coming to Canada?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member seems to be unaware of the fact that they do not have to apply in person. It is possible to take advantage of these provisions through intermediaries and third persons. There is no need to place themselves in the kind of jeopardy which the Hon. Member has described. Indeed, in relation to the program, that has happened on many occasions already.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

PROCUREMENT OF ARMOUR-PLATED AUTOMOBILES

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Solicitor General perhaps I could put my question to the Minister of Supply and Services who is involved in this matter as well. Could the Minister confirm that meetings have taken place between the various Departments involving the purchasing practices when obtaining armoured cars for personnel here in Canada or VIPs from abroad? Can he confirm that some initiatives are being taken to ensure that purchasing practices in his own Department are in proper perspective?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is not providing me with enough details to enable me to give an accurate reply to his question. We regularly purchase armed or armored vehicles both for the Canadian Armed Forces and for the RCMP, but if he would give me more details on the type of armored vehicle he has in mind, I may be able to give him a more accurate reply.

[English]

REPORTED DEFICIENCIES IN VEHICLES

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, I refer specifically to the Prime Minister's limousine and to the vehicles which were purchased for the Summit meeting which was held a few years ago. I am also referring specifically to the Hesse-Eisenhardt Company, and to Protective Materials Inc. I understand that allegations were made that some bids were submitted which were lower than those which the Department accepted.

May I also ask the Minister if he has been made aware of the deficiencies which exist in the Summit Seven vehicles? I refer particularly to the discrepancies in weight between apparently identical vehicles, the fact that the glass appears to be faulty, and that apparently some of these vehicles failed test procedures at Val Cartier. I ask these questions in view of my deep concern for the safety of our diplomatic corps abroad, and my deep concern for the safety of the Prime Minister.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think it is about time Tory members became concerned about my safety. I hope that in my remaining months they will be more gentle with me.

I think I would like to take this opportunity to say that I have refused delivery of the latest limousine. I want it to be delivered clean, fresh and unused, to the next Prime Minister of Canada who, presumably, will be a member of the Liberal Party. That limousine has great advantages and is very solid. I do not like it because the windows do not open, so I have gone back to using the old limousine.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

DISTRIBUTION OF PRESIDENT'S SPEECH

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister who is responsible for Canada Post. In February the President of Canada Post, Mr. Michael Warren, spoke to an American association in Ottawa and told its members how good our Post Office was. He obviously expected that the members of that association would not know the difference. He then sent all 220 grams of his speech, printed in both official languages, to the riding offices and Ottawa offices of each Member of Parliament. A quick calculation tells me that that comes to 123,200 grams of paper, the posting of which would have cost over $700. Would the Minister who is responsible for Canada Post not agree that that money could have been better spent replacing those pickup boxes in small communities which have been taken away, or at least spent in an effort to improve the postal service?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I shall be happy to convey this comment to the President of the Canada Post Corporation.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PRESENCE OF CANADIAN SHIP IN NICARAGUAN PORT

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and relates to the incidents we heard about yesterday, namely the mining of Nicaragua's Puerto Corinto harbour. Would the Prime Minister tell the House whether he has received any information concerning the safety of a Canadian ship which entered the Puerto Corinto harbour this morning with 11 crewmen and 19 cadets from Rimouski's Institut d'enseignement maritime? Has the Prime Minister received from our embassy and the Government of Nicaragua the assurance that the safety of Canadians on that ship is not threatened?

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, according to the information received from the Boréal Navigation Agency and the news we got this morning from our embassy at San José, Costa Rica, it would seem that the ship is not in any danger. This ship—La Mésange—will steer towards the Puerto Corinto harbour this afternoon, following two fishing vessels equipped with fishing nets which would automatically retrieve any mine that might lie in waters through which this ship is navigating. Besides, as an additional safety measure, divers will surround the ship as she nears the Puerto Corinto harbour.

That is the information we received this morning from the embassy and the company. Company officials also told us that the ship's underwriters do not consider that she is in a war zone and, therefore, the standard insurance premiums apply in this case. Last week, another Canadian ship, the Alexander II, sailed to the same harbour, berthed at the same place under similar conditions and no untoward incidents were reported.

EMPLOYMENT

EDUCATIONAL LEAVE PROPOSAL

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In light of the Minister's answer to the question asked by the Hon. Member for Laurier yesterday, I would like to ask the Minister why he finds the idea of individuals saving for their own education or re-education with the help of the tax system, so startling and so regressive?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, if that is so, the answer the Minister gave yesterday misled the House.

USE OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE FUND MONEYS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, on Monday of this week the Minister misled the House again when he indicated that $1 billion of unemployment insurance funds were going into training under Sections 38 and 39. The Minister should know that about $250 million, one-quarter of that amount, was budgeted and used last year. I wonder if the Minister could stand in the House and correct the impression he left on Monday about the amount of UIC training funds, and correct the impression he left yesterday that any idea that was not already being used was both startling and regressive. Could he apologize to the House for those two answers? They were deliberate attempts to mislead the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is unparliamentary for an Hon. Member to allege that someone is deliberately misleading the House. Would the Hon. Member withdraw the word "deliberate"?

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry. I do not know what the Minister's motivation is. I am quite happy to withdraw the word "deliberate". However, he did mislead the House on two days out of three this week, and he did so in a very serious way. I wish he would apologize to the House.

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): That is nonsense, Mr. Speaker. However, I would be quite happy to support in some detail the position which I took in the House. When Tory recommendations are good, those recommendations are already in place. When Tory recommendations are not already in place and are startling, they are regressive.

For instance, the Conservative Party proposed allowing people to set up tax-deductible educational savings plans similar to Registered Home Ownership Plans. That is indeed a kind of proposal which favours high income earners. In fact the present national training program provides direct assistance to trainees by paying for the cost of training. It is an entirely different approach from the one recommended by Tory members, and is more satisfactory.

As another example, the Conservative Party proposed federally guaranteed loans for the needy to enable them to take advantage of training and other educational programs. The fact of the matter is that institutional training programs do not require that the needy pay for their own training. An allowance is provided to them which pays for the cost of the course.

The Conservative Party proposed tax incentives for employers to offset the cost of employee retraining and upgrading of skills. The fact is that the industrial training program currently reimburses employers directly for most of their training costs and pays for half of the trainee wage costs. Training expenses are already tax deductible. I could cite eight or ten such examples and each one of them would substantiate exactly what I said in the House.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

FARMERS' SHARE OF BOARD'S COSTS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, may I commend the Minister of Agriculture for his ambition, may I ask him a question, and may I wish all Liberal leadership candidates as much success as the Minister should expect?

• (1450)

In this day of computers and electronic technology, why can the farmer not, on his final payment of grain, receive a full accounting of his personal share of costs to the Canadian Wheat Board's administration or to demurrage at the ports, in other words, to indicate precisely the difference between the world price and the final price he receives? Is there any other business that would be denied that vital information?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that I would double check with the Wheat Board. I agree with the Hon. Member that, in our modern age of computers, nearly anything should be possible.

REQUEST THAT INFORMATION BE PROVIDED TO FARMERS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I rise briefly to say that if the Minister is not just going to ask them but to make that representation, I commend him for doing so. Certainly it is important in the politics of today that farmers be able to have their industry represented on a personal basis as to cost deducted from world price. They need that information, and I would ask that the Minister give the House the undertaking that he would ensure that on every cheque sent out, that documentation is available so they can, on a personal basis, reflect whether there are inefficiencies in the Wheat Board, inefficiences in demurrage, or wherever they might lie, so that it can be understood on a personal basis.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows as well as I do that the Wheat Board is one of the most efficiently run operations in the grain world. I am not the Minister in charge of the Wheat Board, but I will bring this to the attention of the Minister in charge of the Wheat Board.

AGRICULTURE

INCREASE IN FARM BANKRUPTCIES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture, who knows that in 1983 the average monthly farm bankruptcy rate was 41 per month and that in 1984 the average jumped to 57 farm bankruptcies per month. It is a change in Canada from one year to the next that is now shown to be 58 per cent.

Yesterday the Canadian Federation of Agriculture published a brief in which they set out a farm bankruptcy index that indicated, if 1979 equalled 100, at the current time that would be equal to 620. What is the Minister proposing to do about the situation, or has he decided, with his leadership announcement of today, to give up on farm bankruptcies and concentrate on his Party's leadership, which is also bankrupt?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member uses figures and he knows that there are many circumstances involved in the plight of the farmers. There are poor crops, bad weather, and all of those things that compound the position some of them are in. He has made a lot of loud noises about their plight but has not made any really substantial suggestions about what should be done for them.

As I said, the farmers are pleading with us at the present time, and pleading with the provincial Governments. I must say that the NDP Government in Manitoba does not seem to be doing very much, and the previous Government in Saskatchewan hardly did anything for them because we spent twice as much money on agriculture in Saskatchewan and twice as much in Manitoba as the provinces. So, if he has any substantial suggestions, other than trying to use the Question Period for political reasons, he can let me know.

EMPLOYMENT

EXPENDITURE OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE FUND MONEYS FOR TRAINING PURPOSES

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the question posed by the Hon. Member for Calgary West to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. On April 10 the Minister indicated that $1 billion a year was being spent for training under the Unemployment Insurance Act, specifically under Section 38 and Section 39. That is in Hansard. The Minister knows that there is no money spent under Section 38. That is for job creation. Under Section 37 there is $27,000 being spent. According to the Estimates and a check with the Minister's office, there is $259 million being spent under Section 39. Would the Minister tell us where he found the other $3.25 billion?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will go back and check the record. My understanding is that the question was about funds being used and the suggestion was in relation to funds being used from unemployment insurance for both training and job creation. That is taking place, as I indicated in my answer.

Clearly, in citing Section 38 I was citing our efforts in relation to job creation. My understanding was that the Conservative Party had suggested using unemployment insurance funds for job creation and training. My reply was that we are already doing that under Section 38 and Section 39 of the Act. That is already in place.

The serious question to be asked in relation to unemployment insurance funds is whether one should only be able to do that in a sense by using the entitlements which people have and therefore be required to encourage or entice them to do so by top-ups, or whether we should be looking at other ways of using the Unemployment Insurance Fund which enables us to take more money out even if we do not have that kind of agreement with the recipients. Clearly the Conservative proposal was both in terms of job creation and training. So was my answer. That was the reason I cited both Section 38 and Section 39.

Mr. Speaker: A short supplementary to the Member for St. John's East.

Mr. McGrath: It had nothing to do with job creation. It concerned the Minister's statement in Calgary last week that more unemployment insurance funds should go into job training as opposed to income maintenance. My question was prompted by that.

MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister if he is now prepared to correct the misleading statement that he has left on the record of the House, namely, that $1 billion of UIC funds is going into job training? That is just not in accordance with the facts.

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is anything that is misleading. In Calgary I said that I wanted to see more unemployment insurance funds going into both job creation and training. We have already started that process of looking at other ways, such as combining the recommendations of the Skill Development Task Force leave report with the operation of the unemployment insurance. I suggested that that was the kind of approach which should be considered as we move into the next Parliament. There is nothing inconsistent with that and what I have said in the House.

TOURISM

TAX ON ADVERTISING LITERATURE—EFFECT ON UNITED STATES INTERESTS

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism. It concerns the 9 per cent tax on tourism materials. Can he report anything further to the House with respect to his representations to the Minister of Finance on having that tax removed? I remind him that this is a serious irritant between Canada and the United States and may lead to the Americans retaliating by removing the tax deductible status of U.S. conventions held in Canada.

Hon. David Smith (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I do not have anything to report in terms of representations made to the Minister of Finance. The basic problem is that Canadians have to pay this tax and it is a question of whether or not it is fair to Canadians to pay a tax if Americans who were advertising in Canada did not have to pay the same tax as their Canadian competitors. It is under review. I have not yet heard.

I might point out that while I believe there is a Bill that was introduced by a Member of the House of Representatives, it is not sponsored by the U.S. Government. It is somewhat akin to a private member's Bill, with not much chance of passing.

Mr. Kilgour: The government administration and Congress both give us an impression contrary to that of the Minister.

EFFECT ON CANADIAN PRINTING INDUSTRY

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister realize, for example, that this tax of his is causing Canadian printing jobs in the tourist industry to go south of the border where they do not have the tax? Does he believe that this is the kind of productive employment policy that we need in Canada, or is he planning to change this in the interest of Canadian tourism and of keeping jobs in Canada in a sector which, I remind him, employs 11 per cent of the Canadian work force?

Hon. David Smith (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I think that this Government certainly recognizes the importance of the tourism industry and has taken initiatives that underline that. It is because of some of the reasons the Hon. Member has pointed out that I have made representations to the Minister of Finance.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

DEPLOYMENT OF F-18 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Is the Department of National Defence considering forward or advance basing of F-18 fighter aircraft in Canada north of 60?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman perhaps has read the press reports on the aircraft indicating how Canadian Forces airmen who are using the CF-18 are pleased with that aircraft, notwithstanding all the criticism that we heard from the other side of the House on that particular government procurement.

Mr. McDermid: If you were a pilot you would enjoy it too.

Mr. Blais: The hon. gentleman said that if I were a pilot I would enjoy it too. I want to indicate to him that I did fly the aircraft and I did enjoy the experience.

With respect to the question relating to north of 60, indeed, as we are looking at the deployment of that aircraft, all various options are under consideration.

AIRCRAFT'S RANGE

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, if a threat to Canada's sovereignty ever originated in the North, due to the limited range of the F-18, it is unlikely that it would be able to get from southern bases, do its job, and get back again. Therefore, even if the Government is not thinking of putting bases permanently in the North with F-18 aircraft and crews attached, at least it might consider putting in the facilities so that, if anything untoward happened, at least within a few days the aircraft could be moved there and the runways and everything else would be ready to go.

● (1500)

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I will take the hon. gentleman's comments as a representation.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Northumberland.

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Mr. Nielsen: He knew you were going to do it.

Mr. Hees: He knew I was going to ask him a question and he has ducked out of the House, Mr. Speaker. Would he like to come back in and face the music?

Mr. Speaker: Under the circumstances, the Hon. Member will ask his question another day.

EXPO 86

GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, it is not clear to me to whom I should address my question. However, I will try the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development, who is talking to his fellow candidate. It has to do with Expo 86. Could the Minister tell us, in light of the uncertainties which seem to be surrounding the future of Expo 86, what decisions the federal Government is planning to take under the current circumstances?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that question should be addressed to me. In any event the only information I have, of course, is what I have seen in the newspapers, the recommendation of the Chairman of Expo, Mr. Pattison, to the Premier, and, as far as I know, the decision of the Government of British Columbia has not yet been made public, if in fact it has been taken.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West on the usual question relating to House business.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, on this auspicious occasion, I wonder if the Government House Leader would be good enough to take the House and the country into his confidence with respect to the important business to be considered by the House today and until the adjournment of the House for the Easter recess next Wednesday.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to congratulate the Hon. Member on his new responsibilities. I look forward to working with him.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pinard: At the same time I also want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Yukon on his promotion. I hope that for many years to come he will remain responsible for the transition group!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pinard: Many, many years!

Mr. Nielsen: It's later than you think!

Mr. Pinard: It was also a good experience to work with the Hon. Member for Yukon and I wish him well.

In so far as the business of the House is concerned, Mr. Speaker, tomorrow, as I have indicated, is an allotted day. Monday will be an allotted day as well. Next Tuesday and Wednesday we will be dealing with the second reading of the Bill to be introduced at the beginning of next week. Notice of that Bill will be given today or tomorrow. The Opposition Parties have been made aware of the contents of the Bill by the Prime Minister. It is an Act to create a peace institute. We will want to debate the second reading of that Bill next week in order to be able to send it to a standing committee before we adjourn for Easter.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I had an opportunity at the first House Leaders' meeting which I attended to make inquiries of the Government House Leader with respect to the Western Grain Stabilization Act. I just want the Minister to advise us whether he thinks there will be any possibility of that particular Bill being brought forth for first reading before we adjourn for Easter.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I must consult with the Minister of Agriculture who has always been very well aware of the needs of farmers in this country. I will be able to provide the Hon. Member with specific answers once the Bill is about to be introduced, or once it is on the Order Paper. We have an Order Paper which is rather impressive. As House Leader, I usually deal with the legislation which is ready to be proceeded with on the floor of the House. However, I will look again into the request made by the Hon. Member. I will raise the matter again with the Minister of Agriculture and if it is likely that such legislation is to be introduced in the short-term, I will be glad to negotiate a package which would include such imminent legislation. However, if such legislation is many weeks further down the road, then, in the short term, I will have to deal with the Bills on the Order Paper, as usual.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West on a supplementary and then the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I have one final question, Mr. Speaker, in terms of House business. I wanted simply to say to the Government House Leader that, as he well knows, in terms of the proposed legislation which he has referred to relating to the peace institute there has been correspondence carried on between the Leader of the Opposition and the Prime Minister. It has been a serious exchange of correspondence, a serious exchange of points of view with suggested amendments on the part of the Leader of the Opposition.

There had been a previous exchange of correspondence with respect to the resolution relating to the Prime Minister's peace initiative and the peace debate generally, which came to some fruition. I simply say that I feel it is regrettable that that exchange of correspondence was not allowed to come to fruition with respect to the content of the Bill before the Government indicated its intention to bring that forward. I hope that a reasonable period of time will be allowed for the Prime Minister, the Leader of the Opposition and the Leader of the New Democratic Party to see whether or not there can be some agreement as to the contents of that proposed legislation.

Mr. Pinard: I make two points, Mr. Speaker. First, during the debate on second reading it will surely be possible to consider any good suggestions made by the Opposition Parties on the content of the legislation. Second, the Bill will go to committee and we expect that the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence will look at the Bill during a few days, certainly a few weeks, so that there will be an opportunity to look at serious amendments.

From the correspondence exchanged between the Leaders of the Opposition Parties and the Prime Minister, it seems that some of the requests may be accommodated at the committee level. That is why we are very confident that the legislation will ultimately be acceptable and that one month or so down the road we will be able to give third reading to that Bill. That is why we will want to start debating that Bill next Tuesday.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I also want to join the Government House Leader in congratulating the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West on his new position as the Official Opposition House Leader. I say to the Hon. Member for Yukon that I have worked with him for the last couple of years and it was an enjoyable experience. It certainly did sharpen the senses.

I want to ask the Government House Leader if he might consider what the business will be when we return from the Easter break. Perhaps he can give us some inkling, if not right now. Quite clearly he is not in a position to do that right now. Perhaps by tomorrow, or by Monday at the latest, he might be in a position to tell us what he has in mind for the two or three days immediately after our return from the Easter break.

Mr. Pinard: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I believe the suggestion made by the Hon. Member that I try and let the House know as early as possible next week what the business will be when we come back is a good suggestion indeed. I will try to accommodate the Hon. Member accordingly.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, as the House Leader will remember, the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Oceans passed a unanimous resolution that that Committee be empowered to travel to the West Coast to study the plight of the West Coast salmon fishermen. I know the House Leader some days ago took a question on notice as to whether or not there would be a House order which would enable that Committee to travel to the West Coast. I believe as yet there has been no response.

As the Government House Leader will know, the fishermen are facing a very poor summer, from all reports, and the working season is coming on. It is imperative that these fishermen know as soon as possible so that they can adjust their work schedules to the travels of the Committee. Could the Government House Leader or the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans give us some indication when a House order is going to be presented to us which will empower the Committee to travel to the West Coast to work with the salmon fishermen there?

• (1510)

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I still have to consult with the Minister, but as I understand it the Committee is already seized of a reference relating to the subject matter described by the Hon. Member. It seems to me that the procedure would be that the Committee would come forward with a report to seek permission to travel. We do not have such a report at this time. If we have one, we will consider whether to accept it or not.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have two questions for the President of the Privy Council. Before doing so I want to join in congratulating my colleague from Saskatoon West on his elevation to the new position of Opposition House Leader. I am certainly going to miss him in the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. It has been a very interesting experience working with him on the security legislation and on other matters.

My question is with respect to legislation on access to information. The President of the Privy Council will recall that some time ago I asked him about designating a committee to effectively oversee the implementation of this important legislation as well as that of the Privacy Act. He indicated that he was awaiting the outcome of the proposed security legislation. The committee is now seized of that particular Bill and it will possibly be seized of the Criminal Code reforms and the Divorce Act. Therefore, when does he intend to designate a committee, hopefully the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments, to commence the very important process of review of the access to information and privacy legislation?

Mr. Pinard: The Hon. Member knows that we would prefer that the committee have this responsibility. Of course, if the report on the security legislation is made in a very short period of time, it will be easier for us to make a decision in that sense. But we will have to wait and see over the next few days and I will be in a better position later on to give an answer to the Hon. Member.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately the Government is dragging its heels on the designation of this very important committee. There is another matter concerning a fundamental democratic right in this country, the question of redistribution. As the President of the Privy Council will be well aware, riding boundaries are still based on the results of the 1971 census. To the best of my knowledge there have been reports from all the redistribution commissioners to the Government, which are on the Order Paper, and I am wondering when the Government is finally going to move to ensure that the representation in this House more accurately reflects the population shifts in the country.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, as to dragging heels, I just want to indicate again to the Hon. Member that if he does not drag his heels we will be able to get the security Bill back to the House very shortly. It will then be easier for us to make a decision in answer to his first question.

In so far as the objections to the reports of Electoral Boundaries Commission which appear on the Order Paper are concerned, and there are 45 of them, if the Hon. Member would indicate to me which one he is concerned with—because if he asked a question he must have made an objection—I will try and see if we can schedule debate of his objection, and others if possible, within a reasonable length of time. I have to take into account other business on the Order Paper but, failing to get a very specific and firm agreement on all of the 45 objections, it will be very difficult for the Government to start debating only some of them knowing very well that nothing can be done or completed unless all of the objections are disposed of.

I would welcome the Hon. Member indicating to me his personal concern on the boundaries. I will then raise it again with House Leaders. If we can come to some very specific agreement to dispose of all the objections, then I might consider scheduling some of them for debate in the short term. Failing that consent, we would have to deal with the other items on the Order Paper before we use Government time in the House to deal with these objections.

Mr. Miller: Mr. Speaker, regarding the attempts of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry to go to the West Coast to meet with fishermen, the House Leader knows I have raised this question for the last three weeks. The Committee presented a report to the House on February 17—

Mr. Speaker: With all due respect to the Hon. Member, the same question has been asked by another Member today. As far as the Chair can determine, it is substantially the same. This is not intended as a period of debate. A question specifically regarding House business is in order but the Chair does not intend to allow repetition or prolonged statements.

Mr. Miller: Mr. Speaker, the information I wanted to submit is that the Committee has in fact tabled a report requesting an opportunity to travel. Could the Government House Leader indicate whether he would now be prepared to meet with the Minister and confirm the support for the committee who wish to go to British Columbia?

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, yes, I will talk again to the Minister. I note that the NDP also cares for fishermen.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly), bearing in mind that we have had a number of questions.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, passage of Bill C-16, which would provide substantial help to the extremely depressed shipbuilding industry in Canada, would be of great assistance to the industry. It is my understanding from informal discussions that representatives of all Parties would like to see that dealt with as expeditiously as possible. Would the Government House Leader be prepared to indicate when that Bill might come forward if all Parties are in fact making these statements in good faith?

Mr. Pinard: I thank the Hon. Member for his question. This matter was discussed with the House Leaders at 1.30 today and we hope to come to some firm agreement within a reasonable period of time. I hope we will be able to get this Bill passed shortly after Easter, if not before.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Dauphin-Swan River. Let it be short, please.

Mr. Lewycky: Mr. Speaker, as the Government House Leader knows, the Act concerning multiculturalism was promised in the Speech from the Throne in December. Given the workload he has been allocating to us, will that Act be brought forward? If so, when? Also, will it be referred to the special parliamentary committee which has been dealing with visible minorities, or will the Government be setting up a standing committee on multiculturalism which was unanimously recommended in Equality Now!?

Mr. Pinard: The Hon. Member knows very well that when we promise something in a Speech from the Throne, we always deliver; so he should be a little patient.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. CULLEN—OBLIGATION OF MEMBERS TO PRESENT PETITIONS

Mr. Speaker: Petitions.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would think that of the vast majority of petitions presented in the House by Hon. Members the Hon. Member himself is in favour of the content. Yesterday I was in a position where I felt that as a Member of Parliament I had an obligation to present a petition but I did not agree with the suggestion that legislation be introduced to bring back capital punishment.

Do we have the obligation to present petitions? Having presented that petition, a lot of people thought I had changed my mind on capital punishment. I have not, but I felt an obligation to my constituents who signed the form to present that petition.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is not in the habit of answering this kind of matter. If the Hon. Member wishes to put his request in writing, an appropriate reply will be prepared.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ADDRESS TO PARLIAMENT OF PRESIDENT OF MEXICO

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been the usual discussions between the Parties. I think if you ask you will find that there is unanimous consent that the following motion be put:

That, notwithstanding any Standing Order, when the House adjourns on May 7 1984, it shall stand adjourned until 2:00 p.m. on May 8, 1984; and

That the address of the President of Mexico, to be delivered in the House Chamber that day before members of the Senate and the House of Commons, together with all introductory and related speeches, be printed as an appendix to the House of Commons Debates of that day and form part of the records of this House; and

That the aforementioned proceedings be made available to the media for transmission in the usual way by the House of Commons broadcast system.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council have unanimous consent to move his motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members have heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 338, 388, 612, 704, 726 and 753.

CNR—ACQUISITION OF RAILWAY LINES IN U.S.

Question No. 338—Mr. Heap:

1. Did Canadian National buy railway lines in the northern United States and, if so, for what reason?

2. Did CN plan to route trains from southern Quebec or Ontario through the U.S. to western Canada, south of the Great Lakes, bypassing the Sudbury route?

3. Did CN consider eliminating service or track between Capreol and Ottawa?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows:

1. In June, 1980, the Grand Trunk Western Railroad Company, subsidiary of Grand Trunk Corporation (the holding company for wholly-owned American subsidiaries of Canadian National) acquired the Detroit, Toledo and Ironton Railway Company. Presently the Grand Trunk Corporation is involved in Interstate Commerce Commission hearings regarding the possible acquisition of the Chicago, Milwaukee St. Paul and Pacific Railroad. Such acquisitions are designed to improve the ability of the GTC to compete with consolidated American railway systems by offering longer on-line hauls deeper into the American mid-west and south.

BARRACK POINT TERMINAL, SAINT JOHN, N.B.

Question No. 388—Mr. Howie:

1. What was the total cost of the Barrack Point Terminal in Saint John Harbour, New Brunswick including the computerized loading system?

2. What is the full capacity of the loading machinery in terms of tons per hour?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): The Canada Ports Corporation advises as follows:

1. Ports Canada spent $21.269 million and the terminal operator spent approximately $20 million. The operator's costs included the computerized loading system.

2. Two thousand, seven hundred metric tonnes per hour.

CNR—LEASE PAYMENTS

Question No. 612—Mr. Manly:

1. In the past five years, were any lease payments made to the Canadian National Railway for Lot 160 (in the Cowichan Regional District, Area "D", Vancouver Island) and, if so, what were they?

2. In the current fiscal year, what is the projected income for the railway from the lot?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. Yes. $160,000. 2. $35,000.

EXEMPT STAFF OF MINISTER OF FISHERIES AND OCEANS

Question No. 704—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

1. Are any exempt staff employed by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and, if so, what are their (a) titles (b) positions (c) names?

2. Do any of the staff mentioned in part I receive income, financial assistance or other benefits related to their employment from sources other than the ministerial budget and, if so (a) which members (b) what are the details of the income, financial assistance or other benefits?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans):

SPECIAL RECOVERY EXPORT FINANCING FUND

Question No. 726—Mr. St. Germain:

Since April 1, 1983, was any amount expended under the Special Recovery Export Financing Fund and, if so, what (a) total amount (b) firms have received assistance?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): The $180 million Special Recovery Export Financing Fund (SREFF) was established as part of the Special Recovery Program so to enable the Export Development Corporation to seek out export opportunities more aggressively than it would otherwise be able to do. The Fund was in particular intended to enable EDC to make financing offers at competitive terms on capital projects in developing countries which would entail financing requirements over and above what was available for EDC's regular export financing programs. Financing offers made possible by having the SREFF in place now amount to over $3.3 billion. It is likely that not all of these offers will be taken up in the highly competitive world market in which Canada is pursuing export projects, but the government's financial support does mean that Canadian exporters are competing on an equal footing with other countries, as far as export credit terms and conditions are concerned.

In view of the time required for export projects to come to fruition the Government did not expect that SREFF funds would be expended immediately. It is for that reason that the Fund was planned to be non-lapsing, and to be kept in place into 1988, as back-up to EDC's regular program. As negotiations are still under way on the projects being pursued by Canadian exporters, it is not possible to divulge the names of the firms involved.

DEPARTMENT OF SUPPLY AND SERVICES EXEMPT STAFF

Question No. 753—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

1. Are any exempt staff employed by the Department of Supply and Services and, if so, what are their (a) titles (b) positions (c) names?

2. Do any of the staff mentioned in part I receive income, financial assistance or other benefits related to their employment from sources other than the ministerial budget and, if so (a) which members (b) what are the details of the income, financial assistance or other benefits?

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. The Minister of Supply and Services currently employs eight exempt staff as shown hereunder.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PETROLEUM AND GAS REVENUE TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacLaren that Bill C-14, an Act to amend an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to provide for a revenue tax in respect of petroleum and gas, be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I rise to join in the debate on Bill C-14, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to provide for a revenue tax in respect of petroleum and gas. This is basically an Act to amend the PGRT, which has become very famous initials, and to put in line with a number of other Acts a number of definitions that had been placed in the previous Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act and the Income Tax Act.

This Act is also intended to give credibility to some of the Budget provisions that have been in place for a number of years now for which the legislation has never been passed. It is astonishing that Budgets can pass this House and on the evening of the Budget taxes are in place and being collected by the Government. Yet the Government does not move with any speed legitimately to pass the legislation in the House that gives the tax some effect. This is the case with this legislation.

The $250,000 tax credit has been in place. It allows for a corporation to have an annual credit of up to $250,000. That liability can be deducted from the petroleum and gas revenue tax. It has been in effect since it was announced in the NEP update. It is basically a good measure. This allows a company some cash flow and allows it to make further decisions, hopefully to drill in the Canadian basin.

We also have a reduction in royalties. This is another tax relief measure. We have royalty reduction from 16 per cent to 14.67 per cent, which really is a reduction from the exact rate of 12 per cent to 11 per cent. That was effective from June 1, 1982 to May 31, 1983. It has also been announced in the NEP update. This measure is being provided for in the Bill yet in effect it has already lapsed. This Bill is giving legitimacy to the Budget which put forward this reduction in royalties. A Bill has never been passed to give that royalty reduction any legitimacy. It could be argued that although the measure is no longer in effect it still allows corporations legally to file for that reduction.

In the April 19, 1983 Budget there was also introduced and placed in this Act an enhanced oil recovery program. It basically provided for a reduction from income of capital costs in enhanced oil recovery projects. The damage of the national program was already in place. Companies such as Dome and Imperial Oil had projects in place in Judy Creek. There are still large amounts of oil in the ground but it cannot be brought out of the ground by conventional pumping methods. A series of expensive measures must be used to bring this oil to the surface. Some incentive is required for companies to take on such a project. Many projects which had been envisioned by companies were cancelled when the National Energy Program came in. They did not have the cash flow any more to go forward with these projects.

I can remember an exciting project just west of my home. When carbon dioxide is pumped into a well it provides what many of the people who work in the area call the "milk shake effect". It stirs up the oil in the ground, takes it out of the pores of the rocks and allows it to be pumped to the surface. The proposal that was put forward was to use the carbon dioxide from the coal-fired electrical plant for this process. That carbon dioxide was going into the atmosphere as waste. It could be used with no production cost. It could, in effect, give life to that field. Of course, that project was cancelled with the National Energy Program. Now we have a Bill that is attempting to bring some more life into the enhanced oil recovery program.

If we look at the statistics, we will find that much of the western oil basin that has been producing oil since 1948 basically—some wells in the Turner Valley area before that, but the major discovery was after 1948—has been declining at a rate of about 30,000 barrels per day per year. The statistics do not show that because we have brought on stream two tar sands plants. In the last few years since coming on stream they have produced a substantial amount of oil, which shows increased production from the western oil basin. In effect, our oil production from coventional crude oil was, in 1982, 16 per cent less than in 1979, and it is feasible to believe that unless we find more oil in these basins that could decrease by as much as 10 per cent per year in the future.

Part of the reason we are not adding to that western oil basin or supply is that since the National Energy Program far fewer wells are being drilled searching for oil. In the last few months there have been some interesting discoveries in northern Alberta. There has been some substantial drilling going on in the Saskatchewan basin.

Why is it that we have more drilling in the Saskatchewan area? It is not because of anything the federal Government has done. The National Energy Program is still in place. The PRGT is still in place. But the Saskatchewan Government has allowed oil companies that find oil a royalty holiday of up to five years on these new wells. You might ask why they would forgo that kind of income. It is logical to say that if there are no wells drilled, there are no jobs, no trucks are bought, no people are working and there is nothing to tax. It is far better to allow companies that are prepared to take this kind of financial risk a royalty holiday so they can provide employment to the local citizens in the area. And if there is a possibility of finding oil they can quickly recover their costs.

When you consider that wells in the western basin cost upwards of $500,000 per hole at this time, you can understand that the companies do not want that money sitting for very long. What does this do? Perhaps this is something we should consider applying in other areas, and the federal Government ought to take some leadership in this regard. As this Bill is reducing the PGRT in certain instances, perhaps we might make the suggestion that for new wells drilled in Saskatchewan, Alberta—in any part of the nation—the federal Government forgo any portion of the taxes it levies on the oil industry, and that the provincial governments match the amount in royalty. We then have to get the industry moving again.

What would this do? This would move us more quickly to self-sufficiency. One of the objects of the National Energy Program that has not come about is a move toward self-sufficiency. By removing billions of dollars from existing oil production, mainly in western Canada, and placing that money through the PIP grants into the so-called Canada Lands in the North and in the offshore in the main, we have not been as fortunate as many who proposed the program thought we would be. We have not found energy that could quickly be brought on stream in the Northwest Territories, in the Beaufort, and in the eastern offshore.

However, there is a plus side. This has brought forward the potential of about 1.5 billion barrels of oil in Hibernia. This most likely will not come on stream for up to six to ten years. The Beaufort Sea still has promise, but there has been no development of a commercial reservoir yet. Part of the reason, I believe, is that the petroleum incentive grants have been on the exploratory side and not in the production area. What the companies are tending to do is drill wells to find the extension of the field, rather than delineate the field for actual production. In other words, to detemine the extent of the field where they have drilled and found oil, and whether the field can produce. We are spending billions of dollars in incentives and yet we are getting very little in the sense that there might be some production in the near future.

When a well is drilled in the western Canadian basin and oil is found, the potential to bring that oil on stream very quickly is excellent. That could quickly add to our self-sufficiency needs. What would be more in the interests of our nation is to get some equity in the system so that both could take place, and in that was we could again encourage drilling so that oil can be found in the western basin with thousands of jobs being provided.

One of the negative aspects of the National Energy Program is the taking of money out of the western basin and putting it into the off-shore, because it costs $100 million a well to drill in the off-shore, whereas the cost is approximately $500,00 a well in the Western basin. Both require approximately the same number of men to perform the duty. It is no wonder that since the National Energy Program was brought into existence we have lost about 40 per cent of the jobs in that industry in the Western part of Canada. This translates into anywhere from 20,000 to 40,000 jobs. Those jobs could be quickly brought back on stream if we brought some order into this taxation system and the grants as they are now in place.

Another difficulty with the PGRT, the up-front taxation of oil, as it comes from the well, and natural gas, is in the area of the petrochemical industry. We have in my constituency two large world-scale plants. One of those plants provides all the basic stock for the total industry of Canada. Within the nation we have a number of these large world-scale petrochemical plants. We have them in Sarnia, Montreal, and there are two in the Edmonton region. They are required to move their product into the international market. They have been doing very well at that until recently. We now find that their competitive edge, because oil prices and natural gas prices have not gone as high as predicted, is being lost to the gulf region of the United States, to Mexico—which is bringing on a petrochemical industry—and to Saudi Arabia, a large petrochemical region. They are not charging upfront taxes. In fact, feedstock going into those petrochemical industries is basically going in at the country's cost.

Given our advantages and given the need to find and hold on to new markets before our competitors are in place, we must quickly react to the proposals of the petrochemical industry task force which indicated that there ought to be a market-responsive price for the feedstock going into that industry. This means that rather than taxing the product as it flows into the petrochemical plant, taxation by the Government ought to be on the product as it flows out and into world markets.

The task force also indicated that if there was no tax we ought not to be concerned because we have in place thousands of people who are working. If we do not get the system in place very quickly, the add-ons to the Prentiss and Joffre plants in my constituency will not take place and the people there in the construction industry will lose their jobs. Are we prepared to accept that so the Government can continue to collect the upfront taxation on the feedstock going into those areas? Would it not be better to have the jobs in place and the markets found, anticipating that perhaps in the future there might be profits of which government could take advantage and tax. That makes more sense to me.

It is important as will to look at the many definitions in the Bill. One has to be somewhat of an expert—and we have a few in this Party—to understand a production royalty versus a resource royalty. There is an attempt in the legislation to extract the proper definitions. This is important for companies that are looking to find the most available tax system under which to operate. There are some proposals in the Bill which deal with the definition of royalties.

This Bill will not in any way assist the very serious problems resulting from the National Energy Program. It provides some things which are attractive to the industry, but it does not deal with the lack of drilling in the western sedimentary basin, with the lack of proper tax incentives to get an upgrader in the heavy oil areas of Saskatchewan and Alberta, or with the jobs and oil available from the tar sands which we know can be onstream in a number of years. While this legislation provides a few minor changes which will be beneficial to the oil industry, it does not address the serious problems with which we ought to be dealing.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments, the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell).

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the entire speech of the Hon. Member, but I would like to ask him some questions. There is a real problem with petrochemical industry producers. They came up with a task force report. With all the locked-in gas in Saskatchewan and Alberta which as a very low value, could we go beyond what the task force report recommended?

Mr. Schellenberger: Mr. Speaker, I think the task force was fairly broad in its recommendations. It suggested that we ought to use that shut-in gas, that it was much better to use it in the petrochemical industry than to leave it in the ground, and that the Government ought to look very seriously at a market-responsive price for feedstock going into those plants, not only to ensure that they can continue production in world markets but that there be an expansion.

As far as the eastern Canadian petrochemical industries are concerned, most of their feedstock is in oil. The Government ought to look at providing some incentives to those companies to take a portion of that oil-based feedstock out of production and put in its place liquids from natural gas such as propane, and butane which can be used to provide the needed petrochemicals. They are readily available from the shut-in gas which is in place in the western basin.

If we moved on those recommendations, we would see a substantive change in our competitive nature. Surely there are always ways of improving the situation. We might look at the task force report in detail and suggest that the Government make some rapid moves in that direction. I asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) whether he was looking at its recommendations. He confirmed that he had a group in place which was looking at the suggestions of the task force, and I encourage him to get on with it.

Mr. Fennell: If I recall, they recommended 15 per cent and that the gate price and the gulf price should be reduced even more. What effect would that have on drilling in the West?

Mr. Schellenberger: By getting natural gas in use, small companies that explore for oil and gas are encouraged to continue. Unfortunately they have been finding more gas than oil in the western basin in the last few years. Thousands of these companies have substantial revenues locked up in shut-in gas which they cannot use. With an immediate 15 per cent drop in the price, as was recommended, more natural gas would be flowing into petrochemical plants, not only in the West but hopefully in eastern Canada as well. As a result the cash flow to small companies would be increased, and they could use that money for a continued search for oil. That is what we are looking for. There is a lot of natural gas in place, more than we can realistically use in 30 years or 40 years. We ought to be trying to put it into value-added products which provide jobs and cash for those companies.

Mr. Fennell: The Alberta industries are in desperate shape. Some minor modifications to the Act were brought in. Will they resolve the unemployment problem in Alberta? I know they will not affect the production of half-ton sufficiently. Is this only a partial step toward getting Alberta back to where it was in 1980 before these guys took over again?

Mr. Schellenberger: Absolutely, that is essential. The large thrust of the National Energy Program was to remove cash from the western exploratory system and put it into the Canada lands. This has put tens of thousands of people out of work and has resulted in Alberta having the lowest net return on investment last year of any province in Canada, including Prince Edward Island, whereas before we were the highest. The effect upon the Province of Alberta has been devastating.

Of course this legislation has limited effect. In most cases the incentives included in it are already too late for this year. Our drilling this year will be less than it was in 1981, which was the lowest it had been for many years. What is essential is that which the provinces have been putting forward, such as the royalty holiday of the Province of Saskatchewan. If these could be matched by the federal Government in the interim, until we come into power and bring some order to this whole system, that would certainly help.

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin if there is any move by the provincial governments to lower their royalties or taxes on natural gas, or natural gas liquids, in view of the fact that the Government of Canada reduced that tax to zero as of February 1 this year.

Mr. Schellenberger: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I know that the Alberta Minister of Energy has been in constant touch in the last year with the national Minister to have reductions in place that will allow for more drilling. They have been encouraging the Minister to bring in a better pricing regime for export gas so that we can retain the 4 per cent of the United States market that we now have. These are essential to get markets back into place in western Canada. The provinces are very open to positive suggestions where both the province and the federal Government can share in providing incentives to drilling companies in western Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There being no further questions, the House will proceed to debate.

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, in that part of this great country from which I come we saw water power being used to turn the wheels of machinery, only to have those water courses diverted into hydraulic raceways to supply yet another form of economic energy. Our earlier generations harnessed the great Niagara to provide electrical energy in an economically expansive manner. Energy as we saw it then and the cost of energy were matters of concern to those people who lived in that area a long time ago. We knew then that Canada's energy resources could be, and still can be the engine of growth that this country so badly needs.

We in Niagara remember well the 1980 election. That was the election in which the Liberal Party talked in terms of 18 cents at the gas pumps. They hoodwinked the people with respect to the cost of energy: "Tell the public that what the Conservatives are proposing to do is nothing less than usury, but for goodness sake don't tell them the truth about the cost of energy production and, for goodness sake, don't tell them what we as a party in power or in government would do with respect to the cost of producing energy."

It took the present Government less than one year to raise the cost of that energy production in excess of 18 cents at the gas pump which it was so quick to deny and denounce during the 1980 election campaign. Gasoline prices today, of course, bear no relationship whatsoever to that which was suggested in the fall of 1979 or early months of 1980. If the voters in 1980 had known what they know now, if they had known that $2 a gallon for gasoline in 1984 would be a bargain rate, the election result might have been different. The Government across the way might have been faced with a lesser degree of credibility.

Might I suggest that the voting public soon began to realize the lengths that the Party in Government would go to keep power. For them, history has shown that power does corrupt. This is why I am disappointed with the legislation before us today.

There is no visionary outlook in Bill C-16. This Bill offers nothing new to what was announced earlier, first in the National Energy Program update in June, 1982 and in the Budget of last April. Canadians looking for relief from soaring energy costs will find no comfort in this legislation. Even worse, this legislation fails to put energy mega projects such as the tar sands or any other imaginative program back on track so that energy can be the engine of economic Canadian growth. It lacks the vision of working thousands. It lacks the vision of the wheels turning and the building of pride and confidence in being Canadian. Instead, Parliament's time is being devoted to a rather technical Bill, almost of a housekeeping nature, sanctioning past Cabinet decisions. The opportunity is gone. The opportunity to address the problems which all Canadians know exist under the National Energy Program is being thrown away.

No one, and least of all this Party, can have any reservations about supporting the goals and ideal principles of the National Energy Program. Canadianization, security of supply and energy self-sufficiency are all endorsed by us. If the House will forgive me, they are motherhood issues. We like them. However, the comment cannot be said of the means by which this Government has chosen to reach these goals.

In its self-righteousness, the Government has created a monster Petro-Canada, destroyed the energy megaprojects, has driven record numbers of oil rigs to the United States and elsewhere and has sent energy prices soaring in all spheres of activity. Bill C-14 does not address the serious deficiencies of the National Energy Program. Indeed, legislation has not even been introduced to address one of the most contentious aspects of the National Energy Program, the Canadian ownership charge.

This charge was introduced to pay for the acquisition of Petrofina by Petro-Canada. Petrofina has long since been paid for, yet Canadians go on paying the ownership charge every time they purchase a litre or gallon of gasoline. We question again the morality of this Government and the integrity of that Party which fixes a 4.5 cents a gallon charge for the clearly specified purpose of purchasing Petrofina and then continuing to gather from the consumers of this country $800 million a year, long after the Canadians people paid the cost, excessive as it was, of Petrofina.

It is not too cynical of me to suggest that the only necessity for the continuation of that charge is this Government's continuing appetite for spending; for example, purchasing ridings at the rate of $500,000. In my view, Canadian consumers would do a much better job of efficiently spending and effectively getting a return from the $800 million a year charged to them through this ownership charge.

• (1600)

Even though the Canadian ownership charge is bad, Canadians should not be allowed to forget that it would have been worse had it not been for the bell ringing episode of March, 1982. Buried in that mammoth energy legislation introduced as Bill C-94 was a proposal to allow for the raising of this charge, not to 4.6 cents per gallon but to 16 cents per gallon. Had the legislation been allowed to stand as it was, and had this cash-starved Government raised those charges as it had earlier proposed, Canadians would be losing over $3 billion a year. We on this side of the House stopped that increase dead in its tracks. However, we could have done so earlier with the full support of Canadians across the country.

Canadian people knew perfectly well by that time the worth of the Government's promise or commitment. They had seen its actions and had been deceived by the Government through the National Energy Program. Then as now, we demanded that changes be made to the National Energy Program. Bill C-14 is but one small part of what needs to be done.

As the Hon. Member for Central Nova (Mr. Mulroney) pointed out in Calgary last November, energy policy in the country must once more reflect a sense of realism. The fanciful dreams of bureaucrats and Cabinet Ministers have caused enough damage already. It is self-evident that the sense of realism most needed is an acceptance of the fact that the National Energy Program cannot operate in a vacuum. For example, unrealistic revenue forecasts led to the creation of a Petroleum Incentives Program. Those revenues did not materialize, but the program continues nevertheless. The program continues to the extent that the Auditor General, when looking at the number of grants made, was moved to ask where the returns are.

Many complaints can be levelled against this program. My complaint and the complaint of anyone with a modicum of concern for the Canadian shipbuilding industry is about its negative impact on that industry alone. To put it into perspective, Mr. Speaker, the House should consider that the private sector once accounted for over 80 per cent of the work done in Canadian shipyards. The private sector today accounts for less than 20 per cent in tonnage terms of the work done in those same shipyards.

While there may be many reasons for this reversal, the petroleum incentive grant is a major factor and I will tell you why this is so. A Canadian company leasing foreign-built offshore oil rigs is eligible for grants to cover 80 per cent of those leasing costs. If a company decides to buy a foreign-built offshore oil rig, the company can recover up to 80 per cent of the duty paid. However, a company buying a Canadian-built rig for offshore drilling is not eligible for the grants at all. This is the Government's greatest lesson in a give-and-take program.

Not surprisingly, then, Mr. Speaker, most of the offshore rigs operating off the East Coast or in the Beaufort Sea are foreign built. Not surprisingly then, our shipyards are looking for work. In St. Catharines, the Port Weller Shipyards are working at less than 30 per cent capacity with less than 30 per cent employment.

The program clearly needs adjustment on a priority basis. Yet today we are discussing Bill C-14, part of which gives legislative blessing to a measure which has already been adopted and, in part, even lapsed. I would have thought that the shipbuilding industry warranted greater consideration than that.

Others in the House, particularly those of us on this side, have discussed at some considerable length the technical aspects of this legislation. I do not propose to review that ground. However, other Hon. Members have pointed out how perplexing it is that this Bill should precede Parliament's consideration of matters of pressing concern in the energy sector.

Why should the cost of our energy needs at the gas pump, in our homes or elsewhere be so much higher in this country than the cost to consumers in the United States of America? Where is the justification for continuing the expropriation charge made in the name of a Canadian window on the industry? These issues along with the Petroleum Incentives Program have been pushed aside by Bill C-14. This is a reflection of the depths to which the National Energy Program has fallen. The Government has clearly lost any sense of direction and Bill C-14 is further evidence of that. The Bill will never even begin to restore its direction.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, the previous speaker made some fairly interesting remarks and certainly his concern for the shipbuilding industry is very commendable. However, one of the things which I did not understand about his presentation today was how the Conservative Party can justify the fairly major tax break represented by this legislation. We are not talking about incentives for the enhanced oil recoveries, we are talking about a straight tax break to the oil companies in terms of remission from PGRT and the IORT. If the figures are correct, that kind of a tax break would amount to more than $200 million. That is a very substantial amount of money. It will accrue in large measure to multinational oil companies which hold large reserves and which make substantial profits. Their profits were good last year and are improving this year.

I am interested in how the Hon. Member's Party can justify blanket operation legislation such as this, rather than specific incentives to target groups such as those mentioned by previous speakers. At the same time, no attempt has been made to define how that money is to be spent. For example, the multinationals could determine that they want to improve their cashflow, improve their profits and provide better dividends to owners across the line. This is absolutely within the confines of this Bill.

How do you justify this? This is not the first piece of legislation the Government has promoted which gives a major tax break to the oil companies. How can you justify giving oil companies an unconditional tax break of this magnitude when you are not prepared to pass on the tax breaks to the consumers? How can you justify that—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Could I perhaps remind the Hon. Member that his remarks should be addressed to the Chair?

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member who just spoke had not supported the Liberal Government in December 1979, he would have had the opportunity to see just what the difference would be.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): There is a very fundamental difference in approach to Canadianization and development. While there are some who are very good a rewriting history, we could look at the Diefenbaker years and the establishment of the National Energy Board. This Party has followed that program since, on the basis of encouraging Canadian investment and incentives to Canadianize that natural resource which is ours and can be the energy of economic growth. The approach would have been entirely different. The controls would have been entirely different and would not have followed the socialistic programs of spending money gained from consumer's purchases at the gas pump to socialize and acquire such things as gasoline service stations across the country. The program would have dealt with resource discovery and development and would have made the difference between what now exists and what could have been if not for the intervention of the New Democratic Party.

• (1610)

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, what we heard from the NDP was garbage. The money that they are talking about is money that was stolen from the producers and the Province of Alberta. Their argument is garbage. How could they give a tax break when the money was stolen in the first place?

I have a question for the Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid). Let me phrase it very carefully. The majority of large engine half-ton trucks were used at the western oil patch. When the National Energy Program was introduced it had a devastating effect on Ontario with respect to their use. Was there any direct effect to his own town as a result of the National Energy Program?

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could have further clarification of the last part of the question?

Mr. Fennell: What direct impact was there in his riding as a result of the introduction of the National Energy Program?

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I thought that the comment was related to trucks in particular. However, I want to point out that while I come from an energy conscious community, I also come from an automobile producing community. General Motors is the largest employer there and as a result of the high cost of gasoline we have experienced the greatest hardship and the greatest number of unemployed. St. Catharines used to be a high income area but we have moved from that to an area with one of the highest unemployment rates. We have only recently begun to recover, but it has not been as a result of the oil prices in Canada.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, it was a rather interesting comment which the previous member made about garbage. Let me suggest that perhaps the problem in St. Catharines concerns the fact that that money, instead of going back to consumers, farmers and fishermen, is going back to oil companies. You can use the term "stolen", but when we look at the Bertand Commission, with respect to $12 billion being stolen from the Canadian public, including people in your riding, you are not doing anything about calling those people to justice. They are the same ones to whom this legislation is giving tax relief under the remission of the IORT and the PGRT. How can you justify, as a responsible Member of Parliament, that kind of activity?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must ask the Hon. Member to address his remarks to the Chair and not directly to his colleagues.

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member based his question on a completely different philosophy and approach. As was pointed out, for a company to operate in our enterprise system there must be some margin of profit which can be used for further expansion and development or further use in the larger national interest. Certainly in this particular instance there are producing companies as well as government agencies involved in source discovery and development. Certainly a large number of those dollars will never be recovered because a certain percentage of the petroleum or gas wells will not be commercially viable. We must consider what the final consumer cost will be.

If we are going to tax a commercial corporation out of existence, it must be the sole responsibility of the Government to look at that source discovery and development. I am suggesting that the cost, in that instance, would be no less than the existing operating costs of those commercial corporations.

I come from an area where Petro-Canada stations have purchased Petrofina and BP stations. There used to be the occasional gasoline war, but since they are all controlled and operated by Petro-Canada there are no longer gasoline wars, or that competition. That competitiveness which reduced the price for the consumer no longer exists. We want to return to a system with greater competitiveness and greater productivity.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—Canadian Pacific Railway—Issuance of lay-off notices to workers. (b) Contracting practices—Effect on railway employees; The Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mrs. Appolloni)—Canada Pension Plan—Eligibility of married women; The Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath)—Labour Conditions—Size of labour force—Statement made by Minister of Employment and Immigration. (b) Use of unemployment insurance funds to retrain workers.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PETROLEUM AND GAS REVENUE TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration fo the motion of Mr. MacLaren that Bill C-14, an Act to amend an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to provide for a revenue tax in respect of petroleum and gas, be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to speak to Bill C-14, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to provide for a revenue tax in respect of petroleum and gas. As Hon. Members have pointed out, this is something that has been in effect for some time. We are merely debating it now.

I suggest this demonstrates the policies of trial and error of the Government. With that kind of approach to the management of the most important affairs in our country, we have a situation in which the Government first, through its policies of trial and error, destroys and then attemps to restore. In this case we are dealing with a classic example of a very basic and fundamental policy failure. This kind of government mentality and philosophy in the National Energy Program has destroyed one of the most viable industries in the country and one of the major engines of growth. It was one of the major job creators which, in many respects, was distinctively Canadian, at least at the exploration and service level. The Canadian content and participation in terms of the number of jobs was a very major component to this industry.

It causes one to look at other policies which follow this same philosophy of trial and error; destroy and restore. Look at what the Government is doing in the case of VIA Rail passenger service—clearly the same thing. It unilaterally, without any consideration for the public, without any public input or reference to parliamentary debate, dismantled 20 per cent of Canada's rail passenger service in this country.

We now have a new Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) who is trying to put it back together again, at least he says he is. We are not sure, however, whether we can believe him or not, because every time he speaks about the issue he mouths a different policy. He was out in Jasper last weekend and talked about the need of restoring the rail passenger service between Vancouver and Edmonton. He said if it was going to be restored it was going to have to be a joint funding arrangement with the three levels of government, municipal, provincial and federal. Does that mean there is a complete new policy with respect to the rail passenger service in this country? Or is it just simply a policy for the west? However, that is merely a side issue, Mr. Speaker. The fact of the matter is that this Government sought in 1981 to destroy the rail passenger system in this country and now it is attempting to put it back together.

So it is with this particular piece of legislation. I could talk about FIRA and the investment attitudes in this country. The combination of the National Energy Program and FIRA caused a net investment outflow of something like $17 billion over the last four years. That is both foreign money and a good portion of Canadian money. It is part and parcel of the lack of confidence which these policies of trial and error have created in the minds of a vast number of Canadians.

When I think about people being put in these very important and key positions such as the former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who is now the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), the Minister of Transport, and the Minister in charge of Industry, Trade and Commerce, responsible for FIRA, I can only refer to them as "fly-by-nighters". As one who was involved in the automobile business for a number of years I have known what we call "fly-by-nighters" who come in and set the community on fire for a period of a year. They promise everything but they can never deliver and never live up to the promises they give their customers, or the expectations they create. And there is a deterioration in the goodwill of their customers because they cannot fulfil their promises, and they end up going out of business.

Mr. Ferguson: Are you talking from experience?

Mr. Mazankowski: Yes, I am talking from experience, you bet. I remember some of the things they used to do in those days, Mr. Speaker, especially the used car operators. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, when the Chrysler Corporation—and this is not a plug for Chrysler because I was not a Chrysler dealer—came out with a very attractive warranty. It was called five years or 50,000 miles, whichever occurs first. Some of these used car fly-by-nighters used to set up their business and a customer would come in to buy a car and ask what the warranty was. They would be told it was five and five. When asked what it stood for, the dealer would say "five miles or five minutes, whichever occurs first". But if the customer did not ask the question, he would have gone out thinking he was getting something more than he really was. If he did not ask, he would assume it had some meaning.

That was exactly what happened with the National Energy Program, Mr. Speaker, quite frankly. Canadians really thought they were going to get a fair break in terms of price. They thought they were going to be treated fairly. They thought there was going to be some opportunity to invest. They thought there was going to be some opportunity to expand the energy sector in this country rather than have it contracted. The fact of the matter is that those things did not occur. That policy of trial and error did a great disservice to the energy sector of this country, particularly the fossil fuel sector.

It is really interesting, Mr. Speaker, to remember that this National Energy Program was to have helped Canadian companies, but the Canadian companies which really got drawn into the finite elements of the National Energy Program are the ones which find themselves in the most difficulty, Dome Petroleum, Sulpetrol, Turbo, all because they were lured into making huge investments and undertakings on the basis of the National Energy Program. What is more tragic, Mr. Speaker, is that a very vibrant and vital service industry, the service and exploration industry, which is a very vital component of the energy sector, was literally gutted and dismantled, and with it hundreds upon hundreds of small business enterprises went down the tube. Many of these small businesses were family enterprises. Many of them started with the boom of the oil industry, going back to the 1950s.

What we are doing now, Mr. Speaker, in the process of this Bill, is attempting to repair and restore some semblance of fairness and equity into the policies which affect the development of energy. We hear a lot of things from Liberal leadership candidates these days about the National Energy Program. Some support it and some do not, which is rather strange. The Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development (Mr. Johnston) does not like the National Energy Program. I take it that the honourable John Turner does not like the National Energy Program. It is amazing how those boys were silent when the National Energy Program was delivering such a crushing blow to that very vital industry. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) was in Edmonton two or three weeks ago talking to the Liberal Party faithful. He stated that Alberta should welcome the collapse of the boom because the megaprojects were too big, too difficult to manage, too difficult to finance and too risky. What he is really saying is, "Well, boys, you are really lucky that the National Energy Program came along because we saved you from the boom, from the fact that these megaprojects were going to be too difficult to manage, and were going to overheat the economy". What he is really saying, Mr. Speaker, is that the people of Alberta should thank him for the 14 per cent level of unemployment, for the crashing real estate market, for the bankruptcies and the broken dreams, hopes and aspirations of so many who went down the tube.

The national energy policy, as far as most people in Alberta are concerned, was the most odious policy ever perpetrated upon one single region. Quite frankly, I think it was more than simply a policy of trial and error. I think it was a deliberate plot to destroy one of the very main engines of economic activity in Canada. But I give thanks for the intelligence of Canadians. The people right across the country recognized, long before this Government, that it was unfair, it was not working and that it was affecting the central Canadian heartland. They recognized, for example, that for every dollar spent in western Canada, Ontario receives 42 cents; Quebec, 13 cents; Alberta, 29 cents, and the other provinces, 16 cents, and for every job created in the energy sector in western Canada two jobs are created somewhere else.

When the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) responded to the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell), he alluded to the fact that when the energy industry slows down in western Canada there are fewer trucks sold, fewer compressors sold, less pipe manufactured, less cable and fewer pumps and electrical motors sold. All of it is tied into one total economic package which reverberates throughout the whole of the economy.

Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, the Government believed that it could plan and manipulate. It wanted to remove itself completely from the market and it believed that it could replace the geologists with accountants and bureaucrats to really orchestrate the energy activities in this country. But it has not worked. It has been an absolute and total failure, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to quote an article from The Edmonton Journal of Tuesday, March 27, which I feel puts the whole thing into perspective in terms of an average Albertan's point of view of the National Energy Program. It is a letter to the editor. It is entitled, "Explain the NEP to us", and I quote:

> Oh boy! Here we go again! What sort of idiots do the Liberals think they are dealing with—not just here in the West, but across Canada?
> The quotes attributed to Alberta Liberals and taken from the Bill Sass report (Journal, March 16) leave me quite speechless!
> I would suggest—in all seriousness—that Messrs. Decore, MacGuigan, Schepanovich, Taylor and (Greg) Schmidt call a meeting to be held in Commonwealth Stadium, where they could explain themselves to an audience restricted to Albertans who have been directly affected by the implementation of the National Energy Policy.
>
> By listening to the people of Alberta—

● (1630)

Here is the salient point, Mr. Speaker:

By listening to the people of Alberta—the welders, stenographers, machinists, truckers, designers, salespeople, millwrights, secretaries, engineers, etc., etc.—they just may get a handle on the realities of unemployment, foreclosure, bankruptcy (both personal and business) and the destruction of Alberta's economy!

First on the list of speakers should be Greg Schmidt, to "make clear why some of the things we have done have been advantageous to the West."

Most of all, I'm looking forward to the question period which should follow the speeches! It should make a very interesting day for all present.

This letter was signed by F. Peter Young, Sherwood Park. I do not know the man but I want to tell you that he certainly put the issue into perspective. It is not the big bad oil companies that we are dealing with here, as the NDP tried to suggest; we are dealing with ordinary people who relied upon the energy industry for their livelihood. That has been thrown out the window by the policies of this Government.

We talk about the depressed state of the economy and I will quote from the Canadian Business magazine of June, 1983, which says—

Mr. MacLaren: Canadian Business?

Mr. Mazankowski: Canadian Business.

Mr. MacLaren: Excellent magazine.

Mr. Mazankowski: I am glad the Minister believes this is an excellent magazine. That goes to show that when I speak on a subject I am not subjective in the items I quote. I try to look for things which are objective, and here is an objective assessment.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: Well, we talk about the depressed state of the economy, Mr. Speaker, and month after month the Ministers across the way blame it on the international situation or the weather. But this very objective and, as the Minister suggests, excellent magazine says:

—without the National Energy Program, we would not have declined as far as the Americans; instead we sank much further. Besides, the cynical vote bride of cheap gas that won in 1980 has left enduring gas pains as we endlessly overpay at the pump to finance Petro-Canada takeovers.

That puts the whole thing in perspective. That is why Canadians across the country feel they have been gypped by the NEP.

Mr. Masters: That means that you are going to sell PetroCan?

Mr. Mazankowski: Well, we have Cabinet Ministers over there who are going to sell Petro-Canada. That is very true.

Mr. Foster: Would you sell the whole thing?

Mr. Mazankowski: Well, the service station operation is part of Petro-Canada, at least in my view. Is that not correct, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Foster: Would you sell it all?

Mr. Mazankowski: No, I am talking about the policies over there.

Mr. Foster: You must like it or you would sell it.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, we are not talking—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Foster: Why don't you sell it?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I invite the House to listen attentively to the speech of the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). Members will have an opportunity later on to put questions or make comments.

Mr. Turner: Sell it to the Chinese.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I thank you for suggesting that Hon. Members across the way listen attentively. I think it would do them some good, because I am not talking about the technical aspects of this Bill, I am talking about some very practical aspects, and I speak from some experience.

The Hon. Member wants to know whether I want to sell Petro-Canada. This issue does not deal with Petro-Canada. It is a going oil company owned by the people of Canada and it is in place. It has nothing to do with this legislation. If you want to bring in a bill to denationalize Petro-Canada, we will deal with it. That brings me to the issue of Canadianization.

There have been lots of statements made about Canadianization. What has happened is that there has been very little improvement in private Canadian ownership. Canadian ownership has come about largely as a result of nationalization. We are not really achieving any of the major goals enunciated when the NEP came out.

I want to make it clear that I am not arguing against the intent of this Bill. It is repairing a measure which was ill conceived at the outset. It just demonstrates how far out of line the Government was when it first initiated the NEP.

There were three principles as the major pillars of the NEP: self-suficiency, fairness and opportunity. Dealing with opportunity first, that brings into context the question of Canadianization and how well we have been doing. I put a question on the Order Paper which was answered on December 9, 1983. I asked what percentage of the petroleum industry in Canada was foreign-owned and Canadian-owned in 1980. The answer provided was that it was 73.9 per cent foreign-owned and 26.1 per cent Canadian-owned. At the end of 1982, and I do not have the 1983 figures because I was told that the date for 1983 is not yet available, the foreign-owned percentage was 65.8 per cent, Canadian-owned was 34.2 per cent. There has been some improvement but the key is which portion of Canadian ownership was Government owned? In 1980 it was 3.8 per cent, in 1982 it was 8.6 per cent. Private Canadian ownership was 22.3 per cent in 1980, and 25.6 per cent in 1982. So there was a measly 3 per cent increase in private Canadian ownership. So much for fulfilling the goal of Canadianization. Need I go any further on that particular point?

Let me just talk about fairness for a minute. I do not think one has to deal too long with that. Quite frankly, energy prices today are more than double what they were in 1980. The fact is that there is a great deal of price discrimination in a number of areas.

Let us talk about self-sufficiency. Quite frankly, the only thing helping us improve that is the slowdown in the economy. If you consider the heavy oil going south of the border right now, we are probably net exporters. However, we are still reliant on foreign suppliers for light and medium crude.

On this whole question of opportunity, the one I really wanted to hit on, there has been massive discrimination. Under this Government's policies and its PIP grants there has been a shift of exploration and development activity from the western sedimentary basin to the frontier and offshore. I am not arguing that that kind of exploration should not take place in some form, but it should not be shifted in total. We are the only country in the world which pays a company to drill a dry hole. We pick up 80 per cent of the tab. It cost $35 million to drill a hole in Hibernia and you could drill 120 wells in southern Alberta for that and your chances of finding oil would be a lot greater. Furthermore, to invest in the upgrading and enhancement of heavy oil would be logical way to increase our self sufficiency.

There are so many loose ends, Mr. Speaker, which need to be brought together in a cohesive and coherent energy policy that it does not seem this Government has the capacity, ability or the will to do it. I guess the only thing we will be able to do is hope and anticipate that there will be a new Government so that we can once again use energy as a major engine of economic growth to turn that natural resource into an economic opportunity.

• (1640)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly).

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I appreciated very much the speech of the Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). It is one of the few opportunities that we in the House have to see that Party, and the individuals within it, aligning themselves clearly with the major multinational oil companies in this country. Those are the same companies that the Bertrand Commission identified as ripping off $12 billion from the Canadian people. The previous speaker knows full well that that occurred. The previous speaker for the Conservative Party recognizes that that kind of activity is still occurring today in different forms. He knows that this Bill proposes to legitimize the return of tax dollars, the IORT and the PGRT, to those multinational oil companies. It proposes to return to them amounts which we could use to give relief to farmers and fishermen without increasing the deficit. The previous speaker knows that farmers in his area of the country would benefit tremendously from a 9 per cent reduction in the sales tax. This would be about a $250 million cost to the Treasury. Instead the Member, along with other Members of his Party, is supporting the kind of legislation that redirects that $250 million back into the pockets of the multinational oil companies. To my way of thinking, and that of many other people in this country, that is inexcusable.

The previous speaker attacked FIRA, the lame duck organization that was developed by the Liberals to protect us from these kind of organizations, to ensure that foreign investment would not be a handicap to Canadians. My suggestion, Mr. Speaker, is that the Party which the previous speaker represents is certainly misguided. I took from the Member's speech that his Party will be supporting the return of roughly $250 million of Canadian taxpayer's money to the oil companies.

Mr. Fennell: No it is not. It is producers.

Mr. Skelly: My third point, and I am hoping—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Perhaps the Hon. Member could raise an additional point later on. Both comments and responses should be as brief as possible.

Mr. Skelly: I would like to make a full comment available to the speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Let us hear the answer. Other Members wish to put questions. That is the difficulty the Chair finds itself in. The Hon. Member for Vegreville.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I am absolutely delighted that the Member asked the question. If he had been paying a little more attention to the activities in the House of Commons, rather than going across the country engaging in flim-flam and rhetoric of the kind we are hearing here today, he would know that under my name there is a Private Members' motion for the removal of the 9 per cent federal sales tax on fuel for farmers and fishermen. If he paid any attention to the proceedings in the House of Commons he would also know that that particular motion gained the unanimous consent of the House of Commons. That particular motion, Sir, has now been referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. He does not have to try to ride on the coattails of the Progressive Conservative Party to drum up a little support for the removal of the 9 per cent sales tax on fuel for farmers and fishermen. I am glad he has come alive and awakened up to the fact there was such a tax. I do not think he even realized it.

I am glad he tied those two questions together. The PGRT, which is a production type tax, is exactly the same thing as a federal sales tax. He cannot suggest for one minute that the PGRT, which is a production type tax, is not handed down right to the consumer. It filters through the whole pricing mechanism, and it is the consumer who ends up paying it. It is the consumer who is paying the PGRT, not the big bad oil companies. It will be the consumer who gains the benefit of the reduction of the PGRT, not the big bad oil companies. I am absolutely amazed and appalled that that Member cannot follow the simple sequence of sound reasoning that has been presented by Members in this House. We are looking for cheaper energy prices for the consumer; for the farmer and the fisherman. This man wants to see the 9 per cent sales tax and all the federal taxes stay so that the Government can build up its slush fund and create several kinds of makework projects which may be more politically motivated than job motivated.

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, would the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) explain for the benefit of the New Democratic Party exactly what took place in the House with regard to the question of our Leader to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in regard to federal tax on farm fuel yesterday?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order please. Questions and comments should be related to the speech of the Hon. Member. It is my opinion that the Hon. Member is raising a new matter. However, I am giving him the benefit of the doubt. The Hon. Member for Vegreville.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, Members of the New Democratic Party are here physically but they do not pay any attention. There are always those Members who will attend a meeting but do not listen to what is being said. Yesterday was a clear example of the further commitment of this Party to reduce the 9 per cent federal sales tax. This Party has always stood for the reduction of the Government take, whether in the form of the PGRT, excise tax or a sales tax.

I am glad that the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson) is in the House. I have a tremendous amount of respect for him and I know of his interest in agriculture. He may want to suggest to his Minister of Finance that it might be appropriate to take the 7 per cent excise tax off at the source so farmers would not have to pay that in advance and then claim back for it afterwards, given the fact that they are in a very tight cash squeeze position. It would not cost the federal Government one red cent. As a matter of fact, in many respects it would reduce the administration and the bureaucracy required to send out the refund cheques. I put that to the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary as a positive recommendation. Remove the 7 per cent excise tax on fuel for farmers and fishermen at the source. That would give these individuals that much extra cash during the course of the year. They have to pay for it then claim for it later.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a comment and then ask a question. This is really another revision. It is another baby of NEP. They started off with NEP, then they had the baby NEP, now this is the infant of the baby NEP. We are now getting into exactly what we have in the Income Tax Act. We have an original Act which will now have the same number of revisions in it as the Income Tax Act. Why do they not abandon it and start again?

I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Vegreville a question. Just before I came into the House today I received the annual report of the Canada Oil and Gaslands Administration. In the report under Drilling Activity, I noticed that they referred to 33 exploratory wells which were drilled. None of these appeared to be too large. Would we have been in a better position today if a portion of those funds had been applied to the tarsands and the heavy oil, or do you think we would be in the same place with reserves?

That calls for a 20 minute speech.

Mr. Mazankowski: Yes, that is a 20 minute speech. Let me make one point very clear at the outset. I think we need to explore and develop in every area of Canada. When I say there has been a dramatic shift, I mean there has been a shift almost in total to the frontier and to the off-shore. I am suggesting there should be a better balance. For example, it was estimated that there will be 12 to 14 wells drilled off the eastern seaboard during the 1983 season. You could have drilled 86 deep foothills wells and the chances are you may have had a better probability of discovering oil.

● (1650)

But in the case of the tar sands and the heavy oil just very quickly, Mr. Speaker, the oil resources are there and all that we have to do is put in place the upgraders and the facilities. We have the technology. All we have to do is strike a proper royalty and taxation level. These projects will go ahead and they will produce oil and we will become more self-sufficient.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): We have come to the end of the question period. We are resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, today we are continuing debate on Bill C-14, which is an amendment to the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act, usually referred to as the PGRT. I think what we are really discussing today is not so much the technique of how to sink an oil well or where development in the oil industry should occur, we are discussing in effect a taxation question. PGRT has a lot of impact on where development will take place, in which part of the country and could even effect different sectors of the economy.

This particular Bill chooses to deal with moneys that are collected and recycled into the petroleum industry. As I go on in my speech, I will point out where I think equal amounts of money could be used to better advantage in a period of time when the country is suffering from very high employment. I would like to spend a moment or two to set the stage and point out some of the difficulties that have arisen with regard to petroleum taxation over the past five or six years.

In 1978 of total net petroleum revenues of $8.4 billion, the federal Government received $751 million. In 1979, total revenues rose to $10.6 billion and the federal share was $797 million. In 1980, the total revenues reached $13 million from $8 billion two years before, and the federal share was $795 million. In effect the federal share of petroleum revenues had levelled out and the share of the industry and the share of the other players in the game had gone up by about $5 billion in that two-year period. The producing provinces in the petroleum industry received all of that increase. The federal Government actually lost ground in terms of the share of the petroleum revenues in Canada during the 1979 to 1980 period. That was recognized by the Government in power.

When the Budget of the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) was read into this House in December 1979, a section appeared to recognize not only that the federal share of revenue was dropping in proportion to what it had been, but I think it recognizes very clearly that the Progressive Conservatives considered that as a principle the federal Government had the right to tax oil and gas revenues. I mention this in my speech very early, Mr. Speaker, because it is something that Members of the Official Opposition now proclaim is not the policy of the Party. But when the Conservatives were in Government, not only did they recognize that the federal Government had a share of those revenues, but in the Budget of 1979 there was a section which states, and this is from page 53 of the Budget Papers, that it is the intention of the federal Government to impose a new energy tax which would capture roughly one-half of the returns accruing from annual price increases in excess of $2 per barrel per year on oil and 30 per cent per thousand cubic feet per year on gas.

I think it was very clear in that Budget that the principle of federal rights to taxation on gas and oil was recognized by the Progressive Conservative Government of the day, and that it was prepared to increase that share.

In fact, taxation experts have calculated that that revenue would be under such a program. They estimate that between the years 1980 to 1983, which was the proposal in those Budget papers, the increase would be $7.5 billion minus whatever amounts the federal Government decided to give back by way of production incentives or tax incentives.

The policy was very clear, very well stated, and quite clearly understood, I think, by people across Canada. I only raise the matter again because sometimes it is forgotten. The question then became, how would this new tax be distributed; from where would the increases come since it had been agreed that oil prices at the wellhead would be locked into a step by step increase?

Between 1979 and 1982, the federal Government's net take from up-stream revenues increased by about $1.25 billion. They were in the neighbourhood of $795 million. During the same peak period, however, the producing provinces take rose by about $1.65 billion and the industry's share increased by $2.87 billion. The proportions of the share have changed in the ensuing years with the National Energy Program. The federal Government is now taking a larger percentage of the share, but the overall price that consumers in Canada are paying for oil and gas has increased by some 54 per cent. The Government attempted to increase the size of the pie, and at the same time increased the piece of the pie which the federal Government expected from that larger pie.

Part of what we have before us today is a decision to change the rules as they apply to the PGRT. This change covers two separate sections. I would like to stop here, Mr. Speaker, and go into that portion of my speech in the next session of the House. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, may I call it five o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please! It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—PRIVATE BILLS

[English]

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There are a number of Senate Bills before us which deal with the Marriage Act. I think if you seek unanimous consent you will find that there is an agreement to deal with these Bills en bloc at all stages without debate. In discussions we have found there is consent on all sides. However, I understand the Hon. Member for Edmonton West has a comment he would like to make with regard to these Bills. You might allow his comment, Mr. Speaker, If I may suggest, prior to seeking unanimous consent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is there unanimous consent for the proposal? The Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert).

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I am not in disagreement with the passage of these eight Bills enunciated by the Parliamentary Secretary, except I wish to enter a caveat on behalf of myself and many of my colleagues with regard to the presentation and passage of further Bills.

There is this group of Bills, and I am informed that there are 20 or 30 queued up in the other place at this time of a similar nature, some of which seek to legitimize almost incestuous marriages, or almost incestuous unions such as between a man and his half-sister. We have established norms of morality in the country for a number of reasons. It is my considered view that it is not the job of Parliament, the Senate or the House of Commons, to suddenly allow someone to buy their way past those laws, having come through by Private Members' Bill in the Senate and in the Commons. All of this means that there is a good deal of money involved when it comes down to it to legitimize what society otherwise considers to be unacceptable unions of legal marriage.

I am one of the few Members of the House who was here in the late 1950s and early 1960s when the House was subjected to hundreds of divorce petitions which used to come through like sausages out of a sausage shop from the other place. I was one of those Members whose duty it was to oversee that committee, as far as the government was concerned when my Party was in power, and then subsequently in opposition. In many of those Bills the evidence indicated that there was a good deal of collusion, pure out and out perjury, and standards of evidence before the Senate Committee which would not even make its way through the doorway of a court. This was divorce not only in Quebec, the odd other one came through from other regions. Ultimately Parliament did away with that by amending the Divorce Act, and Quebec accepting divorces. Let me assure the House that we wasted a great deal of time.

Before we now start a new series of Parliament legitimizing—I was going to say queer unions—otherwise irregular unions, something should be done to debate legislation to amend the Divorce Act, the Matrimonial Act or the statutes of any province, whatever they may be, before we are caught up in a regular flow of such legislation. This is something about which the word soon gets out and we could see a steady flow.

I have four Bills here, all of which deal with either an uncle marrying his niece or an aunt marrying her nephew. As I say, there are some others which are coming down the pike. I will emulate one of my colleagues who said, "Very well, these eight are held up until there is introduced into the Senate a Bill for consideration and passage in that House". I understand that there was a Private Bill introduced in the Senate which will be the one that will come to us.

Today I am merely introducing a caveat. In so far as myself and some of my colleagues whom I have consulted are concerned, we will let these Bills through because that was the agreement reached, but there will not be any others acceptable that way unless and until a Senate Bill has been passed and introduced into this House for consideration to put in the necessary changes to whatever statutes are involved to eliminate this sort of sausage machine legislation affecting private individuals who have enough money to come through the Private Members' route.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is there unanimous consent for the proposal put forward by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the effect that we deal with the eight Bills en bloc without debate at all stages in this sitting?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Agreed and so ordered.

MARRIAGE ACT

MEASURES TO PROVIDE EXCEPTION TO LAWS RELATING TO MARRIAGE

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre) (for Mr. Massé) moved that Bill S-2, an Act to provide an exception from the public general law relating to the marriage in the case of Gerald Harvey Fudge and Audrey Marie Saunders, be read a second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Evans (for Mr. Ostiguy) moved that Bill S-3, an Act to provide an exception from the public general law relating to the marriage in the case of Louis Philippe Nadeau and Marie Thérèse Rita Brulé, be read a second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Evans (for Mr. Massé) moved that Bill S-4, an Act to provide an exception from the public general law relating to the marriage in the case of Ernest Hodel and Norma Dora Laurie, be read a second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Evans (for Mr. Massé) moved that Bill S-5, an Act to provide an exception from the public general law relating to the marriage in the case of Benjamin Josheph Andrade and Heather Winnifred Andrade, be read a second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Evans (for Mr. Massé) moved that Bill S-6, an Act to provide an exception from the public general law relating to the marriage in the case of Juan Andrade and Emilia Rodriguez, be read a second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Evans (for Mr. Massé) moved that Bill S-7, an Act to provide an exception from the public general law relating to the marriage in the case of Henri Patry and Aldéa Béa Pitt, be read a second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Evans (for Mr. Ostiguy) moved that Bill S-8, an Act to provide an exception from the public general law relating to the marriage in the case of Joseph Roland Réjean Daoust and Marie Lise Sylvie Girard, be read a second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Evans (for Mr. Ostiguy) moved that Bill S-9, an Act to provide an exception from the public general law relating to the marriage in the case of Pearl Kim Lee and Thomas Siegfried Wieland, be read a second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): By unanimous consent, Mr. Evans, seconded by Mr. Massé, moves that Bills S-2, S-3, S-4, S-5, S-6, S-7, S-8 and S-9, Acts to provide an exception from the public general law relating to marriage, be now read a second time and, by unanimous consent, be referred to Committee of the Whole. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motions?

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I think that in identifying each of the Bills there should be reference to the marriages in the cases of the individuals concerned so that we just do not deal with numbers in Hansard and that Hansard will give a true record of what has been done and what parties are affected by each Bill. I do not say, Mr. Speaker, that you should read them out, but could it not be deemed that after Bills S-2, et cetera, that you gave the names of the parties—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. All the Chair can do from a procedural standpoint is to make sure that we read the Bills. The Bills will have been read and it will be a matter of public record who is mentioned in the Bills. Meanwhile, it is the duty of the Chair to put these Bills through second reading. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motions?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Agreed. Pursuant to Standing Order 58, I do now leave the chair for the House to go into Committee of the Whole.

Motions agreed to, Bills read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into Committee thereon—Mr. Corbin in the chair.

[Translation]

The Chairman: Order, please. The House in Committee of the Whole on Bills S-2, S-3, S-4, S-5, S-6, S-7, S-8 and S-9, to provide exceptions from the public general law relating to marriage.

Shall Clause 1 of these Bills carry? The Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) on a point of order.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I simply want to ask you . . . By way of introduction, each Bill should be called as follows: Bill S-2, an Act to provide an exception from the public general law relating to marriage in the case of Gerald Harvey Fudge and Audrey Marie Saunders. Could all Bills be called that way, because we want to identify—

The Chairman: The Chair has no objection at all. I am speaking for the benefit of the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), if he would care to listen to me for a moment. The Chair has no objection and would be prepared to entertain the wish expressed by the Hon. Member for Edmonton West, but we can take it for granted at the outset that the full title of the Bill will be printed in the Journals of the House of Commons. However, should the Hon. Member for Edmonton West insist, the Chair will be pleased to seek or . . . I will read the title of Bill S-2: an Act to provide an exception from the public general law relating to marriage in the case of Gerald Harvey Fudge and Audrey Marie Saunders; Bill S-3, an act to provide an exception from the public general law relating to marriage in the case of Louis Philippe Nadeau and Marie Thérèse Rita Brulé.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, I have one brief question. I presume that most of these Bills will enable marriage to take place between people who would normally be prevented from doing so because of this normally prohibited degree of consanguinity between them. Would I be correct in assuming that the relationship between the people who wish to marry is not in any case that of a brother and sister?

The Chairman: Order. I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member, but it is the Chairman's understanding that agreement was given at the introduction of second reading of these Bills that they would proceed as a group without debate at all stages this day. Perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary can enlighten the Chair in that respect as to that was indeed the agreement. That is the understanding of the Chair of what it is. Therefore, the Chair is not able to entertain any comments or debate at this time.

MOTIONS

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the payment of municipal taxes out of after-tax income is both an unfair form of double-taxation and an impediment to home-ownership for the average Canadian; and

That the government should consider the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act to permit the deduction from income, for the purposes of calculating taxable income, of all or of some maximum portion of, municipal taxes paid regarding a principal residence.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I have placed this motion in the narrowest possible context in order, I hope, to obtain the consent of the House for the appropriate referral. Members will not be surprised that it is my view that we need to do a great deal more than this for the encouragement and development of home ownership in the country. I believe that many of the values that have underlaid development of our society related to the ability to be secure in title to one's own property.

I could have moved a motion today that related to the deductibility of mortgage interest, that dealt with a number of issues, but that matter has been debated in an election campaign. I do not know whether it will be the subject of another election campaign. I do know that Members opposite took the position at the time that the deductability of mortgage interest was not something they were in favour of. Therefore, today I have framed the motion in the context strictly of what I believe is an equally important matter.

Members know that every Canadian pays directly or indirectly municipal taxes, whether one is a home owner or a tenant. Every Member of this House knows, no matter what they say today as private Members if the Bill is talked out, which I hope it will not, that such a system is unfair. I want to speak briefly about the two sides of the issue. One is the unfairness of the system and the other is the need to do something to encourage home ownership for the average Canadian.

I do not think I need to say a great deal about the unfairness. Virtually everybody here knows that in order to pay $1,000 in municipal taxes today, you have to make quite a lot more than that in pre-tax income. The way our system reads, we are required to pay our municipal taxes out of our after-tax income. On its face, that is unfair. It is unfair both to home owners who have to do it directly and unfair to tenants who have to do it indirectly.

The Province of Ontario moved part way to recognize this dilemma when it brought in its property tax credit scheme. Those filing income tax returns this month in the Province of Ontario see on the form the opportunity to adjust to some degree the taxes they owe the Province of Ontario in an attempt to eliminate the double taxation system. In my view, on a straight matter of tax equity, the time to move to allow a similar deduction at the federal level is overdue. That is self evident. A great deal more does not have to be said about it.

Members of this House will recognize that there is an impediment we place through the Tax Act on the ownership of a home. I can express it as simply as this. Through tax policy, I as a taxpayer am encouraged to save for my old age by making an investment in a Registered Retirement Savings Plan. In some cases, I am encouraged to make those investments for my old age by borrowing money and in some cases the interest paid on the money borrowed is deductible from my income. However, the dream of the average Canadian is to own a home and let the home be the pension plan in the end.

In effect, Mr. Speaker, the tax policy encourages people to borrow money to do certain things but not to exercise the option of borrowing the same amount of money and putting the capital investment into a home. I believe that bias in the tax policy is one of the reasons we have increasingly become a society with a greater proportion of tenants and a smaller proportion of owners.

I represent a constituency in which 60 per cent of the residents are tenants. Not many people would expect to learn that about the riding of Don Valley West in the City of Toronto. However, that is a very normal urban phenomenon these days. A whole series of policies have led to that situation, including density encouragements for developers, land use policies of municipalities and the general attraction of cities like Toronto which bring more and more people to a relatively confined area. As well, various levels of Government have placed impediments on the development of ownership housing.

In the simplest of terms, one of the costs a home owner must bear is his municipal taxes. Since that is a cost which is not deductible, my view is that the tax system creates a bias against a home owner. In my view, we have an obligation to correct that bias. If that were not enough, we are in effect telling people to pay one level of government tax from after-tax income and, in my view, that is an unfair system.

This matter should not be debated at great length. I believe any member of the House who does not understand this by now, after having hearing years of debate, has not been listening to the arguments on this subject. I do not believe there is a need for such arguments any longer. I would hope that Members would understand, therefore, that I have phrased this motion as narrowly as I possibly can. I believe it is time we told home owners who are struggling to maintain a home, or those who would like to be home owners but, under the current system, cannot afford to buy a home, that we believe the system is biased against their dreams and that we wish to remove that bias.

There is no suggestion in this motion that it refers to anything other than the municipal taxes on a principal residence. The motion expresses no suggestion that anyone should necessarily have the right to deduct all of their municipal taxes on all of their property. If appropriate, I am perfectly prepared to discuss with Hon. Members opposite in committee whether there should or should not be a limit on the amount of municipal taxes which may be deducted. I believe all of those questions are still open and I am perfectly prepared to have that debate. However, my personal view is that the general principle of double taxation applies no matter how large a municipal tax bill one pays. It all comes from after-tax income. I do recognize the constraints on the Treasury and I recognize the political constraints. Therefore, I have put this motion in a narrow form so that we could take one small step toward recognizing the hundreds of thousands of Canadians for whom the dream is to own a home, but cannot do so today.

If we were to begin to say to those Canadians who wish to own a home that we will begin to remove this impediment, that tax equity means we should allow municipal taxes to be deducted in whole or in part and that we will adopt the Ontario system so that tenants and home owners are treated equally, both having the right to deduct municipal taxes paid directly or indirectly, we will be taking a step in the right direction. The scheme to which I last referred would refute the argument that was advanced during the last election by some Members opposite regarding tenants' rights. In fact, most of us support the rights of tenants, and I hope it is understood that I intend this motion to apply to tenants as well as home owners.

If we could take those small steps, we would be saying that as a simple matter of principle, we want to remove the bias against home ownership from the tax system and leave the system in a more neutral position. Not only would we remove the tax bias but, in a small way, we would be stating our intentions to encourage more Canadians to attain the dream of owning a home for themselves and their children. We would be encouraging Canadians to protect themselves against outrageous rent increases by buying a home. We would be encouraging the old Canadian tradition of saving for old age through a piece of equity which most Canadians were brought up to believe was the protection for their old age.

I offer this motion to the House in hopes that, because of its fundamental justice and because of its narrowness which eliminates the concern for those who, during the election, were worried about the breadth of this issue, I may obtain from my fellow Members of the House, in their private capacity during this hour of Private Members' Business, a recognition that action in the area of this motion is long overdue. I would therefore ask Hon. Member of the House today to allow this matter, if they possibly can, to be referred to committee for further study.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have the opportunity to speak on the motion of the Hon. Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley). I must say that the proposal he has put before the House this afternoon is interesting, and in some ways appealing. Any motion which makes something deductible that is not now deductible, thus reducing federal Government income tax, is at first blush very interesting, and perhaps very appealing. However, to say that the present system is an unfair form of double taxation may not be totally accurate and could perhaps be misleading.

The Income Tax Act applies to income whereas municipal taxes are levied against property. It is wrong to suggest that the same income is being taxed twice. Through municipal taxes, we are paying for certain services provided by the municipality, just as we pay for any essential goods and services provided by the private sector. Those private sector costs are paid with after-tax dollars. Does that mean that they should be tax deductible as well?

The fact that we pay federal income tax in no way supports the conclusion that municipal taxes should be exempt. It has always been an important principle of our income tax law that expenses in connection with property for personal use are not deductible, whereas those which are paid by a landlord are deductible because they affect business income.

I believe that we must look at the question of equity for renters. Property owners do receive an advantage over renters because the equity in their home or property is exempt from capital gains tax and, indeed, during the past few years when property values have risen rapidly this capital gain has been an important source of income for the retirement of many people, and has not been subject to tax. The tax deduction mentioned in this motion would again treat home owners preferentially. It would tend to favour the more affluent since they are more likely to own homes and have more valuable homes.

Regarding the position of landlords, it may be argued that landlords receive preferential treatment since they may deduct property taxes when computing their taxable income. However, the rental income of landlords is taxable and municipal property taxes, like other costs incurred while earning the landlord's business income, are properly deductible. The same does not apply to home owners and renters nor does it apply, of course, to the personal residence of a landlord. He can deduct the property taxes for the rest of his development, but for his own personal residence he cannot deduct those municipal taxes.

● (1730)

It might be argued that in some way renters could be allowed to claim the property tax deduction instead of landlords. This would no doubt result in landlords raising rents in order to compensate for their increased income tax liabilities. As a result, many renters would be left probably no better off, and those renters who pay no income tax because of their low incomes would be worse off. They would be paying higher rent but getting no tax advantage.

If, for some reason, it was decided to allow both renters and landlords to claim the deduction, the result would be an undue incentive for rental housing.

With respect to the cost of the proposal, it is estimated that full income tax deductibility of municipal taxes paid by home owners could cost some $1 billion in forgone federal tax revenues. The cost could rise to approximately $1.5 billion if the right to this deduction was also granted to those households—more than one-third of the total—who rent their homes, assuming landlords were also allowed to deduct the cost against their rental income. I suggest that is a significant figure. We are talking about $1.5 billion. If it is forgone because of the deductibility of one's personal municipal taxes or the resulting personal municipal taxes passed through to the renter, of course it has to be collected from other sources by the federal Government.

The consequences are that the federal deficit is increased by these very substantial amounts, the federal Government services to Canadians are reduced or an equivalent amount is made up by increasing federal taxes in another direction.

The motion implies that some further incentive is needed to increase home ownership, since it calls the present tax system an impediment to this goal. There is no strong evidence that the tax system is an impediment to home ownership. Approximately two-thirds of Canadian households own their own homes. This proposal would be a windfall gain for those households already owning their homes. It would be no incentive for them. Thus it would be a costly, inefficient form of incentive for home ownership. There is already a major program of incentive for home ownership in the form of registered home ownership savings plans.

I suggest we should look at the effects on other levels of government. The benefits to home owners from this proposal could be eroded in two ways: First, it would be easier for municipal councils to increase local taxes, knowing that the federal Government would absorb part of the added burden through the income tax deduction. This would mean a weakening of an important discipline on local governments by encouraging wasteful spending. It would also be an unnecessary and undesirable intrusion in provincial and municipal affairs.

Second, provincial Governments might well decide to take advantage of the situation by reducing their own transfers to the municipalities. They are already being reduced. The net result could thus be simply a transfer of fiscal resources from federal to provincial Governments with little or no benefit to the taxpayers. It would favour home owners as compared to renters, unless some way could be found of extending the deductibility to renters. It is a move which is not advocated by this motion.

It would favour the more affluent as compared to lower income families, since their tax savings from a deduction is greater as a result of their higher tax bracket. The deduction for the wealthy would likely be higher as well, since they live in better houses and pay higher property taxes.

There would also be inequities among provinces in the benefits provided. The level of property taxes varies significantly among provinces due to differences in methods of financing local Governments. Some provincial Governments finance a larger share of municipal services than do other provinces. The home owner in such a province would pay lower municipal taxes but higher provincial taxes. The deduction proposed today would discriminate against such home owners.

A number of provinces have instituted various forms of relief for property taxes. These amounted to a total of approximately $1 billion in tax credits in 1982. The introduction of a federal tax credit would lead to further interprovincial inequities. For instance, in the Province of Ontario there are significant tax credits for senior citizens. In some cases, I am told, this results in practically no municipal taxes being paid. This would further add to that. I doubt that it would really provide the equity that we should be seeking in any move in this direction.

In view of these complexities, it seems more reasonable to leave responsibility for municipal taxes to the provinces, which have the constitutional responsibility to determine the appropriate degree and nature of any tax relief for municipal ratepayers. While this proposal may seem to have a great deal of appeal at first glance, there are many complexities relating to it, such as equity between lenders and home owners, to home owners who own their homes and those who are paying them off, and many inequities between provinces which provide greater or lesser transfer payments. It seems to me that before such a project or proposal is adopted, it requires a great deal more consideration.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak very briefly on this subject. It is my intention to support the motion introduced by the Hon. Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley). I believe it is a very sensible proposal and one which would do much to stimulate home ownership and housing construction in Canada. I congratulate the Member for bringing this forward today. It is not a new idea, however. It was an integral part of the proposals to stimulate home ownership and housing construction by the Clark government in 1979. It is indeed unfortunate that that government did not stay in office long enough to implement some of its very worthwhile proposals in this field.

I could not help but rise to my feet when I heard the presentation by the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). He read a speech that had evidently been prepared for him by departmental officials, in which he said that the matter had been considered in great detail and discarded. From listening to his speech, I cannot see how any great deal of consideration had been given to these eminent proposals. For instance, he said that the costs of the scheme would be some $1.5 billion. If I listened correctly to the first Member who spoke, he did not propose full implementation. His idea was to allow a partial deduction. For instance, 50 per cent would be some $750 million.

We can look at other areas where the Government is spending money. It has spent $1.5 billion in Canadair and will likely spend more in order to "save"—we do not know if it will—just a few thousand jobs at best. The same type of approach has been taken toward de Havilland with $350 million going into that company. We know that it will have to sink more money into it in the years to come. When we contrast the proposed tax expenditure, or money that the Government will no longer collect, with moneys that the Government is spending on these other porkbarrel type programs and expenditures, it will be seen that the amount of funds involved is something quite reasonable. I do not believe that we can write it off out of hand without studying it in the detail that it deserves, and the detail into which evidently the Hon. Member for Algoma has not gone.

• (1740)

In a typical Liberal fashion, Sir, he says to contrast the simple straightforward proposal put forth by the Hon. Member for Don Valley West with the Registered Home Ownership Program presently in the Government's portfolio of crazy ideas. The RHOSP Program is a typical Liberal program. It is very difficult, confining and very bureaucratic. It necessitates Government taking money, giving it back again, and very detailed treatment as regards taxation. It is something typically bureaucratic, the type of thing you would expect from the Liberals, whereas the proposals coming from this side of the House have been very simple and straightforward, a simple deduction contained on one line of the income tax form. One does not need a doctorate in accounting to be able to figure it out. Everyone can understand it. It is a great idea, Sir.

The proposal has been criticized by Hon. Members on the other side in that it perhaps would encourage municipalities to increase their taxation. That is not necessarily bad if they could do that without increasing the effect on the taxpayer. Municipalities are strapped for funds. They have very limited areas of revenue generation available to them. Nearly all of their revenue comes from property taxation, and they have worthwhile things to do. I suggest that were municipalities able to collect a little more money through the jurisditional area given to them, property taxes in particular, then they would not have to be scrounging to provincial or federal Governments. They would be their own, men, so to speak, and I would like to see that happen.

I do not like the idea which is so prevalent among Hon. Members on the other side, that the federal Government should get in there and tax everything and not allow any room for the other two levels of government. The federal Government takes everything, then gives back to the provinces and to the municipalities, either directly or through the provinces, some of this tax money. In my opinion, there should be a proper amount of tax room for all three levels of government sufficient for them to carry out their duties and responsibilities in their jurisdictional fields without having to go to other levels of government.

There was a suggestion made by the Hon. Member for Algoma that such a program might disproportionately favour people in the middle-income bracket. The Hon. Members opposite always pretend that they are the great friends of the poor and are not really concerned with the average Canadian or the person who would like to have a little higher income than he or she does at the present time. I do not believe this is a strong objection to the proposal.

I understand that in the Province of Ontario where there is a provincial system of rebates for municipal taxes, it has managed to address this problem. It does it in a way and manner which is both fair to the owner and to the tenant.

In the Northwest Territories where there is a territorial rebate of certain municipal taxes, that is done in a simple way, but in a way which is quite fair. Rebates are given at a rate of 50 per cent of the municipal taxation up to a limit. So if one has a 4,000 square foot home and is obliged to pay $3,000 or $4,000 a year or more in municipal taxes, one cannot get 50 per cent of $4,000 but just 50 per cent of a certain amount up to a maximum. It is not entirely equitable but it is reasonable. Everyone sees that an attempt has been made at fairness and there are no real complaints about that. So I do not really agree with the objections put forward at all.

My final comment is that, in my opinion, it is a form of double taxation. It is the same type of double taxation which we now have in the case of mining or oil and gas companies. There is no deduction made for provincial royalties paid when it comes to computing federal income tax. It is that type of approach to life which makes it seem that the Government, in its wish to get more and more revenue, is not willing to take into account anything which might be fair and reasonable if it would decrease revenues which it might otherwise obtain.

We think we are good at thinking up new taxes here, but taxes have been around for thousands and thousands of years. In ancient Alexandria in Egypt 2,000 or more years ago they had thought up nearly every method of taxation and revenue raising that we have today. However, they thought of one more, and I do not really like to bring this to the attention of the Government because it might very well adopt it. However, what they did in ancient Alexandria, Sir, is make it necessary, after you paid all of your taxes, to get a tax receipt to show to the enforcers that the taxes had been paid. Someone had the bright idea of a tax payable on getting your tax receipt, a tax on taxes paid. I just throw that out in case Hon. Members opposite might want to raise another few thousand dollars from hard-working and already oppressed Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Garnet M. Bloomfield (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, it is with a lot of feeling that I enter into this debate today. Having been involved in the 1979 election and believing that it was not a fair tax at that time, I have no notion of being in support of it today. This motion tells us a great deal about the relative priorities of those who would advocate its adoption. It would cost the federal Treasury approximately $1 billion in lost tax revenues to carry out this proposal. That means the Government would have to find that much money in some way to provide this kind of tax benefit to Canadians who own their own homes. This could be done by increasing the deficit or borrowing the money at a time when both the Government and the Official Opposition favour reducing the deficit.

If this tax benefit were not provided by deficit financing, then it would be necessary to reduce other government expenditures, or increase other taxes to offset the cost. There is no free lunch, Mr. Speaker. One billion dollars is a great deal of money to offset. It would take some deep cuts in government services to Canadians or a substantial increase in the burden carried by taxpayers.

But let us assume that we can free up $1 billion in resources available to Government to spend where it thinks the need is greatest. What this motion argues, by inference at least, is that the $1 billion should be spent on Canadians who own their homes. It has been said that "to govern is to choose". We do not have unlimited resources. We have to choose our priorities. I believe we must help those who really need it most.

The last two Budgets set out a number of major priorities and announced a series of initiatives to meet them. Their goal is to build a strong and lasting expansion of the economy that will increase employment in Canada. I mention last year's Budget because its Special Recovery Program was planned for the medium term. Half of it was in the form of direct federal spending to provide new capital facilities that will increase competitiveness and generate new jobs. The other half was in the form of incentives for private investment to improve the competitive strength and job-creating capacity of the private sector. The Special Recovery Capital Projects will have their peak impact—estimated at $1.1 billion—in the new fiscal year just begun.

This year's Budget dealt with other high priorities: expansion of the youth opportunity fund to improve employment prospects for young people, new initiatives in employee profit-sharing plans, tax simplification for small businesses, pension reform, and increased security for home owners in the mortgage market. These are priorities of Government policy which have an important call on the available financial resources.

Do supporters of this motion claim that a billion-dollar tax benefit to home owners commands an equal or higher priority when it comes to allocating scarce fiscal resources? What would be gained by allowing home owners to deduct their municipal taxes from income subject to federal income tax? The motion states that this action would remove an impediment to homeownership for the average Canadian. I suggest that the level of municipal taxes has not been an impediment to a great many Canadians in deciding to become home owners, and the fact that two-thirds of Canadian households own their homes is an indication of that. Yet these are the people who would receive the bulk of the proposed tax benefit.

If we want to spend $1 billion as an incentive for Canadians to become home owners for the first time, surely the incentive should be targeted at them, not at those who have shown they no longer need that incentive. In spending Government money on new programs or tax incentives, it is vital that the money be used in the most efficient way possible. That means applying the incentive at the margin, to influence future decisions, and not using most of the financial resources to reward decisions that have been taken in the past.

Another important weakness in this proposal is that it would introduce a most regressive aspect to our income tax law. A basic principle of tax law is that citizens should be asked to pay taxes according to their ability to pay. Wealthier taxpayers should be expected to carry a proportionately heavier tax burden than those who are on lower incomes.

There is a great deal to be said in favour of leaving the responsibilitity for local taxes in its present form. It exercises a certain discipline in that people are directly responsible for their community expenditures. Having spent ten years of my life in municipal government, I believe that they really know where their dollars come from and where they go. I wish to thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity of putting on the record a few of those thoughts.

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I rise to speak on this Bill, I cannot help but relate back to the proposal of the Opposition when they were in government and the home owner's interest deductibility which would have cost the Government of Canada approximately $3.5 billion. It is not easy to find a valid rationale for adopting the proposal urged in this motion. Should it be in the form of an incentive for home ownership? The motion suggests that, since it describes the present tax structure as being an impediment to Canadians owning their own homes. Should it be done in order to correct a great defect in the tax structure? That seems to be the position taken in this motion, since it talks of correcting "an unfair form of double taxation". Or is it intended simply as a transfer to benefit home owners? It certainly looks as though that would be the result, if not the motive, and we should consider whether such a transfer is justifiable.

Let us look at the question of providing an added incentive to home ownership. The cost of this proposal in reduced federal tax revenues could be about $1 billion, assuming full deduction of municipal property taxes. That is a pretty rich benefit and the sponsor of the motion apparently recognizes that since the motion suggests there might be some limitation in the form of a ceiling on the amount of property taxes which could be deducted.

It is hard to accept the argument that the present non-deductibility of property taxes is an impediment to homeownership. About two-thirds of Canadian households live in their own homes—a remarkably high percentage by any standard. Therefore, if we are to regard this proposal as an incentive to homeownership, it clearly would be a very inefficient and wasteful one. Almost all of the tax benefits would go to those who now own their homes. And in any event there is little evidence that the level of municipal taxation is acting as a deterrent to those who might want to become first-time homeowners.

If we want to devote government financial resources to encouraging people to become homeowners, it makes sense that any incentive be directed specifically towards them and not diverted to existing homeowners. That is precisely the purpose of the existing tax provision for contributions into registered homeownership savings plans. The RHOSP tax benefit involves a cost to the federal treasury in forgone tax revenues of around $100 million a year. At last count some 540,000 Canadians were contributing to their RHOSP accounts. I should remind the House of the change to the RHOSP program introduced in the Recovery budget of April last year, allowing taxpayers extra tax deduction by topping up their RHOSP contributions to the maximum $10,000 in order to buy newly-built homes before the end of 1984.

In addition there are substantial amounts provided through Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation to a number of major housing programs to assist Canadians—including home renovation and rehabilitation, the financing of social housing for low-income households, and rental subsidies for households needing housing assistance. It must be obvious that this kind of approach is a far more effective way of using federal tax resources to improve the housing of Canadians. I would like to turn now to another argument made in support of the proposed motion—the idea that an income tax deduction for municipal property taxes would correct what the motion calls "an unfair form of double taxation". That is an intriguing and puzzling argument. It is true that homeowners pay their municipal taxes out of their income after paying federal and provincial income tax. But the same applies to payments of every form of tax that is not income tax—sales tax, customs tariffs, excise taxes, dog taxes, liquor taxes. Do all of these amount to double taxation? Are we to provide for income tax deductions for all of these other taxes as well, on grounds they constitute double taxation? That seems to be the logic of this motion.

I suggest that homeowners view their municipal property taxes as payments which finance essential local services. I doubt very much that they see these taxes as representing double taxation. I agree that property taxes are paid in so-called "after-tax" dollars—after payment of income tax—but the same can be said for every other purchase of goods and services. It is a far stretch to call this double taxation.

We must conclude that this proposal cannot be justified either as an incentive to homeownership, or as a necessary correction to some supposed problem of double taxation. We are left, therefore, with trying to justify the motion as a worthwhile and necessary fiscal transfer to homeowners. Can one argue that this is really a high priority area for the allocation of as much as $1 billion in federal government resources?

We hear much from the Opposition about the need to reduce the federal deficit, so one can perhaps assume that the sponsor of the motion would not want to increase the deficit by another $1 billion.

That leaves two alternative approaches. If we are to offset the cost of this proposal by reducing expenditures in other areas, the supporters of this proposal should take the responsibility of specifying which federal services should be cut. Or else they should make clear what tax increases they advocate in order to make up the lost revenue.

If we are going to find $1 billion by some general increase in tax revenues, the implication is clear: it means that taxpayers as a whole will be asked to subsidize homeowners. You would be asking families who cannot afford to own their own homes to provide tax assistance for those who do. Since home owners are generally at higher income levels than those who rent, this means seriously regressive taxation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—ISSUANCE OF LAY-OFF NOTICES TO WORKERS. (B) CONTRACTING PRACTICES—EFFECT ON RAILWAY EMPLOYEES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, about two weeks ago when workers in the western shops of the CPR in Winnipeg learned that a number of their workers would be laid off permanently they sent a telegram to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) protesting the lay-offs and urging the Minister to take some action to alleviate the hardships which would arise. Yesterday I brought this to the attention of the Minister and asked him to look into it. I also informed him that I had learned two days ago that a number of workers in the car shop in Winnipeg had been told that they would be laid off shortly. I asked the Minister to take action. Of course the Minister gave the usual reply that as a result of the passage of the legislation ending the Crow rate agreement there would be a substantial increase in the number of people working across the country and in Winnipeg.

I put it to the Minister yesterday, and I do so again today, that 57 full-time jobs are being terminated in Winnipeg in the diesel shop, the power house and the wheel shop operation. A number of workers who have worked for CPR in Montreal and Toronto are being moved to Winnipeg. This will cause a good deal of dislocation to them and their families. I also pointed out to the Minister that lay-offs are now taking place in the car shop.

I would like to remind the House what the Minister said on March 25, 1982. He said:

> We are talking about the kind of investment that will restore the urban centres of western Canada to their pre-eminence as transportation centres. We are talking about the creation of employment across Canada, from the steel mills in Sydney to the locomotive shops in Quebec and Ontario and the major urban centres of western Canada. The change in the Crow rate will have multiple benefits for every community across Canada. It will create employment.

That is the question to which I am trying to get an answer from the Minister. Where are these jobs? Why are these people being laid off?

The Minister can say that the new programs have not started yet and that it will take some time. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that Canadian Pacific is one of the largest, if not the largest corporation in Canada. In 1983 it had gross revenues of $2,430 million and a net income of $184 million, an increase over 1982 of almost 50 per cent. Canadian Pacific is a big, sound, profitable corporation. It got to the position it is in, Mr. Speaker, because of the benefits it received from the people of Canada. Since it was started it has received billions of dollars in grants, hundreds of thousands of acres of land, and untold mineral wealth. If this corporation cannot see its way to carry a few of its employees, for whom there is no work right now, until the time when they and the Minister have assured the people of Canada and their workers that they are going to expand their work force, that says something which is not very commendable about both the CPR and the Minister of Transport.

My second question to the Minister of Transport concerns another issue which has come to light with regard to both the CNR and the CPR. They are continuing and expanding a policy of contracting out work which they started some years ago. When I asked the Minister about that and urged him to do something about it, he said he would talk to the CPR. But he said, "you know, the railways have to be more efficient." What efficiency means when you put the word "efficiency', together with the words "contracting out" is that the railway lays off fulltime employees, permanent employees, who because they are permanent employees and because they are represented by unions have been able to negotiate a decent wage, working conditions and benefits for themselves. What contracting out does is to get rid of those employees and replace them with people who are casual employees who work only when the company has a specific job to do. They work for much lower wages and do not get the benefits and so on which permanent employees get. Studies have been done in Toronto, Windsor, and my own city of Winnipeg which indicate that contracting out services are not as efficiently done as work done by fulltime experienced employees. Contracting out services suffer from high turnover and poor workplace safety standards, and these jobs are often done at minimum wage and produce high returns for the agency—

• (1805)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. gentleman but his time has expired.

[Translation]

Mrs. Éva Côté (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, like other industrial and commercial businesses, CP Rail must occasionally redistribute its human resources and adjust its hiring operations according to the variations in the demand for its product, that is, rail transportation. The most recent staff reductions planned by the CPR in Winnipeg are the result of decisions reached by the directors to maintain an efficient and profitable service. I would like to emphasize that, as a private enterprise, the CPR is required to make profits for its shareholders.

In 1983, in spite of lay-offs and recalls of employees in various occupational groups, there was a net increase in the number of CPR shop employees in Winnipeg. If the current economic recovery keeps up, the opportunities for permanent jobs should continue to improve.

I would add that the temporary shop employees hired by CP Rail were warned at the time of their hiring about this situation so they would be sure not to quit more permanent jobs. In addition to that, the collective agreements covering the laid-off permanent employees protect them against excessive hardship.

The CPR alone has undertaken to allocate something like $450 million to equipment projects in 1984. The purpose of this record high expenditure program is to increase its capacity to move ever-increasing freight volumes. The program flows from the new Western Grain Transportation Act which, for the first time in years, requires payment for the movement of grain.

The CNR and the CPR have initiated many projects which will improve their ability to move the products of Western Canada. As the Minister has said: "We are embarking on a major economic development". The companies are now contracting for purchases and projects which will benefit nearly all the regions of Canada.

The purpose of work distribution by railway companies is not to avoid paying unionized workers. Companies bid for the equipment projects through the normal channels, and I can assure the Hon. Member that selection is made on the basis of price and quality of the proposals and not of the fact that the workers are unionized or not. On the other hand, both the CNR and the CPR have found out that most major contracts have been awarded to companies whose workers are unionized. In some cases, service contracts, such as herbicide spraying and cleaning services, have been awarded to small local companies whose employees are not unionized when they were the only bidders or those were the only services provided.

LABOUR CONDITIONS—SIZE OF LABOUR FORCE—STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION. (B) USE OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE FUNDS TO RETRAIN WORKERS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I take advantage of this adjournment debate to correct for the record some of the outrageously misleading statements of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts). I specifically refer to a question I put to the Minister on April 10, 1984, which can be found at page 2899 of Hansard. My question was prompted by the public musings of the Minister in Calgary, Alberta last week.

● (1810)

On Friday last, the unemployment figures were released by Statistics Canada. On that occasion the Minister, who should have been in the House to answer for the increase in the unemployment rate, was musing publicly in Calgary that the reason unemployment had gone up was that more people participated in the labour force. The actual fact was that the participation rate had gone down while the unemployment rate had continued to escalate for three months. So much for the Minister's knowledge of the labour force and the labour force survey.

The second thing he said in Calgary last Friday was that in his opinion more unemployment insurance funds should be targeted toward manpower training as opposed to income maintenance. He is the Minister responsible for unemployment insurance. When he finally came into the House on Tuesday, we put questions to him. I have referred to these questions.

I asked the Minister, if he is the Minister responsible for unemployment insurance and if he believes that more unemployment insurance funds should go into training as opposed to income maintenance, why does he not do something about it? That was the question. It is there for anybody to see. The Minister's answer, as I said, was outrageously misleading. He said:

> The answer is, of course, that we are. That is exactly what Section 38 and Section 39 of the Unemployment Insurance Act now permits . . . That is what we are doing to the extent of something like $1 billion a year.

The Minister went on to say facetiously:

> Once again the Hon. Member has shown his profound lack of knowledge of what the facts of the situation are.

The Minister has shown once again his profound lack of knowledge of what the facts are. Canada faces one of the greatest challenges in this modern time; that is, the training of our unemployed and the training of our work force to cope with technological change. There are many thousands of young people unemployed, a half million. Many people today are under-employed, especially women. Eighty per cent of the service sector is made up of women. They will be left behind unless we make provision now to train these people.

What are the facts? When the Minister made that statement in the House I checked with his office and then I checked the Estimates. I find that the Minister was wrong on all counts. Let us look at the current Estimates for 1984-85.

Under manpower training we find $259 million of the unemployment insurance fund targeted for training. That represents about 2.5 per cent of the total unemployment insurance paid out in this country. In trying to explain himself today, the Minister said he was not only talking about manpower training, but he was also talking about job creation. The record implies clearly that he was not talking about job creation but manpower training. Even if he was, the fact is that on checking the records we find that under the current Estimates only $207 million was targeted under UI for job-creation purposes. That is still only half of what the Minister said was being spent, if we take his word today that he really meant not only training but job creation as well.

The Minister does not know what he is talking about. He is preoccupied with other things. He is preoccupied with a losing campaign to save his credibility as a Minister, because we know he is not going anywhere in terms of the Liberal leadership of this country. Now he obviously has to do something about his waning credibility.

In his reply to me, incredibly he indicated for example, and I quote from page 2899 of Hansard:

> That is exactly what Section 38 and Section 39 of the Unemployment Insurance Act now permit.

Section 38 has absolutely nothing whatsoever to do with manpower training. There is not one cent being spent under Section 38. He obviously meant Section 37. Under Section 37 of the Act, only $25,000 is being spent to retrain some 50 workers. The rest is being spent under Section 39 of the Unemployment Insurance Act. That is an expenditure of $259 million a year.

We pay out almost $1 billion a month in unemployment insurance in this country. People who draw these benefits should be able to use them to be retrained; to be trained for new jobs, to be trained to cope with new technology, and be trained in the use of computers. We should be using the unemployment insurance fund to train women to meet the challenges of the new technology, to train the half million young people who will be left behind if we do not do something about training them now to handle the jobs with, hopefully, a little more emphasis on research and development and productivity, the jobs that will be created in the future if we can get our economy back on the rails.

This is a very serious matter. We have a right to expect that the Minister of the Crown responsible for training, employment, manpower and unemployment insurance would not only be here but that he would be well informed. Not only is he not here, but obviously he is ill informed. He is either ill informed, misinformed or deliberately trying to mislead the Canadian public. I know the Minister would not do that. I cannot accuse him of doing that, so he must be misinformed. Either way he stands indicted for incompetence.

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is easy to pick a particular month and compare it to the most current month and draw whatever conclusions one wants. The fact is, as previously stated, employment growth on an annual basis has been relatively favourable in comparison to labour force growth. Using the latest 12 months or the latest quarter compared to the corresponding one a year ago gives a more clear indication of the true situation. For instance, on a year-to-year basis, the absolute increase in employment between April 1983 and March 1984 was 242,000 while the labour force grew by 222,000. Comparing the first quarter of 1983 with the first quarter of 1984, employment grew at an annual rate of 334,000 while the labour force grew at an annual rate of 183,000. It is clear therefore that while the Government is still not satisfied with the high level of unemployment, jobs are being created at a faster rate than the growth of the labour force.

CANADA PENSION PLAN—ELIGIBILITY OF MARRIED WOMEN

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, my participation in today's late show flows from my intervention during Question Period yesterday. I have to admit that my intervention arose from a certain degree of anger and utter frustration because of a question from the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney). He threatened the Government with the usual defeat because, he said, we keep attaching a price tag or condition to any help that we might give to farmers or fishermen. On second thought, I felt I did not have to apologize for that anger I felt or the frustration. I felt it reflected very accurately the anger and frustration of the people who have put the farmers and the fishermen in their jobs, that is the wives.

We are all politicians in this House. I agree that probably the Leader of the Opposition is reacting to a strong lobby on the part of western farmers in particular. I do not fault the farmers for having made that lobby. They were probably putting forward their own legitimate claims. I do fault the Leader of the Opposition for his insensitivity to the fact that the people who need his help most are very often the inarticulate, the needy, those who cannot afford to present this lobby. Very often that is the housewife of Canada. Until these voices can be heard, regardless of the amount of money and regardless of their ability to articulate, we are not in a very good democracy. We have to admit that. It is our duty as representatives of all the people in Canada to make sure that we are attuned to the silent voice, which very often is the most needy. This is so, particularly when it comes to the plight of farm wives.

A few years ago, I was privileged to represent Canada at a symposium for rural women of America in Washington. It occurred to me that Canada could well do likewise and call a conference of the rural women of Canada to find out their particular problems.

Rural women do have problems which are different from those of women in urban centres. Obviously, one of the problems is isolation. Another is the amount of sheer hard work that must be done. Few city dwellers like myself will not admit that the work done by rural women is at least three times as hard as the work done by most men. For those rural women and for housewives in the city I am not asking so much for financial gain, but I am asking that a degree of dignity and justice be afforded them and that their work be recognized. The only way dignity and justice can be given to these women is by allowing them to contribute to the Canada Pension Plan.

The inclusion of housewives in the pension scheme would be a highly significant innovation which, to some extent, would recognize the economic worth of raising a family. As well, it would provide an element of financial independence for elderly unemployed women.

This idea is not a novel one, Mr. Speaker. For instance, such a program has already been adopted in Germany and France. In 1978, I had the Library of Parliament research a paper for me. I have been pursuing this question since my first election to the House in 1974. We have made some progress but not enough.

The National Action Committee on the Status of Women has asked that housewives be allowed to contribute to the Canada Pension Plan. More recently, our own parliamentary task force, with all-Party agreement, recommended that a homemaker pension be available to those who, in any year, work only or mainly in the home to care for a spouse, a child under 18 or a dependent and infirm adult relative living in the home.

I would like to repeat, Mr. Speaker, that I am not only asking for money. Money could be provided as, under certain circumstances; it is already being provided by the OAS and the GIS. I am asking for the recognition of the work done by these women throughout our country, and I am asking that they be accorded the justice and dignity they deserve.

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Government has been particularly attentive to the needs of women in formulating its action plan for pension reform which was released in the Budget of February 15. Before providing some details on the Budget proposals that will benefit women, I would like to point out that farmers' wives are already able to participate in the Canada Pension Plan if they work in the family business. As well, wives who work in the paid labour force do contribute to the Canada Pension Plan.

The Government announced an impressive list of proposals that will be of particular help to women. Bills to enact these proposals are now being drafted and will be introduced as soon as possible. Hon. Members will then be asked to ensure speedy passage of these bills so that their benefits will be felt at an early date.

Let me remind Hon. Members of the proposals to help women which are included in the Budget. These include a $50 per month increase in the Guaranteed Income Supplement for single pensioners. This proposal will benefit 750,000 elderly people, three-quarters of whom are women, and will ensure that they can lead a decent life. They include as well improvements to the Canada Pension Plan to ensure that survivor benefits are not terminated upon remarriage, that pension credits are split upon marriage breakdown and that pensions are split at age 65. These proposals will provide retirement income to women in their own right.

In addition, there is reform of private pension plans to ensure inflation protection, vesting after two years and splitting of pension credits upon marriage breakdown. There is improved survivor benefits, equal benefits for men and women, greater membership in private pension plans, major tax improvements to encourage retirement income and better information in respect of both public and private pension plans. Taken together, these proposals will ensure that working women receive in the future a much better deal from the pension system.

The Government has already sought the approval of provinces for changes to the Canada Pension Plan, and there is every indication that provinces will agree to their speedy enactment. Provinces have also been asked to reform private pension plans falling under their jurisdiction, and the federal Government will be working to achieve Canada-wide reforms.

While these are in themselves major reforms of the pension system, the Government is also committed to discuss later this year further improvements to the Canada Pension Plan. The issues which will be discussed with them include whether or not homemakers who work in the home should be covered under the CPP, survivors and disability benefits and the financing of the Plan. These are complex and difficult issues which will require careful consideration. The implementation of any major changes will also require consent of the provinces. I can therefore give the Hon. Member every assurance that the Government is fully aware of the matter which has been raised and is working diligently to ensure that elderly women do not live in poverty.

TRADE

SIZE OF SURPLUS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, despite continuing over-all balance of payments problems which have plagued Canada throughout the years of office of the Liberal Government, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has of late, in order to focus attention on some small bright spot in the economy, made frequent reference to recent merchandise trade balance figures which have been in Canada's favour. However, even in this traditionally favourable area we can see significant deterioration as a result of Liberal trade policy.

The February figures show a decline in external trade surplus of a billion dollars since January. The $2.1 billion January surplus has been reduced to $1.1 billion in February, surely a most alarming trend which, unless reversed, will result in further pressure on the Canadian dollar and, subsequently, higher domestic rates. We cannot allow Canada's financial relationships to worsen. Government policy has to be changed to encourage an inflow of funds into our country rather than the outflow seemingly favoured by the Liberals.

FUEL AND LOAN COSTS OF FARMERS

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, Manitoba farmers can expect little relief from the Government. This week the Farm Credit Corporation increased its lending rate to 15 per cent for long-term loans. At the same time the Government introduced Bill C-14 which will cut the effective rate of tax at the wellhead to 11 per cent for the oil companies, yet the Government continues to refuse to follow the lead of the Manitoba Government and eliminate sales tax on farm fuels.

In 1981 Manitoba farmers used 415 million litres of petroleum fuels in their operations that cost them the tidy sum of $124 million, of which $12 million was federal sales tax. I cannot understand why the Government continues to be so willing to give tax breaks to the major oil companies yet still refuses to give just a little relief to farmers.

It is not surprising that farm bankruptcies have increased by a staggering 58 per cent in the first months of 1984. This is supposed to be a year of recovery, but it is very clear that that recovery is not touching farmers. Instead of being an agency that is helping farmers weather these tough times, the Farm Credit Corporation seems to be doing all it can to make life more difficult for them.

I related an example of this the other day in the House when I told the story of a couple of young farmers who live in my constituency. They went to the Farm Credit Corporation looking for help to meet their loan payments, and were rebuffed. I call upon the Government of the country to do more for farmers, and to save the family farm in Canada.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

POLLUTION DANGER TO NIAGARA RIVER—UNITED STATES COURT ACTION

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, Canada's Minister of the Environment (Mr. Caccia) pondered and stalled during the time allowed by United States District Court Judge Curtin for Canadian intervention on the proposed Niagara S-Area cleanup settlement between Occidental Chemical Corporation and the United States Government. That time has now expired and, except for the Province of Ontario, the court offers only friend of the court status to others, limiting the opportunity to present and challenge evidence, to appeal the court decision, or to monitor conditions of settlement.

Environment Canada's consultants have determined that the proposed settlement is unsatisfactory. Canadian environment officials say that there are no guarantees that the containment program will do the job necessary to protect Canadian interests in the Niagara River. Too late the Minister cries foul, and says that he will once more ask the United States Government to withdraw from the cleanup plan and get on with the removal of the S-Area chemical dump.

There has been enough talk, Mr. Speaker. The Government of Canada can become involved, if not directly then by actively assisting the citizens' groups which propose to file a lawsuit, if they have not yet done so, against Occidental Chemical for alleged environmental damage created by that dump site.

INDUSTRY

INCREASED PRODUCTIVITY IN MANUFACTURING

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, I would like to counter the negative and false statements made by the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) by drawing to the attention of the House a Statistics Canada report released last week which stated that, in 1983, Canadian manufacturing employees produced more for every hour worked than they have since 1971. In fact they out-performed all of our competitors. We also discovered last week that productivity in manufacturing increased by 6.9 per cent last year, and in the commercial sector it increased by 3.3 per cent.

By increasing productivity growth we have conquered one of the major economic maladies afflicting the country. This peak in Canadian productivity is reason enough for the government, and indeed for all Canadians, to smile. Among other positive benefits, productivity growth improves Canada's competitive position in international markets, is a key factor in determining the growth in our standard of living, and will give us strength in continuing to fight inflation.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has said: "Past performance and past spending habits will not sustain us in a fiercely competitive international marketplace. We must become better than the competition—better at producing and marketing goods and services—and better at working together for the shared economic interests of all Canadians". It is my firm conviction that the Government's economic program of action is definitely one which is leading Canadians from recovery to expansion.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

INITIAL GRAIN PRICES

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, announced to farmers today was the startling news that the initial price of grain has dropped very severely to 27 cents per bushel for Hard Red Spring, and 54 cents per bushel for Durum. In the past week our leader has called for a western grain stabilization payment and a formula which would make payments to farmers to alleviate cashflow problems faced by farmers at this time.

The Government has increased fuel costs by 100 per cent in the last four years. The cost of production has risen very significantly. Interest rates have risen. Farmers simply cannot stand up to the costs of production they face today.

The former House Leader of the Official Opposition has called on the House Leader of the Government to bring about quick passage to the western grain stabilization program, but the Government has refused to act. Surely the Government must have more confidence in the farmers of western Canada and in the other farmers of the nation. I call for western grain stabilization and the disbursement of a billion dollars which would assist—

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

CONDEMNATION OF SASKATCHEWAN GOVERNMENT'S POLICIES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, last Wednesday the House witnessed a shocking display of indifference by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and ignorance by the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) on what the NDP has advocated for many months, namely, the removal of the federal sales tax on diesel fuel for farmers and fishermen.

The Opposition Leader finally discovered Saskatchewan. He finally discovered the issue. In so doing he showed a wanton disregard for the facts about Saskatchewan and its incompetent Conservative administration. The Leader of the Opposition stated that the removal of the tax need not add to the deficit. The Prime Minister is ignorant of what was going on in Saskatchewan and so is the Leader of the Official Opposition. They could have pointed out that under two years of Conservative government, unemployment has doubled, housing starts are down, and bankruptcies are up. In three budgets in two years the good successful business Conservative Government has managed to run up $830 million in deficits, yet the Leader of the Official Opposition says the deficit is a prime matter with which he would deal.

Whether or not the deficit goes up, those excise sales taxes must be removed to help farmers and fishermen. With respect to the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Official Opposition, it is a case of the blind leading the ignorant.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ADMINISTRATION

LIBERAL LEADERSHIP RACE—RULES APPLICABLE TO MINISTERIAL STAFFS

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. The Prime Minister has now met, I take it, with all the leadership candidates, unless another person threw his hat in the ring this morning. Yesterday my colleague, the Hon. Member for Durham-Northumberland, asked the Prime Minister to clarify the ground rules respecting the activities of persons on government payrolls who are actively involved in the leadership campaign. Do those same rules, though ill defined, apply as well to the staffs of Ministers who are not in the leadership campaign as individual candidates? Do those same rules apply to the ministerial staffs—the rules which the Prime Minister has laid out for those in the campaign itself?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, they do.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Prime Minister for that answer. After the Prime Minister's meeting with certain candidates—and I said that the rules, at least for this House, were still unclear—the Minister of Agriculture, who is known for his public approach to these things—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp: —said this—

Mr. Beatty: Where's the beef?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp: —the Minister said:

> Mr. Trudeau told Ministers they could not travel with political staff when on government business. When you're a Minister, you're still a Minister . . . You're allowed one staff person to travel with you for government business, but that staff person must not be involved in politics. Staff people who work, you know, on a Minister's staff, the staff take a leave.

Is that an accurate reflection of the guidelines the Prime Minister gave to the candidates?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe I listened attentively. It seems to me, whether the Minister was misquoted or not, he began by saying the contrary to what he went on to say later.

Mr. Beatty: That is Eugene.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: It may be.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I know the Opposition are sometimes reluctant to ask the Minister questions because they are never quite sure what he is going to answer.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mayer: He doesn't either.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Pierre, you may push him to the front of the contest.

• (1120)

Mr. Trudeau: The House is in a good mood. May I ask your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, not to count this as a supplementary so that the Hon. Member could reread that quotation? It seemed to me that it did not quite flow.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Prime Minister's dilemma. We have had that dilemma with the Minister of Agriculture for a long period of time. If I am right in—

Mr. Trudeau: Just quote it.

Mr. Epp: The quote is this:

> Mr. Trudeau told Ministers they could not travel with political staff when on government business. When you're a Minister, you're still a Minister . . . You're allowed one staff person to travel with you for government business, but that staff person must not be involved in politics. Staff people who work, you know, on a Minister's staff, the staff take a leave.

That was the quote I gave.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member will realize, the first phrase which the Hon. Member read is contradicted by the following phrases. I can only ascribe that to the confused press, as usual. They obviously quoted the Minister badly. The Hon. Member would not do that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I noted the phrase that the Minister could not travel with political staff when on government business. That, of course, is not correct, and that is not the guideline. Ministers, when they are on government business, sometimes need departmental staff and they are entitled to travel with departmental staff. But there is no intention to exclude a Minister from also having exempt staff so-called political staff, when he is going on business. He may be on government business but very appropriately at some point be engaged also in political business. So I cannot accept that statement of the Minister's alleged intentions. I am quite sure he did not say that.

REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF GUIDELINES

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): I have a supplementary for the Prime Minister. I appreciate the Prime Minister's explanation that political staff for ministerial travel is a necessity. I have no argument with that. But Canadians have a right to know the exact guidelines which will apply.

In view of the obvious confusion the Prime Minister has, that he claims the press might have and since Canadians have a right to know, and especially in view of the fullsome answers he gave yesterday on the same subject in which he said that these areas were worth looking into, for instance, people on contracts and so forth, would the Prime Minister be willing to make these guidelines public? In that way both Members of the House and the public would actually know the guidelines applicable to Ministers who are in the campaign and to other Ministers and their staff who might obviously be supporting the various candidates? Then we and they would both know the guidelines which the Prime Minister will insist upon during the campaign.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I beg the Hon. Member's indulgence. I believe he started by saying that I had conceded that I was confused. I did not concede that. I conceded the press might be confused, and that the Hon. Member might be confused.

It seems to me I have answered questions very directly in the House, and I will continue to do so. I have no written guidelines. I do not intend to make any written guidelines. On the use of government aircraft, the guidelines are written, but they were written for ministerial conduct generally, whether they are on leadership business or not.

On the general practice of not using departmental staffs for political business on government time, this is a rule which applies all the time whether you are on leadership endeavours or not. The sole reason I held discussions with the leadership candidates, Mr. Speaker, was to make sure that there was no unfair advantage taken by one Minister, or one candidate, over another by the fact that they were not using their staff in the same way. So in reality I got together with them to repeat guidelines which apply to Ministers all the time and, therefore, which continue to apply even more deliberately in the leadership campaign.

We expect further refinements of those guidelines during a campaign, and I explained those to the House too. For instance, an executive assistant is political staff. He is exempt staff. He can engage in politics. However, if the Minister were to use that executive assistant or special assistant to work not on his general political obligations, constituency obligations, and so on, but to recruit delegates, or to organize the leadership campaign itself, at that point I made it clear that there should be a leave of absence or a resignation. That is more in terms of not seeking particular advantage over other candidates rather than that it would be somehow improper to use taxpayers' money for political purposes.

• (1125)

As I pointed out, the Leader of the Opposition's exempt staff uses taxpayers' money for political purposes; that is not objectionable. However, I believe the Hon. Member's former Leader showed that, during their leadership campaign, he did not intend using his position of having exempt staff as Leader of the Opposition in order to give himself an unfair advantage.

Mr. Nielsen: He did not.

Mr. McGrath: He resigned.

Mr. Trudeau: That is what I say. I think he set a good example for what we are doing. He handed over the leadership of the Party, difficult as the decision must have been for him, to the Hon. Member for Yukon. I do not condone his choice of substitute, but I do think his principle was right.

Mr. Nielsen: You will never forget it, either.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ROLE OF MICHAEL RONAN—REQUEST THAT GUIDELINES BE PUT IN WRITING

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister now says there could possibly be revisions in the guidelines in the future.

Mr. Trudeau: No.

Mr. Friesen: That is just what you said. The Prime Minister said just now that in the future there could possibly be revisions to the guidelines. It seems to me that he is encouraging confusion, and possibly suspicion, if there are no defined, written statements on what those guidelines are. I urge the Prime Minister, in order to make sure that the press and public of Canada understand what acceptable conduct is, that there be clearly defined statements in a code of conduct for those people.

Recently, in answer to a question by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Durham-Northumberland, the Prime Minister said: "It is worth looking into" namely, the proper role of persons who have a government contract and are actively working on a candidate's leadership campaign. Has the Prime Minister checked, and can he report that no one on contract to the Government is spending a major portion of his or her time on political activities on behalf of a leadership candidate?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I did check, Mr. Speaker. I checked into the case of one Michael Ronan, I believe, which was brought up in the House. I found, as I had surmised, that he was on contract, but only part-time. I understand he works a maximum of three days a week on contract. Therefore, the other three days are his to spend as he wishes, either engaging in business with the private sector or involving himself in the political process. That is exactly as I had surmised it would be, and I even said that exempt staff who want to work on weekends, or for that matter civil servants who want to involve themselves in that kind of political activity permitted by the Public Service of Canada regulations, are entitled to do what they want with their off-time. So I am not making any revisions. I do not see any need to.

As to a written code of conduct, Mr. Speaker, I am used to making deals, and I can make a very simple deal. If the Leader of the Opposition will spell out a code of conduct for his exempt staff, I can tell him that ours will be the same or more severe. I gave the example of greater severity in my answer to the previous question. I do not think the Leader of the Opposition has even explained to his own Member what the code of conduct is for his exempt staff. But if he does, and it is a proper one, I will obey the same rules, except with a bit greater severity for the leadership candidates.

● (1130)

ROLE OF DAVID ZUSSMAN

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister mentioned his view of the work of one of the members of the exempt staff, Mr. Michael Ronan. What is the status of Mr. David Zussman? He promised to check into the activities of that gentleman as well.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did check into that too. I found out that Mr. David Zussman occasionally travels with his minister. He assists the Minister when the Minister is involved in particular departmental meetings of discussions. I was given two examples. One was when Mr. Chrétien met with the Newfoundland Minister, Mr. Bill Marshall, last week. In that instance Mr. Chrétien was assisted by Mr. Zussman. I am told the same is happening today. There is a meeting arranged with the British Columbia Minister on department related matters.

POSITION OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It concerns the 1986 World Fair to be held in Vancouver. It seems to be on the verge of being cancelled today or tomorrow by Premier Bennett of British Columbia. Would the Prime Minister confirm that he told a journalist, Harvey Oberfeld of British Columbia Television, yesterday, referring to the Fair: "Really, I don't care about it at all"? Would the Prime Minister confirm that he said that? Is that the attitude of the Government of Canada toward this Fair?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I really do not know if I should blame the Hon. Member or the reporter. I remember the circumstances very well. I was returning to Parliament after lunch and was met by a rather pleasant reporter who had tried to talk to me before. I stopped for a moment and asked what he wanted. He said: "There's a lot of discussion and controversy", I believe were his words, or "a lot of questions". I wish we had the tape. I am not sure what was reported. However, I do know the question was of the nature that there is some controversy on the holding of the Fair in British Columbia. I said: "I don't car about that", or "it". That is my position. I do not want to be involved in that controversy, and I do not care about it.

If indeed I was reported by that reporter as saying that the "it" was referring to the Fair rather than to the controversy, I say this is another example of why I do not want to go to the Goddamn press gallery dinner tomorrow night.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: That is unparliamentary.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order, Mr. Speaker. Withdraw.

Mr. Nielsen: He said goldarn.

MINISTER'S MEETING WITH BRITISH COLUMBIA PREMIER

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. I will ask him to show the courage of the Sikhs and the acrobatics of the Shandong Troupe in dealing with this.

I would like to ask him seriously about this Fair. After all, the federal Government has put over $100 million into the Fair. The Queen, very publicly in the stadium in British Columbia, invited nations to Canada to take part in the Fair. Would the Prime Minister confirm that, on behalf of the Government, Senator Austin is meeting with Premier Bennett? Would the Prime Minister indicate to the House whether his Government has ever received any information that perhaps the public has not had, with respect to a financial analysis of how much this Fair is going to cost? Presumably the Government received that before putting about $120 million into the Fair.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the first part of the question, the federal Government is deeply involved. It is contributing $120 million, as well as putting enormous value in services at the disposition of the holding of the Fair. Not only is the Government building a very prestigious edifice in honour of and at the time of the Fair, but also I have personally, in my correspondence with leaders of other Governments, and in my travels, talked about the Fair and in many cases exercised some subtle pressure to get other countries to participate in the fair. That is why I am somewhat indignant at the interpretation given by the Hon. Member or by the media that, in a sense, the federal Government is not interested in the Fair.

We did look very closely at the financial situation of the Fair. I think we bargained quite well and fairly to make sure that we would pay a fair share of the Fair and be involved in the right way. We were very conscious of the danger of overruns. We all remember the experience of the World Fair in Montreal in 1967. I think all Governments now, provincial and federal, are very careful in such events to make sure that costs are kept under control.

Senator Austin has a mandate to hold discussions with the Government of British Columbia to ensure that our funds will be appropriately used and that the taxpayers of Canada will not be involved in paying surpluses or overruns which were not part of the bargain. In that sense, without having followed the file very closely, I can only commend Premier Bennett for making sure that cost overruns are held to a minimum. I am sure that Senator Austin will want to co-operate with the Premier to make sure that, from our point of view, that will be the case.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, surely the Prime Minister is not commending Premier Bennett for announcing a World Fair without having any financial analysis of how much the Fair is going to cost.

MINISTER'S MANDATE

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, the construction unions have proposed a no-strike contract, a waiving of the affiliation clause, that is, to work with non-union people, which is not traditional, and that the work will be done at a negotiated rate. Does that not sound fair? It looks like Premier Bennett may cancel the Fair on what are really ideological grounds.

If the Prime Minister is in favour of the Fair, has he given Senator Austin a mandate to have the federal Government run the Fair and pick up the cost of the Fair if the provincial Government backs out? Is that the extent of Senator Austin's mandate?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No Sir, not at all. I said exactly the contrary, Mr. Speaker. Senator Austin is not mandated by the federal Government to spend any more money than we have already agreed to spend. If there are cost overruns we do not intend to pick them up. Therefore it is proper for the Premier of that province to make sure that costs are held under control. He must do it within the law, and I suppose within proper boundaries of fairness.

I can recall that Premier Barrett of British Columbia, who was of the Hon. Member's Party and allegiance, scotched the 1972 Olympics for Vancouver, for Whistler Mountain, because he felt the province could not afford it at the time. I did not particularly agree with that, but I think he was wise to make the cost a very important factor of his decision. If Premier Bennett is doing like Premier Barrett, it would seem to me the Hon. Member should be the last to complain.

MUSEUMS AND ART GALLERIES

CANADA MUSEUMS CONSTRUCTION CORPORATION—FUND RAISING PROJECT

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. It is with regard to cabinet approval for a secret, private, fund-raising campaign of the Canada Museums Construction Corporation to raise an additional $25 million from corporate and private donors for the new National Gallery and the Museum of Man. Will the Minister assure the House and the 1,750 non-profit museums and galleries that this is a one-time only project, and that the Museums Construction Corporation will not go after the same corporate and private donors who are likely to donate to the regional museum sector? Or is this a new principle of fund raising that the Government intends to expand?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the question. I would like to congratulate him on becoming the official critic for the Opposition on matters of culture and communications.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fox: If this is a secret decision, it is indeed a badly kept secret, with press releases actually being put out about this secret cabinet decision.

• (1140)

The Hon. Member may know, after having read the press release which was put out yesterday by Mrs. Boggs, the Chairman of the Museum Construction Corporation, that Mrs. Boggs does indeed consider that the moneys made available to her by the Government are sufficient to build the two galleries. However, as pointed out by Mrs. Boggs, if the two galleries are to reach a standard of excellence in appearance, which we would all like to see in the National Capital, there may be some need to enrich the amount of money necessary to meet those purposes. For instance, replacing the originally planned brick front of the buildings with stone cladding is a single example.

With respect to the question of raising the funds, the amount of money required has not yet been determined. I expect that the board of the Museum Construction Corporation will be reporting to me on that during the course of the month of May.

I would like to indicate, in response to the Hon. Member's very serious question, that it is indeed a once in a lifetime campaign on the part of the museums. We would very much like to see Canadians across the country have the opportunity to contribute to the museums and to feel pride in having done so.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): I thank the Minister for communicating his good wishes. I will try not to make life too difficult for him. You fellows are having enough problems over there.

FUNDING OF REGIONAL MUSEUMS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, an internal memorandum of the National Museums Corporation warns against this kind of action, and notes that this fund raising attempt will be in competition with other museums and other arts organizations for what is really a very finite amount of dollars. Since the fund raising will free up some federal moneys, is it now the Minister's intention to ensure stable funding to the regional museums?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that there is a program within the National Museums of Canada which has as its main object putting funds into the hands of regional museums. I would hasten to add that, as far as regional museums are concerned, whether or not they have associate status with the National Museums of Canada, there is also a responsibility on the part of provincial Governments, municipal Governments, and the municipality within which a museum is located, to help find the necessary level of financial support for a museum.

In regard to the general question of fund raising, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member, because of his obvious attachment to another political Party at Queen's Park, that the Royal Ontario Museum is embarking on the same type of campaign.

FISHERIES

REOPENING OF GEORGETOWN SEAFOODS PLANT IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. There is growing uncertainty in Prince Edward Island surrounding the Minister's plans for reopening the Georgetown Seafoods plant in time for the new fishing season which begins in a couple of weeks, in early May, as he knows. Given that the ownership of the plant has not yet even been transferred to the new owner, National Sea Products, let alone the plant reopened, would the Minister tell the House what specific plans he has in mind, and what specific schedule he has in mind, for the reopening of that plant?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. First, I would like to remind him that the Official Opposition has taken a stand that National Sea should remain in private hands. That message was listened to by the Government.

Second, the Government decided that one of the conditions for our financial assistance to National Sea, to the private sector, is that they should also have the Georgetown plant within their company. Hopefully, as a result of the support of the Prime Minister, Cabinet, and particularly of the regional Minister for P.E.I., the company has accepted that request of the federal Government and has accepted to buy that plant for $1. The federal Government has committed to give up to $2.3 million in financial assistance to start up costs. Finally, we have also added 5,000 tonnes of Gulf red fish in order to add to the 5,000 or less that Nickerson used to truck to the Georgetown plant in the past. Thus, it will be part of National Sea which will be controlled by the private sector as the Hon. Member's Party has suggested.

SALE OF PLANT—REQUEST FOR GUARANTEES OF FUTURE

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, the Minister just said that the plant in question is to be sold to National Sea Products Limited for $1, despite the fact that the plant will be worth approximately $5 million after the Government itself invests $2.3 million into upgrading that plant.

In light of what he has just said, would the Minister tell us what guarantees the federal Government has obtained from National Sea Products in case that parent company gets into financial difficulty and is no longer able to operate the plant? What guarantees has it been able to get from the company to ensure that the assets of the plant and the fish allocation associated with it revert to Prince Edward Island and to Georgetown, rather than being absorbed into any financial difficulties, even bankruptcy, that the company concerned might incur?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, we cannot have it both ways. There is nobody in Canada whose job is guaranteed. What the federal Government has done is go to the limit of investing whatever money is needed to restructure that company along the wishes of the private sector. When you ask me what guarantee there is that the company will never fail, I frankly ask how the Hon. Member can put a question like that.

Every day, thousands of companies go under, and thousands of new ones are formed. All I can hope is that the private sector which has taken control of the company and has shown confidence by investing up to $20 million, will prove to be good managers. The federal Government, as the Hon. Member would admit, has gone to the extreme limit of allowing the private sector to show their capabilities. Of course I cannot guarantee to anyone in Canada, whether in the public or private sector, that they do not have to compete in this very competitive world.

REFUGEES

DEPORTATION OF SIKHS

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, the Federation of Sikh Societies of Canada is concerned that there are Sikhs under refugee status in Canada who are daily being deported. In the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. It concerns the Sikhs who are daily being deported at this time to Punjab, India.

Is the Prime Minister aware that the new National Security Act in India may mean that these deported refugees could be jailed without trial? Would he consider asking his Minister to hold these deportation orders in abeyance until something could be negotiated with the Federation of Sikh Societies of Canada, which is the national body of Sikhs, to enable these refugees to remain in Canada? In other words, would the Prime Minister undertake to ask his Minister of Employment and Immigration to hold discussions with the Federation on this important matter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot comment on the particular events and recent ones to which the Hon. Member is referring, but I do know the subject and I have heard of the problem. I have even discussed it with the Prime Minister of India on one occasion. I certainly will undertake to follow up with the Minister and try to ascertain if the Government is in a position to do anything in this particular case of which, I repeat, I am not informed.

I have very great admiration for the Sikh people, having been to Amritsar and their glorious temple, having seen their valour and courage over the years, and more recently having been awarded a very great honour by that group of Sikhs. I must say that I will take it upon myself to ensure that the Minister follows up on the question.

GROUP SPONSORSHIP PROGRAM SUGGESTION

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the response of the Prime Minister. When he is discussing this matter with the Minister, could he suggest that one possible solution might be something that was done in the case of Vietnamese refugees whereby there could be group sponsorship programs for the Sikhs? I know that the Federation of Sikh Societies would be prepared to try to negotiate that type of arrangement. We would appreciate it if he would consider talking to his Minister in that regard. Could we have that undertaking as well?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not quite see the parallel that the Hon. Member obviously does, but I certainly will take notice of his question.

INDUSTRY

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES ON RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. As Dr. Kerwin, President of the National Research Council, has stated: "Each additional one per cent of Gross National Product that is spent on research and development will produce 800,000 new jobs". Since the federal Government's share of the national expenditure on research and development has fallen from 48 per cent in 1968 to 37 per cent today, will the Prime Minister advise the House why the federal Government has cut back its share, instead of giving leadership in increasing research and development and thereby providing the additional jobs which Canadians need so badly today?

• (1150)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I begged the Hon. Member the last time when we talked about research and development to check the facts. He has and, I might have known, he checked two sets of facts and confused them. First he says that our share has fallen, which is true, and then he says that we have cut back. It does not follow that because our share has fallen we have cut back. What could very well follow is that the other participants in research and development have decided to spend more, in other words, have followed the example of the federal Government.

The Hon. Member will remember that in our previous exchanges I said he was confused because he was talking about research and development as a global matter and blaming us for not doing enough. I said he should look—which he did, and I am glad he took my advice; he should do so more often—at the shares of the other participants and should realize that they have not been doing, in comparison with the private sector in other countries, and even with the academic sector in other countries, as well as they might. They heeded my advice. They are now spending more. They are spending a more reasonable share of the total. That is what is happening, and I am sure the Hon. Member will understand it if he spends the weekend on the problem.

Mr. Hees: I do not have to spend any time at all in absorbing what the Prime Minister has just said, as I will show the House.

INCREASE IN BUSINESS SHARE OF FUNDING

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister said in answer to my question on April 5, and I quote his words, "The federal Government is much more generous and farseeing in its participating in funding research than the provinces and the private sector", and as private business has increased its share of funding of research and development from 31 per cent to 41 per cent, while the federal Government has decreased its share from 48 per cent to 37 per cent, would the Prime Minister not consider getting the facts straight before he answers serious questions like the one I asked him last week and today, instead of misleading the House as he has done on both occasions?

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I obviously did not mislead the House because the Hon. Member started from my answer to do exactly what I said he should—check the facts. I think my previous answer should be studied with care by the Hon. Member.

Mr. Hees: Studied by you.

Mr. Trudeau: He would see that the private sector—and he noted the business sector—is properly spending more money on research now. Indeed, that is one of the things the Hon. President of the Treasury Board was advocating at the time when he brought in our excellent Foreign Investment Review Agency in order to force the private sector to spend more on research and development rather than do it all in the United States. The Hon. Minister's policies and those of his successors are being met with success and therefore these figures, but the fact remains that we have not cut back, which has the Hon. Member's allegation.

Mr. Hees: You cut back on your share, and that is cutting back.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, we have not cut back. We are spending more, and the Hon. Member knows it. Because other people are spending what they should does not mean we should cut back.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, did you ever hear a better example of trying to prove that black is white?

FISHERIES

DEVELOPMENT OF HYDRO FACILITIES IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—PUBLIC HEARINGS

Mr. Lorne McCuish (Prince George-Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The Aluminum Company of Canada has filed an application with the Province of British Columbia for development of hydro facilities in central British Columbia. There will be public hearings into this application. Is it the Minister's intention that his departmental officials will conduct these hearings or, alternatively, does he see the role of his departmental officials as being part of the panel together with the B.C. Utilities Commission which will hear interveners?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans has been having public meetings in several towns in British Columbia to hear the views of the people and to exchange views. My Department hopes that the B.C. Utilities inquiry will be a full and comprehensive one covering every aspect of the project. Also as the Hon. Member knows, that project is potentially most important and could have very important implications for fish habitats. Obviously those concerns have to be met.

In the last few days senior officials of my Department met with the president and executives of Alcan. The position of the Department is very clear. It is that, according to the law which governs our Department, we cannot allow a project of that size to be undertaken unless, of course, all the different safeguards concerning fish habitat are met.

I hope the B.C. Utilities inquiry will be a full and comprehensive one. I would gladly sit with my counterparts in the B.C. Government to ensure that the terms of reference of that inquiry are totally comprehensive.

Mr. Speaker: There are various Members seeking to be recognized. Could questions be short? A short supplementary, the Hon. Member for Prince George-Bulkley Valley.

FUNDING REQUESTED FOR INTERVENERS

Mr. Lorne McCuish (Prince George-Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, again my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. There will be a number of interveners. Is the Minister prepared to provide funding for the interveners and, if not, who does he see as being responsible for such funding?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I have given a lot of thought to that question and I would like to share my views with the Hon. Member. One of the duties of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans under the law is precisely to monitor any project of that size, or any project which could have implications on fish habitat. Half the workforce of that Department is paid by the taxpayers of the country. Almost 3,000 people out of 6,000 are scientists whose job is precisely to do what the Hon. Member is suggesting. I think it would not be prudent to have taxpayers pay twice—once to the officials of the Department to do an assessment of such projects and to release that information and, second, to fund groups which would like to make a second assessment of the projects. I think that once by the officials of the Department is enough. I am very happy to see the Hon. Member signalling to me that he concurs with my position.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize two Hon. Members for short questions, the Hon. Member for Assiniboia and the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

ANNOUNCEMENT OF INITIAL GRAIN PRICES

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, because there is no other Member from western Canada representing western farmers, I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. He will know how important the initial grain price and an announcement concerning it are to the farmers. Could he clarify just exactly what was the announcement and why it was not made in the House by some of his officials? I understand and know that the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board is in the other place, but surely western farmers deserve better treatment than the Government has been giving them.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member says that he does not know what the other Minister was saying, yet I understand him to say that western farmers deserve better treatment.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: What was the initial price? Why was it not announced in the House?

Mr. Trudeau: What is the allegation of the Hon. Member? Farmers are getting an initial price which is in tradition with what it usually is.

Mr. Nielsen: What is it? How much?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Hon. Members do not know. How can they say they are getting a bad deal if they do not know what that price is?

• (1200)

REQUEST FOR INFORMATION ON PRICE

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, surely the farmers of western Canada deserve better than this from the Prime Minister. In 1968—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the Hon. Member put his supplementary question?

Mr. Gustafson: My supplementary question is clear and simple. Will the Prime Minister indicate to the farmers exactly what the initial price is, or is he going to give the farmers the same answer he gave them in 1968 when he said: "Sell your own wheat"?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, they did not do badly selling their own wheat. They reached ever increasing records under the Liberal Government of Canada. The Hon. Member should not treat with contempt their abilities at selling wheat. I respected their abilities, and through the Wheat Board, which is their agent, they have done very well. The Hon. Member wants to know what the initial price is, yet he goes on to say that the farmers deserve a better deal. Let him find out what the initial price is and then he can decide if it is a good deal or not.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CRASH OF CF-18 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, I have a short question for the Minister of National Defence. We were saddened to learn this morning of the loss of life in a CF-18 yesterday. Does the Minister have a report on that accident, and will there be a full investigation?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Indeed, Mr. Speaker, it is a very sad event. I thank the Hon. Member for giving me the opportunity of offering condolences to Captain Milligan's family, his wife and children. A board of inquiry has been convened and the investigation is ongoing. I am not in a position to provide any details at this time. I do share the sadness of the event, having been very much involved in the whole CF-18 project. I hope we will be in a position to provide more information in the very near future.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 62—AGRICULTURE

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette) moved:

That whereas the economic problems facing Canadian farmers today are largely the result of Government inaction and neglect, this House condemns the Government for its failure to recognize the importance of the agricultural sector and its contribution to economic growth in Canada and urges the Government to move quickly to reduce the farm fuel tax, introduce a red meat stabilization plan, expedite the passage of legislation respecting advance payments, resist the erosion of initial payments for Western grain, pass urgently needed amendments to the Western Grain Stabilization Act, and reduce high interest rates and take steps to facilitate the introduction of agri-bonds.

He said: Mr. Speaker, agriculture has had some exposure in the House this week, and justifiably so. There was an NDP opposition motion on Wednesday and some questions today on agriculture. It is an important topic for this country. Too often many of us simply take agriculture for granted. One reason that happens is that farmers basically are very efficient. As they become more efficient, there are fewer farmers and, therefore, less political influence and political clout. Nevertheless it is a subject that is extremely important.

I will put a couple of figures on the record. This has been done many times by those of us who speak on this topic. Agriculture accounts for 20 per cent of the employment in this country. In addition, it is a very substantial earner of foreign exchange. I suspect that Canadian agricultural exports in the past year will amount to close to $10 billion, a lot of money. Although the figures are not yet available, if you look at 1982 and what has happened in 1983, I believe $10 billion is a conservative estimate of the amount of exports for which agriculture was responsible. One way to illustrate what $1 billion represents is to point out that $1 billion amounts to $400 per capita. If agriculture was responsible for exports of $10 billion, that represents $400 for each person in this country. It certainly helps the over-all economy of this country.

As farmers have become more efficient, in the last three or four years they have been farming away some of their equity. If you look at the figures for 1983 over 1982 you see that in 1982 on average—you have to be careful when talking averages because there are wide variances—approximately 16.2 per cent of disposable income was used to feed Canadians. In 1983 the figure went down to under 16 per cent.

Farmers can take some pride in their efficiency. However, it is well known that farmers have been losing money. There have been record bankruptices in this country, not only in the economy in general, but agriculture in particular. One reason they have been able to feed consumers in this country for a smaller percentage of their disposable income is that every time farmers sell what they produce, they sell off some of their equity, some of the value they have in their farm. This cannot continue if we are to maintain a healthy agricultural industry.

There are other ways to make the same point. The percentage of the consumer dollar that is spent on food which goes back to the farmer is decreasing. It used to be that 50 per cent to 55 per cent of what the consumer spent on food went back to the farm gate. It is now under 50 cents on the dollar. Closer to 46 or 47 cents of every dollar goes back to the producer. That tells us the kind of services available with food. We have food that is out of season and food that is pre-packaged. It has been said many times that you do not get a potato into a modern kitchen unless it is peeled, or somehow processed. That is what consumers take for granted. Very seldom does a store not have milk in stock and on back order. A sour quart of milk is replaced without question. We are served very well by Canadian agriculture.

I wish to make a few points about the way Canadian agriculture is treated relative to the agricultural industry in some other countries around the world. Canada is a relatively small country with a population of 25 million people or thereabouts. The United States has approximately 10 times the population of Canada, as has the European Economic Community. We realize that this Government or any Government of Canada would not be able to spend the number of tax dollars supporting agriculture that either the European Economic Community or the United States is able to spend simply because Canada does not have the industrial base against which to tax in order to support agriculture. We are not suggesting that the Government give more subsidies to agriculture but we are suggesting that there are some things the Canadian Government could do. At the end of my remarks, I would like to make some specific suggestions and point out some of the things the Government could do without increasing the deficit in any substantial way.

A popular word these days is "megaproject". The oil sands has been referred to as a megaproject, as have other things. It has been said many times and is worth saying again that agriculture is an ongoing megaproject. It is a $20 billion ongoing industry. However, this means that it is easier for the Government to take the agricultural industry for granted. It is an extremely large industry, though, and involves something like 20 per cent of the labour force when including all of the service industries and manufacturing industries attached to agriculture. I would like to make sure that the Government and consumers in general understand what a large factor Canadian agriculture is in the economy.

As I said previously, we are very dependent upon exports. On average, 50 cents of every dollar that a Canadian farmer earns comes from exports. It becomes very important for the Government to do what it can to keep us competitive with our international competitors. We must remain competitive because we are not in a position to enter into any kind of a subsidy war with either the United States or the European Economic Community. It is very important for the Government to understand what happens when it starts to tax Canadian agriculture. We must have taxation systems in the country which are as similar as possible to the taxation systems of our chief competitor, the United States.

Taking a look at the situation in the United States, something like $13 billion or $14 billion was spent by the American Government on the PIC Program. We cannot match those kinds of subsidies in this country. It therefore becomes very important that our input costs are as similar to American input costs as possible. My farm is located approximately 50 miles from the American border. A good number of people in the country live very close to the American border. If we were to go across the line and look at the input costs in the United States this spring, we would find that all of an American farmer's input costs are less expensive than they are in Canada. That includes fuel, fertilizers, chemicals, seed, machinery, repairs and everything else. A big chunk of the extra costs which we incur in Canada are the result of taxation.

Dealing with fuel, for instance, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) has told us how great the National Energy Program is because if we did not have that program and the Conservative Party had formed the Government, oil prices would have gone to world levels. The Minister has forgotten to say that a gallon of diesel fuel in the United States costs $1.20 or $1.25, yet the same gallon of diesel fuel costs 50 cents or 60 cents more in Canada. Spare us from what the Minister says is great because it is costing us more money and in fact putting us out of business.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) fail to point out that the Government places a tremendous amount of tax on farm fuels. I am suggesting that we had better be pretty careful when taxing some of these industries because to my mind, and I think a lot of people would agree with me, agriculture is a genuine creator of wealth in the country. If we do not realize this and encourage it and treat the agricultural industry as the Government treats the energy industry, this very basic, fundamental and productive industry will almost be taxed into oblivion. I can make that statement because there are a great many facts and figures to back it up, Mr. Speaker.

There are a few examples of this in southern Ontario and in fact in the Minister's riding of Windsor. In the last six weeks or so, I had a chance to talk to people who make their living in the tobacco industry. That industry is in an absolutely horrendous condition and will lose thousands of jobs this year largely because of the amount of taxation imposed by both levels of government. I am told that a package of cigarettes returns the producer something like six cents a package, yet the Government takes over $1 a package in tax. Without dealing with the morals of smoking, the point is that these producers exist and are very good at what they do. They have families and commitments and it seems to me that if we want to keep people on the land, we must look at the taxation imposed by governments.

A little over two weeks ago, I had a chance to talk to some people who work in the greenhouse industry and who are located very close to Windsor, the riding of the Minister. Those people told me that well over half their costs are associated with energy. A big chunk of the cost of energy is tax. We should get our act together because it seems to me that we will tax these producers out of business, which, in effect, is what some of these taxes on fuels are doing. This does not mean that Canadians will not eat cucumbers, lettuce or tomatoes; it simply means that those things will be imported from the United States.

It does not make any ordinary, common, barnyard sense for a government literally to tax an industry out of business and put Canadian producers out of jobs and then, in order to satisfy consumer demand, import fruits and vegetables from the United States. That creates jobs in the United States but does not do anything for Canadians. We all know that close to two million people in this country are unemployed.

Those are some of the questions which are being asked. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is experiencing these kinds of problems close to his own constituency. He should be responsible and sensitive to the entire Canadian agricultural constituency, but when the problems are that close in a physical sense to the area which the Minister represents and the Government is not prepared to do anything, it really makes me wonder what kind of understanding, if any, the Government has of the Canadian agricultural industry.

I would like to refer now to the Western Grain Transportation Act, a Bill which was passed in this House last fall. We know now that the figures we were given regarding the amount of capital expenditure to be made by the railways and the number of jobs that were to be created by breaking the Crow rate were wrong. When the railways tell us that they are now going to spend something like 25 per cent less on capital expenditures than they initially said they were going to spend because their costs are down and they can accomplish the same thing by spending less money, we wonder why the Government does not come forward and decrease the costs to the producers who are going to pick up a portion of these increases. We have not seen that happen yet and it is another example of how the Government is not concerned about Canadian agriculture. The Government is prepared to see an industry taxed and, in the case of the breaking of the Crow rate, is prepared to see an industry pay more than it should, on the one hand, and pay more than it is able to, on the other. This is something which concerns a great many people.

I would like to suggest to the Government some ideas which, if implemented, would help the financial plight of Canadian farmers now at a very important time. It is now the spring planting season and people are putting their crops in the ground. These suggestions would not only help producers financially but, almost as important and perhaps even more important, they would give farmers a morale boost. Farmers know that they cannot expect governments to bail them out of all of their financial problems. I believe that most producers are very realistic in that respect. If things could be done which would not add to the deficit in any substantial measure, it would be a signal to these people that someone cares and has a little bit of understanding of their serious financial situation. There would be encouragement and hope for the upcoming season and for the following year.

• (1220)

One of the things this Government could do would be to reduce the level of taxation on farm fuels. We have heard our Leader ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) whether that could be done. There was an interesting exchange in the House between them and there was some concern over the deficit. But let me make a suggestion. One of the ways we could decrease the amount of money that producers need in order to put their crops in the ground this spring would be simply to stop collecting the seven cents excise tax on farm fuels which the federal Governmment collects. That could be done without increasing the deficit. This excise tax is collected and then refunded.

The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) is not here at the moment. He is a very beleagered Minister these days. I think that is an understatement after having seen some of the fire under which he has been in the House. Removing that excise tax would not only help the Minister of National Revenue, because he would not have to administer the program, but it would also help the producers. They would not then have to lay out the seven cents a gallon, have that money tied up with the Government for six months, or worry about filling out forms in order to get it back. Eliminating that tax would signal to the farm community that this Government has a little bit of understanding and compassion. This would not add one red cent to the deficit, and it would make good, ordinary sense.

Let me talk about what happened today concerning initial payments. Initial payments are down. The Prime Minister asked what are they. They were announced this morning. The Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) who asked the Prime Minister the question today certainly knew. It was obvious the Prime Minister did not. But initial payments are down 27 cents a bushel for hard red spring wheat. They are down 54 cents a bushel for Durum, 11 cents a bushel for six row barley, 12 cents a bushel for feed barley and they are down in the order of seven or eight cents for the two classes of oats. But the point is that initial payments are down. That is today, Friday of this week.

On Monday we saw the Farm Credit Corporation substantially increase interest rates it is going to charge farmers for new loans. I don't know how to be positive about this, but we had a very, very depressing week as far as Canadian farmers are concerned. At the beginning of the week we were told that interest rates were going up. Interest is a big cost to farmers because they are large users of capital. At the end of the week we see a Government that is not prepared to support Canadian agriculture to guarante these prices. We see grain prices reduced substantially, 27 cents a bushel, which on a percentage basis is 5 per cent or 6 per cent. That is significant. In the case of Durum, the price is down over 10 per cent. I suggest there is room on world markets for a little optimism as far as prices are concerned. My guess is that when the smoke clears, and all the grain is sold, at the end of the coming crop year—and we are going to get a final payment—there will probably be a final payment on the prices announced today.

I see no reason why the Government should not have shown a little bit of faith in Canadian agriculture. It could have said: "We are going to guarantee that prices are the same as they were last year". It may cost us a little money as far as federal treasury is concerned, but if we are prepared to support the aircraft industry in Ontario and Quebec through Canadair and de Havilland by billions of dollars, surely we should be able to support this industry a little bit. It is a critical time of the year and we should give them some encouragement. The Government should be willing to do something on behalf of the agricultural industry.

I have suggested there are a couple of areas the Government could have acted on which would have provided some hope and encouragement to Canadian agriculture. If I am right in my assumption about grain prices, it would not have cost the Government one cent in increased deficit.

There are other things that could be done. We are in disastrous shape as far as research in Canadian agriculture is concerned. A major researcher in western Canada resigned this week because of his disgust at the situation. I cannot remember his exact words, but he threw up his hands at where this country is going in research. This Government could take that in hand. It could show some concern, some direction and some leadership in the research field. It would not cost any additional money. There is a substantial amount of money in the federal Budget for research. One of the concerns we have is that there does not seem to be any direction. Nobody seems to know where we are going. There is no longer enough of the excellent research that was done 15 or 20 years ago. I am told we are now behind the Europeans in many areas of research. This, again, is an area of concern to farmers and which would not involve expenditure of large sums. The money is there. It needs someone to take hold of the situation and show there is concern and some leadership in the Government.

There are two other areas on which we have been urging the Government to act and to act quickly. These are areas the Government said it would do something about in the Throne Speech. I am speaking of red meat stabilization. Simply an attitudinal change would signal that the federal Government and the Minister would support it and that would mean hope for the people in the red meat sector. It would mean they would have a plan and an operation for the calendar year 1984. We have encouraged the Government. We have offered to pass this legislation as quickly as we possibly can as soon as we see it. But we have no legislation. We saw advanced payments legislation introduced and given first reading, but we have not seen it come forward for second reading. We on this side are certainly prepared to support and support as quickly as we can anything that will help Canadian agriculture. It is particularly important that some of these things be done at this critical time of the year.

Before I close I want to comment on the announcement made yesterday by the Minister of Agriculture to seek the leadership of the Liberal Party. I think all of us realize he will certainly add a lot of colour to the campaign. We also hope in his new undertaking that he will not abdicate his responsibilities on behalf of Canadian agriculture. We will certainly support him in any legislation he chooses to bring forward as far as helping Canadian farmers are concerned. We urge the Minister to help farmers and to act quickly. Unfortunately, to date we have not seen much evidence that this Government either understands or cares enough about Canadian agriculture and the problems it is experiencing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): At this stage in our proceedings there is a ten-minute period allowed for questions or comments relating to the Hon. Member's remarks. Are there any questions?

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) spoke excellently. He is from the west but I think he has an appreciation of Ontario agricultural problems. Beyond the agri-bond and the red meat stabilization program, is there anything else that should be done to assist small farmers who cannot spend all their time on the farm?

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, the one thing that would assist farmers no matter where they are in Canada is simply to reduce the level of taxation which the federal Government collects on farm fuels. I mentioned that. We also think there is room for increasing cash advance legislation which would help producers in Ontario. The Hon. Member makes a very good point. If you look at statistics across the country, Ontario has more farmers than any other province. Ontario accounts for about 26 per cent of all farmers.

If we work together as farmers and as Members in the House, there are two things we could accomplish that would help everyone, including Ontario farmers. One is to pressure the Government to do something on agri-bonds and interest rates. The other is to pressure the Government to do something about what most people consider are the excess levels of taxation on farm fuels. The Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin), one of our Ontario Members, has a motion before the Finance Committee to address the whole issue of agri-bonds. We on this side believe that there are some areas that could be addressed as far as the agri-bond concept is concerned which would provide stable, long-term interest rates to farmers without very much, if any, additional cost to the federal treasury.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, in Ontario we deal with much smaller units than in the west. There is no full-time employment for farmers. Many of them, because of the cost of equipment, have had to go out to work. There has been a certain amount of hindrance to farmers which the Hon. Member might address, which particularly applies to Ontario with its large number of small farms.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, we have to look at the taxation system as it applies to farmers. I have to agree with the Minister of Agriculture, who said in a statement back in February in Edmonton when he was addressing the annual meeting of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture that he would much sooner see part-time farmers than absentee landlords. We all agree with that. But the Minister does not have to convince us or the farmers of that, but the people who do some of the assessing under the jurisdiction of the Minister of National Revenue. Certainly, there are some areas which could be helped if the Government was prepared to provide lower interest rates to starting farmers federally, as well as some of the provincial governments. What is wrong with being fair, never mind giving them a break? Why not just be fair in the way you treat people who want to go out and hold two jobs in order that they can some day own a piece of land? There is an area which could have a tremendous amount of improvement, and that is in helping people establish themselves on farms. No matter where you look in this world, the most efficient producer of agricultural products is the family farm. If we cannot encourage that through our taxation systems now, then we will rue this day in the future when we in this country find ourselves short of food.

• (1230)

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member would enlarge upon the question of the Western Grain Stabilization Act. As he knows, the question of amending that Act has come up in the House a great many times over the past year and a half or two years. There have been a lot of representations made by farm groups wanting to make changes to it. The Government has chosen not to introduce any amendments. Does the Hon. Member know of any way, short of retroactivity, any amendment, which would create a payment within the next few months, so that money could get into farmers' hands, or is retroactive application of the current rules the only way of doing that?

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, that is an interesting question, especially because it comes from the New Democratic Party. It shows the way in which we on the opposition side of the House are willing to co-operate.

Yes, there are ways to do it but, unfortunately, we cannot convince the Government. What we could do statistically is change it from a five-year to a three-year average. We could even do better than that. We could change it to a moving average so we would take this year's cost, statistically project next year's figures and use last year's figures. So if we were to take a three-year average and base it on the years 1983, 1984 and project the year 1985, we could trigger a substantial pay-out immediately.

When I say "immediately", Mr. Speaker, I mean that if this Government were prepared to do it, we could pass that legislation this afternoon. There is co-operation on this side but, unfortunately, there is no willingness on the part of Hon. Members opposite to recognize the problem and to provide the kind of leadership which is needed. Even though we disagree substantially with the New Democratic Party on many issues, on this issue we are co-operating with each other. It makes absolutely no sense that we in this House cannot act on something as important as the fund referred to by the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse).

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Speaker, I should advise the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) that the Government of Canada reduced the natural gas and gas liquids tax to zero as of February 1.

Mr. Mayer: I know that.

Mr. Ferguson: The Hon. Member was commenting about the greenhouse industry and how much its fuel was costing, and natural gas was one of the large suppliers of heat for the greenhouse industry. From the information I have, the consumer price actually increased in Ontario when that tax was removed. I am also alarmed about the fact that the prices of anhydrous ammonia and ammonia-based fertilizers have increased this spring even after the tax was removed. I wonder if the Hon. Member has any comment on that.

I also wonder if the Hon. Member has any comment on the fact that just this morning there was a press release from Ontario Hydro indicating that the cost for hydro will increase by 9.1 per cent for 1985.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows very well that we in this House do not have very much to do with provincial matters. However, if the Hon. Member wants to talk about the greenhouse industry, I will tell him that 56 per cent of its costs are energy costs. It is one thing to take off the 9 per cent excise tax, and we appreciate that, but that is only part of the game. We simply must stop treating these inputs which we have in this country as a base for this Government to raise taxes.

Mr. Ferguson: There is no tax on natural gas.

Mr. Mayer: The Hon. Member says there is no tax on natural gas used in the greenhouse industry. Clearly he does not understand the situation, Mr. Speaker. We have energy in abundance in this country. It is shut in in Alberta because there are no markets for it. This Government taxes it at such a level producers are going out of business in this country. When they go out of business, as I said, consumers are still going to use those products but will have to import them, losing jobs along the way. This happens because we basically treat industries like agriculture and energy as cash cows in order to finance the vociferous appetite this Government has for money.

The Hon. Member opposite lives very close to that industry. If he chose to go down and talk to these people, he would have a better understanding of their problems than he obviously has from the silly questions he asks.

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Speaker, I have been in touch with these people in my own constituency. The natural gas and gas liquids tax was removed on February 1. I simply asked the question of the Hon. Member as to why the price to the producers was not lowered. He also did not comment on the Ontario Hydro increase. I also suggest that we should look at the Ontario Energy Board pricing schedule within the Province of Ontario as to its costs to the producers.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, it was interesting to hear the comment made by the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) that, because of his concern for farmers, Hon. Members of the Opposition would take it easy on the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). I wonder, Mr. Speaker, do Members of the Opposition similarly have concern for natives and unemployed? If so, why have they not offered the same courtesy to those Ministers who are also leadership candidates?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) has time for a very short answer.

Mr. Mayer: Very simply, Mr. Speaker, the motion on opposition day today is on agriculture and that is my specific responsibility as far as the Opposition is concerned. I am sure that other Hon. Members of my Party who have responsibilities in the areas to which the Hon. Member refers would be more than happy to co-operate if there was legislation coming forward which was going to benefit other groups. I was simply making the point that we are more than willing to co-operate with the Government. I did not say we would make deals. I said we would co-operate and work together, and encourage the Government to do things. I am sure there are other Members on this side who have responsibilities for other areas, as far as criticizing the Government is concerned, who would be more than happy to offer the same kind of co-operation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): This puts an end to question period. We are resuming debate.

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to say a few words on this very important opposition day debate. One of the most important points which I feel must be brought out this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, is that immediate action has got to be taken by the Government in order to avert a crisis of some national dimension in the agricultural industry. The scenario, in effect, is building up at the present time for a substantial problem in the agricultural industry. All the signs and indications are pointing toward a very poor year in 1984 unless the Government itself really does take the problem seriously and addresses some of the questions which must be addressed.

We have a situation, Mr. Speaker, in which agricultural bankruptcies are up higher than they have been, I guess, since the Depression. The situation is building up in terms of the international grain prices which seem to be dropping. There has been some indication of just how far they may drop on the initial prices which have been made public this morning. When you start to combine these things, Mr. Speaker, and at the same time the Government seems to be turning its back on agriculture, it is plain to see that we could be in for a very, very serious problem.

I want to speak about bankruptcies, Mr. Speaker, because bankruptcy is one of the areas which is the window, in effect, through which we can see what it really happening to an industry, whether agriculture, the business sector, or any other area.

• (1240)

Bankruptcies in agriculture are quite substantial. The Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs reports that in 1983 some 488 Canadian farmers declared bankruptcy. That is a 19 per cent increase over the 1982 level. Bankruptcies on the Prairies jumped by 97 per cent over 1982, some 154 in total. That is startling and it certainly shows the problem we are experiencing in agriculture. We are talking only about the hard bankruptcy; one can only guess at the number of people who have gotten out of agriculture before they went bankrupt. Therefore the problem is very serious.

The Province of Manitoba, where I come from, is the hardest hit with 62 bankruptcies, up 106 per cent over 1982. This was followed by Alberta with 47 bankruptcies, a 96 per cent increase. Saskatchewan had 45 bankruptcies, an 87 per cent increase over 1982. Everything points to bankruptcies continuing at a high level this year, particularly on the Prairies. Then we have international reports which indicate an excess of grain supply, soft market prices, and the Americans will be doing a number of things to sell grain really at any cost.

In 1979, Mr. Speaker, there was one farm bankruptcy in Manitoba and a total of 125 in all of Canada. In 1980 it jumped to 14 in Manitoba, 14 in 1981 and it jumped to 30 in 1982. Then in 1983 it jumped from 30 to 62, and a total of 488 in Canada.

These figures are an indication of just how serious the situation in agriculture is. It has not really been addressed by this Government over the last number of years. Lip service has been paid by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), but nothing concrete has been done. Legislation to help the Canadian farmer in the west, in Manitoba, has not been forthcoming. The only thing we have had to deal with in a meaningful way over the last number of years is, of course, the Bill to do away with the Crowsnest Pass freight rate, which this Party fought long and hard. We were concerned about the increased costs to the western farmer, primarily the grain farmer. Of course, that is coming true and with prices dropping, bankruptcies are up, which will mean one more input cost the western farmer will have to hear for transportation to market.

Young farmers are especially hard hit. They always are because they are not established and do not have the cash reserves. In my own riding of Lisgar in southern Manitoba many young farmers got out of university, in most cases, went back to the farm, farming it on their own and are struggling, literally just hanging on, because of the poor economic situation. Many farms with large capitalizations have incomes of $8,000, $10,000, $12,000, literally below the poverty line. Such a farmer works 12 months a year below the poverty line.

There are not many other industries in this country which would put up with that kind of situation.

An official of the United States National Association of Wheatgrowers has called the 1984 market outlook "scary". If you look at the forecast for grains, you have to conclude that the word "scary" is a good one to use. There is every indication that American farmers will produce this year almost 82 million tons of wheat, the biggest crop ever. Given the outlook for exports and domestic usage, that will add about 14 million tons to the 40 million tons already being carried in the United States. That, of course, means continued low prices and a glut of grain on the world market the likes of which we have not seen for many years. That will mean substantially lower prices for Canadian farmers unless the federal Government is prepared to step in in the short term to bolster the initial prices.

Some weeks ago, Mr. Speaker, I asked the Minister of Agriculture in the House of Commons if he would work in the Cabinet to make sure that initial prices for western grain would be maintained at last year's level. Surely the western farmer can expect no less. There was no concrete answer, and of course this morning we see the results. Hard red spring wheat is down some 27 cents per bushel, Durum wheat is down some 54 cents a bushel, barley is down 11 cents a bushel, feed barley is down some 12 cents per bushel, and oats down seven cents a bushel. This at a time when input costs are going up, farmers are struggling and bankruptcies have increased is just not acceptable. The Government could, if it wanted to, have maintained the initial price for grain at last year's level. There may have had to be some payment by the federal Government to the various grain pools at the end of the crop year, but it would have been a small price to pay to help an industry which is so vital to this country.

The Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) indicated correctly that we support the aircraft industry exclusively in Ontario and Quebec. We support a number of other industries in this country. We have put hundreds of millions of dollars into that industry to support 4,000, 5,000 or 6,000 jobs in central Canada. We are talking about approximately 160,000 to 180,000 individual farmers, small businessmen, who have the very same right to expect some small support at a time in which prices have dropped through absolutely no fault of their own. They should expect to be treated the same as their neighbours in Ontario and Quebec. But from this Government they are not going to receive that treatment. Therefore we are going to have to continue to pressure the Government to make sure that there is some form of assistance available to the grain farmer to get his income up to the area that it was last year at least. Maintaining the initial price is something that has to be done.

An adjustment to the grain stabilization program must also be made. Simply shortening the payment period from the present five years to three years would inject something like $150 million to $180 million into the western economy. The money is there. There is something in the neighbourhood of $900 million of the farmers' and the Government's money sitting in the Western Grain Stabilization Fund that I would imagine the Government is using. An amendment would be needed to shorten the payment period. That amendment, Mr. Speaker, could be passed in a few hours in the House of Commons if the Government would bring it in. That would also give some short-term relief to western agriculture.

The time is critical, Mr. Speaker. For many farmers we are entering a very decisive year. In 1984 they will either make it or it will break them. The bankruptcies I spoke about earlier will increase dramatically unless something is done. I know very few farmers, certainly in my own riding in Manitoba, who want the Government to enter into their business in any meaningful way. They feel, and I think rightly so, that because of the product they produce and the importance of that product to the country, and that because they do deal on an international market, possibly from time to time the country can step in and help them out over the rough spots. The Western Grain Stabilization Act was designed to do that but it has not done that. If we could get a change to that Act it would fulfil its original intention.

Those two things could be of help. Maintaining the initial price, either through a payment from the pool or some form of payment that would maintain the initial price at the end of the crop year, would help. An adjustment to the Grain Stabilization Fund would help. Dropping the federal sales tax on farm fuels would be an easy, quick and effective way of signifying to this segment that we are with them and going to support them. We are talking in terms of 18 cents to 20 cents a gallon if that was the case. Those are three areas which could be addressed before this House adjourns for Easter to signal to the farmer, who is already out making his purchases and is on the land in some cases, that the federal Government in Ottawa is prepared to make a stand to help him out over the rough spots.

There are other things I would like to speak about, Mr. Speaker. Agricultural research is very close to my heart because there is a research station in my riding in Morden, Manitoba, that is desparately in need of more research funds.

Mr. Speaker, I will close by saying that agriculture has not been served well by the Liberal Government. The Minister of Agriculture who is now running for the leadership of the Liberal Party has, by and large, been a disaster. He has been a failure because he has not been the kind of advocate that the agricultural industry needs around that Cabinet table. He is going largely on a reputation that is in most cases hollow. It does not mean anything. The effects, of course, are being felt in a very dramatic way all across the land.

Agriculture must be one of the main engines of this country, Mr. Speaker. We can produce food better than any other country in the world. We can sell it anywhere in the world. The spin-off effect within Canada has been and still is very dramatic in terms of the jobs that it creates. Agriculture is at the present time in need of some small support. It is up to the Government and the House of Commons to give it that support.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any questions or comments related to the Hon. Member's remarks? Debate.

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, before dealing with the substance of my remarks, in which I will remind Hon. Members of the role played by the Farm Credit Corporation, I would like to commend the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) and the Hon. Member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) for bringing this subject before the House today.

I believe that, whoever we may be in this House, whether from Calgary, Toronto, Montreal or any other Canadian city, whoever we are as Members, Mr. Speaker, we must all be thankful for the quality of Canada's farming community. I am pleased to note that the Hon. Members for Portage-Marquette and Lisgar emphasized in their remarks the extent of their respect and admiration for Canadian farmers who make up a small segment of our total population. We might think of them as being a minority of Canadians who feed the rest of us, Mr. Speaker, or consider that all those farmers throughout Canada were the ones who opened up this country for us all who became urban residents.

It is with pleasure and pride that I represent a rural riding, Mr. Speaker, even though its territory cannot be favourably compared with the spectacular expanses of the Portage-Marquette region, nor even with those of the riding of my colleague from Lisgar. However, it is my belief that, despite the difference in extent or volume of productive capacity—indeed, my region is known primarily for producing hogs, chickens and dairy products rather than crops—it is a fact that throughout the country, and I should think that this is what the Hon. Members stressed in their remarks, it is very important that, as decision makers in this House, we be ever conscious of the concerns, problems and difficulties which Canadian farmers must face. It is important that the Canadian farming community be a regular topic of debate in the House because we must find out what to do to make our farmers more productive, better adapted to prevailing market conditions and, I am tempted to say, so proud of themselves that they will be eager to produce even more.

Of course, I thought there was something that did not quite ring true in the speeches of my colleagues from Portage-Marquette and Lisgar, but that is to be expected in the House. I am referring to the fact that we do indulge in partisan rhetoric in our speeches, which is always a somewhat negative approach. It is never pleasant to hear someone say that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is a total failure in the agricultural sector. I would suggest that the Hon. Member for Lisgar did exaggerate when he said that, but it is the kind of partisan remark which was to be expected.

In my opinion, the Minister of Agriculture is known throughout the country—and even throughout the world, since he is President of the World Food Council—as a staunch defender of Canada's farming community. The Minister of Agriculture, along with his Cabinet colleagues and the members of the Liberal Party caucus, is always trying to advocate programs to help farmers. We also try to promote development research. We have research stations throughout the country, including one in the riding of Lisgar, and all those research stations need additional funds, Mr. Speaker. It is a fact of every day life, whether the Government in office is Liberal or Conservative—or, God help us, an NDP Government, but that can never be, it is only a very weird notion—and I think that research and development will always have to be a priority, as it is for this Government. As proof of that, the April Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) featured a recovery program in which additional funds were generously earmarked for new agricultural research facilities. Also, the Department of Science and Technology in co-operation with the Department of Agriculture has approached Canadian universities to try and consolidate the agricultural research capacity of Canadian universities with research centres of Agriculture Canada to achieve a greater impact with that basic research in terms of new products which will be of some assistance to our farmers.

I will carry on with my comments at 2 p.m., Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please! The Hon. Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Lapointe) has the floor.

Mr. Lapointe (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I find this situation absolutely shocking! Although Hon. Members of the Official Opposition keep telling us every day that they want to take over the government, they just cannot assume their responsibilities on this allotted day as the House is called upon to deal with a motion they themselves have moved. That is not good enough ... I agree that baseball games involving the Expos are of the utmost importance and that their first game today is certainly most fascinating to watch on TV. Yet, I am thoroughly shocked to see that the Official Opposition on this allotted day, has been unable to get together 25 Hon. Members. How many are they in the House? I can hardly count 5 of them, Mr. Speaker, and as government Members, we must see to it that there are enough of us to ensure quorum, when they should see to that. Then they will come to me, in their sanctimonious attitude, and say that they are concerned about Canadian farmers. I suggest that by refusing to participate in the debate on this motion on this allotted day they clearly demonstrated their contempt for the Canadian farming community.

Before the lunch recess, Mr. Speaker, I was reminding the House of the major investments in agricultural research which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) announced in his budget of last April. First of all, there are several agricultural research laboratories throughout Canada; it is a field where the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is constantly trying to allocate additional funds to provide Canadian farmers with improved production techniques and help them increase their returns, which is not easy in these difficult times. Through his efforts and his work my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture looks quite satisfactorily, after this sector.

Then, there is the marketing issue. Hon. Members opposite discussed that too. One must not forget that it was against the Official Opposition's month-long filibuster that the government has implemented, on the Minister of Agriculture's initiative, the bill establishing CANAGREX, the corporation which is now responsible for developing new and major export markets for Canada farm products. And as the Right Hon. Prime minister was saying this morning during the Oral Question Period, we have set each year and for many years new wheat selling records, thanks to our farm producers and the Canadian Wheat Board.

There is another area, or another tool which the Government has used quite generously to help farmers make it through the difficult period we have had recently and which is beginning to fade away. As I was saying earlier in my comments, I want to take this opportunity to mention the role played by the Farm Credit Corporation and take stock of its operations.

Of course, we all agree that the agricultural industry has many problems, but I do not believe that the situation is as dark as some people would suggest. The Canadian Government provides considerable assistance to the Canadian farmers who are suffering from the backlash of the economic situation. In addition, this governmental intervention is not temporary; it does not involve ad hoc programs, but rather permanent measures, considering that the Farm Credit Corporation and its predecessor, the Farm Credit Board, have been in operation for 55 years providing Canadian farmers with financial support, management assistance and investment counselling.

To give an idea of the amounts invested in agriculture by the Farm Credit Corporation, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the Hon. Members that the corporation now has something like 80,000 loans outstanding and this represents a total investment of $4.7 billion in the Canadian agricultural industry. As the Hon. Members can see, this is an important contribution to the economic welfare of Canadian farmers.

During the fiscal year which ended thirteen days ago, on March 31, 1984, the Farm Credit Corporation has approved some 7,536 loans under its regular credit program and its special farm financial assistance program for a total amount of $758 million. This means an increase of $141 million over the 1982-83 fiscal year. Besides, the Government has recently approved a budget which will bring up to about $825 million the amounts available to the Farm Credit Corporation for loans to Canadian farmers in 1984-85. This is definitely an increase compared with a volume of loans amounting to $758 million in 1983-84. The Corporation has a budget of $825 million for the year 1984-85.

Mr. Speaker, the role of the Farm Credit Corporation is helping young and new farmers, who do not have the equity required to borrow from commercial institutions. The corporation therefore has an essential role to play. As everyone knows, Mr. Speaker, new farmers and the owners of small farms who want to expand their operation are much more vulnerable because they lack personal assets, but they probably are the ones who need larger sums to develop and maintain a profitable operation and they must be able to borrow this money at favourable terms, something which the commercial sector cannot provide.

The loans with floating or frequently adjusted interest rates offered by the commercial institutions do not take into account the special features of the agricultural industry. It is very difficult for a young farmer or the owner of a small farm with little personal assets to borrow from commercial institutions at a floating rate over a period of 10, 20 or 30 years because the risks and the projections can vary too much.

The only way to help these beginners is to offer them reasonable interest rates and favourable terms, which financial institutions do not normally do. This is exactly what the Farm Credit Corporation is now doing. For instance, the corporation is offering farm enterprises loans of a maximum of $360,000 to $600,000 depending on whether the enterprise includes one or more eligible partner. The loan ceilings of the Farm Credit Corporation have been pushed up twice during the last three years to meet the needs of farmers more adequately. During a recession, the most difficult problem for farmers, as well as for small businesses and many individuals, is related to their special financing needs.

To meet these special needs and financing requirements, the Government is offering farmers, through the FCC, long term credit at terms not generally available to them or to small businesses in order to promote agricultural production. Indeed, speaking of programs developed during the last three years, especially during this period of economic difficulties, one may also mention that in addition to the Farm Credit Corporation loans, over half a billion dollars were offered to farmers to help them refinance their loans under the Small Businesses Development Bonds Program and the Special Farm Assistance Program.

I therefore believe, Mr. Speaker, that the sole purpose of all this is to promote agricultural production, to help newcomers to agriculture, especially the young farmers, and to maintain in Canada the dynamic agricultural industry we now have, which is made up of men and women whose only objective is to improve their production and increase their profits. As the Minister of Agriculture has often said, we have the chance and the privilege in Canada of having the most dynamic agricultural community in the world and its level of production compares favorably with that of any other country.

The Farm Credit Corporation puts loads of energy into its consultation services program. I referred earlier to an amount of $758 million in loans in 1983-84, but in addition to those loans, as we are dealing mostly with young farmers and small farm operators, it is important for the borrower to have a sound understanding of financial management in order to succeed. This is why the Farm Credit Corporation offers its consultation services program to its borrowers. The purpose of this program is to help farmers handle the financial management of their operation so that they will sooner or later attain their personal and economic objectives.

As a general rule, FCC borrowers who need counselling are those with little equity or sizeable debts, an expanding operation, little experience, a high risk business, or financial problems. The corporation is there to help these people by offering them a management support program for two or three years. Generally, this is long enough for them to learn to manage their financial affairs efficiently.

As of March 31, 1984, less than two weeks ago, 4,800 FCC borrowers were involved in its consultation services program, which accounts for 30 per cent of all FCC borrowers. Besides administering credit, loans and financial management assistance programs, the Farm Credit Corporation works hand in hand with federal agencies and Departments, provincial Governments and private lending institutions to meet the specific needs of farmers. For many years now, it has been cooperating with the Provinces of Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Alberta as a partner in their interest grant programs. It has renewed its efforts in that field in 1982-83 by taking part as lender in the Saskatchewan farm buying program. Last year, the FCC signed an agreement whith the Province of Ontario to make funds available under an assistance program designed for newcomers to agriculture.

Since I have only two minutes left, I would like to say in conclusion that between November 1981 and March 31 1984, the Farm Credit Corporation spent $341 million in the interest rebate assistance program. With the rebate set at four percentage points and a budget of $200 million for this program, it was possible to refund $16 million in interest rebates to Canadian farmers. As we all know, the program was extended with an injection of $100 million more in the April Budget of the Minister of Finance. When the Government established that program, the economy recovery was expected to last for the two years of the program. The fact is that the economic recovery was very slow in the agricultural sector. As suggested by the Minister of Agriculture, the Government is now considering the possibility of extending the rebate period or certain other mechanisms to help farmers who are still in financial difficulties. As the Minister of Agriculture said recently, a decision to that effect will be made very soon, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There will be a ten-minute period for questions and comments.

[English]

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in the Minister's remarks. He talked about partisan rhetoric and the fact that he deplored that in the Opposition. He said there was a far-fetched hypothesis around that we would form the next government. If he looks at the polls, he will realize that he was engaging in partisan rhetoric. I thought I should point that out.

Let me ask a serious question. We have suggested that one of the ways of reducing costs to both farmers and fishermen, and it would affect people from coast to coast, is for the Government to stop collecting the seven cents a gallon excise tax on fuel used on the farm and by fishermen. It would not increase the deficit because the Government collects the money and sends it back. I am sure it would help the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) and cut down on the number of steps that have to be taken. It would reduce the amount of bureaucracy involved. If anything, it would reduce government expenditure and maybe help the deficit. Would the Minister support that kind of proposal?

Mr. Lapointe (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I am happy the Hon. Member has asked this question. I am glad the Conservative Party has now come to this conclusion. I remind the Hon. Member that this request has been in the platform of the Liberal Party for the last four years. This suggestion has been put forward by the militants of the Liberal Party. It is being studied very closely by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). When the time comes for the Government to evaluate this issue, I will give it a great deal of attention.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, the Minister was very gracious in his reply. Could he be a little more specific? Will he do more than give it consideration? If it supported by the Opposition and his Party, surely he would not find it difficult to support that proposal and do more than give it consideration when it comes up?

[Translation]

Mr. Lapointe (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I would like my hon. friend from Portage-Marquette to realize that I am not the Minister of Agriculture. I have always supported with much passion and interest the discussions in Cabinet on agricultural issues, whether it be the red meat strategy, the Canadian food strategy or what have you. Whenever the Cabinet deals with such issues, I am vitally interested. But it is somewhat difficult for me, without any financial data which I do not have just now, because my colleague the Minister of Agriculture is the expert in this matter to reply by yes or no. I quite understand the logic of the Hon. Member; in fact our Liberal supporters have clearly indicated during the various conventions we have held over the past few years that the removal of the excise tax on the oil products which farmers and fishermen are using would greatly reduce their production costs. I follow the Hon. Member up to that point, but I lack the necessary data to be able to give my hon. friend a yes or no answer. However, his suggestion seems to me most reasonable.

Mr. Waddell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I should like to put a question to the Minister. I am sorry that I missed part of his speech. Did the Minister deal with the 4 per cent subsidy, a program which has now expired for a certain group of farmers? Maybe he did. When will the Government take a decision in that connection? Is there a chance that it will be favourable to Canadian farmers?

• (1430)

Mr. Lapointe (Charlevoix): I thank the Hon. Member for his question, Mr. Speaker. As I said at the beginning of my speech, even if the Hon. Member represents a constituency in the core of the beautiful city of Vancouver, he is as much concerned with farming issues as all other members, because we know quite well that we owe Canadian farmers not only our fine standard of living but also our very country, because it is as farmers that our forefathers opened this country up to the West Coast.

As for the 4 per cent, I dealt briefly with it in my comments. I think that the Hon. Member is referring to the interest rebate which has been set at 4 per cent with $200 million earmarked for that program.

I said earlier that when the Government set up that program over two years ago, it expected that the recession would be over two years later. Unfortunately, as we all know, the economic recovery in the agricultural sector has been very slow. The Government is now considering a proposal from the Minister of Agriculture aimed at extending the 4 per cent interest rebate program. And my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture stated last week that he expects the Government to be in a position to make a decision soon.

[English]

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join in today's debate on the Opposition motion concerning the great many problems facing agriculture today. Two days ago we in the House debated a very specific aspect of agriculture. At that time we discussed some of the financing difficulties and some very short-term solutions that might provide farmers with the means to stay in business for another year. This was important in order to see producers right across the country through the new crop year. Today's motion allows us to expand our comments further afield and look at the broader role played by agriculture in Canada's economy. Since that is the foundation of today's motion, I would like to spend some time pointing out the role agriculture has played in the expansion of the country.

In North America, the attitude has been taken that agriculture should be used as a means of developing and expanding new lands. That was the case in Quebec, the Maritimes, Central Canada and the Prairies. Agriculture followed the fur trade and the timber trade. As timber disappeared, farms were augmented. As our economy changed from one which was dependent on exports of furs, forestry products and fish, farm products and particularly wheat were added to the economy.

The development of the agricultural base in Canada has almost been completed. Only a few million acres of land are left that could be developed for agricultural purposes and are being used for forestry or wildlife grazing lands. The development aspect of the agricultural industry is almost complete. After the development of the arable land, we moved into a second stage. Throughout most of this century we attempted to utilize technology and mechanization to reduce the number of people required to produce the same amounts or increasing amounts of food. I believe we have come a long way in that revolution and have now come to the next set of crossroads. There are now a number of decisions to make about the kind of agriculture we want in the country.

I began by saying that Canada had followed what has been a North American pattern. I simply remind you of that, Mr. Speaker, because I am going to turn for a moment to the European pattern. Europeans have been producing food on a commercial basis for much longer than we have. Their expansion process ended several hundred years ago. The mechanization program in Europe is complete and Europeans have found that taking human resources away from the agricultural industry could create limits beyond which they do not wish to go.

In Canada we are at the point now where about 4 per cent of the population lives on farms. Since the last war Europeans have been looking at policies which would keep more people on the farms. That is a reversal of the North American policies that have been followed since the war. Most of our policies have had the result, if not the intent, of reducing the number of people on farms. That reduction continues in times like these when net incomes to farmers are extremely low.

If the agricultural industry were to use an accounting system similar to that which is used in most other businesses, we would see that farmers have very little net income right now. I have pointed out many times in the House that the net agricultural income in Canada amounts to about $3.5 billion. That amount has been about the same for the last 10 years. Agriculture Canada tells us that the investment in agricultural production in the country amounts to something over $120 billion. The return on investment alone is in the neighbourhood of 3 per cent or slightly below. However, because of the way the agriculture statistics are published, that return on investment, while it would account for $3.6 billion, does nothing to supply income for the families working in agriculture. They have a choice of paying themselves wages or paying themselves a poor return on their investment amounting to 3 per cent or 3.5 per cent. That is the reality of the situation.

Previous Canadian governments have chosen to adopt certain farm policies that would adjust to the reality that only a certain amount of net income exists. In order to increase farm incomes, the number of farmers has been reduced. Those are the policy options which have been pursued. Since the war Europeans have decided for their own reasons to pursue a policy of more self-sufficiency. I suppose that is something that we on this continent will not understand until we have lived through the horrors of a couple of world wars and until we have been starved a few times. Until that happens, we will probably find it difficult to opt for a policy of self-sufficiency. But the Europeans, having had some experience in that regard, have decided that each of the states within the European Economic Community will attempt to become as self-sufficient as possible.

● (1440)

The EEC have adopted policies which have the effect in our eyes of subsidizing farm production. Until recently the subsidization program went fairly well. On any food products imported into the European Economic Community, the importer paid a very high tariff. The funds raised from those tariffs were used to subsidize the production of agricultural products within the EEC. The European Economic Community has now got to the point where it is self-sufficient in virtually all major agricultural products. There is a slight surplus in some which has created a problem for the EEC. Having become self-sufficient, the EEC no longer has the income from import tariffs to subsidize its internal production. As a result, exports from the EEC combined with the surplus grains in the United States have depressed prices for grain and subsequently for all agricultural production which uses grain.

Canada has this problem and we are facing this difficulty. We have to decide some time, and debates like this are good times to raise the question, which way we should go and whether or not we should opt for more self-sufficiency in Canadian agriculture.

There are some products we clearly cannot produce, bananas being one example. One can think of a number of tropical fruits which are in demand in Canada and which we can never produce here. Anything that can be produced in a temperate zone can be produced here. There are situations where greenhouse production can operate all year round by utilizing some of the waste heat from our power stations. Even in the extreme weather on the Prairies tomatoes, cucumbers and lettuce are grown in greenhouse operations using what was before essentially waste heat. Warm air that is expelled from the manufacture of steam to drive power turbines runs through greenhouses, which aids in the production of vegetables. This operation is limited to the area around power stations and it is economical even though our border is open to the importation of fresh vegetables during the winter.

I think we must look at ways of augmenting the technology we have. Research has been mentioned a couple of times. Now we are at the stage of having to opt for a new type of agriculture. We should be watching where we put some of our research dollars.

We have developed a very high energy-use agriculture, one of the highest energy requirements per Btu of food output in the world. If you compare Canada's energy input-output ratios to that of some of the less developed countries, you would be appalled, Mr. Speaker. Our use of energy in comparison to what we get back from the food produced is only about a quarter to an eighth of the kind of input-output ratios you see in some of the so-called underdeveloped countries like Thailand or China. We have some way to go if the cheap forms of energy imported, oil and gas, are no longer as available as they were in the past.

There are some refreshing breakthroughs in biotechnology. This is probably the research area from which we will reap the most benefits. It seems to me that the development of new useful fungi moulds which can be used for creating alcohol and for attacking some of the crop pests requires far more financing than has been the case. However, it has, with its limited financing, shown some remarkable results. For instance, we have developed now a fungus that attacks the grasshopper. This fungus does not have any effect on the people who distribute the fungus in the fields. The effects of this fungus are almost as good as some of the chemicals that have been used against grasshoppers, and the danger to people and wildlife is almost zero. There are some great advantages to be gained in that area.

Along with changing the direction of agriculture, one of the first steps of which we must be cognizant is that farmers themselves must be allowed to increase their influence in the marketing of their products. We have noted with those products in which we have chosen to be self-sufficient and which we have not attempted to blast into world markets, such as dairy products, that producers have restricted their production and marketed that production to the population in Canada at rates of returns that are remunerative but not overly profitable. They have established that it is possible for farmers to produce goods and set prices in ways that will not only help the consumer to be certain of a product but will keep most of the producers of the product in business.

Products like eggs and poultry are controlled by national marketing boards which have the right to establish price on the basis of the real cost of production. That is absolutely vital if agriculture and farmers are going to be able to continue operating here in Canada. Some of the products in Canada are marketed under somewhat less stringent organizations.

I move now very briefly to the Canadian Wheat Board type of operation. Wheat is still our major export and is still subject to the price established on the so-called world market. It is established somewhere out there and we simply sell it at a price to meet the competititon.

There are some things we could be doing to provide a floor price. We did experiment briefly with the two-price wheat system which was originally conceived by farmers to be a system which would allow them to charge a price in Canada equivalent to their actual costs and to market the balance of their production in world markets at whatever price they could get for it. Subsequently, once the proposal hit the Government and Parliament Hill, it got turned on its head. However, that is what happens sometimes with legislation once it gets here. It eventually turned out to be a way of providing Canadians with grain at a price even lower than the world price. I think the understanding of the two-price wheat system was not as well entrenched in the head of the former Minister of Agriculture, Otto Lang, as it had been in the heads of western farmers who proposed the system in the first place.

The only major area in wheat marketing where the Government has a stabilizing effect at the moment is in the establishment of initial prices. The board takes its proposals for next year's initial price, the first price the farmer receives when he delivers his grain to the elevator, and the Government underwrites that price. If the markets collapse, the Government of Canada will stand behind the price it sets and makes certain that the farmers get at least that amount of money. The tendency has been, though, for the Government to be extremely conservative on the establishment of the price. Almost always the final price is higher than the initial price and the Government of Canada does not carry any loss because the world price is higher than the Government's established price.

Today we heard that the initial prices have been established and that there is quite a marked reduction in the commitment of the Government to hold the line on grain prices, with the result of reduced prices in the order of something like 26 cents, 27 cents on red spring wheat, 54 cents on Durum, and I believe 11 cents or 12 cents on barley. Those are reductions from last year. That does not bode well for Canadian farmers who are already watching their net incomes deteriorate. They just received the message recently from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), through the Farm Credit Corporation, that the interest rates which will be available to farmers for longer term loans will be increased by one or two percentage points. The prospects for agriculture, therefore, going into this spring, are not particularly good.

I spent a little time outlining some of the directions I feel we should be looking to, but farmers going into this crop year need an injection of cash. They need the fulfilment of the promise made by the Government to change the western grain stabilization formula so it will trigger a pay-out. They would have appreciated recognition by the Government that grain prices were already low enough and that a further erosion of the price by way of reduced initial credit payments should have been avoided. They would appreciate it if that decision could be reversed.

As a result of our conventions which are held every other year, we have presented to Canadians a program for agriculture which we believe would eventually get the farmers of Canada back into a more viable position. We believe that for the longer term we must have better marketing institutions to extract the maximum from the market. When that fails there must be, as a back-up, stabilization programs to act as insurance. For the short term, right now when farmers are faced with a critical situation, there must be an injection of credit and cash combined in order that our farmers can survive and we can get agriculture into a position where it can become again a part of the growing economy in Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions or comments. Since no one rises for questions or comments, we will continue with the debate.

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend the two Opposition Parties for choosing agriculture as the topic for debate on two separate days this week. This shows the tremendous respect and esteem—I hope not collusion—which is felt for the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) as he launches his campaign to become leader of the Liberal Party of Canada and Prime Minister of this great nation. It has certainly focused public attention on the agricultural industry and its great leader.

The Minister of Agriculture not only commands great respect in Canada, but is a man of world renown as President of the World Food Council. This man, who had his beginnings as a humble peasant from Essex County, a trait which has always stuck with him, can now run for the highest office in the land, and on his behalf I would like to thank Opposition members for their assistance in launching his campaign. I am sure that farmers across Canada join with me in wishing his every success.

It is interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that both Opposition Parties have chosen agriculture as the theme for debate this week. It emphasizes what we on this side of the House have known all along, that agriculture is one of the most basic and important sectors of the national economy. The Government is fully aware of the importance of agriculture and of the role which farmers play in the Canadian economy. There is a long list of progressive measures taken over the past few years to make sure that Canada's farming community remains strong and that the industry continues to flourish. In particular, I would draw to your attention the major items in the December, 1983 Speech from the Throne and the February, 1984 Budget. Both contained extremely positive elements for Canadian farmers.

Let us consider first several new agricultural initiatives which were announced in the Throne Speech. These are initiatives which will help strengthen the agri-food industry in both the short term and the long term. For one, there will be a commission of inquiry into the potato marketing agency in eastern Canada. The potato industry has been suffering for a long time. The Government of Canada has paid out millions dollars in recent years to help stabilize eastern potato producers' incomes, but the source of their problem appears to lie in the marketing system or, I should say, lack of one. This inquiry will get to the root of the problem.

Just two days ago I spoke in this House and referred to the fact—a fact which was referred to also by the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger)—that farmers have for too long been price takers. I suggested that they should perhaps take advantage of some of the legislation available to them, both at the provincial and federal levels, so that they can establish their price at the farm gate, a price which will reflect their cost of production plus a reasonable return on investment and labour.

I would like to read a short letter I received from one of my constituents. It is dated March 22, and I quote:

Dear Mr. Ferguson:

After being a pork producer for 10 years I have seen the effect of the ups and downs of the market, and the future does not look good. The American farmer is starting to complain about us dumping cheap pork on their market and what will happen if the hog numbers increase 40 or 50 per cent in the next three or four years.

Over the past four to six weeks I have been talking to a lot of pork producers and my feeling is that a strong majority favour a form of supply management voted through by the producers.

It seems to me that a two-price system would be what the industry needs; it is not perfect but let's work on it and make it work and then we can do away with subsidies because they do more harm than good. Subsidies are like wetting in your pants on a very cold day to get warmed up. Yours truly.

I believe this is an accurate reflection, Mr. Speaker, of some of the problems facing younger producers. I mentioned last Wednesday the fact that there really is not a countervailing force in the marketplace to ensure that the producers of Canada obtain a fair return for their products. There must be a countervailing force, whether it is in a democracy or in the marketplace. I believe we must look at this in the proper context.

I would like to refer to a few items which are available to the farmers of Canada in the way of tax provisions. First we have cash basis accounting. All farmers are permitted to use the cash basis method of accounting instead of the accrual method. This results in a considerable deferral of their tax liabilities. There is a provision for flexibility in inventory accounting. There is a provision for farm loss carry-forward which was brought in in the April, 1983 Budget. There is the five-year block averaging provision and there are the tax-free intergenerational transfers of farms.

We have a provision for clearing and improving land available as a deductible current expense. This is again a benefit to the farmers. There is a provision for farm buildings depreciation which quality for the higher rate of capital cost allowance. There is a provision for ten-year reserves. Farmers selling their farms to their children and receiving the sale price in instalments are able to establish a ten-year reserve.

There is the arbitrary expense allowance which allows full-time farmers to deduct up to 25 per cent of all farm home expenses, including a capital cost allowance of 25 per cent on the capital cost of the farm home.

There is relief from quarterly tax payments for farmers and deferral of income on grain sales. This is available to the farmer who delivers certain types of grain prescribed under the Canada Grain Act to a licensed public elevator or a process elevator and receive a deferred cash purchase ticket. A special provision in the Act provides that the amount of the ticket can be deferred until the following year. This is not available to us in eastern Canada but it is available to the farmers of western Canada.

• (1500)

We also have a deferral of income where there has been a statutory destruction of livestock. We have income splitting by paying a salary to spouse and children, the small business deduction, and then of course the investment tax credit. These are only some of the provisions available to the farm sector. Other important measures in the Budget make it easier to transfer a farm from one generation to the other. The family farm is of course the foundation of Canadian agriculture and the Government wants to keep it that way.

I am sorry I do not have a great deal of time because I have a plane to catch, Mr. Speaker, but I want to point out that Agriculture Canada is spending up to $237 million on research, up $35 million from the previous year. Our research program represents well over half the agri-food research done in Canada. I should mention that a capital improvement program for the research branch over the coming ten years amounts to more than $400 million.

Some reference should also be made to the role in international development and food aid through the support of the agricultural industry. The food that Canada provides to less developed countries through the world food program and other agencies, as well as that of our bilateral aid program, is purchased from Canadian farmers at regular prices. But the benefits go further than that. Canadian agricultural commodities given as food aid often serve to keep the door open for future export sales. Canada becomes known as a source of high quality food products. The goal of developmental aid is not to continue to feed countries which cannot feed themselves, but to help establish strong economies with commercial agricultural industries. Thus a country which is a recipient of our aid today will be our trading partner tomorrow. Exports already account for nearly half of net farm income to Canadian producers. As the world develops and our farmers become more efficient, that level will increase.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to emphasize that this Government is not ignoring the plight of Canadian farmers. We are vitally concerned about their economic health and future. Our plans and actions to date this year speak loud and clear. This Government is working on behalf of Canadian farmers, and I hope we can count on the support of all Members in this House in our efforts to improve the lot of this country's food producers.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions or comments.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance, obviously has some influence in Cabinet. I asked the Minister about the seven cent a gallon excise tax, which is collected by the Government and then refunded. If it was not collected, it would not add to the deficit, and it would also help farmers and fishermen this spring and on an ongoing basis because they would not have to lay out that money. I wonder if the Hon. Member is prepared to support that kind of a proposal in Cabinet?

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Speaker, I am well aware of how the system works. You make application for a tax refund. It is the same with the Ontario provincial Government on its sales tax; you have to apply to get it back. The Minister indicated they are studying this and I would want to wait for a Cabinet decision on this issue before making further comment.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, that is a very interesting comment. He gets up and speaks on behalf of farmers, yet he is not willing to do something which makes eminently good sense to almost anyone in this country, including his constituents. Given something which is not going to add to the deficit but will benefit his constituents and assist the Government in the sense that there will be less bureaucracy and therefore less Government expenditure, surely he does not have to wait for a Cabinet decision? Surely he would be willing to push that himself in order that the Cabinet makes that kind of a decision. Is he prepared to support that kind of a proposal which would do all the things I have said on behalf of his constituents.

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, the Minister replied to this. But I can tell the Hon. Member that I have been talking about this for some years and we have also been after the Ontario Tory Government to take a like position.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has quite a lot of experience on the Standing Committee on Agriculture and is now Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance. Will he bring us up to date on the agri-bond situation? Some days ago this House sent a motion to committee to investigate the whole question of agri-bonds. I understand the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs has more or less decided to accept the responsibility but has not yet struck a committee or laid out a format. Can he bring us up to date and tell us how soon we will have an active committee on agri-bonds?

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Speaker, this issue was referred to the committee on February 7, I believe. The Parliamentary Secretary, the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher), moved it be sent to the committee at that time. It was discussed in committee I believe a week ago yesterday. At that time there was no background documentation available. It appears that there are several different concepts, so the committee researcher has been asked to prepare a background paper to be available to the committee when we come back immediately after the Easter break.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, could the Hon. Member tell us if he is prepared to push for the acceptance of the concept of an agri-bond which would see the agricultural sector used as a means of recycling money from the land seller to the land buyer? Does he accept that in principle as a useful method of refinancing agriculture from one generation to the next?

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Speaker, I think it would be completely presumptuous of me to speculate on what the committee may recommend.

Mr. Benjamin: Go ahead. What do you think?

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, just to follow up on what I think was an extremely good question from the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson) is the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance and a farmer. The agri-bond concept has been referred to the committee, so surely it is not asking too much of him to say whether he supports the concept of long-range stable interest rates for farmers. That is essentially what the agri-bond does. Is he in fact in favour of trying to work out something which will assist farmers by having long-term interest rates stabilized and at a preferential rate so that more farmers can own their own land?

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Speaker, I am very much in favour of looking at some improved methods of farm financing. Whether or not the agri-bond concept is the one we should be using, I am not prepared to say until the committee is finished its work. However, I firmly believe, and I am sure the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette understands, that you cannot borrow yourself out of trouble. The farm financing package is only one in a series of requirements urgently needed in the farm sector to bring back an adequate cash flow to the farmers of this nation so they can repay their debts, keep their commitments and earn a living commensurate with that of the rest of society.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): If there are no further questions or comments we will continue with debate. The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker , before I begin my remarks on the motion of the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer), I would like to say that it is my own view, whether or not it is shared by colleagues in my own caucus or those of other Parties, that we should revert back to at least one part of the old rules. The House should sit on Tuesday and Thursday nights, work until one o'clock Friday, and adjourn for the weekend. Members from all Parties are notoriously absent from the House on a Friday afternoon.

Mr. Mayer: We are here.

Mr. Benjamin: I was just going to say that at best my colleagues in the Official Opposition have less than 10 per cent of their Members present. We have something like 7 per cent of ours and the Government has .1 per cent of theirs. There really is not anything for any of us to brag about. I would rather see this House sitting Thursday night and until one o'clock on Friday. We would have a much better attendance and get a lot more done.

Mr. Speaker, I read the Hon. Member's motion with care. I noted the number of items on which he calls for action in his resolution. He calls for a reduction of the farm fuel tax. People in my Party, and I believe people in his Party, in fact have even called for the elimination of the whole 9 per cent excise tax on diesel fuels for farmers and fishermen. That has been asked for by members of both opposition Parties for a number of weeks. For the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) and maybe even the Member for Portage-Marquette, to pretend for one moment that that will not increase the deficit, is to be dreaming in technicolour. Of course it will. My response is, so what? I submit that the welfare and good order of farmers and fishermen is a hell of a lot more important than the size of the deficit.

Mr. Mayer: We did not pretend it was not going to increase the deficit.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend from Portage-Marquette should read the remarks of his own Leader last Wednesday in which he cited the Province of Saskatchewan as knocking off the gasoline tax without increasing the deficit. With three budgets in two years the Government of Saskatchewan has managed us into a $830 million deficit. I am not objecting for one moment to any increase in the deficit of the provincial Government of Saskatchewan because they have reduced the gasoline tax. Let us not kid around. If you knock off the federal sales excise tax it is going to increase the federal deficit. I say, so what?

Mr. Mayer: We said that in the House.

Mr. Benjamin: You cannot have it both ways, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. Benjamin: Now, the red meat stabilization plan—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette on a point of order.

Mr. Benjamin: It is not a point of order, before he says it.

Mr. Mayer: The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) is now pretending he is clairvoyant, Mr. Speaker. To straighten the issue out, we did not pretend that it was not going to increase the deficit. In fact when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) asked our Leader what the cost would be to the federal treasury, the cost was given at $250 million. So I think if the Hon. Member would read Hansard he would understand that we did realize it was going to increase the deficit and we in fact put a figure on it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): That is not a point of order. That is debate. The Hon. Member for Regina West.

Mr. Benjamin: It shows you, Mr. Speaker, how clairvoyant I am. I will now move to the second point the Hon. Member makes, the red meat stabilization plan.

In the years that I have been here who was it that opposed any kind of national orderly marketing system for red meat? It was invariably Tories, Liberals and the Canadian Cattlemen's Association. Once the Canadian Cattlemen's Association accepts a plan for a red meat stabilization program you can bet that it will be hardly better than nothing. It will be meaningless. The Canadian Cattlemen's Association and the Saskatchewan livestock producers said to leave them alone because they wanted the free and open market system. They did not want any government interference or subsidies. As long as the market was average or better than average they were happy. As soon as their free and open market system went down the drain they were the first ones coming to Ottawa with their hands out. They are the ones who have traditionally fought against orderly marketing and fought against the Canadian Wheat Board and criticized it. I do not give a darn whether it is the cattlemen or the Palliser wheat growers or who it is. We support a red meat stabilization program that means something, Mr. Speaker. I am sick and tired of watching the majority of livestock producers, who produce the most livestock in the country, who are not ranchers and who do not belong to the Canadian Cattlemen's Association, having their prices set every bloody morning in Montreal and Chicago. Those prices bear no relationship whatsoever to their cost of production. They bear no relationship whatsoever to whether they are going to survive as livestock producers.

This nation does need a red meat stablilization plan that will in effect prevent the so-called free and open market—Safeway, Dominion and the rest of them—from setting the price of the labour and the investment of the livestock producer in Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Alberta or anywhere else in the country. The price should be set by national legislation and consultation with those actual producers, and should bear some relationship to their cost of production. If that means that in the end retail prices are too high, then how about a consumer subsidy for low and middle income families and the poor? Why saddle it on the primary producer? Let us turn it in reverse, Mr. Speaker. We too want a proper national red meat stabilization program. The kind that is being proposed at best might be slightly better than nothing. Everyone supports passing legislation on increased advance payments and motherhood. The way things are now, the maximum advance payments should be even higher than what is in the proposed legislation. Resist erosion of initial payments.

Last year and the year before we in the NDP, many economists and many people in farm organizations warned about what is going on in the international grain market. A month ago I read another article about what is happening with our major competitors and the amount of grain they have in storage, their excess production and the amount of subsidy they pay to their grain producers. It was the same government, aided and abetted by the Official Opposition who said that that did not matter and that they would still raise the freight rate. The Conservatives said they would not do it tomorrow, they would do away with the statutory grain rates two years from now. Of course, they voted against Bill C-155. It is the typical Tory strategy to work both sides of the street. However, they were in favour of ending the statutory grain rates.

Mr. Gustafson: Why did you accuse me of giving your speech if that is the case?

Mr. Mayer: You never even had enough people to force a vote on some of your own amendments.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, the Tory Party hired the guy who wrote the Bill. He was kept on to finish the work by the Liberal Government. They are not going to get away with that out West.

Mr. Mayer: We will see after the next election.

Mr. Benjamin: Of course we have to stop the erosion of initial payments. What they mean is that when the Canadian Wheat Board must cut prices in order to maintain or get new contracts, the difference between the maximum it receives from an exporter and what the grain producers should receive would be made up from the National Treasury. It is a subsidy that not only benefits the grain producer but the entire nation.

• (1520)

It is time to reinstate what was called the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. I remember the episode when a former Minister of Transport succeeded in eliminating that. Where were the Tories at that time? Our Party was able to have farmers take the Government to court and they had $100 million returned to them. The Temporary Wheat Reserves Act simply meant that the nation as a whole paid the storage charges for any grain in excess of a certain amount in storage. It saved our grain producers $75 million to $100 million a year. However, the Government did away with it, and it was aided and abetted by the Official Opposition. That Act should be reinstated.

The Hon. Member's motion also raises the issue of the Western Grain Stabilization Act. Our Party succeeded in stopping the Government in its first attempt to introduce it. On the second occasion the Official Opposition sat in both the Transport Committee and Agriculture Committee and meekly accepted it even though—

Mr. Gustafson: Where were you yesterday?

Mr. Benjamin: I was there.

Mr. Gustafson: Where were you last week? Did you hear our leader?

Mr. Benjamin: The Leader of the Opposition discovered the Western Grain Stabilization Act just about a week ago.

Mr. Gustafson: Why did you defeat it?

Mr. Benjamin: The Western Grain Stabilization Act was designed to take grain producers' money. There is more than $1 billion in the fund and the Government still has not put up its share. No interest has been collected on this money. When this Act does come into effect, the highest payment is made to the producer who delivers the most grain. The smaller payment will go to the producer who must travel up to 40 miles to the elevator, who is only on his second quota, whose road is closed because of snow or spring thaw, and who is unable to deliver as much grain.

If the unemployment insurance plan was run on the same basis, when unemployment reached a certain level and triggered a payment from the fund, the person who was working full time would get the biggest payment. Surely that is backwards. If the national medicare program was run on the same basis, it would mean that when the number of patients that went to doctors and hospitals exceeded a certain amount and triggered a payment, the person who was never sick a day would get the biggest payment.

That is why the Western Grain Stabilization Act needs to be amended to trigger a payment, and the highest payments should go to those who need it the most. That is what we argued for in the first and second Grain Stabilization Bills that were brought in the House, beginning in 1970.

The motion also calls for a reduction in high interest rates. The former Minister of Finance of the Official Opposition supported two Liberal Ministers of Finance in two ways. First, he supported them in not firing Gerald Bouey and, second, he said he would do the same thing if he were still the Minister of Finance. He would also artificially prop up the Canadian dollar and raise interest rates to keep the Canadian dollar as high as possible. This costs grain produceres, fishermen, the forest industry and all our exporters more at home and raises the costs of our exports. We lose both ways. I am not concerned about what the Canadian dollar is worth compared to the American dollar, the Fiji dollar or the "Pango-Pango" dollar. I am more concerned about what it is worth to Canadians and what it is doing for us here in Canada.

I believe we should take some of the steps that Louis St. Laurent and John Diefenbaker took in pegging the Canadian dollar, pegging interest rates and implementing foreign exchange control, as was done shortly after the Korean War and again in 1958 or 1959, because it assisted all of our primary producers in forestry, the fishery, the grain industry and in livestock. It helped all of our exports. It made imports more expensive so that Canadians bought more goods made in Canada. Why do we not try that again? This program worked when it was applied in wartime.

Grain producers cannot be expected to survive when they are faced with higher freight rates, higher interest rates and higher costs on all their farm inputs while their prices are reduced even further. The nation as a whole must share in the cost of maintaining a viable agricultural industry, whether it is grain on the Prairie or livestock in Ontario, on the Prairies, in Quebec or other parts of Canada.

Mr. King: What about apples?

Mr. Benjamin: Apples, fruits and vegetables; the Government should be investing in the using of excessive heat capacity in a massive greenhouse operation so that we can grow fruits and vegetables during the winter instead of paying $2 or $3 for cauliflower grown in California or Florida. It can be done. Unless primary producers can be assured a decent price and a decent living from their products, they will not survive. How many more years must we go through patchwork and ad hoc measures? When will the Government learn?

The European Economic Community, Argentina and Australia make sure that their producers get a fair price. The Americans will not sit idly by with their surpluses. They will cut their prices. The Government is asking Canadian primary producers to compete against the Treasury of the United States. Surely that is not fair, because the wealth of the entire nation is needed to accomplish that.

I mentioned the matter of grain in storage. We should return to the system where the nation as a whole shares the storage costs of grain. Even during tough times, having grain in store for export sales is like having money in the bank. But that money is for the entire country because the grain producer who has had to pay the cost of growing it cannot afford to keep it. However, this grain in storage is an asset for the entire country and we should share in the cost of its storage, whether it is on the farm, at an inland elevator terminal or export terminal. Surely that is a fair proposition and one that makes good sense. It is done by other countries.

Our agricultural community continues to diminish. What will those thousands of farmers who lose their farms every year do? Money that is spent in the agricultural industry is not an expense but an investment in this country which benefits the entire nation. While the entire country shares in the costs, it also shares in the return on that investment. These costs which may consist of guaranteed initial prices with any difference made up by the national Government, a real grain stabilization income plan or these other programs included in the Hon. Member's motion, should be shared by the entire nation.

I hope that the Government, in its last, gasping days, will implement programs such as those. It will see how well they will be received by the people of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten minute period for comments or questions.

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, first I have a short comment. I just want the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) to get the record straight about federal tax and provincial tax on farm fuel in Saskatchewan. He indicated that the position of the NDP government has always been the position of the Conservative government. There is a long-running example in the Province of Saskatchewan of the exact positions of both Parties. It was the Devine Government which removed provincial tax on farm fuels, some of which amounted to over 32 cents per gallon. A great part of the election in Saskatchewan was fought on that issue. The Hon. Member for Regina West stands in the House and tries to make the position which the Conservative Party has held for some time that of the New Democratic Party.

• (1530)

The interesting part of that exercise is that the day after the Devine Government swept the Province of Saskatchewan with 57 seats, Grant Devine went to the legislature and announced from its steps the removal of tax on farm fuels. For the benefit of the Hon. Member for Regina West, that is the record, and all Saskatchewan people know it well. It is one of the reasons that the NDP ended up with seven seats and seven provincial members in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Benjamin: You do not even have that right.

Mr. Gustafson: When it comes to the position which was taken by our Leader in the House, last week he asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) if he would remove the 9 per cent federal tax, which amounts to some 18 cents or 19 cents per gallon, depending on the region of the country. We know perfectly well what was the answer of the Prime Minister, as does the Hon. Member for Regina West, but it is interesting to note that it was that Member's Party which voted along with the Liberals to defeat a Conservative government that would have provided that kind of policy for Canada.

How can the Hon. Member justify the kinds of remarks he has made in the House? The Conservative Party has stood firm on the removal of sales tax on farm fuels, on the basis that it is counterproductive. He makes the argument of a dollar here or a dollar there. When we compare that with the expenditures of the Government amounting to $2 billion or $3 billion in bail-outs, we realize that the federal tax on farm fuels is counterproductive. As an active farmer, I know that farmers are not working the land as much as they would because of the high cost of fuels. Also, we must take into consideration the comparison between the cost of fuel in the United States and the cost of fuel in Saskatchewan. Then we have a clear picture of what has happened.

I would like the Hon. Member to answer how he can justify turning around the situation as he did in his speech today.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what was the question. It was really a four-minute speech, to which I do not object. I will do the same to the Hon. Member some day.

However, I want to remind the Hon. Member that he may be somewhat confused. The tax on farm fuels was not there in the first place. The Devine Government of Saskatchewan took the gasoline tax off for everyone else. I am not complaining about that, I am not objecting. I think it was a good idea. The tax was taken off on farm fuels years before that.

Mr. Gustafson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Benjamin: The federal tax is still there and that should be removed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) on a point of order.

Mr. Benjamin: It is not a point of order.

Mr. Gustafson: Again the Hon. Member is confused. The tax was there on diesel fuel and it was 42 cents per gallon.

Mr. Althouse: No, it was not there.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Assiniboia does not have a point of order. I understood that to be debate.

Mr. Benjamin: That farmer can say this and this farmer in my Party assures me that it was not there. Perhaps they had different fuel dealers.

Mr. Althouse: The federal tax is refundable.

Mr. Benjamin: The federal tax is refundable on purple gas. They have to apply for it.

Mr. Althouse: But not diesel fuel.

Mr. Benjamin: That is correct, not diesel fuel. We all want the 9 per cent removed on diesel fuel. There is no argument about that.

Obviously the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) was not listening. His Leader said on Wednesday, April 11, as reported on page 2940 of Hansard:

—the cost is in the neighbourhood of $250 million a year . . . as the Government of Saskatchewan proved by removing that tax provincially, it need not add to the deficit because it is a tremendous impetus for growth.

The fact of the matter is—and that is what I indicated at the beginning of my remarks today—that taking the tax off did increase the deficit of the Government of Saskatchewan. That is why I said in my speech a few moments ago, "so what?" The interests of our farmers come ahead of whatever is the damned deficit.

Mr. Gustafson: It is counterproductive.

Mr. Benjamin: He also complained in his speech that all I did was point out what should be done about the various points raised in the motion of the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette. If he does not agree with that, it is fine with me. I was just indicating what should happen and restating that there should be a sharing of grain storage costs by the national government. If he wants to object to that, that is fine too; I do not mind. I do not know what he is complaining about.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member indicated the deficit of the Devine Government—and it is less than divine, one might be tempted to say—when it took over. I was under the impression from some of my colleagues that during the brief regime of the Conservatives, their idea was to increase that tax from 7 cents to 10 cents and that it would not be refundable.

Mr. Fennell: No.

Mr. Gustafson: No.

Mr. Benjamin: I believe it is correct to say that they proposed to increase the tax, but I do not know whether or not they were to make it non-refundable. I think they might have made it refundable, but I believe there was a provision in the budget to increase the tax.

One of the few times I got anything out of a Minister of Finance around here since 1968 was when he provided for a refund of the 10 per cent federal excise tax on gasoline for the disabled. The Budget of the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) took that away. The Hon. Member for Assiniboia wonders why we moved a subamendment, a vote of confidence in that Budget. The Liberals would have voted for our subamendment even if we had included the Regina Manifesto. They would have voted for it no matter how we had worded it. I am fed up with Tories crying and moaning about something which happened five years ago. Their problem is that they have no class. They do not know how to win well or how to lose well. They were the architects and manufacturers of their own defeat. They have been running around sour-graping and crying about it ever since. Most Canadians do not give a damn what happened in 1979. They want to know what will happen in 1984, 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Mayer: Most people would agree with that, and that is why you will not be here after the next election.

Mr. Benjamin: I say to the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) that the present Government of Saskatchewan inherited several hundreds of millions of dollars of surpluses, all of which are now gone, and with three budgets in two years it has $830 million in deficits. We do not complain about some of that deficit because if the gasoline tax is done away with, of course the deficit will increase. However, if it makes it easier for our primary producers, that is more important than the size of the deficit.

The Tories ought to quit crying about the federal deficit because what they are requesting in their motion will increase the federal deficit. I say, so be it, increase the federal deficit if it will prevent thousands of farmers, fishermen and little storekeepers from going bankrupt. Damn it, increase the federal deficit. But the Tories cannot have it both ways and we will call them on it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): That is the end of the ten-minute period for questions and comments.

Mr. Benjamin: No, let's continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): On continuing debate, the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell).

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour and privilege to speak on this agricultural motion this afternoon. This is an important subject, particularly in my riding of Ontario. Many people think that I come from an urban riding; many of my voters as well as some of the gentlemen at the table. I want to explain that my riding on a geographical basis is 90 per cent agricultural and less than 10 per cent urban. I do have a constituency that is most concerned.

● (1540)

I want to mention another point. I have sat in this House for almost five years. My duty day has been Friday. Today is a low point in attendance. There are more people in the gallery than on the floor of the House of Commons. Something should be stated to shame the Liberals who are responsible for having 20 Members here at all times. It is a disgrace.

One of the basic problems facing our entire economy, not only agriculture, is that we have been totally misled by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). On April 11 in New York City he stated we do not consume 90 per cent of private savings for fiscal expenditures. My researcher worked out the figures. He stated we only spend 25 per cent. The figure for 1982 was 83.7 per cent. Today it is over 90 per cent. It is the fiscal approach and fiscal misleading which has caused the trouble.

There are a number of small farmers in my riding. Most legislation has been of little or no benefit to them. For example, there was the creation of Canagrex. I would like someone opposite to tell me what Canagrex has accomplished. It has a staff and a budget and it spends money. It was intended to create revenue for Canada, but it has done nothing. It has tried to interfere with the private sector and has failed.

Members opposite are always knocking the private sector. The private sector is the only thing that will save this country, but the Government does nothing to assist it. I will give an example. I have spoken many times in this House and have asked many questions, but to date I have not received an answer about Canadair and de Havilland which have collectively cost this economy $6 billion. If a little piece of that $6 billion had been directed with equity and fairness to the farmers of Ontario, there would not be the problems we have read about in the papers in the last few years.

Part of the farmers' problems has come about because of Section 31 of the Income Tax Act. Section 31 was designed for hobby farmers. The Department of National Revenue has applied that to legitimate farmers with small farms, those trying to hold the farm together. The Department applied that Section to those who had to leave the land during the off season, or winter season. Together with help from their spouses and children, they did the chores in the morning and at night. This Section was imposed on these farmers who could not afford the expensive equipment when the price of their produce remained at a fixed level. Inflation affected the price of equipment. Applying Section 31 has, therefore, been damaging, yet the Government has collected very little compared to the tremendous waste in the aerospace industry. That industry could have been a success with proper management, but it failed. There is proper management in the agriculture industry. I do not know of any group of people with a better basic understanding of economics than farmers. I probably learned more from my neighbours than anybody I have heard in this House or from any papers I have read. They have a basic belief that unless you have, you do not spend. They believe you must save. If you cannot afford something, you find a way to pay for it.

I wish to give an example of the inequity of Section 31. If these people had incorporated in such a way that they could be paid by a corporation, that Section would have been applied to the farm corporation and they would not have been hurt. However, the Department of Revenue would have caught up with that. Many people use methods under the tax system to avoid tax which are not permitted to the farmers. I object to that.

I dwell on this point because the family unit in Canada is important. We have become dependent on the state. It is time that we became dependent on ourselves and on our own efforts. Farm people are dependent on their own efforts. They have been the creation of our society and the success of our export program. We have let them down. The way the Government invoked the Crowsnest Pass rate, if it had not been for this Party and our amendments, it could have been total destruction of western farmers. Also, it directly affects farmers in eastern Canada.

We have heard vague talk about the red beef stabilization program. Ontario could not wait for the federal Government so it brought in its own program. It could wait no longer. There was such ill treatment that they had to move on their own. If the provinces can bring in such a program, why not the federal Government? It is because the federal Government has not co-operated with the provinces. It will not sit down and work out joint programs. No wonder this country is so split apart. It is because there have been no federal-provincial negotiations. That is one of the first things our government will do after an election is held. We have friends from coast to coast. We are friendly with governments from coast to coast. We have a common purpose, to help Canada. All the Liberals plan for is retaining power, and the Canadian citizens be dammed. I hope the election comes soon.

There are two remarkable items in Ontario that have been accomplished by the Ontario Department of Agriculture, namely, egg advertising and pork advertising. It has assisted to a great extent. Pork producers in my riding could not have survived if they had not been brought together by the provincial minister to work out a program to assist in selling their product across the border. Pork has been somewhat unstable in price in the past. Because of the programs of the Ontario Government, it has stabilized very definitely.

There is another point which, as a previous speaker mentioned, affects Ontario and British Columbia. A ban was placed on fruit on which certain chemicals had been applied. That ban was domestic. It did not apply to vegetables brought into this country from other lands. I do not understand how we can treat our fruit farmers in a negative way, compared to those in other lands. This is an inequity in the system which has been created by the federal Government. It shows that the Government has no heart, it has no feeling for the people. To put something like that in place is wrong. What is good for the goose is good for the gander. If it is good for people in the southern United States, then it must be good for Canadians. I agree that there must be some restriction on certain chemicals which appear to have toxic residue, but we should not impose that restriction only on ourselves.

● (1550)

An issue which has been close to my heart for many years is the possibility of irrigation in Ontario. The Province of Ontario has been blessed by having available to it approximately 50 per cent of the world's supply of water. We must address the issue of producing more food here in Canada and this can be tied into the remarks made earlier about the programs for greenhouses. A great deal of the food produced in Canada is not of as high a quality as the food brought from the United States because the food has not had the chance to grow. There are more facilities in the United States for irrigation than in Canada.

We must try to improve quality and I know that Canadian farmers are capable of doing so. However, they need assistance in order to implement irrigation. Irrigation is very expensive but it could guarantee supply and quality. This is a subject which must be dealt with through federal-provincial discussions. In the future, there may be another dust bowl like the one of the 1930s. It will be then that Ontario could become so important to the production of grain. I feel that this is another very important issue which should be approached.

I recently read an article about interest rates and farmers. As I understand it, the Farm Credit Corporation was created to help farmers get reasonable loans. Under the present program, any farmer who would borrow money on a 20-year term with a 15 per cent interest rate would not make a red cent. He should put his money in the bank so he could get a 15 per cent return on his money. These extended loans are ridiculous because they are being given to farmers at a cost which they cannot afford. If we are going to do something, we should do it in a reasonable way.

The Province of Ontario has a much smaller revenue base than the federal Government, but the provincial Government of Ontario has a program that assists beginning farmers. This program gives a rebate on Farm Credit loans with interest rates that exceed 8 per cent. At least the provincial Government is being realistic. It knows that a farmer cannot afford to pay an interest rate of more than 8 per cent. There has been much instability of interest rates, and that is why a return to Section 31 of the Income Tax Act is inequitable. I know that the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) is fully aware that people are having to borrow money to make the interest payments on money borrowed for equipment purchases.

Many people have said that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is marvellous, and how great it is that he has entered the leadership campaign. They hope he wins the leadership campaign, and then perhaps agriculture will benefit because he will be running the Liberal Party and will not have as much time to do anymore damage to the agricultural community in Canada. If he was serious, Mr. Speaker, he would have fought for reasonable interest rates. He would have fought in Cabinet to make sure that the Minister of Finance was aware of the situation of farmers. However, I do not believe he did so; if he did, he was not heard. I realize that dealing with the Minister of Finance is like beating one's head against a brick wall but I am sure that after four years, the Minister of Agriculture could have gotten the message across.

Such an important segment of our society has been severely hurt. Why has the Minister not brought in agri-bonds? He has known about that scheme for five years. We developed it in 1979 and he did nothing about it. It is very much like the SBDBs which the Government now uses for bankrupt organizations and for farmers who are on the verge of bankruptcy. That is having a negative impact, Mr. Speaker, and we want something with a positive impact. We want positive approaches; we need positive approaches to get the country moving and help the agriculture community. The people in my riding are sick and tired of this Government that really does not understand agriculture and really does not have any representation from the agricultural community West of the Manitoba border. I understand the feelings of those people.

Last week, I read the Budget of the Saskatchewan provincial Government. I will not dwell on it because I believe the Hon. Member who follows me will touch on it. However, I would like to say that every member on the government side should read that Budget which was brought down in March of this year.

Mr. Cullen: What is the deficit?

Mr. Fennell: The financial position is in excellent shape, and the deficit is a lot lower than the National deficit. That Budget has provided the fuel to ignite the engine of the economy. The Budget will help small business people, and it includes a program for the agricultural community which is probably one of the finest I have seen come from a provincial Government.

The Hon. Minister of Agriculture could have implemented such a program. He has failed his country. He has failed the farming community. He has not had a strong enough voice. He has not let the consumers know about the importance of the providers of food.

I have heard many people speak about inequities for farmers, but unless one has been there one does not know what it is like. I have heard it mentioned as compensation that farming is a wonderful way of life. It is a wonderful way of life. I myself live on a farm. I like the outdoors and I like to see the country side from my windows. However, it has become almost impossible for small family units to exist on a farm. If these family units cannot exist, that increases the number of unemployed people who must be provided for either through unemployment insurance or the welfare system. I do not know many farmers who would accept help from the welfare system because they are proud Canadians. They are a credit to the country and they should not have to be put in this position.

I saw your signal, Mr. Speaker, indicating that my time is up. I appreciate having been afforded the opportunity to express the view of the agriculture community in the riding of Ontario and I hope that someone listens to some of the points we have made today.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I would like the Hon. Member to be a little more accurate about some of the points he made. He suggested that farmers should put their money into the bank at an interest rate of 15 per cent. I would like to know if that is the interest rate offered by the banks in the riding of Ontario.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, no, but my point is that if the Government can charge 15 per cent, it can surely pay 15 per cent. I know that the spread is a little less than that, but if the Government is not paying 15 per cent, what right does it have to charge 15 per cent?

The Hon. Member knows perfectly well that he can make 15 per cent on his money through investments. This can be done, not necessarily through fixed income securities but with a combination of capital gains and fixed income securities. As an example, a farmer would be much better off to borrow money from his father than he would be to depend on the Farm Credit Corporation. However, that can not always be done. At interest rates of 15 per cent, farmers or small businessmen cannot survive. The burden of the carrying cost is too great and erodes the potential value of a business.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, it is always a privilege to speak in a crowded Chamber on a Friday afternoon. I would like to say to the Hon. Member that I am rather surprised about it. This is an Opposition Day and the Hon. Member was bemoaning the fact that Liberals were not carrying their share of the quorum. But the fact is that this is their day. This is the day the Opposition has points to make.

Mr. King: We want to make them to you.

Mr. Cullen: Unfortunately we would like to know that there is more than a handful of people who want to make a particular point. I heard the Member from Regina suggesting the approach of his Party, which is one we have come to know all along. New Democrats really do not care about the costs. Once upon a time people in this House are alleged to have said, although it never was said, "what's a million?" The New Democratic Party does not have the responsibility to govern, it does not have the responsibility to raise taxes and it does not have the responsibility to go to the marketplace and say, "another quarter of a billion dollars". New Democrats really do not care about that.

I think what we really have to look at, and that is what a Government does in this particular case, is the over-all picture. A quarter of a billion here and there; do that twice and you have another billion to add to a deficit which I think is barely manageable now. To suggest that he really does not care is rather a callous approach to the problems being faced by the farmer. I was not really surprised because we have had that approach from the NDP in the past.

When the NDP is not required to govern, it is easy to say "Do as I say but not as I do." That is why I asked the Hon. Member about the size of the deficit in Saskatchewan. When it had an NDP Government it did not have a deficit. It had a surplus. It was managing the economy very well. It is rather ironic that a Conservative Government within two years moved from a position of surplus to a position, I think he indicated, of an $800 or a $900 million deficit—after three budgets. He did not seem to mind that as long as that lost government revenue was the result of reducing taxes on gasoline and things of that nature. My riding is not Sarnia, it is Sarnia-Lambton. I think on two different occasions here I have had to change the name of my riding when those powers that be constantly want to do this regrouping and describe my riding as Sarnia, but like the Hon. Member for Ontairo (Mr. Fennell) I do have a very large farm population in Sarnia-Lambton. At one time I had three townships. As a result of redistribution, I lost one of them, but I still have many friends in the area, many of whom were writing to me. Now, fortunately, the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson), who knows more about farmers' problems and how to resolve them than probably most people in this House, represents the township I lost. It has been a privilege for me to represent not only urban, but as my friend from Ontario says, a good number of people in the rural community as well.

In addition to that I had the rare privilege of being the solicitor for the Corporation of the County of Lambton for some eleven years. During that time I also represented townships and villages in the rural area. It is not a new subject to me. Of great assistance, and I think an individual who has provided great leadership in the House as far as farmers' problems are concerned, is the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex. He is a gentleman who served on various tribunals and boards before being elected to the House of Commons. He was a significant leader in the 4H movement. He attended university and I know that over many years he has operated successfully an excellent farm which he has expanded from year to year. It is like the Hutton Agency "when Ralph Ferguson speaks, Bud Cullen listens." He is a man who does have ideas. I was very happy to hear him speak this afternoon and put forth some ideas he has about things the Government has been doing on behalf of the farmer.

It is all right from time to time to look in isolation and say "what are you doing about this? What about this particular tax? What about relief for that?", without looking at the over-all picture and the number of things that have been done on behalf of the Canadian farmer. One has only to look at the last Budget to see some of the significant moves that were made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), who was approached not only by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan)—and I give him full marks for that—but by many Members of the back bench.

A leading role was taken by the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex. We know the Member for Lambton-Middlesex has a Bill on how to deal with farmers who are in difficulty, and the waiting period and the timeframe which they should have.

That is an excellent Bill. It falls short in a couple of areas perhaps, but I think if it were implemented right away it would operate to the benefit of many farmers who find themselves in significant financial difficulty.

The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) is not here. Knowing how far he has to travel, he probably had to catch a plane in order to get home and meet with his constituents. But one always listens with some interest to the Hon. Member. He parrots so often the NDP philosophy, namely, that the NDP does not worry about the cost. But seemingly when New Democrats get into power they do a lot more worrying about it.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) today quoted former Premier Barrett with some approbation about being concerned about the cost of things. The former government in Saskatchewan was concerned about the cost of things. When it comes time to govern the New Democrats seem to take on a much more responsible position than they do here in the House of Commons when they simply suggest ways of making more money available for particular projects without having to account for it.

One of the things that interested me this week, Mr. Speaker, was the announcement by the Minister of Agriculture that he had received Cabinet approval of a tripartite stabilization program for the red meat industry. That represents an historic step forward in the Canadian livestock sector. Red meat producers have been plagued with marketing problems for years, and agreement in principle on a stabilization plan by producers, some provinces and the federal Government climaxes more than ten years of discussion, debate and negotiations. I think it was the Hon. Member who asked, "why did it take so long? Why do provinces have to move on their own?" If we are going to get into a Canadian stabilization program we have to deal with different provinces with different priorities and different ideas about how a stabilization plan can be made to work on behalf of the producers.

Agriculture is a shared jurisdiction by federal and provincial governments in Canada, and the achievement of a general agreement to proceed with a red meat stabilization plan demonstrates the ability of the federal Government and the provinces to co-operate for the benefit of farmers in this country. There has been co-operation through a whole series of fields between the federal Government and either individual provinces on a bilateral basis where that might be necessary, or on a multilateral basis where we have to bring all of the provinces in to a particular area because of the particular problems being faced by Canadians—in this case by the Canadian farmer, the red meat people.

Livestock producers have been particularly hard hit by the world wide recession and inflation. Unlike their colleagues in the poultry and dairy sectors, they have not had the protection of supply management to keep prices in line with their production costs. The new stabilization program will go a long way toward evening out the ups and downs in the red meat industry and allowing producers to plan their production with greater security.

That word "security" has a tendency from time to time to be over-used, and yet it is so important. I find that responsible union leaders from time to time are as much concerned these days about job security as they are with increases or pension plans being put in place.

When operating in the marketplace, where there are so many variables that are beyond the ken and the control of the red meat producer, I think it is appropriate that a stabilization plan be put into place. Whether this is the best one for Canada or Canadian red meat producers I do not know. I am not an expert or a professional in the field, but it seems to me that common sense would dictate that something along this line has to be done. We have seen it done, as I have said, on a province-wide basis, and now it is time to move, hopefully, to the Canada-wide situation.

I think it is important to point out that this plan was worked out in full consultation with the producer organizations. The Minister mentioned on Monday that an agreement on a red meat stabilization plan represents a minor miracle of co-operation among producers, federal and provincial governments. As I indicated earlier, we have a tripartite kind of agreement which is even more difficult than dealing solely with the producer or the provincial governments.

I think a few more minor miracles may be needed before the plan is fully effective for all livestock producers in Canada. I am advised that Members opposite can help in achieving those miracles by co-operating in speedy passage of the enabling legislation necessary for the plan to go into effect. This legislation I am given to understand is expected to be introduced in the very near future, most assuredly in my view before June.

● (1610)

As all Hon. Members know, we have an Agricultural Stabilization Act in effect, and have had for many years. Since 1978 the federal Government has put more than $200 million into the red meat industry in stabilization payments to beef, pork, and lamb. This is just one more indication of the kinds of money we are talking about in terms of helping Canadian farmers.

The new tripartite proposal represents a major step forward in several ways. First, it involves producer participation. Farmers will have a direct stake in this plan. Second, it commits all provinces which join the plan to the same level of support. Top loading by provinces and the balkanization of the industry which it has caused has been a serious problem. That has been one of the defects, the kind of thing the Hon. Member for Ontario raised, that a particular province or provinces had to go it alone, because it did lead to balkanization, which I believe in Canada is inappropriate, certainly not in the best interests of the producer.

How do we work out a plan which is Canada-wide and which wins the acceptance of the federal and provincial Governments and the producers themselves? That is no mean feat. While I sympathize with provinces wishing to help their producers, I am sure they must all realize that a uniform set of policies for farmers across Canada is in the long-term interest of the industry.

I feel the most important benefit of the new program will be the speed with which it will respond to price fluctuations. Under the present Act, once a stabilization payment has been announced, producers have to submit their claims and those claims must be verified before the cheques can go out. Under the new plan, producers will be preregistered and their eligibility will already be established. In all the new plans, except the one for the cow-calf operators, support prices will be calculated quarterly. This means that when payments are warranted, they can be made quickly. I believe that has been the failing, Mr. Speaker, all too often of government programs, be it federal or provincial. When a program promises you something but you have to wait for it, there is a detrimental effect or a worrying effect on the people who are entitled to that particular payment and should not have to wait for it.

I ran into that, Mr. Speaker, all too often with unemployment insurance payments where people anticipated receiving a certain amount of money within a certain period of time. I must say, to the credit of the people who work for the Unemployment Insurance Commission, they have made many splendid moves which have brought about, in the vast majority of cases, prompt payment to people who have paid a premium for insurance.

If this program had been in effect last year, my information is that cow-calf producers would have received $29.7 million; producers of backgrounder cattle, $8.3 million; feed lot operators, $12.4 million; hog producers, $92.4 million and lamb producers $3.9 million. The key features of the new program are; first, that provinces and producers may join on a voluntary basis; second, that the federal Government, participating provinces and producers will contribute equal amounts of money to a stabilization fund; third, separate plans will be offered for cow-calf producers, beef backgrounders, slaughter cattle finishers, hog producers and sheep producers; fourth, payments from the fund will be made when market prices fall below the national support level; and five, the level of support will not be high enough to become an incentive to over-production.

Support prices for beef backgrounders, slaughter cattle and hogs will be based on a guaranteed margin approach, while support prices for calves and sheep will be based on an average weighted price reflecting the impact of inflation.

I am advised, Mr. Speaker, that in this kind of legislation, in this particular instance, the agriculture stabilization board will administer the new plan with guidance from a nine-member red meat stabilization committee. Like the plan itself, that committee will represent the three parties involved, the federal Government, the provinces and the producers. There will also be a consultative committee for each commodity, thus ensuring that those involved in production of red meat products have a continued input into the operation of the plan.

We must be careful, Mr. Speaker, in putting something in place to recognize that there could be defects and there should be some plan or means whereby that particular program can be improved upon and improved upon immediately. Sunset clauses all too often come in and wipe out the whole operation. I believe that is inappropriate, certainly for an operation like this. We must constantly look and check, and constantly pay attention to where the problems are, whether this is done by the consultative committee or by members of the stabilization board or the advisory committee. This is a situation where people will have an opportunity to determine where the program has flaws and to bring about improvements.

I want to emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that this is a voluntary program and full consultation with the producers and the provinces will be maintained throughout the next stages as the program develops. The enabling legislation, as I indicated earlier, will be introduced soon. I see this as a major step forward in support of a very important sector of the agriculture industry, and one which will be watched carefully by producers of other commodities and by other countries. I think it is fair to say, Mr. Speaker, that it is but one more example of the innovative, creative, consultative approach which this Government has taken to encourage the agriculture industry.

I learned a fair amount about farming, Mr. Speaker, when I served as the county solicitor, but I feel I learned a great deal more about politics. On one occasion I was with the Reeve of Alvinston, the late Clayton Cox. We had to go about some important county business in Alvinston. I drove from Sarnia to Alvinston, which is a fair distance, and met him at his home. From there we were going to the place where we were holding the meeting. He kept talking to people and shaking hands and I said, "Come on, Clayton, we have to get moving". He said, "Bud, this is a small town. If I lose that side of the street, I lose the election". They know what democracy is all about in the rural part of our country, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions and comments. If there are no questions or comments, we will proceed to debate.

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, I have told many people lately that the only reason I do not get recognized in the House more often is because the Speakers cannot pronounce Okanagan-Similkameen and do not want to be embarrassed to show it. However, it is a famous area for apples, tree fruits, grapes, wine and cattle. It is just a famous area.

There were some rather interesting comments made today. One comment made me prick up my ears. I heard a Government Member talking about getting payments out on time when people need them. That is a very pertinent comment to the people of Okanagan and to the industry I represent, and, I am proud to say, myself. I still have my orchard. I received a letter from the Minister on March 5. He was very pleased to tell me about a stabilization payment for the 1982 apple crop. I am not sure that all the growers in the Okanagan have received their payments yet. The 1982 crop was fully harvested and in storage by November 1 and probably most of it was stored by October 15 of that year. The stabilization payments were triggered by very depressed prices in that year, and finally in 1984 the growers are receiving a cheque representing the commitment of the federal Government to stabilize the price in 1982.

I was also interested in the dialogue between the Government Member and the Hon. Member for the New Democratic Party concerning deficits, whether they are good or bad, and whether they should be increased or decreased. The argument, from our standpoint, is not that we need to increase deficits in order to do some of the things which should be done in the country, but that we need a Government which is prepared to stop doing things which should not be done in the country and change its priorities for spending. I do not think we are participating in increasing the deficit, we are just going to displace about $5 billion now being misappropriated and put it to more useful purposes.

● (1620)

Mr. Cullen: Tell us what you would do.

Mr. King: We will demonstrate in less than a year's time if you guys ever get the courage—

Mr. Cullen: We have to get a leader first.

Mr. King: Well, you have quite a selection now.

The Royal Bank in advertising its Royfarm banking service for farmers in the magazine Farm and Country used a picture of a needlepoint wall hanging which very prominently states:

If you don't know where you have been and where you are, it's hard to plan where you're going.

I would like to hang one of those in the office of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). Perhaps we could have one hand made by some hard pressed farmer's wife as a constant reminder to the Minister: "If you do not know where you have been and where you are, it is hard to plan where you are going". Farmers across Canada generally have reason to doubt that the Minister knows where the farmer has been, what they have been through, and certainly we doubt that he understands where the farmer is presently at. As the motto says, it is hard, Mr. Minister, to plan where you are going under these circumstances. We would like to help him, but more particularly help the Canadian farmers.

In forming the next Government of Canada, the Progressive Conservative Party will do just that. It is appropriate indeed that we consider the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) on behalf of the Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament, the farmers' friend, I might add. The motion says:

That whereas the economic problems facing Canadian farmers today are largely the result of Government in-action and neglect, this House condemns the Government for its failure to recognize the importance of the agricultural sector and its contribution to economic growth in Canada—

The present Minister of Agriculture will be rather too preoccupied with his own leadership ambitions to put his energies and efforts to helping fulfil the ambitions of Canadian farmers. These days that ambition is simply to survive to meet their obligations, pay their bills and avoid losing their farms, homes, assets and their usefulness to society.

I was interested to see the interview by Pamela Wallin of the Minister of Agriculture on this morning's TV show. Her intuitive questioning of the Minister contained in it much of the reason behind the farmers' grave difficulties today. Her question was something like this: Why are you, the Minister of Agriculture, trying to become the leader of the Liberal Party of Canada, a Party that really has little interest in rural Canada and relates almost exclusively to urban Canada? Those are not the exact words but that is the gist of her question. I believe that demonstrates the root cause of the malaise in agriculture in Canada; a Government which really does not have that much interest in the subject. This is convincingly demonstrated by the statistics available to all which tell a very sad story of neglect by this Government.

We need look no further than the record of farm bankruptcies, Mr. Speaker, which provides an index of escalating difficulties experienced by Canadian farmers. In 1980 bankruptcies were up 77 per cent over 1979. In 1981 they were up a further 17.6 per cent. In 1982 they were up 57 per cent again. In 1983, up 19.6 per cent. In January and February, 1984, bankruptcies are up 58.3 per cent over the same period in 1983. If we assume the number of bankruptcies in 1975 as the base, or 100, the bankruptcy index in 1984 has now reached 620. That measures the degree of anxiety, anger and terror which exists out in the real world of agriculture; out there, Mr. Speaker, where the wheat is growing, the cattle are raised, the eggs produced and, of course, the apples, peaches and cherries are cultivated, nurtured and harvested. It is in that real world that the massive instability is ending in tragedy for a great number of farmers, and there is no prospect in sight of major relief from these difficulties. There is no prospect except the anticipated federal election which will change governments, change Ministers and change an entire philosophy toward government responsibility to agriculture in Canada.

In a statement of Members of Parliament dated April 11, 1984, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture said that surely a modest degree of assistance and assurance of reasonable stability in interest rates, plus reasonable measures of price stability, are a small price to pay to help ensure the preservation of the family farm structure of Canadian agriculture. If the family farm is to be preserved, Mr. Speaker, special farm credit measures must be taken. Today's interest rates are simply not affordable. The question might be asked: Does the Government recognize this fact?

I called the British Columbia Federation of Agriculture to ask them what their chief concerns in British Columbia were today. They gave me three subjects: Stabilization is first and foremost on the mind of B.C. farmers; Section 31 harassment by Revenue Canada is No. 2; third, the Farm Credit Corporation. They said there is a disenchantment that it has come to be the lender of last resort without adequate funding.

The B.C. Federation of Agriculture said recently that to achieve economic recovery and long term prosperity in British Columbia we must recognize and build upon our economic strengths. Agriculture is one of these strengths. The industry contributes $2.5 billion in wholesale sales to the 1982 gross provincial product, a 4 per cent increase over 1981 and a 14 per cent increase over 1980. At a time when other resource industries were hard hit with declines in production and numbers employed, agriculture continued at pre-recession levels. Agriculture is the mainstay of rural communities, stabilizing regional economies. Approximately 65,000 people are kept working in the British Columbia agriculture and food industry. Fifty-five per cent of the food consumed in B.C. is produced in the province by less than 1 per cent of the population. That is the good news in B.C.

The bad news is that net farm income in B.C. is plummeting. The share of the consumer dollar which comes to the farmer is shrinking. The input costs of production to the farmer are skyrocketing. These are facts faced by farmers right across Canada. The dilemma is particularly acute in British Columbia where costs have outstripped ability to pay. These costs are outside the farmers' ability to control.

Take for instance the Okanagan tree fruit farmers growing cherries, apricots, peaches, apples, prunes and pears. Fruits so attractive and so mouthwateringly good must be retailing at a price which puts money in the farmers' pockets, right? Wrong. The 1983 peach crop returned 2.942 cents a pound from the market to the fruit farmers in the Okanagan. That is $58.84 a tonne for the best peaches produced anywhere in Canada, or anywhere in the world.

I first got into fruit farming on my own in 1955 in Kaleden where my father planted the first orchards in 1912. Back in the 1950s and 1960s we used to pick the peach crop and wonder whether we would get three cents a pound. Sometimes we got four cents, sometimes we got less. That was 25 years ago when orchard labour was 75 cents an hour or less as compared to $6 to $10 an hour now. The three cents a pound for peaches in 1961 meant that eight or nine pounds of peaches would buy a gallon of farm fuel. Today with the market returning three cents the orchardist must pick nearly 70 pounds to buy that same gallon of fuel. It is a tough world out there and someone must recognize that fact.

The Minister's response is to tell B.C. farmers that if their province helps them financially the federal Government will penalize them. What a farce. The federal Government is telling B.C. farmers that they are expendable and their situation is not recognized, so tough luck boys and girls.

There are so many little things the Government could be doing to encourage farmers. How about the elimination of the 9 per cent sales tax on fuels used in food production? That would not cure everything, but it would indicate a substantial interest in agriculture. How about taking note of the resolutions which came out of the sixty-second annual meeting of the Canadian Horticultural Council held here in Ottawa in March? A number of them dealt with the complexity and confusion which pertains to deductions; unemployment insurance, Canada pension, workmen's compensation, income tax and other mandatory deductions.

In a resolution the council asked for some uniformity in the formula of the hours worked and the amount earned that would trigger the deduction processes. I wish the Government would recognize the burden that this adds to the farming community. If very often increases the amount of work the farmer has to do in the evening after his daily chores on the farm have been completed.

The fact is that fruit farmers in the Okanagan have their backs to the wall. The industry that produces economic stability in that beautiful area of British Columbia may very well not survive in its present state through this decade. The large part of the competition for markets comes from Washington State where all cost inputs, fuel costs, costs of irrigation, insecticides, fertilizers and, most notably, the cost of labour, are dramatically lower. I would like to quote from the March, 1984 issue of B.C. Country Life, an article by Ted Noonan, entitled "Fruit Trends", which deals with the impossible cost situation faced by Okanagan farmers. He said:

—packing-house workers and employees working for Tree Fruits in B.C. received $12.50 an hour, while across the line in Washington State, the same workers receive $4.70 to $5.25 an hour.

Across the line in Washington State means just that. Farmers in B.C. are competing with farmers in the U.S. with whom they are immediate neighbours. In some cases they can actually talk over the back fence to each other. So we are not talking about some remote foreign country with an impoverished labour force. We are talking about a British Columbia economy that imposes circumstances upon the farming community not duplicated in other areas of this continent.

When I phoned—are we nearly through? We cannot be. I have not had 20 minutes.

If I might just have a minute, I will emphasize the concern which B.C. producers are faced with. They have costs which are totally unrepresentative of the balance of the nation. Yet they are being told that if the province recognizes these cost differentials they will be penalized by the federal Government in the matter of stabilization payments. I am sorry I have so much to say and so little time to say it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen).

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to ask the Hon. Member one question. He indicated they were paying $12.50 for certain workers in his area and $4.70 in the United States. Those figures are not the Government's fault. Were they negotiated or imposed? How did it come about that you were unsuccessful and the others so successful?

Mr. King: Mr. Speaker, I think it must be recognized that B.C. is a well organized labour area in Canada. That situation pertains not just to orchard or agriculture labour. I will go on to read form this article because the writer points out—

Mr. Cullen: I am only interested in the labour part.

Mr. King: This is labour. It says:

According to a recent article in The Vancouver Sun, these food workers—

This is referring to people in Super Valus in retailing.

—are now approaching the second year of a two-year agreement which saw wages rise 85 cents an hour last year, and will see wages rise 76 to 83 cents this April.

● (1640)

These raises will bring the hourly wages of a part-time clerk stocking shelves in the store to $16.78 an hour, while full-time clerks in the same category will earn $618 for a 40 hour week; a total of $32,136 a year.

This is 29 per cent more than those in Ontario and 38 per cent more than in Manitoba.

And it is 51 per cent more than comparable jobs pay in Washington State—

If we are going to get labour into our orchards and fruit packing plants, we must become competitive with what is going on in the rest of the province.

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, this week in the House has been very interesting to farmers. It has been interesting in the sense that, as the Member for Okanagan-Similkameen (Mr. King) mentioned in his remarks, there have been three occasions when the Opposition has asked the Government to consider issues that need such consideration.

Mr. Flis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It appears to me that the ten-minute question period is permitted in order to make comments on the preceding speaker's comments or to ask that Member questions. It is not for the kind of comments the Hon. Member is making now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): That is quite correct but I do not think the Member had a chance to develop the points. Of course, he should direct himself to the speech of the previous Member.

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, I was about to do that. I was commenting about the speech the Hon. Member made in regard to the context of the motion. The motion simply states that it is most important to realize that the Government has failed to recognize that agriculture would stimulate the economy and other sectors in the country. This has been brought out in all of the speeches from this side of the House today. Agriculture is not only important to farmers, it is important in respect of the jobs that are being lost because the Government fails to recognize the importance of agriculture to the economy.

The Leader of our Party raised three issues with respect to agriculture this week. He rose in the House to ask a question about the federal sales tax of 9 per cent being removed. That was rejected by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). He raised the question of the Western Grain Stabilization Act and the fact that there was approximately $1 billion of farmers' money there which could stimulate the economy. Again, the Prime Minister rejected that, not only in the House but also in reference to a letter from our House Leader to the Government House Leader which requested bringing on this legislation quickly. Again today, when we asked a question about the initial price of grain and for the Prime Minister to clarify with the farmers exactly what the findings were, it was in fact rejected. I think it is most important that this not happen.

What does the Hon. Member believe the stimulation of the economy would be if the Government was to give priority to agriculture?

Mr. King: Mr. Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member what it would be in the Okanagan. Agriculture is a very integral part of the Okanagan economy. There were situations in 1949, 1955 and 1963 when we had severe winters that significantly reduced the agricultural capacity of orchards. In some cases it entirely eliminated peaches, apricots and severely reduced cherries. It is the experience in my area that the whole economy of the valley suffers. As well, tourism is cut dramatically as a result of these crop failures.

I said recently in an article I wrote for the local papers that as agriculture goes, so goes the mainstream economy. I believe we can say in western Canada that as western agriculture goes, so goes the Ontario economy. I think we can say that with some justification.

I believe the answer to the question is simply that the impact of a depressed or viable agricultural economy and its effect on the mainstream economy of Canada has been totally underestimated by the Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) for a short question.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is well known for his expertise in the horticulture industry. I would be interested in knowing his concerns about the differences in the cost of production between Canada and the United States. As I understand it, there are some real differences in costs between the U.S. and Canada in his area of the country. Would he outline some of his concerns in this respect?

Mr. King: Mr. Speaker, I believe I indicated some of those disparities during the course of my speech. The fact is that the fruit producers in the Okanagan have great concern about the competition from directly south of the border. It is not only because of the difference in cost production. Another difference is the size of operations that are in place in the Washington-Columbia Valley which cannot be duplicated in Canada.

One of our main concerns is not with the cost of actual production, but the fact that Washington State and California products come to the counter at the market before our production is mature. As a result, the tail end of the market from California and Washington State very often sets the price for the peak of our production. The tail end of the market is when those who are merchandising their produce are getting rid of what they have left, very often at any price. We find it unfortunate that we cannot be protected from this type of dumping of tail-end products from the United States, particularly when it sets the price that our Canadian farmers receive for their product.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): This is the end of the ten-minute period for questions or comments. Continuing debate.

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to receive that welcome from the multitude in the House. I want to welcome back the Member for Okanagan-Similkameen (Mr. King). I know he had a brief bout in the hospital. It is nice to hear his voice in the Chamber again.

I had to laugh somewhat when the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell) was trying to shame the Liberals because of poor attendance. He said that he has been here for five years. In those five years he should have learned that when dealing with government business it is up to our side to provide the quorum, and if it is an Official Opposition day it is up to them to provide a quorum. When they started their debate this morning, they had three people here.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis) just brought to our attention something which is entirely new to me. It is the fact that on Opposition days it is supposed to be the Opposition which has 20 people here to form a quorum, and on government days the Government is supposed to make a quorum. Quite frankly, I have never heard of that order. Perhaps he would be kind enough to give us the reference from whence he gets this.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): First, I do not consider that a point of order. It is a point of discussion. We will return to debate.

Mr. Flis: Mr. Speaker, I think it would make common sense that if they bring in a motion they should have the troops here to debate it—not three people. At 2.30 o'clock, one Tory Member was here. I have been watching their ranks all afternoon. That is the Party which was expressing its great concern about the agricultural sector.

• (1650)

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I prepared a speech and obviously I will not be able to deliver it. I just do not understand the remarks of the Hon. Member. I think my point of order is well taken.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I am sorry to advise the Hon. Member that that is not a point of order.

Mr. Nickerson: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I will recognize the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) on a point of order, but I would appreciate it if he would come directly to his reason for rising.

Mr. Nickerson: Is it not a fact, Sir, that there are three times as many members of the Opposition presently in the Chamber as there are members of the Government?

Mr. Mayer: Four times as many.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): That is not a point of order.

Mr. Gustafson: But it is a fact.

Mr. Flis: The motion of the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) attempts to condemn the Government for failing to recognize the importance of the agricultural sector. Among other subjects, the motion makes specific reference to several initiatives affecting the western grain industry. I would like to draw to his attention the investment of the federal Government since 1973 in the purchase and leasing of hopper cars. This represents money saved for western farmers.

I have one eye on the clock, and I will save the time of the House by not giving the details of that, other than to say that total federal spending under the Crow which will go into branch line rehabilitation and hopper car purchases will amount to $8.9 billion in the decade between 1983 and 1992. The mover of the motion laughs when I bring this to his attention. He was the one who boycotted Bill C-155 all summer and all fall. He was the one who stalled. Now he and his colleagues want passage of a Bill in an hour, after they wasted months and months of the valuable time of this House.

Mr. Mayer: What a bunch of garbage.

Mr. Flis: This is what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was talking about when he said to the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Mulroney), "get your act together, show a little co-operation and we can pass a lot of Bills through the House".

Mr. Gustafson: Let the people decide.

Mr. King: Yes, let the people decide.

Mr. Flis: The Government hopes that this Bill can be passed before the start of the new crop year on August 1. Under the proposed amendments, the maximum advance for individuals will double from $15,000 to $30,000. Other changes include increasing the limit for emergency advances for drying tough and damp grain from $1,000 to $3,000, and for unthreshed grain from $7,500 to $15,000.

The Opposition motion urges the Government to resist the erosion of initial payments. Just this morning the Hon. Senator Hazen Argue, Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, announced in Regina initial payments for the 1984-85 crop year. Senator Argue said that on August 1 the initial payments for spring wheat will decrease $10 per tonne, for feed oats they will increase $20 per tonne, for feed barley and designated oats they will increase $10 per tonne, and that for durum and designated barley they will drop only $5 per tonne from levels set a year ago.

Mr. Patterson: Only!

Mr. Flis: The reductions in wheat payments reflect abundant supplies in relation to world markets and continuing pressure on prices, while the increases reflect more buoyant markets for feed grains.

Despite the difficult outlook for the 1984-85 crop year with respect to wheat, the Government has maintained initial payments as close to last year's levels as possible. That was the intent of part of the Hon. Member's motion. The Government's objective is to assist in maintaining farm cash flow at as high a level as possible, even if it poses a slightly higher risk of deficits in the pool accounts of the Wheat Board, which would have to be underwritten by the federal Treasury.

Even though some initial payments are slightly reduced, Senator Argue has indicated that he would be prepared, if market conditions significantly improve, to recommend that an adjustment be made in the initial payment levels either before August 1, if possible, or after the start of the new crop year.

In today's announcement, Senator Argue noted that once again this year grain exports are moving well—about 5 per cent ahead of shipments in the 1982-83 crop year. Car unloads are up about 2 per cent overall, including a 14.8 per cent increase at Thunder Bay.

Mr. Mayer: That is because the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) was Minister of Transport five years ago.

Mr. Flis: However, there is no doubt the situation in world grain markets is difficult and competition is tough. In these very competitive circumstances, the Canadian Wheat Board is doing an excellent job of marketing prairie grain. The long-term agreements negotiated by the Wheat Board with its customers guarantee minimum sales of 14 million tonnes. Also it should be noted that any substantial reduction in crops in main producing areas in the current crop year could bring about a strengthening of world grain prices.

The Opposition motion also urges the Government to pass urgently-needed amendments to the Western Grain Stabilization Act. Hon. Members will be aware that the Government made a commitment in the Speech from the Throne to introduce amendments to this legislation to make it more responsive to the needs of western farmers.

Mr. Mayer: When?

Mr. Flis: That need was recognized by this side of the House long before the Leader of the Opposition discovered the other week that western farmers have a problem. I am sure Hon. Members of all Parties will support these amendments when they are brought before the House in the near future.

Mr. King: When?

Mr. Flis: The Western Grain Stabilization Act was designed to stabilize net cash flow from seven major grains and oilseeds produced in the West. It has served that purpose quite well. However, in recent times increased grain marketings have tended to mask the fact that grain prices have fallen and production costs have risen. The program must be made more responsive to the actual financial situation of western grain farmers, and that is what the Government is proposing to do.

Mr. Mayer: When, when?

Mr. Flis: Another recent federal initiative to assist western farmers was the contribution of $10 million to the Protein Oil Starch Pilot Plant Corporation in Saskatoon. The POS Pilot Plant Corporation conducts research and development work with a view to developing new products and processes with respect to grains and oilseeds. POS is a joint federal Government-industry initiative. This recent contribution is intended to assist it over the next five-year period and to enable it, in conjunction with its industry clientele, to continue to develop a commercial base of operations.

There are many other positive initiatives and contributions which the federal Government has made to the grain and oilseed industry over the years. These are too numerous to mention here since I have only a few minutes remaining. The performance of the Canadian grain industry in exporting grain is one that is unmatched by any other industry and commodity in Canada.

Seven years ago the Canadian Wheat Board proposed an export target of 30 million tonnes of grain by 1985. Exports of grain and products in the 1982-83 crop year reached 29.5 million tonnes, just shy of the 30 million tonne target with two years still to go. I am confident we will achieve and surpass that target with a level of market returns to the producer which would not be possible with any other type of marketing system.

The Government has a good record with respect to recognizing the importance of the Canadian agricultural industry in general, and the western grain industry in particular. I believe the motion of the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette is not well founded. He talks about government inaction. I have demonstrated, as have the Minister and other speakers before me, that we are a government with positive action for the agricultural sector of the economy.

He talked also about government neglect in his motion. If he researches carefully, he will see that we are a government which is sincere about the agricultural industry. We have great respect for the producers of this land. The philosophy of the Liberal Party is to care for all Canadians, to look after all sectors of the economy. It is not to pit one sector against another, one region against another, one Canadian against another, as the Tories like to do.

Mr. Mayer: What a bunch of garbage. We will send you home in a hopper car.

Mr. Flis: That is what the Tories like to do. They like to disunite the country, yet talk about Canadian unity. They talk bull on their Opposition day. It is the Party of against, of contras, of pitting one region of Canada against another and one sector of the economy against another. They talked about the aerospace industry. What does that industry have to do with the motion before the House? They pitted farmers against the aerospace industry. They should be ashamed of themselves.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 62—TECHNOLOGICAL CHANGE

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West) moved:

That this House condemns the Government for its failure to work co-operatively with the provinces, business, labour, voluntary organizations and the educational community to provide adequate training and retraining opportunities that would enable Canadian workers to feel confident about their ability to deal with the challenges of rapid technological change.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to stand in the House today and devote a full day of the time of the House to what I think may be the most important problem in the country which must be resolved if we are to have an economic future that is full of opportunity and hope for Canadians.

The Conservative task force which dealt with technological change, manpower training and retraining has concluded that those who tell us that the country will require two million new jobs by 1990 simply to retain today's unemployment rate are correct. We find ourselves in an era of rapid change. We on this side of the House have spoken many, many times about the fact that there are well over half a million young people in Canada today who are unemployed. What has not been said with enough frequency is that 73 per cent of those unemployed young Canadians have not been educated or trained beyond high school. In many cases, unemployed young Canadians have not even completed high school.

The fact that unemployed young people are not being trained beyond high school and that within six years we must find two million new jobs within the Canadian economy underlie the thesis advanced by the Conservative Party task force report. When those two facts are coupled with an awareness of the fact that 90 per cent of the people who will be employed in 1990 are already employed in the Canadian economy, we then begin to understand the degree to which we should already have embarked upon a priority program for the training and education of adults. Our failure to do so is inexcusable.

I brought with me today reports which have been prepared in the last four or five years which deal with this issue. At the top of the pile of these reports is a report entitled In the Chips, Opportunities for People Partnerships. That report was put out by the federal Department of Labour. I was vice-chairman when a report entitled Work for Tomorrow, a report of one of the first task forces set up by Parliament to study the issue of the Canadian work force and its needs for training and retraining, was made. That task force reported to the House over three years ago with well over 200 recommendations. However, the Government is very good at appointing task forces and study groups and employing consultants to provide it with answers and policy proposals, but it does not pay any attention to such things.

The next major report I have with me is in two volumes and is entitled Learning a Living in Canada. What has been done about that report, Mr. Speaker? I have with me a very recent report entitled Learning for Life. What has the Government done about that report? What has it done about the report of the Canadian Adult Education Association entitled From the Adult's Point of View, What Should We Do About Education? I have as well a report entitled A Working Majority, What Women Must Do for Pay. I have listed just a sample of the total number of reports and studies which have been produced in the 1980s containing advice for the Government. Nothing has been done about these reports.

It is particularly galling to see on the news or in the newspapers night after night leadership candidates like the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts) talking about the need to use unemployment insurance funds for training. The Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Johnston) has indicated that he has similar views. Those ideas were given to the Government well over three years ago by an all-Party committee of the House of Commons. When that advice was given to the Government, the committee also indicated that the need was urgent. Three years ago the need was urgent, and now we are into the spring of 1984 and the Government has done nothing about it.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration, a leadership candidate, rose in the House last week and said that any idea of the Conservative task force which was not already in place was regressive and startling. That told us more about the Minister and his knowledge of his Department and the advice given to it than anything else. That same Minister stood in the House and told us that $1 billion of unemployment insurance funds were going into the pockets of people so that they could take training, when the Main Estimates indicated $250 million or a quarter of that amount, and that the Government had the intention of cutting unemployment insurance funds for people to take training. To have the Minister stand in the House and tell us the opposite speaks volumes about the competence of the Minister, the concern of the Minister and of the entire Cabinet. The ideas have been around for years. To this day the Minister gives us no indication that he understands those ideas or that he has a legitimate committee to the actualization of those ideas.

What about the educational challenge of the future? Those of us who serve society in the capacity of Members of Parliament of whatever political Party, those of us who have constituency offices in our neighbourhoods and communities, are in touch with unemployed Canadians. They telephone us and they come to see us. Many of them have a rather consistent history of unemployment which goes back a good many years. The common characteristic of those people is that they are not particularly well trained or well educated. Statistics Canada and OECD tell us that somewhere between 27 per cent and 30 per cent of the labour force in the country are functionally illiterate. They cannot read or write well enough to participate fully in training for the modern age. That is a large part of the problem of those who have experienced a great deal of unemployment in the last 10 years to 20 years.

Every Member of Parliament who serves in this Chamber is meeting with unemployed Canadians who have a lot of education, who have obtained master's degrees or doctorates, who have been engineers with 20 years of experience. They are family people with mortgages, car payments and all the obligations which are characteristic of people who have been successful in the labour force for 10, 15 and 20 years. It is those kinds of Canadians who represent the increase in unemployment. Personal anguish is always part of finding themselves suddenly or unexpectedly unemployed. It is that kind of personal anguish which produces statistics such as the following: that every 1 per cent increase in unemployment in society produces a 5 per cent increase in stress-related diseases such as heart attacks, alcoholism, suicide, severe depression and mental illness.

In the life of this Government over the last four years, the unemployment rate has been hiked by 4 per cent to 5 per cent. That tells us, Mr. Speaker, that there is a 20 per cent to 25 per cent increase in stress-related illness in this country as a direct consequence of unemployment. What do we say to those unemployed people today? We tell them that they can collect their unemployment insurance cheque, but do we tell them that while they are collecting that cheque, in a climate where jobs do not exist they can go to school and upgrade their skills? Do we tell them to prepare themselves for the jobs of the future? As a society, Mr. Speaker, we do not, and I suggest to you that it is time we did.

In our Canadian society we must begin to treat the utilization of social expenditures as an investment in people, as a necessary investment, as a wise investment and as a compassionate investment. We must begin to invest in people so they can have a sense of hope about the future. That is the first major shift in public policy which our Party is calling for.

I would like to contrast the Canadian experience with the Japanese experience for just a moment. One of the research findings in the world today is that the average Japanese adult scores ten points higher on an intelligence test than the average North American adult. Does that tell us that there is a genetic difference? I suggest to you that it does not. However, it tells us a great deal about the Japanese culture and its commitment to the educational process. In a nation like Japan, Mr. Speaker, when the economy goes down a little and there is less need for people to do the jobs, the Japanese people go into further training. They are not laid off or put out on the street. They are not told to sit at home and apply for jobs three times a week. They are encouraged to learn something more than they already know. That pays off across their whole society. When we look at the Japanese economy today and we see that it is healthy, that its unemployment and inflation rates are lower, and that it is succeeding in an increasingly competitive world market, we do not have to look much beyond the commitment to education and training to find a reason for its success.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that there are five changes in public policy indicated in this country. We should make those changes as quickly as possible and with as much strength and vigour as we can muster.

The first change, Mr. Speaker, is to increase educational consumerism. We have to change the tax system to make it as desirable to invest in people as it currently is to invest in property, machinery and buildings. Surely, Mr. Speaker, the strength of this nation is in its people. Nothing is built, nothing happens in the economy, without well trained, committed, motivated and skilled people. We must examine every piece of public policy with a view to directing our efforts towards increasing educational consumerism, the willingness of people to participate in educational processes.

Second, Mr. Speaker, we have to use these social assistance and spending programs to support adults in the pursuit of knowledge, in training and retraining. They need income help to make their mortgage and car payments while they participate in training.

Third, we have to move beyond our dependence on the public sector to be the sole provider of educational opportunity and encourage the private and non-profit sectors generally to become more active and more involved in the provision of knowledge. They can then pass on their knowledge to succeeding generations, young and old.

• (1120)

The fourth plank, Mr. Speaker, is to provide special support to those with the inclination and background which enables them to fill jobs dedicated and devoted to the creation of knowledge itself, those of technicians, scientists and so on. We talked about this as a commitment to research. If you conceive it broadly, then we are on the right track. But looking ahead to the creation of the two million jobs necessary, no one knows what they are going to be. We do know, however, that it is human creativity and inventiveness, built on human skills and knowledge, which will produce those new products and services to employ Canadians who are looking eagerly for work. Therefore, the fourth plank is commitment to the creation of new knowledge and we must move quickly on that.

The fifth plank, Mr. Speaker, is really what I think of in a sense as an energy resolution. We waste so much energy in this nation of ours in confrontation between governments, between governments and labour, business and labour, and business and government. We have to re-examine many of the institutions in our society, always with the view to reducing confrontation and increasing co-operation. We will not solve major problems, in particular the training problem, we will not make the massive commitment necessary to training and retraining of our labour force, in the absence of an attitude characterized by co-operation rather than confrontation.

Throughout this day, Mr. Speaker, a number of Members from our Caucus will be standing in this Chamber and speaking to the issue we have identified in our motion. If I can just read it one last time before I sit down, it says:

That this House condemns the Government for its failure to work co-operatively with the provinces, business, labour, voluntary organizations and the educational community to provide adequate training and retraining opportunities that would enable Canadian workers to feel confident about their ability to deal with the challenges of rapid technological change.

Mr. Speaker, a recent survey in Canada told us that 40 per cent of Canadian firms are experiencing difficulty today in hiring people with the proper training to do the job. In a country where measured unemployment is 1.5 million people and true unemployment is two million people, we have jobs going begging because Canadians do not have the necessary skills to fill them. This is a national tragedy; however, it is solvable. I suggest to Members that as the day goes along it would be worthwhile to put on the table their ideas as to what we should be doing to solve that problem.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions or comments. If not, then the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper) for debate.

● (1125)

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in this opposition day debate. I want to commend the Conservatives for choosing this topic. I think it is important that this topic has been chosen for debate today because it is a crucial concern of all Canadians. The Official Opposition's motion calls upon us to pay attention to retraining as it affects the opportunities or lack of opportunities resulting from technological change. Although it is important to focus attention upon training and retraining as a result of the technological change that we are going through today, obviously a focus on training only is not sufficient. If we are going to train people we must ensure there will be jobs for people once they have the training.

Technological change, Mr. Speaker, does not only involve a few computer or software companies in the Ottawa valley or other kinds of high-tech industries being introduced into the Canadian economy. Technological change is an all-pervasive phenomenon that affects every institution, industry and sector of Canadian society. It is affecting the old and established industries which need to be retooled. It is a cause for the emergence of new industries and for a reshaping of the whole economy which involves a growth in the service sector.

Technological change promises the creation of new wealth. It is this promise of new wealth that is at the core of how we approach technological change. If this new wealth is simply going to be for the few, it is going to lead to continued polarization of society and continued injustice and we will be left with large numbers of people unemployed. We must address the question of the distribution of wealth that results from technological change.

One of the ways of approaching this is to look at it from the perspective of job creation and employment. Up until now technological change has resulted in massive job loss. Most of the studies which deal with technological change indicate that there will be more of this in the future. We must ask ourselves how we can assure that all Canadians have employment as we go through this period of technological change and job loss.

One of the concrete ways, Mr. Speaker, of assuring the fair distribution of wealth and jobs is to put greater priority on the concept of the introduction of a shorter work week. If technological change is going to produce greater wealth and raise the productivity of our economy, it should be possible within that framework to reduce the length of the work week. There would, therefore, be more people employed and the people who would otherwise be unemployed would not be bearing the burden of technological change.

However, moving toward a shorter work week will not solve the unemployment problems that will result from the social change that is occurring in our society right now. We will have very seriously to consider how we can create vast numbers of new jobs. One sector in which we can create new employment is human resources, whether as part of the Public Service or the volunteer sector. It is important to begin paying decent wages to people in these sectors. This includes people who work in daycares and those who take care of senior citizens in senior citizen homes, nursing homes or by assisting with chores that seniors cannot handle on their own.

● (1130)

Of course, in order adequately to compensate these people and ensure that enough are doing these jobs, it is necessary to find the money to pay for those services. I suggest this money should come from the increment in wealth that is promised as a result of technological change. Those companies which have increased productivity and therefore a greater share of markets, greater wealth and income should pay a fair share of the tax burden in this country so that we can see that human needs are being met and that our people are employed.

Fair distribution of wealth as a result of technological change brings into question the whole issue of fair taxation. It is a well known fact that over the last couple of decades in this country the burden of taxation has shifted from the corporate sector to the individual. The system for individual income tax is so riddled with loopholes that it is no longer the progressive taxation system that it should be. These many loopholes in the taxation system permit people who earn over $100,000 a year to pay no income tax while the very poor people are faced with a heavy taxation burden. An important part of dealing with technological change in the future concerns implementing a fair taxation system.

Technological change also involves a great adjustment for workers. In order for people humanely to adapt to this change, it is necessary that a number of policy changes take place. For example, when new technology is introduced into an industry, it is important that consultation should take place with the workers so that they are involved in the decision-making concerning the introduction of new technology. The decision for these changes should not be left solely to the individual manager in particular industries; the involvement of workers must be enshrined in legislation. Furthermore, those who will be affected by technological change should be given sufficient notice of this change so that they can prepare for that adjustment.

We must ensure that when workers are laid off as a result of technological change, there are adequate severance pay provisions because the provisions now in place are simply inadequate to deal with the massive technological change that we are experiencing today.

Training is another element of technological change and social adjustment which people must face. Those who lose their jobs because of technological change must have adequate training so they can move into new employment that provides them with a fair and equitable lifestyle and income. In other words, people who are displaced by technology should not have to leave a good-paying job for a low-paying position. They should be ensured of a fair share of the wealth which will eventually come to our society with these changes. This can be assured by adequate training.

There have been a number of proposals for increasing the amount of training in Canada, particularly with respect to the private sector. Let me focus my attention on this subject. A recent report recommended the introduction of paid educational leave. This is an important step for Canadian society to take. It would allow employees to accumulate the right to a certain amount of training, depending on how long they have worked in the industry. Such a program would encourage industry to support the training system in Canada. This is a necessary step, given the over-all record of inadequate training in this country compared to that which takes place in Europe, for example.

Paid educational leave could also alleviate one of the fundamental social problems we face today, which is the serious problem of functional illiteracy. Many people today simply do not have adequate literacy skills in order to function in a modern industrial economy. This recommendation must be considered not only in the context of a productive economy but also from the point of view of social justice. There is no way that those who are functionally illiterate can participate fairly in the wealth of our society.

Women have already been severely affected by technological change and will continue to be affected by this change in the future. Women already suffer inequality since they currently earn approximately 60 per cent of what men earn in similar employment. Since technological change will affect those industries which predominantly employ women, this inequality will increase rather than decrease the difference between their wages with men unless deliberate steps are taken to give them adequate training. These women must have specific training programs to which they have adequate access so that they can share in the wealth that is produced by our economy.

Women are not the only minority group that requires training for our changing economy. The recent report entitled Equality Now focused attention on visible minorities. A productive society which produces wealth must assume social peace and consensus. This can take place only when everyone is treated justly, which cannot happen if some are excluded from sharing in the benefits of our society. The visible minorities require specific strategies in order to have access to the mainstream of Canadian society and good jobs. This requires an affirmative action approach to visible minorities.

Today we have unprecedented numbers of young people who are unemployed, who really have come to the conclusion that they have no hope for the future with regard to employment. Our training endeavours must include them. If we simply abandon a generation of young Canadians to a hopeless situation, then we are setting a time bomb for Canadian society in the future.

When I first started speaking, I mentioned that it was not sufficient to focus upon training alone. When we think in terms of adjustment, we have to think not simply in terms of the adjustment of individual workers but also in terms of the adjustment of the economy as a whole. We need to put in place an industrial strategy to see that we get a fair share of tomorrow's markets, and as technological change sweeps through our economy we must see that we have strong and productive industries. This cannot occur simply by happenstance. Nor can it happen if we leave it to the private market alone. We have to plan the ways in which we are going to ensure that Canadians produce the goods to meet the domestic needs we have and that we can produce goods in a way that allows us to have an adequate penetration into international markets.

We have to plan policies for adjusting the Canadian economy not just with the objective of economic growth but also in the context of full employment. We must aim all of our instruments of public policy at the objective of providing jobs for all Canadians. If we are going to put in place adequate training, then we have to ask, training for what? Therefore we have to plan for those jobs which have to be in place if technological change is going to serve people rather than people being oppressed by technological change.

Briefly let me say that the inadequacy of the Government's approach to technological change is visible in communities. It is visible by virtue of the fact that there are so many unemployed people today. The Government gives no evidence of introducing strategies that will be adequate to provide employment for Canadians. We know from experience that the Government's approach to technological change does not measure up. It is really totally inadequate.

The Conservatives have rightly introduced a motion today calling our attention to training to meet technological change, but the problem with the Conservative approach to technological change is that you have to ask the question, training for what? If you are going to train, you have to plan jobs. When you are hidebound by a free enterprise ideology and you simply leave economic development to the marketplace alone, then, Mr. Speaker, you are likely to end up with a situation no different from the situation from which we are suffering today, namely record high unemployment. I must remind my Tory colleagues that it is not only important to train people for work, but we have to plan the economy in such a way that we will provide work for all Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes).

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for bringing out the issue of notification of the introduction of new technology. Common sense tells us that in Canada today technology has been introduced into the workplace very, very successfully when there has been sufficient advance notification and when there has been a good collective bargaining process in place. I wanted to get to that, but I ran out of time and I thank the Hon. Member for bringing that issue forward.

However, the Hon. Member concludes his speech with the question "training for what?" I suggest to him that if he had spent the last six months, as I have, trying to look at the literature, meeting with representatives of industry, business and provincial governments, he would find that you are forced, in a common-sense way, to come to the conclusion that we do not know what the jobs of the future will be. We do know that we will not have them unless we are competitive and unless we have broad education which gives people sufficient background skills to be inventive so that they can bring forward the new products and services that will employ people.

In that context, I wonder why the New Democratic Party remains attached to the shorter work week. In nations where the shorter work week has been tried it is not producing the jobs that theory said it would. And I wonder why the New Democratic Party is still attached to the levy-grant system, Mr. Speaker. Surely the levy-grant system is a system dedicated to the promotion of the status quo, that is, the training of people for jobs which are most likely to become obsolete. That is the experience of other nations with regard to the levy-grant system, and that is the experience with the shorter work week. Could the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper) indicate to us whether or not the NDP supports the concept of broader educational patterns, things like computer literacy, not because we know what the jobs are going to be but simply because we know the computers are going to be involved in them? Therefore, a broader educational picture, a total societal commitment to more education for everybody, is better than a shorter work week and better than a levy-grant system.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, it is clear and obvious that we have to have a very broad educational base for all Canadians if we are going to have people with the skills and abilities to operate in a technological society. That is a given. We have to have very broad-based educational programs. As a part of that we have to move governments to deal with the whole question of functional illiteracy. We have to have broad-based education so that people are functionally literate. We have to deal with the presently existing career problem of functional illiteracy. We have long been urging the Government to attack functional illiteracy.

With regard to the question of the shorter work week, it is a concrete, important step toward sharing the work in society and toward sharing income in society. Obviously it cannot be the only thing; it has to be part of the over-all package. It has to be part of an over-all strategy the aim of which is the provision of employment for all Canadians. I am surprised that my Tory colleague has rejected the notion of a shorter work week. As long as we bring in new technology, as long as we increase productivity, why can people not look forward to a share in that wealth? Why can they not look forward to more adequate holidays? Why can they not look forward to early retirement? Why can they not look forward to a more decent work week? I think the shorter work week is an essential element of a full employment strategy. We should not be operating simply on the basis of growth for growth's sake; we have to use economic growth to serve people.

With regard to the levy-grant system, this is a system which would be set in place in order to encourage training in industry by industry.

Mr. McDermid: Nonsense.

Mr. Keeper: One of the fundamental problems that we have as an economy is that companies do not do sufficient training. We do not train our own workers. We tend to import them, for example, from Europe.

Mr. McDermid: But not because of the levy-grant system.

Mr. Keeper: We can no longer operate that way and be competitive in international markets. The way the levy-grant system would encourage training is by sharing the cost of training equitably among all industries within a particular segment of the economy.

We stand four square for training in industry, for the levy-grant system, for a shorter work week and for full employment, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I must ask Hon. Members to make their comments, questions and responses a little shorter in order to give everyone a chance to participate. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn).

• (1150)

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, in his remarks the Hon. Member said that we could not dare trust the marketplace to determine what kind of jobs our young people and those who need retraining will have in the future. Whom would he like us to trust? Would he like us to trust the civil servants, the bureaucrats or politicians? Does he suggest that perhaps the New Democratic Party would be better to be trusted in terms of job creation and opportunities for young people? Is his idea that somewhere along the way the state, in its all-seeing wisdom, can create jobs and know where those jobs are going to be in a technological world? Is there some other place where we can look for expertise, other than the demands there will be for new products and so on? My son has a business today that two years ago did not exist anywhere in North America. We would not have that kind of development in his new world.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, this is a typical Tory question which tends to distort rather than inform. It is not a matter of the market place or not the marketplace but a matter of planning in order to be effective in the world market. Individual firms plan. They have a strategic notion of where they are going. Likewise, it is important for a nation to plan where it is going. You cannot get to a particular destination unless you chart your way. What is missing in the Canadian economy is the laying out of a plan in order to indicate how we are going to achieve employment for all Canadians. How are we going to achieve the necessary economic growth that can put people back to work? It is not enough to leave it to the results of the marketplace without planning. We have to combine planning with the marketplace.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, following on the theme of who plans, I have here an article in The Globe and Mail of May 7, 1983, almost a year ago. There is quote after quote about Liberal federal Government planning regarding priority occupations, yet when people graduate with particular sets of skills there are no jobs. In the meantime, there are jobs but people with no skills. We have had decade after decade of central planning for training for occupations of the future.

I have one simple question. Is the Hon. Member willing to redefine the concept of work to include the concept of school and retraining? If he is willing to do that, does he hold to the position that the work week should be reduced? Does he believe that people should be engaged in productive activity, including school, fewer than 35 to 40 hours per week, or is he willing to redefine work so that a larger portion of a person's life cycle is spent in being retrained, re-educated and further educated?

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, obviously it is necessary for people to spend an increasing portion of their life in training and education. We need more flexible systems in order that people can get the training they need. This is not contradictory to the notion of a shorter work week; it is complementary to a shorter work week. If people can get the kind of training they need, obviously when they are training, others can do the job they would otherwise have to continue doing. The notion of paid educational leave would have a positive impact with regard to employment because when an individual recognized his right to train, someone else would have to be brought in to do the job. That would provide employment for more people.

The Hon. Member also talked about planning. He said that we had central planning and it did not get us any place. Planning does not have to be central planning. There are some decisions that have to be made centrally, but a lot more decisions have to be made locally. It depends on the framework and structure put in place to ensure that the planning is done in an intelligent way. Just because the Liberals have botched up planning is no reason to throw out the notion of planning. If we want our economy to serve people, we have to plan how it can be done.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): That is the end of the ten-minute period for questions and comments.

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the Liberals are not participating in this debate today. May I preface my remarks by congratulating my colleague from CalgaryWest (Mr. Hawkes), not only for bringing forward this very timely motion but also to congratulate him together with a colleague in the other place, Senator Nurgitz, on the release of an excellent report by the task force on technological change in manpower training. It is a Progressive Conservative Party report, I might point out. It is an excellent report with some excellent recommendations. The Government has been asking for some positive recommendations from our Party and has been receiving them. The last two have been on Revenue Canada and on manpower training. I hope the Government will take them to heart because they are well thought out, well researched, well reasoned and will work.

I want to go back into the history of training in our country and what has gone on in the past that leads us to where we are today. For far too long we in this country have been importing our skilled labour, primarily from Europe. It has been extremely easy for companies to get skilled people from Europe because of the training programs there. I say to my colleague from the NDP that it is not because of the grant-levy system. The apprenticeship program in Europe goes back many hundreds of years. Apprentices are guaranteed to complete their apprenticeship. That is the difference between European apprenticeships and those in our country today. In this country we use the last on first off principle. An apprentice starts his apprenticeship with a Canadian company not knowing for sure whether he will finish it or not. That is a major problem here which is not experienced in the European picture.

When a young apprentice in Europe applies, is accepted and starts the long journey to getting his journeyman's papers, he is assured that he will in fact complete his apprenticeship. A job is not guaranteed with that company once he receives his journeyman's papers, but he does receive his apprenticeship.

I am told that in the manufacturing industry the first year of an apprenticeship costs a company some $60,000, what with the training, salary and loss of productivity within the plant for that period of time. That is a tremendous amount of money. When you look at something like that, you understand why companies go to Europe to import skilled labour. For $60,000 they can do a tremendous amount of looking in Europe for the skills required and pay the moving expenses of an individual or family to take a skilled labour job in Canada.

● (1200)

It is interesting to note that in this country training has primarily been undertaken by the small and medium-sized manufacturing firms as opposed to the large industries. For example, much to my surprise General Motors began an apprenticeship program within the last three or four years and has now set up quite a fine school in its Windsor plant. This was the first time that had been done.

When we were travelling around looking into the unemployment problem, officials of General Motors readily admitted to us that they had stolen all of their skilled labourers from small and medium-sized firms. In other words, they had let the small and medium-sized firms do the training and they took the expertise. That situation is changing slowly. Companies are beginning to realize that they do in fact have a responsibility to train employees and that it is very important to their increased productivity and competitiveness that they must in fact begin to train employees right here at home.

Another problem is that the skilled labour market in Europe has almost dried up. The remuneration and fringe benefits offered to skilled labourers in Europe do not motivate those labourers to come to a new country. The drop in emigration of skilled labourers has also forced companies in Canada to begin their own training programs and these programs must continue.

While I am on this subject, I would like to speak about the grant-levy system. Variations on this system can be found in Europe. France has a system which is entirely different from that in Britain but it is still called the grant-levy system. The theory of this system is that all of the manufacturing companies in one particular field pay into a fund, those who receive training can withdraw money from this fund to pay for the training and those who do not receive training simply pay money in without receiving any back. When we examined this program, we found that the grant-levy system was in fact not working and that it created a huge bureaucray. I can understand why members of the New Democratic Party like this system. It creates another huge bureaucracy and they love that kind of thing. That is their idea of job creation.

The policing that must go on within this system is phenomenal. People enter individual plants every week to make sure that training is occurring and that the proper forms are being filled out, et cetera. The people who participate in this system are so frustrated with the bureaucracy that they simply do not see it working. Others are happy simply to pay into the fund without receiving training because in the long run it saves them problems and the hassles of bureaucracy. Once a year they simply pay into the fund. I do not think that that is really the answer to the problem we are experiencing in Canada.

Another problem with the grant-levy system is that so many companies are exempt from it. Employers with fewer than 10 employees, those with their own programs and many other employers are exempt. It is a bureaucratic nightmare. If Canadian businesses are saying anything to the Government, they are telling the Government to stay out of their hair or whatever little of it they have left. I can see that the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) is winding up to make a comment so I thought I would say that before he did, Mr. Speaker.

The grant-levy system has not proven to be the answer. It simply does not work. When it does operate, it creates an enormous bureaucracy. We visited the operation in Britain and found the administration of the system required its own building. There were regulations like we have never seen before. It was a very interesting trip. I am sure that if the Government looked into that program in any detail, it would find that the grant-levy system simply does not work.

I would like to speak for a moment about one of the findings of the task force which has been reported from time to time and that is the high percentage of people in the country who are functionally illiterate. When I was involved in the task force on employment opprtunities in the 1980s, one of the greatest shocks I received as a member of that task force was to learn of the high percentage of people who are functionally illiterate. I think all of us from all Parties who were members of that task force were very surprised by this. Unfortunately, when this finding was included in a report, the provincial governments and teachers' associations interpreted it as an attack on their ability to teach in the public school systems. However, it was not that at all.

There are many people in the country who, for one reason or another, leave school at a very early age. Perhaps they leave school to work with their parents in the fishing industry or the hunting and trapping industry. There are many new Canadians who have not experienced the luxury of an educational system such as the one in Canada and who find it very difficult to read and write in either one of the Canada's official languages, or in their own language for that matter, because they have not had the opportunity to do so. We desperately need an attack on this problem. At one time the federal Government had a national reading program and was very concerned with the problem, but lately it seems that the Government is not paying too much attention to the illiteracy problem in the country.

I am finding that there are many Outreach groups in communities across this great land of ours which are very interested in getting involved and helping the illiterate. It is sometimes difficult to identify those who are illiterate but the staff at local Canadian employment offices will admit that they can readily identify those who have trouble reading or filling out forms and who need help. Before we can teach people the skills that are required for the times ahead, we must address the problem of illiteracy.

We read every day about the drop in the numbers of children who are attending school, about teachers who are being laid off and about schools which are being closed down. I know that schools have been closed down in the riding of the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. MacBain). I believe we can use these facilities, not only as training areas for tackling this problem but also as daycare centres which will take care of children so that people can upgrade their skills. The challenge exists and I will return to that challenge in a moment.

I would like to speak about native people for a moment. Aboriginal people in the country are experiencing job discrimination; there is no question about that. The aboriginal groups are a great source of skilled labour. Native people must be given the opportunity to be trained and to receive the education that is available to the rest of Canadian society. I would hope that any national training program would pay special attention to the aboriginal people of the country who are experiencing the highest unemployment rate in the country.

When speaking about the unemployment rate, the 11.3 per cent or 11.4 per cent of the population who are unemployed today, one of the interesting things about that figure is that it does not include native people. If they were included, the figure would be much higher. Through any training program, aboriginal people must be given the opportunity to develop the skills that others have the opportunity of developing.

I would like to deal with co-operation for a moment. Because of the Constitution, education is the responsibility of the provincial governments. They guard that responsibility jealously. I cannot blame them; I understand. But when we are talking about training for skills which will be required in the foreseeable future and when we are talking about mobility of labour from one province to another, from one region to another, we must talk about co-operation.

I think twice a year the Council of Education Ministers gets together. There is very little federal involvement in that organization. When it comes to national training, the federal Government must participate more in a co-operative manner with that Council. There is a great necessity to involve labour and industry in meaningful discussions on manpower training. I have visited company after company in my riding and I am concerned when I see skilled workers becoming older and there are no younger ones to take their place. In a very short period of time the manufacturers will be coming to us and saying that they do not have any skilled labour and that they will have to go to England, Germany of France to find it. It is important that all levels of government sit down together and seriously discuss our training objectives and our training programs.

After travelling from the rocky shores of Newfoundland to Victoria, to the Northwest Territories and all places in between, visiting union halls, manufacturing plants, small businesses and high-tech industries, I realize that we have a fabulous opportunity in Canada to be a leader in many areas of industry in the world. We must remain competitive and to do that we must become more productive. To achieve those goals we must have better training in the country.

Canada has the greatest opportunity of any country in the world. I do not think any Member of the House would disagree with that. Anyone who has travelled around the world is happy to come back home. We must stop bickering and his combativeness which seems to have developed and reached a crisis porportion today. We must start co-operating and ensuring that training programs and the expertise of the nation are allowed to grow and to flourish.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn).

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member shares a common region with me in Peel. In that area there is a program which has been ongoing for a number of years run by the Dufferin-Peel Board of Education. With the Hon. Member's interest in literacy, could he enlighten the House as to how he feels that program is working on a voluntary basis? Volunteers are recruited by the Board to teach one on one people who cannot read or write and therefore cannot apply for jobs or read ordinary headlines in the newspapers and so on. How has that program changed the situation and made it more practical for some of these people to be re-employed?

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I am very familiar with that program. It is sponsored by the Dufferin-Peel Separate School Board. It has obtained funding through the Summer Works Program and the Winter Works Program, but unfortunately those funds have been cut because the Minister does not want programs to become dependent upon temporary funding. I agree with that but we must have—and I covered this in my speech—Outreach programs such as the one of the Dufferin-Peel Separate School Board. It has done excellent work.

One of my greatest thrills occurred after the first summer of this program. The students were required to write a letter to their Member of Parliament. This was the first letter any of these people had ever written in their lives. It was a magnificent experience. However, the program is too small; it only helped about 90 people and there are 500,000 people in the region about which the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) talks. If we are talking about 25 per cent to 30 per cent—and there is some argument about the number of functionally illiterate—we can see that we have barely scratched the surface.

This is a program in which the federal Government could quite legitimately become involved without stepping on provincial toes. It can co-operate with the provincial governments to a great extent. I am very familiar with that particular program. I congratulate them on their success and only wish that we could help them more by reaching more people in a very positive way.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): On a question, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor).

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I commend the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) on his very excellent address. I was particularly interested in his comments on the education of native people. In my constituency we have a school called the Old Sun College. I have been delighted with its progress. Indian boys and girls are able to become mechanics, typists, et cetera. However, the Department of Indian Affairs is continually withholding funds or stalling with this college so that it never knows whether it will operate from one year to the next or otherwise. I agree with the Hon. Member that there should be some intensive programs for training native people. Many people bemoan the fact that they are on welfare, but here we have an opportunity in Old Sun College for people to learn trades and become self-sufficient. Would the Hon. Member enlarge upon his comments with regard to teaching trades and providing other educational facilities for our young native people?

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, first of all I must congratulate the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) on his renomination on the weekend.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: We were very pleased to hear that he was renominated and will be back in the House on the government side after the next election.

I am very concerned about our aboriginal peoples and training programs for them. There is no question that there is job discrimination toward our aboriginal people. It is because of a reputation that has grown up which I for one think is unfair. We have to approach the problem very seriously and return responsibility to Indian people for their own affairs. For far too long the Government has controlled their lives. This comes into play in the area of education. The Progressive Conservative Government will concentrate—

Mr. Dubois: Of Ontario?

Mr. McDermid: The Progressive Conservative Government of Canada after the next election will concentrate upon economic and cultural development for aboriginal people as opposed to the social welfare system upon which the Government concentrates. That is what has to happen. Education plays a very important part. We have to ensure that they have clear access to training programs, that they receive the same quality of education as everyone, and that, when they get out into the world, they are on an equal basis with every other Canadian. That is what the Progressive Conservative Government will do after the next election.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): If there are no further questions or comments, on debate, the Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Dubois).

• (1220)

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Since the beginning of the debate, Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservatives have created the impression that they are quite proud of the motion before the House. If, as they claim, the problem is that serious and if they have so much to say about it, how is it that their motion does not call for a vote? Just what do they have to say about the situation described in the motion? In any event, they may talk all day long about what they see as a crucial issue—they talk about their own future Government! They should not dream in colour nor count their chickens before they are hatched. With respect to new technology, or the rapid technological change, as the motion puts it, this will give us an opportunity today to consider what the Government has been doing these past few years, particularly since the adoption of the 1982 National Training Act which has paved the way for a new national program. Obviously, if Canadian workers want to have the highly paid future jobs, they will have to develop the skills required by industries in leading sectors, and this motion gives me an opportunity today to say what we have been doing. Mr. Speaker, we do not want to take a short-sighted approach, and that is why the Government was prompted by the worldwide economic crisis to provide Canadians with the National Training Program to make it a lot easier for our labour force to adapt itself to the new conditions of the labour market. The National Training Program is an offshoot of the National Training Act adopted by the House a little over two years ago. Having weighed the pros and cons of this program, Hon. Members—particularly our colleagues opposite—know full well that the Government did not spare any effort to improve vocational training and reassess its purposes. Our progress in that field stem from the National Training Program. Basically, Mr. Speaker, the Government had two objectives when it introduced the National Training Act in the House. I should like to mention them so that our Progressive Conservative colleagues will be able to refresh their memory and see for themselves just what has been done in answer to their motion of today. The first objective of the National Training Act was to create a pool of skilled workers needed by employers anxious to expand their operations. There cannot be any doubt about it, the future of our industries is at stake. The second objective, a sequel to the first one, is to help Canadian men and women become more competitive and more productive on the labour market. It stands to reason that the future of all Canadians is at stake. Those are the two objectives of the National Training Act, and discussions have already been held with the provinces, labour and management. In that respect, the Official Opposition Party has been doing a lot of talking and came out with its famous report at Mont-Sainte-Marie. The Minister himself referred to it in answer to a question in the House, explaining what the Canadian Government had done precisely to come to grips with new technology. The Liberal Government considers new technology as something important, and that is why we have been trying to attract high technology industries in every province throughout Canada. Bell Helicopter immediately comes to mind, Mr. Speaker, and I can still recall that Members of the Official Opposition had scoffed at that suggestion. They were saying that perhaps it should not locate in Quebec, or even wondering why it should even consider Quebec in the first place. I do remember some of their questions! Well, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Government thought in terms of high technology precisely because it wants to emphasize programs and industries such as Bell Helicopter.

In order to achieve the purpose of the National Training Act, the government of Canada has established a manpower training strategy the implementation of which is continuing under the act.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like briefly to describe the key elements of the employment opportunity strategy which the government has elaborated for the 80s.

First of all, it is absolutely necessary to secure the best possible information available on job requirements. It is clear that if we lack this basic information in the area of advanced technology and do not know in what direction we should go, we are doomed from the start. In my opinion, it is of the utmost importance to know where we are going. To this end, the government is working in cooperation with business and labour to ward the establishment of the Canadian Occupational Projection System. Also, Mr. Speaker, it was equally necessary to amend our institutional training scheme to ensure the success of our initiatives. Training schools must adapt to the new conditions prevailing on the labour market to provide workers with useful skills.

Such an adaptation is difficult because the number of trainees is not increasing. Special funds, therefore, had to be allocated to up-date training facilities wherever necessary. Projects financed by the Skills Growth Fund under the National Training Act are starting to yield very concrete results of which we can be very proud, Mr. Speaker.

In this connection, Mr. Speaker, when we consider the use which is being made by our teaching institutions, such as the Quebec CEGEPs and similar institutions in other provinces, as far as grades are concerned . . . Recently, the minister had also announced allocations to the Skills Growth Fund in Ontario, in Quebec and throughout Canada. A number of Quebec CEGEPs have received as much as $8 and $10 million, both in Montreal and the surrounding area where there are advanced technology industries requiring workers which highly specialized skills. That is what we have done through the Skills Growth Fund, and that is why we have made funds available to it and they are available because the National Training Act has been passed.

I believe that, by falling in with the requests from these financial institutions, the Canadian Government is also answering the aspirations of businessmen and organized labour, who are well aware that, if we want to have high technology industries, keep those we have or attract new ones, we must have the skilled workers they call for. This is what we are doing through the National Training Act and the Skills Growth Fund.

The Government is constantly seeking to improve the amount and the quality of the training that is required by the industry. In particular, we must increase on-the-job training in the occupational fields essential for economic growth in Canada. The new programs for general industrial training and training in occupational areas where specialized manpower is in short supply are essential tools for bringing about the required improvements.

Other initiatives are needed, Mr. Speaker, to better integrate training programs within the institutions and the industries. We are working on it in co-operation with the Provinces, the employers, the unions and our specialists in the Department of Employment and Immigration.

In a fast changing world, workers will have to go on acquiring new skills throughout their career. Consequently, we shall have to find ways of allowing them the time to do so. Work sharing and development leave will have to be used increasingly for this purpose during the upcoming decade.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Government does not specialize in the closing down of plants as a means of solving the problems related to the upheaval that has been witnessed on the labour market in recent years. However, the Government is aware that we are entering an age where outdated industries will have either to modernize or be replaced by others better suited to the new labour market conditions.

• (1230)

Sure enough, this adaptation is hard to achieve in certain areas of the country where it is sometimes suggested that businesses are closing down. Mr. Speaker, we want to work at bringing in new industries and to offer retraining programs for these workers who, very often, do not have very many years of schooling and have been working for several years for companies which are closing down because of various problems. Naturally, it is not always easy. However, we have developed programs in certain sectors designed to help people who had to retrain or had to quit their jobs.

Of course, we must help industry which choose the lofty road to progress, and we must also provide special assistance to the workers of industries on the downgrade. Some businesses in high technology industries must get more generous assistance, because even though their order books might not yet be full, this government favours technological progress and must be willing to make the required efforts to prevent the industries with a future from sinking.

Mr. Speaker, we believe there are two factors that have a major importance when determining the impact of technological changes, namely those sectors in our economy which will be the most affected by these changes and the speed with which these changes materialize. In working out this concept in co-operation with the other Government levels, as well as with business and labour, the primary aim of the federal Government was to set up an early warning mechanism. Mr. Speaker, this mechanism is the Canadian Occupational Projections System.

As we have emphasized several times, flexibility is the key of success for the National Training Act, and I mean its flexibility to adapt to the ups and downs of the economy and the requirements of the labour market. The basic component of this flexibility is the Canadian Occupational Projections System.

With the information provided by industry, the unions, the Provinces and the federal Government, the Canadian Occupational Projections System, gets specific data on the trends in the labour market. Thanks to this system, fields of occupation which should have priority can be identified and the training grants provided by the Government can be directed to the appropriate disciplines. In other words, Mr. Speaker, we subsidize occupational training wherever it is genuinely needed.

Mr. Speaker, the substantial amounts available for occupational training in Canada shows the intent of the Government to guarantee that Canadian workers can meet the challenges of the upcoming decade. We still believe that the mainspring of the economy is the private sector, supported by practical and necessary initiatives taken by the Government. The economic interdependence of the industrialized and developing countries is a factor which we must more and more take into account in our projections because Canada has to be able to keep its rank as one of the most industrialized countries.

Mr. Speaker, let me now deal with one of the most important programs designed to help businesses face the challenge of new technology. I am speaking about the National Industrial Training Program, which is twofold. First, there is the general industrial training aimed at avoiding shortages of qualified workers, preventing lay-offs due to technological changes and promoting the training of specific groups within the industry. As an example, I could mention the programs for training women in non-traditional occupations, and those which provide training in skills where there is a shortage of specialized workers and which are aimed at promoting training in highly specialized fields of occupation, reducing chronic shortages in such fields of occupation and bringing the employers to enhance the skills of their own workers instead of recruiting foreign workers.

Under this National Industrial Training Program, the employer may be eligible for wage grants covering up to 100 per cent of the instructor's fees, up to 100 per cent of the costs of training aids, up to 75 per cent of registration fees for courses when training is provided by a public or private institution, up to 75 per cent of special general travelling and living expenses incurred by workers in training, and up to 75 per cent of the costs of course preparation.

During one year, Mr. Speaker, the employer is paid 50 per cent of the trainee's wages. This refund may even be more generous in the case of certain types of workers, such as the physically handicapped. Canadian employers are eligible for close to $95 million under this program in 1984-85.

In many respects, Mr. Speaker, our educational systems do not always make it possible for Canadian men and women to develop the skills required on the labour market. It does represent a serious problem because the Canadian economy is bound to stagnate unless people can indeed acquire appropriate professional skills. The National Industrial Training Program is the federal Government's major mechanism to enable Canadian men and women to acquire those new skills for which demand is very strong.

In 1984-85, Mr. Speaker—and this is in answer to those who censure the Government for remaining idle and failing to cooperate with a view to providing Canadian workers with adequate technological training—the federal Government will spend in excess of $902 million for the institutional training of more than 220,000 future workers. This program is more specifically aimed at young school drop-outs, women, native people and others who are at a disadvantage when it comes to employment. Here again, people will be trained in skills for which there will be a strong demand when their apprenticeship is completed.

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that Canadians are aware that there are no simplistic solutions to the current need for new jobs, nor ready-made answers to the challenges of tomorrow's labour market. We do expect very positive results from our strategy to train people for immediate openings and to expand the labour market for the future. The efforts of the Canadian Government reflect the underlying principle to which we fully subscribe: job creation is first and foremost the private sector's responsibility. The role of the Government is to create the proper climate or environment to help Canadian workers and make it easier for them to face the challenges of the labour market. It is our duty as elected representatives to propose new structures to ensure the smooth operation of the labour market. I think we should also thank our colleagues opposite for their efforts to make the Canadian people aware of the situation, while at the same time reminding them that programs such as those I just mentioned and under which $902 million have been set aside for institutional training in 1984-85 are a giant step in the right direction.

As I said a few moments ago, Mr. Speaker, I think that this motion sets the high technology challenge in its proper perspective. Even before the Conservative Party set up their famous task force which made headlines last week, the Canadian Government had already established the foundation required by the National Training Act which was adopted by the House two years ago and which just happens to be the answer to the need for more skilled workers and assistance programs geared to future progress.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): A ten-minute period for questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes).

● (1240)

[English]

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member concentrated on COPS, the Occupational Projection System. The basic problem is that it takes three years for the system to work and we are in a rapidly changing world. Jobs change almost overnight. When one leaves this pinnacle called Ottawa to deal with people in the streets of the communities, one sees that they have very serious concerns about that system. This is true of the provincial governments and certainly of labour and the workforce. It is time that the Minister and the Parliamentary Secretary left Ottawa to go to the streets to find out what is wrong with jobs and the training programs in Canada today. They do not seem to pay any attention to the reports which they commissioned or to the good advice of parliamentary committees that meet with the people.

If the Parliamentary Secretary believes that this program is so good, why did the Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) criticize the Government's commitment on the weekend? Why did the Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), the Chairman of the Liberal standing committee, ask the Minister last week why the Government paid no attention to the report's recommendations in three years? Why are there still skill shortages? Why are the take-up rates for a lot of government programs so low? Why is the Government ignoring all of those briefs?

There is general agreement among business, labour and provincial governments that the present initiatives are not adequate. As well, past initiatives have all been characterized by failure. There is no adequate across the board public strategy to ensure that Canadians get the training they need. When 30 per cent of the workforce is functionally illiterate, why has the Government cut every dime of training for functionally illiterate people? Why did it make that policy decision two years ago, when 30 per cent of the workforce cannot read or write sufficiently to take training in the modern world? Why did it remove every dime from training for 30 per cent of the Canadian workforce? Let us have an answer to some specific questions.

[Translation]

Mr. Dubois: Mr. Speaker, my colleague wants to know where and when I meet people to discuss occupational training. Well, I should wonder about his whereabouts too, because I never see him when I do meet people.

Mr. Speaker, it is quite normal for my colleagues on the government side to state their concerns even if they have not been provided with all necessary data. I will not dwell of course on the inconsistencies of his own party on many programs and issues of public policy. However, with respect to the Adult Occupational Training Act and some decisions which he referred to, I wonder if he has forgotten about the Skill Growth Fund when he says in his motion that we have not taken any adequate step to improve the workers' lot.

We have provided some $902 million during the past six months for institutional training as he will note in numerous press releases about learning institutions which have received money from the Skill Growth Fund. He will then realize that the Government of Canada has been dealing with training problems and with industries requiring financial assistance to provide such training.

When he sees what funds are paid through the Skill Growth Fund to various provinces to CEGEPs in Quebec and to post-secondary institutions to the so-called community colleges in Ontario and other provinces, he will get the answer to his question. If he takes all those matters into account, he will realize what funds are made available by the government in co-operation with employers and employees as well as with educators and officials of Employment and Immigration. Not long ago, at a federal-provincial conference held in New Brunswick, the Minister discussed with his colleagues these very issues which we will continue to emphasize. That is why $902 million have been earmarked for 1984-85.

Mr. Speaker as for our programs, in spite of what my colleague said about alleged cuts, some adjustments were made, practical and concrete results were achieved to provide occupational training.

[English]

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the Hon. Member's answer. It is the stock Liberal answer—"We throw this amount of money at it". That is what the Liberals say every time a discussion arises on any program. It throws that amount of money at it in the hope that some of it sticks. That is not good enough.

Does the Hon. Member for Lotbinière (Mr. Dubois) agree with the statement that "today a diploma or a degree for a million young Canadians is a ticket to despair"?

[Translation]

Mr. Dubois: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to stock Liberal answers. I say to him that we have been putting up in this House with stock progressive conservative questions for 20 years. They are always against something. Very seldom are they in support of anything. What they have been in support of on occasion, when they put forward a motion, is the death penalty for instance, but otherwise they are always against.

And when he suggests that in his mind his proposal addresses the issue of people's plight, I cannot agree with him because, in view of the various programs we have in place, he only has to look at the restructured programs, what, with job creation and help provisions we have brought forward. If I refer specifically to his question and the motion, one has only to look at programs such as CAREER ACCESS for the young, CAREER ACCESS for people discriminated against under current employment conditions, because those people can go to the Canada Employment centres. Employers receive grants, not only under the Training Act but under our Job Creation Programs, to help face the lack of employment. Because the employer who gets the money definitely is in a position, over a number of weeks, to give skills to those individuals. This is what we are doing with the CAREER ACCESS program, both for the young and the hard core unemployed, either women or native people across the land.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, we are fully aware of the situation of our Canadian workers, and this is why high technology is such a priority for the Canadian Government.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Hon. Member will have to keep his supplementary short.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, the quote "today a diploma or a degree for a million young Canadians is a ticket to despair" is from John Turner, the Liberal leadership hopeful, at the Ontario convention a weekend ago. I am glad to see that the Hon. Member does not agree with what he has to say.

Recommendation 16 of the Employment Opportunities for the '80s report recommended, I might say most strongly, to the federal Government that Canada should adopt a ten-year national right to read program. A number of recommendations followed from that regarding the functional illiteracy problem that exists in the country. Why has the federal Government completely ignored those recommendations?

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration has the floor. I would appreciate a short answer, please.

Mr. Dubois: Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members are quoting from statements made by our leadership candidates. For the benefit of my colleagues who will speak next, I could quote extensively from statements made by candidates to the June 1983 Official Opposition leadership convention, and my hon. colleague could very well learn some surprising facts concerning all these programs. As to all the whole series of situations mentioned by my colleague from the other side, I would like to tell him that we have put into place programs which adequately meet these needs. We certainly can try and improve on them. This reminds me of a question put by the Hon. Member's Leader to the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) concerning tax exemptions for Western farmers and the like. What about the deficit? The Hon. Member's Leader says that the deficit must be reduced, that expenditures must be cut. Regarding moneys that we are allocating to these programs, Mr. Speaker, we are trying to be reasonable and to keep in mind the budgetary considerations. Let me tell my hon. colleague that he should take the trouble to examine the various programs implemented by the Department of Employment and Immigration, that he should seriously consider the stated objectives of the Skills Growth Fund and other programs . . . Since the Hon. Member worries about people who are having difficulties, he should consider programs such as Career Access Program and get some for information in a Manpower Centre in his riding. I am quite sure that Department officers would be happy to answer all his questions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Debate?

• (1250)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The period for questions and comments has terminated. We will now continue debate. The Hon. Member for the Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I hope I will be able to justify that round of applause by my presentation.

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): You will.

Mr. Nickerson: I usually do!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nickerson: It is a pleasure to be able to speak on this motion today, Mr. Speaker. I notice that in the traditional style of Opposition motions it is framed in a condemnatory way. I do not think it is the intention to be condemnatory this afternoon, although we might point out some of the shortcomings and failing of the Government. Rather, the idea is to encourage debate on a most important subject, and hopefully some good ideas will come out of it.

I would like to read briefly part of the motion that we are discussing. The emphasis is "to provide adequate training and retraining opportunities that would enable Canadian workers to feel confident"—and I emphasize "to feel confident"—"about their ability to deal with the challenges of rapid technological change". It is not by accident that the motion uses those words. They express the idea of Canadians having confidence in their own ability to deal with changes that are in the process of occurring and will change in the future.

We on this side, unlike our socialist friends to the left, do not think it is the state that should be there to provide every last person in Canada with a job. I do not think that is a reasonable goal. What we can do as a national Government is provide the background and the framework in which Canadians can be confident in their ability to find work and to find meaningful and socially useful things to do. At present that confidence does not exist in Canada. If you travel around the country, you will find that there is fear of the future, sometimes the very near future, as to what might happen. People know how difficult it is for them to be able to make the necessary changes.

In order to illustrate the way I think we should go as a nation, I shall retell a story which I read in a book in the Parliamentary Library when I was reading about Greek history and philosophy. It is one of my favourite subjects and I think I share that in common with another well known Member of this House. This was a story of a person who eventually became a very famous philosopher and teacher; I am sorry to say I have forgotten his name. However, when he was a young man, less than 20 years of age, he was shipwrecked somewhere in the Aegean Sea. He managed to make it to shore. When he arrived on shore in a state of near exhaustion, he had no money and no clothing on his back. He arrived there destitute. He had no friends. He really had nothing going for himself. After a period of months and years he was able not only to survive but to earn the esteem of the people where he lived. He became quite wealthy and well respected. Finally he found his way back into the mainstream of Greek life.

As a result of that experience in his further teaching down the road he stressed the point that his parents had wanted him to enjoy and to participate in life. Although he had nothing when he arrived on this island after being shipwrecked he was able to make a living, he was able to do something useful and he was able to be part of the mainsteam of existence.

I think that is the attitude we should have in teaching in Canada. We should not have to concentrate on finding a job for everybody, but we should make sure that whatever happens to people they will be confident and have the ability to make the best go of it themselves. Things like money, possessions and social status come and go. They are ephemeral. Ability, training and skill beget confidence and they last forever. That is the way we should go, Mr. Speaker.

There are now, as we can ascertain, changes in society and we expect these changes will continue. These changes are not only occurring in Canada but right across the developed world. They are no secret to us. Let me outline some of the changes that are taking place in society. I made a brief list. It is expected that people during the course of a lifetime will not have one specific job. A person will not be a mechanic in a certain factory and spend all of his or her working life doing one job at one location. A person will have several jobs throughout a lifetime. I will come back to this a little later.

There will also have to be flexibility in location. I am thinking specifically of the situation in Ottawa. It is pretty difficult to find anyone who admits to having been born in Ottawa. Most people come from somewhere else other than Ottawa. Many people do not expect to stay here for the rest of their lives. They look upon being in Ottawa as a period before moving on to bigger and better things elsewhere. In this day and age when you can leave Ottawa in the morning and within 24 hours be in Adelaide, Australia, it is something we can expect and it is something we will have to learn to live with. I do not take the parochial view which seems to be common in many areas of the land. I do not even take a national view. I see people travelling throughout the world in order to take the best advantages wherever they might occur.

Another point already mentioned is that education will have to be ongoing. A person will not leave school at 16, 20, or whatever, and consider that the end of his or her education. Education will continue on.

I see that the Steward is about to take the Mace from the Table. Perhaps we can call it one o'clock and I shall be here again at two o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I would like to suggest that the Steward does not intend to take the Mace from the Table.

COMMUNICATIONS

REGULATIONS SOUGHT PROHIBITING PORNOGRAPHIC FILMS ON TELEVISION

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I rise today on a very important matter. I would like to read and fully support the following motion sent to me by the Cochrane Presbyterial United Church Women:

> Whereas television programming that uses films portraying sex acts, perverted or otherwise, almost always degrades women and children; and
> whereas pornographic films tend to erode the basic moral values that have provided stability in our society, and
> whereas no person or animal should be abused or degraded for the amusement of others;
> therefore be it resolved that the Cochrane Presbyterial United Church Women urge the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) and the federal Government to formulate specific regulations that will prevent pornographic films and other forms of erotica from appearing on television.

This message that was sent to me by a group of concerned women in Timiskaming, and I too urge the Minister of Communications to produce legislation that will follow some of the points outlined in the above mentioned motion.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

JOB-CREATION PROGRAMS

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, during last weekend's convention of Quebec's Union of municipalities, reference was made to the last federal-provincial agreement concerning job-creation programs. The Canadian government is being blamed for signing agreements without coming up with the money necessary to implement the municipalities' projects.

This allegation is false, and I am sure our municipal elected representatives will not be fooled by such allegations on the part of dishonest individuals. In fact, the agreement which has just been signed is concerned only with CANADA WORKS and LEAD programs. For that matter, that is a major consideration. From time to time these programs are supplied with funds necessary for their implementation, and it is quite premature to say that these programs will not be adequately funded. The last time cuts were made in these programs was during the short tenure of the Progressive Consevative Party in 1979. The real problem as far the Quebec municipalities are concerned is Bill 38, and that is where the Quebec minister of municipal affaires should direct his efforts, instead of denying his signature or that of his predecessor.

AGRICULTURE

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT—CALL FOR AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE PAY-OUT TO FARMERS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, for months Hon. Members of the Progressive Conservative Party have been pleading with the Government to bring in the Western Grain Stabilization Act amending legislation to provide for a pay-out. But the Government is still procrastinating. This Liberal Government is stalling while farmers are going bankrupt—more than 400 in western Canada last year. The Government just does not seem to care. Three-quarters of our producers are tied into this plan. Cash flow is almost nil.

Close to $1 billion is in this fund which was built up to provide money to the farmers when things were tough. Well, with reduced income the last two years, with everything the farmer has to buy going up, and with aggravating federal taxes piled high on the farmers, any reasonable Government which had the interest of the country at heart would move instantly.

Is this Government trying to bring western Canada to its knees? How many more farms have to go belly up before this Liberal Government will take ten minutes to have this legislation passed?

This Government has raped the western farmers with its transportation Bill, ignored their representations on Canagrex, and is now forcing our producers in the West into receivership, while the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is saying in effect "Let them eat cake". Remember what happened when the same words were used in past history, and do not think for one minute it cannot happen here.

We do not want a lot of talk or deals. We just want the Act brought in and amended so that our farmers can stay alive and continue to produce. Will the Government act?

THE PRIME MINISTER

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I rise to recognize and record a significant milestone in the political life of our country. Today, April 16, marks the five thousandth, five hundredth and sixty-seventh day that the Right Honourable Member for Mount Royal (Mr. Trudeau) has served as Prime Minister of Canada. That record, Mr. Speaker, is exceeded by only two of our 16 Prime Ministers, Sir John A. Macdonald and Mackenzie King, and replaces Sir Wilfrid Laurier's record—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Appolloni: —as the country's longest-serving French-Canadian Prime Minister. Would you remind Hon. Members opposite to have some basic good manners, please, Mr. Speaker?

To have set this record in such turbulent political times is in itself a remarkable achievement, but those 16 years, Mr. Speaker, have been distinguished by quality as well as by quantity.

Mr. Lewis: And unemployment.

Mrs. Appolloni: During them we have seen the resolution of longstanding issues of nationhood, some of them issues which have frustrated a succession of earlier leaders. Most significant among these, Mr. Speaker, have been measures which have enhanced and strengthened our unique status as a bilingual, multicultural country, the patriation of our Constitution and the entrenchment of a Bill of Rights, the defeat of the Quebec referendum on sovereignty-association, and the growing role which French-Canadians have played in Canada's political and business affairs.

We should cite, as well, Mr. Speaker, the patriation of our energy resources, and the development of exploration policies which have brought new promise to our—

PORTS

PORT OF CHURCHILL—APPEAL FOR UPGRADING TO ASSIST GRAIN SHIPMENTS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I am sure you are aware that farm incomes in the Prairies have been dropping and that farm costs and farm bankruptcies have been increasing in the last couple of years. One possible way of improving the situation for farmers, particularly in my area, is to have more money spent on the port of Churchill. I say that because my riding, along with the ridings of the Hon. Member for Dauphin-Swan River (Mr. Lewycky) and the Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski), and places like that, are very close to the port of Churchill. We would like to ship more grain through that port.

The problem, Mr. Speaker, is that the federal Government has not spent as much money as it should over the years in upgrading that facility which is very valuable to Prairie Canada. My appeal today is that more money be spent in upgrading the port of Churchill, and that can be done in many ways. It needs upgrading.

I would also like to make an appeal that more money be spent to improve the rail line facilities which lead to the port of Churchill, and that more money be spent as well by the federal Government in co-operation with the Province of Manitoba, to improve the hydro services to that particular port. If these things are done, Mr. Speaker, we could ship more grain through the port of Churchill, meet more contracts, and in the long run put more money in the hands of farmers of western Canada, which would be a great contribution to all.

I repeat, to my region, to my part of Canada, the port of Churchill is very important, and this Parliament should put more emphasis on improving that port for our farmers and, indeed, for all of Canada.

THE ECONOMY

DECLINE IN EXPORTS—EFFECT ON EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, 1984 is the year of the unemployed. In the riding of Erie alone, close to 600 jobs were lost in the past month. This saddens me greatly because many of the people laid off had fine records of service to their companies and to their communities, and now they reap a bitter reward. Our Government is having a great deal of difficulty coming to terms with this problem. It is throwing money around like there is no tomorrow, and yet it seems unable to adapt our economy to build a basis for future prosperity in a rapidly changing and competitive world.

Our problem, simply stated, is that our resource base, traditionally our strong point, has been eroded by foreign competition. For instance, our share of world nickel production has dropped from 80 per cent to 35 per cent during the 1970s. In the same period our share of world copper production has dropped by nearly a quarter. Our share of the world market for lumber has dropped from 50 per cent in 1970 to 40 per cent. A similar trend is seen in the manufacturing sector. Canada's share of the world's manufactured exports has dropped by more than a third, from 4.8 per cent in 1970, to 3 per cent in 1980. We seem to be exporting less and importing more. In 1970 imports accounted for 25 per cent of consumer purchases. The figure is now 32 per cent.

We are losing ground against other industrialized countries. In 1981 we ranked fifth in the western world. We are now eleventh. Such is the record of the Government. That is why an election should be called as soon as possible. We must get this country on the road to recovery with a Tory Government—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

FISHERIES

CONDITION OF WEST COAST SALMON FISHERY

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, April 15, marked the traditional opening day for commercial salmon fishing on the West Coast for all gears and in all areas. This year only the west coast of Vancouver Island was opened on April 15, and then only for troller men. Stocks are sadly depleted, and no Canada-U.S. agreement is in place to preserve what is left and share it equitably.

The West Coast fishery is not just in "Desperate Straits"; it is in "Crisis Passage, Depletion Sound", and "Gravity Gulf".

• (1410)

Matters are further complicated by the Minister's failure to get his conservation proposals through Cabinet where they now sit, we are told, like fishing boats waiting for the season's opening.

Millions of dollars are tied up on the West Coast in commercial fishing boats, sportscraft, fishing gear, and in back-up industries such as marinas, gear manufacturers, boat builders, and supply services in both the commercial and the sports fishery. Uncertainty about future prospects is causing increasing concern throughout the industry. When is Cabinet going to let it be known whether there are to be changes in the sports catch limit this year and, if so, what the limits are to be? What part will the native fisheries play this year? What catch allocations are to be enforced this year? What role is salmonid enhancement to play? What buy-back proposals are to be made this year?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

RAILWAYS

ALLOCATION OF UPGRADING FUNDS

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to urge the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) to conclude his consultations quickly with the railways, the Canadian Wheat Board, the major grain companies, the Canadian Transport Commission, and the Grain

Transportation Agency, and announce his decision to allocate railway upgrading funds for the coming years.

In a recent letter to me the Minister indicated that the Government has committed more than $1 billion to prairie branch line rehabilitation. The railway companies are waiting to do upgrading work, the grain elevator companies are sitting on their development plans until the rehabilitation plans are announced, the farmers along the lines are worried about the Transport Department's priorities and are hoping that the Minister's consultations will mean improvements along our lines so that they can effectively deliver increased amounts of grain this year.

The Minister has received many representations from the rail line users along the subdivisions in my riding—Big River, Meadow Lake, Robin Hood, Blaine Lake, Amiens, Turtleford, and Bolney subdivisions in particular. He also heard from me on many occasions.

In addition, the Minister is aware that elevator plugging is a problem which adversely affects the producers in my constituency. I urge him to advise the Canadian Transport Commission and the Grain Transportation Agency that grain car allocations in northwest Saskatchewan should be increased to ensure that producers can get their quotas into the elevator system. It is time for him to make his decisions and let the work begin.

EMPLOYMENT

NEED FOR GENERAL TRADES TRAINING

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in this age when Governments in Canada at all levels are focusing on job creation, the emphasis is being placed on education and training in high technology and specialized trades. In doing so, Governments and Canadians as a whole are neglecting a serious need in the employment world which, for the want of a better term, can be called "jack of all trades" jobs. These are jobs which are in tremendous demand and which require only minimal training of people with an entrepreneurial spirit.

Canada, like so many of the industrial nations, has become a throw-away society, the reason that there are thousands of senior citizens and single parents, and those who are mechanically inept, who are in need of multiple small repair jobs within their homes and businesses. These consist, for example, of essential but minor carpentry jobs and minor electrical and plumbing improvements. In general, help for these people is not available without calling in a series of tradesmen who, for the most part, are over-trained for these more simple jobs, who charge a great deal for their services, and who limit their expertise to a very small fraction of the range of jobs that need to be done in the average household.

It is my opinion that young adults with a basic apprenticeship training in any of the contruction trades could adapt their skills to the many minor repairs that are needed in the average

Canadian household. They could provide such services when needed, at a price that could meet the pocketbook of the average person. Such a "jack of all trades" person would reduce the volume of throw-away articles—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT

FAILURE OF RAILWAYS TO FILE RATES

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, a March 8 advertisement by the Department of Transport promised $16.5 billion in investment and creation of 375,000 jobs from Bill C-155 for western Canada. The Minister knew at that time that the level of investment would be substantially lower. The Crow freight rate that the farmers pay for moving their grain will now be double the $4.85 a tonne by 1985, and five times as much by 1991, on top of which a $651 million annual subsidy which the railways will receive will put the railroads on the gravy train.

The Chairman of the Canadian Transport Commission is remaining aloof from the transportation problems of the prairie grain producer by stating to the Transport Committee: "I think that we agree in principle, and that is important. We will see for the rest later on."

Where is the assurance to the producer when the new freight rate regime specified that the railways had to file their new rates by November 1 if they were to take effect on January 1, which they did not do? Where is the assurance to the producer when the Chairman of the Canadian Transport Commission states: "I hope the Government is conscious that there are a lot of improvements to make"? What about some improvement for the grain producers' economic position?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

GRAIN

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD—ANNOUNCEMENT OF INITIAL PRICE

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, in the unfortunate absence of both the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Finance. The Minister will know that last Friday the Members of this House were unaware of the details of what the Canadian Wheat Board had done to western farmers. They were unaware on Friday that the initial price of grain had dropped in all cases. Unfortunately, it has dropped as much as 6 per cent with respect to spring wheat. Bearing in mind that the cost to the farmer has been increasing dramatically each year, and bearing in mind that farm bankruptcies are now double what they were last year, can the Minister explain to the farmers of Canada why he is unprepared to take any risks to support them, while at the same time he is prepared to rescue such giants as Canadair and de Havilland?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I remind my hon. friend that he should look at the support the federal Government has given to the Farm Credit Corporation. He will find that over the last several years the support given by the federal Government has increased steadily. In fact the figures show that the increases over the last few years have been quite significant. I believe that over $800 million a year is now available under the Farm Credit Corporation. This is only one element in the kind of support the federal Government has been providing to the agricultural sector. I could enumerate a number of other areas, Mr. Speaker, but I see you standing to say this is not part of the Question Period as such.

REQUEST FOR ABOLITION OF SALES TAX ON FARM FUELS AND FERTILIZERS

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, what the Minister of Finance failed to tell this House, and what farmers know very well, is that the Farm Credit Corporation in this last week raised interest rates to 14 per cent and 15 per cent. At the same time the Wheat Board dropped the price of grain by 6 per cent, or 27 and 28 cents a bushel. There are farmers I see every weekend who are going bankrupt, as are the small businessmen who serve them. The Government does nothing but increase the cost and reduce their revenue. Bearing that in mind, why will the Minister of Finance not follow up on a suggestion which the Minister of Agriculture has made on various occasions, and at the very least announce the abolition of the 9 per cent federal sales tax on farm fuels and fertilizers?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I remind my hon. friend that the Farm Credit Corporation is not setting the price of grain, as he seems to indicate. As to the increases in interest rates, the FCC has to follow the market. The Hon. Member knows this very well.

The Government has set up programs to help farmers. These programs are known to the Member, and certainly to the farmers who use them. My colleague cannot go on, like his Party is doing all the time, complaining about the deficit and at the same time wanting to increase the deficit by reducing taxes.

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON FARM ISSUES

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, the farmers in western Canada are asking for some assistance to get them through this crisis. They ask for one of three things. They ask for decent grain prices and ask the Government to take some risk on their behalf; they ask for the abolition of the federal sales tax on farm fuels, or for a pay-out under the Western Grain Stabilization Act. What they get instead is a kick in the teeth from the Government. I ask on their behalf, is it that this Government does not care about western Canadian farmers? Is it somehow or other that they are second-class citizens?

• (1420)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is talking as though he did not know that the federal Government is supporting the farming sector, and the grain sector in particular, to the tune of close to $1 billion a year. I would say that that is some kick in the teeth. That is the type of support that the Government is giving to the grain sector, which in turn supports the farming community. The Hon. Member knows this.

The Hon. Member's Party opposed the improvement which we put forward in the Crow legislation, but the Hon. Member should realize that with that legislation goes substantial support to the farming sector and to the grain community. As to the level of the initial payment, my friend also knows that it is only an initial payment. There will be other adjustments made as the year goes on, related to the prices we expect to receive from exports and sale of grain. In the mean time our support is indicated quite clearly by the $1 billion we are giving to the farming and the grain sector at this time.

DISASTERS

STORM DAMAGE IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Privy Council who answers to the House for the activities of the Emergency Measures Organization. The Minister is aware that, over the weekend, prolonged freezing rain caused major power disruptions in the City of St. John's and the populated areas of the eastern Avalon Peninsula. Over 1,000 hydro poles have gone down. Many areas are without power. For example, the Town of Belle Island, with a population of 6,500, has no power at all and is not expected to receive power for another week. Many other towns are in the same predicament. Many steel transmission towers which carry the main supply of power to St. John's and eastern Avalon are also down. Is the Minister in touch with the situation and can he report to the House on it?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I certainly share the concerns expressed by the Hon. Member and other Members on both sides of the House about the situation in Newfoundland. The facts which he has just indicated are accurate, and I wish to assure the Hon. Member that it seems that the damages suffered in Newfoundland are considerable. If a request is made by the provincial Government, that request will be taken very seriously by the federal Government through its financial assistance program for cases of natural disaster.

REQUEST FOR EMERGENCY ASSISTANCE

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the Newfoundland Government is currently assessing the situation. I think the Minister now has enough information to measure the extent of the damage. I suppose the disaster that could most nearly be compared to this situation in terms of the total impact on the community would be flooding. Many elderly people will suffer because of the lack of heat and lack of adequate distribution of water. All of these things would call for some input from and active involvement of the federal Government through the Emergency Measures Organization. I hope that the Minister will take such initiatives.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Of course, Mr. Speaker, and we have already offered assistance and in fact given assistance to the population of Newfoundland. I am told that the RCMP have been asked to help the provincial police in Newfoundland, and I am also told that we have provided beds for those who need them. Our regional director in Newfoundland is continually assessing the situation and answering positively to a request for federal Government assistance. I can assure the Hon. Member that that is being done, and will be done as long as required.

I will go even further than that. We are told by officials from Newfoundland that damages will exceed the thresholds provided for in our financial assistance program for natural disasters. From the information we have already obtained, it looks like the federal Government could contribute up to 90 per cent of the cost of the damages suffered in Newfoundland. I wish to assure the Hon. Member that Emergency Planning Canada is looking at the situation very closely and that the federal Government will do all it can to assist the population of Newfoundland provided, of course, that such a request is made by the provincial Government.

EMPLOYMENT

PLIGHT OF WORKERS OVER 55 YEARS OF AGE

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance well knows the situation that continues to affect so many of the older workers today when faced with lay-offs or dislocation as a result of plants having closed or moved away. Given that there is now a litany of cases that clearly point to the fact that workers over the age of 55 are having grave difficulty qualifying for or being involved in retraining programs, and given that workers over the age of 55 are faced with an almost impossible task when trying to find employers who will employ them, will the Minister recommend three things to the Government?

Will he first recommend that there be a mandatory substantial employer contribution toward early retirement programs for workers between age 55 and 65? Second, will he alter the pension legislation in order to make early retirement a practical proposition for people of that age? Third, will he co-ordinate those two things with the unemployment insurance programs in order that those people do not have to carry far more of the burden of cost than they should reasonably be expected to carry during this economic—

Mr. Speaker: I caution Hon. Members regarding the scope of questions which are placed during Question Period.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will take the question of the Hon. Member as a representation and I will study it with interest. I would like to remind him, however, that the federal Government is providing over $1 billion to special training programs for workers of all ages and that we have set up a Skills Growth Fund which concentrates particularly on cases similar to those mentioned by the Hon. Member. I believe the Minister of Employment and Immigration announced last week that additional funds will be allocated to deal with problems of this particular nature.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, it may not seem to be appropriate but I can assure you, Sir, that it is appropriate.

GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister not realize that for people over the age of 55 the possibility of being enrolled in job retraining programs is virtually non-existent? Given that the Government can find $20 million to give to Mr. Macdonald for his royal commission as he strolls around the country in an attempt to find a solution which is right in front of him, will the Government allocate direct funds now to ensure that those people to whom I have referred will not lose everything they have worked for simply because there is absolutely no corporate reponsibility evident in our country?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I must remind the Hon. Member there are already substantial funds allocated by the Department of Employment and Immigration to help workers, especially older workers, who have been laid off for various reasons.

Funding for those programs by far exceeds the odd $20 million referred to by the Hon. Member. I would invite him to find out about the programs that are now in place, and to help those very workers he is referring to, get acquainted with and apply for, those programs, so they can benefit from them.

The programs are there, and as I said there are very substantial funds allocated for this, and again I think the Hon. Member does not truthfully depict the reality of Government policies when he implies that there is no provision for such people.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows full well, as my colleague has said, that the answer for most of those workers is welfare, but they are not prepared to accept welfare.

EARLY RETIREMENT AID REQUESTED

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister not recognize that all across the country plants are closing down and their workers are being treated worse than cattle? Will the Minister bring forward a program which will allow the workers on whose backs this nation was built to retire with some dignity prior to the normal retirement age of 65? Will he bring forward a program with the allocation of sufficient amounts of money, both from the Government on the one hand and from corporations on the other, so that those people may have the idea that they will be able to live in dignity in Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have already replied to that question, and I wonder if the Hon. Member listened. All I can say is, to be perhaps still more specific, if he refers for instance to the textile, footwear and clothing industries, he will find we have set up a program similar to the one he mentioned. And further, as I said, the Minister of Employment and Immigration has announced substantial funds to help workers out of difficulties such as those the Hon. Member referred to.

I would once more invite him to get acquainted with the programs already in place, he will then realize there are tens of millions of dollars available to workers to help them out of their difficult situation. In fact, the overall funding available to workers for manpower training exceeds the billion dollar mark. Therefore, if the Hon. Member would look at those programs, he would realize that workers are being helped.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PACIFIC PETREL PROJECT—DISCIPLINARY ACTION INQUIRY

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. I have been informed that five senior officers in the Department of National Defence have had reprimands placed on their files in consequence of the Pacific Petrel affair. Would the Minister confirm that this is the case? Would he advise the House of the names of these officers and their appointments, if they are still serving?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the question of discipline is being addressed by the Chief of Defence Staff. However, because of the nature of the discipline which is being contemplated, it is not my intention to confirm or to comment upon that discipline.

TREATMENT OF SENIOR OFFICERS

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, the Minister seems to be dodging his responsibilities as the Minister of National Defence. That Department seems to have no qualms about Major Letson's case. He was court-martialled because of his alleged complicity in this matter. The court martial took place during the final week of his lifetime of service in the forces, and he was found innocent of all charges. When senior officers are involved, no names are to be divulged, and it is a complete cover-up. Would the Minister explain why there is a tough standard for majors and a much more benign standard for major-generals?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is drawing completely inaccurate conclusions. As he knows, I have made the report available to him. He has not seen it yet. I hope he would get information from the report on the Pacific Petrel affair in order to inform himself properly of the circumstances. Subsequent to that I would be pleased to deal with him on any of the aspects he wishes to raise.

CANADIAN DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT CORPORATION

STATUS OF ORDERS FOR DASH-8 AIRCRAFT MANUFACTURED BY DE HAVILLAND

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue who is responsible in the House to answer for the actions of the CDIC, which in turn is responsible for the de Havilland and Dash-8 aircraft. We were saddened to learn this weekend of the possible loss of $30 million worth of business from Air Atonabee to de Havilland on the Dash-8. My question stems from the fact that they are now about to lose a very large order from Time Air of Lethbridge, Alberta, and another large order from Norcan Air of Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, because this company has not been afforded the opportunity by the Crown corporation management to offer an aircraft at a competitive price with offshore industries.

Since they promised Air Atonabee, Time Air, and Norcan Air that they would be given assistance in the sale of the aircraft to these various companies, why are they holding back on that assistance program when they tabled today an order for five aircraft and they are unable to meet it because they are $2 million per aircraft higher than competitors from Ireland?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's question is interesting and I hope that he will abide by the same underlying principles in any future suggestions.

The Hon. Member is talking about a situation where very strong competition exists between several aircraft manufacturers. He knows quite well that in most countries considerable efforts have been made to support companies such as de Havilland or Canadair and the Government has also clearly undertaken to support those companies.

I hope that the Hon. Member, unlike his party, will support the efforts made by this Government so that the company will become more competitive and sell as good an aircraft as the Dash-8 on the international as well as the domestic markets.

[English]

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE OFFERED TO AIRLINE COMPANIES

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows full well that when that order was placed with de Havilland by Air Atonabee, they were assured by the Government that there would be financial assistance to private companies in Canada interested in selling aircraft. The Minister has completely disregarded the question. There is an order today—not tomorrow or next week—for five of those aircraft, by Air Atonabee. There is another order worth $60 million to $100 million from two other Canadian aircraft companies, creating tens of thousands of jobs. Why will the Minister not live up to the commitment of the Government when the orders were originally placed, that there would be financial assistance in order that they could compete, knowing full well that very few Crown corporations can compete with the private sector dollar for dollar? Why is that assistance unavailable when it was promised by the Government in order that these badly-needed jobs could be secured, not only in the air industry but in supply industries which complement the air industry?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): It is very interesting, Mr. Speaker, to get support from at least one member of the Official Opposition for the Government policies to create and preserve jobs at de Havilland and Canadair.

However, I would like to remind the Hon. Member who is strongly interested in private enterprise that some regulations on domestic and international trade are set under the General Agreements on Tariffs and Trade. The Hon. Member should realize that we have to enforce those regulations while clearly supporting, as the Government has been doing, our Canadian companies, especially those in state of the art aeronautics.

PETROCHEMICAL TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATIONS—MEETING OF MINISTERS

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. A report in The Toronto Star yesterday indicated that the Minister had met with the Minister of Energy for the Province of Alberta. I wonder whether such a meeting took place and, if so, was there a follow-up to the recommendations of the petrochemical task force?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I had the occasion to meet on Saturday morning with Mr. Zaozirny, the Minister of Energy for Alberta. We discussed a scheme for an incentive price for natural gas in eastern Canada. We made good progress in our discussion and hope that we can reach a conclusion this week on an incentive price for new quantities of gas in eastern Canada, starting perhaps as soon as the month of May.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

HONDURAS—PROVISION OF CANADIAN AID

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. We are glad to see that he has returned from his first trip to Central America and hope that he will make a statement on motions, because we would be very interested to hear about his 10-day trip.

Since Honduras is a major recipient of Canadian development assistance and is now the base for CIA-supported armed aggression against Nicaragua, could the Minister tell the House if in his discussions with Honduran authorities he made it clear that Canadian development assistance is contingent upon a recipient country not supporting, or making possible, acts of armed aggression against a neighbour?

Mr. Nielsen: Look out below.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I did not make that clear because that is not the policy which the Government of Canada has espoused, particularly in circumstances where it is very difficult to ascertain from the Government concerned the nature of its participation in such activities. I discussed that question quite fully with the successor to General Alvares and I came away without any clear information as to the particular role of Honduras in the situation which the Hon. Member raises. However, if I were obligated to take that position with respect to Honduras, I would have to take a similar position with other countries in the area, including Nicaragua, about which allegations are similarly made with respect to its activities in neighbouring states.

● (1440)

DIPLOMATIC REPRESENTATION IN CENTRAL AMERICA

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, it is difficult in Question Period, I know, but could the Minister be a little more clear? Is it that he got no clear sense that the "contras" were not in fact based in Honduras? I wonder if he would make that clear? Are they or are they not based in Honduras?

Also, Mr. Speaker, since the Minister, I gather, indicated on the radio program "As It Happens", that the importance of having Canadian representation in the area had really struck him, and our diplomatic representation was inadequate, could the Minister say what further representation he envisages, particularly in Honduras and Nicaragua?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I did make it clear that, in my view, it was important to have a Canadian presence in these countries, particularly, I thought, in Nicaragua, in light of developments there, so that we would be fully informed. We have taken steps, as the Hon. Member knows, to strengthen our personnel in Costa Rica, and the ambassador to Costa Rica and his staff are attempting to keep us completely in touch with the situation in Nicaragua. I would admit that it would be better if we could establish a full-time embassy in Managua, as we do in other countries in the world. However, that decision will have to be taken in the light of budgetary considerations and priorities elsewhere.

In principle, I would agree with the Hon. Member that it is important that we know what is happening in Nicaragua, not only that we know what their thinking is but that they know what Canada is thinking about with respect to quite a number of questions which are uppermost in their minds at the present time.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, also in welcoming back the Secretary of State for External Affairs, may I ask would be indicate whether he is planning to tell either the House or the Standing Committee on External Affairs about his trip to Central America? Or would he at least tell us the main point or points he made on Morningside this morning?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I believe it took me about 15 minutes to make those comments this morning. I doubt if that would be suitable at the present time. I will attempt to inform the House at the first opportunity, probably through the Committee, when that is feasible.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR CANCELLATION OF CONSUMERS DISTRIBUTING PROJECT

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister responsible for Canada Post I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Finance. I am sure the Minister is aware of the business community's opposition to Canada Post's expansion into the Consumer Distributing plan. They feel that this would be a direct intervention into the private sector and that businesses are having enough difficulty in Canada today. Does the Minister, or the Government, have any plans to ask Mr. Warren to drop this Consumer Distributing plan in light of all the opposition from Hon. Members on all sides of the House?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Minister responsible for the Canada Post Corporation has already answered the question in the House, however, I will be pleased to draw the Hon. Member's question to his attention.

REQUEST THAT PROJECT RESULTS BE RELEASED PUBLICLY

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister of Finance would also bring to the attention of the Minister that Mr. Warren has informed the Canadian Federation of Independent Business that he will not release the results of the trial run he is conducting right now on Consumers Distributing. I believe the results of this trial run should be made available to all Hon. Members of the House, as well as to any business groups which wish to see how the trial run went. Will the Minister give a commitment that he will approach Mr. Warren to make this trial run public?

VETERANS AFFAIRS

DIEPPE PRISONERS OF WAR—LEVEL OF COMPENSATION

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. It is related to a proposition which was made to many of us by Mr. Giguère, President of the Dieppe Veterans and Prisoners of War Association (Canada). The case with which this organization is concerned is that of a number of Canadian veterans who were imprisoned in Germany during the Second World War and suffered a very terrible experience, some for a few months and who received a bit of a pension.

The tragedy of the situation is that there were a number of these veterans who were prisoners of war in Germany for 33 months, almost three years, during which time they suffered a great deal. They do receive a pension, but it is very small. This organization feels that the least we might do for these veterans is to grant them a pension of 40 per cent. I ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs if he is giving consideration to this appeal?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, may I begin by thanking the Hon. Member for his question. As most Hon. Members of the House are aware, the subject of compensation for prisoners of war was the subject of a rather extensive study, known to most of us as the Herman Report, which was initiated by Doctor Herman. Within that study, Doctor Herman recommended that the levels of compensation should be geared to two factors, first, the period of incarceration and, second, the foreign power involved. While I can appreciate that the Dieppe prisoners of war feel that their level of compensation is too low, I would remind Hon. Members that, within the Herman Report, the level of compensation paid to Dieppe prisoners is the highest level paid to any prisoner of the German power.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL CONSIDERATION

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister if he will consider further the appeal made by the Association, in view of its urgency? Will he give further consideration to this matter?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am always prepared to give consideration to these matters. However, it is certainly not a high priority of my Department at the moment. I would also indicate to the Hon. Member that if, as a result of being involved as a prisoner of war, these are disabling conditions which have been identified, those individuals are always entitled to make application to the Pension Commission to have the effects of those disabling conditions considered, in addition to the compensation already paid to them as prisoners of war.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED MEETING BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister indicate if he has been invited in the next month or so to meet with President Reagan? Has he accepted the invitation? When will the meeting occur? And what are the subjects he anticipates will be discussed?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I only know that soundings were made with our embassy. The administration of President Reagan has given some thought to following up on the idea of trilateral meetings. I had on other occasions indicated that I would consider any such suggestion with interest. The answer was the same this time. I do not know if they are planning any particular date for a meeting. I just know that they have been told this time, as on other occasions, that the idea of trilateral meetings—which did happen once—would be one which I would welcome.

POSSIBLE AGENDA

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister says he would welcome the meeting. Will he indicate what he would like to see discussed as the main topics? I take it that would be the economic condition of Canada, the U.S., and Mexico, or perhaps trade. Can he indicate what agenda items he would most like to see discussed?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I must emphasize to the Hon. Member that the idea of an invitation did not originate with the Government of Canada but with that of the United States. In so far as there are any explorations, it is they who are making them. Therefore, I have not given any thought to an agenda of a meeting which I have not called and which I have not yet been invited to attend.

RAILWAYS

LEVEL OF INVESTMENT BY RAILROADS

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In answer to my colleague from Brandon-Souris he said that $1 billion was being placed by the Government at the disposal of farmers through Bill C-155. Can the Minister explain why his colleague, the Minister of Transport, gave the rationale that investment by the railroads would be down some $4 billion from what was in Bill C-155 because the coal companies will be shipping 13 per cent less coal over the foreseeable future?

Mr. Siddon: They knew that last fall.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the question was about grain, and I indicated there was up to $1 billion worth of support for the grain industry by this Government. My friend knows, for instance, that there is something like $652 million worth of benefits under the Crow program alone. I could go on talking about a number of other programs, whether they be branch line rehabilitation programs, the purchase of hopper cars, subsidies for canola oil, crop insurance for farmers, and so on. My friend can take the trouble of adding those figures and he will find very quickly that he will reach $1 billion of support this Government is giving to the grain producer in this country.

Oral Questions

SIZE OF INVESTMENT TO MOVE GRAIN

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, how does the Minister arrive at the $652 million as being only for the use of grain producers? Sulphur, potash, oil, and lumber travel over those tracks, as well as passenger trains. Could the Minister explain how the $1 billion invested by the Government is designed exclusively for the movement of grain? Is no one else using those tracks, or has he found another formula to double-track and triple-track?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Does my friend realize, Mr. Speaker, that the farmers are not paying the commercial rate that the other groups pay for transportation? The difference comes from the taxpayers of Canada through the support given by this Government.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

USE OF GOVERNOR IN COUNCIL APPOINTMENTS TO INCREASE REPRESENTATION

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. Recommendation No. 21 of the House of Commons Visible Minority Report Equality Now! urges the federal Government to use Governor in Council appointments to increase the participation of visible minorities on federal boards and commissions. Can the Minister indicate what action he is taking or considering to see that this recommendation is carried out? Can he give me some specific examples, and I am thinking of things such as the CRTC?

Hon. D. M. Collenette (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, the practice of this Government has been to encourage the appointment to Governor in Council positions of people who represent a cross section of Canada from all backgrounds and all racial origins. Although I have not ordered a study to find out which particular ethnic or racial backgrounds make up the various positions, I believe the record is indeed a good one and a principle we will follow in the months ahead.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION VACANCY

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister, who will probably be aware that there is currently one vacancy in the nineteen positions on the CRTC. This past weekend, at the Visible Minorities and Media Advertising Conference in Winnipeg, there was a strong recommendation that the Prime Minister consider the appointment of someone from the visible minority community to fill this position, thereby displaying sensitivity to this aspect of multiculturalism. Will the Prime Minister consider doing that?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will consider that as a representation and add it to the very many which are made on behalf of the various groups by the Minister responsible for multiculturalism.

INDUSTRY

PURCHASE OF CANADIAN MANUFACTURED AIRCRAFT

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to that of my colleague from Peterborough, to the Minister of National Revenue. Why is it that the Government, as a matter of policy, has hundreds of millions of dollars as export aid for other companies in other countries to buy goods, yet it has absolutely no money for companies here in Canada to buy planes from firms like de Havilland? Why is that so?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend should be aware of government policies in that area and he would then realize that if Canada, like most countries, has export aid programs, it is because our exports account for 30 per cent of our Gross National Product or 30 cents out of every dollar earned in Canada. As to our support of domestic industries, the Hon. Member knows that it takes various shapes and forms, but that Canada is bound to abide by its international commitments to other countries just as other countries are bound to abide by theirs as far as subsidizing their own domestic industries is concerned. These include the GATT agreements, which prohibit the use of subsidies for domestic purposes, something I urge my hon. friend to familiarize himself with. He would then realize that there are some kinds of domestic support which Canada can provide and others which it cannot because of the international agreements we have signed.

PROVISION OF ASSISTANCE SUGGESTED

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, Air Atonabee is a local Canadian company and this is totally a Canadian matter. I have flown on those Dash-7s because Time Air in Lethbridge has them, and they are a good plane. I do not understand why there is no support for domestic purchases of airplanes involving hundreds of jobs in this country, when there is money for jobs in other countries, like building monuments to socialism in Algeria?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am interested to discover that at long last the Tories are repenting of their sin of 25 years ago when they cancelled the Avro-Arrow—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: —and brought about the demise of de Havilland which the Government of Canada had to rescue and take over. We have invested hundreds of millions of dollars in direct support for de Havilland. The Hon. Member knows his Party was attacking the Government for that support, not 25 years ago but as recently as last week and two weeks ago. The Tories cannot speak out of both sides of their mouth on this issue. This Government has supported the Canadian aeronautical industry while the Tories have been attacking Canadair and de Havilland week after week in this House.

PROPOSED BELL HELICOPTER PLANT—SALES PROJECTIONS

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance and is concerned with Bell Helicopter. I am sure he is aware of the article in Le Devoir today which sets out some very incisive analysis on the Bell Helicopter purchase which led to the conclusion, in their words, that, "we may have a second white elephant at Mirabel".

The world helicopter market is very depressed. The projected average annual sales for the Bell project at Mirabel are equal to 45 per cent of total U.S. production in 1980, which was a record year, and Bell shares that market with ten other manufacturers. In light of that, does the Minister have any doubts that the sales projections made by Bell in support of the $275 million provided to them can be realized?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, here again we have another typical example of the attitude of Progressive Conservative Party members towards the development of aeronautical industry in Canada. They have relentlessly spent their time in the past attacking first the Canadair Corporation, then the de Havilland Corporation, and now Bell Helicopter Corporation, an American multinational seeking to establish itself in Canada, specifically in Quebec. My hon. colleague, as Progressive Conservative Party critic in industrial matters, began attacking the project the moment it was announced. He has been against this project from the very beginning, and his party's policy is to continue denouncing all advanced technology and aeronautical projects, especially in Quebec as is the case with Canadair and Bell Helicopter. I wi' o remind the Hon. Member that the projections which have been made public are those of Bell Helicopter USA and it is upon those projections that corporation has made its investment decisions. My hon. friend, therefore, should know better than to panic after reading a single article in a Montreal morning paper.

THE ECONOMY

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER OF ENERGY

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister of Finance still concur with the rosy projections he has been making in the House, in spite of rising interest rates and a falling dollar? As reported in Hansard of March 29, the Minister said that the economy has moved from recovery to expansion. Or does the Minister agree with the Minister of Energy who, speaking in Vancouver last Friday, said: "The recent upward trend in interest rates, the slow recovery of commodity prices, the generally low levels of investment, mean that growth years will not return in the foreseeable future"?

Which way would the Minister of Finance have it? Who is stating the Government's position? Does he accept this outright repudiation of the policies of the Government by the Minister of Energy? Does the Minister of Finance think it is appropriate for Liberal leadership candidates to go around the country contradicting government policy the way the Minister of Energy and others have done?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, one could find a nice way of answering the question by referring to a document which I am sure the Conservative Party has not read yet. It is the International Monetary Fund's analysis of the world economic outlook. If my friend refers to page 46 of that document he will find that the rate of growth expected for Canada in 1984 is 5 per cent. That is the highest rate of growth for any country, together with the United States. Only Canada and the United States have that high a rate.

PETITION

MR. KING—NUCLEAR DISARMAMENT

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to this House a petition attesting to the alarm expressed by 380 residents of the federal riding of Okanagan-Similkameen. They are alarmed by the threat to the survival of humanity posed by the existence of nuclear weapons and the continuing arms race. They state that enduring peace cannot be built on the accumulation of weaponry. As a result of these convictions they pray and beseech the House to consider this vital issue and to introduce a Bill into Parliament to stop all nuclear-related activities, with due respect for life. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

Order Paper Questions

CANADIAN INSTITUTE FOR INTERNATIONAL PEACE AND SECURITY

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-32, an Act to establish the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Minister shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

NCC—AMOUNT OF LAND EXPROPRIATED 1962-1983

Question No. 7—Mr. McKenzie:

1. For the fiscal year (a) 1962-63 (b) 1963-64 (c) 1964-65 (d) 1965-66 (e) 1966-67 (f) 1967-68 (g) 1968-69 (h) 1969-70 (i) 1970-71 (j) 1971-72 (k) 1972-73 (l) 1973-74 (m) 1974-75 (n) 1975-76 (o) 1976-77 (p) 1977-78 (q) 1978-79 (r) 1979-80 (s) 1980-81 (t) 1981-82 (u) 1982-83, what amount of land was expropriated by the National Capital Commission?

2. For each year, what was the total cost of expropriating the land?

3. For each year, what was the number of projects planned for the land and, in each case, how many (a) were completed (b) are actually under way?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works):

1.

Fiscal year	Acres of Land Expropriated	General Areas of Projects Planned
(a) 1962-63	460.00	LeBreton Flats Bridgehead Quebec Sussex Drive Misc. Ottawa Sites Hurdman Road Quebec Gatineau Park Philemon Wright Parkway
(b) 1963-64	157.80	Misc. Ottawa Sites Confederation Square Philemon Wright Parkway
(c) 1964-65	127.88	Colonel By Drive Deschênes Britannia Misc. Hull Sites Gatineau Park Confederation Square LeBreton Flats
(d) 1965-66	6.41	Confederation Square LeBreton Flats Eastern Parkway Ottawa River Parkway
(e) 1966-67	611.77	Quebec Gatineau Park
(f) 1967-68	.15	Ottawa River Parkway
(g) 1968-69	100.18	Hull/Lucerne—Misc. Sites
(h) 1969-70	17.16	Hull—Misc. Sites
(m) 1974-75	3,505.55	South East City Rideau River Parkway
(n) 1975-76	107.65	Gatineau Park
All other years	Nil	Nil

2. Annual expropriation costs through negotiated settlements or adjudications of the Federal Court of Canada, many of which predate 1962-63, are listed for each fiscal year. There is no correlation with the specific parcels of land included in the total amounts of land by project area as reported under (1), because a parcel of land expropriated in any given fiscal year may actually be paid for in a subsequent fiscal year allowing for the time required to obtain either a negotiated settlement of expropriation or a court decision.

Fiscal year	Cost
(a) 1962-63	$2,045,228.91
(b) 1963-64	$7,042,829.50
(c) 1964-65	$7,044,382.61
(d) 1965-66	$4,624,529.99
(e) 1966-67	$4,874,742.79
(f) 1967-68	$3,698,683.57
(g) 1968-69	$694,019.80
(h) 1969-70	$1,630,591.96
(i) 1970-71	$2,955,815.79
(j) 1971-72	$1,032,437.75
(k) 1972-73	$2,365,811.19
(l) 1973-74	$564,773.13
(m) 1974-75	$3,156,332.25
(n) 1975-76	$5,395,579.47
(o) 1976-77	$254,147.18
(p) 1977-78	$256,087.95
(q) 1978-79	$238,070.58
(r) 1979-80	$194,341.45
(s) 1980-81	$4,034,654.93
(t) 1981-82	$1,587,792.22
(u) 1982-83	$2,014,393.23

3. The data on specific parcels of land in general project areas on a project-by-project basis and their current status regarding completion is not readily available. The cost in time and effort required to trace and gather specific data for each expropriated parcel of land under (1) would be prohibitive.

DND—PERSONS ENGAGED IN PUBLIC RELATIONS

Question No. 79—Mr. Howie:

1. How many persons engaged in public relations, media relations or publicity are employed by the Department of National Defence?

2. How many Canadian Armed Forces personnel have public relations, media relations, publicity or editorial functions as their primary duty?

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1 and 2. Seventy persons, of which 59 are members of the Canadian Armed Forces.

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL

Question No. 377—Mr. Howie:

1. In the current fiscal year how many persons are employed in the office of the President of the Privy Council and what is the total estimated cost of salaries?

2. For each of the two preceding fiscal years what amount was spent for salaries?

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. Twenty-nine persons, $725,000 (forecast).

2. 1982-83—$664,642—$664,642 (27 persons); 1981-82—$618,020 (26 persons).

CANADIAN FILM DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Question No. 484—Mr. Howie:

Since April 1, 1983, did the government pay any amount to the Canadian Film Development Corporation and, if so, what amount?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): I am advised by the Canadian Film Development Corporation as follows: The parliamentary vote 83/84 for the Corporation amounts to $4,764,000. Following the Broadcast Policy, the Corporation received $34,000,000 voted in July, 1983.

WINTER OLYMPICS, SARAJEVO, YUGOSLAVIA

Question No. 710—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

1. To the knowledge of the Government, how many Canadian athletes participated in the 1984 Winter Olympics in Sarajevo, Yugoslavia?

2. Did the Government incur any cost to (a) fund the athletes while in Sarajevo (b) transport the athletes to and from Sarajevo and, if so, in each case, what amount?

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): 1. The Canadian Olympic Team for the 1984 Olympic Winter Games in Sarajevo was composed of 76 athletes who represented Canada in eight of the ten sports on the Olympic program.

2. The federal Government contributed approximately one-half of the costs of transportation and accommodation associated with the Olympic Team's travel to Sarajevo and stay in the Olympic Village during the Games.
