EMPLOYMENT

ALLEGED INVASION OF PRIVACY AT MANPOWER CENTRES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to move the following motion under Standing Order 43.

Whereas a so-called bilingual survey is being conducted in certain Canada Manpower centres across Canada, and whereas such a survey is at present being conducted at the Canada Manpower centre in Moncton whereby certain persons entering the office of the Canada Manpower centre are asked certain questions and, furthermore, among other things, telephone calls to the Manpower centre are being listened to by a so-called silent listener without notice being given to the caller, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn):

That the Minister of Employment and Immigration cause these surveys to be halted and, in particular, the silent listener procedure on the telephone system which is a patent trespass on the privacy of individuals calling in.

Mr. Speaker: The introduction of such a motion for debate would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

CALL FOR UPGRADING OF CANADIAN RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Whereas the then minister of science and technology last June announced the government's intention to stimulate the low level of Canadian research and development with an enlightened government procurement policy, and whereas despite opposition questioning no regulations are yet in place to achieve this important purpose, I move, seconded by the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek):

That the Minister of Supply and Services be directed to treat this as a matter of urgency and make a statement on motions explaining the delay on this important matter.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be introduced for debate at this time only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

LABOUR DISPUTES

SECTOR BARGAINING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity having to do with the damaging fact that the number of man-days lost as a result of strikes and walk-outs in the first 11 months of 1978 increased by 141.3 per cent over the previous year, from 2.9 million in 1977 to over 7 million in 1978, mostly as a result of the fragmentation of union power.

Bearing in mind that as far back as February 14, 1975, the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), then president of the treasury board, promised that a bill on sector bargaining would be brought before the House, only for us to find the Minister of Labour exactly three years later—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Jelinek: I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Huron-Middlesex (Mr. McKinley):

That the government introduce forthwith legislation requiring union groups in a single public service sector to bargain with the government on a joint basis.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be introduced at this time, pursuant to Standing Order 43, only by unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

S.O. 43

EMPLOYMENT OF IMMIGRANTS UNDER OUTREACH PROJECT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, under the same Standing Order, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez):

That the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) be directed to reconsider the cutting off of Outreach project No. 21-00160, Services d'aide aux Néo-Québécois et Immigrants, in light of the fact that these services have provided placement for some 500 persons in the Montreal area, have advised recent immigrants, have been consulted by the Department of Immigration itself as well as by the Quebec department of agriculture, and have served and are equipped to deal with immigrants in 11 different languages enabling immigrants from 48 different countries to become established in Canada—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: It would appear the hon. member has now gone beyond the content of the motion and is beginning to argue the case. It seems to me the motion should have been confined to the reconsideration of the project.

Mr. Brewin: I will just finish my sentence then, which will bring the matter to an end.

Mr. Speaker: The motion can be introduced at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PC FUND-RAISING DINNER IN MONTREAL—PROPOSAL THAT PRICE PAID FOR TICKETS BE REFUNDED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 and seek the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a motion relating to a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Drummond (Mr. Pinard):

That the price paid for tickets to the Progressive Conservative fund-raising dinner held in Montreal last Sunday be refunded to the few sponsors who bought most of the tickets and to the other guests who had their appetite curbed by the inconsistent remarks made by the Tory mini-leader.

RAILWAYS

FEASIBILITY OF ALASKA-BRITISH COLUMBIA-WASHINGTON STATE RAIL SYSTEM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of the same Standing Order.

In view of the fact that British Columbia continues to have a railway, the BCR, which is incomplete inasmuch as it lacks a northern connection, and in view of the fact that a rail link from Washington state to Alaska through British Columbia would represent a tremendous economic advance for all of British Columbia and provide alternate safe energy transport from the United States, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes):

That this House request the Minister of Transport to meet with his U.S. counterpart, transport secretary Brock Adam, to examine the feasibility of co-operative rail construction to complete the B.C. Railway for an Alaska-B.C.-Washington state rail system.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented at this time only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

REQUEST LOTO CANADA FUNDS BE DISBURSED BY CANADA COUNCIL AND NOT BY CABINET—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I would like to move the following motion. In view of widespread concern among the cultural community that Loto Canada funds for the arts will be disbursed by cabinet under the provisions of Bill C-41 and not by an arm's length agency such as the Canada Council, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn):

That in order to avoid political patronage in funding artistic endeavours, this House instruct the minister to redraft the bill to ensure that the Canada Council will be responsible for disbursing these funds.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 43, only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

INQUIRY WHETHER LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION WILL DEFINE HIS POSITION ON RIGHTS OF FRENCH MINORITIES OUTSIDE QUEBEC—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, given the fact that in a speech he made last February 18 the Leader of the Opposition strongly insisted that the rights of the English-speaking minority in Quebec be maintained in the constitution without, however, extending the same protection to the French-speaking minorities outside Quebec; given the fact that during the same meeting Newfoundland Premier Frank Moores pressed the Leader of the Opposition to act as follows, and I quote:

"take a very very strong stand on minority language rights whether it is in the provinces or in Quebec", I move, seconded by the hon. member for York West (Mr. Fleming):

That this House urges the Leader of the Official Opposition to make his position clear. Does he want language rights—

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

SUGGESTED REVISION OF DECISION CONCERNING ABOLISHING CANADIAN COUNCIL OF RURAL DEVELOPMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 to present a motion of pressing necessity.

Since the Canadian Council of Rural Development was established in 1965 to improve the poor economic situation in many rural areas of this country; since that council made up of national and regional organizations directly concerned with development disparities in rural areas is a vital link between the people involved and the government; and since the government will put an end to the activities of that body as a result of the recent budget cuts, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette):

That this House direct the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion to review that decision in order that the important work the council has started be continued.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, presentation of such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

VACANCY

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that I have received a communication informing me that a vacancy has occurred in the representation, namely: the Hon. Ron Basford, PC, member for the electoral district of Vancouver Centre, by resignation.

Accordingly, I have addressed my warrant to the Chief Electoral Officer for the issue of a new writ of election for the said electoral district.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

TREATMENT OF DEBT CHARGES IN THE ESTIMATES

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. When making his statement following the tabling of the main estimates yesterday, the minister stated, among other things:

—the money the federal government pays out in debt charges can be considered as a form of transfer payment, since it is money being paid directly to Canadians.

Is it, therefore, the government's position that this $8.38 billion in expenditures and, indeed, debt charges in general, are really inconsequential; that they are merely transferred from one pocket to the other and may, in fact, be beneficial since they provide income to bondholders? Is that the position of the government?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (President of the Treasury Board): No, it is not, Mr. Speaker. I believe I suggested that in a sense it is a form of transfer payment since 94 per cent or 95 per cent of it goes to Canadian bondholders.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, the minister also stated in his remarks yesterday, speaking about Canada's net debt, that "it is less worrisome when viewed in the context of Canadian history" during the last quarter century. He went on to state, also, that we have a long way to go before "the size of this nation's debt" becomes "an albatross to economic development and growth".

● (1420)

Given that the debt is 22.2 per cent of the gross national product and has increased substantially in the last four years, and given the minister's comments about it not being an albatross, perhaps he could enlighten the House as to what the national debt would have to be before it becomes an albatross. How big is an albatross, and when does the national debt become a deterrent—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will realize that his question is hypothetical in nature.

Mr. Andre: The minister cast a judgment, Mr. Speaker, as to the effect of our national debt and I thought it was reasonable to ask him when we need to worry.

The minister tries to paint a rosy picture of our national debt by making some comparisons between our current debt and the national debt 25 years ago during the post-war period, pointing out that since 1952 the debt has decreased. Something which the minister did not point out, but which he should have, is that since 1975 the debt has been increasing and is now four times what it was in 1975.

When does the minister feel that this trend will reverse itself so that we will have a continuation of events as they were during the post-war period, when the national debt's proportion of the GNP was on the decline?

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, as I pointed out to the hon. member yesterday, the net national debt at the end of this year we expect will be slightly in excess of 22 per cent of our gross national product, roughly the place where it stood ten years ago. As the hon. member has indicated, it dipped below this figure in the intervening ten years and in the last three or four years has moved up again. However, that figure is substantially less. In 1962, it stood at 33 per cent, in 1952 it stood at 52 per cent, and in 1947 it stood at 110 per cent. So as a percentage of our gross national product, it is certainly not a figure that should be staggering to Canadians.

TOTAL NATIONAL DEBT

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the President of the Treasury Board a supplementary question on the basis of his press release of February 19. I would say that there is some more political skullduggery and cover-up involved with this matter, because on his sheet he indicated that the net debt for 1979-80 would be $64,672 million but for some strange reason the minister did not indicate what the total debt would be. It is very easy to figure this out. In my view, it comes to about $110 billion or $111 billion for the 1979-80 fiscal year.

Will the minister confirm this figure and, if not, does he have another figure? Also, why did he leave this figure out, covering-up as far as the total debt is concerned?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, that is absolute nonsense.

[Mr. Andre.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Buchanan: I made the point very clearly yesterday that it is the net national debt. It is the outstanding bonds, treasury bills and interest payments less the equities that we have in the Crown corporations, loans, investments, and so on. The hon. member has the net debt figure and I clearly described it as such.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, it is not a lot of nonsense. I have a document here which indicates net public debt of $64 billion. What I want to know is, why did the minister not advise the Canadian people what the total gross debt would be? Those spaces are blank on this document. If the minister has the net public debt figure, surely he should have the figures which would indicate what the gross public debt would be for 1979-80. Why the cover-up?

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, there has been absolutely no effort at cover-up at all.

Mr. Alexander: Why is it not in here?

Mr. Buchanan: I do not have the same sheets which the hon. member is waving around. My sheets show the net debt and the GNP.

Mr. Alexander: It came with your press release. It is right here.

Mr. Buchanan: That is fine. Mine show the net national debt. I clearly referred in my remarks to the net national debt. I am delighted to give the hon. member the approximate figure: from memory, it is somewhere between $100 billion and $110 billion gross.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I have one last supplementary to the President of the, what is it, Board of Economic Development Ministers. That is a big title. I just want to get back to the albatross. I would like to ask the boss of the President of the Treasury Board whether he agrees with his colleague when he says that we have a long way to go before the size of this nation's debt becomes an albatross to economic development. It is a simple question. Has the minister a very simple answer for that very easy question?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Board of Economic Development Ministers): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the President of the Treasury Board.

EMPLOYMENT

FUTURE OF OUTREACH PROJECTS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It concerns cuts confirmed in yesterday's estimates of programs relating specifically to women's employment, including the $23 million cut for Manpower training programs vital to many women throughout this country.

My specific area of concern is the uncertain future of some 22 Outreach projects, some of which have already been cut. The others are now under review, one of them to be reviewed later this week. Since the minister stated that all Outreach projects would be fairly and carefully assessed before their future was determined, would he not agree that any fair evaluation of these projects must include direct input from those working on the projects and some survey of those served by them?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated that each of the Outreach projects will be checked out. Some of them have, in fact, been continued; some at a lower rate of participation from the financial standpoint. Others were cancelled because they did not meet the criteria. Some were initiated in 1975 and they have had as much as $200,000 of taxpayers' money to get them operational.

We have to do an evaluation on an annual basis, as requested by the Auditor General. We think we are being responsible in this regrad. They have not all been cancelled. We have also indicated in our programs that we want to see that women coming into the workforce have an opportunity to play their rightful role. We have set quotas in some areas that are not traditionally occupied by women. I am happy to say that in employment programs, Canada Works and training programs, women form an even larger percentage of participation than they have in the actual workforce.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, all of that was interesting, and some of it was even true. I should like the minister now to answer the question. Since two of these projects which have served women very well throughout the country—the one in London has had a 30 per cent placement rate, which is better than the average for Manpower centres across the country—and considering that the review of the Ottawa project and the Toronto project did not include input from the projects themselves and did not include any survey of the clients they were servicing, will the minister assure the House that all future assessments will include input by the project people and the surveys of their clients?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I disagree with the hon. member. There has been a solid and honest review of each and every one of these projects to determine whether they meet the criteria. Some of them have not met the placement criteria so far as finding jobs for women is concerned or finding jobs for people who meet the particular criteria. In some of them there is an overlapping between what the program does, what the Canada employment centre is set up to do and what it does very well at the expense of the taxpayer.

We do not think a duplication of that effort best serves the needs of women. For that reason, the funding for some projects has been reduced because they are not meeting the criteria they were established to meet.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, one despairs of getting a direct answer to a direct question. I asked the minister if he would consider input from the project people themselves, or if they would survey their clients. He has evaded the question twice and I suspect I am not going to get an answer.

I should like to put my last question to the minister. Since the overwhelming evidence from people outside the political parties entirely has been that these projects have been remarkably successful and remarkably beneficial to women, would the minister consider giving to each of the 22 Outreach projects affecting women a three-month extension so that there will be a fair review process into which they can have direct input before they are cancelled?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is already drawing on the experience we followed. Where we found particular projects were having some difficulty, we extended the time and the funding for a period of three months to enable them to adjust to the situation and possibly find other sources of funding for the portion we were withdrawing. In some instances that was necessary. Some of the projects were finished. They were not meeting the criteria and were able to wind down at a time when they anticipated they would be closed.

Last November, we commented that this kind of investigation was in progress and gave the organization adequate time. The hon. member suggests they have all been discontinued, but in fact they have not. A lot of projects are still in place and are still being funded, but they must meet the criteria and not duplicate efforts that we are performing, and performing very well, through our employment centres.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

INQUIRY AS TO ORGANIZATION TO REPLACE CANADIAN COUNCIL OF RURAL DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the recent budgetary cuts inflicted upon the Canadian Council of Rural Development, which is made up of several rural organizations and whose members are responsible for determining what problems and difficulties they have to face, especially with regard to determining the priorities of rural development in underprivileged areas, can the minister tell the House whether he has provided for replacing this service so that the population in those areas are not totally deprived of the priceless advice of that body?

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, when expenditures have to be cut it is indeed always difficult to determine what programs will be cancelled or cut back without hampering too seriously the objectives sought. In fact, in August when we had to resign ourselves to reducing expenditures and doing away with or reducing some programs, it was difficult for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to offer several programs since in fact we have only two major ones. We decided to do away with the advisory council to the minister on development policies because over the last three years it has made a tremendous number of suggestions to us so that we probably have more work cut out for us for the next two or three years than we can possibly do in order to implement their proposals. Besides, after a good many discussions with the members of the council, I agreed that their services having really been of considerable help, it would therefore be a good idea to set up, in the very near future, a system of consultations to be put in place over coming months or in the next few years.

NATIONAL UNITY

MINISTER'S REMARKS ON NEGOTIATIONS WITH QUEBEC

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. It concerns an article in the current issue of Reader's Digest written by Ron Lebel, where the minister is quoted as saying:

> Four-fifths of the Parti Québécois program can be implemented within the federal system and the remaining fifth can be negotiated.

In order to be precise, I ask the minister specifically if the first article in the Parti Québécois program, that is, to "obtain political sovereignty for Quebec by democratic means and to propose to Canada a mutually advantageous economic association," is part of the four-fifths that the minister states can be implemented, or is it part of the one-fifth that he feels can be negotiated?

Mr. Speaker: The minister, I am sure, is anxious to answer the question. However, it seems to me that the question is not directed to him in his capacity as Minister of Justice but, rather, in some political responsibility.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question may be for him in his capacity as a member of the House of Commons, or in his geographic capacity, but questions in the House of Commons would have to relate to his responsibility as Minister of Justice.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, my question was asked in the context of constitutional change.

Mr. Clark: For which he is responsible.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have not read the particular article. However, I can say to the hon. lady that the Minister of Justice, this government and this party have always had a consistent constitutional policy in this regard and we have not attempted to make any flip-flop like the hon lady's party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Lalonde: The answer to the question is very clear, simple and categorical, that this party, this government and myself will not negotiate sovereignty association—period.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Since the article was in the context of the minister stating that federalism is much more flexible than the Quebec government claims, with regard to the four-fifths and one-fifth statement that he made, could he say whether or not the proposal in the Parti Québécois platform, in its program to start proceedings immediately to accede to independence by proposing a law asking Ottawa to return to Quebec all the powers except those delegated to common organisms, is among the things the minister considers to be four-fifths implemented in the system of federalism, or is it in the one-fifth that he is prepared to negotiate?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, this government has stated again its position quite clearly. We have only two conditions in the renewal of the Canadian federation: one, that it be made within the federal system; two, that there be a charter of rights guaranteeing individual rights.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: This government has no illusion, contrary to some members on the other side, that sovereignty association is some kind of renewed federalism, as the well-known hon. member from the other side has stated.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I gather these fellows are clamouring to get into my fund-raising dinners. It is too bad nobody will go to theirs.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: We are well acquainted with the Minister of Justice's and the government's claim that they are always misquoted when they get into trouble. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce did that when he was quoted as saying that housing was a luxury according to the Liberal party.

Let me come back to the Minister of Justice. He is now saying that he did not say what he said.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Will the minister tell us what he did say and what he meant when he told a journalist, Mr. Lebel, on behalf of the Liberal party as the constitutional spokesman:

Four-fifths of the Parti Québécois program can be implemented within the federal system and the remaining fifth can be negotiated.

That is very clear. If that is not what the minister meant when he said those words, what did he mean when he said those words?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: We know the way you operate.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I can understand the Leader of the Opposition trying to extricate himself from the problem he has created for himself with his flip-flopping.

An hon. Member: Exactly.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: But I can assure the hon. member that on this side there has been no flip-flopping at all.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: No one believes you.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: I have stated quite clearly that as far as this government is concerned, any negotiation with any provincial government has to be in the context of the federal system. We are not negotiating anything approximating sovereignty association and we have no illusions about it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, now the minister has said definitively that there has been no flip-flopping on his side. That means that he is standing by the following statement, and I quote again from Mr. Marc Lalonde, constitutional spokesman for the Liberal government:

Four-fifths of the Parti Québécois program can be implemented within the federal system and the remaining fifth can be negotiated.

He admits he said that. Will he tell us: if it does not mean what it says, what, in the minister's judgment, does it mean?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition has not even listened to what I have said.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: I have said that I have not read the article. But even if I had said what he said—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: I will read the article and find out, and I suggest that the hon. member should read the whole of the article.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): You have not read it.

Mr. Alexander: You are stuck this time, Marc.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: There is one thing clear in this party, and that is that sovereignty association is not negotiable.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AIRPORTS

SAFETY FACILITIES AT VICTORIA INTERNATIONAL

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport: it concerns air traffic safety.

I wonder if the minister is aware that the lives of Air Canada passengers were endangered at Victoria international airport recently when on the night of December 15-16 last a scheduled Air Canada flight landed late at that airport without the protection of the fire engine crash crew because the fire hall had not been notified of a delayed flight, as was the course of action that had been agreed upon many weeks before, and that a similar incident occurred earlier in the month, on December 2?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Since the minister was not aware of that, he is now aware of it. Is the minister aware that there is a possibility that aircraft could still land there without the protection of the fire engine and crash service? What are his officials doing to ensure that safety is assured there as it is elsewhere?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, obviously, any matter such as this brought to the attention of my officials is reacted to by them with the necessary steps taken. I imagine this is the reason for the hon. member's question, that there was some dissatisfaction on the part of the people involved in firefighting at that particular airport because of the amount of overtime being worked. Hence, they are coming to the hon. member with a question which I would imagine was handled in a regular way. I will look into that matter, however, and make sure I am right in saying that there is no problem for the hon. member to be concerned about.

Oral Questions

AIR TRANSPORT

ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION AGAINST FRENCH-SPEAKING STUDENTS AT AIR CONTROLLERS' TRAINING INSTITUTE, CORNWALL

Mr. Ed. Lumley (Stormont-Dundas): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. On Thursday, February 8, the Minister of Transport, in reply to a question from the hon. member for Joliette, indicated that French-speaking students attending the Transport Canada training institute in Cornwall had suffered discrimination. This response, unfortunately, reflected on the integrity and competence of the staff of the institute.

In view of the report made public today by the minister's very competent parliamentary secretary, which indicated no evidence of discrimination, would the minister clarify the situation?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to have the opportunity to do so. I did not say that there has been discrimination, but in referring to the fact that certain problems had been corrected I did, unfortunately, use the word "discrimination" in terms of the things which did not at this time exist. I certainly apologize for the implication that it carried or that was put into it by the news media as a positive statement of there having been discrimination, which there was not.

I join the hon. member in recognizing the work of the hon. member for Charlevoix who looked into this matter and confirmed there has been no discrimination. He made certain recommendations upon which I have acted. I hope this will bring about a better atmosphere for the students involved, as well as for the institution as a whole.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

ASSIGNMENT OF CHILD TAX CREDIT TO WINNIPEG HOUSING AUTHORITY TO MEET ARREARS IN RENT

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It is based on the fact that the Winnipeg Housing Authority, which operates, I believe, under direction of the provincial government, has sent written notice to tenants in public housing who are in arrears in their rent that the authority has learned from the income tax department about the child tax credit that is to be received this spring, that it is a windfall and therefore they are being summoned into the office of the Winnipeg Housing Authority, told to bring certain documents and to be prepared to make an assignment of that money to the authority.

In view of the fact that we understood that this money was to go to the mothers of Canada and was not to be assignable, is there not something the minister can do to stop this nefarious practice?

[Mr. Lang.]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I read the letter sent by the Winnipeg Housing Authority signed by a Mr. Malley, whom I would demote immediately if I had the power to do so—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Bégin: —blackmailing the tenants, threatening to throw them into the street if they did not assign their child tax credit to pay rents or arrears. My colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, is looking into the legality of this action. At first glance, it seems absolutely illegal to ask for power of attorney from mothers without reimbursing them at least 85 per cent of the cheques because these people think of themselves as tax discounters. We are looking into that and I will report to the House as soon as we have the answer.

One thing is sure: if a department store or a large business was doing that, the Conservative opposition would call those people jackals. I will be very curious to see if the Conservative members from Manitoba are going to state loud and clear their opposition to that policy which, of course, is against the people. I want to say to mothers that they have the right to refuse the appointment which is forced upon them and to refuse to bring their income tax returns and receipts to the Winnipeg Housing Authority.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that in some other provinces other bodies are also doing things that seem to deny to mothers the full benefit of the child tax credit, is the minister taking steps to make sure that mothers right across Canada get the full benefit of this child tax credit?

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, I have personally supervised the program and the publicity. We have television clips scheduled to be shown all over Canada right now, asking mothers to apply for that program. It is not an automatic program such as the family allowance. Mothers have to file an application. I think all community groups in the country are now aware of the program and have received small funds for their expenditures in having neighbours helping to fill out the forms in order to get the money.

AIRPORTS

NAVIGATIONAL AIDS AND FIREFIGHTING EQUIPMENT FOR CASTLEGAR, B.C.

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Now that the Minister of Transport has foisted upon the residents of Castlegar and the users of that airport a third party contract arrangement which is singularly unpopular, is he now prepared to make a forward step in the provision of immediately needed navigational aids and firefighting equipment?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised to hear the hon. member refer to the contract as one that displeases anyone. I thought there was general favour for the fact that we entered into insurance contracts for the smaller airports across this country when it was beyond their means to enter into satisfactory contracts of insurance one by one by themselves.

Obviously, the issue of equipment is one we have constantly under review. As we have funds available, equipment is bought and appropriate equipment is moved according to the traffic patterns of air travel in this country.

Mr. Brisco: In light of the fact the existing radio navigational aid is so old that spare parts are obtained from the Smithsonian Institute and in light of the fact that Castlegar is acknowledged by pilots to be one of the most hazardous airports in Canada in terms of the final and immediate approaches, will the minister now consider implementation of a program to put VOR into Castlegar?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, every airport without an ILS or VOR wants one. There is simply not enough money to meet all these requests and to do these nice things all over the country at once. We look carefully at the priorities in terms of the numbers of flights and such things as the conditions, including any special geographical characteristics. It is on that basis that decisions are made about where the necessary equipment will be placed.

INDUSTRY

AVAILABILITY OF STEEL TO CONTRACTORS IN WESTERN CANADA

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question affects three ministers, Industry, Trade and Commerce, National Revenue, and Finance, and anyone can answer.

Mr. MacKay: I doubt it.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): With regard to the Anti-Dumping Tribunal's binding imposition of a special duty on steel shapes, I-beams, and so forth, will the minister concerned explain to the steel constructors and contractors in western Canada why they cannot get steel?

● (1450)

Canadian suppliers who are supposed to be protected are not even interested in supplying steel or selling their steel abroad because of the devalued dollar. What are western Canadian constructors going to do? Can we not get some relief when we need the steel?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, western contractors can buy steel. The problem is that they cannot buy steel in Canada at dump prices which are injurious to our industry. That is the difficulty. Perhaps the hon. member wants to ask the government to disallow the ruling of the Anti-Dumping Tribunal, but I am sure there might be a time or two when such rulings might be injurious to Alberta or western Canada with regard to other products.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, if the minister will accept an increase of 40 per cent in the price of steel, and if he will agree that steel from Canadian suppliers is not obtainable, the question of dumping is absolutely academic. If the government was able to make an exception for British Columbia for part of the time, why is it not able now to recognize that the ruling has no relevance to the market at the present time?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, what the government did at that time was to allow contractors to put in their bids. They bid on construction projects. The government served notice that the findings of the Anti-Dumping Tribunal were in fact injurious to Canadian industry. If my memory serves me correctly, we gave the industry 90 days' notice, and steel can still be bought from Japan, South Korea, the United States or from Canadian mills. However, steel cannot be bought at what is considered dumping prices.

FISHERIES

NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING ALASKA COAST HALIBUT FISHERY

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, what the government actually did was discourage foreign suppliers from selling to Canada, and now we cannot buy the stuff any more.

My question is to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment. What is the status of negotiations relative to halibut fishing off the Alaska coast?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I will be meeting with the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and I will be briefed by those who attended the negotiations this afternoon at 3.30. Until then, I should not venture public comment.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker the fishermen in that area are very concerned that their privileges will be exchanged for rights granted in eastern waters.

An hon. Member: Bull!

Mr. Friesen: They have registered their protest with the minister with respect to this matter. Reports are that they will be excluded from American waters and that they will have to go to Canadian waters which are already overfished. Are these reports correct? There are 140 licensed trawlers in Canadian waters fishing for groundfish. Added to that are 40 to 60 vessels which are presently fishing for halibut. What contingency plan does the minister have to help those fishermen who will be dislocated?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to deny flatly that there was any trade-off between one coast and the other. Second, we have indicated to fishermen all along that if there was to be a dislocation, and if we could not successfully negotiate the prolonged presence of Canadians off the coast of Alaska, then we would consider a program of relocation. The hon. member should certainly be familiar with that. If he is not, he should be.

NORTHERN PIPELINES

ALASKA HIGHWAY PROJECT—DELAYS IN CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of statements by John McMillian of the Northwest Alaskan Pipeline Company that the Alaska Highway pipeline will be delayed up to a year due to regulatory delays in the United States, does the government plan to make a formal protest regarding these delays to the United States administration, considering that we have a treaty with them, and will the government be asking the United States to legislate deadlines for their regulatory procedures such as was used for the Alyeska pipeline, so that there will be no further delays in the planned completion date for this important project to Canada?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I had discussions a week ago Saturday with Secretary of State Vance on this particular question. I think I can say without qualification that the problem does not lie with the United States Administration. Mr. Vance made it very clear that the administration is very anxious to proceed as rapidly as possible with the pipeline.

I did not put specific inquiries to him as to what actions might be possible for the administration to take, but he did assure me that it was moving as rapidly as it could with the various interests in the United States to eliminate any roadblocks which might presently exist.

I want to emphasize once again that there is no difficulty with the United States Administration. It remains as committed to this project as it was when the Prime Minister and the President announced it some time ago.

SHIPPING

USE OF MARITIME POLLUTION CLAIMS FUND

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question for the Minister of Transport. I believe the minister is aware of the maritime pollution claims fund which was established by, I believe, his seatmate several years ago. I believe the target at that time was to establish a fund of about $25 million made up from levies on oil moved by sea.

I wonder if the minister can confirm that there is approximately twice the amount of the target amount in that fund, nearly $50 million and, if so, does he propose to use the interest or any of the funds available for some other useful purpose since, fortunately, claims made against the fund have been practically negligible?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we reviewed the growth of the fund and, as it crossed approximately the $40 million figure, we did terminate the charges which were accumulating toward the fund. As the hon. member says, interest is now accumulating and only a small portion has been used for the actual pollution claims purpose. We are examining the question of possible uses of the interest from this fund for other purposes in connection with the broad objective of controlling pollution and clearing the atmosphere.

However, I am advised that a change in the legislation would be required to accomplish this, and I intend to bring that legislation forward in due course.

Mr. MacKay: Is the minister considering using some of the surplus funds for research into oil emulsification and things of that nature? Would he consider that kind of use for the surplus funds?

Mr. Lang: Yes, Mr. Speaker, either for equipment and, therefore, facilities to deal with pollution problems as they arise or for research and development of that kind of equipment.

GRAIN

REASON FOR SLOW SHIPMENT FROM WEST COAST—PURCHASE OF HOPPER CARS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Transport. What earthly reason is there for the fact that we are now behind 400,000 tons of shipments of grain on the west coast, and what is the minister doing about it?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the hon. member means by being behind by that amount. It has been a very difficult shipping season on the west coast, for a number of reasons. Terminals have been unloading at a much lower rate than satisfactory. That is due to a combination of factors. Some new terminals are coming on stream. There have been labour difficulties regarding refusal to work overtime.

On February 13, Canadian National suffered a serious problem with a line. On, I believe, February 15, the CP had a problem with regard to a bridge. Both these problems were experienced in the Fraser Canyon. These problems have caused a disappearance of cars available for unloading. However, both problems have been solved and we will be trying again to move grain as rapidly as possible.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, the source of the number I quoted was a press article regarding a statement by a man by the name of Otto Lang.

Yesterday, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce made reference to the Bible. I would like now to get an answer from the New Testament. Why are we purchasing, with farmers' money, new hopper cars when after the first 21 weeks of the crop year there are on CN and CP lines a daily average of 1,235 cars waiting to be unloaded, and when the rate of unloading at the port of Vancouver is 442 cars? Why are we buying new cars with farmers' money when we cannot unload even a third of the number of cars waiting?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in my opening remarks in answer to the first question, I feel that the hon. member is misquoting. The figure the hon. member mentioned has nothing to do with Vancouver. If I spoke about 400,000 tons, that was a reference to how far we are behind in our exports this year compared with last year, which is quite a different matter. It has nothing to do with the question the hon. member is asking. The next time he reads about statements by Otto Lang, let him get an official interpretation.

An hon. Member: We need one.

Mr. Lang: The point the hon. member misses is that the hopper cars being ordered are being ordered for the latter part of 1979 and 1980, and the fact that the terminals have been having difficulties this year, and therefore there have been cars available with loads, does not diminish the clear requirement for the additional cars. We are paying good money for repairs and for additional cars which the Canadian Wheat Board has decided should be purchased.

● (1500)

Mr. Speaker, I am optimistic that as the years go by we will have to move much more grain, and by 1985 we are looking at the movement of 30 million tonnes of grain to export, 50 per cent higher than current records.

NATIONAL REVENUE

SALES TAX ON STORM WINDOWS AND DOORS

Mr. Jack Hare (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue and it has to do with energy conservation in the home. It relates to the government's decision to reimpose the federal sales tax on storm windows and doors in the November budget.

In a letter to my office, the minister stated that the tax exemption had been removed for storm windows and doors, including double and triple-glass windows, because glass is less efficient in energy conservation than solid wall construction.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hare: I should like to ask the minister to explain this rationale. Does he wish to suggest that homes in cold climates should have no windows or, rather, is he worried that people will take advantage of this tax exemption to build glass houses?

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of National Revenue and Minister of State (Small Business)): Mr. Speaker, I think I had better look at that letter again.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ARTS AND SCIENCES

DISBURSEMENT OF LOTO CANADA FUNDS

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. Under the provisions of Bill C-41, cabinet, and not an independent agency such as the Canada Council, will be responsible for disbursing Loto Canada funds for the arts.

In view of the concern expressed by the cultural community about keeping these grants free from political influence, will the minister commit the government to amend the bill to allow independent agencies such as the Canada Council to disburse these funds?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): No, Mr. Speaker, under the legislation the disbursement of Loto Canada funds is not the responsibility of cabinet but is in the hands of the Secretary of State. I think it would be extremely undesirable to place it in the hands of an agency such as Canada Council, for then there might be a danger that these funds would become absorbed in the ordinary operating expenditures of these agencies, and it is my purpose to ensure that these funds are kept apart to ensure that the operating funds are supplemented but that these funds are kept for their special purpose.

Mr. Symes: Mr. Speaker, that is an incredible answer, given the kind of cutbacks this government has imposed upon the cultural community. I should like to ask the minister the following question. Given the lack of adequate funding for the arts over the past few years, and the announced cutback of several million dollars in grants for arts and culture for 1979-80, can the minister assure the House that the new revenues gained from Loto Canada will be treated for what they are, additional revenues for the arts community, and that he will maintain ongoing funding under the regular formula to which we are accustomed? To argue otherwise is to argue how ineffective the minister is in cabinet in speaking up for grants for the arts.

Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wants to get into the details of the expenditure allocations, it would take a long time to do so, but I would be able to show him that his statement is not an accurate one. I do not think I can usefully add much more to my previous answer to the hon. member.

Oral Questions

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

AUTHORIZED WIRETAPS AND NUMBER OF CONVICTIONS OBTAINED

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Solicitor General. I put the same question last year on the last wiretapping report of the Solicitor General of Canada.

Last year—that is, in 1978—there were 3,427 authorized wiretaps; that is, wiretaps authorized by judges. Of those, only 897 persons were arrested and there were four convictions. We hear a lot these days about the charter of rights and the constitution. Proportionately the same figures applied last year. Will the minister now reconsider the Liberal government's position and amend the Code because of what I would call abuse of the process of law?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): If the hon. gentleman would look at the report, he would see that the number of people arrested in terms of the 1975 authorizations increased as the years went by. In terms of the 1975 authorizations, 407 people were named in the authorizations, and the hon. member will see that in 1978, with reference to 1975, 1,557 people were subjected to arrest. In terms of criminal proceedings, the hon. member will see that there were 968 convictions, in total, with reference to 1975.

As I am sure the hon. member understands very well, the reason for that is that as we obtain authorizations we conduct the investigations and subsequently arrests are made, following which it takes some time before the cases proceed through the individual tribunals. We had to wait right up until 1978 to get the total figures for 1975.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, so that we can get away from the minister's verbosity with reference to the matter, let me point out that we had the same answer last year. Last year, there were only 13 convictions and a similar number of arrests, as the minister pointed out. Under this act, people are being arrested and their civil rights usurped. As I said, there were four convictions out of 3,427 wiretaps, and the figures were similar for last year.

The minister keeps talking about the catch-up. I wonder when we are going to catch up. We are putting people in jail, but as a result of this evidence we are getting no convictions; that is my point.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I would be very pleased if the hon. gentleman would review the report again.

Mr. Woolliams: I have read it.

Mr. Blais: He would see that in 1975 we had 562 authorizations, and as of today there are 968 convictions. In 1976, we had 613 authorizations, and as of today we have achieved 790 convictions. In 1977, we had 615 authorizations, and as of today we have 495 convictions. Of course, as we look at the 1977 and 1976 figures, there are still cases before the courts and there have been no convictions on those cases. But when we look at the total number of authorizations we see that the total number of convictions exceeds the authorizations.

I would also like to point out to the hon. gentleman that in terms of wiretap installations, there has been a decrease in the number from 1977 to 1978. In 1977, there were 1,429 installations, and in 1978 there were 1,386.

PRIVILEGE

MR. McKENZIE—AIR SAFETY REGULATIONS—STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF TRANSPORT

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have given you notice of my question of privilege and now I should like to explain why I am presenting it 20 days late. I have obtained evidence this past weekend and yesterday giving grounds for my question of privilege.

On February 8, the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) questioned the minister on the tabling of a document on air safety regulations. He asked:

> Can we expect this report to be made public—?

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) stated:

> Our tradition in a very open department is to . . . place reports of this sort in our library, where they are indexed and available to the public, even if we do not feel they are necessarily of the sort that deserve to be printed. I say "a very open department", noting the "the raspberries" from the other side, because they may not know that we have thousands and thousands of documents available in the library.

I am interested in a particular air crash which took place last March in Saskatoon, so I contacted the minister's department and his officials provided me with a one page report on this accident which took place in Saskatoon in March of 1978. I made further inquiries on my own and I found out that there are 20 pages missing from this report. That means the minister does not operate an open department and members of parliament cannot contact his department and his library. What he said is not true.

I have obtained a transcript of the coroner's inquest into this accident. The inquest was started in June of 1978. It had to be postponed for three months. Then it continued in September of 1978. The minister would not provide the proper documentation with regard to this crash. This insistent coroner was finally able to get from the minister an additional 20 pages so he could continue with his inquest into these tragic deaths. I would like to quote briefly from the transcript of the coroner's inquest as follows:

> Gentlemen of the jury, you will remember that at our last meeting we adjourned the inquest because we lacked certain evidence which was in the form of a report which has been forwarded by the investigator who investigated this accident on behalf of the Department of Transport, and during the subsequent weeks we have been busy with negotiations with the department in an attempt to obtain this report. We only recently received it and now we are going to continue with this inquest.

Throughout the second section of this inquiry into the accident, the coroner makes some of the most damaging statements against the Minister of Transport and his department for not providing information with regard to air crashes. Finally the minister's office came up with the additional 20 pages. This is further evidence as to why we should proceed with Bill C-40 at this time when we have statements such as this one.

I discussed this accident with the widow of one of the victims last Sunday and she informed me—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the hon. member, being on a procedural point, should stick to the merits of the question of privilege.

Mr. McKenzie: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Even the widow could not receive the full report. So I would like to ask the minister, through you, Mr. Speaker, either to withdraw his remarks that this documentation is available through making inquiries to his department—because in fact it is not available; this one page document he gave me is not complete as there are 20 other pages to be attached to it to have the full report—or explain why he cannot provide us with the full documentation when we phone his department with regard to accidents. As I have said, this is further evidence why Bill C-40 should be proceeded with immediately.

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak on this question of privilege in support of my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie), arising out of the same answer that the minister gave on February 8, as reported at pages 3013 and 3014 of Hansard.

The minister in his answer indicated that his department was a very open one and that reports of the kind to which we referred during the question period, reports emanating from the Ministry of Transport having to do with air safety, were placed in the library and were available to the public. My question arose from the fact that back in December of 1977 I asked the Minister of Transport whether he would make available to the House the northern Ontario aviation safety report undertaken by Messrs. Carswell and Slaughter. At that time the minister said he would look into the matter and determine whether it could be made public. The other day the minister gave us to understand by his answer that the department was an open one, that this information was there, that it had been indexed and placed in the library and that it was available to all members who desired to obtain it.

After that exchange had taken place I contacted the library and asked for the full report. I was told the full report was not available in the library either on paper or on film. A copy of an abridged version together with a press release the minister had issued was the only material available to me. Thus, when the minister suggests that his department is open and that reports of this nature are made public, when he suggests that all members have to do is contact the library and obtain copies of the reports they desire, his statements are not in accordance with the facts. If he is not misleading the House he is treading close to doing so, and I suggest the matter be either clarified by the minister or taken under Your Honour's advisement.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. members who have spoken, particularly the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie), have carried on their usual tactic of trying to introduce all kinds of extraneous matters by way of debate under the guise of a question of privilege, thereby taking up valuable time which would otherwise be available to the House. Of course, they are never likely to let legislation move along easily in this House so they raise these questions time and time again. I presume they had to give Your Honour notice of a question of privilege. I am a little surprised that in this case they did not have the courtesy to give me notice too, so that I could be sure of being here. I was almost out of the chamber before they raised the matter, again an example of the way in which they like to proceed.

The fact is that if you look at my response you will see I was not saying that that particular report would be made available. I was not dealing with that issue; it is one which still has to be reflected upon by me. There are certain things of a confidential nature which come before the ministry of transport and which cannot be made public. I refer particularly in this context to transcriptions of recordings of conversations between pilots and controllers.

There is a bill presently before the House on first reading which has in it a potential for public access to material of this sort, private conversations between controllers and pilots, and I have already indicated—I say this again because I know there will be some concern on the part of pilots and controllers—that I intend to be very open during the committee stage to hear their view as to what additional control ought to be placed upon those matters; their right to privacy demands that there be some protection against too wide open access to material of this kind. There are other matters of a confidential nature which come before government; nearly everyone recognizes that they must remain confidential. That is done. Our objective within that department has been to keep this material within as narrow limits as possible.

I discovered that one of the reasons a number of things were not made public was because they were not of such a nature that anyone wanted to expend the money on printing and publishing them, or, indeed, translating them so that they would be available to all Canadians. In respect to those cases I devised a system a few years ago which now obviously embarrasses hon. members opposite who are presently supposed to have a responsibility in transport; they do not realize they have access to this material. We devised a system of making available documents in our library under which people who wanted copies could obtain them at a charge. Literally every document which did not have some specific, traditional and well accepted reason for being kept confidential is indexed and made available in that library. I do not know the precise number—30,000 or 40,000 documents I think it is—but I will check that figure so that the hon. member does not raise a further question of privilege based on whether I said 30,000 when I really should have said 28,000 or 38,000; he quibbles about matters of this sort.

The fact is that we are open as a department and matters of very great breadth are available to hon. members. The discomfort of hon. members opposite arises because, while they purport to be transport critics, they obviously did not know, over the years, that this material was there.

Mr. Speaker: Order. By defending his answer, referring to it again and indicating that he stands by it, the minister, of course, takes this out of the area of procedure and leads it into an area of disagreement where it remains at this time. I have to set this matter aside as a question of privilege.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. McGRATH—DENIAL OF MISREPRESENTATION OF STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I did not raise this matter yesterday because the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Allmand) had left the House. In any event I wanted to check the record. What the hon. gentleman said yesterday did not constitute grounds for raising a question of privilege because it was not unparliamentary. Nevertheless, it was a serious charge. I regret the minister is not in his place this afternoon.

In reply to my question, which can be found reported at page 3345 of Hansard, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs said this:

> I never said food prices would go up by 14 per cent in a few months; I said the increase would be from 12 per cent to 14 per cent, year over year, in the next few months and 9 per cent to 10 per cent for the total year at the end of the year. That is a very gross misrepresentation, which is not unusual for the hon. member.

As I say, I consider that to be a serious charge. "Gross misrepresentation" may not give rise to a question of privilege but it does imply disorder, as I think Your Honour will agree. I checked out my source for making the statement I did in my question to the minister and I found it in the speech the minister made to the Consumers' Association of Manitoba last week. This is on page 12 of the speech:

> I consider, however, that much of the improvement will not come until the latter part of the year and for the next few months we can, unfortunately, expect to see increases in food prices of between 12 and 14 per cent.

That is the end of the quotation, Mr. Speaker. Obviously I did not misrepresent what the minister had said. It was not a misrepresentation or a gross misrepresentation. I am sorry the minister is not here because I know he is a fair person and would want to correct the record if he was present.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Obviously the matter should now be left for the minister to direct his attention to the intervention by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). I am sure he will do that and will indicate whether he wishes to dispute it further.

[Mr. Lang.]

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, if I might speak briefly in respect of the taking of my question of privilege under advisement—

An hon. Member: No, it is finished.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) has defended his answer in the House today which takes this matter out of the realm of privilege and places it in the position of a matter of disagreement. Once a minister stands in his place and says he stands by his answer, although the hon. member obviously disagrees, he has defended his answer and is saying to the House it should look at the record, and what was said ought to be interpreted in such a way as to lead to an innocent conclusion, which places the matter, as I have said, as a matter of interpretation or disagreement between the parties, and in my opinion, takes the matter out of the category of a question of privilege.

Mr. McKenzie: Could I put a further question? I reserve the right to proceed with this matter as a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member may reserve the right to do a number of other things. He certainly has no right to proceed with that matter any further. I have adjudicated on it and I cannot change my adjudication. If the hon. member thinks that as a result of some intervention in this debate he has some additional matter to pursue, that may very well be the case. I do not know that.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

CONCURRENCE IN FIFTH REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE

On the Order: Motions:

February 16, 1979—Mr. Baldwin (Joint Chairman of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments):

That the Fifth Report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments, presented to the House on Friday, February 16, 1979, be concurred in.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, may I discuss this briefly as a point of order in the hope that it might save some time of the House. I am not actually moving the motion at this time. It is a motion in my name as co-chairman of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments to concur in a unanimous report. It was agreed to by members from all sides of the House. I believe it was actually moved by a member of another party from the other place and seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt). It purports to seek authority for the committee to conduct a comprehensive study of the means by which parliament can better oversee the government regulatory process, and one or two related things.

I would like nothing better than to debate that in light of the vast improvements which have been made in jurisdictions in Australia and the United States, but I know the time of the House is limited before this session ends.

I would be prepared to put the motion now if there was an indication that the House would accept it. I understand it either has been moved or will be moved and passed in the other place. If someone in authority on the other side could give me the assurance that if I put the motion it will be passed without debate, I would be prepared to waive the right to debate it. I am asking for concurrence as the delegate of the committee. It is not a motion on behalf of this party. Because of the limited time between now and the expiration of this session and the amount of work this committee will have to do to try to bring in a reasonable report which may be left as a legacy to the next parliament and the next government, we would like to get the matter under way as soon as possible. I would be prepared to waive any right to debate the matter if I can get the undertaking that if I move the motion now it will be accepted.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the suggestion of the hon. member deserves consideration. I would have to take a closer look at that report before taking position. I take note of his suggestion. I understand that he is prepared to stand his motion today and before the end of the week we should be in position to say whether his suggestion is acceptable or not.

[English]

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, if I hear from the government before tomorrow that it is prepared to give that undertaking that is fine; otherwise I am giving notice now that I will present my motion tomorrow and we will have a debate.

QUESTION ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, question No. 672 will be answered today.

ST. BONIFACE—DECREASES IN ANNUAL PAYMENTS

Question No. 672—Mr. Hare:

What is the total amount of decreases in annual payments paid into the Constituency of St. Boniface brought about by the government's restraint programme and which departments and what amounts are involved in each case?

Mr. Thomas H. Lefebvre (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): The information requested is not readily available. To provide an accurate reply would entail a lengthy and costly examination of the accounts of every program of each department which cost in manpower and time would be exorbitant or prohibitive.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if question No. 626 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Speaker: Shall question 626 be deemed to be made an order for return?

Mr. Paproski: Agreed.

*EXTERNAL AFFAIRS PROGRAM—FOREIGN VISITORS

Question No. 610—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. Has the Department of External Affairs set up an exercise known as "Programme for Foreign Visitors"?

2. Are funds available for foreigners touring Canada as "opinion formers"?

3. How many of such "opinion formers" have toured Canada under the auspices of the Department of External Affairs, and what was the total cost in each of the past four years?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): In so far as the Department of External Affairs is concerned, the reply is as follows:

1. Yes. The Department of External Affairs has as part of its external information activities a program to encourage visits to Canada by selected foreign journalists, broadcasters and other "opinion formers" and to assist others in these categories visiting Canada on their own initiative. The program is designed to encourage a greater knowledge of Canada abroad and better understanding of Canadian attitudes and policies affecting our relations with other countries.

2. Yes. Where desirable, the Department of External Affairs meets the cost of travel to and from and within Canada of foreign journalists and other "opinion formers" selected on the recommendation of Canadian missions abroad. The financial assistance available to each visitor is limited by Treasury Board regulations. The funds are drawn from those available for information and cultural relations under the "Canadian interests abroad program" provided for in the estimates of the Department of External Affairs.

3. The number of sponsored "opinion formers" who have visited Canada under the auspices of the Department of External Affairs and the costs involved in each of the past four fiscal years are:

	Number of Sponsored Visitors	Total Cost $
1974-75	278	$215,218.08

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. EPP—QUESTION NO. 679—CONTRADICTORY INFORMATION SUPPLIED BY SOLICITOR GENERAL

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. When a member places a question on the order paper with the expectation of receiving an answer from the government, he also expects the answer to be in accordance with the facts. It creates difficulty for an hon. member who has raised specific questions about government activity in his riding to receive an answer to such a question on the order paper that is totally contradicted by the minister who supplied the answer in the first place.

On December 4, 1978, I placed question No. 679 on the order paper asking the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais) the following:

Is the government planning expansion of the RCMP Highway Detachment Building located at Steinbach, Highway No. 12 and, if so (a) what is the capital spending (b) on what date will construction (i) begin (ii) be completed?

I received an answer to that question on January 30, 1979, which appears in Hansard at page 2700. The answer the Solicitor General gave was very succinct. It consisted of the one word "No". I think everyone in this House would interpret that answer as meaning only one thing, namely, that the construction about which I inquired was not taking place.

I asked the question in view of the fact I had spoken with a number of officials in the RCMP detachment office as well as at headquarters in Winnipeg who indicated to me that in fact this construction was to take place. After having received that negative answer on January 30, 1979, an answer signed, as nearly as I can make out the signature, by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Solicitor General (Mr. Young), I received a letter signed by the Solicitor General dated February 13, 1979. This letter from the Solicitor General totally contradicted the answer I had received as recorded in Hansard. The letter dated February 13, 1979, and addressed to myself reads:

Reference is made to your letter dated 1978-12-21 and to the interim reply dated 1979-01-09 from my Ministry Assistant, concerning the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Detachment at Steinbach, Manitoba.

I am informed by the Commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police that interior renovations as well as a new parking lot at the rear of the building, with access from the Town's back lane, are indeed programmed for the fiscal year 1980/81. The estimated cost for the project is not expected to exceed the $180,000 figure as you mentioned.

As you are aware, however, projects such as these are evaluated on a force-wide basis yearly and should others be deemed of a higher priority in the competition for scarce resources, a delay in present plans could occur.

The letter is signed by the Solicitor General from whose department I received this negative answer.

After I received the negative answer and prior to receiving the letter from the Solicitor General, the local press contacted me as to the RCMP's plans for the RCMP detachment building located on highway No. 12. I supplied them with the question which I had placed on the order paper and also the answer. An article appeared in the local press which indicated that the Solicitor General's department had now decided that the plans were not to go forward. I accepted these answers as factual and in good faith. How else should I have interpreted the answers? Subsequently, one week later, from the same minister, from the same department, on the same question about the same detachment building, the minister gives me a reply which in fact had been confirmed by the RCMP in Winnipeg.

At the moment I can only place myself in your hands, Mr. Speaker. As an individual member, I do not know what other recourse I have. When an answer is given, then totally denied, and in fact an opposite answer given by the Solicitor General, what response can I possibly make to my constituents? This matter came to my attention last night, and I am placing myself in your hands, Mr. Speaker. If there is in fact a prima facie case, I will look at it and advise as to whether I will proceed with it.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I fully sympathize with the hon. member on the point that he is making. I have looked at the question which he has on the order paper and, indeed, it is a very normal and very short question that he poses. I do not have with me the written inquiry which he directed to my attention and to which he has received a reply. Therefore, I am not in a position to advise the hon. member whether there is an inconsistency in the reply which he received to his question on the order paper.

Mr. Epp: I told you there was.

Mr. Blais: That is the hon. member's interpretation. I would like to look at the two documents and provide the hon. member with a reply. Of course, I would insist that there has not been any intention to provide wrongful information. If there is a difference in the two documents it might be because of the time when the two replies were made. However, Mr. Speaker, I would want to have some time to review the matter and then to deal with it fully. In view of the fact that it has been raised in the House, I will be replying and making the corrections which will be compellable before this House.

MR. HNATYSHYN—DELAY IN ANSWERING QUESTIONS NOS. 207 AND 208

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, very briefly, I would like to raise a point of order at this point. Up to this date, I have not complained about the particular questions which were placed on the order paper during the first week of this particular session. I believe now that it is most appropriate for me to stand up and in a most serious way address my remarks to the parliamentary secretary and ask him if he will now pay attention to two particular questions and at the earliest possible date obtain the answers to them.

These questions are very important in terms of government expenditures and the use by members of the cabinet of publicly paid and publicly financed equipment belonging to the government. The questions are also important in terms of whether or not certain equipment belonging to the people of Canada and the government has been used for political activities. I refer specifically, for the parliamentary secretary's benefit, to questions Nos. 207 and 208 which stand in my name.

One question asks whether the Liberal Party of Canada has paid for the use of any government aircraft in the period August 16 to October 16, 1978, in connection with the by-elections held on October 16, 1978, and, if so, what is the amount for each trip. I know that this information is available from the Department of Transport and that it can very easily be ascertained.

The second question asks whether or not the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or members of the cabinet during the period August 16 to October 16, 1978, made use of government aircraft and, if so, what was the total cost and what was the destination on each occasion. Again, a simple request of factual information which is on the records of the Department of Transport and which is easily obtained.

I think that it is in the interest of the government to have this information brought forward immediately. If there had been a simple answer, that the aircraft had not been used during the course of the political campaign, I would expect that it would be very simple to write a nil reply. I have to draw the conclusion that equipment was used during the course of this political campaign by government members, who have an advantage in terms of political activity in this country, having available to them JetStars and government aircraft of various descriptions to bring them to various constituencies in the course of an election campaign.

It is very important that the record be made clear and that the government not hide this matter until this parliament is dissolved, unless it wants to be accused of keeping this matter under confidential cover-up. If they are hiding information which the people of Canada are entitled to see they will know what kind of morality exists in this particular government.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that the member believes that Canadians take him seriously when he says he wants to act in the interest of the government. I am also convinced that he is serious when he says that his questions are important. However, there are about 700 questions on the order paper and all members believe that their questions are important, Mr. Speaker. If you would allow me, I would say that on February 14, less than six days ago, the official statistics were as follows. Answers had been provided to 434 of 1,137 questions, which means an average of 37.2 per cent. Therefore, this is a satisfactory average compared with other averages at this time of a session during recent years. I am asking the hon. member to be patient. He has been well looked after by parliament in the past and we will continue to do so. He knows quite well that the government has never attempted to hide anything to members opposite, especially when the information is available.

[English]

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I am very interested in the parliamentary secretary's reply, because as a former minister of transport I know how these accounts are kept. These accounts are kept on a daily basis in the Department of Transport. If an aircraft is used by anybody, the hours and the expenditures for salaries, fuel and so on are kept on a daily basis and can be obtained very rapidly and very easily.

There is absolutely no excuse for holding up an answer of this kind longer than one week at the outside. I know what I am talking about because I was in this job for three and a half years, and we answered many questions of this kind. Those questions should have been answered a long time ago, and it will be a disgrace on this government if they are not answered immediately. There is absolutely no excuse for not giving out information which is available today.

MR. ORLIKOW—DELAY IN ANSWERING QUESTIONS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): On the same question, Mr. Speaker, I was very interested to hear the Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) urge the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn) to have patience. I was interested because I have heard that same excuse so many times.

I should like to direct the attention of the parliamentary secretary to the order paper. On October 14, I set down a series of about 50 questions beginning with No. 85, asking for information about the names of the chief executive officers, the presidents and vice-presidents of a large number of Crown corporations and their salaries. Not only did I put those questions on the order paper on the first day of this session, but they were on for most of last session, and if my memory serves me correctly they may even have been on the order paper of the session before.

I know it has not been customary in the past to give information about salaries paid to senior officials of Crown corporations. If the government holds the view that it is not in the public interest to give out such information, then it seems to me they ought to say so and not leave questions on the order paper.

I was interested in an article which appeared in yesterday's Globe and Mail and which reported—and I think correctly—that the head of the Bank of Canada receives a salary of around $100,000 per year. I am not saying I think that is too high or too low, but I do not see why that kind of information should not be made available to the people of Canada. That is why I put the questions on the order paper. They are not difficult to answer, and it seems to me that I should have had the answers long ago. If the government does not want to answer the questions, surely they could say so in the regular way and then I could pursue the questions in committee or in some other way.

When the parliamentary secretary urges members to be patient, I think he should be honest when he gives that kind of advice. I do not think he is when he says that, in light of my experience and the failure of the government to answer questions which have been on the order paper this session and last session.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I take it that the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) is not suggesting that the parliamentary secretary is being dishonest. He made a rather clear charge that he thinks the hon. parliamentary secretary should be honest and he does not think he is being honest. I want to be very careful that he is not accusing him of dishonesty before we go on.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry. What I probably should have said was that I was not certain of his sincerity.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): In his remarks the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) told us how it was done in his time. Mr. Speaker, I will check to see whether things have changed after 16 years at the Department of Transport. I will also consider the representations made by the hon. member of the NDP and ask those who are responsible for research in the various departments and agencies to try and expedite the procedures involved so that complete answers can be given in better time.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

ENERGY SUPPLIES EMERGENCY ACT, 1979

MEASURE TO CONSERVE STOCKS

The House resumed from Monday, February 19, consideration of the motion of Mr. Gillespie that Bill C-42, to provide the means to conserve the supplies of energy within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or market disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, with this bill, the government is once again trying to intrude into provincial affairs. Clause 15 states the following:

> The board may, with the approval of the Governor in Council, enter into arrangements with provincial authorities for the regulation and pricing by such provincial authorities of the supplies of electric power—

In fact, Mr. Speaker, we are well aware that electric power comes within provincial jurisdiction. I am certain that every provincial government in Canada can recognize the problem caused by conservation. For this reason and others that I will mention later on, we of the Social Credit Party of Canada must oppose passage of this bill, which once again shows us the lack of sincerity of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie), who introduced it.

Mr. Speaker, when we consider the great oil resources of Canada and when we see the situation which has forced the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to introduce such a bill, we may first want to laugh, but in view of the circumstances, it is normal to feel some anger, which I believe is justified. We know that in 1974 the government introduced a bill somewhat similar to this one, and it must once again introduce a bill which is quite close to the one passed in 1974. This bill clearly shows just what the Canadian government can do to protect the rights of the Canadian citizens from a multinational company, and I would like to say in passing, Mr. Speaker, that unfortunately, I was unable in the past to put a question on the order paper asking how much in back taxes this multinational company or Exxon subsidiary owes the federal government.

When the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise) asked how many companies were owing tax money to the federal government and how much they were indeed owing, it can be assumed that this company was certainly among the 2,400 which owe a total of $298 million to the federal government. And this is one of the reasons why we cannot support this bill.

Unfortunately, oil that had originally been intended for Quebec and the maritime provinces is being diverted by that same multinational. We know that this company redistributes oil to its Canadian parent company through Imperial Oil and that this company diverts crude oil that should normally go to Quebec and the maritime provinces.

Bill C-42 is merely a response to a situation which could be escalating and is intended in the short run to redistribute equitably the black gold of our country. In the long run we will have to find alternatives to this crisis, energetic alternatives especially to counteract soaring oil prices. Since 1973, the costs of oil supplies have kept soaring. At the same time, the profits of multinational oil corporations have increased considerably. Not only do car drivers have to foot the bill for this but so has our whole economy. The spiralling rise of oil prices is partly responsible for the current economic recession. Western countries must pay more and more for this black gold, which does not contribute to their economic recovery.

Mr. Speaker, Canada must consider itself lucky to possess such enormous oil reserves. Our situation is not as serious as that of European countries, but it could certainly be better than it is now. The means of distribution are very complex, especially in eastern Canada where Quebec for instance must import 40 per cent of its oil consumption while the maritime provinces have no access to western Canadian oil, which means that oil supplies to Quebec and especially the Atlantic provinces largely depend on the decisions of multinational corporations, and the recent events have demonstrated that the Canadian government could not do much in this area. Yet the Canadian government has an instrument, namely Petro-Canada or PetroCan, which could get directly from Venezuela the oil delivered to us by Esso. I think it is the government's duty to act as soon as possible through PetroCan.

Mr. Speaker, when introducing this bill the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources specified that it is designed to meet a situation which could become urgent. Even though he admits that Canada has to face a difficult period and has very serious problems, the federal energy minister said at a press conference that there is little likelihood of rationing this year. Mr. Speaker, when I explained earlier why we are against the bill, that is one of the reasons. Last weekend in my riding I heard many people express their disagreement with that legislation. They are very reluctant to a return of the 1939-45 wartime stamps rationing system. They were fed up with that situation then and do not want it in 1979, 1980 or 1985. As the minister says, perhaps not this year but it means that in coming years we will undoubtedly have to go back to rationing which would force us to use coupons to get the basic things people need. We hear nowadays that a car is no longer a necessity; those same people have the right, particularly when we consider our wealth of petroleum products, to use the petroleum without being subject to rationing.

The minister is trying to tell us that there is little risk of rationing for this year. At least that is what he said. However, certain facts contradict what the minister said. Indeed some home heating oil distributors have already been rationed, even before the Iranian oil fields were closed. According to Mr. Raymond Martinbeau, Montreal area president of the Independent Oil Distributers Association, the large refineries in eastern Montreal and St. Romuald that belong to the large multinational oil corporations have rationed the supply of these small distributors by 40 per cent. The problem is not only an economic issue but it also seriously affects people buying oil from those small distributors. At a meeting with the association, Mr. Martinbeau depicted a situation which has been very serious for quite some time when he said, and I quote:

—the shortfall could be here within a week. A little later, users of refined oil for furnaces would then be hit.

Mr. Speaker, when people like Mr. Martinbeau tell us things like that, I agree with one of my colleagues who said yesterday that when this bill is considered in committee we should have the power to question all witnesses to understand the situation in which we find ourselves. I think it would be in the interest of the government to investigate the actions of multinationals which have been rationing the distribution of oil for a while. I am not convinced there is any direct link between that situation and the crisis in Iran.

Mr. Speaker, we should remember the tumult that there would soon be an oil crisis. There still are enormous oil reserves, both in Canada and abroad. I agree that inflation and the geophysical features of some fields sent exploration costs on a spiral. We should however ask ourselves whether the exploration cost increase since 1973 justifies the unreasonable increase in oil prices. Mr Speaker, the price paid for oil by the public and our industries is much too high in my view, and the enormous profits made by oil multinational corporations make us wonder. The government should not only ensure that there is fair distribution of oil, it should also exercise some control over oil companies that are caught up by the oil fever.

Mr. Speaker, I for one remember the time when we had here some years ago in this House an hon. member who had won the respect of almost every member here. That hon. member for Témiscamingue, as I recall for having read his speeches in Hansard and having heard him, warned this same government to take care not to give those multinational corporations everything they wished in the form of subsidies because some day they would come here and control the government.

And if that member ever had a chance to come back to this House, I am sure he would rise today and tell you, Mr. Speaker, and to hon. members how right he was to warn the government to beware of those companies which have always tried to dominate and rule our country. I think we may realize the seriousness of the remarks of the hon. member for Témiscamingue, Mr. Réal Caouette, when we see this government forced to introduce Bill C-42.

Mr. Speaker, on the one hand we agree with the minister when he says that the government should continue to encourage people to use energy wisely by avoiding waste to the maximum extent. I agree. I have here a letter from a company which has a branch in my Villeneuve riding, a manufacturer of windows, doors and storm doors which spent hundreds of thousands of dollars trying to find a product that would save energy. We can appreciate the lack of seriousness of ministers and government members when a study was made by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation at the request of that company to establish the quality of their windows. For a 71 by 39⅜-inch window the heat loss is 0.18 per foot of opening. For a 60 by 36-inch window the heat loss is 0.16 per foot of opening. Given a 69 by 79-inch patio door, the heat loss reaches 0.19.

We all believed in the honesty of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and that of the Minister of Consumer Affairs (Mr. Allmand). The president of that company wrote a letter to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the office of the minister sent us a copy. I quote the letter of the minister:

The office of Mr. Allmand sent us a copy of a letter you wrote to the minister on January 10, 1979 and a copy of your letter to Mr. Rémi Guérin, an engineer with the Quebec Housing Corporation, also on January 10.

The minister read your letter and asked me to send a copy of it to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to inform them of the products you sell on the market—

And again, as I said earlier, this company used, not government subsidies but its savings, to invest almost $400,000 to demonstrate that it was ready to co-operate with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to reduce the demand for energy. Again I quote from the same letter:

—to inform them of the products you sell on the market, and which might promote our energy conservation policy in the housing field.

Sincerely yours,

Marcel C. Vienneau,
Executive Assistant.

Following this, Mr. Speaker, the company sent me a letter which stated, I quote:

Concerning your recent letter regarding windows, we wish to inform you of a letter received from the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

[Mr. Caouette (Villeneuve).]

This letter clearly states that the idea is to heat outside air rather than conserve energy inside, so why such waste by adding insulation in the walls and the ceilings.

Furthermore, we enclose an article published in "Quebec Construction" mentioning the creation of Crown corporation to develop new energy sources. The budget at its disposal might exceed $10 million.

We are wondering whether instead of spending taxpayers' money to develop new energy it would not be better to carry out research to find away of ventilating or purifying stale air a house whose windows are of a superior quality and therefore reduce the loss of energy.

By analysing these two facts whose end results are contradictory in nature, we can only conclude that we (private enterprise) have spent money uselessly to come up with a window of superior quality because our air infiltration tests show a .18 maximum factor and a framing with a durability of five times and more over a wood window.

● (1600)

Mr. Speaker, these are not the people who carried out the tests, as I said earlier, the tests were made by so-called experts of the department of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

We believe that it is time we stop contradicting ourselves and find short-term solutions to conserve energy in our buildings and therefore save money for the consumers.

Mr. Speaker, these people are investing thousands of dollars; we only need to refer to what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) was saying some time ago in his budget speech when he announced that the 5 per cent tax on doors and double-doors would be re-instated. I think that doors and double-doors do not provide insulation and I also think that not only the minister but also the people of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation who approved this decision because they just realized it.

But on the other side we have a minister in "economic format" who gives subsidies to companies which make triple pane windows while the minister responsible for the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation said the following in a letter addressed to the head of Fenêres arctiques Inc., following the correspondence they exchanged with the minister, and I quote:

We acknowledge receipt of a copy of the letter you sent to Mr. Rémi Guérin of the QHC concerning the quality of windows installed in QHC and CMHC projects.

Although the window made by J. B. Charron Ltée has very reduced air leaks per foot, our government, through the National Research Council (NRC), thought it is not the best way to save energy.

They recognize the fact that the window can save a considerable amount of energy, Mr. Speaker, but because, according to the National Research Council of Canada, that window does not let enough air in and, as I said ealier, cannot warm up the air outside, it is not regarded as a good window.

Again I quote:

In a recent document entitled "Measures to save energy in new NRC buildings", the emphasis is placed on the reduction of the total window surface in relation with the total floor surface (the maximum permitted being 15 per cent) and on the installation of triple pane windows in areas where the number of degree-days is over 11,700.

They do not agree, Mr. Speaker, to say that windows are not insulation, but we are prepared to give subsidies to those companies which make such windows. I do not understand at all the attitude of the department which is responsible for the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

I further quote:

In that document, it is recognized that a maximum 0.50 p.c.m. rate of air infiltration per foot can be tolerated, because it is generally admitted that any house requires a minimum of ½ air change every hour for the needs of ventilation (replacement of air) and relative humidity control (condensation). If all the windows were perfectly airtight it would no doubt be necessary to ensure this ventilation by mechanical means, probably less effective from a performance standpoint, as well as cost effectiveness.

I trust those few comments will be of use to you.

Yours truly,
Jacques Soucy, P.Eng.,
Support Centre,
Quebec Regional Office
Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation

Mr. Speaker, speaking of the bill before us, the minister says we must above all save energy; so why is it that the same minister or his colleagues are not in favour of trying out those windows, manufactured here in Canada, so that we might at least find out if they really can help conserve energy efficiently.

Mr. Speaker, of course we of the opposition are rather at a disadvantage, as I said before, to prevent passage of this bill; yet I should like to express a wish. Since 1974, when I was elected to this House, we have passed many bills; but after they are adopted and have been given assent by the Senate, civil servants come along with regulations. So, the wish I express on behalf of my colleagues of the Social Credit Party of Canada is that the minister, after this bill is passed and before applying regulations, should come back before a standing committee to give us a chance to look into the possibilities, to the best of our ability, of ensuring that this bill is welcomed by the people.

Mr. Speaker, in closing may I say that I trust the minister will understand my message, and that those companies will invest, not through government subsidies but by saving their well earned pennies, huge sums of money in an effort to save energy as the minister would have us do today.

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) explained the provisions of the bill before us and described the international circumstances which made it necessary for the government to proceed with precautionary measures to assure energy security.

The hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) claimed that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources had failed to recognize the seriousness of the energy situation. As I listened to the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham, I was struck by how unjustified that charge against the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was, because very early in the game the minister acknowledged in the House of Commons the serious situation which prevailed as a result of the cessation of production in Iran. In fact, the minister was acknowledging, as a result of inquiries by hon. members on the government side, that this situation posed a serious threat before the matter became a subject of lively questioning on the part of members of the official opposition. If the hon. member will take a look at Hansard, he will understand that it was some two weeks after the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) raised the question that he himself began to realize that the matter indeed was one which required attention.

I want to tell the hon. member that I listened to him very carefully last night, and while he led us through a tortuous, so-called historical description of events in Mexico, Iran and whatever oil-producing country he could conjure up. there was very little in the way of content or policy pronouncements in his speech. There was no effort on his part to tell us what the policy of his party is except to denounce the major policy instrument which is available to the Government of Canada in these circumstances, namely, Petro-Canada. I would like to return to that subject later on in my comments.

I would like to respond more seriously to the concerns which have been raised by members from Atlantic Canada with respect to energy security in that part of the country. In providing the reassurance to the people of those four provinces that the government is conscious of their needs, I would like to lay to rest some of the incorrect assertions which have been made by hon. members opposite and particularly to draw attention to some of the unjustified scare tactics which have been used; for example, the allegation that people will be freezing in the dark next winter because of the negligence of the Government of Canada.

I regard that allegation as no contribution in what is a serious situation. Nowhere in Canada were the implications of the 1973 energy crisis more clear than in Atlantic Canada. As the supply crisis developed into a price crisis, the Government of Canada took immediate action to protect the oil-importing provinces from massive increases in offshore oil prices. In his historical review the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham made no reference to that imaginative oil import compensation program which was set up to subsidize eastern consumers through tax revenues collected from western exports. Since January, 1974 a total of—I was going to say a total of approximately $1.9 billion, but almost $2 billion has been transferred in subsidies in favour of the consumers of Atlantic Canada. These compensation payments have allowed the necessary time for adaptation to higher costs. Equally important, they have helped to protect the Atlantic provinces from becoming unattractive from the point of view of industrial development.

Of course, the oil import compensation program provided relief from a crisis situation, and it still provides relief, but in itself it could not hold out hope for a brighter energy future for Atlantic Canada. As I recall very clearly, the government moved at that time along two fronts to build our energy potential. One was in the field of conservation and the other the development of alternate energy sources, both new and traditional.

Conservation has taken several forms. Agreements were signed with the governments of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island dealing with home insulation and industrial conservation. These programs became the model for the Canadian home insulation program. In all, over $100 million was committed between 1975 and 1978 to Atlantic conservation programs.

Energy development has also been a high priority for the Government of Canada. Yesterday, the day on which the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham gave the minister the rounds of the kitchen, the minister tabled a memorandum of understanding with the governments of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island concerning the establishment of the Maritime Energy Corporation. The new corporation will be charged with rationalizing and developing electric power transmission in the three provinces. The Maritime Energy Corporation will also serve as the sponsor of the development of Fundy tidal power and of nuclear power at Le Preau. For tidal power, $33 million has been committed to a preinvestment design project. Strange, therefore, that a memorandum of understanding should be tabled by a minister who has been accused of not being alert to the energy requirements of Canada.

Now I should like to turn my attention to Newfoundland. The Government of Canada has also engaged in important new co-operation with the government of Newfoundland by establishing the Lower Churchill Development Corporation. The development of this energy source will involve investment in the order of billions of dollars and will constitute a major new source of electric power.

From a Nova Scotia perspective, coal is also assuming a new importance in electricity generation. Exploration financed by the Government of Canada has indicated major new reserves that offer the prospect of an expanded thermal coal production by the Cape Breton Development Corporation and increased power generation.

Before I turn to the role of Petro-Canada in Atlantic Canada's energy picture, let me just add renewable energy resources to the list of the government's energy initiatives. As part of the national program of $380 million, the Atlantic provinces are sharing in funds for solar, wood, wind and recycled waste energy.

May I turn now to Petro-Canada. I invite the next hon. member to speak on the other side to justify the opposition of his party to Petro-Canada in light of the important activities that that corporation is undertaking in the interests of the energy situation in Atlantic Canada. It is just over three years since our national oil company was born. In those years, Petro-Canada has grown from virtually nothing to to rank now among the major companies of the Canadian petroleum industry.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: One of the remarkable futures of this robust enterprise is the way in which it has spread its spending and activity from western Canada across to the Atlantic and north to the Arctic islands.

Atlantic Canada has benefited from the activities of this company and stands to gain more in the future. Why is the official opposition attempting to destroy this corporation which is opening new opportunities in Canada?

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. MacEachen: Let me illustrate, for the benefit of members of the House, Petro-Canada's activities to increase the domestic petroleum supply, to substitute domestic gas for imported oil, and to provide greater security for our remaining oil imports.

As hon. members know, the Scotia shelf has been the scene of petroleum exploration activity for well over a decade now. There have been disappointing dry holes, but there have also been promising oil and gas discoveries, particularly in the Sable Island area. Unfortunately, none of them yet have proven commercial.

When Petro-Canada was created, exploration activity was slackening off, largely as a result of disappointment at the inability to prove commercial viability of the existing finds. However, the injection of fresh exploration funds by Petro-Canada, in association with established explorationists, has contributed to maintaining a level of exploration activity off the Scotia shelf for the past two years. I think it is true to say that, without Petro-Canada's participation, there would have been very little activity in our Atlantic offshore area in 1977 and 1978. That is a clear benefit to the province of Nova Scotia, to the Atlantic provinces and to Canada itself as a result of the activities of Petro-Canada.

Further north, Petro-Canada has helped to bring in a significant natural gas discovery, the Hopedale find off Hamilton Inlet last summer. This, the fourth major discovery on the Labrador shelf, was the result of an imaginative collaboration by Petro-Canada and a private industry partner. While much work remains to be done before this discovery can be properly assessed, and even more time and effort will have to be spent before gas can be brought ashore, it is clear that Petro-Canada is making a significant contribution to the development of what many geologists consider one of our most promising frontier areas.

As we have said, the development of indigenous energy sources is one of the major elements in our national energy strategy. The second is the substitution, wherever possible, of indigenous energy for imported energies. In this regard Petro-Canada's contribution in the Atlantic area as one of the initiators of the Q and M pipeline project is intended to bring western Canadian gas eastward to serve Quebec and to penetrate into the maritimes. As I said, Petro-Canada is one of the initiators of this potential project of real benefit to Canada. If realized, we hope it will substitute Canadian sources of energy for expensive, imported sources of energy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: This bold project, if successful, could displace substantial volumes of imported oil and could as well provide a base for the utilization of Arctic islands gas in the Atlantic area and Quebec. This project will come before the National Energy Board for public hearing and decision later this year. So I ask hon. members opposite: Do they not think that this particular initiative taken by Petro-Canada is not of considerable interest and potential benefit to the Atlantic area?

While on the subject of natural gas, and not wanting to confine myself to the activities of Petro-Canada in Atlantic Canada, I must mention Petro-Canada's Arctic pilot project, a $1.5 billion scheme to bring natural gas from the eastern Arctic islands by tanker in liquefield form. While the terminal for discharge of this gas will not necessarily be in Atlantic Canada, it could obviously bring important benefits to the region in terms of gas supply and the sourcing of equipment.

Finally, I would like to draw the attention of the House to the fact that Petro-Canada is right now negotiating with Pemex, the Mexican national oil company, contractual arrangements to give effect to the intergovernmental understanding reached last month which provides for the supply to Canada of 100,000 barrels a day of secure Mexican oil in the 1980s. I was rather surprised last night to hear the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham give the impression that it was somewhat shameful for Petro-Canada to be engaging in these international activities, that it was somewhat immoral, that is was a matter which should be left to the multinational corporations. We believe that this is a legitimate role for a national petroleum company which is operating in the public interest and in the interest of the people of Canada.

I am aware of the concern of residents of the Atlantic provinces, of consumers in Atlantic Canada and of provincial governments in Atlantic Canada about the region's heavy dependence on oil and about the fact that this oil is currently imported from potentially insecure foreign sources. I have just drawn attention to efforts being made by Petro-Canada to discover and develop the region's own petroleum resource potential, to substitute domestic gas for imported oil and to assure a higher degree of security for those imports which remain. Nevertheless, it is understandable that people in Atlantic Canada should look west and wonder whether and how they will be able to source at least a portion of their oil needs from discovered and developing resources in our own west.

I would appreciate some additional analysis from members of the official opposition as a follow-up to the rather plaintive cry uttered by the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) on February 16 in this House when he asked the minister:

> I want to ask the minister how it is possible, in a country that has enough oil to meet the needs of all its citizens, that the government did not put in place long ago . . . distribution systems that would get out oil to the maritimes, which we ought to be able to do.

I took that formulation to heart, and I want to deal with it, I hope constructively. It brings me to the question of establishing a pipeline connection from western Canada to the Atlantic area. The government—as the minister pointed out very clearly yesterday—has made a start in this direction by providing financial guarantees for the extension of the Interprovincial Pipe Line system from Sarnia to Montreal, an extension which was completed in 1976 and which is today flowing more than 300,000 barrels of oil a day into the Montreal area.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: That is the Sarnia extension. This extension east from Sarnia is by itself significant for Atlantic Canada. By reducing eastern Canada's total dependence on imported oil from about 800,000 barrels a day in 1973 to some 500,000 barrels a day now, the supply security of the whole area has been improved.

Of course, hon. members will say that the pipeline still terminates at Montreal. The idea has been put forward of extending the pipeline to Quebec city and there providing facilities for tanker loading to supply Atlantic refineries. As well, the idea has been canvassed of reversing one of the lines of pipe in the Portland-Montreal pipeline system with a view to flowing western Canadian oil via Portland, Maine, to Atlantic refineries.

Both these schemes, which are touching upon the question raised by the hon. member for Don Valley—if they did not touch on that they could not have touched on anything real—may have some merit. I understand from my colleague, the hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources that a joint study of the partial reversal of the Portland-Montreal pipeline is to be embarked upon by the federal government, the affected provincial governments and the pipeline company.

Of course, any study of "Oil East" will require careful evaluation of the potential for the western Canadian petroleum resource base to support an additional eastward flow at least long enough to allow for depreciation of any new facilities which might be put in.

As well, the question of costs and cost differentials will require examination. The federal government is already spending a great deal of money on oil import compensation and on subsidizing the pipeline tariff differential between Toronto and Montreal. We will want to find out whether "Oil East" is likely to involve additional subsidies. As well, alternative means of better securing the Atlantic provinces' oil supply, including the use of strategic petroleum storage and the substitution away from oil to indigenous energy forms, will need to be looked into.

In response to the question raised by the hon. member for Don Valley, I really want to point out that these are important questions that are currently receiving urgent attention from the government and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Before concluding on that point I think I am justified in saying that my exposition or recitation of all the activities in the field of energy under the leadership of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, it seems to me, is a clear rebuttal to the very unjustified charges made against him by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: I just want to say a word or two about the Tories and PetroCan. It mystifies me why they are opposing this national petroleum corporation. PetroCan is presently a major instrument for ensuring secure energy supplies for this country.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. MacEachen: It is a major instrument for ensuring secure energy supplies for this country. I repeated the sentence in the hope that the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham would repeat his retort, namely, "Nonsense". I believe that is the kind of attitude that will be very harmful to him and his party when they go into Atlantic Canada seeking votes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: There is clear evidence to all of us that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) wants to abolish Petro-Can, allegedly because it is a threat to free enterprise. He is mistaken. It is not a matter of free enterprise, not a matter of public enterprise versus private enterprise; it is not socialism versus free enterprise. It is Canadian interests versus international interests; and it is Canadian enterprise versus multinational corporations.

Petro-Canada has a central role to play in exploration and supply. To abolish it would be to place our faith, as the Tories apparently do, in the multinational companies. It would also be to exclude Canada from major international activities in the oil field.

It was interesting to me that the eloquence of the words of the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham had hardly escaped from his lips when I picked up today's Globe and Mail report on business and read that the government of Newfoundland has committed ideological deviationism because it has not gone along with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) in his efforts to dismantle Petro-Canada. In fact, the Globe and Mail tells us that Petro-Canada, the federal energy corporation, has become a major partner in the Eastcan group of France and will take over as the operator of the consortium's offshore exploration program in 1980, according to Newfoundland energy minister Brian Peckford. The report goes on to say:

> Petro-Canada will assume full control of offshore drilling in 1980, a turn of events the minister views as "a major decision in shaping the future development of our offshore resources."

When the government of Newfoundland decided to associate Petro-Canada with offshore exploration so vital to that province, they viewed it as a major decision in shaping the future development of our offshore resources. In our view, the decision to create Petro-Canada was a major decision in shaping the future development of the petroleum and energy interests of Canada.

Now, Mr. Speaker, just a word about the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). I always try to pay a little attention to his comments. Last night they were somewhat amusing. Certainly they were amusing to me as one who laboured manfully during the period of minority government, to which period in our history the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby made reference last night. I quote him as follows:

> When the minister waves the flag about Petro-Canada I recall some private conversations in that period when the Liberal government of the day was by no means enthusiastic about Petro-Canada, the two-price system or the pipeline.

In fairness, the hon. member referred to those three elements—Petro-Canada, the two-price system and the pipeline—as the cornerstones of the evolving energy policy for Canada; I gave him credit for recognizing that reality. But it is the next sentence I found difficult to accept. He went on to say:

> In order to survive a crucial vote at Christmas, 1973, and to protect their hides they accepted all three items which were almost literally forced down their throats—

Then, with an innocent rhetorical flourish the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby turned to another subject by saying: "But that is history." Well, of course, it is not history. The hon. member was obviously hallucinating last night when he attempted to ascribe the evolution of these major energy policies to a repentance before a vote in 1973. All I say is that my memory of these things does not coincide with that of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby. I see that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is smiling. I hope he is smiling in approval of my history and not of the bad history given us by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby. I reject outright the suggestion that these policies were forced upon us because we were afraid to lose a vote.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We will have a little talk about that.

Mr. MacEachen: I reject that assertion and I believe the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby will agree with me upon reflection. We both realize these were major policies embarked upon at that time by the Government of Canada and that we are continuing to add to the energy potential and the energy security of this country by bringing before the House the measure in the name of my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I do not know who will be proven right with respect to the events of five or six years ago in that minority parliament, but let me remind hon. members that from where I sat there was a serious question of exactly who was in bed with whom at that time. One way or another it does not matter, but there is no question that two parties were in bed together.

Just a word to the minister. I would love to see him when he appears some Saturday night trying to shove that crap down somebody's throat, because that is nonsense and he knows it. Nobody is arguing against what Petro-Canada has done. However, a reasonable position to take in this country is that private enterprise could do it, and do it just as well.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Forrestall: The socialists over here would nationalize everything at once to acquire the wealth so that it could be redistributed. The socialists over there are just a bit chicken; they cannot quite get themselves out of the socialist bed into which they crawled eight or ten years ago and get back into the mainstream of society. They cannot be electorally honest with themselves.

There was a classic example this afternoon. Of course, the NDP shoved Petro-Canada down the throat of the government. They did not want it. In those days, years ago, there were good Liberals in this country who believed there was a role for the private sector in matters of such great national significance as this. Nobody questions what Petro-Canada is doing. It always amuses me when government takes credit for things other people do. Nobody is arguing against the need to get on with things. There is a difference of opinion as to whether or not a Crown corporation can do it better. I do not happen to believe it can. The corporation might, at the time, have been convenient as a vehicle into which to pump the hundreds of millions of dollars needed into some of these projects. This was necessary and it continues to be necessary, but it is not a question, as government spokesmen would have us believe, of the official opposition arguing against the need to improve the security of our oil supplies, to develop new resources or to preserve and develop our existing resources.

The minister is right again—he is always right, or at least half right—when he says there is not really an oil crisis at this point. The crisis with which we are faced is a management crisis. I need not remind the minister, to take him all the way back to General Eisenhower, of General Eisenhower's role in the dilemma in which we find ourselves. When he cut off our quota system, my right hon. friend from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) embarked on an oil policy which was a very sensible one at the time. It met this country's needs and met them well. It made sense. The beneficial effects of developing and securing a western petroleum base have been clearly demonstrated, and for the minister to suggest otherwise is nonsense. The crisis is one of management, not of supply, though we may well find an oil supply crisis on our hands.

Nobody believes this government and nobody can believe them. They told us that there were no problems, not only with regard to oil but with regard to a variety of issues, only to find in subsequent days and months that in fact there is a crisis. The recent oil problem is just an example, albeit a classical one.

The compensation program, which the government House leader had to come and straighten out, of course is needed; nobody is arguing or finding any fault with that proposition. The right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert knew and others in intervening years knew that we would have to do something to correct the absence of security of oil resources for eastern Canada. The Department of Regional Economic Expansion is spending hundreds of millions of dollars to attract and develop an industrial base in Atlantic Canada. It is no wonder that people are confused and frustrated with the policies of the government, which on the one hand does something that seems positive, but on the other hand is cutting the very legs out from under the policy with which the right hand is concerned.

Something of which the minister has to be continuously reminded is that there are large industrial users of energy in Atlantic Canada. On the one hand we have DREE doing everything that it can to develop the Atlantic economy, but on the other hand we have high energy costs. For example, 3.9 million kilowatt hours per month costs a Nova Scotian industry $139,104. In Quebec City the cost is $66,000, and in Ontario generally it costs $76,000. In Manitoba the cost is $71,000, Saskatchewan $61,000, Alberta $75,000, B.C. $58,000, Newfoundland $99,000, New Brunswick $101,000, and in Nova Scotia it costs $140,000. How in the hell can we develop an industrial base if we do not have cheap, accessible, secure energy?

This government says that it is doing everything. Of course, it is doing a lot of things, but why were they not doing those things after eastern Canada had been hit over the head with a sledgehammer in 1973 and 1974? No area in Canada felt the brunt of that Israeli-Arab conflict to the extent that we did in Atlantic Canada. Within months basic prices had quadrupled. God only knows what they are today, but oil landing at Dartmouth is now costing approximately $17.50 per barrel.

Just so hon. members will be aware why we are concerned, and why we do not like to be told everything is well only to learn in fact that everything is not well, I will explain. Householders in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, for this month—one of the coldest months in Canadian history—will pay over $60 for 1,000 kilowatt hours. In Halifax they will pay $48.20, in Fredericton they will pay $41.14 and in Montreal the cost will be $26.35. In other cities such as St. Catharines the cost is $28.95, in Brandon it is $31, in Saskatoon it is $28, in Calgary it is $25 and in Victoria the cost is $34.

I wonder what those figures mean to the minister? Of course, he is concerned. I know that he is concerned because he had to get the Cape Breton giant to speak to easterners because nobody else believes him. The crisis is in management. Why was the minister not putting in place the remedies for this situation six years ago? There is Petro-Canada but, good God, we have only heard of it in the last 72 hours. It has been out spending the taxpayers' money, and probably some of it needed to be spent.

Mr. Andre: I can do that too.

Mr. Forrestall: Yes, the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) can do it too. So can the private sector and probably a lot more efficiently.

An hon. Member: Give me a blank cheque and I will do anything.

Mr. Forrestall: Yes, give anybody a blank cheque and they will probably do a good job. Our concern is the security of oil today.

An hon. Member: You are way off.

Mr. Forrestall: I am not way off; you are wrong. Nothing which can be said to the people of eastern Canada will convince them that the minister is right. That is where the crisis is. I am not trying to exacerbate things. Why could the minister not get Gerry Regan, Dick Hatfield and Alex Campbell to agree to the formation of a maritime energy corporation three or four years ago? Why did the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) not tell us a story then? We needed it three or four years ago, not because there is a crisis now. When the President of the Privy Council was questioned in the House the other day in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie), he simply sat there. I am hard-pressed to describe any Cape Bretoner as looking stunned, but to tell the honest to goodness truth, Mr. Speaker, I do not think that he knew what was going on. I think he thought there was something serious happening, but it was obvious that the President of Privy Council had not been advised or briefed. Is that or is that not serious? These are our concerns.

What assurances do we have that on April 1, at the end of this first quarter, there will be the same amount of oil at the Dartmouth refinery and other refineries which are involved as there was one year ago in April, 1978? We heard a lot of rhetoric from the minister last night and from the President of Privy Council this afternoon. Neither has unequivocally stated that there will be the same amount of oil at the Montreal and Dartmouth refineries and all the other refineries of Imperial Oil on April 1, 1979 as there was on April 1, 1978. That is what is concerning people. We hear about all the great things which Petro-Canada can do, will do and is doing, but nobody has told us that we will have that oil for sure.

The storage capacity is running down, and late spring and summer months is the time when they rebuild for the next year. Will the oil be there in April, May and June to fill those tanks?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Not if Exxon keeps cutting down and diverting the oil from you.

Mr. Forrestall: The one other question that concerns me, Mr. Speaker, is the question of price. Spot oil in western European markets yesterday afternoon at four o'clock was bouncing between $21 and $24. Can we in Atlantic Canada anticipate that that is what we will have to pay for a barrel of oil? We are paying $17.50 today, but by how much will it go up by the first day of September, for example? Does the minister have any information in that regard? What will Mexico do if the Middle East drives its prices up? I say once again, in Charlottetown people are paying $60 for 1,000 kilowatt hours and in Halifax they are paying $48. Our industrial users are paying $140,000 for 3.9 million kilowatt hours. How can we develop an industrial base when our costs for energy are so far out of whack with the rest of the country? No matter how much the oil compensatory arrangements make up, the fact of the matter is that 1,000 kilowatts is costing $60 in P.E.I. What is the government going to do about it? How high will they allow the price to go?

I am a little surprised at the position the President of the Privy Council must have found himself in this afternoon of having to come into this chamber and speak to Atlantic Canada for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Obviously, he believes the minister will not be believed in that part of the country and feels it is incumbent upon himself to speak. I hope he will see fit to answer one or two questions, particularly with regard to the conflict with DREE, the conflict the government finds itself in with respect to this development of an industrial base, and what the anticipated price of crude landed at Dartmouth or Montreal refineries will be for September and the end of this year. I hope he can give an assurance, with some appearance of truth, with respect to the supply that will be available to us for the rest of the year. Those are the questions that concern us.

As the minister said, the bill before us is similar to one that was introduced before. We are prepared to move it quickly to committee so that it can be examined with the fairness it requires and the government can impose some form of monitoring or other control in case of a shortage in order to ensure equitable distribution. I look forward to dealing with the matter in committee. Perhaps someone from the government side will speak later—apart from this sham of Petro-Canada—and tell the people of eastern Canada how much oil there is, how much it is going to cost and whether we are going to get it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) seeking the floor?

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, a point of order. Is the hon. member closing the debate?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: No, I did not say that. I asked the hon. member if he was seeking the floor to participate in the debate so that there will not be any question as to who has the floor at eight o'clock when the House is reconvened.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Patterson)—Penitentiaries—Optimum number of persons to be housed in institutions; the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman)—Statistics Canada—Voluntary responses to Stats-Can surveys.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, private bills and notices of motions.

[English]

Is it agreed that order No. 9 standing in the name of the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Siddon) be allowed to stand by unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Agreed and so ordered.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

CANADIAN SOLAR ENERGY INSTITUTE ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport) moved that Bill C-210, to establish the Canadian Solar Energy Institute, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before I allow the House to begin consideration of Bill C-210, I hope hon. members will allow me a few comments.

The Chair is again faced with the decision of allowing or not consideration of a private member's bill that has been published on the order paper and has passed first reading, along with a group of some 250 private members' public bills, at the beginning of this session on October 30. I find it difficult to take some of the time that could be made available for the discussion of such a bill for a procedural debate. Hon. members are aware that at the beginning of every session the Chair is in the position of having to authorize such first readings without having had a chance to pass judgment on the procedural acceptability of this group of bills, but at the same time it informs the House that it reserves the right, before consideration at second reading stage, to declare any such bill out of order due to irregularities or infringement of the rules or practices of the House.

Because Bill C-210 was expected to come up for consideration at any time during the last few weeks, I have had an opportunity to examine it thoroughly in relation to our Standing Orders and practices, as I indicated I would at the conclusion of my comments on Bill C-204 standing in the name of the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) on November 9, 1978.

I might inform hon. members that I have in front of me pages of precedents that I could use to declare this bill procedurally unacceptable. On the other hand, I accept the fact that hon. members might have other views on the matter and might want to express a different opinion based on different precedents. I feel that hon. members would have difficulty convincing me that this bill does not infringe upon the financial initiative of the Crown. On the other hand, before making such a decision, I would normally invite hon. members to express their opinion. This would bring about a long procedural debate which would use up most of the time available for consideration of private members' business today.

To save time, I plan to put some remarks on the record suggesting to the House such changes in our Standing Orders to provide for a set period of time that could be made available, probably between the hours of six and eight—the ideal hours when we can do everything we cannot do during the day—such time to be made available outside private members' hour, to permit such procedural debates without reducing in any way the time available for consideration of private members' business.

Coming back to Bill C-210, I must point out to the House that clause 3(2) of the bill provides for the appointment by the governor in council of five persons who, together with others who may become members, shall constitute the Canadian Solar Energy Institute. The Interpretation Act makes it clear that the power to appoint includes the power to pay, therefore, because the governor in council could choose to pay a salary to these members, the bill clearly involves an appropriation of a part of the public revenue.

Might I also underline the fact that when a similar bill was presented by the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) in 1977, it provided that members of the institute would serve without remuneration, but that condition does not appear in the bill now before us. This does not mean that I approve of such provision included in a bill for the sole purpose of bypassing the Standing Orders or the BNA Act which require a recommendation from the Crown for the appropriation of public revenue. But the fact that this condition is left out this time makes us question it.

I also have some questions as to the financial implication of clause 4 of Bill C-210 which is meant to set the objects of the institute, which are to facilitate the production of solar energy equipment, to sponsor, encourage and promote research, and to prepare, compile, publish and distribute information. I find it difficult to believe that these objectives could be achieved without some substantial expenditures, at least for an initial undetermined period, or until sufficient sources of revenue are developed. Of course, this could only be of indirect consequence to the public purse and it could be corrected through the voting of a subsidy or a grant through estimates.

It is my view that, in accordance with Standing Order 62(2), such a bill should be accompanied by a recommendation from the Crown on introduction, particularly if I base myself on recent years' practices in the Canadian House of Commons which have given rise to strict interpretation of this rule. Technically, this bill is not properly before the House, but since a similar bill did pass this House in an earlier session and even reached the other place, I am inclined to allow debate on it at this stage, reserving the right to oppose its progress at another stage, while at the same time protecting the position of the Chair in such matters in the future.

Therefore, I will put the question to the House at this time with all these considerations.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, at the outset I would like to thank the Chair for permitting this bill to proceed. I would also like to assure Your Honour that, after carefully studying your remarks, full attention will be given to them and the necessary adjustment in consultation with all parties concerned hopefully will be made at the committee stage.

Members of this House may recall the forerunner of this bill, Bill C-309, respecting the domestic and industrial use of solar energy. It was passed by this House in April, 1977. In the Senate, Bill C-309 received approval at second reading as well as an extensive hearing before the committee on banking, trade and commerce before it died on the order paper in October, 1977, at the end of the session. I would like to thank the senators, particularly the members of the Senate committee on banking, trade and commerce, for their advice on improving the technical aspects of this bill. I would also like to thank the law clerk and parliamentary counsel of the Senate, Mr. Ray du Plessis, for his assistance in redrafting the bill and enabling me to bring forward an improved version to the House today. It is entitled "An act to establish the Canadian Solar Energy Institute".

Before moving on to discuss this bill, I would also like to congratulate the government, and in particular the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie), for the practical programs he announced in Toronto in July 1978 to develop the potential of solar energy and produce energy from forest products and municipal waste. As part of this program of some $380 million to span the next five years the minister launched the program of assistance to solar energy manufacturers. He also launched a program relating to the purchase and use of solar heating which will provide contracts worth a total of $125 million to buy Canadian-made solar space and water heating equipment for new federal buildings; and a program having to do with low energy building design awards. In addition, federal funding worth $114 million was set aside to share costs with the provinces and the private sector for demonstration projects in renewable energy and conservation. These programs to develop solar energy have encouraged the interest and participation of a large number of Canadians.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

Recent developments on the energy scene domestically and internationally make it all the more important for us to step up our efforts at turning to renewable sources of energy, and solar energy is one of them. This is the focus of Bill C-210, which addresses itself to the creation of a Canadian solar energy institute. The institute is needed. It would help to achieve the national solar energy objective for Canada as outlined this month in the report entitled "Energy Futures for Canadians" prepared for the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, which report proposed the following objective:

—supply at least five per cent of primary energy from renewables (other than hydro) by 2000, and 10 per cent by 2025—the equivalent of about 400,000 barrels of oil a day in the year 2000, and one million barrels a day by 2025.

The institute would help achieve this target, perhaps well in advance of the dates suggested in the report. How would this be achieved? The institute would direct and co-ordinate efforts related to the development of solar energy. At the federal level we have the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. As well we have the National Research Council leading in the research and development of solar technology, the demonstration of prototype solar systems, assistance to Canadian solar equipment manufacturers for industrial product development, and the development of tests and standards for solar equipment. In addition, the National Research Council provides general and technical information on solar energy.

The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce has a major role to play in the development of a strong Canadian solar energy equipment industry. As part of its efforts to provide information and assistance to solar manufacturers this year, the department is planning a trade mission to help establish industrial co-operation between Canadian firms and their counterparts in Germany and France. The Department of Public Works is administering the program of assistance to solar energy manufacturers, and the program covering the purchase and use of solar heating equipment.

Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is administering the low energy building design awards. It is also supposed to set mortgage policy with regard to the use of solar systems. The Ministry of State for Science and Technology looks at solar energy from the point of view of science policy and industrial development. Agriculture Canada is sponsoring a study to find out the suitability of solar heating to dry grain in the prairie provinces and heat livestock barns, machinery sheds and greenhouses. These separate efforts are commendable. They are also the main reason why an institute is needed.

The role of the Canadian solar energy institute would be to bring these efforts together. It would be accountable to one minister, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and Minister of State for Science and Technology. The institute would establish priorities and policies. It would provide the leadership and co-ordination needed to avoid duplication of effort. The various research, development and assistance programs now in existence would continue to go on in the departments, agencies and private organizations where they are best performed. If at a later date it was decided that solar development would better be handled by means of a Crown corporation, the institute and its directors would form the nucleus of expertise.

The institute would consist of directors, half of whom would represent federal departments and agencies involved in solar systems and half would represent groups and associations with an interest in solar energy, such as the Canadian Solar Industries' Association, the Solar Energy Society of Canada, builders, engineers, architects, planners, interested unions, consumers, etc.

Some of the specific tasks the institute would perform are as follows:

(a) to facilite the production by Canadian manufacturers of solar energy equipment and parts by examining, testing and studying proposed products and assisting in the development of prototypes suitable for manufacture.

This would be done in co-operation with the Canadian Solar Energy Association, the National Research Council, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

● (1720)

(b) to sponsor, encourage and promote continuing research in Canada in respect of the application and use of solar energy and to further the development in Canada of solar energy technology.

Here the institute would co-operate with the National Research Council, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the Ministry of State for Science and Technology, the Canadian Solar Industries' Association and other interested groups.

(c) to prepare, compile, publish and distribute information relating to the application and use of solar energy.

This could be done in co-operation with the National Research Council, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and private organizations such as the Solar Energy Society of Canada, the Biomass Research Institute and the Brace Research Institute of Montreal.

It is important to remember that some of this work is already being undertaken in some of the solar programs as well as by private agencies. But the time has come to focus these efforts and set national goals for solar energy development and application in areas such as manufacturing and construction, accommodating both passive solar designs and active solar systems, research, and development of incentives for consumers.

The institute, given the means, could also assist the provinces in the development of important provincial policies such as legislation to define rights to light, changes in the assessment acts so as to provide an incentive, or remove the disincentive for the homeowner who wishes to incorporate passive solar design features or an active solar system in a new or existing house. Most, if not all, of the provinces are now engaged in studying rights to light legislation. Many, including Alberta, are reviewing the question of tax assessment as it relates to solar equipped buildings and the Quebec government has even proposed the establishment of a solar Crown corporation, "La Société nationale des Énergies Nouvelles", in a white paper tabled on June 20, 1978.

The institute, in addition, could consult with consumer groups and the Canadian Solar Industries' Association and review regularly the industrial standards now being established by the National Research Council and the Canadian Standards Association. Preliminary standards for solar collectors and a standard procedure for their evaluation are expected to be announced this spring.

In another area, the institute could explore the development of solar technology suitable for use in developing countries in consultation with the Canadian International Development Agency and the International Development Research Centre.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that what we have accomplished so far in Canada is a good start. Now we need the instrument to enable us to move another step ahead. A Canadian solar energy institute is the means whereby we can get the fullest utilization from an energy option that is clear and environmentally sound, develop a new Canadian industry which will create many new jobs for Canadians and, if possible, reach the potential predicted for the year 2000 before the turn of the century.

We have a lot to gain. By supplying at least 5 per cent of our primary energy from renewables, other than hydro, in the year 2000 and 10 per cent by the year 2025 as proposed in the report "Energy Futures for Canadians", our estimated savings would be about 400,000 barrels of oil a day in the year 2000, worth $2.5 billion by today's prices, and one million barrels a day by 2025, worth up to $5 billion a year.

Another estimate comes from the National Research Council, to the effect that we could save close to $1.2 to $1.4 billion a year in the cost of imported oil if renewable energy provides 4 per cent to 5 per cent of our primary energy needs by the year 2000. Whichever of these two estimates is closest to the truth, their magnitude alone suggests they must command attention.

Of course, these potential savings have to be weighed against the capital investments needed to achieve them, but reducing our dependence on imported oil, it seems to me, would make this investment all the more desirable for this and future generations of Canadians.

The need for a Canadian solar energy institute is even greater now than it was two years ago when hon. members discussed and approved Bill C-309. I understand that the government is favourably inclined to allow this bill to receive second reading approval today and be sent to committee for study. I invite the views of interested members and hope that remarks will be kept within the allotted hour so as to permit passage of this bill.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I was interested in your remarks at the opening of the debate. I had attempted to put forward a private member's bill establishing a similar association or institute to deal with getting government involved in setting up standards for solar energy equipment. I believe this is a very important area that has to be moved into with great speed. There is a requirement that government be involved with legislation in order that companies preparing solar equipment can get ready for tax incentives that we are prepared to offer them when we become the government.

My bill was ruled out of order because an expenditure of money would have been required. Even though I was as devious as I could be, it was still ruled out of order. I realize the problem you would have had in allowing the bill to go forward.

I commend the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) for being successful at something at which I failed. I see in one area of the bill that with this institute we could in fact set up a standards association and provide the kind of directives that are necessary in the solar field. Companies could then provide the standards to consumers who want to purchase solar equipment. The consumers would know they were getting something they could depend on, something that would give them service for 15 to 20 years.

At the outset I want to go through the three recommendations in the bill one by one and give some of my thoughts on them. Clause 4(a) of the bill reads:

—to facilitate the production by Canadian manufacturers of solar energy equipment and parts by examining, testing and studying proposed products and assisting in the development of prototypes suitable for manufacture;—

That is a good clause. I again emphasize that within that clause we can fit an area whereby standards can be established and legislation brought forward. These standards could be established once the Canadian Standards Association and the Ontario Research foundation come up with suggested standards. I hope that will be done this spring because it is very essential. It reminds me of a quote from Halacy:

The makers and installers of solar equipment are a weird and wonderful lot, ranging from giants like General Electric and Honeywell through geniuses with no capital to backlot entrepreneurs who will sell a homeowner two 3′ by 6′ panels to heat his home through a Maine winter.

He is trying to say it is very important that standards be established and that they be established quickly. It is essential that members of parliament and the government be involved in this matter because there are many questions to be answered. If we do not get involved in attempting to answer these questions, the bureaucracy may argue for some length of time and we will never get to actually having this put in place and convincing consumers that it is a good buy.

Who will be responsible for testing? I believe it is essential that the government be responsible for that and that it set up a facility capable of testing solar panels and solar equipment year-round, because I foresee that there will be great interest in manufacturing these items. I believe there are about 100 firms in Canada which are capable of manufacturing solar equipment, and they all want their equipment tested. I think now that would be impossible during the winter season, and therefore it is essential that there be a facility capable of testing this equipment all year round.

Once a particular unit has been approved and a stamp of approval applied to it, then if that unit is slightly changed or improved, we will have to decide whether it must go through the testing procedure again so that it can be recommended again. We will have to see that standards are not too rigid and that they do not discourage companies from bringing their products forward, but we will also have to see that the standards are not too flexible so as to allow certain manufacturers to get approval for solar equipment which will not stand up.

I think the government should move quickly to set up regulations and to invite people who are now working in this field to make recommendations so that we can get on with testing products, so that stamps of approval will be on them when incentives are provided and so that more consumers will be aware of solar energy. The part of the bill dealing with this is for the most part good, and I think we can improve it in such a way that I could support it.

In clause 4(b) the hon. member for Davenport suggests that this institute sponsor, encourage, and promote continuing research in Canada in respect of the application and use of solar energy, and further the development in Canada of solar energy technology. That is very important, particularly when we consider the record of this government with regard to making announcements supposedly to help people involved with renewable energy and solar energy.

On July 4 the minister stated that he would make available $125 million between 1979 and 1984 under a program called PUSH. That program is designed to assist in the purchase and use of solar energy. This was an attempt by the government to help manufacturers by supplying extra dollars for purchasing equipment to put into federal buildings so that there would be a solar presence in those buildings. That is a good program which has much potential. Spreading $125 million over five years suggests that $25 million should be made available every year, but already there is a memo circulating in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources stating that the $25 million allotted this year should be reduced to $1.5 million. The announcement to which I referred earlier was made almost three quarters of a year ago, but the program is not really off to any start at all because rather than $25 million being put forward it looks as though only $1.5 million will be put forward.

If there are some problems, I think the public should be made aware that it is impossible to start with the program this year. However, every indication should be made that in the following four years this money will be allocated and that solar equipment manufacturers will be assisted. This program could also be of assistance with regard to testing and the establishment of standards, because a certain amount of risk would otherwise be taken by the consumer. This program could be of benefit to the consumer, however, because once these products are tested consumers would be willing to use this technology in their facilities.

Another program called the Program of Assistance to Solar Energy Manufacturers, PASEM for short, has been announced. It seems to be off to a good start. I looked in the supplementary estimates and found that $600,000 has already been allocated for this program. Initially it was envisaged that about 25 grants of $10,000 each would be awarded to firms so that they could prepare solar equipment design proposals. After that the idea was that the government would make ten contributions of $200,000 to $300,000 each. Initially I had some reservations about this program, and I believe I still do.

The choices for grants have been very good. They have been applied across the whole field of renewable energy, and many grants have been made to small business firms which are the ones which I think have shown the most initiative in this area. I know large companies are getting involved because they see a lucrative market, particularly in the United States. I commend this involvement, but I would also like to see small business involvement. The government should help with research, and after research is undertaken small business should be encouraged to become involved in providing technology to the market. It appears that we will have to watch very closely to see whether small businesses will be bought off by small grants and whether large grants will be going to large international firms so that they can continue the research.

There are already some problems. I asked a question of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Ouellet) some weeks ago as to when application forms were made available for these grants. We learned that a few weeks before the application deadline the Department of Public Works changed the format. I believe the application form was about 70 pages long. Large companies employ people to handle such forms, but small businesses comprising one, two, or perhaps ten individuals would take some time to go through a 70-page application form to make the necessary changes. It seems to me that there is a push away from small business and that help is being given to larger businesses.

Compared with the United States, Canada has a long way to go in the research field. For the fiscal year 1980 the Americans have set aside some $500 million for work in solar energy research and development. This money is intended to support a wide variety of technologies aimed at harnessing the sun's rays. In past years grants have amounted to hundreds of millions of dollars. While we are now getting a slow start in this area, I think we will have to recognize that most research will be done in the United States, and that will increase our need to import technology. We are going to be behind.

The United States has recognized the importance of solar technology now, and not five years down the road. This government's policy seems to be geared to events five or ten years down the road. So far all this government has done has been to provide research grants to a number of industries. That is commendable, but in no way does it allow industry to begin manufacturing quality solar collectors now. In many states of the United States tax credits are allowed for that purpose. In California swimming pools cannot be built unless they are heated by solar energy.

President Carter is prepared to put in a solar installation tax incentive as part of his energy program. This legislation might well have passed the House in the United States by now. They have recognized that although at present these installations are slightly more expensive because of the price of natural gas, these prices are going up. It is essential to use renewable energy forms in houses today in order to cut back on our reliance on natural gas and oil. The United States is doing that by use of tax credits. I believe this to be very important. It forms part of the Progressive Conservative platform on renewable energy, and if tax credits were provided in this country they would be of great benefit.

I should now like to go on to clause 4(c) on preparing, compiling, publishing and distributing information. It is a very important clause in this bill. There is a tremendous amount of information available on renewable energy. I can remember complaining in a committee of the House of Commons that this information was not available to members of the public and that even I, as a member of parliament, did not have it. I was slightly amused when the following day boxes of material arrived at my office. I appreciated that, because it helped me to become more knowledgeable on renewable energy forms and it also proved to me that much information was available to the public. However, the problem I saw was that while there was a good deal of information, there was not one pamphlet regarding each area in which simple questions would be answered that a person considering the use of renewable energy forms in his home would ask, some basic questions as to how this energy form is set up, how much it would cost, what are its chances of failure, and other questions of that nature.

I found that in the United States there are a number of simple, basic pamphlets available to consumers of renewable energy, particularly in the solar area. They are small, five page pamphlets which contain answers to basic questions, and refer the person interested to a number of other booklets giving more detailed information. I think that is very necessary, and I believe that if this bill is passed an institute could be set up for the purpose of providing information, concerning renewable sources of energy, in simple pamphlet form. I suppose the government has attempted to do that through community conservation centres, but unfortunately they failed, in my opinion. A number of serious problems cropped up in the setting up of these community conservation centres.

I should like to make a few comments about the serious errors that were made in that area. First, an inadequate range of materials was provided to people at these centres. Many of those centres were understaffed and the people undertrained. All they had was a two-week training period. They were hired without any knowledge and given only a two-week training period, following which they were supposed to be able to give detailed technical information on renewable energy and conservation.

In many cases, the employees of the centres were not suitable for the job. They went about chastising other agencies which had the necessary information available, and they appeared at the doors of people who did not know what it was all about. In many cases the people hired were not suitable. We found also that there were breakdowns in financial administration. The centres were set up for a set period of time, but they ran out of money before that. Just when the people in the centres became knowledgeable in the subject, the funding ran out.

We should use as an example here the Franklin Institute in the United States where people knowledgeable in the subject of renewable sources of energy and conservation were established in cities across the country and told that free Zenith numbers would be provided for inquiries. Capable individuals were hired to staff these offices. Here in Canada a program in each province to educate people about the existence of such offices could be set up. People could be told where they can phone to obtain the necessary information, and if they wished more detailed information they would be told where suitable manufacturers are located and the quality of equipment available.

I spoke about three areas in the bill. I have no objection to seeing the bill go to committee. There are many questions which I should like to ask and some amendments I would like to see made. I recognize that the hon. member for Davenport is fully aware of the importance of renewable energy and I am prepared to fight side by side with him to see that this legislation goes ahead as quickly as possible.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that my time is nearly up and I see your eagerness to interrupt me. We have a number of policy proposals which were announced on International Sun Day last May. They still stand as a way to break ground and get renewable energy moving in this country so as to provide heat for homes and businesses and reduce our reliance on oil and gas.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I should like to commend the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) for once more bringing before parliament this piece of legislation, Bill C-210, an act to establish the solar energy institute. As he has already said, it is very similar to legislation which was approved by the House previously. I hope that this time the House will pass it, that the committee will pass it, and the other place will pass it, and that this legislation will go onto the statute books. I do not want to talk it to death and therefore I shall make my comments very brief.

I will give the reasons why something along the line of what is proposed by the hon. member should be put into effect. First of all, we need to recognize in Canada just how serious is the energy situation. The hon. member for Davenport referred several times to the fact that solar energy would save so many hundreds of thousands of barrels of oil in the year 2000 and so many hundreds of thousands of barrels more by the year 2025. The fact of the matter is that by the year 2025, in terms of conventional oil, we might not have very much oil. Our own supplies will probably be exhausted in the mid-1990s.

The international authorities estimate that by the year 2000, or earlier, Saudi Arabia will be the only country in the world with oil to export, so that the fossil fuels, oil, gas and coal are being rapidly depleted. Unfortunately, we have become so used to these crises that we have become hardened to them, and fail to recognize how serious this situation is. That means that all of our technology, our science and our forward planning should be devoted to looking at renewable sources of energy. Whether it is geothermal power, tidal power, utilization of forest waste, biomass or solar energy, all of them have a part to play, and we ought to be using our research and scientific facilities to look at these various options.

I am one of the persons who has said repeatedly over the years, from my very limited experience, that no one is going to find a cure-all for the energy crisis, that there is no one thing that will solve the problem. It will have to be a mix of renewable and non-renewable resources. That is why I feel we should not rush into spending billions of dollars putting up scores of nuclear plants, because if we spend too much on high cost facilities we shall feel obliged to stay in that area in order to get back our capital investment. There should be a mix enabling us to move into whatever areas prove most advantageous. All sources of energy, fossil fuels, nuclear power, solar power, will have to be used until we can work out a mix which will best suit our circumstances. Solar energy therefore has an important part to play. Setting up an institute, if that is the best way of doing it, could serve a useful purpose.

I recognize the reservations you have, Mr. Speaker, as to the propriety of the bill from a procedural point of view. I would point out, however, that while the governor general in council might appoint the directors it is not mandatory that they should be paid; the directors could be persons willing to give their time free of charge as a public service. I would be one. Money would be needed, of course, but there is no reason why, under clause 7, revenues and donations could not be secured from individuals, companies and organizations having a stake in promoting the development of solar energy.

Canada has an opportunity to be in the forefront of this development. I have had a chance to see what is being done in Australia, Hong Kong, Singapore, Israel, and the United States which is probably ahead of all other countries in this field. I hope the time will come when the government or, failing the government, some institute with general support, will bring together all the talent and expertise of the scientific community in order to develop a practical, inexpensive unit for harnessing solar energy.

I know that experiments are going on in some of the provinces. I know that Saskatchewan is experimenting with a house which is completely serviced by solar energy, and that a number of private firms are also experimenting in this field. What I am suggesting is work on a model which can be put into mass production. I submit there is a billion dollar industry waiting to be picked up. The developing countries which lack hydro power and fossil fuels are crying out for cheap, readily available and easily installed solar energy equipment, and the country which moves into this field will be moving into an area of enormous potential.

For these reasons I support the bill and hope it will receive the wholehearted approval of the House, the committee and the other place. I trust that the work of this institute, if it is set up with the co-operation of all sections of the Canadian people and of all levels of government, will make a useful contribution to what I believe can be part of the solution to the energy crisis which confronts not only Canada but every country in the world.

[Translation]

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, first of all I will say that I will be brief because there is not much time left and I would not want, like those in the government, to kill such an important bill by talking until six o'clock. I would like to congratulate the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) for having introduced Bill C-210, which aims at establishing an institute to study solar energy.

Mr. Speaker, I have often made recommendations and requests in this House to promote a much more extensive use of solar energy. As everyone knows, the sun is a marvellous celestial body which holds a lot of energy and sends us heat and light. I have often asked the House to pass legislation to implement Daylight Saving Time. Strangely enough, my colleagues opposite have always refused to study this question even though this procedure was used advantageously during the war, and more recently, the United States implemented Daylight Saving Time as an experiment and a study showed that this resulted in a 2.5 per cent savings on oil and electricity. Mr. Speaker, when we know that we now use an enormous amount of energy in all areas, we can see that 2.5 per cent can mean a lot of money, and if we had taken such an action, we would certainly have avoided the emergency bill now under consideration.

Mr. Speaker, once again, I suggest that instead of confusing the population twice a year, in the spring and in the fall, when we have to set our watches back one hour, we should do like every other creature in the universe and take advantage of the sun, especially during the summer and also at this time of the year when the sun rises earlier. This would certainly save a lot of energy.

I conclude by saying that I hope the motion of the hon. member will be passed by this House and the Senate and that the government will finally decide to commission the necessary research in the field of solar energy.

Mr. Pierre Bussières (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief. First of all I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) for the determination and tenacity he has shown in the study of renewable sources of energy and for his imaginativeness in introducing this bill. I should also like to point out that we understood full well the reservations of the Chair on whether or not this bill is in order. Still, we are quite in favour of this bill being read the second time, while keeping in mind the reservations that have been expressed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

[English]

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Just before calling it six o'clock I should like to draw attention to how courteous we on this side of the House are when it comes to private members' bills. I would hope hon. members on the other side will take note and allow some of our bills to go through.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear!

Mr. Railton: Mr. Speaker, I think the point is well taken. We have seen a display of courtesy on the part of the whip on the other side, which I hope will continue even during the other debates in the House. Thank you very much.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As we are approaching six o'clock, by unanimous consent, the hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

ENERGY SUPPLIES EMERGENCY ACT, 1979

MEASURE TO CONSERVE STOCKS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Gillespie that Bill C-42, to provide a means to conserve the supplies of energy within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or market disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have an opportunity to speak on the Energy Supplies Emergency Act, 1979. As most members who have been involved in the energy scene since 1973-74 know, this will be a new allocation bill to replace Bill C-236, which was in force from 1974 to 1976 and which set up the Energy Supplies Allocation Board. In the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works we have had many opportunities to call members of the Board to give testimony about the preparation of the energy allocation program. A great deal of work has been done but, due to the fact that the bill contained a sunset clause, it is no longer operative and so a new one had to be introduced. I do not think anyone would question the need for such a bill with the prospect of the loss of a substantial proportion of oil from Iran. I congratulate the minister for bringing in the bill.

In his speech last night the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) harangued the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) for not recognizing the seriousness of the energy situation in view of the political instability of Iran. During question period on February 15, he accused the minister of doing a flip-flop and so on. If we look at the chronology of events, however, and the questions put in the House during those days, we will see that several members on the government side put questions to the minister, who responded in some detail about the seriousness of the situation.

On February 5 the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) asked the minister whether a rationing system was being considered as was reported to be the case in the United States, and whether Canada was prepared to cope with shortages of petroleum. The minister's reply appeared at page 2874 in Hansard, as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, the situation is serious. It is by no means a panic situation at the present time, but it is serious. We may well be facing reductions in supply in the coming months. At the present time, the situation is still manageable.

The next day I put a question to the minister. The leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) had just returned from his globe-girdling trip, when he offered energy supplies to Japan and to Israel. I asked the minister if the National Energy Board had advised the Leader of the Opposition that supplies would be surplus in Canada. It was obvious that the Leader of the Opposition, when he was tripping around the world offering energy supplies to other countries, was not aware of any shortage in Canada. I think that goes for the knowledge of the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham as well. He did not get around to asking many questions until February 8, some days after questions had been put by members on the government side.

In his speech last night the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham complained that nothing had been done in the years between 1974 and 1979. Of course that begs the question of what was done. If we start to talk about the things that were done through the particular government policy that seems to upset the official opposition, PetroCan, it becomes obvious that a great deal has been done. It has carried out exploration in the Arctic Islands, often in co-operation with private oil companies. It has used its leverage to get other companies in the private sector involved in the High Arctic Islands where the chances of return on investment in the short run are not very great. PetroCan, in co-operation with AGTL, has proposed a pipeline company to bring natural gas to Quebec and the maritimes from the western provinces. When this line is constructed it will back out many millions of barrels of offshore petroleum.

Through the acquisition of Pacific Petroleums Ltd., our national company will be in a position to exploit and develop the oil and gas reserves of the country. As a result of activities in the High Arctic PetroCan has an application before the National Energy Board for gas liquefication and a tanker program that will bring gas from the PanArctic exploration activity in the High Arctic to east coast ports. A substantial part of the exploration off the east coast is also being carried out by PetroCan.

During the next election campaign, Mr. Speaker, I think a great many eastern members of the Conservative party will be very embarrassed by the official position of that party. Last night the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham asked what was being done about the great potential that exists off the east coast. He must have been amazed this morning to read an article on the front page of the Business Section of the Globe and Mail in which the minister of energy for Newfoundland, Brian Peckford, describes the important role of PetroCan. The article begins:

> Petro-Canada, the federal energy corporation, has become a major partner in Eastcan Group of France and will take over as the operator of the consortium's offshore exploration program in 1980, according to Newfoundland Energy Minister Brian Peckford.

It is interesting that the Conservative minister of energy for Newfoundland is proudly proclaiming what PetroCan is going to do in the offshore areas of Labrador and Newfoundland. He went on to explain that $120 million will be spent over the next two years. This is one Conservative who does not ride with the federal branch of the party.

I think that most members of the Conservative caucus from eastern Canada are going to be embarrassed by the kind of opposition to Petro-Canada by their colleagues, especially those from Alberta. They know in eastern Canada, where so many activities are taking place relating to energy supply, whether we are talking about the Quebec and maritime pipeline or the gas liquefication program from the High Arctic Islands, or whether we are talking about exploration in the Arctic Islands or the east coast offshore drilling, that all these projects are taking place through the activities of Petro-Canada and with revenues generated from Pacific Petroleums so that demand on the federal taxpayer will be reduced to an absolute minimum.

If we look at the conservative policy on oil prices, it is a very interesting task to try to define exactly what that policy is. Perhaps it could be generally described as being whatever Bill Davis and Peter Lougheed want. For example, let us examine what happened at the first ministers' meeting in November and December where a price increase of $1 per barrel was sought. The federal government was able to delay that increase of $1 per barrel until next September. It had in mind the implications on the consumer price index of an earlier increase and what it would do to inflation in Canada. That is a very simple thing, if Bill and Peter are agreed. But what happens if they do not agree? Suppose the premier of Alberta says that he wants a higher price for oil, perhaps an extra dollar a barrel, and the premier of Ontario does not want to have that increase because he represents the consuming end of our country. What happens then? Then the Leader of the Opposition disappears, just like his bags did in Thailand. So it is difficult to define exactly what Tory policy is on price when several provincial premiers are involved.

Last night the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham asked what had been done between 1974 and 1979. After a lot of huffing and puffing during his speech, criticizing everything, he finally said that they would support the bill. That showed some wisdom on his part. It took him a long time to get around to it. But during the course of his remarks he asked what has been done between 1974 and 1979. I would like to touch on two or three things that have been done. In my opinion a great deal has been done during these critical years. For instance, I can think of the Syncrude project.

I have a clipping from a newspaper published last week which indicates that Syncrude has produced five million barrels of oil. This production is gradually building up to what it will be in the next year or so of 125,000 barrels of oil a day. Hon. members will recall that when that project was being considered by the House the NDP said the federal government should take over the Syncrude project, and that it should not get into bed with the multinationals. If you had sat in on the national resources and public works committee hearings, Mr. Speaker, you would have heard that something like $19 billion of the $25 billion net revenue from that Syncrude project will accrue to governments. I have forgotten the exact percentage of equity by the three governments involved, but it is something like 40 per cent or 50 per cent. In spite of that, 77 per cent of the net revenues for the Syncrude project go to the three levels of government involved. It backs out another 125,000 barrels of imported oil a day. But even more important than that and the $300 million worth of federal investment in it which is administered by Petro-Canada is the fact that this project came on stream and it is proving up the technology on a massive scale to meet the environmental standards of a modern plant of that size and to prove its efficiency.

The price tag of $2.2 billion, which seemed so much when the project was undertaken, is dwarfed today by the cost of such a plant which I understand will be closer to $4 billion in any new projects of this type.

If we look at Conservative policy on uranium and nuclear energy we see that two or three years ago the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham was telling us that we should have a moratorium on uranium and nuclear exports. If we had followed that course of action we would have been in very tight straits today with uranium supplies, not only affecting customers in Canada but customers around the world. That policy would have meant that development of the mines at Elliot Lake would not have taken place as rapidly as they have. Instead the federal government moved rapidly to organize the most comprehensive safeguard system to be found any place in the world. This has ensured that our uranium, our technology, and our nuclear hardware are used for peaceful purposes.

If we look at communities today such as Elliot Lake, which is moving ahead by some 800 total new miners every year for the next six years, we see the kind of potential which that industry provides.

A few days ago I noticed a press report from Uranium Canada regarding the stockpile which was established in the 1965-1970 period. A large amount of this Canadian uranium has been loaned to Ontario Hydro to even out their demand for uranium supplies. And thus we see another policy of the federal government not only providing guarantees that Canadian uranium supplies will be available for at least 40 years in the future for every new reactor, but also that the stockpile of uranium will be available for utilities such as Ontario Hydro. This uranium can then be borrowed by the utility at a considerable saving to it, at the same time providing considerable profit to Uranium Canada Ltd. which administers this stockpile. I understand it is worth some $750 million today. I have now outlined some of the programs which the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham was unaware of last night when he was criticizing government policy.

Turning now to renewable energy, surely this must be an area of tremendous importance in the future. Last summer the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources announced a program to develop our renewable energy resources and to ensure that we have the technology in our country to develop this industry as much as possible. This is hand in hand with the government's research and development on renewable energy resources. We see not only the government purchasing, but in areas of utilizing biomass and other technology with regard to solar heat for space heating, developing this program during the next five years with this $380 million program announced by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources last July.

Look at the northern gas pipeline legislation which we passed very expeditiously a year ago. We worked many hours in that special committee. That committee has now been re-established to monitor the work of the agency. We see that Canada is meeting all of its commitments in this regard. We see some slippage in the United States program. Next week we will have Mr. McMillan of the Northwest Alaska Pipeline before the committee. We will be questioning him very closely as to the delays that are taking place. If in fact we are going to get delays of a year and a half such as he is suggesting in press reports, we should be calling on the United States to legislate their regulatory program so that this pipeline is not further delayed. When it comes on stream, economic benefits will accrue to Canada, as well as setting up the potential of delivery of gas from the Beaufort Sea area in the next few years.

While the Leader of the Opposition was on his tour around the world making headlines at home, some of which he did not like very much, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was in Mexico working out a state-to-state agreement between Petro-Can and the Mexican oil company to purchase 100,000 barrels of oil a day. I understand that will start flowing later this year.

The minister indicated a great deal of progress has been made on this agreement. We have to look at that trip not only from the perspective of how good it was for Canada in view of the shortage of supplies we are going to have from Iran, but also in terms of trade. It was not a case of us buying their non-renewable resources but a case of us buying their non-renewable resources and selling them manufactured goods in the form of a Candu reactor. This has got to be the kind of mature economic arrangement which Canada, as an industrialized nation, should be working toward.

We are selling manufactured goods for non-renewable resources. Obviously this is a good arrangement for us. At the same time we must look at this in the context of President Carter's visit there last week. He did not make a deal. It was not a very productive trip. Obviously the trip of our Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources looks that much better because of the very good progress that was made.

This did not happen because of his one visit. We look back a few years to the joint ministerial meetings and visits to Mexico, and the visit by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), all working toward the day when this kind of an arrangement would be necessary for Canada. Obviously that agreement will be very beneficial to our country.

One of the reasons for setting up Petro-Canada was to be able to make these state-to-state trading arrangements. If we look down the pike 30 or 40 years, the equation for non-renewable resources like gas and oil will get tighter and tighter. As that occurs, the need and demand for a company like Petro-Can will be even greater.

Can anybody imagine a private utility meeting the energy needs of Ontario that are provided by Ontario Hydro? In the early days, setting up a dam and creating hydroelectric power was possible for many small companies to perform. However, as our non-renewable resources become more and more depleted, the need for a national energy petroleum corporation becomes that much greater.

Looking at some of the other important developments during the past four or five years, we see the Montreal oil pipeline of which the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham was not aware. I am told that during the last few weeks that pipeline has been putting through 340,000 barrels of oil a day, almost to its capacity. There are some blanks in the system in the United States portion of the line, so there has to be some rearrangement of supplies through the Chicago loop of that system. However, it is providing supplies to Montreal that we did not have in 1973 at the time of the oil embargo.

Instead of importing 800,000 barrels of oil a day as we would be doing without that pipeline, we are importing something like 500,000 barrels a day and drawing down our offshore oil to around 30 per cent. The Conservatives would say that this pipeline should only be done on a private enterprise basis. But because it is not a money-making venture it has had some considerable subsidy. At the same time, it reduces our dependency on offshore oil and becomes absolutely crucial during the period when we have shortages internationally.

We have a commitment to the International Energy Agency that was set up a few years ago to share our reserves with western user countries. We have to meet those commitments at a time of shortage of oil supplies, such as we are now facing with the cutting off of Iranian oil.

The hon. member for Northumberland-Durham suggested that agreement was never considered by the House of Commons. If he had been serving on the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works at that time, he would be aware of the very extended amount of study that went into that program. He would know how it worked in terms of the trigger mechanism. He would know of our responsibility with regard to reserves, the kind of commitment we have to other countries, and that they have to us if there are serious shortfalls.

The chairman of the board and chief executive officer of PetroCan, Mr. William Hopper, who has done an excellent job in Petro-Canada was the key representative of Canada at those meetings in Paris of the International Energy Agency. He did a good job for Canada, and even chaired some of the committees at those agency meetings.

We have a bill before us tonight that will put us in the position where the governor in council can declare an emergency, allocate oil, and impose rationing if necessary. The minister has indicated that this bill will probably not be necessary, but we will have it in place should the need arise. It will give us the powers necessary to meet emergencies and to fulfil our international responsibility. I hope we will pass this bill and move it into the committee where it can be given detailed study.

The government has taken a large number of important steps to meet the long-term energy needs of this country, to reduce demand, to increase the supply of gas, to identify our uranium supply and to upgrade the transportation system. I refer the house to the oil pipeline to Montreal and the Alaska Highway natural gas pipeline. Legislation is in place with regard to the Alaska Highway natural gas pipeline, and things are moving ahead on that. This week there was the announcement of the agreement regarding the Maritime Energy Corporation. I remind the House of the new programs upon which Petro-Canada has embarked in the last year and a half.

I hope we will pass this bill quickly so that it can be studied in detail in the committee and so that it can take on the important responsibility which is waiting for it.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, as other speakers on this side of the House have indicated, we recognize the necessity for a bill of this kind at this time. It would be folly again to neglect or try to ignore the fact that our offshore supplies are insecure. It is amazing the number of times that lesson has been brought home to this government, but what has it done about security of supply for Canada? Since at least 1950 the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada—that is, small Canadian-owned companies, some not so small, and their association—has been making representations to this government and its predecessors indicating that Canada should become self-sufficient in oil and gas and that Canada should not rely on imported oil and gas. All these representations were to no avail, in spite of Middle East developments.

I suppose the best example of just how wrong this government can be is in the document entitled "An Energy Policy for Canada" published in July of 1973, in which the government stated:

> To date, the security threat has not appeared serious enough to require arrangements to be made to supply the area east of the Ottawa Valley with western Canadian crude oil.

That gem of advice from the yahoos opposite who are supposed to be looking after our energy supplies was given three months before the OPEC embargo when there were shortages offshore. Having had the OPEC warning and the warning with regard to Iran's political upheaval, I hope we will not have to go through this exercise again and that this government will finally pursue policies which will result in Canada's being self-sufficient, as we have indicated should have been done for a number of years.

When he does take this bill to the committee I expect that the minister will permit witnesses from the provinces, and amendments. Considering the frequency with which this government has been saying it wants to co-operate with the provinces, and considering that in 1974 and 1975 there were disputes between the federal government and the producing provinces, it is incredible to me that the minister would bring this bill forward without having consulted the producing provinces. There has been no consultation at all. One could be forgiven for thinking that the government might be deliberately trying to start another battle in anticipation of some short-term political gain, without any concern for the long-term damage which might be done to the country.

During this debate a number of speakers opposite have raised the Petro-Canada question and, in the process, made many statements which are just plain untrue. I would like to deal with a few of those. The minister said that Petro-Canada has caused a considerable increase in exploration and development. The fact is that Petro-Canada has not drilled a single well for either gas or oil in Canada, and if the minister does not believe me, I suggest he check the Calgary newspapers of a couple of weeks ago. If he does, he will see the president of Petro-Canada quoted as admitting that Petro-Canada has yet to drill a single well.

What has Petro-Canada done? The minister said that Chairman Hua of mainland China wanted to deal with Petro-Canada. What poppycock! Chairman Hua was quite prepared to deal with Coca-Cola, and if he is prepared to deal with Coca-Cola, I am sure he would be prepared to deal with PanCanadian, Home, Dome, Ranger, Anderson Exploration, or with a dozen other Canadian-owned oil companies which would be prepared to go to China next week to engage in exploration activities. The minister expects us to believe that Chairman Hua said, "Please bring us Petro-Canada; we don't care that it has not drilled anywhere in the world." Absurd!

Then the minister went on to say that without Petro-Canada we would not be negotiating with Norway. What I want to know is why we are negotiating with Norway. I thought our aim was to try to secure oil supplies for Canada. I did not know we were interested in Norway's security of supply. I thought we were interested in Canada's security of supply.

Mr. Gillespie: You have the blinkers on.

Mr. Andre: Can somebody explain to me how drilling in the North Sea with Norway's state-owned oil company is going to bring about security of supply for Canada? I am afraid that one escapes me.

I would like to deal with the remarks of the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) a little more seriously, because they were made seriously. I may disagree with the position taken by the New Democratic Party, but that party is much more honest in its position than the group opposite. Members of the New Democratic Party do not claim to be something and then do something else. The Leader of the New Democratic Party made a statement to the effect that we should welcome a state-owned oil company because every country in the world has one. Let us look at the situation. The four strongest economies in the world are those of the United States, Germany, Japan and Switzerland. Not one of those countries has a national oil company.

Mr. Gillespie: Oh, really?

Mr. Andre: Let us look at the level just below that, at countries such as France, Belgium and the United Kingdom. None of those countries have significant oil companies.

An hon. Member: What about BP?

Mr. Andre: BP has been mentioned. I will mention others. Fina of Belgium and Total and Aquitaine of France are not Crown corporations as we know them. They are corporations in which the state has a significant ownership position. I am sure hon. members would appreciate the difference. They are not agents of the state. They operate in the market place. The state happens to be a shareholder, and that is quite different. If the minister thinks there is no difference, then he must feel that CDC Oil and Gas is exactly the same as Petro-Canada. Does he believe that CDC Oil and Gas, of which the Government of Canada owns 50 per cent, is the same as Petro-Canada, or was he aware of this? Probably not.

Is CDC Oil and Gas the same as Petro-Canada? Is it an agent of Her Majesty? No, it is not. I think the minister should do a little homework. When we talk about countries' having national or state-owned oil companies, we are talking about the Third World. I agree that most Third World countries have national oil companies, but if we are going to use international experience as a model, why do we not model ourselves after the winners? Why do we not model ourselves after Germany and Japan in terms of the way we handle our economy? Why do we model ourselves after Indonesia and Pertamina, its national oil company, which went out of business?

The second point raised by the Leader of the New Democratic Party which deserves serious discussion is the suggestion that Petro-Canada should be the sole purchasing agent for crude oil purchased offshore for use in Canada. I do want to deal with that—I think it was a proposal of the Leader of the NDP, sincerely made, but it has serious dangers which I would like to bring to the attention of the House. The first one is the argument about having all your eggs in one basket. It would be a serious mistake to have one, sole national oil buyer purchasing all of Canada's imported oil.

I see the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Faulkner) shaking his head. I will remind him of the last time an agent of Her Majesty, this government, went purchasing oil for Canada. It was in 1974. The government purchased oil in Rotterdam at $45 a barrel, the highest price ever paid for oil, before or since. To boot, it was bad oil, it had such a high surphur content it had to be blended with better quality oil before you could burn it. You have to admit there exists at least a possibility that if we had a sole buyer buying for all of Canada, we could end up making that kind of a bad deal, not just for a boat load but for a whole year's supply, and we would end up paying for that. It makes a lot more sense to have five or ten purchasers purchasing off-shore oil for Canada, and they should be Canadian companies. Here I agree with the Leader of the NDP and probably with the government. I think Imperial Oil should be buying its off-shore oil directly and should not be going through a middle man, it should not being going through Exxon, because the corporate purposes of Exxon may not be synonymous with the best interests of Canada. On the other hand, if the purchasers are Canadian companies operating in Canada, we know they will be seeking to maximize their profits, we will understand their motivation, and we can design rules to accommodate them and get the best deal for the country.

The other criticism of having Petro-Canada as our sole oil purchasing agent for off-shore oil needs to be considered, and that is the damage that this could do to our flexibility in pursuing an independent foreign policy. I would ask the minister and the NDP rhetorically, through you, Mr. Speaker, how flexible we would be able to be in our Middle East foreign policy if Petro-Canada were the sole agent of Her Majesty dealing with Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Qatar, Bahrain, Iran and the other states.

An hon. Member: Very flexible.

Mr. Andre: Would we be able to bring in anti-Arab boycott legislation under those circumstances? What kind of pressure could be put on Canada? Would that not be a greater threat to our sovereignty than the current situation? I ask, without dwelling on it, could Petro-Canada have a Jewish president under those circumstances? The dangers of having Petro-Canada as the sole purchasing agent are simply too large for us to consider that possibility.

The minister alluded in his remarks to the Canadian Commercial Corporation. If he went back to look at the letters patent, the order in council creating the CCC by the Liberal government in 1946, he will see that that corporation was created explicitly, purposely, for government to government commercial deals, including areas like oil. This corporation has just moved into its nice, shiny glass house at 240 Sparks Street. If in fact it is necessary for Canada to have government to government deals, the CCC is there to sign the contract.

The President of the Privy Council, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen), entered the debate, and again showed that he knows an awful lot more about the rules of the House than he knows about the oil business or any other business. For example, he spoke about all the great things Petro-Canada is doing on the east coast. He said that, for example, Petro-Canada is exploring off the coast of Nova Scotia. That is false, Mr. Speaker. Mobil Oil is exploring off the coast of Nova Scotia—Petro-Canada is giving Mobil Oil the cheques. We do not need a Crown corporation to do that. Even someone with the capabilities of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) could handle the task of just taking a cheque and handing it to a company.

The Deputy Prime Minister said that Petro-Canada is proposing the Q and M gas pipeline from the west to Halifax. Wrong again, Mr. Speaker. That line was proposed by Alberta Gas Trunk Line, not Petro-Canada. Alberta Gas Trunk Line did the work on it. I wonder if the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources would be willing to go to Etobicoke and tell his constituents that if the Q and M pipeline is built, the government will probably have to increase their fuel bills by 5 per cent to 10 per cent to pay the pipeline tariff, because that is what will happen, and the minister knows it.

The statement was made that Petro-Canada is exploring in the Arctic islands. Wrong, Mr. Speaker. They are not exploring in the Arctic islands, PanArctic is exploring in the Arctic islands. PanArctic has been in existence for about a decade. The federal government owned a 45 per cent participation, and that again meant sending cheques. So now Petro-Canada picks up the cheque in Ottawa and delivers it to PanArctic. That is the extent of Petro-Canada's participation in drilling in the Arctic.

The minister also said that Petro-Canada is involved in bringing down natural gas from the Arctic islands. A magnificent project, he said; they are being real pioneers, he said. Wrong again, Mr. Speaker. It is the Alberta Gas Trunk Line and Dome Petroleum, two Canadian companies, that are doing the work for that project. Petro-Canada is supplying cash. They are taking it out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund and delivering it.

According to the Deputy Prime Minister, Petro-Canada was supposed to have found some gas off Labrador. I might say, parenthetically, that finding gas off Labrador is a boo-boo because everybody knows there is gas there. You go out there to look for oil—there is oil out there too. Finding gas off Labrador can be almost called a costly mistake. However, it was not Petro-Canada but Chevron Standard, a multinational of California, that dug that well. Petro-Canada supplied some of the cash but did not drill the well.

We have to put some of these things into perspective. To give you an example of the kind of distortion that goes on, let me say that last year Petro-Canada, when it issued its annual report, issued a press release which said that Petro-Canada had $88 million in net revenue. So the Canadian Press reporter dutifully reported that Petro-Canada had $88 million in net profit. That was a headline. I received the annual report and looked at it and found that $88 million was the gross proceeds, but when you took off things like wages, salaries and rent, trivial things like that, the income came down to $9 million. Then, when you paid taxes, it came down to $5 million. When you work that out as a return on the investment, it worked out to a return of 1.7 per cent. So the Government of Canada is borrowing money in Japan and elsewhere and paying 10 per cent for that money, which it is then investing in Petro-Canada in return for which it gets 1.7 per cent, and it is singing a hallelujah chorus about the great investment it is making. It is absurd, Mr. Speaker.

We have maintained a consistent position with regard to Petro-Canada, and indeed with regard to all Crown corporations, for a number of very good reasons. First, the government does not even know how many Crown corporations there are. There are over 400, but nobody ever there can tell you how many there are.

Second, the Auditor General indicated in his 1976 report that the financial management and control of Crown corporations are significantly below the minimum acceptable standards. We think that is a serious charge.

Third, we have observed, and I am sure the public has observed, the way ministers misuse Crown corporations. For example, when Atomic Energy of Canada Limited sold a reactor to Argentina, the predecessor of this minister, the Hon. Donald Macdonald, was out there on television saying what a magnificent Crown corporation this is, "We have done a super job, we have sold a reactor." Then when we found they had to pay under the counter kickbacks to a number of Swiss bank accounts, and that there was some hanky-panky involved, his successor could not be found. They said, "Atomic Energy of Canada Limited—nerver heard of it. Don't ask us." They take all the credit when they do something good, and they run and hide when they do something wrong. That is contrary to our view of what a government based on responsible ministers is supposed to do.

When we talk about political interference with Crown corporations we have to recall again the appointment of Bryce Mackasey to the chairmanship of Air Canada. What is to prevent this irresponsible government from reappointing Maurice Strong to the chairmanship of PetroCan or, worse still, Ron Basford, the latest departure from over there? What is to prevent the appointment of somebody else who knows nothing about the business? If you think that will not happen, then just look at what has happened. The man who loused up the Post Office is now going to have a go at the airline, at $95,000 a year.

This conflict between the political goals of a political government and the commercial goals of a commercial corporation is at the root of what is wrong with the way this government is using Crown corporations. There is a confusion of the goals. The Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council has said, "Is it not marvellous that Petro-Canada is financing this operation for Nova Scotia?" It is, if they find oil, but there has been a lot of exploration out there which has come up dry so far. No one has asked, for example, whether it would not be better to take that money now going into dry holes and use it for the development of new mines in Cape Breton, or for the improvement of the mines already there. That would bring on more coal and contribute to our energy self-sufficiency, and in the process would create jobs. I wonder whether the Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council has ever thought of these kinds of comparisons.

Any fool can dip into the Consolidated Revenue Fund, that bottomless pit, take out money, give it to an oil company and say, "Build me a well." But it takes some wisdom to decide how best to spend the money to the maximum benefit of Canada. That is not something this government is doing.

Petro-Canada is the only oil company I know of, and there are 487 in my constituency, that has a Ph.D. in political science on staff. Imagine a political scientist in an oil company. Why is that? I suggest it is because its goals are political goals. Any other oil company, if it had that money, would hire a geologist, a geophysicist or a driller. Petro-Canada hires a political scientist. Is that what we want our money spent on?

Last fall when Petro-Canada took over Pacific Pete the minister said this would reduce the requirement on the public purse. "PetroCan will not need our money, it will get it from Pacific Pete." There was an indication in the blue book tabled yesterday that PetroCan is getting another $160 million out of your jeans and my jeans.

The minister also said that Petro-Canada was responsible for generating interest in heavy oils. When I was a graduate student 16 years ago people were exploring and doing research in respect of the production of heavy oils, long before Petro-Can was ever dreamed up. The minister knows that the executive of Pacific Petroleum came to see him two years ago with a proposal to build a heavy oil upgrading plant in Hardisty, Alberta. Knowing that, how he can stand up in the House and say that PetroCan is the company that originated the interest in a heavy oil plant is beyond my comprehension.

If you want to know what is wrong with a national oil company let me refer you to this publication of the government of Canada called "An Energy Policy for Canada", Phase I, published in 1973. Beginning at page 189 and continuing for three pages there appear eight good reasons why a national oil company is not desirable. Obviously whoever wrote this was not successful in having it read by the ministry because the reasons are all there why a national oil company is not a good idea. Those in the ministry would not listen.

There is not time for me to go into all the details of our plan of action in respect of Crown corporations when we take over, but let me give you some idea of what will happen, by this little anecdote about the Alberta Gas Trunk Line. Alberta Gas Trunk Line is a company created in 1956 by the Alberta government for the purpose of gathering gas in the province for delivery at the borders to TransCanada Pipelines and other purchasers. It is a utility company, a monopoly.

Instead of creating a Crown corporation, which seemed natural and which the people opposite would have done, Ernest Manning, then premier, offered the shares of this company to the citizens of Alberta. In that way he created a privately owned corporation, the shares of which are widely held by Albertans. It is regulated by the Public Utilities Board. Instead of being struck with a Crown corporation, today we have the Alberta Gas Trunk Line, one of the most dynamic and active companies in the country doing a superb job in the energy industry. What a tragedy if Ernest Manning had the mentality of that lacklustre bunch over there and had left the Alberta Gas Trunk Line as a Crown corporation. Instead of a Crown corporation we have an active and widely held privately-owned Canadian company.

The people of Germany had the good sense in the post-war period to elect the conservative government of Adenauer, who in turn had the sense to appoint Ludwig Erhard as his financial minister. He proceeded to put together a number of state-owned companies, companies like Volkswagen, a name that is very well known now. In 1958-59 Mr. Erhard said that the state did not need to run these Crown corporations, but should sell the shares to the people of Germany, and that is what he did. He offered the shares to people in Germany earning salaries of under $3,800 at the time. This included the Volkswagen company and a company called Preussag mining and oil company of Germany. Instead of Volkswagen and Preussag being state-owned companies they are companies now owned privately by the people of Germany. The people purchased these shares offered to them by the finance minister.

Right across the North Sea in the United Kingdom the people had the misfortune or bad judgment to elect the socialist government of Clement Attlee which followed the opposite procedure of nationalizing companies. Whereas Erhard made them privately-owned, Mr. Attlee took them all over and nationalized them. Can anyone with any sense look at the record and note what has happened to companies like Volkswagen, one of the largest automobile companies in the world, as compared to the British motor companies which the U.K. government nationalized under a state-owned corporation, and still advocate state ownership as a solution? No, Mr. Speaker, we should follow the example of Ludwig Erhard with regard to the 400 Crown corporations the government has created. If there are lessons to be learned internationally we should learn from the winners, from Germany, Japan, Switzerland or the United States, none of which have state-owned oil companies. We ought not to be running around the world trying to learn lessons from Indonesia, Kuwait or Iran. Let us do what the winners have done, instead of following the path of the losers.

Let us do what Germany has done, not what the United Kingdom has done. Let us sell out these Crown corporations to Canadians, let us not go through the process of nationalizing more and more of the oil industry.

I should like to bring it to the notice of members over there that in the last five years a revolution has been going on in Calgary and in the oil industry generally. The percentage of companies owned by Canadians has been increasing at a significant rate. Today, the movers and shakers in the industry out there are largely in Canadian-owned companies. They were responsible for drilling 85 per cent of the exploration wells last year. There are myriad success stories out there involving Canadians who have become important actors in the oil and gas picture. This is the wrong time for the government to interfere with that process, using the heavy hand of Petro-Can, because finally, after years of neglect we have in place a tax scheme which allows Canadians a chance.

Wait five or ten years and the majority of the oil and gas industry will be owned by Canadians. Let ministers over there pay attention to policy not to details. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development should get his act together and replace the regulations pertaining to northern land use which were withdrawn in 1970. Those regulations were withdrawn nearly nine years ago, yet so far nothing has been put in their place. Talk about incompetence. Ministers should concentrate on the responsibilities which fall within their bailiwicks and let individual Canadians who are operating in this business right now get on with it. They will find the oil and gas we need, and we shall have a secure and happy future.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) finished his speech with a burst of eloquence. He felt the government, in developing an oil policy, should follow the winners, that they ought to avoid state-ownership. He believes they should follow the lead of the Seven Big Sisters who control the industry over a large part of the world, certainly in North America.

I want to ask him to give some thought to this: when you talk about winners, you should decide who they are. Take North America where the great oil monopolies have controlled the production, refining, and distribution of oil in Canada and in the United States. Today, the United States, which was once self-sufficient in oil, imports about 16 million barrels a day, and Canada, which ten years ago was exporting 60 per cent of its oil and 65 per cent of its gas, is a net importer of oil. Britain, where the Labour government started by buying 40 per cent of British Petroleum—ownership has been stepped up to 60 per cent for which they get government control over the oil industry while at the same time benefiting from the company's expertise, its technology, its managerial skills and sales outlets—is today for the first time in its history a net exporter of oil.

Mr. Andre: And it was a Canadian oil company which first found oil in the North Sea.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): So let us be careful before embarking on these ideological discussions. On the eve of an election the Tory party is psychopathic on the subject of Petro-Canada. They are psychotic about the whole idea of public ownership. They have spent most of the time in the last few days pimping for the oil companies.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Andre: Imagine that coming from a minister. You should be ashamed!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): If I were doing the pimping I would be ashamed!

This bill, except for a few minor changes, is almost identical to the act to which assent was given in parliament on January 14, 1974, and which expired on June 30, 1976. The regrettable thing was that the legislation was allowed to expire. The other day the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) blamed the Conservative party for insisting on a sunset clause in that legislation. My feeling is that the Tories can make enough mistakes on their own without the Liberals attributing any of theirs to them. The Liberal government has got into a position now where, if anything goes wrong, it blames either René Lévesque or the Tory party.

There was no need for that legislation to have expired on June 30, 1976. At that time the government had a clear majority and could have brought in an amendment removing the sunset clause, or it could have introduced an energy supplies emergency act any time between June 30, 1976, and now. It ought to have done so, first because the situation in the Middle East is so unsettled, as it has been for a long time, and second because we are a signatory to a treaty under the International Energy Agency.

I was the only member of the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works who objected to Canada signing that treaty, and I object still because I believe the terms were most unfavourable to Canada. I agree with the principle, but the consuming countries certainly managed to do a hatchet job on the producing countries, of which Canada was one, when that treaty was signed. Nevertheless, having signed that treaty we entered into an obligation. If the decline in world production was seven per cent or more, a trigger mechanism went into operation and we had to be ready to put in an allocation system within 60 days. But how can one put in an allocation system in the absence of necessary legislation on the statute books?

The other day the minister said this was important legislation, and I agree. But if it is important it should have been dealt with long before this, not when we are facing a crisis.

An hon. Member: A spurious crisis.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Let me say a word about the present situation. It is easy to become rhetorical on either side. We could talk about a great crisis and the drastic consequences or, on the other hand, we could talk in soothing terms and try to convince the public that all is well. The fact of the matter is that the situation created by the turmoil in Iran is serious in so far as that country supplies about six million barrels a day of the world's oil, on which Canada is dependent for from anywhere between 100,000 barrels to 125,000 barrels per day. It is a serious matter, but it is not a disaster, and we can cope if we have the proper mechanism. We must look at the matter in its perspective.

As a matter of fact, in some ways what has happened with respect to Iran and with respect to the diversion by Exxon of the Venezuela oil is a blessing in disguise because it has done two things. It has demonstrated, first, to the Canadian people the vulnerability of Canada's position with respect to its oil supplies. We had a crisis in 1973 and 1974, and all of us who were in the House at that time will remember the feeling of panic we felt because of the situation in the Middle East and because of a threatened boycott by the OPEC nations. All kinds of remedies were put forward and the government at that time took some measures to deal with the situation.

The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), my leader, pointed out last night that the New Democratic Party played a part in promoting and pushing for the implementation of some of the measures which were taken at that time. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) said that that version given by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby was not accurate. My leader said that history would bear him out. I am prepared to leave it to the historians, because anyone who takes the trouble to read the records of 1973 and 1974 will see that I myself, as the energy critic for the New Democratic Party, put before this House the measures which we were seeking. At the time we were asking for a phasing out of exports to the United States, a two-price system, the setting up of a publicly-owned petroleum company, and the construction of the pipeline from Sarnia to Montreal.

Hon. members who take the trouble to look up the record will find that that day, before a vote of confidence was taken, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) rose in the House, not the then minister of energy, mines and resources, and agreed to all those items, including the construction of the pipeline from Sarnia to Montreal. I would warn hon. members not to let any of the government members tell them that they wanted to do these things all along, because only a few week before that the then minister of energy, mines and resources, Mr. Donald Macdonald, had made a speech pointing out how improper and how improvident it would be to build a pipeline from Sarnia to Montreal. When I suggested that the pipeline should be a reversible pipeline so we could ship oil either way, there were cries of derision from across the floor. So let there not be any fooling as to why some of these things were put in place.

I do not want to take any of the credit from the government for these items which they put in place, but they should not try to fool anybody that the things which they put in place at that time were not done under duress, because they were left with no alternative. What they did at that time was right, and it has improved the position of Canada today. We would be in a much worse position today if we had not phased out exports and if we had not built the pipeline from Sarnia to Montreal.

There were some other things which the government said they were going to do at that time in order to make Canada self-sufficient in oil. They were going to store oil in the maritimes in caverns, empty mine shafts, and various geological formations where oil could be stored so that never again would we be in the critical position we were in in 1973 and 1974. What has happened? Complacency has crept in and the government has slid back into a state of apathy. We have not pursued with the proper amount of diligence the implementation of programs to make this country self-sufficient in oil. This is why we are in the serious situation we are in today.

One of the criticisms we have had of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is that when the Iranian situation became serious and members began to ask questions, the minister gave us soothing syrup and said "Nothing to worry about, Mexico will give us 100,000 barrels a day."

Mr. Gillespie: Read the record.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): He said that Venezuela has assured us that 200,000 barrels a day will still be coming to us, and that we will be able, by means of swaps, to meet the situation.

Let us look at what happened when the minister was questioned further. It is true that the minister—and I give both him and Petro-Canada full credit for this—said that they had negotiated an agreement with Mexico. But there will not be oil from Mexico until the end of the year, and it will only be 15,000 or 20,000 barrels a day. The minister said in the House that it will not be until the end of 1980 and probably the beginning of 1981 before we will get 100,000 barrels a day. With reference to his discussions with Venezuela, all that country would promise is that we would continue to get the 200,000 barrels which we have been getting in the past. He indicated that while they would be glad to give us more oil, they did not have any available.

With reference to the swaps, the minister himself said in the House that the swaps would bring us only some 40,000 barrels a day in the next quarter. That, of course, will not meet all the problems which we will face if the Iranian oil is withheld from Canada because we will need much more than that. I have a great deal of sympathy for the minister, and nobody suggests that it is a simple problem, but it would have been much better to have told us frankly what the situation was, rather than trying to tell Canadian people and the members of this House that all was well when, as a matter of fact, we were facing a very serious situation.

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

I would like to point out something which the House may not fully appreciate, that if we get by, and I think there is a good chance we will because the Iranian oil wells may get into production within a few weeks or months and we may be getting supplies again, it should not be forgotten that swaps, by which we deliver more oil into the Chicago market in exchange for American companies delivering to Quebec and to the Atlantic provinces, will mean we will have to step up our production of oil in western Canada by 50,000 or 100,000 barrels a day or more. That can only be done for a short time without seriously damaging the field. What is more, it is using up the reserves which we need to fall back on in the case of an emergency.

I do not think we fully appreciate yet the National Energy Board's report which shows that our own oil is declining at an alarming rate, that in the 1990s we will virtually be out of regular, conventional oil, and that we will have to fall back on oil from tar sands and heavy oil. We ought not to deceive ourselves as to just how serious the situation is. Nor should we on the other hand become panicky and cry blue ruin.

This House has to realize that legislation like this is necessary, but much more is necessary if we are to solve the problem of having a national energy policy in Canada. That is my first point, Mr. Speaker, that the Iranian oil crisis has demonstrated how vulnerable Canada is in the event of any curtailment of imported oil.

The second thing that has been demonstrated is that the multinational oil companies have become a law unto themselves. They serve not the interests of any country or the people of any country, but their own personal interests. That was illustrated very well when Exxon decided not to cut off Iranian oil but to cut off 25,000 barrels of oil which normally it was supposed to deliver to its subsidiary, Imperial Oil of Canada, on a formula devised by Exxon.

When Exxon was asked to explain they said, "We followed the formula set up by the International Energy Agency, the 7 per cent." They cut oil, not on the basis of the amount of oil imported, but on the basis of the amount of oil sold in a given market. It so happens that Imperial sells a lot of oil in Canada but it does not import very much because it produces most of its oil here. So we got a big cut because the reduction was based on the total amount of oil consumed in the market. I can understand that, although I cannot agree with the formula set up by the international energy agency.

Exxon is not an international energy agency. By what authority does it arrogate to itself the power to determine how oil will be distributed and how it will break contracts even with its own subsidiaries, that can have a detrimental effect on the consumers of this country?

Just the other day during question period in a dispute with a Conservative member, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said that we do not want Exxon to solve our problems; that we are going to solve our own problems. I agree with that, but how does the minister propose we settle our own problems? He says we will settle the problem not by the Government of Canada dealing with Venezuela, but that we will settle the problem by telling Imperial Oil to deal with Venezuela. Does anybody think that Imperial Oil, owned and controlled by Exxon, is going to go to Venezuela and make a deal with them if its parent company says it cannot do so?

I am not going to launch a tirade against Exxon or Imperial Oil, Mr. Speaker. The great oil companies, like any other monopolies, have two basic goals. The first is to maximize their profits, and the second is to look after the interests of the country in which they were formed. That is understandable. If Exxon has to make a decision about where it will cut supplies, it is going to cut them in any country other than the United States. A Canadian company would certainly give preference to Canada and I would expect it to do so, rather than to another country.

What is happening, and this is being demonstrated by the crisis through which we have passed, is that when it comes to determining how much oil Canadian consumers will get, those decisions are not going to be made by the Government of Canada, not by a publicly-owned oil company in Canada, but by an international company like Exxon, or any of the other multinational companies, without regard to what the Canadian government say, or what is in the best interests of the Canadian people. That is why we in the New Democratic Party believe the time has come for the Government of Canada to deal directly with the oil producing countries, and particularly with those that have state-owned trading companies.

We must wake up to the facts of the last quarter of the twentieth century with respect to oil. The basic fact is that the great oil companies no longer own great oil fields. There was a time when these companies owned the oil of Saudi Arabia, Iraq, Iran, Nigeria, Canada and the United States. They even owned oil fields in Mexico until they were thrown out in 1936. They controlled and could move supplies of oil wherever they liked. What happened is that in almost all of these countries, except Canada and the United States, the people rebelled against them and took control of production of oil in their countries, so that today the great oil companies are little more than oil brokers and transporters, except in Canada and the United States.

Today, if you really want to negotiate about oil, you have to go to the state oil companies of the producing nations of the world. That makes sense because these oil producing countries have lost faith in the multinational oil companies. They have said repeatedly that they want to deal directly with the oil consuming countries.

The Shah of Iran, who was certainly not considered a raving radical, made a statement to the press five years ago when he was in the United States. He said in effect, "We prefer to deal on a government to government basis when selling oil because, if we raise the price of oil by a dollar per barrel, the oil companies increase the price by $2 ber barrel. They put one dollar in their pocket, and that creates a lot of bad feeling." The Shah of Iran himself offered to negotiate. In this House at that time I pleaded with the then minister of energy, mines and resources, Mr. Macdonald, to enter into agreements with Iran, Iraq, Nigeria, Venezuela and Mexico. We have been so timid that we have left the oil companies to run the show and now we are paying the price.

Members of the Progressive Conservative Party have spent a lot of time in this debate attacking the idea of a publicly-owned oil company for Canada, with particular emphasis on Petro-Canada. When the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) spoke in the debate last night, he said, as reported at page 3386 of Hansard:

> I do not believe that intervention of Petro-Can in the Mexican transaction, or in the Venezuelan transaction, would have been any help at all.

In the same speech he said, as reported at page 3387 of Hansard:

> We still believe that if Exxon should not be in the middle of these deals there is no reason Petro-Canada should be in the middle of these deals either.

At that point the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby interjected as follows:

> Who should?

The hon. member replied, in part, as follows:

> Certainly the companies themselves are able to contract and negotiate on their own.

If they are able to contract and negotiate on their own, why are we in the situation we are? Why are we importing oil? Why are we having difficulty getting oil? What members of the Progressive Conservative party need to do is to wake up to the fact that we are in a new era with respect to oil. The great power of the oil companies, their control of the production of oil is dwindling. This is happening all over the world. Today if one wants to deal in oil, one has to deal with governments and with the state-owned oil companies in the producing nations in order to get oil. That is why we think it important that Petro-Canada have a role in this matter. First, we think it ought to be a member of the allocation board which the minister proposes to set up under this legislation.

We think Petro-Canada should be the sole importer, so that we can have oil purchased on the basis of a company that will be able to act in the interests of the Canadian people and, which will see that oil which is contracted for is shipped to Canada, and not diverted to some other place, as was done in the case of Exxon, which took away some of the supplies which were contracted for by Imperial Oil.

We will support this legislation, of course. But I want to say that this is legislation that we think should have been on the statute books for some time. However, we ought not to leave this debate with the illusion that this will solve our problems. This is only giving a tool to the government which it can use to help solve a problem.

They are many things which must be done and I would like to enumerate them briefly. First, swaps. That is exchanging oil, selling it to the market in Chicago and in exchange taking offshore oil for Quebec and the maritime provinces. This is a temporary solution, but is dangerous if it is carried on too long. However, it can meet our needs in the hope that the Iranian situation will right itself over the next few months.

Second, it is time to reduce our exports. We are still exporting oil to the United States. I do not mean that we should cut off the United States. I think we should say to the Americans that we are in a very serious position, and we are prepared to exchange oil. We are shipping about 275,000 barrels of oil a day to the United States. We will continue that into the midwest if the United States will deliver 275,000 barrels a day of offshore oil to Canada. If that arrangement was put in place, with the oil coming through the pipeline Quebec would be completely self-sufficient. We could then put the rest of the offshore oil into the Atlantic provinces.

Third, as I have already mentioned, we should use Petro-Canada for an aggressive purchase program. I do not say this on any ideological grounds. I have never been one who believes in public ownership for the sake of public ownership. Public ownership or nationalization is simply an economic tool. Sometimes it is the right tool, and sometimes it is the wrong tool. In this case it is the right tool because it is the only way Canadians can have control of energy, and energy today is the oxygen by which the body politic lives.

Fourth, we ought to start an oil storage program. The minister said the other day the reason that this has not been done is because Canada is waiting on the United States. We have waited a whole year for the Americans to get to work on the Alaskan pipeline. We may wait for another year. I do not know how long it will take. But it will not be of much comfort to the Canadian people if they freeze in the dark, and then for us to tell them that the reason we did not store oil in the geological formations in the maritimes was because the Americans forget to answer the mail.

Mr. Gillies: Or did not get it.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Or did not get it. I would urge the government to start work immediately on this business of storing oil, particularly in the summer months when consumption is low. That is an opportune time to fill up these caverns so we will have a reserve.

Fifth, we should loop the pipeline from Chicago to Sarnia. Today the President of the Privy Council was telling us—he was really telling his constituents—that the government was favourable toward the building of a pipeline to take natural gas from Montreal to the Atlantic provinces. If he is going to do that, then he better start pouring cold water on the enthusiasm that is being generated in the National Energy Board and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources for exports of gas to the United States. You cannot sell gas to the United States and have gas for the maritimes as well.

As everyone knows, the pipeline goes from western Canada to Chicago and from there on to Sarnia and Montreal. This pipeline could carry 200,000 barrels a day more, but the bottleneck is between Chicago and Sarnia. It would be a comparatively simple thing and fairly inexpensive to loop that pipeline. That would give 200,000 barrels more to eastern Canada, but that 200,000 barrels of course would have to come, in my opinion, either from exports to the United States or by some type of swap arrangement. I do not think we could step up permanently our production of western oil by 200,000 barrels a day without running down our reserves to a dangerous level.

Sixth, and this is something I have already mentioned, we should get on with the business of running a pipeline from Montreal to the maritimes.

Seventh, I think the government should provide incentives to persuade industry and power utilities in Ontario, Quebec, and in the Atlantic provinces to switch from oil to natural gas. One of the great mistakes made in the Atlantic provinces during the 1950s and 1960s because offshore oil—spot oil—was cheap, was to generate most of their electrical power with oil. Today, of course, electric power in the Atlantic provinces is at a price which is absolutely prohibitive. The sooner they change over from oil to gas or to coal is the only hope people there can have their energy requirements met.

Finally, I suggest we must start developing an over-all energy policy. We cannot deal just in oil and gas. We must include coal, hydro power, and we have to see what place there is for nuclear power. Above all, we have to start moving into solar power and into the renewable energy supplies. That means an integrated national energy policy. I do not believe we have yet formulated that in any great detail.

I want to close by saying that the world of tomorrow will belong to those nations which have two essential things, energy and food. Canada is in the fortunate position that it has the potential for both of these. It is true that we are running out of conventional oil. But we have heavy oil, we have the tar sands, and we still have fairly large quantities of natural gas, and very large quantities of coal. We have a lot of uranium, and we also have areas where food can be produced. With those two commodities, oil potential and food potential, Canada in the twenty-first century has a greater opportunity for increased well-being than any other country in the world.

I am strong in my faith in Canada. I think that if this parliament in the next few years can cope with the energy problem and produce an energy policy which will meet the needs of the Canadian people, our children and our grandchildren will reap the benefits, if we have the intelligence and the statesmanship to seize the opportunity and to follow the paths that will be of benefit to our people and indeed to all mankind.

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, the very fact that we are debating this issue tonight demonstrates that for the last 14 years we have not had an energy policy in Canada. This government has demonstrated once again that it has no capacity for leadership, no criteria in its own mind to judge what it should be dealing with, and no idea of the priorities which should be before it. This might be understandable, although not excusable, except for the fact that energy and energy needs have been at the forefront of debate in every country of the world during the past few years.

Because of the fact we do have energy resources in our nation, this government has been lulled into the feeling that we did not have to put in place a particular policy to meet the needs of Canadians. If there has been an energy policy of any sort by the government, it has to be described as some sort of vague sort of continentalism, a policy that was not based on the fundamental responsibility of any government, which is to protect the sovereignty of its own country, to protect the needs of its people, and to guard the rights of all its citizens.

In the development of energy, this government has been so caught up in the wrong issues; it has missed the fundamentals; it has been so concerned about extending government control into the private sector that it has failed to meet the basic energy needs of the Canadian people.

The reality of the Canadian situation is that we have no energy policy. We have not had an energy policy since the fifties. In those days we had a policy. It was a very simple policy. It was the right policy, and it was based on three very simple propositions.

One was to increase the supply of energy in Canada. This was done by the development of a selective price policy favorable to the western oil producers. Second, it stated that the slow growth areas of the nation should not have to pay as high a price for energy as more prosperous regions, and this was achieved by having Atlantic Canada use offshore oil for its needs. Finally, any excess production was to be exported so that we could help solve our balance of payments problems.

This was the policy developed in the Diefenbaker years, which people liked to deride. However, it was a policy that worked, and it was a policy that was important for all Canadians. There was neither conflict with provinces nor with industry, and there was protection for all Canadians regardless of where they lived.

Canadians could survive the neglect of not having an energy policy throughout the last decade as long as there was cheap energy throughout the world. However, that situation changed in 1973 with the development of the OPEC cartel. When the day of inexpensive energy was over, every Canadian had the right to expect that this government would develop a new viable energy policy, a policy that would increase the supply of energy in this country, particularly oil and natural gas, and a policy that would assure that every Canadian, because we are a country rich in energy, would have the energy he needed.

Instead we have today a situation where there is a portion of Canadians who have no access to energy that is produced in this country. We in this party do not believe that there are second-class citizens in any part of Canada. We do not believe in an energy policy that does not include all Canadians. We believe that a government that apparently has no concern about all of Atlantic Canada in its so-called energy strategy is a government which does not deserve the confidence of the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillies: That is the situation we find ourselves in today. This government talked constantly about the need for conservation, and yet we have moved from a country that was exporting oil to a country that is importing oil. We have a government that has ostensibly talked about increasing supply after the OPEC crisis, but look what it did.

First, we had the enormous conflict brought about by this government over the taxation of energy. At the very time that we needed a policy to increase supplies, the federal government went out of its way to reduce supplies. Second, we have a federal government that in nine years could not put in a place a set of regulations for the regulation of exploration of oil and gas in the northern parts of Canada. In the same period of time, the British discovered oil in the North Sea, drilled for it and brought it to market. As the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) said, Great Britain is now in an export position.

We in this country have the greatest proven oil reserves in the world in the tar sands of Alberta. What did the government do? Nothing. For 13 years there was a private enterprise corporation working in the oil sands developing technology to obtain oil from the sands. What did the government of Canada do? Nothing.

When the crisis came upon us and Syncrude started, the federal government instead of supporting the pioneer work allowed world prices to Syncrude without allowing them to the Great Canadian Tar Sands company which had pioneered the work there. A country that was talking about doing something to increase our energy supplies did nothing.

The only thing, of consequence, the government could think of doing was to create PetroCan, the post office of the petroleum industry. It was to be the answer to all our supply problems. What has it done? It has not discovered any oil and in the current crisis it has nothing to offer Canadians.

It was intriguing to hear the minister say how exciting it is that PetroCan is dealing over in China, when the people in Atlantic Canada cannot get energy. That is the problem. That is why we need a government policy to deal with energy problems in Atlantic Canada.

The policy of the Liberal government has been put forth in their statement, a strategy for self-reliance. What a mistake in direction for this country. The energy policy for Canada must be a policy of self-sufficiency. With the resources we have in this country, it is irresponsible in the extreme for any government to suggest that Canada must be dependent on other nations to meet its energy needs. We do not have to be and with the proper policies which will be developed after the next election with a new government, we will not be.

The case can be made that the general policies followed by the federal government in the energy field, particularly with respect to oil, since the OPEC crisis, have probably reduced the total supply of energy available for Canadians since 1974. The federal government's inability to solve the tax problem which drove the drills and oil rigs out of Alberta and the west reduced the total supply of energy that would be available to Canadians at the present time.

On the basis of supply policy its action was counterproductive. However, where the government stands even more indicted is that it did nothing to deal with the energy problems of Atlantic Canada, an area which depends on offshore oil.

Once the OPEC cartel was formed everyone knew that dependence on offshore oil was totally inadequate. And yet, we did not store oil when we could have. Nothing was done to develop a transportation system to carry oil and gas to Atlantic Canada. We have a Department of Regional Economic Expansion to help slow growth areas. However, at the same time the government did nothing to put in place an energy program to protect the long-term interests of the people of that region.

How incredible it is that someone living in Charlottetown has to pay $60 when someone in St. Catharines pays $28 for the same amount of electricity. How incredible it is that we would allow that kind of situation to develop. How incredible it is that the government would not know, after disruption in world markets, that its first priority had to be to get energy into Atlantic Canada.

The other day the minister commented that we are a net importer of oil. Of course we are at the present time. The government's conservation program has been a total failure, but the minister forgets that there are many substitutions for oil. We were talking about 80 per cent of the electricity in Atlantic Canada being fuelled by oil. Did the minister never hear of natural gas? Given the fact that we have a surplus of natural gas, how could the government be so neglectful that it did not find some way to get natural gas to Atlantic Canada? How could it be so neglectful when it knew, or ought to have known, that its foreign sources of supply of oil were not likely to be available in the future? Clearly this is a government which has neglected the fundamental responsibility of any government, to look after the interests of its citizens.

This government stands indicted for the way it has managed the economy, for racking up a deficit and for causing inflation. It stands indicted for creating alienation across the country. It stands indicted for being unable to handle the separatism problem in the province of Quebec. It stands really indicted for the way it has handled energy policy and for its inability to provide for all Canadians, regardless of where they live, with an equal opportunity to get the energy they should have in a country as rich in energy as is this nation. For some reason or other this government does not seem to understand the functions of leadership and government. Those functions are to provide a framework within which citizens can live. This government has been so wrapped up in expanding its own power goals and in developing things like Petro-Canada that it has missed the objective any energy policy should have.

[Mr. Gillies.]

In the few moments I have left I would like to point out that the government has been indicted in many areas, but the thing that will cause the electors to convict it in an election which must be called soon—because we cannot stand the mismanagement we have had much longer—will be the government's absolute failure in energy policy.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

PENITENTIARIES—OPTIMUM NUMBER OF PERSONS TO BE HOUSED IN INSTITUTIONS

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, on February 12 I directed some questions to the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais) with respect to the announced changes in the Canadian Penitentiary Service construction program. Although the announcement referred to a national program, I wish to deal with it as it relates to my constituency of Fraser Valley East. The first question I addressed to the minister on February 12 as it is reported in Hansard at page 3107 was the following:

In view of his recent statement regarding penitentiary services, will the minister advise the House whether he has rejected the submission of the subcommittee on the penitentiary service that institutions housing a maximum of 200 persons would be the most efficient and desirable in future planning?

The minister's response was as follows:

—I made a statement in Kamloops, I believe in the second week of December—if the hon. gentleman is not aware of it, I will send him a copy—in which I indicated what the present policy was in terms of penitentiary construction.

In checking the statement alluded to I found that the minister rejected the submission of the subcommittee on penitentiaries which suggested that penal institutions should be limited in size to house a population of 220 to 250 inmates. The feeling of frustration and concern expressed by members of the committee recently over the government's attitude to their work and report is understandable in the light of the attitude taken by the minister in that instance.

My second question on February 12 was:

Mr. Speaker, will the minister report to the House on the results of his meeting with the mayors of central and upper Fraser Valley a week ago when the announced changes as they relate to penal institutions in that area were discussed?

The minister's response was totally irrelevant and only substantiated what was already known, that the upper Fraser Valley is a beautiful area in which to live. I should remind the minister of a statement which I made some time ago, that because of the proliferation of penal institutions in the Fraser Valley, residents might soon be forced out to permit the turning of the Fraser Valley into a penal colony.

Perhaps I should compliment the minister on his ability to evaluate the beauties of the area in such a short time, for he did not make himself available to questions at a meeting which was held with the mayors of the municipalities on that occasion. I would like to quote from Abbotsford, Sumas and Matsqui News of January 31, part of an article headed "Community Input Heard on Prisons." It reads:

Their boss, Solicitor General Jean-Jacques Blais was conspiciously absent for all but a short luncheon meeting. "He might just as well have stayed in Ottawa!" remarked DeJong, annoyed that Blais had not made himself available.

DeJong is the mayor of Matsqui. The article goes on to read:

It would have been that much better if he had heard the complaints and suggestions directly rather than through staff, he noted.

This indicates that the minister, although he was in the community, did not make himself available to the mayors for questioning and for getting some answers to the problems that were concerning him.

The next question I had hoped to pose was: what consultation took place with the local authorities before the changes were decided upon and announced? I suggest that there was very little, if any, consultation that took place. I have here a letter from James M. Murphy, the regional director general of the Canadian Penitentiary Service, the National Parole Service, to mayor Harry DeJong, under date of December 4, 1978. It starts:

An important announcement will be made shortly by the Solicitor General of Canada regarding the Canadian penitentiary service's construction program.

In order that you may be fully informed of the accommodation plans for the Pacific region, a detailed summary will be forwarded to you the moment such information is available.

The announcement was made on December 12. I am not sure when the mayor received this letter, but it would indicate that he did not have an opportunity to make inquiries or to endeavour to discover just what was involved in the proposed changes.

In this connection I have a letter from the Corporation of the District of Kent to the Solicitor General under date of January 23, of which I would like to read several paragraphs:

This letter is in reference to your December 12, 1978 announcement relating to a revised program for construction of new penitentiaries which program includes renovations and expansions of both institutions within our municipality, namely, Kent and Mountain institutions.

Shortly following your announcement, as mayor, I was contacted by a Vancouver based radio station at which time I declined comment having only heard of the news from the caller. I then contacted one of the local officials of the Canadian Penitentiary Services who promised to secure a copy of the news release for council's information.

At a meeting of the council a letter was approved to be forwarded to the Solicitor General as follows:

That a letter be forwarded to the Solicitor General outlining council's dissatisfaction with the recent announcement regarding the construction program, pointing out the following:

1. Prior commitment to council by Canadian Penitentiary Services to discuss new developments before public announcements.

2. Impact on the community and community opinion, and

3. That not even the employees were aware of these plans, prior to the Solicitor General's announcement;

The letter went on to read:

During discussion on the resolution, it was pointed out that council had been assured by officials of your department that they would be advised of any new development to be carried out at the local institutions prior to any public announcement being made.

The commitment was not kept and they were not advised, prior to this announcement, of just what was involved. So there was no consultation, no agreements, no negotiations, no discussion on additional problems that municipalities would face upon the location or enlargement of these institutions within their borders.

The problems they want to discuss are, first, reclassification to residential assessment rates in the Matsqui case will mean a loss of $45,000 to the municipality. Second, the need for the hospital to take care of inmates under security rather than in local hospitals where people are endangered by these individuals. Third—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Roger Young (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to respond to the issues which the hon. member has raised; perhaps it will help if I give him some background on the announced changes. It is true that the revised construction program announced in early December represents a departure from previous thinking on the size of institutions. A number of important factors influenced the government's decision to build institutions with accommodation capacities ranging up to 350 to 450 inmates, according to the need of the region.

When the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) announced the government's program of economic restraint in August of last year, the Canadian Corrections Service re-examined the previous and very costly construction program. A number of factors, including the size of institutions were considered. It became clear there was no empirical evidence in support of the conclusion that smaller institutions are better able to fulfil correctional objectives than the marginally larger 450 inmate institutions. The results of several studies, both here and abroad, do not appear to indicate that size in itself is the crucial criterion.

Construction of the somewhat larger institutions affords the potential of offering a wider variety of equally high quality programs than does the construction of smaller facilities. We intend to do just this by continuing the policy of providing living units in order to allow close personal interaction between staff and inmates. Under the revised construction program it is only the number of such living units per institution that will be increased. The size of each living unit will remain unchanged.

Having assured themselves that there is no evidence that program quality is solely or even primarily dependent on over-all inmate capacity, the CCS examined the economic implications of building smaller institutions. Comparative data, holding level of service constant, indicated that the annual operating and maintenance costs in a medium security penitentiary containing 160 inmates are 40 per cent higher than in a penitentiary containing 420 inmates. Similar comparisons with maximum security institutions indicated that the smaller institutions cost approximately 65 per cent more per inmate than the larger institutions. On this basis it was decided that if new institutions are to be built at all they should be designed in such a way that the living unit concept can be introduced in order to maintain program quality, and that inmate capacity could be expanded, should the need arise, to a maximum of 450 inmates.

As a result of restricting the revised capital construction program to these objectives, a number of previously planned institutions were cancelled at a capital cost saving to the taxpayer of $225 million. Even this greatly restricted construction program will be subject to annual review in order to respond to unexpected increases or decreases in inmate population. Furthermore, in response to the specific concern that the building of more maximum security cells leads inevitably to their occupancy, it is our intention to avoid just this danger by taking steps to reduce the proportion of inmates held in maximum custody through such actions as the development of a new classification policy.

It is our hope that many initiatives such as community programming, crime prevention, diversion, alternatives to incarceration, and better classification and preparation for release within our institutions, will bear fruit and enable us to restrict the construction of new capacity even further.

STATISTICS CANADA—VOLUNTARY RESPONSES TO STATSCAN SURVEYS

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, the issue I bring forward tonight is based upon the most fundamental of democratic government principles. It revolves around the relationship of the individual and the state, touching individual liberty, freedom of information, citizens' rights, and the privilege of members of parliament.

● (2215)

Democratic governments evolved originally to protect and to serve individual citizens and their rights and privileges, as opposed to totalitarian regimes which suppress individual liberties.

A recent Gallup poll asked Canadians: "Do you think business, labour or governments constitute the greatest danger to Canada's future?" The new and changed response of Canadians was to identify government as the threat instead of as a protection and service device. Unfortunately the Government of Canada has moved beyond protection and service toward totalitarian suppression of information and legislated compulsion that, rather than protecting, suppresses and persecutes individual liberty and freedom of choice. In this recent poll the public has recognized a reality that has long been recognized by even the most moderate civil libertarians. Individuals are shouting, the majority is no longer silent, but the government is deaf. This phrase is the motto adopted by one of my constituents who has been pursued by the federal government for the last two and a half years for refusing to answer some questions on the 1976 census form. When viewed in the light of her single plight to make this government face the reality that it cannot continue to practise statistical voyeurism at census or any other time, her adage capsulizes much of what I wish to underline here this evening.

Let me now refer specifically to the ominous section 29 of the Statistics Act. It states that any individual who, without lawful excuse, refuses or neglects to fill in, to the best of his or her knowledge and belief, any form distributed under the Statistics Act, may be charged with a summary conviction offence and fined or jailed.

Let us look at some of the questions for which a refusal to answer may bring such a penalty. From the 1976 census form we take this question: "How many visitors or other persons who have a usual home elsewhere in Canada stayed overnight on May 31, June 1?", or "Do you enter your living quarters: by a private entrance from outside; through a common hall or passageway through someone else's living quarters?" Personally, I have no objection to answering these questions, but if I refuse should I be sent to jail or fined?

We in this House have heard many of the questions now being posed to Canadians by the Statistics Canada survey of family expenditures in 1978, in respect of which many people may be charged for refusing to answer, that is, of course, only if the minister responsible is not feeling as benevolent as he was yesterday during the question period when he described his authoritarian concept of selective persecution through selective prosecution.

In order to determine if she was being persecuted or prosecuted, or a little bit of both, and in order to determine whether there was the legal precedence and court transcripts that might have been available to build her defence, Mrs. Sheremeta, who is not a lawyer and in fact does not have the resources to pay a lawyer, attempted to find the answers to some very simple and basic questions. She asked: How many Canadian citizens refused to complete their 1976 census forms fully? Of these, how many refused to give only some information and how many refused to give any answers at all? How many Canadians have been prosecuted under Section 29 of the Statistics Act, and how many have had proceedings started against them as a result of refusing to answer all questions on the 1976 census forms?

As an individual she was denied access to this information even though the information was not considered classified or secret. She then assumed that if she could not have this information as an individual, then surely her member of parliament could, and she asked me to find the answers to those same questions. I asked for these answers and I, in turn, the member representing Mrs. Sheremeta and thousands of other individuals in Fraser Valley West, was denied access to this very basic and simple information. Information Canada in a letter to me said:

● (2220)

The information you requested was not considered classified or secret by Statistics Canada.

If it is not classified or secret, why can I or Mrs. Sheremeta not have the information? Apparently, the reason is because the Department of Justice decided not to furnish this information, which was conveyed by telephone to my office. The letter goes on to say:

Your office was informed that the prosecution considered the information irrelevant—

If the information was not secret, not classified, and irrelevant to the case, why is Mrs. Sheremeta denied access and why am I, as a member of parliament, denied access to this information? I cannot understand that, and there is no logical answer. In addition to that the letter goes on to say:

—I am informed that the presiding judge was of the same view.

In other words, the prosecution is collaborating with the presiding judge to determine whether or not evidence which we may need or may not need should be released to us. I think that this is a very unfair persecution, not prosecution. Obviously the Crown attorney in the case was either fabricating the truth in some way, or lying in some way, because he said that the material was irrelevant. If it was irrelevant he would have released it to me.

This is just a small example of how the checks and balances so delicately built into our democratic system—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Wenman: Mr. Speaker, may I ask for another two minutes to complete my remarks?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Solicitor General (Mr. Young).

Mr. Wenman: Cut off again.

Mr. Roger Young (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the Statistics Act does not currently permit Statistics Canada to undertake surveys on an explicit voluntary basis. Nonetheless, for a good number of years, the agency has successfully conducted many surveys, especially those of households, depending almost completely on the good will and voluntary co-operation of respondents. While the Statistics Act provides for the possibility of penalties for non-response, mention of such provisions is carefully avoided to ensure that no perception of threat or intimidation is present. The policy governing the behaviour of Statistics Canada enumerators in this regard is clearly set out in the booklet "Doorstep Diplomacy", which is a guide for interviewers, and reinforced in all training programs. Key passages in that booklet demonstrate the overriding desire of the agency to fulfil its mandate through co-operation, not compulsion.

Statistics Canada is aware, however, of the heightened public concern for privacy and confidentiality in recent years and is mindful of the need to preserve the best possible relations with respondents. The agency has thus undertaken a review of the many issues concerning the explicit use of the voluntary survey technique. After weighing the important considerations, Statistics Canada has determined that legal authority for the agency to conduct surveys on a voluntary basis, when it makes sense to do so, should be granted, and plans are under way to seek appropriate Statistics Act amendments.

Statistics Canada will be responsible for ensuring a careful and orderly implementation of any new voluntary survey authority, in a way that preserves the nation's vital socioeconomic data base. Overly rapid conversion to a system of voluntary surveys, before careful testing of the results, would be irresponsible and could seriously impair the quality of critical data series. In this regard it has long been clearly recognized by all who have examined this issue that no single approach to voluntary response is appropriate for all surveys.

The hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) has also made reference to a census case under Section 29 of the Statistics Act, concerning one of his constituents. The decision in that case has been appealed and thus the matter remains before the courts. It is worth noting, however, that in the judgment of the lower court the judge rules on a technicality in the evidence brought forward by the Crown to support the charge. The judge did not dismiss the case on the grounds of compulsory response, invasion of privacy or any of the other submissions made by the accused. The judge stated further that on these matters of legislation, parliament is supreme and the law must be carried out.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until 2 p.m. tomorrow.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.22 p.m.

NATIONAL UNITY

ASSERTION THAT BOUNDARY BETWEEN NEWFOUNDLAND AND QUEBEC NOT NEGOTIABLE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the statement in the February edition of Reader's Digest by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lalonde) that—

—four-fifths of the Parti Québécois program . . . can be implemented within the federal system and the remaining fifth can be negotiated——and in view of the claims by the PQ government to a large part of the territory of Newfoundland as spelled out in article 6 of the PQ manifesto, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie):

That this House rejects the claim of the PQ government of Quebec to any part of the territory of the province of Newfoundland and, furthermore, that it is the opinion of this House that the boundary between Newfoundland and Quebec as established by the Privy Council decision of 1927 and as set out in the BNA Act is not negotiable.

Mr. Speaker: The introduction of such a motion for debate at this time would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE TO RECOMMENDATIONS OF OVERVIEW COMMITTEE REPORT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that the federal government released today its response to the recommendations of the labour-business Overview Committee reviewing the industry sector task force reports in which 500 Canadians participated, and in view of the fact that the economic ministers of the Crown responsible for these matters are not here, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies):

That this House condemns the government for its mishandling of this matter and in particular for its responding in a manner which appears to be more political than factual, leading the CLC to call the response a self-serving pre-election document which amounts to a breach of faith with private sector participants and to suggest the possibility that the CLC might withdraw from the whole process.

Mr. Speaker: This motion can be put at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

REQUEST FOR AUDITOR GENERAL'S INVESTIGATION INTO FINANCIAL AFFAIRS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of the same Standing Order.

In view of the report on the CBC news last night, and the confirmation today of the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) (Mrs. Campagnolo) that the squandering of taxpayers' money as a result of mismanagement in Loto Canada has increased from $800,000 in early December to a now scandalous $8 million, and since in this House on December 5 in reference to the issue the minister stated, "I am only an $800,000 woman," I move, seconded by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Rae):

That this House requests the Auditor General to investigate the financial calamity of Loto Canada and to report on what has happened in two months to change the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) from an $800,000 woman to an $8 million woman.

Mr. Speaker: The introduction of such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF ORGANIZATION RESPONSIBLE FOR ISSUING AND CIRCULATING MONEY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 in connection with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Last Monday the President of the Treasury Board tabled the 1979-80 estimates in the House of Commons. Those estimates reveal that the government expects to pay $8.35 billion in interest on the total debt, which represents a rise of 18.9 per cent over the previous year. Since those interest charges on the debt account for 16.5 cents of every dollar spent by the government, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette):

That the House request the establishment of a public financial organization responsible for issuing and circulating all currency and credit necessary for a satisfactory operation of the Canadian economy; that no interest be levied on the issuance of any new credit so as to free Canadians from the burden of public borrowings abroad and excessive interest charges on those loans.

GOVERNMENT'S INTENTIONS RESPECTING APPEAL IN CASE OF PETER TREU—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, in spite of the notable lack of applause from the other side, I still hope there will be some suitable disposition in respect of this issue.

Under the same Standing Order, I should like to propose this motion. In light of the unanimous decision of the Quebec Court of Appeal setting aside the conviction of Peter Treu and the circumstances of that decision, I move:

That this House requests the government to forthwith indicate the decision will not be appealed and to consider what action can be taken to make compensation to Mr. Treu for the personal, professional and financial damage he has sustained over the last few years as the tragic result of the investigation, trial and appeal during that time.

PUBLIC SERVICE

FINGERPRINTING OF PUBLIC SERVANTS IN NON-SECURITY POSITIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent necessity pertaining to the fingerprinting of public servants in numerous departments, including recent activities in the Department of External Affairs and, in particular, fingerprinting that took place in the past two weeks at the Bourque Building, 305 Rideau Street, of certain members of the national headquarters' staff of the Canada Employment and Immigration Department.

I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

Whereas question No. 9 on the order paper, asking for details of the massive fingerprinting being surreptitiously conducted by the government of public servants in non-security positions, has remained unanswered for two years, and in view of these latest serious incidents, the Prime Minister be required to issue a statement of government policy on the fingerprinting of public servants which appears to constitute a horrendous governmental invasion of privacy and resembles undemocratic procedures practised by fascist and communist police states.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the presentation of such motion?

REQUEST HOUSE GIVE MORAL SUPPORT TO MR. SPEAKER IN IMPROVING HEALTH CONDITIONS OF "HANSARD" OFFICES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the terms of Standing Order 43, I make the following proposal:

As the physical and ambient environment influence both the quality and the amount of work produced, as small, unhealthy and polluted offices are harmful to the health of workers, and as the Abbott Commission on Parliamentary Accommodation recommended, as a priority, a marked improvement in the offices of the employees of the House of Commons assigned to Hansard, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier):

That this House grant its moral support to the Speaker of the House of Commons in order that during the coming election period those offices be enlarged or the Hansard staff relocated with a view to respecting at least the minimal standards for a healthy work environment that usually apply in the private sector.

LOTO CANADA

REPORTED WASTE RESULTING FROM ALLEGED MISHANDLING OF LOTO SELECT PROGRAM

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and it concerns the government's abortive attempt to set up a computerized lottery last year.

Can the minister confirm the report which was on the CBC national news last night, that the waste as a result of the government's mishandling of the Loto Select program will total some $13 million, with almost $8 million being put up by the federal government and over $5 million being paid by the provinces?

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm the report. I have said I would table it in the House of Commons and it is my intention to do so today. For once the CBC got the correct figures, so I can say that it is a total of $13.2 million of a committed contract of $60 million.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mrs. Campagnolo: The provinces of Ontario and Quebec will pay $5.15 million and Loto Canada will pay $7.97 million. The hon. member should think about his comment with regard to wastage, because this $8 million has purchased a profit for Loto Canada and, therefore, for all the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, surely this is the first minister of the Crown in the history of Canada who would brag about wasting $13 million belonging to the people of Canada. The minister has so far refused to tell the House whether or not, knowing that the Loto Select program might never get off the ground, she at least had the common sense to insert into contracts with suppliers a cancellation clause that would allow her to escape.

On December 6 and December 7, the minister gave a firm undertaking to the House that she would table those contracts in the House upon termination of the contracts. Will the minister now table those contracts and, further, will she tell the House specifically if she at least had the common sense, when dealing with millions of dollars of Canadian taxpayers' money, to include cancellation clauses in the contracts and, particularly, in the multimillion dollar contract with General Instruments Ltd.?

Mrs. Campagnolo: Mr. Speaker, I think that I am the first cabinet minister who has ever made profits like $200 million.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: Ho, ho. The $200 million woman.

Mrs. Campagnolo: A sexist remark from the hon. member for Annapolis Valley.

Mr. Nowlan: The minister of fun and games.

Mrs. Campagnolo: As to the question, the signed document is a commercial document for General Instruments, and even though it is cancelled it still retains its commercial proprietary confidentiality. Therefore, the people, who are the taxpayers, might be liable for damages if I were to make this particular contract public at this time.

As to the hon. member's second question with regard to the commitment by Ontario and Quebec, it is in like space: the commitment will be met on March 5 after which, and with their concurrence, I would consider tabling it.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, we are told that the cover-up will continue for at least several more weeks. In the four months which elapsed between the time the minister announced the birth of this abortive Loto Select program in June, and the date in October when she announced its death, she managed to squander public funds, of which she was the trustee, at a rate of more than $75 a minute, 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

In view of this fact, is the minister now prepared to take the only honourable course of action open to her and submit her resignation from the cabinet?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Oxford.

GRANTS TO SPORTS ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the minister refused to answer that last question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House should know that the question was clearly argumentative and that I did not permit the minister to answer.

● (1420)

Mr. Halliday: My question is directed to the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport). Since the $13 million of public funds which the minister squandered on behalf of the federal government and two provincial governments is almost one-half of her total budget for this coming year, does this gross error account for the fact that she had to completely withdraw support for six provincial organizations responsible for sport and recreation for the disabled?

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, it accounts for the fact that beginning January 1, 1980, there will probably be $40 million for sport at the national level and $40 million for the arts at the national level. If we had listened to the hon. member's colleagues or, in fact, to some of the lottery ministers of the Conservative provinces, there would be no Loto Canada today.

Let us get the facts straight. Each of the two parties gave up two items. The provinces surrendered the principle which they had been maintaining, that the provincial lottery should be exclusive in this country. They gave that up to allow Loto Canada to continue in an agreement of which the hon. member has a copy. In addition, they gave up $5.15 million. Loto Canada, on its side, surrendered the $1 lottery and we gave up $7.97 million to ensure that, unlike the Leader of the Opposition who in Vancouver last week said that he would end Loto Canada.

An hon. Member: Resign.

Mrs. Campagnolo: That would have cost the people of Canada, as a national purpose, $72 million this year. Therefore, I say the absent Leader of the Opposition would have cost national purposes—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

An hon. Member: Now we know what a non-answer is.

Mr. Halliday: A supplementary question to the minister, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) seems to be implying that the new policy of the government, in order to reach agreements with the provinces, is to waste a considerable amount of public funds.

May I ask the minister if she now concedes that she made an error of decision in entering into the ill-fated contracts for Loto Select, when at the very same time she was announcing reductions in grants to many worth-while national organizations such as the Red Cross, the YM-YWCA, the Girl Guides and the Boy Scouts?

Mrs. Campagnolo: Mr. Speaker, I would repeat to the hon. opposition critic that the money has been spent as an investment to keep Loto Canada at the national level. I think hon. members opposite know that their leader is determined to become the eleventh premier of this country by getting rid of national enterprises such as Loto Canada, Petro-Canada and probably anything else of national import.

To answer the hon. gentleman's question in which he said that the YM-YWCA, water safety courses and other things, have not received funding from me this year, I must say he is quite correct. That is the result of a federal-provincial conference where the provinces asked for the right to have these things under provincial purview. We did yield to that request, but we did maintain our purview in fitness and sport and at the national level.

[Mr. Speaker.]

MINISTER'S CONSULTATIONS WITH PROVINCES RESPECTING LOTTERIES—REQUEST FOR AUDITOR GENERAL'S INVESTIGATION OF LOTO CANADA

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct some questions to the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport). I should like to take her back to the source of the loss. A loss is a loss, no matter what she says.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Leggatt: Not all the way back. My question deals with the consultations the minister had with her provincial counterparts with regard to Loto Canada. There were several meetings, some in June and some later, which dealt with the question of Loto Select. Can the minister advise whether she had any agreement from the provincial governments before she went into this scheme which has squandered some $13 million of federal tax money?

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, if I had any proper co-operation with the provinces, I doubt very much that we would have had to go to these lengths of competition.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Campagnolo: The hon. member who is from British Columbia should know that it was our province of British Columbia that refused to attend the conference; our province that refused and broke the conference that was scheduled for September, 1977. I am quite sure that if that conference had taken place, the $1 lotteries would never have been undertaken as they were.

I do not know what the hon. gentleman intends with the rest of his question. He knows very well that the meeting in June was one where the federal government, through Loto Canada, offered the provinces 50 per cent of our profits. The provinces did not want 50 per cent of our profits; they wanted 100 per cent, which we were not willing to give. Eventually, after bilateral discussions—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mrs. Campagnolo: —with the provinces, we gave them 50 per cent of our product. I think that is a fair and equitable arrangement in the circumstances.

• (1425)

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, the minister should have been perfectly aware that the refusal to attend that conference was a clear indication the provinces would have nothing to do with her scheme, and yet she proceeded to squander public money. Those are the facts.

My question is this. Given the admitted loss that has been confirmed of $8 million at the federal level, has the minister recommended, or is she recommending to cabinet that there be a specific reference to the Auditor General so that he can have a clear, intensive investigation into where this public money has been squandered and why it is so much?

Mrs. Campagnolo: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member realizes that only one province refused to attend the conference and the other nine provinces were in favour of attending the conference in September of 1977—

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Fraser: Did you waste the money, or did you not?

Mrs. Campagnolo: —which I think would have made it possible for this to go ahead.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Campagnolo: I beg your pardon, Mr. Speaker; I do hope that I have the floor for a few moments to answer the question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Campagnolo: Obviously, the hon. member for New Westminster is concerned that this amount of money has been invested to retain Loto Canada. He seems to believe it should have been given over to the provinces. It was not; it has been shared. The province of Ontario and the province of Quebec are partners with us in this, and the other provinces in this country do not have any competition in the $1 lottery, which is part of the agreement.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, the minister should also be aware that her scheme is drying up numerous private lottery, charitable schemes in the country.

My final supplementary question is this. Perhaps the minister could be specific in terms of the waste in the city of Vancouver of the $160,000 lease for the useless office space in Vancouver and the $300,000 for mothballed furniture. Has that now been marketed, or is it still sitting there as an albatross around the neck of the taxpayers in downtown Vancouver?

Mrs. Campagnolo: Mr. Speaker, the facts are all contained in the report that I will table today. I am sure the hon. member will be pleased to know that all those matters have been dealt with and are successfully settled.

I do wish, Mr. Speaker, that he would not fight his campaign for the British Columbia election on the floor of this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Shame on you.

CRIMINAL CODE

REQUEST FOR DECRIMINALIZING OF POSSESSION OF MARIJUANA—MINISTER'S DISCUSSIONS WITH CERTAIN MEMBERS

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Justice. This morning I read an article in an English newspaper which said that I had prevented the minister from introducing a bill decriminalizing the possession of marijuana, a bill which would have changed the approach taken about this drug in the Criminal Code. Could the minister tell us whether he meant that all of a sudden I was influential enough to stop him or whether he was trying to convince the media that I should have voted for a bill I had not even read?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Justice): The hon. member will recall that in a conversation with him, I asked him if his party would be willing to support an amendment to the Criminal Code which would have the effect of reducing the penalties for possession of marijuana and more particularly of eliminating criminal records for that offence. The hon. member will recall he indicated then that his party preferred to keep the law as is it now without changing it. Therefore, when journalists asked me about that, I told them that unfortunately there was not general agreement in the House to proceed expeditiously with the consideration of amendments which could have been proposed. I think that I reflected very accurately the conversation I had with the hon. member and, as I see his colleagues nodding, I think that is indeed the policy of his party.

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I am somewhat distressed by the fact that we have not had the opportunity to look into the amendments the minister has been advocating and I suggest we should have had the opportunity to do so before coming to a decision. If he means that they wanted to maintain criminal files on all young people involved in drug taking, I think it would have been possible to demonstrate some open-mindedness. On the other hand, I resent the fact that newspaper articles do not reflect the discussion.

Mr. Lalonde: If the hon. member is now saying that he is prepared to have the legislation amended, although he had indicated during our discussions that he was in favour of maintaining the legislation as it now exists, I shall be pleased to discuss this issue further with him. If he now wants a similar legislation to which he can refer, I suggest to him Bill S-9 which I tabled in the House about two years ago. It had been introduced in the Senate, and perhaps the hon. member might direct his remarks to me in light of that bill.

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, one last supplementary question. I suggest that the minister wants to mislead the House, for I have never said that I did not want to read it and I did not mean that we did not want to look into it; what I said was that we were not prepared to rush this bill through but that we were willing to discuss it. It is quite the contrary.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I suddenly realize that it is becoming increasingly difficult to find out whether the hon. member's party is for or against the proposed amendments to this legislation. When I met him he simply indicated that his party would rather keep the Criminal Code as it now stands. Now, if the hon. is saying that his party is willing to change its position, I shall be pleased to discuss further this issue with him.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE TO RECOMMENDATIONS OF OVERVIEW COMMITTEE REPORT

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of nine of the ten members of the Board of Economic Development Ministers of this country who just gave a 46-numbered response to the recommendations of the Overview Committee dealing with industrial sector studies in this country, my question will be to the Deputy Prime Minister who happens to be the tenth member of that board.

Is the Deputy Prime Minister aware of the fact that a meaningful comment of the Overview Committee was with regard to the urgency of having full employment in this country and the suggestion that the government should work to a full employment policy, and that notwithstanding that recommendation there was no response from the federal government with respect to this urgent matter?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have a copy of the response of the government to the proposals, recommendations or views of the Overview Committee. I realize that not all of the recommendations that have been made by the Overview Committee have been accepted by the government. Most of them have been accepted. Some of the recommendations must be responded to by provincial governments because they are under provincial authority.

Maybe the hon. member can indicate precisely what recommendation has not been responded to and I will attempt to explain to him the reason for that. I would say, however, that as one looks at the table of contents, almost each and every one of the subjects has either a direct or an indirect bearing upon the pursuit of full employment. Of course, the whole purpose of the exercise was to promote economic growth in Canada as recommended by the committee and supported by the government.

Mr. Stevens: I refer the Deputy Prime Minister to the Overview report on manpower, where it states that "manpower policy should be, in the view of the committee, a full employment policy". There was no response by the federal government to that recommendation. Will the Deputy Prime Minister indicate whether the government in truth believes in full employment in this country and yet does not have a policy to deliver full employment?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, it seems rather curious that the hon. member would ask the Government of Canada whether it believes in a full employment policy. One of the main objectives of the financial and fiscal policy of the government is to promote increasing employment in Canada, as witnessed by the rather remarkable performance of the economy in the past year in producing additional jobs. However, I would say to the hon. member that on page 15 of the report, continuing the dialogue on industrial growth, there is a very extensive commentary on the part of the government to the recommendations of the Overview Committee on the question of manpower and labour relations.

Mr. Stevens: Is the Deputy Prime Minister aware that the Canadian Labour Congress took great exception, in a press release released at eleven o'clock this morning, to the government's response with regard to their Overview recommendations, stating that the government's response is a "pre-election document that amounts to a breach of faith with private sector participants," and are even suggesting that the Congress may reconsider its participation in future exercises of this type?

If the minister is aware of that comment by the CLC, can he explain his earlier remarks to the House? Second, is he going to take any steps to try to ensure that the CLC does not pull out of the process, as it is suggesting it might do?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I was not aware of the attitude of the CLC to this response of the Government of Canada until the hon. member for York-Simcoe drew it to the attention of the House. Indeed, it would be a matter of regret if the Canadian Labour Congress withdrew from this consultative process, which was novel, imaginative and useful and which involved not only the Congress but representatives from the academic community and industry.

I believe that any fair-minded citizen who reads this report would be stretching his imagination to conclude that it in any way represented a pre-election document. It was a government response to the views that were expressed by the Overview Committee. I can imagine the howls of protest we would hear from the hon. member if the government failed to make a considered response to the recommendations of the Overview Committee. This is a very serious response and ought to be regarded as such. I am surprised that it could or would be interpreted in any way as a pre-election document.

GOVERNMENT'S INTENTIONS RESPECTING APPEAL AND REPARATION IN CASE OF PETER TREU

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice with regard to the Peter Treu case. While I assume the minister has not yet had a chance to obtain and read the full record of the reasons for judgment, I imagine that as a good minister he at least telephoned and knows some of the reasons for judgment.

While the minister did not have the chance to hear the appeal, as I did, I would ask if he would, under the conditions that exist, make a clear statement that it is not the intention of this government to appeal that decision, and that the government will give very serious consideration to the question of making reparation for the very tragic and serious damage which has been sustained by Dr. Treu as a result of the experiences which, from my observation in reading the evidence, appear to result from bureaucratic bungling and ineptitude.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would advise the hon. member that we obtained a copy of the judgment at noon today. I instructed the law officers of the Crown to examine this judgment immediately and to report to me as expeditiously as possible. I expect to be able to answer the hon. member very soon indeed.

As to the second part of his question, I would indicate to him, as I am sure he knows, that in that instance, as in many other instances of prosecutions before the courts, there was a preliminary inquiry at which a prima facie case was found with regard to the possibility of an offence having been committed. Second, there was a judgment at the trial division convicting of an offence. This judgment has now been reversed by the Court of Appeal. That is where the matter stands at this time. This is the way the rule of law applies in this country.

Mr. Baldwin: Before making a decision in that regard, I trust the minister will bear in mind that investigations were launched and took place over a year and a half, costing several hundred thousand dollars. The government was prepared to spend that much money in this case.

My supplementary question is this. Bearing in mind that this decision follows several decisions of courts in the United Kingdom dealing with the Official Secrets Act, and that in both countries the courts have universally taken exception to the rather heavy-handed and frequently intimidating and discriminatory use of the Official Secrets Act by governments in both countries in using this act, will the minister agree with the words of one British justice that it is about time parts of this act should be pensioned off?

Would he also agree that a committee should be appointed to examine these decisions and this act and recommend to the House that this medieval legislation be brought into conformity with modern ideas of equity and justice?

Mr. Lalonde: As the hon. member has indicated, the Official Secrets Act goes back many years in both countries. At the present time, a committee of officials is at work reviewing the Official Secrets Act. It has been engaged in this work for the last few months. I hope its review will be concluded in the next while and that it will lead to proposed amendments which would be brought before the House for study and improvement if possible.

NATIONAL REVENUE

ALLEGED DUMPING OF SOVIET-MADE AUTOMOBILES ON CANADIAN MARKET—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue, but in his absence I will direct it to his parliamentary secretary.

In view of the fact that Soviet-made Lada automobiles are selling on the Canadian market for approximately $4,000 each, and that apparently the retail price in the Soviet Union is approximately $10,000, would the hon. gentleman have this matter investigated and, if the price gap is confirmed, take the necessary steps leading to the imposition of anti-dumping duties on these cars?

[Translation]

Mr. Yves Demers (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue and Minister of State (Small Business)): Mr. Speaker, I want to advise the hon. member that there has been no formal investigation to determine if there is dumping of these vehicles. This type of investigation under the Anti-dumping Act would normally be undertaken at the request of Canadian vehicle manufacturers. To date, there has been no such request.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE TO RECOMMENDATIONS OF OVERVIEW COMMITTEE REPORT

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to return, if I may, to the subject of the Tier II report and direct a further question to the Deputy Prime Minister. Surely he would agree that the 500 men and women from the private sector and the labour sector who participated in this review are fair-minded men and women of considerable judgment.

I ask the minister whether, in response to the very serious charges made, he is not at least prepared to admit that the principal recommendations in the report have been treated somewhat lightly and that by agreeing in principle, or in part, and then going on to say that steps are already in place to achieve the goal sought by the recommendations, the government has jeopardized the services of people of some distinction in the two sectors concerned?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I readily agree with the hon. member that the 500 persons who took part in the examination of the 23 sectoral studies were serious and that they made a very good contribution. Their recommendations were considered and the government has made a careful response to each of them.

I believe that if the hon. member examines the situation, he will find that in many instances recommendations or views put forward by the Overview Committee were accepted by the government either in whole or in part. In other instances it was found that ideas put forward by the committee were already in effect or were capable of implementation through current programs. I, personally, do not find any basis for complaint against the government for making a careful and serious response to the Overview Committee. We believe the recommendations were important but we believe the consultative process is equally important.

We shall do everything possible to remove any misunderstanding which may have accounted for some of the reports which have been made to the House today, because I believe only a misunderstanding could be the basis for the kind of criticism we have heard.

Mr. Forrestall: Surely the members of the Overview Committee were aware, for example, of the existence of the document "Energy Strategy for Canada—A Policy for Self-Reliance" when they recommended that a national energy policy be developed by the federal government in consultation with the provinces and the industry concerned. Surely the minister will accept that the ladies and gentlemen connected with those sectors of our economy were fully aware of that document and yet, believing it was not sufficient to meet present Canadian requirements, put forward recommendations calling for the development of an energy policy.

Why would the government shoot it down? Why does the government persist in terming it a misunderstanding, if it accepts the proposition that the Overview Committee is composed of well-informed men and women and that its opinions are important?

Mr. MacEachen: I have never attempted in my answers to escape from the fact that in certain instances there is a difference of opinion between the views of the Overview Committee and the view of the government. The Overview Committee stated its belief that the government ought to develop what it called an energy policy. We have countered and replied by saying that there are in place the elements of an energy policy as set out in "Energy Strategy for Canada—A Policy for Self-Reliance."

We have also pointed out that in certain areas of the proposals made by the Overview Committee, there are strong differences of opinion among the provinces as to which policies ought to be followed, for example, with regard to pricing, and that it is not possible in certain instances for the government to move forward with the unanimous support of the provinces. Only yesterday we noted how difficult it was for members of the opposition to put together an energy policy on pricing as we heard from western and eastern members who were taking somewhat different views.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT LARGE CORPORATIONS BE PREVENTED FROM PROFITEERING

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. An hour ago Statistics Canada reported that industrial corporate profits in the final quarter of last year, 1978, went up by an astounding 39 per cent, based on increased sales of only 13.6 per cent.

In light of the fact that the cost of living went up by 8.9 per cent and that the average wage increase was only about 6 per cent, and bearing in mind the desire of the Prime Minister that all Canadians restrain their incomes, I should like to ask the minister whether he will now urge the large corporations of this country to rescind price increases which result in large, usury-type profits?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I do not know what report the hon. member is referring to, but I received a report at noon put out by the Anti-Inflation Board, entitled "A Study of Profits and Profit Margins in the Food Industry." It does not say what the hon. member says. It is an update of the report the AIB made last fall. It says that over-all food processing industry sample profit margins remained unchanged at 3.3 per cent for the nine-month period ending September, 1978.

With respect to food distribution, it says the profit margin for the first nine months of 1978 averaged 1.30 per cent, up from 1.21 per cent in 1977. This compares to 1.67 per cent over the period 1971-1977. There are increases, but not of the kind mentioned by the hon. member. Further to his question, we do intend to hold meetings with people in the food industry to discuss some of these problems.

Mr. Nystrom: At one time the minister used to say he would look into things. Now, he cannot even hear. My question related to a report from Statistics Canada which came to me at about one o'clock. It reported that industrial corporate profits in general had risen by 39 per cent in the fourth quarter of last year. Will the minister now urge the corporations to rescind price increases which have led to profits of this type which can be described as usurious?

● (1450)

Mr. Allmand: I apologize to the hon. member, I thought he was referring to profits in the food industry. Sometimes it is difficult to hear in the House. I have not yet seen the report to which he referred. I would like to read it before making any statement on it.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REPORT OF OVERVIEW COMMITTEE—REASON FOR ABSENCE OF MINISTERS

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister who in responses to questions by the hon. member for York-Simcoe and others has demonstrated his lack of knowledge with respect to the report and therefore demonstrated a lack of seriousness in the government's response to the report.

My question to him is this. In a matter as serious as this, dealing with the economics and future of this country and supposedly continuing the dialogue, as the government has put it, would the minister explain why the House of Commons, on the date when this document is released, is faced with the absence of nine economic ministers plus the Prime Minister? If there is a reason why those nine economic ministers are missing, I certainly would like to hear it and so would the country.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I accept any criticism the hon. member might make about my lack of knowledge on this or any other subject, but I would point out to him that my responses were based on the report itself, unlike the questions that were asked by his colleagues which were based totally on the press release of the Canadian Labour Congress.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: I believe if the opposition had any knowledge of this subject, they might be able to develop independent questions instead of relying on what might be construed by some people as a not entirely non-partisan document.

The Prime Minister and nine economic ministers are in the city of Toronto today on public business—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: —meeting, today and tomorrow, with quite a large number of public interest groups. Of course, the President of the Board of Economic Ministers made this particular report public today, which I hope will be a matter of broad public discussion.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): The economic life of this country is extremely important and I would think the government would await the presence of these economic ministers in the House so they could be questioned on the day the report is released.

There is another matter, however. Has the government, in this report, conspired to mislead the people in this country with respect to the work of this government; and I deal with the whole question of the commodity tax revenue? The government in its response has implied, at page 25, that this committee has a reference to deal with the commodity tax review. In fact, we have tried to get the government to put in a reference, and they have said, "After the committee has finished its review." The government has attempted to imply that the commodity tax review is before parliament. That is not true.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): When does the government intend to move on that review?

Mr. MacEachen: In reply to the hon. member, I would like to say that my reading of the report controverts entirely the implication which the hon. member has drawn.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

RAILWAYS

RESTORATION OF RAIL LINK BETWEEN NORTHERN AND SOUTHERN ONTARIO

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport, but in his absence I will put it to his parliamentary secretary.

I should like to know whether the Minister of Transport is aware of the serious problem which has been created by the VIA Rail schedule for those people in northern Ontario who live along the CNR main line west of Capreol. Access by rail to Toronto, the political and commercial capital of the province, has become difficult and at times nearly impossible because of inadequate transfer arrangements. What action is the Minister of Transport able or willing to take to help restore an essential rail link between northern and southern Ontario?

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the minister has been made aware of the situation and has requested VIA Rail to look into it. VIA officials, I have been told, are studying the problem now and any change which would be requested would be referred to the CTC for approval.

NATIONAL UNITY

REPORTED STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice.

It has to do with a minor mathematical problem. The minister will enlighten the House. Yesterday the minister answered questions asked by my leader and by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands. I think I saw the article published in the Reader's Digest which mentioned four-fifths of the program of the Parti Québécois and another fifth, which equals 100 per cent, in my view. To that the minister answered that it is out of the question to negotiate sovereignty. So I would ask him today—because he certainly had time to read that article—whether he can tell us if the newsman reported his statement accurately and, if not, I would let him answer my question?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no, and I gave notice to the House that I would raise a question of privilege at 3 p.m. on that matter.

Mr. La Salle: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

When the minister says the answer is no, does that mean that the newsman did not accurately report his statements?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I shall demonstrate that at three o'clock.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

OVERVIEW COMMITTEE REPORT—CRITICISM OF CLC TO RESPONSE OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister who in answer to one of my colleagues earlier today with respect to the Overview Committee report on labour and business said that a careful and serious response has been given to that report. The Deputy Prime Minister went on to talk about the consultative process.

In view of the fact that the CLC stated today that the federal government never gave the Overview Committee the opportunity to have a detailed dialogue on its report in the long discussions that went into the construction of its recommendations, is the Deputy Prime Minister saying that there was a careful and serious response through the consultative process, or is he saying that the CLC statement is false?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I gather that the debate would be about what constitutes a detailed examination or a detailed dialogue, but the hon. member should recall the nature of this process. It began with 23 sectoral studies which were launched by the Prime Minister and the provincial premiers. These sectoral studies were then examined by the Overview Committee, which made recommendations on the sectoral studies. They were presented to the government, and it is at this time that the government has prepared its response to the recommendations.

If the hon. member reads the report, he will understand that it is a careful, well developed response to these serious recommendations. This is but one step in the dialogue. The hon. member should look at the title of this document, which is "Action for Industrial Growth—Continuing the Dialogue". The dialogue has not ceased and it is hoped that those who participated in the Overview Committee will continue the dialogue by making their response to what is contained in this document.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister said that this is just one step in the dialogue. For a number of years we have been hearing from the government about steps in the dialogue with labour, the result of which has been the withdrawal of labour from the Economic Council of Canada and from the Canada Labour Relations Council, and now the warning that the Congress, as is stated in its press release, is forced to reconsider its participation in future exercises of this type.

Is the Deputy Prime Minister prepared to make a commitment, now, to meet again with the labour and business side to reconsider what is clearly, on the basis of the allegations that have been made today, a shallow and inconsiderate response to the Overview Committee?

● (1500)

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I reject entirely the hon. member's description of this particular report. It is the very opposite of a shallow and superficial document. If it had been regarded as such by the Canadian Labour Congress, the Congress would not have reacted so strongly and politically by describing it as a pre-election document. One does not describe a document as being shallow and superficial unless one finds something very worth-while in it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SUGGESTION OVERSEAS ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL RECEIVE FREE MAILING PRIVILEGES

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. In view of the fact that certain of our armed forces personnel posted overseas have free mailing privileges, will the minister advise the House whether he has had any discussions with the Postmaster General with a view to offering all armed forces personnel posted overseas free mailing privileges?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am unaware of free mailing privileges which are available to the armed forces. Armed forces personnel are treated in the same way as any other citizen of Canada abroad. I would be happy to look into this matter to see the import of the hon. member's question, but I do not think this is a step which would be recommended at this time.

The armed forces are paid well. They are paid at the same level as the public service of Canada. We want to make certain that they continue to be paid well and that they keep up with the cost of living, but I have no intention of extending free mailing privileges to the armed forces, or even requesting it.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ABSENCE OF MINISTERS—PROPOSED MOTION TO ADJOURN

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a different point. In view of the fact that every economic minister is absent from this House, I move that this House do now adjourn.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the hon. member have a supplementary question?

Mr. Elzinga: I move that this House do now adjourn.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): There is a motion on the floor.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will know that I recognized him during the course of the question period. A motion to adjourn is always in order, according to the Standing Orders of the House. However, such a motion must be put forward, as I have ruled on more than one occasion in the past, at a time when a member has the floor for the purpose of putting a motion, which is not done during the question period. When a member has the floor at a time at which motions are received, then that motion is always receivable.

PRIVILEGE

MR. LALONDE—ARTICLE APPEARING IN "READER'S DIGEST"

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Yesterday in this House I was asked questions by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) concerning an article which attributed a certain statement to me. I read that article overnight. I would like to say that to my knowledge I have never been interviewed by the journalist for Reader's Digest who wrote this article.

I checked my public statements over the last six months, and the only possible source of anything approaching such a statement as the one read in this House by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands would have been on the occasion of a well attended press conference in Montreal on October 6 last. That press conference was weil reported at the time. I indicated repeatedly during that press conference that there could be no question of negotiating sovereignty-association in any way, shape or form, and one piece of evidence of this is the Ottawa Citizen of October 7. This was only one among several other quotations in the newspapers at the time. The Ottawa Citizen said, and I quote:

> Lalonde reaffirmed that an administration under Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau would not enter into negotiations on sovereignty-association if the province chose that option in a referendum expected late next year or early in 1980.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: The article continues:

> "—We will not negotiate sovereignty-association," Lalonde said. "We do not believe it's a workable solution."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: I read the transcript of the whole press conference and found no trace of the statement attributed to me. I can only conclude that the statement was not made. In fact, the section of the article in Reader's Digest where one finds the statement attributed to me talks about the flexibility of federalism, not about possible negotiations about sovereignty-association. Everybody present at the conference understood that what was referred to were the specific policy proposals of the PQ in various fields of government activity. I indicated that out of these 85 per cent could be implemented under the BNA Act as it stands at the present time.

As to the other 15 per cent, amendments like those we have been discussing with all the provinces over the last few months would be required; for example, amendments dealing with resources, marriage and divorce, communications, indirect taxation, etc., or there could be implementation by the federal government after consultation with the provinces.

In order to make the record perfectly clear and beyond any doubt on this subject I would like to read into the record an excerpt of what I actually said at that conference. The first statement was in French:

[Translation]

> Finally, to deal with the federal system, is it true that it has been so bad for Quebec in 1867?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not want to restrict the minister's right to do what he is doing. We have traditionally permitted members of the House of Commons to rise in their place to complain that they had been inaccurately reported to the point of privilege or perhaps contempt of the House. In this particular case, however, I think the hon. minister is going another step. He is indicating, first, that he did not give the interview which was allegedly reported by Reader's Digest, and that is the main point. The second point is that Reader's Digest may have used some other conference—which is not certain, obviously—as the source of its material, and the minister now seeks to put on the record the contents of that conference. I think the House has to take the minister's word as to what he said at that time, but I think it would be extending procedures too much to permit him now to read into the record his statements at that time.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, the statement which has been attributed to me made specific reference to certain percentages which I did refer to during the press conference. I have with me the actual text of what was said, and I submit, with respect, that in order to make sure that the House will have the full story, that I can make my question of privilege quite clear and that there will be no doubt later on about what was said, I should be allowed to put on the record a short excerpt of what I actually said. I want there to be no doubt about what was said on this particular subject. I think it is very relevant to the point of this debate.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If we were dealing with a situation in which the source had been identified in the newspaper or magazine article—for example, a statement by the minister—I think the minister would be entitled to read that statement into the record. However, that is not in fact the case. It is a slightly different case. The minister is saying, in the first place, that he gave no interview to the magazine and, in the second place, that the only source, therefore, must have been some press conference. The minister therefore wishes to read his comments at that press conference into the record. I think the minister is entitled—as he has done or may wish to do—to give to the House a précis of what he said at that time, but I do not think he is entitled to read now the record of that press conference.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, what I indicated quite clearly was that four-fifths of what the Parti Québécois was proposing could be implemented under the existing constitution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: As far as the rest was concerned, it could be implemented via discussions with the federal government—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: —and in no case could there be negotiations about sovereignty-association. I therefore regret that the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands has been unable to find bedfellows for the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) and the Leader of the Opposition, who have been saying that they would negotiate sovereignty-association and that they would rather negotiate with Mr. Lévesque than with Mr. Ryan. We on this side of the House will leave flimflamming and flip-flopping to the Conservative party.

[Mr. Speaker.]

• (1510)

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, on the same question of privilege, having listened to the minister's explanation of the quotation I gave in the House yesterday, I can only confirm that he, indeed, is confirming the very words I used.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: I would like to point out to the minister, sir, that the reason I raised it, and the reason I know he is now presenting it as a question of privilege, is that when he used the terms "four-fifths of the Parti Québécois program" and "one-fifth of the Parti Québécois program"—in fact, the document issued by the Parti Québécois, which means the Parti Québécois program is called "Programme Officiel du Parti Québécois"—the program of the Parti Québécois includes a great many things which I hope the minister, indeed, would never negotiate or would never want to see implemented.

That program, in effect, says, according to him, that the Government of Canada would agree to the admission of the province of Quebec to the United Nations; that the Government of Canada, according to the minister, would agree to have all the fiscal policies and all the taxes paid to the Government of Canada transferred to the government of Quebec. That program of which he says four-fifths would be implemented under federalism and one-fifth he could negotiate would include the transfer of all Arctic lands above Quebec to the province of Quebec.

That is the reason, sir, I raised the question. I wanted to give the minister an opportunity to deny it. He did not deny it yesterday and he has not denied it today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: In terms of the procedural disposition of the matter raised by the minister, it is a common aspect of our practice here that members who feel themselves aggrieved in this way by an inaccurate or improper reporting have the opportunity to rise and say so in the House. Those involved have been given a brief opportunity to do that. It is not within the classical definition of privilege unless the reporting is contemptuous of a member or contemptuous of the House. The hon. minister has indicated that the article which was referred to was not as a result of an interview with him. I think that is a very serious aspect of the matter which ought not to be overlooked.

If it was reported in such a way as to indicate that it was as a result of an interview, that would be a matter of a rather serious grievance. Nevertheless, whether it goes that route or beyond it, it still does not in my view constitute a contempt of the House or a contempt of the member. Therefore, on strict procedural grounds the matter does not fall within a question of privilege, and I think is concluded from that point of view.

I have two other notices of questions of privilege. The hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) has given me notice of a question of privilege which relates to proceedings in the committee. I have given him the benefit of whatever research we have developed since receiving his notice. This raises a fundamental problem in respect of proceedings in committee, or difficulties regarding procedural rulings in a committee, which are not generally within the purview of the Chair. However, I will give the hon. member an opportunity to try to persuade me otherwise.

The second notice of a question of privilege I have received relates to a grievance by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) in respect of an inability to obtain documents, a matter which is also generally handled by way of an application for documents. I will also give him a chance to persuade me otherwise.

MR. CROUSE—CONDUCT OF CHAIRMAN OF STANDING COMMITTEE ON FISHERIES AND FORESTRY

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I know you will appreciate that during my 22 years in the House this is the first time I have asked for the privilege of raising a matter of this type. I do so because I feel that my privileges have been infringed upon even though, albeit, in a committee.

I rise, therefore, on this matter because of the conduct last evening of the chairman of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry. His interpretation of relevancy in respect of questioning on Bill C-35, which is a government omnibus bill on government reorganization, was so restrictive as to inhibit me and members of the committee in our understanding of the purpose and implementation of the bill.

While I appreciate that all debate must be relevant, it is possible to enforce the rule to a point where debate is throttled and there is infringement on freedom of speech. Beauchesne, and I have checked—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before the hon. member goes any further into the details of the difficulties he had in the standing committee, let me say that my difficulty from a procedural viewpoint is this. Let us suppose I accept the statement he just made, that the chairman of a standing committee was so restrictive that it was an infringement almost upon freedom of speech, or however the hon. member wants to put that. My difficulty is, from a procedural point of view how do I have anything to do with that from this chair? Is it not clearly established on the precedents I have provided the hon. member that his recourse or remedy has to be exhausted first in the committee, and that when the report of the committee, one way or another, comes to this House I can then deal with it, but not until then?

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your difficulty and I am not trying to be obstinate. We spent an hour and a half trying to resolve the problem in the committee last evening without arriving at any conclusion. I relate my request to Beauchesne's new fifth edition which states:

299(1) Relevancy is not easy to define. For borderline cases, the member should be given the benefit of the doubt.

I submit, sir, that this benefit of the doubt was not granted to the five members of the opposition, or even government members, last evening by the chairman of that committee. I look to you, sir, for guidance in this matter.

We were dealing with Bill C-35, which establishes a whole new fisheries department. It sets out its powers, and alludes to jurisdictional conflicts with other departments. It provides for negotiations with the provinces. It requires an annual report, it revamps the fisheries research board, details the qualifications for members and sets out the board's purpose. It is impossible to determine the possible effects of this bill without setting it in the context of departmental policies. This is what we were trying to do last evening, and I refer to all members of the committee, not just members of the official opposition.

The second reading debate in this House was wide open. It is up to a committee chairman, I submit, to enforce strict relevance on amendments but not during the general exploratory, investigative phase of a committee's hearings. Committee members ought to be able to discuss anything which might form the basis of an amendment, and the scope for amendment of a bill defining the structure or scope of a department is fairly wide.

This bill is similar in purpose, although wider in terms, to the government reorganization bill of 1971 which originally set up the Department of the Environment. That bill was debated in committee of the whole and members had no difficulty making statements and asking questions to place the bill in its proper context. The chairman did enforce relevancy, but not in as ridiculous a manner as at present in the standing committee.

If it can be ruled that actions by persons outside this House can inhibit members from doing their duty, surely the House cannot go on forever holding the view that no degree of manipulation of the rules or the silencing of members can ever be considered improper. At some point there must be a need to rule that misuse of the rules is so grotesque that it is lifted from the context of procedural disagreement and can be fairly seen as a direct interference with the ability of members to speak freely to the question before them.

This is such a case and, therefore, I would ask that the use of the rules of relevance to throttle legitimate questioning and discussion on Bill C-35 by the chairman of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member will realize on reflection that essentially what he is asking the Chair to do—and this, of course, is the reason it wisely has never been attempted in the past—is sit on an appeal of a decision of a chairman of a standing committee, without hearing any of the evidence or being in any way able to hear any of the testimony or examine the problem.

I can only tell the hon. member that, in conformity with the precedents I have supplied him, I really have no other choice except to tell him and other members involved that they must pursue and exhaust the remedy in committee and in some way initiate a report to this House before this Chair can deal with it. Procedurally, I am in no position to accept and, therefore, in no position to comment, either for or against, on the proposition he has put forward this afternoon.

● (1520)

MR. McKENZIE—FAILURE OF MINISTER OF TRANSPORT TO PROVIDE DOCUMENTATION TO HOUSE OF COMMONS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate having this second opportunity to present my case. Yesterday I pointed out to the House that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) has refused to give me complete documentation on the crash of a Beech 95A aircraft in Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, in March, 1978. I pointed out that the minister had submitted full documentation on the crash to the coroner's inquest in Saskatoon but that he has refused to make the same information available to the House of Commons.

The minister gave a long answer yesterday, but it did not pertain to the particular point I raised. At page 3409 of yesterday's Hansard he said:

There are certain things of a confidential nature which come before the Minister of Transport and which cannot be made public.

I have not asked for anything of that nature. I have merely asked for the full documentation on this particular crash. If the minister can make this documentation available to a coroner's inquiry, the report of which is made public, then he can make it available to the House of Commons.

Therefore, I would like to submit the following motion:

That the conduct of the Minister of Transport in providing to a coroner's inquest documentation which he will not provide to the House of Commons be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, the committee to have the power to call for persons, papers and documents and to report back to the House.

Your Honour has mentioned that there are other methods of obtaining information from ministers. We have tried all of them. I have been trying to obtain information from this minister on other air crashes since last October, but it is most difficult to obtain any information on any type of matter from the Minister of Transport. I would like you, sir, to entertain my motion.

Mr. Speaker: I have given the matter of the documents referred to by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) careful consideration since receiving his notice. Of course, I was familiar with some of the background because of the question of privilege which he raised yesterday on what was essentially the same subject.

The matter raised yesterday was different in that the hon. member was raising the point that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) had in a previous answer indicated that basically all documentation was on file or could be obtained, and the hon. member took issue with that answer. That point was disposed of yesterday when the hon. minister returned to that answer and defended it in this House, thereby, in my opinion, putting it into the area of a disagreement or argument between the two members and thus taking it out of the area of privilege.

As a result of that answer yesterday the hon. member now says that the minister confirmed that a document had been surrendered to a coroner's inquest, but that this document has not been made available to him, thus putting the hon. member in a position where his privileges are affected thereby.

The situation with respect to the acquisition of documents, as the hon. member will know, is that first of all in the House of Commons members may make application by way of a notice of motion for the production of documents. This is done on a regular basis and ministers, I am sure to the chagrin of opposition members, stand in their place and indicate that they are not going to produce their documents for various reasons.

If I were to grant that that matter were to become a question of privilege because the minister was refusing on some grounds to produce that document to a member, I think that I would be stretching the limit of the definition of privilege beyond recognition. If I were to decide that a prima facie refusal by a minister to produce a document became privilege, I would be altering the law or privilege considerably.

The hon. member does not actually say that he has made an application pursuant to motions for the production of documents and that the minister subsequently has refused to produce them. He does say in his argument that the minister has refused his other request for information, but he does not identify this particular one.

In addition, the hon. member supports his argument by referring to the fact that, if the document can be produced in a coroner's court, then it ought to be produced to the hon. member. That may very well be so, but it certainly does not follow that because the court has the power to subpoena a document, or have it produced to it or call as a witness the person who prepared the document, and thereby have access to the information, that that power necessarily lies in the hands of every member of parliament in the discharge of his obligations. Again, I think that it would be a considerable alteration of privilege to grant the hon. member's request.

If the hon. member has not already exhausted the other available devices open to him in securing this report, by way of a motion to produce the document, questions to the minister during question period and so on, I suggest that he ought to do so and perhaps in due time there may be more light shed on this argument. But on the basis of the arguments put forward today by the hon. member, I cannot bring it within the ambit of privilege.

MR. NIELSEN—REQUEST FOR EXPANDED REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order which I direct to the government House leader, on February 14 I asked him if, in view of the fact that the House had unanimously passed the second report of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, he would present expanded terms of reference to that committee so as to reactivate the subcommittee on penitentiaries and permit it to travel to the major institutions in the country in an effort to head off what is shaping up to be a major series of disturbances in the system again. He said that he would take the matter up with the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais) as to what the next step ought to be.

Could the House leader now inform the House whether he has reached a conclusion to bring in expanded terms of reference in the interest of peace within the system?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there may be a misunderstanding between the hon. member and myself. I had assumed that the matter had been attended to or was capable of resolution under the report that had been submitted by the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. If I am mistaken in that which was my understanding, I will review the matter again.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I would like to explain to the minister that the second report was unanimously concurred in by the House and that it called for an expansion of the terms of reference so that the subcommittee could be reactivated. This is what I am asking about.

PRIVILEGE

MR. McKINNON—VARIANCE IN ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

Mr. Speaker: There is another unfinished matter of privilege before the House on which we reserved the right of the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) to make a contribution.

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on that question of privilege which I raised last Wednesday concerning conflicting answers which I received to questions in the House. At that time the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Danson) made a short reply and you, sir, gave the minister additional time to prepare a contribution on this question. Later that day I advised the Clerk of the House that I would not be here last Thursday or Friday, but would be here on Monday, February 19, and days following. I was rather surprised on my return on Saturday to learn that the minister had seen fit to ignore the usual courtesy and had risen in his place and delivered his reply in my absence on Thursday last. The bright side is that I have had ample time to read his reply carefully.

Frankly, Mr. Speaker I had hoped that the minister might be able to clarify the situation, perhaps by stating that one of the replies had been an honest mistake. Instead, he chose to muddy the situation by quoting a plethora of selected dates about extraneous happenings which had little to do with the central issue.

That issue can be encapsulated into a very few words. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said on November 14 that Chancellor Schmidt and others in mid-July had asked for a few more months and that the government felt it would be willing to give them a few more months. The minister said in Hansard at page 867 on November 7, 1978:

> The vendors asked for additional time to submit.

It should be noted that both of these remarks were made in November, some four months after Chancellor Schmidt asked for an extension and, incidentally, if we accept the minister's reply of last Thursday, we must believe that Chancellor Schmidt was asking for this indulgence two weeks after it was granted—a most unlikely happening.

Now we get the opposite answer. The question was on the order paper and asked:

> Did Chancellor Schmidt personally or some of the other bidders ask for a few more months beyond the August 1 deadline?

The answer was no. I have avoided, in the interests of simplicity, mentioning all the other doubts and questions raised by the rambling dissertation of the minister last Thursday. My case remains the same now as then. Wherein does the truth lie? Did Chancellor Schmidt ask for and receive a few more months, question No. 1, or did he not, which is question No. 2?

The likelihood of his asking for additional time in July, which he had already been granted in June, and such time to last for only two weeks, as posited by the minister in his reply, cannot be taken seriously. I presume, sir, that you will consider the question of privilege as seriously as I do, noting that the minister did not deny any of the statements. If you decide there is a prima facie case, I will be prepared to move the motion I read last Wednesday.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Over the period of time this question has endured before the House, I have heard the hon. member twice, I think, so I believe I should hear the minister a second time and then make a decision.

It seems to me, before finalizing the matter, that the question I have to decide is a simple one. The hon. member has cited two answers which he says are in conflict with each other. The question that I have to decide, therefore, is whether one of those answers was a misleading answer, and, if so, whether it was a deliberately misleading answer. Those are the two questions I have to decide.

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal with the lengthy preamble of the hon. member with reference to his absence from the House. I thought I explained that with the courtesy which I think one member should show to another in this House. I think that courtesy should be mutual.

I had not been made aware that the hon. member would not be present. Indeed, I made a commitment to his House leader, so I suggest that they should get together. Obviously on that side of the House they do not get together on very many things. They should be known as the "Variety club".

I did, as committed, give my answer the next day, being well aware that there are very good reasons for members not being present in the House all the time. I would have hoped that the hon. member would have extented the same courtesy in replying that I have extended and that I think all hon. members should extend.

I still fail to see where there is conflict. I stand by the answer I gave on February 15, at page 3258 of Hansard. I know the hon. member has difficulty understanding these things and adding up dates, and has taken a long time to get around to doing this. If there is anything wrong, there was no intent to be misleading. I do not think it was misleading. I think my answer was accurate and speaks for itself. I think my answer of February 15 should be quite clear. If it is not, I would be very happy to clarify it. We could get our staffs together and arrange a date when we are both in the House so that there would be absolutely no question in the hon. member's mind.

Mr. Speaker: As is so frequently the case, the minister has at least put a procedural point to rest for the moment by saying that if there has been any misleading in respect of these two answers—that is the contention of the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon), and I do not make a judgment on that—which he says are not in conflict with one another, it was not intentional on his part. I have to accept that. It is a long-standing tradition of this House that it has always accepted the word given by any member of the House and that, if there has been a misleading of the House, such misleading is argued or is in dispute; but regardless of the dispute, that if such a misleading has taken place, it has not been intentional and that takes it out of the area of privilege. Therefore, I think it closes the matter from the point of view of the Chair.

MOTION TO ADJOURN

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that there was a document released today involving the economic life of this country and that nine economic ministers plus the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) chose not to be here, and the government chose to issue that document on a date when they would not be here, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga):

That this House do now adjourn.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Baker, Grenville-Carleton), which was negatived on the following division:

CANADIAN COUNCIL OF CHRISTIANS AND JEWS—OPEN HOUSE CANADA PROGRAM

Question No. 292—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What are the names and job designations of all persons concerned with granting funds to the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews in connection with the programme "Open House Canada"?

2. (a) What are the names of the persons signing contracts pertaining to the Programme on behalf of the (i) government (ii) Canadian Council of Christians and Jews (b) what are all the details of any such contracts?

3. To the knowledge of the government, how many written inquiries were received by the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews from the public in connection with the Programme?

4. Has the government received any written inquiries from the public in regard to the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews in connection with the Programme?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): 1. The people concerned with granting funds to the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews in connection with the Open House Canada Program are:

The head, project support and planning, Open House Canada

The chief, social communications

The director, citizens' participation

The associate director, citizens' participation

The assistant under secretary of state, citizenship and bilingualism development

The assistant under secretary of state, cultural affairs
The senior assistant under secretary of state

These officials are involved at various stages of the grants consideration process; approval of grants rests with the Secretary of State.

2. (a) (i) One contract was signed with the CCCJ during the fiscal year 1977-78 under the Open House Canada program for the provision of field support services. The senior assistant under secretary of state signed this contract on behalf of Her Majesty after approval had been given by the Secretary of State.

(ii) The president, signed on behalf of the council.

(b) The contract called for the operation by CCCJ of a 24-hour, 365-day "on-call" service to provide assistance as required to Open House Canada participants. This would include provision of information, re-routing or accommodation of participants encountering travel problems in transit, and other crisis intervention as appropriate.

For the operation of this service, it was agreed that CCCJ would receive a professional fee of $44,000 and actual documented expenses not to exceed $72,000. In fact, CCCJ waived payment of a portion of its fee so that the total amounts paid were:

Professional fee	$29,000
Expenses	6,774.49
Total	$35,774.49

3. According to the final report of the council on its performance of the contract, some 60 written inquiries, 100 telephone inquiries and 25 visits from prospective participants were received.

4. The Department of the Secretary of State has no record of having received any such inquiries.

SECRETARY OF STATE—CANADIAN COUNCIL OF CHRISTIANS AND JEWS

Question No. 293—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Were funds given by the Department of the Secretary of State to the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews between the years 1974 and 1978 and, if so, what was the amount involved in each year?

2. What was the name of the program and the amount to which such funds were dispersed?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State):

Calendar Year	Grants	Contract
1974	$ 61,250
1975	56,940
1976	23,051
1978 (Nov 9/78)	767,013

OPEN HOUSE CANADA

Question No. 294—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the government carry out an audit of the funds given to the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews in regard to the Program "Open House Canada" and, if so (a) on what date (b) what were the results or recommendations of such audit?

2. To the knowledge of the government, in what Canadian cities does the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews maintain offices?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): 1. The government has received a full and detailed accounting of the expenditures of grants provided by Open House Canada to the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews. A formal government audit has not been carried out as such audits are not required for grants funding. The accounts of the CCCJ are, of course, audited annually by the Council's own auditors, and copies of its most recent financial statement have been made available to the department. Regarding its 1977-78 service contract, CCCJ has agreed to make all relevant records and supporting documentation available to the department for audit at any time.

2. To our knowledge, as of October 25, 1978, the Council maintains offices in: Halifax, Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto, Winnipeg, Calgary, Vancouver.

MULTICULTURALISM—STATEMENT OF MINISTER

Question No. 583—Mr. Mitges:

1. Did the Minister of State for Multiculturalism make a statement on June 15, 1978, to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts, to the effect that the budget of the Multiculturalism Directorate for the fiscal year 1978-79 would be $7.544 million and, if so, has the government subsequently made the decision to decrease this proposed budget?

2. If it is the government's intention to decrease the overall budget of the Directorate, which programmes will be affected and by what amounts?

Hon. Norman A. Cafik (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): 1. Yes, the minister made the above statement. There is no decrease in the directorate's budget for the fiscal year 1978-79 and none is intended.

2. Not applicable.

NATIONAL DEBT—PROVINCIAL AND MUNICIPAL SHARE

Question No. 665—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. To the knowledge of the government, for each (a) province (b) municipality as a whole, in each province, what was their share of the National Debt on March 31 (i) 1967 (ii) 1978?

2. On March 31 (a) 1967 (b) 1978, what was the total debt of the government, provinces and the municipalities?

Mr. Alan Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): 1. Data on provincial and municipal debt, by province, for the fiscal years 1970-71 to 1975-76 are available in the Statistics Canada publication Consolidated Government Finance, catalogue 68-202. Data on total debt outstanding of provinces and municipalities (no provincial detail) for calendar years 1961 to 1976 are available in Financial Flow Accounts, volume II, catalogue 13-563, data for 1976 (revised) and 1977 and available in catalogue 13-002.

Fiscal Year Ending March 31	Public Debt of the Federal Government[a]		Net Debt of the Federal Government[b]
	$Millions[c]	per cent of GNP[d]	$Millions[c]	per cent of GNP[d]
1967	28,471	46.0	15,535	25.1

[a] The public debt of the federal government consists of all liabilities which appear on the government's statement of assets and liabilities.
[b] The net debt of the federal government is represented by the excess of recorded liabilities over net recorded assets.
[c] Amounts for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1967 have been calculated on a basis consistent with the presentation of assets and liabilities introduced in the Public Accounts of Canada for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977.

With respect to provincial and municipal debt see answer to question 1.

CBC—TV PROGRAMS IN FREDERICTON

Question No. 777—Mr. Howie:

Are there plans by the CBC to expand English language television programming and facilities at Fredericton, New Brunswick and, if so, what are they?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: The CBC has tentative plans for the expansion of English language television facilities at Fredericton, but their extent is dependent upon the outcome of negotiations now in progress with the New Brunswick Broadcasting Company.

MR. ROBERT REMPEL

Question No. 980—Mr. Epp:

Is Mr. Robert Rempel working for Sport Canada and, if so, what is his (a) job description (b) annual salary?

Order Paper Questions

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): In so far as the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) is concerned: Mr. Robert Rempel is not working for Sport Canada.

UNINSURED LOSSES OF EQUIPMENT

Question No. 1,099—Mr. Clarke (Vancouver Quadra):

1. With reference to the uninsured losses of equipment in the Public Service Staff Relations Board detailed at page 9.60, Volume 1 of the 1977-78 Public Accounts of Canada, did the Board take steps to ascertain the present whereabouts of the missing electric typewriters and, if so (a) what were they (b) what was the result of the steps taken?

2. Was the thief apprehended?

3. On what date, in what locations and under what circumstances were the machines stolen?

4. Did the Board undertake procedural changes to ensure that such an incident does not recur and, if so, what were they?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): 1. (a) The Public Service Staff Relations Board reported the thefts to the Ottawa Police for investigation as to the whereabouts of the missing electric typewriters.

(b) The result of the investigation was negative.

2. The thief was not apprehended.

3. Two electric typewriters were stolen from the fifth floor of L'Esplanade Laurier during silent hours (1600 September 13, 1977 to 0730 September 14, 1977). Two electric typewriters were stolen from the fifth floor of L'Esplanade Laurier during silent hours 1600 September 15, 1977 to 0730 September 16, 1977).

4. The following procedural changes were implemented to prevent recurrences:

(a) A security committee was established to review and implement improved security measures;

(b) the installation of dead-bolt locks in addition to existing locks on all access doors was undertaken to prevent recurrences;

(c) additional security guards were employed pending the implementation of improved security measures; and

(d) special doors were installed in stairwells to prevent unauthorized access to government occupied floors.

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Urban Affairs) moved that Bill C-29, to amend the National Housing Act and the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act and to make other related amendments, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity to introduce this bill and—explain how it will help Canadians—find better housing at a more reasonable price.

[English]

I am ashamed to have witnessed the attitude displayed by the loyal opposition in taking up the precious time of this House.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: The minister will know that he is forbidden by the rules of this House to reflect upon the votes of this House, but is the minister four-fifths ashamed or only one-fifth ashamed?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. There is no way in which I can pass judgment because I have not heard a thing.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): He didn't say anything.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is obviously acting like a little kid.

[English]

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I recognized the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) on a point of order, and I hope hon. members will at least give me a chance to hear what he has to say.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, my point of order has two parts. The first is to draw to the attention of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) the very clear rule of this House which prevents him from reflecting upon the vote which has just been cast.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Breau: He was just reflecting on your stupidity.

Mr. Clark: I will wait until hon. members opposite become a little more tranquil.

An hon. Member: You may have to wait.

Mr. Harquail: You are wasting Canadian money.

• (1740)

Mr. Clark: I will wait until they become quiet, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: The second part of my point—

An hon. Member: What a shameful performance.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: I am not sure why they are trying to shout us down so much, Mr. Speaker, but the second part of my point of order is to ask if the Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Urban Affairs in what he said is four-fifths ashamed or simply one-fifth ashamed?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see that you have recognized that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) really has no point of order in his intervention. Indeed, what he has just said is that he does not want me to reflect on the vote that has just been cast. Indeed, I do not want to reflect on it. They lost the time of the House this afternoon and they lost the vote too.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Ouellet: What is important is that the House was supposed to start discussing an important measure that will allow the possibility of having more housing for the low income people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ouellet: It is a piece of legislation that will allow the hundreds and hundreds of municipalities across Canada to have appropriate financing under a federal-provincial scheme that has been agreed upon. They are waiting for the Conservative party to finally allow this bill to be approved by parliament.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I was observing what was going on in the House this afternoon at 4.30 before the vote. I want to tell the people who are watching us on television, and who obviously could not see which members were in the House during the call of the bell, that the Liberals were ready to vote from the start.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I think the minister is really getting away from the topic and that his remarks deal with the vote, which cannot be debated, just as I thought the issue raised by the hon. Leader of the Opposition a bit premature since the minister had perhaps not gone so far as the Leader of the Opposition maintained. Also, his remarks do not concern the bill before us, and I would like him to go back to the issue at hand.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that in its most important aspects this bill implements the new orientation the Canadian government intends to give housing. That orientation is being adopted as a result of the meetings I have held with my provincial colleagues; together, as ministers responsible for housing in Canada, we formulated this new policy. However, Mr. Speaker, I deplore the fact that we should have failed to get from the Opposition, and in particular the Progressive Conservative party, more co-operation and collaboration in adopting this bill posthaste.

An hon. Member: They wasted the time of the House.

Mr. Ouellet: Naturally, we should have liked to have passed this bill in a single day, to have seen it through all its stages; because of the urgency of implementing the program, the bill should have been passed in one day. We were unable to get the co-operation of the Progressive Conservative party in order to do so; in addition they insisted today on wasting the time of the House of Commons, which is another example of the lack co-operation, the irresponsibility of the Tories.

This afternoon, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) behaved like a kid bent on playing hooky. It is obvious he does not have the sense of responsibility one needs to take on the heaviest responsibilities in the land.

An hon. Member: He lacks leadership!

Mr. Ouellet: That man has neither the maturity nor the training to hope to become Prime Minister, and his attitude in the House today proved it clearly.

The provisions in this bill, Mr. Speaker, address specifically great national objectives, the first of which is probably the most important, namely a considerable increase in the number of housing units that meet the needs of Canadians with the lowest incomes.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Why don't you call a judge?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I have just heard the unpleasant innuendo made towards me by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker). That is a typical example of the rubbish he constantly mouths and it clearly reveals the baseness of that member who periodically in the House shows his spite towards other members of the House. To me, he appears to be someone who is totally lacking in parliamentary manners, who behaves in a deplorable manner; I regret this sort of allusion and, Mr. Speaker, I find it is simply disgusting.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to continue my remarks on this bill because I think that beyond the partisan spite of some of the members of the Conservative opposition, there are some objectives and important ideals which enable us to continue our work as parliamentarians and allow us above all to hope that we can settle important problems, particularly those in the field of housing. Our present housing programs, which are undertaken in conjunction with the provincial governments, hardly provide at the moment 19,000 units a year; it is not enough to meet the needs of the country. It is obvious that we must build each year a greater number of units for old and low income people.

That is why the government of Canada undertook to go ahead with a program to speed up housing construction by asking for the co-operation of the provinces, the co-operation of municipal authorities and also the co-operation of all private and public organizations involved in public housing. We set a target of 30,000 housing units a year and I am convinced the new measures proposed in this bill will enable us to reach that target rapidly.

The people who will benefit from the new non-profit housing program are low-income people, women on their own, raising families on their own, old and disabled people. That is in fact our first priority. They are the people we want to help and they are the people to whom we want to give more adequate and more decent housing facilities in Canada.

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, most Canadians are well housed. Whatever yardsticks one may use, they are among the best housed people in the world. In fact, housing production in Canada in recent years has been the highest in our history. During the last four years housing starts in Canada reached an average of nearly 250,000 units. Hon. members who want to compare our accomplishments with a specific standard only have to look at the United States. The Progressive Conservative party tried to take a formula in use in the United States, use it as a political football and come up with some kind of magic formula to meet housing needs in Canada.

Obviously when one compares our accomplishments with that specific norm which exists in the United States, we find that between 1967 and 1977, for example, we built in Canada an average of 10 new housing units per 1,000 people, while for the same period in the United States the proportion was only 6.8 units for the same number of people. Mr. Speaker, not only did our rate of production exceed that of the United States, but it had greater stability and less pronounced year to year variations.

● (1750)

[English]

I would like to look at the proposal which was put forward recently by the Conservative party. It has tried to copy a policy which has existed in the United States for years.

Mrs. Pigott: Successfully.

Mr. Ouellet: Not successfully, but with great difficulty. This policy is being copied by the Conservative party in the hope that it will be more successful in Canada than in the United States. People in Canada realize that the Liberal party has been helping to produce better housing and a greater number of homes and that the terrible scheme which the Conservative party proposes will be regressive.

We are getting short of time, Mr. Speaker, and I would like to discuss further this matter when the debate continues, unless the Conservative party again tries to prevent the House from proceeding in the normal way with its business. There is no doubt that the House leader for the Conservative party will try other tricks to block the normal activities of the House to prevent it from proceeding normally. We cannot have confidence in him. He is obviously trying to prevent the government from proceeding in an effective manner.

Mr. Crombie: How about the bill?

Mr. Ouellet: Before we adjourn at six o'clock, I would like to say that if one looks at the performance of this government in housing—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) is shouting at the Chair from his seat. If he would like to address himself to the Chair, he should seek the floor.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am very much concerned that the government, which has delayed the bringing of this bill forward for one year, is now using its debating time for personal attacks on members of the opposition. I am not the least bit concerned about the personal attacks from the minister, because I consider the source from which they come. I am anxious, however, to get on with the legislation.

Mr. Ouellet: If the House leader for the Conservative party is so anxious to have this bill pass, I hope that he will agree to a specific timetable to pass it before the end of the week or early next week; in other words, that the bill will be dealt with in all its stages and approved. I am sure that he knows that this bill is important to a large number of municipalities across the country. The hon. member also knows that in order to have an appropriate program for the rehabilitation of housing, this bill should be approved. If the opposition House leader is speaking honestly, he should be prepared to tell us now that he is ready to agree to having this bill approved in all its stages within one or two days.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the House for the minister, who is so beside himself with synthetic rage that he had difficulty doing his bargaining on the floor of the House.

Mr. Pinard: He has the right to speak in English.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): When I became the House leader of this party—

Mr. Pinard: What is wrong, just because he speaks slowly in English?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): —I indicated that we did not feel it was our duty as the opposition inordinately to hold up legislation which was important. I will undertake to the House that that will be the attitude of this party as long as it is in opposition, which I hope will not be too long.

I want to give the minister that reassurance. I would also like to say in the course of this debate that I am always concerned when the atmosphere of the House of Commons breaks down into unreasoning partisanship. I hope that the minister will get on with the legislation which he has brought forward. The hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mrs. Pigott) is ready to follow him and to put forward a proposition. In fact, she has been waiting two months for the minister to bring in this legislation.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I realize that it is almost six o'clock, but I have not yet received an assurance from the hon. member that he will co-operate and do his best to speed up the passage of this bill. I hope that we will get his support.

I would like to say something which will point out quite clearly the great performance of the current government in dealing with housing in Canada. A Gallup poll which was taken 11 years ago, in 1968, asked Canadians across the country whether they were satisfied or dissatisfied with the housing situation. That poll indicated at that time that 60 per cent of the people were satisfied, 34 per cent were dissatisfied and 6 per cent did not know.

At the end of 1978 another Gallup poll was taken and the same questions were asked. The results of that poll were: 85.5 per cent of Canadians were satisfied with the housing situation, and 13 per cent were dissatisfied. I think this clearly illustrates the good performance of the Liberal party in terms of housing.

I will continue my remarks when this debate continues. I would call it six o'clock.

Business of the House

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I would just like to know what the business will be for tomorrow.

• (1800)

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should know that tomorrow the House will be dealing with a motion introduced by the Progressive Conservative party.

[English]

Mr. Paproski: That is fine. It is Friday I was looking for. I knew tomorrow was our opposition day.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, in all likelihood, Friday we will continue the consideration of Bill C-29 and in the event of any change, we will try to advise the hon. member before the beginning of the sitting on Friday.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock this House stands adjourned untill two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

STATUS OF WOMEN

ALLEGED FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO PROVIDE EQUAL OPPORTUNITY FOR WOMEN IN PUBLIC SERVICE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, in view of the recently published report of the Advisory Council on the Status of Women, entitled "Women in the Public Service—Barriers to Equal Opportunity", and its total indictment of federal policies and programs to achieve equal opportunity for women, indicating in particular that "the federal government has failed to provide equal opportunity for women in the public service", and they are actually lagging behind the private sector and, in particular, that there is a disturbing reversal in the career assignment program with a reduction from the 30 per cent participation rate for women in 1975 to a 14 per cent participation rate in 1977, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald):

That this government immediately report on, (1) the specific goals that have been in effect since 1975 in respect of the achievement of equal opportunity, department by department; (2) those departments or agencies which have failed to meet their particular objective on a year by year basis; and (3) the annual assessment provided to Treasury Board on the implementation of equal opportunity programs for women in the various departments and agencies.

Mr. Speaker: The introduction of such a motion for debate at this time can only be done with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

REQUEST THAT MORE EFFICIENT MEASURES BE TAKEN TO PROMOTE BILINGUALISM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to move a motion under Standing Order 43.

Considering that the Commissioner of Official Languages has stated that the government should clean its own house before acting as protector of linguistic equality; considering, again according to the commissioner, that the working language in the public service is spoken mainly among lower ranks; and finally, considering that in the commissioner's opinion it is frightening that the government has chosen this moment to reduce by $34 million the budget to promote bilingualism in the provinces, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey):

That the House unanimously urge the Prime Minister of Canada to refrain from deluding Canadians with his fine speeches and, as the commissioner says, to take action.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, such motion can be presented only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

PROPOSED SHERBROOK-McGREGOR OVERPASS IN WINNIPEG—REQUEST FOR DELAY UNTIL STUDY OF RAILWAY RELOCATION UNDERTAKEN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the contents of this motion represent views expressed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) and I hope, therefore, that the House will give consent to its being presented at this time.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom):

That this House notes that the building of a proposed Sherbrook-McGregor overpass in Winnipeg would seriously disturb residents both north and south of the Canadian Pacific Railway yards, and therefore urges the federal government not to support the building of the said overpass at this time, but to delay any decision thereon until there has been a full and thorough study of railway relocation at Winnipeg, and this House urges the government to commit the necessary funds for such a study so that it can proceed forthwith.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be introduced at this time only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

REQUEST THAT REPORT OF COMMISSIONER BE STUDIED BY PARLIAMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 and seek the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a motion relating to a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In light of the pessimistic remarks the Commissioner of Official Languages made when he presented his annual report; given the clear contradiction which exists between his remarks and the government's pretension about finding solutions to our national problems; given the fact that, without admitting it, the government realizes the failure of its policies by ordering, for instance, a cut of more than one-third in the staff of the Linguistic Training Branch; and given the fact that this government misleads all Canadians in general and all Quebeckers in particular by trying to monopolize all attempts to safeguard Canadian unity while denying the very existence of the Quebec nation, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard):

That the House instruct the government to take into account the report of the Commissioner of Official Languages by putting it up for consideration and resolution in parliament.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, presentation of this motion for debate requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

CALL FOR CASH INCENTIVES TO PROMOTE DEVELOPMENT OF ALTERNATE SOURCES OF ENERGY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to request the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with an important matter of pressing necessity to our national transportation problems.

The establishment of a government in Iran that is unfriendly to the western world has increased the threat of an oil shortage in North America in the not-too-distant future, and places a burden on all of us to encourage our scientists to come up with alternate sources of energy and better applications of fossil fuels. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Patterson):

[Mr. Speaker.]

That the House unanimously approve a motion to have the federal government devise some form of cash incentive program and national prizes from lottery funds to encourage our inventors and scientists to develop more efficient uses of fossil fuels, especially as motive power, and also to develop alternate sources of energy for motive power.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for discussion at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

FISHERIES

EXPANSION OF CANADIAN FISHING FLEET—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to raise a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that the Minister of Fisheries recently awarded a contract for the catching of 12,000 tons of codfish to two communist countries, namely, East Germany and Poland, which will require the licensing of 12 East German freezer trawlers and six Polish factory ships within Canada's 200-mile limit, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie):

That the Minister of Fisheries, once the needs of our inshore fishermen are met, encourage the development of a Canadian catching capability in northern areas in order to provide much needed employment, ashore and afloat, through the expansion of our Canadian fishing fleet.

ALLEGED ARBITRARY ACTION BY CANADA EMPLOYMENT OFFICE TO DETRIMENT OF NOVA SCOTIA WOODCUTTERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, although this resolution, on the surface, would seem to be a regional issue, I am sure you will agree that it has national implications and is of urgent and pressing necessity.

For the past two weeks or so, pulpwood cutters from the East Richmond section of my constituency have been receiving notices from the Canada Employment office located in Port Hawkesbury, Nova Scotia, telling them to immediately return to work regardless of weather conditions, transportation difficulties or the rates of pay which they will receive.

All this has occurred in view of the fact that the windchill factor in that area recently dropped to 48 degrees below zero for some days and in view of the fact that in the past these poorly paid woodcutters did not even have qualified scalers and were not required by UIC and Manpower officials to return to work until late spring. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes):

That the Minister of Employment and Immigration immediately notify these and other officials acting in such an arbitrary and coercive way to cease and desist from such action.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the introduction of such a motion for debate at this time?

STATISTICS CANADA

PROTECTION OF PERSONAL INFORMATION SUPPLIED BY CANADIANS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to direct to the Deputy Prime Minister regarding the inviolability and the confidentiality of statistical information which Canadians supply to their government.

In view of the voluble assurances given last week by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce about the confidentiality and integrity of Statistics Canada, could the Deputy Prime Minister assure the House and the country that Statistics Canada does take care of and protect the very personal information that is supplied by the people of Canada to their government?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member's question, I have not made any personal investigation into the matter. I cannot provide the assurance based upon my own knowledge or research, but I will check into the matter and provide the hon. member with whatever assurance can be made at a later time.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I respect the Deputy Prime Minister's attitude. As a parliamentarian of long experience, would he agree with me that the condition under which income tax returns are made available to the chief statistician, pursuant to section 23 of the Statistics Act, are very specific and imply cabinet responsibility? Section 23 (1) (a) of the Statistics Act reads in part as follows:

—in such manner and at such times as the governor in council may prescribe upon the recommendation of the minister and the Minister of National Revenue.

Would my hon. friend agree that there is a certain amount of cabinet responsibility involved in protecting this very important income tax and other statistical information that the government requires from the people of this country?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, of course I agree there is a responsibility to protect the confidentiality of information provided to the government, particularly the confidentiality that is prescribed by law. It is the responsibility of the government to ensure that the law will be carried out.

Mr. MacKay: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I want to bring a very serious matter to the attention of the Deputy Prime Minister and ask what he will do to remedy the fact that thousands of confidential forms, including income tax returns, are lying unattended in cardboard boxes in circumstances where people can walk in off the street and have access to them. This situation has existed for months; it is still occurring. Will the minister, once he has satisfied himself that this information is correct, consider an inquiry into Statistics Canada of the type I requested two years ago?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I will take the hon. member's representations seriously. I have absolutely no personal knowledge about the existence of all these cardboard boxes. I have not made any personal tour of the buildings, as the hon. member may have done, but I shall take his representations seriously and make inquiries.

REASON NAMES, ADDRESSES AND SOCIAL INSURANCE NUMBERS GIVEN TO STATISTICS CANADA

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Deputy Prime Minister. Given the situation that within a few blocks of this chamber 50 to 60 boxes are lying unattended which contain this confidential information, including tax information, where anyone can walk off the street and inspect it, and given the responsibility of the cabinet under section 23 of the Statistics Act wherein the cabinet sets conditions under which documents are given to Statistics Canada, can the Deputy Prime Minister explain why tax information would be delivered that would include names, addresses and social insurance numbers, when that information can be of absolutely no interest or assistance whatsoever to Statistics Canada in terms of its mandate?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have already given assurances to the hon. member's colleague that I shall look into this matter.

Mr. Jarvis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The Deputy Prime Minister will recall that it was revealed not long ago that a previous minister of national revenue, now the Minister of Employment and Immigration wrote—out of concern, I am sure—to the then solicitor general, now the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, expressing concern about access to that type of confidential information by law enforcement officers.

Can the Deputy Prime Minister inform the House whether he is aware of any comparable concern by the present Minister of National Revenue in terms of delivery of confidential information to Statistics Canada and the methods of protecting that confidentiality which Statistics Canada supposedly exercises?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member asks me if I am aware of any concern held by the Minister of National Revenue along the lines expressed in a letter about which we are informed and about which lengthy discussions took place in this House. I am not aware of any discussions carried out by the Minister of National Revenue. He may have had them. He may feel this concern, but it certainly has not been conveyed to me in any way so that I can respond to the hon. member's question.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

PROFIT INCREASES OF CORPORATIONS—INCREASES IN CONSUMER PRICES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Considering that Statistics Canada figures released yesterday show that profit increases for the last quarter of 1978 went up 39 per cent, coming after earlier quarterly increases of 32 per cent, 18 per cent and 12 per cent, and considering that the minister said outside the House yesterday that the government would be prepared to use its purchasing policy and its powers in the marketplace to force companies to come into line in terms of having reasonable prices for Canadian consumers, I ask the minister to explain to the House precisely what he means by this.

Another question of equal importance is this: does the government intend to take immediate action to implement such a policy?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, first of all, we cannot conclude that increased profits have been caused by price gouging, profiteering or anything like that. Increased profits may very well be due to increased efficiency, more sales, and so on.

Mr. Gillies: What about the falling dollar?

Mr. Allmand: Let me state, Mr. Speaker, that profit increases have historically heralded a general economic recovery and the hon. member should welcome that. Furthermore, our preliminary studies show that profit levels are not out of line with historical patterns for profits. Finally, there was a report released, I think today, that stated over the last four years wages and salaries have increased much more than profits.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I rather suspected the minister would add that last statistic. If he does a little further research, he will find out that during the last ten years wages have gone up 141 per cent but profits—please note this, Mr. Minister—during the same decade increased by 240.8 per cent, almost twice the rate of wage increases over the past decade. It depends where you start the trend. It depends who your friends are, as well.

Mr. Stevens: Is that the four-fifths and the one-fifth?

Mr. Broadbent: Having regard to what the minister said about profit increases perhaps being due to increased sales, and considering the AIB report that came out yesterday on food industry profits at the retail level indicated that profit increases in fact were up 37.9 per cent, almost double the rate of increase in sales which was only 17.4 per cent, I ask the minister, is he fully satisfied that the very high prices paid by Canadian consumers in food stores are not in good measure due to the fact that companies are making more profits perhaps than they should be?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, there is no evidence that the high profits are due to extraordinarily high prices. As a matter of fact, the AIB report referred to by the hon. member concluded that profit margins last year were quite in line with historical patterns and in some cases there were declines in the third quarter of the year.

We are concerned about increasing food prices and the increase in inflation. I have said before that if the hon. member or anyone else has evidence that some increased prices are due to price-fixing or rigging the marketplace, I would be very pleased to put our team of people from the competition bureau to work on that.

Mr. Paproski: That is your job.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, it is the minister's department that is supposed to be investigating this matter.

Mr. Paproski: That is why he is there.

Mr. Broadbent: This is why he has to pay civil servants to do it and not members on the opposition side. The minister just indicated that the profit figures in retailing were not out of line. I point out to him that the report put out by the AIB indicates retail profit increases were indeed higher than the period 1971 to 1977, so these profits were abnormally high. I wish the minister would check his own data on that.

REQUEST THAT STEEL PRICE INCREASES BE ROLLED BACK

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I would like to turn to another sector, the steel industry. Considering that all three major firms announced over the weekend an increase in their prices by about 7 per cent, coming on top of other price increases of 6 per cent or 7 per cent announced just three months ago, and considering that profits for the three companies are up 45 per cent, year over year, from 1977 to 1978, will the minister now practice what he preaches and ensure that these companies effect rollbacks in steel price increases so that consumer durables, automobiles and a whole range of other items will not escalate out of sight in price during 1979?

● (1425)

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): First, Mr. Speaker, with regard to food, the hon. member should read once more the AIB report which was published yesterday. While there are reports of increased profits in some areas, they also report some lower profits, especially in the third quarter of last year.

With regard to steel, a week or so ago I asked officials in my department to analyse steel price increases in their analysis of the situation in the steel industry. I have not yet received that report from them.

OBJECTION TO MANNER OF ADVERTISING CHILD TAX CREDIT PROGRAM

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Protests are coming to members from across the country against the objectionable television advertising that is sponsored by the minister promoting the child tax credit bill. This advertising is presented in a lifestyle form and is creating pressure on parents, especially low income parents. Apart altogether from the political, partisan overtones of the ad—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: —and I think it is shameful, it is in fact misleading. Does the minister intend to withdraw it from television and, if not, why not?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, if the government had the money, I would ask for $1 million to have the ad shown three times as often.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Bégin: I challenge the hon. member to read the text of the ad to this House, a copy of which has been given to his party, and to read the description of the video part as well and give us an example, direct or indirect, of partisanship, because there is none in the ad. The ad tells Canadian parents, mothers in particular that there is a new credit from which 75 per cent of Canadian mothers will benefit partly or fully, and that they have to apply for it. That is what the ad does. I wish we could have more money.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, the minister does not realize the visual impact of this ad, showing a family in a lifestyle with a middle income background which will create undue pressures on low income families, many of whom already have a difficult time managing what the ad presents as a windfall gain. Even though the object is to explain how to obtain the child tax credit, which is commendable, the way the minister is going about it will create social hardships on families.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: I suggest if hon. members opposite saw this ad, they would know exactly what I am talking about and perhaps might even share my concern. Members are getting protests from across the country about this objectionable advertising. Will the minister withdraw it from television?

Miss Bégin: The answer is no, Mr. Speaker, and each free time slot I am able to get, I will use. I would like the hon. member and everyone else to know that we have more copies of the ad which can be used on cable TV and other types of community television. I would say that the members of the Conservative party have a problem with their emotions and sensitivities; they are always in the wrong place. They are all mixed up in their ideology when it comes to women, by the way.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, our problems are nothing like the problems of the government, one of which is this Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: I would like to ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, who is responsible for the Combines Investigation Act, if he will refer this misleading ad to the combines investigation branch which has responsibility for dealing with misleading advertising. If he does that, he will find that it will be withdrawn from television.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the director of investigations will take note of the hon. member's comment.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT REFUSES TO ASSIST "LES CHAUSSURES DES CANTONS DE L'EST" IN RICHMOND, QUEBEC

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. His department having refused to participate in the financing of Les chaussures des Cantons de l'Est project in Richmond, can the minister give the exact reasons for his refusal and tell us whether he expects a new study to be made of that file in the near future?

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as I explained to the hon. member personally, the company and the applicants themselves are familiar with the exact reasons for which we turned down the request they made to our department with a view to helping that business to start operating again. As I have said repeatedly, if new considerations entered the picture, and if the project as submitted were to be financed differently, I could certainly justify looking at the application again.

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, on a supplementary. As the Quebec government has authorized a subsidy of some $150,000 through the OSE program, Opération solidarité économique, phase 4, as well as a loan of $350,000 from the Quebec Industrial Development Corporation—it would seem that the Quebec government is even looking into the possibility of making good the subsidy that was refused by the federal government—and as the Quebec government has said of the project that it will be of tremendous value to the area, while the federal government claimed that would be absolutely useless to the economic expansion of that area, can the minister explain why there should be so much difference between the appreciations of the Quebec and the federal governments on such a big project?

[Miss Bégin.]

Mr. Lessard: According to the information I have obtained, Mr. Speaker, the financial support which the Quebec government is willing to provide to carry out this project does not seem to meet the normal criteria established for the operation of current provincial programs. If the Quebec government should decide to provide financial assistance to this project, even if provincial officials claim that it is not economically viable, I think therefore that they are the ones who are making the decision. I suggest I should not have to wait until the Quebec government makes up its mind about a project before we decide ourselves whether or not to support it. Our decision has nothing whatsoever to do with whether or not the Quebec government supports it.

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, I have a last supplementary question. Would the minister tell the House—I am afraid I have been misunderstood—that provincial officials must co-operate with federal officials? How is it that this project, which should create 95 new jobs, is differently assessed? Is it for political reasons or what?

Mr. Lessard: Mr. Speaker, their criteria probably differ from ours. But according to the information available to me, they apparently feel that, based on their criteria, this project is not deemed viable.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PROTECTION OF INDIANS' TREATY RIGHTS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It has to do with the treaty rights of Indians. These rights are sacred to the Indians. Recently, the Indians won a case in connection with migratory birds being hunted outside the season applicable to other Canadians. The Government of Canada then entered into a protocol with the United States of America, a country which has never been very considerate of Indian rights all through the years. The judgment was, in effect, set aside and this aroused a deep sense of understandable antagonism among Indians in general. You cannot take treaty rights and destroy them without the consent of the treaty nation concerned.

Will the minister reconsider this question and assure, as a result of further consideration and discussion with the Indians, that their treaty rights will not be subject to interference by the government, however convenient it may be for the government to act in co-operation with the United States?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): I share the right hon. gentleman's view of the importance of the treaties to the Indian and to the people of Canada. They were sacred undertakings entered into by the Crown and by the Indians. I think this government has always recognized that. But I am puzzled by his reference to the Migratory Birds Convention, because in fact what my colleague, the minister of the environment, did in signing the amendment to the convention with the Secretary of the Interior of the United States was to open up the possibility of finding a remedy for a grievance which has been felt since 1917, a limitation which confined Indian and Inuit hunting to the seasons applicable to all the others.

My colleague has opened up that situation now to allow negotiations with the provinces and the Indian people so that Indians and Inuit might hunt outside that season. So the move we made had the effect of expanding Indian rights, which I think was consistent with the treaty.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No matter what the benevolent explanation may be, the Indians are being deprived of their rights and I want an assurance from the minister to protect the Indians' treaty rights, not the generalization he made at the inception of his remarks when dealing with my question. Are you going to give them their rights, or will you deprive them of these sacred rights to which they are unquestionably entitled?

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Faulkner: I am not sure you know what a treaty right is all about.

Mr. Speaker, I tried to respond directly to the right hon. gentleman's question. It was he who raised the question of the Migratory Birds Convention and he pointed out that it restricted Indian rights. I agreed with him and said that a few weeks ago my colleague and I arranged with the other parties to the treaty to expand it. So what we have done, in fact, is to allow for the expansion of Indian hunting rights.

The right hon. member talks about a range of other rights. I would point out that there are presently discussions going on with the Indian people within the framework of amendments to the Indian Act which specifically deal with hunting, trapping and fishing rights. Furthermore, an agreement in principal has been concluded with the Inuvialuit of the Mackenzie delta which enshrines not only hunting, trapping and fishing rights but specialized rights, exclusive rights to harvesting. I do not want to be gratuitous, but I have to say that this government has probably done more than any previous government to ensure the rights of the Indian and Inuit people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: It was my government which gave them the vote that Liberal party governments denied them all through the years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SHIPBUILDING

INQUIRY AS TO MEASURES GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO TAKE TO REBUILD SHIPBUILDING FACILITIES IN GASPÉ

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Régional Economic Expansion. As the minister is surely aware, a fire has destroyed the Gaspé shipbuilding facilities, thereby depriving 60 people of work and causing losses of about $4 million. Can the minister tell us if these people can count on his department's good offices so that these shipbuilding facilities can be rebuilt in the near future?

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I have just been informed, when returning to Ottawa, of this terrible fire which destroyed the Gaspé shipbuilding facilities. We will ensure that department officials in Rimouski immediately contact the owners of the firm concerned to find out if it intends to rebuild these facilities, as we are given to believe. I want to give the hon. member my word that we will do all we can and as much as the existing programs will allow us to help the people involved.

STATUS OF WOMEN

ALLEGED FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO PROVIDE EQUAL OPPORTUNITY FOR WOMEN IN PUBLIC SERVICE

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the minister responsible for the status of women. It refers to the latest report of the Advisory Council on the Status of Women having to do with women in the public service and entitled "Barriers to Equal Opportunity."

• (1440)

The report is a veritable indictment of the policies and programs of the federal government and concludes that the federal government has failed to provide equal opportunities to women in the public service and that it is lagging behind the private sector. In light of cabinet directive No. 44 issued in 1972, and the cabinet document on equal opportunities issued in November of 1975, can the minister explain why the government has totally ignored its responsibilities with respect to women employed in the public service?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, first I must say that the hon. member has given a very biased reading of that report. That report contains several other aspects which the hon. member seems to ignore. I would like to remind him that a series of measures have been taken by Treasury Board with the Public Service Commission to try and improve the situation in terms of equal opportunities for women in the public service.

As the hon. member knows, departments are now required to bring forward five-year plans and to be up to date every year as to their plans for improving opportunities for women in the public service. We believe that through the monitoring of these plans, which is conducted by Treasury Board, it will be possible to speed up progress.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, as the minister well knows, more than a year ago he promised that annual reports would be submitted to Treasury Board as well as projections of the goals of these five-year plans of action. They have not yet been produced.

Since the principle of equal opportunity was announced more than three years ago, I wonder if the minister can tell us why only 20 departments have full-time equal opportunities co-ordinators while 31 have part-time co-ordinators. With respect to Treasury Board obligations, there are only two staff people, with no budget, while the official languages program has 45 staff people and a budget of $1,340,000. Why this disparity if the government is committed to equal opportunities for women as well as the official languages program?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, never at any time was there a decision to the effect that there should be full-time co-ordinators in every department. Some departments are very small and do not require full-time co-ordinators. All departments were asked to assign to a senior official a specific responsibility concerning the promotion of equal opportunities for women in the public service and we have made sure that in the larger departments full-time people would be assigned for that purpose.

As far as smaller departments are concerned, this function can be fulfilled by senior officers who have other responsibilities. It is a question of using in the best possible way the human resources available to perform the job.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED MOVE OF AIR CANADA OPERATIONS FROM HEATHROW TO GATWICK AIRPORT—BRITISH RESPONSE TO CANADIAN PROTEST

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he has received any reaction or formal response from the British government arising out of the representations made to the British government by the Canadian High Commissioner with respect to the proposition of forcing Air Canada to move from Heathrow airport to Gatwick airport.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have received what might properly be described as an interim reply from the Foreign Secretary, Dr. Owen, to High Commissioner Martin. The contents of it are obviously confidential, but I think the gist of it is that the British government has not made a final decision. Dr. Owen has undertaken personally to look into the matter.

On a less formal basis, I also received communications from Dr. Owen indicating that he is personally seized of this problem and will be discussing it with me at, I hope, some fairly early date.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, what other action, if any, is being contemplated by the Government of Canada? Could the Secretary of State for External Affairs also indicate the status of the bilaterals which are to take place some time in the course of the next six to 12 months?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, on the first part of the question, I took note of the proposal by the right hon. member for Prince Albert when he asked me and was good enough to defer consideration of whether a Standing Order 43 motion unanimously supported would be advisable. Given his long association with the High Commissioner in London, I think he will appreciate that I got in touch with him directly. I telephoned him and asked him about it, and he said at this time he did not feel this would be appropriate, although the mere fact that it had been raised in the House would in itself be useful.

Mr. Woolliams: Sounds like Paul Martin.

Mr. Jamieson: Not only does it sound like Paul, but I think it makes as much good sense as most of the things Paul used to say.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fraser: Usefully inappropriate.

ALLEGED FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO PROVIDE EQUAL OPPORTUNITY FOR WOMEN—STEPS TO IMPROVE PROGRAM

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is in the same area touched on by the hon. member for Egmont, except that I would like to put my question to the President of the Treasury Board. My question is based on the report of the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women entitled "Women in the Public Service—Barriers to Equal Opportunity", the key line of which is to the effect that the government's efforts to achieve positive results since 1971 have been a consistent failure.

In view of the fact that there are so few departments which are carrying out the intent, despite what was said a moment ago by the minister responsible for the status of women, will the President of the Treasury Board use his authority to demand that all departments hire full-time equal opportunities officers immediately, and discipline managers who fail to achieve positive results in this area?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as my colleague indicated, we are not sure that in all departments—because some are relatively small—it is necessary to have such officers. On the other hand, I share the concern which is at the base of the hon. member's question, that we have not made the good progress we would have liked and should have made in this area. As the hon. member knows, we received the final report just yesterday. We are looking at it very seriously and I will be happy to take whatever steps are necessary to do what we can to make certain that during the coming year we make better headway.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary question I would like to ask the President of the Treasury Board if he will look very closely at the sections in the report which deal with the first hired, first fired development and also with superannuation. The report says, for example, that the policy of equality which was established in the Public Service Superannuation Act is completely violated by the employment structures because women do not get steady employment as men do, and thus do not get the pensions to which they are entitled. It also says that these same structures of employment result in firings hitting women more than they do men.

Will the President of the Treasury Board look at these specific problems and do his best to get them corrected?

Mr. Buchanan: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

PUBLIC WORKS

SITE OF NEW UNITED STATES EMBASSY—PLANS FOR NEW COURTHOUSE

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works or, in his absence, his parliamentary secretary. Could the parliamentary secretary tell this House whether the United States Embassy intends to construct a new building for its operations in Cartier Square on a site made available by the Department of Public Works, and whether the province of Ontario intends to convert the Old Ottawa Teachers' College building, adjacent to the U.S. Embassy site, to a new courthouse?

Mr. Hal Herbert (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the U.S. embassy has concluded an agreement with the Department of Public Works and will be constructing a new embassy in the near future on the site mentioned by the hon. member for Ottawa West.

The province of Ontario has made proposals concerning the development of a new courthouse, and discussions are under way. The Government of Canada has offered an alternative site and this is being considered.

AUTHENTICITY OF DOCUMENT ON FIREARMS CONTROL

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have given notice of my intention to ask a question of the Solicitor General. My question relates to a document I have passed to him, on which hopefully he can make a comment. The document is entitled "The police function in Canada as a control and enforcement agency in regards to amendments to the firearms section of the Criminal Code". One of the paragraphs in the document reads as follows:

—as far as an armed and organized public was concerned and it was felt in the interests of the function that it was desirous to ensure that the public be discreetly but effectively disarmed over a period of the forthcoming five years.

Having had an opportunity to study this document, I wonder if the Solicitor General can tell the House today whether it is authentic, and its source of information.

● (1450)

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I have received a large number of letters from members of parliament who are concerned about that document. I want to indicate at the outset that the document is a phony. One finds, on reading it, that the forced officialese which is used can only indicate that whoever is the creator or the author of the document consciously attempted to concoct a document in order to create an inflammatory situation. In my view, it is the only blemish in an otherwise very positive reception that has been granted to the gun control program in the country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blais: I would point out to the hon. gentleman that this document is false. I am addressing that question tomorrow at the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters in London, where I will be dealing with that document and its contents. There is no need for any member of the House, or indeed any member of the Canadian public, to be concerned.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, of course, I look at it as a source of comfort that the Solicitor General has told us now that we need not be concerned. This document has been widely circulated, has been published in magazines and has incited the antagonism of thousands of legitimate gun owners in the country, as well as creating all kinds of difficulties for members of parliament.

My question to the minister is, then: knowing that this document has been forged and is phony, knowing of its content and knowing how widely the document has been circulated, have the police or has the minister made any effort to find the source of the distribution of this kind of poison throughout the country, and what is the result of such an investigation?

Mr. Blais: Let me hasten to agree with the hon. gentleman that the document approximates poison. I wish to indicate, as well, my great disappointment at the fact that the National Firearms' Association, which I always assumed was a responsible gun owners' association, has seen fit, notwithstanding the patent falsehood of this document, to include it in one of its newsletters.

In terms of what measures can be taken, I will take the hon. gentleman's representation seriously.

Mr. Whiteway: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Postmaster General, who was in his seat a minute ago. Perhaps I can be recognized a little later when he comes back.

SOCIAL INSURANCE

GOVERNMENT'S INTENTIONS RESPECTING LIMITING USE OF SOCIAL INSURANCE NUMBERS

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Prime Minister has written to the de facto leader of the New Democratic Party, Mr. Dennis McDermott, stating categorically that the government has no intention at all of limiting the use of social insurance numbers.

The minister will recall that he gave an undertaking in the House to create an advisory council, one of whose purposes would be to investigate the restriction of social insurance numbers. The fact is that there has been no action in the department in this connection and no action on the part of the advisory council. The minister has either misled the House or has been shot out of the air by the Prime Minister. Would the minister indicate whether he has any intention at all of studying the limitation of social insurance numbers?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have not read the letter and I am somewhat suspicious of the interpretation being given to it by the hon. member. I did indicate that under the human rights legislation, my colleague, the President of the Treasury Board, had the responsibility of monitoring in so far as the data banks are concerned, and I gave an undertaking that it would be examined by the advisory council—not only the concern which the hon. member has and which I share, but also the negative aspects if we simply pass legislation outlawing the use of social insurance numbers except in the four instances I have indicated.

This is something that warrants study because it will have a severe impact in many areas which will work to the detriment of people who are quite prepared to use their social insurance numbers in the interests of gaining several benefits across the country.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that the letter written by the Prime Minister to Mr. McDermott has been widely publicized in the press. The Prime Minister speaks in it approvingly of the extension of the use of social insurance numbers in private industry.

In view of the fact, also, that the Prime Minister, during the 1972 election campaign, said that he foresaw the day in the near future when national identification cards would be used in Canada, I want to know whether we can get a categorical statement from the Minister of Employment and Immigration to the effect that social insurance numbers will not become, in Canada, a single identifying number. There was a commitment from him that he would look into it. He has done nothing. I should like to get that undertaking from him right now, in plain English.

An hon. Member: Or French.

Mr. Cullen: As I indicated, I am somewhat dubious of the interpretation given by the hon. member. He says I did nothing. In fact, I have prepared a brief that I want to present to the advisory council asking them for their view on this subject, and I have indicated that under the human rights legislation there is an ongoing monitoring process being carried out by the Treasury Board, as their responsibility. So something is being done. I did not indicate that I was going to go further than that at this time. I am indicating that there are down-sides as well as up-sides to the use of social insurance numbers.

POST OFFICE

LIABILITY FOR REGISTERED ITEMS THAT ARE LOST

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Postmaster General: it has to do with a paid advertisement in the Winnipeg Free Press. On the same day, on the front page of that paper there was a small article entitled "Registered mail! What's that?". In part, the article reads that in the Federal Court of Canada, Judge Louis Marceau ruled that the Post Office was not liable for registered objects that were lost. The ad reads in part:

> Proof of mailing and proof of delivery are my security when mailing contracts worth thousands of dollars to the U.S. and Europe. That's why I use registered mail.

In light of that contradiction, would the Postmaster General direct the Post Office to withdraw this obviously dishonest and misleading ad?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that the allegation of the hon. member about the misleading ad is true. I think the ad was done purposely to inform the public about our registered and certified mail. People should know, if they get the information, that there is a limit on the responsibility for a parcel which is registered or certified. So I think the advertising is not misleading; it is straight to the point and we will probably make it appear again.

Mr. Whiteway: My question is directed to the same minister. Would the minister look into the judgment brought down by Judge Marceau in that case and compare it, with regard to the liability of the Post Office in respect of registered mail, with the advertisements put out by the Post Office, to see whether or not these ads are misleading, which on the surface they appear to be?

Mr. Lamontagne: From what I know of the judgment of the judge in this case, I do not think he blames the Post Office; he just questions whether perhaps better information could be given on the limits of insured mail and the responsibility we have in these cases, that is all.

AGRICULTURE

DECISION OF ALBERTA TURKEY PRODUCERS TO WITHDRAW FROM NATIONAL PLAN—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. It is prompted by the recent decision of the Alberta turkey producers to withdraw from the national plan. The decision was taken not particularly by choice but, rather, by necessity.

The minister has been warned about this problem over the last 12 months and he knows that a similar problem exists in the other national agencies. I want to ask what action he intends to take in the near future to overcome this difficulty and similar difficulties which exist in three or four of the national marketing plans.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member speaks as if it were my fault that the Alberta turkey producers have decided to withdraw from the national plan. It is written right into the agreement which they have signed that if they give one year's notice, they can withdraw. They want to be self-sufficient in turkeys in Alberta. They want a larger share of the national market for turkeys in Alberta.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: According to the plan, they shall share, in a true Canadian attitude, in the total national production of turkeys. They say that because the population in Alberta has increased, they should have more of the turkey production. That is not in accordance with the terms of the agreement which they signed.

● (1500)

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is addressed to the same minister. He should recognize that the continued success of these national marketing plans depends upon the ability of the producers within each province to take advantage of some of the changing and increasing marketing conditions within the provinces. Under the present regulation, which is within the minister's responsibility, this is simply impossible. I simply ask the minister if he will accept his responsibility and call a meeting in the very near future of his provincial counterparts and other people within the agricultural industry in an attempt to resolve these difficulties before all the national plans in this country go down the drain.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, none of the national plans will go down the drain unless the producers themselves make the decision, because they are the ones who agree among themselves how the quotas shall be shared. I do not tell them what they should do with what parts of the quotas; they decide among themselves how they shall be shared. If one province cannot convince the other nine provinces how they shall be shared, it has that alternative of withdrawing from the plan. If they want to discard a plan they will be on the road to self-destruction. It will not be the result of what I do, but of what they do unto themselves.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask the government House leader whether he can designate the business we will be covering in the next little while? I draw his attention to the answer to the question about House business yesterday in which he indicated he might be able to go further than perhaps a day or so. If in the course of his answer he could perhaps designate next Tuesday as an allotted day, I would be grateful.

May I thank him for the draft of the motion in respect of the reference of the various estimates to several standing committees of the House. If he can assure me that it is in the usual form I would be quite prepared to indicate that it would be appropriate for him to call that tomorrow.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I would be prepared to designate next Tuesday as an allotted day. My understanding is that the reference of the estimates to the several standing committees is the traditional reference that is familiar to the House.

With regard to the business tomorrow, we will be continuing our debate on the amendment to the National Housing Act, followed by the resumed debate on second reading of the energy bill. I would like then, of course, for members to keep in mind the possibility of dealing with the bill amending the Judges Act. It is not an item that should provoke prolonged discussion. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lalonde) is also interested in the possibility of dealing with a particular amendment to the Criminal Code that might be broken out of the larger bill and presented to the House.

I would also at some point like to call Bill S-6 which has come from the Senate. Of course, hon. members may keep in mind that we still have the budget bill and the excise tax bill which are very much in my mind.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend and I have talked periodically about the commodity tax review and the reference of that to the appropriate standing committee. Given the representations in the document that he and I discussed yesterday in the House, is he prepared to indicate today that he will put down the appropriate reference so it can be dealt with, on the assurance that he would be prepared to refer it to the committee without debate?

Business of the House

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have taken note of the items of business indicated, and where discussions are necessary we shall be glad to take part in them. I regret that the government House leader has still given no indication in respect of a bill to amend legislation affecting veterans. I hope that he and his fellow maritimer, the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald), can soon get together on this important issue.

In respect of the motion to refer the estimates to various committees, I am happy to take the minister's word that it is in the usual form, but I wonder why I did not get a copy of it. I hope the minister did not put it in the mail.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that I did not withhold a copy of that reference because of his irresponsible behaviour yesterday. I overlooked that. I will make sure he gets a copy of that reference at an early date.

With reference to the observation of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) about the commodity tax review, I must say I am in somewhat of a quandary about making that reference. I understand the committee is dealing with the Bank Act and it has its hands full, so to speak. I will confer with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) as to whether there would be any purpose in sending this item to the committee in light of the heavy workload presently before that particular committee.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, if I understood correctly, the government House leader has indicated his intention of presenting a bill amending the Criminal Code, without debate, and I want to emphasize to the government House leader that we do not intend to let any amendment to the Criminal Code be passed without reserving our right to discuss it when it is presented to us.

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): My question concerns the business of the House and the tabling of the report of the Commissioner of Official Languages the day before yesterday. I would like to ask the government House leader if he intends to refer this report to a special House or joint committee for consideration, and to urge him to do so immediately as this is an urgent matter.

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the suggestion has been made that it might be useful to send the report of the Official Languages Commissioner to a joint committee of the House and the Senate for study. That seems to me to be a worthwhile suggestion and, as I indicated yesterday, that possibility is under very active consideration.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: It may be possible to take that step when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) returns from Toronto. I want to thank the hon. member for mentioning it. If we had a motion making such a reference it might give the House an opportunity to debate questions relating to the official languages, and would give the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) an opportunity perhaps to clear up the ambiguities that exist in respect of his policy.

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) what his intentions are in respect of a notice of motion in his name that has been on the order paper for a week to provide a reference to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence for the consideration of Canada's foreign and defence policies?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, my intentions in respect of that motion are honourable.

An hon. Member: Your others were not?

Mr. MacEachen: I will call it when I get an assurance from members opposite that it will be passed without debate. I will not call it if there is a propensity to make notable, I am sure, speeches on the reference, as in my view it would be better to have the committee get on with the job immediately.

MR. MURTA—SALMONELLA POISONING—REQUESTED CLARIFICATION OF REMARKS OF MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege, and I will be brief as I know this is an allotted day.

● (1510)

Mr. Murta: On Thursday, February 15, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), in response to a question by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) with regard to the question of the salmonella epidemic in Quebec as it related to feed purchased for the feeding of cattle, said, as reported on page 3254 of Hansard:

—that it comes from the province of Manitoba. It is not just coming from the province of Quebec: it is associated with a wide, wide area in Canada—

That statement is wrong. The contaminated feed that was mentioned by the hon. member for Bellechasse did not come from the province of Manitoba.

My question of privilege is that I would like at this time to give the Minister of Agriculture a chance to set the record straight and to clear up this incorrect information that he put on Hansard at that time.

Mr. Speaker: I must stress to begin with that the question raised by the hon. member is not on good procedural ground. I have had no notice of his intention to raise the question; therefore, I cannot entertain it as such. However, if the minister wishes to take the opportunity to make a brief intervention, he may do so.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member sent me notice that he would raise the matter as a point of order, but it seems to have changed to a point of privilege. As the hon. member just quoted, I mentioned a wide, wide area of Canada. We know that the salmonella came from some place in Canada. It was suggested to me that it possibly could have come from some place in Manitoba or the plant in Quebec which was producing the feed.

We have done research in different plants, and we have done research as to the boxcars that carried the product. We have found a certain kind of salmonella that does not have exactly the same description as the kind which was in the feed that caused the problem with the dairy cattle which consumed it. We are still checking the plant and we are still checking on all the sources of this protein.

We did not name any plant at all; I said a wide, wide area of Canada. We know that it came from some place in Canada, and it was suspected that it came from some place in Manitoba. Manitoba is a very big province.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. BRISCO—AIRPORTS—REQUEST MINISTER OF TRANSPORT REVIEW ANSWER

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my point of order is very brief. On February 20, 1979, I addressed a question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang). Without being disputatious, I am certain that the Minister of Transport genuinely misunderstood my question or may not have heard it correctly and, in that sense, provided an incorrect answer. I wonder if the Minister of Transport would like to have the opportunity, at some later date, to review my question and respond to it in the fashion of a point of order?

MR. PAPROSKI—S.O. 43 MOTION—REFLECTION ON HOUSE VOTE

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my point of order is with regard to the motion under Standing Order 43 moved by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) today. I think there was contained therein a reflection on the vote which was taken yesterday. There had been agreement when the division bells were called that the government whip and the opposition whip would come in in 15 minutes, but the government whip decided that it would be at five thirty, six thirty or seven thirty.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I did not put the question on the motion of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt). I have indicated that matters which relate to the procedures of the House are not proper subjects of motions pursuant to Standing Order 43. As soon as I heard the beginning of the content of the motion, I stopped the hon. member from further putting it. That is the only control I can have over such matters. I do not think there is anything with regard to that motion which could give rise to a point of order that we could debate on that subject now.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 391, 401, 694 and 944.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

REVENUES—INCOME TAX

Question No. 391—Mr. Herbert:

What is the income of the government, by province, from taxes on (a) renewable (b) non-renewable resources?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): The latest data on federal corporate income tax by industrial sector is for the 1975 taxation year. Federal corporate income tax collected from the agriculture, forestry, fishing and trapping sectors, was $29.5 million; federal income tax from the mining sector (which includes non-integrated petroleum producers) was $694.3 million. Federal income tax from integrated petroleum and coal companies (that is, companies with refining and marketing activities in addition to resource production) was $390.4 million in 1975. Federal income taxes by sector for the individual provinces are not reported on income tax forms.

An impression of how federal taxes arise from each province can be gained by analysing the amount of taxable income allocated to each province for purposes of assessing the provincial income tax. This allocation is generally based on each corporation's distribution of wages and sales by province. The following list provides this information.

Provincial Allocation of Taxable Income by Major Industry Group 1975
(thousands of dollars)

Province	Agriculture, forestry, fishing and trapping	Total Mining including Mineral Fuels	Petroleum and Coal Products Manufacturing
Newfoundland	X	880	10,610
Prince Edward Island	561	271	2,777
Nova Scotia	3,165	11,259	X
New Brunswick	3,039	2,894	11,179
Quebec	7,144	91,049	166,203
Ontario	33,301	351,301	371,986
Manitoba	6,265	45,405	40,392
Saskatchewan	25,936	104,356	53,670
Alberta	36,243	1,664,427	537,611
British Columbia	33,602	179,944	152,103
Northwest Territories	X	38,703	5,006
Yukon	24	29,644	979
Other jurisdictions	0	9,246	X
Total Taxable Income	149,675	2,529,379	1,388,232

X—Confidential because of the requirements of the Statistics Act.

Conceptually it is not possible to determine precisely in which province corporate income is earned. For example, it can be argued that income is earned where a sale occurs or alternately where production occurs. Moreover, the location of the earning of income is not, of course, any indication of the location of those who in fact bear the tax. Such an analysis would have to consider the degree to which corporate taxes are shifted forward to purchasers of the industry's product, backward to, for example, suppliers of materials and labour and financial resources in the form of lower payments for their goods and services, or is borne by shareholders in the form of lower return on their investment.

The federal government does not charge royalties or levy mining income taxes on minerals under the jurisdiction of provincial governments. Excise and sales taxes are not imposed on primary products such as logs, fish, natural gas, etc. A charge on each barrel of crude petroleum or petroleum product exported from Canada has been levied since October 1973. In the 1977-78 fiscal year this charge amounted to $431,630,-274.64. Although not specifically earmarked, revenues from the export charge assist in providing subsidies for oil imported into eastern Canada, thus enabling uniform oil prices in Canada, which are lower than international prices.

STATISTICS CANADA EMPLOYEES—BELLECHASSE

Question No. 401—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

What are the names, addresses, duties and salaries of Statistics Canada employees in the Constituency of Bellechasse?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada employs only part-time interviewers in the constituency of Bellechasse.

[Mr. Chrétien.]

Name	Address	Salary
Clarisse Dion	Berthier sur mer	$ 5.30
Claire Lévesque	Berthier sur mer	$ 5.55
Germaine Caron	Montmagny	$ 4.65
Pauline T. Journeault	L'Islet sur mer	$ 4.65
Béatrice Bourgault	St. Adalbert	$ 5.30

ATMOSPHERIC ENVIRONMENT SERVICE CONTRACTS

Question No. 694—Mr. Forrestall:

Are atmospheric environment service contracts with individuals providing weather data to be terminated as a result of the $200,000 cutback announced by the government in September 1978 and, if so, which ones?

Hon. Len Marchand (Minister of State (Environment)): Yes, the ones at Blue River, British Columbia, Brooks, Alberta, Rockglen, Saskatchewan, Grand Rapids, Manitoba, Harrington Harbour, Quebec, Parent, Quebec.

CANADIAN PENITENTIARY SERVICE—OVERTIME

Question No. 944—Mr. Patterson:

1. For the fiscal year (a) 1976-77 (b) 1977-78, what amount of overtime was paid to employees of the Canadian Penitentiary Service and how many hours does the amount represent?

2. Is there a currently full complement of employees in the Canadian Penitentiary Service in the class of (a) Security Officer (b) Living Unit Officer?

3. Are any of the supervisory positions in the Canadian Penitentiary Service currently being filled by correction officers on a temporary basis?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): By the Ministry of the Solicitor General: (Canadian Penitentiary Service and National Parole Service)

1. Fiscal Year	Amount	Hours
1976/77	13,264,427	1,126,196
1977/78	12,247,096	952,717

MR. BEATTY—DELAY IN ANSWERING QUESTIONS

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Yet another day has gone by and none of my questions, of which there are well over 20 in number and which have been on the order paper in many instances for several months and in some cases for over a year, have been answered. It is clear that the parliamentary secretary apparently has no intention of discharging his reponsibility to get answers to those questions. I have received information to the effect that this information is available but that it is being withheld from the House.

I think that the parliamentary secretary ought at least to indicate to the House some sort of timetable, if he does in fact intend to answer any of my questions, as to when these questions will be answered. If it is not the parliamentary secretary's intention to act in good faith and to give answers to questions which are put on the order paper, then surely he has the responsibility to parliament and the people of Canada to indicate in a straightforward fashion that his intention is to withhold the information.

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask the hon. member to have the courage to accuse me of bad faith or of withholding information from the House. I wish that he would have the courage to accuse me formally, rather than making innuendoes. I have always told the House that we do our best to provide full and complete information to all members.

I would refer the hon. member to the answer which I gave him on January 30, 1979. This answer still stands. I will not accept this kind of innuendo from an hon. member who complains not at all about questions which cost the people of Canada thousands of dollars to answer. We are still working on those questions to provide him with full and complete answers. He will get the answers as soon as we have all the details.

I ask him to have the courage to make clear accusations, and then we will see what happens.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, the parliamentary secretary has indicated that the reason why he is refusing to answer my questions is that they cost too much. I specifically—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The parliamentary secretary did not say that he was refusing to answer the hon. member's questions. He said that the hon. member was raising complaints about the failure to answer questions which cost a lot of money to answer, but he did not say that he was refusing to answer them.

Mr. Beatty: The parliamentary secretary definitely indicated that it was very costly to answer those questions. I have specifically, on a number of instances in this House, requested the parliamentary secretary to indicate to me any instance where he felt that the question was too costly to provide the information, and I would be prepared to withdraw any question for which he could substantiate such a claim. To date he has not done that. Surely he has the responsibility, if he is going to make that sort of charge in the House, to at least cough up the information and justify the charge which he has made.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would listen I just told him that even if I personally found his questions stupid and even if it does cost a lot of money to the people of Canada, we are working to try to obtain all of the information required to give the hon. member full and complete answers as soon as possible.

An hon. Member: When?

Transportation

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I take exception to the excuse which we keep hearing on this matter of the expense to produce answers to order paper questions. I have a first hand example of a reply from the parliamentary secretary who said that an answer to one of my questions would cost $6,500. I phoned the CPR research section in Montreal, and ten minutes later they phoned me back with the answer. That did not cost $6,500. I think that there is an abuse in the use of this excuse.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—FAILURE OF MINISTER OF TRANSPORT TO DEAL ADEQUATELY WITH TRANSPORTATION MATTERS

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville) moved:

That this House condemns the failure of the Minister of Transport to deal adequately with transportation matters in this country and, specifically, his failure:

(1) to provide an adequate marine transportation policy;

(2) to maintain acceptable standards of air safety;

(3) to deal adequately with grain movement, resulting in losses of hundreds of millions of dollars to producers and to the Canadian economy;

(4) to consider hardships imposed upon communities and producers arising from the implementation of the Prairie Rail Action Committee report;

(5) to provide consistent leadership in urban transportation; and

(6) to preside effectively and objectively over the granting of tenders and the administration of car rental concessions at Canada's international airports.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Members will recall that proceedings on this motion will expire in accordance with Standing Order 58(11) at the ordinary hour of adjournment this day.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, the substance of this motion which I have presented today on behalf of my party can probably be summed up in one word, and that word is "failure"—failure of this minister to deal adequately with problems relating to transportation and failure of this government to outline a comprehensive national transportation policy within which these problems could be resolved.

We have taken the opportunity to highlight six specific areas of concern and, in our view, gross deficiency. In singling out these six areas we hope to demonstrate during the course of debate today that this minister and government are ladened with incompetence, guilty of indecision, lacking in leadership and wracked with fatigue.

There are six examples, Mr. Speaker, but there could have been more—perhaps 101 more. For example, we could have referred in this motion to the actions of the minister in needlessly causing tension at the Cornwall training centre where, through his inappropriate choice of words, he cast reflection upon and unjustly defamed some of the instructors who are doing a very difficult job at the institute.

We could have referred to the government's failure to enunciate a fair and comprehensive regional third level air carrier policy in this country. We have had inconsistent and ad hoc measures and policies which were clearly demonstrated in the Nordair fiasco, which company is nationalized, or privatized, and we do not know what will be the eventual outcome. Surely in an area as important as regional air carriers in this country, a policy must be enunciated so that the industry may develop and grow in an orderly fashion. Surely we need a definitive policy in order to establish the necessary infrastructures such as airports, navigational aids and other related items. There has been no policy, however, and there has been no planning.

In this motion we could have singled out any one of a dozen examples of waste, incompetence and mismanagement, as cited in the recent Auditor General's report, such as cost overruns at the Calgary airport, cost overruns at the transport training centre, cost overruns on R class icebreakers, Mirabel and Pickering; and, of course, we could have selected that new little scheme which was produced in the estimates this year, the new airport revolving fund scheme which will have the effect of hiding the white elephants. The department is clearly a mess, Mr. Speaker. Anyone reading the Auditor General's report would not be mistaken in coming to that conclusion.

We could have put the legislative record of this minister before the House. Since he assumed the portfolio of transport he has only piloted two substantive legislative measures through this institution, the Air Canada reorganizational bill and the CN bill. There were some amendments to the maritime code but most of the work was done before he assumed the portfolio.

Just the other day in the House the minister complained that he could not get any legislation through. I want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, that if the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) learned the meaning of the words co-operation and consultation, I am sure it would be a different story.

We offered to refer the subject matter of Bill C-20 concerning amendments to the National Transportation Act to the committee for study, but we have to ask ourselves why that committee has not been working. It has not considered any major business since last June. Indeed, it is probably the most underworked and underutilized committee of this House. The minister suggested the other day that the Tories will not allow any legislation through because they want to travel. That is absolutely untrue. I suggest to you, sir, when he says that, that he is treading on the borerline of perpetrating a deliberate falsehood.

Mr. Railton: Be careful there.

Mr. Mazankowski: I am always careful. We detect a certain amount of friction between the minister and the chairman of that committee, the hon. member for LaSalle-Émard-Cote Saint Paul (Mr. Campbell). We know that the minister wanted the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) to be chairman.

An hon. Member: Who is he?

Mr. Mazankowski: He is the pampered pet. The minister thinks he needs a little higher profile because he is in trouble out there.

An hon. Member: They are both in trouble.

Mr. Mazankowski: The hon. member for Assiniboia came to the organizational meeting but he saw the troops were solidly lined up against him. He did not get his lollypop and had to resort to sitting on the sidelines. The committee came out solidly for the present chairman. We think he has been doing a good job. He has been performing his duties in an objective way, he has been independent and, above all, he has been fair.

I was speaking about the inaction of the committee, Mr. Speaker. This goes back to the relationship between the minister and the chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications with whom the minister seems to have some sort of axe to grind. I see the parliamentary secretary shaking his head in the negative. He knows there was a certain amount of campaigning before this election took place.

What we have here, Mr. Speaker, is a clear demonstration of the failure of the minister to use the resources of the committee. He has failed to use the resources of this House and the members of this House. He has failed to co-operate and use the expertise that exists in the various sectors of transportation in this country.

I am glad that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) is in the House, Mr. Speaker, as I am sure he will agree with what I have to say. When it comes to the provinces, as far as co-operation is concerned, the minister's duty to provide leadership in the area of co-ordinating national policy and in the area of defining national goals and objectives has been totally abrogated.

The minister of transport for the province of Alberta has been attempting to work with the federal government to seek redress in the area of freight groupings and better rates on processed goods, but he absolutely gave up on the federal minister. He dealt directly with the railways and he got an agreement. They signed a railway pact which would achieve those objectives. The leadership did not come from this minister or this government; they had to go it alone.

Another example is the attitude of the minister with regard to the emergency grain summit which he fought tooth and nail. He went to the first ministers' conference and was embarrassed when the premier of Manitoba called for an emergency summit. He was immediately supported by the other western premiers and was shamed into attending. It was a very good meeting. I know the minister was really surprised. When I asked a question in the House in this regard, he suggested to me that there would be nothing going on more than organized finger pointing. This minister refuses to consult and co-operate. A tremendous amount of good will was generated as a result of that grain summit.

● (1530)

And so we have this kind of scenario. Instead of admitting there is a problem, this minister goes around the country and stands up in this House and tells Canadians that all is well. He has even taken on a mission for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien). When speaking in a debate last week, the Minister of Transport said at page 3177 of Hansard:

> This country is by and large in excellent economic shape.

It is in as good shape as his own department.

An hon. Member: And that is terrible!

Mr. Mazankowski: It is amazing that a man of his intelligence and knowledge would subject himself to being discredited by being party to those kinds of statements. As a result, fewer and fewer people believe the minister and this government. More and more they are finding that this government cannot be trusted any longer.

The tragedy resulting from their failure and from their broken promises, particularly in this very important and critical area of transport, is simply that many Canadians have lost opportunities. These are opportunities that could have provided jobs and could have aided in our economic recovery. These were opportunities which could have assisted many Canadians from coast to coast to achieve a sense of purpose and fulfilment. This is something which has declined more and more during the office of this administration.

I speak about lost opportunities. I want to refer to an opportunity which has enormous potential for this country. I have in mind the marine sector. Probably there has not been another segment of transportation which has been studied more than the marine sector, with the possible exception of the grain handling system. And yet in spite of that, and in spite of all the studies and all the platitudes, nothing substantive has been done for Canadians over the last 15 years to retrieve some of the benefits of the $25 billion deep sea trade that is generated in this country.

What a lost opportunity that is. How sad. It is shameful for a country like Canada to have lost such an opportunity. The drain of some $3 billion annually to foreign shipping interests should be cause for concern if not outright alarm. Surely steps should be taken immediately to at least curtail or contain that escalation, if not reverse it. This government's attitude toward the shipping industry can best be described as mere tokenism and as being shortsighted. It has failed to give the shipping sector the prominence it deserves. It has failed to foster a climate that is conducive to this very important industry's achieving its potential. It is best summed up by a statement made on behalf of the Dominion Marine Association as follows:

Transportation

> Unhappily for the Canadian shipping industry and, we believe, for the economy of Canada, dealings between the federal government and the industry have, over the past 15 years or so, come to take the form of an "adversary" relationship. We of the industry see little sign that the government has our interests in mind when transportation policies are devised and implemented. Instead, our principal contacts with the government and officials in recent years have become a matter of resisting measures devised by them, which will do nothing to improve and often a good deal to impair the efficiency and welfare of the industry.

Running resistance to the industry rather than working with the industry has been the result of the actions of this government.

I turn to another lost opportunity, namely the grains industry. Here we have failed to capture our potential in world markets because of deficient grain handling and our transportation system. This certainly demonstrates another graphic example of a lost opportunity to the economy of Canada and to Canadians.

Over the last eight months deferrals, lost sales, not to mention demurrage, have cost this country a loss in grain sales of 6 million metric tonnes. That, translated into dollars and cents, is worth $1 billion in the hands of the producer. If you multiply that through the economy—there is a multiplier effect of about 5.5—the total is worth $5.5 billion. This is a financial blow, to say the least, as far as producers are concerned, but it is a tragedy as far as the Canadian economy is concerned. The fact is that we have not increased our capacity to deliver grain since 1972-73. There has been some additional terminal capacity which has come on stream during the last few months. But while world demand increases, Canada's exports remain static.

In the meantime, since the early 1970s the United States has doubled its exports of grain. Canada is clearly on trial over the next year as far as its major customers are concerned, and particularly with respect to the Chinese and Japanese markets. We must get our house in order. We must demonstrate to them that we have the capacity to improve our system and to enlarge it; otherwise our sales will be further jeopardized.

In this connection I have two suggestions. First, I would suggest that the minister seriously consider the appointment of a grain transport co-ordinator, at least on a temporary basis, until such time as there can be some structural changes in the system, and until such time as our capacity increases. There is still poor co-ordination and poor utilization. There is still a need for a referee.

Second, I hope that the minister will stop running interference with the orderly development of the terminal facility at Prince Rupert. Grandiose schemes of a superport at Ridley Island, I suggest, will only serve to defer the project and to escalate the cost. It is the producer who must bear the cost.

What is needed is to get on with the job and with constructing a grain terminal immediately. This could be done at Casey Point and it could be started this year. The Ridley Island project will be deferred for perhaps three years or more. The Alberta government and the consortia have taken the initiative in this regard. Unless this minister is prepared to co-operate with them he should mind his own business and let them get on with the job.

I turn now to the question of air safety. In spite of the minister's assurance, it is clear that events of the recent past, and specifically over the last 12 months, have given Canadians clear evidence that there is serious erosion taking place in public air safety in Canada. We have referred on numerous occasions to the investigation in northern Ontario. The minister promised to hire more inspectors. Today we should have about 400 inspectors; we have 308. This is a shortfall of some 80 or so. Morale is low and the numbers and declining. In the meantime, Canada's safety record has dropped from eight to thirteenth as far as international standards are concerned. The ministry's investigations revealed enforcement is generally unco-ordinated and often haphazard. There are suggestions that are even more disturbing. According to some informed sources both inside and outside the department, it is highly probable that inadequate regulations may have contributed to some degree to the Cranbrook tragedy.

Rather than acting responsibly, this minister chooses to gloss over the issue and play the old reassuring game that all is well. I suggest that constitutes a clear dereliction of duty on his part. We again call for a full public inquiry into the whole area of air safety so that all the facts may be known and corrective measures put in place. That is a minimum.

I wish to deal briefly with the question of urban transportation. This government has consistently failed to provide honest leadership. We remember the $290 million urban transportation scheme announced by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) at a noon luncheon on June 18, 1974. It was withdrawn, but not before a number of municipalities and provincial governments made plans based upon that promise.

In 1977 the plan was reorganized. It amounted to nothing more than a reorganization of the existing $230 million five-year program. That program has been largely ineffective because of delays, red tape and bureaucracy. Right now in the city of Toronto there are three very dangerous railroad crossings that should have been provided for under the rail grade crossing program but have not been because of delays, red tape and bureaucracy.

The railway relocation bill was heralded as a major piece of legislation in 1974. I am told there has not been one application approved under the provisions of that legislation. So much for the grandiose schemes of the urban transportation program enunciated by the Liberal government in 1974. This program can best be described as nothing more than a big burp.

I return to the question of the government's failure. It has failed to consult with its counterparts that are involved in transportation. It has failed to co-operate. It has shown contempt and disdain for parliament and has not allowed parliament to deal with the issues regarding transportation.

This government has failed to admit that there are problems in certain areas. Rather it tends to gloss over the issue. It has been stated many times in this House that the government has failed to develop a comprehensive transportation plan. In a nation as diverse and widespread as Canada, transportation is vital. It is vital to the achievement of a balanced regional economic development, to the establishment of a sound industrial base and to the unity of this country. A comprehensive national transportation policy is one of the major keys to the attainments of these goals.

There are some basic and fundamental principles on which an effective transportation policy should be based. First, provincial and municipal governments, and indeed the users of transportation services, should be more directly involved in the formulation and implementation of policies and objectives. We need realistic consultation. There must be prime objectives in the formulation of government policy. As well, parliament must once again become the primary forum in which transportation policies and issues are resolved.

Second, the transportation policy should be an instrument for the attainment of national and regional goals. We on this side reject, as I am sure does the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the user-pay concept of the Minister of Transport. The minister has said that before in this House and I am sure he will not change his mind. Transportation policies should be used to enhance the competitive position of Canadian producers and processors. Our transportation policy should encourage the development, further processing and manufacturing of our renewal and non-renewable resources in those areas where they are produced.

Third, a new transportation policy should include the reduction and simplification of the regulatory process. The present complex and bureaucratic system of regulations and red tape should be simplified through an orderly process of deregulation. The sunset law principle and a genuine commitment to privatization should be applied.

Fourth, a transportation policy should encourage increased competition. Where effective competition does not and cannot exist, an effective and workable mechanism must be put in place to ensure protection to the captive and near captive shipper.

Fifth, the Department of Transport should be reorganized to provide for improved ministerial control and accountability. At the present time the Department of Transport has over 21,000 employees and consists of three administrations. These are subdivided into 2,000 responsibility and cost centres which are responsible for the administration of 100 separate and distinct programs and activities. In addition, the department oversees the operations of the airport revolving fund and the operations of some 13 Crown corporations. This structure should be reorganized to make the department more responsive to the different modes of transportation, to allow for more effective ministerial control and to improve accountability to parliament.

In order to be effective, these principles must not just be nebulous statements by the minister but put into the context of a new national transportation plan or act. Our present National Transportation Act is out of date and is inadequate for providing that kind of framework. One of the first priorities is to get on with the job of bringing in a new national transportation act. Canada must not be allowed to enter the next decade with a transportation system based on the last one.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am always amazed when the Tories rise to talk about problems in transportation. They resort to so many obvious falsehoods and distortions in approaching the question that their credibility surely must fail altogether.

● (1550)

In his preliminary remarks, the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) talked about our having passed only two substantive measures through the House, although he admitted there was a third to which he wasn't paying attention because he thought it had some pre-history. In that case, I guess we should get some credit for the nine or so measures on the order paper which have not been proceeded with because of the amount of time members of the Tory party insist on spending on whatever subject comes up, making speech after speech. And then, yesterday, they resorted to the childish tactic of adjourning the House, stopping the business of the House altogether. That is the kind of conduct which has gone on in delaying legislation time after time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: The hon. member was stating a complete untruth in referring to any intention of mine in relation to the committee and the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) as chairman of it. I guess he resorted to that tactic for his own reasons. He was completely wrong in implying there was any lack of consultation between me and my officials, my staff, the users and the transportation industry. Indeed, I would venture to say that almost every organization involved with transportation wishing to have direct access to me or wishing to contact officials in Transport Canada has found that they can do so. Over the last three and a half years almost every one of them would tell you, Mr. Speaker, that they have had more consultation than ever before and are satisfied with the degree to which we try to take account of their views before moving on a particular transportation issue.

The hon. member was also completely wrong—it was absolute distortion—in saying I fought tooth and nail against a grain summit with the western premiers. Indeed, when the suggestion appeared at the first ministers' conference I replied immediately that I thought it was a good idea. When Premier Lyon wired and suggested a date in January which was not possible for me, I replied suggesting a date in December for that conference and I attended it with delight. I was delighted at the results because at that conference the premiers, in the presence of the leading members of the grain handling and transportation system, saw that essentially all the things that needed to be done in connection with our transport and handling of grain could be done, including the selling of it, and that we could realistically set a target for export of 30 million tons for 1985, a target at which the hon. member for Vegreville had long scoffed when I suggested we should build for a billion bushels of export. Well, we are now talking about a higher target than that.

At that conference one of the things we all recognized was that if we were to achieve these new levels of exports—50 per cent higher than current record or near-record levels—one of the key things was to continue the encouragement of production of wheat, barley and particularly rapeseed in the prairies, and that all of us had to talk together about the possibility and prospect for this in order that farmers would agree to use the fertilizers and chemical sprays which can allow such production to occur.

One of the reasons, we do not have more capacity for exporting grain today is that it took so long to persuade even the elevator companies involved in terminal construction to go ahead with expansion in Vancouver where it was seen to be most needed, although I immediately emphasize for those interested in the movement of grain through the Thunder Bay area that we foresee increases there as well. It is simply that the increases out of Vancouver and out of Prince Rupert are of an order of magnitude so much greater.

Hon. members might note that the actual construction of additional facilities by the elevator companies, including even the farmer-owned companies, did not come about until we had put in place, through the Canadian Wheat Board, incentives to encourage them to go ahead. That was because they were concerned as to whether production would keep up with exports. What hon. members who are not from the prairies may fail to recognize is that we are exporting record volumes and only have the extra grain on hand because we have had absolutely record crops over the last three years, and that in many previous years we exported more grain than we were actually producing. That is a fact that is very important in our over-all approach to the problem of transportation.

I suppose where the hon. member is most amazing is in his ability to stand as a transportation critic and say that he thinks we did not do right in not developing a comprehensive policy on transportation. I was amazed the other day to find that he and his colleague from Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) failed to know how open our department was with thousands and thousands of documents available for inspection. He, as critic for transportation, missed this very important fact which should have been fundamental to his work, and now I find he does not know there stands a full statement of policy on transportation from 1975, a statement which is comprehensive and which meets the needs of today as well as it did at that time. And our actions reflect the practical application of that policy.

He ended up with some pious principles, many of which reflect ideas which are contained in far more elaborate form in our own statement of policy. And there is another thing he has failed to understand. He appears to say we should have amended the National Transportation Act. Mr. Speaker, we have before this House, as we did earlier, a bill to amend the National Transportation Act, and let it be understood that in a previous parliament when that act was before us the Conservative opposition made it clear they were going to filibuster it and extend the days of debate of that bill virtually endlessly.

Mr. Mazankowski: Talk to your colleague!

Mr. Lang: These amendments to the National Transportation Act stated in clause 3 proposals and principles affecting transportation which were carefully agreed upon and negotiated as being perfectly satisfactory with the premiers of the Atlantic provinces. They contained provisions in regard to freight rates and controlling maximum rates which directly reflect western interests. One of the reasons this bill did not carry on to its conclusion despite the filibuster was that my colleagues were amazed at the fact that though it was a bill in direct answer to western demands to deal with short haul-long haul rate discrepancies, western demands to put in place control over freight rates which are too high in some cases, that very bill was filibustered by western Tories one after the other.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Vegreville said he did not like our marine policy. We have elaborated a specific policy with regard to shipping which in many of its aspects is designed in detail to meet the needs of today. The fact is that shipping conferences, arrangements between nations and potential United Nations arrangements put us in a position where we may need an ability to respond, and we have indicated our intention to come forward with legislation in that regard.

Of course, there are specific interests which would like us to take additional measures. We have indicated our special preference for Canadian shipping in the Arctic, and this can be a very important matter in the development of Arctic technology and Canadian shipping. But we have repeated our view that as a matter of policy low-cost shipping is extremely important to Canada, to its importers and to its exporters. If the Tories do not yet know it, this country lives on its exports, its imports, its trade, and we do not want protectionist policies in regard to shipping any more than we want them anywhere else in trade.

We are creating an environment for shipping where we can protect ourselves while still gaining the advantage of the economy of lower-cost shipping in the world. We drew the line, and will draw the line, at the protection of ocean-going shipping which will cause higher prices to the shippers of Canadian goods.

The hon. member for Vegreville is laying the groundwork for his colleague from Dartmouth when he announces support for this kind of higher-cost shipping, but I am a little surprised that the hon. member for Vegreville would support that policy. Of course, it is a fact that we find one Conservative policy today cancelled tomorrow and a new one the following day, as we saw with regard to deficits and with regard to negotiating sovereignty-association. We also find the Conservative party enunciating on the same day two different policies for different parts of the country so that it can appear to have the best of both. That is perfectly suitable to a party in the opposition so long as it remains in the opposition, because that kind of lack of responsibility can be exercised only when a decision does not have to be made. The Conservative party can have it both ways in all parts of the country.

I suppose the hon. member for Vegreville would make it sound as though we had done little with regard to transport in Canada, but I remind him of the operations of Canadian National Railways and Air Canada, both of which any non-partisan observer and perhaps even partisan ones—perhaps even some Tories—would admit are being operated more effectively and more sensibly and with more productivity today than ever before. In both cases—and I hope this does not offend my friends in the New Democratic Party—they are now being operated at a profit. Profit is, after all, a payment for capital invested, and I hope even a New Democrat would admit that you need a return on investment if you expect investment to continue.

It is true that with regard to Air Canada and Canadian National we could, as presumably we did in days gone by, say that they are government-owned and that the government will go on investing even if it does not get a return. Of course, where that was so unfair and wrong was that it discouraged proper management attitudes and effectiveness within those Crown corporations. It also was completely unfair to the competitors of the airline and the railway, whether competitors in trucking, on other railroads, other airlines and the like. Therefore, we are moving toward principles under which effective operations will be a test, and reasonable return on investment will be expected.

We have begun to see this happen. The hon. member for Vegreville did not mention VIA Rail, with which we have taken a completely new approach to rail passenger policy. We now have a management dedicated to trying to make good sense out of our rail passenger service and to offering it again to attract people back to rail as a way of moving about this country. We already find 15 per cent or so increases in the number of people riding, and this is while we have made only a beginning. We have made only a beginning because we have some new equipment, but the important new equipment, the ten new, light, rapid, comfortable and Canadian-made trains which are on order will be available for the track only in 1980. At that time we will see a whole new chance at offering service through VIA Rail. Surely we have made sense out of what had been a deteriorating rail passenger service, and we will continue to try to provide better and more effective service.

Incidentally, in the delicate and difficult negotiations in bringing VIA Rail together out of Canadian National and Canadian Pacific, and in having to deal with employees who were in both these railways and in part moving to the new railway, VIA Rail, we had some of the best working relationships with union leaders one could ever want to have in arriving at arrangements and agreements which they have said were an example for others to follow.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: From one part of this country to the other we have been dealing with specific transportation problems within the broad framework of attempting to have an effective and efficient system but one which is always conscious of social needs and of the need for economic development. After all, this government and this Liberal party have long been in the forefront with policies to encourage the economic development of those areas where growth would otherwise be a good deal slower. Regions like the Atlantic region, from which the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) comes, have long recognized the importance to this country of the Liberal policy of regional economic expansion, moving the country forward and attempting to promote development. This policy emerges in our willingness to improve air facilities where the actual demands of traffic would not appear, on a dollars and cents basis alone, to justify those improvements. I think of the improvements currently going on at the Wabush, Charlo, Gander and St. Leonard airports. I think of some of the airports in the maritimes and the investment for regional development.

This clearly emphasizes our belief that areas where we want development to be encouraged require significant transportation expenditures, and we are prepared to make them. When we have little problems or problems of a specific kind, we attack them in a specific way. The farmers of Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick were extremely concerned two years ago about the situation with regard to shipping their potatoes. They were concerned that old reefer cars were coming to the end of their lives, and they wondered where they were going to go. We created a working group composed of government representatives, railway representatives, representatives of potato marketing boards and producers and representatives of the provinces to tackle the problem on all fronts and to see what needed to be done. We learned the number of cars which were required. We found a way to ensure that when trucks were not available, insulated boxes got into the movement. Port improvements were made so that the receiving of that product could take place to the satisfaction of the people involved in its shipment. We acted directly to deal with their problems. We were required to ensure that the railways would have adequate cars, adequate in the view of the producers themselves and adequate for their marketing operations. We made arrangements to provide cars by taking on certain financial obligations against the risk of those cars not being used.

The hon. member for Vegreville comes from an area where grain is produced. He is a prairie member, yet in talking about transportation he did not seem to think it worthy to mention $1 billion of expenditures already committed to the improvement of our grain handling and transportation system. Pursuant to government policy 8,000 hopper cars were purchased to ensure that there was more capacity for the movement of grain. I think of the $700 million to $800 million program for rebuilding branch lines on the prairies. For years, including years when there was a Tory government with a prairie prime minister and when most members of parliament from the prairies were in that government or on government backbenches, nothing was done to create certainty or a future for the whole branch line and grain handling system on the prairies. Not a thing was done because they were afraid, in typical Tory fashion, to act.

The hon. member for Vegreville started out by talking about lack of decision and leadership. Those are not things usually laid at my doorstep. The hon. member is usually more apt to say I display too much of that, but I have always known of the political warning that if you stay away from problems, you are likely to be able to escape a lot of heartache because even solutions to problems have their own problems, as seen by the people they are meant to serve. I have never been a believer in that. I believe in looking at the problems facing the grain farmer and the grain handling and transportation sysem. This is true of others areas of transport. I believe in tackling problems, even at the significant risk of adverse reaction or worry about change.

I am used to hon. members opposite thinking up slogans. When we created a new quota system in 1970, they said it was going to damage the family farm and that Lang was out to hurt the family farm. That was their great cry in those days. Today farmers would not go back to the quota system we had before, which was disorganized. Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, what the prairie Tories, having been in government for six years, left behind in terms of the management of the grain system? When quotas were open, there was no way of predicting what kind of grain was going to be put into elevators, whether or not it was grain that was wanted. There was no way of knowing whether the grain that was going to be shipped was the grain that was wanted at the terminals. It was only because in those days they were shipping so little grain that they could afford this haphazard system of letting the wrong grain go on the wrong day without much regard for it. The Wheat Board told me, when I became responsible for grain matters, that it used to have to order two bushels of grain for every one they wanted because 50 per cent of the grain that arrived was unwanted grain in terms of their shipping program.

In those Tory days we were exporting 300 million or 400 million bushels of grain a year. Since 1969, when I became responsible for grain transportation, the figure has been almost invariably 700 million bushels of grain or more, and of course in the last four years, including this year, over 800 million bushels of grain were exported.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: But, Mr. Speaker, we do not talk about that as if it were a plateau on which we should rest, even though last year and this year we were setting records. Now we are talking about going 50 per cent higher six years from now, up to 30 million tons, 1,300 million bushels, for export, figures that dwarf anything the hon. member ever dreamed of.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: The hon. member ignores the billions of dollars in the grain handling and transportation system. He says I should butt out of the Prince Rupert situation. I am really amazed at the hon. member, who I think is the only living Albertan left who thinks that Casey Point is the place to put a terminal. It is true that a spokesman for BCDC still says so, although the British Columbia government has agreed with us that the right place for the terminal is Ridley Island. But they do not agree with their own development corporation. The governments of Alberta, Manitoba, and Saskatchewan agree with us that Ridley Point is the place to put our grain terminal, such as we are suggesting be put in Prince Rupert. Do you know why, Mr. Speaker? Because the moment we started talking about a new grain terminal at Prince Rupert of ten million bushel capacity plus 20 million bushel surge, there was no possibility of building that kind of terminal at Casey Point; but the hon. member wants us to go back and build it there.

Of course, if the people in the elevator consortium wanted to go ahead with that kind of construction, it would be perfectly open for them to do so and nothing would stand in their way. But in fact what they want are certain arrangements with regard to Prince Rupert which we are pursuing and which do in fact involve our active participation. The hon. member praises the government of Alberta. It is true that they offered to lend them $100 million if that were needed. It is made to sound as if it was great largesse, but, after all, with the heritage fund around, they are looking for people to whom to lend anyway. I am not sure how great an act that was, but let that lie and let the hon. member understand that it was not as great an act and that the really important act is still to come.

What I want the hon. member to know is that I believe firmly that we will be moving forward with the Prince Rupert terminal, and I want him to know as well that, as in the past, we will be ensuring that the grain system for handling that grain, the whole rail system, and the rail system for handling all the other thousands and thousands of tonnes of products, will be put in place. The hon. member ignores the fact that the two major railways in this country have been continuing to expand significantly their capacity to handle potash, coal and sulphur as well as grain, and that they have been doing it as a result of the encouragement to ensure that the necessary capacity was there. For instance, the necessary cash flow for the Canadian Pacific to go ahead with major improvements in the Rocky Mountains, to virtually double track certain stretches and to eliminate the last of the steep grades, results from two specific measures for improved tax arrangements for the corporation in the two recent budgets which have allowed them to have the cash flow to go ahead with these improvements.

That is an example of the kind of foresight we have had in ensuring that transportation would benefit in all parts of this country. In the Atlantic provinces we can take a look at the ferry services and at the improvements there in terms of new vessels put on stream and new management put in place as we move toward more sensible transportation and action.

Our air policy has produced strong airlines and will produce stronger ones. The hon. member is not able to understand all of the complexities of strengthening regional airlines, but I want him to know that I do not think the people most directly involved in the management of those regionals have the kind of doubts and worries he has. I want him to know that they have no such worries, in part because of our regular meetings together on airline matters and on what needs to be done to make the airline service in this country more effective.

When it comes to Canadian travel, we encourage the development of every possible lower fare that the airlines can put forward. We asked the Canadian Transport Commission to review its charter regulations and to relax them in order to allow for more charters. They did so to some extent, and when they did not do as much as we thought they should, we altered their decision and allowed for more charters. We encouraged the main airlines to offer charter competitive fares. The delightful thing about those is that they are available between all kinds of different points in the country, not just between the major cities which the key charter operations alone would serve, and that is important. But we are not satisfied to rest there; we are going ahead working and waiting for the additional changes in the regulations which will allow that to happen. We do not treat it either as though it were a simple thing.

The hon. member for Vegreville has expressed the Tories' approval for deregulation. It is interesting that again here Tories in opposition agree with the current American wave of deregulation, but Tories in government, in Ontario, for instance, or in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Newfoundland or Manitoba—

Some hon. Members: Go on.

Mr. Lang: —have not moved to deregulate their trucking industry. The trucking industry is one of the most regulated industries. Do the Tories in power take action to deregulate the industry? No. But of course, Tories do not necessarily need consistency from one part of the country to the other, from one day to the next. They do not need consistency because they are trained for the opposition. They know how to do the opposition job in one way in one part of the country and in another way in another part of the country, and that is where they should stay. However, they have not quite kept up to their traditions by allowing what they say to be heard. They have had to reverse themselves, as is their new tack these days. Today it is this, tomorrow that. They will negotiate sovereignty-association, and then they will not negotiate sovereignty-association.

Some hon. Members: Four-fifths.

Mr. Lang: Then they attack the deficit. They say that deficits are bad for this country. We have heard that time and time again. Except I must admit that at every budget it seems to me they have one spokesman saying that another $1 billion would be exactly right and another spokesman saying that another $1 billion less would be exactly right. The hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) and the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) have this tweedle-dee and tweedle-dum act going on between them. But then their leader revealed all to us when he said that Tories think that big deficits are bad, but in the immediate period we will have a bigger deficit because the way to have a smaller deficit is by having a bigger one. His words were still echoing in the television chamber when the hon. member for York-Simcoe found that to be too much for his Toronto friends. He said that surely the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) only meant this would last one month, two months or three months, that it would be a short-term deficit which would then disappear.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the minister but the time allotted to him has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank and congratulate my good friend, the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), for presenting his motion today on behalf of his party and giving the House a chance to discuss transportation. The hon. member for Vegreville and I have done this on numerous occasions in the almost ten years that he and I have been here, and we still have to put up pretty well the same arguments to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) that we did ten years ago.

● (1620)

I think we can support the motion, but later on toward the end of my speech I intend to move an amendment in the following words:

(7) to implement the Hall royal commission report recommendations with regard to statutory rates;

(8) to ensure that transportation be used as an instrument of national policy rather than an instrument to make profits.

In 1974 the Liberals made glowing promises to improve the transportation system, and judging from the election results the program they promised received support from a majority of Canadians. Since then the commitments have been abandoned. There is a list of broken promises as long as your arm. The hon. member for Vegreville listed some and I will list more later.

Before I speak to what is in the motion I should like to speak to what is not in it. For a century Canadian transportation policy has been plagued by the myth that competition, profits and free enterprise would solve our problems in transportation. When are we going to stop being made fools of by this giant con job? We have a small population scattered over a great deal of geography, with extremes of climate and markets that are fragmented. It seems to me that that calls for co-operation and sharing of the cost of transportation by the nation as a whole.

Transportation companies have been taking large profits out of the consumer's and taxpayer's pockets, and now that the government has made the CN more commercial and businesslike the CN has increased its profits from $28 million to $136 million. That figures out to about a 383 per cent increase in one year.

CP Limited increased its profits 31 per cent, from $247 million to $325 million. Air Canada's profits are up 135 per cent. CP Air increased its profits by 506 per cent, but it still provides inadequate service. It still does not provide enough rolling stock or adequate facilities of a reasonable standard.

These companies have been siphoning off profits and putting them into the pockets of shareholders instead of reinvesting a larger portion in rebuilding, enlarging and improving our rail and air systems. The taxpayers are headed for more stormy weather, and the Canadian traveller will be facing higher fares if either the Liberals or the Conservatives succeed in turning our transportation system over to the tender mercies of private enterprise.

The Minister of Transport wants to privatize Air Canada and the CNR. So does the Conservative financial critic, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). In May 1977 he said:

I suggest it is time to stop counting and start subtracting. It is time to begin divesting ourselves of some of these Crown corporations rather than creating new ones.

In that context he was referring to Air Canada. It was the people of Canada through their government who built a national airline when private enterprise would not touch it with a ten-foot pole because it could not make a fast buck. Now that there is some profit, private enterprise wants the gravy. Where was private enterprise when we needed it?

On March 3 of last year the hon. member for York-Simcoe said:

If this government was serious in trying to orient the CN to a more businesslike approach, why will they not let the private sector buy into the CN?

As if we have not had enough grief with CP, that hon. member now wants to let the same breed of cats into the CN. Just so there is no confusion about Tory transportation policy, I remind the House that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) wants to give the CPR more airline business. When will the official opposition learn that you cannot depend on the CNR to provide fair, equitable service at a price that consumers can afford?

While the Leader of the Opposition was busy attacking Petro-Can, the only major oil company in Canada that is not foreign owned, he was walking across this country defending the CPR. Imagine defending an outfit that owes the people of Canada $500 million in deferred taxes, has received hundreds of millions of dollars in government handouts, that sabotages grain movement and then will not even tell us how much the chairman is paid. We had to find that out from a U.S. authority.

It was the official opposition that persuaded the government to amend Air Canada legislation to require Air Canada to operate in contemplation of profit. That can only mean one thing—reduced service to Atlantic Canada, the prairies and outlying regions where there is not the volume of traffic to sustain profits.

It is time for us in this country to make our transportation companies serve the people rather than profits, and while I would be the first to admit that the Liberal government has been a failure at improving the facilities for moving freight, it has been a disaster at improving facilities for moving people.

During the last election campaign the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) promised $290 million over five years to improve urban transit with the government contributing to capital improvements. That promise has never been kept. The actual program announced last year involves little or no new funding, and now we see the CPR increasing its commuter fares in Montreal by 35 per cent and the CNR increasing its fares by 50 per cent.

During the last election campaign the Prime Minister promised to establish transcontinental excursion trains to supplement existing transcontinental services. Instead, the Liberals want to cut back transcontinental service across Canada. The government had a report prepared by IBI consultants recommending abandonment of two of the three long distance services between Montreal and the maritimes.

During the 1974 election campaign the Prime Minister promised to bring into service high speed trains to serve the Quebec City to Windsor corridor, Atlantic Canada to Quebec, Edmonton to Calgary, and Vancouver to Chilliwack. That was five years ago and not one new train has been put into service since then. In fact, we have lost trains. The government has only ten train sets on order for the whole of Canada. That will not even replace old equipment that is and will have to be scrapped. We will end up even further behind than we are now.

The train from Ottawa to Toronto takes five and three-quarter hours at an average speed of 48 miles per hour. The train from Edmonton to Calgary averages only 55 miles per hour, and the government's agency, VIA Rail, plans to abandon that service. No wonder no one will get on the train when a jackrabbit could make the trip quicker. Until we get high speed inter-city trains that average 125 miles per hour to 150 miles per hour, we will not have an incentive for people to leave their automobiles at home and take the train instead of the bus or the plane.

I note that in Alberta the NDP has promised to spend $500 million to improve the Edmonton to Calgary rail corridor. That is the kind of program needed across Canada, in the maritimes, in central Canada and in the west. Massive investment is required to improve our railways, the most efficient energy mode of travel following water carriage. By improving our railway system's capability to carry people we will improve its capability to move freight. That would mean more jobs and more industrial development.

The Liberals promised to revamp the entire grain handling system in 1974, from the farmer's granary to the ships in the harbour. They promised a national freight car leasing corporation and to purchase a reserve freight car fleet. That has not happened.

[Mr. Benjamin.]

I want to remind the Minister of Transport that if he were to enforce section 262 of the Railway Act, which provides that the railway shall provide suitable accommodation to load, transport and unload all traffic offered, and if he implemented the major recommendation of the Hall commission on statutory rates, the railroads would have the funds to rebuild and rehabilitate the railway lines and to purchase cars and locomotives. They would have the majority of the funds needed. The Government of Canada could advance any additional funds at low interest that the railways may need.

It is not just the lack of grain cars that is causing a problem. Since the end of the Second World War we have been short of rolling stock. If you talk to the potato growers in P.E.I. and New Brunswick, they will tell you the problem has existed for 50 years, that they have never had sufficient cars to move their crops. If you talk to the fruit and vegetable growers in southern Ontario, they will tell you there is never enough equipment. Talk to the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave). He and thousands of others in the cattle business will tell you, Mr. Speaker, that there has always been a shortage of stock cars when the time comes to move their livestock.

Talk to the people in the lumber industry, Mr. Speaker. When a major shipment of lumber is to be moved for export and to the domestic market, there is a chronic shortage of railway rolling stock, and that is the case with commodity after commodity. The railways have never lived up to their legal liability under the Railway Act of Canada.

The minister talked about 700 million to 800 million bushel years, and that is great. The tragedy is that in the past year we could have had another three million tonnes of sales to China, a country which prefers to deal with us. The Chinese are grateful for the good and fair treatment which we have given them over the years. The Wheat Board could not tender because they knew they could not deliver an additional three million tonnes and that there was insufficient rail capacity to move that additional grain to the west coast. The Canadian Wheat Board commissioner said that the prairie farmers had lost $450 million, or $3,000 each, during the calendar year 1978 because of Canada's inability to deliver more grain for export.

The board has identified the number one problem in grain transportation as lack of grain cars. The railways continue to take an average of 1,800 boxcars out of grain service each year and, as a result, the farmers have been blackmailed into paying for 2,000 new hopper cars, which is the responsibility of the railways and of the government. I do not condemn the Canadian Wheat Board. I do not like the fact that they had to order hopper cars, but it was a desperate, last resort move which it felt it had to make to protect our export markets and to provide us with the capacity to move the volume of grain we are moving now.

We welcomed and supported the purchase of 8,000 cars by the government. But the Minister of Transport has been double-crossed, the government has been double-crossed and the people of Canada have been double-crossed because we have a lesser capacity to move grain by rail now than we had at the end of 1972. The railroads have removed more cars from grain movement than the taxpayers have put into it since 1972. We are worse off now in our capability than we were at the end of 1972.

The Canadian Wheat Board has called for the purchase of another 10,000 cars, and they must be put on stream at the rate of 2,000 or 3,000 cars a year starting now. They must be purchased by the railways or by a combination of the railways and the government. But beyond that, hundreds of millions of dollars should be invested in other kinds of railway rolling stock and locomotive power. Over the next ten years we should invest a minimum of $1 billion a year for ten years just in our railway systems and urban transit systems alone.

The minister talks about $1 billion, but he forgets to tell the House and the people of Canada that in his books that money is spread out over a period of about eight years. That time frame should be cut in half to get rail lines rebuilt and rehabilitated. The minister should also act immediately to reject the branch line recommendations by the Prairie Rail Action Committee, and not make those communities, grain producers and all the people concerned in the areas affected go through this exercise for the third time around. They have gone through this exercise with the Hall commission, with PRAC, and now they have to go through it again with the Canadian Transport Commission.

The chairman of the Prairie Rail Action Committee has said that it is always cheaper to truck grain on light density lines than it is on high density lines. I do not grant that that statement is true because there are even exceptions on light density lines. I wish that the minister and the Prairie Rail Action Committee would explain their recommendation to abandon hundreds of miles of high density track, which amounts to as much movement as 110,000 to 120,000 bushels per mile of track.

The Minister of Transport tells us that this is getting rid of the uncertainty and that it will rationalize and make more efficient our rail system in the prairies, but the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board says that we are going to have to increase production—and he is right because the Canadian Wheat Board has said it—by another ten million tonnes by 1985. That means that the rail lines which the Prairie Rail Action Committee recommends should be abandoned will be high density lines, and all of them need to be retained. Not one of those abandonments should be proceeded with.

I am confident, Mr. Speaker, that our grain producers can reach that level of increased production and that our farmer-owned elevator companies can handle it. The expansion at the ports of Vancouver and Prince Rupert will be able to handle it, but our rail system cannot handle it. Taking up track is no way to improve our handling capacity.

The Prairie Rail Action Committee exceeded its terms of reference in two instances. It recommended the abandonment of the Lewvan subdivision, about 107 miles of track, which the Hall commission recommended should be put in the basic network and which the minister did put in the basic network. The Lewvan subdivision is none of PRAC's business. They have no business whatsoever recommending the abandonment of a line in the basic network. Their terms of reference ask them to look at the role of lines in the basic network and that is all. The minister had better reject that abandonment recommendation out of hand.

PRAC also exceeded its terms of reference when in its reports it repeatedly referred to competition. There is nothing in its terms of reference which allows them to use the criteria of competition in arriving at their recommendations. The Prairie Rail Action Committee had no business butting in. If the competition is needed it will be the grain producers who will decide and the grain companies. We do not need this outrageous attempt by the Prairie Rail Action Committee to manipulate grain companies.

I find it strange that most of their abandonment recommendations are on lines where the large majority of elevators are owned by the farmers themselves. The minister had better reject all those applications. The minister says that the CTC can make a final decision on a line. That is not so. The federal government can put any line it wants into the basic network. The minister could do it tomorrow by order in council. If the CTC rejects an abandonment application by the railroads, they must review that line within every five years and uncertainty remains. I have had no guarantee or commitment from the minister that where the CTC rejects an abandonment recommendation by PRAC he will put it into the basic network.

Mr. Lang: You missed it.

Mr. Benjamin: If he said that, Mr. Speaker, then I am happy. But why will he not put those PRAC lines into the basic network without having to go through the CTC hearings?

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom):

That the motion be amended by adding at the end thereof the following words:

(7) to implement the Hall royal commission report recommendations with regard to statutory rates;

(8) to ensure that transportation be used as an instrument of national policy rather than an instrument to make profits.

The minister still has time to put into gear the funding and the policies necessary to implement what is needed for transportation in Canada.

In closing, I would like to make a brief reference to my own constituency and ask the minister to please get something done about the situation in Regina with regard to a number of areas. We are sick and tired of being treated like a backwoods village. The airport was congested enough with two airlines in and out plus the private aircraft, but now the minister has put a third airline in there. There was not room for two. Now there is congestion every day and the nonsense of forcing passengers on charter flights to land in Regina, fly on to Calgary to clear customs and come back to Regina the next day. It is incredible.

Even if the minister has to instal a temporary building immediately in front of the airport building to house customs, a place which will handle at least 100 people, then it should be done. This whole restraint and cutback nonsense, this mindless proposition 13 syndrome of cutback and restraint is showing its results. We are losing our weather office, there is the customs problem, the excise facilities are being cut down and RCMP training is being cut down. The Minister of Transport can see that Regina and a host of other small and medium-size cities in this country are in the same situation. Several more billions of dollars should be invested in transportation to serve them.

● (1640)

Our transportation systems must be set up so that they can cross-subsidize and provide a reasonable equality of service to remote areas in the north as well as to the Atlantic and prairie provinces to ensure that people are not discriminated against because of where they live or produce their goods. That is the only way a transportation system in a country like Canada can operate properly.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in the debate this afternoon. I must say that the minister has risen above himself in attaining a level of obfuscation in his interpretation of the facts. It is a little difficult even to accuse him of intellectual dishonesty. I think he has attained a level of complete self-delusion if he believes that the only factual comment on transportation in this country must flow from his lips.

His charges that the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) resorted to falsehoods is sheer balderdash and the minister knows it. I am quite prepared to accept that there are difficulties in dealing with the subject in depth in thirty minutes, but the casual selection of data made by the minister to suit his political purposes is not acceptable. I will be surprised if it buys him a vote in Saskatoon, and I am sure that it will not hurt the hon. member for Vegreville at all. On balance, I think the hon. member put a lot more thoughtful preparation into his comments than did the minister.

As the hon. member for Vegreville indicated, the motion only gives a partial list of the minister's failings. As a sort of academic exercise a few months ago we listed 1,001 failings, any one of which would have been sufficient grounds for his resignation. We have only put forward half a dozen failings today, and our colleagues to the left have added two more very reasonable ones.

[Mr. Benjamin.]

Over the years the minister has rejected suggestions for reorganization of the department which would make it more responsive to the consultative process. He has rejected the reorganization that would permit good ideas to be sifted, considered and find their way into legislation or regulations. That is regrettable. Transportation is in a mess in this country, for the simple reason that no man, not even the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), can properly and adequately cope with the myriad of details and the complexity involved in national transportation.

We have not delayed legislation, as the minister suggested, Mr. Speaker. He has brought forward several pieces of very specific legislation but he does not have in place his amended National Transportation Act although the present one is 10 or 12 years old. It is reasonable to suggest that the minister should bring in the amendments to the National Transportation Act so that we would have a background against which to consider the various pieces of ad hoc legislation he has brought in to meet specific situations.

It is interesting to note that the minister acceded to that. He did bring it on but he did not move to debate the matter in the House. He rejected out of hand our suggestion that if he wanted to move the legislation forward in this parliament, all he had to do was permit a day or two of debate on the amending bill and implement referral of the subject matter to the Standing Committee on Transportation and Communications.

My colleague's charge that this committee has not met is serious and factual. It is a matter of some regret that it has not been at work on matters of importance to the Canadian people. I would remind the minister that the offer to refer the subject matter of the bill to the committee where it could be discussed and witnesses called is still open. The bill could be strengthened in this way; then we could go on with consideration of the legislation that is so badly needed to assist transportation in this country.

I should like to deal with one aspect of transportation, Mr. Speaker. I am not sure that even the minister believes that we have a national marine policy. I give him credit, however, for having tried for the better part of a year to convince his cabinet colleagues of the necessity of moving very gradually toward control over our seaborne imports and exports.

To hear him say that we do not need this when, in fact, he is pressing hard for it, is a little difficult to take. All the indications pointed to a positive attitude on the part of the government. A shipping policy for Canada was produced. Interestingly enough, it looks as if four or five chapters were written by the minister and that somebody then shot him down in the final chapter. In my own mind I am sure that he did not agree with it. Newspaper headlines such as "Industry Blasts Ottawa Shipping Policy" or "Deep Sea Policy Opposed by Unions" would seem to endorse this.

We are dealing with a $25 billion industry, Mr. Speaker. Surely a sector of our economy of that magnitude deserves a little bit more attention than this government is apparently prepared to give it. We should be pursuing a marine transport policy which reflects the belief that the marine mode is a viable transportation industry sector on its own and should be viewed with the same amount of respect as other modes of transportation in this country. Its importance is not to be trifled with or left to the vagaries of the distant future, as the minister would suggest.

Marine transport must be co-ordinated with and made complementary to other marine related industries, such as shipbuilding and repair, the fisheries, and our fledgling but potentially vast ocean resource industry. We must have a marine policy which is freed from present obstacles, disincentives and restrictions. This will permit and encourage the pursuit of targets of opportunity which could be generating billions of dollars for Canada and hundreds of thousand of jobs for Canadians.

Much more specifically, if the minister is concerned about options that are available to us—and he is forever accusing this side of the House of not knowing what it is doing or where it is going—I will suggest a few. These are a few areas the minister could and perhaps should pursue. We should be encouraging the gradual development of a Canadian deep sea fleet by providing tax incentives and deferrals, as well as allowing for flexibility in the timing and claiming of capital cost allowances for new construction. I am not talking about direct subsidies or the pouring of any new money into this venture at all; I am talking about money which is simply not in motion at this time. Tax policies permitting pre-tax dollars to be spent on vessel replacement and low interest loans, similar to the type given by the Export Development Corporation, should be made available now to Canadian shipowners. This will enable them to take advantage of targets of opportunity as they foresee them.

There is another area, that of the far northern waters. The minister has been generous enough in a wishy-washy way to respond to urgings over many years with respect to these waters north of 60 degrees. There is no need to be wishy-washy about that. There is no need for Canadians not to have their full presence in the Arctic with respect to our own extraction of resources and its allied industry. No ships should be in these northern waters other than Canadian ships. These ships should be designed and built in Canada and their crews should be Canadian. They should be subject to Canadian law. There is no need for the present wishy-washy policy at all. The government should clearly say that it will lend assistance to the design and construction of special ships. In this instance we could be talking about the LNG or cargo ships, it does not matter. There is one there already.

As well, we are examining other principles. If we are to attract the support of financial communities interested in investing in marine matters, we should not be wishy-washy. We must clearly indicate to them that their investment will be protected by both regulation and by law. But we have not done that. The minister was not prepared to go even that far. There was some vague suggestion in reaction to our urgings that he would go a little way down the road, but he has not gone far enough.

A realistic and equitable share of Canadian water-borne trade carried by Canadian bottoms should be encouraged through the negotiation of bilateral trade agreements and with regard to UNCTAD's new code of conduct for liner conferences. These areas should be pursued. The fears of the early 1970s cannot be related to the realities of today. Decisions cannot be made based on those apprehensions. We must make decisions based on the reality of today, not six or seven years ago.

Consistent with the policy of removing obstacles and road blocks to the development of Canada's capability for re-entering deep sea trade, some particular emphasis should be put on the role which Canada should be playing in the development of international maritime codes, perhaps through an organization such as International Maritime Co-ordinating Organization. We should be doing this because standards are now being devised and put into place which do not have the fullest reflection of Canadian needs with respect to our northern waters, our coastal waters and our inland Great Lakes systems.

In furthering the case for Canada's re-entry into deep sea trade, around the world there are a large number of recently built ships which are lying idle. We should encourage Canadian entrepeneurs and ship owners to re-enter the foreign market by permitting them access to this idle ship tonnage and extending to them the benefits that I have just outlined. We should not give them the world. If these people go offshore and acquire a ship and we waive the usual import arrangements, the money and profits earned could and should be set aside on the basis that a Canadian built ship should be the next acquisition. In other words, for every ship bought offshore with government assistance any profits should be turned over to create activity in our Canadian shipyards for the construction of new vessels. This will be a stimulating factor for the shipbuilding industry.

Any marine policy should be better co-ordinated with construction activity in our yards than is the case at the present time. A requirement should be that all ships operating in government service, including ferries, be designed and built in Canadian yards, manned by Canadians and subject to Canadian laws. In my opinion, this can be achieved quite simply. But we do not do that. We have not brought an end to offshore leasing. I see no clear intent on the part of CN Marine and the Department of Transport to do anything meaningful about it. It never surprises me when I pick up a paper to read of a group, perhaps in Norway, Sweden, Germany or the U.K., looking for vessels to charter for our east coast ferry services.

One of the most disgraceful situations which is within the minister's area of competency must continue to be the anomalies in our national ports. In the main estimates tabled the other day I notice that the minister had seen fit to drop the National Harbours Board virtually completely from the itemized statements. I think the phrase "National Harbours Board" shows up somewhere in one of the statements of objectives, but for all intents and purposes it has been dropped. It no longer exists. And yet that is the only statutory authority that is maintaining ports of significance in Canada.

I find it very difficult to understand why the minister did not take steps earlier to correct these anomalies in spite of repeated urgings from this side of the House to do so. We have half in place at the Ports Council and half in place at the National Harbours Board. I suggest that the employees of the National Harbours Board have been in anything other than a high state of morale over the last two or three years. And yet the minister has seen fit to do little or virtually nothing about it. In my opinion, that is a damn shame.

I turn now to the pilotage authorities in this country. Five or six years ago when the royal commission on pilotage presented its report, one of its principal thoughts and recommendations was that the matter should be reviewed in five years. But that has not taken place. Traditional trading patterns with masters of ships sailing in waters in which they are familiar continue to require pilots. This is a further encumbrance to ship movement that reflects lack of concern, and I suppose in some sense reflects also the lack of awareness the minister has with respect to the difficulties facing the shipping industry in Canada. Tolls on the St. Lawrence seaway is another area needing attention. It can be clearly seen from the last annual report of the seaway authority, incidentally about a year late in its presentation, that it is now breaking even.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams)—Post Office—Door to door mail delivery in urban areas; the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis)—Finance—Ottawa—Grants in lieu of taxes; the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen)—Industry—Rebuilding of airports in Trinidad—Government involvement.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski:

That this House condemns the failure of the Minister of Transport to deal adequately with transportation matters in this country and, specifically, his failure:

(1) to provide an adequate marine transportation policy;

(2) to maintain acceptable standards of air safety;

(3) to deal adequately with grain movement, resulting in losses of hundreds of millions of dollars to producers and to the Canadian economy;

(4) to consider hardships imposed upon communities and producers arising from the implementation of the Prairie Rail Action Committee report;

(5) to provide consistent leadership in urban transportation; and

(6) to preside effectively and objectively over the granting of tenders and the administration of car rental concessions at Canada's international airports.

And the amendment thereto of Mr. Benjamin:

That the motion be amended by adding at the end thereof the following words:

(7) to implement the Hall royal commission report recommendations with regard to statutory rates;

(8) to ensure that transportation be used as an instrument of national policy rather than an instrument to make profits.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe if you ask you will find there is all party agreement to limit the speeches from here on in to 15 minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Hon. members have heard the representation of the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom). Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It is so ordered.

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to participate in this debate today because of the importance of transportation to the west coast and my long standing interest in transportation, particularly with regard to water-borne cargo.

In his remarks the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) alluded to the National Transportation Act. That act, which was passed by this House and enacted in 1967, called for a transportation system which was economic, adequate and efficient, in which the natural advantages of technology and the competitive forces of the market were left free to determine the rates, conditions of service and other aspects of the relationship between the suppliers and users of transportation services.

When the transportation policy was reviewed in 1975, many of the concepts and principles of the 1967 act were retained. These included intermodality, competition and regulation, commercial viability, subsidy programs and, of course, the elements of equity and accessibility.

One major shift in emphasis in the 1975 policy was the concept of using transportation to support national and regional economic and social development objectives. Transportation has always been viewed, to a greater or lesser extent, as an instrument of public purpose. This dates practically from confederation, and I am sure that every one of the hon. members here present is aware that the building of the first major transcontinental railway in Canada was to link the new province of British Columbia with the eastern provinces. But until 1975 the idea of using transportation to support other government objectives has been generally implicit and external to the traditional role of ensuring that Canada had an efficient and functioning transportation system. Now government policy makes it clear that regional development is an explicit objective of transportation and of Transport Canada as an operating department of the federal government.

Transport Canada is only one element in our country's complex and constantly changing transportation system. The role must, therefore, be assessed according to its interrelationships with the other components of the system, as well as with the non-transportation objectives of the government. Transport Canada is faced with many conflicting pressures as a result, not the least of which at this point in time is the fiscal restraints imposed on all federal agencies. We have been successful in keeping our expenditures as low as possible and increasing our revenues.

On the matter of marine transportation, Transport Canada recently released a shipping policy that identified a number of trends and developments that affect Canada's sea trade. The concerns arising from these trends and developments can be grouped into three categories: government involvement in shipping; reduced competition; and the changing economies of the shipping industry. Government involvement has increased greatly over the past two decades, to the point that in some trades, not the laws of supply and demand but the decisions of government determine what shipping services are to be made available and at what prices.

The financial and economic health of world shipping is not good. Extensive oversupply of shipping capacity, escalating operating costs, declining profits and the uncertain future of the shipping industry have begun to take their toll. What these changes suggest is that Canada's long-standing, and I believe successful, policy of reliance upon foreign flag shipping may have to be re-examined to see if it is the appropriate route to follow for the 1980s.

An examination of the key issues at play in the shipping world has led to the outlining of four principal shipping options. They are: total reliance on foreign flag shipping; Canadian owned and managed enterprises, using ships registered elsewhere and manned by foreign crews; foreign built, Canadian flag vessels crewed by Canadians; and, Canadian flag vessels built in Canada and manned by Canadians. The primary objective of a Canadian marine policy should be to ensure the continuing availability of adequate and economic shipping services as part of an over-all transportation system serving Canada, with a secondary objective of being able to capitalize on significant opportunities. With this objective in mind, I do not believe there are sufficient grounds for a radical shift in our shipping policy. However, some reorientation is necessary to better prepare us to meet changing circumstances.

In discussing the appropriate marine policy for Canada, I believe we must avoid the pitfalls evident elsewhere in international shipping where lavish assistance measures have led to the creation of merchant marine fleets that are inefficient and uneconomic.

Timing remains a fundamental issue in the direction of Canada's marine policy. If world conditions continue in the direction they have been going, it will merely be a matter of time as to when we will be launching the necessary package of government policies to encourage the creation of a Canadian shipping fleet in which we have a greater voice in regard to future development.

On February 1, 1979, the Board of Economic Development Ministers announced a national development policy for the shipbuilding industry. Members on all sides of the House applauded the government which was responding to sectoral studies of the shipbuilding industry. I would like to summarize the decisions made as of that date.

An extension was announced to the present 20 per cent shipbuilding subsidy to the end of 1979 and acceleration of government ship procurement orders was announced on that day by the President of the Board of Economic Development Ministers (Mr. Andras). The announcement reflected a reorientation of the government's policy of support for the shipbuilding industry in the face of a worldwide slump in demand.

The minister said the government will open discussions with industry, labour and the provinces to work out details of new measures designed to assist the industry. What was announced that day was a policy to maintain a shipbuilding and repair capacity in Canada during the present period of worldwide difficulty; to assist the industry to specialize the various areas and to reinforce its technical and innovative capacity; and to provide assistance to workers who, despite the efforts of government and industry, may no longer be able to find employment in the shipyards.

Details of that announcement contained other information, including expansion of the dry dock facilities for Burrard Yarrows Corporation, formerly Burrard Dry Dock Co. Ltd., at Vancouver; lengthening the existing dry dock at Saint John, New Brunswick; and construction of a 4,000 ton synchrolift at the CN dockyard in St. John's, Newfoundland.

The minister also announced at that time that the advance ship procurement will involve construction of an "R" class Arctic icebreaker to replace the 25-year-old D'Iberville; replacement of the ferry Abegweit on the Prince Edward Island-Cape Tormentine run by a new ice-breaking vessel with about three times the capacity; construction of a 205-foot fisheries patrol vessel to replace the Halifax based Cygnus; refit the HMC Preserver, an operational naval support vessel now operating in the Atlantic to allow it to operate in the Arctic; and construction of seven search and rescue vessels for the Canadian coast guard service on both coasts. As I have said, I believe members on both sides will applaud the action taken by the government in the search and rescue field in which a number of us have an interest.

● (1710)

I should like to comment on the statement made by the Minister of Transport on January 24. Dealing with Canadian deep sea shipping policy he said:

1. There will be a continued reliance on the international shipping market to supply most Canadian deep-sea requirements.

2. While no new financial or tax incentives for a Canadian-registered fleet are proposed at this time, the government will require that Canadian flag vessels, where available at reasonable cost, are to be used as a condition of export of processed or partially processed resources from the Arctic.

3. The government is prepared, in addition, to consider requests for assistance in the use of Canadian-built and registered vessels related to Arctic development.

4. The federal government will introduce legislation to enable it to act where national interests are threatened by foreign governments or carriers, to permit the designation of "Canadian" shipping lines, and to provide for agreements enabling Canadian companies to trade in areas where they might otherwise be precluded.

Most of us are aware of repeated statements made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) and others with respect to the deficit on Canada's tourism account of approximately $1.6 billion a year. I suggest there is a situation in international shipping which is costing Canada approximately $2 billion a year. I refer to outflows of Canadian dollars used to procure the services of foreign bottoms. Many of us on either side of the political spectrum would agree that it ought to be the policy of the government to reduce deficits encountered in the exporting and importing of goods, if for no other reason than improvement in the balance of trade. No one suggests the situation can be changed overnight but we should be taking steps to encourage the movement of our goods by Canadian ships as a matter of primary concern.

In relation to many countries we are a very young nation and we have concerned ourselves more particularly throughout the years with connecting the various regions of this wide-flung nation through rail lines, roads and air transport. We sought to do this rather than strengthen our links with other countries by way of water-borne trade. However, we have reached the point at which most of our people are well served by the existing transport system and perhaps we could now begin to look outward more frequently and deal with the import and export of goods as one of the world's principal traders. I am concerned about our dependence on foreign bottoms, partly because I believe the situation is parallel to that which we face in the field of energy where a portion of our oil supplies is dependent on fuel sources outside Canada.

In the last few years we have seen a very interesting situation develop. Through its state-owned shipping company the U.S.S.R. has cut shipping rates and become extremely competitive. Indeed, much of the world's trade now depends on U.S.S.R. bottoms. I wonder if many members in this chamber will consider this to be a secure method of shipping goods and supplies which are vital to Canada. Is this situation not one which is similar to that which we have experienced in energy—

[Mr. Anderson.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. I must inform the hon. member that his time has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to say a few words, first of all on the motion moved by my hon. colleague, the member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). I would like more particularly to refer to the debates of last January 29 when I moved in the House a motion asking for a national navigation policy, and I quote:

—a national navigation policy, the prime objective of which would be to lay a favourable groundwork for the setting up of a true Canadian merchant marine.

Mr. Speaker, while this is only one of the aspects of the transportation policy, it is important. As a matter of fact, we cannot constantly defer our action in that area. It is the responsibility of the present government, and not of future generations, to solve that problem. We made some progress as far as the moving of resources in the Arctic is concerned. The government did take some measures to ensure that the beneficiaries are Canadian people. But what is more important is the international transportation of goods. When we speak of international transportation of goods, we mean their transportation on the high seas, on the deep seas that surround us. When I discussed the matter of a merchant marine for our trade, I said that the report on shipping tabled last month represented the status quo for those who advocate a merchant marine.

Indeed, one of the conclusions of the report was that we could not afford a merchant marine, and especially that it was not justified. Costs did not justify it, according to the report.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lapointe) replied to me saying it was not the status quo since we are doing everything possible to make sure that our Arctic resources are transported by Canadians. The islands in the Arctic are in Canadian territory; and therefore, this is not a question of trade.

Mr. Speaker, I am absolutely convinced that many hon. members in this House are eager to see Canada develop a merchant marine. My colleague from Lévis (Mr. Guay) has brought up the matter repeatedly over the years.

Indeed, when I introduced my motion on January 29 last he said that he had been debating that issue for nearly 15 years. My colleague from Esquimalt-Saanich is also interested in the issue. For them, the conclusion of the report is quite clear, and I quote:

After full consideration of all of the factors involved, the government has concluded that, in the present circumstances achievement of these objectives does not warrant the provision of new tax or financial measures to support the development of a Canadian deep-sea merchant marine.

I do not know what government members base themselves on to say that it is not the status quo. Canada, a rich, industrialized and respected country among the major countries of this world has the merchant marine it deserves—four ships proudly flying the red maple leaf. Following the government report, we will soon be able to sing about our merchant marine: "Il était un petit navire qui n'avait jamais jamais navigué." Indeed, Mr. Speaker, one of the owners of one of those four boats is a Rimouski shipowner, Mr. Jules Jourdain. He was telling me that last year, when he was in one of the third world countries on a pier he saw something that just staggered him. He saw large quantities of goods and sacks of wheat or other things clearly marked CANADA being hauled by a Liberian ship. He told me: I was really confused, ashamed and particularly shocked by the fact that our generosity was being transported by a foreign merchant marine. And he added: The contracts the federal government awards for the transportation of outside machinery and goods are awarded to individuals who do not even have a boat.

Indeed, there are agencies somewhere around Montreal or Ottawa taking contracts from the government and then chartering foreign boats with cheap labour crews. And he added: That goes on right under our noses, and I with a crew of 20 have all the difficulty in the world at my own risk operating a 2,500 ton boat. That is the present situation in this country, Mr. Speaker. So, the government policy is unequivocal, we do not need a merchant marine. There will always be foreign shipowners to take advantage of it.

Let us now deal with other areas of transportation. I have risen on several occasions, despite what my colleague and friend from Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Béchard) might think, to criticize the CN passenger service as well as air transport. I am particularly gratified that passenger service has been given a new impetus by the creation of VIA Rail. Canadians have long ceased relying on railways as a means of transportation, because service was abominable and cars outdated. That explains why bus companies have flourished since the early 60s. We are 20 years or more behind Europe when it comes to passenger rail service. VIA Rail has instilled high hopes, but it takes years to restructure an entire railway system. By that time, people may be so used to the bus and the plane that VIA Rail will never be economically viable. All this is due to a lack of leadership in transportation. That is why we must now do something about shipping and suburban transportation, which is also giving way to the bus.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to go back to June 1975 when the former minister of transport, who is now in the Senate, announced the principles which would guide the transport policy of this government, that is availability, profitability and active control by the government in the development of a national transportation network. I would like to repeat this last principle: active control by the government in the development of a national transportation network.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the great distances between our various areas it is quite obvious that adequate and effective means of transport are essential. Economically disadvantaged areas cannot develop, often because they do not have the necessary transportation infrastructures. I would like to take this opportunity to say a few words about eastern Quebec. On several occasions, I have requested improvements in the air service provided to the Gaspé peninsula and the Magdalen Islands. The government recently announced certain improvements, about which I am quite pleased. Let us take the VIA Rail service. Never try telling the people in our area about the train. The service is very bad, winter and summer. The train is always late. The troubles at the Voyageur bus line continue. Part of the Gaspé peninsula is serviced only by this company, all the way from Gaspé to Mont-Joli and including Sainte-Anne-Des-Monts and Matane. The situation is quite intolerable. My colleague from Vegreville is doing a great service to Canada today by giving us an opportunity to speak about a matter of such importance for the future of our country.

Mr. Speaker, we should respond as soon as possible by developing a transportation policy based on the needs of the population and present realities. If our oil supplies decrease as years go by and fuel prices increase, Canadians will rely much more on public transport, which includes trains, buses and airplanes. We shall therefore have to show some initiatives and not be afraid to take up the challenge, as has unfortunately happened in the case of our merchant navy. Following the budgetary cutbacks, I wonder whether we can expect any major transportation project to be implemented. However, I believe that we must underline that it is the so-called economically underdeveloped areas which suffer most from the weaknesses in our transportation policy. Obviously, industries are not going to settle where there is no adequate freight or passenger services. Then, the only industries our rural regions are going to get are primary industries, that is natural resources industries and small local industries.

This means that all our economic problems are related to a certain extent to the transportation situation. I shall add that we might have advantage in following the example of some European countries or even the United States that made substantial progress in recent years. The United States have decided to protect and expand their shipping industry. We might be well advised to create an inquiry commission to study the transportation needs of the various areas and to establish, in co-operation with the provinces, joint plans for the development of our transportation systems. The transportation issue is of such magnitude that we might discuss it forever. So, to conclude my remarks, I thank my colleague from Vegreville for the interest he demonstrated for that subject and for having given us the opportunity to express our views on the performance of the government in this field.

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take part in this debate today. The opposition motion deals with a condemnation of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) for not dealing adequately with transport matters and specifically grain movement, which has resulted in the loss of hundreds of millions of dollars to producers and to the Canadian economy. To be more specific, the amount lost last year was about $450 million in deferred or lost sales because of inaction by this government. Every time this government has to make a decision, it commissions another study on western grain. That $450 million represents a loss of about $3,000 for every permit holder in western Canada, and I know of no other group in this country which would put up with that kind of loss. On top of that, Mr. Speaker, they have incurred some $25 million in demurrage charges for ships that have been waiting, mainly in the Vancouver area. Of course, the demurrage charges will once again be very high in the coming year.

What is very important in this whole debate on grain transportation is the lack of confidence in Canada, among our customers in other parts of the world. At present Chinese officials are travelling across Canada—today they are in Winnipeg. They are very cautious about the size of their purchase for the coming years because they are aware of the difficulties we have in moving our grain to export. Also, we have lost sales to Japan, not only last year but this year. It is interesting to note that the Canadian Wheat Board tenders for grain sales to Japan, which are done on a weekly basis and are considered to be bread and butter sales. In recent months the Wheat Board has had to cancel these tenders because of our inadequate transportation system.

My point is that Canada's international reputation is being severely damaged at present. I am concerned about the fact that we are in danger of losing further grain sales in the coming months. That is becoming more and more evident all the time. The problem is that Canadians do not seem to realize the seriousness of the situation. There are indications at present that there have been additional deferrals of grain sales in the present crop year, and certainly the Wheat Board is not talking about them.

In terms of the industry itself, it is a sad story of a long series of studies that the Minister of Transport has perpetrated on the western farmer. A number of studies have been carried out, but in 1975 the first major study was undertaken by Justice Emmett Hall. That is history now, and we remember it as the Hall commission. The over-all system was reviewed then. Then we had the Snavely report, on the costing study. Then we had a study by the Prairie Rail Action committee which the government instituted because it did not feel that the Hall commission study was sufficiently thorough. At present we have an ongoing study called the Booz-Allen study in which they are trying to pinpoint the problems in areas which have already been studied.

We also have the quota review committee which has studied the problem of quotas, and the grain summit which was brought into being by the premier of Manitoba, which involves the province, the industry and the federal government. This study was conducted because no positive action has been taken by the federal government. Also, we have at present a study of producer cars. The feeling in the west is that whenever a hard decision must be made, the government comes up with another study. Problems are never really solved by action, they are studied to death, in the hope, I suppose, that at some point in time they will go away.

As an indication of the kind of problem we are facing, let me point to the whole question of the rail hopper cars. The Canadian grain fleet consists, to quite an extent, of old, small boxcars that cannot move grain as efficiently and quickly as necessary. Some time ago the federal government purchased some 8,000 hopper cars to move grain. The Wheat Board, because it felt frustrated due to its inability to acquire more hopper cars from the federal government, purchased its own hopper cars, or rather is in the process of doing so, but the matter is still before the courts. The Wheat Board is talking in terms of purchasing some 2,000 cars. Recently the board made a statement that it would like to see the provincial government and the federal government purchase an additional 10,000 cars in the next few years.

Because of the inaction of the government, because of endless studies and foot-dragging, and because the Minister of Transport and the Liberal government refuse to make a decision, we could end up with rail grain cars owned, some by the federal government, some by the producers, and some by the provincial governments. Ultimately there would be a terrible mix-up and nobody would know what the other group was doing, least of all the railways operating those cars.

At present the province of Manitoba is probably the worst of any of the prairie provinces in terms of grain movement. In Manitoba most of the grain goes to Thunder Bay, which freezes up in the winter so that there is very little movement out of Thunder Bay in that season. In fact it is almost non-existent then. Because of the bottlenecks in the transportation system, feed grains, rapeseed and flax, the traditional crops produced in some quantities in Manitoba, are not moving out of the province. Only a little of high protein wheat, the 13.5 per cent protein wheat, is moving out of some parts of the province, but for the most part grain movement is non-existent.

In the past winter, cash flow for the Manitoba grain farmer has been low, to say the least. Presumably quotas will open up in the province when road restrictions are on, restricting the ability of farmers to move grain. But the basic problem is that grain which should be moving to Thunder Bay at present because there is room in the elevators is not being moved. We need, in this country, better co-ordination in our grain movement to Thunder Bay, we need a build-up of supplies at Thunder Bay during the winter months, and the Canadian Wheat Board export program needs to be upgraded. In other words, what we should have is incentives built in throughout the whole grain handling system.

Another area to which we should address ourselves in terms of grain transportation is increasing the capacity of our ports to handle grain. We need better co-ordination of railways, a build-up of supply at the ports, and the upgrading of the Wheat Board export program. There are other ports in the country which can handle a sizeable amount of grain if we do our handling properly. There is the Port of Churchill in the province of Manitoba. We should aim at exporting a minimum of 50 millions bushels of grain through that port every year. I believe our highest exports at the present time are in the neighbourhood of some 30 million to 32 million bushels. The Prince Rupert port must be upgraded so that the surge capacity so desperately needed at Vancouver will be there. It is not there at the present time, and that is where most of our problems exist.

In order to alleviate some of the problems I have talked about, we on this side of the House feel there is a definite need for a grain transportation co-ordinator. Some people might call that particular person a grain czar, but what is needed is someone with the legislative power to deal with the railways, the unions, the grain companies, and the elevator companies in order to get them working together. We have put this point before the House of Commons on previous occasions, but once again it has not been acted upon. We will probably have a study after all this to see whether that would be a good workable idea. Certainly in the next two or three years, until some of the present basic problems in the whole transportation and grain handling systems are solved, such a position is required.

The staff of the co-ordinator could be small and, in my opinion, the office should be located in Winnipeg. It would not cost very much. Obviously the reason the office should be in Winnipeg is that that is where the head offices of grain companies are, and that is where the head office of the western region of the railways is located. That individual, with a reasonably small staff, could work with the industry to co-ordinate functions which are not being carried out at the present time. He should co-ordinate the movement of our grain to markets so that we do not end up with a loss in sales in the neighbourhood of some $450 million, and presumably these figures will come very close to repeating themselves this year.

The way grain transportation, grain handling and collecting systems are operating at the present time, the job will not be done properly. The operation is too fragmented, and leadership is not coming from the Minister of Transport. This whole question is certainly important to western farmers and westeners in general. It should also be considered important to all the people of Canada considering the amount of money being generated and brought into Canada by this industry. In my opinion, the government, in the area of grain handling, has been viewed by the people of Canada as sorely lacking, for the past number of years.

Transportation

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, we have before the House of Commons today another of those motions directed against the Wheat Board and Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang). If you were to read the motion itself, or just listen to the speech by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), you could very easily conclude that this was a motion steeped in some rather vitriolic and irrational hyperbole, calculated not to achieve anything very worth-while or constructive, but rather to offend and be offensive. I suppose if you stopped the process just after reading the motion, or just after listening to the hon. member for Vegreville, you might conclude that this whole process is totally partisan and largely irrelevant from the point of view of accomplishing anything worth-while.

I think, in the course of the discussion that took place after that initial speaker this afternoon, the tone took a turn for the better. In the course of the discussion that has taken place since the speech by that hon. member for Vegreville, we have perhaps heard something worth-while. I for one certainly do not intend to deal with his political attacks or partisan comments because they are irrelevant and totally unfounded.

I can understand his sensitivity when I consider that the polls and the trend of momentum in Canada are not in his favour. If he checks the numbers he will find that is true. I do not intend to get into that argument which he opened up. Instead, I will deal with what is substantive in the motion, and with what has been said by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) and the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) who spoke earlier in the debate. I will try to deal with some of the substantive points they raised, because I think, in spite of the introduction we got from the hon. member for Vegreville, the subject is a serious one that we in the House of Commons should treat seriously. I do not intend to get into that rather petty debate which the hon. member for Vegreville launched this afternoon.

In the time that is available it is impossible to deal with all the points listed in the motion, in any kind of detail. The motion does raise some important questions and one could not really dispose of all of them in the course of only 15 minutes. I should like to deal particularly with point No. 4 in the motion which relates particularly to the report of the Prairie Rail Action Committee. The opposition's reaction to that particular report has, almost without exception, tended to be entirely negative. It would appear that the members of the opposition parties, with one or two notable exceptions, have rejected the report of the Prairie Rail Action Committee, and have rejected the very concept of that committee out of hand.

I think it is important to keep that report and the work of PRAC in context. In 1974 we began a process in western Canada of categorizing rail lines, moving toward a rail system that will have the capacity to meet the challenges we all know are coming in the future. When we started that process in 1974 we began with a network consisting of something just over 19,000 miles. The Prairie Rail Action Committee was asked to look at 2,400 miles of that total network of 19,000 miles. Obviously the work of PRAC related to a relatively small proportion of the rail network in the west.

Of the 2,400 miles that PRAC was examining, the committee made a positive recommendation for the retention of 1,000 miles, and a negative recommendation suggesting the abandonment of about 1,400 miles. The total study obviously involved a small proportion of the total picture in respect of grain transportation in western Canada, and even if the negative recommendations were all to be implemented as they were proposed in the PRAC report, and even if they were applied to the very letter, less than 10 per cent of the trackage in western Canada would be involved, and less than 10 per cent of the total number of delivery points in western Canada would be affected.

The motion talks about the implementation of the PRAC report and recommendations. Wherever that committee made a positive recommendation, recommending that a rail line should be retained, the Government of Canada has acted quickly to retain that line and to move it from the doubtful category, where it was left by the Hall commission, into the permanent category, where it is guaranteed for the future and can go on the schedule for upgrading. In every instance where PRAC made a positive recommendation, that recommendation has in fact been implemented.

As for the negative suggestions in the report, those recommendations are not within the government's hands to implement. They will now be referred to the Canadian Transport Commission for consideration, and I have every confidence in the world that the CTC will allow the communities, the farmers, and those who are interested in these lines, and vitally interested in them, to present their arguments, and will give them every possible consideration in the most favourable light.

Again if we remember the context in which the Prairie Rail Action Committee began we will know that the statistics I mentioned indicate that the study was in respect of a relatively small portion of the rail network in western Canada. In 1974 we had that initial categorization of rail lines, followed by the Hall Commission report, which was followed by PRAC. At this stage after the work of PRAC, but before the final work done by the Canadian Transport Commission, already a full 80 per cent of the total prairie network we began with in 1974 is in the permanent category, is guaranteed, and is on the schedule for upgrading for the future. I think that it is important to keep those numbers in mind to understand the context within which the Prairie Rail Action Committee was working. Furthermore, with respect to the negative recommendations in the PRAC report, I think that it is important also to approach that next step, and that is the work of the Canadian Transport Commission with a positive and determined attitude.

In this regard I think it is important to take a look at what is happening in some cases across western Canada, and as an example I will refer to my own constituency of Assiniboia. I have had the opportunity already to get together with many of the groups in communities that are working vigorously for rail line retention in my constituency, and to date these discussions have included get togethers in Francis and Gray about the Lewvan subdivision which was mentioned earlier this afternoon, in Bengough with regard to the Bengough and Avonlea subdivisions and the line to Big Beaver, in Big Beaver itself, in Lake Alma and Minton regarding the Bromhead subdivision to Minton, and in Ceylon regarding the Bengough subdivision. Further sessions of this kind are planned for this weekend in Lewvan, Benson, Bengough and Dummer, and undoubtedly meetings of this kind will continue into the future as well.

I am very pleased to have the opportunity of participating in these discussions and to work with the individuals and the local organizations which are involved, and as all this work goes forward I want to be sure that the strongest and most favourable arguments are advanced before the CTC on behalf of the communities in my area where rail lines may be affected by PRAC recommendations. Many local people are doing research work now and are preparing their briefs. They can count upon me and upon my office for every assistance, as I have told them directly on many occasions. I think that the recommendations they want to make are good ones, and I am optimistic about what we will be able to accomplish in this regard.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: If you need any help, Ralph, you can call on me.

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn) offers his assistance. I can assure him that we will win these cases without his assistance and, indeed, he is not going to be in any position to offer anybody very much assistance.

In describing the situation in Assiniboia and what is being done there in co-operation with groups and organizations, I would like to deal for just a moment with where the opposition parties stand in relation to the PRAC report. Both of them have confirmed here today that their official positions are basically to oppose entirely the recommendations of the Prairie Rail Action Committee in its report. They apparently would revert to the 1977 report of the Hall commission. That sounds innocent enough and it sounds like motherhood, but what does it really mean, and how would that sort of action affect Assiniboia constituents?

If the Tories and the NDP got their way and if the Hall report were to be implemented as they suggest, many rail miles in my part of Saskatchewan which are now fully protected and which are now a part of the permanent system and are guaranteed for the future, would either be abandoned or left in an uncertain, unprotected position for perhaps another 12 years.

It is important to remember that the lines assigned to the Prairie Rail Action Committee for study, the 2,400 miles I mentioned a moment ago, were lines where the Hall commission had failed to make a definitive recommendation, either for retention or abandonment. Instead, the Hall commission had suggested that these lines should go into some sort of limbo category. They were to be run temporarily by a new government agency called the Prairie Rail Authority, but they were not to be in the permanent network, they were not scheduled for upgrading, and they could be abandoned at any time by the PRA between 1977 and 1990. That is hardly a desirable situation. Farmers and farm organizations made it clear that such languishing uncertainty would be intolerable.

Accordingly, the federal government asked the Prairie Rail Action Committee to review these 2,400 miles of rail line left in that limbo state by the Hall report. The objective was to see if a higher degree of certainty about these lines could be achieved without waiting for Hall's doubtful period to expire in 1990. The PRAC report called for retention of about 1,000 of the rail miles studied. As I mentioned before, we have already acted to move each and every one of these rail lines into the permanent, basic, guaranteed network.

In the constituency of Assiniboia, the PRAC and the subsequent action of the federal government have saved and protected lines like the Wood Mountain subdivision from Maxstone to Mankota, the Avonlea subdivision from Moose Jaw to Avonlea and Claybank, the Tyvan subdivision from Regina to Stoughton, the Bromhead subdivision from Southall to Tribune, the Weyburn subdivision from Weyburn to Radville, the Amulet subdivision from Ormiston to Crane Valley, and the Gravelbourg subdivision from Mossbank to Hodgeville.

In the first six of these cases—I have just mentioned seven—we have taken doubtful lines left in limbo by the Hall commission and we have guaranteed them for the future as a result of the report of the Prairie Rail Action Committee. The significant part in assessing the opposition position is that the opposition parties in this House have exactly the opposite policy, and by totally rejecting the PRAC concept and by clinging as they do instinctively to the the Hall report, the Tories and the NDP are arguing for the doubt and uncertainty on these lines to continue for up to another 12 years.

In the case of the Gravelbourg subdivision, which was the seventh of the lines which I just mentioned, the opposition parties are arguing for continuing the limbo status of the portion from Mossbank to Gravelbourg through Bateman to Hodgeville—because that is what Hall recommended. The PRAC report helped to save the Gravelbourg line, but the Tories and the NDP have rejected the PRAC report in its entirety.

I believe that the evidence which I have cited this afternoon shows that the Prairie Rail Action Committee did a substantial amount of good and useful work and that it should not be rejected out of hand. We can each disagree with certain conclusions, and the conclusions are there, spelled out in detail, so one can see where it is possible to disagree because the arguments are there. If the PRAC has made mistakes, they are obvious on the face of the record and can be pointed out and questioned. Where the PRAC has proposed abandonment, the cases will be reviewed, as I said before, in due course by the CTC so we will have another opportunity to argue strenously for retention. As I have indicated, I am working closely with many of the local groups involved in this effort in my area. The cases which we have to present are good ones, and I am optimistic about the prospects that we have for a positive and favourable conclusion.

In the final analysis, I am confident, as I have said, that we are now building effectively in western Canada toward a capacity where we will be able to move a billion bushels of grain, and beyond, each year with speed and efficiency. We have the marketing opportunities to move that grain, our farmers have the productive capacity, and I am sure that the grain industry, assisted by the Government of Canada, will be able to meet the challenge.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to raise a brief question of privilege in view of remarks by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale). It has been my observation in listening to the radio in Saskatchewan that someone is imitating the voice of the hon. member and saying that the PRAC has exceeded its jurisdiction. I just wanted him to know that.

Mr. Goodale: The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn) will know that the remarks that I have made in that respect refer very specifically to one instance in the report of the PRAC having to do with the Lewvan subdivision running southeast from Regina. If the hon. member will wait for about 48 hours, I think that he will have some pleasant news in that regard.

Mr. Neil: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I may call it six o'clock.

Mr. Malone: A point of order, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Six o'clock has been called by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil). I will recognize the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Malone) at eight o'clock when the House resumes.

It being six o'clock p.m., I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

• (2000)

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, in my opinion the debate this evening is a very important one and concerns a subject that really cannot be adequately dealt with in the time allotted to each speaker. This government, and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) in particular, have failed disastrously in the field of transportation. Because of the short time available to me, my remarks will be restricted to items Nos. (3) and (4) in the motion, which read as follows:

(3) to deal adequately with grain movement, resulting in losses of hundreds of millions of dollars to producers and to the Canadian economy;

(4) to consider hardships imposed upon communities and producers arising from the implementation of the Prairie Rail Action Committee report.

The Minister of Transport may brag about the grain that has been sold, and he does so on every occasion that he rises to speak. However, he never mentions the millions of dollars lost by producers, which according to the Wheat Board in a recent letter sent to producers, amounted to something like $450 million in the last crop year. If this is related to the farmer or producer, it means something in the order of $3,000 each, and if we use the multiplier effect of 5.2, we find the loss to the economy is in the nature of $2.5 billion.

When the minister is on his feet he never talks about lost sales in any detail. He never talks about lost markets or the loss of Canada's credibility as a supplier and, of course, he never talks about the millions of dollars in demurrage charges that pile up every year and which are charged to the farmers' accounts by the Wheat Board.

Since the minister assumed that portfolio his solution has been to set up a series of commissions and studies. The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) who spoke earlier today listed them. What he does with those commissions and studies, with the exception of PRAC, is put them on the shelf and forget about them. In April, 1977, he set up the Hall commission which carried out the most comprehensive study of grain handling and transportation ever conducted in the history of western Canada. The commission held many meetings throughout the prairie provinces, both on a local and regional basis, and heard some 1,180 submissions. The report was submitted to the minister. It was almost one year to the day before the minister met with Mr. Justice Hall to discuss the recommendations in that report.

I suggest the minister would not have met with Mr. Justice Hall at that time had it not been for the fact that the Standing Committee on Agriculture passed a motion requesting Mr. Justice Hall and his officials to appear before the committee. Such a motion would never have passed except that one member of the Liberal party who attended the committee meeting had the guts to vote with the opposition in asking for Mr. Justice Hall's attendance. It was only then that the minister decided to meet with Mr. Justice Hall.

The official opposition gave general approval to the recommendations of the Hall commission, including the recommendation for the setting up of a Prairie Rail Authority. We believed the implementation of the many recommendations would be one step toward the solution of the grain handling and transportation system and the rationalization of the system. But the minister's response to the Hall commission report was to set up another committee. This was not the Prairie Rail Authority, but what he called the Prairie Rail Action Committee. That committee was chaired by Dr. Fred Anderson of Regina, a man who apparently had a preconceived idea of any individual or community he considered were branch line retentionists. He had this to say at page 7 of his report:

The retentionist picture of prairie society seems to be one of static decay, a picture of an indigent prairie grain industry served by dying towns, locked into a fixed and obsolete technology of production and transport. That such is portrayed by some of those who are the political and industrial leaders of prairie agriculture is a tragic disservice to an important industry dependent on efficiency for success in world markets.

He is a man who apparently does not understand the importance and the viability of small towns. He sounds like a man who would endorse the philosophy contained in that famous report given to the government entitled "Agriculture in the Seventies" which envisaged the elimination of the family farm. He would cut down the number of farms by two-thirds and cut back production by one half. I almost said four-fifths and one fifth, thinking back to what the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lalonde) said the other day, and thinking of remarks made by the minister when he spoke in this debate and mentioned the flip-flopping of this party and its leader. It reminded me of the remarks made by the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations (Mr. Reid) and the remarks made by the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. De Bané) on Quebec separatism. If the minister had turned an ear and listened to members in his party and cabinet colleagues he would not have talked about a flip-flop on this side. This government is the biggest flip and the biggest flop in the history of this country.

Dr. Anderson sounded like a man who envisaged, as the Minister of Transport did, an elevator system made up of only 22 inland terminals located in larger centres, with 356 satellite elevators, with trucks being the major system of transportation in effect saying "to hell with the smaller towns and communities." The PRAC committee in reaching its conclusions regarding branch lines totally ignored the undertakings made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in the 1974 election. In that campaign, in June 1974, the Prime Minister promised the western farmer that the Government of Canada would not abandon branch lines as long as elevator companies considered that elevator service was warranted.

There are a number of lines that fall into that category throughout the prairie system. I could cite a number, but I will only refer to two, both of which are located in my constituency. One is the Colonsay line where the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool and the United Grain Growers, before the Hall commission, before community hearings and before the PRAC committee hearings, undertook in some cases to build and to upgrade the facilities. The other one is the Central Butte—Riverhurst line where the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool and Cargill undertook to enlarge or build new facilities. In both cases the PRAC committee said that the lines must go. This was despite the fact that a substantial portion of the lines that were indicated should be abandoned were accepted by the community. But the key portion of the lines where the elevator companies said they would give service were from Central Butte to Riverhurst and from Dilke to Liberty. As I mentioned, PRAC had said these portions must also go. Despite the undertaking given by the Prime Minister in 1974, the minister has not been prepared to lift a finger to say that these portions of the line should be retained.

We are suspicious that the minister and this government may be playing political games and will wait until an election campaign, and at that time the liberal candidates who will be in the various constituencies will say, "We have saved your line for you. The minister has decided that these lines which PRAC said should be abandoned will be saved." If this is what the minister is going to do, let him take a firm stand now and tell us what his intentions are. Let us not play politics. Let us not use branch line abandonment as an election gimmick. The policy of this party, and I will say it loud and clear so there is no misunderstanding, is that when we form the government, and we will form the government after the next election, will be that those branch lines where, during the hearings, the elevator companies said they would undertake to build new facilities and/or upgrade present facilities and continue to give service, will be retained. This is an undertaking that I am giving on behalf of our party, the official opposition, the party that will form the government after the next election.

In early December other western members of the official opposition and myself travelled west and met with members of the three wheat pools, the United Grain Growers, various other grain companies, as well as the Canadian Wheat Board, the grain commission, agricultural organizations and officials of the railways in the three prairie provinces. It was interesting to hear their views. We came away with one conclusion, that every facet of the system was blaming the other for the problems that exist and have existed for a number of years. It boiled down to the fact that this minister never at any time convened a meeting of representatives of all the various components of the system, including producer representatives, to determine the reasons for and possible solutions to the problems that exist in the grain handling and transportation system.

As the hon. member for Vegreville said, it was left to the premier of Manitoba, Sterling Lyon, to call a summit meeting. It was with considerable reluctance that the Minister of Transport attended. The meeting was an embarrassment to the minister because it took the initiative away from him. Of course he really has not ever had any initiative. The minister has failed in his mandate. He can boast all he likes about his success in grain handling and transportation, but come the next election I am sure that the electorate will overwhelmingly let him and his government know what they think of his record.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to note that the speeches in this debate have been cut to 15 minutes. It indicates the importance of this subject to all parties. Transportation can never be a marginal subject for Canadians, for two basic reasons. As this is a massive country it is often necessary to move our goods over long distances. A high percentage of our gross national product, 15 per cent or more, is spent in so doing. We are, if not in the real sense, at least on a per capita basis the world's largest trading nation. The movement of goods in and out of our ports of entry is a vital fact.

At the end of his trip, and I do not intend to use the subject of transportation to dwell on that, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) made a very interesting statement, considering that we are in effect the largest trading nation in the world on a per capita basis. He said, and I quote:

> There will be a marginal increase in attention to world issues, but I expect to be preoccupied with the agenda of parliament and an election campaign, in which foreign policy questions likely won't play a major role. I foresee, now, the priorities of our early years in office as having their origins domestically.

I do not understand how someone preparing himself for the office of prime minister, and a party preparing itself to rule, can say that foreign affairs will not be of consequence to us, especially during this time of massive global problems such as those in China, moving oil from Iran, and so on.

We have to look at transportation not as a marginal aspect but as a very important aspect of life in Canada. We have to look at transportation as it affects our foreign trade. Certainly discussions concerning the grain industry have been in that direction.

I might be blamed for being somewhat parochial in introducing the topic of foreign trade. However, I defend myself against that charge on the ground that the city of Thunder Bay is a very major port in this country, the third largest in Canada. Through it is shipped two thirds of all the grain that is moved out of Canada. When I speak of activities in my community, I speak of activities that are very pertinent to Canada's trade, and foreign trade in general. This country exports between 80 and 90 per cent of its forest products. Taking both of these together, we see that foreign trade becomes extremely important in the life of our community as well as the life of this country.

In addition to being the largest grain port, it is rapidly becoming if not the largest then one of the largest coal ports. Within the next five years it will be the largest coal port in this country. Therefore transportation is a very important issue to the people of Thunder Bay and to the rest of Canada. Sometimes I take to task the people in my community who do not see this in such an important role although most of their livelihood is, in one way or another, related to this topic.

There has been a great deal of discussion in this chamber about moving grain to alternate points such as Churchill, Vancouver, and Prince Rupert. I do not say that that is not necessary. There is a tendency to forget the fact that two thirds of western grain moves through the port of Thunder Bay.

Senior railroad officials have suggested that were it not for the Crowsnest arrangement, and I am not suggesting that that should disappear, and the true costs of moving grain were understood, most of the grain in this country would be moved through Thunder Bay and not west coast ports because of the extreme costs in moving commodities across the Rockies. I would like to see that suggestion proved or disproved. Be that as it may, our role is significant.

I have one criticism which has been made over a long period of years, namely, that we have not made the kind of impression upon people in the western provinces that we should have made. In terms of our economy we are much more closely associated with Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, than with Ontario. It was only an accident of history, certainly not of geography, that we were included in the province of Ontario.

I have suggested in discussions with officials in the Ministry of Transport that we should consider moving much closer in our associations with people in the western provinces. There is a great need for people in Thunder Bay to associate themselves with people in the transportation business in the three prairie provinces. At some point in the fairly near future our harbour commission should be enlarged in some form or another to include a representative from each of the three provinces. An alternate suggestion would be to set up an advisory board with the three provinces. We could then begin to understand in the western provinces and in my community that this is a relationship which is very important. I hope these studies will be acted upon by the ministry and supported by the harbours commission.

Mr. Benjamin: You had 15 years and you blew it.

Mr. McRae: It has been suggested that some criticism has been directed against our harbour and I was concerned recently when it was reported to me that a group of farmers in Manitoba had met at the premier's office to make a number of complaints about it. I checked with the premier's office and was informed there had been no such criticism; neither was there any criticism arising from the meeting to which the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) referred. I agree there are some things which need to be done, but in general we are moving in the right direction.

Work on removing sludge from the bottom of the harbour is going ahead fairly rapidly; because of pollution problems it is necessary to land the sludge. The first phase will be finished in a couple of months at a cost of about $5 million, provided by the federal government, and another $13.5 million has been set aside to provide for dredging over the next 20 years or so. I think we will have a first class harbour which will meet the needs of Canadians for a long time to come in the grain industry and in the coal industry, as well as in the general movement of materials.

Perhaps one thing which Canadians should appreciate more is the fact that here we have a major harbour some 2,000 miles from the Atlantic ocean yet perfectly able to accommodate the movement of large ships 2,000 miles inland to the open sea. It is one of the things which makes Canada unique. The St. Lawrence Seaway is of great interest to people in my constituency, and we were concerned recently when the Seaway rates were raised so rapidly. There was to be a doubling of the rates but I am pleased to see that it has been decided to spread this increase over three years. It is our hope that over the next few years we will become more useful as a port, especially if we can extend the shipping year to 11 or perhaps 12 months. Positive studies have been undertaken which show that such an extension would be of great importance to this country as well as to the United States.

I would like to turn to two or three other points, Mr. Speaker, and to deal with them quite rapidly. I would mention VIA Rail, which I feel is a fundamental development in our transportation system. For the last 15 or 20 years we have seen two railways providing passenger services with very little interest in doing so. I refer particularly to the CPR. I think the CN did try to make the service workable to some extent but there hasn't been a great deal of zeal applied. There are some reasons why things are turning around in terms of energy use and so on, but it seems to me it was important for us to set up VIA Rail, a system dedicated solely to making passenger services available in this country. Already the rates have been reduced, certainly as compared to those on the old CP line, new equipment has been ordered, and I believe we will make progress.

One point of criticism I should like to make has to do with transcontinental service. One concern shared by those of us on the north line and the south line is the bottleneck which exists at Capreol or Sudbury. Two trains starting out two or three days earlier at Vancouver are expected to arrive at the same instant in order that one group can proceed to Montreal while the other group goes to Toronto. It is just not realistic to expect this to work out and I think something has to be done about the situation. I would like to spend more time on this question, but unfortunately I must move along to the other points I wish to make.

The hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) made a couple of statements about air safety which rather bothered me. He mentioned that Canada had moved from eighth to thirteenth place in the world in terms of air safety. But that is a meaningless kind of figure. One cannot really define safety unless one does so on the basis of miles travelled. In terms of air travel and the passenger miles travelled, Canadians rank with the United States and Britain as the top three in terms of safety. That is the fundamental factor, not the fact that we may be tenth, twelfth or thirteenth. In terms of passenger miles travelled we are in the top three. There has been some concern, which I have shared, with respect to safety in Northern Ontario, but I would—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to enter this debate. It has become quite a wide-ranging debate—we have covered many subjects today. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) spoke about the deficit this afternoon, but what the deficit has to do with this debate I really don't know. However, there is one thing I would point out to him. He said we were going to increase the deficit. I doubt whether we will have to increase the deficit, Mr. Speaker, because after reading the Auditor General's report this week in which he noted that only half the $50 billion budget can be accounted for, I can assure the minister that when we form the government we will account for every dollar that is spent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKenzie: And we will implement every recommendation in the Auditor General's report, something which we have been calling for over the last ten years. We will get our expenditures into line and we will find out where the money is going. Incidentally, the Auditor General's reports each year get worse. They do not get better under the Liberal administration, which has been refusing to implement the recommendations in them. We are not afraid to be accountable. Also, we will strengthen the terms of reference under which the Auditor General operates, and we will get spending in line and work toward a balanced budget.

The minister said this afternoon that the Conservative provincial government was not co-operating with the trucking industry. That is not entirely correct. I cannot speak for all the provinces, but I can speak for Manitoba with respect to trucking regulations. As a matter of fact they worked with the federal government to improve some of the regulations recently when they increased the gross vehicle weight from 74,000 pounds to 110,000 pounds. That made the trucking industry in Manitoba very happy. The Manitoba government has also increased the length of trailer combinations, permitting larger combinations on the highways, something which was very welcome to the trucking industry in Manitoba. I know a lot of people engaged in the trucking industry in Manitoba and I can assure the Minister of Transport that none of them will be voting in the next election for the Liberal party. They are all going to be voting for us, they are all going to be supporting the Conservative party. The trucking industry in Manitoba has been very pleased since the NDP government there was defeated. That industry had a difficult job trying to survive under that socialist government.

In the rambling debate we have had today the Minister of Transport dealt with sovereignty-association, but he forgot to mention that in a recent speech in Scarborough the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations (Mr. Reid) stated that if the separation referendum were to carry by a majority, he would let Quebec go. In a radio interview on December 10 the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. De Bané) said the same thing. He said that if the vote were to carry, he would let Quebec go.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. McKenzie: Yes, "We will let them go."

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. McKenzie: On what terms will the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations let Quebec go? Is Quebec going to keep Air Canada, CNR, or the St. Lawrence Seaway? What kinds of deals will this government cook up? Is this part of the four-fifths, one-fifth proposal?

Our position has been made very clear. We have clarified it. There will not be any sovereignty-association, any under the counter deals, or any of the seven or eight positions adopted by the government. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has said, "When they separate, I will go and live in Quebec." It would be very interesting to know what kinds of deals this government is cooking up with the province of Quebec right now.

I have listened to some of the infantile remarks by government members about our leader's losing his luggage. They have tried to create an impression that an individual is responsible for his luggage when he gets on an aeroplane. We all know that is not true, and our leader did not lose his luggage. It came on the following aeroplane. That is common; it has happened to me. On one occasion I flew from Montreal to Toronto and was informed that my luggage would be on the next plane. That is common, but the infantile remarks of members of this so-called government do not indicate that.

Here is a recent interview with the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) (Mrs. Campagnolo), "A day in the life of Iona Campagnolo". She said:

> Nowadays April Holland, my assistant, buys more clothes for me than I do for myself. The airlines often lose my bag so that wherever I am I have to send April out to buy me a dress—

When this minister arrives, she does not even have a dress. She loses her luggage all the time, but why does this great government not mention that? Not only does the minister lose her luggage but she also loses taxpayers' money, to the tune of about $13 million in her latest deal.

I would like to get back to the motion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKenzie: I would also like to congratulate the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) for his excellent contribution this afternoon. I want to confine most of my remarks to air safety and to impress upon the House the importance of debating Bill C-40, which is legislation respecting the establishment of the office of the commissioner of transportation accident investigation. The minister says we cannot debate this bill because we will block it. That is just nonsense. We have been calling for this type of investigative body for many years. My colleague, the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), has raised this matter many times, and this bill should be sent to a committee for debate.

I have some concerns, however, about this bill. Clause 19 at page 12 says:

> The commissioner may, on a confidential basis, provide an interim report containing information on the progress and findings of an investigation into an accident—

The word "may" should be removed and replaced by "shall". With regard to the words "on a confidential basis" I do not know how this commissioner, when looking into an air crash, could give confidential information to a coroner conducting an inquest. Once information is given to a coroner at an inquest, that information is on the public record, and it is in the coroner's report. It is made public, so how can the commissioner give confidential information? There are some flaws in the bill, but I must emphasize that it is imperative that this bill be dealt with before an election is called.

I will give some examples of why we should be getting on to Bill C-40. I want to refer to a fatal crash of a Beech D95A in Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, in March, 1978. I asked the Minister of Transport to give me full documentation regarding that crash. He gave me one little page. There are approximately 20 pages missing, and this causes further suspicion because the minister stood up in this House and said that he has an open department and a big library. He said that one need only telephone in order to get anything one wants.

Mr. Paproski: Four-fifths, one-fifth.

Mr. McKenzie: Yes, you get a fraction of what you ask for. I suppose that is the same four-fifths, one-fifth formula the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lalonde) uses for dealing with Quebec.

On this one-page report it states, and I quote:

The manufacturer of this aircraft had issued a safety directive two years prior to the accident warning about the dangers of attempting single engine flight at what had theretofore been considered a safe minimum speed.

In this tragedy an instructor and a student were practising cutting out one engine and manoeuvering the plane but, unfortunately, the plane crashed and both occupants were killed. This one-page report goes on to say:

This information was distributed by the manufacturer in the U.S.A. but not to all operators in Canada.

This is something which should be thoroughly investigated. I am sure there must be a number of Beech D95A's around, and I certainly hope their owners have been notified about this warning from the manufacturer.

The coroner's inquest into this fatal crash of March, 1978, began in June, but it had to be adjourned because the Ministry of Transport refused to give full documentation to the coroner. However, this coroner kept after MOT, and finally the department had to provide him with full documentation so that he could complete his inquiry into this fatal crash. As reported in the transcript of the inquest the coroner said:

Gentlemen of the jury, you will remember that at our last meeting here we adjourned the inquest because we lacked certain evidence which was in the form of a report which has been forwarded by the investigator who investigated this accident on behalf of the Department of Transport, and during the subsequent weeks we've been busy with negotiations with the department in an attempt to obtain this report. We only recently received it and now we're going to continue with this inquest.

It is very costly and time-consuming when coroners have to adjourn inquiries because MOT will not co-operate.

The coroner also said:

Now the witness from the Department of Transport was in a difficult position because, as a witness, he was obliged to testify and give evidence—all the evidence available to him. At the same time he was under an obligation in his department not to disclose matters which they considered to be confidential—

[Mr. McKenzie.]

How can there be a proper inquiry into a fatal crash if MOT officials cannot give all the evidence at the inquiry? That is why we have to proceed with Bill C-40. We must overcome these obstacles which are placed before coroners or anyone else who is trying to investigate.

The coroner went on to say the following:

I am sure that no member of the Department of Transport or the government wants to use this sort of secrecy to impose dictatorial measures, but we do know that in countries such as Russia the legal proceedings are conducted in secrecy, people are accused and tried in secrecy and sentenced in secrecy and the public is denied access to information about what's going on in these courts.

I do not think it is very flattering for Canada to be compared with a country like Russia because we will not give coroners complete information regarding air crashes.

● (2050)

The coroner went on to say:

Thirdly, when a government department insists on conducting its own investigation into fatal accidents involving members of its staff, it leaves itself open to the question of whether a conflict of interest exists.

So the sooner we get the investigation into air safety and investigations into other transportation accidents out of the hands of MOT and into the hands of this private investigation group, the sooner Canada will take a step in the right direction.

The coroner went on to say:

—when lives are at stake it is in the interest of the public that confidentiality give way to public investigation.

So this is a condemnation of the Minister of Transport and of how accidents are investigated.

A couple of years ago Dr. John Butt, Alberta's chief medical examiner, at a medical symposium in Calgary accused MOT of putting bureaucracy ahead of safety in investigations. Dr. Butt said this attitude prevented him from immediately getting to the scene of the Calgary plane crash of December, 1974, in which three persons were killed, and "snow plow fatties", who apparently were acting on Transport Canada orders, had been stationed to block his way. Mr. Speaker, you can see the seriousness of the situation and the obstacles that the Minister of Transport and his department are putting in the way of proper inquiries into air fatalities.

A couple of years ago a directive was put out by MOT that MOT safety inspectors were not to implement their duties fully with regard to air safety infractions because, as the telex said, they must not fully consider the possibility of—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, the motion that is before the House today moved by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) allows us an opportunity to talk about the many problems in transportation. It also gives us the opportunity to zero in on one or two of those problems. I want to look at a couple of them this evening. First, I want to look at the problems faced by the prairie farmer and at the state of farming and agriculture in this country, and I want to try to relate to the House the importance of a transportation system that is efficient and well planned for the farmers of our country. I want to give the House a couple of statistics to show that this is a very important debate and that farmers are important in our country.

First of all, total farm income in 1978 was around $12 billion, and the food and agricultural sector of our economy amounts to roughly 40 per cent of the GNP. So when we talk about farming we look at an area which is extremely important for all of Canada. I am very concerned about what is happening to the income of prairie farmers today. I was startled, as, I am sure the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. McIsaac) will be, to see what is happening to the income of farmers in my home province. I want to put a few statistics on the record. I do this because one of the reasons farmers are in difficulty is that we do not have an efficient transportation system. As officials of the Wheat Board said last week, because of the lack of grain handling facilities alone, we lost some $450 million worth of sales of wheat to the world market.

Let us take a look to see what is happening to the grain farm income in the province of Saskatchewan. I will take the total cash receipts for the year 1975 to begin with and I will round off the figures. The total cash receipts in 1975 were $2.5 billion. The projected cash receipts in 1979 are $2.4 billion, less than they were some four years previously.

An hon. Member: Whose projections are they, yours?

Mr. Nystrom: These are figures from the department of agriculture in the province of Saskatchewan. I assume their statistics are correct. If you want to use 1978 figures, you find that in this case they are $2,480 million. So you see that the farm income in that province in terms of our gross receipts, total cash receipts, has not gone up. But if you look at the real statistics, that is, the net income of the farmer, you find that in 1975 the net income of Saskatchewan farmers was $1,474 million. The projected income of Saskatchewan farmers in 1979 is $909 million. So you can see that it is roughly half a billion dollars less in 1979 than it was in 1975. The same story is true if you go back to the year 1978 where you do not have to use projections but the actual income. You find that the income of the Saskatchewan farmer was $1,060 million. The operating costs of farmers in the province of Saskatchewan in 1975 were $1.1 billion; while in 1979 the projected costs are some $1.7 billion.

I put those figures on the record to show you that while other people in our economy are taking more, often it is not enough. We fight in this House to help veterans, old age pensioners, to increase family allowances, to help the Indian and Metis people, the unemployed and the like. At the same time there are huge corporate profits and the wealthy get wealthier all the time, but you find that the farmers in the prairie provinces—my own province is one, but Alberta and Manitoba are the same—are seeing a real drop in their net income and an escalation in their costs.

One of the reasons for that—of course there are many others but this is a transportation debate, which is why I will stick to transportation topics—is that the railway system in this country is inefficient and the farmers have all kinds of grain that they cannot sell. We all know that China was in the market for a lot of grain this year. We could have sold an extra three million tonnes of grain to China if we had had the handling facilities. But we did not, so they turned to the United States and signed with them their first contract in history, or certainly in a long time. The United States at long last has recognized China. If we do not move quickly, we may lose potential markets there in the future.

Another interesting statistic which the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) put on the record today and which is true, a fact which I want to emphasize once again, is that we can anticipate a tremendous growth in the production of wheat in this country. That is another reason why the motion put before the House by the hon. member for Vegreville is so important. In 1978 the total amount of grain we produced was 21.4 million tonnes, while in 1985 the projections are that we will be producing some 30 million tonnes of grain, an increase of nearly 50 per cent. That will be so in only about five or six years' time. For these reasons we have to improve the railway system in our country.

I want to comment now on one specific item with regard to the transportation of grain, and that is the whole question of rail line abandonment in the prairies and, to be specific, the PRAC report which was released in the first or second week of January of this year. I want to recount some of the history of that report to try to show members why it is so important to us in the prairies. Mr. Justice Hall studied roughly 6,000 miles of rail line a few years ago. He recommended that about 2,000 miles of this rail line were obviously so efficient, needed, and in a place where they would be utilized economically they should be put into the basic network. The minister agreed and put them in the basic network. He considered another 2,000 miles of rail line, roughly, said they were not used very much and the farmers had other points to which they could deliver, that the lines were not efficient and should not be upgraded, and recommended they be abandoned by the year 1981. Of course the minister listened to that recommendation.

Then there was a third category of lines that he really could not make up his mind about and thought there should be further study before deciding what should be done. That consisted of about 2,400 miles of line. He recommended the government set up a prairie rail authority with the power to decide whether they should or should not be upgraded. In other words, he recommended a semi-autonomous body apart and separate from the Minister of Transport.

It did not surprise me greatly that the minister rejected that recommendation of Hall. He said he did not want to lose control of the decision-making process. Instead, he appointed a buddy of his, Professor Anderson from Regina, to head up the Prairie Rail Action Committee, or PRAC. It was to come in with recommendations by the end of 1978 regarding that 2,400 miles of rail line on the prairies.

That committee recommended that about 60 per cent of that line should just be abandoned and that about 40 per cent should be preserved. In one or two cases the committee did not even study the lines it was supposed to be studying. In one case in particular in the riding of Assiniboia, and I hope the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) will rise to his feet and say a few words—

An hon. Member: He did. He made a great speech.

Mr. Nystrom: He made a speech. I am very glad to hear that he did.

An hon. Member: He was very critical of PRAC.

Mr. Nystrom: I hope he was very critical of PRAC, because in his riding it recommended that a line that has in the basic network be abandoned, namely, the Lewvan line. That was a very irresponsible thing for that committee to have done and this line was definitely in its terms of reference. I am sure the voters in that constituency, come the month of May, June or July, will remember that decision of PRAC.

The committee made a recommendation to the minister that about 60 per cent of the lines it was studying should be abandoned. Let me refer to two examples in my own constituency, the circumstances of which I think are symbolic of PRAC recommendations right across the prairies.

First of all we have a line that runs from the large town of Sturgis Junction to the even larger town of Kelvington. That line runs for roughly 41 or 42 miles. It is utilized by a lot of farmers. A lot of grain is hauled over that line. There are four other towns on that line. Some of them are quite large towns and they include the town of Preeceville with well over 1,500 people, or closer to 2,000, and the town of Kelvington with over 1,500 people. Almost everybody thought that Hall made a serious mistake, and so did I, when he did not recommend that the line be put into the basic network. All you have to do is pick up a map of Saskatchewan and you will see that this part of the province has a lot of farmers, and that in most cases, if the line goes, those farmers will have a long way to haul their grain.

Hall thought this needed further study. Even so, all of us assumed that PRAC would recommend the line be saved. What did PRAC do? It recommended that the entire line with the exception of 3.5 miles be abandoned. In other words, PRAC only saved that little part between Lilian Junction to the town of Preeceville. That is all that was saved. PRAC recommended abandoning the rest of that line which also serves a town called Lintlaw where the wheat pool wanted to put up a very large new elevator. The town of MacNutt has a very good grain delivery service, and the farmers will have to haul into Kelvington. The committee said that they had the big town of Kelvington, and it recommended that this line be abandoned, just letting these little communities swim on their own.

The recommendation was that a lake crossing be built from the Rosedale-Tisdale subdivision line to the town of Kelvington. The cost of building that would be almost the same in terms of dollars as it would have been to rehabilitate and reconstruct the whole line in the first place, and thus provide a good service for all the farmers living along that entire rail line.

Let me refer to the second example, also in my constituency. It is called the Rhein subdivision. It runs from a little place called Ross Junction, which is near the large town of Canora, an area that the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn) is familiar with, down to the town of MacNutt, which is right up against the Manitoba boundary and the riding of the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie) and the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Stewart). They are both familiar with this particular rail line. This line as well is fairly long, running for 50-some odd miles. It services a lot of people and a lot of towns. It has a delivery point at a little town called Hamton, one in Rhein, one in Stornoway, one in Wroxton, one in Calder and another in MacNutt. These serve a great number of farmers in an area where a lot of grain is produced.

It is a very important line in terms of grain, and many people live in those small towns and villages along the line. PRAC recommended that roughly half of that rail line be abandoned. It recommended that the line from Ross Junction to Hamton be abandoned and that the line from Hamton running on through to Wroxton be saved. It also recommended abandonment of that part of the line from Wroxton to MacNutt. That section serves a lot of people.

I have had several meetings with the people of both those communities. They are very concerned about keeping this rail line. In the fall of 1977 they established "Save Our Rail Line" committees which met with members of PRAC before they made this recommendation. They had another meeting with the Minister of Transport, and have managed to save about half the rail line there. However, these other communities are now in danger, four of them in particular, of losing their rail line, thus adding to the expense of farmers having to haul their grain much greater distances. There is also an additional expense in terms of wear and tear of municipal roads. Of course the small towns and villages where the line is to be abandoned will soon become ghost towns, because when the farmers haul somewhere else they also do their shopping elsewhere.

I see you rising, Mr. Speaker, so I will conclude by making an appeal to the Minister of Transport to save about 90 per cent or 95 per cent of the lines that PRAC said should go. If I had more time I could give detailed reasons why these lines should be saved, specifically to save those communities and small towns.

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I suppose I should commence my remarks by expressing my appreciation to the opposition critic for bringing this motion before the House today as it provides an opportunity to participate in this debate. I welcome the opportunity of saying something about what the minister and the Ministry of Transport have been able to do for Atlantic Canada, in contrast to all the stories we have been hearing about difficulties in the west.

As I looked at the motion I could not help but think it might fit in with some of the things that have been before the House in recent days, using up the time of this place. I would not want to say that these were entirely frivolous things; however, we do have clear evidence of the delaying tactics that have been used in recent days.

We have many members on all sides of this House who are considered to be reasonable and intelligent men, yet we find members of the official opposition, when referring to transportation, using words like "condemn", "terrible", and "awful". There is nothing in that that is of use to Canadians. I have one word for it, and that is "hogwash." The evidence is very clear as to what the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) has been able to do in these modern times, and particularly in recent years in effectively carrying out his responsibilities.

As I was saying just the other evening, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), I believe, was going on at length in his usual rhetoric, and at the beginning, the middle and the end of his interjection and intervention in the House, repeatedly, the best he could come up with was to call for the Minister of Transport's resignation. We all know how ridiculous this type of intervention is, and that is how it will be interpreted by Canadians because transportation is a very serious topic.

One aspect of this motion before us tonight is air safety. Canada has nothing to be ashamed of whatsoever with respect to air safety. Indeed, because of the very stringent air safety regulations, Canada enjoys one of the best, if not the best, reputations in the world for air safety, and that is something of which each and every one of us can be proud.

Canada's safety record for scheduled air carriers has not deteriorated over the past years. In fact the latest complete figures available on commercial air travel, 1970 to 1977, indicate that our country's air safety record has remained relatively constant over that time period that it is on par with that of the United States and Great Britain, and that it is considerably better than the International Air Traffic Association's average for fatal accidents of all countries.

I am not sure where those who are making the allegations are getting their facts and figures, but the most recent data from Statistics Canada's aviation statistics centre on accident rates for Canadian registered aircraft provide an analysis of the number of accidents per 100,000 hours flown. These data reveal that over a five-year period, 1973 to 1977, there has been a consistent decline, from .63 accidents per 100,000 hours flown during 1973, to .21 accidents per 100,000 hours flown in 1977.

The information on accidents and activity of Canadian air carriers presented in the article "World Airline Safety" in Flight magazine, January 20, 1979, suggests that the number of fatal accidents per unit number of flights is the best single safety measure when, in fact, the number of accidents per unit activity is a more comprehensive measure for comparisons among different countries and airlines. Added to this difficulty of comparing accident records among countries fairly and accurately, is that there are different definitions of accidents. Comparisons among countries on the basis of fatal accidents are comparisons among measures of the countries' liability to fatal accidents. This liability to accidents is measured by the average number of fatal accidents per unit time. As time is a measure of the length of exposure to risks, it is measured by the amount of activity over the period, including flights, hours flown, and production.

The definition of accident in the Flight article those occurrances, "involving fatalities to one or more occupants . . . of public transport aircraft—including scheduled helicopters—operating scheduled or non-scheduled revenue passenger or revenue cargo flights." In Canada it should be noted that "public air transport" is not a recognized term. Canadian commercial air transportation services are classified as unit toll—scheduled and non-scheduled—and charter. Charter services are grouped into various subclasses according to the weight of the aircraft used.

I do not wish to take up the entire allotment of time permitted me, Mr. Speaker, to speak only of air safety, but I would like to make it very clear that Canada places great importance on air safety, as I think we should, and because of our very stringent air safety regulations Canada enjoys one of the best reputations in the world.

I would like to talk now about the benefits we are enjoying in Atlantic Canada as a result of some of the measures and policies of the Minister of Transport. In the last year or so the minister has deemed it important and necessary to allocate over $100 million for the over-all strengthening of the transportation system in the Atlantic provinces and, indeed, these funds, coupled with DREE programs under special agreements, under highway agreements and subagreements in the four Atlantic provinces, have enabled us to improve our position substantially both in the highway transportation linkages and in air transportation by providing more modern facilities to ensure modern air passenger service.

If hon. members will look at the recent estimates presented in the House by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Buchanan) they will find that in the Atlantic provinces, and particularly in New Brunswick, a substantial number of dollars has been allocated for the improvement, not only of the facilities at Saint John and the landing equipment at Moncton, but as well for the construction of a new modern air terminal at Charlo and for the new air strip and facilities at St. Léonard, New Brunswick.

This is a need that has been expressed and pursued for a considerable period of time, and I know that the citizens of the areas which I have mentioned are very, very pleased with these announcements and inclusions in the expenditures for the fiscal year 1979-80. In addition to the improvements to the highways and the air facilities there will also be a detailed analysis arising from the ports policy bill, in the Atlantic area and, in particular, of course, Saint John, which has proven its competence in being able to handle the cargo traffic by surpassing Halifax in tonnage averages. I believe that it has been a long accepted fact that competition exists between the port of Halifax and the port of Saint John because of the dynamic leadership and the administration of those interested and concerned with the port facilities in Saint John. In a short period of time they have been able to bring this port up to and beyond the capacity of what they are able to accomplish at the Halifax port.

I would also like to take this occasion this evening to mention the importance of the ports in northern New Brunswick, not only the port of Belledune but also the port of Dalhousie. These ports are deep-water, year-round, ice-free ports. In the case of the Belledune port, they are able to ship ore from the zinc refinery and fertilizer, and concentrates, and from the tank farm which was just built in recent years by Shell Oil. I think this is a very significant development for this deep water port.

I am delighted to announce tonight that officials of the American Potash Company are also considering the port facilities at Belledune as a route for shipping potash when they go into production within the next 12 to 15 months in Sussex, New Brunswick. This has come about because of lack of capacity at the Saint John port at the moment.

People interested in the development of the Belledune port are encouraged that it will not only be used by Brunswick Mining and Smelting for the shipment of ore, and by Shell Oil as a petroleum port, but that other petroleum companies have expressed interest in locating tank farms at the site. It is a significant breakthrough that a company with the potential of the American Potash Company has, in recent weeks, indicated a sincere interest in making an in-depth analysis of the facilities available at Belledune for shipment of their product. I understand that the facilities exist at Belledune, and when the necessary agreements have been made with the Noranda group and with Brunswick Mining and Smelting, there is every possibility that potash could move through that port.

This is not to diminish, of course, the importance of the deep-water, ice-free port at Dalhousie. The International Pulp and Paper company ships some of the finest newsprint in the world to international markets through that port. It is also used for shipping ore. The F.W. Perrie Company and McCain Foods have shown an interest in using it for shipping potatoes to world markets.

This is a very significant development and will have more than a passing impact on the region. It will have a definite impact on the economy, and it encourages all those who have shown an interest in the continuing development of the port.

[Mr. Harquail.]

I think the port of Belledune in Gloucester County which is being developed by the Chaleur Development Corporation and the citizens interested in that area, as well as the Restigouche development, who are all concerned with the Port Commission in developing Dalhousie port, each standing on their own feet as regards their abilities to grow to their maximum potential, will bring additional growth to northern New Brunswick. Funds have recently been approved for the design and engineering of an additional zinc smelter at Belledune. The federal government will contribute $1.5 million to the design and engineering of this plant, in co-operation with the province and Brunswick Mining and Smelting. All these things—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Frank Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) for introducing this motion. I certainly agree with what he said—that at the moment we have no understandable transportation policy. No one knows where we are going in the area of rail transportation. One thing that western farmers know very well, however, is that wherever this rail transportation mess is going, the grain sector will get there first. The minister said there was no terminal expansion at Vancouver until they offered incentives. He should know that they were offered guarantees of storage paid by farmers, but I am happy to say this was never accepted by the grain companies out there.

The minister praised VIA Rail. If the subsidy paid to VIA Rail were paid to bus transportation, every long distance traveller in Canada could travel free.

The minister made a great fuss about Tory governments and the prairie prime minister who, he said, did nothing for grain or grain transportation because so little grain was shipped, and so on. That is arrogant nonsense. Figures issued by the Canadian Wheat Board, over the signature of the minister, show that for the years 1963-64 the total export of wheat and flour equivalents was 592 million bushels or 23.4 per cent of world trade. This figure has never been exceeded. In the two best years that the minister can brag about, 1976-77, 494 million bushels of wheat and flour equivalents were exported, representing 21 per cent of world trade. Last year was the best year under this minister when 587 million bushels were exported, or 22 per cent of world trade. So far this year exports are 20 per cent below the same time last year. At the present time wheat is selling for $5 per bushel at Vancouver.

The minister will probably argue that more varieties are in the stream now. The answer to that is that the farmers have been forced into the new varieties because this Liberal government could not move their wheat.

The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) dealt with the need for co-ordination of the whole system and indicated that no leadership was being shown by the minister. I should like to remind the House that a year and one half ago the Fraser River bridge was washed out. That was a disaster for the port of Vancouver as the main line of the Canadian National uses the bridge. For the three weeks that it was out of use, the port of Vancouver set a record for unloads, so it can be done if proper leadership is given.

The hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McRae) boasted about the great port of Thunder Bay. I should like to remind him that grain moving through Vancouver commands a 50-cent per bushel premium over Thunder Bay. It should be noted that of all ports, the prairie port of Churchill is by far the cheapest route for the movement of western grain to markets in Europe.

I should like to deal with part (3) of the motion, Mr. Speaker, which reads as follows:

That this House condemns the failure of the Minister of Transport to deal adequately with transportation matters in this country and, specifically, his failure:

(3) to deal adequately with grain movement, resulting in losses of hundreds of millions of dollars to producers and to the Canadian economy.

After a good many years with the minister in charge, it seems that the chickens have come home to roost.

I should like to examine the present system as it stands after the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars of taxpayers' money for subsidies, equipment and upgrading. During the tenure of the minister the 30,000 grain carrying cars decreased to the present 20,000, including the 8,000 government hoppers. Last year, because of inability to deliver, grain producers lost, in sales and deferred sales, which are the same thing, $500 million. It will be much the same this year. The minister was bragging about unloads at Vancouver this year. The latest figures I was able to get from the Canadian Grain Commission show that on February 14, 293 cars were unloaded. Mr. Speaker, 700 should have been unloaded. On February 15, 123 cars were unloaded, and on February 16, 258 were unloaded. The capability of the port is 700 cars, Mr. Speaker. There is no need to mention, either, that demurrage charges reached record amounts last year.

One of the great tragedies of the situation is that we are delivering on deferred contracts at the old price and are not able to take advantage of the current $5 per bushel price asking at Vancouver. This adds up to some $4,000 for every farmer in western Canada. That is more than was indicated by the hon. member for Lisgar because I have added the old low price at which we are delivering the grain. A good case could be made that this is a deliberate attempt to hold down the grain economy of western Canada.

Today, 12 ships were waiting at Vancouver, and six other ones loading, while there are unused facilities at the port for bulk handling, and unused capacity in the interior of the country with government elevators not working to capacity.

We still have the unresolved Crow rate issue with tax money still pouring into the railroads and no over-all plan or understanding, and certainly no commitment from the railways for satisfactory service. To top it all off we now read in the paper about secret meetings taking place in western Canada to try to resolve this contentious Crow rate issue.

● (2130)

The Canadian Wheat Board had been forced into buying, with farmers' money, a good number of hopper cars. I would like to read into the record what a respected grain company, James Richardson and Sons, Limited, say in the February 15, 1979, grain letter. This indicates no leadership at all by the government or by the minister in this area. The second paragraph of this letter reads:

The Wheat Board has again taken the bull by the horns on the subject of hopper cars.

Further on in the paragraph it is mentioned there will be a requirement of:

—an additional 10,000 hopper cars over the next few years. The Board claims that unless these additions are made to the hopper car fleet, exports could decline by about one million tonnes per year resulting in a possible loss to prairie producers and the western economy of 4.2 billion dollars by 1985.

The letter also says:

Whatever the outcome, it is difficult to fault the Board for trying to take some decisive action or a first step in tackling the monumental grain handling problem.

Producer groups are now seeking a court injunction to stop the use of producers' money for these hopper cars. This is not the first time that producers have had to go to court to force this minister to act legally. I think we can all remember the hold up of the temporary Wheat Reserves Act of some years ago. Japan, one of our best customers, has put Canada on trial for the next 12 months because of the unacceptable delays in delivery of wheat through Vancouver.

We now have a Prairie Rail Action Committee report which is described as offensive and insulting by the largest grain handling company we have. This report only adds to the confusion in western Canada. In my area there is a line called the Dun Elm subdivision from Player to Simmie. The line is contingent at the present time upon a trucking subsidy and a road subsidy for its retention. It is so complicated and balled up that it is impossible for anyone in the district to understand it.

As an indication of the desperate situation facing many grain producers, I will mention just one producer car which was loaded on January 31, 1979, at Marquette, Manitoba, the mainline of the CPR. The car was still there yesterday, which was February 24. The number, if anyone is interested, is CPWX600413. This is a heartbreaker for the farmer involved who urgently needs the cash.

There is another problem coming up in the spring of 1979, and that is a labour problem in Vancouver with a work slowdown by the grain handlers union. With no overtime being worked by the grain handlers, it can take up to 18 hours to clean one car of rapeseed. Certainly the minister has not been taking any initiative in this area. It is interesting that the chief commissioner for the Canadian Wheat Board considered this so serious that he went to Vancouver and met with union representatives. We have customers waiting at the seaboard, unused capacity in the system, producers' bins full, and financial loss to the farmers. All of this just boggles the mind. We have no understanding of where it will all end.

The feed grain issue is still unresolved in spite of dozens of investigations and the setting up of commissions to look into the problem. It follows that the question is asked, "How do we get into this sort of a mess?" Some ten years ago at a time when my constituents were busily going about producing new wealth for themselves and the government, a task force was set up on agriculture. It released its findings in 1970. That task force report called for a reduction by two thirds of the number of farming units in Canada by 1990, and a reduction in the country's farm acreage, some ten million acres. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) was part of the government that accepted those recommendations.

There were statements contained in that report such as that by 1980 more than 90 per cent of all Canadians will live in centres with a population of 10,000 or more; 80 per cent of all Canadians may be living in three metropolitan areas, etc. Along with all this went a general attitude of preparedness for rural to urban migration. The government accepted this task force report and took it for granted that this rural-urban migration was a good thing. The railways, having to plan years ahead, naturally took their cue from this report and from the government's position taken on the task force. They decided, quite rightly, that there was no future in prairie agriculture and they would have to devote their energies elsewhere in the country.

The task force on agriculture was followed by the infamous lift program, and this minister was responsible. This was a program where farmers were paid to take crop land out of production. We all know what happened. Within two years Canada was sold right out of grain. The cost to the farmers in western Canada can be calculated by a loss of hundreds of millions of dollars.

This lift program confirmed the railways' suspicions that the future was indeed bleak for prairie agriculture. They acted accordingly and reduced their railway effort in western Canada. In the absence of any commitment by the national government to support a viable western agriculture, there was no other choice for the railways. We just have to look to see how far our competitors in the United States have come in the last year. The U.S. made the commitment to agriculture that, as it ran down its natural resources, great efforts were to be diverted into production of food. Last year the United States increased its exports of grain by more than the Canadian total export figure. Last year 10,000 hopper cars went into the grain handling system. This year 20,000 are scheduled to go into it.

After the disaster of this LIFT program, the howls of the western farmers forced the government to reverse its decision. The first thing the minister did was to panic with a fire sale of feed barley. This was offered at Thunder Bay at 57 cents a bushel. This cost western farmers dearly. The minister then decided, for political reasons I suppose and because of its high visibility, to overhaul and revamp the prairie branch line rail system and the country elevator system. The real bottleneck which had always been at the Pacific seaboard was to remain as it was, with not one cent spent on it. Next we have a branch line study undertaken by Mr. Justice Emmett Hall who turned in a report very well accepted by the public, but not what the minister wanted. So he headed it off with more studies, the Bryden report, the Prairie Rail Action Committee report, etc., and that is where we stand now.

[Mr. Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek).]

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I believe it was my friend, the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil), who earlier in the evening made the point that there was inadequate time to debate a very comprehensive, large and broad subject. I am sure that he shares my feeling that we would have been much better off using the time yesterday afternoon between four o'clock and 5.30 p.m. as government members sat in their desks waiting for my hon. friends opposite to come into the House.

Mr. Stevens: You are the one who fouled it up. You said 5.30 p.m.

Mr. Gillies: You set the time.

Mr. McIsaac: We might have used some of that time to debate this very important issue. I think the motion is an important one.

Mr. Stevens: You said 5.30 p.m. What are you complaining about?

Mr. McIsaac: I am not complaining. I am saying to hon. members opposite that we might have found some additional time yesterday that went to no real avail.

I am happy to be able to participate in this debate on the motion put by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). This afternoon I felt that the hon. member for Vegreville did not put his usual vim and vigour into his motion. I am not sure what that tells us. Perhaps my hon. friend is having difficulty speaking without a platform put forward by his party to help him in putting forward a case for transportation for western Canada and other parts of the country.

In listening to the minister and other speakers, but the minister primarily, I think he put the case for many of the major achievements of the government in the field of transportation. However, I think it is well worth reviewing the record of the government over the last five or six years. Compare some of that with the four or five-year period of the Tory government from 1958 to 1962. The latter part will not take too long because there were really only two achievements in that time. One was the establishment of the MacPherson royal commission which was established in 1959. In 1967 some of its recommendations were incorporated into the National Transportation Act. From that eight-year effort we saw some moves which covered their program.

Producers in my part of the country and elsewhere will recall Tory transportation efforts and their lack of any concrete results in terms of remedying the problems which they have become expert about in the last couple of years.

While there are still many problems with transportation in this country, whether it be rail, air, or ground transportation, we are better off than we were just a few years ago. There has been another important change in the last number of years. There is a much better understanding of problems. I do not deny that there are many of them. However, whether it is provincial governments, farm organizations, transportation companies, the federal government or other agencies, there is much better co-ordination and co-operation in trying to delineate, sort out, spell out, and deal with, as well as resolve, some of the issues. The approach initiated by the former minister of transport in a massive study which involved industry, the unions and everyne else, was the beginning of that much better understanding. It has helped to solve many of the problems that have plagued us. We still have some distance to go.

I will turn now to the grain movement which has been referred to more often than not in this debate. Along with members opposite, I would like to see more rail capacity, more locomotive power, more twinning of tracks, extended rail service, and more extended facilities in Vancouver, Prince Rupert, Churchill and so on. There is no question that those kinds of facilities are more than desirable. However, they cost many hundreds of millions of dollars. It will be a long time before everyone's shopping list can be fully accommodated.

This brings us back to what can be done to improve car turnaround and our present facilities, and to integrate them to bring about the movement of more prairie grain to the terminals, either east or west. Everyone is aware that the railroads are moving a great deal more other bulk commodities, which has put some pressure on the system as well.

The question of dealing adequately with grain movement which has resulted in hundreds of millions of dollars in losses to producers and the Canadian economy is in one of the paragraphs of the motion. The hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton) dealt with that question. I am not sure how valid the claims are with regard to whether it is $3,000 or $4,000 that farmers may have lost. I suggest the word lost is being abused because the grain is still there. Instead of being sold at $2.37 or $2.38 as it was a year and a half ago, it is now very close to the $5 mark.

As the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek pointed out, some of the grain now going out was contracted for at prices below the $5. Many farmers are not all that unhappy if they have adequate storage.

Members opposite have short memories. It was only a few years ago that we were looking at four bushel quotas, clogged elevators, grain piled on the ground, and so on. We do not have that on the prairies today. We do not have anything like the backlog and the clogging of the system that was the case not many years ago.

Mr. Towers: Now we have a six-bushel quota.

Mr. McIsaac: The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) says we have a six-bushel quota. I do not know how many producers in his area have grain stored on the farms. I suppose there are not that many.

Mr. Towers: All of them.

Mr. McIsaac: If that is so, they are very fortunate producers. Last year will certainly have been one of the better crop years if that is the case.

I realize that improvements can be made. In fact improvements are desirable. I agree that the system is overloaded and is not taking out the amount of grain that has been grown in the last three years. However, this year Thunder Bay is running something like 13 per cent better than last year.

Mr. Benjamin: We were behind in both years.

Mr. McIsaac: We moved a lot last year and we moved a great deal the year before. If we can do a bit better this year, that will be three record years in a row. We have never before moved that volume for three years. I know it is more important today to the producers and farmers to get the grain to market, get the cheques in their pockets and pay the machinery companies and municipal offices, because they can no longer operate with one or two slack years. They must have that cash flow.

As I have said before in similar debates, the situation for many producers in rural areas in terms of the economic level of those districts, regions and areas, has never been better. Listening to members opposite, one would think there were dire thoughts of bankruptcy all across the prairies among the grain producers, and in the communities. That is certainly not the case. I see the hon. member for Vegreville smiling. He knows that in some of these communities the businessmen used to be better off than the producers and farmers. Today that is pretty well turned around. It is the producers and the farmers who can now buy out the businessman. That is what has happened over the past number of years.

I have listened to my friends opposite with their continual doom and gloom. However, we have not heard much about what they are going to do. I am waiting for my friend from Vegreville and others to tell us the Tory policies in terms of improving, expanding, and building for the 30 million tonnes we will be moving in a few years.

Mr. Paproski: Is that four-fifths or one-fifth?

Mr. McIsaac: That is 30 million as opposed to 20 million tonnes currently being moved.

Mr. Neil: Tell us about the lost sales.

Mr. McIsaac: There is no question that there have been some lost sales. Nobody has denied that. I say in spite of that, we are testing the system. We are moving considerably more grain. Under that pressure, we will come to grips with some of the problems. Hopper cars are only one of the responses of this government. Look at hopper cars, rail rehabilitation, branch line subsidies, and branch line rehabilitation which is going forward. It adds up to close to a billion dollars in the last five or six years. That is a great deal of money and effort to put into a system. It still needs more, but this government, when it is re-elected, will be glad to continue that kind of subsidy, that kind of effort.

I have one more point, and it concerns the PRAC committee report. That is the committee which was set up to deal with those rail lines still left in limbo by the Hall Grain Handling and Transportation Commission. It was the definite view of producers, grain companies and others that some agency could deal with this matter and arrive at a conclusion either for retention or abandonment. That report came out in January. Of course it pleased those people whose lines were recommended for inclusion in the permanent network and, needless to say, it very much displeased anyone whose lines were recommended for abandonment. In my opinion, that committee and that commission overlooked a number of options they might well have considered. They might have looked more closely at the off-line elevator system, and they did not give adequate consideration to the costs which would fall on the communities and municipalities. I am sure railroad costs were gone into adequately, but I am not sure the other costs were.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. The hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Malone).

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege this evening of being able to wrap up what started out as an excellent debate—by and large it continued as a tremendous debate as far as contributions from this side of the House were concerned. I commend my hon. friend from Vegreville for raising the subject. We have heard some excellent speeches from the other side of the House, too, in terms of oratory. However, they failed as to content.

Politics has been in evidence in a great many of the speeches tonight, but as the final speaker I believe it is my prerogative to try to package together what has happened. No one here is seeking to deny that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) is intelligent; no one is trying to deny that he is a good speaker, or that he is an academic. But we are saying the bottom line is that he is incompetent and that he is arrogant. Irrespective of his intellectual capacity, the transport system has failed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Malone: Most of us can recall an interesting list, a host of commissions and studies such as that undertaken by the MacPherson Commission in 1969, the agricultural task force, the Western Economic Opportunities Conference, the Hall report, the Snavely report and so on. These reports come along, and when they do not suit this minister he appoints a new commission so as to get what he wants. This is the crux of the whole problem—all study and no action for 16 years.

Such criticism might be regarded as merely partisan if it were only the Conservative party and the New Democratic Party which were saying the government had failed. But it is not that. It is government members themselves who say the Minister of Transport is simply an incompetent person. I would like to share some interesting information gleaned from the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lapointe). I put a question to him the other day. I asked him on what date the Minister of Transport gave a direct order that substandard service should be provided on those lines that they wanted PRAC to destroy. His answer was:

> Mr. Speaker, I do not know the exact date but I will inquire and inform the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Malone: To this date I have not received a letter from the department telling me on what date they ordered an inadequate service on these lines.

Not only are there members on the other side who feel the minister is incompetent, we on this side have the good fortune to see over there a minister of the Crown who says that his colleague is absolutely incompetent. I refer not merely to a fellow member of the party but one of the ministers of the Crown. I want to quote what has been said by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner), for example:

> The hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt has done everything to destroy western Canada since he became a member of the cabinet.

That can be found in Hansard at page 185 for October 7, 1974.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce does not stop there. He really goes on to say what kind of minister we have in charge of transport. He said:

> The Minister of Transport has fouled up almost everything he has touched—the Air Traffic Controllers, the car rental system and allocating $30 million to CPR.

That, too, is in Hansard. That is what the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce thinks of this useless Minister of Transport. I might say, Mr. Speaker, that I am only on page one of a 26-page document. Speaking in the debate on the Speech from the Throne he accused the Minister of Transport of "working with the railways to destroy freight rates which benefit western farmers". He added that the Minister of Transport was "in bed with them". Now we find the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in the same bed—in pink pyjamas. Attacking the Minister of Transport, he said:

> I have often forecast—and I shall be there when it comes about—that I shall see Otto Lang tarred and feathered and driven out of Saskatchewan. I will pay for the oil and I will pluck the chickens.

What we are talking about here is incompetence. I can certainly understand what happens to the feelings of a tall man—

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The parliamentary secretary on a point of order.

Mr. Loiselle (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say to the future former member for Crowfoot that with the incompetence he displays when he speaks about the people of western Canada, as an easterner I can tell him that he would find it beneficial to visit his constituency before making an attack against the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. Hon. members should remember that only a few seconds remain before the end of the debate and I will have to extend a little the time allotted to the hon. member.

[English]

Mr. Malone: I would not want to see such interruptions taken from my time, Mr. Speaker, because I have here 26 pages of this kind of information. It must be lowering to the self-esteem of a tall man who wears a western hat to have to live with these words, words he used as late as March 10, 1977:

Do you really think I would lower myself to be in the same party as Transort Minister Otto Lang who has ruined not only the nation's transport system but its grain industry, too?

He must have found out that the Minister of Transport didn't have the depth he thought he had since he was able to lower himself so easily.

The list goes on and on. I do not know whether to call it ten o'clock tonight or ten o'clock tomorrow morning. If there were sufficient times available I should have liked to deal in detail with the subject of the Prairie Rail Action Committee and what it is doing to the prairies. What we do see is the effect of cloning. The Minister of Transport has cloned his likeness into the shape of Professor Fred Anderson to do as he wanted to do. He wanted to abandon railways without community hearings and without having alternative systems in place. When railways are abandoned that way, disruption is caused in prairie communities. I can cite one example.

● (2200)

Rail service is being removed from towns surrounding Stettler, Alberta. Such towns are Rumsey, Rowley, Big Valley, Endiang, Byemoor, Red Willow and Donalda. It is now being assumed that one community can take in all the grain from those communities where rail lines are being abandoned. Without extra services in that one community, the only conclusion we can come to is the conclusion drawn by my party and by the New Democratic Party, that is, in terms of transportation policy this government is incompetent.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are beginning to rise, and if I can conclude with the word incompetent, I could not conclude with a better one.

Mr. Harquail: That is a good word for you.

Mr. Loiselle (Chambly): Why do you lie like that?

An hon. Member: Withdraw.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I heard the words of the hon. member opposite. I apologize for not remembering the name of his riding. He mentioned a word which I do not think he would want to leave on the record. Perhaps he might want to take this opportunity to withdraw that word and not to blemish the good nature of this House, which never becomes political. We do not get into harsh political language at all, and I think the hon. member might like to have such an opportunity.

[Translation]

Mr. Loiselle (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, as I just indicated, the hon. member should be ashamed of what he says because I know his riding well, and in any event most producers in his riding would not support him.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would ask the hon. member to return to his seat. I want to indicate to him that I did not hear the remark he made, but if he used a term that was not parliamentary, I think he should withdraw it.

Mr. Loiselle (Chambly): If I said "liar"—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I did not hear the remark.

Mr. Loiselle (Chambly): If I said "liar", I will correct myself by saying the hon. member did not tell the truth.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think the explanation given by the hon. member is acceptable.

[English]

I hope the hon. member will accept the explanation.

It being 10 p.m., it is my duty to inform the House that, pursuant to Standing Order 58(11), proceedings on the motion have expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

POST OFFICE—DOOR-TO-DOOR MAIL DELIVERY IN URBAN AREAS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, on two occasions I have raised questions in reference to conditions in the Post Office and to the way it is functioning in the city of Calgary. I raised this matter on January 26 and again on February 13. I asked the minister to order an independent investigation into the workings of the Post Office and into the gross inefficiency in a city which is growing by more than 2,000 inhabitants a month.

I want to make it abundantly clear that in my long association here as a member of parliament, and before that in practising as a barrister, mail was the lifeblood of both endeavours. I have found that 99.9 per cent of those involved with post office work are dedicated people who endeavour to be honest. However, sometimes one bad apple in a barrel will turn every apple bad, and let those who deny that the things I will be dealing with tonight are happening come forward and explain these people's serious and real grievances.

What are some of those grievances? Separate from the main post office in Calgary and the distributing centre near the old air depot we have what we call mail depots at Ranchlands, Beddington Heights, Dealcour, Edgemont, Pineridge, Temple, Rundle, and so forth. As these mail depots are only open from eight in the morning to four in the afternoon or, as some of the letters show, from 8.30 in the morning to 3.30 in the afternoon, if both spouses in a family are working it is impossible for them to get their mail. In the rest of the city there is mail delivery, that is, in the old parts of the city. There they pay the same taxes as those people who live in the new areas and who are getting a different service. Therefore there is discrimination, because they all pay the same taxes.

People in my city are pretty reasonable and if they could get their mail and get proper and honest delivery of mail after working hours out of boxes when the depots are open, then I would not be receiving a petition with 240 names on it asking their member of parliament, that is myself, for some action.

Last February 4 two employees came to me on Sunday morning and disclosed certain grievances, other than those I have discussed, concerning certain things that are taking place in the Post Office at present. They dealt in particular with what is happening to fragile parcels which are posted in various parts of Canada, or indeed in Calgary to go to other areas. They asked me not to use their names because they were frightened of what might happen to them if I disclosed their names with reference to the information they gave me.

I just want to deal with some of the grievances which were related to me. Here is a letter written on August 25, 1978, and it is rather symbolic of the Post Office. It is written by Mr. Doolittle. He writes:

> This past week here in Calgary the "special delivery" service arrived at our establishment at approximately 6.30 p.m. and found the place closed and the door locked as we are on summer hours and are closed between 5 p.m. and 7 p.m. for supper.

The mail was the payroll for a large company. There was a kid in his early teens outside. An envelope with many thousands of dollars was handed over to him to hold until the place re-opened. Luckily the kid, with true western character, was honest and the people got their payroll.

Let me read from another letter dated August 24, 1978, written by W. R. Porteous. He writes:

> The problem is that a duly stamped first class envelope clearly addressed was posted at Sarnia, Ontario on the 4th day of August containing business documents one of which was an invoice for $198,000. This envelope was lost by your department until today, August 23, 1978.

It is signed W. R. Porteous, Assistant Division Manager and Division Engineer of Halliburton Services Limited.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

I have one more letter of grievance dated April 4, 1978, written by Vernon E. Sills, and the Calgary address is in my riding. He writes:

> As you are no doubt aware, it is not uncommon for mail to cross Calgary in roughly five to seven days, however, one item that may have escaped notice is the fact that some of my subscribed hobby magazines always seem to arrive opened.

The Calgary North News finds that its subscriptions are being cancelled by the dozen because people receive this weekly newspaper three weeks after it is posted in the same city.

I have another letter here dated April 4 which again refers to the Post Office situation. The minister says that I exaggerate the situation. Just listen to this letter which reads:

> In light of the fact Rev. E. Lindenburger of Fort MacLeod received a parcel of clothes mailed from Sudbury, not only was this parcel inexcusably damaged and mutilated, it was also soaked with what appears to be kerosene and placed in a plastic bag in Winnipeg and stamped "repaired".

● (2210)

I could go on and on. A newspaper clipping deals with what I have said about depots by stating:

> With several new developments just opening up, the post office estimates that by 1979 some 20,000 Calgarians living in 6,200 households could be getting their mail from the six depots and three postal stations now handing it out.

It points out the fact that these people are not able to get their mail because these places are locked up when they get off work. I have many letters with evidence that indicates that the people have talked with the postmasters or postmistresses at these depots where parcels are damaged. Some employees have even admitted playing hockey with the parcels, and doing other things.

I am asking for an independent investigation. If there is nothing wrong with the Post Office, and the grievances of these thousands of people are not true, why is the minister refusing us an independent investigation? That is all we are asking.

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I would like to assure the House that virtue is not a characteristic confined only to western Canadians. I am sure the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. Woolliams) did not want to mislead the House in that respect.

The Postmaster General (Mr. Lamontagne) is fully aware of the situation in Calgary, a situation that is also occurring across the country. Calgary, riding the crest of a buoyant economy, has expanded rapidly. This expansion has made it impossible for Canada Post to react as quickly as we would have liked to the needs of new suburbs in Calgary.

It is well known in this House that the government is committed to restraint in its spending. While it is popular to clamour for cuts in government spending, it is inevitable that when cuts are made some people will be adversely affected. We cannot have it both ways. Obviously the hon. member for Calgary North and his colleagues in the Conservative party do not believe that.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), since his election as leader of that party in 1976, has castigated the government for its increased expenditures. When the government does its homework and brings in programs to cut back government spending, there are objections from the hon. member for Calgary North and others on that side. At the same time the Leader of the Opposition is floating around the country making pre-election promises totalling in value something over $6 billion; something which I think is scandalous and intellectually inconsistent, but which is characteristic of the Conservative party. We either spend at an unabated rate and contribute to the inflationary spiral, or we try to restrain expansion of services, even though those services are essential, as are postal services.

We have had to curtail expansion in a number of Canadian centres. Nevertheless, in all cases we have provided local services in the form of group boxes or general delivery. What we have provided has been designed to give the best service possible, at that point in time, while we take steps to make improvements.

Most Canadian centres have not expanded as dramatically as Calgary. I would like to remind the hon. member for Calgary North that we have the same problem in metropolitan Toronto. Many representations have been made by my colleagues, the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Philbrook), the hon. member for Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Milne), and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Abbott) on this exact subject.

Competent staff must be found and facilities must be built. All of this must be done with great care to ensure that by satisfying the needs of Calgarians we do not impose unwarranted hardships on other Canadian centres, including Toronto and other cities across this country.

The hon. member for Calgary North made some remark about an independent investigation. Members of his party will have an adequate opportunity to talk about postal problems when Bill C-27 comes before the committee. That bill is to establish a Crown corporation, and the hon. member for Calgary North will be able to get all the frustrations out of his system.

Within a very short time the Postmaster General, I assure this House, will have some very heartening news for the citizens of Calgary.

FINANCE—OTTAWA—GRANTS IN LIEU OF TAXES

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, on February 9, I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), whether he was in a position to make an announcement about grants in lieu of taxes to the city of Ottawa, and on February 19 the minister, when making a press release, outlined that it was the intention of the government to introduce legislation which would change the Municipal Grants Act and increase federal grants in lieu of taxes by $25.5 million by the end of a four-year phase-in period across Canada.

The effect of this new policy would be to increase grants to the city of Ottawa by $3 million in the year 1980, by $4 million in 1981, by $5 million in 1982, and by $6 million by 1983. The people I represent very much appreciate the fact that the federal government has recognized, not only in the national capital but across the country, that there is an obligation carried by municipal taxpayers for services to government owned property which has not been properly shared up to this point.

There are some aspects of the situation in the national capital to which I would like to call the attention of the government and the members of this House. In the national capital region there has been a special policy developed which is not applicable in the same way in other parts of Canada. The government has decided first on a policy of relocation from Ottawa to Hull of something like six million square feet of office space, and it has further decided to decentralize out of the Ottawa-Hull national capital region approximately 15,000 to 20,000 jobs. The latter policy has run into some difficulties because of the language guarantees to those who were slated to be transferred to the province of Quebec, and to that extent that policy has been stalled.

I think that it is evident to anyone who cares to look about in the centre of the national capital that there is vacant office space and a depressed condition among the merchants on the Mall and in other areas. All this reflects the fact that it is a company town and the policy of the major employer in this area is to change the scale of its major operations.

I recently asked the finance commissioner of the city of Ottawa what he thought the impact of the new policy was in this area, in other words, whether the formula for grants in lieu of taxes will generally reflect the scale of the government's operation. He told me that something between $1 million and $1.5 million per year were lost in grants than would have been the case had this abandonment not taken place. It is not easy to put a figure on it. The policy will be reflected slowly. The privately owned office accommodation which becomes vacant will apply for a reduction in its taxes in periods ahead. The federal government, of course, has destroyed two million square feet of temporary office accommodation, or is about to complete that destruction. That accommodation may have not been the best, but it does mean that the grant is being reduced accordingly. I think that there is a special hardship as a result of the very decided policies of the Government of Canada with regard to the national capital region which should be considered by the department.

There is the broader question which the regional municipality has argued in the past, that the Government of Canada should pay business taxes, something which it does not presently do. This is as a result of the way in which the province of Ontario casts its tax structure on municipal property residential rates and business rates. Not every province follows this method. I am told that Prince Edward Island changed the basis of its taxation to eliminate the separate business tax, which had the effect of increasing the federal grants accordingly. The city of Ottawa has applied to the province on many occasions to change the basis of taxation because it would add something like $30 million a year to its coffers if the federal government paid the full taxes as a normal private employer would do. The government has rejected this contention.

I do not hold out much hope, on the basis of discussions which have taken place, that there will be a change in the position of the federal government. I do hope that the government will consider a change in policy as part of a new phase of federal municipal relations in Canada and that it will carry its full share of the tax load for services to that property which it owns in the municipalities. I hope that it will look at the special claim of an area like the national capital which suffers from the adverse effects of federal government policies. I hope also that the province of Ontario will look at its structure of business and residential taxes and make certain modifications that would be more consistent with the way in which property taxes are levied in other parts of Canada. That would have the effect of substantially increasing the grant.

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) on behalf of my colleague, the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Martin), who is away on government business.

In response to the question raised by the hon. member for Ottawa West, the government is preparing legislation concerning grants to municipalities in lieu of taxes. A bill providing for a completely new Municipal Grants Act will be tabled very soon. The details of the government's proposals for enlarging the grants program will be set out in that bill. A statement providing a general outline of the proposals will be issued within the next few days.

A great deal of work has gone into the preparation of a new act. This has included an examination of all of the various restrictions on the grants that are now paid. In particular, a detailed study has been made of each of the categories of property that is presently excluded from grant, and of various irritants with the program that have accumulated in the 22 years since the legislation was last amended.

While the program of grants in lieu of taxes is a national program which applies all across Canada, it does have particular importance for municipalities in the national capital area, including the city of Ottawa, to which the hon. member for Ottawa West has referred. In view of these circumstances the government has looked carefully at the impact of the present grant program on Ottawa in order to ensure that the new program will treat the city in a fair and equitable manner. The new municipal grants act will take account of this study, and the government's proposals will bring important benefits to the city. It will also take account of numerous representations which have been received from the city and, on behalf of the city, from the hon. member for Ottawa West and the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

[Mr. Francis.]

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I should like to acknowledge how the hon. member for Ottawa West and his colleague, the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier, have spoken out most strongly and forcefully on behalf of the citizens of Ottawa on this particularly difficult subject.

INDUSTRY—REBUILDING OF AIRPORTS IN TRINIDAD—GOVERNMENT INVOLVEMENT

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, some time ago I received a letter from a constituent who is vice-president of a telecommunications engineering firm. He enclosed an article from the Globe and Mail "Report on Business". The heading indicated that Canada will provide $10 million for Trinidad airports and that it is planning to help build new airports and a penitentiary there.

Just a few days ago, February 15, the Ottawa Citizen carried an article which pointed out that Canada will act as the key contractor for the construction work. In part the article reads as follows:

> Presumably, when the memorandum was under discussion, Trinidad's officials were not acquainted with Canada's experience in building penitentiaries.

If the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) wants to sell Canada's expertise in building penitentiaries, which one will he use as a model—Archambault, Millhaven, Laval, the B.C. penitentiary, Dorchester, or Kingston?

When I put a question to the minister in the House about the construction deal his department is negotiating with Trinidad, he answered, as reported at page 1652 of Hansard, as follows:

> Our Department of Transport was chosen to act as a key contractor. It will seek out and sublet contracts to Canadian engineering firms in order to complete the work.

We should focus on two points in this matter, Mr. Speaker. First, is the government competent to act as the key contractor in the construction of airports? Mirabel airport cost $600 million and is now running into the red at $1 million per week, something like $52 million per year. It is the forty-fourth busiest airport in Canada, which does not show the government as competent to act as the key contractor for other airports. When I went through Mirabel airport a year ago the roof was leaking and the floors were cracked. A zinc tub placed to catch the leak from the roof had a beautiful red velvet rope around it. The government was the key contractor for that installation.

● (2225)

I turn to what the Auditor General said concerning the government's role as key contractor for the airport at Calgary. I quote from paragraph 19.105:

> Although the design and construction of air terminal buildings to meet future requirements is a complex task, we are not satisfied that the Department's procedures were adequate to prevent any unnecessary increases in either the cost or size of the Calgary air terminal building. Specifically:
> Extensive authority was delegated to the Western Region without effective review, challenge and control by Headquarters.

There was no clear acknowledgment by individuals within the administration of responsibility or accountability for the financial viability of the new airport complex once in operation.

There were inadequate general area and cost criteria, based on comparable Canadian or foreign facilities, against which to monitor the project.

I recognize that that airport in appearance is palatial, but can we afford to operate it, especially when one looks at the cost overruns?

On the other side of the coin we have airports all across Canada. Think of the airport at Castlegar which the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco) asked about the other day. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) would not provide adequate facilities for that airport. Then the hon. member from Esquimalt continually asks about getting radar for the Victoria airport, to no avail. But the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce wants to act in a grandiose manner and be the key contractor for the airport in Trinidad. I say if the government is the key contractor, can Trinidad afford it?

And so it follows, if the government wants to negotiate trade, and it keeps on saying that it wants to privatize everything—the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said a few days ago how profit is honourable and he believes in the private sector—why did the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce not tell the government of Trinidad that Canada has many consulting engineers and engineering firms who are perfectly competent to do that work that Trinidad needs? The minister could tell representatives of the Trinidad government that he would find out whether our consulting firms would give expertise to the government of Trinidad, and through the Export Development Bank or one of the government agencies make sure that we could finance the $10 million that is being talked about. If the government really believes in private enterprise, why did it not take that route? But rather than do that, this government with its centralist view would prefer to work through the Department of Transport and pretend that the officials of that department can act in an adequate way as key contractors for the project.

I think the people of Canada deserve a straightforward, candid, honest answer on how much this will cost the government of Trinidad if our government is to be the key contractor. How much is the business community in Canada going to lose because the government is acting as the agent rather than providing the liaison so that private enterprise, the engineering firms and consultants in Canada, can do that work? We deserve some straight answers.

How many other commitments do we add that are not recorded in this memorandum? We will never know, as we found out relative to the deals that were made with Cuba. How many years will it take before we learn what the whole picture really is?

[Translation]

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to answer the erroneous questions of the hon. member, because the role of the Government of Canada in that agreement we signed with Trinidad-Tobago will not be to act as the key contractor, but rather to provide the government of Trinidad-Tobago with the consultants required for carrying out those projects.

Mr. Friesen: That is not what you said.

Mr. Loiselle (Chambly): Please, listen. As much for the two proposed airports totalling $150 million as for the proposed penitentiary we will have to build. The only role the Department of the Solicitor General and the Department of Transport will have to play, will be to define with the government of Trinidad-Tobago a schedule for those projects and, then ask Canadian consulting engineers to provide the expertise to carry out the contract.

The other role of the Government of Canada will be through the EDC to provide the financing.

But, Mr. Speaker, it is as simple as that. About that contract with Trinidad-Tobago, I believe last week when I was in Toronto with perhaps the 15 biggest construction and consulting businessmen in Canada, everyone agreed that the attitude of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) in this specific project had been excellent. And I would like to come back to the hon. member who wants to talk about Mirabel. I would like to come back to the hon. member who would like to talk about certain other projects we should be ashamed of in Canada. I would like to say to the hon. member that as someone who travelled across this country, who has friends in the consulting business, Mirabel would be the glory of about any country. And when someone tells me that it is a mistake to have done what we did, I say that the only mistake the government made in that case was perhaps using project managers rather than civil servants to carry out the whole project and if that is the hon. member's defence of private enterprise as he sees it, that is bullshit and he is wrong. As it happens, the hon. member is talking out of context because Mirabel can be held as an example to every other country, as all experts agree.

As concerns our projects for penal institutions, we have consulting engineers in Quebec and in the other provinces whom we can hold as an example to others for the implementation of such projects, precisely because of the wish of the Canadian government to show confidence in our Canadian experts. However, when the hon. member makes erroneous statements, as I said a moment ago when I called another member a "liar," which I amended by saying that he was straying a bit far from the truth, this has really been his trademark in the last few months.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I understand that a point of order cannot be raised during the adjournment motion, but I would like the hon. member to note that on page 105 of the fifth edition of Beauchesne, the word he used earlier is said to be unparliamentary, and I hope he will at least try to retract what he said even though the word has already been used. In any case, I can remind him that he has violated the Standing Orders of this House.

The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until 11 a.m. tomorrow.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.32.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

OBJECTION TO USE OF THEIR EXCELLENCIES' PHOTOGRAPHS IN LIBERAL CONSTITUENCY REPORTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the use by some Liberal members of parliament of a pamphlet from parliament, at public expense, containing photographs of Their Excellencies and observations concerning His Excellency, a document that is patently designed with the intention of implying their association therewith, thereby placing the Queen's representative in a potentially invidious constitutional position, I move:

That this House direct that such constituency reports have deleted therefrom the references to which I have already referred.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be introduced for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 43, only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CRIMINAL CODE

BILL TO AMEND SECTIONS DEALING WITH SOLICITING AND PROSTITUTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to seek the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a motion relating to a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

The cities of Vancouver and Toronto, and other major urban centres, have requested an amendment to the Code in reference to solicitation and prostitution to restore order on their streets. All parties have agreed to have this amendment severed from omnibus Bill C-21. I therefore move:

That the government bring forward this bill forthwith without delay, and in consequence that it be approved by parliament expeditiously, so as to prevent the error made by the Prime Minister when he was minister of justice, of removing a similar clause dealing with the same when the vagrancy section of the Code was totally repealed.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for debate at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Woolliams: How can you say no when your party wants it done? They have approached us.

AIR TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR IMPROVED FACILITIES AT YORKTON AIRPORT—EAST-WEST SERVICE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

The city of Yorkton neither needs nor wants the air route awarded to Norcanair by the Canadian Transport Commission. Considering that Norcanair has failed to inaugurate this service, violating the CTC's requirement that service commence within six months of July, 1978, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the Minister of Transport provide at once the necessary assistance to improve the maintenance and runways at Yorkton airport, and that he assist the city in attracting east-west air service from Transair to the extent, if necessary, of providing operating subsidies on this route.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 43, only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

GOVERNMENT'S POSITION ON QUEBEC'S PROPOSAL FOR ADMISSION TO UN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the depressing statement by the Minister of Justice that "four-fifths of the Parti Québécois program can be implemented within the federal system and the remaining fifth can be negotiated", I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That this House direct the Minister of Justice to make a statement on motions to explain the government's intention with respect to item II, subsection 4 of the Parti Québécois' program, namely, Quebec's admission to the United Nations.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SENATE COMMITTEE STUDY OF OFF-TRACK BETTING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I wish to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Now that the Minister of Agriculture has evaded his responsibility by asking a committee of the other place to report on what to do about off-track betting, the same minister, by way of a statement in this House, should explain his change of attitude about the other place in view of his reported observation a few months ago when, on being asked if he would like an appointment as a senator, said, "Lord save me. I would never want to be a senator"—

AMENDMENT TO PROTECT CHILDREN FROM SEXUAL ABUSE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

In view of the fact that section 166 of the Criminal Code more adequately protects female children than male children against sexual exploitation, and in view of continuing incidents of sexual exploitation of children, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway):

That the government move swiftly to implement the provisions of Bill C-211, an act to amend the Criminal Code, which the government included in Bill C-21.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate at this time requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROVISION OF BOXCARS TO FOREST PRODUCTS INDUSTRY IN NORTHERN ONTARIO—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Being fully aware of the urgent need for more railway boxcars in western Canada for the movement of grain, especially wheat, but believing that it is totally unacceptable to impoverish other regions of the country in order to meet this need, thereby causing industrial disruption and lay-offs in those regions, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier):

That this House requests the Government of Canada to instruct the Canadian National Railways to maintain their full commitment of boxcars to the forest products industry of northern Ontario for the movement of wood chips and other forestry products such as lumber.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be introduced for debate at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CALL FOR LEGISLATION IMPOSING SANCTIONS ON COMPANIES COMPLYING WITH BOYCOTTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

In view of the increasing evidence of a systematic, pervasive boycott by many Arab countries against Canadian companies that continue to trade with and invest in Israel, and in view of Canada's friendship with Israel and concern for her future economic and political security, as well as our opposition as a country against discrimination of any kind, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent):

That the government introduce legislation for second reading providing for sanctions against companies that comply with such a boycott without further delay.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for debate at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AIRPORTS

CASTLEGAR, B.C.—REQUEST FOR UPDATING OF FIREFIGHTING EQUIPMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In light of the fact that over one year ago the ministry of transport promised a foam truck for firefighting at the Castlegar airport, and promised ten months ago new navigational aids—neither of which have been delivered—and in light of the fact that in the past year the only addition to the firefighting equipment at Castlegar airport has been two pairs of snowshoes, without operating instructions, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga):

That the Minister of Transport consider and correct the inadequacies of the existing equipment consisting of one ancient fire truck, one fire axe, two fire extinguishers, three pairs of rubber boots, two pairs of snowshoes, and a second rubber ducky for the minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Oral questions.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

MINISTER'S REACTION TO SCIENCE COUNCIL REPORT "FORGING THE LINKS—A TECHNOLOGICAL POLICY FOR CANADA"

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, who is in Toronto looking for help—he did not find any, I do not believe, either—my question is to the Minister of Science and Technology who is the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, because I do not think he realizes he is the Minister of Science and Technology.

● (1115)

The minister has just had a report presented to him by the Science Council of Canada, called "Forging the Links—A Technological Policy for Canada", in which it is pointed out that Canada is faced with a serious economic crisis and that its share of world manufactured exports dropped from 5.6 per cent in 1970 to 3.8 per cent five years later. In addition, it points out that if we had been able to maintain our exports at the 1970 level, we would have an additional $8 billion worth of exports and we would have trimmed our unemployment in this country by one-third.

In view of this report to the minister, by an independent, non-political body appointed by the government, would the minister tell the House whether he believes the analysis of this report and will act on it, or does he believe the Minister of Transport who said last Tuesday that this country is in excellent economic shape? Whose advice has he taken? Is he going to act on this report?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member had looked at the figures, he would know that there has been a very substantial increase in employment in the manufacturing industry: something in the order of well over 100,000 new jobs were created in the manufacturing industry last year. But that is not to say the government is complacent about the health and promise of the manufacturing industry. Indeed, I think the Science Council's report will be a helpful report to the government and to industry as well.

The hon. member should know that the 23 sector task forces, which were composed of both industry and labour, reported to the government and the government has been able, through what is really a massive review of policy with respect to the manufacturing industry—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gillespie: —to agree to a very substantial number of those recommendations, recommendations which should strengthen the manufacturing industry in the years to come.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the figures for last year show that our deficit in fully manufactured products internationally, with the world was $12.2 billion and that our deficit with the United States in fully manufactured goods was $8.9 billion, up $700 million from the year before.

The Science Council of Canada has pointed out that our deterioration is worse in advanced industrial sectors. They conclude that Canada is moving away from an industrialized economy back to one based on the export of raw materials. In light of the conclusions of this eminent group which is very familiar with the Canadian manufacturing industry, will the minister stop his flippant replies, forget that he was on the program last night on Global TV, "Snow White and the Seven Economic Dwarfs"—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Crosbie: —and tell the House what steps the government intends to take to reverse this desperate situation that has grown up since 1970 under their jurisdiction? What steps does he intend to take—not flimflam and nonsensical replies?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I think the Canadian people and, indeed, industry would expect government to work with industry. That is why my colleagues and I have emphasized the importance of labour-management-government co-operation.

I referred a moment ago to the massive review of policy; that something in the order of close to 1,000 personnel from industry and from labour participated in these task forces. The hon. member seems to want to ignore the fact that the largest part by far, the majority, of the Canadian manufacturing industry was covered by these task forces. These task forces examined the strengths and weaknesses of our manufacturing industry and they made a number of recommendations, the vast majority of which I have already indicated the government has accepted.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, let me give the minister one other statistic. From 1970 to 1977, the proportion of the Canadian market served by imports grew from 26 per cent to just over 31 per cent. We are losing our exports and we are not displacing the imports.

Will the minister tell us, does he agree with the conclusion of this study, which reported to him, that our industry has weakened since the 1960 merger of the department of industry with trade and commerce? Is he now considering separating these two bodies again, in view of the fact that industry seems to have been smothered and has never recovered since this merger?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Crosbie: Is the minister taking this seriously? After all, three years' work went into that report.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is confused with imports and exports—

Mr. Whelan: That is normal.

Mr. Gillespie: —and whether we should be increasing our imports or reducing our exports. That is the way the question came across. Let me assure the hon. member that if he looks at the figures, which I suspect he does not do very often—

Mr. Whelan: Right on.

Mr. Gillespie: —he will find that we had a record merchandise trade surplus last year, and he will see that the manufacturing industry in many sectors of Canada right now is performing virtually at full capacity.

• (1120)

He would also recognize that the science and technology R and D incentives of last year resulted in a major, new incentive program for industry which we hope will help to produce the kind of Canadian research and development activity in the future which will build a more innovative manufacturing industry in this country.

INDUSTRY

NEED FOR AN INDUSTRIAL STRATEGY FOR CANADA

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of any minister who is even remotely an economic minister, I will go to one of the Seven Dwarfs, sometimes referred to as Smiley: I refer to the Minister of National Revenue.

[Mr. Gillespie.]

As a dispute seems to have broken out between the President of the Board of Economic Development Ministers and the Minister of Labour as to whether it is desirable in this country to have anything called an industrial strategy, will the minister indicate where he falls in this debate: is he for an industrial strategy, or against it?

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of National Revenue and Minister of State (Small Business)): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member says I am referred to as Smiley. I think it would be unparliamentary of me to mention some of the names by which he is referred to.

I attended the conference at which both ministers expressed themselves on the question of industrial strategy. I dispute very much that they had any severe difference of opinion.

Mr. Clark: They were four-fifths together.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I hope I did not misname the minister: there are several other names applied to the Seven Dwarfs, such as Dopey, Sleepy, and a few others; perhaps one of those is more fitting.

My further question to the minister centres on this important question which came up in the task force Overview; that is, that the commodity tax review has been stalled, notwithstanding the fact Overview recommends that the important advantage that is being given as a result of commodity taxation in this country be ended. We have been trying to get a reference to the finance committee on this matter. Will the Minister of National Revenue indicate whether he is aware of the anxiety concerning this imbalance and, second, will he take some steps to get proper reference to the finance committee so that some type of a report can be forthcoming?

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, to the minister of finance that cannot be, I would simply say that when the Minister of Finance returns to the House, the hon. member should ask him that question: it is entirely his responsibility.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question on the same subject matter to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, in the absence of the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister.

The acceptance or non-acceptance by the government of an industrial strategy is absolutely central to the question of the industrial future of this country. Considering that the President of the Board of Economic Development Ministers flatly rejected such an approach yesterday in Toronto and, contrary to what we have just heard from one of the minister's colleagues, the Minister of Labour said what we are doing now is not going as far as he would have liked and that this piecemeal approach is not enough—that is a flat disagreement between the senior minister and the Minister of Labour—I would ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs: who was speaking for the government on this matter? Does the government accept, or not accept, the need for an industrial strategy?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there have been many statements made in this House by present ministers and their predecessors, including myself as minister of industrial development and also as minister of industry, trade and commerce. The issue may well hinge on whether we are talking in the singular in terms of an industrial strategy, or talking, as the sectoral report suggests, of having a number of related strategies, each of which is moving ahead within a general, over-all framework.

If we look at the statements which have been made with regard to industrial strategies on, for example, the shipbuilding industry and the forest industry within the last few weeks, it can be seen that the Board of Economic Development Ministers is in fact pursuing a series of industrial initiatives in all of the key sectors. Whether one wishes to put an umbrella definition on that as being a total industrial strategy or whether, as the responsible minister has said—and I agree, and I am sure all our colleagues on this side agree—one goes at it on the basis of analysing each individual key sector and developing it in the way which is now being done is, I suggest, more a matter of semantics than anything else.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I say, with respect, to the minister that the question is much greater than a semantic one.

I will go back to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Science Council correctly pointed out that dealing with different sectors of the Canadian economy or different aspects of our economic difficulty, whether it is inflation on the one hand or unemployment on the other, is not enough. The Science Council says that these have to be seen as symptoms of a larger structural difficulty.

I would like to ask the minister who has responsibility for the Science Council why the Government of Canada cannot do what France, Japan, Norway, Sweden and most other industrial countries have done, that is, have an over-all industrial strategy which integrates economic policy. That is the only way, as the Science Council has pointed out, that we can achieve long-range full employment in this country.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, it has already been made very clear by my colleagues, the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the President of the Board of Economic Development Ministers, that we are approaching this in key sectors. We are approaching it from the point of view of the interests of both management and labour. Labour and management in each of these sector task forces made recommendations.

The government was not sitting there saying, "We are going to decide what should be done". We were saying, "We would like to hear from you." To each of these sector task forces government personnel were attached, but government personnel were not writing the rules; they were listening and taking notes; they were part of the process. I am sure the hon. member would agree that labour has something very important to say about the development of an industrial strategy for Canada.

Mr. Fraser: When did you ever listen to labour?

Mr. Gillespie: If the hon. member does believe that, he should be supporting the government's efforts to involve the labour movement in the enunciation and articulation of separate strategies for separate industries.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the minister really should go out and have another glass of sherry.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Will he, just for once, deal with the substance of the matter? The Science Council points out that the government has never had a coherent industrial strategy because it has, and I quote, "an ideological aversion" to planning in a sensible way. Why is it that other industrial countries can recognize that there is a need to match resource development with industrial output, that there is a need to integrate inflation policy with full employment, and that there is a need not simply to have a shipbuilding industry in one part of Canada and a plastics industry in another part, but to integrate the two?

Why is it that other industrial countries are able to do this, but this government—which has been around for many years—has not been able to do that in the past and is refusing to do it for the future?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, let me go back to the key performing parts of the Canadian economy, the industries themselves. The government believes that labour and management should work together. The forest products industry is a very good example. It is a massive industry. It is one of our most important exporting industries. As a result of the consultation which took place between labour, management and the government with respect to problems and opportunities, the government announced a program of support for the industry which will help it become competitive and modernize for the future.

We believe in a selective approach like that and in dealing with each of the key sectors. The automotive sector is another important one, as the hon. member knows. He has also mentioned the shipbuilding sector. We believe in working with the parties involved. We would be more likely to develop a viable and strong shipbuilding industry through consultation that by working in some back room as perhaps some of the hon. member's supporters believe we should.

SHIPBUILDING

INQUIRY WHETHER TENDERS WILL BE CALLED FOR IMPROVEMENT OF SHIPBUILDING FACILITIES

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services.

In view of the fact that last week the Davie Shipbuilding Limited in Lauzon had to lay off some 100 workers for lack of contracts, could the minister advise the House whether he has been asked by the Minister of National Defence to call for tenders to repair or build ships in shipyards located in eastern Quebec?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to advise the hon. member that I shall be visiting this shipyard personally on Monday of next week. I want to remind him that, especially due to the difficulties both Canadian and foreign shipyards are experiencing, there are problems indeed. That is why Mr. Andras, the president over a conference of the Board of Economic Development Ministers, announced two months ago an accelerated program of ship repairs. As for us, in order to indicate to the House an interesting date, I should like to advise the hon. member that on April 19 we shall complete the assessment of the proposals we received in December, 1978, for the building of six new ships costing $1.5 billion. We hope to have the assessment of these proposals completed within the next two months. Following that, there will be, of course, a full schedule to adhere to before a contract can be awarded.

INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBILITY OF GIVING PRIORITY TO LAUZON SHIPYARDS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I see from the reply of the minister that things are improving. I should like to ask whether contracts are awarded after calls for tender or after negotiations with the shipyards themselves? Can the minister also tell us whether he has the authority to give some priority to the Lauzon shipyard which, to my mind, is the most affected of all shipyards in eastern Canada?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, where building is concerned we proceed through calls for tender. Naturally, when we do we realize that some shipyards are already filling out orders, and because of that they cannot tender while others, as the hon. member mentioned himself, like the Davie Shipbuilding Ltd., are going through extremely difficult times and are operating below capacity.

Personally, as a Quebecker and for the sake of fairness, I sincerely hope that the Davie Shipbuilding Ltd. can soon get some of the contracts awarded to the best bidder.

[Mr. Gillespie.]

REQUEST FOR STUDY ON IMPROVING FACILITIES AT LAUZON SHIPYARDS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, the minister certainly knows—if he does not, he will on Monday when he goes to the shipyards—that the yards need to be expanded, according to my information, in order to allow the company to build larger ships. Would the minister be willing to urge his cabinet colleagues to give very serious consideration to that matter and would he authorize the upgrading of the shipyards if these works are deemed necessary, which would obviously give quite a good deal of work to a few hundred people before the implementation of the projects which he referred to?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Supply and Services): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would truly be willing to discuss the matter when I go to the Lauzon shipyards on Monday and the hon. member can be sure that if it is established that upgrading operations would make the yards more efficient and productive, I will talk about it with my colleagues in the government.

While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell the hon. member for Bellechasse that a few months ago my department awarded a $12 million contract to the Lauzon shipyards for repairs to the Protecteur, a contract which I think will come to an end in June.

NATIONAL REVENUE

REASON DETAILED INCOME TAX RETURNS PLACED IN CUSTODY OF STATISTICS CANADA

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Revenue for what reason it is necessary to allow complete income tax returns of Canadians, or copies thereof, to be placed in the custody of Statistics Canada, when presumably it is only certain statistical data that is required.

Why is it necessary that tax forms leave the care and custody of Revenue Canada, particularly in view of the heavy responsibility placed on the cabinet and on this minister under section 23 of the Statistics Act?

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of National Revenue and Minister of State (Small Business)): Mr. Speaker, the Statistics Act allows Statistics Canada to have access to returns and requires Revenue Canada to make them available in accordance with section 23. Section 16 of that act stipulates that the returns, when given to Statistics Canada, are subject to the confidentiality provisions in that area. I can assure him that so far as the Department of National Revenue is concerned, our files are kept in the strictest confidentiality.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Abbott: I can also assure the hon. member that if he comes snuffling around our place with his cameras and listening devices, we will throw him out on his ear.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacKay: Now I know, Mr. Speaker, why there have been so many ministers of national revenue: it is a refuge for mediocrity.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacKay: I want to ask the minister, seriously, whether he has had any discussions with the other minister specifically responsible for Statistics Canada, namely, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and whether anybody to his knowledge is taking any interest in this statistical agency, because I would remind him that statistics can be used to support anything, especially statisticians.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that the hon. member's inane discourtesies require an answer, but he knows which minister has the responsibility for Statistics Canada. On this particular subject, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, I believe, is prepared to answer questions concerning Statistics Canada—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Abbott: I say that he is prepared to do so in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jamieson: Thank you very much.

Mr. Abbott: I simply thought I would point out, in the clearest English possible, that under the act we are required to turn over tax returns to Statistics Canada and that once turned over, they remain their responsibility. I do not know what further answer the hon. member would require.

INVOLVEMENT OF RCMP IN INVESTIGATING SECURITY AT STATISTICS CANADA

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): There is absolutely no obligation to turn over those tax forms with names, addresses, and social insurance numbers—none whatsoever.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jarvis: We have a situation where I and dozens of members of the House have farm constituents whose confidential tax returns are lying around in rooms with absolutely no security, and this is the minister's responsibility. Now may I ask him: can he confirm the reports emanating last might and this morning that the RCMP has been directed to investigate and hunt down the source of the information that led to the revelations by my colleague yesterday? Is that accurate? Has the RCMP been directed to hunt down that public servant?

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of National Revenue and Minister of State (Small Business)): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member started his question by giving a selective list of those items that he says do not need to be on the returns when they are forwarded to Statistics Canada. That is perhaps his opinion. What other items he says do not need to be on the returns is another matter.

An hon. Member: What do you say?

Mr. Abbott: I simply repeat that the returns are sent to Statistics Canada in accordance with the act. Whether or not investigations have been ordered by the RCMP is not within my province to answer.

Mr. Jarvis: The forms are sent under conditions established by the governor in council. That is exactly the provision in section 23. But to get back to the RCMP investigation, if the minister really wants to be cutting, will he cut out right now the RCMP investigation into the source of the leak, and in its stead devote an equal number of RCMP man-hours to teaching his officials and Statistics Canada officials the very basics of security to protect confidential information?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Abbott: Well, Mr. Speaker, if I could cut out anything, it would be stupid questions like that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Abbott: I made it clear to the hon. member that we guard the confidentiality of tax returns with real care. There is no question that Revenue Canada has disclosed any information concerning tax returns, and under no circumstances has Revenue Canada ordered the RCMP to do anything. So I suggest to the hon. member that if he wishes to ask questions concerning the management of Statistics Canada, he should ask the questions. I am telling him of the responsibilities I have under my departmental area.

AGRICULTURE

MARKETING BOARDS—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON INCREASE IN INDIVIDUAL QUOTAS

Mr. Claude Tessier (Compton): Mr. Speaker, could the minister of Agriculture tell the House to what extent government policy with regard to marketing boards could cease to serve its original purpose, namely to ensure the right to participate in national production and evolve into a commodity traded to the highest bidder, which will be reflected at the level of production costs and eventually be passed on to the consumer? My question is this: who is responsible for the increase in the price of those quotas? Could the minister indicate whether he will take the necessary steps to remedy this situation which seriously distorts the aim of existing and future marketing boards, considering some producers will not be able to afford that security and consumers will have to foot the bill later on and what is worse, the future of these farms is in jeopardy as it becomes increasingly expensive to buy the right to produce.

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member knows that the quota values are worked out and managed by provincial marketing boards under the jurisdiction of provincial authorities. We do have a provincial-federal committee studying quota values. I have deep concern about what is happening here, but there does not seem to be any great trend to do much about it.

I do not know what the report is going to bring in, but every province has a different system. I believe the province of Manitoba—if I could mention that province's name without somebody getting up on a question of privilege—has quota values in some instances, at least, for some products under marketing boards with no value in return to the marketing board but a redistribution to the people who need them, and the present government has not seen fit to change that.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF CIRCUMSTANCES SURROUNDING PROSECUTION OF PETER TREU

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Supply and Services. I am pleased to be able to ask this question of him because as a member he was quite open. I hope he still is, in spite of having joined the cabinet.

My question has to do with the case of Peter Treu and the matter of compensation. Having in mind that this prosecution was only launched with a fiat of the Attorney General, which in turn was given on information provided to the Attorney General—and we have had some experience in this House, in the case referred to by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham, of information placed before ministers by security forces—and having in mind that this particular investigation and prosecution was continued and carried on in a very virulent and savage way by security people attached at one time to his department, will the minister investigate the circumstances under which this investigation took place and the information which was placed before the Attorney General in respect of which the fiat was given for prosecution, and report to this House so we can consider the question of reasonable compensation for this man who has been very grievously wronged, in spite of what the Minister of Justice said?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, first of all, with regard to being open I am very happy that members of the official opposition have accepted my invitation to meet twice with senior officials in my department, in my absence, to ask them any question they wish about the department, because I think that if we cannot withstand the closest public scrutiny, that is not a mark of good management.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. De Bané: Because the matter of classification of security clearance is within my department, I have asked my department to get in touch with the Department of Justice to review this practice. We know from this case that Mr. Treu lost his security clearance without even knowing about it. When we are asked in our department to check and give an opinion as to security clearance, we do so and we give that opinion only to the employer, but there is no standard of practice for the employer to advise someone that he has lost his security clearance, or what have you. As I say, I have already asked my department to get in touch with the Department of Justice to review this practice.

In essence, I am disturbed that when we are asked to give a security clearance in respect of someone, the results of that inquiry are not communicated to the person involved, and for that reason I should like to review the whole policy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

LOTO CANADA

PROVISIONS OF CONTRACTS LET IN LOTO SELECT PROGRAM

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I, too, have a question for the Minister of Supply and Services but it relates to the responsibility of his department in acting as consultant, and the loss of some $13 million on the abortive Loto Select program.

In the interests of open government, while the minister's department was advising Loto Canada in respect of contracts that it entered into, did his department also advise Loto Canada that it should include in those contracts cancellation clauses which would allow the government to get out of the contracts, if that was necessary, at a minimal cost to the people of Canada?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, my department acted as the contracting authority in some of the minor elements of the whole matter, for instance, concerning furniture, adverstisements, signs, etc. As the contracting authority, we made purchases on behalf of Loto Canada to the extent of about $500,000. We have managed, in about two months, to dispose of about 70 per cent of that at 100 per cent of the price we paid for it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. De Bané: As for the contracts signed by the Loto Canada corporation and not by us, we did lend someone from our department to give advice on its operation, not on operation of DSS.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the minister's anxiety to give us information. I want to get some clarification from him. In view of the fact that the president of Loto Canada indicated in a letter to the minister that it was Supply and Services that acted as consultant in the negotiation of these contracts, a fact which has been confirmed by the minister, I should like to ask the minister this specific question: Did officials of the minister's department advise Loto Canada to include in its contracts cancellation clauses which would allow the Government of Canada to escape from the provisions of those contracts at a minimal cost to the people of Canada?

Mr. De Bané: If I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to take notice of that question because it is very precise. I would hope to be able to give my answer on Tuesday at the latest, as I will be absent on Monday.

What I can tell the hon. member is that my department did receive a letter from the president of Loto Canada thanking the department for the dedication of that single employee we did send and who worked, as the president said in the letter, "under extremely difficult conditions".

CONTINUATION OF GRANT TO RAPE CRISIS CENTRES—ASSIGNMENT OF CHILD TAX CREDIT TO WINNIPEG HOUSING AUTHORITY TO MEET ARREARS IN RENT

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, if I may, I should like in one question to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether she has followed through, as she said she would, in respect of two questions I put to her recently. On February 5, I asked her about the continuation of the grant to the National Assistor of Canadian Rape Crisis Centres. She said she would follow that personally. Has she done so?

On February 20, Mr. Speaker, I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare if she would try to find some way to stop the practice of the Winnipeg Housing Authority of requiring housing tenants who are in arrears to assign their child tax credits even before they get them. Has she done anything further in respect of that matter?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, on the first part of the question, I can report that I have looked into the request for funds by the Ottawa Rape Crisis Centre to my department. In fact, it is a request for two demonstration projects. One is a continuation of the three-year demonstration project and it is being studied by the department in the usual way, as I have said. I would remind hon. members, however, that there are very limited resources.

The other project is a new one which would lead to the creation of a national association of Rape Crisis Centres in the country. It, too, is being studied by the department and I hope to have the recommendations before the end of March. Let me just say that according to an early analysis of the project, it will be given high priority.

As to the other aspects of the problem of crisis centres like the ones which we are studying, the provincial governments can apply for assistance under CAP. There are two such centres which are already cost-shared under the CAP agreement. One is the coalition of British Columbia Rape Relief Centres and the other one is the Saskatoon Rape Crisis Centre. This is the direction which we will take for the future.

As to the Winnipeg Housing Authority and their interference in the tax system, perhaps I could ask my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, to give the answer.

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of National Revenue and Minister of State (Small Business)): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that an assignment of a federal tax refund is prohibited by the Financial Administration Act. My department will not honour such assignments: they will make the cheque out to the taxpayer and send it to the address given by the taxpayer. An official of my department has advised the Winnipeg Housing Authority of that fact.

STATUS OF INQUIRY INTO CLASSIFICATIONS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. On December 19, I believe he indicated that he was looking very closely into the delegation to departments to classify. As I understand it now, that delegation has been withdrawn from at least the personnel officers, the economists and the administrators. Does that mean that the inquiry has been completed, or can we expect to hear from the minister with respect to further withdrawals; and if so, when?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, it does not mean that it is completed but, on the other hand, it does not necessarily mean there will be further withdrawals. As I have indicated, we are examining the eight groups which we felt had the greatest shortcomings as far as classification was concerned. As the hon. member has indicated, we have withdrawn from three groups the classification delegation. That may not happen with the others, but it has not yet been completed.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the minister is giving very close study, is monitoring the situation and certain procedures have been set in place. One thing which the minister has not told us is the anticipated savings. Right now we are wasting some $50 million as a result of overclassification. Could he indicate to the House, now, what the anticipated savings are and the time-frame within which this will happen?

Has the minister any information in this regard, given the fact, once again, that with every passing moment we are wasting a good deal of the taxpayers' money.

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, on previous occasions I have explained to the hon. member the situation on the positions that were overclassified: we would anticipate, approximately in a year hence, downgrading those positions, or earlier if the occupant moved out for some other reason. So the action is in fact in train right now to do a substantial amount toward removing these misclassifications.

I have made it quite clear to the hon. member, as well, that we are not happy with the degree of misclassification in the public service, but that it is not something which we can correct overnight. It will become an ongoing and regular part of our process to monitor the program of delegation extremely closely.

LOTO CANADA

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF LETTER FROM CORPORATION TO DSS

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Supply and Services relating to the questions asked by my colleague, the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo.

The minister has referred to a letter which his department received from Loto Canada. Would the minister consider tabling that letter, since he has already referred to it? In giving his reply on Tuesday, if he cannot table the letter today would the minister be in a position to inform the House as to what were the "difficult circumstances"—I think I am quoting him correctly—which were referred to in the letter which apparently related to difficulties that one of his public servants had in the matter of a Loto Canada contract? If the minister could answer that question today, I would be grateful; but, if not, I would be quite prepared to wait until Tuesday.

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I do not see why I should have any reservations in tabling that letter.

With regard to the difficult circumstances, I understand that the corporation wanted, for reasons which are already public knowledge, to perform that procurement on an urgent basis, and we sent them that official from our department, who worked under very difficult conditions. I shall send a copy of that letter without delay.

[Mr. Alexander.]

IMMIGRATION

ADMISSION OF PROSTITUTES INTO CANADA—ALLEGED DIRECTIVE TO IMMIGRATION OFFICIALS

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It deals with a recent directive sent to all immigration offices in Canada by Mr. J. Hucker, director general of the minister's enforcement branch, which reads in part, "an officer must grant admission or allow all alleged or admitted prostitutes to remain in Canada." In other words, establishing an open-door policy for prostitutes from around the world into Canada.

I would like to ask the minister, firstly, if he is aware of this directive and, if so, could he provide this House with the bare facts behind this memorandum which at first glance seem to fall under the Minister of Transport's user-pay policy.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have not had the hon. member's experience in being able to spot what is and what is not a prostitute, so I am at somewhat of a disadvantage there.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cullen: The hon. member indicated to me that he would be posing a question today, and I thank him for that, but unfortunately he did not tell me what the subject matter would be.

An hon. Member: That is the kind of information you need.

Mr. Danson: It got laid aside.

Mr. Cullen: As my colleague, the minister of defence, has said, "It got laid aside." I will check into the particular memo, because I have a feeling that perhaps the hon. member is misinterpreting its intent.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that law enforcement agencies in Canada generally support the view that prostitution and the evils surrounding it are not only immoral but tend to be surrounded by an atmosphere of crime, can the minister now assure this House that he will take every necessary step to advise his immigration officers around the country to disallow the entry into Canada of prostitutes, be they alleged, admitted or otherwise?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I do not know if the hon. member is suggesting that we should ask each woman or, for that matter, man who enters the country whether they are in fact a prostitute. I wish that the hon. member would have had the courtesy of letting me see the memo so that I could have checked it out to determine whether he in fact is giving the correct interpretation.

PARKS CANADA

FILM TO HAVE BEEN MADE AT FORT LANGLEY, B.C.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in his responsibility for parks.

Just over two months ago I asked one of the members of the minister's caucus to contact him to secure permission for a film producer to use the facilities of Fort Langley to shoot a film, at a cost of approximately $1.5 million. To this day the minister has not answered the member of his caucus, nor the film producer, with the result that this $1.5 million job has gone to the United States.

Is it the minister's policy to ignore a member of his own caucus the way he ignores us? In view of the fact that the Department of National Revenue would like to get rid of the policy of capital cost allowances to the film industry because it is too successful, is this the minister's way of co-operating with that impending policy of the Department of National Revenue?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have in fact replied to the hon. member. He may not have had a chance to read the reply, but it is on his desk now.

PROGRAM FOR REGIONAL CENTRES OF EXCELLENCE—IMPLEMENTATION THEREOF

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Science and Technology.

Last June, the minister announced the government's intention to develop important regional centres of excellence, and last July the province of New Brunswick made proposals for a centre of excellence at the University of New Brunswick that would lead to a forestry complex with an important stimulative effect on the whole forest industry. When will the minister indicate his response and explain the long delay in implementing this important program?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, this is a very important program and a very big one, too. The hon. member will realize the importance of the forest industry to the province of New Brunswick.

I can assure him that I am interested in trying to develop the kind of complex which I think might well serve the interests of the people of New Brunswick and the interests of Canadians. A week ago I had conversations with the Premier of New Brunswick with respect to such a complex. I hope it will be possible to make an announcement in the near future.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. DANSON—FREE MAILING PRIVILEGES FOR ARMED FORCES—CLARIFICATION OF ANSWER

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In answer to a question put by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga) the last time I was in the House, on February 21, I gave an answer which was technically accurate but which might not have been precise. It related to free mailing privileges for the armed forces. The Canadian government and the Department of National Defence do not provide free mailing privileges, as I indicated. I understand however, that the United Nations Emergency Force in the Middle East has free mailing privileges provided by the United Nations for five letters per week of up to one ounce each. My answer might have been somewhat misleading in light of the hon. member's question as I read it in Hansard.

I will pursue the matter of other United Nations forces having the same privileges, but each force has its own rules of procedure.

MR. BAKER (GRENVILLE-CARLETON)—REFERENCE OF ESTIMATES TO STANDING COMMITTEES

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in which I think the Acting Prime Minister will be interested. There was some indication from the government House leader yesterday that the government would introduce a motion today to refer the estimates to the appropriate standing committees so that we could get to the discussion of them. It does seem an unusually long time to leave the estimates in limbo before referring them, but I do not see the motion on the order paper. Is a particular minister going to do that today?

Miss MacDonald: They cannot find a minister today.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Acting Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) has the matter in hand. I want to advise the opposition House leader that unfortunately at the last moment the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) was taken ill with a relapse of his very bad bout of influenza and is not able to be in the House.

PRIVILEGE

MR. FRIESEN—REMARKS OF PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY TO MINISTER OF INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I had given you notice earlier this morning that I wished to raise a question of privilege relative to the language used last night by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Industry Trade and Commerce (Mr. Loiselle). I see that he is not in his place so I should like to reserve that point until he is here.

Gold Coins

MR. FRIESEN—LETTER FROM MINISTER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT RESPECTING FILM CREW

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): The second point I would like to raise Mr. Speaker, is a question of privilege relative to the answer just given me by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Faulkner) that the letter he had written to me was already on my desk. I would point out there is no way that could be so because he did not know I had made that request. I suggest that the minister is misleading the House and I would leave it to him to decide whether it was deliberate or accidental. There was no way he could have known that I made a representation to a member of his caucus and so there was no way he could have written to me.

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I hope I did not misunderstand the hon. member, but last week I signed a letter to him which dealt with a film crew going into a national park. I assumed that was the question he was raising—unless it had to do with another film crew and another national park. That letter was sent across to him last week, as my memory serves me, because I remember reading it carefully.

I can tell him now that the answer is negative. I am not entirely satisfied with the negative response and if he wants to pursue it with me later I will be pleased to do so, but I did send that letter last week.

ROYAL CANADIAN MINT

ANNOUNCEMENT OF MINTING OF GOLD BULLION COIN

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to inform the House, on my behalf and on behalf of the President of the Board of Economic Development Ministers (Mr. Andras), of the government's decision to undertake a three-year program for the sale of gold bullion coins. This decision stems mainly if not exclusively from the request made to that effect by our Canadian gold mine operators. The gold mining industry, which is concentrated mainly in Ontario, Quebec and the Northwest Territories, employs 4,700 people. Canada, which is the third largest gold producer in the world, will thus be following in the footsteps of the two first producers, South Africa and the U.S.S.R., which are also selling gold bullion coins, and will be slightly ahead of the United States which will likely undertake a similar program next year.

To give an idea of the extent of this over a billion dollar program, at today's rate of exchange, need I only say that it will require, over the next three years, a total of five million ounces of gold, equal to the amount of gold extracted from Canadian mines in the last three years. It is our hope that this program, a first in the history of the Royal Canadian Mint, will be an incentive to our industry, as it has been indicated to me. It is certainly my most heartfelt wish.

In other words, my dear colleagues, the government's sole interest in the sale of such gold bullion coins, is to help our gold mines. Accordingly, during this three-year trial period, the five million ounces of pure gold will be supplied exclusively by our Canadian gold mines or from government reserves. Also, to limit and even preclude any risk of deficit, the government has decided to give the Royal Canadian Mint total and exclusive responsibility over all aspects of this gold bullion coin program, both in Canada and abroad.

[English]

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, at the outset of my brief remarks I want to thank the minister for his courtesy in making available to me and my colleague, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), an advance copy of the text of his remarks and also a copy of the press release.

If I can be forgiven for digressing slightly, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that both in question period today and in his general conduct since assuming this portfolio the minister has indicated a conscious desire—which is perhaps conspicuously in conflict with the attitude of a number of his colleagues—to share with parliament information about the activities of his department and to allow parliament an opportunity to have input into his department's activities. On behalf of my colleagues, I should like to indicate our appreciation of his willingness to give us that opportunity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: The minister's statement and the press release contain the bare bones of the policy he has announced today. We will want more information about the specific policy, such as the timing of the introduction of the coins, the distribution system and various other mechanisms which will be put in place, but I want to indicate this party's general support for the policy.

Progressive Conservative members of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs helped expedite passage of the legislation which set up the mechanism for the issuance of these gold coins. We also urged the government to expedite the sale of the coins, and if our advice had been followed they would be on sale now. Progressive Conservative members of the committee proposed amendments for greater controls on the program and for better reporting to parliament about the activities of the Mint in this regard.

In his statement the minister suggested that the sale of these coins will be a shot in the arm for the gold mining industry in Canada. On this side we sincerely hope that is the case, because at a time when one million Canadians are unemployed and the economy is sluggish we strongly support any action by this government to get the economy back on the rails.

It is clear from the experience of South Africa, with their equivalent of this coin, that the program can work well. Although we would want to follow the introduction of the coin and the marketing of it closely, in summary we think basically it is a good idea. We will be looking forward to receiving more information from the minister as to exactly what the government's activities will be in this area.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the minister for making this information available to hon. members. I would also like to congratulate him on his manner of handling questions in the House. May I add that I have appreciated the work done by the minister's predecessor in this field, Mr. Goyer. I know that Mr. Goyer and the present Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. De Bané) have stood pretty well alone in their department by giving approval to this type of assistance to the gold mining industry. The department did not want to get involved in the area and its representatives said so at the committee hearings. They set up a number of roadblocks, but I am pleased to see that the government has decided to go ahead in any event.

As the minister has said, this is a billion dollar market. When the Americans put gold bullion on the market, hundreds of thousands of bids were made, far surpassing the amount of gold which was made available. The program has turned out to be a hedge against oil price inflation and inflation in general. It is also a hedge against bankruptcies in the business world and against bank bankruptcies, which are a fact of life in various countries around the world. For that reason gold bullion coins which are backed by the Mint, sold by the Mint and handled by the Mint will assure buyers around the world that they are getting exactly what they are paying for. This will enable buyers to trade these coins without any question as to value.

Some resentment was felt by people buying Kruger rands because of South Africa's policy. The Canadian coin overcomes one difficulty in that we are making it a coin of the realm. Certainly the $50 face value has no relationship to the purchase price because to buy this coin at today's market price cost Canadians $300. So it is not what you call a face value coin; it is a coin of the realm. The Kruger rand is not.

From the 23 lode mines in Canada in 1977 only about 1,717,000 ounces of gold were produced. To produce this gold the employment of about 5,000 miners in those 23 gold mines was needed. These mines produce an export value for Canada of about $239 million. If Canada enters this field where we are producing only 1.7 million ounces of gold per year, production must increase if we are to meet the requirements; otherwise, any shortfall will have to be made up from the reserves in our treasury.

I hope, along with other members of the House, that the government will assist the gold mining industry to find a ready market, a market that is available to the small producers as well as the large ones who do not have a marketing agency of their own. In effect the government through the Mint is going to act as the international agent for the distribution of much of our newly produced gold.

Along with other forms of assistance that the government can provide and is providing to places like Kirkland Lake, where a grant has been made available for surveys in the amount of $2.5. million, I hope that instead of only 5,000 miners in the gold mining industry next year, perhaps we will see 7,000 or 8,000. It seems to me that we will be producing more than the two million ounces which the minister has agreed to produce in the two years following this year.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to join with two of my colleagues in the opposition in thanking the hon. Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. De Bané) for providing us with a copy of his statement early enough for at least a cursory study of it. I would also like to congratulate him for the straightforward manner in which he attempted to give us the information we wanted. We have experienced it once again today, and it speaks well for him.

Mr. Speaker, that decision of the hon. minister to promote the production of gold bars is intended, according to what he said, to help gold mines in the Northwest Territories. Gold mines are mostly in Quebec and Ontario. I come from a gold producing area. Some produce gold mines only and others only marginally but they still produce some.

Now, I remember, Mr. Speaker, that no more than ten years ago when the price of gold was set at $35 an ounce, the government had to subsidize gold mines to enable them to produce and provide some jobs to miners and today, when the price of gold has risen to almost $246 an ounce, we have to help them in another way by producing gold ingots worth $50 and selling them to the public. Such system, Mr. Speaker, is no doubt better than direct subsidies, because it will enable those who want to make secure investments to buy those gold ingots which could hardly depreciate in view of the price at which they are marketed.

It remains, Mr. Speaker, that the production of a new gold coin in Canada is undertaken at a time where the government is experiencing some hardship. It has just been announced that the government has incurred a deficit of some $6 million for the production of the one cent copper coin. Now, Mr. Speaker, all kinds of devices have been used to try to make up that deficit. They thought they could reduce the size of the one cent coin, but they soon realized that there would be some problems with vending machines when that lighter one cent coin would be substituted for a dime. They also thought that a hole could be bored in the centre of that one cent coin. But since there were obviously so many holes in our monetary system they did not dare make fools of themselves with that method. The fact is that they have failed to find a solution and that our coin production shows a deficit. Mr. Speaker, I hope the production of that gold bullion coin which will sell for $50 will not show a deficit.

The minister says that in order to avoid this, the government gave the Royal Mint the total and exclusive responsibility for every aspect of that program. If there is any risk of running into a deficit in this case, I do not think it could be avoided by giving such a responsibility to the Royal Mint. Well, I think, Mr. Speaker, that on the whole it is a good decision because it will first of all enable our gold mines to survive, and our miners to find stable and paying jobs, and also because it will make it possible for Canadians to invest money in that form of investment which seems fairly sound.

[English]

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the minister in my brief remarks, the statement which was read by him today and the accompanying press release contained only the bare bones of the proposal being made by the government. I would like to ask him, specifically with regard to the distribution system that will be followed, what sort of marketing system will be used? Does the minister intend to have the Mint serve as a retailer of coins and sell directly to individuals or sell through wholesalers? If he intends to sell through wholesalers, what method will be used to select the wholesalers?

[Translation]

Mr. De Bané: That, Mr. Speaker, is a very important and sensitive question. For the time being, I can tell the hon. member that it will be the responsibility of the board of directors of the Royal Mint. Since the government's decision has just been taken, the board of directors has not yet reached a final decision as to the course to be followed. However, according to my preliminary discussions with the president of the Royal Mint, it seems that the marketing methods used by South Africa, which, of course, is a much bigger producer than Canada, will be followed rather closely. South Africa issues some eight million gold coins every year. As for us, we will issue some two million.

Apparently, various aspects will have to be considered. Firstly, the dealer should already be in the gold business, he should be able not only to sell gold, but also to buy it back from investors wishing to sell it, and should meet other criteria which will be defined by the Royal Mint.

So, the various details pertaining to distribution have not yet been worked out by the Royal Canadian Mint whose responsibility it will be. What we know for sure is that huge amounts of money will be involved, over a billion dollars, and that profits will be almost non-existent for the Mint; in other words, on the one hand very little profit is expected, while on the other hand, the risk involved is pretty high. That is why the Royal Mint has agreed to implement this program provided it is given the sole responsibility for it, from A to Z. Let us not forget that the price of the coin will vary on a daily basis, depending on gold market prices. Already, in the two major nations involved in this field, the U.S.S.R. and South Africa, there is in operation a system of sales to the wholesalers, which we cannot change, and which is based on the day to day price of gold plus three per cent.

Therefore, it is with that 3 per cent that the Royal Mint will have to defray all its costs and also the current price of gold plus 3 per cent charged to the wholesaler. So the Mint cannot afford to make any mistake, otherwise we would incur tremendous losses.

[English]

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, the minister alluded to the situation where similar coins are being marketed by the Soviet Union and South Africa. Although I was not a member of the committee at the time, my colleagues inform me that when the officials came before the standing committee, they were unclear. They had few details as to the marketing of the South Africa Kruger rand. Since the systematic study done following the hearings held by the committee, has the minister been able to come up with more information about the marketing policies of the Kruger rand and whether sales are in fact taking place?

With regard to any marketing studies that have been done by the Canadian Mint, what does the minister consider to be the breakdown of domestic sales versus international sales? Does he expect that the vast majority of these coins will be sold in the United States? What percentage does he expect will be sold domestically and what percentage does he expect will be sold in the rest of the world? Also, the minister indicated that he expects that a million will be sold this year and two million per year in 1980 and 1981. What marketing studies have been made to determine that those markets are in fact there?

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Speaker, in the first instance, since the decision of the cabinet was taken a few days ago the Royal Mint sent two high ranking civil servants to South Africa to meet with the people in charge of the program in that country. South Africa, which is by far the largest exporter of gold, has only 16 distributors throughout the world. This distribution is done through the largest banks, those that are in the gold business.

As to the second question, we expect to sell about 10 per cent of the gold bullion coins in Canada and the rest throughout the world, essentially in West Germany and the United States. I do not have the authority to give formal instruction to the board of the Royal Mint. However, they are convinced they will not be able to meet the demand. If that is so, I have asked them to ensure that we serve those Canadians who would like to invest in pure gold before selling abroad. However, I understand that traditionally those who are interested in investing in gold are essentially the West Germans and the Americans. I might point out that the United States secretary of the treasury has already announced that that country will be proceeding on a bigger scale than us in the next year.

Mr. Peters: How does the Mint intend to purchase from the mines? Second, the minister may find that there is an immense market for this production. If that market develops, does he intend to have the mines supply the newly minted gold?

Mr. De Bané: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have received letters from different gold mining companies assuring me that they will be selling to the Royal Mint. I will not read them all. However, I might read a portion of the letter I received from John L. Bonus, managing director of the Mining Association of Canada. I quote:

> The association will now proceed to approach all Canadian gold producers alerting them to the nature and requirements of this program and suggesting that they make available to the government as much of their production as possible for this purpose.

If by chance something should happen in that regard, I have an agreement with the Department of Finance that they are prepared for the first three years to supply out of their reserves of 22 million ounces a maximum of five million ounces. I might point out that I have no interest in the program unless it is to produce gold bullion coins from gold which comes from our gold mining industry. I do not think there is any interest in doing this with gold from foreign mines.

● (1230)

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, the minister has read from a letter from an officer of the Mining Association of Canada. I wonder if he would care to table that letter now.

Mr. De Bané: Agreed, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Is leave granted to the minister to table the letter he referred to?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, if my understanding is correct, the person writing that letter in effect said, "We will now deliver gold to the Mint". I believe the minister is indicating that that is correct. Was the Mining Association or any member companies of the Mining Association advised of the minister's announcement previous to his making it in this House? The letter appears to indicate that the person writing it had knowledge of the minister's announcement today. The letter in effect says, "We will now deliver gold to the Canadian Mint". Would the minister confirm whether member companies of the Mining Association or the Mining Association itself were advised of the minister's announcement today previous to his making the announcement?

Mr. De Bané: In no way, shape or form, Mr. Speaker. When I was appointed minister of my department, I was told about this matter. I told my officials that I would have no interest in such a program unless it were desired by the gold mining industry. I said that I would not pursue the matter in cabinet unless I had the assurance that it was according to the wishes of the gold mining industry. I received that letter in January, and I proposed this program to the cabinet only a few days ago.

However, before taking this matter to the cabinet, I wanted to have letters from the mining industry to be sure that this is really what it wanted, because it is my belief that whatever the bureaucracy thinks, if the private sector has ideas which are not contrary to the common good, we should listen, especially if no cost to the treasury is involved.

Mr. Stevens: Perhaps we will deal with the letter later. I should like to shift to another line of questioning. In the minister's announcement he indicated that the five million ounces of fine gold required over the three-year trial period will be drawn exclusively from Canadian gold mines or from Crown reserves, meaning foreign exchange reserves. As this matter has been the subject of quite a lot of debate in this House—the question of gold reserves in relation to our foreign exchange—would the minister indicate whether a commitment has been made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) or by the Bank of Canada that they will supply gold from the foreign exchange reserve fund? If that commitment has been made, to what extent are they willing to sell part of the reserve, and at what price will that gold be sold?

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Speaker, as I told the House, the raison d'être for the program is to help the gold mining industry. The gold mining industry made representations to me, but I must also consider what would happen if industry were to lose its traditional customers. As I said, I object to gold coming from foreign mines, so for the three-year trial period—and this program is only for three years—I have the firm commitment of the Department of Finance that for the entire program of five million ounces it is prepared to sell us that maximum of five million ounces from its own reserves.

Of course, I do not think we will need to buy gold from other than our own Canadian mining industry, but so that we can be sure of supply, we can buy gold from Crown reserves. At what price? The price will be the going price on the day of sale. I do not remember if the price is to be wholesale or retail; I think it is to be retail. Whether we buy from the mining industry, the Bank of Canada or the Department of Finance, the mechanics will be the same. The seller of the gold will earn about 0.5 per cent of the value of the gold, not the usual 8 per cent, 9 per cent, 10 per cent or whatever interest rates are current.

The seller will be paid on a retail basis. I am told that this is the way it is done in the gold trade. The procedure will be exactly the same regardless whether the gold comes from the gold mining industry or from the Bank of Canada. This is why I can assure the House that if, because of the requirement of working capital, more than $1 billion is required, special financing for this program will not be needed by the Mint. However, there is a danger because gold is sold at its value plus 3 per cent. This is the way it is done with South Africa, and we have to work under that system. As long as gold is valued as it is today, at $249 plus 3 per cent, the cost of selling will be $7 or $8. That amount covers expenses and a small profit. However, if the price goes down to $150 plus 3 per cent, the industry will be losing money. I assume that if ever that happens the program will be stopped, because unlike the numismatic program under which we know in advance that we will sell at a certain price with a large profit margin, we are dealing here with the daily price plus 3 per cent.

Mr. Stevens: Is the commitment the minister has received from the Minister of Finance an unlimited commitment? If for some reason Canadian producers are unable to supply enough gold for the minting of these gold maple leaf coins, would the Bank of Canada be willing to sell its entire reserve of gold? Is it a total commitment with no limitation?

Second, why has only one coin been chosen? The Mining Association recommended that there be a one ounce coin and a half ounce coin. As the minister probably knows, it is expected that in the United States there will be four gold coins minted, and they might compete against our one ounce coin.

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Speaker, we have a commitment for five million ounces for the entire program, if that much is needed. I am not in a position today to answer the second part of the question.

[Translation]

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, maybe I am a little uneasy when looking at a picture of that gold coin, but it is engraved on the coin: 50 dollars, 1979. The press release says that the gold coin will have a face value of $50 and the price will be the current market price for gold, plus a charge for transfer, coining and delivery costs. Is it possible to engrave 50 dollars on the coin if it is sold at the market price?

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Speaker, I had exactly the same reaction when I saw that coin, but here are the reasons: first of all, that is the definition of the Department of Finance, since the Government of Canada is per se the final guarantor of the coin; second, according to all experts consulted throughout the world, a gold investor is not concerned about the amount engraved. The best example is that South Africa as well as the United States do not issue gold coins but one ounce medallions. There is absolutely nothing engraved on it and it is not currency. So, for gold investors, this does not matter at all and the Department of Finance, for very complex reasons, has decided that 50 dollars would be written on it.

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the minister's answer. Since the Minister of Finance has decided to determine a face value for very complex reasons, would it not be to attract potential buyers who are not used to buying metal in bulk?

Mr. De Bané: No, it seems it is a matter of money supply and other considerations, especially because all gold dealers we have consulted, the Deutsch Bank, the Dresden Bank and others, have told us: A gold buyer does not care what is written on it; that is immaterial.

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I have two brief questions for the Minister of Supply and Services. Does the minister believe there will be a larger market for gold coins than for fine gold?

[English]

Mr. De Bané: Is the hon. member asking me about medallions or coins in gold? Actually, there are two systems, the Kruger rand of South Africa and the U.S. medallion. We will have coins in gold. The investor who wants to buy pure gold will not be, as I was told, influenced by whether it is a coin or whether it is a medallion because what he wants primarily is that it be pure gold, and that is what we will have.

Mr. Clarke: I would like to ask, Mr. Speaker, why would the government want to make a gold coin instead of letting private industry make a medal, for example?

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Speaker, we are doing so at the request of the Canadian gold mining industry which thinks it would be more prestigious if those gold coins were legal tender money in Canada. As, for very obvious political reasons, a lot of people do not want to buy the coins put out by the two largest producers, South Africa and the U.S.S.R., because of Canada's image, all the specialists we consulted tell us that demand for Canadian gold bullion coins will be excessively strong.

[English]

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Speaker, I understand from the letter to the minister that the gold mining industry was given the information that the program was approved over a month ago. I see the minister is shaking his head, so I will let him respond.

Mr. De Bané: When I was faced with that proposal, I told my officials that I would not take this matter to the cabinet before obtaining the opinion of private industry. My rationale in supporting the program is whether it will help the gold mining industry of Canada. So I wanted to know, first, what the industry thought about it.

I received in January the letter to which the hon. member referred and I tabled it a few minutes ago. In it I was told that the Mining Association supports such a program. It was only then that I decided to go to cabinet, which I did just a few days ago. That letter was one of the main elements of my decision to support the program, my philosophy being that when private industry asks us for something which is not contrary to the common good, and when we can manage to do it without incurring supplementary expenditures, we should listen to them and do it.

Mr. Clarke: I am referring now directly to the letter written by the managing director of the Mining Association of Canada. Does the minister not think that the phrase—

—chairman of the gold committee of the Mining Association of Canada, has informed the executive committee of the board of directors of the association that the interdepartmental committee studying the proposed gold bullion coin program has concluded its assessment on a positive note.

—informs the industry that the program will go ahead?

Mr. De Bané: That was done on my instructions. I told the officials of several departments that I was not ready to bring that project to the government for its consideration unless I had the assurance that it would benefit and be to the liking of the industry, and I wanted the officials to meet with the industry and bring me back their reactions. I wanted to know exactly what the industry thinks about the program before going further, because, as I said, there is no point in having such a program if it is not to the liking of the gold mining industry of Canada. The risks are enormous and the benefits are almost nonexistent.

The working capital for such a program, at today's price, would be over $1.25 billion, and if the Mint could manage to make $1 million or $2 million in profit, that would be great. The risk of loss is enormous. The only reason I am undertaking such a program is that the industry have asked for it and I agreed with their reasons. But let me point out again that I brought the matter to the cabinet just a few days ago.

[Translation]

Mr. Ian Watson (Laprairie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the minister and his department for the initiative he just took. Advisers seem to be saying that demand will come mainly from gold investors, and I believe that is true, but in view of the price I also believe that there is going to be rather considerable demand for that money as a piece of jewelry or a Christmas gift and so on. So I ask this. I just received from my colleague a picture of the coin in question and it seems to me the reverse with the maple leaf looks a little too commercial—fine gold one ounce. That looks commercial and I am wondering whether it would not be preferable to have only a maple leaf instead of that writing which does look commercial. It is a suggestion.

Mr. De Bané: Not being an expert, Mr. Speaker, I would of course be happy to convey the learned observations and technique preferences of the hon. member to the board of directors fo the Royal Canadian Mint.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This concludes the questions to the Minister of Supply and Services.

MAIN ESTIMATES, 1979-80

REFERENCE OF ITEMS TO STANDING COMMITTEES

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move a motion pursuant to Standing Orders 58(14) and 59. I might say at the outset that the motion is rather lengthy. It refers the estimates to several standing committees. Copies of the motion have been distributed to hon. members opposite and I believe there is an agreement that it will not be necessary to read the whole motion. If there is consent, could we take it as read, Mr. Speaker?

● (1250)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that the motion of the minister be taken as read?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): And printed.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: The motion is the following:]

That the Estimates, 1979-80, tabled Monday, February 19, 1979, be referred to the several Standing Committees of the House as follows:

To the Standing Committee on Agriculture:

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Roger Young (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 32, 776, 1,037, 1,038, 1,039 and 1,117.

[Text]

PROFESSIONAL SERVICES

Question No. 32—Mr. Orlikow:

1. For the fiscal year 1976-77, what contracts for professional services were let for studies, surveys and analyses into (a) present or future policies, programmes or information analysis and their efficiency and effectiveness (b) the examination of the administration or internal operation of the Prime Minister's Office?

2. How much was committed on each contract and to whom?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): 1. (a) None. (b) None.

2. Not applicable.

POLICY ON USE OF VEHICLES

Question No. 776—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Does the government have a policy on the use of government and armed services vehicles for personal or recreational use and, if so, what is it?

2. (a) With which department or armed service base is the car with Canada licence 19214 registered (b) is this vehicle assigned to one person and (i) if so, to whom (ii) if not, what procedures are followed for controlling use of the vehicle?

3. Was this vehicle signed out on October 13, 1978 and, if so, to whom and for what reason?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Supply and Services and National Defence as follows:

1. Yes. The policy on personal use of government motor vehicles is detailed in the publication entitled "Policy and Standards on Motor Vehicles", issued under Treasury Board circular 1976-27.

Significant policy points are as follows:

(a) Use of a government vehicle for essential private purposes may be authorized if tied in with government business or in remote areas.

(b) If in the interest of the government, limited private use may be authorized, normally for such purposes as economy of safe custody.

(c) Exceptional private use of a government vehicle must be authorized in writing by the minister or deputy head of the department or agency involved.

The use of armed services vehicles in support of authorized recreational activities is also permitted.

2. (a) Canadian Forces Base Penhold.

(b) No.

(i) Not applicable.

(ii) Its use is controlled by the base transport officer.

3. Yes. The vehicle was signed out to 743 communication squadron, CFB Penhold who were participating in exercise Pen North XI in the Valleyfield, Alberta area. The vehicle during the day in question was despatched to Valleyfield, Alberta for a supply run.

PRIVY COUNCIL OFFICE

Question No. 1,037—Mr. Cossitt:

What was the entire cost of maintaining all aspects of the Privy Council Office for each of the past six years and what was the total cost for these years?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): The information requested is available in the Public Accounts of Canada.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS OFFICE

Question No. 1,038—Mr. Cossitt:

What was the entire cost of maintaining all aspects of the Federal-Provincial Relations Office from the date it came into existence?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): The information requested is available in the Public Accounts of Canada.

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

Question No. 1,039—Mr. Cossitt:

What was the entire cost of maintaining all aspects of the Prime Minister's Office for each of the past six years and what was the total cost for these years?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): The information requested is available in the Public Accounts of Canada.

CIDA—AID TO ALGERIA

Question No. 1,117—Mr. Roche:

Did CIDA recently sign an aid agreement with Algeria and, if so (a) in what amount (b) for what projects (c) with what kind of control and monitoring of the expenditure?

Mr. Louis Duclos (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): No.

[English]

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The questions enumerated by the hon. parliamentary secretary have been answered today. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

MR. WHITEWAY—DELAY IN ANSWERING QUESTION NO. 580

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I want to bring to the attention of the House and to the attention of the appropriate minister the fact that question No. 580, standing on the order paper in my name since November 16, has yet to be answered. I raised this matter two weeks ago and the answer I received from the parliamentary secretary on February 9 as reported at page 3071 of Hansard, is as follows:

Mr. Speaker, I believe that it is not true that the minister will not allow this question to be answered. The question will be answered correctly, but it is not quite as simple as the hon. member indicates.

Then he said, and this is the operative part:

I will look into the matter to make sure that the question is answered.

I then asked him "when", to which he did not reply. The government has still not said when it will answer, as indicated by the fact that it has yet to answer question No. 580.

My question is one of some importance in that it has to do with the unity information office. On November 10, 1978, the then minister of federal-provincial relations answered a question in the House, and that answer is to be found at page 1011 of Hansard for that date. It relates in part to the same information. My question is simply supplementary to that question, but requires more detail. I would like to know why it is that the minister could give that answer, yet some three months later has failed to answer the detailed question I have on the order paper.

I just wanted to bring to the attention of the government that this important question relating to the cost and the number of periodicals or publications of that propaganda office, more commonly known as the unity information office, has not been answered and the Canadian people still do not have that information regarding the expenditures of the government for its own propaganda purposes.

Mr. Paproski: There is nobody there to answer.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There does not seem to be any comment. I would take it that the hon. member has made his point or grievance which eventually will be noted.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

The House resumed from Wednesday, February 21, consideration of the motion of Mr. Ouellet that Bill C-29, to amend the National Housing Act and the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act and to make other related amendments, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, when I was interrupted the other day at six o'clock I was explaining that Canadians, by any standard, are among the best housed people in the world, and that this was not only conjecture, it was the fact. This fact has been confirmed recently, as I was explaining to the House, by a Gallup poll taken across Canada last October. It showed that more than 85 per cent of Canadians were satisfied with their housing. Even in the Atlantic region where economic problems are more severe, more than 78 per cent of the people indicated satisfaction with their housing. The question asked of Canadians at the time was: "Are you satisfied, dissatisfied, or have no opinion about your housing situation?"

It was very interesting to note that this satisfactory response was given consistently by people of all ages, of all economic groups and in all parts of the country. Without question, the majority of Canadians are satisfied with their housing.

It is particularly reassuring, as I was indicating in my earlier remarks, that the degree of satisfaction has grown during the course of the last ten years. When a similar Gallup poll was conducted ten years ago the degree of satisfaction was only around 60 per cent and it is now over 85 per cent. The degree of dissatisfaction expressed at that time was 34 per cent, and this has now declined to 13 per cent.

One of the main reasons why people are satisfied with their housing is that an ever increasing proportion of this production consists of good quality housing of relatively small size which middle income families can afford. With our Assisted Home

Ownership Program and our rental housing program, we have managed during the last few years to decrease the production of highly priced homes and to increase that of accommodation which meets the need of the average Canadian family. From the inception of those two programs, from 1973 to 1977, 240,000 good units have been built at reasonable prices. The success of those programs not only helped a quarter of a million families to get good housing but also helped stabilize the prices of new and older dwellings. In fact, in 1977, the price of new housing units increased by 3.3 per cent only while the personal available income increased by almost 9 per cent.

Not only did we produce a larger number of housing units, Mr. Speaker, but we also improved on the quality of these units. Whereas in the early 1950s, 52 per cent of homes did not have central heating or electricity, this percentage has now fallen to less than 10 per cent. The percentage of homes without running water, hot or cold, was 43 per cent of all existing homes 25 years ago and is now down to 4 per cent only. The situation keeps on improving rapidly. Meanwhile, through our rehabilitation program, we have spent some $225 million to repair more that 50,000 units located in urban and rural areas, in order that they meet acceptable sanitary and security standards and that their usefulness be extended for another 15 years.

All those policies have been launched, needless to say by officials of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Obviously these directives come from the management of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

Before the House takes recess for one hour, I would like to draw the attention of the House and of Mr. Speaker to the presence in the gallery of the Speaker of the five members of the private sector who sit on the board of directors of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation: Mr. McGloan, a lawyer from Saint John, New Brunswick; Mr. Jacques Plante, a businessman from Quebec city; Mr. Conrad Pinette, a businessman from Williams Lake, British Columbia; and, a noticeable fact of which I am proud, two most competent ladies: Mrs. Christine McKee, an urbanist at the University of Winnipeg and Mrs. Sylvia Sutherland, a journalist and member of civil organizations in Peterborough, Ontario.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If I did not interrupt the minister it is certainly not because he was not out of order. It will be understood that hon. members who rise in the House cannot be permitted to identify people sitting in the galleries; this is allowed only in special cases for official government representatives. In any case, it being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until 2 p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

• (1400)

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, this is my third contribution in this debate in support of the bill before this House. Obviously, our rules do not allow a member to speak three times at the same stages of a debate, but the public and the members of this House will understand that, on the two previous occasions, I have been interrupted by the adjournment of the House.

When we adjourned at lunch time, Mr. Speaker, I was referring to the many reasons why 85 per cent of Canadians are satisfied with housing policies in Canada. This morning, I explained with a series of figures, the reasons why they are satisfied and those figures show outstanding progress as concerns the building of housing units for low-wage earners and senior citizens who need adequate housing.

Mr. Speaker, the figures I quoted this morning are important because they give the exact picture of the housing situation in Canada. They clearly show, I think, that in most cases, Canadians are living in relatively high quality housing. I am not suggesting, Mr. Speaker, that such a high quality was reached only through the efforts of the federal government. Obviously, private builders and private financial institutions have played an essential role, as did other government levels. Mr. Speaker, I will unhesitatingly say that it would have been impossible to reach such a high level of performance without the help of the National Housing Act and programs and policies administered by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation which is an agency of the Canadian government responsible for housing and community planning.

More than half of Canadian householders own their houses. And out of this number, half do not have mortgage debts nor is it necessary that they have any as the Progressive Conservative proposal made by the Leader of the Opposition would have them in order to benefit from this reactionary mortgage tax credit.

Mr. Speaker, I do not claim that we should rest on our laurels and be complacent about the housing situation in Canada. Obviously there is room for improvement. But as we now meet the needs of most Canadians as far as housing is concerned it becomes increasingly urgent to direct our efforts and resources toward the minority of Canadians who cannot provide for their own needs and who do not find help in the existing programs.

In this regard, the recent Gallup poll asked Canadians whether they were satisfied with the present housing situation in Canada. It is very interesting to analyse the motives of the few who declared themselves dissatisfied. As I was saying previously, this poll taken at the end of 1978, showed that 85 per cent of the people were satisfied and only 13 per cent were dissatisfied with the housing situation in Canada.

A breakdown of this 13 per cent of dissatisfied people shows that the major problem is high cost and—

● (1410)

[English]

I have some statistics that I would like to give to hon. members. Out of the 13 per cent who declared they were dissatisfied with housing, 17 per cent said their living accommodation was too small, that there was not enough space, that the kitchens were too small and there were not enough bedrooms; 8 per cent who were living in rental accommodation said they would prefer to live in houses of their own; a big chunk of the dissatisfied, representing 33 per cent of the 13 per cent of Canadians not satisfied with their housing, said that their housing was too expensive or hard to heat; 9 per cent complained of rundown accommodation, the need for repairs, inadequate plumbing and so forth, and 10 per cent said they felt they were living in an unsuitable neighbourhood. All this dissatisfaction must be looked into.

We are not without housing problems, Mr. Speaker. It is certainly clear that many Canadians are not well housed. It is an urgent concern of the federal government that our efforts and resources be directed to improving living conditions for those people who cannot provide for themselves.

Federal housing policies and programs have always been developed in response to the need that prevails at any given time. As market and economic conditions change, as the wants, needs and even the tastes of the Canadian people change, so does the federal approach to housing. In order to respond realistically to change CMHC must continue to fill a useful and effective role as a national housing agency.

We know that in metropolitan Canada about 155,000 households have inadequate or unsuitable dwellings and cannot afford better accommodation without spending over 30 per cent of their income to obtain it. Of these households only about 73,000 live in dwellings that could be improved; the rest would have to move in order to have adequate shelter.

In addition, about 283,000 households pay more than 30 per cent of their income for suitable and adequate shelter. Most of these people live in the older, central areas of cities and towns. In many cases these areas extend outward from the city core along railway tracks, are near airports or are mixed with or adjacent to industrial areas. In these central neighbourhoods housing stock is usually of poor quality while the level of community services is consistently inadequate. These problems are well known and obviously they are known to the opposition.

[Translation]

When we made this report public, showing that there are over 150,000 families living in unsatisfactory housing in Canada, the Progressive Conservative critic on housing cried shame. Here is what Professor Lawrence Smith said in an interview over the CTV network on Canada AM about the indignation of the Progressive Conservative critic on housing matters. Professor Smith was interviewed by the commentator Norm Perry.

[English]

Part of Mr. Perry's interview with Lawrence Smith, who is a professor at Toronto University, went as follows:

—Jean Pigott, the Conservative MP, she made public a report by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and she quotes from that report and she says, "Look, according to this report, CMHC says 150,000 households in this country are in inadequate housing." Now, that sounds pretty frightening. Is she right?

SMITH: —well, I would look at it just the opposite. I can't say that the number is wrong, but I wouldn't think that's frightening at all. I would think that that's a great endorsement of the housing policy and the housing industry. Because there's about 7¾ million households in Canada, so what that says is that there's two per cent, or just under two per cent of the households that are in inadequate housing, and that's a phenomenal compliment to policy-makers over the years and the housing industry.

PERRY: —So that's really a taking out of context thing, then, isn't it? In other words, when you say 150,000 inadequate housing it sounds bad. You say it's only two per cent of the houses in this country, and it's pretty good.

SMITH: —That's right. It's about, oh, six or eight months' construction.

PERRY: —Okay. She also claims (and again she's quoting from CMHC) 438,000 households are spending more than 30 per cent of their income on housing, which suggests that houses are very expensive. Now, I don't think that's any surprise to anybody, but for 438,000 people to be spending more than 30 per cent of their income on housing, that sounds pretty scary.

● (1420)

Professor Smith replied:

Well, once again, you have to put all this in context. That comes out to only six per cent of the total households in the country, which then isn't a staggering amount. Second of all, you have to look at who it is that's spending this. For example, if a young family buys—stretches and buys a house and they end up spending 30 or 35 per cent of their income in the first year or two because they expect their incomes are going to rise, and five or 10 years later it will be down to 25 or 22 per cent, that's not scary at all. On the other hand, if it happens to be elderly or people on fixed incomes, where they have no hope of rising incomes and maybe will face rising housing costs, then there's a hardship problem for them.

But, again, the interpretation of this shouldn't be that there's problems in the housing industry. The interpretation of too high a proportion of income going to housing could well be that there are some families and households that have too low an income.

Mr. Speaker, there is a summary of what Professor Smith said in this television interview while commenting on the criticism passed by the Progressive Conservative opposition on housing in Canada. That is what I would have said myself. It is obvious, when one considers the whole housing situation in Canada, putting it back in its true perspective, that not only housing production at an acceptable level and at an acceptable cost must be taken into account, but also the financial capacity of those who live in those homes.

There is no housing crisis in Canada. There may have been at the beginning of this decade, in the early seventies, ten years ago, a hint of crisis, but the Trudeau government did a remarkable job during the last ten years to remedy this problem and solve in an outstanding way the deficiencies and difficulties which existed in the early seventies. Assuredly, the job is not finished. There are certainly adjustments to be made. There are certainly improvements to be made yet.

And precisely, Mr. Speaker, this bill that we are considering today deals with such matters in amending the National Housing Act, first, to increase the building of public housing by non-profit organizations, second, to encourage much larger investments by the private sector in the housing area, third, to extend to all of Canada the Housing Rehabilitation Assistance Program.

Fourth, to set up an efficient housing program for our people. Five, to encourage and support co-operative housing in Canada. Six, to offer the borrower with lesser means another option through mortgage with graduated payments. And seven, to provide a community services program that will help the provinces and the municipalities give better service to their people. Those, Mr. Speaker, are seven actual measures to be found in this bill and which are designed to help those who are poorly housed, and those who are most in need of assistance, namely our low-income workers and our older citizens.

Naturally, those measures provide for the construction of a larger number of housing units for the needy. But, on the other hand, there are also those who are paying too much for their housing. But in their case, and I say it again, theirs is not so much a problem of housing as one of income. For them, as hon. members know, I announced earlier this week, in a speech I made in Toronto, that there was another solution to their problem, which strikes me as infinitely more just than that proposed by the loyal opposition in this House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, commenting on this bill gives me an opportunity to draw a parallel between the approach taken by the Progressive Conservative party and that taken by the Liberal party of Canada as regards the housing issue. There are obviously many differences between us and the Progressive Conservative party. Once again, when it comes to solving the housing problem in Canada we can see that the Progressive Conservative party is the party of the rich and well off while the Liberal party is the one which cares about the average citizen and the working class in Canada.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: Like the luxury hotels of William Teron.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I see that I have just touched the nerves of Conservative party members in this House. They do not like it when we tell Canadians the truth and expose the fundamental difference that exists between the two parties in Canada.

An hon. Member: Vive la différence!

Mr. Ouellet: I did not intend to elaborate on this but because hon. members have objected and do not like what I am saying, I shall. On the one hand we have the Clark proposals, the deduction of municipal tax and mortgage interest payments from the taxable income of home owners. This scheme is too expensive. This country cannot afford such a scheme at this time. It is a scheme which is wasteful because it does not meet head on the housing problems of today. Above all, it is a scheme that is unfair because it is the redistribution of wealth to the rich of this country.

An hon. Member: What about Les Terrasses de la Chaudière?

Mr. Ouellet: They do not like it when we talk about their scheme because they are stuck with it—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ouellet: —unless, as they have done on numerous occasions, such as on the question of deficits and the sovereignty-association issue, they have flip-flopped. They might flip-flop on the Clark proposals for housing.

An. hon. Member: Like the four-fifths and the one-fifth?

Mr. Ouellet: Before they flip-flop on it, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that if the Conservative party scheme—which is a proposed scheme of full deductibility for mortgage interest and municipal tax—had been in effect in 1976, it would have cost Canada $2.1 billion in lost revenue. If we look at this scheme today it will cost much more.

An hon. Member: Not true.

Mr. Ouellet: And its cost will further increase as mortgage borrowing increases to take advantage of the scheme. The disadvantage of such a scheme is evident. It would cause the diversion of mortgage funds from new construction projects to refinance loans on existing properties, either to settle consumer debts or for purposes of sale. This would cause added pressure on mortgage interest rates and the availability of mortgage funds for new building purposes would be impaired.

• (1430)

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): No more Rideau Centre.

Mr. Ouellet: The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) has just gone on record as opposing the Rideau Centre.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. That project was announced before the last three general elections. I hope it will again be announced for completion. I can say that it will certainly have the support of our party. The only problem is that the minister has not announced anything.

Mr. Ouellet: Steady progress is being made on that project. The former mayor of Ottawa has been instrumental, along with the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), in putting forward this project. I am sure it will come to fruition in due course.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It will come to attrition.

Mr. Ouellet: It will be of great benefit to the citizens of Ottawa. It will be to the credit of the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier and other members of parliament who will be elected on the Liberal platform in the Ottawa region at the time of the next election.

Mr. Lawrence: The "Gauthier memorial centre".

Mr. Ouellet: To return to the bill, I was discussing and explaining the fundamental difference in approach between the Conservatives and the Liberals. I was saying that the Conservative scheme would be much too expensive, a waste of good taxpayers' money. While the present government has adopted a firm policy of restraint in government expenditures, this does not mean that it has closed off the possibilities of initiatives to serve employment purposes in an efficient way and which offer relief to people who are in difficult economic circumstances.

Our primary objection to the idea of deductibility is that it is wasteful and inefficient as an employment generator. Above all, it is unfair and regressive in its income distribution effects. To generate employment through the housing market, it is necessary only to stimulate the construction or repair of housing. Funds expended for these purposes put people to work. It is not necessary or efficient from an employment point of view to attach subsidies to the entire occupied housing starts at enormous expense.

On the other hand, if the purpose of deductibility is simply to offer relief to people who cannot afford to occupy housing, then there is no reason to exclude the entire tenant population and no reason to accord aid to home owners in a deliberately perverse manner which tends to increase the aid with the level of income of the beneficiary household.

Let me elaborate quickly on this. I just mentioned that if deductibility had been in effect in 1976, it would have cost $2.1 billion. Of this amount tenants, who constitute 38 per cent of households and who have lower income on average than home owners, will get nothing. Households making less than $5,000 income, who constituted 21 per cent of all households in 1976, would also get nothing. Those earning from $5,000 to $15,000, who made up almost half the population in 1976, would get just over one-third of the benefits. The remaining 31 per cent of households, those earning over $15,000, would receive two-thirds of the entire benefits.

An hon. Member: A Tory program.

Mr. Ouellet: Indeed a Tory program. It clearly differentiates the approach to housing of Liberals and Conservatives.

A further point has to do with the interprovincial impact on deductibility which tends to favour provinces which have high income and high home owner propensity. The evidence is that on mortgage interest deductibility, only Ontario and British Columbia will gain relatively in the sense that the benefit to their citizens would be higher than their relative share of the number of households. All of the other provinces will benefit less than their share.

It is very interesting to see that the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada, HUDAC, decided that they cannot endorse the proposals of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) unless certain conditions are included, conditions that obviously cannot be met. A Canadian Press report of February 20, 1979, stated:

> HUDAC said the resultant loss of tax revenue would have to be matched by cuts in government expenditures so that the government deficit would not be adversely affected as a result of the program.

It is impossible for the Conservatives to meet that point. Their scheme will only add substantially to the deficit of the Canadian government.

> It also wanted assurance that the supply and price of mortgage money would not be adversely affected and that the "cyclical instability of the industry would not be aggravated".

Indeed, the builders of Canada have every reason to be frightened by these tremendous effects on the cyclical instability of the industry that would be hurt by such measures.

It is also interesting to look at the report of a member of parliament who went to the United States along with other members of this House to study their system. The purpose of the discussions was to assess the merits of their fiscal system which permits the deductibillity of mortgage interest and real estate taxes in computing incomes. The hon. member for Westmount (Mr. Johnston) had this to report on his return to Canada:

> The deductibility feature certainly favours upper income earners, not only because of the progressive nature of the rate structure in the United States but also because home owners in 1976 had an average of $16,000 while renters had an average income of $7,400.
> The average price per home in the United States at the present time is approximately $61,000 and 63 per cent of U.S. housing is owner-occupied with a high of 69 per cent in some areas to a low in New York State of 47 per cent. It is important to note that in Canada in 1976, 63 per cent of all households were owned, which is identical with the U.S. experience and yet no mortgage interest or real estate taxes are deductible in this country.

● (1440)

So without such a beautiful scheme, our performance in Canada is very good, and we do not need regressive measures to complicate the situation.

The third matter reported by the hon. member for Westmount is the following:

> The recommendation of all government officials and all independent economists with whom we met was to the effect that a system of mortgage interest and real estate tax deductibility is to be avoided at all costs . . . The problem which they all recognized is that once incorporated in a fiscal system, the deduction is impossible to eliminate.

Then it creates all kinds of embarrassment. I have explained the so-called miracle solutions to housing problems offered by the official opposition. On the other hand, the Liberal government has come forward with the series of measures included in this bill to tackle head on some of our main housing problems.

Our approach has been discussed with and approved by the provinces. Our solutions are eagerly anticipated by municipalities, co-operative movements and various non-profit organizations in Canada. What we want to do is economically sound, fiscally responsible, relevant and 100 per cent socially just. I do not pretend that this bill will solve all problems, but there is no doubt that it will go a long way toward doing that.

I admit that the government will soon have to be concerned about the still large number of families which live in inadequate and unsuitable housing because they cannot afford satisfactory accommodation. We will have to consider the possibility of a more general kind of aid for people who have difficulty obtaining decent accommodation. This type of aid might be in the nature of shelter allowances. I recognize that this will require a very substantial commitment of government funds, and in a period of restraint such a scheme can hardly be implemented; but the reason I am talking about such a scheme today—while I recognize that funds are not presently available—is that I want to warn Canadians that there is a better way of solving housing problems in Canada than by adopting the proposal of the Leader of the Opposition, which would be detrimental.

There is no doubt that there is a better way of solving housing problems when money is available. It seems to me that the right direction has been taken by the governments of British Columbia and New Brunswick in the introduction of their shelter allowance programs for the elderly. Those programs assist the elderly with their rental payments, to the extent that those payments exceed 25 per cent of their incomes, and it is thus possible for those people to solve their housing problems better by choosing freely in the marketplace. I sincerely hope that in the near future and as soon as our economy permits we will adopt shelter allowance systems which will provide assistance to home owners and tenants alike through payment of tax credits for shelter expenditures exceeding a certain percentage of income.

Until then, the bill now under consideration will authorize the implementation of a new non-profit housing program which has been designed to increase the housing stock for low-income Canadians and eliminate many of the disadvantages of traditional federal-provincial housing programs.

I would like to take a few more minutes to outline this program, Mr. Speaker. First of all, it will operate through non-profit organizations, whether private church organizations, philanthropic clubs, unions or other similar organizations, or public organizations set up by municipal or provincial authorities.

These organizations, when they wish to build or buy low-cost rental housing, will be privately financed by banks, trust companies or credit unions recognized under the National Housing Act. To ensure that the organizations will be able to obtain easily such mortgage loans, the federal government will provide mortgage insurance under the provisions of the National Housing Act. This insurance will cover the whole value of these properties, not only in the case of the units to be built, but also in the case of existing housing to be purchased and repaired.

Everyone will be allowed to reside in these dwellings. Those with higher income will pay the rental rate necessary to make the project profitable. Those who cannot afford to pay the whole amount will pay a rent proportional to their income. Since many tenants will pay a lower rent than the viable economic rent, the residential projects will operate at a loss. These operational losses will be covered by a new system of federal grants which will provide a significantly higher contribution than the one previously provided through public housing programs.

I would now like to give a brief explanation of the mathematical methods used to set the amount of federal grants and rental rates. Firstly, under federal-provincial public housing programs, it is the provincial governments which set the rentals and administer the rental projects. This is not the responsibility of the federal government which has never set rentals and has no intention of doing so, either within the existing public housing programs or under the new non-profit housing program. Earlier this year and also at the end of 1978, it was falsely suggested that the federal government was gearing to increase rentals for tenants of public housing projects, which created some concern over the disastrous effect that such increases would have on low income families. As I said, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government does not set rentals and has no intention whatsoever to do so either in the public housing or in any other sector. Indeed, we could not increase or lower these rentals even if we wanted to, because we do not have the authority to do so, since this authority belongs primarily to municipal and provincial governments.

It is the provinces which set rentals, usually according to income-based scale. This scale varies greatly between provinces. In some, tenants pay a flat rate of 25 or 30 per cent, in others, the provincial government sets the percentage of income paid in rent. Also, the method of calculating household incomes and child benefits differs, as well as additional heating, electricity and parking costs.

Ever since 1970, the federal government has put out as guidelines for the provinces, rent scales which are based on what is considered as family income. Some provinces have made use of some of these guidelines, but not a single one of them is using them to their full potential. The rents thus proposed for housing units fully serviced, vary on the federal scale from 16.7 per cent in the case of the very low income people to 25 per cent for those with a slightly better income.

Hon. members are certainly aware of the fact that under the traditional programs of social housing, the federal government makes up jointly with the provinces for the operation deficits incurred when housing low-income people who are unable to pay commercial rates. The rent scales vary considerably from one province to the next, and so do the operation deficits. Therefore, the provinces which require their tenants to pay a smaller share of their income for rent, run up deficits which are generally greater than those which require them to pay higher rents.

In order to treat all provinces equally, the Canadian government routinely pays, as a form of grant, any amount, however small, shown either on the provincial rent scale or on the proposed federal scale. As this scale has not been adjusted since 1970, whereas incomes, even that of the most underprivileged, have increased considerably since then, a very high proportion of tenants are receiving allocations based on 25 per cent of their income.

Mr. Speaker, most Canadians spend at least that much of their income for housing and some, especially the low-income earners who provide for their own needs without the benefit of public housing programs, spend a much greater share of their income on housing. While discussing the content of the new non-profit housing program with my colleagues, the provincial housing ministers, last year, I pointed out that there would be some advantages if they could all agree to phase over a period of time a uniform rent scale across Canada based, for instance, on a fixed rate of 25 per cent of gross income.

The provinces undertook to look into the matter and have in fact met several times in the past months to discuss this. From what transpired from their last meeting, I understand that they were unable to agree on the matter and a general consensus is therefore out of the question. This will have a very simple consequence: existing provisions will continue to be applied and each province will continue to use the scale it deems appropriate. As in the past, the federal government will pay the lesser of either the grant based on its proposed scale for public housing or the grant based on the current provincial scale. In any case, the grants should never exceed the actual operating deficit.

As provided by the new non-profit housing program, the total federal subsidy, for a particular project, will be sufficient to bring the interest rate down to 2 per cent. It will be the responsibility of the particular province to pay the other required subsidies. If a province pays a contribution which is equal to that of the federal government, the subsequent subsidies will be paid on a 50-50 basis by both governments.

The formula proposed by the Government of Canada is no doubt quite significant and very interesting, Mr. Speaker. One of the major problems faced by a non-profit organization interested in building and operating public housing units, is the interest rate it will have to pay over the years on the capital borrowed for such a project. So the decision of the Government of Canada to use its subsidy to bring down the prevailing interest rate to a fixed rate of 2 per cent is a considerable progress. It could substantially assist non-profitable organization in building and developing a greater number of housing projects.

There is no doubt that it will help if we say to those non-profitable organizations: Do not worry about the high rate of interest you have to pay and which may go up over the years; no matter what it is, whether it be 8 per cent, 9 per cent, 10 per cent, 11 per cent, 12 per cent or even 14 per cent, I guarantee that for the duration of the project, until such time as you have reimbursed the capital, there is no doubt that we will grant you an annual subsidy to reduce that rate of interest, which may be 10 or 9 per cent, as I said, to 2 per cent. The difference between that 2 per cent and the 10 per cent or 11 per cent the market may be asking, you will receive each year in federal government grants.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that this proposal will be of considerable help, not only to the non-profitable organizations in the private sector, but also, and especially, to those in the provincial and municipal sectors. To my mind, this program is equitable from the point of view of the tenants of housing sponsored by non-profitable organizations as well as from that of both federal and provincial governments. It respects in every point the stand I have taken during consultations with the provinces and the long-term policy of the Canadian government with regard to cost-sharing housing programs set up through joint federal and provincial initiative.

All the obstacles to the integral implementation of such a program have, to my mind, been removed, and I am optimistic about the achievement of its ultimate goal, namely, the annual construction of 30,000 good housing units for those in greatest need. I could add, Mr. Speaker, that one of the main instruments in getting this new housing program under way will be the housing co-operatives that played such an important role in the last few years in giving many Canadians access to decent housing which they could not have had without their help. From the start, we were concerned about seeing to it that those co-operatives would have every opportunity to participate fully in the program, and that nothing in the administration of the program would run counter to the principles on which the co-operative movement is based.

I am pleased to announce, Mr. Speaker, that following very extensive discussions with the Canadian Co-operative Housing Foundation we have reached an agreement which will help us achieve our respective objectives concerning the administration of grants and the financial burden of the occupants. In addition to helping these housing co-operatives, we also want to open a new avenue to make housing available to low income individuals, and that is the rationale for another important principle contained in the bill. Indeed these amendments to the act will support and give more strength to our policy of relying as much as possible on private investment for housing construction and saving public funds for the kind of help only the government is able to offer.

Obviously, neither the federal government nor provincial governments have the resources required to meet all the needs in the area of housing in Canada. We believe the private sector has financial resources that we must utilize in a more useful way, precisely to channel private funds into the implementation of the housing program.

Mr. Speaker, my colleagues are no doubt aware that mortgage insurance under the NHA is the major tool to stimulate private investment in housing, protecting as it does the lender against losses. The legislation put forward extends the provisions of the mortgage insurance program in a number of important ways to promote private sector investments and reduce government expenditures, which indeed is in line with our policy of reducing the Canadian government deficit.

The legislation would amend mortgage insurance provisions under the National Housing Act to make graduated payment mortgages more popular in private sector lending circles. Such a loan technique is a normal development of house ownership and rental housing programs. It would enable borrowers to reduce their monthly payments during the first year of occupancy, with later stabilization in the remaining payment period. Although this type of loan might not be the universal solution to housing problems, where put to proper use by lenders and borrowers it could indeed be most useful, particularly in the case of young people who start in life with limited revenues, as most people in similar circumstances, but who have every reason to believe their financial resources will increase as they advance in life.

I am pleased to indicate this new mortgage tool is finding increasing acceptance among both borrowers and financial people. As stated in the latest CMHC report, the corporation had insured graduated payment mortgages covering some 5,000 units. The legislation further provides that where a borrower defaults on his payments under an insured graduated payment mortgage, the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation will retake the loan and proceed with quick settlement with the lender.

Of course the Tory housing critic feels our experience in house ownership programs met with difficulties. She referred to defaults and foreclosures.

Some members opposite have asked me in the House about the percentage of defaults. They underlined the fact that according to them, about 10 per cent of those who took advantage of the Assisted Home Owership Program had defaulted. They remind me, Mr. Speaker, of that individual who complaints that his glass is 10 per cent empty when he should rejoice that it is still 90 per cent full.

There is no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that the Government of Canada took some risks with its Assisted Home Ownership Program when it encouraged certain people whose income were rather low and whose chances of becoming home owners were perhaps somewhat remote. Of course the Government of Canada took some risks, just as it is prepared to do when it offers the graduated payment mortgage and states that in case of default it will assume the debt and proceed quickly to settle with the lender. But we are prepared to take some risks, because unlike the Conservatives who want policies for the benefit of the rich, we are prepared to implement policies which could endanger in some way the financial security of those transactions. We are prepared to take some risks for the benefit of middle income and even low-income people to allow them to take advantage, like any other Canadians, of the privilege and the opportunity to own their own house.

I do not hesitate to say that whatever criticisms the Progressive Conservative opposition may make on that issue and whatever percentage is involved, be it 2 per cent, 4 per cent, 5 per cent, or even 10 per cent, I prefer to let them play with those percentages concerning defaults and arrears. I am satisfied that we brought forward an outstanding program. Even though 10 per cent of those who benefited from those programs have failed to meet their payments, there are still another 90 per cent who did. We can be proud of that, because without this program 90 per cent of Canadians would not be home owners at present. We did not pass that motion.

In short, Mr. Speaker, I think that this bill will allow us, if it is adopted, to increase considerably the federal assistance to low-income people for the improvement of their housing. I heard the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mrs. Pigott) say that this assistance program to promote the purchase of houses was badly administered. By whom? Badly administered by that poor young couple who, some years ago, borrowed money in the hope of owning their house but who, for personal reasons, are no longer able to meet their payments, because they did not get the wage increase they expected to get, or because there was sickness in the family, or for any other personal reasons which prevented them from meeting their commitments. This has nothing to do with the Canadian government.

We said that we developed a program to promote home ownership and entered into an agreement with banking institutions so that they make funds available to Canadian borrowers while the Government of Canada granted subsidies to reduce the borrowing costs for new owners. If, unfortunately, some people could not take full advantage of the program, it is not our fault since we did not manage the program as the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mrs. Pigott) is suggesting.

We did not manage the program, we are only granting subsidies to reduce the cost for new owners. All we do is guarantee the loan made by the bank which normally, if we had not agreed to guarantee that loan, would not likely have loaned money to small or medium-income people. I think this attitude of the Progressive Conservative party which attacks such a fair and socially generous measure for small-income people to help them own their home shows clearly the true nature of that party in that they would never take a financial chance to help small-income people in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the bill before us will, of course, contribute to increase the number of housing units. It is one of the prime objectives of the government. Furthermore, we want also, through this bill, to facilitate the restoration of Canadian residences. How many Canadians are living in an older house, that is not as comfortable and adequate as it was 10, 15, 20 or 30 years ago. But how many Canadians want to stay on living in that house because their father or grandfather lived in it, because it is located in a small town or a district where they know many people, where they feel at home!

Under its Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program, the government has already spent millions of dollars to promote the rehabilitation of those residences. And we want to expand that program, because we believe that there is in Canada a large number of residences that are worth repairing and might be used for another 15, 20 or 30 years. It will be a cheaper way and probably a more humane way to answer the needs of those Canadian families who do not want a new house and choose to fill some holes or some cracks in the doors, the windows or the frame of their old house, who want to instal a new heating system and modernize their beautiful old house to make it more comfortable. And this bill, Mr. Speaker, specifically provides for a series of measures that will prompt the private sector to invest more in residential rehabilitation in Canada.

This bill will enable us not only to reach our goals in the housing field but also to obtain an even wider objective. It will enable the government to co-operate with other government levels so that all Canadians may live in a safe and pleasant environment. The community services program referred to in this bill is designed to carry out the second part of that commitment made by the Government of Canada which is to provide not only a good home for all Canadians, but also to give them a pleasant and secure environment. The federal aid to attain that objective will be provided so as to respect fully the levies made by municipal and provincial authorities to meet their needs and priorities and will remove most of the waste due to duplication of administrative procedures.

The community services program was discussed with the provincial minister concerned. It merges the federal assistance provided until now for neighbourhood improvements, water supply and sewage treatment facilities and for the construction of low rental and medium density housing. The federal government will continue, of course, to provide help in the form of direct grants for all those activities but it will extend from now on its assistance to a whole list of social, cultural and recreational services.

If I suggested extending the scope of the community services program it is because I realized that previous programs did not fully meet the needs of all Canadian municipalities and they needed precisely the flexibility required to allow them to have, if they so want, community and recreation centres, parks, ice rinks, child care centers, libraries, to allow them to improve their municipal buildings as a municipal investment and to build plants for conversion of garbage into energy power and carry out all capital works considered priorities by those municipalities.

The new program, Mr. Speaker, is in line with the concept of block financing that was agreed upon by the provincial ministers at our meeting in Edmonton in February. The program provides that the federal government funds will be used for cummunity services in accordance with the purpose of the program but they will be distributed according to provincial and municipal priorities. I want to say that the various projects will not have to be approved by the Government of Canada, as was the case previously for the neighbourhood improvement program or the municipal infrastructure program. We are withdrawing all public servants in charge of the implementation, the monitoring or the administration of those programs. Finally, we are taking out one level of government in the use of those programs. We believe it is not necessary to have three levels of government represented in the management and administration of those programs. We trust municipal and provincial authorities to take care of that program by themselves. And, of course, we believe this program will meet the true priorities of Canadian municipalities much more adequately.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to conclude my remarks by saying that in general this legislation is one of the important aspects of the Canadian government's position on housing in Canada. We can indeed be proud of our past accomplishments, but we want a better future still, because we are aware that there remain housing problems in Canada and that Canadian municipalities have major priorities which must be met. It is in this spirit of co-operation with provincial and municipal authorities as well as with public or private social housing agencies that the Canadian government wants to have a part in improving the production of Canadian homes, in a better environment, in all areas of our country.

I am not suggesting that this bill meets all the needs. As I have said, there is still progress to be made, and we will be able, in time, to meet other objectives, given the proper financial resources and to the extent, of course, of our financial capability.

Also, amendments to this bill may yet have to be brought in.

I do not pretend that we have solved everything. I have already received a few recommendations for amending certain minor aspects of the act, particularly with respect to the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program where private financing should be made easier to obtain in order to get better results from that program.

I know that the opposition parties will probably make proposals and introduce amendments to improve this bill. As for me, Mr. Speaker, and I say it now, any useful, constructive and worth-while proposal will be welcome and I am anxious to sit on that committee to deal with this bill clause by clause in order to analyse it even further and if necessary to amend it in the best interest of all Canadians.

To conclude, I wish to say that it is the result of lengthy discussions with the provincial authorities. I know that they approve of this bill and I urge hon. members to do the same.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not ask for a decision at this moment, but I wonder if I could alert the House to the fact that I have asked my friend, the Progressive Conservative House leader, whether there might be some possibility of his getting his friend, the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Siddon) to postpone his private member's discussion today so that we could continue this debate and let the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mrs. Pigott) have all the time she needs, and for the spokesmen for the other parties to make their statements today. It might be useful to have all four parties on record in the same Hansard. As I say, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) may be able to give me an answer now or later.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I shall certainly speak to the member who has a private member's bill but I do not think this is necessary, having regard to the continuing function of Hansard, to have the debate continued in that way. I am a little concerned about the kind of bargaining that my friend has just done in public. He came to me privately and asked if I would see whether I could arrange that, and I told him I would do my best. I do not really think it is the responsibility of opposition parties to make up for the fact that the minister perhaps went on a little long.

Mr. Ouellet: On that point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member said he felt I went on too long. I waited for almost an hour and one-half last Wednesday before starting to speak. The study of this bill was due to start at three o'clock, but I had to wait until almost 5.45 p.m. before starting to speak. I have since been interrupted twice because of adjournments. I think it is fair to say that I have done my best to deal with this bill as quickly as possible.

Mrs. Jean E. Pigott (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House are pleased to participate in second reading of this bill which embodies legislation to amend various sections of the National Housing Act. It is with great relief that I can finally rise in my place today on behalf of the thousands of municipalities in the provinces and the various third-sector groups who waited, some impatiently, for almost a year for this legislation to be debated and passed in this House. The minister has announced the various new programs four, five or six times—I have lost count.

Following release of the minister's new directions on housing last year, his attention, it would appear, has been on every direction except housing. He has either been preoccupied with planning an election that his leader is afraid to call or, as he stated this week in Toronto, he would prefer the value of the Canadian dollar to rise before doing anything except philosophize on housing problems. That includes the plight of 800,000 families who pay more than 25 per cent of their income for shelter. Everyone knows that if we waited for the Canadian dollar to rise under this government, our urban problems would multiply. A high priced dollar would make our exports more expensive, besides. Presumably his deputy minister would then have to peddle his grass huts internationally.

As I indicated earlier, it is almost a year since the minister announced his new direction. The government has deliberately contrived to schedule second reading of this bill at a time when municipalities are planning for funding following the termination of the old NIP program, and the non-profit and co-operative sectors have programs and prospects which have been unnecessarily delayed by this government's attempt to orchestrate quick passage of this bill without adequate examination and debate. But then again, careful examination and prudent lending are something that can be ignored particularly when luxury hotels are being financed with NHA money, or when the ministry directed CMHC to work on a system of patronage. The question is not so much the evolution of the policy of the lender of last resort but is a question of CMHC financing which resort. Mr. Speaker, we are not misled by this orchestration of a short time span on this bill. The minister has given a verbal commitment to the provinces that this legislation will be retroactive. He does not need to have quick passage and we intend to take as long as we can to debate this bill.

I should like to assure the Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) that our unqualified support could be extended, but now I cannot.

The House and the people of this nation should have an opportunity to review the history of the ministry. The minister took quite a few diversions in the last hour so I shall spend a little time on the Ministry of Urban Affairs. I believe what has happened to the ministry symbolizes the failure of this government to assume its catalytic role in the determination of a national urban strategy. From its proclamation in this parliament in June, 1971, its mandate has been unfilled.

This government, lacking in any real commitment or sustained responsibility in the urban environment, has finally played this ministry as a card in the constitutional shuffle. The minister was never more accurate than when he stated before an audience Monday that "federal housing policies and programs have always been developed in response to the needs that prevailed at any given time." What resulted from these changing responses, to any given time on which the urgent drove out the important, was considerable confusion as to what assistance was available, what assistance had been withdrawn, and what the implementation dates were that were constantly being revised.

I wonder, sometimes, whether the minister has ever gone to see the mess he has created in some of the regions of the country. In more cases than not, "urgent" meant "elections" or "empire reorganization". There was never any continuity and stability in program operation. This prompted one provincial official to state that Ottawa should get out of the numbers game and commit themselves to supporting longer-term principles and goals. He commented that the numbers can change or be reviewed every year, but the principles should remain.

The ministry was established to co-ordinate between federal agencies. It was to initiate policy proposal and evaluate both established federal policies affecting urban Canada, and proposals for change. It was to foster co-operative relationship in respect of urban affairs with the provinces and, through them, their municipalities, and with the public and private organizations. Certainly not least, it was to initiate, conduct, co-ordinate and recommend research related to urbanization.

It is interesting to note what transpired. In 1973 the government directed that a senior interdepartmental committee on urban affairs be established at the deputy minister level to co-ordinate government involvement in urban affairs. That committee, from all accounts, never met.

The policy research function of the ministry which is central to its mandate, hardly exists, if it exists at all. This led one former director general of the ministry to state publicly:

There is an irresistible presumption in the events of the past eight years that Trudeau rationalism, in so far as the urban policy field is concerned, has gone full circle, and we are back to politics as usual.

● (1530)

Indeed let us hope that the research people in the ministry can come up with some answers for the minister's new found concern for shelter allowances.

I have so many studies here. They are all the studies that have been done for mortgage interest deductibility. I have another one here for property tax. It is too bad. They were all ready to put in the budget, but the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) took them first.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Pigott: These studies are all from the minister's department. Some of them are from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien).

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I want to remind the hon. member that indeed a government which has—

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, that is debate. It is not a point of order. You cannot interrupt the speech of an hon. member like that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. In all fairness hon. members should allow the Chair to hear what the minister has to say, and I will make the decision based on his submission.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I will say it in French because it will be easier for me and I will be able to say it more directly. The hon. member speaks about studies made by my department. It is obvious that my department carried out a great number of studies and there is a basic difference between studies and a government decision. If this matter has been studied it was precisely to find out after the study that it was a bad solution to this problem.

[English]

Mrs. Pigott: Mr. Speaker, I have more on this one and I will come back to it.

If the minister would remove his people from working on the polls and surveys that should more properly be done by Mr. Goldfarb, he would produce those figures or numbers which he could not elaborate on on Monday. Perhaps I could read what the Citizen reported last night under the heading "Ad Hoc Largesse on Housing."

The federal Liberals are clearly stung by the popularity of the Tories' mortgage-interest deductibility plan. Nothing else can account for Urban Affairs Minister André Ouellet saying that the government hopes to introduce a tax credit for home owners and tenants—

This was not a bombshell from Ouellet. It was more like a puffball, full as it was of equivocation and pre-election resentment of Joe Clark's success with his scheme.

The Liberals will not get far by denouncing the Conservative deductibility plan as "expensive, unfair and wasteful," when the vast majority of Canadian home owners and aspiring home owners think it's the greatest thing since insulation.

Ouellet's pious venture into generalities about this form of housing subsidy falls flat when compared with the Tory idea for the simple reason that it will contribute little to revitalizing the important sectors of the economy that mortgage-interest deductibility will help.

That is what our plan is all about. It is to get this country back to work again.

The article goes on to say:

Furthermore, Ouellet's concept duplicates some of the programs already in existence at the provincial level—

They are always trying to steal provincial material. The article continues:

—and therefore looks like just a piece of ad hoc Liberal largesse in time for the electoral onslaught.

I have another article here. I think these are very good articles for the minister to hear. This is from the Journal for February 22, 1979. It appears in the editorial section under the heading Tax Credit 'concept'—Yes, Please, No Details":

'I'm not going to give you any figures. I'm talking about a concept and I'm not going to get bogged down in detail,' said André Ouellet, the federal urban affairs minister—

The article continues:

Mr. Ouellet was right about one thing. There was no need to get bogged down in detail because he was already bogged down in general. The 'concept' is just not airworthy, and it should be left on the ground where it belongs or, better still, buried.

In conclusion, the article reads:

Mr. Ouellet should stick to his vow about no details on his idea. Enough has already been heard.

An hon. Member: Well said.

Mrs. Pigott: Yes, it is well said.

One of the hallmarks of this ministry has been management by the revolving door.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Pigott: It seems that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) is interested in these articles. I have some for him too.

There have been four ministers and there has been a cavalry of directors and employees of the ministry who have resigned in frustration or who have been fired during the course of the numerous reorganizations under the minister's deputy minister. One thing is clear. Anyone may disagree with particular details about the workings of this ministry and may deliver their own judgment about its failure, but I am confident that no amount of manipulation can get around the stark conclusion that it has been politics as usual at the ministry and that our urban policies are unfulfilled. When leadership and a commitment to an over-all national urban policy were called for, the government failed to appreciate the complexities of modern municipal administration and the participatory requirements of our evolving democracy. The "just society" under this government was characterized by programs just too little, just too late, just too complicated, and damned expensive.

The way this minister worked out participatory democracy was characterized by these nocturnal news releases and government by the eleven o'clock news. A flurry of telexes—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Pigott: My remarks seem to be hurting the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Railton). There has been a flurry of telexes to provincial capitals after the fact, and informing rather than consulting provincial governments of federal intentions.

It is interesting to note that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has given at least several different reasons for disbanding the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs. One wonders to what extent the Auditor General's criteria of effectiveness, efficiency and economy affected the analysis and decision to disband this agency. It is most surprising that no studies that I am aware of regarding the basis of this decision have been made public. There is no word from this minister in all of his speeches about what is going to happen regarding the concerns for urban policy. But we will take care of that later, of course. It probably would not matter anyway considering the view of the assistant secretary of the urban analysis branch who is quoted as saying, "I'd hate to see an audit done on everything ordered by cabinet".

Regardless of this, Mr. Speaker, I think I speak for most members of the House and a number of persons and agencies outside government when I say we are waiting most anxiously for a summary of seven years' of work by our best urban experts at a cost of millions of dollars. I think it is important following the eventual transition of government to this party that we avoid any duplication of research projects. The minister has proposed various amendments to the National Housing Act that pertain to this government's new direction in low income and social housing.

Central Mortgage and Housing's 1977 capital budget approved by this government totalled $1.8 billion. Actual commitments for that year amounted to $1.3 billion due, in part, according to the annual report, to a lack of response to the social housing programs already in play. So it is not surprising that the programs have been revamped. In many respects the new low income housing programs are singular examples of meeting the growing backlog of need in this sector. It seems very strange the Liberals only quote figures when they go the way they want them to go, but never when we are on the winning side.

Mr. Cullen: It happens so seldom.

Mrs. Pigott: We have been doing very well. Do not worry. All you have to do is take a look at what is happening in the Toronto area.

There are an estimated 155,000 households in Canada with very serious housing problems, paying too much for substandard, crowded accommodation. An additional 438,000 are paying over 30 per cent for shelter. I am so glad the minister and I agree on these figures.

If we consider the normal expenditure ratio employed today, which is 25 per cent, that figure then balloons to 800,000 persons. However, it is revealing to note that one of the principal suggestions contained in a confidential study by the interdepartmental committee on social policy on shelter is that poor people living in public housing may soon have to pay 30 per cent. I hope that it does not make the minister uncomfortable to hear this so close to an election, but he must admit that it was a policy which was announced early last year and then quietly dropped in the summer. A lot of people have not forgotten.

The government makes a big deal out of the fact that it has met provincial requests to disentangle from overlapping administration procedures. Let me make it quite clear that it is only in those areas where principal funding has been shifted to the private sector that the federal government has withdrawn. I hope that many of the Liberal backbenchers who live in the province of Quebec will realize how unfair this is going to be. It will not affect the Montreal or Quebec city market, but it will definitely affect the rural areas.

In a single area where the federal government retained a capital commitment under section 40, provincial governments still view this as an intrusion into their jurisdiction. Moreover, to qualify for federal contributions, loans and insurance, provincial and municipal housing agents are required to expend enormous resources to provide the mountain of information still requested by Central Mortgage and Housing.

The specific instruments for achieving disentanglement, and hence the programs, would be federal and provincial master agreements which would be prepared and signed annually with each province. To date there is anything but unanimous agreement, and only three or four provinces have actually signed.

While recognition of the value of the third-sector groups is long overdue, it is imperative that management skills and training be provided and insured through an adequately funded community resource fund program. A national urban policy must be sensitive to the fundamental social ties that bind human communities together by placing a clear new emphasis upon restoration of a sense of community through the reinforcement and preservation of communities.

Neighbourhood and voluntary non-profit groups have made impressive efforts to renew their communities in many parts of this country. Despite lack of funds and at times a lack of support from outside the community, neighbourhood-based revitalized activities have shown great signs of progress and must be encouraged.

The federal government has failed to help strengthen and expand neighbourhood and voluntary group efforts at self-help. It has failed to encourage cities to grant neighbourhood and non-profit voluntary groups the opportunity to participate in planning and implementing community-oriented programs. It should begin to encourage cities more actively to use the knowledge and energy of neighbourhood volunteers and the expertise of neighbourhood group leaders and staff. From all appearances, it is evident that the government is still intent on subsidizing the housing unit when it would be more useful to explore the possibility of extending federal funds, particularly as regards senior citizens, to the provinces via the global funding formula for the purpose of subsidizing incomes on the British Columbia or New Brunswick model. I was grateful to hear the minister speak of both these models which are ways that we must go in the future with other programs such as these.

One thing was made clear this week when the minister philosophized about his shelter allowance scheme. He stated that if the dollar improved, if government revenues increase, and if everything else was just ideal, he would commit his government to a housing program to alleviate the present problem. What is clear, Mr. Speaker, is that housing is not a priority of this government and that urban planning is not a priority of this government.

As stated by Mr. Hellyer, who is a former Liberal cabinet minister and a member of the federal housing task force:

> If the federal government were really serious about housing costs it would move heaven and earth to assist municipalities, including the provision of cheap money for the installation of municipal services. But it proposes, instead, to concentrate on treating the symptoms rather than the disease. And that is the reason for the mushrooming bureaucracy and astronomical subsidies that have failed to do the job.

The Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program has been to a large extent one of the more innovative and successful programs administered by CMHC. The program has been applauded from all areas of the country. The government has recognized and responded to its biggest challenges. It was formerly extended only to those areas and neighbourhoods designated within a neighbourhood improvement program area; the NIP program. So what has this government done? First of all, the minister has announced publicly in this House and in committee that the program would now be universal, open to everyone. The Federation of Canadian Municipalities were moved to extend laurels to the minister for proposed changes which would enable this program to exist on a nationwide basis. However, this respected federation and the Canadian public succumbed to one of the biggest deceptions ever perpetrated by this government. In a confidential memo between the minister and the president of CMHC it is clear that the RRAP program is anything but universal.

I have here a memorandum addressed to the minister from Mr. R. V. Hession, the president of CMHC, the rationing of funds for the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program. I quote:

> I am writing in regard to the availability of funds under the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program. Since the announcement of December 12, 1978 about the proposed removal of statutory area constraints on the program, we have been receiving calls from the media and members of the public at large on this subject, and it is important that we know how best to respond.
> In 1978, we committed $82 million in urban NIP and special designated areas. Of this, $45 million was for rental RRAP, for which we will have no need for capital provisions in 1979. The other $37 million committed last year was for home owners.
> The 1979 capital budget is $56 million. We will need $37 million to maintain activity in the existing designated areas where work has already begun. A further $3 million will be needed to deal with areas already designated but where work has not started. This leaves $16 million of the 1979 budget for new initiatives. However, 68 areas have submitted final applications for designation under the 1978 rules. After the new law comes into effect, they will not need order in council designation, but they will warrant some priority attention. These 68 areas will require at least $7 million. Thus only $9 million for some 2,250 units remains for work under the terms of the new program criteria once the bill is passed. This is a fairly modest amount and we should avoid raising expectations which we cannot satisfy.
> You realize I am sure that neither the industry nor the municipal delivery system nor the present and projected RRAP budget permit the operation of a universal program in the specific sense that anyone, any day of the week can walk into a municipal office and be served. If people interpret universal to mean this, they are bound to be disappointed.

Mr. Ouellet: Read the next paragraph.

Mrs. Pigott: All right, I will read the whole thing.

> There can and should be a universal program in three senses, however:
> 1. any one of the over two million housing units in need of modernization aid should be able to secure a loan at reasonable interest insured under the National Housing Act;
> 2. based on the criteria already in place, these units and others should be able to receive federal grant assistance—
> 3. based on a phased program addressing the worst conditions first over a ten-year period, the 200,000-400,000 dwellings in need of serious upgrading and occupied by lower income people should be brought up to maintenance and occupancy standards—

Of course, that will be under our government so we will do it. I will read the last one:

> What it means in the briefest terms is that while a considerable number of people can take action in the near future, because their areas and homes are in bad shape, others will need to wait for a while. It also means that rehabilitation effort will continue to be concentrated in specified action areas as in the past, but as a matter of policy, not formal legislation.

An hon. Member: And not universal.

Mrs. Pigott: Don't you love those universal programs? In summary, then, in view of the minister's own figures that 25 per cent of the Canadian housing stock is over 20 years old and in light of his reduced—and unmentioned—budget of $56 million, I can only assume that this minister and this government live in a universe of their own. What is necessary is a long-term strategy combining housing needs, financial resorces, and the capabilities of government and industry in an effort to redress the inadequate housing policies of this government.

With respect to native people on reserves, total new construction to eliminate the present backlog and meet the next five-year needs is 23,000 units, while the total number of major renovations in the same period is 30,000 units. These requirements represent an annual construction rate of 4,500 new units compared with a recent average of approximately 2,400 units per year, and a need for approximately 6,000 major renovations per year compared with a recent rate of 1,800 units per year. During the debate my colleagues will comment much more on the great need for housing for Indians.

With all due respect to the minister, I realize he has very much on his mind while getting ready for the election. I think that is why he is in a hurry but, please, let us be realistic, and let us commit ourselves to a long-term strategy for renovation which in many ways would act as the cornerstone in any urban renewal project. We all realize it cannot be done overnight, but in committee we intend to discuss additional avenues open to the government to adopt such a strategy.

Finally, with regard to RRAP, I question why we should discriminate against the landlord when the success of this program has been that it has ensured a steady increase in the number of renovated units in some of our older neighbourhoods. More about that in the committee.

One of the remaining elements in the bill emphasizes new and expanded use of NHA mortgage insurance. In point of fact the aggregate maximum of loan insurance has been increased to $40 billion. In the committee we will want the minister to give us much more information on this clause.

AHOP has been dropped in favour of a graduated mortgage payment. The minister knows, and I know, that major lending institutions do not support this financing technique, and to gain this support the government proposes to implement a quick settlement package. In the words of one analyst, and I quote:

There are no longer any checks and balances; no rules for circumspection. The borrowers can borrow with hardly any money down. The lenders can lend with scant attention to risk. And CMHC can subsidize with magnanimous indifference.

On the one hand, we have the Minister of Finance who wants to continue to wrestle inflation to the ground and, on the other hand, we have the Minister of State for Urban Affairs phasing in a graduated mortgage payment based on future inflationary increases in prices and incomes. The minister is putting people in an incredible bind. Under this government that is all that has been achieved. The 1971 housing dollar is worth 48.2 cents.

The cost of housing has not even been addressed in this bill. That is very serious. This week the minister announced to an audience of Toronto home builders that he was increasing the maximum NHA lending price to $70,000. Imagine, $70,000! The mayor of Toronto spoke prior to the minister that day, and he indicated that under the old price-lending structure less than 10 per cent of the families in metro Toronto had incomes which would permit them to purchase new housing. The minister has lived in a vacuum somewhere. He criticizes our leader's mortgage interest deduction proposal, but he forgets that of the 67 per cent of the Canadian people who had incomes under $18,000 in 1976, only 5 per cent could borrow $25,000. The minister and his rich! He forgets. I am very eager to see what happens to the minister when he goes out to union halls and into poor districts and talks against our mortgage interest deductibility proposal.

Mr. Ouellet: I will.

Mrs. Pigott: On Wednesday Liberal candidates in Toronto begged the government to bring in a property tax deduction, remove tax from building supplies, or at least do something about ARPs and MURBs to relieve the rental situation. The minister did not do a thing. On whatever night it was the minister returned I overheard two Liberal backbenchers out in the lobby saying, "Ouellet just hammered nails in our coffins in the Toronto area."

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): You are a great carpenter.

Mrs. Pigott: Poor Toronto!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Pigott: Hon. members opposite should not quote figures given by the Minister of Finance. He has not yet in this session been right about a figure. He has never been right. I have some good studies too. I have one wonderful study entitled "The Mid-Term Implications of Mortgage Interest and Property Tax Deductions for the Government" by one of the learned people in our country. We said $1.6 million. This person is saying that at the end of the first year it would cost $63 million, $259 million the next, $684 million the next, and then $1.77 billion. The figures are getting better for us all the time. Those poor Liberals. Let them go to Ontario; I do not mind.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): What did they tell you when you were in Washington?

Mrs. Pigott: The minister is always talking about Mr. Smith. Mr. Smith went to Washington. Something happened to him there, too, but we went to Washington, and it was just great. Every economist and every revenue fellow said, "Don't do it, but—"

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): "Don't do it".

Mrs. Pigott: No, they did not say that. They told me that the American dream is to own your own home, no matter what bracket you are in.

Mr. Rae: You said that.

Mrs. Pigott: Just a second. Marjorie Nichols, the politicians, and all the economists said it too. The hon. member can go anywhere in this country asking what the Canadian dream is, and he will find that the Canadian dream is to own. The hon. member's party does not care. It does not recognize that. It just wants to give away. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner), with his big ranch, said that owning a home is a luxury.

Mr. Whiteway: It is a dream to own a house, and the nightmare is this government.

Mrs. Pigott: The Minister of Finance claimed some months ago that the money which was spent under the present government was spent to build houses and increase supply, not to create expectations and demand for higher prices. In fact, scarcities of serviced lots and high carrying costs due to zoning delays, combined with this government's own demand initiatives, have resulted in unparalleled housing inflation in the past four years. The average resale price for housing for the period—and this is the period of this government—from 1973 to 1977 increased by $21,000, or 67 per cent. The average cost of a new NHA single attached dwelling in that four-year period increased $16,600, or 39 per cent. As I indicated earlier, the net effect is that the purchasing power of the 1971 housing dollar—the dollar of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance—is less than 50 cents today.

This problem is compounded by the fact that residential construction activity is bound to decline if the current large inventory of newly constructed but unoccupied dwelling units is not absorbed. To compensate for this decline in residential building activity the minister has encouraged the home building industry to become actively involved in the new co-operative and non-profit form of housing. However, in a speech in Windsor late last year Mr. Robert Adamson of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation indicated that, and I quote:

While the new non-profit program promises to do a better job of bringing adequate accommodation—

AIR TRANSPORT

SUGGESTION AIR CANADA ROUTES BE GRANTED TO OTHER AIR LINES

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should take steps to end the near-monopoly of major national air routes by Air Canada and permit private airlines to compete on a more equitable basis with Air Canada, and, that permission should be granted to CP Air to extend its transcontinental service to Halifax.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to present this motion this afternoon and to discuss for a few moments the three portions of the motion in sequence.

This motion cites the failure by the government opposite to implement a competitive air transportation policy which would recognize the legitimate and rightful aspirations of our private airlines. Indeed, this motion indicts the government for its repeated refusal to pay more than lip service to the common sense principle that private sector airlines be allowed greater freedom to compete with Air Canada.

To be more specific, we in the Progressive Conservative party believe that privately financed airlines should be entitled to a much greater share of the air transportation business in Canada and that future growth mut be directed almost entirely toward these privately-owned enterprises.

At the outset I want to make it clear that the thrust of our argument should in no way be construed as a criticism of Air Canada. In fact in my own riding of Burnaby-Richmond-Delta, Air Canada personnel are very active, and I and many of my colleagues on this side of the House enjoy travelling with Air Canada personnel on a weekly basis for many hours. I know the local management of Air Canada in Vancouver, and we on this side of the House are extremely pleased with the senior management of Air Canada as represented by Mr.

Claude Taylor. Indeed, we could do well with more people like Claude Taylor in this government.

I single out CP Air in the first part of my motion because it is tremendously important to western Canada, but also because it has been identified, as a consequence of transcontinental air policies introduced in the mid-1960s, as the sole second transcontinental air carrier in this country.

CP Air pumps over $280 million annually into the economy of British Columbia and over $1 million of tax revenue into my constituency. It employs over 4,500 people there. By comparison, Air Canada employs 800 people in British Columbia, roughly speaking, and approximately 15,000 in and around the city of Montreal. So if we from the west tend to have some affinity for CP Air, I suppose we have a legitimate reason for it.

The thrust of this motion is not to advocate a reduction of Air Canada's services but rather to ask: should the regional and transcontinental air services in Canada be dominated by one large and centralized national airline? We have only to look at the crippling effects which strikes impose upon our air services to conclude that we should not allow a dominant role to be played by one large nationalized airline in providing air services in this country. The thrust of this motion is that CP Air and regional airlines should enjoy virtually 100 per cent of the future growth at least for the next few years.

I indicated that there were three parts to the motion, and I would like to speak to them in turn. The first section of the motion reads as follows:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should take steps to end the near-monopoly of major national air routes—

By that I mean the monopoly of transcontinental routes enjoyed by Air Canada. Indeed, I note that recently Mr. Claude Taylor told the press that Air Canada did not enjoy a monopoly. But under the transcontinental policy for the division of services between Air Canada and CP Air as set out in 1977, CP Air was granted only 25 per cent of transcontinental services and Air Canada was granted 75 per cent. If that is not a near-monopoly, I do not know what is.

I should like to read now from a press release put out by the Air Canada information services in September of 1978, a document which surprised me indeed because it sounded more political than factual. In fact there are a few games with numbers here, which surprise because my engineering and scientific background has taught me to trust numbers. But having sat in the House for some weeks and having heard the comments of my colleague, the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mrs. Pigott), and having witnessed the introduction of the estimates by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Buchanan) on Monday evening, I have to believe that numbers do not always tell the truth. There are many games that can be played with numbers, as all hon. members well know. I will read, from this press release issued in September of 1978, a statement relative to CP Air. It is entitled "Air Canada/CP Air Transcontinental Share" and it reads:

> —they haven't mounted the full capacity to which they were entitled under government regulations.
> In fact they haven't put up their allowable capacity in the past five years.

That is absolutely untrue. CP Air has produced approximately 95 per cent of their allowed capacity in terms of seat-mile service each year since 1975. So any suggestion that they have not put up their allowable capacity is patently untrue. No airline regulated by the Canadian Transport Commission would risk putting up 100 per cent of its capacity because if it put up one extra flight a week, it could well go over the allowed limit and thus contravene their operating licence.

Recently the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) has announced an increase to CP Air of some 35 per cent of the growth in transcontinental air traffic for 1978, and 45 per cent of the increase in 1979. That has allowed CP Air to enjoy slightly more of the pie. They now enjoy 27 per cent as opposed to 25 per cent.

I would like to read another portion of the same press release as follows:

> Taking only the two companies' major pairs of points, Air Canada currently provides about 60 per cent of the capacity while CP Air provides 40 per cent.

That too is a game with numbers, and it is patently untrue. The next statement reads that if all of Air Canada's services are added, they enjoy 77.5 per cent of the services. So it all depends on how you play with the numbers.

I would like to refer now to the final paragraph of this press release from Air Canada which states:

> It should be noted that CP Air picks and chooses the routes it will serve at a frequency giving maximum return.

This is an old chestnut. It is sometimes claimed that Air Canada must serve small traffic centres, while CP Air has been accused of not serving its share of the small traffic generating points in Canada compared with Air Canada. In fact the direct opposite is true. CP Air serves only eight of the top 20 cities in Canada versus Air Canada's 19 of the top 20 cities, and CP Air serves seven of the 45 smaller cities, versus Air Canada's service to only four of them. So of the smallest served, the least frequently served of the 85 airports in Canada, CP Air serves twice as many as does Air Canada. So much for the old chestnut.

Another statement from this presumably correct press release is the following:

> For example CP Air provides absolutely no service to Saskatchewan.

Indeed, they do not provide any service to Saskatchewan. They have never been asked to or invited to apply for a licence. In fact at present I understand the volume would not justify it.

I submit that CP Air is the only other transcontinental airline which should be allowed to provide at least 50 per cent of the transcontinental traffic in Canada in the future, and that increase should be gradually phased in over a reasonable period of time.

CP Air is ready to provide service to Halifax, which is the essence of the third portion of my motion, and is also interested in the possibility of providing competitive air service into Thunder Bay.

● (1610)

There is another statistic that might be very interesting to this House. Since 1955 CP Air has transferred 5,700 route miles to regional carriers in Canada, whereas on the other hand Air Canada has transferred only 1,600 route miles. Something is out of whack here, Mr. Speaker. The airline which enjoys prominence in Canada's transcontinental route gives up 1,600 miles, and the airline which enjoys only one-third as much traffic volume gives up more than three times that many route miles. I think something is rather unbalanced, and I believe that statistic to be true.

The second part of my motion states that:

—the government should take steps to . . . permit private airlines to compete on a more equitable basis with Air Canada—

Here I am referring to regional policy and third-level air transportation policies which we ought to have in this country. Indeed, in spite of the promises made in this House by the Minister of Transport five years ago, he has yet to set out a policy for third-level air carriers, and the policy relative to regional air service is old and outdated, having been introduced in 1966.

The regional air carriers in Canada are operating in a vacuum. What does the future hold in store for Transair, Pacific Western, Wardair, Great Lakes, Nordair, Quebecair and Eastern Provincial? What does the future hold in store for those airlines? The Minister of Transport is not telling them, and neither is the Canadian Transport Commission.

One thing is certain, and that is the following, the regionals called recently for an immediate review of government policy affecting the future of regional airlines. Something else these regional airlines have suggested is that transcontinental carriers give up some of their route miles to regional carriers on a responsible phase basis.

If you look at the statistics they suggest that CP Air has already given up three times as many route miles as Air Canada. Which should be the first airline to give up some route miles?

I note a headline in a February issue of the Globe and Mail with a picture of Claude Taylor beneath it, which states:

Air Canada president Claude Taylor believes that competition is a two-way street and warns that his airline will be a tough competitor.

That sounds good, but then we start picking up ads in different newspapers. Here is one that says "There's no better choice from Ottawa", and goes on to state:

If your business takes you west, take one of our business machines for the fastest, most frequent service.

Of course that is true because only Air Canada gives you one-stop through service each morning and evening to Vancouver. The ad goes on to state that only Air Canada gives you daily non-stop service to Calgary, and to Edmonton only Air Canada offers daily non-stops. To Winnipeg only Air Canada offers three daily non-stops.

Let us look at another recent advertisement with a picture of a large fleet of 20 DC9s flying from Ottawa to Toronto. The heading below the picture states "Up to 20 flights a day to and from Toronto". The ad itself goes on to state:

Flights every hour, every week-day, so it's easy to remember the schedule.

I am not attacking Air Canada. I am trying merely to point out here that the Toronto-Ottawa route should properly be viewed as a regional route, as should the Toronto to Montreal route. In fact on the Montreal-Toronto route Air Canada has 30 daily flights, CP has four, and other airlines offer four. On the Toronto-Ottawa flight on the daily "Rapidair" service Air Canada offers 20, once per hour, while other airlines offer four, and CP Air is allowed two. Something is very disproportionate here. This is not a transcontinental airline operation; this is a regional air service and ought rightly to be performed by a private sector airline.

We were all pleased to note that Air Canada is thinking of going private and, indeed, is about to pay or has recently paid its first return to the public purse, amounting to a 4 per cent return on the recent recapitalization of $330 million. I take Mr. Taylor at his word, and I think his record and performance as president of Air Canada have been outstanding, when he suggests the government might want to sell Air Canada. I submit that it should sell Air Canada immediately. It should sell the government's equity through recapitalization, that is, the $330 million used under the restructuring legislation approved by this House in the past year. I suggest that $330 million in capital equity ought to be sold to the private sector in the form of shares to let all Canadians have the chance to own a bigger piece of Air Canada at their discretion rather than by decree.

Finally, the third part of my motion recommends that permission be granted to CP Air to extend its transcontinental service to Halifax. In fact the minister responsible, the Minister of Transport, made a grandiose gesture last November to the effect that he had no objection to allowing the CTC to consider extending CP Air routes east of Montreal. This is very strange coming from the same minister who has delayed repeated requests from CP Air to have its applications received. Be that as it may, the minister has now condescended to receive the application from CP Air, but for the present CP Air is going through the monstrous task of filling out innumerable forms and filing innumerable affidavits in order to prepare itself to appear before the CTC to advance its cause. There again is an example of the problems which our private sector airlines have to contend with when they are dealing with transport regulations in this country—tedious, copious quantities of form filling and red tape.

Referring to the Halifax connection, as I understand it there is absolutely no potential conflict with services into Halifax provided by Eastern Provincial Airways out of Montreal. CP Air is applying for the right to serve Halifax from Toronto only, so it can, indeed, enjoy the title with Air Canada of a transcontinental airline, which means from one side of the continent to the other.

The petitions that CP Air has forwarded to the minister over many recent months have been supported by strong appeals from the chambers of commerce and the city council of Halifax. Indeed, there is no objection and, in fact, there is a strong desire on the part of locals in Halifax that this application be approved. Indeed, the people of Halifax were concerned during a recent Air Canada strike because they lost their service, and it is high time there was an alternative direct connection with Toronto.

In the long-term, CP Air envisages flights to Europe via Halifax. I believe the citizens of Halifax would welcome as long overdue the opportunity to fly to Europe without flying back to Montreal first.

Those are the three elements of my motion. I see I have about one minute left. I would just like to summarize by indicating that on this side of the House we believe that the Canadian Transport Commission has no clearcut regional air transportation policies, and the decisions it makes appear to be based on ad hoc guidelines. There are no specific operating guidelines. The onus seems to be on the applicants to devote tremendous time and cost to the preparation of copious forms and documents to support their applications.

We in the Progressive Conservative party when we form the government will undertake a program of controlled de-regulation. We do not advocate overnight de-regulation along the lines of the recent experiment in the United States, but when one looks to the success of that experiment one has to feel that perhaps there is a lot to be said for allowing much more competition among private sector airlines.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Savard (Verdun): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to reply to the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Siddon) who has moved a motion advocating greater competition for Air Canada. It has been moved that the government should take steps to end the near-monopoly of major national air routes by Air Canada; that private airlines should be permitted to compete on a more equitable basis with Air Canada, and, finally, that permission should be granted to CP Air to extend its transcontinental service to Halifax. I want to say, immediately, Mr. Speaker, that I consider the steps the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta has proposed the government take have merit. Indeed, they have such considerable merit that the government has already taken the very actions proposed by him.

As long ago as 1976, it was recognized that certain changes of the kind proposed in the first part of the member's motion could and should be made with respect to Air Canada's role. That is why the government prepared new legislation concerning Air Canada. On October 28, 1976 a new "act respecting the reorganization of Air Canada" was given first reading in this House. The Air Canada Act, 1977, was subsequently assented to on February 2, 1978. That legislation served, among other things, to put Air Canada on the same basis as other carriers in obtaining licence authority for new routes before the Canadian Transport Commission. Or, as the hon. member has expressed it, this act permitted private airlines to compete on a more equitable basis with Air Canada. I will explain this in some detail later.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I would like to challenge the allegation that Air Canada has a "near-monopoly of major national air routes". I believe that the facts suggest otherwise and I will present some in a few moments to show why. Finally, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member moved that permission be granted to CP Air to extend its transcontinental services to Halifax. In fact, on November 7, 1978, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) announced that the government has no objection to CP Air applying to the Canadian Transport Commission to operate into the Atlantic provinces, in conformity with the CTC's regulatory requirements.

I would like to examine the three parts of this motion in some detail, Mr. Speaker. I will begin with the first part of it: that the government should take steps to end the near-monopoly of major national air routes by Air Canada. I suggest that this part of the motion is more an allegation than a proposed action. It is an allegation that Air Canada does, in fact, have "a near-monopoly on major national air routes". I suggest that we should examine this allegation closely.

What is a "near-monopoly"? A monopoly is, literally, exclusive possession or control. So I suppose that a "near-monopoly" is exclusive possession or control of most, but not quite all, the major national air routes.

Next, we must try to determine what a "major national air route" is. There is no single accepted definition of a major national air route and I do not know what definition the hon. member may have in mind. I would therefore like to suggest three different ways in which "a major national air route" might be defined and to discuss these with reference to Air Canada's alleged monopoly of them.

One definition of a national air route—perhaps almost too facile a definition—is a route which stretches across the entire country, a route from sea to sea that links major cities on the east coast with major centres on the west coast. Let us look at a few examples of such routes to see just what kind of a monopoly Air Canada has. First, St. John's to Victoria: no carrier, of course, offers a direct flight between these two cities. It is necessary to make connections. Air Canada, as the national carrier, naturally provides a service between these two provincial capitals, connecting in Montreal or Toronto. But it is also possible to fly on Eastern Provincial Airways to Montreal—though, granted, not on a direct flight—and the rest of the way on CP Air. The same possibilities exist between Halifax and Vancouver.

Certain other east to west coast linkages are not, in fact, totally served by Air Canada. From, say, Charlottetown or Moncton to Prince Rupert or Kamloops, it is necessary to travel on carriers other than Air Canada part of the way. This is because Air Canada is not intended to serve all centres. Under Canadian air transportation policy, other carriers are intended to serve such centres. This means that Air Canada cannot possibly have a near-monopoly on all east to west coast routes. More will be said about the roles of Air Canada and the other carriers later.

A second way of defining "major national air routes" would be to look at those city pairs which generated the greatest numbers of passengers travelling between them. In 1977, the latest year for which complete figures are available, the following city-pairs, in the order of their ranking, experienced the highest traffic volumes: Montreal-Toronto, Ottawa-Toronto, Calgary-Edmonton, Toronto-Vancouver, Calgary-Vancouver, Edmonton-Vancouver, Toronto-Winnipeg, Calgary-Toronto, Halifax-Toronto and Edmonton-Toronto.

I would like to examine each of these high traffic routes to see whether they are served by other scheduled air carriers or whether Air Canada has a monopolistic grip on the most highly travelled routes. First, Montreal-Toronto: this route is served by CP Air, Air Canada and Nordair. Second, Ottawa-Toronto: served by CP Air, Air Canada, Nordair, Great Lakes Airlines and Otonabee Airways. Third, Calgary-Edmonton: served only by PWA. Fourth, Toronto-Vancouver: served by CP Air and Air Canada directly and by Transair and PWA on an indirect service. Fifth, Calgary-Vancouver: served by CP Air, Air Canada and PWA. Sixth, Edmonton-Vancouver: similarly served by CP Air, Air Canada and PWA. Seventh, Toronto-Winnipeg: served by Air Canada and Nordair. Eighth, Calgary-Toronto: served directly by CP Air and Air Canada, and by Transair and Nordair on an indirect service.

Ninth, Halifax-Toronto: served by Air Canada at present, but both CP Air and EPA have expressed interest in serving this route. And, as I mentioned earlier, the Minister of Transport has specifically announced that the government would have no objection to CP Air applying to the Canadian Transport Commission to operate into the Atlantic provinces.

Tenth, Edmonton-Toronto: like Calgary-Toronto, served directly by CP Air and Air Canada, and by Transair and Nordair on an indirect service.

● (1630)

Mr. Speaker, I have just described the scheduled air services available on the ten most travelled air routes in the country. On nine of those routes Air Canada has at least one competitor. On the tenth, Toronto-Halifax, there is a good possibility that Air Canada will soon have competition. I ask: is this evidence that Air Canada has a near-monopolistic grip on major routes in this country?

If some members of this House remain unconvinced that Air Canada does not have competition on "major national air routes", let me cite a third way of defining such routes. This definition is in terms of route length. Those routes which it is most appropriate that the national carriers—Air Canada and CP Air—serve are obviously the long-haul and medium-haul routes, say, all those over 500 miles, as measured by great circle mileages. Although I might mention, parenthetically, that under Canadian air transportation policy, the regional air carriers have been given authority for certain long-haul routes, notably in the north.

I would like to cite a random selection of medium and long-haul routes, excluding those I have already mentioned, and to indicate, as I just did for the most travelled routes, which carriers serve these routes.

First, Gander-Halifax; 506 great circle miles: served by Air Canada and EPA.

Second, Montreal-Windsor; 509 great circle miles: served by Air Canada and Nordair.

Third, Edmonton-Winnipeg; 738 great circle miles: served by Air Canada and Transair.

Fourth, Wabush-Montreal; 600 great circle miles: served by Québecair.

Fifth, Yellowknife-Edmonton; 633 great circle miles: served by PWA.

I could continue with examples, Mr. Speaker, but I believe the point is made once again. On what might logically be defined as "major national air routes", Air Canada simply does not have a monopoly—or a near-monopoly. It has competition.

Mr. Speaker, having pointed out that Air Canada does have competition on major national air routes, I would like to provide some background concerning Air Canada and its evolving role and the evolving nature of the air transportation industry in general. I believe that this background may provide some explanation as to why the hon. member felt that Air Canada has a near-monopoly position on major air routes. Certainly this was the case at one time but, as I am going to explain, there were valid reasons for this situation.

Air Canada was, of course, originally known as Trans-Canada Airlines and incorporated under the Trans-Canada Airlines Act, passed in 1937. Trans-Canada Airlines was established as a Crown corporation specifically to serve as the national air carrier—a leader, a pioneer and developer in making air services available across the country. TCA was also to provide efficient services without a government subsidy.

The history of TCA—which became Air Canada in 1965—has been one of almost continuous growth. In 1939, TCA linked Vancouver and Montreal for the first time with a scheduled passenger air service, using small Lockheeds. The next year, it extended its budding transcontinental services to Moncton. In 1941, it achieved sea to sea service with the start of flights to Halifax. After the war, TCA continued its development of domestic services as well as transborder and international services. In the 1950s, it had acquired the Super Constellation, seating 75 passengers and in 1955 became the first North American airline to introduce the comfort and speed of propeller turbine aircraft when the first of 51 British-built Vickers Viscounts was introduced on Canadian routes. In 1960, Air Canada introduced the commercial jet age to Canada when it started using the DC-8 from Vancouver to Montreal.

During the 1960s, Air Canada retired many of its early piston-engine aircraft and became the first airline in North America with an all-turbine fleet. In 1971, Air Canada introduced the first wide-body jet on its routes, the Boeing 747.

I have mentioned these vignettes of Air Canada's history in order to convey a sense of how it has changed in the forty years since it was established. At the same time, the entire Canadian air transportation industry has evolved as well.

After a study in the late 1950s by a British transport expert, Mr. Stephen Wheatcroft, competition was allowed on certain routes. But in a policy statement in 1964, the then Minister of Transport, Mr. Pickersgill, stated that:

> In the domestic mainline field, while the principle of competition is not rejected, any development of competition should not compromise or seriously injure the economic viability of TCA's main line domestic operations which represent the essential framework of its network of domestic services. In other words, there must not be the kind of competition which would put TCA into the red; and, in the event that competition continues, the air transport board should ensure an opportunity for growth to both lines above this basic minimum.

These words may sound unnecessarily cautious, but I think that we should remember that, if one airline can handle the available business—as Air Canada was generally doing—and another carrier is introduced in order to provide competition, it follows that the profits of the original carrier will decline. Indeed, profits would decline sufficiently to "put TCA into the red", as Mr. Pickersgill mentioned.

The mid-1960s were a time of substantial change in the Canadian air carrier industry. During this period, the regional air carriers started to become an increasingly important force within the aviation industry. In 1966, this role was clarified in a policy statement by the Minister of Transport, who stated that:

> The role of regional carriers is to operate regional routes to supplement the domestic mainline operations of Air Canada and CPA and to provide regular and scheduled service into the north. They will not become directly competitive on any substantial scale with the two mainline carriers. Routes which because of volume of traffic, size of airports and related facilities, or suitable type of aircraft, do not fit the type of mainline operations of Air Canada or CPA will be reserved for regional carriers or, in some cases, may be transferred to them. The principal deciding factor should be the nature of the route. The Air Transport Board will be responsible for determining what routes are suitable for the regional carriers. Regional carriers will be expected to operate on a regional basis and will not be authorized to expand as potential transcontinental carriers. While rigid definition of boundaries for any one regional carrier is neither practical nor desirable, the main operations of each carrier will be carried on in one region.
> Economic and efficient operation of a regional route pattern may in some cases involve competition with Air Canada or CPA on a mainline route segment. In such cases, the regional carriers can be authorized to be operated in competition with Air Canada or CPA.

[Mr. Savard.]

I would now like to refer to the second part of the hon. member's motion, in which he asked that private airlines be permitted to compete on a more equitable basis with Air Canada. It is correct that, at one time, other carriers were not on quite the same footing as Air Canada. This is because Air Canada's behaviour was governed by the Air Canada contract with the federal government. By virtue of this contract, pursuant to section 14 of the Air Canada Act, Air Canada provided domestic service outside the Canadian Transport Commission normal regulatory powers.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

[English]

Mr. Ellis: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I realize this is an indulgence. The hon. member made a list of things and there was one that did not come through to me very clearly. I wonder if I could have that information.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): This could be granted with the unanimous consent of the House, since the hon. member has taken his 20 minutes.

Mr. Lachance: On that point of order, Mr. Speaker, if I understood the hon. member, he did not specify what sentence he was referring to, and I suggest the hon. member who just spoke could give a copy of his speech to the hon. member opposite.

● (1640)

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, if there are other members who are anxious to speak in this debate, I assure them that my remarks will be very brief. In other words, there will be time for others before five o'clock.

Let me say it comes as no surprise to me when a member of the Progressive Conservative party wants to expand the role of private enterprise in our airlines system, and in so doing to cut down on the role of the publicly owned line known as Air Canada. That is in keeping with the philosophy of that party, and it is to be expected that that point of view would be presented by them in this House.

As a matter of fact it was when the present member for Prince Edward-Hasting (Mr. Hees) was the minister of transport that, for the first time, a line other than Trans-Canada Airlines, as it was known then, was given rights on the transcontinental route. So the proposal being put forward today is simply an extension of Conservative philosophy. However, I must say that I feel quite disturbed and unhappy when I hear a spokesman from the Liberal side of the House say that there is merit in this motion and that there is much in it that the government is already doing.

I am even more disturbed when I read in newspapers and when I hear the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Siddon) quote a statement made by Mr. Claude Taylor, president of Air Canada, that maybe the time has come to sell off the publicly-owned airline.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I trust that some way or another, and I will see to it right now, that the applause in response to what I said was not applause for me; it was Tory applause, for the idea that Air Canada should be sold. We, in this party, are thoroughly opposed to that. The reason I decided to take a few moments during this hour is to make my plea to the members of the Liberal party not to go Tory, not to go back on what they have done in building up a national airline in Canada.

Mr. Ellis: With Bryce Mackasey in charge?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I realize that my friend hits me at a weak point when he mentions Bryce Mackasey. But he has not stayed in any job very long, so let us not worry too much about that.

Members are used to my getting into debates and reciting ancient history, but it is usually in my favourite field of pensions that I do this. But there was some other ancient history going through my mind this afternoon. My friend from across the way referred to the organization of Trans-Canada Airlines in 1937—that was before I was here in this House—but in the middle 1940s we had quite serious discussions about post-war civil aviation policy. We had a policy laid down by the then prime minister, the Right Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King, and we had some interesting contributions made by the minister who was in charge, namely, the Right Hon. Clarence Decatur Howe.

I remember very well—I am trying to think what year it was but I cannot recall if it was just before the end of the war or just after it, but it was certainly in the middle forties—Mr. Howe standing up and telling us he had tried his best to get the Canadian Pacific Railway to come in with the Canadian National Railways on the organization of Trans-Canada Airlines. But, said Mr. Howe, Canadian Pacific was not interested. Why? Because there was no money to be made in the operation at that time. That is what drove C. D. Howe to a form of public ownership, namely, establishing Trans-Canada Airlines under full public ownership.

An hon. Member: C. D. Howe was a great man.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He was a great man in many ways. We who sat opposite him fought him, but we had great respect for him. In this area he was absolutely right. Recalling that attitude on the part of Canadian Pacific when they refused to come in to help build up an airline or give service to the country, I am not greatly impressed by CP Air's desire now to serve the country by getting additional routes and becoming a transcontinental airline challenging the position of Air Canada. So I say, Mr. Speaker, that my worry today is not at all what the Tories say. They are being true to form. But my worry is that the Liberals might pay some attention to what Mr. Claude Taylor has said. I hear a Liberal member say no to that. That is good.

I am also worried about the legislation that was put through last year and which my friend, the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. MacRae), disliked as much as some of us did, which put profit as a major element in the operation of the airline. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) said yesterday that he hoped he would not offend us over here in the New Democratic Party by saying Canadian National Railways and Air Canada are now making a profit. That does not offend us at all. But what does worry us is the notion too many Liberals seem to have, that because these lines are making a profit mabye we should now turn them over to private enterprise. No, Mr. Speaker, a thousand times no! Public ownership in this area has served the people in this country tremendously, and we think it should stay that way.

An hon. Member: I agree.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is one member, and I hear one over here. Let me count. There are six votes.

An hon. Member: Name those Liberals.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have six Liberals, all good members of the Friday afternoon club, who agree with me. There are not six Tories here to say no, only five. So, six Liberals and I make seven. There are only five Tories, so we win the day—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): —for public ownership of Air Canada.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, as a new boy, and one of the members of the Friday afternoon club—

An hon. Member: Welcome! We have being doing it for 15 years.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): —I rise with some trepidation when I follow such a distinguished veteran member of the House of Commons as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). But I have to say that I will look in Hansard at the first paragraph in his intervention in this debate because it expresses precisely what the Progressive Conservative party stands for and precisely our opposition to this stand that our frieds to the left take in this case.

However, I rise to support in principle the spirit of this motion by my colleague, the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Siddon) specifically, and very briefly, because it is rather late on Friday afternoon, but I want to deal with that section of his motion which reads:

> Permit private airlines to compete on a more equitable basis with Air Canada.

Hon. members will know, since I am sure that all my colleagues read all speeches made in Hansard as diligently as I do, that I have voiced concern in this House about Air Canada taking over Nordair, a highly successful privately-owned regional airline and one which provides an essential service to southern Ontario and to my own area of Hamilton. Indeed, it has now been extended to the city of Winnipeg, the home of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Hon. members will also recall the high and heavy flak which the government received from many sources, such as the airline industry, the private sector, employees of Nordair, and especially the media whose editorials roundly condemned the idea of a big government airline which has enough of its own troubles, diluting the effectiveness and crippling the entrepreneurial efficiency of a privately-owned regional operation like Nordair. There were even fears in my area that Hamilton's service would not only deteriorate with Air Canada's absorption of Nordair, but that the government-owned airline might one day need to consolidate its operations and we could lose the kind of valuable service that Nordair provides to our area, altogether. I have since had those fears put to rest by persons I trust who are knowledgeable in the field. As the industrial capital of Canada, Hamilton and its civic airport will continue to enjoy some ongoing and perhaps expanded regional air service to serve southwestern Ontario, northern New York State, and perhaps a direct Hamilton-Winnipeg route.

The question that still remains, and it is very germane to this debate, is what is Nordair's future now that Air Canada has been given a mandate by the government to reprivatize the regional carrier within the space of a year from last October. What will the eventual role of Air Canada be as the government agent in this sale? How will Nordair, and in the larger context Air Canada, fit into the government's over-all rationalization of the several regional carriers in central and eastern Canada?

With this government's recent stampede to the right, and its determination suddenly to honour the private sector of this country's economy, I cannot believe that it will not use every chance to continue its inevitable encroachment on free enterprise in Canada. The thinking of this administration has always been that the government can do better. What the Liberals and our friends to the left do not tell us is the corollary of this, that it is the extended version of Murphy's law. If something can go wrong, it will, only the Canadian taxpayer has to foot the bill. I am not saying that any government involvement is wrong. In the case of Air Canada's participation and Ottawa's over-all plan for rationalizing the airlines, a limited role is desirable.

For many years I have been a supporter of Air Canada in the national role that this parliament has given it to perform. It does not always do that well. Until recently, labour-management relations have been lousy.

I approve of some Air Canada participation in our national airline transportation system. For example, some of the applicants who want to buy Nordair, such as Great Lakes, Quebecair, plus other regional airlines in eastern Canada such as Eastern Provincial Airways and Nordair itself—all have their reservations systems run by Air Canada. My information is that almost without exception every applicant for Nordair has stipulated that they want Air Canada's participation to the extent of 10 per cent to 15 per cent to 20 per cent. Therefore, there is a desire to see Air Canada maintain a role in regional and third carrier operations for the sake of continuity, experience and, to a certain extent, security. However, I emphasize that whatever emerges from the hot and heavy negotiations now going on in Montreal, I would be concerned about the over-all Air Canada involvement in a regional air service.

Like my colleague from Burnaby-Richmond-Delta I too take Air Canada president Claude Taylor as a straightforward, objective, and tough negotiator. The problem I am told that Mr. Taylor faces, and something that should concern our party and indeed the Canadian people, is this. None of these applicants really have enough money to put together a whole regional airline which stretches from Newfoundland to Winnipeg. The capital base for such a carrier with common equipment, 737 aircraft, could be in excess of $100 million. However, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) still thinks there should be a great megalopolis of a regional carrier which stretches from Newfoundland to the Great Lakes and beyond. On the other hand, people I have talked to feel there is a definite autonomous desire on the part of Ontario interests, Quebec interests and Atlantic Canada.

In conclusion, I intend to ask the Minister of Transport at the earliest opportunity, on Monday if he is back in the House, whether he will allow his rationalization of regional airlines to proceed along a regional and geographical basis, that is, autonomously owned and operated regional services in Ontario, Quebec and Atlantic Canada, or whether the minister is determined to go with one single regional carrier with the commonality of equipment from St. John's to Winnipeg. I will also be asking the minister about the widely rumoured merger of Quebecair and Nordair, to be headquartered in Montreal.

There is one other fear that has been expressed to me and which I voice to the House at this late hour. Given this government's financial and labour management record with many of its Crown corporations, there is a fear on the part of many people that if Air Canada cannot find a satisfactory buyer, the Government of Canada might resort to setting up yet another Crown corporation to oversee all the regional airlines in eastern and central Canada. That would be tragic.

In short, we on this side look forward to hearing before this parliament comes to an end the transport minister's long promised and eagerly awaited policy on just how much scope the government will allow private regional operations in eastern and central Canada to carry on, and just how much competition Nordair, Quebecair, Great Lakes and Eastern Provincial Airways from whatever emerges out of this rationalization policy will be allowed with the very firmly established government-owned airline, Air Canada.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, there are only two or three minutes remaining, but I am very anxious to take part in this debate. I do not know how often I have stood on the floor of this House over the past six years to defend Air Canada against those who would nationalize, privatize it, or just disband it. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) need not worry that we are going to let Air Canada disappear as the Tories would have happen.

We never hear from those on the other side that the province of Alberta had no business nationalizing an airline, that it had no business buying enough pieces to put together the better part of a national airline. That kind of socialization and nationalization is fine.

When PWA bought out Transair, which serviced Thunder Bay, because of the idea of only having two national carriers, this almost forced Nordair into government hands. The Tories must decide whether theirs is a party for the good of this country or just to deal with and support provincial aims.

I have a great deal of concern about the statement attributed to Mr. Taylor. It is not the kind of thing that should be said by the president of a Crown corporation. He was in fact stating policy, which should be stated by the government. If the minister has not already done so, I hope he will speak to Mr. Taylor and put him straight on this point. I am also sure that Mr. Mackasey, a close personal friend, will speak to Mr. Taylor along this line.

BEREAVEMENT

EXPRESSION OF DEEP SYMPATHY TO FAMILIES OF MINERS KILLED AND INJURED IN COAL MINE EXPLOSION AT GLACE BAY, N.S.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgency and with a great deal of sorrow.

I ask through you, sir, seconded by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard):

That the members of the House of Commons extend to the families of the men killed in the coal mine accident at No. 26 Colliery, in the town of Glace Bay, Nova Scotia, on Saturday, February 24, 1979, their deepest sympathy in this tragic moment of their lives and express the hope that the surviving miners will pull through their terrible ordeal.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of such a motion at this time requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion moved by Mr. Hogan and seconded by Mr. Lessard. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

EXPENSE INCURRED IN TRANSPORTING LIBERAL MEMBERS TO PRINCE EDWARD-HASTINGS, ONT.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees):

That this House request the Liberal party to pay the $4,000 plus that it cost the taxpayers to transport six members of the Liberal caucus, namely, the hon. member for Peterborough, the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville, the hon. member for York South and the hon. member for Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe, in a Department of Transport executive Viscount aircraft and have a full crew standing by all day today so that those members can spread political propaganda liberally in that area, it being particularly a waste of time since the good people of Prince Edward and Hastings counties are not in any way taken in by such nonsense.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the introduction of the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PROTEST AGAINST GOVERNMENT OCCUPANCY OF LE DIPLOMATE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Jean E. Pigott (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Because there has been the allegation of external pressure in the dispute between the National Capital Commission and Phillipe St-Cyr, the owner of Le Diplomate, and 21 witnesses have been named, including the Minister of State for Urban Affairs and Minister of Public Works, the President of the Treasury Board and the Chairman of the National Capital Commission, I move, seconded by the member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That the Minister of Public Works rescind the order in council issued giving the federal government permission to occupy Le Diplomate and abide by the court's decision in order that justice both be done, and be seen to be done.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of such a motion for debate at this time can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

CALL FOR MEASURES TO RESTRAIN RISING FOOD PRICES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): In view of two reports released over the weekend, one by the AIB showing that food prices in 1978 escalated by 21 per cent, the other by Statistics Canada showing that the average weekly wage increased by only 6.4 per cent, meaning, with a 9 per cent increase in the cost of living, a decrease of $340 for the year in purchasing power, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House calls upon the government to bring in measures to restrain rising prices and, furthermore, urges specifically the reinstatement of federal subsidies on bread and milk to alleviate the burden of food costs faced by Canadian families.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of such a motion for debate at this time can be done only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

REQUEST FOR RETRACTION OF MINISTER'S STATEMENTS CONCERNING SALMONELLA OUTBREAK IN QUEBEC AND FEED FROM MANITOBA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

In view of the statements made on February 15 by the Minister of Agriculture that bacteria infected feed from Manitoba caused a salmonella outbreak in Quebec, and in view of the fact that tests now concluded have proven that the infected feed did not originate in Manitoba, but in Quebec, and in view of the fact that these statements of the minister are damaging the reputation of Manitoba's feed industry. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta):

That the Minister of Agriculture retract his unfounded statements and extend apologies to the members of Manitoba's agricultural community.

Mr. Speaker: The motion can be presented for discussion at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO PREVENT OIL SHORTAGE IN QUEBEC—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jacques Lavoie (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 to ask for the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion regarding an urgent and important matter.

In view of the fact that oil companies have exported refined oil and that Esso has diverted to the American market oil which was intended for Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Mercier (Mr. Boulanger):

That the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources take appropriate action so that Quebeckers not be deprived of oil.

INCOME TAX RETURNS—RIGHT OF CANADIANS TO CONFIDENTIALITY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, involving the security and confidentiality of tax and statistical data supplied by Canadians in trust to their government.

Since it has been demonstrated that tax and statistical information has been left open to public inspection, and that the responsibility rests with the cabinet and particularly with the departments of National Revenue and Industry, Trade and Commerce, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That the tax and other forms be examined by qualified officers to ascertain how many Canadians were affected by having their forms left under such carelessly exposed conditions and notified so that they are made aware of the situation in case any complications occur from unauthorized access to the information on their returns.

REQUEST FOR IMPROVED FACILITIES AT GREAT LAKES' SHIPYARDS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

In view of the fact that in the government's recently announced program to assist the lagging shipbuilding industry in Canada, it is quite evident that most of this assistance is slated for the east and west coast shipbuilding industries to the almost complete disregard of the shipbuilding industries in the Great Lakes area, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Scott):

That the government take immediate steps to correct this injustice and that applications for assistance from the shipbuilding industries on our Great Lakes be given the same earnest consideration and the same priorities as those from the shipbuilding yards on our coasts.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INDUSTRIAL STRATEGY RECOMMENDED BY SCIENCE COUNCIL—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce—who are probably discussing whether the Prime Minister was sinful or not by going south—I have a question for the president of the economic board of refugees.

● (1415)

First, I want to know whether the minister has examined the study "Forging the Links," of the Science Council of Canada. If so, does he have a comment on the situation they describe on page 17 "as a massive failure of the country's industrial system", that imports have grown from 26 per cent to 31 per cent of our Canadian market—that imports grew to 31 per cent up to 1977—and our exports are declining relatively, and that we are moving from an industrialized economy to one based on the export of raw materials?

Has the minister studied this report? Did he read it before he stated and came to the decision that Canada should have no coherent industrial strategy which the Science Council of Canada recommends?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Board of Economic Development Ministers): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is, again, making distortions out of any comments I made. Yes, the report to which he referred is a matter of very important significance to the government. It is being studied most carefully.

With regard to the question of imports, the hon. member might be interested to know that in the last two years the growth of import penetration in Canada is the smallest of 11 OECD countries, which is a source of some comfort to us.

With regard to the development of industrial strategies, we have been, and will continue to be, diligent in working toward that end.

Mr. Crosbie: I realize the minister is being diligent, Mr. Speaker, but he has not come up with any industrial strategies that the Science Council of Canada know about. The Prime Minister said to help him, he is in trouble, but we want Canada helped because Canada is in trouble as a result of this ten years of inaction.

Would the minister comment on page 24 of the report where the Science Council deals with the question of invisible trade, items such as transport services, tourism, investment income and payment on the debt which has risen, by the way, from $1.5 billion in interest on our foreign debt to $4.8 billion which is estimated this year—and it will be worse in the future. They state that of 25 industrial countries, Canada is twenty-fifth in the contribution of invisible trade items to our trade account.

Will the minister tell the House whether he has now developed any strategy in dealing with this desparate situation, other than the strategy of borrowing $8 billion or $9 billion abroad to add to that tremendous deficit? What is his strategy for dealing with this?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is referring to the deficit in the current account. I have, of course, said that we have a current account deficit that is quite significant in Canada. Traditionally, we have opted for investment from abroad.

Canada is a country that has been developing over the past 110 years through borrowing from abroad. We are, in fact, a developing nation with a lot of infrastructure to put in place. It has been traditional for Canada to borrow abroad. Therefore, that is what we are doing at this time. I think this policy has served Canada very well for a long time.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the minister has not answered my question. I will ask his deskmate, the President of the Board of Economic Development Ministers—who is now supposed to head this area—what specific policies the government is developing to overcome this tremendous deficit on the invisible trade account, particularly in view of the fact that the study has found that in the sectors of our manufacturing which utilize high technology, we are in a very serious deficit situation and our surplus in exports is really from raw materials and crude and processed resource material.

In view of this, what are the minister's promises? His deskmate is borrowing billions more abroad and there will be very much higher interest payments. How is the minister going to overcome that on the trade surplus or the surplus side of our international balance of accounts? If not, the Canadian dollar is doomed to even worse decreases. What is his answer to this?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, one of the greatest dangers to the Canadian dollar is spurious comments like that of the hon. member and some of his colleagues. There is a great deal of encouragement to be taken from the increase in our export merchandise trade balance which will reach $3.5 billion this year with every sign, over and above the advantage the Canadian dollar gives us for exports these days, of a vast improvement in the competitive position of Canadian manufacturing. That fact is well known to the manufacturing industry and is a matter of their comments in recent consultations and public statements by them.

I really believe the hon. member would serve the country much better if he would give some kind of hope based on facts that are well known and well established. If he wants to deal in facts of three or four years ago and peddle those across the country, he is not encouraging optimism or investor confidence in this country.

INTEREST PAID ON NATIONAL DEBT

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I should also like to direct my question to the minister in charge of the BED ministers of this cabinet: it centres on the question of an industrial strategy.

Does the minister agree with his counterpart, the President of the Treasury Board, that it is not the quantum of national debt that worries him but, rather, the amount of interest we are paying on it? I ask this question bearing in mind that just before this government took power, the total interest portion of the national budget was about 9 per cent, compared to 16.5 per cent now.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this question was handled by the President of the Treasury Board quite efficiently last week when he explained to Canadians that, of course, we have a large debt in Canada but that in relation to what the debt was in 1962 in terms of percentage of gross national product, the proportion of Canadian debt at this time has dropped from 30 per cent to 23 per cent, and that is a good achievement.

[Mr. Crosbie.]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, if the minister in charge of the BED ministers does not wish to reply, perhaps I could put my supplementary question to the Minister of Finance, the minister who has attempted to justify the $62 billion net debt of this country at the present time.

Following the pattern set in the United States and in the United Kingdom, will the minister give us a five-year overview in relation to expenditure and revenue figures in Canada with a view to establishing what, in fact, will be the borrowing needs of this government this year and for the ensuing four years, bearing in mind that Wood Gundy points out that the total borrowing requirement of this government for this year and the next four years will amount to $55 billion?

I would like the minister first to indicate whether he confirms this five-year forecast and, second, will he confirm that $55 billion is, in fact, the amount the government will likely be borrowing if its plans are carried out?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, each year we table before the House a budget which includes the government's expenditures and revenue. We are fully aware that the service of our debt is presently quite costly and that our requirements for liquid assets of $10.7 billion are very high. That is why over the last three years we have undertaken to cut back our expenses, and I am certain that the hon. member will agree with me that our deficit should not increase; also I hope that he will not endorse the statements made by his leader who has gone across Canada recommending tax cuts that would increase the deficit by $6 to $7 billion next year.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REASON FOR INCREASES IN FOOD PRICES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

On the weekend, the Anti-Inflation Board produced figures showing that food prices went up a full 21 per cent over last year. In view of the fact that this is the biggest increase in the history of indexing, and considering that this process is continuing day after day, will the minister explain why flour prices—which affect the price of so many food items, including bread—have gone up, according to the same report, by a full 25 per cent in the past two months, when the removal of the federal subsidy should have meant a price increase much lower than that?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, according to the AIB report, the reason for food price increases is, as we have been stating all along, the increase in the price of beef, fresh fruits and vegetables and of bakery products.

The increase in the price of fruits and vegetables in part is due to the difference in the value of our dollar and the American dollar, particularly during the winter when these commodities are imported. The increase in the price of beef, as is well known, relates to the beef cycle. We have been trying to encourage people to move to alternatives to beef, especially pork, the price of which has been very good in recent weeks.

● (1425)

On the question of flour and bakery products, we estimated that the removal of the subsidy should result in an additional cost of seven cents on a standard loaf of bread. I have not been able to analyse the figures with respect to flour. I think the hon. member referred to bakery flour, and I would have to analyse the figures which he gave and of which I have not had notice. However, I will be pleased to do that and get back to him.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, as usual, the minister is going to set up another study to investigate some price increase. It would be nice for him to come to the House just for once having conducted an investigation of the matter about which he is almost certain to be asked.

The Anti-Inflation Board also confirmed at the weekend that chicken retail prices went up some 35 per cent in the past year, more than twice as much as the farmer received. Since this question was raised with the minister in the House by one of my colleagues more than a week ago, will he now confirm that in the case of chicken prices the middlemen simply increased their profits on chickens by increasing chicken prices to correspond with beef price increases, even though there were not real increases in the cost of chicken production to correspond with increases in the cost of producing beef?

If there is profiteering in this area—and all the evidence seems to indicate that there is—will the minister do something such as rolling back price increases for chicken?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, it is very easy for the hon. member to come to the House every day to ask questions without giving notice. I have pages and pages of briefing here on food price increases, but the hon. member always manages to come up with some obscure question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: Almost any fool can put a question in the House, but a worth-while answer requires some analysis of statistics. The hon. member puts questions, not to gain information but merely to embarrass.

On the hon. member's question with respect to chickens, there is no doubt that the price of chicken and poultry has increased following the phenomenal rise in beef prices. Because there has been a shift to alternative sources of protein, demand is greater than supply and under market conditions the price of chicken will increase.

As the hon. member knows, there are marketing boards for chicken and turkey, and we hope measures will be taken to increase quotas for those two items so that there will be a greater supply and, therefore, a lowering of prices.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, not just any fool would give that answer; it takes a particular fool on the government side.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: If the minister considers a question about chicken prices to be obscure, I would like him to go out into the streets of Ottawa and talk to typical housewives and ask them if the question is obscure. The minister has had notice of that question for more than a week. He was asked this same question. He has produced no answers. It is very clear—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member realizes that I consistently extend to him the opportunity to ask questions at the beginning of every day. However, he now seeks an opportunity on a final supplementary both to ask a question and to make an argument. Now I suppose the hon. member seeks to put another question. He should get to it very directly.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I will come to the question. Considering that for more than three weeks the minister has not brought about one rollback in price increases, will he now honestly state to hon. members on this side of the House as well as to the people of Canada that the government has absolutely no intention of doing anything about escalating prices in any sector of the economy?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member says he gave me notice about flour prices. He did not. The notice I received was with regard to a question about bread prices. There are many aspects of the milling industry about which one could put questions and it is impossible to have all the statistics and figures here in the question period without notice.

The hon. member knows that with the phasing-out of the AIB there is no power in the government to roll back prices. There may be measures which could be taken to moderate price increases, and the government is considering measures which might do that, but we have no rollback power. The hon. member knows that, and he opposed that. Furthermore, he puts forward very facile suggestions for action without even considering what fallout there would be on many other sectors of the Canadian economy.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

HIGH INTEREST PAID ON FOREIGN BORROWINGS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Minister of Finance a moment ago going back to 1962, and it impels me to ask him, as Minister of Finance in a totally bankrupt government, a question. Today, the deficit is approximately $11,000 million because of a government which had engaged in squander-mania all across the board. That amount had to be borrowed and it is costing the Canadian people $5 million a day in interest.

I would like the minister to explain that and to produce his alibi for a situation which indicates that our country is virtually in a state of bankruptcy.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I just said, the ratio between the GNP and the debt in Canada has gone down from 33 per cent in 1962 to 23 per cent today. That is a fact.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: If hon. members do not like me to speak about 1962, I can go back to 1958, which was worse.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has been singularly free of questions on my part during the session even though I have listened to his obvious alibis. I ask him to answer this question: Is it not a fact that today it costs the Canadian people, because of the squander-mania and the waste of this government causing a deficit of $11,000 million, $5 million a day in interest?

Mr. Chrétien: I think that the borrowing of this government abroad is not more expensive than borrowing inside Canada. As the right hon. member knows, when we borrow for exchange purposes this money goes into the fund and is reinvested in U.S. government securities. On some days the cost of the money we borrow is no more than the revenue we are receiving. Last week I gave the committee a letter about this. I will make sure that the hon. member receives a copy of it. He can read it and he will have good reason not to ask me any more questions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Why does the minister not answer the question? I produced the truth, and he is afraid to admit it.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PRESENCE OF PICKETER OUTSIDE HOUSE OF COMMONS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Since the beginning of this session, I have been intrigued by the sight, at the west door of parliament, of a person walking about holding a sign. As that sign was unilingual, I could not make out too well what was written on it. Last week I went to the person and asked her: Are we not in a bilingual country: why could your sign not be bilingual? The next day I had the pleasant surprise of seeing that it was bilingual. I could then better understand her claims. I should like to ask the Minister of Justice whether, in that capacity, he would be willing, or has already done so, to look into the claims of that person who is still there despite the very cold weather and whether he could tell us very frankly after having met her what the position of the government is with regard to her situation and, if she has certain rights, how he could help her to make herself heard democratically in order to settle that matter once and for all?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question. I have had the opportunity of speaking with the person concerned, to have her explain the situation; I have also had some of the civil servants in my department look into the situation brought to our attention by that lady. Unfortunately, I must tell the hon. member that this person is complaining about the decision brought down by the Quebec Court of Appeal confirming the judgment of the Quebec Superior Court. As the right hon. Prime Minister mentioned in the House last week or two weeks ago, I believe, our examination of the case has shown that there is nothing we can do as a government. The case resulted from a matter under municipal jurisdiction, more specifically that of the city of Hull; we must respect the decisions of the courts just like any other Canadian citizen is expected to do. So, despite my conversations with that lady and our examination of the case, I feel there is nothing we can do as a government because to do otherwise would be tantamount to intervening in the decisions of our tribunals. I doubt that anyone in this House would like to see the government embark on that course of action.

HUMAN RIGHTS

OPPORTUNITY TO INTRODUCE BILL TO ESTABLISH OMBUDSMAN AT FEDERAL LEVEL

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question. It has already been widely reported that a federal ombudsman, such as the one in Quebec and in Ontario, would be appointed and very recently the Ontario government asked parliament to pass special legislation to enable a judge to fill that post. Is the minister prepared to tell the House whether the government still intends to introduce such legislation so that the matter could be considered not at a ministerial level but at the ombudsman level, so as not to lead other countries to believe that we are not well disposed towards the individuals who make demands that come under different jurisdictions?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the government still intends to introduce such a bill. However I would like to remind hon. members of two things. In the first place, concerning complaints of citizens about administration of justice, as in the present case, the complaint would not have to be filed with the ombudsman but with the Canadian Judicial Council which, as far as I know, has considered the matter and found that there was no ground for complaint. As for the other aspect, if that lady is complaining about a municipal regulation, it is obvious that her complaint should be filed with the Quebec ombudsman rather than with a federal ombudsman who would not have the necessary authority to intervene in such decision.

COMMUNICATIONS

REQUEST PROCEEDINGS OF HOUSE BE BROADCAST EARLIER IN DAY

Mr. Jacques Lavoie (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. Considering that the broadcasting of the debates by cable TV companies such as the Montreal based National Cablevision is very late, which prevents many citizens from participating or becoming acquainted with what happens here in the House of Commons, can the Minister of Communications tell the House whether some move is being considered or whether communications to those companies are needed to be able to broadcast those debates earlier, like those of the National Assembly, to enable as many citizens as possible to follow them?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, at the present time the debates of the House of Commons are broadcast mainly on community channels, and only people in the Ottawa area have direct access to the live broadcasting of those debates. As for the province of Quebec and the debates of the National Assembly, Radio-Quebec is responsible for that broadcast. Consequently it has the choice to have a live broadcast in some areas of Quebec. As far as our debates are concerned, we can only have a pre-recorded broadcast outside the Ottawa area. The problem is quite different in a large country like ours but CBC is taking steps to broadcast the debates by satellite. On their side, cable TV companies are taking steps to broadcast the debates and in a few days, a workshop will be held to try to come up with a package which could be programmed by satellite, which would enable a larger number of people to see a live broadcast of the debates.

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON EARTH STATION SATELLITES—DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that one of the problems is completion of the discussions on how to televise live the proceedings of the House of Commons, when will the long delayed announcement of the minister on the earth station satellite receiving policy be made, which will overcome some of the hurdles; or is she waiting until the select committee makes its report, which was scheduled for the end of this month?

● (1440)

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): No, the ownership policy on earth stations has been under review now for a year. I am due to announce my conclusions of that review very, very soon.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PURCHASE OF EARTH RECEIVING STATIONS BY CORPORATION

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Secretary of State: it involves television in the House of Commons.

In view of the fact there have been negotiations between the cable industry and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation combining an earth station satellite review policy, which the minister will announce in a few days, is the minister aware the CBC has declared an intention to purchase 100 frontier type earth receiving stations to attach to the head-ends of cable companies without their consent at the moment?

If the minister is aware of this, can he indicate what cost factor is involved, in view of the fact we understand there has been certain restraint in CBC moneys and that this could have been done at no charge to the public purse by the sole initiative of cable companies?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I have had discussions with the corporation concerning the possibility of extending the coverage of the broadcasting of the House. The specific proposal suggested by the hon. member has not been brought to my attention, if indeed it is true. I will examine with the CBC whether in fact that is the case.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

TRAGEDY IN MINE AT GLACE BAY, N.S.—INVESTIGATION BY MINISTER

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour under whose jurisdiction comes mine safety in the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

I was not present in the chamber when the motion under Standing Order 43 was made, but I am sure we all reiterate the sincere sympathy to the survivors of the ten men who lost their lives and our deepest prayers go out to those who have gone through such a horrible, horrible experience. I thank the minister for sending his preliminary report. Is the minister in a position to provide any further information to the House at this time regarding this terrible, terrible tragedy?

Hon. Martin O'Connell (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I want to join with the expression of sympathy in the motion under Standing Order 43 moved by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond and express my sympathy to the families who have suffered the loss or severe injury of loved ones in that tragic accident.

Today I appointed Mr. Roy Elfstrom, the director of the occupational safety and health branch of my department, as a commissioner with powers under the Inquiries Act to do an immediate on-the-spot investigation into the causes of the accident so far as they can be determined. Already a preliminary investigation is under way which is being conducted on a tripartite basis, that is, safety officers from Labour Canada who are in Sydney all the time, members of the unions involved, and of the company.

I felt it was necessary to make a second inquiry in order to secure all physical evidence and if necessary all testimony under oath before physical evidence changes or people's memories slip. Also, I am giving consideration, although I have not reached a decision, to appointing a public inquiry should that seem to be necessary.

ANNOUNCED SALARY INCREASE FOR SENIOR PUBLIC SERVANTS—SMALLER INCREASES GRANTED PERSONS IN LESS SENIOR POSITIONS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the fact the government preaches restraint, especially for ordinary workers, an example being the fact that some 18,000 low-paid Ontario hospital workers were limited to an average wage increase of approximately $8 a week, how does the government justify the increase for senior public servants ranging around $100 a week, with a new high of $78,700 a year?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member is aware, the government decided to increase the compensation of senior public servants in Canada based upon a report prepared by an independent group which advised the government on this. As a matter of fact, its recommendations were in excess of the figure decided upon by the government.

The 7 per cent increase leaves us with a very significant compression problem as far as incomes are concerned within the public service. But we felt it should be held to that amount at this time because that is roughly the figure many settlements came in at within the public service.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I will not comment upon the attempt to pass the buck back to that advisory group; after all, it is the government which makes the decision.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Muir.]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In view of the fact that references to the consumer price index were made both in the report of the Lambert advisory group and in the minister's statement, and if these increases are to enable persons to keep up with the cost of living, is it not about time to consider those who have to struggle with the cost of living, and not those who are making $40,000, $50,000 or $60,000 a year? Will the government give some leadership, and not just preach restraint which amounts to sheer hypocrisy?

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member has pointed out, the recommendations of the advisory committee report were of the order of 7.5 per cent and 8 per cent. It was felt those should be cut back to the range of 7 per cent.

An hon. Member: Big deal.

Mr. Buchanan: If hon. members are now starting a new approach, that we should not use percentages, that we should use absolute dollars—

Mr. Broadbent: Good idea.

Mr. Buchanan: Well, it is a totally new concept. I suggest hon. members might go out and advocate it to some of their union supporters, to see how vigorous the support would be from them.

An hon. Member: That is right.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

TIMING OF ANNOUNCEMENT ON GOVERNMENT FOOD POLICY

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the one raised by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby. Last Friday, outside the House, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs referred to a food policy which was about to be announced by the government. He said that we could expect an announcement today, although it would not come from him.

In light of the 21 per cent over-all annual rate of increase in the price of food identified by the AIB, and the justifiable concern about this matter, can the minister tell the House who in the government is responsible for food policy and when we can expect the announcement to which he referred outside the House on Friday?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the story in the press was completely false. At no time did I say that there would be an announcement this week or any other week, although I was pressed by a reporter, or several reporters, to do so; and I cannot tell the hon. member now.

I have told the hon. member on several occasions that there are several departments involved in food policies: the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Fisheries and the Environment, the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the Department of National Health and Welfare, and there are many provincial departments of agriculture, fisheries and consumer affairs. But the answers to the problems of high food prices are not as simple as many hon. members would suggest.

JUSTIFICATION FOR INCREASE IN PRICE OF CHICKEN

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture, who seems to have something to say in the area of food policy.

An hon. Member: Not much.

Mr. McGrath: If an announcement on a new food strategy for the government is made, will the Minister of Agriculture be responsible for that food strategy?

While I am on my feet, perhaps I can ask the minister if there is any shortfall in the supply of chicken which has been identified by AIB as one of the contributing factors because of the decrease in the demand for beef. If there is no shortage of supply, perhaps the minister can tell the House how he justifies the increase in the price of chicken.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the statistics and facts I have been given show that there are some four million pounds more poultry in storage now than a year ago, and some five million pounds more beef and pork. There has been an increase in the production of turkey, and turkey has gone down in price by 2.8 per cent. The hon. member did not mention that. The hon. member hollered like hell about how much turkey there was—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Order.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I apologize. He hollered like everything about how much the shortage of turkeys would be, and we ended up with approximately 20 million pounds of turkey surplus after the first of the year. The program for food policies was stated quite clearly by my colleague.

PUBLISHING

PROPOSED TARIFF ON IMPORTED BOOKS—CONSULTATION WITH INDUSTRY

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of National Revenue. It relates to the considerable concern and reaction in the book publishing industry with respect to a recent decision by his department to establish a new zero-rate tariff on imported books.

In view of this major decision which was taken by National Revenue earlier this year, and its impact upon Canadian book publishing, I wonder if the minister could indicate what kind of consultation took place with the book publishing industry, and what kind of advance notice was given prior to the introduction of this new zero-rating for the next three-year period.

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of National Revenue and Minister of State (Small Business)): Mr. Speaker, I have read the article and some surrounding data about the reduction of the rate to zero, and I gather that this has been a long-sought reform by the publishing industry.

As the hon. member perhaps is aware, changes in duties and rates are carried out by my department but the policy is directed by the Minister of Finance I assume that this has been a step which has been sought for some time by the international publishing community.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the minister is not better informed on this particular subject, otherwise he would be aware of the comprehensive policy that was forwarded to the government late in 1977. I am sure that the Secretary of State for External Affairs or the Secretary of State is aware of this.

Would one of those ministers, or the Minister of Finance, indicate to the House why only one element of that policy was introduced, why there was no zero-based year attached to the policy, why it excludes the whole question of the importation of fine paper and material used in book publishing and why, in effect, there was no final consultation or notification to the publishing industry, inasmuch as all segments of publishing and the book industry at the retail level, as well as authors, have protested the government's recent action in this regard?

Perhaps the Secretary of State is the best informed in terms of the health of the Canadian book publishing industry.

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the hon. member terminated his question that way, because up to that point he had been rather sensible.

Indeed there have been extensive discussions with the industry about these changes, particularly in the context of accession to the Florence agreement. The decision was not to attach ourselves to the Florence agreement but go to a zero-based tariff item for three years over which we would assess its possible consequences. There have been extensive discussions and consultations with the industry and, contrary to the hon. member's suggestion, the industry is by no means unanimous in its rejection of such a move. There is division within the industry as to whether this step would be favourable or not.

We have taken this decision, not in isolation but in the context of other measures which I hope to be able to announce soon.

ENERGY

SECURITY OF OIL SUPPLY FOR EASTERN CANADA—ROLE OF PETRO-CANADA

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

In view of the need for secure supplies of oil from offshore for eastern Canada, and the reversal of the Tory policy concerning Petro-Canada as indicated over the weekend by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham and reported in the Toronto Star of yesterday, will the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources be pressing ahead with additional long-term supply arrangements for imported oil using Petro-Canada as Canada's agent?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I am very interested in the change of view by the hon. member for Nothumberland-Durham. I am not sure whether he has checked it out with his leader yet, because his leader is still talking about winding-up and dismantling Petro-Canada.

Miss MacDonald: Ask Maurice Strong about it.

Mr. Gillespie: I can assure the hon. member that Petro-Canada is pressing ahead in trying to make a deal and write a contract with Pemex, the national oil company of Mexico. A group of negotiators from Petro-Canada and the Canadian government were in Mexico very recently. I can report that they had a very good and very useful discussion, and I believe that it should be possible to sign an agreement with Mexico in the very near future.

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON NATURAL GAS PIPELINE TO QUEBEC AND EASTERN CANADA

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Could the minister tell the House if it is government policy to approve a natural gas pipeline to Quebec and the maritimes, if it is government policy to be against it, or if it is government policy that they are awaiting the recommendation of the National Energy Board?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I have made a number of statements in the past indicating that I think it would be highly desirable for a natural gas pipeline to go all the way from the west to the Atlantic Ocean. I hope that that will be possible. I also hope that the economics of this particular submission will be established before the National Energy Board. I expect that the National Energy Board will be addressing itself to this very important question this year.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, if it is already government policy to approve of this, why is the question of whether or not there should be an application to the National Energy Board one which the government is following? Why is the time and money being spent with respect to the policy decision itself which the National Energy Board is expected to recommend to the government? Why are we going through this rigmarole, if the government has already made up its mind?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, this is not the first time that the hon. member has not listened to the answer or based his question on an absolutely false premise. If the hon. member had listened very carefully, he would have heard that I said the economics of this matter are very important. The National Energy Board has been set up to examine the submission and the economics of that submission.

REQUEST THAT LADY PICKETER OUTSIDE HOUSE OF COMMONS STATE GRIEVANCE TO JUSTICE COMMITTEE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question supplementary to those asked a short time ago by the hon. member for Central Nova, by the hon. member for Bellechasse today, and by the hon. member for Timiskaming in the past, of the Minister of Justice who is a lawyer and knows of the difficulties of trials and the experience of trial lawyers.

In light of the fact that the lady who is protesting outside parliament is a registered nurse, has been out there for two or three months and is actually starving herself in an attempt to bring some heed to her grievances, would the minister now—and I offer this as a plea and suggestion—discuss this matter with the chairman of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs and members of the committee on that side of the House so that this lady could come before the committee and set out her grievance, and so a report could be made to the Department of Justice and the government? In this way that person would get a fair hearing. I am sure she would receive a fair hearing from that committee.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is a member of the steering committee on justice and legal affairs. I am sure that he could bring his representations directly to that steering committee and to the chairman of the standing committee.

I would repeat that I have seen this lady myself. I have asked the officials in my department to look into her case and it is quite clear that the matter which the lady is protesting about is one of private litigation. The lady is unsatisfied with a judgment rendered by the Superior Court of Quebec and the Court of Appeal of Quebec. She is in the same situation as any private citizen who is not satisifed with a judgment rendered by the courts. There is nothing which the Minister of Justice or the federal government as such can do. In this particular litigation, neither the federal government nor any of its agents were involved, either as a party in the action or as interveners in any way. It is a matter of private litigation under the civil law of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Capilano.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, may I ask one supplementary?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary North.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I am not suggesting—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not like to interrupt the hon. member, but I am troubled that we have spent a great deal of time on this matter. There are several other members who, I am sure, have been pressing for several days to be recognized. Perhaps the hon. member could ask a very brief question and then I will recognize the hon. member for Capilano.

Mr. Woolliams: I am always brief, Mr. Speaker. I would ask the Minister of Justice if he would lend his support. Naturally, I can recommend the matter to the steering committee, but this parliament sets the references for that committee. I am asking the minister to lend his support in this matter.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I think that if the hon. member had listened to my first answer, I said everything that I needed to say on the subject.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ALLEGED ISSUANCE OF CREDIT CARDS FOR CORPORATION'S USE

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. Would the Secretary of State tell the House if he has approved the issuance of credit cards with major department stores in the name of and to the account of Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and can he advise us as to the extent of such issuance?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I have not personally done so. It may be within the delegation of signing authority that that has taken place, but I personally have not done so.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, while the minister is looking into the risk and accountability aspects of such a credit card issue, would he also look into the purchase of $58 worth of pantyhose at an Eatons's downtown store in Vancouver, and will he take steps to protect the credit of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation by either withdrawing such credit cards or by instructing the CBC to pay its account with Eaton's on time?

• (1500)

Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, I take it the hon. member's question relates to the CBC. I shall be happy to pass on his concern about pantyhose and any other miscellaneous details.

AGRICULTURE

TARIFFS ON CANNED TOMATOES—PROTECTION FOR CANADIAN PRODUCERS

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): A few weeks ago the Minister of Agriculture made a speech having to do with tariffs on canned tomatoes. This resulted in a headline that said he promised 17 per cent protection. Can the minister tell the House if there is to be 17 per cent protection for producers in the province with regard to imported canned tomatoes?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am fully aware of the headline in that newspaper. That was not what I stated. The person who wrote it was concerned about what the Tariff Board had recommended. The Tariff Board had recommended that kind of protection.

In the talk I gave to them, I said that I hoped they would be somewhere near that when the recommendation was made, etc. I can give the tape to the hon. member to listen to. All my speeches are taped and double-taped to make sure that when somebody does use a headline such as this, we can offer them the evidence of what was actually said.

As the hon. member knows, a study of the Tariff Board report has been completed. Negotiations have been going on for some months, representations have been made and we hope they will soon be implemented.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious the Minister of Agriculture wants to support the farmers in this matter.

FINANCE

TARIFF ON CANNED TOMATOES—POSITION OF MINISTER

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): May I ask the Minister of Finance whether in cabinet he will support a recommendation espousing such a tariff to protect the tomato growers in the province?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if we have something to make public, we will do it in due course. I am not in a position to do it at this time.

Public Service

PRIVILEGE

MR. FRIESEN—REMARKS OF PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY TO MINISTER OF INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, last Friday I rose on a question of privilege respecting language used in the House by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Loiselle). He was not in his seat at that time so I reserved my question of privilege until today.

I would point out that Hansard records that the Acting Speaker on that evening pointed out that the rules of the House did not permit me to rise on that occasion to ask the hon. member to retract his statement. While I applaud his facility in bilingualism, I wish he would use a more elevated diction. As Hansard records, and as Beauchesne points out, the language he used on that evening was definitely unparliamentary, and I would ask him to retract his statement.

[Translation]

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, it is a fact that I used the expression "bullshit" but unfortunately this type of slang is sometimes acceptable in French. I just cannot accept the pessimistic attitude of the hon. member opposite concerning the excellent record of the Canadian economy. I therefore withdraw my remarks, but I realize at the same time that they were founded.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) pointed out, we were facing a procedural constraint, as we do in adjournment debate when we set aside three ten-minutes periods. We have always followed the practice that those periods cannot be upset by procedural discussion of any sort. When this occurred, the hon. member properly gave notice and the parliamentary secretary in response to this later discussion has now withdrawn the offending remark. The matter is now closed.

PUBLIC SERVICE

TABLING OF REPORT ON PROGRAM PERFORMANCE MEASUREMENT

Hon. Judd Buchanan (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2), I wish to table in both official languages the 1979 report on program performance measurement in the public service of Canada.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

COMMEMORATIVE CEREMONIES TO MARK D-DAY LANDINGS

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, June 6, 1979, marks the thirty-fifth anniversary of the D-Day landings in Normandy. I would like at this time to pay homage to the gallant Canadian sailors, soldiers and airmen who took part in the allied invasion of Normandy on June 6, 1944, the greatest amphibious operation of all time.

Thousands of Canadians servicemen in the Canadian 3rd division, 2nd Canadian armoured brigade and 1st Canadian parachute battalion—nearly one-fifth of the total invasion force of 100,000 men—stormed across the Normandy beaches and elsewhere to free northwest Europe from the tyranny of enemy occupation. By the end of that dramatic day 35 years ago, it had become apparent that the massive venture had succeeded, though it represented for Canada a loss of 1,074 killed, wounded and missing.

Canadian veterans of the three services who took part in the Normandy landings continue to reflect on those events and think of their comrades who fell, denied the chance to return home and partake of the opportunities of our growing and prosperous land.

This coming June, Mr. Speaker, I will lead a delegation of 40 veterans, representing the Canadian units, battalions, regiments and corps which took part in Operation Overlord. Commemorative ceremonies will be held at Beny-sur-Mer and other sites in the Canadian sector. The group will also participate in British and American ceremonies in the respective sectors. Representatives of the Royal Canadian Legion and National Council of Veterans Associations will also attend these commemorative ceremonies.

I must remind hon. members that we emerged as a great nation because of the tens of thousands of young men and women—including some who sit here today as members of parliament—who volunteered in two world wars to fight for their country in far off lands when our freedom was threatened. These Canadians served and fought together, regardless of language, race or color. They fought united as Canadians on the Normandy beaches and later in the campaign in northwest Europe—the final turning point in the titanic struggle to preserve freedom and democracy in the world.

Let us remember today and always the thousands of Canadians who lie in graves in France and around the world because of their duty to Canada. They, by their sacrifice, protected our freedom to govern and to build a great nation for those of us who remain. They have earned their place of honour, and "We will remember them".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to join with my colleague the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) in paying homage to the gallant Canadian sailors, soldiers and airmen who took part in the allied invasion of Normandy on June 6, 1944. The minister is quite correct in terming this the greatest amphibious operation of all times and no one who lived through those days will ever forget the fear and tension of the moment.

It is also important that Canadians not yet born in 1944 be reminded of the valiant efforts of the invasion force and the terrible losses suffered during that day—1,074 killed, wounded and missing in a single day. The figure is awesome.

I congratulate the minister on his plan to lead a delegation of veterans who took part in Operation Overlord to the commemorative ceremonies at Beny-sur-Mer. I am sure this will be a moving occasion for all involved and will serve to draw special attention to the thirty-fifth anniversary of D-Day.

To the minister's call to remember the thousands of Canadians who lie in graves in France and around the world, I would also like to add a plea to remember the veterans who returned. I am thinking particularly of veterans who were accorded veterans' preference in employment in the public service and who are now suffering from an apparent change of government policy in this regard. I also refer to veterans experiencing difficulties obtaining admission to former veterans' hospitals, widows of veterans denied a pension because of the government's failure to act on the recommendations of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs relating to prisoners of war, war amputees and others.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, by all means let us remember the anniversary of the D-Day landings in Normandy; but at the same time let this government manifest in a tangible way to the veterans of this country that they are remembered also.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1510)

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we are happy to join in welcoming the announcement that has been made by the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) that he will lead a delegation to Normandy on June 6 of this year. I remember very well the solemnity of that day, June 6, 1944, in this House of Commons when all of us realized how much turned on the events that were taking place. It was before the days of television and so we went across the hall to room 16 to listen to a radio broadcast by his Majesty King George VI. As I say, we were all aware how much depended on the outcome of the events of that day.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, we are glad that this delegation will be going to commemorate the thirty-fifth anniversary, and I join with the minister in saying that we cannot too often say of Canada's veterans "We shall remember them".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the minister for providing me with the text of his remarks a few minutes before the oral question period.

Mr. Speaker, even if World War II events are slowly falling into oblivion, there are faces and memories which just refuse to die. For all those of us who lived through the difficult Normandy landings and all those Canadians who were involved in it, this remains the epitome of courage and determination.

This military operation certainly proved costly, claiming nearly 1,100 Canadian lives, but what sorrow for all those who, on this side of the Atlantic, had lost their loved ones. Yet, they could find solace in the conviction that these braves had not lost their lives in vain. Thus falling on the field of honour, our Canadian servicemen have set the corner-stone for the new, strong, prosperous and free Canada in which we live today and which we owe in part to them. This is something to keep in mind. I sincerely wish that all young Canadians will follow the fine example of courage and determination these heroes have set and which remains a source of unlimited hope for the future.

[English]

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not mean to intrude into the area of my colleague, but I would like to point out that one of the spearhead brigades of that invasion was the 8th Canadian Infantry Brigade in which I served. That brigade was made up of Le Régiment de la Chaudière which was all French speaking; the North Shore New Brunswick Regiment which was about half French speaking; and the Queen's Own Rifles of Canada which was English speaking. So it was a brigade commanded at one time by a Francophone commander which was just about 50-50 English speaking and French speaking. I hope that Canadians will not forget that. I hope they will also not forget that had we had an alliance at that time, and had we been prepared better than we were, we might not have seen all of those lives lost.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POINT OF ORDER

MR. ALEXANDER—PRACTICE OF TABLING DOCUMENTS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I want to register my concern with respect to actions by ministers that are taking place of late in this House of Commons. We have just seen the President of Treasury Board (Mr. Buchanan) tabling a document or documents concerning program performance measurements. What I find extremely offensive is the fact that I know he held a press conference, or a mini-press conference, this morning. The press is aware of the contents of the documents. It seems to me the practice is that ministers are now tabling documents and running.

As I understand it, Mr. Speaker, this is the sort of practice which is becoming more prevalent. I understand from the documents they have tabled that they have picked the best and ignored the rest, and given them a gold star, which is certainly distorting the truth. Sooner or later we have to put our finger on the problem around here. When I first arrived in 1968 ministers had the guts to stand up when they were tabling documents.

This document or these documents in particular are of some concern because they talk about the economy, value for money, efficiency, the Comptroller General and the Auditor General. This sort of practice must stop. We in the opposition must be given an opportunity to know at least as much as the press. The press knows all about the documents which have been tabled this afternoon. I think it is very unfair and most discriminatory that we do not. It shows a certain amount of irresponsibility on the part of ministers. I would respectfully say, sir, that we have to come to grips with these particular tactics which this government is becoming so famous for in attempting to evade its responsibilities.

My objection is that if ministers can table documents after they have discussed the contents therein with the press, then I think it is incumbent upon them at least to give us the benefit of their views at the time these documents are tabled, rather than tabling documents and running, which seems to be the policy of this government.

Hon. Judd Buchanan (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure what the hon. member is alluding to. I was in Toronto all morning and did not have a press conference. I do not know what he is speaking about, I am sorry.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, there was a conference held—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In any event the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) was not on very strong procedural grounds. I do not know what procedural objection can be taken to a minister tabling documents. The hon. member may have a grievance which he wants to argue about, but in fact there is no action that the Chair can possibly take on the point that he raised.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

COMMEMORATIVE CEREMONY TO MARK D-DAY LANDINGS—OPPORTUNITY TO ASK QUESTIONS

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, in regard to the statement made a moment ago by the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) and to speeches made by other members representing other parties, I stand to be corrected but I assumed that it was possible under the procedure now in effect for a member to ask a question of the minister in regard to the statement he had made following the making of that statement.

If that is correct, in the minister's absence I would like to direct my question to whomever the acting prime minister may be.

[Mr. Alexander.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt) is correct that we have been following a practice which calls for discretion by the Chair in entertaining questions of a minister following a statement made by a minister and then corresponding statements on behalf of the other three parties. However, the existence of a question period itself and the duration of it, if it does exist, is in the discretion of the Chair. I did see the hon. member standing but I was not aware that he wanted to put a question. Frankly, my inclination would be that this was not the kind of statement which would ordinarily lead me to conduct a question period in any case.

In these circumstances, the nature of the statement would be such that I would have had to have some advance notice. The hon. member will be aware that in almost every other case where a statement is made by a minister and it raises an area of some discussion or some disagreement, that is routinely followed by a question period, but with the more ceremonial statements of this sort we have not done that. I think I would exercise my discretion along those lines in that way.

I should also say to the hon. member that if I do start a question period the rule is that questions can only be put to the minister who has made the statement. Therefore, perhaps the hon. member will have another opportunity to put whatever question it was, he had in mind.

DECISION OF GOVERNMENT NOT TO APPEAL PETER TREU CASE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order dealing with ministers' statements. I have just been advised that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lalonde) went outside the House and made a statement to some members of the media to the effect that the government did not intend to appeal the decision in connection with the case of Peter Treu. This, of course, is the right of the minister, but to some extent this matter was the property of the House and it had been raised in the House.

I did attempt to seek the floor in order to put a supplementary question but the Chair did not recognize me, as is its privilege. Tied up with the question of appeal is the question of compensation and matters of that kind. I think it shows a shocking arrogance and contempt on the part of the minister by his failing—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: I see the minister is here now. It has been brought to my attention that the minister made the statement that it is not the government's intention to appeal the case of Peter Treu and that this statement was made outside the House. If I am wrong in that and the minister tells me, I will apologize. However, if I am correct, I think the minister should apologize, or, in the alternative, make a statement in the House at this time.

• (1520)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before recognizing the minister I want to say that the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) did ask a question to this effect a day or two ago. I know that he was trying to get recognized today. Obviously the line he is pursuing is one that ought to have been pursued in the question period. He is telling the House that, through circumstances beyond his control, he was not able to do that. I was not able to recognize him in the question period. That does not alter the basic fact that the hon. member does not have a good procedural ground. If the minister intends to make a statement now, it will have to be with the consent of the House.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I waited during the whole question period for a question on this particular subject. Unfortunately no question came. I instructed my officials to advise counsel for Mr. Treu at noon today that the government would not be appealing the case. Since I had not had the question in this House during question period, when the press asked me about it after question period I indicated my decision not to appeal the case against Mr. Treu.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I will not pursue this further except to say that under those circumstances I will tell the minister that anything I said about his being arrogant and contemptuous I will withdraw, because he was waiting for me to ask the question. That I was not recognized was not his fault. It is not often that ministers sit around waiting for me to ask questions; I hope it becomes a habit. I certainly hope that under the circumstances the Chair's very long memory will be kept in full gear so that tomorrow or the next day this matter might indeed be pursued.

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): On the same point of order, I feel that I have a valid point of order with regard to what the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lalonde) has just said, that he made the statement outside the House because he did not have an opportunity to answer inside the House. I, and I am sure other hon. members, fail to see why he could not have made such a statement on motions.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member will recognize that if ministers were to avail themselves of an opportunity to make such a reply, which might be only a single line, on statements on motions on a regular basis, that procedure would get very cluttered indeed.

HOST RENT-A-CAR LTD.

Question No. 597—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Did the Attorney General of Canada register a Statement of Claim in the City of Winnipeg, July 24, 1978 against Host Rent-a-Car Ltd. for total arrears, including interest, in the amount of $863,679.96 and, if so, what is the total amount of arrears and interest owed to the Department of Transport by the Company from July 24, 1978 to date?

2. Does Section 27 of the Contract Lease Specifications for Car Rental Concessions state, that in case of non-payment of fees, default, breach or non-observance made by the lessee, the Department may terminate the agreement between Host Rent-a-Car Ltd. and the Department of Transport and also, if required by the Minister, remove all supplies, articles, equipment, materials, effects and things brought or placed thereon or therein by the lessee and, if so, for what reason did the Department not implement Section 27 of this tender contract?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): 1. Yes. The arrears, including interest, from July 24, 1978, to November 15, 1978, total $1,119,260.

2. Yes. The Crown instituted its statement of claim against Host after due consideration of the available legal recourses.

STONE CARVERS, CARPENTERS, PAINTERS EMPLOYED BY DPW

Question No. 623—Mr. Friesen:

How many persons are employed as (a) stone carvers (b) carpenters (c) painters by the Department of Public Works and, in each case, how many are in the salary range (i) $5,000 to $8,000 (ii) $8,001 to $10,000 (iii) $10,001 to $12,000 (iv) $12,001 to $14,000 (v) $14,001 to $16,000 (vi) $16,001 to $18,000 (vii) $18,001 to $20,000 (viii) $20,001 or more?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Public Works Canada employ:

	Salary Range	(a) Stone Carvers	(b) Carpenters	(c) Painters
(i)	5,000 to 8,000	nil	nil	nil
(ii)	8,001 to 10,000	nil	nil	nil
(iii)	10,001 to 12,000	1	8	1
(iv)	12,001 to 14,000	nil	20	25
(v)	14,001 to 16,000	2	55	23
(vi)	16,001 to 18,000	1	24	3
(vii)	18,001 to 20,000	nil	1	nil
(viii)	20,001 or more	nil	3	nil

ICE RECONNAISSANCE

Question No. 696—Mr. Forrestall:

1. With reference to the $1,200,000 spending cutback that will result in a reduction in the level of flying time contracted for ice reconnaissance purposes, which contracts currently held in the Arctic and Atlantic areas will be reduced or terminated?

2. What percentage of the total (a) budget (b) flying time for ice reconnaissance purposes does such reduction represent?

3. What part of the reduction in the level of flying time represents time contracted for over Atlantic areas as compared to Arctic areas?

4. Will there be a corresponding reduction in ground operations as a result of the reduction in flying time?

Hon. Len Marchand (Minister of State (Environment)): 1. Most ice reconnaissance is flown under a single multi-year contract which remains in force, but flying time will be cut back to the minimum allowed in the contract.

2. The reduction represents approximately (a) 13 per cent of the proposed budget and (b) about 17 per cent in contract flying hours.

3. Likely in the order of 40 hours or 4 per cent of the planned total for the Atlantic areas as compared to 90 hours or 6 per cent of the planned total for the Arctic.

4. There will be no reduction in service output, for most cuts will be made in remote sensor development and in the system documenting where these sensor records were obtained.

MULTICULTURALISM

Question No. 735—Mr. Mitges:

1. Has the Multiculturalism Directorate developed a method of evaluating the (a) effeciency (b) effectiveness of its programmes which are involved in the distribution of grants and/or contributions and (i) if so, what is the method (ii) if not, for what reason?

2. With respect to the above programmes, for the fiscal year (a) 1975-76 (b) 1976-77 (c) 1977-78 (d) 1978-79, has the Directorate made any attempt to evaluate their (i) efficiency (ii) effectiveness and, if so, what were the results?

Hon. Norman A. Cafik (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): 1 and 2. Up to the present time evaluation of the multiculturalism programs has been an informal but constant and on-going process, leading, in 1977, to a review of the entire multiculturalism program within the Secretary of State Department. As a result of this review new directions were given to the program, with the introduction of new activities and the expansion of existing projects; new and revised criteria were established; and Treasury Board approval obtained for additional resources to carry out the new directions over the next five years. The directorate is now in the initial stages of developing a formal plan to evaluate the efficiency and effectiveness of its programs which are involved in the distribution of grants and/or contributions.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. COSSITT—DELAY IN ANSWERING QUESTIONS

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise just briefly to draw attention to the same four questions that I have drawn attention to on at least five or six occasions. In the absence of the parliamentary secretary, I raised this point about a week ago with the hon. member who stood in for him. I asked if I could be told when these long standing questions would be answered.

One question is No. 4, concerning members of the Canadian Transport Commission or their wives who have passes with Air Canada. This question has been outstanding on various order papers for two years and eight months.

Another concerns purchases made by the Prime Minister's office in excess of $86,000 from public funds. I asked what this represented. It has been outstanding for three years, despite the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said in this House "Let it be made public. Put it in all the papers, I don't care". That was one year ago.

I would also ask about two other questions. Question No. 9 concerns the invasion of privacy, and so on, of public servants in non-security risk positions who have been fingerprinted. I asked why this was being done, how many have been done and so on. This question has been outstanding for two years.

Housing

Finally, question No. 10 concerns Martin Goldfarb and Goldfarb Consultants, also known as pollsters for the Liberal party. I asked how much work they had done for the government. This question has been outstanding for one year and seven months on various order papers.

I wonder if the parliamentary secretary, as I said before many times, instead of giving percentages of how well he has done, could tell us about the questions he has not answered which are embarrassing to the government. I assume the reasons for not answering these questions can only lie in that category. Can I have some assurance as to when these questions will be answered?

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is complaining about four questions only which have remained unanswered. That is, of course, because we have answered a very large number of his questions during the last few months as he might have noticed. So he can rest assured. Once again, I would remind him that he has always been treated very fairly by parliament, and we will continue to give his questions serious consideration.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Friday, February 23, consideration of the motion of Mr. Ouellet that Bill C-29, to amend the National Housing Act and the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act and to make other related amendments, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mrs. Jean E. Pigott (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, before we adjourned debate on this bill on Friday, I had been explaining the failure of this government over the last eight years to commit itself to any national urban strategy. Moreover, as late as this past week end the minister in Montreal reiterated the stark fact that housing is not a priority of this government. It is interesting to see that for the debate on this bill the minister is not in the House.

Mr. Paproski: That shows how much he cares.

Mrs. Pigott: That's right.

Mr. Lalonde: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. lady will realize that the minister had an important press conference in Montreal at noon today. He is on his way to this House. He will be here a little later this afternoon.

Mrs. Pigott: It is funny that press conferences always take precedence over what is going on in the House of Commons.

Mr. Boulanger: Where's Joe?

Mrs. Pigott: I am interested in the minister whose bill this is.

Mr. Boulanger: I am interested in Joe Clark.

Mrs. Pigott: You will have a lot of him later. The government, in the words of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner), believes that housing is a luxury and will always be considered a luxury. I can only relate the facts of the latest available study, including all of the ones I have from the minister's own office.

More than 40 per cent of Canadian home owners had personal incomes in 1976 of less than $10,000 and 67 per cent of them had incomes under $15,000—and the government think that mortgage deductibility is just for the rich. Less than 6 per cent of all Canadian home owners reported personal incomes of more than $25,000 in 1976. If one takes household income, which is the total income in a household, even if more than one spouse works or there are working dependants, the figures for 1976 show that 35 per cent of all home owners in Canada had an income under $10,000 a year. Slightly more than 10 per cent of all Canadian home owners recorded household incomes of more than $25,000.

These are the facts about Canadian home owners who the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) claim are too rich to deserve any kind of tax break from their government in Ottawa. In terms of occupation, it is worth noting that the largest single category of homeowners, almost 35 per cent, are skilled or unskilled labourers. When we get out on the hustings, Mr. Speaker, I wonder what the other two parties are prepared to do, and will they go into the union halls and factories and tell these Canadians that they are too well off to warrant a tax reduction?

What about the second largest category of home owners? They are retired people and account for 19 per cent of all home owners. Are they the rich?

An hon. Member: Perhaps.

Mrs. Pigott: Well, tell that to the home owners. Tell them they should not have a tax break. In fact, these classified home owners, the top income category, account for little more than 6 per cent of all Canadian home owners. The minister spent most of his time last Friday discussing the benefits of extending tax reductions to the beleaguered Canadian home owner. Like a variety of economists, columnists and politicians who criticize our proposal, it has been an interesting exercise to watch the number of Liberal government spokesmen assume the role of critic, one usually reserved for our side of the House. We have had the more positive role of taking the government side. Let me assure hon. members opposite, Mr. Speaker, that this is a position my party and my leader readily accept.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Pigott: I do not wish to dwell too long on this subject, but long enough to say that our proposed policy is one which offers tax recognition and relief to Canadians who have worked hard and saved to buy homes of their own. These are the forgotten people of the Canadian tax system who put up most of the money and make relatively little demand on many public services.

The Progressive Conservative party does not accept the Liberal no-growth scenario of the future. It means death to our communities. Our party is the only one to accept that growth must be an economic policy. Originally, the concept of government was that taxpayers would finance the administration to contribute to the economy. We now seem to be caught in the position of trying to administer the economy to finance the government. For 16 per cent of every Liberal government dollar goes to finance the national debt, which will reach $100 billion next year.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mrs. Pigott: The government will have the dubious distinction of being known as the government of default by default. On behalf of the Conservative party, the future government, I make no apology for the fact that we recognize it is high time that Canadians were given some recognition and some incentive to keep up the hard work on which this country was built. That means we would not continue with a tax system which penalizes young couples who want a home and young children. Mr. Speaker, it means turning our tax system around to reward those who produce and those who save in order to provide the capital for the expansion of our economic base, which in turn provides the jobs for our chidren.

After the minister's trip to Toronto on Wednesday of last week, I thought it would be interesting to read the Globe and Mail. It said:

> No, Mr. Ouellet's proposal falls down on its own demerits. Whatever its failings, Mr. Clark's mortgage deductibility program was aimed at reducing the high inventory of houses on the market, prompting a boom in the housing industry, and reactivating the economy. What Mr. Ouellet suggests is, quite simply, a redistribution of wealth, and the obvious question is, why is he cloaking a plan to cut taxes in something that resembles a housing policy?
>
> The answer, we fear, is that the federal government, anxious to be seen as all things by all people, delights in creating special categories which appeal to special sectors of voters. Mothers get a cheque, families with low income get a cheque, everyone gets a cheque—less a policy than a determined effort to disguise a lack of policy. With any luck, the builders' reaction—one of disappointment—should convince Mr. Ouellet, and his government, to leave this particular kite on the conference floor.

This is one time I happen to really agree with the Globe and Mail.

One of the remaining elements in the bill emphasizes new expanded use of NHA mortgage insurance. In point of fact, the aggregate maximum of loan insurance has been increased to $40 billion and we hope to spend more time in committee in this area. The AHOP program has been dropped in favour of a graduated mortgage payment. Major lending institutions do not support this financing technique and to gain this support the government proposes to implement a quick settlement package. In the words of one analyst, "there are no longer any checks and balances; no rules for circumspection. The borrowers can borrow with hardly any money down. The lenders can lend with scant attention to risk. And CMHC can subsidize with magnanimous indifference."

I would like to read a little more, Mr. Speaker. I think it is important to quote, for instance, from the magazine "Finance". I refer to an item headed "The federal mortgage mess: will the banks help bail out Ottawa?" It is by Stephen Raikes:

> It started out last winter as an election plum—yet another program to help thousands of "average Canadians" buy homes they would otherwise be hard pressed to afford.
> Now, several months after the election-campaign-that-never-was, Ottawa's Graduated Payment Mortgage (GPM) program looks more like a badly shriveled prune—
> Suppose for instance that a house buyer needs to borrow $35,000 at 10¼ per cent for 25 years . . . The unpleasant but less obvious fact is that over the life of the debt the GPM will cost the borrower $9,324 more than the standard mortgage would—$105,024 compared with $95,700. In those early years his payments aren't large enough even to cover all the interest, let alone retire any of the principal. As a result, he's obliged later on to pay interest on his unpaid interest. Thus his debt, rather than being retired, gradually increases—
> Understandably, there are people in the world of finance who wonder whether there is a house buyer anywhere in Canada who really needs that kind of "help" from his federal government.

W. Peter Carter, past chairman of the mortgage committee of the Canadian Bankers' Association, has coined his own term for this. He calls it "GPM, the Permadebt." I think this is a very serious side to the graduated payment mortgage, Mr. Speaker, and we must take much more time to debate it. We must spend time in committee on its detail.

On the one hand we have the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) who wants to continue to wrestle inflation to the ground, and on the other we have the Minister of State for Urban Affairs phasing in graduated payment mortgages based on future inflationary increases in prices and incomes. We are putting people into a dreadful box if we pass this piece of legislation.

The Minister of Finance claimed some months ago that the money spent under the present government went to build houses and increase supply, not to create expectation and demand higher prices. In fact, scarcity of serviced lots and high carrying costs due to zoning delays combined with this government's own demand initiatives equal unprecedented housing inflation over the past four years. This problem is now compounded by the fact that residential construction activity is bound to decline if the current large inventory of newly constructed but unoccupied dwellings is not absorbed.

To compensate for this decline in residential building activity the minister has encouraged the home building industry to become actively involved in the new co-operative and non-profit form of housing. In a speech he made last Friday the minister went to great lengths to describe this. But what worries me is the statement the hon. gentleman made last September when he was discussing the CMHC budget cuts. The minister urged sponsors of low income housing projects to give up their preoccupation with the design and construction of new housing. He went on to say, and I quote:

> I believe that low income housing sponsors would be wise to consider seriously the "best buy" principle and look toward existing housing for their clients rather than think in terms of new structures.

I hope the people in the private sector will recognize what the minister was saying here. I am warning them now that he will probably try to get rid of the 53,000 AHOP homes before he lets them go ahead.

● (1540)

Mr. Adamson of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation indicated last year in a speech in Windsor that while the new non-profit program promises to do a better job of bringing adequate accommodation within the reach of many people, it is not likely to have a massive effect on the production of new housing. I think this is one thing this House and this government must realize. While it is imperative that we encourage this side of our community life, we must realize that it represents only a very small proportion of what must be done in the housing market.

As for the termination of the old AHOP, the minister is certainly aware of my evaluation of that program. However, I believe it is important for us to examine for the record the actual success of this program because I believe it mirrors the future of the graduated mortgage payment as it is being proposed at the moment. The graduated mortgage payment is much worse, from the government's point of view, because there will be an automatic payout with any account three months in arrears.

I would like to draw the attention of the House to the fact that AHOP foreclosures increased by 463 per cent in 1978 over 1977. That is to say, the number of AHOP foreclosures increased from 265 to 1,492. AHOP foreclosures now account for 56 per cent of all mortgages acquired by the mortgage insurance fund. Furthermore, we have stated that the default rate approximates 10 per cent. In recent correspondence the minister indicated that it is 1.62 per cent of direct loans administered by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, up marginally, he said, from the 1.31 per cent of a year ago. However, a year ago in the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs he indicated that the default rate was 5.6 per cent, up from 5.1 per cent, and records show that by March of 1978 the rate was 8 per cent.

Now the minister states that there are 36,000 AHOP accounts under administration. One year ago there were 39,000. Changing the definition does not remove the fact that there are hundreds, if not thousands, of AHOP purchasers who are now having difficulties in meeting their shelter expenditures. It is a common joke within the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation that the minister is operating the best key club in Ontario because people just mail in their keys.

Meetings called "disaster meetings" are held at the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation with regard to AHOP foreclosures, but the minister will not even answer our questions about them in this House. What is even more alarming is the growing number of reports daily about lack of quality construction in many AHOP homes, in violation of the national building code. I am aware that in the spirit of good politics a man should mend his fences. If this holds true for this program, the minister had better start "fixin". The question this raises is, what does it actually mean when a project is advertised as "government approved" or "CMHC approved"? According to the minister or his ex-parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), the slogan or advertisement "CMHC approved" means nothing. Indeed, according to the ex-parliamentary secretary, the government could not care less what happens to the houses. The only inspection which is supposed to be carried out pertains to the advancement of mortgage money. We know from the growing number of reports and the increase in the number of active RCMP investigations that the government cannot even manage this. This is one of the hidden tragedies.

How many people have driven by these projects and seen the label of the Government of Canada on them, and how many have thought that they were buying a good product? This is a serious matter which must be investigated and rectified.

I found it particularly enlightening to review another confidential study of the department which reads in part as follows:

> Provision of insurance entails appraisal and inspection of units and this served to provide a kind of guarantee to purchasers on the quality and workmanship of their unit.

The question, of course, is whether or not we can describe the kind of guarantee which is referred to in that cabinet document.

Before I leave completely the housing mortgage issue, I think I should make it clear that if the minister had anything to say last week in Toronto, one thing was clear: housing is not a priority of this government at this time. We on this side feel that housing is a basic right of every Canadian, and to us it is priority.

If the so-called Canadian housing crisis means anything, the lack of affordable and meaningful choice is its characteristic. Many Canadians have been forced into the no housing choice position in which a third to one half of their regular income goes for shelter. In this process they do not necessarily gain better quality but may be forced into accommodation which is considered by any set of criteria to be substandard. The changing pattern of ownership and tenancy is a response to what is available, not an exercise of choice.

To many Canadians this lack of choice means that the user requirements are not being met. User requirements have physical, social and environmental aspects. Physical requirements relate to a concern about the individual house and its heating, plumbing and wiring systems. They pertain to structural safety and to the development and determination of housing standards which will engender good public health. At least half the total housing stock in the 1970s was created prior to 1945, and a fair proportion of it was built in the first quarter of the century or earlier. This very substantial amount of reasonably good old housing deserves our profound attention during the balance of this century. This party feels very strongly that this is a priority.

User requirements, however, should be seen in a much wider context. A dwelling is located in a neighbourhood, and much more attention should be paid to the wider environment as one of the important aspects of user concern. Therefore, user requirements must be conceived as social and environmental in nature rather than merely physical.

One of the toughest tasks for business today is to foresee what tomorrow's customers will want to buy. The industry with the bleakest outlook is housing, and that has ominous implications for the rest of the economy. That is why mortgage interest deductibility and property tax deduction proposals are part of our policy. We care about the economy as well as about housing.

Earl Bederman, assistant vice president and economist for the Permanent Trust Company, has said:

> The future for housing isn't what it used to be. The annual population growth from now until the end of the century will be 1 per cent compared with 3 per cent of the 1950s. Actual requirements for new housing will take a dive in the mid-1980s.

Bederman estimates that by the end of the century requirements will be 40 per cent lower than they are today. Over the long run, and I quote again:

> Real estates markets are likely to get more fragile.

As house prices decline, home owners could find themselves with high mortgages but lower equity. We are getting very close to the point where equity-carrying cost ratios will tilt in favour of more walk-away situations and outright defaults. Price declines in the order of 25 per cent to 30 per cent cannot be ruled out. That is why we have to have a review of AHOP, and we must look very carefully at graduated mortgage payments.

What opportunities there will be in construction should be in smaller-sized homes, duplexes and row housing. The renovation business will boom. It already accounts for 35 per cent of the residential construction market, and analysts feel that it will continue to be the fastest growing sector over the next few years. This must be encouraged by the federal government.

Experimentation in the social and environmental aspects of user requirements should be actively encouraged. Experimentation is required at four levels: the street, the immediate neighbourhood, the subregions within an urban area and the broader community. In short, we must have emphasis on experimentation. Funds must be made available which make much more possible active experimentation in new ways of building our communities. To this end, government and businesses must provide the funds necessary for experimentation to adapt our communities to new forms of living in the remaining part of this century. We must find incentives for the unorthodox builder. The "thou shalt not" philosophy should be replaced by a policy of encouraging social and physical innovation. The Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the provincial housing corporations are in a strategic position to provide leadership in such an effort.

The great tragedy is the wasted years of this ministry. I find it strange to read again the comments which the minister made last Friday. Never once did he mention what was going to happen to the people, the policies and the projects that had been started in the ministry. Who is going to care for this in the federal government when the ministry is phased out on April 1? What will happen to CMHC? It is one of the saddest things to have to stand here today and comment about that wonderful organization of the past called CMHC. The minister seems to want to change its name, and I wonder why.

In the question period I asked for an investigation into CMHC by the Auditor General because I believe we must clean up a sad and desperate situation out there. It is rather hard to read into the record what has happened to CMHC under the direction of the minister. I could talk about York Place, luxury hotels, Cloverdale, I could mention Virginia Park, the great home insulation program that never got off the ground, that great tragedy called Walter Rudnicki, the $15,000 staff tournaments, Quigley Road, and land banking. I could read into the record the series of five articles in which the Hamilton Spectator wrote about such things as $500,000 for 12 basements, the RCMP probe into housing disasters, 150 Sanford, how the developers' pie was sweetened. But what I need to read really is the very fine editorial which appeared in the Spectator of February 3 entitled "Time to Evaluate CMHC". It reads:

When short-term political considerations become more important than good planning and competent management, taxpayers can expect to find themselves footing the bills without receiving any benefits.

In a probing series of articles published last week, Spectator reporter. John Kernaghan revealed how the corporation has been used as a political tool for several years now. As a result, CMHC may have wasted millions of taxpayers' dollars over the last ten years.

If CMHC had stuck to its original purpose and remained a lending institution, chances are it would be a respected and substantial part of today's housing industry. However, government pressures for social involvement and the consequent use of CMHC as a way to influence voters through such programs as low income housing projects, native housing projects and modified handouts such as the Assisted Home Ownership Plan have left the Crown corporation with some major, and unnecessary, financial white elephants on its hands.

CMHC's current problems apparently stem from a combination of political pressure coupled with a lack of ministerial responsibility and an absence of accountability . . . On the other hand, there is also considerable evidence that the federal government frequently ignored the recommendations of CMHC inspectors and officials.

We have terrible tragedies which should be investigated, Mr. Speaker. There is one called 150 Sanford. I believe that there should be an immediate investigation into this area. The editorial goes on to read:

As a first step in cleaning up CMHC's problems, the minister responsible for the agency must exert control over the corporation's plans and its budget—

Finally, CMHC should not be used as yet another job creation agency or as a vehicle for social form. Its original purpose was to provide funds to home owners, not to developers, and it should return to its role as a funding agency.

To a great extent, the problem stems from the present government's lack of coherent planning and its tendency to distort valid programs to political ends. The unemployment insurance scheme and CMHC are prime examples of the messes that can result.

Since Canada now has a declining birth rate and a temporary housing surplus, it is an ideal time to have the Auditor General review the management policies of CMHC and determine how well taxpayers' money is being spent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whiteway: The minister will not do it.

Mrs. Pigott: We have asked for it.

Mr. Whiteway: Maybe he is having a press conference to resign.

Mrs. Pigott: To come back to my comments, sir, may I point out that policymakers must come to recognize that we have a considerable technical knowledge of house building, of the servicing of land and of the provision of physical facilities within a house, on a street or in a neighbourhood, but that we have very little knowledge about meeting people's social and community needs. A major objective is to obtain that knowledge.

This is not to say that we should attempt to obtain this understanding in isolation. Whatever experimentation is going to be tried should be intimately embraced within the systems approach. It should be part of the effort to obtain a better understanding of the urban system. Already many innovations have been made in Canadian urban life. What has often been lacking is the monitoring of these innovations. It is only through organized and systematic monitoring of experiments that answers can be obtained on what works and does not. Probably the major concern that needs to be addressed in housing today is the affordability problem and the promise of industrialization within the housing industry. It is to their credit that the industry has been able to produce as well as it has within the constraints that have developed around it and within it.

However, increased attention must be given to the regional variations in housing construction. As well, qualitative criteria for human habitations must be incorporated. It can no longer remain a policy of guaranteeing mortgage risk only to have the house deteriorate some months after the work is finished. The national building code should not be a static document. Input must come from architects, scientists, psychologists and many others in the formulation of a realistic code that will reflect regional quantitative and qualitative standards for housing.

Other constraints include financing, training and land assembly. I should make reference to the land component. Although a recent study, the Greenspan report, indicated that it was a mistake for government to have initiated land assembly programs when they did, the fact is that affordability and choice could be bettered if policies were launched which utilized the public funded land banks now in existence. We must address ourselves to land banks. We have close to $1 billion invested in them and there should be a well thought out plan for them. I speak with experience because Carlsbad Springs in my constituency is one of the saddest blots on our history. The land there was brought by Mr. Teron before the 1972 election. What happened is that many of the good market gardeners of this region who were displaced, first, by the green belt went out to Carlsbad Springs and were then displaced the second time. People have not received fair compensation, but that is not the only issue. The sad thing is they cannot get a long-term lease and they have no idea what is to happen to that land. Why invest a second time in your life in a good farm if you do not know what the future is?

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a point of order?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I cannot recognize the hon. member, he is not in his proper place in the House.

Mr. Francis: Yes, I am, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): My humble apologies.

Mr. Francis: I am sure the hon. member would like to acknowledge the fact, with regard to her reference to Mr. Teron, that he did not join CMHC until 1973. Therefore he could hardly have acquired the Carlsbad Springs area in 1972 when he was in private business.

● (1600)

Mrs. Pigott: I am glad to see the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) being so close to this side; it is wonderful. Perhaps I am mistaken but I think the hon. member would find that Mr. Teron put together the whole—

Mr. Francis: The hon. member is mistaken.

Mrs. Pigott: I will continue, Mr. Speaker. Returning to the area of land banking, in the long run the forms and procedures for those measures of public ownership which might be required must be the object of study and consultation among the three levels of government. Although this and other improvements should be considered, I should like to emphasize that a fundamental reconsideration of housing policy is required if technology is to be employed adequately.

The absence of an effective national policy for public deployment of land and for application of up-to-date concepts of land usage ultimately must be remedied. Otherwise, alternative policies will be mere stopgaps to be eroded as the built-in constraints take a toll on the national effort. As a parliamentarian, I realize there is an urgent necessity to find a new role for government, sensitive to the complexities of contemporary urban problems.

In the interest of freeing the creative potential of government, I am suggesting a major retreat from processes of heavy bureaucratic supervision of urban programs involving two or more levels of government. Governments as providers of public services must recognize that passing papers of approvals and counterapprovals is a costly, soul-destroying process which can grind the system to a halt. Changing the style of governing will take a new sense of maturity, but trade-offs in the way of greater productivity and rationalization of roles should more than offset the imagined losses of control.

One by-product of the new style would be the releasing of provincial and federal governments to concentrate on public policy issues appropriate to their place in the total government system. In urban policy these would be issues related to broad development patterns, the structure of population, employment and services, and the structure of underlying financial allocations and industrial strategies which reverberate on the entire urban system. These sentiments are echoed in a book entitled: "Changing Canadian Cities—The Next 25 Years" by Len Gertler and Ron Crowley. This book contains one of the best quotations concerning urban policy which I have read in a long time. In part it reads as follows:

> Looking at the evolution of policy and government I cannot resist the observation that Canadian urban policies are unfulfilled. As a nation in search of a formula to stay united, we are still attempting to carry over into this age of uncertainty the attitudes and styles of government from long ago. The adjustment we make to the demands of our time may determine whether the chroniclers of 2000 A.D. will characterize our period as the "age of wisdom and mature democracy" or of "mismanagement and misguided authority".

The government has failed in controlling inflation, in creating employment for hundreds of young people, and has also missed one of the greatest opportunities of this decade. By concentrating on housing starts the government missed laying the groundwork and planning for Canadian urban living in the 1980s and 1990s. It did not concentrate on affordability and quality of shelter. It did not listen to the grassroots of the nation, the people who want to create community living which will make urban centres liveable and maintain the fundamental social building blocks which make up our society: the family unit, school, church, the work place and the municipal hall. Such a close relationship would maintain and foster the great democratic way of life in this young nation.

The Minister of State for Urban Affairs has failed miserably. I should like to refer to a document entitled: "Report Card for Ministry of State for Urban Affairs". It is the report card of a student, "André Ouellet". The report card refers to various subjects. Under the subject "AHOP" the grading is "poor". Under the column "Comment", it reads: "Course dropped—all government students were failing!" Under the subject "ARP", the grading is "fair" and the comment reads: "Mediocre course with questionable benefits".

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Pigott: I think hon. members opposite should read the report card. Under the subject "CHIP and NIP", the grading was "good" and the comment reads:

> CHIP—poorly attended.
> NIP—needs substantially greater funding.

Under "Community Services Program", the grading is "poor" and the comment reads:

> Student should register with the provincial instructors before intruding into their classroom.

Under "CMHC", the grading is "poor" and the comment is: "Course is in a mess—should be investigated". Under "Federal-Provincial Relationships", again the minister failed and the comment reads as follows:

Student lacked the basic skills required for this course—namely co-operation, consultation and agreement.

Under the subject "Graduated Payment Mortgage", again the minister failed and the comment indicates that the "student should drop this course immediately". Under the subject "RRAP", the minister received a "good" grading, but the comment reads: "Needs more effort and greater attention". Under "Attendance", the comment reads:

Student should attend to his duties rather than politicking in Quebec.

Of course that is what the minister is doing today.

Under the subject "Appearance", the minister has received another "good" grading and the comment reads: "Student looks good". Under "Administration", the grading is "poor" and the comment reads: "This trait is noticeably absent from the student". Under "Creativity", the minister receives an "excellent" grading with the following comment: "Student is unsurpassed in dreaming up new schemes". The minister receives a "poor" grading under the subject "Punctuality".

An hon. Member: What is your policy?

Mrs. Pigott: Our policy is to get the economy going with mortgage deductibility; that is our policy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Pigott: The comment under the subject "Punctuality" read: "Student is often late for period of oral questioning".

Some hon. Members: Right on!

Mrs. Pigott: The last page of the report card reads as follows:

It is the decision of the testing committee that André Ouellet—

The minister does not pass with honours, does not pass with distinction, does not pass, does not pass on condition, and does not fail. Instead, under the notation "Other" the following appears:

André is required to take a minimum of four years remedial training in opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: A wonderful report.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Martin).

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Will the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mrs. Pigott) permit a question?

Mrs. Pigott: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Housing

Mr. Martin: I know the hon. member was a member of a recent parliamentary delegation which went to Washington. A little earlier the hon. member spoke very eloquently in support of the principle of the deduction of mortgage interest for income tax purposes. I know this policy has some trouble finding complete acceptance on the other side of the House. I am thinking of the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) or any member who is from an area with many apartment homes. What was the general consensus the delegation received from the various distinguished people whom they saw in Washington as to the advisability of such a policy? How did the Americans feel about it?

Mrs. Pigott: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have this opportunity; I have been hoping for it all afternoon. We went into the office of one congressman who had been 14 years in Congress. We talked to him about the policy.

Mr. Collenette: Name him.

Mrs. Pigott: He is a congressman from upper New York State.

An hon. Member: Nobody knows the hon. member's name either.

Mrs. Pigott: In any event, the congressman indicated that the American's dream is to own a home. This is part and parcel of the motivation of many Americans. They dream of owning their own land and, using the words of my Scottish grandmother, their own "but and ben".

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

• (1610)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member is on a point of order.

An hon. Member: Mr. Speaker, she is answering a question. It is not a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. The parliamentary secretary sought the floor to ask a question and the hon. lady is answering that question.

Mr. Crombie: Take them one at a time.

Mrs. Pigott: I will try. This man went on to say that owning your own home has been one of the dynamic measures which produced the great economy of the United States. It was one of the things which I noticed about the politicians. I will agree that the economists did criticize the issue, but in talking to them privately they all said it was one of the things which they could not change because it was so fundamental to the beliefs of the people of their country that they should own homes.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We have a social conscience on this side.

Mrs. Pigott: Secondly, we asked about the renters. My friend has also said that this policy did help the renters because one third of all renters want to own their own home, one third of the renters are people with special social problems who need assistance, around which the programs should be designed, and the other third are senior citizens who have no wish to own their own home.

Some of my colleagues had a very difficult time in Washington because they knew in their hearts that things were not as they seemed. I ask hon. members in this House if they have ever talked to a revenue man who wanted to cut taxes. I have never talked to a revenue man who wanted to cut taxes, so I discounted the people from the revenue department.

There are so many economists today with their ideas. I listen to politicians because politicians know what the people want, but not the others.

An hon. Member: Some of us do.

Mrs. Pigott: The good ones on this side do. I hope that answers the hon. member's question.

[Translation]

Mr. Corbin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member quoted a member of the U.S. Congress, a New York State representative. It is the practice in this House when quoting someone to give the person's name. I wonder if the hon. member could name the U.S. congressman she claims to be quoting. I think this is important for the current debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hon. member referred to a certain New York State senator or governor but did not quote him. As she did not specifically quote a New York State governor or representative, this rule does not apply.

[English]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: Go back to sleep.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria on a question of privilege.

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Speaker, the deputy whip of the Progressive Conservative party is harassing me, He is not even in his seat. He told me to go on sleeping. I would like—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. I think that all hon. members will agree that if the Chair had to rule on remarks shouted from the various sides it would be very difficult. We rule only on matters relating to hon. members who have the floor. I now recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) told us in his speech last Friday that Canadians are among the best housed people in the world, that there is no housing crisis in Canada, that we have an acceptable level of housing production and that the cost of housing is within the financial capacity of those who live in homes. It was such a pleasant and complacent picture that some of us, I am sure, were wondering why we have any housing programs at all and, indeed, whether any are needed.

There is a great deal of distance between the minister's picture of Canadian housing and the experience of the poor people in Winnipeg and elsewhere. Just two years ago the then chairman of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, Mr. Teron, made a speech in Calgary in November 1976, and he was quoted as saying:

> When 280,000 families in Canada pay more than 50 per cent of their family income for housing, 550,000 families in Canada pay more than 45 per cent, 820,000 families pay more than 25 per cent, and two-thirds of Canadians in need of housing cannot afford to buy or rent without a subsidy from their fellow man, we have a fundamental problem—we must take reasonable action now, or more drastic action later.

Has the situation changed in just over two years from the time Mr. Teron made that speech? Just over a few weeks ago there was a special report on housing which appeared in the Winnipeg Tribune which said among other things:

> Several thousand Winnipeg families, including about 3,000 headed by single women, face a bleak winter in housing conditions described as "poor," "substandard" and "dumpy," while three levels of government back away from the low-income housing problem.

Recently, there was a strange situation in my city where the city council, composed mostly of Conservatives, refused to go ahead with a $1 million low-income housing project, despite the fact that in so doing they were rejecting substantial amounts of money offered by the federal government and the provincial government. The federal response to the reality of low income policy was nicely summarized by a CMHC regional economist in Winnipeg, Mr. Karl Falk, who said:

> Our official party line is that housing is a provincial matter, we are only in there by default.

No provincial government has the financial resources to singlehandedly tackle the housing problem, but we in Manitoba must deal with a Tory provincial government which has not authorized any new family public housing since it took office. They want to see if there is a need, according to the chairman of the provincial housing corporation, before they go ahead.

One group which the minister did not listen to while deciding that Canada has no housing problem is the Institute for Urban Affairs in Winnipeg which, incidentally, is headed by a very prominent Liberal, Mr. Lloyd Axworthy, the man who they would like to see as a Liberal candidate in the next federal election and who spent several years in Ottawa as special assistant to the then minister of housing, Mr. Hellyer. The institute's assistant director said in the same issue of the Tribune:

> It leaves me very disturbed because someone has to take responsibility for making sure housing needs are met. No one seems willing to play that role, and the private sector is not going to pick up the slack.

That is what that institute thinks of the federal government's so-called housing policy.

There is a great deal of slack in the Winnipeg housing situation which could be taken up. A recent report found that my city has both a large stock of older, poor quality, deteriorating housing in the inner city and an inner city community which is deteriorating in strength and vitality. Thirty-seven per cent of Winnipeg renters pay more than one quarter of their income on rent, a situation which is worse only in Vancouver among the major Canadian cities. People in Winnipeg see nothing in the housing situation about which they can be complacent, despite what the minister said last Friday.

What will be the effect of this bill when it is enacted? This bill will implement the changes which were included in the amendments to the National Housing Act last May under the title "New Directions in Housing." This statement called for a number of things, among which were included:

—an end to the generous aid to co-ops and non-profits started during the minority parliament and its replacement by less expensive subsidies.

—an end to rent supplements (50-50 federal-provincial) for co-op, non-profit, provincial or municipal housing units.

—an end to loans to provinces or municipalities for the construction of public housing and to the 50-50 sharing of operating losses in such projects; CMHC will continue to offer provinces a partnership arrangement in public housing (federal government pays 75 per cent of capital cost and operating losses).

● (1620)

The provinces do not care much for this option as it involves too much interference by Central Mortgage and Housing. One of the goals of the new directions was supposedly to end this type of interference.

There is also an end to the assisted home ownership program and an end to the assisted rental program—both of which received such glowing comments when they were proposed by this government—and the introduction of the graduated payment mortgage which was insured but not offered by CMHC. Like AHOP, it simply postpones the monthly mortgage payment you cannot afford now to a later date when your situation will be even worse.

There was also the expansion of the types of mortgages which CMHC can insure to make up for the fact CMHC no longer lends money. There was an expansion of the residential rehabilitation program, but without the funds to implement it. There was an end to the municipal infrastructure program for water and sewer construction, the municipal incentive program which provided grants for medium density housing, and the neighbourhood improvement program and its replacement by the community services program which provides less money for a wider range of projects.

I should like to quote again from the article in the Winnipeg Tribune of January 31, 1979, on the effect of just one of the proposals. Referring to the non-profit housing program, the article reads as follows:

Under the old program, CMHC provided low interest loans for such non-profit housing corporations as the provincial government's MHRC and native people's KINEW. While it attached the string of rents held to 25 per cent of tenants' incomes (where rental housing was involved), it made that string elastic through rent supplements. Under the new program, financing must be obtained through the private sector—

The private sector does not want this burden.

—although the federal government will provide generous interest reduction grants. But to qualify for the grants, the non-profit corporations must meet the 25 per cent rental requirements without the elastic feature of rent supplements. Section 44-1B of the National Housing Act, which provided for rent supplements to fill the gap between the cost of housing and the 25 per cent of income standard of affordability, has been discontinued.

Stan Fulham, head of KINEW—

KINEW is a native housing organization which has done a very fine job of providing housing for native people in Winnipeg.

—the non-profit corporation geared to provide housing to native people, figures the program won't be much help for low income families. "Even with a two per cent interest rate, you're still taking $200 or more a month. So for the low income people, it's no help. KINEW's going to be forced to discriminate. If there's no subsidy available to them, they just won't be able to afford our housing. They'll have to take substandard slum housing."

That is what one of the most active groups which provides housing for people in Winnipeg who cannot afford housing in the conventional way has to say about the government's proposals.

I want to look now at the community services program which groups together all the old programs such as non-profit housing, co-operative housing, sewer and water extention, the neighbourhood improvement program and so on. The government says it is willing to adopt a global approach to its financial aid to municipalities, and to achieve this it proposes to take ten individual programs, each of which requires well in excess of $25 million for Canada as a whole, and lump them together to produce what it calls a new global approach, for a maximum of $250 million per year instead of the $339 million which was allocated for all these programs last year. That is an economic sleight-of-hand. The government expects the provinces and the municipalities to thank them for this.

The federal government has indicated that it wants to produce flexibility and wider latitude for the provinces and municipalities in using federal funds, to enable federal assistance to better respond to local needs and conditions, to reduce duplication and to ensure that assistance is available equally to all provinces.

We must look beyond the kind of rhetoric the minister used last Friday. As we have seen many times before with this government, rhetoric and action are clearly two different things. To the extent that this program is obviously long on rhetoric, it is correspondingly short on action. It is particularly short on funding, Mr. Speaker, which, as I have already indicated, has been cut back very substantially this year because of the government's restraint program. It uses expressions like "great" and "ongoing", but what do they mean? In 1973, after an irresponsible delay of five critical years during which urban renewal programs were cut off, the new NIP program was brought forth. In 1978, almost before most municipalities learned to make effective use of the neighbourhood improvement program, the government took it away, merging it with such a variety of other demanding programs that it will be, in effect, emasculated.

A close look at the neighbourhood improvement program and its operation shows exactly how it was emasculated. Under the old legislation, if an area was designated for improvement under NIP it was automatically eligible for the residential rehabilitation assistance program. Now under the community services program there is no guarantee that RRAP funding will be available to people in the neighbourhood improvement area. The neighbourhood improvement program will fail without those rehabilitation funds. That failure will be felt by the residents of neighbourhoods in the Winnipeg area such as the Chalmers area in Elmwood and the Daniel McIntyre area in west Winnipeg. These areas had hoped to be able to benefit from the program which since 1973 have made a great difference in other Winnipeg neighbourhoods which have benefited from the start of them.

The necessity of keeping the automatic link with the neighbourhood improvement program and the residential rehabilitation assistance program was illustrated in the Point Douglas project, a Winnipeg neighbourhood which had become quite run down. There are between 650 and 700 dwellings in that area. They received 480 RRAP loans with the result that it is now a much better neighbourhood for people to live in and to raise their families. The same thing can be seen in other neighbourhood improvement programs around Winnipeg. Point Douglas received RRAP grants for 70 per cent of the homes. There was also RRAP funding for 280 homes in the Centennial area, representing between 50 per cent and 60 per cent of homes in that area. In St. Boniface 40 per cent of homes under the NIP program received RRAP funds. It is estimated that under another NIP program in the William Whyte area about 80 per cent of the homes will need RRAP money for rehabilitation. This is at a time when the government has decided to cut back on the amount of RRAP funding and make it more difficult to obtain.

There has been a direct relationship between the use of funds to improve a neighbourhood and funds to rehabilitate the housing in that neighbourhood. However, community services grants for those two purposes will not be automatically linked. They will just be part of the many deserving programs that must suddenly make do with a much smaller global budget. This is going to deny the chance of real improvement to many neighbourhoods in Winnipeg. What is true in Winnipeg is true in other cities across Canada. The government does not care. Instead of worrying about these neighbourhoods it is involved in a game it has been playing for years—offer the neighbourhoods, the communities and cities of Canada lots of sizzle and when they try to taste the steak, pull it away.

For the past ten years, in fact for the past 35 to 40 years, extensive areas of housing and urban development have been built in this country without adequate storm sewers, community facilities, solid waste disposal, urban transport and many other essential services. For the past three years, for example, AHOP has been touted as a great solution for moderate income housing. But housing in what kind of urban environment? In my own area the best municipal officials can suggest, to prevent a brand new AHOP and NHA financed housing project from having basements flooded with raw sewage five or six times a year, is to fill a nearby artifical lake built for storm water retention and to divert raw sewage into it. What a commentary on the kind of planning this government has done in recent years!

[Mr. Orlikow.]

This housing was built by developers who are well known supporters of the Liberal party. It got CMHC approval and encouragement to build on lands which were totally inadequate with respect to storm and sanitary sewage facilities.

With problems like this burgeoning in urban developments across the country, even if $100 million out of the proposed $250 million was used to correct problems such as those which have been created in my constituency, it would be barely enough to finance a fraction of what needs to be done to correct damage resulting from poorly administered NHA programs.

In other words, the Liberal government in Ottawa wants to bail out and leave the province and municipalities with inadequate funding to clean up the mess left by its ill-conceived programs. Furthermore, in the mad rush to get starts in place, no precautions were taken. Its funding arrangements are not even equitable in terms of the population of the regions of the country. In Manitoba's case, instead of receiving $12½ million it has been offered only $10 million.

Before getting away from this subject, I want to warn the minister that as a result of a decision handed down last week by the Supreme Court of Canada which held that a municipality which had drained part of a suburb of Ottawa without taking adequate precautions so that homes already built had substantial damage done to their foundations was responsible for this situation and would probably have to pay damages. I hope that the residents of my area will go after the city and the developers who were so negligent that they built over 1,000 houses without providing for the run-off of rain water, which resulted in houses being flooded, although they should have known and I think did know that they were not providing adequate storm sewers for the area.

What about Canadians who presumably manage to purchase their own homes? Despite what the minister said, Canadians are house poor. The high cost of housing is absorbing a large portion of an individual's total income every year. We had better start looking carefully at our assumptions concerning housing and land. Since 1945 the single family dwelling located on a large lot has become the ideal form of housing which most Canadians aspired to. In the 1950s it was possible for the average Canadian to own his own home. A generation later his sons and daughters cannot do the same thing.

Each week I receive a list of new homes purchased in the city of Winnipeg. I look particularly at the ones purchased in my own constituency. From this list I can see people who are buying homes at prices of $60,000, $70,000, $80,000 and $90,000, and I wonder how they will manage to make the mortgage payments on those homes. They have committed themselves for the next 25 years to monthly payments that run anywhere from $300 to $600 a month. This is a burden which many of them will find impossible to carry in the next few years.

In spite of the increase in family income since 1961, the ability of people to afford a house in those cities has actually decreased. A study done in Winnipeg comparing 1961 and 1975 prices found that family incomes had increased by 100 per cent in that time, but the price of a new house in the suburbs had increased by 152 per cent. And if you add to that the increase in monthly payments which reflects both higher housing prices and higher mortgage interest rates, the increase was 219 per cent.

Right now the average price of a house in metropolitan Toronto is $68,500 and it is anticipated that the price will rise another 7 per cent to 8 per cent over the next year. In the central core it is even higher; the average there is $80,000. With mortgage rates now at a high of 11.25 per cent, the dream has become almost unattainable. Just who is buying houses?

In the few Canadians cities where suburban lots are still reasonably priced, moderate income families can still afford suburban single family houses. In 1976 in Halifax 66 per cent of all new house buyers under NHA had incomes of less than $15,000. In Saskatoon 56 per cent of all new house buyers had incomes less that $15,000. Those were two cities where some lots were controlled by municipal government. But in cities with high land prices the figures are very different. In Toronto only 7 per cent of new house buyers had incomes less than $15,000. In Winnipeg it was 8 per cent and in Edmonton only 4 per cent.

It would appear that moderate and low income families are unable to afford the great Canadian dream of owning their own homes. The housing market presently caters to the middle and upper class. Today's typical family needs an annual income of nearly $30,000 to buy a new home in metropolitan Toronto. One of the reasons for the very substantial increase in the cost of a home in Canada has to do with the cost of land. That is something we should be looking at very carefully. The cost of raw land has increased, but in the total cost of lots it is a relatively modest factor.

It has been the practice of many developers to assemble private land banks in anticipation of future needs. What one CMHC researcher discovered is that a small number of developers hold enough land to supply all new suburban lots which will be required for the next five to 15 years. And because they control the land assemblies, a few developers are able to control the market in ways that lead the price increases for suburban house lots. Between 1971 and 1976 house prices have doubled in most cities. The price increases are not from higher costs of production, but rather from increases in profits developers have made on the land. A recent study has documented that profits by the large suburban land developers added $7,000 to $10,000 to the price of new $50,000 homes in Regina and Winnipeg. In cities like Vancouver, Calgary, Toronto and Ottawa profits added $15,000 to $24,000 to the price of a $60,000 home. Just west of Toronto the Peel housing task force found that profits on lots were 22 per cent of the final selling price of the house.

It is large land owners making windfall profits on the sale of their property who are escalating the cost of housing. Land, urban land in particular, we believe should be treated as a scarce resource in much the same way as other natural resources. Under the present system we are allowing a few people to effectively control the supply and cost of land. But it is not only the cost of housing that they control; they also dictate the options as to the kind of housing available. It is either housing everyone wants but few can afford, or housing that everyone can afford but few want.

If hon. members doubt my charge that the developers are making exorbitant profits, let me quote from an article which appeared in the Winnipeg Tribune dated October 31, 1978. This article was written by Val Werier who writes a column almost every day in that newspaper. It reads:

> In northwest Winnipeg—

This is an area within my constituency.

> —a market gardener sold his 32 acres in 1973 for $64,000, or $2,000 an acre. In 1977, the new owners were listing it at $500,000. This year they are asking $688,000 or about $21,000 an acre.

● (1640)

That is quite an increase in just six years. The article goes on to say:

> Within the past five years, the asking price for some land in the northwest corner of the city has risen tenfold, according to one real estate agent.
> "The speculators are taking homebuyers for a ride because of the high price for land," he says.
> The real estate agent notes, for example, that eight acres were sold in 1975 for $72,500 near the site of the Seven Oaks hospital, now under construction. Today, the asking price for this raw land is about $400,000 because the new owner can capitalize on the huge public expenditures in the form of a hospital. The hospital will attract new developments such as apartment blocks.

That is the situation which we now face. The survey of housing units has provided new and up-to-date data that permit a better identification of the number of households suffering from some form of housing need, either dwelling unit inadequacy, overcrowding or problems of affordability. Overall about 60 per cent of all households in urban Canada had none of the above problems in 1974. About one third, or 1,025,000 households, have one problem only. Another 7 per cent encountered two or more problems and therefore had serious shelter inadequacies.

Of the approximately one third of 1,025,000 households that were suffering from some form of housing deprivation, 180,000 were living in inadequate dwellings, 298,000 were overcrowded and 547,000 were paying more than 25 per cent of total household income on shelter. Affordability therefore emerges as the largest single housing problem. Yet, Mr. Speaker, in his speech the minister did not pay any attention to the question of affordability. Listening to the minister, one would assume that he believes no one in Canada has any problem with affordability.

What is the major lesson to be learned from these facts? Any policy in the housing field that does not deal with the power of the financial institutions and large developers who are ripping people off is bound to fail. For that is the major source of the problem, and that is my major objection to the Conservative proposal which simply allows for the deduction of mortgage interest from income tax. On the surface this seems like a great idea and it certainly means that home owners, or those wanting to buy a house, will be in a favourable tax position in comparison with those people who are tenants or who do not have mortgages.

But the scheme has drawbacks. It will increase housing prices and the profits of developers; it will not do anything about prices and the profits of developers; it will not do anything about high interest rates or high bank profits; and it will represent a real drain on government revenues. Economists estimate that the immediate loss in tax revenue will be in the neighbourhood of $3 billion. This would represent an increase of 25 per cent of our national deficit.

The lead-off spokesman for the official opposition spent a good deal of time quoting editorials which criticized the government. I want to put on record the first part of an editorial which appeared in the February 24 edition of the Toronto Star, a newspaper which it is rumoured will be endorsing the Conservative party in the next election. The article is headed "Tax Gifts Won't Help Housing". I quote:

> Worried about the appeal of the Conservatives' pre-election promise to make home mortgage interest tax deductible, the federal Liberals have now come up with a bonanza of their own.
> But both the Liberal and Conservative plans are wrong-headed. They don't get at the root of the problem—how to enable more people to buy their first home. Instead the two political parties, while talking fiscal restraint, are competing to bribe the taxpayer with his own money in programs that will cost more than a billion dollars—
>
> Both the Conservative and the Liberal proposals have the same flaws. The Tories' is worse because it gives most to middle and upper income groups. But both sacrifice substantial amounts of government revenue which will have to be made up from some other taxation source. And they fail to deal with Canada's real housing needs.
> There are two real needs. One is felt by young couples wanting to buy their own homes who, with incomes in the $14,000 to $17,000 range, can't afford the $385 monthly payment that's needed to pay off a 25-year, $40,000 mortgage with an 11 per cent interest rate.
>
> The other need is that of elderly pensioners, welfare recipients and minimum wage earners who can't even dream of buying their own homes and who must have some form of assisted housing if they are to be able to live decently.
>
> The way to meet these needs is not to give up tax revenues by offering deductions or credits but to use the money to put affordable housing within reach of the two groups.
> It's been estimated, for example, that Clark's proposal for mortgage interest deductibility would cost the federal treasury $1.6 billion a year when it's fully in effect. By contrast, it's also been estimated that it would cost much less—$250 million a year—to provide subsidized 8 per cent mortgages for families earning $20,000 or less a year and buying their first homes for $50,000 or less.

That is what the Toronto Star, which has usually supported the Liberal party but apparently is going to switch its allegiance, had to say about both the Liberal and Conservative proposals.

I have already commented on the unconscionable profits made by developers in the business of developing land for future housing. We cannot overlook, however, the exorbitant profits made in recent years by Canadian banks, much of it a result of the high interest costs charged for consumer loans and mortgages.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

Profits of nine of the 11 chartered banks after taxes were $732 million in 1977 and $975 million in 1978, an increase of 33 per cent in one year. That is the bank's answer to the government's appeal for restraint. A study for the Economic Council of Canada by Professor Mintz of Queen's university indicated that excess profits by the banks in Canada in the period 1967 to 1973 were between $200 million and $500 million.

We believe provision should be made in the Bank Act and the National Housing Act to allow the government not only to offer low interest mortgages but to force lending institutions to do the same, and also provide for low down payments.

I want to summarize briefly what we believe to be the major defects in the government's housing and urban policy and what we believe needs to be done. First, it is obvious that the government is proposing that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation withdraw from all funding, that it stop its loans, grants and subsidies for housing and urban renewal.

The Economic Council of Canada said several years ago that the government should use housing as a tool for getting the economy moving when it is slow. When the economy is slow, as it is now, and housing is down this leaves the construction industry, an important component in our whole economic climate, slack. Instead of functioning at or near capacity, the construction industry now has great unused capacity.

We believe that housing is a basic need which should be provided for regardless of the fact that the economy is slack at the present time. We should be dealing with the question of affordability. Even if we build the 30,000 non-profit units which the minister foresees in the coming year, and which we believe is not a questionable objective but an unlikely to be reached objective, we would hardly put a dent in the need for decent housing in this country.

The graduated mortgage program is not going to work because the banks will not co-operate. In the view of one banker, that means "Permadebt". I think it was an official of the Royal Bank who said that. I suggest that is what it means because, with graduated payment mortgages, the payments for the first years will not even meet the interest and the deficit in the early years will be met later by higher monthly payments. At that point people will be turning back the houses which they purchased in good faith under this program.

● (1650)

We believe the federal government has a responsibility to ensure that there is an adequate standard of sewer and water services provided in urban centres in this country. Under the community services program which the government proposes there is no guarantee that we will have this adequate standard. We think the program is deficient in concept and even more deficient in the amount of funding the government proposes to put into it.

What we need to do, in our view, is provide funds for the projects covered by the community services program, and the $250 million proposed is not adequate. Second, we believe we should provide for co-operative, non-profit public housing. That money is not included in the estimates we have for next year. We believe the government should bring back its land assembly program.

An hon. Member: What?

Mr. Orlikow: We need to stop the rip-off which has taken place over the last number of years by developers who have made, are making and will make tremendous and exorbitant profits unless governments at three levels step in to carry out this land assembly program.

In addition, we need to provide adequate funds for the residential rehabilitation assistance program, and the estimates for next year do not provide for that. We need to force the banks to set mortgage rates at 8 per cent for families with incomes of $20,000 or less who want to buy homes that cost less than $50,000.

Those are the minimum steps we believe are necessary if we are to meet the housing needs of the people of Canada. We certainly do not see those steps in this bill and we do not see the funds provided for in the estimates we have before us for the coming year. We did not hear about these things in the speech of the minister last Friday. For those reasons we certainly intend to vote against this bill.

Mr. Art Lee (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure and an honour to participate in this debate. I should like to support these amendments to the National Housing Act for a number of reasons. During the debate so far we have heard a considerable amount of discussion in respect of the mortgage deductibility program proposed by members of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Recently, as the House knows, an all party committee went to Washington to examine with U.S. representatives and other officials the issue of mortgage deductibility. The all party committee was comprised of the hon. members for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke), Ottawa-Carleton (Mrs. Pigott), Broadview (Mr. Rae), Westmount (Mr. Johnston) and Stormont-Dundas (Mr. Lumley). In a memorandum prepared by the hon. member for Westmount, he concluded:

> A recommendation of all government officials and all independent economists with whom we met was to the effect that a system of mortgage interest or real estate tax deductibility is to be avoided at all costs.

The hon. member for Westmount went on to say:

> Because the proposed deductions favour high income owners the measure is regressive, and in lieu of promoting tax neutrality it offends the principle, because it discriminates against tenants and non-homeowners. Because it selects only real estate taxes for deduction there would be a shift of local taxation into the real estate tax area with less emphasis being placed in other areas of local taxation.
>
> Because of the regressive nature of this provision the benefits derived would tend to favour owners of existing homes, providing them with more disposable incomes while doing much less for income groups anxious to enter the housing market, and doing nothing for those at the low end of the income scale without sufficient income to take advantage of these deductions. The effect of this would be to widen the economic gap between the rich and the poor, between home owners and non-home owners.
> Adequate studies have not been performed to determine what impact the deductibility of mortgage interest and real estate taxes would have on urban communities. For example, to what extent would the centre core properties be purchased and renovated as the result of this scheme, driving tenants and owners in these low income areas into substandard housing and substandard accommodation? What impact would this particular mortgage deductibility scheme have on the urban sprawl and on the pressure for condominiumization of apartments, with the resulting impact on our tenant population?
> In brief, no fiscal program which would alter the basic structure of the tax system should be introduced without the most thorough study and analysis of the kind now being carried on by the Urban Institute for HUD in the United States. Once in place it cannot be easily modified and its social consequences can be farreaching.

Because of its regressive nature I reject the proposal of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Instead, I firmly believe that a tax credit system would be more beneficial as it assists low income earners regardless of whether they are home owners or renters. Also the use of tax shelters would help people like senior citizens who need more direct assistance because they are not able to have the advantage of progressive incomes.

In short, I agree wholeheartedly that shelter tax allowances will provide assistance to home owners and tenants alike through payment of a tax credit shelter expenditure exceeding a certain percentage of income in the right way. As I indicated, I support these amendments to the National Housing Act for a number of reasons. They represent a reasonable approach to housing problems across a very broad front.

I am particularly pleased that the bill preserves and extends one of the most important housing measures ever put forward here in Canada. I am referring to the residential rehabilitation assistance program, otherwise known as RRAP. I am delighted to see that the government has removed or intends to remove the restrictions from this program, that its benefits are no longer going to be restricted to certain designated areas but will apply to Canadians wherever they live. With the passage of this legislation all Canadians will become eligible for RRAP assistance within the terms of the program, and I have no doubt that the funds available to support it will be applied to more pressing needs wherever they occur in Canada.

I am not surprised that RRAP met with such immediate enthusiastic response by the people of Canada. RRAP and its twin, neighbourhood improvement, actually originated in the Strathcona area located in my riding.

If it is the pleasure of the House, may I call it five o'clock?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco)—Airports—Navigational aids and firefighting equipment for Castlegar, B.C.; the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen)—Fisheries—Negotiations respecting Alaska coast halibut fishery; the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Hare)—National Revenue—Sales tax on storm windows and doors.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions and public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I think there is unanimous consent that we proceed with notice of motion No. 18 and that preceding notices of motions be allowed to stand and retain their precedence.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is it agreed that motions Nos. 7, 9, 16 and 17 stand by unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

AGRICULTURE

ADVISABILITY OF INSTITUTING INDIVIDUAL INCOME STABILIZATION PROGRAM FOR WESTERN PRODUCERS

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin) moved:

That the Standing Committee on Agriculture be empowered to study the advisability of instituting an individual rather than aggregate program of income stabilization for the western producer, and to report its findings to the House.

He said: Mr. Speaker, over the years I have given much thought to stabilization as a means of helping farmers in all of Canada but particularly in western Canada, and as an attempt to eliminate the so-called hills and valleys in the production of commodities and in the prices producers get for those commodities. We have examined various plans in order to accomplish this. Producers have attempted to accomplish it by means of supply management marketing boards. Various government stabilization plans have been instituted and a number of income tax techniques are available to farmers, but it is my belief that members of parliament and the Standing Committee on Agriculture as a whole should take a very serious look at individual stabilization as the plan of the future in order to help farmers adequately stabilize their incomes.

Since I arrived here as a member in 1972 I have considered it a pleasure to serve on the Standing Committee on Agriculture because I have felt it has always done an excellent job of dealing with questions put before it. I remember that when it was dealing with the Western Grain Stabilization Act the committee travelled to western Canada to learn the opinions of western farmers as to whether we should have that legislation and, if we should, whether amendments or changes should be made to it. I found at that time that a number of members were questioning whether we should have aggregate stabilization, that is, stabilization of the whole area, or individual stabilization of some sort which might be better suited to regions or to particular problems.

While the committee was on that trip, this question was asked many times, and I have here a few responses from witnesses who came before that committee. One response came from the hon. John Messer, then minister of agriculture of the province of Saskatchewan. He said:

The plan does not provide individual commodity or regional income stability. No account is taken for regional, geographic and climatic factors which influence the production of various grains throughout the prairies.

When we were in Manitoba the hon. Sam Uskiw, the then Manitoba minister of agriculture, said:

It seems to me that since the proposed grain stabilization act is being portrayed as an income insurance scheme and since it is a contributory plan, farmers should know what insurance they are buying; in other words, the plan must relate to the needs of individuals, and it should be possible for individuals to determine what benefits would accrue to them if the events against which they are insuring themselves should occur.

Many members of the committee felt that the plan should be individual and perhaps administered by the crop insurance plan, which is active all across the prairies and has offices throughout the regions and people who are constantly travelling among farms. Here is a natural set-up by which an individual plan could be established. The hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) came up with a plan, and during a good part of the time he had in the committee he discussed whether an individual plan could be set up which could be administered by the crop insurance people. I also felt that there should be an individual plan, and I remember asking the then minister of agriculture of the province of Manitoba what his thoughts were. He stated them as follows:

If it was possible to base stabilization on the individual, that would mean that the province would have to administer it and I suspect the best way to administer it would be through crop insurance machinery that is already set up.

I do not necessarily agree that the plan would have to be administered by the province, but the then minister did state that he felt that the crop insurance people could administer such a plan.

The Palliser Wheat Growers Association stated the following:

If individual stabilization is the objective, the plan would be more effective if dovetailed with existing crop insurance programs.

I now come to the point where I must state that I fully believe that the individual stabilization method is the ultimate program for Canada, and I fully believe that if the Standing Committee on Agriculture were to study such a method, the majority of members of that committee would come to have the same opinion.

I would have no objection if we were to broaden my motion so that we could study a stabilization plan which would guarantee margins. I know that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has been discussing this with the provinces. Rather than having a 90 per cent level, the minister has been discussing perhaps a 100 per cent level plus cost of production and other changes. However, I think members of parliament should get involved in such a study because farmers face rapidly rising production costs, to the extent that tractors and other machinery now cost two to three times more than they did only five years ago.

Because we are an exporting nation, world production fluctuations have a great influence on what the Canadian farmer earns. We have to give farmers a reasonable return on their investment or they will continue to leave agriculture and flock to the cities. That is why I introduced this private member's motion today. I am asking hon. members to give the Standing Committee on Agriculture the power to study the principle of stabilization on an individual basis. By doing so, hon. members might become informed about the benefits of such a plan. We must take this opportunity to achieve improved farm income stability at the farmer level.

Hon. members might say that there are a number of programs in place at the present time to do just that, and I agree that there is some truth in that. The first ones which come to mind are the Western Grain Stabilization Act and the Agricultural Stabilization Act. Those are both aggregate plans, and they cannot take account of regional and climatic factors and decisions of individual farmers as to what crops they plant, weed control, whether they stay in hogs or increase production of cattle. They do not take account of crop markets or price, which is often determined by world factors.

Of course, there is always government interference in the agricultural sector, and an aggregate plan cannot take account of that. Those plans are slow to pay. That was demonstrated by the first pay-out under the western grain stabilization plan. It took the government a year to make its first full payment. Half of it came six months after it should have come, and the other half came a full six months after that. There is a very complicated trigger formula which must be followed before payouts can be made, and there is also some room for the minister to decide when it is most politically advantageous.

There is another factor, and that is that one commodity can have an enormous effect on whether the trigger mechanism comes into play. Under the western grain stabilization plan wheat in the province of Saskatchewan bears too heavily on the trigger mechanism, and under the Agricultural Stabilization Act regional factors are not taken into consideration. Beef prices in Toronto are always five cents to seven cents higher than they are in western Canada, and because of that the averaging mechanism does not reflect the average price of beef in western Canada. So I find that these aggregate plans do not take into account the needs of the individual farmers. When a pay out occurs it benefits them, but in many cases when the need is there the stabilization plan is not.

● (1710)

Then there are such techniques as block averaging and general averaging, but the benefits of both tend to be in the years when farm incomes are the highest and the farmers do not really need them. We have deferred cash purchase tickets which are only available to grain farmers and also are used in high income years. Some farmers can use year-end purchasing as a stabilization factor. If they have a good year, they can buy their tractors before the end of the year. We can also have deferred sales. In effect, this is an individual plan because the farmer does not have to sell his grain; he can keep it in his bins and sell it the following year. But that does not help the Canadian economy because we must bring in foreign capital by selling our agricultural produce.

Then there is capital cost allowance, which is really depreciation and has been used for a number of years to help in income control.

All these programs are available, but true stabilization for a farmer on an individual basis does not exist today.

Some farmers are now attempting to use RRSPs for their own individual stabilization, but because withdrawals are limited—you cannot make partial withdrawals under this plan—farmers have to incur the cost of setting up many plans so that when they need money, they can draw from one of the plans and still have some money available for other years. This is complex but it shows that it is really what these farmers want. They are using what laws are available now to do just that.

I have come to the conclusion that none of these plans offer the individual the type of stabilization he needs; nor do they reward efficiency or good management or allow farmers true protection in the case of individual disaster. All across Canada there are problems such as brucellosis or IBR in cattle and various diseases in poultry and hogs which cannot be covered under an aggregate plan but which could be covered under this individual type of plan. We can have a significant price drop in one commodity in western Canada, such as, for example, in barley or rapeseed, but because of the importance of wheat in the western grain stabilization plan the price drop will not trigger aggregate plans; so again these farmers will suffer.

That is why it is imperative in these times of the fluctuating dollar, inflation, world conflicts, rising input costs and increasing consumer resistance to rising food costs that we study and implement an individual stabilization plan. I believe that the committee should start by examining thoroughly the very excellent study that was done by Peat, Marwick and Partners for the Alberta department of agriculture entitled "Feasibility of an Income Averaging Trust Account". The objectives of this plan were that farmers deposit a portion of their income during high revenue years and withdraw funds in lower income years. The main objective was to stabilize the income of the individual farmers on a voluntary basis and at the same time provide indirect stabilization for rural and general economies.

The study outlines a number of concepts with which I totally agree. There are eight of them; that the minimum deposit be one year and the maximum deposit be seven years; that minimum deposits and withdrawals be $1,000 and the maximum amount of the total deposit be $100,000; that in the years that money is withdrawn, no deposits could be made; that only farmers between the age of 18 and 70 would be eligible; that participation in the trust account would be voluntary; that only income from farming operations would be eligible; and that withdrawals would be considered non-farm income and could not be used for block averaging.

They have laid down the basis on which an individual plan could work through a great deal of study and by talking with farm organizations and farmers about what they think they need. I spoke with the unifarm people in Alberta and found them to be in total agreement that we should study the plan as the ultimate stabilization plan for farmers. The impact of the study is to help stabilize the rural economy in the price of farm supplies. This would benefit medium, large and small farmers alike, and in addition it would be of benefit to the government taxation department because revenues from farm income would tend to fluctuate less.

The study has helped us as well because it encompassed all stabilization plans that were available in various countries of the world and concluded that a plan which is now available in New Zealand best fits the idea put forward by the Alberta department of agriculture and studied by Peat, Marwick and Partners. The New Zealand plan has been in place since 1965 and is known as the farm income stabilization scheme. It allows farmers to deposit up to 25 per cent of their gross income into income equalization accounts. The concept of the plan is quite similar to what I have just outlined.

I should like to state in conclusion that here is an opportunity for members of parliament to improve farm income through individual stabilization by passing this motion. The ancillary effects on the total agricultural economy, levels of inventories, farm equipment and supply purchase patterns and the smoothing out of federal and provincial taxation incomes are all important and tend to create an environment where planning and production management techniques could become more effective. In future this plan, with more study, could replace the western grain stabilization plan and the agricultural stabilization plan by having regional triggers in place wherein producer accounts would be supplemented by government payments and producers in various commodity groups would get stabilization help from federal assistance, as is now the case under the western grain stabilization plan, through their individual accounts.

I thank the House for giving me the opportunity to put this motion before hon. members and I hope they give it their serious consideration.

[Translation]

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) for his motion. I must say in support of the hon. member that I had often the opportunity to meet him during the two years when I was parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture, and his contribution to the Standing Committee on Agriculture was always of the highest standing.

This motion, Mr. Speaker, also indicates that the hon. member is much interested in agriculture. I must admit that even, as I have just said, if I had the honour to serve as parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture, there are very few farmers in my constituency. There is, of course, the experimental farm of Lennoxville which, I must say, has substantially contributed to the promotion of agriculture in Canada, performing very important research work and serving with outstanding diligence the farmers of Quebec and of the Eastern Townships.

Of course, even if there are not many farmers in my riding, God knows that agriculture and every other aspect of the food industry affects everybody. In the speech he has just made, the hon. member raised some very interesting points which should be taken into serious consideration. However, I should remind hon. members that the Department of Agriculture helped farmers tremendously in the last few years. Take, for example, the two extremely important pieces of legislation which were passed by the House during the last six years, and which were greatly supported by hon. members on the opposition side, and particularly by the mover of the motion which is before us today.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to mention one of his colleagues, the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave) who always made a remarkable contribution in the Committee on Agriculture which demonstrates that he is particularly concerned with the agricultural segment of our society and with the interests of his constituents.

Mr. Speaker, the markets are a lot more unstable in agriculture than in most other sectors of the economy. Therefore, the income levels of farmers vary much more than those of other Canadians. This greater uncertainty is a source of great difficulty for farmers and very often slows down the development of agriculture. The inputs and outputs of resources from the production sector, depending on price fluctuations, result in higher production costs.

On the other hand, farmers may be persuaded to renounce certain monetary advantages of specialization, for by varying their crops, they may count on a more stable income and attenuate some of the risks resulting from the slowing down of a market due to the application of modern technology. The climate of uncertainty in which producers live quickly spreads to their suppliers of goods and services and their purchasers of farm products. Finally, their effects are felt on the economy as a whole. Because of the problems resulting from the instability of farm markets, the House has finally adopted stabilization legislation for wheat and other grains.

The programs applied under these two pieces of legislation lessen the effects of unstable markets by ensuring that, during more difficult times, producers will receive support payments which increase their incomes to a level which represents a certain percentage of the net eligible grain sale proceeds for all producers for the year under review. That is exactly what the hon. member who has introduced this motion claimed a while ago. Since the computation of the support level takes these proceeds into account, Canadian farmers will continue, as indeed they should, to base their decisions concerning production on the fundamental tendencies of the prices on the market place.

Mr. Speaker, the stabilization mechanism gives good protection to the farmers against the fluctuations mentioned by the hon. member, but it has much less influence on permanent decreases in market prices since these influence the support levels. All producers receive the same supplementary payment by production unit under these two stabilization programs, this aims at ensuring that the position of each farmer in relation to the others is not changed by the stabilization program.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words about the Agricultural Stabilization Act. Even though the programs established under this act have remained within the spirit of the previous act, passed in 1957 or 1958, certain changes have been made to the policy to meet the new requirements of farmers. The first act included provisions for designated products. These were products which had to be supported at a level set at 80 per cent of the average market price in the last ten years or the ten previous years. The government was empowered to increase this minimum level it deemed appropriate. However, non-designated products could benefit from support if need be, but always at the discretion of the minister. The support price of these designated products was equivalent to the ten-year average percentage judged appropriate to absorb losses on the market. The amendments which resulted in the 1975 act have been very beneficial for the farmers. The amendments concern mostly the list of designated products and the formula for establishing the support prices.

Certain designated products were not listed in the 1958 act, and this shows the significant improvements which were made in the new legislation. For instance, the designated products now include steers, pigs, sheep, industrial milk and cream, corn, soya, as well as oats and barley produced outside the zone designated by the Canadian Wheat Board. The minimum support level for these products was set at 90 per cent of the market price during the previous five years.

This is the major difference between the legislation passed in 1958 and that passed in 1975. In the first case, the support level was set at 80 per cent of the prices during the previous ten years, while the support level is now based on a five-year period, which is much more reasonable and much more advantageous for the farmers. In other words, instead of 80 per cent, it is 90 per cent of the last five years. The minimum rate has thus been increased by 10 per cent and the period considered has been lowered from ten to five years. Just as the 1958 act, the revised legislation provides the increase, if need be, of the minimum rate of assistance and the designation of other products for assistance purposes. And we can add to that the problems pertaining to the present agricultural products stabilization program. Also, we all know that apart from this legislation there were the two acts I mentioned in the beginning, namely one on stabilization and one on wheat.

The implementation of the 1975 act has brought to light a certain number of problems, namely that some producers consider the rate of assistance too low. In that respect, I think, as the hon. member mentioned about midway through his speech, this deserved some consideration in certain instances, and I believe that the government did indeed, two or three times, increase the amount of assistance granted for certain products. But there again I agree with the hon. member that in certain cases it is clearly too low because imports, that is certain products that cost a lot more in the farmer end product, are not always included. For a lot of producers, not disclosing the support price before the production period also contributes to reduce considerably the extent to which programs lessen the climate of uncertainty.

Cow calves are not on the list of specified products and it is perhaps a lack that should be corrected. A number of pork and cattle producers feel the present program does not protect them adequately and they have to reduce the support period. Here again, producers of these two commodities expressed on several occasions—and I remember on two occasions at the Department of Agriculture—certain claims they felt the government should consider.

Although the legislation included provisions for an increase in the basic rate and its financing by producers no procedures were developed for that purpose. There again, although those two pieces of legislation are in the interest of farmers I believe certain amendments could be brought in, and, of course, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is always prepared to change the existing laws to suit them to current conditions.

Mr. Speaker, I know for having worked with our Minister of Agriculture—who incidentally has been there for seven years—how farmers both in western and eastern Canada appreciate the interest and constant concern he has to fight both at the caucus as well as the ministers' level to ensure farmers get the most and are protected against inflation and certain other economic difficulties. We all know that farmers or agriculturists are perhaps the most vulnerable class in our society because, in addition to the difficulties every group faces, they have to live with the uncertainties of the weather over which they have no control; that is why this government passed legislation to protect them a bit more against bad weather, both literally and figuratively.

Since the act, as amended in 1975, has come into effect, a number of provinces, Mr. Speaker, as should be pointed out here, have adopted their own stabilization programs. Still, the federal government is concerned about the variety of programs implemented with regard to goods produced and sold throughout Canada, because varying levels of support from one province to the other could be a source of numerous problems.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, the federal government does not disagree with the fact that some of the provinces have decided to give help to agriculture. What it is concerned about is the diversity of those programs. Some provinces being richer, they can offer much more than other provinces; consequently, there are two classes of farmers in Canada. That is why the Minister of Agriculture has always taken great care to avoid such differences as much as possible. There are enough regional disparities in Canada as it is, which of course we are trying to remedy, but incentives however should not be provided through programs that vary so much from one province to another, although they are valid in themselves. The constant goal of the Minister of Agriculture has been that all those programs help farmers equally across Canada. This is why federal programs have tried to integrate most of the stabilization programs as much as possible and to the extent provinces are willing.

Because each province wants to protect farmers, there could be a run on levels of support, and producers in more generous provinces would naturally have an edge on their counterparts in other provinces, and production could slide to more generous provinces. It is my view and indeed the view of farmers, as will be recognized by the mover of the motion, that with such a range of programs we could eventually get to the point where some provinces could, by reason of their location, economic base and a host of other factors, stimulate producers through generous and acceptable measures into raising their production to a level that would harm producers in other areas, and although this could have short-term benefits for a small number, it certainly would be harmful on the longer term both to themselves and farmers throughout the country. For that reason, federal programs must work across the land and be as generous as possible, while avoiding that some provinces benefit more than others.

On the other hand, this country could get into difficulty with its trading partners, who look badly toward what they feel is unfair subsidizing of Canadian products. The Canadian government and provinces held detailed discussions on all the stabilization programs I referred to. Discussions up till now have been positive, and all parties have been looking for a solution to problems faced by current programs. In the cause of these discussions, a federal-provincial technical committee was created to examine all aspects of the agricultural prices stabilization policy and report to respective ministers. While the present proposal is formulated by the federal government and comes under its responsibility, it was inspired to a large degree by these discussions.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the steps taken over the last six or seven years prove to what pains the federal government, and in particular the present Liberal government and the present Minister of Agriculture, have gone to give not only the agricultural population but all Canadians laws ensuring a greater stability of income for all farmers. This greater stability of income has an impact on all the other economic sectors; one must in fact recognize that if farmers must bear certain difficulties in the agricultural sector, an abnormal increase in food prices may follow. This would of course be due to a lack of planning, to a lack of price stabilization laws on Canadian agricultural products.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, while I was late getting in at the beginning of this debate, I am very pleased to have this opportunity to make a few remarks in support of my colleague, the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger). He has selected a very worth-while topic which has not received fair comment since the grain stabilization debate of several years ago.

There is much to be said in support of the individual stabilization approach. I think we should give it serious attention. In these few minutes, Mr. Speaker, I want to speak of the special needs it would serve in the drought areas across southern Alberta and southwestern Saskatchewan where there are the resultant extremes in farm and ranch income. This is materially affected by the rapid sales of livestock, grain and farm products due to the drought conditions which are a fact of life in that area.

I should like to give two excellent examples of this, Mr. Speaker, the years 1977 and 1978. The 1977 records show it was the worst single drought year since the 1930s. I speak with some conviction, Mr. Speaker, because I remember those years. The worst years were 1931, 1932 and 1937. The year 1977 was at least the equal in terms of growth, or lack of it, to those years in the thirties. Surface water, of course, is the staff of life in those drought areas, but snow run-off during that single year was worse than at any time in the ten-year period.

In sharp contrast, 1978 was one of the best growth years. I would go as far as to say it was the best growth year for natural grass or hay since 1927. The growth of cultivated grains was above average but not as spectacular in 1978 as was the growth of grass and hay.

Such extremes of moisture conditions present real problems to people involved in agriculture. I think we should give some special recognition to this problem when we discuss a stabilization program. The hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton) drew attention to the need for special recognition of these extremes in committee when we were considering the grain stabilization bill several years ago and he proposed the same concept—that it should be handled on an individual basis. I suggest that in the rush to stabilize various agricultural commodities this more practical and sensible approach has been completely overlooked. The hon. member for Wetaskiwin pointed out that the proposal has been fully researched by the planning and research secretariat of the Alberta department of agriculture. I do not wish to promote this type of program for just that province, however, as I think there should be national individual stabilization.

In fairness, Mr. Speaker, I should say that most of my remarks will probably be directed to the possibility of such a program being used in the Canadian beef cattle industry but the same concept could apply to any other agricultural commodity. The basic concept of the individual approach would be that a farmer could deposit a portion of his income during high income years and withdraw some or all of those funds during low income years, in effect creating his own stabilization program. This has some basic advantages over what could be termed a universal stabilization plan, the concept that we have been considering officially until now.

Amongst the advantages, first of all, is the fact that it should cost less to the public treasury in terms of payout and the bureaucracy—needed to administer it. Second, the tax payments of farmers would probably not be greatly affected. They might increase as a result of a more stable environment, and tax revenues would tend to even out over the years which would be a good thing. The third advantage, and perhaps the most important, is that the plan would not obscure market signals in any way, whereas a universal plan tends to insulate farmers from the realities of the marketplace. That is most important, especially in the cattle industry. The feeling that goes along with that insulation from the marketplace is that if the market place does not pay enough, the taxpayer will. That feeling does exist as a result of the way some stabilization programs have been operated.

The fourth advantage that I see is that it would discourage farmers from attempting to delay taxes by maximizing costs in high income years. A big example of this is the practice of feeders and cattlemen of purchasing feeder cattle near the year end and carrying them over for resale in the next taxation year. This distorts the cattle market, and we are better off without such a practice. An individual stabilization program would get around this problem.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, the program suggested by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin has much to commend it over the current guaranteed margin approach that the federal government suggests in its new look at the stabilization program. What disturbs me about this program is the suggestion that there be a 100 per cent support level. That is what used to be called "top loading." A 100 per cent margin approach will guarantee a real top loaded situation. The danger of this is that it will definitely lead to overproduction. We would be ignorant of our immediate past history if we did not remember what led us into the situation we find ourselves in now where we have the highest prices in the history of the cattle industry because of the situation developed with an oversupply, influenced by government policies four or five years ago.

A stabilization program is fine, but we should not go overboard with it and then find ourselves in the situation that would require production controls. That would not be received very favourably by cattlemen. Those are my comments, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to be here to support my colleague, the hon. member for Wetaskiwin.

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would allow me to pose a question?

Mr. Hargrave: Yes.

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member could tell the House whether his concept of stabilization could work outside the marketing agency or if, on the contrary, it would operate best within the framework of a marketing agency controlled by the producers.

Mr. Hargrave: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member is addressing a question to me about the possibilities for supplying management powers. I would say that the cattle industry in Canada and, in fact, in North America, does not lend itself to that, and there are a couple of pretty important reasons. The first is that, whether we like it or not, we are operating in a North American market. When Canada is in a situation of having too many cattle, a situation which does not occur very often, the only place where we can dispose of this excess of cattle is in the United States. When we have a shortage of cattle, a situation which we seem to be in most of the time, from where do we get additional cattle? From the United States.

The basis of my statement that we cannot operate on a supply management basis is that the United States, with their market-oriented approach in their cattle system, would never allow Canadian industry to be a part of that if we were to approach it in a supply management manner.

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to participate for a few moments in this particular debate. I am always happy to listen to both hon. members who have put forward their thoughts with respect to farm income and agriculture from the opposite side, namely, the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) and the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave).

Let me say that I only disagreed with one comment made by the member from Medicine Hat when in essence, perhaps inadvertently he attributed some of the difficulties that the cattle industry in Canada and around the world has gone through over the last several years to government policies. I know my hon. friend is well aware that it would not matter if we had had no cattle in either Alberta or Saskatchewan over the last few years, we would still have seen more or less the same erratic fluctuations which have occurred in the United States, Australia, Brazil, and so on. We were not alone in some of the misjudgments, if you like, that were involved in terms of the very high numbers, which then decreased. We are now in a situation where the prices are up. I know his constituents and mine are more than happy with the prices being received today for beef and beef cattle. But consumers put pressure on provincial and federal governments, not only in Canada but elsewhere, to look at this whole question again to see what can or cannot be done. I share many of his views with respect to what can be done and what cannot be done, as well.

I would only quarrel with one aspect of the motion today, although I quarrel very little with the thoughts and thesis in general put forward by hon. members opposite. The motion reads:

That the Standing Committee on Agriculture be empowered to study the advisability of instituting an individual rather than aggregate program of income stabilization for the western producer—

My quarrel is with the "rather than" idea. I do not believe we can divorce the two concepts. I do not believe we can say there is no need for over-all farming stabilization plans, programs or policies, whether this pertains to potatoes, grain, beef, milk or anything else. Maybe we could look at some improvement and some changes in present policy, and perhaps present tax legislation to accommodate some of the things referred to, particularly as it pertains to the beef industry in western Canada. This was spelled out just a few moments ago by the hon. member for Medicine Hat. However, I would point out again my basic disagreement with the way the motion is worded, and say I would oppose it on that basis only. I am not opposing many of the excellent points put forward.

If I may take a moment or two to look at the general goals of stabilization plans, whether we are talking west or east it does not matter a great deal, we must look and ask ourselves what a general stabilization plan is designed to do. We should also ask ourselves whether we can devise an individual plan that will meet some of those objectives. I would suggest a stabilization plan for agriculture or for any agricultural product should first of all stabilize the income of the agricultural industry.

Second, it should help to stabilize the agricultural input in the industry. I am thinking here of the fertilizer industry, the chemical industry, veterinary supplies etc., all other machinery and related industries involved in agricultural input.

Third, I suppose an agricultural stabilization program should serve to stabilize the economy of the region. This, as my hon. friends opposite and indeed all members of this House know, has been one of the difficulties in western Canada, the instability of income for everybody in all economic sectors. We do not have to go back to the 1930s to those dramatic times with respect to lack of crops and lack of prices and the devastating effects which that cycle had. We have not seen anything similar to that since, but we still see the ups and downs, and the effects which they have on an entire region.

Then we must look at stability with respect to the income of an individual farmer as well; that I recognize and acknowledge. If we are talking only stability with respect to the individual, as opposed to paying no attention or very little attention to the over-all objectives of a stabilization program, we are not meeting all of the concerns with which we should be dealing.

I am sure that all hon. members in this House who are from farming areas particularly know of the high prices and high costs of input, the kinds of dollars and figures which farmers have to deal with today in writing cheques and in paying bills, along with the kinds of receipts which they have to have, the income from any one of the farm products, that all of this is more and more important today than it ever was. Therefore we must look at every possibility of trying to bring about greater stability in the income of the individual farmer, producer, and farm producers collectively.

Cash flow today is absolutely vital to farmers in terms of continuing to operate. It does not matter whether they are maritime potato growers, or beef producers or grain growers. Long gone are the days when one could get by on a farm, as I did in the maritimes when I was growing up, with very little cash income. At that time one could also grow crops and bring them in and manage to get by with very few dollars. But that day has long since gone in all regions of the country and in all sectors of agriculture.

We need to look at our present aggregate plans. We need to stress those over and above the individual concept and the points made by my hon. friends in this particular motion. An aggregate plan will stabilize the income of the industry by making payouts when the income of that industry decreases. We have seen an example of that just in the past year with respect to the western grain stabilization program. I recall some of the questions and issues which came forward from that very good session of the committee at that time, referred to by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin.

The plan is now in operation. It is quite likely there will be a payout in that plan in the current year. He is correct in this sense that it does not meet all of the individual requirements that may come along. I am not sure that it should. I worry about a plan looking after the individual's cash needs in terms of having more interference with what that farmer may do or may not do. As the hon. member knows, in his part of Alberta, and in my part of Saskatchewan, the cereal grain farmer can grow wheat, or barley, or flax—he can grow a number of things in most cases. If we tied it up too much on an individual crop basis—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hour reserved for consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Ouellet that Bill C-29, to amend the National Housing Act and the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act and to make other related amendments, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Art Lee (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, before the five o'clock adjournment I was addressing myself to the amendments with respect to the RRAP program. I indicated at that time that the RRAP program in effect had its origins in an area of my constituency known as Strathcona. I believe it is then appropriate for me to retell the Strathcona story in order that all hon. members can understand the significance of rehabilitation.

Strathcona is one of Vancouver's oldest residential neighbourhoods. Most of the houses in the area were built about the turn of the century, but some date back to the origins of the city itself. The Strathcona school was originally built in 1890 as the East End school.

The early residents of Strathcona were Anglo-Saxon. However, the area soon became inhabited by large numbers of Italians and Jews, as well as Scandinavians, Ukrainians, Russians and Yugoslavs. The old Hastings Auditorium at 828 East Hastings used to be called the "Italian Hall" and was the centre of Vancouver's pre-World War II Italian community. Benny's Italian Market at Union and Princess dates back to 1915. The Gibbs Boys Club building at Heatley and Pender was originally built in 1921 as the Schara Tzedeck Synagogue. The Ukrainian Canadian Centre at Hawks and Pender dates back to 1928. The church at Princess and Pender was built as the Swedish Lutheran Church and served as the Ukrainian Catholic Church before it became the Chinese Catholic Church. The Russian People's Home on Campbell Avenue, adjacent to the Russian Orthodox Church, was built by the Yugoslav community. The Yugoslavs had their own centre on Keefer Street.

Compared to the Europeans, the Chinese were latecomers to Strathcona. There were some Chinese and Japanese living in the area in the 1930s. However, it was not until after the repeal of the Chinese Exclusion Act in 1947 that Strathcona became increasingly Chinese. The area served as a gateway for postwar Chinese immigrants. Housing prices were low and the area was adjacent to Chinatown.

In 1947 Strathcona was only about 28 per cent Chinese. By 1957 this figure had reached about 50 per cent. Strathcona today is about 75 per cent Chinese. It contains less than 10 per cent of greater Vancouver's 60,000-plus Chinese. There are large numbers of Chinese living in neighbourhoods well outside of the Chinatown-Strathcona area.

Housing

In 1957 the city of Vancouver embarked upon a 20-year urban renewal plan. A major focus of this program was comprehensive redevelopment for Strathcona, the clearance of all existing homes and replacement with public housing, high rises, and row housing. Union Street was to be the southern border of the new Strathcona as the blocks of homes below it were to be demolished for a major city freeway system.

The rationale for the urban renewal was that Strathcona, in addition to having old and rundown housing, was in a strategic location being adjacent to the downtown, waterfront and False Creek areas. The city wanted high density development for Strathcona. Commencing in 1958, the city placed a freeze upon the entire area; property values were frozen; no major redevelopment and home improvement permits were allowed, and no regular public works maintenance was carried out. The neighbourhood was left to await the bulldozer.

• (2010)

The first phase of urban renewal began in 1959 with the construction of 159 units of public housing at MacLean Park. An entire block of homes was then demolished as a new replacement park. Ten acres of land and homes were then cleared in preparation for the 376 unit Raymur Place housing project at Campbell Avenue.

Acquisition and clearance for Scheme II urban renewal began in 1965 with the expropriation and clearance of homes in five blocks for an extention to MacLean Park, senior citizens housing, and an extention to Strathcona school.

The urban renewal schemes met strong opposition from Strathcona residents and Chinatown leaders. It was pointed out that the urban renewal would destroy the community and threaten the livelihood of Chinatown. The expropriation of homes for $6,000-$8,000 was argued to be unfair and discriminatory. The protests were of no avail as the city continued with its urban renewal. In August, 1968, the city prepared Scheme III, the final and complete bulldozing of the entire neighbourhood. Fortunately this scheme was never implemented as the federal government reassessed its urban renewal involvement across Canada.

The third and final urban renewal proposal had also sparked a last ditch effort among Strathcona residents to stop the bulldozing of their neighbourhood. In December, 1968, 600 persons attended the founding meeting of the Strathcona Property Owners and Tenants Association, SPOTA. The purpose of the new organization was to ensure that the people who live in the area would be fully informed, and their interests and community would be protected. In briefs to city hall, SPOTA argued for a revised renewal scheme which favoured rehabilitation and preservation.

In the fall of 1969 SPOTA was asked by the senior governments to join in a four level committee to investigate rehabilitation for Strathcona. It was the first time in Canada that a committee had been charged with that responsibility. It was also the first time that a citizens group had been invited to participate in such a capacity.

In July, 1971, after almost two years of meetings, studies and negotiations, the committee agreed upon a series of recommendations. They called for a $4.9 million rehabilitation scheme, with two million dollars each in new public works and grant-loan housing rehabilitation assistance. The Strathcona rehabilitation project officially began in February, 1972, and operated out of a site office on Hawks Avenue. During the three years of implementation, the three levels of government, site office staff and the community worked closely and informally together.

In the summer of 1973 the federal government introduced national programs for neighbourhood improvement and rehabilitation based largely on the Strathcona experience. The new programs, NIP and RRAP, which the city of Vancouver has already chosen for certain areas, include additional and expanded features of the Strathcona project. The new programs are also meant to recognize a meaningful role for citizen involvement in the neighbourhood improvement process.

With the completion of the rehabilitation project in 1975, Strathcona displays a new look and spirit. Under the project 233 houses were improved, with the majority of home owners expending sums above and beyond the grant-loan assistance. If the original $2 million allotted for housing rehabilitation assistance, less than $700,000 was spent. This resulted because the grant-loan scheme excluded more home owners and failed to attract more landlords than had originally been estimated. The new sidewalks, sewers and streets were installed but overran their $2 million budget by $500,000.

With strong community initiative, a new linear park was funded by the rehabilitation project. Vacant lots were used in the park development to connect the existing parks in the neighbourhood. The linear park also involved blocking off streets and thus curtailing heavy truck and non-residential traffic through the community.

Another worth-while development during the rehabilitation project was the home improvement centre. Initiated by Strathcona students, this centre offered free design services and home improvement, and operated repair workshops for the elderly and lower income people. It operated under OFY and LIP funding.

For members of SPOTA, rehabilitation of their neighbourhood did not end with the rehabilitation project. Midway through the project in 1973, SPOTA initiated plans for non-profit housing on infill lots throughout their neighbourhood. These lots, which had been acquired by the city under urban renewal, were sold to the provincial government at SPOTA's request. The province was to lease the land for non-profit housing.

SPOTA began its housing program with a seven-unit co-operative on five vacant lots at 730 Union Street. After several months of delay by city zoning officials, the project began construction in the fall of 1974. Five months later the seven families moved in. Financing of the co-operative came under the federal government's non-profit housing program.

In the fall of 1975 SPOTA began phase two of the infill housing. This involved three units of housing on double lots at eight different Strathcona locations. The first families started moving into the new units in the spring of 1976. Financing for this phase came under the provincial government's non-profit housing program.

The third and final phase of the infill housing involves the construction of single units on 16 remaining small lots. Construction was to begin in the summer of 1976.

Future SPOTA housing plans include non-profit housing on the vacant land opposite the Strathcona school. This site was acquired by the city under urban renewal and then sold to a developer for $210,000, about one third of the cost of the land assembly. In 1971 the city sought to buy it back for three times the amount to locate a large firehall there. After strong Strathcona-Chinatown protests, which culminated in a large rally in December, 1972, civic officials re-declared the land for housing. In February, 1974, SPOTA and another organization were chosen by the city to develop non-profit and senior citizens housing on the site. Although the two organizations submitted detailed housing plans to the city in the fall of 1974, no city action has been taken because of a legal suit filed by the private developer demanding market value for the land. At the present time the "firehall site" is a parking lot operated for and by the Vancouver police department.

During its years of existence, SPOTA has not only been involved in rehabilitation and new housing, but has also been concerned with many other community matters. The organization has worked closely with other Strathcona groups in social services and recreational and educational concerns. The oranization has participated in many festivals and conferences which have taken place in the area. It has assisted students and researchers interested in neighbourhood improvement and rehabilitation.

For SPOTA neighbourhood improvement will not end with the rehabilitation project and the new housing. It is a continuous process. Other problems will be encountered.

Whatever the future, there has been one central principle throughout the Strathcona experience, and that is that citizens must participate in those decisions which affect their community. This principle has been fought for by SPOTA, as it has been by many other neighbourhood organizations across Canada.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I have three other designated NIP/RRAP areas in my riding, these being the downtown eastside, Grandview-Woodlands, and Kiwassa. I also share, with my hon. friend from Vancouver-Kingsway, the NIP/RRAP area known as Mount Pleasant. The same success story is applicable to these communities, People living in these areas have pride. They feel they belong to a neighbourhood. That is well worth the exercise.

I am told that since the program was introduced in 1973 CMHC has been assisting in the rehabilitation of some 20,000 units a year. I hope that as the program is broadened, and as municipal officials become more familiar with its application, we will be able to increase that annual rate. It is important to bear in mind, however, that residential rehabilitation is a long-term program.

● (2020)

There are some two million housing units in Canada which were built before the end of the World War II. Some of these are in good shape, and some are now beyond rehabilitation. A great many of them—perhaps as many as half of these old houses—could benefit from some basic rehabilitation and have their useful life extended by a number of years. The point I would like to make is that a job of this magnitude cannot be accomplished overnight, or even in a single year. The number of homes that can be rehabilitated in any year depends not only upon the federal funds which can be made available but also upon the capacity of municipal organizations to manage and implement the program, and on availability of skilled, organized manpower to carry out the actual repairs and reconstruction. There is no question that residential rehabilitation will continue in Canada and will grow year by year.

There is no doubt in my mind either that the Government of Canada will continue to play a leadership role in this growing industry. The critical importance of rehabilitation is becoming more widely recognized every day in Canada and throughout the world.

More and more people are recognizing the importance of saving housing and extending its useful life, instead of tearing it down and building something new. Rehabilitation and preservation are part of the whole philosophy of the conserver society. There is a need to manage and recycle our non-renewable resources.

If we can make our existing housing work longer, there is a very significant saving in energy, materials, and financial resources, compared with starting from scratch to build new houses. This trend is an important part of the changing pattern of housing development which is emerging in Canada and throughout the world. It means that our concerns are gradually shifting away from annual production targets to a broader concept of housing needs.

Since the end of World War II and up until recent years our main concern has been with production, the generation of new housing starts. CMHC was established in 1946 to help us catch up with the backlog of housing production created by the depression and the war years. We were worried, first of all, about housing for returning veterans, and then about the growing demand created by the so-called baby boom. The production of new housing was a critical problem in those years and has continued to be important. Many of our National Housing Act programs have been intended to encourage new construction. Up to now, that has been our prime goal.

Times are changing, however, and so are our housing needs. The rate of population growth has been slowing down for the last 20 years or so and this likely will continue for at least another decade. This fact and others mean that we will need less new housing each year. By the mid-eighties, as we have all read, we will probably need only about 200,000 starts a year. Declining population growth also means that there will be a higher proportion of elderly people in the population. At the same time, more people are putting off getting married and having children. Young people are leaving home at an earlier age. The result of these trends will be smaller households and more so-called non-family households. The net effect of all these changes will be a shift from the suburbs, away from the ranch bungalows and family-type, child-oriented housing, toward the inner city where housing is older and more in need of rehabilitation.

The rising cost of fuel and our dwindling energy resources will, of course, accelerate this shift into the city proper by raising the cost of the daily journey to work.

All the demographic trends, economic projections and our shifting social values suggest that rehabilitation is going to be a more significant activity for at least the rest of this century. I am pleased to see the government, in bringing forward these amendments, recognizes the importance of rehabilitation and conservation and has reaffirmed its intention to continue to support it in a tangible way.

One particular amendment relating to rehabilitation deserves special mention, namely, the lifting of the $500 forgiveness feature on private rooming houses. The rate will be established by regulation and therefore this method provides the required flexibility. At present, the law provides for loans up to $4,000 per bed to rehabilitate rooming houses with $500 of this amount being forgivable. The Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) recognized this as being totally inadequate, and these amendments take care of this by removing the maximum ceiling of $500.

What does this mean, however, in human terms? Really, it finally recognizes that people who live in the downtown cores of cities, often wrongly referred to as skid rows, are entitled to decent housing, as well as those who live in more affluent areas.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lee: The seed for this amendment was planted during the Habitat conference which took place in Vancouver in the spring of 1976 when the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Danson) visited the downtown east side of Vancouver in his former capacity as minister of state for urban affairs. He saw the deplorable conditions first-hand. The same is true in other Canadian cities, like Toronto. Unfortunately, the conditions in Vancouver's downtown east side are indescribable with words, but let me illustrate by quoting from a report entitled "The Downtown East Side Report" as follows:

> In general, though, the relevant area is bounded by Clark Drive, Cambie Street, the south lane of Hastings Street, and the waterfront. It also includes a number of hotels and rooming houses in Chinatown and Strathcona. A number of people live in a similar housing situation in the downtown core, particularly on Granville Street, but because of resource limitations they were not specifically included in the study.
> Over the past few decades, accommodation in hotels and rooming houses has been allowed to decline in both quantity and quality. Commercial uses and office space uses have pushed many residents eastward, first out of the downtown core, and, later, out of the Gastown area. Residents have opposed this trend, but municipal zoning policies have allowed it to continue. More recently, re-zoning proposals threaten to allow industrial uses to displace residential accommodation in the Oppenheimer area, east of Main Street. New zoning policies to stabilize and reinforce the residential character of the area would be needed to halt this over-all trend.

The hotels involved are very old buildings, some of them built before the turn of the century. The above-ground floors are divided into single rooms. Usually, the ground floor contains commercial space, often premises with a liquor licence legally supported by the rooms upstairs. The rooming houses are smaller buildings or large older houses divided into separate rooms for tenants.

For years the hotels and rooming houses of the downtown eastside have been characterized by an almost continuous stream of complaints about uncleanliness, pests, fire hazards, etc. These conditions usually violate Vancouver bylaw standards. The problem has been not that the standards are too lenient, but that the standards have not been met, in practice.

In fact the report disclosed that the total number of bylaw violations found in the 23 buildings examined was 9,743.

What about the people who live in these rooming houses? Who are they? Putting the sex, age and household status of the tenants together, the most typical tenant interviewed was a 50 to 59-year old man living by himself.

Because the area involved is wrongfully referred to as skid row, there is a myth that tenants who live there are transient. In fact the average length of residence is about 13 years, an astonishing figure for a neighbourhood that has a reputation as a transient area. This result is confirmed by the 1971 census, which showed that the downtown east side is the second most stable residential area of Vancouver, after Dunbar, a comfortable single family dwelling area.

With respect to income, it is striking that almost all the people surveyed receive well below the minimum income estimated by the Canadian Senate as necessary for a decent, healthy life in Canada; 34 per cent receive less than half the poverty level. In short, most of the tenants are on fixed incomes, receiving guaranteed income supplements, war veterans allowances, Canada Pension and unemployment insurance. With this particular amendment, rehabilitation of these rooming houses can now go ahead. Rehabilitation will unquestionably help this area, but new housing is also required. The federal government, through CMHC, considers new housing a priority in this area. What does the city of Vancouver say? His Worship Jack Volrich says it is not a priority area.

What does the province say? Well, it is up to the city to declare its priority and, in any event, the province will not make direct subsidies available to new housing projects, other than senior citizens' projects. Clearly, given the level of incomes in this area, subsidies are required to augment and to ensure the amendments in this current bill regarding social housing will be effective. However, the city and the province through the minister of housing, the hon. William Vander Zalm, who is well known to hon. members of this House for his "Frog" songs—

Mr. Friesen: He is a Liberal. He ran for the Liberal leadership.

Mr. Lee: —are reluctant to reciprocate the federal measures. I submit this is because of ignorance on the part of the present minister of housing in British Columbia and the mayor and city council of Vancouver. To classify this area as skid-row is totally unacceptable. Residents, like other Canadian citizens, deserve decent, affordable housing. The federal minister of housing has recognized this by these amendments, and I would encourage the city of Vancouver and the province of British Columbia to join with the federal government in helping areas like the downtown east side core of the city of Vancouver.

● (2030)

We are dealing with human beings, not some mythical notion of skid-row bums or winos. To allow areas like the downtown east side to stagnate because of ignorance would be a travesty and a condemnation of modern civilization.

Mr. Blackburn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order which is directed to the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Lee), having listened to his very lengthy but very informative speech. I should like to ask the hon. member, for whom I have the utmost respect, what he has been able to do in this area since becoming a member of parliament. I find myself in a similar position in my riding. What can we do as members of parliament here in Ottawa to get rid of the slum landlords, to try to get rid of the people who would take—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I suggest to the hon. member that this is not a point of order. He is asking the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Lee) a question. Would the hon. member for Vancouver East accept a question?

Mr. Lee: Yes, Mr. Speaker. In answer to the question the hon. member put to me about what we can do with absentee and slum landlords, let me say to him that the first thing we can do in the city of Vancouver—and some members of the council in that city have been trying to do it—is to get the city standards and bylaws enforced. If you start enforcing these bylaws, it is argued these people will close the hotels and the private rooming houses. But our experience has shown that this is not necessarily the case.

The more recent experience we have had in the area of enforcing the bylaw with respect to the installation of fire sprinklers cost a lot of money, and most of the absentee landlords said they would have to close these premises down because of the cost. But the enforcement of these bylaws has saved a number of lives and has not resulted in most of these absentee landlords closing down the premises. A lot has to be done by the maintenance of city standards and bylaws, but the kinds of amendments envisaged in this legislation will help as well.

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, it is Monday, February 26, 1979, and I want you to know, sir, that in the House of Commons, in the nation's capital, things are as they ought to be. We on this side propose and they on the other side oppose. We have taken the stance of the government in proposing the positive proposals on the deductibility of interest on property taxes. They on the other side are preparing themselves for the opposition and are taking the stance of opposing that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whiteway: Just listen to those Liberals howl. The minister leading off the debate and his Liberals have spent more time criticizing and attacking the Conservative proposal and policy, which is a clear, popular policy across the country, of interest deductibility of municipal property taxes. The minister spoke in the House for two and a half hours but did not say anything. He is a minister who speaks well in both languages but says nothing in either. For two and a half hours he spoke in this chamber and, by and large, he said nothing except to criticize the PC policy of interest deductibility of municipal property taxes.

You will understand, sir, my reluctance to believe them because I well remember the time back in the election campaign of 1974 when this government and this minister went across the country preaching to the Canadian people, and sounding so sincere, that price and wage controls would not work. I remember well the night when the Prime Minister of this country (Mr. Trudeau) spoke on national television and, in a most dramatic moment, pointed straight to every Canadian and said, "Zap, you're frozen." The Liberals were against wage and price controls, and every Canadian knew they were against it. To a man they were categorically opposed to them. Well, sir, here they sit tonight, as they did yesterday and last week, and as I suppose they will tomorrow, opposed to our program of interest deductibility and municipal tax deductibility from personal income tax. So you will undertstand if I am reluctant to believe them, for these Liberals will change their minds as the wind changes and they will find out, as they have in the byelections and since, what the people truly think.

They sent a contingent down to Washington to prepare a report and to come back and tell us that everyone in Washington is against our program. If they could, they would undo it. Why, everyone is against it except the people, except the 230 million Americans. Well, sir, my party and I, we will all stay with the people.

I was somewhat impressed by the housing critic of my party, the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mrs. Pigott), as she spoke in the House for about an hour. She did not use the kind of biting criticism that was a characteristic of the minister's speech. She was constructive. To that degree I can also compliment the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Lee) because, although his opening remarks in the first five or ten minutes were critical of our deductibility program, he did at least devote part of his speech to his own riding and the things that are happening there. These Liberals are so preoccupied and all in a fluff because they are on the wrong side, not only of a good issue but of the right issue. I am going to set them straight and do what, from time to time, is required of students of government who have not done their homework. I will lecture them, sir, from five to ten minutes on the merits of the interest deductibility proposal.

First of all, the minister should know that our program is not a housing program. He referred to it time and time again as the Tory housing policy. It is not a housing policy. We have told him and told him, but we will tell him again that this is not our housing policy. Now that the super minister of economic affairs is here, perhaps he might write it down and tape the note in front of his desk so that in time he will understand that this is not our housing policy, it is an economic policy.

Our economic policy on the deductibility of interest on your principal residence up to a maximum of $5,000 a year is based on the principle that governments prejudice interest rates. I am fortunate in that the President of the Board of Economic Development Ministers (Mr. Andras) is in the House paying strict attention, and I am sure that when he speaks on this subject he will underscore the reality that governments, by their borrowing practices and spending habits, in essence set the interest rates of the country. It is because of the wasteful and extravagant spending of the government that the interest rates on first mortgages in this country are anywhere between 11.75 per cent to 12.5 per cent, depending in what part of the country you apply for a mortgage. So the first principle of our program is based on the reality that government sets interest rates.

Then the other reality is that in the 25 or 30-year amortization period of a mortgage, interest constitutes a large portion of the principal and interest mortgage payment.

Another principle upon which our policy is based is that housing is the right of every Canadian. We disagree with what was suggested by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) when he said that housing was a luxury. I do not consider housing to be a luxury. It is the right of every Canadian who wants to own his own home. The government ought to put its financial affairs into shape so that those Canadians can afford homes. It is with that background that we adopted a policy of interest deductibility. Our policy is a simple one. Its maximum is $5,000 a year on a maximum mortgage of $50,000 on the interest deductibility side. It must be on a principal residence, a first mortgage, and $1,000 maximum property taxes.

We heard the minister and other government members scrambling to think of every conceivable bad point in our policy. They even put the best minds at the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to work. I know my information is true because I was told by members of CMHC. The minister told them to burn the midnight oil. They were told to get their best minds and brains working on getting reasons why the Tory policy is bad and will not work. The minister did not ask for an objective analysis of the deductibility. He wanted reasons to fire back at Tory members why the program would not work. They came up with the following reasons.

They said our program was for the rich. The facts prove them wrong. There are approximately 4.6 million households in the country. Approximately 67 per cent, or two-thirds, of home owners earn under $15,000, and only 6 per cent earn over $25,000. The argument that our program is for the rich just does not bear out. As a matter of fact, if one combines all the incomes of people working in a given family, 35 per cent of family incomes are under $10,000. Only 10 per cent of the combined incomes within families owning homes are over $25,000. When the Grits go around the country indicating that it is not a policy for the poor, they do not have the facts, and the facts prove them wrong.

Another great criticism which is mimicked in unison from time to time by hon. members opposite is that there will be a great run on the mortgage market. Canadian mortgage funds will dry up, according to hon. members opposite, if everyone runs out and borrows all the money they can against their homes to take full advantage of the mortgage deductibility scheme. Perhaps that will occur, but we must remember that most Canadians have mortgages on their homes, or those who do not have the maximum possible mortgages on their homes, run out to borrow money in order to take advantage of the scheme, will they put it in cookie jars or their socks? Of course not. They will re-invest it.

The other day my leader coined a phrase, a little slogan which means a lot, "From the sock to the stock." I happen to think Canadians are astute in investing their money in Canada. Thus I am excited about the possibility of Canadians borrowing against their homes to invest in this country. If they do that, our program will be of double benefit to the country.

Also hon. members opposite indicate that our program would discriminate against renters. The minister made a great ado about this. He indicated that our policy would discriminate against renters. I took the time to visit one apartment block in my constituency. I knocked on several doors and said, "Do you have a dream or a hope of one day owning your own home?" In every single case the answer was "Yes". I do not deny from time to time some Canadians prefer to rent, but by and large renters want to own their own homes. Our program would allow their hopes to happen and their dreams to come true. It would allow a large number of renters to own their own homes. The Liberals who suggest this program discriminates against renters should talk to the renters and find out that that is not the case.

Also hon. members opposite have indicated that the government could not afford such a program. They have asked how Tories would be able to pay for the program, and have come up with astronomical figures. We indicated that the cost of the program would be $1.6 billion in the fourth year, and the Liberal government increased that cost by $4 billion. That is the type of Grit financing which has occurred over the last 15 years. We have said that it would cost approximately $1.6 billion, and our estimation will not be out by much. We can afford such a scheme because we believe the Auditor General when he said there was waste and inefficiency in the government. Now we have a political commitment.

When my leader goes across the country talking about zero-based financing, sunset laws, the efficiency of government, and squeezing every tax dollar for every bit of worth we can get out of it, he means it. We are committed to such a government program, and that is why our interest deductibility scheme will work. Also we know it will work because we have the support of Canadians across the country.

We on this side know the comments that we have been receiving, as well as the comments being received by government members. This is an exciting program which gets the blood of Canadians running. They see tax dollars coming to them which otherwise would go to the government. An increase in their disposable incomes makes them excited because it increases their buying power. That would be an economic stimulus. I suspect there are still Liberals in the country who will attempt to discredit our program every time they get a chance, but they should remember that Canadians are accepting our program and rejecting their criticism. They are lining up by the hundreds of thousands to support a government which proposes such programs.

We are beginning to prepare for governing, while the Liberal government is beginning to prepare itself for the role of opposition. The Liberal government is stale and a spendthrift. It is almost foreshadowing the things to come when the Prime Minister calls the next election.

Other members on this side of the House will deal with various aspects of Bill C-29 which should have been before the House for consideration a year ago. The Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) should not stand in his place and suggest that we ought to give this bill quick passage, and then speak on it for 2.5 hours one year after it should have been introduced. We on this side will take the bill apart piece by piece. In committee we will reconstruct it so that it will deal effectively with the problems in the country. The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) will deal with AHOP. The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) will deal with rural housing and CHIP. The hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) will deal with RRAP and community services. The hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. Holmes) will deal with native housing, and so on. We on this side will propose such positive amendments and criticisms of this legislation that it will be whipped into shape. In committee we will continue the mentality which the government has displayed in preparing itself for the role of opposition.

I am concerned that Bill C-29 merely begins new directions in housing, a new era in consultation and relations between the federal and provincial governments, a new direction in housing, from public to social and a new era in financing, that is, a shift from the government sector to the private sector. I would like to deal with those three areas.

The era of consultation, of realizations between the federal government and the provincial governments is the first one with which I would like to deal. We have had a decade of intrusion by the federal government into provincial jurisdiction, and as a death repentance, at the last hour on the eve of a federal election the Minister of State for Urban Affairs is scrambling about the country finally realizing that the ministry of state for urban affairs must wind down and get out of areas of jurisdiction belonging to the provinces, so he talks about global funding.

Consultation means to seek opinion and implies obtaining agreement before action is taken. The most recent report of the task force of western premiers on constitutional trends reads at page 31:

In the broad areas of housing and urban affairs, consultation is virtually non existent.

The western premiers have found that through the years consultation has not been there, so when the minister claimed there had been consultation he implied that not only had he sought their advice, that there was discussion on the various courses of action, but that there had been agreement before action was taken. We now have as of January 1, in effect, a new housing act for community services, and yet as of that date there were provinces which had not signed and were not in agreement, but parliament is asked to ratify the amendments.

Parliament, in the tradition which I know it, is a body which debates the proposals of the federal government before they are implemented, but in this case we are asked merely to ratify the decision already made and implemented by the federal government. I can see, in looking at the documentation which I can find, and hearing the testimony of the provinces, that this was a hurried move by the minister. There were two meetings, one of which was on February 1, 1978, in Edmonton. After those two meetings, and without agreement, the minister decides unilaterally on a new direction for housing, the new community service program, and he is chopping AHOP, changing RRAP, and abolishing ARP and all the rest, on a unilateral decision by this government. That certainly is not consultation. That is a new direction in housing, but it is a typical kind of consultation which characterizes this government.

What we now see is more central housing policies in the name of unity and that the provincial governments are now asked not to be co-makers of policy or co-determiners of a direction for housing, but to be nothing more than administrators, the boys who do the leg work for the kinds of programs envisaged by the minister. For those who believe that this federal government consults with the provinces about global funding, I would read to hon. members what the minister said in his speech as it is reported at page 3551 of Hansard:

This bill will enable us not only to reach our goals in the housing field but also to obtain an even wider objective. It will enable the government to co-operate with other government levels so that Canadians may live in a safe and pleasant environment.

He goes on to say a few lines down:

The community services program was discussed with the provincial ministers concerned.

Perhaps it was discussed, but there was no agreement reached and nothing signed before it was implemented. He then goes on to say:

The federal government will continue, of course, to provide help in the form of direct grants for all those activities but it will extend from now on its assistance to a whole list of social, cultural and recreational services.

This minister is not only continuing the tradition of this government of intrusion into provincial rights respecting housing, but in fact he is enlarging his share of influence. By the minister's own definition this program now covers a whole list of social, cultural, and recreational services. I can see that this new era of consultation is really a new era of intrusion by this federal minister, under the hoax of community services and the illusion of global funding. I like his language because it sounds good, but he betrays himself as to what he really means. I am concerned that this new era of consultation is really much more widespread in terms of intrusion, but as far as the mentality of the minister is concerned, it is only business as usual.

This bill poses a new era in the direction of housing from the public sector to the social sector. I have been watching the clock and it must be on "speed up" time because it is just flying by, so I am going to make one point and then go on to a solution I have for the minister which I would like to put to him before my time expires. We see in this shift from public to social housing—and by that I mean a new concept in the thinking of this minister and this government—that the responsibility of the federal government is not simply providing the unity which is a classic definition of public housing, but rather going into social housing which implies not only the brick and mortar but also the kind of community, equality, and integrated housing. It is much more socialistic than the minister would lead us to believe. I think there ought to be some scrutiny in this regard, the change from the traditional public funding by the federal government to a socialistic housing policy.

The area which is of most interest to me tonight is the change to a new era of financing proposed by Bill C-29, a shift from the funding which was hitherto the responsibility of the federal government. That responsibility for funding is now being shifted to the private sector. In effect, the private sector will take on the socialistic policies of the federal government. This is evident in two particular areas. One area is with regard to RRAP, which my colleague, the hon. member for Rosedale, will deal with, but I hope that the minister, being from the province of Quebec, realizes that with the large number of renters in that province it will be of particular concern to Quebeckers. No longer will the federal government provide funds for the RRAP program. They must now come exclusively from the private sector, which will bring hardship to the province of Quebec in particular because funding from the private sector will not come easy.

In the last year we have witnessed a fiasco in the AHOP program. My colleague, the hon. member for St. John's East, will be talking about AHOP, but certainly I want to deal with GPMs. GPMs are replacing the AHOP program, so we must look at AHOP to see what went wrong with it in order to determine whether GPMs can correct it.

AHOP was based on two premises, shaky as they were. I am surprised that the superminister, who at one time was minister of urban affairs, even allowed AHOP to come into being. I applaud the government for innovative ideas, for new concepts, but it is foolhardy, it is stupid, it is irresponsible for a government to jump from one program into another without evaluating the first one. They are jumping from AHOP into GPMs without evaluating AHOP.

The two premises on which AHOP rested were, first, that the real disposal income of AHOP families would increase. The other day the minister said—and I cannot quote him exactly—"I am sorry that their incomes did not rise to their expectations; I am sorry that their real incomes did not go up as much as they had thought or hoped." He is sorry to bring in a program based on the fact that incomes would rise—then the government brought in wage and price controls which would negate that fact—but he introduces it after 10 per cent of AHOP units in this country are in default. That figure will double within four or five months.

AHOP was based on the assumption that the real value of the property would increase. We knew what happened to land and house prices at the turn of the decade, yet this government based a program on the expectation, upon the certainty, that real estate values would increase. In the last couple of years, sir, real estate has not appreciated. Now that the first five-year term is over we find that the value of AHOP homes has not escalated. Because of the subsidy against the second mortgage—held by CMHC or the lender—those two combined exceeded the value of the home. With the market interest rates of today and the real PIT doubled in many cases, we are faced with walk-aways and defaults.

In that setting the government turned its back on AHOP, still defending it in this House and across the country. If they could humble themselves for once and bring themselves to admit—the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) (Mrs. Campagnolo) is in the House tonight and this could easily be said of her—that they make a mistake in judgment, as we all do from time to time; if only they could come before the House and the Canadian people and say, "We made a mistake in judgment, we acted without the full facts," instead, they defend their actions today—and it will be to the death of this government.

Instead of admitting that AHOP is a colossal failure with massive defaults, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs stands in this House and defends it. But it is so good that he abandons the program and brings in GPM! That alone is evidence that the AHOP funding was inadequate, badly based, and irresponsible.

Let us examine the GPMs and see what the lending institutions say about this new government funding scheme. I shall only take time for two quotations. An article in the Free Press of February 21 reports an interview with Mr. M. L. Lahn of Canada Trust in which he said that most foreclosures of Canada Trust are related to the disastrous AHOP. The article goes on as follows:

[Mr. Whiteway.]

Canada Trust became a lender under the AHOP program "most reluctantly and only in support of government policy." The loans were government insured, otherwise the company would not have participated, the president said.

The current Central Mortgage and Housing Corp. (CMHC) sponsored graduated payments loans almost ensure negative equities and even greater foreclosure problems unless inflation in housing values occurs rapidly—a rather inappropriate social premise on which to proceed.

He goes on to say that he will not participate. Perhaps the minister wants to pass off lightly what the trust companies say, but he cannot pass off the Royal Bank. Mr. W. Peter Carter, the general manager of mortgage services for the Royal Bank—he is no little teller, he is the man who is going to make the policy—was interviewed by The Tribune. An article which appeared in the February 17 issue reports in part as follows:

He said the GPM lending scheme is an example of both "irresponsible lending" and "irresponsible government."

The article went on to quote him as follows:

The major chartered banks have told Central Mortgage and Housing Corp. of our concerns and have told them bluntly that we are not prepared to promote such a scheme," he said. "We think it is morally indefensible."

The Royal Bank will not lend a nickel to the GPM. Last Friday, with the knowledge of the disaster of AHOP, with the knowledge that the lending institutions have told him the policy is wrong, indefensible, immoral and irresponsible, the minister said in this House, "Boys, we are going to go ahead anyway."

Sir, GPM could work. Here is a formula. The minister is in the House and he should take his pencil and write it down. The super minister is also here. He should write it down in case the Minister of State for Urban Affairs cannot understand it. Here is the formula by which GPMs could work.

Let us look at the government's proposal. It is for 5 per cent down and that the level of payments in the first five years be 75 per cent of the normal level of payments. That means that for the first nine years, in fact for the first 15 years, the debt against the house will exceed the original principal owing on the house. That will guarantee for the first 15 years that whoever owns it will owe more than they paid for the house. It will be negative equity. That is why the Royal Bank and Canada Trust have said they will not participate, because of that kind of irresponsible lending practice.

They have suggested that if the minister would use the formula of 14 per cent down, 14 per cent front end equity and 75 per cent of standard level payment, it would work. That would always ensure that the debt would never exceed the original principal, or cost of the house. Alternatively, they could put 8 per cent down and have the payments 85 per cent of the normal level payments. Either of those would work as long as at any given time there would be no negative equity. That is the key to making the GPM work. Any other formula will not work.

The minister knew this scheme was bound for disaster. The banks and financial institutions of the country as well as the CMHC warned him. He knew this would not be an exciting program to the banks because of the track record of AHOP. The GPM is identical to AHOP in the concept of 5 per cent and 75 per cent.

The minister must have thought that he could throw in a sweetener—give them a deal they could not refuse. In effect he told the private banking institutions, "The government is not going to have any more responsibility for funding for families whose incomes cannot buy a normal market mortgage." He was saying that the government is going to wipe its hands of funding responsibility and put it all in the private sector. He was saying, "Boys, here is a deal you cannot refuse. If you accept this kind of funding which has already proved to be disastrous in AHOP"—that is my editorial note—the minister did not admit that, never has, and probably never will. The sweetener is—and this is all in the bill—that if the GPMs are in default for 90 days, all the lender—the trust company or the bank—has to do is to phone CMHC and tell them, and CMHC says, "All right, we will make good the mortgage." It is done immediately, without any foreclosure procedure, without any normal period in which they can give notice of foreclosure to the tenant, or to the mortgagee. There is none of that. CMHC will pay up immediately. That was the sweetener, and knowing it was a bad economic policy the government said, "Do not worry, this will not cost you a cent. If they are three months in arrears, we will guarantee the payment."

Sir, I am glad that the banks and the trust companies in this country are more responsible than the minister. They said, "That kind of financing is morally indefensible. We will not do it. We will not go along with it." Here is the answer, sir. I will make those changes in committee. I will make the amendments that will change the GPMs so that they will be acceptable to the lending institutions of this country. I will give the minister notice now that if he does not accept those and the other amendments which we have proposed on this side to clean up Bill C-29 and make it look like a housing policy instead of political gimmickry, we will not support this bill on third reading. We will vote for it to go to committee so we can clean it up. That is the stance we are taking. It is a positive stance, getting ready for government.

We have positive proposals. We will take them to the committee and we will move every amendment necessary to make this act work and to make it equitable. We will make it do all the things the minister claims he wants done but claims he cannot because the legislation is inadequate. We will do that. But if you do not accept those, sir, we will vote against this bill on third reading. We will do so because the legislation is wrong and the GPM is morally indefensible. It will lead to the same kinds of disasters we have experienced with AHOP.

There are two other alternatives about which we have been talking. These are positive suggestions that we have asked the minister to consider in the area of housing. We have asked him to look at reverse annuities for senior citizens or for those people who have equity in their homes but may want to turn that equity into an annuity. We have asked the minister to look at that. Up to this point in time there have been no studies and no reviews. We have not had a minute's worth of study done by this minister's department on reverse annuities.

We have asked the minister to look at variable rates. But as soon as we say that variable rates are popular in some states of the United States, the minister has this phobia that interest deductibility is an American phenomenon. It is an American dream but it has been part of the American housing policy for some 50 years. So the minister has this phobia that an Americanized dream is something wrong. It is something like saying that we cannot copy those Americans. The minister has not even considered this suggestion. As a matter of fact, the words variable mortgage have never passed his lips. He cannot bring himself to say the words. We are saying the words tonight. I am asking the minister to look at variable rates in mortgages which have worked successfully in many of the states in the United States.

I see that my time has almost expired, but before closing I would like to tell the minister that we have been watching his activities over the last year. We have been waiting for this legislation. I want to tell you, sir, that I am disappointed that this minister continues hacking at the branches instead of digging at the roots. He hacks at the branches, changing the rules. He has a program one day which he changes the next. He has an AHOP policy one day and he abolishes it the next. This government, and this minister, will be known as the government of default by default. I would hope that when we take the reins of government the comparison will be made that they were the government of default and we were the government of no fault.

To that end we would commit ourselves and our party not only to good economic policy but to a housing policy of equity for all.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the National Housing Act amendments which provide some needed additional flexibility. I am particularly pleased that the restrictions were removed from the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program so that it is no longer limited to housing in areas designated for neighbourhood improvement. When this bill is passed, the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program, or RRAP, as most people know it, will make available to individual home owners CMHC direct loans and subsidies based on income. Co-operative housing groups and non-profit associations will also be eligible for RRAP assistance without being limited to designated areas.

Representing as I do an urban constituency with older housing and with many skilled construction workers who could do repairs and reconstruction, I am particularly pleased to see measures that favour renovation and preservation of older housing.

Many of our Canadian housing programs up to now have been aimed at increasing the supply of new houses. For example, ceilings on the AHOP program were such that, in Toronto, buyers were limited to a condominium or a townhouse in the suburbs. But many people prefer to live near their families and friends in the inner city without having to spend a lot of time and money travelling to and from work, hence the importance of renovating older homes and doing this in a way which makes these homes accessible to people with low incomes, whether these older homes are renovated by individual home owners or by a group of people who have decided to form a co-operative in order to provide themselves with affordable housing.

Prior to 1973 co-operative housing was treated as just another form of home ownership and received the same treatment and benefits as a single applicant for a home owner loan. I am referring here to both types of housing co-operatives, first the building co-operatives in which a group of people simply pool their resources to build their housing at the same time with each member of the group owning a unit outright, to do with as she or he pleases, and second, the continuing co-operative or the non-profit group which provide housing for members, in which case the co-operative itself owns the housing, each member has a share in the project, and none of the units in such a co-operative can be sold for a profit.

By 1973, although building co-operatives received some assistance, continuing co-operatives under group ownership had great difficulty in getting recognition and acceptance under the act. One problem was that legislation did not provide for co-operatives to obtain loans for low rental housing, except as the sponsor for a project in which residents did not have to be members. In other words, people with low and moderate income could have housing provided for them, but they could not own it through a co-operative.

Another problem prior to 1973 was that co-operatives could obtain funding only for new projects, not for existing housing, nor even for the rehabilitation of existing housing. As a result, people in a rental project could not get an NHA loan to buy it co-operatively even if the landlord wished to sell it to them. This made it difficult indeed to mount a strong national progam of co-operative housing.

Nineteen seventy-three, however, saw the beginning of some of the changes, the final development of which we see in the present bill. This was aimed at helping co-operatives to develop fully as another housing alternative, and particularly for Canadians with low and moderate incomes. The two most important provisions in the 1973 legislation were, first, that housing co-operatives could qualify for 100 per cent loans for non-profit, low rental housing; and, second, loans were made available for both the purchase and rehabilitation of existing housing. That new legislation in effect started a new form of co-operatives, one in which members are collectively owners but individually are in a leasehold position. On the one hand, they have the proprietary rights of a landlord and, on the other hand, the rights and advantages of tenants.

Recently the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) had extensive discussions with the Co-Operative Housing Foundation of Canada which resulted in an agreement concerning the administration of subsidies and charges to occupants of the housing units that serve mutual objectives.

The new agreement provides for fewer controls by CMHC on actual project development, and allows co-operatives to have the opportunity to use a wider range of procurement techniques based on the group's experience. Greater latitude is also given to co-operative groups in choosing between the acquisition of existing developments and the construction of new projects. The agreement provides, as well, for a significant increase in the federal financial support to co-operative projects, and continued application of the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program. This agreement reflects the greater experience that has been gained in co-operative housing.

One important feature of the new legislation is that co-operative housing will be available to anyone, on a rent to income basis. Those who can afford to pay the full rent will do so. Those whose income is not sufficient to allow them to afford the full rent will pay according to their income, and the resulting losses will be offset by federal government subsidies.

There is no doubt that the new program will result in much higher production of this much needed type of accommodation; federal assistance will be almost doubled, and I understand that private lending institutions have indicated their willingness to invest as much as $500 million during the next few years in support of co-operative housing. This means that the number of people living in co-operative housing could easily double in a few years, going from the present level of about 50,000 to more than 100,000.

I am pleased to see this enhanced support to co-operative housing. It represents another means of offering an improved choice to families who want to own a home and are willing to put work into it but do not have large amounts of capital available.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see that the Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) is in his place tonight. I know he has been following the debate very closely. I hope he will follow what I have to say.

First, I think this has to be said. It has been mentioned by other members in the debate. It seems we should have been dealing with this bill six months ago, if not a year ago. That would have given us an opportunity to give it the kind of scrutiny and the kind of committee study that it requires.

There are many good, very commendable features in the bill. Quite frankly, there are also parts of the bill that bother us. They require much closer scrutiny. Consequently we are looking for the opportunity of giving the bill, if the life of this parliament permits, the kind of scrutiny in committee that it so justly deserves and warrants, especially given the performance of this minister during his tenure as minister responsible for housing and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

I wish to speak on one aspect of the bill, namely, the program that will replace the Assisted Home Ownership Program. There is no question about the commendable objectives of the AHOP program. It has succeeded in making affordable housing available across this country to people who normally would not be able to afford to buy a home, especially in this inflationary period we are going through at the present time. It has succeeded in that objective.

Perhaps one of the reasons AHOP is in trouble, and it is in serious trouble notwithstanding the fact that it is about to be scrapped and replaced by a new program, is because it was put in place with unseemly haste. Projects were approved without due regard to the inspection capability of the corporation or of the Ministry of State for Housing and Urban Affairs.

What should have been a bonanza for the low income earners who could not afford housing has in fact turned out to be a bonanza in the form of a substantial windfall to some of the developers and builders in this country, some of whom set up fly by night operations merely to cash in on the government's haste to get on with the AHOP program.

One only has to go across this country and look at some of the projects that have been built under the program. I have seen several. In the city of Surrey, in the Vancouver area, there is an AHOP program which is disgraceful. I hope my colleague who represents that part of the country will enlarge upon that. I find the situation all across the country. Montreal has a substantial AHOP program with serious problems because of inadequate inspection, hasty construction, and the use of substandard building materials. The same is true in the city of Hamilton and in my own city of St. John's.

It is that program in the city of St. John's that I want to speak about tonight for a few moments. I do so because it happens to be in my constituency and because of the fact that I believe what has happened in the Virginia Park AHOP program is unfortunately typical of what has happened to other AHOP projects across the country. Let us take a look at it.

This project was built by a contractor who formed a special sub-company, if I can put it that way, to carry out this project. That company no longer exists. What does exist is over 100 houses on which the brick is deteriorating. Substandard building materials were used within and without. There is faulty plumbing, faulty wiring, inadequate insulation, indeed in places no insulation at all, all pointing to the fact that this project obviously did not receive adequate inspection.

As a result of some very good investigative reporting by the CBC program "The Fifth Estate", aired on December 5, there is now an RCMP investigation into allegations of pay-offs by the builder to CMHC inspectors. Charges have not been laid but the allegations have been made and the investigation is under way.

● (2130)

I first brought this matter to the attention of the minister almost two years ago. At that time the complaint did not relate to faulty brick as that had not made itself apparent. I was requested by the people who were buying these homes under the Assisted Home Ownership Program to inspect personally some of the grievances they were trying to get redressed by CMHC. I saw first hand in these houses the use of bathroom fixtures that, at best, could only be described as seconds. For example, one thing I noticed in several of the houses I visited was that the bath tubs had cracks in them. I asked the home owner who first identified this what excuse he had been given for this. He said he had been told that one of the workmen had dropped a hammer into the bath tub. I found that this workman had dropped several hammers in that particular block because every second or third house I examined had a bath tub with a crack in it. Similarly with the sink fixtures, they were just hanging from the walls.

There was inadequate plastering and the windows dit not fit, to the point that on a rainy day with the wind blowing in a certain direction the rain would come inside the house. There were problems in relation to inadequate insulation resulting in unusually high heating bills. All these things were identified in that project several years ago. Letters were written, but nothing was done about them. It took the deterioration of substandard brick to bring this matter to a head.

When this bill does get before committee I will have the opportunity to lay the whole sordid picture of the Virginia Park AHOP project before this House in the form of photographs, affidavits, engineering studies and the whole bit.

What I and these people find difficult to understand is the attitude of the minister and of CMHC. This matter has been raised on a number of occasions in the House by myself, and the response from the minister has been to the effect that this is not the responsibility of CMHC. What was their response when confronted with this? Their response was that they would make additional moneys available to the owners of these houses so they could carry out the necessary repairs themselves. On the face of it that seemed like a reasonable offer, until it was discovered that what they intended to do was make the additional moneys available to the home owners and then add it on to their mortgages, giving them a year or two before they had to start paying back the additional moneys. In addition, they would have to pay back an unfixed interest rate on the money for that period of time during which payments were not made. That was the generous offer the minister made.

In reply to my question of January 23, the minister said as reported at page 2440 of Hansard:

> The offer does not only include an increase in the loan, but the possibility of subsidies attached to this offer of an extra loan in order to allow people to make urgent repairs to their homes. Discussions are going on at the present time between the CMHC regional director and the lawyer representing some of the owners, but I should like the people concerned to look fully at the advantages which are offered, because CMHC is going beyond normal practice in trying to accommodate them and help them solve their problems.

These are not their problems because, unless the minister comes to his senses, or a case can be made in committee following which the minister adopts a more reasonable and positive attitude, this will be a question for the courts to decide.

What we are looking at here is a project in respect of which CMHC approved the builder in the first instance. CMHC had to approve the site and approve the plans of the buildings. It had to approve the materials that were being used, and had to inspect the construction throughout, and in fact make the final inspection before making progress payments available to the contractor. That all took place before the home owners came into the picture, so there is no question about where responsibility lies.

Although the minister has not told me this, has not said so in the House, the reason the minister and CMHC have taken this attitude toward the Virginia Park AHOP project is that they are afraid of opening the flood gates. They know there are literally hundreds and hundreds of AHOP houses across this country which people bought from CMHC in good faith, secure at the time in the knowledge that they had been inspected by the national housing agency of the Government of Canada and approved by that agency. They felt they had a reasonably good investment, but found when they moved in that the houses had been inadequately inspected. That is the only logical conclusion you can come to after examining these projects, not just Virginia Park. You must come to the conclusion that in fact somebody had failed to ensure adequately through the inspection process that first class materials were being used throughout.

CMHC has now taken the attitude that these people have to assume the financial responsibility for this faulty brick, for the inadequate or substandard building materials, and for the inspectors who must have been blindfolded when they inspected and approved some of these things I saw first-hand. These people are expected now to pay for the mistakes of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs and for the mistakes of CMHC. Can you imagine the minister and CMHC now saying these people who have had their problems fully identified by the National Research Council, which did a study of the brick, and by professionals who were readily able to identify some of the serious flaws in construction and some of the substandard materials used, are themselves responsible? Can you imagine them saying they will provide the funds necessary to make the repairs but will add them on to the mortgages? They will not indicate what interest they will have to pay on that money until a year or two down the road. In the interim they will get the money that will be added to their mortgages and will have to pay interest for the use of that money.

These people have unanimously rejected that offer outright. There was not one single dissenting voice to that rejection. There was no political coercion, because they spoke through their solicitor, a gentleman by the way who has been doing a first-class job on behalf of these people notwithstanding that at one point in time he was a Liberal candidate in St. John's East. He has been doing a first class job for these people, without any remuneration whatsoever. There is no political motivation behind what has been happening at Virginia Park, but each time this question has been raised in the House the minister has admitted that a problem exists. He has also been very quick to admit that in no way could the corporation be considered financially liable for what has happened to these homes. What has happened to them?

My colleague, the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway), has referred to the fact that many of these homes have depreciated in value, partly because of the fact that the housing market has levelled off, but largely because of the fact that many of them were built, all at the same price, and held at a certain level. Let us say I am in the city of Toronto and I pay $45,000 for my house. Someone moves in next year and pays $45,000 for his house, so the price of my house remains the same. These houses have depreciated in value because of faulty construction and substandard materials, yet the minister and CMHC fully expect these people to add on to their financial liability and to increase the cost of houses which have in fact depreciated in value. It is not difficult to understand why such an offer was rejected, if it can be dignified by being termed an offer.

The offer was rejected outright. I am not concerned about the flood gates. I am not concerned about the fact that the minister may very well be setting a precedent if he decides to deal with Virginia Park in a just way. He may be setting a precedent he will have to live with in Montreal, in Hamilton, in Vancouver, or wherever this problem, which seems to be characteristic of AHOP across the country, occurs. I am concerned only with seeing that justice is done for those people who bought those houses having faith in National Housing Act inspections and through the good offices and because of the good reputation of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I look forward to confronting the minister when this matter goes to committee. I serve notice to the minister right now that although he may think he will get this bill through expeditiously because there are some commendable features, and because he is bringing it in the dying days of this parliament, until we get satisfaction on these AHOP projects across the country, and certainly until I get satisfaction on what has happened to the AHOP project in my own constituency—

Mr. Friesen: And mine.

Mr. McGrath: My colleague talks about his.

An hon. Member: Filibuster.

Mr. McGrath: The hon. member can call it a filibuster if he likes, but we have a responsibility to represent our constituents in this House, and I intend to bring before the committee evidence which will indicate beyond reasonable doubt just exactly where the fault is and where the blame lies. The minister should be prepared to change his attitude and come up with a reasonable solution to this problem. What I would call a reasonable settlement would be a cash settlement after an adequate assessment as to the extent of the damage has been made, a cash settlement with no strings attached. In other words, the people involved should be able to repair their homes, replace the faulty brick, replace the faulty windows, replace the faulty fixtures—

Mr. Brisco: Replace the minister.

Mr. McGrath: —and put in proper insulation, and they should be able to do that without being out of pocket one dollar. We will settle for nothing less because I think these people are entitled to that. Simple justice demands that, and as a representative of people who are victims of one such AHOP project I intend to settle for nothing less.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take the floor on this important piece of legislation concerning our population's most urgent needs.

If I may, I would first like to comment on the speech just made by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). To me, he seemed more like a housing inspector than a legislator. He mentioned a few isolated cases of possibly inadequate construction, but he once more reflected his party's attitude; as far as construction is concerned, his party has barely reached the plumbing phase, whereas the Liberal party is into urban planning.

The attitude shown by the hon. member who preceded me exactly reflects the position of a party lacking in imagination, except to limit itself by telling Canadians: Ask your municipalities to increase your municipal taxes and we will give you a $2 billion federal income tax credit.

Mr. Speaker, this is applying a band-aid where a review of the planning process is needed. I am proud to belong to a party which has improved the construction situation in this country; the picture is highly positive when one considers that an average of 250,000 units have been built in Canada the last four years. We note that, from 1967 to 1977, we have, through the federal housing agency, built a great number of housing units—an average of 10 new units per 1,000 inhabitants.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank the ministers responsible whom I see here tonight: the President of the Board of Economic Development Ministers, the hon. member from Thunder Bay and also the hon. member for Papineau, the present Minister of Public Works, who were largely responsible for these initiatives and achievements in housing. I think that in the eyes of Canadians these figures and these achievements are much more serious and positive guarantees for the future than the speech made by the hon. member for St. John's East, where he dealt with specific cases out of the number of housing units in Canada that I mentioned. He preferred to speak of local problems rather than deal with this issue to the extent covered in the legislation before us.

The purpose of this bill, Mr. Speaker, once the provinces have been consulted, is to adopt a global approach to federal financial assistance to municipalities by combining the neighbourhood improvement program, the municipal infrastructure program and the municipal grants program in a single community services grant program. One of the objectives, and certainly not the least, in view of the present housing situation for low income earners and the fact that under existing agreements we are building 19,000 housing units, is to build 30,000 such units for low income earners.

The federal and provincial governments agreed to finance those three programs to the extent of $150 million for 1979, $250 million for 1980 that will be distributed at the provincial level through community services contributions based on the population and the financial capacities of the municipalities.

For the information of hon. members and particularly the people who are listening and watching us, the province of Newfoundland will get through this new legislation $4.2 million in 1979 and $7 million in 1980. As concerns the province of Quebec, it will get about $47 million for 1979, and $78 million for 1980. I shall not list the amounts for each province but it is clearly mentioned in the legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I am very optimistic as concerns our performance in the housing field, and the infrastructure at the municipal level, and as the hon. member for Laval, which is the second largest municipality in the province of Quebec, in population and area, I can say that we benefited from the help given by the Canadian government to all those programs. I think that as concerns the population of Laval, I must congratulate the Canadian government and the minister responsible, who is now Minister of Public Works, for the precious contribution we got through those various programs, the social housing program, the infrastructure program or the municipal assistance program, to allow municipalities to make the most economical possible use of the land for building projects in view of the increasing cost of public utilities. As an example, the amount of $2,157,000 was given to the city of Laval under this assistance program for municipalities which want to build in high density residential areas. If we take this amount and relate it to general rates, this meant a reduction of 3 per cent in general rates for all residents in the city of Laval in 1976-77 and will probably mean the same thing this year. If we take a house assessed at $40,000, this means $120 per home owner under the policy which was cancelled last December.

Even though I am quite optimistic about this program and the results obtained by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, I am much more concerned about this bill, as I told the minister when he appeared before the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. I expressed my concern while being well aware that this was a request made by the provinces under the pretext that it come under provincial or municipal jurisdiction, which is quite true, but we have accepted that this become more and more a provincial responsibility, and the various projects will be approved following applications made by the provinces.

Let us look at the situation of social housing in 1977. Mr. Speaker, I refer you to the annual report of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. We can read the following on page 20, and this describes in summary the interest shown by the provinces in the development of social housing. The House will see how my concern is justified if we take into account what I have just mentioned. This is what it says:

The largest shortfall in loan commitments under CMHC's 1977 capital budget was for the construction and acquisition of housing for low and moderate income people. This was particularly marked for public housing to be rented to tenants according to an approved rent-to-income scale. Commitments for this type of housing financed with loans by CMHC to the provinces, and by joint investment undertakings by CMHC and the provinces, totalled only $199 million in 1977 compared to a budget allocation for the year of $353 million.

—which means that $199 million of the $353 million available were used, and I continue:

In 1976, some $403 million had been committed for these purposes under the National Housing Act.

So we can definitely see a rather considerable reduction in the amounts which were made available to the provinces for public housing. I bring to the attention of all provinces and of all organizations that if this amendment is made through the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act, we shall reach our objectives, namely to increase the number of housing units for low income people.

May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

AIRPORTS—NAVIGATIONAL AIDS AND FIREFIGHTING EQUIPMENT FOR CASTLEGAR, B.C.

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, on February 20 I addressed two questions to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) relative to the firefighting equipment at Castlegar and the navigational aids at Castlegar airport. In his response the minister made what I consider to be an innocent mistake, one which I drew to his attention as a point of order a couple of days ago. Whereas I was talking about third party contract agreements, the minister was under the impression that I was directing my question to the subject of insurance contracts for smaller airports across the country.

[Mr. Roy (Laval).]

I am well aware of the fact there are a number of smaller airports across Canada which were concerned about this particular problem, and that the minister covered some 37 airports with a $100 million liability insurance per airport. In itself that action has taken a great deal of strain off the concerns of the smaller regional municipal airports. The minister failed to understand in my question that I was referring to third party contracts, the habit of the government to turn over the operation of regional airports to a third party. There are a couple of classic examples.

I suggest Your Honour should look at Resolute Bay where, in a period of a few years, there was a 229 per cent increase in the operational costs of the airport. Also we can look at the record of Frobisher Bay operated by the Tower Corporation out of Montreal. We will see that Nordair and its pilots expressed considerable dissatisfaction over the operation of that field. We see in a very remote area an airport which recently was blocked completely from any contact with the outside world through that travel mode by virtue of several days of blizzard. We see an airport which does not have a fire chief and does not have the type of firefighting expertise one would expect to be in place in an airport with such a remote location.

When the briefing session was held for the people bidding on the third party contract for Castlegar airport, it was interesting to note that some of the bidding parties did not even know where Castlegar was located. Some had mistaken Cranbrook for Castlegar. Some thought it was somewhere in the northern part of the province. Others did not know where it was. There were three firms in Castlegar which bid on the operation of that airport. Although I am not fully convinced the third party operation is the route to go, certainly I would prefer being in a position to deal with a local contractor. But on the basis of the bids submitted, it appears the award may well go to Agda Ltd., a firm of consulting engineers in Ottawa. It could go to the second highest bidder, the Tower Corporation of Montreal. I think my suspicions will be borne out in fact. I suspect that any of these firms removed from the city of Castlegar will have that operation run by subcontractors. Not only do we see the operation of the airport run at arm's length or at some considerable distance, also we see subcontractors running the airport. The service at that airport will deteriorate as a result of this kind of nonsense.

In terms of the navigational aids which I raised with the minister, and in terms of firefighting equipment, Castlegar has received nothing but empty promises. They were promised a foam truck over a year ago. They still have no foam truck and no facilities for storing it in the winter, as foam freezes.

Castlegar was promised a new navigational aid to replace the one which comes out of the Smithsonian Institute located at Crescent Valley, a navigational aid which is so old that the ministry has trouble finding spare parts for that particular unit. Yet these promises have not borne fruit.

We find that the Ministry of Transport denied Castlegar airport the construction of a sand shed so that the sand would not freeze. They said that it would be too expensive, so it was taken out of the airport budget, and the workers themselves at the airport built it, solidly, for $6,000. We find that Kelowna has an aluminum frame building which is sitting there and getting mouldy with age. This building sat there for a year and nobody knew who ordered it, why it was ordered or what it was to be used for. Yet it was there, but there was nothing for Castlegar. Penticton has 61 employees under the Ministry of Transport, but Castlegar has less than half that.

In terms of navigational aids the minister has said that he is concerned that they use navigational aids according to the geographical conditions of that particular area. No other airport in Canada is more qualified for a VOR than Castlegar. The approaches to Castlegar are exceedingly narrow. It does not qualify under any of today's terms of instrument landing technology for instrument landing. Therefore it is time that Castlegar received a VOR and that the minister stopped fooling the public.

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to provide a brief bit of background information in response to the question by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco), dealing with firefighting equipment and navigational aids for the airport at Castlegar.

A contract operation of the airport has become necessary because of a decision made by the city of Castlegar to cease operating the airport effective March 31 of this year. The city has been fully consulted with regard to this course of action. Other possible, but less favourable, options would have been the closure of the airport or operation by Transport Canada.

It is planned, Mr. Speaker, to place a small foam crash truck capable of carrying 400 gallons into Castlegar airport around the middle of April this year. This vehicle will remain in Castlegar until such time as deliveries of medium foam trucks, capable of carrying 1,000 gallons, commence from the next contract. The next contract for airport emergency vehicles is in the tendering stage at the present time, and one medium foam truck for Castlegar is included.

The "D" category airport in which Castlegar falls requires a first response truck and a foam truck of 850 gallons capacity. Castlegar already has a first response truck. With the addition of the small foam truck of 400 gallons, it will be slightly deficient in the amount of water carried during the interim pending arrival of the new medium foam truck of 1,000 gallons.

[Translation]

In August 1978, the installation of a localizer beacon with distance measuring equipment, commonly called DME, in Castlegar was approved and the project was to be carried out in 1982-83. Since then, Mr. Speaker, it has become possible to carry out that project in 1980-81.

Such equipment will replace the low-frequency range used in Castlegar and will provide better signals to pilots making ILS approaches. In addition, DME facilities on the ground will give a more accurate distance between aircraft and airport to planes equipped with that device. The information provided by both navigational aids will give the pilot a better position reading during the ILS approach, which is an improvement to the navigational aid system of that airport.

FISHERIES—NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING ALASKA COAST HALIBUT FISHERY

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, on February 20 I rose in the House to ask the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc) the following questions:

What is the status of negotiations relative to halibut fishing off the Alaska coast?

And, secondly, I stated:

—the fishermen in that area are very concerned that their privileges will be exchanged for rights granted in eastern waters. They have registered their protest with the minister with respect to this matter. Reports are that they will be excluded from American waters and they will have to go to Canadian waters which are already overfished.

There are at least four areas of concern, and possibly more, which the fishermen in British Columbia have. I raised the matter in the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry just a few days ago, but I did not get much more satisfaction from the minister at that time than I have received in this House.

In committee I discovered that the United States government served notice on the Minister of Fisheries several years ago that they were planning to end the halibut fishing convention which has been in operation for something like 55 years off the cost of Alaska. If the minister knew two years ago that there was going to be some finality to this agreement, why did we not have a fallback position? Was there no back-up position for our negotiators when they went to Juneau to negotiate last September?

The second important question is: what happens to the halibut fishermen during this time? The negotiated settlement with the United States provides that this year Canadian halibut fishermen will be able to catch half of their normal catch quota, and next year it will be one quarter of their normal catch quota. A fisherman who is handed an ultimatum that he can only catch half as much as in other years would begin to worry about his income, especially if he has a boat with a crew of four or five to look after. He must wonder how he is to make a living. There are from 40 to 60 craft with a total crew of up to 250 people who must wonder what they will be doing this summer. If that is to be the normal catch, half of them must be wondering, and the rest will have to wonder after next year. If we consider the gross products involved in Canadian export, then we must worry because there is no other market for them at the present time.

The next problem is one of confidence. The halibut fishermen are organized into about nine different groups. All were invited to go with Ambassador Cadieux to help negotiate the settlement. After the negotiations were settled they sent a news release to the minister saying unanimously, "We are opposed to this agreement because we cannot make a living with this kind of settlement." I grant that one person did not sign because the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) (Mrs. Campagnolo) called him directly and asked him not to sign. The rest of them all signed as being opposed. They would rather have settled for three million pounds than the two million and be cut off entirely next year, than get the kind of half life settlement they are subject to this time.

Regardless of what the fishermen wanted, Mr. Cadieux accepted it. I cannot help but wonder why they were invited in the first place. If people who know something about the industry first hand, unanimously rejected the agreement, then what was the ambassador trying to do?

My fourth concern is about what will happen to the groundfishermen off the coast of Vancouver Island. In committee the other day the minister admitted that those stocks are already at a critical stage of depletion and that we cannot afford to fish them much more extensively than at the present. Surely the United States fishermen in the area are going to get all they can from those fishing grounds. I wonder about the kind of surveillance the Department of Fisheries has been exercising when our stock cannot reach that state. We have something like 140 trawlers out there working those fishing grounds which are at a critical level already. What happens if 40 or 60 halibut fishermen are introduced to the area? The United States fishermen who are withdrawing will be replaced by Canadian fishermen coming into the area.

● (2215)

Finally, there is one more concern that I need to put on the record. That is the presence of factory ships. The minister has introduced licences. He says all the time that these are for stocks that Canadians are not accustomed to fishing and processing. That may be true, but that does not mean that they are not doing it. With the kind of surveillance that we have in that area, I question whether that Polish ship, or whatever flag it is flying, is restricted to that kind of a licence.

I asked the minister a very pointed question in the lobby several weeks ago. He had his executive assistant with him at that time. My question was: what kind of a labour agreement does that factory ship have because the fishermen in B.C. are wondering about it. It was a secret negotiation, apparently. The minister turned to his assistant and asked him to find out and to let me know. To this day I have not heard what kind of an agreement or contract it was. Those fish are being caught out there, they are being processed and transported out there, but the Canadian economy gets no tax benefit and apparently little labour benefit from it. Canadian people, and certainly the fishermen on the west coast, have a right to know what kind of an agreement has existed between the factory ship—that flag ship—and the Government of Canada.

[Mr. Friesen.]

Mr. Jack Pearsall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, negotiations between Canada and the U.S.A. concerning Canadian halibut fishing off Alaska took place in Juneau, Alaska, February 14 and 15, and a proposed agreement was worked out. It has not, and I wish to emphasize at this time that it has not been approved by the two governments. The Canadian and the U.S. negotiators have made recommendations to their respective governments that, if approved, would mean the continuation of the International Pacific Halibut Commission and the phase-out of Canadian halibut fishing off Alaska.

Under the proposed agreement, Canadian fishermen would be allowed to catch two million pounds of halibut off Alaska in 1979 and one million pounds in 1980. In other words, compared to what Canadian fishermen took in 1978, they would be allowed to take about 55 per cent of that amount in 1979 and about 30 per cent in 1980. The two negotiators have also agreed to recommend that U.S. vessels be allowed to catch 3,250 metric tonnes of groundfish off British Columbia in 1979 and 1980, or about 40 per cent of recent levels.

I would like to point out that the Canadian halibut fishery that was under discussion was carried out in waters under the fisheries jurisdiction of the U.S.A., and if an agreement were not concluded, Canadian fishermen would not be allowed, and I repeat would not be allowed to fish for halibut in 1979 or subsequent years.

I would also like to reaffirm a statement made by the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc) in the House on February 19, that if there is to be dislocation of the Canadian halibut fleet, a program of relocation is being considered. Officials have interviewed almost all of the owners of vessels which have fished in that area, and a program is being designed that will take into account the individual circumstances of the fishermen affected either by an abrupt termination of the Alaskan halibut fishery, or through a phase-out.

NATIONAL REVENUE—SALES TAX ON STORM WINDOWS AND DOORS

Mr. Jack Hare (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I rise in the hope of obtaining a sensible answer to a question I put to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Abbott) on Tuesday, February 20. It concerns energy conservation in the home. It specifically relates to the government's decision in the November 16 budget to reimpose the 5 per cent federal sales tax on storm windows and doors. These are items which heretofore had been tax exempt.

I have received a communication from a manufacturer in St. Boniface who is in the door and window business. He is a small manufacturer and employs about 60 people. This is a very important industry in St. Boniface. In a telegram to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), my constituent stated:

● (2220)

Your reimposition of the federal sales tax on windows and door defeats discriminately our purpose in reducing energy wastage in this world energy crisis. You have deflated us and left us cold. We now see no purpose in pursuing the critical need to manufacture good double and triple windows to save energy. If every house in Canada was supplied with single windows then perhaps you would realize the importance of good windows and doors in this energy crisis. It is unfortunate that with the stroke of a pen and without any consultation with our industry you elected to penalize particularly the people in the cold west.

I ask the minister to explain the rationale behind this change in tax policy. In all fairness I should mention that the minister has made a stab at an explanation in a letter sent to my office on December 13. In that letter the minister explained, in a bewildering example of logic, that:

The exemption for storm doors and storm windows was originally intended to be confined to these goods for installation on existing buildings. This was not found to be practicable, however, and as a result, all double glass windows and glass cladding material became exempt from sales tax. As glass is less efficient in energy conservation than solid wall construction, the exemption did not achieve its original intent.

The government has made a point of professing its support for measures which would conserve energy. I wish to quote one short paragraph by a scientist with the Economic Council of Canada:

The implementation of energy conservation programs will benefit Canada more in both the short term and the long term than equivalent investments in new energy producing facilities, according to a paper by D. B. Brooks.

The government has encouraged Canadians to turn unnecessary lights off, to put on a sweater before adjusting the thermostat. Indeed, considerable lip service has been paid to saving energy. The government claimed the need to create an energy conscious atmosphere in Canada, with the idea that reduced consumption of energy would result in reduced dependence on imported oil. It is a worth-while and necessary pursuit. The energy crunch has everyone concerned. Only last week the government introduced legislation enabling it to ration energy supplies in case of emergency.

Conservation is a vital part of any national energy strategy. As we seek out new, more reliable sources of supply, we should also be working simultaneously to bring in measures which encourage more efficient use of energy. The reimposition of sales tax on storm windows and storm doors, as well as the continued taxation of insulated steel, one door systems, is lamentably misplaced, in that it acts to discourage efficient use of energy. There had been a good reason for the previous tax exemption on these items, namely, that double and triple glass storm windows and doors make a substantial contribution to the conservation of energy in the home. Now, because the minister has surmised that "glass is less efficient in energy conservation than solid wall construction", storm windows and doors are to be taxed. I really wonder if the minister expects us to live in houses with no windows? Of course glass is less energy efficient than solid walls, but double and triple glass is a lot more efficient than single glass.

Another concern arising from that confused letter is the distinction the minister makes between the need to encourage installation of energy efficient windows and doors on existing buildings and an apparent disinclination to provide for the inclusion of these same items on new buildings. Should not all buildings be equipped to conserve as much energy as much as possible?

I sincerely hope this government is interested in providing incentives for the conservation of energy. In the United States, not only is there a tax exemption on the sale of storm windows and doors, but a tax credit of 15 per cent is available for their installation. Somehow U.S. taxation officials in all their wisdom are able to get around the obstacles which dumbfound our government in its purported efforts to promote energy conservation in the home.

● (2225)

In Canada as well there has been recognition of the energy conservation value of double and triple glazed windows and doors. The Associate Committee of the National Building Code, of the National Research Council, determined in 1978 that within certain specifications double and triple glazing of windows or single glazing with a storm sash provide the necessary thermal resistance to be considered energy efficient. I wish we could make the government realize the value of insulated windows. We would like to see a co-ordinated energy conservation strategy put in place.

[Translation]

Mr. Yves Demers (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue and Minister of State (Small Business)): Mr. Speaker, when the June 23, 1975 budget was brought down, the hon. John Turner announced three important changes in the excise and sales tax. Those changes included an exemption for storm windows, storm doors and double glass windows to be installed on existing buildings. The purpose of that exemption was to encourage the owners of those buildings to conserve energy.

It was realized that those double glass windows were being used not only on existing buildings but also in the construction of new ones. The use of those windows in the latter case was giving a fiscal advantage to the users of glass over the users of other conventional materials. The latter usually have to pay a tax at the reduced rate of 5 per cent. Let me give you as an example in the national capital: the Place du Portage buildings are built of pre-stressed concrete, which is subject to a rate of 5 per cent, while the Bank of Canada building, whose outside face is made of glass, is consequently tax exempt.

The June 1975 budget provided an exemption for that glass when used on existing buildings but not on new ones. It proved to be very difficult to apply the act, the manufacturer being unable to control the use of his products. Mostly because of that administrative difficulty, it was decided to cancel that exemption in the November 16, 1978, budget. That is why, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Abbott) gave the answer he did in his letter of December 13 to the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Hare).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until 2 p.m. tomorrow.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

FUNDING OF CANADIAN COUNCIL OF CHRISTIANS AND JEWS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent necessity pertaining to public funds given by the Department of Secretary of State as revealed in answers to my recent order paper questions concerning the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews, and particularly the grant of over three-quarters of a million dollars in recent months and the fact that there has been a rash of resignations of prominent Canadians from this organization, including the hon. Paul Hellyer, Jerry Yanover, legislative assistant to the Deputy Prime Minister, newscaster Max Keeping, CBC official Ludovic Hudon, and the reported impending resignations of other prominent Canadians, including the member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence).

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday):

That this House requests the Auditor General of Canada to immediately institute a full audit of public funds given to this organization, with the full force of the law being used to determine the disposition of such funds, including a reported 4.5 per cent interest, $57,000 mortgage and a $9,000 interest-free loan to Peter Jones, president of the organization, the removal from the board of directors of such respected—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me the hon. member is going on to support his motion. The motion the hon. member wishes to put, can be put, pursuant to Standing Order 43, only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HEALTH

DONATIONS BY TORONTO CITIZENS FOR TREATMENT OF HERBIE QUINONES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to move a motion, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, regarding an urgent matter.

In view of the successful operation in Toronto yesterday on the little boy, Herbie Quinones, who was unable to obtain medical services in his own country due to his parents lack of financial resources, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House recognize and applaud the citizens of Toronto for their generosity and, furthermore, that this House urge the United States to adopt our medicare system so that there will be no more little Herbie cases in the United States.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This motion seems to be a little beyond our administrative jurisdiction.

REPARATION FOR PETER TREU—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a motion of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

In light of the reasons for judgment of the Quebec Court of Appeal in the case of Peter Treu, in light of the fact that the prosecution could only be launched under the Official Secrets Act by special order of the Attorney General of Canada and the granting of this order shows either gross carelessness or negligence in permitting the charge to be laid, in light of the fact that the charge was deliberately laid as an indictable offence, rather than a summary conviction, so the government could seek a heavier penalty, in light of the fact that the government has agreed to assist a former minister of the Crown with his legal costs in an action against him by a civil servant, and having in mind that Dr. Treu's ultimate acquittal followed after five years of harassment, I move:

That this House urges the government to give sympathetic consideration to the case of Dr. Treu to receive some reparation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be introduced for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 43, only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

PENITENTIARIES

FUTURE OF PRISON FOR WOMEN, KINGSTON, ONT.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the conflicting forecasts that have been made by the Department of the Solicitor General regarding the future of the prison for women in Kingston, and in view of the build-up of tension and unease that such uncertainty is bound to create in any penal institution among members of the staff, as well as among those who are incarcerated, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday):

That this House instruct the Solicitor General to make a statement on motions at the first possible opportunity clarifying the position of the government in relation to the prison for women at Kingston.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for debate at this time only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST THAT COMMISSION EXPEDITE DECISIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with an urgent question of pressing necessity.

Given the statutory 30-day limit for any unemployment insurance beneficiary to file an appeal, and considering that those limits are not respected by the Unemployment Insurance Commission, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That the House enjoin the Minister of Employment and Immigration to compel the commission to expedite its decisions, finalize any application or settle any dispute in a period of time equal to that granted to beneficiaries.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HUMAN RIGHTS

ALLEGED MUZZLING OF HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION BY MINISTER OF JUSTICE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to Standing Order 43.

In view of the action taken yesterday by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lalonde) and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) in commencing legal proceedings against the federal Human Rights Commission seeking to prevent their investigation into the violation of the human rights of Elizabeth Lodge, Carmen Hyde, Elizabeth Cox, Elaine Peart, Rubena Whyte, Gloria Lawrence and Lola Anderson, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow):

That this House instruct the Minister of Justice to abandon his attempt to muzzle the Canadian Human Rights Commission so that an appropriate investigation may continue.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for debate at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

NATIONAL REVENUE

EXPLANATION BY MINISTER FOR INSECURITY OF TAX FILES DEPOSITED WITH STATISTICS CANADA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of grave importance.

In view of the revelation of the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) that income tax returns placed in the custody of Statistics Canada by the National Revenue minister were not given adequate security, an abuse of trust of the general public that such information is treated as strictly confidential, and in view of the fact that the revenue minister must have a record of those whose files were released to Statistics Canada, a majority of whom appear to be farmers who, understandably, suspect they are being subjected to unwarranted attention, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That the Minister of National Revenue personally communicate in writing to all persons who have been so betrayed, and give an explanation as to the purpose for which Statistics Canada requested their income tax files and the circumstances under which these forms were left unattended.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be introduced for debate at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

PUBLIC WORKS

RESEARCH OFFICES OF CONSERVATIVE PARTY AND NDP—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Art Lee (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have a motion of urgent and pressing necessity under Standing Order 43.

In view of the government's commitment to federal spending restraint and the desire for a higher degree of cost effectiveness in federal government projects, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. Catharines (Mr. Parent):

That this House requests the Department of Public Works to undertake a periodic review of the efficacy of the $10,000 wall of secrecy built of lead which has been installed between the research offices of the NDP and Conservative parties, which was requested by those two parties to avoid mutual contamination.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

HUMAN RIGHTS

JURISDICTION OF HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION OVER DEPARTMENT OF EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

The minister will know that the Canadian Human Rights Act was passed by this parliament and that it applies explicitly to all government departments and agencies. He will also know that he, or his officials on his instructions are now asking the Federal Court of Canada to declare that the Human Rights Commission has no jurisdiction over his department and over the dealings of his department with the millions of people who come to this country each year.

Will the minister tell the House on what grounds he can justify his position that the Human Rights Act applies to everybody else but not to his department?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we asked for the declaratory order because we did not, in fact, think that this legislation applies. The fact is we would have a series of appeals that are provided for under the immigration legislation. Having gone through all those appeal procedures, we would have another follow-up at the taxpayers' expense, a whole new procedure instituted by the human rights legislation.

Mr. Fairweather himself has some doubt. He is quoted as saying that if the department wins the case, he will ask parliament for legislation clearly saying the department is subject to his anti-discrimination powers. Therefore, we have asked for the declaratory order. Mr. Fairweather himself has some doubt on the basis of the quotes attributed to him.

● (1415)

Mr. Clark: It is bad enough for the minister to try to cut the powers of the Human Rights Commission; it is worse for him to try to misrepresent the position taken by the commissioner. If he has the courage of his position, he will table the whole of the letter from the chairman of the Human Rights Commission and not quote selective extracts from it.

The question I am putting to the minister, who knows full well it was the clear intention of parliament to give the Human Rights Commission the power to stop his department as well as any other agency which abused human rights in this country—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Clark: I ask him again, why is he seeking to have his department exempted from the human rights provisions which apply to all other agencies and activities in this country?

Mr. Cullen: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I was not quoting from a letter; I was quoting from a press report.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Cullen: Well, the opposition very often gives the impression that what is said in the press is correct. I am saying I was quoting from a report, a Canadian Press article by Juliet O'Neil who has gained a splendid reputation here, that the Human Rights Commissioner had said that should the department win the case, he would ask parliament for legislation clearly stating that the department is subject to his anti-discrimination powers. I simply indicated that Mr. Fairweather is prepared to concede that there might be some doubt. I was not criticizing him for it; I was simply quoting what was said.

Mr. Clark: The minister refuses to deal with the question why he thinks his department has special status. Let me ask him a further question. Since he knows the Commissioner for Human Rights has said he intends to pursue his investigation into the situation involving this group of Jamaican women while the Federal Court is arriving at a determination of the question before it, would the minister tell us whether he will assure parliament that there will be full co-operation on the part of his officials with the Commissioner of Human Rights in his declared intention to pursue that examination; or will he and his officials continue to obstruct the work of the commission?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I do not blame the Human Rights Commissioner for taking this particular course—if you can't get them on first, get them on second. We are asking the court for a declaratory order as to whether we are bound by this particular piece of legislation.

Notwithstanding that application to the court, if Mr. Fairweather proceeds—and it is hypothetical, I suppose—we shall have to take whatever action we deem to be appropriate at that time. We shall not back away from a declaratory order until we hear the judgment of the court.

Mr. Clark: A supplementary question to the Minister of Justice who should be conscious, since the Human Rights Commission lies within his jurisdiction, that what is at stake here is a fundamental guarantee of human rights in this country.

What action does the Minister of Justice intend to take to ensure that the exercise of its proper responsibilities by the Human Rights Commission will not be frustrated by the action of his colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Justice): What is at stake here is the interpretation of two laws passed by this parliament, the interpretation of which appears to be in some doubt. What has taken place is an appearance before the court to ask that the matter be clarified. That is where the matter stands at present. I am sure the Human Rights Commission will do what it considers best within its jurisdiction.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. May I preface it by saying it is unfortunate he did not read the whole of the press release referred to, because in the last part the Human Rights Commissioner is reported as saying he was certain that the powers of the commission were intended to cover immigration as well as other fields. In addition, a year ago the Human Rights Commission indicated that it had jurisdiction in this very area.

I ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration why it is that since this was the very first case to come before the Human Rights Commission—almost a year ago to the day, on March 1, 1978—and that on March 9 the Human Rights Commission indicated publicly that it would investigate this case, for over a year the department frustrated the honest attempts of the Human Rights Commission to investigate these complaints and now, when it has lost on every count, the department is appealing, thus frustrating attempts to have justice not only done but seen to be done. I am sure this must concern the minister, even if only a little.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the hon. member should misinterpret what took place in this case. These particular individuals were subject to a deportation order. Notwithstanding that, they wanted to go to the courts for an interpretation. They took an appeal to the Federal Court. They lost that particular case. Notwithstanding that, they wanted to take the matter to the Federal Court of Appeal. They in fact took that action. We held off taking any action with regard to issuing the deportation order until they had exhausted all their rights.

In addition to that, I met with both the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, which made some representations in this case, and with the individual women concerned, in the presence of their counsel and, I might say, in the presence of their children. I have undertaken to have another look at these particular cases and I am going to do so in a very sympathetic way. But I have to deal with the court proceedings which were initiated in the first instance, not by us but by the individuals represented, properly enough, by the Human Rights Commission. I think we have been very fair in this procedure.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I will direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice who, I am sure, must be concerned about these matters. He has indicated that there is now apparently some doubt as to whether the Human Rights Commission has jurisdiction. Could he indicate where, in the act or in the regulations which were promulgated after the act, this doubt is created or what possible arguments he can make as Minister of Justice which would exclude the responsibilities of the Human Rights Commission for investigating one of the major departments which deals with millions of people, Canadians, immigrants and visitors who come into this country?

Can he indicate what possible shred of legal support there is for taking these simply unacceptable actions respecting the exclusion of human rights jurisdiction from a major government agency?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is asking me for a legal opinion. He knows that is against the rules of this House. The matter is going before the court for an interpretation and the court will advise which interpretation is the right one in the circumstances.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INCREASE IN DIVIDEND PAYMENTS TO FOREIGN COMPANIES—EFFECT ON GNP

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Board of Economic Development Ministers.

Statistics Canada figures released just a few hours ago show that gross national product increases in 1978 were at an alarmingly low level of only 3.4 per cent, well below what the Minister of Finance forecast. Statistics Canada points out that this has been largely due to the significant increase in the outflow of dividend payments to countries outside Canada, that profits were up by 24 per cent and that dividend payments going out increased to $2.2 billion. Statistics Canada states that price increases have been unusually large.

Would the minister not agree that in ordinary language this means that foreign-owned firms are overcharging Canadians and taking excessive profits out of this country and into others?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Board of Economic Development Ministers): Mr. Speaker, we will have a debate this afternoon on the whole subject of inflation. I have not seen the evidence of excessive profits to which the hon. member is referring, whether they be excessive profits in the hands of Canadian-owned corporations or foreign corporations.

I had some difficulty with the arithmetic at the beginning of the hon. member's question. He was talking about a 3.4 per cent growth in the gross national product and he said that that was attributable to the passage of dividends from Canada to foreign countries. I am really at a bit of a loss to understand what his reference was, but on the general subject I do not think the premise on which the hon. member based his question is actually accurate.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I hope before the debate takes place at three o'clock the minister will have a chance to look at these truly alarming figures. They were released publicly just a few hours ago and they point out that profits were up about 24 per cent, year over year, for 1978. They point out that there was a $2.2 billion flow of dividend payments outside the country. These are facts and they are connected.

Almost 60 per cent of Canadian manufacturing is owned by companies with head offices outside Canada. I would like to ask the minister, given the serious economic consequences of this situation and the Prime Minister's own promise to do something about it back in 1974, when will the government be prepared to implement that promise as it pertains to resource ownership in this country?

● (1425)

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I know the hon. member has said on other occasions that his party would espouse a policy of controlling the flow of capital outside this country. This is one of his answers to the passage of dividends, or anything else I supppose, outside Canada. In my view, that would be the most destructive policy possible for a country that depends for 25 per cent of its gross national product on export and on trading, because it would totally isolate this country from trade back and forth between nations. I think it would be an outrageous and disastrous policy to espouse.

There are many developmental programs in trade now working in consultation with the private sector to increase our GNP, to increase our export competitiveness, and indeed this involves talking to multinational corporations to see that they honour the principles of corporate responsibility within this country, and I am encouraged by the response we are getting.

Mr. Broadbent: One way of turning the problem around is to get a much higher degree of Canadian ownership of Canadian industry. That would be pretty self-evident, even to the minister.

Considering that, at least in the context of an election campaign, the Prime Minister recognized this in July in the minister's part of northern Ontario—in Sault Ste. Marie, to be precise—when he said that all future resource development projects in this country would be at least 50 per cent Canadian owned, and since then that promise has been systematically ignored, can the minister tell us if the government intends, before the next election, to start implementing the last election's promises?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member always goes too far. He said it has been systematically ignored, as though nothing has been done. I would put before him the increasing success of Petro-Canada in that whole field.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andras: Once again, it is a matter of the method of implementation of policies toward these objectives, rather than the absolute question of whether the objectives are shared by us or others. We certainly want to see an increase of Canadian ownership. It is a question of whether we do it in a reasonable, sensible way by incentive rather than with a stick.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DELAY IN STUDYING LAY-OFFS AT BRAZEAU TRANSPORT COMPANY, ROUYN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. About a dozen employees who were laid off last October by Brazeau Transport in Rouyn have had to wait two months for a decision by the Unemployment Insurance Commission finally to entertain an application concerning this problem, although such lay-offs may be considered as a collective conflict. These 12 employees submitted an application early in January and today, as February is about to come to an end, they are still waiting to find out whether the appeal will be accepted to go to the board of referees. Could the minister indicate whether this is normal procedure and, if not, what he intends to to do to solve this four-month old problem?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the hon. member for his representations. This is certainly not normal procedures, and I shall have to look into these special circumstances before I can reply to the hon. member.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, as this is normal procedure in our area and, for the benefit of the minister, as it is not the fault of local civil servants but because decisions are made in Montreal from where they are transmitted to the office in Rouyn or Val d'Or, I should like to ask the minister whether he would be willing to decentralize that system of operation which delays decisions, seeing those twelve persons have just been advised that their files will be ready at the end of March or even perhaps in April. Would the minister be willing to decentralize those decision-taking powers and transfer them to the areas where the problems exist?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, we have already done so in all provinces; now, a civil servant, man or woman, is responsible for each province. We have also made each area responsible for itself. However, at the present time it is not possible to decentralize every riding or city in Quebec or in Canada. But I shall have to look into the situation. If there is a problem, we will find a solution to it.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, the minister says that a few persons analyse such situations in each province: as the case I put to him today occurs in the hundreds in isolated areas, I do not ask him that the system be adopted in each community, but only that the decision-taking powers be given at the regional level. As the problem exists at the provincial level, in this case in Montreal, where decisions are delayed, is the minister willing to redistribute the powers of decision in the vicinity of Montreal, instead of keeping the current system that delays unduly the payment of benefits for over four months? If the minister wants other examples, I can give him hundreds of them which have been pending for two and a half years.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me the hon. member is repeating his representations: I shall have to look into the matter.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

GROWTH OF GNP BELOW THAT FORECAST BY GOVERNMENT—REASON THEREFOR

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance, I should like to direct a question to the President of the Board of Economic Development Ministers, sometimes known as the BED board.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: My question centres on the gross national product figures just released. First, has the minister read these rather alarming figures? Second, in view of the fact the fourth quarter GNP now is seasonally adjusted at an annual rate of only 1.8 per cent, only 3.4 per cent for the entire year last year, would the minister indicate why the Minister of Finance predicted only last November that the real growth would be 4.5 per cent? Why was a commitment given in Bonn that we would achieve 5 per cent real growth in the country, when the record has been so dismal?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Board of Economic Development Ministers): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has dealt with this issue on many occasions. Certainly, the 3.4 per cent growth was less than we had hoped for. But I would point out to the hon. member that probably we are the only country among the senior industrial nations which has had a real growth trend in every quarter of every year since the OPEC crisis took place in 1973.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andras: The hon. member can point out the differences between forecasts, realizations and capacity, but also he should put before the Canadian public the true perspective by indicating that this country has had the best real growth performance along with Japan, of any of those nations over the last seven or eight years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same minister. I refer him to the United States President's economic report to Congress which certainly indicates that the real growth in Canada is much different, compared to that of the United States, from what the minister indicated.

My follow-up question centres on the fact that durable goods and personal expenditure on consumer goods generally, on a real basis, actually declined in the fourth quarter. Could the minister indicate why that occurred notwithstanding the fact the government embarked upon a $1 billion manufacturing sales tax reduction starting with the last budget? Why should sales actually drop off, as opposed to some type of a stimulant result from the expenditure made in that budget?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, regarding the reduction in the federal sales tax which has been explained many times in the House, the effect does not take place the day after in terms of its impact on consumer spending or, therefore, growth through that aspect of the economy. Existing inventories must be worked through, and those inventories are being worked through now.

My own view is quite optimistic for the year 1979, and I might say that optimism is shared by many hundreds of businessmen to whom I have talked in the last two or three months. They seem to have a much more bullish view and much more faith in Canada's economy than certain members opposite or certain theoretical economists. Certainly, I know where I will place my bets.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, again my question is directed to the same minister. Certainly, I know where the voters of Canada will place their bets in the next election.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: In view of the unsatisfactory real growth figures revealed this morning, and the fact the trade deficit actually widened in the fourth quarter, would the minister tell us what he anticipates for real growth in the current year?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, that is the prerogative of the Minister of Finance. I think he has set forth some targets. If the hon. member wants to speculate and place bets on the electoral results, I would like to have Jimmy the Greek give odds on the 60 seats the hon. Leader of the Opposition suggested he would get in the province of Quebec.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

COMPENSATION FOR PETER TREU—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice, having in mind the facts set out in the reasons for judgment given by the Quebec Court of Appeal.

In light of the fact the Minister of Supply and Services, quite honestly and openly, said in the House that he had some doubts as to the security procedure which must have been used in the case of Dr. Treu, that in this particular case prosecutions could be launched only under the direct order of the Attorney General, and that the prosecution launched was directed toward an indictable offence, is the minister prepared to review the facts in this case and give consideration to the provision of some form of compensation for Dr. Alexander Peter Treu?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have reviewed all the facts in this case very carefully. Also, I read the judgment of the Court of Appeal very carefully. I would remind the hon. member that the principle of making ex gratia payments to persons accused of criminal offences who are acquitted, whether at the trial level or on appeal, is not a principle which is part of criminal justice in Canada.

Mr. Clark: Ask Jean-Pierre Goyer.

Mr. Lalonde: The matter of compensation in general is one which the Law Reform Commission is studying at the present time and upon which it will report. Also, I must remind the hon. member that the provinces will have to be involved very closely with this, because they would be the ones to bear most of the burden of such a situation if such a decision was reached, that compensation should be established as a practice. Thus, that is the general principle.

As far as this particular case is concerned, as I indicated to the hon. member, I have reviewed this case very carefully. I have come to the conclusion, without any doubt, that the charge made against Dr. Treu was not a frivolous one. He was charged with a very serious offence. There was a preliminary inquiry in which a prima facie case was found which allowed the case to be taken to trial. There was a trial before a judge at which Dr. Treu was convicted of the offence, and then it went to appeal where he was acquitted. As far as I am concerned, that man has been acquitted by the courts at the appeal level and he should be recognized as innocent; but I do not think in those circumstances there is any basis for compensation.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, this charge followed only after a 1½-year investigation which proved to be fruitless and cost the government several hundred thousand dollars. Last summer, when this case was at its height, there was an attempt by suggestion and innuendo to prevent members of the press and even myself from pursuing it. There were elements of the government at different levels which hinted that there was much more involved in this case and, "If Baldwin only knew, he would shut up."

Forgetting the question of justice, and on the question of equity from a government which once professed to believe in a just society, does the government not feel this man merits some recognition?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind the hon. member that according to press reports, one of the reasons—I do not know what the hon. member is referring to when he refers to innuendo—

An hon. Member: Trudeau.

● (1440)

Mr. Lalonde: —I read was that counsel for Mr. Treu is considering a civil lawsuit alleging, among other things, that an officer of the RCMP would have provided a Conservative member of parliament with information that would have brought before the public this issue that they wanted to keep out of the glare of publicity. I do not think the hon. member is well founded in his argument.

ENERGY

GOVERNMENT PLANS TO MAINTAIN SECURITY OF SUPPLY

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Given the report yesterday from Associated Press that Iranian oil field workers are controlling the oilfields and demanding that the product be sent where they want, what plans has the government to replace our share of the 20 per cent of the world's oil supply that could be lost to the west and, specifically, what plans have we to replace oil by natural gas in the Atlantic provinces?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I have answered questions in the House indicating that western crude is now replacing a good deal of the shortfall in Iranian fuel, and other reallocations of oil in the Atlantic provinces. I believe that particular option available to us has been an important option. I also believe that western Canada natural gas can play an increasingly important part in displacing foreign crude oil, particularly in the markets of Quebec and, to some extent, Ontario and even farther afield into the maritimes. I very much hope it will be possible to advance measures which will bring natural gas into these markets.

An hon. Member: When?

Mr. Gillespie: I believe the potential there may be up to 100,000 barrels a day of oil by displacement from natural gas in Canada's future.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADA'S ROLE IN UN NEGOTIATIONS ON CHINA-VIETNAM CONFLICT

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and concerns Canada's role in the negotiations going on today at the United Nations to end the China-Vietnam conflict.

Is it the view of the government that a compromise resolution is possible and acceptable to the three veto powers and, if so, is Canada co-ordinating this approach to the negotiations with other countries, particularly our NATO allies?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the question is to some extent hypothetical because, I suppose, the answer would depend in large measure upon the particular wording of the resolution. I can only tell the hon. member that the resolution presented before the Security Council is apparently not acceptable to at least the Soviet Union, which has already indicated that it intends to vote against it or to veto it, whichever is the most appropriate method.

As to co-ordination, we have been in consultation with various other parties. We are not now a member of the Security Council, but we have been in discussion with other parties at the UN. I think our position was made very clear in a quite excellent statement by Ambassador Barton which no doubt the hon. member has seen.

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, the U.S.S.R. keeps warning or suggesting that Peking should withdraw "before it is too late". Given the Soviet military activity in the Southeast theatre today, has the Government of Canada expressed its concern to Moscow or suggested that Soviet rhetoric and activity ought to be reduced in order to give the rest of the world an opportunity to find a proper and acceptable solution to this conflict?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I indicated six or seven days ago that we had, in fact, made representations not by way of note but by way of personal intervention, on my instruction, to our ambassadors to Moscow and Peking and also indirectly to the Cambodians and Vietnamese that we feel that the four parties—certainly three of them, anyway—the Russians, the Chinese and the Vietnamese, ought to withdraw from their various incursions and, in the case of the Soviet Union, which has not made incursions, that it ought to be temperate in its remarks.

We indicated that, indeed, the only solution possible in our view—a view I am sure is shared by all members—is in the form of talks and negotiations taking place, and that it would be advisable that all parties withdraw their forces from those various places in an effort to get these kind of talks under way.

PUBLIC SERVICE

LAY-OFFS UNDER RESTRAINT PROGRAM—ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION AGAINST WOMEN

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question for the President of the Treasury Board is based on government statistics that came out just today, showing another form of gross discrimination against women in the public service.

In view of the fact that, for example, in the professional and scientific category 23 per cent of the employees are women, the other 77 per cent being men, but with recent lay-offs under the restraint program 56 per cent of the lay-offs have been women with the other 44 per cent being men, what steps does the President of the Treasury Board propose to take, in view of the declared policy that the government is in favour of women's rights, in order to reverse this trend and to make sure at least that it does not continue to happen?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is correct in pointing this out. It is a fact that occurs. It is the positions which are declared surplus, not the individuals, and I think really we should be turning that on its head and focusing on the situation to see if we have been making any headway in these particular categories over the last few years.

I was particularly encouraged to note that when you break them down into the senior, intermediate and junior levels for the scientific catefory, the administrative and foreign service, we have been making significant headway, particularly—and I think this is encouraging—at the junior levels. These younger women are coming into the public service and they will be gradually moving up into the more senior positions. I could quote figures here, Mr. Speaker, but in fact we are, and I can demonstrate quite clearly to the hon. member, making significant progress in this area.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the minister has the same table I have in my possession. May I point out to him that in every one of the seven categories on this table, the percentage of lay-offs of women is greater than that of their percentage of the work force. That being the case, surely there is a need for some correction.

Let me put my question to the minister this way. In view of the fact that his colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, has a task force out trying to sell private industry on the idea of an affirmative action program for employment of women, will he not borrow some of the members of that task force and put them to work in the public service itself?

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, we have been making significant headway in this area. In the four years from 1974 to 1978, some 21,443 women entered the public service, as opposed to 16,800 men. There was an improvement, certainly, and as I indicated in reply to the hon. member a few days ago, we would like to see more rapid progress. We have moved up from a little over 31 per cent to about 35 per cent women in the public service. I think we are moving by trend and direction in the right way. We intend to continue in that direction.

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the President of the Treasury Board. I should like to point out to him that what we are speaking about is not what has taken place in the last four years, but present moves under the lay-off program which will reverse that whole trend. That is what women are concerned about.

I would like to ask the minister why, indeed, the government is now abandoning its supposed commitment to proportional representation in the public service, because that is what these figures indicate. If it is not abandoning that principle, will the minister produce the figures relating to the lay-offs which are now taking place? Will he table those figures which will show how many men and how many women are being laid off by the federal government in each of the categories, so we will know exactly whether the discrimination that the figures now before us show is indeed true?

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, I am not quite certain what my two colleagues opposite are advocating. I have told them we have been making significant headway in hiring more women in the public service over the last four years. I have given the figures. Naturally, if we have hired more, unfortunately there are more of them at the junior level.

Are the hon. members advocating that we lay off the more senior public servants and keep the latest hirees on staff? If that is their idea, it is a most peculiar personnel policy to recommend for the Public Service of Canada.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the figures show that in the professional and scientific category more women are being laid off than men in the current round of cutbacks. That is what we are protesting, Mr. Speaker. I want the minister to produce his figures which show, individual by individual, where cutbacks have taken place, so that the discrimination of the government in relation to all its policies about women are put on the table once and for all.

● (1450)

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, I would reiterate for the hon. member that we have been making significant headway, particularly at junior levels, in bringing women into the scientific and professional categories and the administrative foreign service, but we are not doing so well in the technical area although progress is being made. These are the people who are the latest hirees and, naturally, if there is some restriction in the public service it is normal policy that the people most recently hired are the first laid off.

HUMAN RIGHTS

APPLICATION OF CANADIAN HUMAN RIGHTS ACT

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I want to put a question to the Minister of Justice relating to questions that were asked a few moments ago about the Canadian Human Rights Commission and the opinion expressed by the commissioner.

Could the minister tell the House whether it is now the policy of the government to distinguish between the statutes and agencies to which the Canadian Human Rights Act applies? I have in mind Bill C-22, wherein clause 7.1 reads:

Nothing in this act shall be construed as limiting the application of the Canadian Human Rights Act.

The government has laid that out. The Canadian Human Rights Act, section 63.1, reads as follows:

This act is binding on Her Majesty in right of Canada—

It would seem that these sections are precisely the same, in effect, in law.

Is it now the position of the government that it will choose when the Canadian Human Rights Act will not apply; that it will apply when it is convenient but it will not apply when it is inconvenient to the government?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Justice): Of course not, Mr. Speaker. The role of the government is to try to apply the law, but when there is a genuine doubt or apparent conflict between statutes the normal course is to ask for an interpretation by the courts. If the courts find that there is no contradiction, there would be no problem, but if there is a problem then the task would be to clarify the law; to come in the normal way before parliament to get the law clarified.

I think the best interpreters of the law are still the courts of this land. I am surprised that the hon. member would raise objections to going before the courts to get clarification of the law as soon as possible so that the intention of parliament can be made quite clear. If it needs to be clarified any further, then we can come back with further amendments to the law.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Justice is suffering from a conflict of interest between his position as Minister of Justice, on the one hand, and Attorney General of Canada on the other, which puts him above merely standing up for his colleague in the ministry.

I put this question to him now as Attorney General of Canada. Given the fact that the Canadian Human Rights Act says, "This act is binding on Her Majesty", and given the fact that the Canadian Human Rights Act also says that the purpose of the act is to extend the present laws of Canada to the purview of matters coming within the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada—which certainly covers immigration—will the minister ask the House for consent to table those documents which he says the rules of the House make it impossible or improper for him to table? I can give an undertaking that we on this side of the House are prepared to give our consent.

Will the minister take advantage of this, in his capacity as Attorney General, and table the documents so that not only will the courts be apprised some day with respect to its position but this parliament, which passed a law believing it was of universal application, will have a chance to look at it as well? Will he do that?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I heard the hon. member's argument. The rules of this House strictly forbid my giving legal opinions before this House.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I asked for your consent.

Mr. Lalonde: If I am advised there is a genuine argument or disagreement as to the interpretation of the law in this respect, the law should be clarified by the courts. That is the normal process to follow.

IMMIGRATION

USE BY IMMIGRANTS OF IMMIGRATION CONSULTANTS—ETHICS OF CONSULTANTS

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I should like to point out to him that he would not be in the same difficulty if he had accepted the amendments to provide for representation of these people before the commission.

Has the minister received evidence within the last few days from the ethnic communities of Canada about cases where members of those communities, having established themselves as immigration consultants, have used their position and their association with ethnic communities to rip them off? Their credentials as immigration consultants are, at best, illusory and they have given out very wrong information that has hurt people who thought they had a case before the Immigration Appeal Board but in fact did not. Large sums of money have been given to these immigration consultants by people who are very vulnerable.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it has not come to my personal attention that the ethnic communities have made that representation. It should also be pointed out that there are many bona fide, excellent consultants in the immigration field who can get that information if they wish from departmental officials. Some people prefer to go to immigration consultants. Many of them have been in business for many years. They are not lawyers, but they are very competent. I think that using the broad brush of criticism for all of them does a disservice to many immigration consultants who do a first-class job on behalf of immigrants.

I am concerned about those who are "ripping off" and I should like to see what we can do about that. I do not want to do it to the detriment of the many people who are not lawyers but who are providing an excellent service to immigrants on the immigration laws.

Mr. Epp: A supplementary question. I do not believe I said that I was painting all immigration consultants with that brush. However, the minister knows, and I know, that there are people posing in that way who are doing exactly what I pointed out.

I am asking the minister if he has examined the representations of immigration lawyers and the question whether immigration consultants should either be licensed or certified. It could be made known to persons who need this type of service that in fact these people have certain qualifications related to the advertising they are doing.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I have received representations from lawyers who provide legal advice on the act and who represent immigrants before the various tribunals that are available to refugees or immigrants. There may be some conflict in licensing, because lawyers, for example, are licensed within a province. It would be difficult to make the determination within provincial jurisdiction that someone is or is not entitled to practice law and, if they are entitled to practice law, that they can perform these other services.

In so far as consultants are concerned, not being lawyers I am not sure whether we would have that jurisdiction alone at the federal level, or whether we might have to work in concert with the provinces to try to weed out the bad and maintain the good. I am concerned with the problem, and it is a matter of finding the administrative mechanism to deal with it.

HUMAN RIGHTS

DIRECTIVE DEALING WITH SECURITY CLEARANCE—ALLEGED DENIAL OF BASIC RIGHTS

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Solicitor General which is along the lines of human rights in the country? I should like to point out to the minister that it is not only the ministry of immigration and the ministry of justice that claim immunity from the Human Rights Act, but his own department as well.

I should like to ask whether the minister is aware of a directive dealing with security clearance, called 11-3, which denies basic human rights not only to immigrants and women but to one out of three Canadians not born in this country.

One paragraph in the directive refers to "close relatives living within the borders of such foreign nations as may cause him to be subject to pressures." Canadians who have such relatives in other countries would not be able to get a security clearance in this country either in the public service or in other sensitive positions in private industry.

Is the minister aware of this directive, and is he prepared to examine it and withdraw this most offensive document that exists within his department?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the general principle that is reflected in the directive. I have already asked for a review of the directive and also a review of the document to which the hon. member refers.

● (1500)

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I ask the minister, through you, whether he is prepared to make a statement in the House with regard to this very serious matter, as it clearly establishes one-third of Canadians as second-class citizens, not being able to advance into a confidential position in the civil service; and, of course, every immigrant in this country falls into that category.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I am ready to take the representations of the hon. gentlemen very seriously indeed. As he well knows, the document to which he refers finds its origin back in 1965, or thereabouts.

PRIVILEGE

MR. WOOLLIAMS—STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF JUSTICE CONCERNING PETER TREU CASE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lalonde) in answering the distinguished member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) in reference to the Treu case, used the term as an excuse for non-payment of compensation that a prima facie case had been made out in the preliminary hearing. The Minister of Justice has said on another occasion today that he does not quote the law. I would like to give the Minister of Justice a chance to correct this statement because the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal said this in dealing with what is necessary in a preliminary hearing:

> For committal for trial the Crown merely has to show that the accused is probably guilty and there is sufficient evidence . . . in favour of the Crown.

It is a matter of sufficiency. That has been upheld by the Supreme Court of Canada in the following words:

> The "justice", in accordance with this principle, is, in my opinion, required to commit an accused person for trial in any case in which there is admissible evidence which could, if it were believed, result in a conviction.

My point is that in a preliminary hearing a prima facie case does not have to be made out. It is a question of sufficiency of evidence and if believed—if it could be believed by a judge and jury or a judge alone—then that person could be sent up for trial. The Minister of Justice left the impression that there was a prima facie case made out against Mr. Treu. That is an error in law and an error in fact.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, you can see why it is not proper to give legal opinions in the House.

An hon. Member: Table a document from a real lawyer.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. DICK—NOTICE QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE TO BE RAISED

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, having read through a document which was tabled in the House on Wednesday and having it come to my attention with some other information given by a minister in reply to a question, at the first opportunity I will supply you and the minister with a copy of a notice of privilege. This is my first opportunity to indicate that I will bring forward a question of privilege regarding Loto Canada and dealing with the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) (Mrs. Campagnolo). I will supply proper notice of that tomorrow.

PRIVILEGE

MR. ABBOTT—ACCESS TO INCOME TAX FORMS

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege arising from a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 today made by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers), and also one yesterday made in the same context by the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker), the inference by both these members has been that tax forms under the guardianship of Revenue Canada have somehow been revealed by a wide variety of people, and we should be informing certain farm groups of their concerns. I just want to reiterate that I take exception to the hon. member's being able to communicate to the public at large that Revenue Canada does not guard its income tax returns with great care.

An hon. Member: That is not true.

Mr. Abbott: At the same time I think it is important, Mr. Speaker, to take note of the fact that on February 23 the Globe and Mail reported in connection with the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) that he showed a Globe and Mail reporter copies of four 1977 tax returns that he had been given with social insurance numbers, taxable income, income tax paid and spouses' names in full view. He then went on to say that he was in possession of some—

An hon. Member: Order.

An hon. Member: What is your privilege?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The nature of the minister's intervention on procedural grounds is a little uncertain to me. I thought he began taking issue with some statement that was made during the question period. The hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) did not participate in the question period today, and I do not know how his activities got into the point that the minister was on originally. I thought he was taking issue with some statement that was made during the question period and I think he has to confine himself to that.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, I am still on my point of order—

An hon. Member: It was a question of privilege.

Mr. Abbott: —my question of privilege to confirm that it is not this government or the Minister of National Revenue or the Department of National Revenue that stands in risk of revealing tax forms to the public. It is the hon. member for Central Nova possessed of stolen tax returns—

Mr. Alexander: Stolen?

Mr. Abbott: —and this "private dick" in residence in the Tory party has been revealing these forms to the public—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker).

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, aside from the doubtful validity of the minister's rising on a point of privilege and then in the middle of it saying that it was a point of order dealing with some motion made in the House under the provisions of Standing Order 43—to which somebody on the other side probably said no, or we would have heard about it, and maybe the minister himself said no—first of all I think that is a dubious point of privilege, to say the very least, and he ought to be cut off immediately in that respect.

The second matter that I want to raise, now that my friend has gone into the merits of it, is that no amount of rhetoric or debate or skirting around will absolve the government from the responsibility which the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) took for the government himself when he was at least straightforward and honest enough to say that it was the government's responsibility to maintain records, and the government had failed in that responsibility. That is the bottom line in all of this, Mr. Speaker, not the minister's nonsense.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of privilege. We are entering here an entirely new area with respect to questions of privilege as they relate to motions made under Standing Order 43. If you, sir, are going to allow debating points to be smuggled into our proceedings by spurious points of privilege in answer to motions under Standing Order 43, then this whole procedure is going to fall into a gross abuse of the rules of this House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The procedural grounds here are very clear. I have allowed two members on my left to contribute to the discussion. There is no decision to make. I stopped the minister when he wandered into some other area. But the intervention he has made is one that is attempted in this House very often. If it is the sense of the House that I should stop these interventions right at the start, I will be only too happy to do so because they invariably lead us into difficulty. However, I must say that we must all be aware that if I am to stop a particular hon. member before letting him go on for a couple of sentences, I will have to stop everyone. These interventions come from all sides of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I am quite prepared to do that. In any event, I will reaffirm now that taking issue with a statement up to three o'clock, whether it be during the presentation of applications pursuant to Standing Order 43 or in the placing of questions or in answering them, taking issue with anything done up to that time by way of a question of privilege is a misuse of the question of privilege procedure. If it is the sense of the House that I cut that practice off much more sharply than I have, I will be only too happy to do so.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. ALEXANDER—RIGHT TO RAISE QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE RESERVED ON BEHALF OF HON. MEMBER FOR CENTRAL NOVA

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, having heard the minister responsible for Revenue Canada either imply or state that the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) and/or "private dick" stole documents, I just want to advise Your Honour that I am reserving the right of the hon. member for Central Nova to have an opportunity to look at the blues in order to pursue a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The record will have to be examined. My memory is that the minister in his intervention said that the hon. member for Central Nova was possessed of stolen documents. That was the language used; at least, that is my recollection. Like the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), I will examine the record, as I am sure the minister will, to see whether he made an accusation of a member having committed an offence. If he did, that will have to be withdrawn. We will have to examine the record. The minister, of course, is on notice to that effect.

MR. TOWERS—RIGHT TO RAISE QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE RESERVED

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I wish to reserve the right to raise a question of privilege tomorrow after having looked at the blues, as the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Abbott) used my name in his statement today.

JOURNAL OF PUBLIC COMMENT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH DAILY REGISTER

Mr. Bob Kaplan (York Centre) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-463, to establish the Journal of Public Comment.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, when members of parliament are misquoted or misinterpreted they have elaborate protections under our parliamentary procedures. No such protection exists for private citizens who may be misrepresented or misquoted in this House. My bill will establish a new journal in which citizens at their own expense can tell in writing their side of the story if they are directly referred to and feel that they have been misrepresented in parliamentary debate.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

OLD PORT OF MONTREAL

Question No. 220—Mr. Jones:

1. Is there a project underway at present to redevelop the old harbour of Montreal? Who has undertaken this project? How large an area is encompassed by this project?

Order Paper Questions

2. What is the expected cost of this project? What department or departments, either provincial or federal, are responsible for the cost of this project? How much of the cost is the province responsible for and how much is the federal government responsible for? What monies have been spent to date on this project? Give a breakdown of each department's contribution to date.

3. Has there been any public participation in the redevelopment of the old harbour of Montreal and if so, what form has it taken? What civic groups are involved in this project?

4. What goals are to be achieved by redevelopment of the old harbour of Montreal? Have any of these been achieved to date and if so, what are they?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Urban Affairs): 1. There is a project under way to redevelop the old port of Montreal. It is an initiative of the federal government and the general plan for the area is being prepared by the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs in conjunction with other federal departments and the other levels of government. The study area is 450 acres (180 ha).

2. At this early stage of planning it is impossible to estimate what the cost will be. The MSUA research and demonstration group are responsible for the planning in co-operation with CMHC, Parks Canada, Public Works, NHB, and the provincial, MUC and city governments. The ultimate responsibility for carrying out specific projects within the over-all development plan will be determined as part of the planning process. The only monies spent to date have involved:

demolition of an unused grain elevator and dismantling the unused autostade by CMHC ($1.15 million), and the opening of a project office and the beginning of planning by MSUA, $1.35 million.

acquisition of properties on St. Pierre Street to be renovated as housing by CMHC, $0.94 million.

3. There is a public participation program in the planning of the area. It involves an association of interested individuals and groups with public meetings and workshops, as well as questionnaires and the solicitation of briefs and public suggestions. The civic groups who have so far chosen to become actively involved are: Association des locataires de Habitat 67, Association des propriétaires du vieux Montréal, Chambre de commerce du district de Montréal, Comité québécois des sentiers de randonnée, Guilde de la marine marchande, Jeune Chambre de Montréal, Monde à bicyclette, Sauvons Montréal, STOP, Société pour vaincre la pollution, Syndicat des initiatives du vieux Montréal.

4. The planning objectives for the project as outlined by the federal cabinet are:

(a) Conserve and promote the Canadian cultural heritage.

(b) Improve urban living conditions and facilitate public access to the water's edge within the constraints created by the presence of the harbour.

(c) Contribute to the efforts for an economic recovery.

(d) Maintain certain harbour functions that are congruous with the urban and historic environment.

Although the project has only been under way for a few months, a major barrier between old Montreal and the river, namely grain elevator No. 2, has been removed opening a vista on the St. Lawrence. It is anticipated that by next summer, other actions will have taken place which will improve public access to the water and promote the cultural heritage.

ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN "WELCOME TO THE ENERGY EFFICIENT BUILDINGS"

Question No. 241—Mr. Epp:

1. How much is the advertising campaign entitled "Welcome to the Energy Efficient Buildings" costing the government?

2. How widely is the campaign being publicized and for how long?

3. How much will the entire programme of building analysis cost?

4. Are the analysts government employees and, if not (a) who are they and what firms do they represent (b) how much are they being paid (c) on what basis were they hired?

5. How much did the production of the primary picture of the Minister of Public Works in the campaign cost?

6. How much did the hard hat cost which the Minister is wearing in the picture?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Urban Affairs): 1. $132,000.

2. The campaign was publicized in the National Capital area for three months.

3. An accurate cost figure cannot be given. The estimated costs are based on doing a preliminary assessment on all buildings in the inventory. The estimates are based on $.55 square metre with a Crown-owned inventory of 5.3 million square metres, or approximately $3 million.

4. (a) The analysis is being carried out by both public servants and private sector consultants (see list of consultants below).

(b) The consultants are paid in a range from $5,000 to $20,000 depending on the size of the building.

(c) The consultants are hired where no Public Works Canada staff are available to do the job. They are hired on the basis of their professional skill, knowledge of the area of operation, availability of staff and proven performance.

5. $20.

6. $2.83.

2. Was Host allowed entry into the terminals on the dates specified by DOT and, if not, for what reason?

3. What was Host's rank with respect to other successful bidders in October 1976?

4. Was Host promised a choice of counter location in respect to their rank among the successful bidders and was Host in fact granted such space commensurate with their rank?

5. What was the length of the contract agreed to by DOT with respect to Host's successful bid in October 1976?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): 1 to 5. This question is presently the subject of litigation and as such, no comment can be made.

URBAN TRANSIT—NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 802—Mr. Howie:

1. Since April 1, 1978, how much assistance has been made available to the Province of New Brunswick to assist with urban transit?

2. Is the allocation of funds during this five year programme still based on the formula of $2.00 per capita according to the population of the Province as recorded in the official Census of 1976?

3. To date, what community and privately operated bus systems have received assistance?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): 1. Under the Urban Transportation Assistance Program, New Brunswick will receive $6,774,000 over the five-year period commencing on April 1, 1978. None of this money has yet been transferred.

2. No. The allocation is based on $10 per capita over the five-year life of the program.

3. No bus systems have yet received assistance from the Urban Transportation Assistance Program. It is expected that agreements will shortly be signed that will provide assistance to municipality owned urban bus systems in Fredericton, Moncton and Saint John. Under the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Program $309,906 has been contributed for the acquisition of three intercity buses by SMT Eastern Ltd.

POINT OF ORDER

DELAY IN ANSWERING QUESTION NO. 19

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I refer to question No. 19 which was placed on the order paper on October 11 in this session and is outstanding from previous order papers. It concerns the use, or perhaps I should say misuse, of the Unemployment Insurance Commission computer in Montreal, allegedly by public servants after hours.

When I first raised this matter in the House, the RCMP subsequently ordered an investigation. I was contacted by the RCMP and co-operated to the fullest extent with them. I have been assured that this investigation has long since finished, yet no answer has been given as to whether Key Data Canada got use of this computer and paid kickbacks to public servants, including the installation of a swimming pool in the back yard of one public servant in the city of Montreal.

As the question has been outstanding this long, and since the investigation of the incident has been completed by the RCMP and this question is still sitting on the desk of the minister or whoever is responsible, I feel it is time that we now have some indication of what is going on. They were passing around free swimming pools and, it is alleged, $20 bills in envelopes to public servants in order to draw them into this scheme. Fortunately many of them refused. It is time we knew exactly what happened in the city of Montreal at the time when Mr. Kingsley and Mr. Mainville were involved in directing the computer centre. Mr. Mainville was regional director at the time.

Can the parliamentary secretary tell us when this question is going to be answered? Do we have to wait another two years? Are they going to keep hiding crooks in the public service and not let the people of Canada know that their money is being embezzled?

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Would the hon. member repeat the question to which he refers.

[English]

Mr. Cossitt: Question No. 19, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The question enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—REQUESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF FAIR PRICES COMMISSION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby) moved:

That, given the government's failure to hold down rising prices, which have increased the cost-of-living burden for Canadian families, this House calls on the government to establish a fair prices commission, with powers to investigate and, where necessary, to roll back unfair price increases.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members will note that not later than 9.45 o'clock p.m. every question necessary to dispose of proceedings shall be put forthwith in accordance with Standing Order 58(9).

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the debate we are going to have this afternoon is one of the most important in the history of this parliament.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: A Conservative member laughs. I hope he is as concerned about prices as most Canadians. I say it is one of the most important because the subject matter affects every Canadian. It affects pensioners, married couples, single people, trade unionists and non-trade unionists. The reality is that at this point in 1979 we are facing the clear prospect of a major new inflationary cycle.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has expressly said that he has not called an election because the Parliament of Canada has things to do. I cannot think of a subject matter that the people of this country would like parliament to deal with more than prices. If the Prime Minister is going to continue to hold off having an election on the ground that parliament has things to do, I would like to see soon on the order paper a measure from the government, even just one, indicating that it wants to come to grips with this very serious matter.

In 1978 prices went up by some 9 per cent. The most recent figures show that that 9 per cent figure is continuing in 1979 and is in fact likely to worsen. That is on the price side. If you look at wages and salaries, the pay of Canadians, what do you find? Figures released on the weekend by Statistics Canada show that the average weekly earnings of Canadians increased from $252 a week to $269, an increase of only 6.4 per cent.

If you subtract the increase in the cost of living for 1978 from the increase in earnings, what do you find? I am sure even members of the cabinet can understand this reality. In 1978, the average Canadian worker had a net loss in his income of $340. His standard of living did not increase at all in 1978. With price increases exceeding salary increases, the ordinary family is falling behind in an economic sense.

I am not so much concerned with 1978 as I am with what is going on right now in terms of what is in store for the rest of 1979. Looking at the trends for the last quarter of 1978, the alarming conclusion one has to reach is that the net loss of income which became apparent in 1978 will be even worse for Canadian workers in 1979 unless something is done. The reality is that real incomes are falling behind.

Wage settlements continue to fall behind the increase in the cost of living. I learned of one settlement over the weekend affecting 18,000 hospital workers in Ontario. Hospital workers in every province are among the most poorly paid Canadians. Their settlement amounted to 4 per cent, or even slightly less. It does not take an economic genius to realise what is happening; even without briefing notes the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Allmand) could calculate that an increase of 4 per cent set against an increase in the cost of living conservatively estimated at 9 per cent for this year means a significant loss of income for those hospital workers. The fact is that thousands of workers who have been subjected to a wage control program for the past three years are now accepting similar settlements. It is time a measure of economic justice went in the direction of the workers. That is what this debate is all about.

The AIB report which came out over the weekend showed that food prices went up by some 21 per cent in the past year. Again, I should like the cabinet minister who will be replying in this debate on behalf of the government to consider the impact of this increase on a typical family. It is not so serious in its impact on members of parliament because compared with most Canadians we are well paid. It is not so serious in its impact on a civil servant who has just got a $5,000 increase in pay. But it is very serious for pensioners and low income earners who spend a much larger proportion of their incomes on food than do the rest of us. The price of hamburger meat, I heard not long ago, had reached $2 a pound and I am told it is now in excess of $2. A head of cauliflower in Ottawa costs

$1.98. Last week, in the same store, the price was $1.49. Vegetable prices have risen so high that a Liberal senator, a member of that other august body which joins us from time to time in assessing legislation, thought we should remove vegetables from the consumer price index. That is the Liberal way of dealing with the high price of food—remove it from the statistical accounting system. I am sure the hon. senator does not speak for the government in that regard but I should like to hear what members of the cabinet intend to do about the high cost of vegetables as well as of other food.

Today a loaf of bread costs 69 cents or 70 cents. Every food item is costing more day after day, as housewives know—they do not need politicians to tell them. Lumber prices are going up as well as steel prices which affect so many consumer needs. Car prices are going up. Prices in every sector of the economy are increasing, not declining. I asked my research staff to try to find evidence of some falling off in prices somewhere because it seemed to me that if we were getting increased efficiency as a basis for increases in profits some falling off in prices could be expected. But I am told there are no such reductions in prices. In the old days firms cut the prices of some of their products in order to win a larger share of the market; but nowadays prices are not reduced, they are set and then they are kept up.

So we are confronted by this reality. On one hand, wages and salaries have been controlled by the AIB for three years; controls have now been removed and there is every indication that the demands being made by workers are reasonable. On the other hand, prices and profits are going out of sight and it is obvious that something has to be done.

Something has to be done in terms of fairness for its own sake. What I want to emphasize today, however, is this. If we are to head off a new round of inflation in 1979, we must take action today for the Canadian worker on the price side of the ledger. If we expect men and women who will be coming to the bargaining table in 1979 to do what they normally do, which is to make reasonable wage demands, then we have to confront them with a reasonable price situation. As sure as we are sitting in this chamber today, Mr. Speaker, if the price escalation continues at its present rate, continues to rise in 1979 as it did in 1978, Canadian men and women who are bargaining for wages to ensure that their families have a reasonable existence will demand increases later this year which are at least equivalent to the increase in the cost of living. So the more the cost of living goes up, the more we can expect wage and salary demands to go up. And that is just, Mr. Speaker.

If you look at the period from 1945 to the present time you will find almost without exception, not only in this country but in the United States as well, wage and salary demands have invariably followed price increases, not the other way around. I read a report in the New York Times on Sunday which made the same case as I am making here.

The inflation we are now experiencing certainly has nothing to do with wage and salary demands. It has everything to do with demands on the economy by the other side of the ledger. So what can we do? What has been the response of the government? The government, led by the Prime Minister, who says he does not want an election because parliament should be doing something, has not done a thing about increasing prices. In general, it has made three responses to questions my colleagues and I have been putting since Christmas in the House about price increases. On the one hand, when the government could get away with it, it has said that price increases are not real, that they do not exist and that we are making things up. That has happened from time to time. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs typifies that by his mobilized inaction. The typical response has been to say that the situation will be studied but that there is nothing the government can do. That has been the twofold response of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The response has been to set up another study and to say in advance that there is nothing the government can do—and I am waiting to hear a report on at least one of these studies—even if the study concludes that there is price gouging.

There has not been one rollback ordered by this government, which is crucial if we are addressing our concern to the typical worker in Canada. Not one price has come down as a result of action by this government. Quite the contrary, by lifting subsidies recently on bread and milk and by allowing oil companies to get what they could in the market, this government has been directly responsible for many of the price increases which have taken place. I say on behalf of my colleagues that something can be done, and something must be done.

Before I indicate what must be done, I want to mention half a dozen examples because I think one example is worth a thousand generalizations. The people who are out there in the country certainly deal with concrete examples. They do not deal with annual figures put out by Statistics Canada, and I hope when the minister speaks on behalf of the government today he will deal with these cases because they point very clearly in one direction. This has caused me to conclude that we have to propose to this government a specific method for dealing with prices because the government has not been able to come up with one on its own.

First I want to deal with the general question of food prices. We know the government's response in this regard. Its response is that the low level of the Canadian dollar has meant that food prices are inescapably higher. Let me concede right off the bat that that is true in many cases. If we import orange juice or vegetables from Florida or California and our dollar is low, prices will be higher. Anyone who is honest must acknowledge that reality.

However, there is another reality about which the government does not like to talk, and I want to draw attention to it. The report issued by the AIB last week indicated that food store profits jumped 37.9 per cent in the third quarter of last year over the third quarter of 1977. In the same period—and this is the issue which concerns me—sales increased by only 17.4 per cent. In terms of elementary arithmetic, profits increased at twice the rate of sales. We want to know the reason for that. It may be that there has been some remarkable new efficiency introduced by the food chains. It may be that there have been some devices or managerial actions which have led to profit increases twice that of sales. Perhaps some creative genius has been at work at the middle man level in the food sector.

If that is the case, I think Canadian consumers would like to know about it. All I am saying is that on the basis of past performance and trends there is good reason for us to conclude that food prices are too high because profits in large measure are too high in this sector, and that consumers are being charged much more than they ought to be charged. We say we would like that to be investigated. We would like to have some answers. I want to stress that we are not assuming that conclusion, but at least we have the honesty to look at the evidence and not just to ignore it.

Another example is flour. A five pound bag of Five Roses flour increased in price by some 44 cents from the first week in December to the middle of this month. A five pound bag is a relatively small amount, and it is very interesting that its price should increase 44 cents in a two-month period. The federal subsidy which had been on until the middle of December, when it was removed, was only 22 cents per five pound bag of flour, and the consumer was charged twice the amount he should have been charged if the removal of the subsidy were simply passed directly on. We say that that bears investigation. Why is the removal of the subsidy being compounded in its impact on the consumer?

Bread prices are seriously affected by the removal of that subsidy. We felt that subsidy should have been left on, and we urged that because bread is a basic food for Canadians. However, the government removed the subsidy. That ought to have increased the price of a loaf of bread three cents to four cents. Instead, the price went up between eight cents and ten cents. Now a family spends 69 cents or 70 cents when it buys a loaf of bread.

Then there is chicken. In view of the performance of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs yesterday one is tempted to say that the chickens have come home to roost in terms of the government's lack of policy on consumer items. What is the reality regarding chicken prices? The AIB reported recently that poultry prices increased by some 33.5 per cent during the past year. However, the farmer got only 12.5 per cent of that. I think a legitimate question again arises: Where did the rest go? We are paying all that money for chickens; where did the rest go? The farmer does not have it.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs does not like what he calls obscure questions. I find it difficult to understand why he regards questions about chicken prices and flour prices as obscure. However, that is his problem, not mine. The minister said in the House yesterday that the price of chicken went up because there was an increase in demand. Anyone who looks at the real world of economics knows that increase in demand is related to the question of supply and price. At one point in yesterday's question period the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs said to me that if I really understood reality I would know that when demand is increased prices go up.

Some 20 minutes later the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) let the truth be known when he revealed that during the past year the amount of frozen chicken increased. We have some four million more pounds of poultry frozen in storage—taken off the market—in 1979 than we had in 1978. That is the reason for the increase in price. Farmers have done their job, as they have traditionally done in Canada. One of the most efficient agricultural sectors of any country in the world exists in this country. Farmers have produced the chickens, but somehow the middle men have managed to take them off the market. They have kept four million pounds more in frozen storage instead of putting them on the market so that the Canadian consumer could pay a reasonable price. That is the real reason chicken prices have increased in response to demand.

With regard to lumber prices, there has been a 70 per cent increase in lumber prices over the past two years, with a further 10 per cent increase last month. This has added about $1,200, in terms of its economic impact on the economy, to the construction cost of a single family home with 1,800 square feet of floor space. One board foot of two-by-four spruce now retails at 23 cents, compared to 17 cents last year. Plywood prices are up to $14.25 from $11 for a four-by-eight foot sheet of half inch spruce sheeting. The big six of the pulp and paper industry, the companies which have benefited so recently from another multi-million dollar handout from this government, have recorded a 123 per cent increase in profits, from $182 million in 1977 to $407 million in 1978. I suggest that perhaps there is some exaggeration in the profit there, that perhaps there is some slight overcharging to the consumer. I suggest that if the government is interested in heading off potentially inflationary demands coming on the wage and salary side in 1979, lumber prices, among others, are areas in which the government should be zeroing in and, more than that, areas in which they should be turning around those price increases.

What about the poor banks? The major banks in Canada, that handful of financial entities protected by government legislation from outside competition, that small group of Canadian banks, had almost a $1 billion net profit last year. They in turn are increasing charges now for everyone—farmers, small businessmen, everyone who has an account—for the services they get. At the same time their profits are going right out of sight.

Finally, I will turn to the farmer. What about his input costs? Right now, a 100 horsepower tractor sells for some $28,000, up 16 per cent over last year. A combine, which is rather essential for our farmers in western Canada in particular but by no means exclusively there, went up in price in the past year from $32,000 to over $41,000, up some 30 per cent in one year. I stress again that this has come about precisely at a time when wage and salary increases were going up slightly in excess of 6 per cent. In this case it is not the worker who is getting more than his share; it is someone else who has come between the industrial worker and the farmer. It is someone else who is getting that 30 per cent rip-off.

Therefore, it seems to me that farm input costs have to be considered rather seriously, and I say that particularly in the context of 1979 when the federal Department of Agriculture forecast that net farm income in 1979 will go down compared to 1978, not up.

Very clearly, something has to be done. I have given a number of examples. I could without any difficulty have given a dozen more examples which would require any fair-minded person or any fair-minded government to take action.

What are we recommending? We are saying that the pressures on the economy at this time very clearly are not on the wage and salary side; very clearly they are on the price side from sources other than wages and salaries. Very clearly they are up and going higher. Both in terms of present justice to the consumer and in terms of having a favourable impact on wage and salary settlements in 1979 further down the road, something must be done now about prices.

Therefore, we are proposing—so that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs will not have to rise day after day to say that the government has no authority to do this—the establishment of a fair prices commission. We say that the commission should have the following powers. First, on a selective basis, it should investigate prima facie unfair prices for food, essential household services, basic industrial commodities and farm input costs.

Second, it should have the power to delay price increases while these investigations are under way.

Third, it should have the power to obtain full information from corporations in sectors in which it is investigating a particular price increase.

Fourth, it should have the power to order rollbacks when unfair prices are discovered.

In our view, this commission should consist simply of five or six members, with a staff seconded to it by other departments that are relevant to financial concerns. There is no need to create an elaborate bureaucracy.

The way we see this commission functioning is exactly analogous, in terms of federal government authority, to the kind of influence exercised in the U.S. economy in the past by presidents Kennedy and Johnson. In the past, both those U.S. presidents singled out the steel sector which, during their respective presidencies, was proposing unjustified price increases. They had the presidential authority and the moral authority that the leader in any country should have but that we have lacked in this country. Those two presidents took on the steel industry and said that their price increases were unjustified and should be stopped. This had a significant impact on prices throughout the economy because other firms were made aware of the fact that the government meant business.

This is precisely the purpose of this commission. We see it functioning on a selective basis and zeroing in on particular targets, taking particular examples and, when it finds unfair price increases ordering rollbacks. With that kind of action we do not think it at all necessary to have across the board controls. Not only are they cumbersome and unworkable, as we have seen they are unnecessary. That is the point I am making. A selective approach at this time could have major effect because, when it rolls back a few prices, all those in the economy who had the temptation in the same year to levy unwarranted prices will not do so. That is what we think should be the effect. We think that action is overdue. We think this fair prices commission, which by no means would guarantee perfectly just prices to Canadians, would at least provide them with something they have lacked for a long time, and that is fair prices.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Board of Economic Development Ministers): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this debate today on the subject of inflation, a matter of deserved concern to all of us, and certainly a matter of overriding concern to the government. Our policies have been directed for quite some time toward trying to alleviate and bring inflation under control while avoiding other kinds of adjustments across the economy. It is always a finely balanced and difficult action to take.

I will not pretend today that we have succeeded totally in meeting our goal of reducing the rate of inflation, but I think there is good evidence, if people want to examine objectively the record, that we are on the road to a better price performance and that we are doing better in that area than most other industrialized nations. There have been some setbacks on the road, there is no question about it. They come mainly as the result of elements beyond our domestic control. But even here we are trying to meet and overcome them. We have a long haul ahead, as does every country that we can examine, but I think I want to stress the need in this country, and I think the justification, for having confidence.

I believe there is a mounting sense of optimism that I detect in our economy, perhaps not among members on the benches opposite or among some of the theoretical economists. Let us look for a few minutes at what has been happening on the inflation front. It was approximately five years ago that Canada was hit, as other countries were hit, by the shock of double-digit inflation with price increases in 1974 and 1975 touching close to the 11 per cent mark. That situation forced introduction of the anti-inflation program in the fall of 1975 and the imposition of anti-inflation controls which helped to bring down prices and to bring about a gradual turnaround in the price situation. But I think we all realize that a control program of that nature is a psychological weapon in the main and is consistent only with the market economy if it is in place for a limited period of time. Thus, the process of decontrol was put in motion approximately a year ago, in April of last year.

Unfair Price Increases

During that same month in his spring budget, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) said that the increase in the consumer price index during 1978, in his opinion, would be approximately 7 per cent. It turned out to be 9 per cent, in the main because of unexpectedly high food prices and a further devaluation of the dollar, the other side of that coin, which pushed up the cost of all goods which we import.

Given no surprises, this year we expect the CPI to rise between 7 per cent and 7.5 per cent, but again food and imports will be the main contributors to that price increase. I am not saying for a moment the size of that increase is acceptable to us, but it will be significantly below the rates experienced in the past few years.

The motion before the House in the name of the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party purports to be a solution to the increased burden which inflation places on Canadian families. It would create a new agency which would apparently oversee pricing practices in this country, but in our view it does not address the basic problem. Indeed it would be irrelevant to many of the most important sources of current price increases. In addition it deals only with prices and ignores the basic cost elements, which are the essential foundations of the price structure, as though they do not exist. Time and time again it has been proven in this country and elsewhere that prices cannot be controlled in isolation from costs, wages, profits and dividends.

I imagine the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party would expect the agency to go to work first in the areas where prices are rising fastest, some of which he pointed out today. After all, when one is hunting elephants it is wise to go into elephant country. I suspect the hon. member would want that agency to look at food prices first, particularly beef, which are the main concerns of Canadian shoppers today. Although the leader of the New Democratic Party carefully avoided this, I wonder if he is prepared also to confront the cattleman and tell him that his prices are too high.

Mr. Broadbent: The answer is no.

Mr. Andras: After suffering through several years of depressed prices and rising costs, I can imagine the response the hon. member would get from the cattle farmer. Thus, the hon. member wants to cut in at some other level. He has been critical of the food processing industry over the last several weeks, but conveniently ignored the extensive investigation of the food processing and food retailing industry which was carried out just a few months ago by the Anti-Inflation Board and updated last week on the basis of third quarter data. The study concluded that profit margins in the industry varied very little from historic norms during the first nine months of 1978.

The AIB found that the profit margin was increasing, but it found that the profit margin was 3.3 per cent in food processing which was identical to the same period in 1977. In the food wholesaling area, profit margins moved up slightly from 1.21 per cent to 1.30 per cent in the periods under comparison. For food retailers, the profit margin was 1.88 per cent in the 1978 period and 1.80 per cent in 1977. Profit margins in the beverage industry declined between 1971 and 1978.

Perhaps the New Democratic Party through this agency would be prepared to tackle the number two villain on the price scene—imports. Approximately 30 per cent of the goods consumed by the Canadians come from outside the country. Foreign producers are facing price increases of their own, and the devaluation of the Canadian dollar against foreign currencies means that it costs us more to import foreign products.

Mr. Broadbent: Right.

Mr. Andras: I do not know whether the NDP is suggesting that this agency would roll back the prices paid to California lettuce producers or Florida orange growers.

Mr. Broadbent: Did the minister listen to my speech? I said no.

Mr. Andras: The hon. member has one precise point at which he cuts in, and the entire sequence of the food chain, food pricing and its mechanics seem to be a mystery to him. In any event, the hon. member thinks this is a magic wand he can wave and our exchange rate problems will disappear and all those factors will be settled.

I should like to remind members of the House that in the spring of 1974 the government presented a bill to parliament. It was an amendment to the Combines Investigation Act which would have enabled the government temporarily to freeze prices on goods where there was evidence of profiteering and to roll back prices in those circumstances. When the then minister of consumer and corporate affairs introduced the bill he said that it was designed to "stop business from taking advantage of current economic conditions to unduly enhance profits." The bill was opposed by the same opposition critics who sit across the floor today. It died on the order paper when parliament was dissolved for the general election of 1974. Following the election, the government re-examined the whole question of prices, particularly food prices, and decided that the bill introduced previously was no longer effective in the changing economic situation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andras: From that study we developed the concept of the anti-inflation program which was put in place in the fall of 1975. That policy on prices included guidelines which limited price increases to the recovery of added costs. Profits were restricted to margins no higher than 95 per cent of a firm's pre-tax net profit margin in the average of the previous five years. That policy worked well during the period of the anti-inflation program.

At the end of the controls it was decided at a conference of first ministers to ask the Economic Council of Canada to continue an analysis of price and cost developments. That request led to the establishment of the Centre for the Study of Inflation and Productivity. That agency was assigned the task of monitoring prices and incomes to inform the public of developments which appear to threaten our ability to reduce inflation. As well it was instructed to investigate structural problems which may add to costs or prices and leave the economy more vulnerable to inflationary shocks. Just recently the executive of CSIP wrote to the major corporations for additional information on costs and prices to expand its work of analysis.

That is the extent of its mandate, but I should like to point out that the original proposal put forward by the federal government to the premiers of the provinces at the time of the federal-provincial conference in February, 1978, was a stronger agency with greater powers, not roll-back powers but greater investigative and mandatory powers to demand information and so on. Frankly, it was the provincial premiers who resisted that and asked us not to go ahead. The premier of New Brunswick said that he would support a lesser powered agency. He suggested in reviewing the changes which have been made in it that we should stop calling it a monitoring agency because it implies a certain amount of compulsion. He said he would like to see this set up and have it operate on a voluntary basis. That is the view of New Brunswick.

• (1600)

Mr. Davis of Ontario had great reservations about having this—

An hon. Member: Leave it to the provinces again.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, there is going to be a very interesting bit of information in a minute. Mr. Davis said that what he is looking for is to get out of involvement as government and, as much as we can, allow the business community and the collective bargaining process to function in its normal fashion. He said there should be a very clear understanding that this is a transitory sort of thing and that we are not just moving from one phase of controls to another for an unstated period of time.

I have a more definite, more positive and more precise description of concern expressed by one premier, Premier Blakeney of Saskatchewan. He clearly said that he wanted to make a very precise comment. He said that in its present form, the stronger form that was presented by the federal government to that conference, they oppose the monitoring agency, and they have no doubts about that at all. He suggested that we are in a world of psychology, and it seemed to him that if we are to foster an economic recovery we need the psychological benefit of a definite end to control, a clean break and not any haphazard return to a food prices review board. He went on to say that he really thought what we needed, in his judgment, was a clean break so that everybody will know that the control program is over and that we are all back into the business of setting prices and incomes by the market forces.

The premier of Saskatchewan went on to indicate his clear opinion that it seemed to him we have to face up to the fact that we will have to establish prices and incomes by market forces sooner or later, and it may as well be sooner. He did not think putting off the inevitable would do anything except prolong the confusion.

There is dissension. The provinces do not want us to proceed with a stronger agency than the present Centre for the Study of Inflation and Productivity. I want to indicate that the Minister of Finance, along with the cabinet, is seriously looking at the centre, and there is serious consideration as to whether there are additional monitoring powers that may or may not be necessary clearly to establish before the Canadian people whether there is profiteering. Whatever is decided on, it will fall definitely short of rollback. We do not intend to go that route. There are many reasons why we feel that would be the wrong thing to do. In the end the real key to controlling inflation is a strong and a growing economy functioning under responsible monetary and fiscal policies. That has to be the basis for full recovery and expansion in the private sector.

We took the decision a few years ago, along with the provinces, to begin to control our spending, holding it below the rate of growth in the GNP, and this is being accomplished. Monetary policy is reflecting our concern about inflation. There are a great number of other strong influences at work stimulating private sector activity. Our improvement in the international competitive situation is capable of documentation. Our domestic costs have come down at a time when the external value of the Canadian dollar has declined. We have seen a dramatic gain in jobs, more than 440,000 in the past 12 months, and we have seen a record $3.5 billion surplus in merchandise trade for 1978. Manufacturing has been recovering strongly over the past year with output up by 9 per cent and employment up by 7 per cent. We are confident that real growth this year will be about 3.5 per cent, and investment intentions which are already known suggest there will be growth in real investment of 4 per cent to 5 per cent for the economy as a whole.

The word "profit" was mentioned. I think it is a very important aspect of the recovery that this country has seen in economic terms that profits are improving. People can play games with percentage increases. One dollar profit this year on a million dollar investment is not very much. You can double that to $2 profit next year and you have a 100 per cent increase. You really have to dig a lot deeper than the leader of the NDP is digging to indicate a true pattern there.

Quite frankly, profit is not a dirty word to me. It is the main source of the capital investment that we need to produce jobs, protect jobs and create the growth this country really needs. It is something that should be welcomed by every sector of the economy, by labour as well as business, because without profits the money available for labour for decent wages and for the protection of jobs is simply not there.

We think the pieces are in place for sound expansion of the economy. We are admittedly concerned about the surge in imported food prices which is squeezing the real income of workers. We do not deny that, or that this is making the transition to lower inflation that much more difficult. But it is a serious question as to whether we can protect the people of this country from all aspects of imported inflation. Most certainly any over-zealous attempt to interfere with the workings of the marketplace, where there is no evidence of a scapegoat, as there is not in respect of food prices, could be a response in the wrong direction. We could respond the wrong way and turn back the progress which has been so painfully established over the past few years.

Finally, there are real and technical difficulties with regard to the hon. member's proposal for a rollback. I think he is well aware of the constitutional position and that the federal government would have no such powers, except perhaps in a few areas of federal jurisdiction, such as the banks which he suggested. In the rest, a rollback power legislated by us would have to take place only on the basis of an emergency, as the anti-inflation program itself. It is very, very doubtful whether that could be proven is a case of law, and it is very doubtful in my mind whether that degree of urgency does in fact exist.

I have indicated the reaction of provincial governments. I have indicated the reaction of the government of Saskatchewan, which was most forceful of all, surprisingly, in saying it is time to let the market forces work. We are not about to embark on an agency with rollback provisions. We are not going into controls. We are coming out of those controls and it is somewhat painful. We are looking to the responsibility of the main actors in the marketplace to realize that we cannot, all or any of us, take more out of this economy than we are prepared to put into it.

I sense a great deal of responsibility on the part of labour groups. I agree with the leader of the NDP and his comments in that regard because I have been talking to labour and I see a much greater degree of rapport between business and labour. I am just back from British Columbia where there was a very encouraging recognition of much better dialogue between the main forces in the economy there. I hope that spreads. I hope these profits which the leader of the NDP is so ashamed of do get ploughed back into plant expansion and into competitive modernization so they can stay competitive in international markets particularly and protect and expand job creation. To knock them and to denigrate profits, and to start opting for artificial interventions in the marketplace when the facts do not yet warrant it, is the fastest way to turn off this return to profits and job creation that we see taking place.

I repeat that we are looking very carefully at the activities of the agency now in place; the Minister of Finance is taking this very seriously indeed. I think he will have some comments to make within the next few days, but I assure you that these activities will not be expanded, nor will we include the power of rollback.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, what is significant about the speech that we just heard is the fact that it was made by the President of the Board of Economic Development Ministers (Mr. Andras) and not by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Allmand). I would expect him to speak but my point is that I fully expected him to lead off this debate for the government since it is he who has the statutory responsibility within government. I intend to come back to that in a few minutes, Mr. Speaker.

The motion put forward by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) is simplistic and, on the surface, commendable. This kind of simplistic approach is quite typical of the New Democratic Party. They come up with what is a reasonably adequate diagnosis of the symptoms but then they provide a remedy that amounts to a band-aid. We do not want another band-aid, Mr. Speaker. What we want is a cure. What this country wants is a cure.

I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Martin) who makes a positive contribution to this House from time to time, Mr. Speaker, will make one on his feet during the debate and not from his seat.

The President of the Board of Economic Development Ministers referred in his speech to the parliament of 1972-74 and the amendments to the Combines Investigation Act introduced at that time by the then minister of consumer and corporate affairs. Those amendments, of course, were to provide, where necessary, the kind of rollback power called for in the motion put forward by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby in setting up his fair prices commission.

Of course, as the minister indicated in his speech, the amendments died with the dissolution of that parliament when we had a general election. I look forward to hearing the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) in this regard, because what is interesting is that when the government came back with a renewed mandate, they did not introduce the amendments to the Combines Investigation Act, which would have been the decent, honest and consistent thing to do, but proceeded to introduce that which they had campaigned against, namely, wage and price controls.

We all remember that campaign and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) going about the country saying "Zap, you are frozen", speaking against any kind of controls. And then when we came back he forgot about the previous parliament and the need to amend the Combines Investigation Act, competition policy and all the things that would have a meaningful effect in the marketplace. Instead we got a controls program.

I suppose that is all we can expect from this government but we are getting a little tired of hearing the government, in debate after debate, regardless of the issue, parading statements by provincial premiers and socking it to the provinces instead of hearing clear statements on where the government stands and what it proposes to do about the economic situation in the country today. We certainly did not get it from the President of BED Ministers as he attempted to speak for the government in replying to the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby. We got from him, however, a hint that if this parliament lasts that long they are going to—I hesitate to use the word—"beef" up the Centre for the Study of Productivity and Inflation. What they propose to do about that toothless, useless agency whose credibility has already been destroyed is beyond me.

The problem in the first place was the failure to establish that agency under the aegis of the Inquiries Act which would give it the authority to act that it does not presently have. In consequence of some of the incorrect pronouncements it has spouted, it has lost whatever credibility it may have had as it sets out to monitor the marketplace. I suppose one can draw from the fact that the President of the Board of Economic Development Ministers spoke for the government, instead of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs or the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), the conclusion that finally the government is beginning to get its act together with respect to some kind of strategy on prices. Perhaps the President of the Board of Economic Development Ministers is finally emerging as the minister who will be responsible for co-ordinating that food strategy we have heard so much about from the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the Minister of Agriculture and others.

Perhaps that is what the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs was referring to last week when he stated to the press what he has tried to correct or deny in the House, namely: "There is going to be a statement—something is happening. I cannot tell you very much but things are happening. We are going to have a statement on co-ordinated food strategy. All I can tell you is that I will not be making that statement, it will be some other minister."

It will not be the Minister of Agriculture; obviously he lost the battle too. That is how we can explain his absence from the House today. Obviously it is not going to be the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Perhaps the President of the Board of Economic Development Ministers will finally have something to co-ordinate. Let us hope that at last he will be able to bring it all together.

What do we mean when we speak of co-ordination in terms of food strategy, Mr. Speaker? We mean the co-ordination of various government departments that are the responsibility of divers government ministers. We mean somebody to co-ordinate the policies of the Minister of Agriculture on the one hand, who has a responsibility to the producers of this country, and the policies of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs on the other hand, who has a very definite statutory responsibility to the consumers of this country.

Bringing up the rear is the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) who has some say with respect to imports into the country. We are told that a large part of food inflation at the moment is represented by imports. Then there is the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) who controls the Canadian Wheat Board. He rises in his place in this House without regard to the consequences and in one fell swoop eliminates the consumer subsidy on domestically consumed wheat, notwithstanding the fact that this means a minimum 15 per cent increase in the price of a loaf of bread, an increase in the price of flour, some of which increase cannot be justified, an increase in the price of pasta products and all the things made from wheat.

Then we have the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc) representing a major food ministry of this government.

I do not know what the hon. member from New Brunswick is trying to say from his seat, Mr. Speaker. I hope he says it on his feet before the debate is over.

● (1620)

The Minister of Fisheries and the Environment has a definite responsibility in this House. The price of fish is good. The price of fish is too high for the same reason that the price of beef is too high. This is because it is priced on the American market and because of our sinking dollar. That is the reason we have to pay so much for fish in Canada. I hope the hon. member would address himself to that question. But when one talks about the price of fish, it speaks to the fact that we, as one of the great and most important fishing nations of the world, have one of the smallest per capita consumptions of fish. I believe we consume somewhere between 13 pounds and 15 pounds of fish per capita per annum. Something that should be addressed by government policy is how we can increase the consumption of fish in Canada.

All of these things have to be brought together in some kind of a co-ordinated strategy. On the one hand the Minister of Agriculture talks about supply and management with the various marketing boards that are able to control supply. On the other hand we have the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who has to react to whatever the Minister of Agriculture says every time there is a request to limit or increase the supply of chickens coming into the country. The same holds true for eggs and turkeys.

I want to make this very clear just in case it has not been made clear before. The last thing Canadians want is another commission. We are fed up with commissions. What we want is action. We want a government that is prepared to act. We do not want another bureaucracy. Look at what we have had. That is all we have had from this government. Now all we are getting from the NDP is this cry of "set up another commission; set up another agency." How many commissions and how many agencies have we had since 1968 when the Prime Minister promised or told us that he had wrestled inflation to the ground?

Let us look back and recall some of them. As I recall, we had the prices and incomes commission, of late and unlamented memory. This was a useless agency which put together a substantial and expensive bureaucracy only to be disbanded.

Then as a response to the politics of the food situation which was getting to be a hot political issue in 1972, the government opened parliament with a big announcement in the Speech from the Throne that it was concerned about food prices and the effect of rising food prices, and that it was going to do something about it. But what did the government do? It set up another commission. This was the special commission on trends in food prices. It is interesting to note that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) was the distinguished chairman of that committee. He has since been resurrected in a new incarnation, somewhat more partisan and somewhat less objective than his role at that time, and that is the more to be pitied; but he was the chairman and knows what I am talking about.

That committee recommended, among other things, when it made its final report in 1973, a ten-year food strategy for Canada. That was in 1973, six years ago. Instead of having government action on food strategy for Canada, as recommended by an all party committee of this House, we had that special committee, the food prices review board under the guidance of Mrs. Plumptre. We know that happened to the food prices review board. It was able to identify the problems but it could do nothing about them. Nevertheless, that was the government's response at the time.

What it did next was to establish another commission. That commission was followed by the Anti-Inflation Board which grew out of the "Zap, you're frozen" policy of the Prime Minister in the 1974 election campaign.

Mr. Alexander: Another flip-flop.

Mr. McGrath: That was followed by yet another commission. This is the one which was announced with such fanfare a year ago last February by the Minister of Agriculture and the then minister of consumer and corporate affairs—the only time the old gobbler and Chicken Little have ever been able to get together on anything. They jointly announced the convening of a special conference to formulate a food policy or food strategy for Canada. So there was this big conference in Ottawa in February. It was held at great expense and brought a lot of people together, but that, Mr. Speaker, is the last we heard from them.

Then we had the royal commission on corporate concentration, but this was just another study. Finally comes the agency that we are now going to have beefed up, according to the speech made by the President of the Board of Economic Development Ministers today, and that is the Centre for the Study of Inflation and Productivity, which is supposed to look after our interests during post controls.

Certainly the people of Canada do not want another commission, even one that has the very commendable feature of being called a fair prices commission. I suspect we will be hearing a lot more about that fair prices commission as the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby mounts his campaign whenever this government screws up the courage to call an election.

An hon. Member: They are screwing up everything else.

Mr. McGrath: There is only one thing that we need right now, Mr. Speaker. We need this government to screw up its courage to get us out of here and go to the people of Canada. I suspect that is the only way we will get action. We will not get any action from this tired, old, worn-out government over there which is gasping its last breath.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. McGrath.]

Mr. McGrath: The only time we will get action is whenever the Prime Minister screws up his courage to go to the people of Canada. Then we will get action because there will be a change of government so fast that the Prime Minister and his colleagues will not know what has hit them.

We are all in favour of fair prices. What I find rather interesting about this proposal put forward by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby is that, no matter how he tries to talk about it, it is just another form of controls, the very controls which day after day he has spoken against in this House. Now he intends to set up another controls mechanism. By listening to the hon. member's argument very carefully one could hear the hon. member arguing against his own proposal.

If we examine the experience of the Anti-Inflation Board—the controls program which is now supposed to be deactivated—what do we find? We find that in the first year of the setting up of the AIB the rate of inflation was 7.5 per cent. The reason it was 7.5 per cent had nothing to do with the controls program. During the first year of the Anti-Inflation Board there was a fairly substantial drop in food prices, which were not controlled in any case by the AIB at the time. Then in 1977 the rate of inflation rose to 8 per cent. Again in the final year of the controls program, 1978, the rate of inflation was at 9 per cent. At the rate we are going this year we are heading into double-digit inflation. All of this was happening at a time when the government's target for inflation at the time it set up the AIB was 4 per cent. We should now be at an annual rate of inflation of 4 per cent. That is not bad, Mr. Speaker. If you look at the figures, I estimate they are out about 125 per cent, which is not bad for this government given some of its other forecasts. The rate of inflation for the final year of the controls program was the third worst in our history and the second worst in the industrial world. Only Italy had a worse rate. Now we are going to have another controls mechanism.

I do not understand the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby. He has identified what has happened. He identified that prices have gone ahead and wages are falling behind. He knows that during the last two years of the controls program wages fell behind by an average of $520.

It boggles the mind to understand how the hon. member can get up in this House and with a straight face put forward this kind of proposal which is not worth the paper on which it is written. We do not want another controls program. We do not want another commission. What we want is a change in government and the sooner the better.

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to take part in this debate and, in particular, to deal with some of the comments made by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) in his speech. I have said before that whenever the Tories cannot make up their minds on an issue, they use the eloquence of the hon. member for St. John's East. They know he is sensitive to the needs of the people because of the province and the constituency with which he identifies.

Today the hon. member for St. John's East was used unfairly. In defending or explaining a position on behalf of his party today he was used unfairly to the point where he got carried away. Above all else, and this is on the record, he used the words in this House that the price of fish is now too high. In trying to defend and explain the position of the Tory party the hon. member for St. John's East got up in this House and said that the price of fish is too high.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I apologize for interrupting the hon. member, but I must do so because of what I consider to be a gross misrepresentation of what I said. I did not say that the price of fish was too high. What I said and clearly implied was if we got our monetary situation in shape, because of the attack on the dollar and because fish, like beef, is priced on the American market, Canadians have to pay too much for fish consumed in Canada. That is what I said. That is not what the hon. member represented me as having said.

Mr. Breau: The record will speak for itself. I challenge the hon. member to show me in Hansard tomorrow that he did not say the words "the price of fish is too high." It is true that he said the price of beef is too high, but he also said that the price of fish is too high. If he can prove to me through the tapes, the blues or Hansard that he did not say that, I will withdraw the allegation. However, I heard him say that.

I have heard members of the Tory party suggest that the currency situation today is dangerous and bad for the Canadian economy, and this at a time when the price of fish, lumber, wood products, peat moss and minerals makes the Canadian economy more competitive and gives us a better edge in penetrating markets, some of which we have lost over the years. I have heard Tories, including the hon. member for St. John's East, complain about that in the House. Fishermen and those who work in the woods and in the peat moss industry, when purchasing equipment such as outboard motors, chain saws, trucks or mill equipment, have to pay the North American or world price. However, the Tories suggest that fishermen or those in the lumber industry should not get the world price.

People who work in the resource industries have traditionally had lower salaries than those who work in central Canada or in secondary manufacturing. The philosophy of the Tories is that because we have a currency exchange situation which benefits those people because the industries in which they work can better penetrate the market and receive better prices, that is bad. I find it terrible that a Newfoundland member would suggest that kind of policy.

A week or ten days ago the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) said that he generally agreed with the energy policies of Premier Lougheed. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) is in the chamber. When he was leader of his party in 1973 and 1974, I remember his suggesting that the price of oil in Canada should more or less follow the international price. When it comes to oil, the Tories think we should have the world price. However, when it comes to fish, lumber and peat moss, they say we should not follow the world price. What hypocrisy! That is a double standard. They say that Ontario should get the world price for the cars, tractors, chain saws and outboard motors which they manufacture, but the fishermen should not get the world price. I say the fisherman and the lumberman has every right to the world price.

Coming from New Brunswick, I would not for one minute accept a government that would say otherwise. I have defended the government policy we are now following. I would not accept any policy that would restrict the profits of the fishing or lumber industry to the point that their prices or penetration of the market would be diminished. If this went on for a long time, those industries could possibly be asked to make a sacrifice or follow a policy of reinvesting in their mills, plants or whatever they have.

Look at the losses from the bankruptcies that have occurred over the past seven or eight years in the fishing industry in Newfoundland, New Brunswick and the rest of the Atlantic provinces as well as those in the forestry industry. How can anyone suggest that these people should not benefit for a certain period from the currency exchange market?

The policy being followed by the government is a fair policy. I have never heard the leader of the New Democratic Party say that wages in the auto plants in Oshawa should not be at the North American level. Neither have I heard him say that the wages of those who manufacture outboard motors in Peterborough should be lower than the North American wage. The same is true with regard to the manufacture of all kinds of equipment and with regard to the resource industries. Why is it that the fisherman, the man working in the woods or the woman working in the fish plant, should not benefit from the advantage they now have because of the currency exchange?

For the first time in ten or 12 years the pulp and paper industry is operating at 100 per cent capacity. In the hon. member's province a mill that had been closed has been or will be reopened.

Mr. McGrath: No thanks to this government.

• (1640)

Mr. Breau: The hon. member is wrong there. Everyone knows that if it were not for the advantage derived from the 83-cent dollar, that mill could probably not have reopened. In my constituency the pulp and paper industry is working at 100 per cent capacity and there is every indication that next summer they will want to increase inventories, cut more wood and create more jobs. The Tories do not like that. I wonder if the Tories know what the hell their policy is.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Order.

Mr. Breau: Do they want more credibility when they suggest something or do they just want to create confusion? I do not believe they are malicious. They are nice people. They are just naive and confused.

The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) comes from a riding which does not benefit from the high price of lumber or minerals or fish. He comes from a constituency which can protect itself, a place where labour and business are highly organized. What in Ontario is being manufactured but not being sold at the world price, at the North American price? I have not seen a car, a chain saw, an outboard motor or any piece of equipment that a fisherman or a lumberman uses which was bought in Ontario at a price less than the North American price.

So when I hear the hon. member for York-Simcoe and other Tories who speak for Bay Street argue against the 83-cent dollar, I can very well understand them; they are not benefiting from this situation. But when I hear the hon. members for St. John's East or St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), along with other members from regions which for a long time have not been able to benefit from the North American economy, make the same criticism, I think it is really unfair. I am surprised they should support the policy of confusion which we find coming from the other side.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, for at least 15 years the Atlantic provinces have not had the advantages industry can benefit from, for example a better penetration of American markets, be it in the area of fish, building lumber, pulp and paper, peat moss and minerals, fine paper or generally all areas of resource. One of the reasons for this situation is that the international exchange market presently benefits from Canadian exports.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is fair policy to let those industries expand and create more jobs. Pulp and paper as well as building lumber companies are said to be anticipating one of the biggest years in terms of the number of jobs created, in terms of salaries, in terms of everything. It is going to be one of the biggest years we have had.

Mr. Speaker, I do not see why the Progressive Conservative party and the hon. member for St. John's East would want to oppose that. I do not understand. I told the government on several occasions that I could not support the restrictive measures which could result in those products being sold in Canada at lower prices than on the North American market, and for a very simple reason.

I have never heard the leader of the New Democratic Party and member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), who comes from a riding where cars are manufactured, say in this House that car workers in Oshawa should earn less than the average North American salary. On the contrary, they are paid more than North American salaries, and I find it fair because the market allows that.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

If the market today allows fishermen, woodworkers and peat workers to have better wages, Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand why they should not be given a chance. Why come up and say: You, no. You have the advantage because of the Canadian dollar standing at only 83 cents. The Progressive Conservatives would say: No, you are not going to get that. But that would be grossly unfair.

I would like to say a few words about the comments of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby who recommends yet another control policy. However, Mr. Speaker, from his very first days in the House the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, like the former leader of his party during the 1972 election, has always submitted all types of distortions and made-up figures to show that when certain companies make big profits, this necessarily means that they are ripping off Canadian consumers.

Mr. Speaker, this is a naive concept of the operation of our economy and does not correspond to reality. If there are no profits in a company, how can this industry or this company keep up with modern technology? Where will it take the necessary funds to expand, to implement modern methods, to protect the jobs and all the other economic benefits that the community in which it is established can enjoy because of it? Where will it get this? The Leader of the New Democratic Party never talks about this. Socialists never answer this question. They simply say that all investments should come from the public sector or that the public sector should borrow for everything. In other words, we should use the taxpayers' money because the public treasury must provide all the funds. We collect taxes or else we borrow on behalf of the taxpayers. What these people are suggesting is that all investments in a society should come from the public sector. How can they expect the private sector to finance the development and modernization of their own plants if they do not make a profit?

An hon. member is shaking his head to show that this is not so, that the public sector can finance everything. I would like to ask him how we can expect banks, financial institutions or those who buy shares on the market to invest in these plants or production units if they are not profitable?

Mr. Speaker, if an industry, sector or plant is to modernize, protect jobs and safeguard the community, as indeed our Canadian communities derive direct and indirect benefits from industrial activity, how can they remain in business without showing a profit? Every time profits increase we are faced with that naive NDP reaction. But members from that party of course never quote direct figures. They never refer to such or such a corporation increasing its profits from say $100,000 to $200,000, which may not be excessive in certain cases. The reference is to say profits soaring 100 per cent.

A 100 per cent increase may be obtained by putting $10 on top of $10, but the increase is still only $10. Mr. Speaker, playing with percentages is really dishonest. It does not give parliament or the public the true picture. It is misleading the public. When I hear people like the NDP leader and his colleagues comparing 1978 profits, those in the last quarter of 1978 and projections for 1979, with those in 1976 and 1977, this is really dishonest. Truly it is trying to mislead the House and public, because we all know profits were low over that period. Was it not normal then that the increase be significant percentage wise? What counts is the increase in absolute terms. And looking at the profit increase in absolute terms, there may be cases of profiteering, but the broad point cannot be made that all profit increases in Canada over 1978 have been excessive in any given sector. As I say, there may be individual cases, but the broad point cannot be made that all profits have been excessive.

True, Mr. Speaker, food prices have been going up rapidly. True, there has been abnormal increase in that sector right now. Take the case of fish for instance. Fishermen today sell their catch to processors who in turn sell most of their finished product in the United States and Europe. When they sell in the U.S. and Europe they are paid in U.S. or European currency and can command higher prices. What are hon. member asking for? According to the NDP leader, it is unjust that fishermen should have this advantage for a certain time. When a Canadian citizen buys fish, if he can afford it, does he say that fishermen must subsize his food bill? What does he say? As I said a while ago, I have never heard the NDP leader claim that the unionized workers who make cars or outboard motors for the fishermen should subsidize car prices.

• (1650)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Does the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to be here listening to this debate because I have finally learned why we have an 83-cent dollar. It is because the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) is in favour of an 83-cent dollar. He told the government that we must have an 83-cent dollar, and he would oppose any effort to stop the dollar from going down to 83 cents.

I have heard no one from any party in this House take exception to producers getting world prices for their produce except for oil, in which case prices have been held considerably below world prices. The hon. member for Gloucester must feel he has a weak case; otherwise he would not put up such a straw argument. No one is opposed to producers getting world prices for their fish or lumber, but some of us are concerned about what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) seems to be concerned about, if I understand him, and that is that the falling dollar has substantial inflationary effects and causes about one-third of the inflation we have been experiencing in recent months. I think that is something to be concerned about.

The hon. member said the Conservative party is confused. I daresay from time to time we get confused, but we try not to be dishonest. I have to categorize the anti-inflation policy of the government for the last number of years as lacking in frankness, being inconsistent and being opportunistic and basically dishonest. No doubt the hon. member for Gloucester will go to his part of the country taking credit for the advantages of the discount of 17 cents on our dollar. The Prime Minister and others will try to persuade people in other parts of the country that while the government is maintaining somewhat of a dirty float, it is concerned about the declining dollar. They will be saying that this came about in spite of their best efforts to pursue policies which would ensure the strength of the Canadian dollar, because they are concerned about inflationary effects. The Liberal party and the hon. member for Gloucester cannot have it both ways, and they might as well stop trying now because they are going to be exposed.

I understand the reaction of the leader of the New Democratic Party. Going into a supermarket these days is a rather chilling experience, about the same thing as listening to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) present a budget in this House or hearing about the size of the deficit he is predicting. The leader of the New Democratic Party suggested in this House this afternoon that the way to deal with this situation at the present time is to establish an investigatory commission with power to roll back. I am disappointed in my hon. friend, the leader of the New Democratic Party, because this is really nothing more than a gimmick unless it really amounts to controls.

I suppose in fairness one has to conclude that it does amount to controls. It is easy enough to talk about fair prices and rolling back unfair prices, but what is a fair price and what is an unfair price? We would have to establish some criteria. If a commission is to be established to roll prices back, it has to be given some criteria by this parliament under which to operate. Such a commission would be a form of control. The leader of the New Democratic Party says it really would not be a general control but a selective control.

How in justice can we operate selective controls? When we talk about selective controls, do we mean that some people would have their prices rolled back if they were caught by the commission but other people could gain bigger margins if they could get away with it? Is no one to be subjected to any specific kind of regulation? There must be some concept of fairness, and in all frankness I do not feel it helps the case of the New Democratic Party to talk about selective controls. That would be no more advantageous than general controls.

I do not think there is any way the New Democratic Party can get away from the controls aspect. If this commission is to be something more than a gimmick, it has to control prices effectively. It has to keep price increases within some concept of fairness to be defined by the Parliament of Canada, and that is surely a form of control.

It seems to me that what we are experiencing here this afternoon is to some extent a replay of 1973 and 1974. In that era, as I recall it, the New Democratic Party was calling for some form of control on prices. The government introduced the profiteering legislation to which the minister referred earlier this afternoon.

I do not want to go through all the history of those days but, as the minister said, that policy was not considered to be appropriate when the government came back with a clear majority and it was not beholden in any way to my friends in the New Democratic Party. The profiteering legislation was clearly a concept adopted by the government of the day in 1973 and 1974 to maintain the support of the New Democratic Party members of this parliament for a limited period of time. When the government came back after the election of 1974 and did not need that support, it dropped the whole idea.

● (1700)

I am not prepared, and I do not believe the members of my party are prepared, to support a return to controls at this time. We have just been through all that with regard to the AIB. It is true that I and my party advocated short term, general controls on prices and incomes back in 1973-74 because we considered them appropriate at that time. We saw the development of a strong degree of inflationary psychology and we advocated controls at that time for the only purpose for which controls are really useful, and that is to curb and deflate inflationary expectations. However, the government, in its wisdom and for electoral purposes, said that controls never work, that they were unalterably opposed to controls, and they fought the campaign on that issue. As we know, after the election we heard no more about the profiteering legislation and the government resorted to controls.

When the control measures were brought in, the government predicted that by the fall of 1978, that is last fall, inflation would be down to some 4 per cent. We know that that has not happened. I do not want to spend too long on the government's record.

I notice all hon. members on the other side are busily engaged in writing and do not want to hear what I am saying. I do not blame them; I would not want, if I were on their side, to listen to a recital of their cynical behaviour either. But regardless of how busy hon. members may keep themselves, the fact is that they have behaved in this way and this is one of the difficulties which the government confronts at the present time.

One of the main difficulties that the country has been facing in terms of inflation, following the removal of the AIB controls, has been the devaluation of the Canadian dollar. This has been recognized by the Prime Minister and by members of the government. The Canadian dollar has been falling because people in the rest of the world do not have confidence in the government or in the Canadian dollar. As the governor of the Bank of Canada said in the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, he was very concerned that we were getting near the point where any significant further fall in the value of the dollar would trigger the kind of wage demands and general cycle that Great Britain and some other countries have experienced. He emphasized in the committee the grave importance of the Canadian dollar's not taking any further significant drop.

When we consider how we are going to fight inflation, one of our aims surely must be to prevent that drop from happening. The leader of the NDP made his proposal here today. He said the fact that prices are going up may well trigger substantial wage demands. That may well be, but what is the most significant reason that prices have been going up? There may be some profiteering in the country, I do not know, but I do know and I can see there has been a significant fall of the Canadian dollar with consequential effects on price increases. I can see this kind of thing making the working man in this country very nervous about his standard of living and causing him to think twice about the wage settlement he is prepared to accept.

This is not the whole story but I think that to a very substantial extent one thing we have to establish, if we are going to get anywhere, is that we will deal with these problems in a straightforward way. We are not going to go around one part of the country saying that the devaluation of the dollar is a great thing for our exports, and in another part of the country telling some kind of story about doing the best we can to prevent the dollar from falling and indeed to strengthen the dollar. We are not going to introduce a policy, such as the 1975 policy, that "we are going to wrestle the inflation rate down to 4 per cent", and then fail. I do not know if members on the other side have noticed that we have failed, but we on this side of the House see the failure. The realization of that failure is not confined to this House; it is seen all over the world. Anybody trading on the Canadian dollar can see the difference between the promises of this government and the actual performance.

When we first introduced the controls, the government was against any severe fiscal restraint. That was in the fall of 1975. In the summer of 1978, I think, the Prime Minister, perhaps off the top of his head, announced severe fiscal restraint. What kind of consistency is that? Why did he change his mind? Possibly because he figured it was popular in the summer of 1978 to be in favour of fiscal restraint.

When "The Way Ahead" was published and released in the fall of 1976, the government announced its determination to head off any further inflation. I think it claimed the rate of inflation was down to 6 per cent and predicted it would soon be down to 4 per cent. We all know it is up around 9 per cent.

One of the substantial problems that the country faces in maintaining respect for the value of our dollar, in maintaining any respect outside our country for the future of our economy, is the lack of credibility of the government. Yet the government announced a year and a half or so later that it is following a policy diametrically opposed. You have a government making firm predictions as to what effects its policies will have on the rate of price increases in the country, and the actual rate of inflation is more than twice as high as was predicted.

I do not believe there are any easy answers to the economic problems this country faces, economic difficulties which have been brought about in substantial measure by this government. But when you have people playing games, as did the hon. member for Gloucester today, and when you have a Minister of Finance presiding over a budget deficit of some $12 billion, up $1 billion or so from the previous year, and trying to blame that on the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) and saying the Leader of the Opposition was talking about big deficits, what kind of games are these? The members opposite and their ministers have a serious responsibility to tell the people the truth, even in election time.

We have had on the part of the government a sequence of deception and change, and even when the government is trying to be honest, which is not too often, and making predictions about the effect of its policies, it has proved to be incredibly wide of the mark, so wide of the mark as to destroy any confidence on the part of anybody watching this country that the government has the slightest idea as to what it should be doing or what is going on.

• (1710)

A restraint program was introduced when there was a rate of inflation of something over 10 per cent. Three and a half years later we are operating at an inflation rate of over 9 per cent. We have a dollar which has been drifting downwards and the government pretending that the market might determine the level of the dollar when in fact the dollar is floating on a sea of foreign borrowings. Even with all those borrowings, the dollar has drifted down to close to 83 cents. Despite the grave concern the governor of the Bank of Canada expressed about this process, the hon. member for Gloucester stood up in the House and said that this is a terrific thing and tried to invent a straw man to attack.

Mr. Breau: It is good for the resource industry.

Mr. Stanfield: Hon. members opposite cannot have it both ways. I thought they were supposed to be the government of the country. I thought they were supposed to be looking after the interests of the country as a whole and not trying to play one part of the country off against another.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Stanfield: I wish the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party had put forward a resolution of substance on the subject of inflation this afternoon because I would have loved to support him and to vote against the government on the matter of inflation. The record of the government is tortuous and incompetent. There is a complete lack of confidence in the government's record. I came into the House this afternoon and witnessed the performance of the hon. member for Gloucester. I would have thought members of the government who supported eleventh hour conversion would have looked at the interests of the country as a whole and thought in terms of an anti-inflation and development program in the interests of the country as a whole.

I do not dwell on this, but I do not think Canadians have forgotten the change in position of my friends opposite since 1974 and 1975. That has created a basic lack of confidence in the government which has affected the acceptability and effectiveness of all its programs since that date. I regret to say I have no confidence in the intentions of the government to pursue a consistent program of development and anti-inflation. Also I regret that I cannot support the motion put forward by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) which is either a gimmick or an inappropriate form of control. I look to my leader and hon. members of my party to go into the next election with an honest and frank statement to the people of the country—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stanfield: Thank you; I will just end my sentence. We will go into the next election with an honest and frank statement to the people of the country. We will not promise the moon and we will not promise the impossible. We will tell Canadians what the facts are and put forward realistic, honest policies. When the people of the country place their confidence in my leader following the next election, I am confident he will not introduce a year later a policy diametrically opposed to those he will advocate during the election campaign.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have been listening to this debate this afternoon, contrary to what was suggested by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield).

I can sympathize with the motivation which has led the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party to place this motion before the House today. I am fed up and the consumers whose interests I represent are fed up with the seemingly unending increase in prices. All of us in the government want to do something to help consumers, be they business consumers or individuals. We have done much in recent years to ease the burden of rising prices.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: We have subsidized eastern consumers of oil. My colleague has recently increased the guaranteed income supplement and developed a child tax credit of $200 per child to help lower and middle income groups. We have lowered sales and personal income taxes both directly and via indexing. As a matter of fact, the recent consumer price index indicated that the federal sales tax reduction announced in the November budget is being passed on, and that the non-food element of the recent CPI showed a very slight increase due to that tax cut. As a matter of fact, in some cases there were decreases in the index respecting clothing and furniture.

Foremost in our initiatives to control inflation in recent years was the establishment of the Anti-Inflation Board in the fall of 1975. I want to point out to the House and remind Canadians that that occurred 15 months after the 1974 election, at a time when there was escalating inflation. Contrary to the statement made by the hon. member for Halifax, there was no deception.

Mr. Stanfield: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: I was a member of the government and of the House much before the 1974 election when we said that we had a contingency plan for price controls but that we did not think controls should be applied at that time. We did not apply them after the election, but they were applied 15 months later. It was not because we wanted to do it; it was a situation similar to a person requiring a serious operation to cure a very drastic medical problem. We felt we had to go ahead with the controls in the fall of 1975.

In comparing the provisions of that proposal in 1975 with the provision before the House today, it is interesting to note that the Anti-Inflation Board was given the power to investigate and to roll back prices. But what did the NDP do at that time? They voted against the measure unanimously. More than that, half way through the program they attempted to terminate the AIB mandate by circulating a petition. Of course, at that time NDP members said that the AIB program was a program to control wages and not prices and, of course, that was not true. There were guidelines respecting wages, prices and profits. As a matter of fact, there were rollbacks in all areas. Even recently the AIB ordered rollbacks respecting prices and profits in the food industry, in a prominent food chain. Also that was done respecting insurance and other industries. The controls applied to profits and prices as well as wages, but the NDP did not support this policy.

Today the NDP is proposing a system where there would be a rollback similar to the roll-back power in the AIB program, and they want us to support it. I agree with the hon. member for Halifax that it is a gimmick.

When we introduced the AIB program, we did so reluctantly and only on a limited basis for a three-year period. At that time we said that its principal purpose was to break the rampant inflation psychology and to implement some structural changes in our economic system. Among those changes that were pursued were reforms of our competition policy, of which I will say more later, the development of an industrial strategy, some of which has been announced in recent weeks by my colleague, the President of the Board of Economic Development Ministers (Mr. Andras); changes in the international trading system, which are now being pursued in the multinational trade negotiations; and extensive measures taken by the government to curtail its growth and to cut out fat and waste; in other words, to streamline our governmental system.

There is no doubt that there has been an alarming increase in food prices, but it certainly has not been to the extent alleged by the NDP leader and, to my knowledge, not for the reasons stated by him. Yesterday he said that a recent AIB report stated that food prices had increased by 21 per cent over the past year. All I can say is the CPI index put out by Statistics Canada reported a year over year increase of 13.5 per cent for food, and this compared with the general index of the year over year increase for all items of 8.4 per cent. On a monthly basis, last month food increased by 1.9 per cent compared with a general increase in the index of 0.8 per cent.

However, these increases are still too large. They are not as large as stated by the leader of the NDP but they are still too large. We expected large increases at the beginning of this year, particularly due to the cost of imported vegetables and fruits and the removal of the wheat subsidy. With regard to the removal of that wheat subsidy, when we removed it we said we only had limited amounts of money and we felt we had to put it where it was needed most. We took the money we had in such universal subsidy programs as the skim milk program and the wheat subsidy program and put it into programs put forward by my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), to channel more money to the middle and lower income senior citizen and the middle and lower income families.

The leader of the NDP also referred to increased profits. Once again he distorted the picture. It is true that there have been increased profits certain segments of the food industry, but on the whole these increased profits are welcomed. In 1976 there were very low if any profits in food processing and distribution have been in accord with historical norms. To see a recovery of this nature is certainly a good thing.

Furthermore, to compare increases in profits, as the leader of the NDP has done, without referring to a base I think is dishonest. As he knows, in the food industry there is very erratic behaviour in respect of profits. Profits are continually going up and down in the food processing and retailing industries and, consequently, if you take the profits from a very low base and judge them with a high period, of course you will get in that period a high increase. But, I put it to the NDP and other hon. members, have they seen one occasion since the war—and I think this is a good thing—when our general wage level has decreased? It has not. We continue to see an increase in wages. I say that is a good thing—

An hon. Member: In real income?

Mr. Allmand: In real income. But to compare that with the increase in profits for limited periods of time without defining your base is dishonest.

Generally an increase in profits heralds a resurgence in the economy. The NDP suggests that these profits are unreasonable and in fact that they are the cause of the rapid price rise. That is what I got from the speech of the leader of the NDP. I have been examining the profit reports in recent months and I have not been able to find any evidence to support this contention. Last summer the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) asked the Anti-Inflation Board to conduct a study of profit margins in the food processing and distribution industries. The AIB report in the fall concluded that the profit margins were not out of line with historical norms in these industries.

Just a few weeks ago the Anti-Inflation Board published an update of its fall report and stated once more that, although profits had increased in the third quarter of last year, they were still not out of line with historic norms.

I think I should refer further to some of the wording of the report. It concluded that in the first nine months of 1978 profit margins in the Canadian food processing and retailing industries had varied little from historic norms. This conclusion is similar to the one presented in the earlier report in the fall in respect of the first six months of 1978. The report went on to say that in the food distribution industry the rate of increase in profits had been more than in food processing, but still that it was not out of line with historic norms.

I doubt if there is any industry in Canada which has been investigated as much as the food industry. I have here a list of some of the inquiries and investigations that have been carried on recently. In 1966 to 1968 we had the royal commission on consumer problems and inflation in the prairie provinces, the Batten commission. In 1967 we had the special joint committee on consumer credit and consumer prices, of which I was a member. In 1957 to 1960 we had the royal commission of price spreads of food products, the Stewart commission. In 1948 we had the royal commission on food prices, the Curtis commission. Then we have in Ontario at the present time the Leach commission. We had in British Columbia in 1977 to 1979 the select standing committee on agriculture which studied the B.C. food industry. We have the Anti-Inflation Board and before that we had the food prices review board. There has been study after study of the food industry, and generally these studies have concluded that there is no one level, no one group of companies, which is ripping off the Canadian consumer.

It is true that from time to time we have prosecuted and had convictions recorded against certain food companies under the combines act. That will always be the case. There will always be some bad actors in the field. But generally speaking there has been no evidence and no conclusion in any report that I know of that any one sector of the food industry is ripping off the consumer.

I should also like to put on record that we have been very active in my department in pursuing action under the combines act regarding such things as price fixing, price discrimination, market rigging, predatory pricing, misleading advertising, double-ticketing and so on, which are all marketing offences and illegal under the Combines Investigation Act. We have been extremely successful in gaining convictions against many companies for these things.

I could give a whole list of activities and initiatives taken by my department to attack price fixing, unfair pricing and misbehaviour in the marketplace. What further can we in government do to deal with escalating prices, especially food prices?

This afternoon my colleague, the President of the Board of Economic Development Ministers, stated that we are examining ways to strengthen our price monitoring capabilities so we can do a better job. That is already in the works; but it will not involve a control mechanism, nor will it have rollback powers. We are also examining measures to increase food supply where appropriate to moderate food prices, and to encourage Canadians to move to other more reasonable food alternatives.

Recently the government appointed a new chairman of the national food products marketing council, a chairman who has had experience not only in agriculture but also in the consumer movement. She will give a more fair hearing to all elements of the food industry. There were new guidelines produced for the food products marketing council which instructed the council to give a more extensive hearing to, and greater flexibility in the consideration of, these elements. In my department we have several programs to help consumers get the best value for their food dollar. We distribute to many daily and weekly newspapers in the country what is called a "food backgrounder" which provides information on the best way to spend money on food. For example, last week many columns carried information about the price of pork which was a good buy in many parts of the country. At other times protein alternatives have been suggested such as eggs, poultry, fish and so on. This information has been helpful to consumers. We are also establishing as an experiment a phone-in service in Vancouver and Victoria where consumers can call a published number and get information on their problems concerning food and food prices.

• (1730)

During the summer we bring together experts on nutrition and food and then send them to areas of the country where help is needed most—the poor areas of the cities, Indian groups, Indian reservations and remote rural areas, to instruct people on good food, nutrition, and the best value for money.

We are encouraging the development of "no name" generic foods and "no frills" stores. I have visited these stores and tasted and examined the food. This has been a very successful program in selling good food at lower prices. If consumers take advantage of these types of marketing they can save money.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we intend to bring in very shortly once again, reforms to our competition legislation. If anything will really assure fair prices for the consumer it is a truly competitive and open marketplace. If the opposition parties, in particular, the NDP, really want to see fair prices in the marketplace, then I challenge them to give quick passage to the competition bill when it is brought forward in a few days. It is significant, Mr. Speaker, that no opposition party has approached the government to co-operate on the passage of the competition legislation which would, among other things, move it from a criminal type legislation to civil legislation. This would allow us to proceed with a great deal more flexibility than the present law, and to outlaw and convict on many practices which lead to higher prices and inferior products in the marketplace.

Inflation is a matter of great concern to the government, but the government is also concerned about the flexibility and responsiveness of the Canadian economy. The government is confident that businesses and labour union leaders have the same concern that we not fritter away the gains that we have made through the AIB program over the past three years. Government expenditure is under control; wage demands and negotiated settlements are more realistic; the outlook for our exports is excellent, and there is a strong possibility that food price increases will be more moderate as time goes on.

In these circumstances, to return to confrontation and controls, as the motion before the House proposes, rather than to place greater emphasis on self-restraint and responsibility, would be a move in the wrong direction. Canadians know that they cannot increase their competitiveness and their standard of living simply by raising prices. The government will, of course, not tolerate an irresponsible attitude toward wage and price escalation, nor will it use its control of monetary policy to underwrite such inflationary increases.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, today we are dealing with the New Democratic Party motion to set up a fair prices commission to provide some kind of protection to consumers against alarmingly high price increases. I have listened to the spokesmen for the government trying to paint a picture showing that all is well with the world and that all we have to do is practise some self-restraint to prevent an escalating inflationary cycle for the rest of this year.

I think this confirms what many of us in the real world believe, that cabinet is living in a "Never Never Land." Anyone who has shopped for food or paid the home heating bill knows that prices are going up. The picture is not as rosy as the government tries to convey. For the minister to say that the way out of this dilemma is to practise self-restraint, is ludicrous.

Mr. Allmand: I did not say that.

Mr. Symes: How do we practise self restraint on food prices? Do we give up eating meat, poultry, or fresh vegetables? Are we to do as a Liberal senator advised, and treat vegetables as a luxury, taking them out of the consumer price index? Apparently Canadians should not use fresh vegetables in their daily diet. That is the kind of nonsense we are offered as the solution to our problems. The minister does not mention self-restraint in the pricing policies of business in this country, especially the large corporations.

I want to analyse why we in this party think prices are going up and that the only real way to help customers is to establish an investigative body with power to roll back unrealistic price increases. We all know from published statistics that prices went up by 9 per cent last year over the year before but wages only went up by 6.4 per cent. Workers today have suffered a loss in real income of some 3 per cent in terms of purchasing power. As my leader said, if this trend continues, with prices going up faster than wages, it is inevitable and reasonable that workers will ask to catch up. There is no reason why they should be the victims of an economy that is increasingly charging them higher prices in their daily lives. There will be a great impetus to catch up. The scenario will be very much like the high inflation we faced in 1973-74.

Let us examine some price increases that affect most Canadians. The most obvious is food prices which have increased by 21 per cent over a year ago, especially in the area of beef and fresh vegetables. We can only find a solution if we examine the causes. The cost of imported food is a tremendously important factor. Because of the lack of a sound national agricultural and food policy we have to rely on more and more food imports, especially fresh vegetables. As our dollar has declined to some 83 cents U.S., we find that we pay more for U.S. vegetables. The lower Canadian dollar pushes the price of food up.

We agree that little can be done immediately about the price of imported food. The long-run solution is to make Canada more self-sufficient in some of the important foods. Good agricultural land is being taken over for industrial development. Farmers are not receiving adequate prices and are being driven out of business. All of this can be attributed to the lack of a food and agricultural policy.

What has the government done in recent months about a food policy? The Conservative party has proposed cutbacks in government spending. The government has been doing flip-flops regarding certain policy changes but it has accepted the idea that restraint and cutbacks are necessary. Consumers feel the consequences of such action. First of all, the government removed the subsidy on wheat used for bread. This should have meant a three to four-cent increase in the price of a loaf, but somewhere along the line the price went up by seven to ten cents. If the subsidy amounted to three or four cents, surely when it was removed consumers had the right to expect the increase in the price would be no more than three or four cents. But something went wrong along the way. We say that as consumers we need some kind of protection against that unfair escalation in price. We have received no answer from the government because there is no economic tool and there is no investigative body to ensure that that kind of price rip-off does not occur.

● (1740)

The same thing happened when the government, again in response to the Conservative concept of government restraint and cutback, took off the subsidy from skim milk powder. As a result the cost of skim milk powder went up some 50 cents a pound. It should be recalled that it is usually low income families who use this milk powder. They are the ones who are faced with the big burden of cost increases.

Government policy on removing subsidies has contributed directly to recent price increases on certain commodities. We, of course, oppose that kind of policy.

There is another reason why prices are going up; farmers are now able to get higher prices for their products. For example, a few years ago we know that the beef raisers were not getting enough money for their product. It was costing more to produce beef than they were getting for it. So they began to slaughter their herds to avoid bankruptcy. That situation caused a shortage. The demand is still with us and the shortage is there in terms of the actual product, and that drives up prices. What is the solution to that? Surely it is to institute a beef marketing program, some kind of a price support program so we will not have this dramatic fluctuation of prices for beef over the years. This has been avoided in the egg industry by having a regulation of production. Surely we could use the same model for the beef industry to even out the ups and downs and to ensure cattlemen will at least get an adequate price and steady income for their product.

As I said, the farmer is getting a higher price for his product and that is another reason for higher prices. Let us take a look at a specific area and try to determine how much is going to the farmer, how much is going to the retailer and to the other people in the food chain line. Let us look at chicken prices. For example, take a frozen full chicken under four pounds. We find that in February, 1979, the price increase over February, 1978, went up from 46 cents a pound to 53 cents a pound. This was a 15 per cent increase to the farmer. However, the retail price over the same period went from 69 cents a pound to $1.18 a pound, or a 71 per cent increase in price. It seems to me that any rational person examining what is causing food price increases would want to zero in on what caused that 71 per cent increase at the retail level. If we examine that we will realize why price increases are rising so dramatically.

Although the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Allmand) protests, every consumer who goes into the supermarket knows that day by day and week by week prices are going up. People want to know if these price increases are justified.

Let us now look at the food dollar. For every dollar spent on food we find that 37 cents goes to the farmer and about 32 cents goes to the retailer. The rest goes to processors, wholesalers and transporters.

The AIB has continued to study some of these retail price increases. It has shown that food store profits increased 37.9 per cent in 1978 over the same period in 1977. Now, the NDP accepts that in the private sector profits have to be made. The point is, are the profit increases justified on sound economic grounds which anyone would accept? Has productivity increased thereby justifying a profit increase of that magnitude? Have sales increased, thereby justifying that kind of profit increase?

Again, when one looks at the retail food sector study done by the AIB, they said that profits increased over 37 per cent but the sales only increased by 17.4 per cent. In other words, their profits more than doubled their sales increase. So unless there was a dramatic increase in the productivity at that level, I think we are justified in raising the question, as consumers: is there an unjustified price increase taking place in order to account for that tremendous profit increase, despite a lower sales increase? Surely that is something a fair prices commission which we are advocating today could look at and determine whether the consumer was being ripped off by unjustified price increases. The price increases in the food industry are only one symptom of what is happening to the economy.

In the House I have raised the question of lumber price increases. These prices have gone up 70 per cent over the past two years, 10 per cent in the month of January, 1979 alone. I have tried to get the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to investigate that problem, and where necessary bring in representatives of the companies and force a moderation in price or even a rollback, but this has been to no avail. Let us not fool ourselves. This price increase for lumber will cause a tremendous increase in the cost of housing. With this increased price for lumber I have estimated that it will cause about a $1,200 increase in the cost of an ordinary single family dwelling consisting of 1,800 square feet of floor space.

The minister says that it is the old case of supply and demand; that there is a tremendous demand for lumber products; that the Americans are buying our lumber and this is pushing the price up. He says we are exporting so much because our dollar is low and that we are making a good buck when the Americans buy our lumber. This was supposed to be a rationale for the lower dollar to help Canadians in terms of exports. But what has it done? It has pushed up the price of lumber in Canada for the Canadian consumer. This government has not taken the logical step of introducing a two-price system for lumber so that Canadian domestic consumers would pay a lower price. The lumber exported could fetch a price at what the market would bear on the world market and so allow that price to increase. I see no justification why Canadian consumers should face a 71 per cent increase in the cost of lumber when we all know the cost of production has not gone up by any kind of percentage relationship to that price increase.

Steel prices are another example. The price of steel is so important to our economy it touches on items all the way from pots to automobiles. The big three steel companies have recently increased their prices anywhere from 5 per cent to 18 per cent. As a result, these steel companies have recorded a 46 per cent profit increase, from $196 million in 1977 to $285 million in 1978. Last August, of course, steelworkers who are employed by these companies, and whose hard work contributed to this profit, had to accept a 6 per cent to 7 per cent wage increase, despite 9 per cent inflation and record company profits.

The Liberals and Conservatives in this House like to blame workers' wages as the main cause of companies raising prices. I disagree fundamentally with that. My argument is that companies today are able to manipulate prices upwards because our supposed free enterprise or competitive system in reality is no longer working. We do not have effective competition to hold down prices in Canada today. What we do have is a state of oligopolies or near monopolies. We have a few large companies controlling their particular sector of the economy. When they are able to control it through supply, they are able to control it through price. We have some 200,000 corporations in Canada, but a mere 500 of them accounted for 51 per cent of the sales, 59 per cent of the assets, and 63 per cent of the profits. Can anyone tell me we have effective competition in our economy when that kind of situation occurs?

If we do not have effective competition, we will not have fair prices to the consumer. Where is the competition when only four companies in Canada control 70 per cent of all flour and cereal production, four companies control 75 per cent of our iron and steel production, four companies control 93 per cent of our motor vehicle production, four companies control 71 per cent of all agricultural machinery production, four companies control 53 per cent of all slaughtering and meat products industries, and four companies control 79 per cent of all petroleum refining in this country?

There is no effective competition when you have that kind of control by the few over these important sectors of our economy. As John Galbraith, the economist, said, if the market fails, so does the case against government intervention. That is why the NDP wants a fair prices commission set up by the federal government, with powers on a national scope to investigate price increases on a selective basis where it becomes apparent to the consumer that there are tremendous increases, and this commission should have the power to roll back unjustified price increases.

The market will not do it for us because there is no longer effective competition in the major sectors of the market. If that will not work, the only protection we as consumers have is for the government to step in and act on our behalf through the commission we are advocating in this debate today.

As I said, we recognize that private companies have to make a profit, but where the market is not working it is incumbent upon government to analyse and see whether the profits are excessive or not, and whether they are justified in relation to the costs of production. Until we have a fair prices commission we will not be able to counteract the natural temptation of these large and powerful corporations which control so much of our economy to jack up prices arbitrarily, charging whatever they figure the market will bear.

If prices go up, inflation goes up, and workers demand more in wage increases. The vicious cycle repeats itself. The corporations have done very well since 1972. When you subtract the effect of inflation over the period 1972 to 1978, you find that corporate profits have increased in real terms by 55 per cent while wages have only increased by 10 per cent in real terms.

Throughout the debate here the Liberals and Conservatives have indicated they oppose the NDP motion to set up a fair prices commission to protect consumers. I regret the stand of the two old line parties, although it does not surprise me. The Conservative answer to the problem of rising prices is to call an election and get rid of the government. They do not propose any alternative solution other than the time-worn idea of wage and price controls. The Liberals stole the idea from the Conservatives. We know how ineffective that program was and how it disrupted the economy and penalized workers. The President of the Board of Economic Development Ministers (Mr. Andras) says that profits are good, that he agrees with what is happening, leaving the consumer to the mercy of a market controlled by these near monopolies. I consider that unfair.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired. He may continue only with unanimous consent. Does the hon. member have consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join in this debate on the NDP motion before this House. I am not one to suggest there should be greater federal spending, but perhaps for the sake of the Canadian public it would pay us to send this little contingent of NDPers to England to learn the new message of the Labour government in that country. The prattle that we are continuously subjected to in this House from this little group is something that the Labour party in all innocence, ten to 15 years ago in England, thought was the gospel. It has been proven to be wrong. It is unfortunate that they do not go there and find the error of the Labour party's ways in the past, and quit making these silly suggestions as solutions to inflation and other things in Canada.

It is odd that the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) finished his remarks by saying, and these were his words, how ineffective the wage and price controls program of the government was. We agree it was ineffective. In fact this is the only party that consistently fought against that program. The NDP repeatedly joined with the Liberals when we made various moves to try to terminate that program. Think of how inconsistent they are. The speaker on behalf of the group to my left, presumably supporting the motion, ended by saying how ineffective the wage and price controls program was, and yet the thrust of their motion is to give us another controls program. Does it really make sense?

The reasons for our inflation today are due to three problems. First, our diving dollar has added one-third to our rate of inflation in the past two years. The Centre for the Study of Inflation and Productivity, established at the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) request, has said:

> Canada has experienced more inflation because of the depreciation of the dollar. By the end of 1978, the CPI was 6½ per cent higher than it would have been without the dollar depreciation. So the dollar decline has been responsible for about one-third of the total inflation measured by the CPI in this two-year period. In 1978 the CPI rose 9.0 per cent from the year before. Without depreciation of the dollar the increase would have been about 6 per cent.

The second reason we have inflation is that while most other countries have been following a relatively tight money and public spending position, our government has been trying to hang loose.

Third, our spending deficit with the rest of the world is the worst in relative terms of any industrial country. In fact OECD countries, on balance, had a surplus on this account last year while our problem worsened. This drove up our interest rates, which adds to our costs and inflation.

I mention those three points because they are the fundamental points that are causing the inflation that is so incomfortable in the world today. The proposal of the NDP would be nothing but a eunuch. May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair till eight o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

● (2000)

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, just before the dinner break I was making a few comments concerning the motion put before the House by the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) today. I think it is important that we read the wording of the motion once again. It states:

That, given the government's failure to hold down rising prices, which have increased the cost-of-living burden for Canadian families, this House calls on the government to establish a Fair Prices Commission, with powers to investigate and, where necessary, to roll back unfair price increases.

The reason I read that motion, Mr. Speaker, is that until we can think of the true import of what he is saying we cannot conceive of the total inconsistency of the socialists to my left. Here we have them saying that the government has failed—which we agree—to hold down rising prices, and in turn these prices have increased the cost-of-living burden to Canadians. Certainly nobody on this side of the House would disagree with that. But how the leader of the NDP can fail to realize that his group was instrumental in triggering the government into the spending programs and deficit programs which have resulted in the inflation we are now living under in this country, I find hard to understand.

The motion then goes on to call on the government to establish a fair prices commission with powers to investigate. If such a commission were ever set up, the first thing it should start investigating is why the NDP voted so often to support the government during the minority days of the parliament between 1972 and 1974. If that commission was ever established I hope it would analyse why the NDP, in spite of the fabulous monetary and fiscal growth on the part of the government, continued to support it if, at that time, they were worried about inflation. The fact is, anybody could have predicted then that this alliance between the socialists and the near-socialists was going to trigger the inflation we are now experiencing.

We do not need a commission to tell us there is inflation in our country. Any housewife can go into a corner grocery store and see the price increases. If he cannot afford the 25 cents it now costs to buy a copy of the Globe and Mail I will give my copy to the Leader of the NDP and perhaps he could read the livestock reports which appear there. He could see, for example, that in Omaha the price for No. 1 cattle is between $65 and $67 per hunderweight live weight. If he looks at this, he will find that in Montreal the same type of animal sells for $75 to $80. If he does some arithmetic, he will find that it takes 120 cents to buy one American dollar. If he multiplies the Omaha price by 120 Canadian cents, he will get exactly the price beef is trading for in Montreal, Toronto or Calgary compared with Omaha. In short, as far as live beef is concerned, our prices are 20 per cent higher because the dollar is 17 per cent below par with the American dollar. It is as simple as that.

● (2010)

How these fellows can seem to be so mystified and run around saying they do not know where inflation is coming from, and how they can say they want a commission to explain it is not hard to understand. The truth is that they want a decoy. They want to be able to go to the Canadian electorate and pretend that they have in mind the setting up of a fair prices commission which somehow would do something meaningful about inflation. That is just a blind. It is not fair to the Canadian public. They know this might help some of their bureaucratic friends to get new and high paying jobs, but we will not do one thing to solve the problem of inflation until we can convince the government of the day, hopefully a Joe Clark government, that prices can be controlled only by restraint in government spending and monetary growth.

It is the government which has the control, but is it not interesting that when this same NDP group was given a chance in November of 1975 to change the AIB reference so that the board could investigate government spending, the NDP voted against us? Hon. members might recall that at that time I moved a motion that the AIB should have power to make explicit, and I quote:

—such implications of the failure of the federal government to co-operate in combating inflation by monitoring the respective main and supplementary estimates of expenditures for each fiscal year of such government, and publicly commenting, within 21 days after any such estimates, are made public, upon any failure, disclosed in such estimates, by such government to combat inflation.

That is what we in this party proposed in November of 1975. We voted for that, but the grand old alliance between the socialists and the near-socialists ganged up on us so there could be no inquiry into the increasing estimates of government expenditures. It is not difficult to understand what has happened since that time. That was in 1975, and in that year total federal government spending was $34.357 billion. Just last week the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Buchanan) revealed that estimates of government spending are now up to $52 billion.

On budget night, November 16, the deficit predicted for this year by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) was $12.1 billion. The minister revealed that for fiscal 1980 the deficit would be $12.9 billion. In two short years, the minister tells us, the total deficit is to be $25 billion on an expenditure of roughly $100 billion. In short, for every dollar the government now spends it receives only 75 cents in revenue. The remaining 25 cents have to be found some place, either through debt or through the printing of more money.

That is what is contributing to inflation in this country because, to the degree the government is over-inflating our money system, it causes pressure on prices. To the degree that the deficit is viewed around the world as irresponsible fiscally, that brings our dollar under pressure. And when I say that the dollar is under pressure, let us not forget that since December, 1976, it is not just that our dollar has fallen 16 per cent in relation to the American currency; it has fallen 37 per cent in relation to United Kingdom currency, 47 per cent in relation to the German Deutsche mark, and 74 per cent in relation to the Japanese yen.

That has been the consequence of the irresponsible fiscal and monetary policies this government has put in place in the last four to five years. That is why we are saying we do not need any more decoys. We do not need more commissions to tell us the obvious. What we need most of all is a new government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: If we cannot get rid of the emperor and his hordes, at least let us talk some sense to them. It is the diving dollar which is causing the inflation which is now so objectionable in the country, and let there be no doubt that we do not need a commision to tell us what the full impact of that falling dollar will be. We can talk to any merchant today. I was talking earlier to a manufacturer and distributor in Vancouver. He told me that only now is he starting to pass on the total cost of the goods he has been purchasing from Taiwan, Japan and other oriental countries, and translating the fall in the value of our dollar into higher prices to the Canadian public. Those prices are still to be felt in Canada.

I spoke to a shoe manufacturer in Quebec city at noon today. He said that the public will not believe the prices it will be required to pay for shoes as a result of our collapsing dollar. He pointed out that leather prices have doubled because, since our dollar started to fall, leather became more attractive to buyers in, for example, Japan. They have been buying our leather, and the result is that the price of leather has doubled. The net result is that when we come to buy shoes—which the chap from Quebec city pointed out were manufactured 15 years ago for less than $15—retailers will be paying $60 and, it is anticipated, consumers will be paying $100 per pair. Those are the facts. A head of lettuce today costs 20 per cent more, simply because this government has irresponsibly allowed our dollar to collapse. Let us tell the public the truth and stop pretending some fair prices commission will discover why prices are going up. Prices are going up because this government has failed to run our economy in a responsible way.

I could go through any number of items which are produced and consumed in Canada, but they are priced on a continental basis, and the result is that to the degree our dollar continues to fall Canadian workers are expected to pay American dollar prices, yet they get Canadian dollar wages. That is the dilemma, and surely even this government can realize that it has toyed with a falling dollar. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) once said that a 90-cent dollar was a good thing. The government should have had the courage to structure our monetary and fiscal position to ensure that the dollar did not fall below 90 cents and down to the 83-cent level it is at now.

I think every member in this House should go out and start telling the Canadian public the way it is. It is time the public understood that wage and price controls did not work. If we compare our record with that of the United States, we find that in each of the three years when we had wage and price controls and the Americans did not, they performed better than we did as far as inflation control was concerned. Here are the figures. In 1976 the United States had inflation of 5.8 per cent, and we had 7.5 per cent. In 1977 the United States had 6.5 per cent, and we had 8 per cent. In 1978 the United States had 7.6 per cent inflation and we had 9 per cent. With wage and price controls we lost every year.

Hon. members will recall that October day when the Prime Minister announced his wonderful program to control inflation in this country. He said that he would do four things. He was going to bring in wage and price controls. He was going to have government expenditure restraint, monetary restraint, and a massive deregulation of industry. Unfortunately, once the government put its wage and price control program into effect, it forgot, in any meaningful way, the other three points of its restraint program. Government spending, as I have indicated, continued to rise. Certainly the monetary growth continued, and there has been nothing but verbiage so far as deregulation is concerned. That is why we have inflation.

For the NDP to be suggesting now that they want still another commission to control something further shows how out of touch they are with reality. It is not just that they are out of touch with Canadian reality. I referred earlier to the fact that initially they took their approach from the Labour party in England. That is in effect from where they pirated most of their thinking. But unfortunately the lines of communication seem to have broken down because the English Labour party has at least come to its senses, while the NDP charges on in its usual irresponsible way. I say this because I find it is interesting now that when you look at the economic progress report published by the treasury in Great Britain you find that they are taking a meaning approach to expenditure restraint. They have accepted that the growth should be limited to 2 per cent on a real base year over year, and they have projected ahead to 1983 to show that in fact they will keep a lid on their expenditures, they will have a smaller deficit and, in short, that is why the U.K. pound is going up and our dollar is going down. We are the last of the western nations to accept the basic principle that you have to run a prudent economy if you want to lick inflation.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Tonight, Mr. Speaker, the motion before the House deals with the creation of a fair prices commission with powers to investigate and, where necessary, to roll back unfair price increases. To me, Mr. Speaker, this motion is not complete. We are wondering whether it proposes to freeze wages and prices like in the past or whether it is simply designed to study rocketing wages and prices. And we, too, are wondering how to achieve that goal. The mover of that motion did not specify how he intended to reach the objectives contemplated in his motion.

Tonight I would like to make three or four brief proposals which have already been made here and which our party puts forward to stop ever higher prices and wages and so on. This would be done first through the consumer discount, second by the establishment of a commission which would be called the national credit bureau, and third, the reduction of interest or the stoppage of debt accumulation and the control of monopolies.

Most Canadians, Mr. Speaker, have heard of the consumer discount, mainly from us who advocate the reforms of social credit. However, few understand the mechanism. What is the consumer discount? It is simply something that would make prices a reflection of the true economic conditions of the country. In other words, if production is abundant and easy, the purchase of that same production would become easy. So you see that it is not necessary to restrict or even reduce production as is being done today to stabilize prices.

What is wrong with the present make-up of prices? Prices are too high compared to the incomes to pay for them. The imbalance between what is sold and what people can buy leads to economic bottlenecks, waste and material insecurity. That frantic race after higher salaries because prices keep going up produces galloping inflation which will stop only when governments will take the means to stop that rise.

Where do prices come from? Consumer prices come from the total cost of production to which profits and interests must be added. Today the manufacturer says that salaries are too high, the materials he needs to make the end products are also too high and consequently his profits are too low. If he has to raise the cost of his product, the worker in turn will not have the necessary salary to purchase that same product. The fair prices commission as proposed tonight at both the consumer and producer level might probably to able to roll back certain unjustified and unjustifiable price increases.

But in addition to that monitoring board, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) would have been better off including in his motion the consumer discount to reduce injustices. The consumer discount would work this way: prices paid by consumers for their purchases would be discounted by the retailers who, after submitting to a government agency the necessary proof that the sales were actually made, would receive credits to compensate the difference between the discounted prices and normal sales prices. Here is an example. Let us say that you want to buy a pair of gloves at the regular price of $20. The retailer who is registered under the consumer discount program will give you a discount of 25 per cent, $5 which the government would pay back to the retailer, or still it would be possible to purchase directly from the retailer if he agreed to reduce his prices.

Ever since we have been sitting in his House, we have been advocating the consumer discount. From the early days of social credit, we had an item in our election platform which reads as follows: a social credit government would reduce consumer goods prices through subsidies paid to retailers provided they lowered their prices by a percentage equivalent to the amount of the subsidies.

This mechanism will eliminate inflation while guaranteeing fair prices. Of course, we would need a commission, which could be called for instance the national credit commission, and which should be quite independent from political influence, as are now Statistics Canada and the Supreme Court of Canada. This commission would be responsible for collecting all the data and figures required for a national account book where it could find all the information necessary to issue credit.

These national accounts would give credit value to all valuable goods in the country whose total could be evaluated in dollars. This evaluation would cover lands, businesses, farm industries, public buildings, houses, mines, all means of transport, including railroads, ships, airplanes, cars, roads, bridges and canals, as well as our semi-finished and finished products. In other words, it would include as far as possible all material wealth. It should be noted in passing that the census of nearly all these values is already done by Statistics Canada. If we go back to the year 1929, which was more normal than all the others that followed, and if we consider that the figures do not include the value of our undeveloped natural resources, the total of our tangible resources was still evaluated at $30,276 million. This independent commission would be strictly responsible for keeping the national accounts up to date. This means that it would have to register regularly all increases and decreases in our total wealth.

Let us suppose that in a six-month period, we produced or imported $4 billion worth of goods and that improvements costing $200 million were made to our commercial or industrial equipment. This would mean an increase in our national wealth and would be added on the credit side of our national accounts. Let us suppose, on the contrary, that during the same six-month period, consumption and exports amounted to $3.5 billion and that the depreciation of the same equipment amounted to $150,000. This would mean a decrease in our national wealth. This amount would therefore have to be subtracted from the national accounts or debited to the country.

Mr. Speaker, how could we achieve a balance between the amount of the wealth produced and the amount of money needed for distribution? The Social Credit Party of Canada would suggest the creation of a commission or central bureau responsible for achieving this balance. A federal office of the Social Credit Party of Canada compiles the total wealth produced during the last period on the basis, let us say, of the previous year. It also evaluates total consumption during the same period. The difference provides the available assets which are registered under the available national credit. Mr. Speaker, I have here a chart which gives concrete examples of all this, but I will simply mention a few figures since I cannot table the whole chart.

Let us suppose a production of $7 billion with imports of $1.2 billion and an appreciation of $4.6 billion for a total of $12.8 billion. On the other hand, the consumer account shows $5.5 billion for consumption, $1.2 billion for exports and a depreciation of $1.3 billion, for a total of $8 billion. There is therefore $4.8 billion in the national account for redistribution to consumers. I quote:

> A few additional remarks to clarify this. Imports and exports were set at equal levels, although this will not always be the case, but this must be the ultimate goal in a sound system. The purpose of international trade is to give consumers access to a greater variety of goods, not to draw the last cent out of customers. The money-grubbing merchant whose aim, in international trade, is to pocket his neighbour's gold is the unnatural fruit of a twisted tree.

This gives you an idea, Mr. Speaker, of the second reform we propose, the national credit office, which would have control over investments and especially over consumer prices as well as control over production costs.

Our third suggestion—and I see that my time is fast running out—would be to reduce interest. I think, Mr. Speaker, that we have many times stood before this House to request that interest be either reduced or frozen, especially in the residential construction sector.

Imagine a young man who dreams of building a house nowadays. He must first pay taxes and then, because the value of the dollar drops, he loses another 17 per cent. He must pay a building tax, excise tax, and sales tax, so that before thinking of building a house he must think of the 48 per cent in taxes alone that he must pay. He buys building materials and builds himself a $40,000 house which in reality is worth only $20,000. The cost includes $20,000 worth of taxes. He then goes to a a loan company and obtains from the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation or any other agency a 30-year loan at 10 per cent, 11 per cent, or 11.5 per cent. At the end of 30 years, he will have paid four times the nominal value of his $40,000 house which in fact contains only $20,000 worth of materials. He will have paid $40,000 to build his house and $160,000 to financial institutions because he will have succeeded in building it.

[Mr. Gauthier (Roberval).]

This is why I suggest that a young man who wants to build a house today must be realistic and say: I am going into debt today not for $40,000 but $160,000. Mr. Speaker, if on top of that we add municipal taxes, school taxes and insurance coverage, we realize that it is costly nowadays for someone who wants to build a home.

Well, I think that if the government decided once and for all to use the credit of the Bank of Canada to finance those houses and desisted from making those young couples pay two, three or four houses to own one after 30 years, we would not need urban development and housing programs to encourage young people to build, although I say to encourage young people to get into debt, because we know ahead of time that 50 per cent of those young people will never overcome their debts. That is why I ask and propose today, while we are debating this motion, that the government pass a legislation to allow those who want to build a single family dwelling to do so, and to pay one but not three or four houses in interest. Only then, Mr. Speaker, could we urge people to build their houses.

Finally, I would like to say a few words on debts, as long as the government continues to get into debt and set such an example. In the fourth quarter of last year we borrowed $7 billion, again we are borrowing $10 billion, and that is over and above our $12 billion deficit, and the bigger the better.

It is raining billions around here, but billions of dollars of debts, and until such time as we have put an end to that type of indebtedness, and as long as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) keeps on saying, as he did recently in reply to a question: "We are not that deep into debt; we have committed only 33 per cent of the gross national product," the situation will not change. Moreover, the minister is not telling the truth to the people. He compares the debt of the federal government with the gross national product. Let him compare eggs with eggs, and apples with apples. When he speaks of the gross national product, let him compare it with the national debt.

Mr. Speaker, if we take all the debts of the federal government, the provinces, school boards, municipalities and individuals, we will find that our national debt exceeds by perhaps $25 billion our gross national product. To be sincere, frank, and in order not to mislead the population, when we speak of the gross national product, we must compare it with the national debt and not with the debt of a single municipality or a single province. I see that I have run out of time.

● (2040)

[English]

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to take part in this debate on a subject which is extremely important to all Canadians, and particularly to Canadians of low income. I welcome particularly the very practical measures announced in the course of today's debate by the President of the Board of Economic Development Ministers (Mr. Andras) and by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Allmand), which of the many remedies available place emphasis on a strengthened monitoring group, on increased competition in the market, and also on increasing the food supply and the information about alternatives. Information to consumers about alternatives is perhaps a counter-inflationary measure which is not generally as well perceived as it might be, but quite clearly the better informed the consumer, the better he or she can protect himself or herself.

The concern being expressed by Canadians about high food prices at the present time is very understandable. Food is a necessity of life. Escalation of food costs faces people day in and day out when they shop for their families. Consumers on the average spend 13.2 per cent of their disposable incomes on food for the home, but about 17 per cent of the population which makes up the lowest income sector spends nearly one quarter of its income on food. This is the group for whom recent price increases create a grave problem, the people who have little discretionary income and little flexibility.

In the search for solutions I think it is important to think of future supply as well as costs in the here and now. Intelligent consumer advocacy requires a concern for supply as well as for costs. For example, at the present time butter, skim milk powder and cheese are showing some price increases, but since these reflect increased prices to the farmers who produce industrial milk as of January, 1978, these prices should promote confidence among producers and provide stability in the industry so that all Canadians can benefit from a steady supply of dairy products.

The high cost of beef at the present time is related to supply problems. Beef prices have risen again and are expected to do so in the future because supplies of beef in North America are declining as cattlemen retain animals to rebuild their herds.

Farm prices have risen rapidly since December and this is being reflected in retail prices. Low prices are not necessarily in the consumer's best interests if they are reached at the expense of prejudicing supply in the future. In the past the Government of Canada has intervened to keep prices down in the short term by subsidies on flour and skim milk powder for instance. The difficulty with the subsidy route is that it is universal and benefits equally those with very high incomes and those whose incomes are very limited. With present government emphasis on restraint and relocation, the decision has been made to help those who need help most by, instead, trying to put more disposable income into the hands of people with lesser incomes so they are better able to withstand increases in food costs and other things related to the necessities of life.

As part of this emphasis we have seen the indexing of personal exemptions under the Income Tax Act, the child tax credit, increased family allowances, and increases in the guaranteed annual supplement. Putting money into the hands of those who most need it in order that they can meet the necessities of life is my preferred method of dealing with this kind of inflation in respect of basic necessities.

Unfair Price Increases

It is a matter of regret to me that a couple of years ago when the then minister of national health and welfare wanted to introduce a system of subsidy for the working poor, the province of Ontario blocked that measure, just as Ontario blocked the proposal made to allow housewives to protect their Canada Pension Plan contributions during the years when they were at home with children, receiving low or no income which would allow them to protect their buying power in future years when they are retired.

However, basic to any increase in social service payments is, of course, a strong, healthy economy. That is why I welcome the structural changes in the economy that have been made in the last year or two and with which we are now progressing, the industrial strategy measures, the current negotiations with GATT, the reduction in government expenditures in order to leave more room in the private sector and, particularly, our decision to go ahead with some amendments to the competition bill.

The food industry is one that has been investigated more than any other, and this afternoon the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs listed some of the many investigations we have had, none of which has produced serious or pervasive evidence of price gouging. There have been some rollbacks under the AIB program of food prices, and there have, indeed, been some convictions for double ticketing or misleading advertising, but essentially as one looks at the long history of investigations into the food industry, and the comparatively small amount of evidence of dishonest practices that ran afoul of present legislation, one has to ask oneself why the public continues to be so suspicious of retailers and distributors in the food industry. I think I can see two or three reasons for this.

When a worker, a union, or a consumer looks at profit in the manufacturing sector, there is perhaps less tendency to regard it as necessarily negative. There is more of an assumption that profits in the manufacturing sector may go into plant expansion or something that will create more jobs. When profit is made by a large supermarket it is not so easy to assume it will be used to benefit Canadians generally, and to create jobs. Most people would think that the logical place for supermarket profits to be reflected would be in reduced prices.

There is also the fact that people are faced with food costs every day. There is not the same opportunity for discretion as there may be with some manufactured items. In the food industry, practices which are not dishonest in themselves can distort the market. There are practices against which we have no legislation at the present time, and the commission which the Ontario government now has investigating the question of volume discounts is perhaps a response to this kind of concern.

Profit recovery has traditionally heralded a general economic recovery, but profits in the food industry are generally regarded not as an indicator of good things to come but as an indicator of lack of adequate competition.

I would suggest that the most useful thing members of this House who are concerned about food prices could do, is to support the new competition bill, if they consider as many Canadians do, that the companies do not appear to be operating in a healthy competitive marketplace.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a few remarks about this very wise and admirable motion which we have put forward today. I think it is important to have a good memory around this House of Commons. When one hears what is being said today and compares it with things said previously, one just has to laugh.

I cannot help but think back to 1975, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, it really started with the Tory party in the 1974 election campaign when they said they wanted wage and price controls. They said there was an inflation psychology, that wages were chasing prices. Their method of dealing with this wage inflation psychology was to bring in controls. The Liberal party and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) ran around the country saying controls would not work, and that what the Tories really wanted to do was control the wages of workers. There are many members on the other side of the House who ran their campaigns strictly against wage and price controls.

An hon. Member: They lied.

Mr. Rodriguez: Yes, they lied, Mr. Speaker. People voted for them believing that—

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I know that the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) becomes overly excited at times, but I certainly take exception when he says that this party lied. We were honest—

An hon. Member: He said the Liberals.

Mr. Alexander: I do not know who he was talking about, but I know there was a reflection on me, which I do not accept. Of course, if he was not referring to this party, or these members, then I am wrong, but I hope he will clear it up. If he is saying that the Liberals and the government lied, then I share his views, because that is exactly what happened in 1974.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sure the hon. member would not want the Chair to have two sets of standards. If the word lie is not parliamentary, then it is not parliamentary.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, if I have offended anybody, then I will say that during the 1974 campaign the Liberals misled the Canadian people and they were less than honest. I know that is parliamentary.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I recognize a paid commercial when I hear one. I wish the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) would not be so sensitive. His turn will come. I will make it very clear to him, when he has uttered a verbal obfuscation. In the meantime, it is members on the other side who have verbally obfuscated the Canadian people. They told them that if this government were re-elected, there would be no wage and price controls. We know they turned around that Thanksgiving night in 1975 when the Prime Minister said on television that what he was going to do with this program was break the inflation psychology of anticipating further price increases.

I did not hear very much from the government benches today about the price increases which are coming hot and heavy every week to the consumers of this country. They blame labour for fuelling the fires of inflation. They waged a campaign in this country blaming labour for fuelling inflation, and got the public on their side in that kind of witch hunt campaign. The facts are out, however. In 1978 the average weekly wage only increased 6.4 per cent while the cost of living increased 9 per cent, and now we are having another run of price increases.

This evening I spoke to a gentleman in Toronto. He told me that he bought bread at Food City on Gerrard Street in Toronto four weeks ago at three loaves for $1, for a house brand bread. Today he gets two loaves for $1. What justification is there for an increase of 17 cents in the price of a loaf of bread? What justifies the increase in the price of chicken? I was touring my riding yesterday, and I was amazed to hear the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Allmand) on the radio saying that chicken prices went up because there is a demand for it created by the price of beef going up. What is he doing about it?

Mr. Allmand: Increase the supply.

Mr. Rodriguez: What does he suggest, Mr. Speaker, that people switch to pork? What happens when the price of pork goes up?

Mr. Allmand: Increase the supply.

Mr. Rodriguez: They have all these people on the string, Mr. Speaker. I am amazed at the speed with which an increase in price at the farm gate results in an increase in price at the retail counter. But the other way takes months and months for a decrease in the basic price to be reflected in the retail price.

● (2100)

At the moment prices are rising at the pre-controls pace. But what do we hear? We hear the Prime Minister talking about bank settlements. He said the bank workers are getting settlements which are too big, and that this was inflationary. Can you imagine that, Mr. Speaker? Fancy saying that to the tellers and clerks who work in the banks. I know of a man in my riding who was working for the Banque Canadienne Nationale earning $8,760 a year. He has a wife and child to support, but he could not make ends meet. He had to go to the Manpower Office to try to find another job because he could not live on $8,760 a year. And this person should get a 6 per cent increase? These are the friends of the two old line parties; the bankers. They love it when the Prime Minister says that they should hold the line on increases and wages for bank workers.

On the other hand, what about the service charges the banks charge their customers? For example, the Toronto-Dominion Bank increased the interest rate to their Chargex customers to 21 per cent. They did this just by one snap of the finger. Who did they negotiate with? They did not negotiate with anybody. They decided that the price was going to go up to 21 per cent, and that is the way it happened.

I could understand the sensitivity of the Tories, but we do not hear them getting up from day to day talking about price increases. They talk about the falling dollar. They do not talk about price increases. I could understand why the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) blames everything on the falling dollar. He does not talk about the banks at all. But the bankers have spoken to his leader about him. I understand there is a little promise that he is not going to be the finance minister should the disaster happen that they form the government. We will see the proof of the pudding tonight, because these Tories are going to vote with the Liberal gang over there.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: I say that that in effect shows the Tories are also verbally obfuscating the public. They are not prepared to challenge the corporate sector. The corporate sector must be challenged. And what do I mean by that? I mean in effect that the government instead of standing back on the sidelines and reacting in a neutral sort of way, must involve itself in planning this economy and directing it. It has left it to the multinational corporate sector.

As I observe the scene today, mergers are taking place and the corporate giants are getting larger and larger. They are getting more powerful than those who are elected to govern the country. The corporate sector must be challenged in this country. For example, when Inco made a $300 million net profit in 1973 there was nothing incumbent upon them to invest that profit in Canada. What did they do? They bought a battery company in the United States. They did what they felt was in the best interests of the corporate structure, and they were taken to the cleaners by their stockbrokers. Corporations are not in business to create employment. They are not some sort of social agency to look after the welfare of Canadians. They are there to maximize profits.

It is in the interest of the government to make sure that the resources of this country are so dispersed, so invested as to create a healthy economic climate for our people. We are not the servants of the multinational corporate structures. It is the reverse, and roles have been changed in this place. For example, a cabinet minister takes the same plane with bankers to Toronto. So how do you expect him to take a tough stand with them, Mr. Speaker? What happened to the legislation that would amend the combines act, and the Small Loans Act?

Mr. Allmand: Will you support it when I bring it in next week?

Mr. Rodriguez: You bring it in and we will have a look at it.

Mr. Allmand: That is what you did last time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: This government brought in Bill C-13 which would allow banks to lend money under the Small Loans Act at up to 70 per cent.

Mr. Allmand: It is Bill C-16.

Mr. Rodriguez: Seventy per cent was the criminal rate. That is what the government wanted for its banking friends. How could we support that? We said no way. Seventy per cent was the criminal rate at which prosecution takes place.

Mr. Allmand: That is the wrong rate.

Mr. Rodriguez: The argument is that the rate must be made high enough for banks to lend money. These are the people who made a billion dollars in profit last year. I am talking about the big five. They have all sorts of money to invest in sound investments in Chile and Guatemala. They really have good credit ratings. And yet the banks do not have money to lend to Canadians at 34 per cent or 24 per cent interest; instead, they wanted 70 per cent. I say to the minister, bring in a bill that is void of all those sorts of give-aways to the corporate sector and we will give it passage.

Where is the bill which demanded that the banks pay interest on a minimum daily balance? As hon. members know, the banks at present only pay interest on the minimum monthly balance, and that is paid on a quarterly basis. Where is the bill? Where is the bill that said that banks must pay on a minimum daily balance?

Where is the bill directing the banks to take part of their portfolios to set aside for the building of homes for low income and middle income Canadians? Where is that? The government does not dare touch the banks. There is a conspiracy of silence in this House of Commons, and the Tories, who are supposed to be the official opposition in this House, are silent on these matters which affect the welfare and the well-being of the Canadian people.

We have been hewers of wood and drawers of water. As long as people in Canada keep electing Liberal governments, or Tories as alternatives, we will continue to be enslaved in that fashion. Look at what is happening with the falling dollar. Sure our raw resources are now very attractive. To balance our accounts this country is going to sell off more and more resources, forever locking us into that pattern of hinterland development. That is shocking and shameful on the part of this government. If it had any guts at all it would plan the economy so that the investment would be directed into those sectors which are job-creating and which hold some future for Canadians.

We are not going to go on ripping nickel out of the ground. We do not have any research and development for copper and nickel in the Sudbury basin, but the price of nickel is going up and so is the price of copper. The price of cobalt is going up too. Who is getting the benefit from these rising prices?

Certainly not the Canadian people, because mining of minerals is capital intensive not job intensive. The job intensive area is in the manufacturing sector.

What kind of planning does the Canadian government have? There is no planning. So as the foreign demand for our resources rose because of the drop in the value of the Canadian dollar, we have to ship more minerals out of the country. The multinational corporations jacked the price up and Canadians pay more as well. We do not have a two-price system.

We do not have a two-price system for lumber. The demand is high because the Japanese want more of our first-class lumber, but Canadians are the ones who pay. Canadians have witnessed a fantastic increase in the price of lumber. That adds to the cost of building a home. However, the friendly banker is right there waiting to give you a mortgage that will be amortized over 40 years. If you wish to retire the mortgage, however, there is a prepayment charge. Where is the bill to eliminate prepayment charges on mortgages?

There is a silent conspiracy. If credit unions can give a no prepayment mortgage, why can the big five not do the same when you retire your mortgage? Why have they hidden that bill? I challenge the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to bring forward that bill tomorrow, without cooking it up with his banking friends, and we will give it quick passage.

Mr. Allmand: I will remember that.

Mr. Rodriguez: We have now reached the stage where Canadians pay these high prices because of the increased prices for lumber. Is there any rationale for that? How can we expect the worker, faced with these increasing prices, to settle for 6.7 per cent or 6.8 per cent? Last year the cost of living rose 9 per cent. Therefore with a 6 per cent increase in wages that worker lost $340 last year. He still has to go to the store to buy these items, and in order to build his home he must pay the same price for lumber as the Japanese. This government is totally and absolutely useless in its approach to this. Consumers are beginning to boycott.

Incidentally, I did not mention the fact that the Economic Council of Canada had Professor Mintz do a study and write a paper. The taxpayers paid for that. What happened? It was not until after 10,000 copies had been printed that it was discovered it was something we should not see. I do not want to get into the cost of that blooper on the part of government agencies for which we pay. What was done about it? I suppose some bureaucrats were paid double time and a half to shred the bloody thing. That paper could have been recycled. With 10,000 reports, which probably averaged 12 pages each, that would be a lot of paper that could have been recycled.

Why was it stifled? I suppose there was a telephone call to the Prime Minister's good friend, Mrs. Ostry. Maybe it came from one of the big five. I was going to say Mr. McLaughlin, but he is a friend of the Tories. I suspect that after the telephone call that paper was taken out of the report, even though such papers traditionally carry a disclaimer on the bottom.

An hon. Member: It had a disclaimer.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is why it should have been published. In fact, not so long ago the Prime Minister said to my leader that there are always disclaimers on reports by the Economic Council of Canada. Again, that is part of the conspiracy of silence in this country. These two old line parties are committed not to interfere in the economy. Those on this side would get rid of Petro-Canada, the one feeble attempt which this party pushed the government to become involved in in the minority period.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Is there consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I believe the motion before the House tonight is deceptive. I think it is cruel and hypocritical. Therefore I will vote against it. It is deceptive because it is designed to appeal to everyone when it speaks of and rightly condemns unfair prices. Obviously in a time of great hardship, high taxes, high inflation, high prices and high unemployment, any unfair price is one of many elements that may be present in our economy which a thinking people and all MPs are against. I do not care what side of the House the member sits on, everyone in this House is obviously against unfair prices.

As a political slogan or a conscientious and compassionate citizen, all of us in this House and every thinking citizen are against unfair prices. All of us are against the very idea of those who may be able to manipulate the marketplace to their advantage and to the detriment of everyone else. Make no mistake about it. These are very general and genuine concerns today. There may well be abuses in the marketplace.

When one goes food shopping, for instance, and sees week after week large increases in some of the food items in the stores and supermarkets, some of them seasonal items but many of them of the non-seasonal variety, any shopper in Canada today has to wonder whether some of the increases can be justified or whether somewhere, in the long and complex food industry chain from basic producer right through to you and I, the ultimate consumer, there is not someone who is using some unseen and unknown advantage to make an undue profit and produce an unfair price.

Just last weekend in the golden horseshoe area of southern Ontario, which has the reputation of having the most competitive supermarket and grocery industry in the country, resulting in the lowest prices for most food items in the country, I had to worry, along with the mover of the motion, when I noticed that a single fresh imported cauliflower cost me, while doing the family shopping, $1.89. That price was mentioned earlier.

What was not mentioned was that when I went to buy four unripe tomatoes, it cost me over $1, more than 25 cents each. We are great salad fans. When I went to buy a single lettuce imported from Holland, of all places, it cost me 89 cents. For three Florida grapefruit the price was 99 cents, and at that I think it was a special, 33 cents for each grapefruit. There are other items with which I shall not bother the House tonight. But I hope no one will go away believing that right now the people of Canada are not concerned about high prices, prices which many of them immediately translate, rightly or wrongly, into the proposition that they are unfair prices.

I repeat, however, that I feel the motion before the House is deceptive. It is misleading, and therefore it is cruel to many people who will be taken in by the type of argument we have just heard from one of the members of the New Democratic Party. Why? Because it was based upon the undeniable fact that the prices of many commodities are higher than most of us have ever seen in our lives, and it is easy to believe that those higher prices could be unfair prices.

Why is the motion deceptive? It is deceptive because, after describing the symptoms correctly, after diagnosing the illness in the Canadian economy, it holds out as its shining beacon, as its gleaming hope, as its cure, a solution which is not only incorrect and ineffective but which is unnecessary—a phony answer, a phony solution. What is the solution it proposes? It is the setting up of yet another restrictive board or commission.

I don't care whether it is called an anti-inflation board or a prices review board, or a centre for the study of inflation and productivity; I don't care whether it is called a fair prices commission or an unfair prices commission, it is certainly not the way to cure the sickness in Canada's price structure or in the nation's economy. I suspect the mover of the motion knows this as well as you and I know it, Mr. Speaker. How can you roll back prices unless you roll back profits and dividends?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence: Now we are getting to it. How can you roll back prices unless you roll back costs? How can you roll back prices unless you roll back wages and salaries—

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Lawrence: —and materials, labour, energy, the million and one other inputs which finally result in the price paid by the consumer?

An hon. Member: Spoken like a Liberal!

Mr. Lawrence: To determine what is an unfair price, the prices of all ingredients, all the prices involved, would have to be determined. Whether you like it or not, this process has eventually to become a full-fledged control program, a program of control over wages and costs as well as prices. In my naivete, in my innocence of what goes on here, in my belief that there should be some standards and principles in Canadian politics, I thought that the New Democratic Party, mainly at the urging of organized labour, was against programs of that type. But here they are, contrary to the expressed wish of the Canadian Labour Congress, the UAW, the steelworkers, CUPE and many others in the organized labour movement, defending a policy which has not worked in the past and which will not work in the future, either.

The mover of the motion says his commission could be operated by five or six board members using existing staff from government departments. That is nonsense. It is as inane as the speech we heard from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) during the debate leading to the setting up of the Anti-Inflation Board when he said the board would remain a small agency employing about 200 people. As we all know, by the spring of 1978 the staff of the AIB had grown to more than 1,000. And it didn't work. It didn't work then, and it certainly cannot work today.

Let us get back to those imported cauliflowers, to those lettuce imported from Holland. How about those tomatoes, those grapefruit? The hon. member may laugh, but these are one of the biggest factors in the jump in food prices over the last few months. Would a Canadian government board be able to arrive at the truth when examining the chain of items accounting for the high cost of imported food? Even if it did, would it be able to do anything about it? I cannot believe that even the members of the New Democratic Party take the view that it could. It would be powerless in respect of these imported items and, this being the case, it would become nothing more than a phony facade behind which the real culprit in this whole mess, the present government with its lack of fiscal and economic policy, could hide and take shelter.

Let me take hon. members back to a debate which took place on September 13, 1973. Speaking in this House in a debate on food policy, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) said, and I quote him, that controls had been "an utter disaster" and that wherever they had been tried they had failed. They were, he said, merely a "convenient political gimmick." I say to you, sir, that the NDP motion before the House today is precisely that. It is a convenient political gimmick because, if they cannot nationalize a thing, they want to set up another board to oversee it. That is their answer to everything.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lawrence: There is one thing I can honestly say I have not heard from them. They have not advocated setting up "FoodCan" or "GroceryCan" in an effort to control the industry.

What is the cause of the high prices of almost everything which is imported—food, cars, energy, textiles? Don't take my word for it, let's see what the latest of these ineffective expensive boards and commissions that both the government and the NDP are so fond of setting up, says. Within the last few days the Centre for the Study of Inflation and Productivity said in its own publication, "The Monitor":

> Canada has experienced more inflation because of the depreciation (of the Canadian dollar). By the end of 1978, the CPI was 6½ per cent higher than it would have been without the dollar depreciation. So the dollar decline has been responsible for about one-third of the total inflation measured by the CPI in this two-year period. In 1978 the CPI rose 9.0 per cent from the year before. Without depreciation of the dollar the increase would have been about 6 per cent.

● (2130)

Liberal member after Liberal member can rise in his place and say, as we heard earlier today, that the fall of the dollar—Canada's sinking dollar, not Canada's floating dollar—is a good thing for Canadians. Because of the large amount of imported foods, imported goods and imported materials we have to import, the drop in the dollar has added one-third, on the average, to the total inflation from which this country is suffering. Those cauliflowers, those tomatoes, that lettuce and that grapefruit would have had one-third cut off their normal seasonal price increase if Canada's dollar had remained constant.

What would another board or commission be able to do about the dollar's drop? Would it roll back the value of the dollar to parity or to where it should be? Would it prosecute the Government of Canada for imposing high taxes, causing loss of investor confidence, the high cost of government, the bungling of an inept Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) or the inability of the Prime Minister to control his bureaucracy or his policies, all of which have added to this country's shaky dollar dropsy? Of course, no Canadian board or commission would be able to do that. Earlier today we heard from the Lord High Poobah of economic ministers. His post was set up, I suspect, because the Prime Minister really did not have the political courage to fire the Minister of Finance. The President of the Board of Economic Development Ministers (Mr. Andras) says that CSIP is going to have increased monitoring powers. Big deal! With all the force I can muster I say that tinkering with government commissions and playing around with government boards will not cure the illness the government has caused in this country. Substituting a board or commission for the work and jurisdiction of an incredibly weak Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Allmand) also will not do it. The only answer is a clean, fresh broom.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lawrence: The only answer is an election. Lord knows we have tried, but we cannot possibly change the attitude and the policies of this government, and we cannot change the effects of having a bunch of bungling government ministers. If we cannot change their policies, opinions and characteristics, the obvious answer is to change the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alan Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I rise in the closing minutes of this interesting debate I must first make some reference to the closing remarks of the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence). He spoke about illnesses in the economy, and I think we all accept that there are certain areas, particularly unemployment, where indeed we do have problems. We recognize that, but the hon. member talks about illnesses, and his financial spokesman recommends a deficit which would be 50 per cent greater than the one we already have. The hon. member did not tell us about what that would do to our balance of payments and to our exchange rate.

It was interesting to hear from the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) tonight. The hon. member seems to have toned down somewhat with regard to an increased deficit. He tells us now that he is not in favour of higher deficits. Other financial critics are, but he is not. He indicated earlier that he is quite happy with a 2 per cent growth rate. He commended the British Labour government for realizing the kind of growth rate it can expect in coming years. Earlier today he was criticizing Canada for having achieved a 3.4 per cent growth rate last year. However, that is typical of the varying opinions we hear from time to time from the variety club of five financial critics opposite.

The basic subject of the debate which has been going on here today has been the matter of inflation and its effect on families. We on this side obviously welcome such a debate because in recent years inflation has been an overriding concern of this government. The policies of the government have been directed toward bringing it under control while minimizing the adjustment costs to the economy.

We all recognize that there have been some setbacks, chiefly the result of elements beyond our domestic control, but they are being met and overcome. We still have a long, hard haul ahead, but this is a time for confidence and not gloom. In fact I believe that a mounting sense of confidence is now apparent in our economy, if not on the benches opposite.

I would like to move for a moment to the matter of food prices because I think that is the paramount issue on the minds of Canadians at this time, bearing in mind that the big increase in the rate of inflation last year was due in large part to increases in food prices. The hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) referred earlier to increases in wages, and I think it should be noted that increases in the non-food sector were about in line with average figures for the increases in wages he mentioned.

Food prices are extremely sensitive to increased costs for energy, transportation and labour. The rate of increase in the total cost of living for non-food items has been considerably less than for food and has been trending downward until very recently. At the same time, over-all increases in average annual wage settlements have been on a distinct upward trend. As a result, the number of hours of work required to feed a family has continued to decrease remarkably. Recent price increases, though substantial in percentage terms, are less striking in terms of actual dollar costs for average annual consumption. The present upward movement in prices does not reflect a general pattern of profiteering by farmers, producers or retailers. On the contrary, no element of the food system has secured a rate of return higher than its historic average. Some of these points were made earlier this afternoon in the address by the President of the Board of Economic Development Ministers (Mr. Andras), but some of them need to be repeated.

More than one-third of the rate of increase in food prices reflects cyclical shortages in certain products, weather conditions and crop failures which are unusual and unavoidable.

Another third of the rate of increase in food prices reflects, as has been mentioned earlier today, the devaluation of the Canadian dollar, reductions in subsidies as a result of government restraint and supply management directed at ensuring reliable and stable domestic sources of supply, all of which are policies with more than offsetting advantages to Canadians in terms of increased employment, reductions in government expenditures and sound markets.

While the causes of increased food prices are therefore defensible and unavoidable, the government has been concerned about protecting the poor and the aged from their effects. To this end the government has modified the child tax credit program and increased the guaranteed income supplement in addition to the protection already afforded by indexing to these groups and to recipients of unemployment insurance and social assistance. Further measures to deal with food price increases are under review, but the government is determined to avoid steps which, in order to achieve allusory short-term improvements, in fact add to the bureaucracy, create inefficiencies, build in unacceptable longer-term costs, and simply tend to shift price burdens for consumers from one visible area to other less visible ones.

With regard to profits in food and beverages processing compared with all manufacturing for the years 1975 to 1978 there are a few points which perhaps should be registered. Food industry profits as a percentage of sales are lower than for all manufacturing. If the alcoholic beverage industry is deleted, the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs estimates the profits to be 4 per cent of sales, which is slightly higher than the 3.3 per cent estimated by the AIB for the first three-quarters of 1978. Profits as a percentage of equity for all manufacturers vary slightly from those of food and beverage processors. From the low point in 1976 the ratio of profits to equity in all manufacturing grew by 20.7 per cent, while that for food and beverages grew by only 13.4 per cent. For retailing, AIB sample data can be compared with Statistics Canada data for 1975 through 1977.

Mr. McGrath: Don't read that stuff, Alan. You can do better.

Mr. Martin: Some of these statistics are important. We see that pre-tax profits as a percentage of sales for all retail profits are 2.6 per cent, and for food are 1.8 per cent.

● (2140)

An hon. Member: Who is the author?

Mr. Martin: I think the conclusions need to be noted. I know that the official opposition does not like to hear these statistics any more than does the NDP.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: We don't like to read the department's briefs.

Mr. Martin: The following conclusions may be reached: Profits as a per cent of sales are lower in food than for all retailing.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The parliamentary secretary has the floor for the purpose of making a speech. I suggest we all listen.

Mr. Martin: Second, retailers in food receive higher returns on equity than for all retailing. Food retailers have experienced a more rapid recovery from the low profit levels of 1976 than other retailers. Though profits have recovered from the 1976 low, the share of the consumer food dollar retained by retailers is still around 4 cents.

An hon. Member: You read very well.

Mr. Martin: The only reason I read these statistics is that they are important to the Canadian public as they listen to the kinds of arguments put forward by the NDP and their motion. If we are going to rebut that kind of motion it is important, I suggest, that the rebuttal be based on facts, and these are facts that need to be noted.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Martin: The real key, as mentioned earlier today on this side, to controlling inflation, is indeed a strong and growing economy functioning under responsible monetary and fiscal policies, one thing that the Canadian public would be sure not to have, if they ever made the fatal error—which I am sure they will not—of putting people in the official opposition in power.

Recently the executive of CSIP wrote to the major coprorations for additional information on cost and prices to expand its work of analysis.

Hon. members will recall the decision taken a year ago with federal and provincial governments to hold down the growth of their spending below the growth rate of GNP. Again I want to repeat that the premier of Saskatchewan, a staunch member of the NDP, was not in favour of any stronger mechanism than the type of organization that was brought into effect with CSIP in this area, and I think it is important that federal members of the NDP appreciate that point.

The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Buchanan) presented his main estimates for the fiscal year which begins next April 1. They show an increase in federal outlays of 8.9 per cent over the current fiscal year. This will be significantly below the growth of the GNP for 1979-80, now expected to be somewhere around 11 per cent.

Just four years ago, the federal spending amounted to 21.7 per cent of the GNP; for the coming fiscal year it will be down to 19.9 per cent. Meanwhile there are other strong influences at work stimulating the private sector activity. Probably the most important is the marked improvement in our international competitive position which has occurred in the last four most important is the marked improvement in our international competitive position which has occurred in the last four years, largely due to the impact of AIB and its ability to control the runaway type of inflation which we were experiencing in late 1975.

We have brought our domestic costs down at a time when the external value of the Canadian dollar has declined. We have seen a dramatic gain in jobs. Figures have been stated over and over again showing some 450,000 new jobs in the last 12 months. We are the only country in the industrialized world to have a year over year increase in new jobs since the OPEC crisis in 1973.

Some hon. Members: Question.

An hon. Member: This is a recording. Nobody believes you.

Mr. Martin: I am confident that the real growth this year will be in excess of the 1978 rate, which turned out to be about 3.4 per cent as confirmed by—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It being 9.45 p.m. it is my duty to interrupt the debate and put forthwith any questions necessary to conclude the proceedings now before the House, in accordance with section 9 of Standing Order 58.

All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Broadbent) which was negatived on the following division:

SOCIAL INSURANCE

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION LIMITING USE OF SOCIAL INSURANCE NUMBERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn):

That this House direct the Prime Minister and the Minister of Employment and Immigration to forthwith bring forward legislation limiting the use of social insurance numbers in light of the revelation by Geoff Johnson of the Ottawa Citizen today that the social insurance number is now required by the Ottawa Diaper Service before it will deliver.

Mr. Speaker: The introduction of such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NATIONAL UNITY

PQ PLATFORM—GOVERNMENT POSITION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

In view of the exposure of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lalonde) to association with a sovereign in the person of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his willingness to negotiate sovereignty association with the PQ on the "QT", I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That the minister explain on motions which one-fifth of the PQ platform he will negotiate and which four-fifths he believes can be implemented within the federal system, and advise the House when he intends to commence implementation of the four-fifths and when he intends to proceed, as defined by the dictionary, to confer with the PQ with a view to compromise, or agreement, or to bring about the other one-fifth, or advise whether he will now obey Coughlin's law not to talk unless he can improve the silence.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

EMPLOYMENT

CUTBACK IN WOMEN'S "OUTREACH" PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR DELAY PENDING STUDY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

In view of the fact that a women's employment Outreach project in Toronto called "Times Change" has just been cut by 45 per cent, and since the cut is based on an administrative recommendation without the promised project assessment, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House instruct the Minister of Employment and Immigration to rescind the cutback until the government's own recommendation to carry out a full study, including a client survey, is completed.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for discussion at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

URBAN AFFAIRS

COMPLETION OF WALKWAY AT PORTAGE AND MAIN, WINNIPEG—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Hare (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

In recognition of the completion in Winnipeg of the underground walkway and shopping complex at the corner of Portage and Main, and in recognition of the fact that this means pedestrians in downtown Winnipeg will no longer face the challenge of the icy blasts at Canada's coldest intersection, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway):

That this House recognize this great moment in the history of western Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

S.O. 43

STATISTICS CANADA

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO PROCEDURES AND EFFICIENCY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I rise, pursuant to Standing Order 43, regarding the continuing ineptitude of Statistics Canada, recent particulars of which have been set out in the last two issues of the Globe and Mail regarding the occupational employment survey and ethnic group language and birthplace data.

Since the occupational employment survey, upon which Statistics Canada has reportedly spent $4 million, has been called "garbage" by an internal memo—it recalls the "1971 Census on Merchandising" which also cost millions and was never published—and keeping in mind that the latter was under a director who dealt in private data, and the former under a director who reportedly ran a car dealership out of his Statistics Canada office, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence):

That a full inquiry be made into Statistics Canada operations, priorities, procedures and efficiency.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

USE OF PRODUCERS' MONEY TO PURCHASE GRAIN HOPPER CARS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of widespread evidence that the unprecedented decision by the Wheat Board to use producers' money to buy hopper cars does not meet with the wholehearted approval of all producers, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Stewart):

That the minister in charge of the Wheat Board consult with producer groups as to the feasibility of a plebiscite of permit holders to determine if producers are agreeable to their money being used to purchase hopper cars.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for debate at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

CALL FOR DEVELOPMENT STRATEGY FOR ATLANTIC PROVINCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Whereas the latest economic indicators show that the disparity between Canadians living in the Atlantic provinces and the rest of Canada continues to widen, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett):

That the Prime Minister be directed to convene a meeting of DREE and the premiers of all the Atlantic provinces to devise a regional development strategy to build a modern infrastructure and identify areas of comparable natural advantage, committing national resources to develop them.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for debate at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

BILINGUALISM

REQUEST FOR RE-ESTABLISHMENT OF BILINGUAL BONUS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with an important matter of pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that the government has decided to remove the bilingual bonus and that accordingly the salary of some employees will decrease, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard):

That the House urge the government to reconsider its decision to avoid taking a backward step with its bilingualism policy.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion cannot be presented for consideration without unanimous consent? Is there unanimous consent?

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

PROPOSED INCREASE IN BEER PRICES IN ONTARIO—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask leave to move the following motion.

In view of the announcement yesterday that the breweries have asked the Liquor Control Board of Ontario for permission to make a further increase in beer prices of 50 cents a case, following an increase in beer prices just last April, and in view of a statement made by the Centre for the Study of Inflation and Productivity that the profits of breweries in the first three quarters of 1978 were up by some 33 per cent over the same period in 1977, I ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow):

That the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs be instructed to urge his provincial counterpart in the government of Ontario to take action to roll back these price increases.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of such a motion for debate at this time would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

TRADE

SUGGESTED SPECIAL STATUS FOR MARITIMES' MANUFACTURED GOODS AND EXPORTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

As GATT negotiations are bogging down over the apparent difficulty encountered by Canada and the United States in resolving the problems of non-tariff and countervailing duties, and since resulting delay is blocking progress in areas of manufacturing development in the maritime region, I ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie):

That this House instruct the minister responsible for DREE to propose to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce a regionalization program whereby products manufactured and exported from the less developed maritime region would receive special status.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the presentation of such a motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NATURAL RESOURCES

NEED FOR UNIMPEDED ACCESS ACROSS ALASKA-CANADA BORDER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, my motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43 does, indeed, concern a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of recent actions by the United States government which appear to limit entry to U.S. lands adjacent or close to the Alaska-Canada border, especially in the Panhandle region, and in view of the fact that access to these lands is essential for resource exploration in northern British Columbia and the Yukon, I ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen):

That the Government of Canada investigate the effect of the U.S. land withdrawals on mineral and other resource development on affected Canadian lands and that the government move promptly to preserve the right of unimpeded access through the Alaska border which were granted to Canada in 1825 under the Russo-British Treaty and later reconfirmed in 1903 under the Alaska Boundary Treaty between Canada and the United States.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion for debate at this time would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

PRICE MONITORING TO PROTECT CONSUMERS—EFFECT ON INFLATION OF DEVALUED DOLLAR

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It arises out of his rather rambling speech yesterday in which he said that he was fed up and that everyone in the government wants to do something to help consumers. The minister then spoke about putting in place further monitoring devices.

Does he accept the CSIP report issued this month which shows that prices have gone up one-third on account of the diving dollar alone in the past two years? Does he accept that last year, rather than having 9 per cent inflation we would have had 6 per cent inflation if it had not been for the government's policy of having a cheap dollar?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, when I spoke, I was referring to the remarks made by the President of the Board of Economic Development Ministers when he said that the government was considering improvements to our price monitoring system.

Included in the alternatives we were considering was the strengthening of CSIP. But, yes, I agree that the difference in our dollar has meant increases in certain food products, especially those imported from the United States. However, as the Minister of Finance and others have said—and I support them—this is a measure which cuts both ways. While we have higher consumer prices in some instances, we also have the creation of many, many jobs.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, if the minister agrees that the fall in the dollar to 83 cents has had an effect on prices, including beef prices, vegetable prices and leather goods' prices, would he indicate whether he would like to see the dollar at a somewhat higher level? It could be accomplished through government action. Does the minister agree with, or would he contradict the statement given to the country by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration that he would like to see a 75-cent dollar, which would put us into a three-quarters, one-quarter type of situation as far as the economy is concerned?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the policy announced by the Minister of Finance which on balance is improving economic conditions in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the minister obviously does not even understand the policies of the Minister of Finance, if we compare his last statement with his first answer. In his speech yesterday the minister stated that the government will not "use its control of monetary policy to underwrite such inflationary increases". Those were the minister's final words.

Does the minister realize that between February 15, 1978, and February 15 of this year, M-3 growth in this country went up 20 per cent, and does he not feel that that is underwriting inflationary pressures?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is misinterpreting my remarks. Perhaps I should give another speech to enlighten him on what I really meant.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

INCREASES IN FOOD PRICES—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION INTO PROFITEERING

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like to put a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, who is emerging as the Howard Beale of the cabinet.

Yesterday, when he said he was fed up and that he was not going to take it any more, he indicated that the government, among other things, was taking steps to increase our food supply. On Monday, when he was asked a question about increases in the price of chicken—substantial increases; over 34 per cent in a year—the minister said that was the result of increased consumer demand, implying a short supply. The same day, the Minister of Agriculture said that there was a four million pound surplus of chicken on hand.

In view of the fact that the minister has once again been contradicted by a minister who is obviously better informed, will he now use the substantial powers he already has to investigate increases in chicken prices to make sure there is no price-gouging or profiteering?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I will be pleased to do that, Mr. Speaker; but the turkey marketing board has already increased its quotas for production in 1979. It is too early yet to see what the effect of this will be on prices, but it is our belief that that increase in quotas will lead to a moderation of prices.

● (1420)

It is the same thing with other products under marketing boards. I have not reread the remarks of the Minister of Agriculture, but I am sure we are saying the same thing on this. Nevertheless, I am continually looking into price increases, and if there is anything exceptional with respect to the increases in the price of products mentioned by the hon. member, we will do what we can.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry the old gobbler, the Minister of Agriculture, is not here to hear his colleague not make a distinction between a chicken and a turkey.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: I want to ask the minister, now that we know how well informed he is, the following question. Yesterday he said that the government, among other things, was about to bring in amendments to the combines act. He indicated in the same speech that the government is not looking for rollback powers.

I want to ask the minister two questions. First of all, what additional powers is he looking for under the combines act that he does not already have and, if he can satisfy us on that question, can he tell us why it has taken him this long to bring in these amendments?

Mr. Allmand: As the hon. member knows, in the last session of parliament we had a bill before the House, Bill C-13. We had a lot of discussion on that bill with consumer groups, business groups, professionals, and so on, and I considered some amendments. I proposed and will bring forward amendments to Bill C-13. That has already been approved in cabinet and the bill as amended should be brought before the House very shortly.

INCREASES IN PRICE OF CHICKEN—SUPPLY POSITION RESPECTING POULTRY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, but before that I should say that the Conservatives had a chance yesterday to vote for a measure that would have given the government power to order rollbacks, and yet they opposed it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: You guys live with your conscience!

I should like to ask the minister if he is saying to the House, now, that the Minister of Agriculture was wrong, or is he accepting his correction? The Minister of Agriculture said there "are some four million pounds more poultry in storage than a year ago." He said there is no supply problem. The minister said yesterday that the reason we have these astronomical increases in the price of chicken is that "demand is greater than supply". Will he clarify that? Is he accepting the correction of the Minister of Agriculture and, if so, how can he justify the very high price of chicken that consumers have to pay?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The hon. member and his party had a chance to vote for an agency that had rollback powers in 1975, but they voted against it at that time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: Now they have put a gimmick before the Canadian people and they are flip-flopping on the particular subject.

I have not had a chance to analyse the answer given by the Minister of Agriculture the other day, but it is very likely we were talking about different periods, because different marketing boards which come under the federal level of jurisdiction and others which come under provincial jurisdiction have already increased supply quotas for 1979, and consequently there was a recognition that more supply was needed. But it is too early at this point in time in 1979 to know the effect of those increased supplies already agreed upon.

I might remind the hon. member that the government has, as well, approved an increase in the beef quota of seven million pounds for 1979.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, we voted against the measure in 1975 because it would only control prices and do nothing—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Go back and start again.

Mr. Broadbent: It would only control wages and do nothing about prices. The minister accepts the Tory applause because they voted with the government to hold down wages.

I should like to ask the minister the following question. Considering that yesterday he said he was fed up with rising prices, and moved us almost to tears, but he said at the same time that the only thing he was prepared to do about it was to bring in some changes to the Competition Act, I ask him in all seriousness—considering that, at best, changes in the Competition Act might have a marginal effect on prices two years down the road—is the minister saying that the government has no plans to deal with rising prices in 1979?

Mr. Allmand: Yesterday, we mentioned at least three different approaches to the problem. The President of the Board of Economic Development Ministers referred to increased powers for a price monitoring agency but without rollback powers. I stated that we were going to bring in Competition Act reforms and I mentioned measures to deal with supply problems which affect prices with respect to supply and demand in the marketplace.

Mr. Lawrence: You've been talking about it for ten years.

• (1425)

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the opposition likes to suggest that these complex problems can be dealt with in simplistic ways.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: I tell them—

Mr. Fraser: Ten years.

Mr. Allmand: I tell them that they cannot be dealt with in simplistic ways.

Mr. Fraser: Ten years.

Mr. Allmand: I will keep the floor, Mr. Speaker, until the opposition—

Mr. Fraser: Ten years you have been playing around with it.

Mr. Allmand: The hon. member—

Mr. Fraser: Ten years.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Fraser: Ten years.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, may I have an opportunity to finish answering the question?

Mr. Fraser: You have had ten years.

Mr. Allmand: The hon. member's party has been in power in several provinces for more than ten years and they have not solved any problems yet.

Mr. Fraser: It is your fault, Warren.

Mr. Speaker: A final supplementary; the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the minister with care. He talked about increasing supply and improving competition. He will have the complete support of my party on serious measures. We agree that in the final analysis, long-range solutions are required.

I repeat my serious question to him: for consumers who are facing rising prices now, in 1979, will the government not do anything more this year to bring down the constant rate of escalation of prices?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, as I have answered on previous occasions, we are looking at different alternatives to deal with the short-term problem. But the prediction for this year is that there will be a moderation in food prices as the year goes on. The prediction for 1979 is a rate of inflation, with the food index, of between 8 per cent and 10 per cent, compared with 14 per cent last year.

Mr. McGrath: You said 14 per cent in Winnipeg last week.

Mr. Allmand: The problem is with beef and with imported vegetables and fruits.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): You are the problem.

Mr. Allmand: There is no simple solution with imported food and with the beef cycle.

An hon. Member: The problem is with you.

EXCISE TAX

POSSIBILITY OF ABOLISHING TAX ON JEWELLERY—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Since the Canadian Jewellers Association has recently submitted a report to the Department of Finance requesting the abolition of excise taxes on jewellery as a means of discouraging the illegal jewellery trade which it estimates at $230 million a year and considering that this industry, which employs some 19,000 workers, is largely Canadian-owned, can the Minister inform this House if he has any intention of doing something in this regard?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this measure is of a budgetary nature. I am taking note of the hon. member's recommendations. We have indeed received such a request from Canadian jewellers and this will be considered within the budgetary proposals for the next budget.

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. I would be very much tempted at this time to ask the minister when he expects to table his next budget.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, when the state of the economy makes it necessary.

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, now that it has been proved that some sectors suffer more than others from the burden of the manufacturer's tax, whether it be because of fraud as in the case of jewellers or because of excessive competition in others, would the minister be willing to recommend selective excise tax cuts similar to the provincial sales tax in Quebec which, as we all know, had positive results which at times were excellent?

Mr. Chrétien: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out to the hon. member that selective cuts in the federal sales tax were made way before the provincial cuts. Taxes on clothing, textiles and footwear were removed in 1973; last year, the Quebec government merely imitated what the federal government had done a few years before. As for other suggestions similar to those of the hon. member, I say to him that they will be looked into when the budget is being prepared.

AIR TRANSPORT

RATIONALIZATION OF REGIONAL AIR CARRIERS—POSSIBLE MERGER OF QUEBECAIR AND NORDAIR

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Since we on this side are awaiting eagerly the promised policy statement on the rationalization of regional air carriers, could the minister say whether he is trying for one regional airline from Newfoundland through to the Great Lakes and, indeed, beyond to Winnipeg?

Can the minister see, as an interim measure, the merger of Quebecair and Nordair headquartered in Montreal with Quebecair in control, as is predicted widely in the airline industry?

● (1430)

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the objectives we have in mind are to have a stronger position for the regionals and the regional operation, but this need not at this point in time create any concern at all on the part of any of the employees or managements in the regional.

I see the developments as taking place, whatever they may be, over time and in a way which takes into full account the concerns of the people involved who are doing a very good job with the operations at the moment. I see, in short, a time for strengthening the regionals' operation and, therefore, also some significant time in finding the right kind of combinations to produce these stronger results. It is not a matter one can dictate easily in any way because of the fact that many different investors, many different interests and many possible combinations do exist, and the steps to get to the final destination of stronger regional operation in the eastern half of the country are, indeed, many and optional.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I realize it is not an easy matter to deal with, but I still do not know how close we now are to a policy statement on the rationalization of airlines.

I have a copy of a petition signed by 620 Nordair employees and delivered to the minister last Friday, urging him to leave Nordair under Air Canada's control for an indefinite period. What is the minister's response to the petition, and does it leave open the possibility that Nordair will not be re-privatized within the time-frame of a year; or if Air Canada cannot find a satisfactory buyer, could this leave open the possibility of the government setting up a separate Crown corporation to rationalize the airline?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I would be very interested to know whether, in putting the question that way, the hon. member is stating his view that it would be desirable to leave Nordair—

An hon. Member: Give us your view.

Mr. Lang: —in the ownership of Air Canada, because I heard the leader of his party—

An hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Lang: —make a clearcut demand to go in the opposite direction. I would like to know whether, once again, we are hearing two views here from the Conservative party, which is not unusual.

I was really directing my remarks to the petition when I emphasized that I believe, in whatever combination or operation may emerge, the employees of Nordair and the management of Nordair can be sure their good job and their effective operation of that airline will be recognized. They need have no concern about that, whatever the combinations are that emerge. It will develop in a relatively short period of time, I am satisfied, but I think the hon. member will appreciate that it is difficult to forecast the precise next step or result when so many combinations of investment interest are involved, as well as the interests of the various employees and airlines.

An hon. Member: Another broken promise.

THE CONSTITUTION

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Justice—and he has disappeared.

An hon. Member: That is what happened to justice; it disappeared, too.

Mr. McGrath: He is out getting a fifth.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that is more applause than the Minister of Justice gets anywhere else at any time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I wish to ask him this. As the custodian of the constitutional rights of Canadians by virtue of his position, and also by the designation of the Prime Minister, I would ask him when the government changed its mind regarding the bringing in of constitutional amendments and the need of a constitutional amendment being secured and the constitution returned to Canada by the end of 1978. At what time did the government change its mind?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the government has not changed its decision in that regard; those were the objectives the government set for itself at various times; like any government, at times we cannot achieve them since we have to proceed by way of consultation with the provinces, and we know those do not always go as fast as we would like them to.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I ask him that question simply to ascertain whether the Prime Minister was speaking for the Government of Canada the other day in the city of Toronto when he was on a voyage for the discovery of votes which he ascertained were not there.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: He has not come back since.

Mr. Diefenbaker: At that time, the Prime Minister made this statement about the Queen, "She is good and she is nice, but her position is one of inherited privilege, something that democrats cringe at". He went on to say, "The Queen needs to be updated".

Has the government a policy of updating the Queen?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: What is the nature of that updating? Surely parliament should know because, after all, the Prime Minister said at one time he was going to abolish the Queen, and at another time that she was no good to Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: That is not true.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You have no respect.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, it is music to hear the annoyance expressed when the truth is told. I ask, what is the plan of the government to update the Queen in order to make her modern, more democratic and less authoritarian?

An hon. Member: Leave the Queen alone; we love her.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, the words of the right hon. member are a disgrace, and he must have been quoting from the Toronto Sun.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Windsor West.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will hear the right hon. member at three o'clock. I have recognized the hon. member for Windsor West.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: In all the years I have been here—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have heard the right hon. member rise on a question of privilege. I will follow what has been our practice now for almost three years, by taking the question of privilege at three o'clock. I recognize the hon. member for Windsor West.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker—

TRANSPORT

POWERS AND DUTIES OF CTC IN CONNECTION WITH ENVIRONMENTAL IMPACT OF RAILWAY FACILITIES

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. I would ask whether the government will now add provisions to Bill C-20 on the powers and duties of the Canadian Transport Commission in order to set limits on the commission's present authority to rehear the same matter and to confirm that it can take into account the full environmental impact of the building of railway facilities, and generally to ensure a fair balance between the railway companies and private citizens in terms of real ability to have access to all procedures connected with the commission.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have heard what I take to be a representation from the hon. member suggesting that we make that kind of provision in Bill C-20. I will say to the hon. member that I would be prepared to give consideration to that kind of issue and that type of approach when the bill is in committee.

LEWVAN, SASKATCHEWAN, RAIL LINE—REPORT OF PRAC

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport. As the minister knows, the Prairie Rail Action Committee has tabled its report in the natural flow to the Canadian Transport Commission and then to the minister.

Under what logical or political reason did the minister singularly pick out the Lewvan line in Saskatchewan, in the riding of the hon. member for Assiniboia, and unilaterally take that line and place it into the basic network without consideration of any of the other lines?

An hon. Member: It is already in the basic network.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member has confirmed what I said the other day, that it would help in criticizing the various reports, whether they be the PRAC report or the Hall commission report, if members of the Tory and the New Democratic parties would read one or both of these reports.

If the hon. member for Battle River had read the PRAC report or the Hall commission report, he would have found that the Lewvan line in fact was recommended for the permanent network by the Hall commission and was transfered to the permanent network by the Hall commission, and it was in rather exceptional circumstances that on examining that line and some others, the Prairie Rail Action Committee indicated it felt we should reverse that action.

● (1440)

I presume that in commending the Hall commission report, as hon. members opposite have, they commend what we did in putting the Lewvan line into the permanent network and, therefore, should commend us in saying, as we did the other day, that we do not intend to change that and it remains in the permanent line. It is not by way of exception; it is continuing what the Hall commission recommended.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport has just made this great chamber into a house of ill-rebuke. The minister, knowing very well that the position taken by the Prairie Rail Action Committee is a more recent report than the Hall commission report, has unilaterally taken that line and put it back into the basic network.

Would the minister give this House the criteria, apart from the Hall decision, as to what lines he intends to put back in, and will those criteria apply to other railway lines or is this merely to be used as a pre-campaign gimmick to give lines back to any member on that side of the House?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Battle River not only has not read the report; he does not understand the simple answer which I gave him. That very simple answer is that the Lewvan line was put into the permanent network after the Hall commission report and in accordance with the recommendations of the Hall commission report. No one but the government, by order in council, could in any way remove that line from the permanent network. Certainly, the Prairie Rail Action Committee could not.

The Prairie Rail Action Committee made a recommendation which suggested that we remove it and open up the question of the future of that line again. The other day we said no, we will not; we are standing on the Hall commission recommendation and our action in making that line part of the permanent network.

I commend to the hon. member for Battle River the reading of one or both of those reports. He owes it to his constituents so long as he purports to serve them.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Liberal selectivity.

Mr. Paproski: Liberal patronage.

Mr. Clark: Patronage by any other name—

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT'S INSTRUCTIONS TO CANADIAN DELEGATION AT BELGRADE CONFERENCE

Mr. Yuri Shymko (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the upcoming Madrid review conference of the Helsinki Accords, is it true that the head of the Canadian delegation in Belgrade was instructed by the government not to officially protest the arrest of individual members of the Helsinki public monitoring groups in the Soviet Union by naming violators and victims, as was done by the U.S. delegation and, if so, why?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me notice that he intended to ask this question, although it was only one hour ago. As I told him at that time, I would prefer to take the question as notice and give the hon. member a more detailed answer and provide the necessary documentation with regard to the Belgrade conference at a later date.

COMMUNICATIONS

ROLE OF CABLE TV OPERATORS IN SATELLITE EARTH STATIONS' PROGRAM

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Communications. Yesterday, the minister dealt another blow to public development and control over our broadcasting system by announcing that cable operators would be able to own satellite earth stations in order to set up a national cable network.

In view of the minister's own admission, in her speech of February 23, that cable TV has contributed to the reduction of domestically-produced programming, and the fact that this announcement was made prior to the release of the Clyne report on the future broadcasting, can the minister explain why she bowed so quickly to the cable operators before a full and public discussion could take place?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the matter of the earth stations is outside the mandate of the Clyne commission, as I stated in the House the other day.

As for the impact of the policy I announced yesterday on the Canadian telecommunications system, I am afraid the hon. member does not realize that this policy will result in better and more services in the remote and rural areas, which is one of the main objectives of our policies. Also, the ownership of earth stations in the hands of the broadcasters or cable operators will result, I am sure, in diminution of the cost of those services to the consumers, and I would expect that the hon. member would be very much in favour of that.

Mr. Symes: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that one of the mandates of the Clyne commission was to discuss the feasibility of paid TV, and that the main rationale which cable operators give for having a national network is to introduce pay television, I fail to see the minister's argument that it falls outside the jurisdiction of that commission.

However, one of the other things which the minister states in her press release is that this new policy will encourage Canadian manufacture of earth stations and that there will be a large industrial benefit for Canada. In view of the reports that the U.S. manufacturers of earth stations will have saturated their domestic market within a year or two, I would like to know what guarantees the minister can give us that those American manufacturers will not, in turn, dump their products on the Canadian market and that the private cable operators will, therefore, purchase the American earth stations which are cheaper than the product of the Canadian industry?

Mrs. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, we have been working very closely with manufacturers of earth stations in order to let them know in advance what would be the technical requirements for those earth stations, and we in turn plan to approve technical standards so that the Canadian manufacturers will be well aware of the kind of requirements that we will need for those earth stations. They are preparing to offer that product to cable operators, broadcasters and other telecommunicators who might be needing them.

With regard to the possibility of American manufacturers dumping on the Canadian market, I believe that such an occurrence is very remote since our requirements do not coincide with the requirements of the United States. We are hopeful that Canadian manufacturers will take advantage of this new policy in order to develop the product. As a matter of fact, in advance of that policy some telecommunicators have been placing orders with Canadian companies, and Canadian companies have been able to bid quite competitively with American companies.

Oral Questions

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REASON FOR ABSENCE OF PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the acting government House leader and it arises from the very real concern that some of us in this House have for the health of the Prime Minister, who has not been in the House for over a week. Where is the Prime Minister? Is he ill?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is at his home. He cannot be in the House today, but I hope he will be here tomorrow.

Mr. Paproski: Shall we send him a "get well" card?

FUTURE OF WILLIAM HEAD INSTITUTION, VANCOUVER ISLAND

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. Would he be able to comment on reports which are circulating around southern Vancouver Island to the effect that the William Head penal institution is to be phased out by the government within the next two or three years?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, as I announced in Kamloops on December 14, the only institution that we are planning to close in British Columbia is the British Columbia penitentiary.

HUMAN RIGHTS ACT

APPLICATION TO FEDERAL LEGISLATION AND DEPARTMENTS

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice, who will have heard yesterday the curious view of his colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, that protecting human rights is a waste of money if it applies to federal agencies which already have an appeal procedure.

The minister will know that there are a number of federal agencies which have appeal procedures: the Canadian Citizenship Act, the Customs Act, the Divorce Act, the Excise Tax Act, the Expropriation Act, the Pension Benefits Standards Act—it is a long, long list. I would like to ask the minister, is it the policy of the Government of Canada that the Human Rights Act does not apply to any federal legislation or any federal department where there is already an existing appeal procedure? Is that the position, or is there a special case for the Department of Immigration?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it is not a matter of policy; it is a matter of law. The question which arises in that particular case is whether or not there is a conflict as to interpretation under the Immigration Act and under the Canadian Human Rights Act, and that is all that is at question.

[Mrs. Sauvé.]

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the House leader of my party, in a statement which I am sure is supported by other parties in this House, indicated that there would be agreement on the part of this party and of other parties in the House of Commons were the Minister of Justice to seek the authority of parliament to change the practice and to table in this House of Commons the legal opinion that has been given in relation to the application of the Human Rights Act to the Department of Immigration, where this case has already arisen, or to other cases where there are appeal procedures, and if there is any logic to the government's position it might apply later on.

This House has a right to know if an act which it passed in good faith is going to be consistently frustrated by the Government of Canada. Since the minister can expect that he would get that agreement from the House of Commons, will he seek the agreement to take the extraordinary procedure of tabling the legal opinion of the Government of Canada so we will know what future assaults there might be upon the Human Rights Act?

● (1450)

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, there is not one act at stake, but two acts that have been passed by this parliament. The first one is the Immigration Act and the second is the Human Rights Act. Both acts were proposed by this government, they have been considered by parliament and parliamentary committees and adopted by parliament.

The matter is now before the courts. The arguments will be made before the courts, and the courts will decide what is the correct interpretation.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the minister will surely know that the language in the Human Rights Act, in its second section stating the purpose of the act, says that it is to extend the present laws of Canada. He will also know that in that legislation there is one explicit exclusion and that relates to the Indian Act. Clearly, the purpose of this legislation was to apply to all other federal agencies. Clearly, the Minister of Employment and Immigration is arguing that his department is exceptional because there are appeal procedures.

We need to know whether that argument which he put forward is being put forward by other departments that also have appeal procedures, which are legion. We need to know the legal position of the Government of Canada and we need to know the policy of the Government of Canada. Will the Minister of Justice stop hiding the policy position of the Government of Canada, and will he seek the agreement of this House of Commons to make clear the legal position upon which, presumably, this most extraordinary attempt has been based by the Minister of Employment and Immigration to undercut and frustrate the Human Rights Act?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, there is a very good reason why there is a rule of this House that legal opinions of the Department of Justice are not tabled. That rule has been followed for the last 112 years, and I do not intend to break it. What the hon. member is doing is trying to argue the case which should be argued before the courts.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: That is the end of the Human Rights Act.

AGRICULTURE

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR FARMERS' LOSSES BECAUSE OF HEAVY SNOWFALLS

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew North-Nipissing East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the amiable Minister of Agriculture. Ever since many farmers and feed mill operators in the upper Ottawa Valley area of eastern Ontario and western Quebec have lost a large number of valuable buildings which collapsed as a result of unusually heavy snowfalls, my colleague the hon. member for Pontiac and I have received many representations from throughout the farm community for assistance.

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has his question, will he put it forth, please.

Mr. Hopkins: Because there is no insurance to cover such losses, and because requests for such assistance must come to the federal government through the provinces, has the minister received any request from either the Ontario or Quebec governments for shared financial assistance and, if so, what has been his approach?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, but I will check.

LOTO CANADA

RECOMMENDATION THAT CANCELLATION CLAUSES BE INCLUDED IN GENERAL INSTRUMENTS' CONTRACTS

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Supply and Services relating to the Loto Select disaster.

Did the minister's department, when they were serving as consultants to Loto Canada, recommend the inclusion of a cancellation clause in the multimillion dollar contracts which were signed with General Instruments? If such a recommendation was made, was it followed by Loto Canada?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, yes, the recommendation was made by DSS to the management of Loto Canada.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, would the minister answer the last half of the question? Was that advice accepted by Loto Canada?

Mr. De Bané: No, Mr. Speaker, it was not accepted by the management of Loto Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. De Bané: And the reason for it, of course, can be given by the management of Loto Canada and the minister who reports to the House and who may be the only minister who cares for amateur sport.

An hon. Member: She is certainly amateur.

EARTH STATION SATELLITE POLICY—CLYNE COMMITTEE REPORT

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications in regard to her press release on earth station satellite policy. I was interested in the answer she gave to the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie.

Since the Clyne commission was mandated to give a report restructuring telecommunications in the whole system, I would like the minister to point out in the press release commissioning the Clyne commission just where the earth station satellite policy was accepted. Also, in view of the fact that the Clyne commission was supposed to report by the end of the month, could the minister, when answering the question, tell us when we can expect the Clyne commission report?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the Clyne committee report will be on schedule. My understanding is that the committee has now finished its work and that the recommendations have been signed by all members of the committee. Apart from some editing having to take place, the report will be ready and will be given to me by the deadline I was expecting.

As for the hon. member's question about whether this was part of the mandate, the mandate of that committee was to give me an idea, among other things, of the structure of telecommunications of the future. Of course, earth stations belong to that structure. The matter of the earth stations has been under review for over a year, and it is important at this particular time to introduce the necessary flexibility into the system and also to maximize the use of the satellite. Those are principles which have been already affirmed by me, and therefore I proceeded with the change in the policy on ownership of earth stations despite the fact that the Clyne report has not yet been given to me.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the minister's statement, in effect, indicates a new policy which is supposed to be a new revolution in terms of technology to enable cable operators and/or broadcasters to take Canadian signals from Canadian stations thereby, in effect giving Canadians more opportunity to see the CBC, the CTV Global and/or proceedings in this House of Commons, why in the name of technology and/or science and/or bureaucracy did it take two years of study, not one year and/or the ten years that we have had of Telesat policy?

At one time, ten years ago, we were the leader, and because of the moratorium on any new initiatives we are now slipping behind and are trying to catch up.

Mrs. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, the review did not last two years, as the hon. member has suggested. I would like to look at the date on which I made the announcement in the Canada Gazette.

An hon. Member: November, 1977.

Mrs. Sauvé: It was 1977. At any rate, I took the necessary time in order to have that review carried out cautiously. The reason this policy was not set up until today is, of course, the fact that technological revolution and progress only now allows us to be freer with the matter of earth stations. The new technology allows transmission on a new band, which is the 12 and 14 gigahertz, and therefore the earth stations are less complicated than those which are needed in the 4 and 6 gigahertz range. It is really the progress of technology that allows for a change in policy. So we must take advantage of technological progress in order to expand the service, make it cheaper and make the whole operation more flexible.

TRADE

GATT NEGOTIATIONS ON NON-TARIFF TRADE BARRIERS

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Industry Trade and Commerce I direct my question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Can the minister indicate the progress with the United States in the GATT negotiations with relation to the area of non-tariff trade barriers?

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am not at this point in a position to report to the hon. gentleman on the progress achieved in those negotiations.

PROPOSED SHERBROOK-McGREGOR OVERPASS IN WINNIPEG—COMMITMENT OF FUNDS FOR RAILWAY RELOCATION STUDY

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport? In view of statements made in Winnipeg a few days ago by his colleague, the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations, which were favourable to a government commitment of money for a railway relocation study in Winnipeg rather than the building of the Sherbrook-McGregor overpass, can the Minister of Transport say whether he will shortly be announcing a commitment of funds for that survey?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated that if the province agrees that the federal funds contained in the urban transportation assistance program be used for such a study, we would certainly go along with that. I think, in the interests of the total long-term future of Winnipeg, that does sound like a very good idea. I had not wanted to interfere in that essentially local decision, but I certainly support the further study of it and I would be glad to go that way.

NATIONAL REVENUE

CHILD TAX CREDIT FORMS

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. It has to do with the means test form that he prepared for Canadian mothers' use respecting the child tax credit.

The minister, in answer to questions from this side of the House last week, repeatedly said that the form was really simple and very easy to fill out. If that is the case, why is the Canadian government offering local groups large sums of money to help mothers fill in these forms?

• (1500)

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of National Revenue and Minister of State (Small Business)): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is putting words in my mouth. I said that for a first-time filer, naturally it is a complicated process. Thanks to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, a good many volunteers, and the offices of members on this side, mothers are finding it quite possible, in the overwhelming proportion of cases, to fill out this form, which is not a means test as the hon. member so pejoratively described it.

WELFARE

REQUEST FOR PRECISION RESPECTING CHILD TAX CREDIT

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

I should like to know, in view of the seriousness of the situation, whether she has made specific representations to the Minister of National Revenue to clarify and simplify these matters. If she feels that everything is clear just now, could she advise the House why the government has paid various groups to help people fill in these forms?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I should like to advise the hon. member that the Minister of National Revenue issued a press release some time ago to assure the general public that next year only one short and simple form would replace the two used this year because the fiscal system was already in place. I should like to add that the opposition has tried to kill this program by suggesting that we are faced with an administrative disaster, which is simply not true. We have already received 375,000 forms from Quebec and 350,000 from Ontario, of which only 15 could not be identified. This will prove immediately to the hon. member that there is no disaster and that this program is progressing quite satisfactorily. In reply to the last part of his question, I must say that on my own initiative I have provided community groups with small amounts of money to help Canadian mothers participate for the first time in a program which is not automatic. I have nothing else to add.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DIEFENBAKER—EXPRESSION USED BY MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I usually do not rise on a question of privilege. I realize that in the crossfire in the House of Commons things are sometimes said that ought not to be said. However, I rose today when a minister of the Crown holding the responsible position of Minister of Justice (Mr. Lalonde) made a statement that cannot be justified in any way. Using expressions like that used by him indicate that he was caught by a portion of his anatomy that I am not going to refer to particularly.

I now refer to the statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) as reported in the Toronto Sun.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: When sensibilities are exacerbated, sense then ends so far as those who suffer therefrom. I refer to the words that were used. The heading is "Royal Status Makes Democrats Cringe, Says Trudeau". He has not denied it. Of course, he has not been here and has not had the opportunity to do that. It then says, "Queen Needs Update: PM". The article is written by Ian Harvey, a responsible writer, and reads as follows:

> The Queen's role in Canada "needs updating to the 20th century," Prime Minister Trudeau said yesterday.
> Trudeau told a bearpit session at York University's Osgoode Hall that while she has many "pluses there are also some negatives."
> "She's good, she's nice, she's everything," he said. But her position is one of "inherited privilege—something all democrats cringe at."

I quoted what was said and I can use the words of the hon. gentleman—they were a disgrace. When he starts giving opinions on the law as he did a few minutes ago to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), I remind the Minister of Justice that he has a record unequalled in this country. In all the years he has never been reversed on appeal, because he never had a case.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: He has not yet got over the experience he had in the House of Commons the other day when the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands referred to an article in Reader's Digest.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have surely extended the right hon. member full leeway to develop his question of privilege. I take it that he has taken issue with the expression used by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lalonde) today. As I recall the last answer of the minister, the one to which the right hon. member has referred, it was his use of the word disgrace in respect of the right hon. member's question. I think he has developed that point. I surely cannot let him go on now and make an attack on the minister respecting other days in the House.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I do not make an attack. I tell the truth about the falsehood that he told.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not expect a withdrawal from him because he does not realize what he has done. I once heard this expression used in the British House of Commons and immediately the Speaker called the individual who used it to order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I wonder if we could get order among this tribe.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would like to know if the right hon. member is asking me to examine the term disgrace and determine whether it is an unparliamentary term. I do not believe it is. If the right hon. member has precedents to that effect, I would be glad to hear them.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You have established my point, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much.

Mr. Speaker: I do not sense a procedural point in the presentation of the right hon. member. I have a notice of privilege from the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick).

MR. DICK—LOTO CANADA—PRESIDENT'S REPORT INTO LOTO SELECT PROJECT

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to raise a question of privilege of which I have given you notice, and notice to the minister involved. The point arises out of a motion under Standing Order 43 which I put on June 26, 1978, and to which the minister replied in a letter dated June 28, 1978. In the letter signed by the minister in ink, in her own hand I believe, it states:

> This letter is in reference to your question under Standing Order 43 made Friday, June 23, 1978. I will send you a letter received from Loto Canada concerning the letting of a three year contract to General Instrument (Canada) Limited.

There are two other paragraphs which do not pertain to this, asking whether I wanted a briefing and so on. The letter which I was then sent is dated June 26, 1978, and is signed by Mr. Cousineau, the president of Loto Canada.

I have had to go through an awful lot of correspondence as well as a report which was filed in this House on February 21 to make sure there was accuracy and that I would not be bringing up what may be an error in a question of privilege. There has been much checking and verification. I believe this is an important question of privilege; there are many anomalies, contradictions and oversights in the report which was tabled on Wednesday, February 21, as a report from the president of Loto Canada. Generally, the report follows a number of order paper questions which I had put down, starting at No. 1,030. It certainly does not go into the matter in any detail as I had requested.

● (1510)

The Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mrs. Campagnolo) tabled in the House a document which she said constituted a report of Loto Canada to her regarding the resolution of contracts having to do with the abandoned Loto Select games. I served notice immediately that Appendix B in the table of documents which purports to be a copy of a letter sent by Guy Cousineau, the president of Loto Canada, to the minister on June 26, 1978, is in fact not that letter.

On June 28 of last year the minister sent to me a letter signed by herself in which she enclosed a photocopy of the letter of June 26, 1978, signed by Guy Cousineau. The letter the minister tabled is, in fact, an altered version, and a significant paragraph has been deleted.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, the nineteenth edition of Erskine May states clearly on page 141, under the title "Presenting Forged, Falsified or Fabricated Documents to Either House or Committees of Either House":

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

> It is a breach of privilege to present or cause to be presented to either House or to committees of either House forged, falsified or fabricated documents with intent to deceive such House or committees or to subscribe the names of other persons or fictitious names to documents intended to be presented—

I am not suggesting that a wrong name has been added or that a name has been forged, but I am saying it is a fabricated document. Under the next heading on the same page, "Conspiracy to Deceive Either House or Committees of Either House," we read:

> —persons who present false, forged or fabricated documents to either House or to committees of either House are guilty of a breach of privilege.

Under the third heading on that page, "Abstracting or Altering Documents Presented to the House", Erskine May states:

> To abstract any record or other document from the custody of the Clerk or to falsify or improperly alter any records of, or documents presented to either House, or committees of either House, will constitute a contempt.

As I have stated, on June 28 the minister sent me a covering letter, which I have read in part, together with a copy of a letter from Mr. Cousineau to herself dated June 26 outlining the circumstances surrounding Loto Canada's computer game, Loto Select. Now I find in the report tabled by the minister, half way down page seven, the following:

> With no time available to eliminate problems after commencement only proven performance was considered acceptable. Potential performance or hypothetical capability would constitute an unacceptable risk as prejudicing either credibility and/or time limits. (This topic is dealt with at somewhat greater length in the letter contained in Appendix B of June 26, 1978).

Now I find that in the report tabled by the minister there exists this Appendix B which purports to be a letter dated June 26, 1978, from Mr. Cousineau to herself. I would draw the attention of the House to the fact that this letter as tabled appears to have been altered and subsequently signed, with a few changes in punctuation—a few commas have been added or deleted as is normal, I guess, when retyping. The margins have been reset, and starting at the bottom of page two of the letter they shift one paragraph over to the top of page three, so you start to get caught up when they delete the paragraph.

Page one is identical, word for word and paragraph for paragraph, as between the two versions. Page two begins with a paragraph saying: "Accordingly, following from the second of the foregoing—" and ends, in the last sentence, "In the circumstances, I believe this attitude on our part was both necessary and justified." On the other hand, the letter which was sent to me dated June 26 started on page two with the words: "Accordingly, following from the second of the foregoing points—", words identical to those in the other letter, but there is another paragraph on that page; in the tabled version that paragraph has been slipped over to the top of page three and everything slides down a little bit. So it gets to be on page three, and a paragraph is missing.

On page three of the original letter of June 26, a copy of which I left with your office, Mr. Speaker, on serving notice, there is a paragraph which states:

> On balance, therefore, and keeping in mind that the tendering process alone would consume between three and four months of the limited pre-1980 time period, the corporation judged that it was fully justified in entering into a sole-sourced contract.

Considering that much of the debate has been concerned with tendering, or lack of tendering, and the sole sourcing of a large contract directed to an American firm, it is odd that that paragraph should have been omitted in its entirety from the version tabled in the House of Commons on Wednesday last. It was a key paragraph of the original letter. In it, the president of the corporation outlined Loto Canada's reasons for sole-sourcing this important and costly contract to an American firm. Yet in the document tabled in the House the paragraph has been deleted, and the letter signed again by the president of Loto Canada as if it had been the letter of January 26, 1978. All other paragraphs and words in the two versions are identical. Mr. Speaker, I believe this constitutes a prima facie case of privilege.

I should also like to state that there are other anomalies in the document tabled by the minister which contradict previous statements made by her in the House and which would, it seems to me, lead to the conclusion that the hon. lady has misled the House at least on occasions in relation to Loto Select. I feel that this alteration of a document before it was tabled constitutes such a flagrant breach of privilege that it should immediately be brought to the attention of the House. Should Your Honour find that a prima facie question of privilege has been established, on the basis of the references I have made to Erskine May and other authorities, I would be prepared to move:

That the tabling in the House of Commons on Wednesday February 21, by the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport of a report on the circumstances surrounding Loto Canada's computer game Loto Select, a part of which was a letter, Appendix B, which purports to be a copy of the letter sent by the president of Loto Canada to the minister on June 26, 1978 regarding Loto Select, but in fact which is a significantly altered version of that letter, be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

● (1520)

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the courtesy of the hon. gentleman. I received notice of his motion, but it would have been more helpful if the motion had said what it was the hon. member wished me to examine. The hon. member's motion refers to Loto Canada's resolution of contracts for its Loto Select game, this being his first opportunity to raise this question of privilege after these anomalies and omissions came to his attention.

The hon. member did not know of the alleged anomalies and omissions when he called my office today. He did not know them yesterday when he raised this, so I have not been accorded the privilege of knowing whatever prior knowledge he may have had of what it was he was going to bring forward today.

We know that the prime matter to be brought forward is whether there was an attempt to deceive. This is the essential element which has been brought forward by the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick).

Naturally it will be necessary for me to consult the officers of Loto Canada and to determine from the president if indeed there was a substantial change, and it will be necessary for me to bring this information back to the House. That is the question concerning the letter itself.

However, the hon. member once again today raised the question of what he has referred to as the American purchase. In this regard I can say that the hon. member himself was guilty of irresponsible and reprehensible behaviour when he attended the Ontario unveiling of a software purchase and said that it was an all-Canadian purchase. The fact is that the Ontario Lottery is and was as dependent upon American software as was Loto Canada at that time. The hon. member has raised this repeatedly in the House, and he has done so again today, so I would like to address myself to that.

The Ontario and Quebec games are so dependent on American software that the most recent edition of an American trade publication contains an article, which I want to table today, entitled "Datatrol Inc. of Hudson Massachusetts' new programmable wagering terminal" which says, and I quote:

The first installations of this terminal took place last November in the Canadian provinces of Ontario and Quebec under the direction of the Ontario Lottery Corporation and Loto Quebec.

The hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton has repeatedly said that Loto Canada's decision to lease from an American subsidiary was a wrongful act, and he based this assertion on the fact that Ontario was able to make purchases in like manner from a Canadian corporation which, in fact, it did not. That is demonstrated in the documents which I table herewith.

The hon. member referred to some fine phrases by opposition members from time to time. He has in fact backed the Canadian computer industry, which I think is commendable. However, the fact is that last year the Canadian computer industry did not yet have the capability to develop an integrated gaming system of the kind required by Loto Select as well as by Ontario and Quebec. It is because of this, and because of Loto Canada's desire in its capacity as a Crown corporation to support the government's over-all industrial strategy, that Loto Canada has initiated through the Department of Supply and Services a research granting system of up to $500,000 in order to develop Canadian production of gaming and lottery technology programs.

The hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton castigated me in his news conference for having been the minister responsible for a corporation which leased from an American company, but he himself was false when he made—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I allowed the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) some leeway. The minister has refuted one or two peripheral points, but the essential point remains the one about the discrepancy between the two documents. I think I am correct that the minister began by indicating that she would return to the House at a later time with some information on that matter.

Mrs. Campagnolo: Mr. Speaker, since I was not accorded the courtesy of an actual request to come back with a report from the president relative to the letter, I said at the beginning of my remarks that I reserve my right to do that, and that is what I wish to make known now.

Mr. Speaker: The minister, of course, enjoys the right, as any hon. member would, to research her side of the case and determine the nature of the discrepancy the hon. member described. Therefore she will return to the House as soon as possible with whatever explanation is forthcoming from her in that regard. The minister put a document forward, and the procedural nature of this is a little obscure to me during the course of this kind of argument. If the House wants to give the minister leave to table that document, I presume it might be appropriate to do so now. That would keep our procedures from being somewhat varied in the circumstances. Is the minister at liberty to table this document forthwith?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: So ordered.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, looking ahead to the defence which will be offered I just want to indicate that it is our view—and I say this with respect—that the question raised by the minister as to whether there was an intent to deceive is not a question with respect to the matter of privilege. That is a question for the committee to decide. That is a matter which goes to the committee. The question before the House is whether there was a discrepancy between two documents. It is a question of a discrepancy, by omission, between the two documents. That is an assertion which has been made, and I think when the minister returns to the House she should direct herself to that point, bearing in mind the principle Your Honour set out in a lengthy and, I think, very learned and acceptable judgment involving the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) where that was the precise issue.

That is the question, and that is the matter upon which I presume Your Honour would find that there is a prima facie case. The matter would then go to the committee, assuming that a majority of the members of this House voted to send it to the committee. That was the issue in the case of the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham. That is the matter about which my hon. friend opposite is grunting. In that case the government voted against the openness which this House wanted with respect to that question.

The last matter is that it might be helpful to the House if, in anticipation of what the minister is going to say, and dealing with the narrow question which the House must consider—as to whether there are any other documents which ought to be tabled—perhaps the minister could undertake now to table in advance of her argument—perhaps later today when we would be prepared to give her consent—any other documents, the contracts particularly, to which she is referring, because that is the matter which is of interest to the country. I know the minister smiles a lot, but that is a matter which is of interest to the country, and if the minister could undertake to disclose the whole of the position taken by the government with respect to this matter, it would be a most refreshing undertaking from this government, and particularly from this minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think it is wise to weigh the arguments on both sides, but I think it is wise also to learn all the facts before we get into the law. The minister has indicated that she wants to investigate the matter and return to the House. It seems to me that that would finalize the factual aspect of it. Then we could begin to discuss what procedural decisions have to be made. However, until we know all the facts I do not know how I could entertain any arguments at this stage. We ought to wait for the minister to make all the facts known before we start to argue the law.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to get into the merits or the facts. We look forward with anticipation to the minister's explanations, but I do hope that I, and other hon. members who wish to participate by making submissions to the Chair as to whether or not a prima facie case exists with regard to the question of privilege raised, will be given the opportunity to make those submissions to the Chair before any ruling is made as to whether or not there is a prima facie case.

• (1530)

Mr. Speaker: Once again I do not know how I can prejudge that until I hear what the facts are.

I have notice from the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) about a question of privilege.

MR. TOWERS—REMARKS MADE BY MINISTER OF NATIONAL REVENUE

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege concerning remarks of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Abbott) yesterday related to my motion under Standing Order 43 on income tax returns of some Red Deer constituents included with those found in boxes in an Ottawa building, unguarded and without adequate security. Every member of parliament is responsible to his or her constituents, and part of that duty is to act on their behalf. Surely no member of this House is to be denied the right to protect those who elected him, particularly involving confidential information entrusted to the Minister of National Revenue.

The general public understandably does not, or has not up until now, been concerned about legislation authorizing or compelling the minister to release income tax returns to another department or agency of government. When they file income tax returns, they are obeying and complying with a federal law.

The minister said in his question of privilege yesterday:

I take exception to the hon. members being able to communicate to the public at large that Revenue Canada does not guard its income tax returns with great care.

Had the income tax files in question been "guarded", I would not have moved my motion yesterday. I might add that the boxes with the income tax returns in question were shown on television, giving them far wider publicity and greater impact than verbal representations within this chamber.

The purpose of my motion was to have the Minister of National Revenue communicate with those persons whose files were released to Statistics Canada to reassure them, and to explain how their income tax returns are being used. If the minister accedes to my request, any adverse effect or doubt as a result of the unguarded confidential files could be satisfactorily resolved, at least to a degree.

I take exception to the implication of the Minister of National Revenue that my motion was an attempt to publicize in any way the boxes of unattended and unprotected income tax returns. Surely the minister, the custodian of millions of income tax returns containing perhaps more personal and confidential detail than those of any other federal department, would not find my request unreasonable or unparliamentary.

By exercising a small degree of co-operation, understanding and tolerance, and by accepting the responsibility of his portfolio, the Minister of National Revenue could regain the confidence of the general public, at the same time reassuring this House and Canadians everywhere that confidential information is protected, or will be in the future.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would say offhand that the hon. member's great irritability has nothing to do with the question of privilege, but I would nevertheless reserve the right of the minister to answer him on his return to the House, if you deem it advisable.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Peace River rising (Mr. Baldwin) on the same question? I know there was another aspect of the minister's intervention yesterday that was raised. I do not know whether or not that is to be pursued.

Mr. Alexander: I am just awaiting my turn, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: In respect of this particular grievance raised by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers), I do not think I should keep it open. It is not a question of privilege; it is not a procedural matter; it is a grievance which the hon. member raised, a disagreement with the minister. We ought to close that matter from the procedural point of view.

However, yesterday the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) gave notice of his intention to raise a question of privilege with respect to another aspect of the minister's intervention, and we should proceed with that now.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. ALEXANDER—RIGHT TO RAISE QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE RESERVED ON BEHALF OF HON. MEMBER FOR CENTRAL NOVA

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for recognizing me. As you know, yesterday I brought to your attention words which I found to be rather offensive and most unparliamentary, directed to and related to the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay). At that time I heard the word "stolen", or an implication in that regard, and it was your suggestion that we examine the blues, which I did, sir. I would refer Your Honour to page 3632 of Hansard of February 27, and I reserve the right of the hon. member for Central Nova to pursue this matter, if he so desires, as I understand he will not be back this week, being on public business as usual. I hope this is the last time I will have to rise on this matter, given the fact it is Wednesday, to protect his rights.

I would like to bring Your Honour's attention to the middle of page 3632 of Hansard where the following is reported:

> MR. ABBOTT: Mr. Speaker, I am still on my point of order—
>
> AN HON. MEMBER: It was a question of privilege.
> MR. ABBOTT: —my question of privilege to confirm that it is not this government or the Minister of National Revenue or the Department of National Revenue that stands in risk of revealing tax forms to the public. It is the hon. member for Central Nova possessed of stolen tax returns—
> MR. ALEXANDER: Stolen?
> MR. ABBOTT: —and this "private dick" in residence in the Tory party has been revealing these forms to the public—

In my view, sir, this calls for an allowance to be given to the hon. member for Central Nova and as well for an opportunity to be given the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Abbott) to see whether or not he still has the foot and mouth disease. I rise now to retain the right, which I know the hon. member for Central Nova wants, to pursue the matter further.

MR. BALDWIN—LOTO CANADA—TABLING OF LETTERS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise simply on a point of order in connection with the question of privilege raised by my colleague, the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick). I am looking to the expedition and simplification of the debate, when it comes, on the question on which Your Honour will have to make a decision. We know that last Wednesday a letter referred to by the hon. member was tabled in the House. As I understand it, the narrow point which Your Honour has to consider, and which perhaps the committee will have to consider, is that the letter is in conflict with what purported to be a similar letter which was sent directly to the hon. member by the minister, which would have the effect of being calculated to deceive the hon. member.

I would urge the minister, under those conditions, to save the time of the House which might be used in reading the entire letter into the record, and to table her letter of June 28, 1978, written to the hon. member, accompanied by what purports to be the letter directed to her written by Guy

Cousineau, dated June 26, 1978. We would then have on the record both letters, and for the benefit of Your Honour and the benefit of members in the House who might want to make a contribution, the matter would be laid out completely.

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I take the representation extremely seriously and I will reserve my decision until tomorrow.

MR. ALEXANDER—RIGHT TO RAISE QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE RESERVED ON BEHALF OF HON. MEMBER FOR CENTRAL NOVA

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the minister has dealt with the point of order raised by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). Now I want to answer the point of order raised by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) who complained about the minister saying that the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) was possessed of stolen tax returns. I see, on reading Hansard, that that is what the minister said. He never said that the hon. member for Central Nova had stolen those documents or knew that the documents were stolen. So there is absolutely nothing wrong in that statement and I ask that the question of privilege be set aside.

Mr. Speaker: I really prefer that we argue these things only once. I do not think there is any point in doing part of the argument today and another part at a later time. The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) has reserved the right of the hon. member involved to take this up. If he takes it up, we will do all of the argument at one time and make a decision then.

MR. COSSITT—DELAY IN ANSWERING QUESTION NO. 19

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I regret that I had already left the House yesterday when the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt) rose on a point of order in reference to question No. 19 on the order paper dealing with an RCMP investigation into the alleged misuse of the unemployment insurance computer in Montreal.

Rather than content himself with inquiring about the status of the question, the hon. member made a number of grave charges against two public servants, naming them both in his remarks. His references to these two officers, coupled with mention of kickbacks, installation of a swimming pool for one officer, cash payments to civil servants, crooks hiding in the civil service and embezzlement, demand an immediate answer. I had hoped to reply before now to question No. 19, but I wanted to ensure that all aspects of the member's allegations had been thoroughly investigated. Now I am able to report the RCMP has revealed that there is no evidence whatever to substantiate any of the hon. member's allegations. I shall be providing a full and detailed reply to question No. 19 as soon as possible, but the hon. member's unfounded charges cannot go unchallenged in the meantime.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

• (1540)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MR. BLAIS—REPLY TO QUESTION NO. 679

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in reply to a matter raised by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) on February 20, 1979, as an item under routine proceedings. The hon. member questioned replies given to him on question No. 679 on the order paper and in a letter dated February 13, 1979, both of which concerned the RCMP Highway Detachment Building located at Steinbach, Manitoba. The reply to the question on the order paper was signed by my parliamentary secretary, and the letter was signed by myself.

The hon. member for Provencher alleged that there was a discrepancy between the answers given to him. I have taken the opportunity of reviewing question No. 679 on the order paper and the correspondence. Question No. 679 asked if the government is planning expansion of the RCMP Highway Detachment Building located at Steinbach, Highway No. 12, and its response was "No". There are no proposals to expand that building. However, as indicated in the letter to the hon. member for Provencher, interior renovations, as well as a new parking lot at the rear of the building, are programmed for the fiscal year 1980-81. I do not consider there is a conflict in the response to question No. 679 vis-à-vis the letter sent to the hon. member. As hon. members opposite word their questions on the order paper with care, the answers also are worded carefully with reference to the questions asked.

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais) was correct in outlining the case. It was pretty well a repeat of what I raised on February 20 as reported at pages Nos. 3412 and 3413 of Hansard.

In the technical sense the minister said I used the word "expand" the detachment building in Steinbach, namely, the rural detachment located on Highway No. 12. The minister made the claim, if I understand him correctly, that if the physical dimensions of the building are not expanded, the square footage of the building, then the building is not expanded. If I interpret him correctly, then the government answered my question correctly by a negative answer of "No". But the minister knows that in "D" Division headquarters in Winnipeg, as well as at RCMP detachment offices in Steinbach, for some time there have been discussions on renovating the building. In the manner in which the question was asked, it was quite clear I was asking for the building program for that detachment building. Now the minister claims that it is not being expanded but in fact they will go forward with the renovations as had been discussed by the RCMP in the various forms which I have mentioned.

While the minister, in the very technical sense and with a dictionary definition of "expansion", might be able to get away with a negative answer, the fact of the matter is that it was a question requesting information on behalf of my constituents.

An hon. Member: You won't get that from them.

Mr. Epp: What I did get was a totally wrong impression and my constituents got a totally wrong impression that the building project which had been purported to go forward, now was not to go forward. Most hon. members in the House who come from rural areas recognize that if a federal building project is to take place in their area, there is a lot of discussion in the concerned area before the project ever gets under way. There is extreme interest in local rural areas as to whether the federal government will go forward with the project. In this case it was an RCMP detachment building.

Members of the force are very close members of the community and they speak with other members of the community. The impression left was that the government planned to go forward with renovations. But when I received a "No" answer to my written question, the impression was that the project was dead. A few days later I received the minister's answer in letter form arguing that the project was to go forward again. I could stand here a long time arguing whether a parking lot attached to a detachment building is expansion or renovation. I do not know what is being renovated, but I know what is being expanded. Now that the minister is trying to hide behind the words "expansion" and "renovation", I hope this case will be put to rest only on the basis that he will go forward with the expansion and/or renovations which were planned a long time ago.

MR. DIEFENBAKER—CLARIFICATION OF WORDS USED IN ASKING QUESTION RESPECTING MONARCHY

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I would not like to leave anything on the record which would be taken as a quotation. The last words I uttered today were that "he was going to abolish the Queen," that is, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), "and at another time that she was no good to Canada." That was not in any way a quotation. The statement made by the Prime Minister was that she was of no more consequence than skiing or even snowshoeing.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I missed Your Honour calling for the introduction of bills.

[Translation]

There has been consultation with the other parties in the House about the possible introduction of a special bill. This would involve extraction from Bill C-51 of the provisions on prostitution. I believe consultations with opposition parties have led to an agreement to introduce this bill for accelerated consideration during this session, rather than wait for consideration of the whole Bill C-51.

[English]

If I report correctly the understanding between the parties, I would beg the permission of the House to introduce, for first reading, this particular bill.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lalonde) is quite correct; we consent.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I know there have been discussions, some of them with other members. We are prepared to consent to the introduction of this bill, but that does not mean we are consenting to anything else.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That is all the minister is requesting.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has given consent to revert to the introduction of bills.

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-44, to amend the Criminal Code (Soliciting for the purpose of prostitution).

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 539, 554, 848 and 864.

I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

LOUIS-HYPPOLITE LAFONTAINE TUNNEL

Question No. 539—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. Did the government make any contribution to the construction of the Louis-Hyppolite Lafontaine Tunnel and, if so (a) to what extent (b) in what amount?

2. Is the Tunnel entirely paid for and, if not, are payments spread over several years and, if so, over how many years and in what amount for each year?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Urban Affairs): 1. The federal government contributed to the construction of the Louis-Hyppolite Lafontaine Tunnel under the Trans-Canada Highway Act: (a) to the extent of 90 per cent of an equivalent two-lane highway. (b) in the amount of $53,000,000.

2. The federal share of the costs were paid to the province of Quebec as construction proceeded and progress construction cost claims were submitted by the province as per the act.

WINNIPEG TAXATION OFFICE

Question No. 554—Mr. Hare:

1. What is the status of construction of the Winnipeg taxation office?

2. What is the expected date of completion?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Urban Affairs): 1. The status of construction of the Winnipeg taxation office is 15 per cent completed.

2. Contract final completion date is October 31, 1979.

POST OFFICE—PROJECTS IN RICHMOND

Question No. 848—Mr. Beaudoin:

1. Since 1968, did the Post Office Department finance projects in the Constituency of Richmond and, if so (a) what were the projects (b) what was the (i) total amount (ii) amount in each case (c) what were the areas?

2. Is the Department planning to do so in the near future and, if so (a) what will be the amount (b) in which areas?

Mr. David Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): 1. No. (a) and (b) Not applicable.

2. No.

STAMPS—HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN

Question No. 864—Mr. Howie:

For the fiscal year ended March 31, 1978, how many postage stamps and in what denominations were produced showing a portrait of Her Majesty the Queen, and in these same denominations, how many were produced showing any other portrait or picture?

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): Denominations of stamps depicting the Queen's Portrait and other subjects of the same denomination produced in fiscal year 1977-78:

Ten cents	Queen—202,000 rolls × 100	20,200,000
	4,820,000 books × 4	19,280,000	39,480,000

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, notice of motion for the production of papers No. 8 is acceptable to the government subject to the usual reservations concerning confidential documents and to the authorization of the government authorities concerned.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Subject to the conditions described, shall notice of motion for the production of papers No. 8 be deemed to have been adopted?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

OPERATING REACTORS IN CANADA

Motion No. 8—Mr. Lawrence:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of licences and supporting documentation for all operating reactors in Canada.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Pinard: Would Your Honour be so kind as to call notices of motions for the production of papers Nos. 5, 6, 7 and 9?

COPIES OF MINUTES OF WORKING GROUP ON PRINCIPLES AND CRITERIA FOR NUCLEAR SAFETY

Motion No. 5—Mr. Lawrence:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all minutes of the Inter-Organizational Working Group on General Principles and Criteria for Nuclear Safety from September 14, 1977 to date.

Mr. Pierre Bussières (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the Atomic Energy Control Board replied that those documents are internal documents and cannot therefore be made public. The board received the final report of the Inter-Organizational Working Group and published it on November 28, 1979. It has not yet been decided whether the proposals of the report will be accepted, as the comments of interested groups and individuals in the private sector have not yet been received. I therefore would ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

ENERGY SUPPLIES EMERGENCY ACT, 1979

MEASURES TO CONSERVE STOCKS

The House resumed, from Tuesday, February 20, consideration of the motion of Mr. Gillespie that Bill C-42, to provide the means to conserve the supplies of energy within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or market disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, this bill we are dealing with today concerning emergency powers to be given the government to allocate energy in the event of an interruption or dislocation of supply, is one of tremendous importance, and we want to make a few observations before it moves to the committee.

One has to ask oneself how many energy crises we, as a country, will have to face before this government takes action in terms of implementing a rational energy policy geared to the goal of self-sufficiency in energy for consumers in Canada. What brought on this most recent example of the need for a bill is in everyone's mind, namely, the Iranian situation whereby some 100,000 barrels of oil usually destined for Canada were cut off because of domestic problems in Iran. What happened to make the situation worse, of course, was a decision by the Exxon oil company of the United States in a directive to its Canadian subsidiary, Imperial Oil, to divert some 25,000 barrels of crude from Venezuela bound for Canada. Of course this made the situation for the people in eastern Canada all the more precarious.

I do not have to remind the House that back in 1973 and 1974 we faced a similar crisis when world supply was, or appeared to be, interrupted, and the Liberal government at that time brought forward an emergency bill to give it the necessary powers to deal with rationing and other procedures needed in Canada. Unfortunately, at the insistence of the Conservative party, there was a time limit. The measure was to expire after two years, and it did so, I believe in 1976. As a result we have to go through the whole process again of re-introducing and passing a similar bill.

The passage of this one bill really does not go to the root of the problem, the real vulnerability of Canada in terms of energy. Because of the government's lack of initiative, and because of the backward looking policies of previous Liberal and Conservative governments, we are in a situation today where a country such as Canada, which in theory should be self-sufficient in energy needs, is in reality dependent upon imported oil from OPEC countries to meet consumer needs east of the Ottawa valley. That shortsighted policy of not building an oil pipeline from our western Canadian oil fields to our east coast has now caught up with us on two very dramatic occasions. This indicates the real powerlessness of the Canadian government without the option of Canadian supply for Canadian markets.

When we recall that over 90 per cent of our oil industry is foreign owned it soon becomes apparent that the options the government has to implement energy policy in the interest of Canadians are limited, indeed. When Imperial Oil got the order from its parent company, Exxon, that once again pointed out dramatically how we are at the mercy of the multinational oil companies. We do not have an energy policy stressing Canadian self-sufficiency and Canadian control of our energy resources.

We in this party have argued time and time again, in this House and elsewhere, from the earliest days of the 1960s, that we must have public control and ownership of our vital energy sector if we are to develop a nation that is economically strong, and if we are to be in a position to avoid the kind of precariousness of supply and the kind of blackmail that can take place as a result of decisions by OPEC or the multinationals.

We had a spectacle just a few weeks ago when Imperial announced it was going to divert Venezuelan oil bound for Canada to other markets of the Exxon corporation in order to make up for the shortfall that Exxon was experiencing in its other markets because of the Iranian cutback. We had the spectacle of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Gillespie) begging the subsidiary of a multinational oil company, Imperial Oil, to please not divert the oil that was regularly bound for Canada, contracted under due legal process for the Canadian market.

Indeed, that situation is still not resolved. Imperial has cut down on the amount of oil it wanted to divert, but this does not go to the root of the problem; nor does it offer us as consumers a long-range solution to the problems resulting from an interruption of supply.

Surely we, as Canadians, need no further evidence that we have to reverse this disastrous energy policy pursued by this Liberal government if we are to proceed on a sound and rational basis for the supply of energy in this country. When we consider the way out we know it is not, as the Conservatives would have it, just to leave it all to the private sector in the hope that somehow, through private initiative and private decision making, there will be enough oil found to meet our needs for decades to come. That is just not going to work. Surely the oil crisis we saw in the middle 1970s, and the oil crisis we see now, are evidence of the fact that the situation has gone beyond the control of the multinationals or private energy companies. Therefore the only way we, as a country, can stop that kind of blackmail, that threat and that lack of control, is to have the Government of Canada as a public authority begin to take an active role in energy policy-making in this country.

● (1600)

The private oil companies have no loyalty but to themselves. They are part of a multinational oil conglomerate, and they have interests which have no loyalty to any one country, but only to the over-all global plan of the multinational itself. If we are to avoid future situations, such as where a multinational like Exxon tells its Canadian subsidiary, Imperial, to do this or that—irrespective of what it means to Canadian policy—we must have public ownership and control of our energy sector.

We do have an option, and as a result of the policies that the New Democratic Party was able to pressure this government into taking during the minority parliament of 1972-1974 and during the energy crisis of those years when we held the balance of power, action which it would not have taken if it were in a majority situation, because the Liberals are just as wedded to the free enterprise ideal in the oil industry as are the Conservatives, now, however, we have Petro-Canada, the national oil company owned by the people of Canada through their federal government.

This company can provide us with an option to the kind of dominance by the multinationals in our energy sector. When Petro-Canada was set up we advocated that it take an active role in the beginning to buy back our energy resources so that we would have Canadian ownership and, hence, some Canadian decision-making authority in the field of energy in this country.

It was a very slow start under the Liberal government once it was returned with a majority in 1974, and Petro-Canada did not move in a big way into the energy market. I think, though, that the government has seen the logic of our argument, and it now realizes that one way we can get out of the current dilemma is for Petro-Canada to play a larger role in our oil industry. This current crisis presents us, therefore, with an excellent opportunity to use our national, public petroleum company in a positive and progressive manner, and that is to avoid the kind of blackmail situation or arbitrary decision making taken by the multinational parent companies. Instead of Exxon dictating to Imperial or through Imperial to arrange the contracts for supply, the way out is to use Petro-Canada as the sole agency for arranging oil contracts with producing nations.

We know that the government of Venezuela is quite anxious to negotiate supply contracts on a government-to-government basis. Venezuela, of course, is the major supplier of oil to eastern Canada, since we do not have a pipeline from the west. Surely this is a golden opportunity for Petro-Canada to act as sole agent for purchasing all the oil which Venezuela is willing to sell to Canada. In this way we can avoid the kind of stranglehold position which Exxon has over supply from Venezuela. If Petro-Canada were the sole purchasing agent—and it would be a paper transaction since Petro-Canada does not have the tankers to move the oil—then it could farm out to the subsidiary companies in Canada the oil destined for Canadian markets. This is a short-term, interim solution to the problems we are facing now.

In the long term, of course, the real solution would be to establish a system which would preclude any subsidiary of a multinational oil company from dominating the market and being able to interrupt energy supply or cause an energy crisis to escalate, contrary to the interests of the Government of Canada. Our party has advocated for some years now that Petro-Canada buy out Canada's largest oil company, Imperial Oil, the leader in oil and energy decision making in this country, so that the Crown corporation could be the leader in the oil industry in terms of exploration decisions, supply decisions, and price decisions.

We know that Petro-Canada has bought out Pacific Petroleums but, again, it is not the major company. We still have a long way to go in order to control or break the stranglehold which the multinationals have on our energy sector. It appalls me to listen in this House to the Conservative party's answer to the dilemma we are in now. Of course, they would have us dismantle Petro-Canada, our only national oil company, and sell it back to the private sector. This would leave us right back at square one and in the kind of dilemma in which we now find ourselves.

If we do not have an option to the multinational companies in terms of a national, publicly controlled oil company, then we have no bargaining tool or policy at our disposal to reverse this dangerous trend which has developed. Surely Canadians who are concerned about pricing and supply should reject the policy of the Conservative party and make it known to them that their policy to abolish Petro-Canada is unacceptable and that it would work against the interest of all Canadians. If we are to have a national energy policy we need initiatives now to deal with an emergency should it arise, not just in terms of this bill, but some long-range plans, because energy is not only related to heating our homes or driving our automobiles, it is related to the whole manufacturing and industrial sector of our economy.

Think of the advantages, Mr. Speaker, we could have had as a nation if we had initiated a policy for national interests rather than relying on the multinational oil companies. Think of the advantages we could have had in terms of avoiding the kind of price increases that the OPEC nations were able to impose on North America. If Canada has an enlightened policy of public development of our oil supplies we would have a pipeline from east to west. We could have been self-sufficient in oil and avoided the kind of price escalation when oil quadrupled in price over a few years. Because the multinational oil companies did not want a pipeline built to eastern Canada, because they were more interested in developing our western reserves for export to the American market, we have had to rely on Middle East and Venezuelan oil for eastern Canada. Once the OPEC nations pushed up the price of that oil, eastern Canada had to pay the higher price and, as a result, the price was forced up in western Canada. But that is an old story and one that I need not go into because I think most members in this House are well aware of it.

We must not react from crisis to crisis by introducing measures such as we have before the House today. We have to use public instruments, such as Petro-Canada and legislation in terms of regaining control, to implement a policy of self-sufficiency in oil and natural gas or that will bring us as close as possible to that goal. This means, of course, extending the pipeline from Montreal to eastern Canada to provide oil eventually for that market, especially when the tar sands production comes on stream. It also means that we must reduce our exports of oil to the United States. We have exported so much of our oil that we now face shortages in the long term. We should be implementing a policy of storage of oil in some of the abandoned mines in Newfoundland and the maritime provinces so that we are not caught short. We should be looping the Sarnia to Montreal pipeline so that we can deliver more oil to the Montreal area in the event of interruptions or cutbacks in supply to eastern Canada.

Surely one of the things which we must look at with renewed interest and some urgency, to displace our dependence on imported oil in Atlantic Canada, is natural gas. That, of course, means extending the natural gas pipeline to the maritime provinces. That is an important goal. The government has expressed some interest in doing so. But I do not see the kinds of initiatives needed now to give some kind of relief to the poor consumer in Atlantic Canada who is paying outrageous prices for oil. We could displace some of that oil needed by extending a natural gas pipeline, because natural gas currently is priced at 85 per cent of the price of oil. That leads me to what is taking place this afternoon. The National Energy Board in an hour or so will release its decision concerning whether we will export more of our natural gas from western Canada to the United States.

● (1610)

Mr. Nielsen: The decision has been made already.

Mr. Symes: From all reports that we see in this morning's press, from the reports and the predictions it would appear that we will see once more western Canadian natural gas exported to the United States. I quote from an article which appeared in this morning's Globe and Mail written by Jeff Carruthers. He says:

> The National Energy Board has decided that there is a sufficient surplus of western Canadian gas to support new short-term exports of slightly more than 600 million cubic feet a day over 15 years or almost 1 billion cubic feet a day if a shorter, 10-year period is used.
> However, to achieve this, the NEB has had to modify its domestic protection formula used to calculate the amount of domestic gas that has to be set aside for "foreseeable" domestic needs, including new eastern markets.

I have not seen the report, which I say is due to be released in detail in a short while, and I have not examined the revision of the formula, but if this report in this morning's press is accurate that the National Energy Board is to allow natural gas exports, the only way it can do so is, as the report said, to revise the formula that declares what is surplus to Canada's needs. The indication is that the National Energy Board, in order to justify these exports, has revised the formula downward. It has given Canadians less protection in terms of what amount of gas should remain in order to meet our future demands. If that is true, it soon becomes quite obvious that the Liberal government is using this situation, and looking at the politics of the situation rather than the energy interests of Canadians. The Liberal government understands that by allowing exports of natural gas to the United States this will in turn have the effect of boosting the value of the Canadian dollar. That is a very important political consideration for this government on the eve of a federal election.

It would seem to me that what is happening here is that in the short term interests of saving the hide of the Liberal party by means of pushing up the value of the dollar by exports of natural gas, that short-term interest has taken precedence over the long-term energy interests of Canadians. That is indeed, Mr. Speaker, a sad commentary on the kind of thinking that goes on in the cabinet. As we know, the cabinet does give direction to the National Energy Board.

Here we are in the middle of an energy crisis approving more natural gas exports to the United States when it is so obvious that we need to ensure future supplies for Canada in this energy sparse world, and it is so obvious that Atlantic Canada needs this natural gas to help offset these high oil prices. Surely any government that had the interests of Canada at heart, instead of thinking of saving its political hide by hoping a short-term policy will boost the value of the Canadian dollar, would realize that we have to protect our future energy needs by ensuring that that natural gas remains in Canada for use by Canadians.

It seems so backward in our thinking that we should be exporting natural gas at this time in our history, especially when there are indications that certain areas of the United States, for example, Texas, have their own gas bubble or surplus. The Americans, I think, are rather shrewd; they prefer to keep their natural gas in the ground and use Canadian gas because they know what the future holds in terms of energy supplies.

We can only suspect the kind of decision that will be made by the National Energy Board, given its past record. In the past the National Energy Board, by listening to the multinational oil and gas companies, has told Canadians that we have an abundant supply not only of oil but of natural gas, enough natural gas to last us into the 21st century. We have seen how they have been proven wrong by overrelying on the figures which industry supplies to them. Only a short while ago industry was telling us that we would freeze in the dark and if higher prices were not approved new oil and gas would not be found and Canadians would face a disaster.

Suddenly after industry got its high prices, we are now told we have a surplus and we have to export it and get rid of it. Within a year the scenario will be that the industry will be telling us we have a natural gas shortage and that we need higher prices to find new supplies, and the cycle will repeat itself. How many times do we have to be burned by this short-sighted manipulation of figures by the industry, that our National Energy Board swallows holus bolus?

Surely, in the interests of Canadians, we have to oppose any decision at this time by the National Energy Board to export supplies of natural gas to the United States. The assumption that it is surplus to our needs is a false one. I believe that it is being based on a formula which does not look at our energy needs, and indeed, I think the Energy Board is being pressured by the government to allow these exports in the hope that the value of the Canadian dollar will increase and that will look good for the government as it heads into an election.

If we are to define what surplus means, not only must it be in terms of what our projected needs will be according to demand and consumption, but we must be looking at the term surplus in the view of processing more natural gas in Canada to develop a petro-chemical industry in western Canada. If we do that, then the definition of surplus takes on a whole new life. We will then begin to realize that we have to increase the supply of gas even more in Canada to develop a petro-chemical industry and thus provide jobs and dollars for our western provinces.

If we want to supply natural gas to eastern Canada we cannot allow these kinds of huge exports to continue. If we want to develop a petro-chemical industry we must cut back on these natural gas exports. If we want to ensure Canadians will have sufficient supplies of energy down the road, more than just 25 years or ten years' hence, then we must cut back on some of these exports. This can be done without jeopardizing the industry here in Canada.

Many small exploration companies can argue, quite legitimately, that if they cannot export they will suffer cash flow problems. Especially for the smaller companies it would seem to me a wise policy that both provincial and federal governments could buy natural gas and cap it off, leaving it in the ground, because we will need that gas in the future. Saskatchewan did this in the past and it proved a very wise decision. They were able to buy natural gas at six cents per thousand cubic feet. The price today is around $2. That gas is there. It is able to be used by Canadians when they need it. Surely this is the kind of policy we should initiate now to ensure not only sufficient cash flow for the companies but that the gas will be there when we need it.

This whole pressure by the gas industry to export is one of shortsightedness in terms of our long-range energy needs. That has been proven in the past in the way that price and supply have been manipulated. Now we see the proponents of the Alaska natural gas pipeline that is to run through Canada again arguing before a committee of this House that they must prebuild the southern portion of the line in order to finance the eventual whole line that runs to Alaska.

What does that prebuilding mean? It means taking Alberta gas and running it through the southern portion of that line to the United States. In other words, Canadians are financing a natural gas pipeline that we were told in this House had no other purpose but to move Alaska gas to American markets. We will use up our Alberta reserves and export them to the United States at a price of around $2 per thousand cubic feet. We will eventually have to buy back because we will have used up our gas, paying around $4 for Alaska gas. There is no sense to that kind of economic argument other than to maximize the financial position of the natural gas pipeline companies.

The bill before us today, while helping us in terms of an emergency giving this federal government some powers to allocate supply if a crisis comes upon us, does nothing in the long run to solve the very severe energy situation in which this country finds itself because of past misguided policies of both Liberal and Conservative governments. I hope this gives Canadians an opportunity to wake up to the realities of the power of the multinational oil companies in the world today and realize that the only way out is through public ownership and control of our energy sector.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in rising this afternoon I did not think I would have to begin by referring to some of the remarks of the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes), but in view of the nature of them I certainly must do so. The hon. member was completely off base, completely wrong in suggesting that when the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) dealt with Imperial Oil about oil supplies for eastern Canada, he was begging, to use the word of the hon. member.

The minister was not begging. He was stating what it was necessary for a company to do, with the firm knowledge that he had the full support of the government behind him in what he was doing. No doubt he had support from certain other parts of the House as well with regard to any action that might have been required to ensure Canada's interests with regard to supply of oil. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources had earlier made arrangements with Venezuela and Mexico, in his usual forward-looking way, to secure oil supplies, and in the best interests of this country he will continue to do that.

I am also struck by the fact that the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie liked to make and, in fact, remake a little history, and throw in a few other things to boot. He now thinks that a pipeline should have been built many years ago from central Canada to the Atlantic in order that oil from Alberta and Saskatchewan could be conveyed there. I am not sure that I recall the strength of the argument from any of his friends who lived in those areas of the country at the time the issue was current in that regard.

We developed the policy of building the pipeline to serve up to the Ottawa valley in order to secure supplies by the continued exploration and development of those oil resources in western Canada. We were doing that at some cost in terms of slightly higher oil supplies for this region, justifying that on the basis of security. In other words, in terms of governing policies, we were striking a compromise between the higher costs that had to be paid in the short run and the long-run good of security of supply.

We drew the line against imposing much higher costs for the eastern part of the country which had access to the lowest cost oil available in the world for many, many years. Through that policy we avoided significant additional cost to consumers of oil throughout the whole central and eastern region beyond the Ottawa valley and to the east. At the same time we developed other policies, which the hon. member criticizes, allowing certain exports to the United States so that exploration and development would thereby be encouraged.

I was intrigued by the fact that the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie again criticized us for exporting oil to the United States. He criticized us for not having the oil flow into eastern Canada and the Atlantic, and criticized us for letting it flow to the United States. I understand each of those positions taken separately. However, when he said that because we let it flow to the United States, we disposed of so much oil that we developed for ourselves what he called a long-term shortage, he lost me. If it had flowed to the east instead of the United States, we would be in the same supply situation we are in now. The hon. member cannot have it all three ways. He absolutely cannot.

The hon. member was completely wrong in his analysis. It was typical of what I call eastern NDP members, and by that I mean those from central Canada. He insists that anything we did at that time had to be attributed to some policy or program that was favoured by the oil companies. He said that is why we did not build the pipeline beyond the Ottawa valley.

That is completely wrong. I was minister responsible for energy in 1969. Time and time again I was visited by representatives of the oil companies urging that we move in that direction, urging that the extra cost was worth while in terms of security. They were in favour of that. We were balancing the interests of the people of Canada in terms of lower cost oil available to them at that time. By our additional extension of sales into the United States, we were encouraging the very export and development we now have and which has been very important to us.

I do not know where we would be if we listened to the left and the right with regard to our exports. We would be a fully closed in nation. Just the other day the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) said that we should impose import surcharges, this at a time when the world is trying to move toward freer trade. He finds himself back with the Tories of the nineteenth century. It is clear that Clark's Tories are Tories of the nineteenth century. It is visible in everything they say.

He was going to impose import surcharges. The Tory leader, after criticizing higher prices on goods coming into this country because of the drop in the dollar, was going to impose import surcharges on top of that. Not only that, but he would threaten the whole access we have to the United States market because their balance of payments leaves them to think a little bit about that kind of measure which we must resist in the interests of freer trade.

The NDP, at least those from the east, constantly insist that we not sell anything to the United States. The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie criticized us for selling oil in days gone by to the United States, which was done in order to encourage export and development in Alberta and Saskatchewan. He could not say that honestly and fairly in the face of his friends from the province of Saskatchewan. He discourages us now from exporting gas to the United States.

● (1630)

Just the other day I heard a Conservative spokesman say we should not sell wheat to the Soviet Union. That would be his reaction, he said, for a variety of reasons having to do with certain policies followed by that country. So for one reason or another we would export nothing as a result of positions taken by people from the right or from the left.

The bill before us is important as a consistent part of government policy to make sure we have in place mechanisms to deal with problems of oil and energy. We feel that its early passage is extremely important, and we urge hon. members to make this possible—I understand there is now some agreement that it may go through. The current instability in the Middle East, the problems in Iran, the mobilization of the Saudi Arabian army all make it important that the bill should become law and perhaps justify the comment of the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie that it might have been better had we omitted the sunset clause which now obliges us to spend a great deal of time considering this legislation once again.

Notwithstanding our desire to deal with this matter swiftly, it is important to note that the government's policy with regard to energy has been consistently one of looking ahead, of balancing the interest of obtaining secure supplies against the advantages of access to supplies at as low a cost as possible. Members of the New Democratic Party are caustic, but are they caustic about the fact that we intervened to make sure that prices in Canada would not immediately and in too rapid a fashion reflect the drastic oil price increases which are occurring? Are they caustic about the fact that we have in place pricing mechanisms which mean that the tremendous potential for price insecurity, the tremendous potential for sudden rises in price, will not have an impact in Canada in any immediate way—that from the Atlantic to the Pacific and, beyond that, to both islands, there are arrangements which secure reasonable prices in this country and provide that only over a gradual period the increases which are going on in the world, and against which we cannot isolate ourselves for ever, will come into effect?

Many have testified to the wisdom of Canadian policy with regard to balancing the various factors involved. Only yesterday before a Senate committee a spokesman for the Northwest Alaskan Pipeline Company, Mr. John G. McMillian, who is also the chief executive officer, was testifying about pipeline and energy matters. Senator Lucien had asked him whether anything on the Canadian side had caused any delay or problem from his point of view. His answer is instructive because, before dealing with that precise question with regard to pipe lines, he said:

> No. In fact, we can only compliment you and your government. First, in 1973 when you had an oil crisis you evolved and developed an energy plan that has paid off. Your energy plan is working. You are getting conservation. You have had activity in exploration; you have developed new resources; you are to be complimented on that.

Then he went on to say that we were also to be complimented upon dealing with the pipe line in an expeditious way.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: That is some outside testimony with regard to the manner in which we have accomplished matters here.

The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie rather touchingly tried to take a good deal of credit for Petro-Canada. I am delighted that he recognizes the value of Petro-Canada. He takes credit for it because the legislation setting it up was developed at a time of a minority government. Of course, in that sense he might actually have had the chance to vote for it and support it, if he were here at that time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Tell us the whole story!

Mr. Lang: Let us consider Petro-Canada and the important role which was foreseen for it by the government—how completely consistent it is with what the government has done and with what Liberal policy has been over the years in taking action over the years where free enterprise often operates. If I might bring back memories of other voices, that means government action and ownership of private enterprise when necessary, but I will paraphrase slightly and say "only when necessary". I think this states very accurately and very well a good policy for a government of Canada to follow.

The example of Petro-Canada was not brand new. I am talking in particular, really, of its forerunner, of the development of Panarctic and the government's investment in it. I am thinking of the fact that years earlier a majority Liberal government, a government which the hon. member cannot claim to have supported in any way, invested in Panarctic at a time when it was not possible to get private investment to go alone into the risky areas of the north. The Hon. Arthur Laing deserves a great deal of credit for seeing that this was a need which fitted well into the Liberal policy of moving when necessary into areas where private enterprise was not willing or not able to do the job at the time. So this is not a new policy and it does not smack of socialism as the Clark Tories seem to think.

Another example which is consistent with Liberal policy was the creation some 40 years ago of Air Canada. The architect was C. D. Howe, a predecessor of mine, in many ways of whose actions and activities I am very proud. He is not usually thought of as in any way a socialist or as a destroyer of free enterprise. I would recommend to the Clark Tories that they begin to read a little about the philosophy that brought about such a development. At that time, private enterprise was unwilling to produce a Canadian airline. We thought we needed one and therefore we moved to create such an airline so as to serve many communities in this country. That was the only way of getting it. In today's conditions, such action in the aviation field would not have been necessary. But it is necessary now to do something in the area of oil supplies.

Just as, earlier, Panarctic was needed as the explorer in the north and in the Arctic, so Canada needs to acquire additional ownership in a field about which the role and domination of foreign owners has caused so much concern. Petro-Canada has already, in the very short time of its existence, done really great things. The hon. member thinks it has been slow to get off the ground, but in that short period of four years a great deal has been achieved. It is participating now in exploration in Labrador which otherwise would not necessarily be taking place; it has joined in the development of heavy oil projects. Otherwise we might very well have seen a stagnant situation in an area where there is an important need. In bringing Pacific Petroleums to Canadian ownership we made a long-term contribution to our future in oil and oil resources.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: Indeed, Mr. Speaker, it could even be said that Petro-Canada contributed one more important Canadianization effort in the reintroduction of Husky Oil here, because its activities in that regard brought this about in a very real and significant way. Yet the Clark Tories would sell off Petro-Canada, would move this important device out of existence. They would throw it away, and for that reason alone the people of Canada should hold them up and ask them to explain what they mean and what they would do, and why. If it is anything but a desire to please a few key supporters in certain places in Canada, I cannot think what it could be. Those same people should know that province after province has embarked upon enterprises like this when necessary, and that country after country around the world, of every kind of political complexion, has found it necessary from time to time to take direct government action in relation to oil ownership and energy ownership, just as we have with Petro-Canada.

The people of Canada will ask the Leader of the Opposition how he can justify risking their security of supply and their position in development and exploration while at the same time saying he intends to dismantle and throw away Petro-Canada. It will not wash, Mr. Speaker. The people of Canada will not accept that kind of action.

● (1640)

There is another matter which perhaps deserves consideration in relation to this bill. As I say, I hope we will now move forward quickly.

Mr. Paproski: If you sit down, we will.

Mr. Lang: That other matter is the position of the Conservative party with relation to whether the federal government should act at all and whether it should play a role with respect to energy resources for Canadians. We have just completed a constitutional conference at which one of the key issues was the position of the federal government on natural resources, and the position to be accorded to the provinces in which those natural resources are found. This federal government reached out as far as it could possibly be expected to reach to find a position which would be satisfactory to provincial interests with regard to provincial ownership, provincial financial rights, and provincial control of the disposition of natural resources in the provinces.

We wrote sections in a proposed draft constitution which effectively gave to the provinces not only recognition of their ownership but also a very full recognition of their place in relation to revenue from these resources. We gave them taxing power, even when that taxing power is indirect in relation to these resources, in the texts we had before us at that conference. We said they could have a good deal of control over distribution, disposition, and exploration of these resources.

Some qualifications were agreed upon. One was that this should not be discriminatory as between provinces in such a way that they could somehow favour one neighbour over another. That was agreed upon. Where the line was drawn was where we felt that there were times when, as a federal government protecting Canadians throughout this country, we needed the ability to legislate in order to ensure that those resources were there for the use of all Canadians. The words we wanted to use as an occasion for our ability to legislate were that we could do so under the federal trade and commerce power when there was a compelling national interest.

Premier Lougheed of Alberta refused to accept that position. Coming from Saskatchewan, I was delighted that Saskatchewan was willing to agree to that. In that regard Mr. Blakeney said at the conference, and I quote:

> —and I commend the federal government for their flexibility and their willingness to accommodate in many of these areas.
> I would underline that. We for our part came here with the same point of view.

Seeing that we had gone as far as we ought to go at that particular point in time, Premier Lougheed said that he would not accept words which said that a compelling national interest should be a ground for federal legislation, whatever we do in relation to the full control of provinces over their resources.

Perhaps it is not surprising that Premier Lougheed took that position because, some years before that, he said he was not a compromiser. That is an interesting phrase, because surely as Canadians here in this parliament from all over the country, whether in our caucus, in cabinet, or in Tory or NDP caucuses, we learn over time that a balanced view must be taken on a specific issue at a specific time. That must be the role played by a federal government for all of Canada. That is a national role which must be played.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: Premier Lougheed did not necessarily want to be in that position because in 1977, when he declined to seek what some thought he might, the leadership of the national Conservative party, he was asked about it, and he said at that time that he did not want to go to the central part of Canada, into the federal government. He said, and I quote:

> If you go to the centre, you have to compromise your position as a spokesman for the West. I don't have to compromise anything to anybody in terms of Alberta.

Perhaps that is an extreme position to take in terms of what is necessary in the national interest. I prefer the reasonableness of Premier Blakeney for being willing to compromise in the end, and for saying that what he was getting was adequate to protect Saskatchewan. And Premier Blakeney has not been weak in his defence of provincial rights. I think everyone will acknowledge that.

I do not say that I find it amazing that Premier Lougheed would take the position he took and then argue on behalf of Alberta that he wanted everything, including a complete veto, even when there might be a compelling national interest, but I was astonished that the Leader of the Opposition, leading the Clark Tories down a particular path, should say at that time that he agreed with Premier Lougheed. Here we have a Conservative leader who would dismantle Petro-Canada and throw it away, and who would also say that he would not necessarily demand that a federal government have the power to legislate in relation to resources and security when there is a compelling national interest requiring that legislation. That must be put down alongside other statements on energy policy by the Leader of the Opposition, and it must be judged by the people of Canada.

We need this legislation now. I commend to the House—and I believe this is its wish—its early passage. I hope this bill will be dealt with very quickly in the committee. As hon. members know, this bill was studied clause by clause in parliament, and we see that there are very few changes. Therefore, the bill should be back before us very quickly. I hope that will happen and that the bill will be part of the armory of the people and the Government of Canada in making sure that energy matters are dealt with properly in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, about half an hour ago my good friend, the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard), came over and asked me whether we had any more speakers at this stage of the debate. I told him we did not. That was a categorical answer, and I assure the House that we had no intention at that time of extending the debate any further. Even now I intend to take the floor for only a few minutes, but the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) will not be surprised.

Mr. Symes: He is the cause.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He is partly the cause of it, but his friend, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen), also made a speech a few days ago in which he said some of the same things the Minister of Transport said today, and I think a moment or two should be taken just to set the record straight, to coin a phrase around here.

It has been very refreshing listening to the praise of public ownership we have heard from the Minister of Transport. He even used the word "socialism". This is a great day! I am encouraged, because at times the minister gives the impression that he is the biggest privatizer of all on either side of the House.

I hope Air Canada or the Canadian National Railways will not now be sold off. The minister indulged in a moment of praise for the late Right Hon. C. D. Howe. The minister gave him credit for bringing Trans-Canada Airlines into being as a Crown corporation. That credit is fully deserved by the late Mr. Howe. I do not know whether it reached the record or not, but when the minister spoke about that I interjected that Mr. Howe was provoked into doing what he did by the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the authority for that statement is Mr. Howe himself. In fact, on many occasions he tried to explain that he was not a public ownership person, or a socialist like the Minister of Transport, that he had tried to get the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific to join together in setting up the Trans-Canada Airlines, but the CPR would not go along. It was not interested in the future of Canada, it was interested only in profits.

● (1650)

The Minister of Transport must not go away now—

Mr. Lang: I give you two minutes.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Five minutes, and then you can go. Mr. Howe was so provoked by this that he took the bull by the horns, as it were, and brought in Trans-Canada Airlines as a publicly owned corporation.

The reason I asked the minister not to go away is this. I will not try to tell the whole story today, and there are many reasons why I will not do so. I simply hope that some day when some graduate student is doing his Ph.D. thesis—they are doing them all the time and we make our contributions to them—and he is asked to do a study of PetroCan and how it came into being, I hope that student will be given access to my files, to the files of David Lewis, to the files of the President of the Privy Council, and to the files of the cabinet generally, and that the student will be able to tell the story as it is.

I am not asking the House or the country today to take my version as the whole story, or to believe the government. But for this minister and the President of the Privy Council to stand up and try to tell us that Petro-Canada was their idea only, that it had nothing to do with any pressure from members of the NDP who held a certain whip hand in that minority government, is not right.

I have a good memory of the conversations that took place. I have too good a memory of November and December, 1973, when we were closer to an election than some of us liked in view of the kind of weather into which we were heading. I remember having to phone David Lewis, who was up at the tar sands, to tell him that the government had agreed to the four points on which we were insisting and had agreed to bring in Petro-Canada. If I were to tell the whole story, I would have to say that David Lewis was just a bit unhappy because he wanted the election, but he realized that if the government was going to bring in Petro-Canada and agree to the other three points we had made, we would have to continue to support that government.

As I said, I will leave it to a Ph.D. student to write about it some day. He can examine the records and files of all of us. That is all I need to say. The minister can go now, if he wants to.

Mr. Lang: May I ask the hon. member a question before I leave?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, go ahead.

Mr. Lang: I want to ask the hon. member whether he has ever heard of the briar patch?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Which one of us is Brer Rabbit? I just wanted to get it clear that it was not a free initiative on the part of the government that Petro-Canada was created. Maybe they believed in it as C. D. Howe believed in Trans-Canada Airlines and the Liberals believed in the Canadian National Railways and as they have some other things in terms of public ownership, but the story, when it is finally told by some researcher in history, will be a lot different from the story that has been given to us by the President of the Privy Council or the Minister of Transport. They have been giving us fiction; some day we shall have the real story.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I give the floor to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) and I point out to all hon. members that when the minister speaks now, he closes the debate.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, in closing this debate on second reading I should like to say that it has been made very clear in speeches by hon. members opposite and hon. members on this side of the House that we are dealing with a matter of security of supply, security of the Canadian supply, security of the Canadian economy, and security of particular regions of Canada, particularly Atlantic Canada and a large part of Quebec, because, as hon. members know, that part of the country is dependent on foreign oil for 100 per cent of its supplies.

The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) suggested that the solution to that problem was to build a pipeline down to Atlantic Canada. Perhaps he has forgotten the situation. Perhaps he has forgotten what the National Energy Board had to say about our oil supplies. If he had read those reports, he would have recognized that there has been a significant change for the better as a result of the policies put into place by the government over the last few years.

A little over a year ago the National Energy Board was saying that there was not enough Canadian oil in the west to move through the pipeline, which was built by this government and subsidized by this government, into the Montreal market. That pipeline—which, as I said, is subsidized by the government—is now moving more than 300,000 barrels a day of Canadian crude into the Montreal area. That has reduced our dependence on foreign oil from 800,000 barrels a day to 500,000 barrels a day, very close to a 40 per cent reduction in the level of foreign supplies on which we have to depend. But a little over a year ago the National Energy Board was warning Canadians it would be necessary perhaps to reverse that pipeline, that the oil in the west would not be sufficient to continue moving through the pipeline into Montreal for more than a few years. The early eighties were the time they were suggesting we might have to reverse that pipeline and bring imported oil into the Ontario market.

The last report of the National Energy Board on the oil supply requirements which was issued by them in the past fall indicated that there had been a significant change in the supply situation, that instead of having to contemplate a reversal of the pipeline in a few years, we can now look forward to sustaining the movement of oil from the west to the east. But they also made quite clear that we do not yet have enough oil to contemplate looking after Atlantic Canada from Canadian sources.

Hon. members will know that there is a pipeline in place. But for the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie to suggest, as did the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies), that we should be building a pipeline to the east is to suggest that they have not done their homework, that they are not really familiar with the distribution systems in the country. There is a pipeline from Montreal to Portland which could take Canadian oil down to Portland, Maine, and then by tanker around to the Atlantic ports. There is only one problem at the moment, that is, insufficient oil in place to sustain the movement of oil through that pipeline. That raises one of the really fundamental questions for Canadians that was touched upon very briefly by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) in his remarks today.

One of the really basic questions is: How do you ensure security for Canadians when the federal government does not have control over the pace of development of the large western tar sands and the heavy oils of the west? The Minister of Transport referred to compelling national interest and the importance of interpreting this in terms of trade and commerce. I put this question to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr.

Clark) and to opposition members: is compelling national interest not going to be a reason for the federal government to consider other measures to ensure the development of the tar sands and the heavy oils? That will be one of the big questions to which Canadians will have to address themselves in the months to come.

There is another aspect of security of supply which is important to Canadians, and it has to do with the question of prices. We on this side of the House know that if it had not been for the Liberal government, the federal government would not have the power, through the Petroleum Administration Act, to establish prices, to establish a domestic price in Canada which is lower than the international price. If the Tory policy with respect to pricing were in place today, there would be no security for those in eastern Canada with respect to the kind of erratic price movements we are seeing, higher price movements being announced by the Middle East and the other supplying nations. There would be no security for Atlantic Canada with respect to price if it was not for the federal government's Petroleum Administration Act.

• (1700)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillespie: If Tory pricing policy were in place, we would see a government which would be saying, "We are going to let the Arabs and the OPEC nations decide what price Canadians should pay and what the price in Atlantic Canada should be." If they did not say that, probably they would say, "We will let the government of Alberta decide that for us." I see an hon. member opposite nodding. I assume that is still the position of his party, that they would not interfere as a federal government with the establishment of a fair price for the oil Canadians need. That is a major difference between the Liberal government and the Tory opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillespie: A good deal has been said by hon. members opposite about the national oil company, Petro-Canada. I should like to put on the record some of the things they have said in the past. I should like to refute them, because I think this is a very important issue from the point of view of security of energy supply for Canadians.

I should like to refer to a speech made by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) on July 2, 1975. In the course of his remarks, as reported at page 7202 of Hansard, he stated the following:

> The truth is that PetroCan is a socialistic dream. They have conjured up in their minds the impression that the petroleum industry is not owned by Canadians but is owned by foreign corporations. That is not in accordance with the facts. Canadians own the petroleum in this country.

Also he indicated that this was entirely different to what the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) said.

The chief financial critic, or the member of the Tory party who would like to be thought of as the chief financial critic, said in 1975 that Canadians own the petroleum and the petroleum industry of this country. Anyone who has followed the scene knows the petroleum industry largely has been foreign-controlled, and that it is probably close to 90 per cent foreign-controlled. Anyone who has followed the scene knows Petro-Canada, which was created a little over three years ago, now is the first ranking Canadian company and the only Canadian company in the top ten of the petroleum companies in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillespie: It seems to me the chief financial critic of the opposition was attempting to mislead the Canadian public by the suggestion that somehow or other Canadians own and control the industry. What do the Tories have against the national oil company? Apparently nothing, as long as the national oil company operating in Canada belongs to some other country.

A short while ago the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) suggested that the Japanese national oil company did not exist. As reported at page 3433 of Hansard dated February 20, 1979, he said the following:

> The four strongest economies in the world are those of the United States, Germany, Japan and Switzerland. Not one of those countries has a national oil company.

Hon. members will know that the United States has no need for one as five of the Seven Sisters exist in the United States. Certainly hon. members on this side of the House know that the other two countries, Germany and Japan, have significant state ownership in national oil companies. The hon. member for Calgary Centre should have known this because the Canadian affiliate of the Japanese national oil company has a joint venture with the Canadian national oil company, Petro-Canada, in the in situ development of the tar sands.

If the Leader of the Opposition were to form the government, he would dismantle Petro-Canada. He would get rid of it or, to use his words, he would wind it up.

Mr. Oberle: He did not say that.

Mr. Gillespie: He would wind it up, a favourite phrase which he has repeated many times. What the Leader of the Opposition is saying is that he would turn over the joint venture between Petro-Canada and the Japanese national oil company affiliate, which one of the official critics of the opposition indicated did not exist in Canada, presumably to one of the multinational corporations in Canada. I do not see how Canadians or members on this side can take any other implication out of the hon. member's remarks when he said that he would wind up the national oil company of Canada, the Canadian national oil company which has entered into a joint venture with a foreign national oil company.

The opposition does not seem to realize that the very significant joint venture which Petro-Canada entered into off the Labrador coast is with EastCan. EastCan is a very significant investment, through a series of corporations, by the French government. Again the Leader of the Opposition would dismantle, sell, get rid of, or wind up the Canadian national oil company. He would have to say to the President of France, "I am sorry, we are not in a position in Canada, as a matter of Tory policy, to enter into joint ventures with your national oil company. We cannot deal with you; we do not want to deal with you. Make your own deals. Why don't you make a deal with one of the multinationals?" That is what EastCan was doing before Petro-Canada moved in on this joint venture.

Canadians living in Atlantic Canada recognize the importance of Petro-Can to Atlantic Canada. Just the other day the energy minister of Newfoundland extolled the virtues of Petro-Canada in terms of the planning and development of the oil resources off his province and off Labrador. On an earlier occasion the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), in a question directed to me, pushed hard for more activity on the part of Petro-Canada off the Labrador coast. Yet the Leader of the Opposition said that he would dismantle Petro-Canada, the first and only Canadian company in the first ten. He would get rid of it, he would sell it.

Mr. Pinard: It is unbelievable.

Mr. Gillespie: He would stab it in the back. I hear the comment, "It is unbelievable". It is unbelievable, incomprehensible, and ludicrous.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillespie: Perhaps some members opposite feel somewhat uncomfortable. Perhaps some of them are hoping that the confusions of the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) will tend to fudge this issue of Petro-Canada, but let me remind them of a few things which happened recently. In a speech in Calgary on April 7, the Leader of the Opposition said that first they, "would cut the role of government in Canada and encourage the risk-taker, the worker and the Canadian who want to reach out and build in this country." Also he indicated that it would be done in the following ways, amongst others: "We would get the Government of Canada out of Petro-Canada." That is what the Leader of the Opposition said in 1978 in Calgary. He repeated the same theme before the Canadian Club in Montreal on March 13, 1978. More recently he repeated the same theme in other centres across the country. Some opposition members are starting to feel somewhat uncomfortable. I have referred to the discomfort of some of the Atlantic members with the position of their leader on this issue.

I should like to refer to some of the comments of the official energy critic of the Conservative party, the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham. At page 3386 of Hansard for February 19 the hon. member is reported to have had this to say:

● (1710)

—the intervention of a state oil trading company in the middle of complex, complicated negotiations and dealings between people in the private sector and people in the producing field would not add anything toward the solution of the international energy crisis of today.

He went on to say:

I do not believe that the intervention of Petro-Can in the Mexican transaction, or in the Venezuelan transaction, would have been any help at all.

This clearly demonstrates the total bankruptcy of policy on the part of the Tory party, the official opposition, in respect of the role of a national oil company which other countries have seen to be important to their security.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillespie: The hon. member and the official opposition do not seem to realize that the western hemisphere sources, Mexico and Venezuela, can be enormously important to Canada. Right now Venezuela is supplying roughly 40 per cent of our energy needs, and Mexico has offered to supply another 20 per cent, equivalent to the amount of oil we were getting from Iran.

Both these countries, Mexico and Venezuela, have national oil companies, and both countries have said they want to deal on a direct basis and would like to deal with our national oil company. In Venezuela the national oil company there, Petroleos de Venezuela, has already established a working relationship with Petro-Canada. Petroleos de Venezuela and PetroCan are going to be participating in four important research and development projects aimed at the production and development of heavy oil. Both countries have enormous potential there. Petroleos de Venezuela, the national oil company, is not saying it wants to deal with some multinational corporation. It is saying it wants to deal with Petro-Canada. It has made it very clear it wants to deal with Petro-Canada.

Venezuela has heavy oil and the importance of Venezuela to our future in terms of helping to unlock the secrets of heavy oil can be just as important as Venezuela has been in the past. It is a country which supplies Canada with close to 40 per cent. It is a major supplier for over 40 to 50 years of oil, and it wants to deal with Petro-Canada because it recognizes the importance of this national oil company. We want to deal with Petroleos de Venezuela because we recognize its importance to our future as well.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me members of the opposition are getting a little uncomfortable. As I said a little earlier, there are members on the opposite side who are uncomfortable with the official position of their party, and who are very uncomfortable with the position of the Leader of the Official Opposition. That is becoming apparent from the comments and heckling on the other side.

The official energy critic of the Tory party said he did not see how Petro-Canada could be particularly helpful in the Mexican transaction. He was referring to the undertaking that Mexico has conveyed to us. The government of Mexico conveyed the undertaking to me in Mexico City in early January that it would be prepared to guarantee 100,000 barrels a day. That government has said it wants Pemex, its national oil company, to work out the details with our national oil company, Petro-Canada. That government did not say to me that it wanted its national oil company, Pemex, to work out the details with anybody else. It wants the deal made between the national oil company in Canada and the national oil company in Mexico. This is what security of supply is all about.

Later on in the same debate the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham is reported as stating, at page 3387 of Hansard, and he was talking about arranging contracts with Venezuela and Mexico:

If Petro-Can did follow this useless intervention, to my mind consumers' costs would go up.

He does not recognize security of supply when it is staring him in the face. Again he was against Petro-Canada, yet a couple of days later on February 25, as reported in the Sunday Toronto Star, he stated:

The Conservative party is not necessarily against having any sort of international oil-trading corporation. It may well be that we might need . . . should have . . . one—

The energy critic was starting to feel uncomfortable. He was starting to feel the concern of Canadians, the concern of the public. He started to become aware that the public was uncomfortable, as are members of his own party, with the official Tory position.

Just when we thought the Tories were about to jump the other way we saw another CP report of a couple of days ago which said that the Conservative energy critic denied government charges Monday that his party has revised plans to dismantle PetroCan, the government oil company. Quite clearly the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham has once again established that the official position of his party is to dismantle the national oil company.

I have referred to the Japanese national oil company, which is operating in the Athabasca oil sands with Petro-Canada, a corporation which the hon. member for Calgary Centre seems to be unaware of, and I have said the German government has a significant interest in another corporation, Deminex. It is small and I do not want to suggest it is a large corporation, or anything as large as PetroCan. It is a small corporation, but the point is that the German government, which was referred to by the hon. member for Calgary Centre, recognizes the importance of a corporation in which it has a significant or controlling interest in terms of providing security of supply, in the same way that the British government recognizes this.

As you probably know, the British government has two corporations in which it has the controlling interest, British Petroleum, and the British National Oil Corporation. The French government has controlling interest in oil companies for its security of supply. The Italian government has a controlling interest in a national oil company, and the Japanese government has a controlling interest in a national oil company. They recognize the importance of national oil companies to security of supply. Quite clearly there is a bankruptcy on the part of the Tory party in respect of the importance of national oil companies. There is little understanding about the importance of security of supply and the instrument that can attain security of supply for Canada, and I refer to Petro-Canada.

I hope it will be possible to move this bill through the committee stage and bring it back to the House at a very early date. It may be possible to bring this bill back to the House on Friday. The Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, I am told, is ready to consider this bill. I am told as well that none of the provinces, when this bill went through the House the last time, raised any objections to provisions in the bill then, nor have they since. The last time this bill was in the House it received considerable discussion and attention, and I would hope, given the urgency of the situation outside this country—the revolution in Iran, the report of the mobilization of the armed forces of Saudi Arabia today, and the reports of the erratic price behaviour by the other OPEC producers, the unexpected increases—it will receive speedy passage. There is also the possibility that the United States may invoke rationing in the very near future. There are reports that the government of the United States has submitted legislation to Congress dealing with mandatory allocation measures and a rationing system.

● (1720)

Given these factors, and given the fact that Canada is a member by treaty of the emergency oil sharing arrangement under the International Energy Agency, whereby we would be obligated to invoke an allocation system in the event that world consumption were reduced as a result of shortage of supply by 7 per cent, and given the fact that we are 5 per cent already on a world-wide basis—which is not all that far away from the 7 per cent, the trigger level, as it is called—I would hope that the House and all parties would deal with this matter expeditiously so that we might deal with it in third reading form later this week.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Monday, February 26, consideration of the motion of Mr. Ouellet that Bill C-29, to amend the National Housing Act and the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act and to make other related amendments, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): I listened very carefully both to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) and to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) and I felt, Mr. Speaker, that as a Canadian coming from the eastern part of the country, my interests were much better served and more secure—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I must advise the hon. member that, in this debate on Bill C-29, relating to the National Housing Act, he cannot deal with the subject of a bill we have just passed, otherwise other hon. members will want to do the same.

Mr. Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, I was just going to deal with the bill before us which, I think, confirms once again the move of this government to protect and serve more efficiently the interests of Canadians, a measure which hopefully will be supported by all Canadians. For this reason, the suggestion in Quebec now is that the Progressive Conservative party's greatest challenge is to find 60 candidates to cover the 75 constituencies in the province.

Mr. Speaker, Monday last I was giving enthusiastic support to Bill C-29 to amend the National Housing Act, thus highlighting the Canadian government's goal of using a new approach with other levels of government, a global approach under which three current projects, the neighbourhood improvement program, the municipal infrastructure program and the municipal incentive program would be merged into one, the community services grant program that would have an annual budget of about $150 million for 1980 and an expected $250 million for the next year, and if the various provinces so desire, further consultations could be opened to clarify certain technical points. If further improvements are desired, it will be perfectly possible to introduce them in later years, after those two years I referred to with financial commitments of roughly $150 and $250 million respectively.

This new approach stems from the requests of provincial governments wishing to assume fully that administrative responsibility which has been recognized by the Canadian government. The government will maintain its financial contributions along with other levels of government for the well-being of Canadians in order to improve the environment through better community services. The federal contribution will not be restricted to new housing or housing improvements, it will apply to the creation of community services extended by municipalities. Most importantly, this legislation has the flexibility needed. Municipalities that so desire can build community centres, or public parks, or public libraries, or they can improve municipal buildings.

Last Monday, I expressed my concerns with this new departure in social housing, based on the past performances of provincial governments. I referred to Canadian government commitments vis-à-vis the provinces in fiscal 1977. The Canadian government had allocated the provinces $353 million of public housing funds for people who need it most, people in the lowest income group. Of that amount, $199 million only were used in fiscal 1977.

• (1730)

One could denote at that time a little lack of enthusiasm on the part of provincial governments for the construction of public housing. But those worries might be set to rest because this bill does not put on the back burner non-profit organizations and housing corporations which will play an important role in the construction of housing for lower income people to help the Government of Canada reach the annual objective of 30,000 new housing units for low income people compared with the 19,000 now being built.

These are important amendments to the National Housing Act because non-profit organizations will be able to get financing from private organizations and lending institutions, and the Government of Canada will pitch in a special subsidy to reduce the interest rate, the commercial rate that can go from 11 per cent, 12 per cent or 13 per cent to 2 per cent. The subsidy will be paid annually by the Government of Canada to reduce interest rates and thus the liabilities of those.

Mr. Speaker, again I want to congratulate the ministers and the officers who played a major role in the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation because the end result, as I mentioned Monday, is very good. I think that result in the housing sector will also be reflected in the result we will get in the energy area. In the past four years 250,000 housing units were built in Canada. We can make a comparison because the Progressive Conservative party seems to go and get ideas from our American friends.

Here are our accomplishments in Canada during the years 1967 to 1977: on average ten new housing units were built in Canada per 1,000 population while during the same period the proportion in United States was only 6.8 for the same number of people. I think this indicates our housing policies were not all that bad. But there are also other comparisons which can be drawn to confirm once again that performance by the Government of Canada in recent years. I refer to the 1968 Gallup poll on housing. What were the results of that 1968 Gallup poll on housing? The results of that poll indicated that 60 per cent of people were satisfied with their housing, but 34 per cent were dissatisfied, and 6 per cent did not have an opinion.

Let us now look at the situation ten years later. Another Gallup poll was taken asking the same questions to ensure better continuity and easier comparison. Here are the results of this poll on housing taken at the end of 1978: 85 per cent of Canadians were satisfied with the housing situation and only 13 per cent were dissatisfied. This is a most positive result which confirms the extent to which the Trudeau government has applied itself to housing conditions in Canada, and I wish to take this opportunity to congratulate also those who contributed to this success. Of course, this success is due to the initiative of the government, through its ministers and members of parliament, but also to the assistance of the builders and all financial institutions.

This national success is also reflected in the various provinces. As I represent a city which now has a population of more than 250,000, I had a survey made to find out to what extent the federal housing authority had contributed to housing in Laval. The Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation provided the following statistics on insured loans granted to home buyers in the city of Laval. From 1968 to 1977, authorized borrowers received $152,272,000 to build 7,279 units. Thanks to the direct loans granted under section 15, we were able to build 3,960 housing units for which financing amounted to $45 million.

Let us now look at the contribution of the Canadian government to the infrastructures in Laval. Once again, we find that the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation made a major contribution to urban development, either through water purification projects, sewer systems or water systems, and I see here a figure of $8 million for 1976 alone. There is a contribution of $2 million for 1977, and I believe that in 1978, the amount of financing will exceed $8 million. In this case, we got about 25 per cent of the loan. So the Canadian government subsidizes home buyers and provides assistance at the municipal level for the construction of sewers and water pipes.

I asked how much money the Canadian government gave to the city of Laval for the construction of high-density units. Under his policy, the Canadian government gave $1,000 per unit. The policy ended last December. At that time, we provided a subsidy of a little over $2,158,000 for housing to reduce construction prices and thus to lower rents.

I have also a list of direct loans granted by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to construction companies building senior citizen homes for non-profit organizations.

The people of Laval, and I am convinced that the situation is the same in the ridings of my colleagues in this House, have built in Sainte-Rose a 174-unit senior citizen home entirely financed by the government of Canada. We have also built in Chomedey the Manoir Cardinal entirely financed by the government of Canada and three other homes financed in a proportion of 90 to 95 per cent, by the Quebec Housing Corporation, the Manoir des Îles, the Résidence Sainte-Dorothée, and we are building two other homes eligible for subsidies from the Quebec Housing Corporation, but which are financed at 95 per cent by the government of Canada, one in Laval-des-Rapides and another in Chomedey which will accommodate about 200 people and be financed by both governments. Mr. Speaker, those are some of the projects undertaken in co-operation with the provincial government and with extensive help from the municipalities.

Mr. Speaker, I quoted those figures to emphasize the role played by the Government of Canada, through the National Housing Act, in the housing field. And to support my argument, I refer to an article from La Presse dated February 20, about a report published in the magazine Habitation 79 on the comparative purchasing cost of a single family house in Ontario, in Laval and in Western Ontario, in Metropolitan Toronto, at Mississauga. The cost of land is $12,692 in Toronto, $2,400 in Laval, and they mentioned also the cost of local services and I wish to underline that there are some differences, that the legislation is different as public services are not financed in the same way in the province of Quebec as in the province of Ontario. In fact municipalities in Quebec pay for the services, that is sewer and water systems and sidewalks, through municipal taxes, while in Ontario, when you buy a lot these services are financed by the promoters. So the cost of these services is included in the price of the land and the owners pay only a property tax.

Notwithstanding all this, Mr. Speaker, I can say that we have contributed to lower building costs by giving assistance to developers, by financially helping municipalities and by creating this competition between promoters. I am sure that a property which costs $35,910 to build in Laval, as mentioned in the article, would cost about $65,000 in Ontario, in greater Toronto, because of the reasons I mentioned and because of the different tax structure.

Thanks to the initiative taken by the Canadian government in putting programs at the disposal of all agencies having a direct interest in housing, we have succeeded in reducing housing construction costs in Canada as a whole and in Quebec in particular. I feel that if there had been more landowners in Toronto, a little more competition between landowners or developers, they would have obtained for home buyers the same benefits as in Quebec.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I hope that opposition members are as conscious as we are on this side of the House of the importance this legislation has both for those who want better housing conditions and for the municipalities which will use the funds available under this legislation to provide their residents with parks, libraries and the infrastructure required.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on Bill C-29, which is designed to amend the National Housing Act and the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act and to make other related amendments. Shelter, Mr. Speaker, is one of the most basic human needs and has been so from time immemorial. Shelter, whether it be in the form of modern housing or any other suitable form to protect human beings against adverse elements of nature, has always been regarded as a criterion for measuring the quality of life.

I am, therefore, glad to speak on a matter such as housing, that is so close to all of us and fundamental to the well-being of any society. This debate on amending the National Housing Act affords some of us on this side of the House the welcome opportunity to make a contribution and offer our opinion on the national housing policy.

It has been a most frustrating experience, to say the least, to have to put up with the stonewalling tactics of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) during his appearances before the housing committee. On occasion the minister would disallow members of this department from answering members' queries and legitimate concern about the direction of housing policy. Maybe the government has no housing policy and is therefore unable to be answerable to Canadians about its haphazard programs.

You will recall that the proposals contained in the bill now before the House were first made public almost a year ago. Given the minister's pomposity, and propensity to election jitters, he readily pounces on the opportunity to make unrealistic promise-filled pronouncements. At this stage, however, the hide and seek game is over, and the government will have to face the Canadian electorate and account for its bankupt policies.

I would like to address myself to the residential rehabilitation program, which was introduced to provide federal aid in the improvement and repair of substandard dwellings. The Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program is one of the four major areas to be affected by the bill now before us. Under the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program, RRAP, loans, part of which could be forgiven, were available only to homeowners and landlords who owned property in neighbourhood improvement areas of the country, and for non-profit housing projects. The new legislation intends to remove these restrictions and allow RRAP to be applicable on a universal basis.

Now coming to the universal application of the rehabilitation program, the proposal to remove any restraints on the applicability of the program is the greatest deception of all. Previously RRAP funds were only available to houses located within neighbourhood improvement areas, so designated in conjunction with provincial and local governments. An internal memo from Mr. Hession, the president of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, to the minister states:

> You realize I am sure that neither the industry not the municipal delivery system nor the present and projected RRAP budget permit the operation of a "universal" program . . . Rehabilitation effort will continue to be concentrated in specified action areas as in the past, but as a matter of policy, not formal legislation.

In view of this apparent contradiction between the terms outlined in the bill as to the universal application of RRAP and the advice from the department to the effect that the pursuit of such a policy is not feasible at this time, is the minister's statement just another election inspired promise, obviously never to be fulfilled? Has the minister undertaken serious consultations with his department officials to determine what course of action to follow, or is the minister posturing for the up-coming election?

The internal memo to which I referred cautions the minister against making promises that the department knows it cannot fulfil. It states, for instance, ". . . we should avoid raising expectations which we cannot satisfy." The hon. gentleman would be well advised to heed the sound advice of his departmental officials instead of making promises that he knows himself he cannot fulfil. He ought to consider his own department's ten-year plan to modernize and rehabilitate Canada's housing stock.

It is estimated there are approximately two million housing units in Canada which were constructed prior to the end of the Second World War. These premises are in dire need of modernization, whether simply to upgrade insulation or to carry out repairs on the basic structures. I support the contention of CMHC that over a ten-year period the 200,000 to 400,000 dwellings in need of serious upgrading, which are occupied by lower income people, should be brought up to maintenance and occupancy standards with RRAP funds. It is important to establish fair criteria to determine those who are in greatest need of funds for rehabilitation, and to this end I strongly urge that the program be made universal. Adequate and appropriate criteria should be developed to process applications. At the present time 20,000 units are being rehabilitated annually.

While the minister amuses himself playing number games to content himself with the achievements of the department, countless Canadians are joining the list of perplexed victims of the government's erratic housing policies. If there is a single word that sums up the policies of the federal government in housing, that word is "erratic". The minister is preoccupied with politicizing the housing issue rather than spending his time and energies devising means to help achieve a better standard of living for Canadians.

We cannot afford to look upon programs such as RRAP in isolation. They tie in with the mainstream of economic life in our nation. For instance, expansion of the rehabilitation program would undoubtedly offer employment to a large number of Canadians, and the spin-off effect would be felt in various other supporting industries. This would be a much welcomed move in view of the present high rate of unemployment in the construction industry.

While welcoming the move up the socio-economic ladder of many Canadians who have become homeowners of late, I cannot but help express sympathy with many unfortunate individuals who have had to give up their homes. The federal government programs lured many of these individuals into home ownership on grounds and terms which were not fair to prospective owners.

In 1978 the first home owners under the Assisted Home Ownership Program—AHOP—saw their five-year subsidy come to an end. The results have been extremely disappointing in that 10 per cent defaulted on their mortgages, unable or unwilling to meet their payments. This compares, by the way, with a default rate of only one half of one per cent on regular mortgages. It is in this area that the minister lacks compassion and sensitivity to the plight of home owners. He is merely interested in playing a numbers game to support his theory that no other person or government can do better than his own.

To support the point I am making, Mr. Speaker, a study done in 1972 by three faculty members of the University of Montreal charged that CMHC was too close to the development industry and was more concerned with housing starts than with the type of quality of housing needed. A case in point is the career of a well-known developer who turned administrator and then back to developer. I refer, of course, to the person of Mr. Teron, now in private business at the expense of the public purse.

In discussing the bill before us, may I take the opportunity to register concern over the federal government's unwillingness to contract out work to non-union labour? This leaves a number of small though reliable firms out in the cold when it comes to securing government contracts. I have spoken before in favour of allocating as many federal government projects to small businesses as possible. In view of the importance of this sector to our economy, I urge the government to give every encouragement to the small scale construction firms in the housing industry.

I have been an advocate of free market forces of supply and demand being the determining factor in the running of our economy. After all, it is on that that our economic success is modelled. I strongly suggest that the federal government allow the forces of the free market system to determine the price structure in the housing industry. Evidence all around us from various countries should convince anyone that, when market forces are allowed to operate freely the end product is more often than not less costly than when there is heavy government intervention.

Sometimes the cost of administering government programs is prohibitive and is detrimental to the very success of the programs. For instance, the government is still baffled about the lack of response to the Canadian home insulation program. Without elaborating at any great length, I would make the brief observation that the government ought to engage in a more vigorous advertising campaign to inform Canadians about the program. As well, the federal government might reconsider the present terms of the program. Most of us are aware that there is a special grant of $500 available in only two of the provinces, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. This $500 represents an outright grant.

I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that there are frigid zones elsewhere, including my own riding of Parry Sound-Muskoka, where insulation is even more badly needed than in those areas. Further, I would point out that the $500 grant available in the rest of Canada is subject to income tax. It is all well and good for a person whose income is so low that he does not have to pay income tax, but I repeat, in my view these arrangements are discriminatory. Again, the grant pays only two-thirds of the cost of materials up to $500. Of course if you purchase more than $500 worth of insulation materials you would be able to secure the full amount.

May I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

NATIONAL SECURITY

DIRECTIVE ISSUED RESPECTING SECURITY CLEARANCE OF PUBLIC SERVANTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the terms of Standing Order 43. My motion relates to a directive which came out of the office of the Solicitor General with respect to the security clearance of people in sensitive and public positions.

A paragraph in the directive reads that no person can be cleared for such a position while he or she has close relatives living within the borders of such foreign nations as may cause subjection to intolerable pressures, or if he or she has recently resided in foreign countries where no check of activities is possible. Having regard to this, and since one-third of all Canadian citizens fall into this category, I ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges):

That the Solicitor General be required to rescind this directive immediately and avail himself at the earliest opportunity in the House of assuring hon. members that such clearances will not be carried out along ethnic lines.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be put to the House only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

SETTLEMENT OF NATIVE LAND CLAIMS IN YUKON TERRITORY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of the same Standing Order on a matter of some urgency.

In view of the recent agreement, dated February 19 of this year, outlining the process for negotiating native land claims in the Yukon territory, in view of the undertakings given by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development that the federal government would negotiate directly and in good faith, and in view of the provision in clause 3 which now gives the territorial government of the Yukon complete veto power over any settlement, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes):

That this House request the minister to delete the Yukon government veto power and accept the clear federal responsibility to negotiate, in good faith, a fair settlement of native claims in the Yukon.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for debate only with unanimous consent. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NARCOTICS

RECOGNITION OF DRUG PROBLEM IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—CALL FOR FEDERAL ASSISTANCE TO ALLEVIATE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on an urgent matter under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Last night's CBC airing of the television drama "Drying Up the Streets" graphically brought to light the interrelated problems of heroin addiction and prostitution. In light of the concern about prostitution expressed yesterday in this House, and in light of the many requests made by myself and my colleagues for federal financial assistance to the British Columbia heroin health entry plan, a plan which is of considerable merit and which could lead toward the resolution of the heroin addiction problem in British Columbia, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen):

● (1410)

That this House recommends to the Prime Minister, the Minister of Justice, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, as well as the Solicitor General, that they request a special screening of "Drying Up the Streets" and that they spend some time with the Vancouver drug squad to witness first-hand the degradation and violence inherent in the heroin sub-culture and, further, this House recognizes the special drug problem of British Columbia by demonstrating its support for federal assistance to the British Columbia heroin health entry program.

Mr. Speaker: The introduction of such a motion for debate at this time can be done only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

PROPOSED CHANGE OF NAME OF PENSIONERS' ASSOCIATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the terms of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Danson) has decreed that the Canadian Forces Long Service Pensioners Association must stop using that name and that it is now to be known as "90358 Canada Incorporated". Assurances have been received that the other side of the House is not totally opposed to the organization's using its time-honoured name. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon):

That this House directs the Minister of National Defence and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to rescind their objections and restore the name Canadian Forces Long Service Pensioners Association to that association.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate at this time requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

RECOMMENDATION THAT GOVERNMENT INVEST MORE IN RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with an important matter of pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Gillespie) has convened an ad hoc committee made up of distinguished representatives of the scientific community and other sectors to determine how the government could reach total investments of 1.5 per cent of the gross national product by 1983, and that the committee indicated that annual investments would have to be increased by 27 per cent in the industrial sector, by 10 per cent in government research and development and by 30 per cent in university research, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard):

That the government review its budget expenditures and honour its commitment made in June 1978 by the Minister of State for Science and Technology to invest the necessary amounts each year in research and development so as to reach 1.5 per cent of the gross national product by 1983.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, such a motion can be presented for debate only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

PROPOSAL THAT MULTILATERAL AGREEMENT BE NEGOTIATED WITH PROVINCES CONCERNING TEACHING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask for the unanimous consent of the House to propose a motion regarding an urgent and important matter.

In view of the fact that federal-provincial agreements on assistance to the teaching of official languages will end in a month, and in view of the importance of these agreements which guarantee to Canadian students the right to be educated in their mother tongue while remaining free to learn the second language, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert):

That the House lends its total support to the Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts) in the negotiation of a multilateral agreement with all provinces, and considers that the desire of certain provinces for bilateral agreements would in effect bear unjustly on official language minorities and widen the ever present educational gap between Canadian provinces.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the terms of the hon. member's motion. Under Standing Order 43, such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

LOTO CANADA

REQUEST FOR DELAY IN IMPLEMENTING LUXURY LOTTERY UNTIL STUDY COMPLETED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

With regard to recent reports that Loto Canada is studying the feasibility of setting up a luxury lottery entailing the sale of $20, $25 and $100 tickets, and in light of the minister's recent confession of having lost over $13 million because she rushed into the Loto Select lottery without proper consultation, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That this House directs the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) to await the study requested by the hon. member for York West and which has been undertaken by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in order to assess the full implications of lotteries in our society before endeavouring to implement another federal lottery.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be introduced for discussion only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

LOTO CANADA

REASON DSS RECOMMENDED CANCELLATION CLAUSE IN LOTO SELECT CONTRACTS

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Supply and Services relating to the loss of some $13 million in the government's aborted attempt to set up a computerized lottery.

● (1415)

Yesterday, the Minister of Supply and Services indicated to the House that his officials in the Department of Supply and Services had recommended to Loto Canada that they include in the contracts that they signed with General Instruments Limited an escape or cancellation clause. May I ask the minister what the reason was for the officials making that recommendation?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Supply and Services): A cancellation clause is included in all our contracts, naturally, to establish the terms under which damages are payable to the contractor. The formula is therefore most simple. We pay the contractor for the work performed up to cancellation, plus a certain percentage of profits. We suggested to the management of Loto Canada that such a clause be included in the contract, and I believe Loto Canada asked the company to include it but the latter refused to do so.

[English]

REASON LOTO CANADA IGNORED PROVISION OF CANCELLATION CLAUSE IN LOTO SELECT CONTRACTS

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I would like to turn now to the minister who is responsible for losing this $13 million of public funds of which she is the trustee.

In light of the fact that the Minister of Supply and Services has indicated to the House that his department recommended the inclusion of a cancellation clause in these contracts with General Instruments, can the minister tell the House why she and her officials ignored this very prudent advice?

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member appears continually to refer to the amount of $13.15 million expended on Loto Select as a loss, and he attempts to attribute it to the General Instruments contract alone, which he well knows is false.

In addition, he knows that it is usual and traditional—and the proper term, by the way—to call it a "termination for the convenience of the Crown" clause. This "termination for the convenience of the Crown" clause is used in the Department of Supply and Services' contracts at all times. However, in this case the Department of Supply and Services was making recommendations to Loto Canada on a number of different contracts and, in fact, on the General Instruments' contract they made the recommendation and the management of Loto Canada examined it carefully, taking into account the recommendation of DSS, and determined that it would be more favourable to the company if they made a plan, should it ever become necessary, for a negotiated release of contract rather than the traditional termination clause.

Mr. Beatty: Apparently, if this minister were playing poker she would prefer four two's to four kings.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: We should have a convenience for the Crown clause to rid of the minister, too, I think, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister whether she will now follow the example that has been set by her most junior colleague, the Minister of Supply and Services, and put an end to the wall of secrecy that she has constructed around this whole affair. Will she now table in the House of Commons the contracts with all the clauses which were signed by her with suppliers?

Mrs. Campagnolo: Mr. Speaker, if I were playing poker, I would certainly not play it with jokers who had already been tried and failed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Campagnolo: I find it surprising and strange indeed that the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo would prefer to join his leader in getting rid of Loto Canada altogether than in knowing the facts which I tabled in the House and which his most assiduous colleague, the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton, researched night and day only to discover one missing paragraph, which I will discuss later today.

These facts, and the papers tabled in the House, were discussed with the Auditor General. In fact, he is the auditor of Loto Canada, as the hon. member well knows. A copy of the Loto Select document was sent to the Auditor General's office. I believe the hon. gentleman opposite wants me to table all manner of contracts. I will simply say that the action taken in terminating the contract of General Instruments was done at the least possible cost, and if the hon. gentleman had taken the time to read the Loto Select cancellation document, he would have seen that the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, along with Loto Canada, had budgeted in excess of $11 million—$11.7 million—for the cancellation of that contract, which was cancelled at $8 million, thereby not even reaching the potential amount. There was the amount of $3.7 million which was not expended in the provinces' recommendation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

RESPONSIBILITY FOR LOSS SUSTAINED IN LOTO SELECT PROGRAM

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my question to the same minister. Yesterday, in an interview with journalists outside the House, she was asked a question as follows, which I read from a transcript of that interview:

Just to make it clear, when you went to General Instruments, when your consultants went to General Instruments, and asked for a cancellation clause, did they say "no" outright, or did they say if you want it it will cost you a lot more?

Well, I'm afraid you would have to ask the management of Loto Canada that. As you know, I am the minister who reports to the House for the Crown corporation; it is a Schedule "C" corporation. You might want to look into that because the president of Loto Canada would make those decisions.

Is it the minister's position that the responsibility for the $13 million in disclosed losses resulting from the cancellation of Loto Select lies solely with the officials of Loto Canada and not with herself as the minister who answers to the House for Loto Select?

● (1420)

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Naturally, Mr. Speaker, policy decisions are made by the government. Management decisions—and in this case the General Instruments' contract was a management decision—are made by management. I think the hon. member for Yukon did a great service in the over-all discussion of Loto Canada yesterday when he inserted himself into the discussion of a question of privilege and said that he did not want to be confusing the issue by bringing any facts forward.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mrs. Campagnolo: I see he is staying in that same form today.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, in a letter to the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo, the Auditor General, Mr. Macdonell, disclosed that he is now carrying out an audit of the costs incurred by Loto Canada in setting up the Loto Select game.

Since a detailed report on investigations such as this can be provided to parliament only in the annual report of the Auditor General, would the minister undertake to seek approval from her colleagues for an interim report by the Auditor General on Loto Select, to be provided to parliament? Since Loto Canada is a Crown corporation and as such its spending cannot be reviewed by a committee of the House, will the minister move a special reference to the appropriate committee of the House so that a thorough investigation of the operations of Loto Canada can be undertaken?

Mrs. Campagnolo: Mr. Speaker, here we have, again, the strange anomaly of the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Campagnolo: Last year, when they had ample opportunity to call before the committee members of Loto Canada and members of the auditor's staff we had with us, they did not even bother to call Loto Canada. Not once in the whole year was it before the committee. Now, this year, they want two to make up for the fact that they did not have one last year. That is an independent office of the House of Commons, naturally, and I believe we will have our regular report, as we always do, to which the opposition then can make reference.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENERGY

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD REPORT—SURPLUS OF NATURAL GAS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources regarding the most recent report of the National Energy Board which indicates that if the board had followed the formula it has always used in the past, there would be no surplus of natural gas, but by means of a formula specially concocted for the occasion, it finds a surplus of 1.6 trillion cubic feet or 3.4 trillion cubic feet, depending on which premise is taken, and recommends an export of two trillion cubic feet.

In view of the fact the government has endorsed the idea of the Q and M line to the maritimes and the idea of making gas available to transfer from oil to gas in many of the industries in central Canada, can the minister assure the House and the country that no exports of natural gas will be approved until such time as it has been demonstrated that there is sufficient natural gas, first, for the Q and M line and, second, for the transfer from oil to gas in industry; and, finally, to supply the growing demands of the petrochemical industry for petroleum products?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, the government's priority has been to increase energy security for Canada; also, it has been to use natural gas to the maximum possible extent to displace foreign oil. For that reason, the government welcomes the findings of the National Energy Board that our reserves have gone up significantly by 4.7 trillion cubic feet. There is absolutely record activity right now with respect to the exploration and development of our gas fields and petroleum resources.

● (1425)

The prospects for the future are exceedingly good. We are particularly pleased with all these events because they result from initiatives and a climate which the government has provided to get this kind of activity going.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillespie: Clearly, it is going to be possible for natural gas to provide a greater degree of energy security for Canadians than was thought to be the case a short while ago—two years ago—when the National Energy Board last reported. They have, as hon. members know, included two new tests along with the reserves test. We believe this deliverability test will be an improvement to the protection of Canadians in terms of future energy supply.

With the additional reserves, the additional tests and the possibility of using exports, as the hon. member has indicated, to maximize Canadian markets for natural gas, I think the outlook has changed quite significantly in the last two years.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, that was a lot of gas, but not much of an answer to my question.

In view of the fact that in 1970 this government accepted the recommendation of the National Energy Board and approved the export of these three trillion cubic feet, and only a few years later the same board and the same government were telling the people of Canada that unless we built a pipeline into the Arctic we were going to freeze in the dark, the minister will have to find something better than this rhetoric in order to convince the Canadian people that we can meet our needs and at the same time export an additional two trillion cubic feet of natural gas.

I want to ask the minister this very specific question. In view of the fact that the estimate of Q and M for gas requirements is 5.1 trillion cubic feet, and the National Energy Board estimate is 3.3 cubic feet—which is a difference of 1.8 trillion cubic feet—and if Q and M is right in that regard, then two trillion cubic feet for export will be used up—and you cannot use the same gas twice—which will take priority, Q and M or the exports? Would the minister please answer that question?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I have made it quite clear in answers in this House over the last few days, and even before, that the potential of the Q and M pipeline and the other competing application, the application by TransCanada PipeLines, to move Canadian gas into the Quebec and maritime markets is a matter of very great importance to this government.

I have just said, in answer to the hon. member's first question, that we believe that exports can also support that particular expansion of the Canadian market for Canadian gas. I think I made it very clear in my first answer that we would expect the National Energy Board, at its hearings, to examine the potential, the linkage between gas exports and the development of these markets in Canada.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, neither the National Energy Board nor anybody else, other than the government, can make the final determination as to which will have priority. I am trying to find out from the minister if Q and M is simply a pre-election gimmick for the people in the maritimes, or whether the government is serious in its intention to see to it that the gas available for that pipeline is reserves.

I want to tell the minister that page 5 of the National Energy Board report points out that in its previous report of two years ago it predicted we would have gas deficiencies by 1983, and it now says it is able to say that we will not have gas deficiencies before 1992. At my age, 1992 does not give me any concern, but to a blossoming youth like you, Mr. Speaker, it must cause some apprehension. I am, therefore, asking the minister if he considers that a 13-year down the road possibility of gas shortages does not concern him and does not make him feel that the government ought to say that the first priority for the gas which is now in place will be the Q and M line and the need for Canadian supplies, rather than the export market. Will the minister tell us where he stands on that?

● (1430)

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I would like to go back over the same ground, because I think the hon. member has missed some of the important points I have made.

I have stated many times my belief in the importance of the Q and M pipeline, or the competing application, to Canada. I have stated many times why I believe that the expansion of the gas markets in Quebec and the maritimes will be important to Canada, because it can displace foreign oil. I believe that the NEB makes this point, that natural gas can displace imported oil by as much as 100,000 barrels of oil per day by 1995. That is a very important factor in Canadian security.

The NEB, in their report, made it quite clear that they have taken my advice and the advice of the government with respect to this hearing, and they have made sure that there is sufficient gas to look after the expansion of eastern Canadian markets before they have looked at exports. I have gone further than that and said in my answers just a few moments ago that I would expect exports to be made as a result of the surplus which they have found.

Those exports could support the development and expansion of those markets in the way that, if we did not have any exports, we would not be able to support them. I think those exports could change the economic viability of the Q and M pipeline very considerably, and that is why I have said in my answers today that I believe export potential can be of very considerable help in moving that particular project forward.

Oral Questions

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

RECOMMENDATION THAT GOVERNMENT INVEST MORE IN RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and Minister of State for Science and Technology. In the report he got recently from the ad hoc committee he set up on funds earmarked for research and development, annual increases of 27, 10 and 30 per cent respectively were recommended for the industrial, government and university sectors. Statistics Canada reported recently that an increase of only 8.4 per cent was to be expected for the current year for research and development in the private sector. In view of the huge gap between the recommendations of the ad hoc committee, the figures announced by the Minister of National Health and Welfare and those of Statistics Canada, can the minister explain to the House how he plans to respect the commitments made last June to increase funds for R and D to 1.5 per cent of the gross national product by 1983?

[English]

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, there have been a number of very significant increases in the allocation of moneys by the federal government for research and development in this country. Those were announced by my predecessor. At the same time, last summer, the government announced a number of measures aimed at securing more research and development in this country, and I refer to the Centre of Excellence policy.

At that time it was made quite clear that the increase in research and development, if we were to achieve the target of 1.5 per cent of the GNP by the early 1980s, would require a significant contribution from the private sector. The point was made that the government could not find the funds and spend the money to do it on its own; that it had to be done to a large extent in the private sector.

To that end, the Minister of Finance in his most recent budget changed, altered and improved the tax credit system for research and development in industry, a significant incremental change. I believe that the amounts there may be worth in the order of $125 million, and I very much hope that private industry will take advantage of this benefit.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: I would like to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister's arguments do not relate to what we just found in the estimates tabled recently by his colleague of the Treasury Board. According to the statistics reported in October 1978 by the Department of Science and Technology, the cuts on research in that department represent 78.4 per cent of the budget cuts in the Department of Communications, 62.9 per cent in the Department of Environment, 53.2 per cent in the Department of Fisheries, 100 per cent in the Department of Science and Technology and 85.7 per cent on the social sciences and humanities research program.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member has a question, he should ask it right away.

Mr. Laprise: Could the minister explain why, among those departments, his Department of Science and Technology is the most affected by those budget cuts?

[English]

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, there have been a number of changes in budgets. Some have gone up, and some have gone down. But the effect is an increase in research and development. As I noted in my first answer, of course, the budget estimates do not reflect the tax credits which the Minister of Finance provided in his last budget because those tax credits affect the revenue side of the equation, not the expenditure side, and the most significant increase we could expect would be through the tax credit side.

TRADE

OPPORTUNITY FOR DEBATE ON GATT AGREEMENTS ARRIVED AT

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I would like to welcome him back. I hope that he had a lift while he was away from the House last week and that his spirits are improved.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister: In view of the situation that the GATT talks are concluded, and the importance of these talks to Canadian industry generally and to Canadian resource industries such as agriculture and fisheries, will the Prime Minister make a commitment that there will be a full disclosure of all agreements which the government has entered into, and a full debate on the results of those arrangements, as well as information on whatever adjustment assistance will be provided, before there is an election which is rumoured to be coming between now and July?

Will the goverment be making full disclosure before an election and giving us a chance for debate on that full disclosure?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if my spirits had not improved, this applause would certainly improve them. I am not worried about the hon. member; he always has his spirits with him.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: In so far as the undertaking which the hon. member is asking me to give, of course I would give it, provided the House is sitting at that time.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, at least I did not say that the Prime Minister was sinful, as his Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce did, or perhaps he said "had a skinful"; I am not sure which.

My supplementary question is for the Deputy Prime Minister—from the sublime to the ridiculous. The Deputy Prime Minister made a speech several days ago on GATT in which he said, "The major trade deal appears to be shaping up fine between Canada and the U.S., but there are still problems with Japan and the European Economic Community." But on February 21, Mr. Strauss of the United States said, "The tariff issue between Canada and the United States is far from settled" and that they were very upset over Canada's refusal to accept a new custom's code that would standardize valuation procedures. Who is telling the truth in this instance, the Deputy Prime Minister or Mr. Strauss?

[Editor's Note: Mr. MacEachen and Mr. Trudeau rose at the same time to answer the question.]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I think—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Give Allan a chance.

An hon. Member: Welcome back.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I apologize for making your job difficult. I understand that it must be impossible to know which of these ministers will answer, because we are all so anxious to put the facts before the House. I realize that on this subject my colleague, the Deputy Prime Minister is probably more competent than I am, but I just could not resist the temptation to congratulate the hon. member for his "wry" sense of humour.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary is to Flip, and not Flop. My question is for the Deputy Prime Minister, who is no longer in command. I am glad to see that the Prime Minister is not in trouble in his own ranks, as he is in Canada, apparently, according to his speech in Toronto.

● (1440)

Would the Deputy Prime Minister explain to the House what the difficulties are with the Japanese and European Community offers? He said they have not taken adequate action on many of our essential export interests; and do those interests include fisheries' products?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the earlier question, the statement I made about the possibility of imminent dealings with the United States was made on Monday of this week.

I said in the statement that, subject to the settlement of certain issues, there appears to be a major deal in the offing with the United States. That was true on Monday and it is true today, Thursday.

An hon. Member: What about tomorrow?

Mr. MacEachen: Quite apart from what Mr. Strauss may have said, on whatever date, with respect to possible dealings with the European Community and Japan, in the latter case we have not received offers that we believe are equal and provide a reciprocal advantage to Canada with respect to the offers we have made to Japan. It may be that with respect to that country we will have to withdraw certain concessions which we have put on the table.

With respect to the European Community, in our view we have not yet received adequate recognition of our requirements with respect to fisheries, non-ferrous metals and wood products.

POST OFFICE

STEPS TO IMPROVE DOOR-TO-DOOR DELIVERY

Mr. F. A. Philbrook (Halton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Postmaster General. In view of the fact many Canadians still are not receiving door-to-door mail delivery, when at the same time we could hire many more letter carriers and help the unemployment situation, will the minister speak to the President of the Treasury Board, and whatever other minister is appropriate, about transferring funds in some way from the government's budget and hiring more letter carriers?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, my relations with the President of the Treasury Board are very friendly. I have spoken to him a great deal about the possibility of having letter carriers for door-to-door delivery, but I would like to repeat again that this government has a policy of restraint as far as the budget is concerned. It is not a question for us to decide if we want to have a larger or smaller deficit; we want to have as small a deficit as possible.

As long as we abide by our policy of budget restraint for the moment we are trying to give the best service possible to everyone across the country. If by any chance we have more money, the economy is getting better and the policy of the government changes, this will be the first priority.

Oral Questions

SPORTS

REQUEST THAT GYMNAST KAREN KELSALL RECEIVE FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport). As the minister knows, Karen Kelsall is the only amateur gymnast who has reached world cup ranking. She has been promised help since last October, but has not received any as yet.

Is it now the minister's policy, or the policy of her department, that there are millions of dollars for professional hockey, but not one cent for world class amateurs?

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Certainly not, Mr. Speaker. The total amount for gymnastics this year is a great deal more than it was last year. Miss Kelsall's total support in help to her coach, help for travel and help for her over-all training, has amounted to $16,000, including her Game Plan support program.

We are very proud of Miss Kelsall, as I know the hon. member is. She has brought honour to Canada and will continue to do so with the help of Sport Canada.

Mr. Friesen: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister has two letters from the mother of Karen Kelsall that are waiting to be answered. Will she take time to answer them and provide the parents with the promised money that was supposed to be there last October?

Mrs. Campagnolo: Mr. Speaker, the only reason Mrs. Kelsall writes to me is that she knows very well I intervene for all amateur sports people when they have these difficulties. The Game Plan support program is—

Mr. Forrestall: October, November, December, January, February—five months.

Mrs. Campagnolo: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member from somewhere in the Atlantic provinces is perhaps bubbling over a bit.

I will make sure this matter is looked into today. If Miss Kelsall is having any problems, I will certainly see that they are attended to.

AIRPORTS

COST TO CANADIAN TAXPAYERS OF MIRABEL AIRPORT

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: Welcome back.

Mr. Hees: As the operating deficit for Mirabel airport has cost Canadian taxpayers in excess of $150 million in the three years since the airport started operation, and as the early deficit shows no sign of decreasing below $50 million per year, I would ask the minister how much longer the government intends to operate this great white elephant which is not needed by the Canadian air transport industry or wanted by the Canadian travelling public.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I think the hon. member knows well that the deficit to which he refers and calls an operating deficit is really made up of carrying forward interest charges and depreciation.

Mr. Stevens: What is wrong with that?

Mr. Lang: The hon. member for York-Simcoe, who knows all about these things, asks what is wrong with that. There is certainly nothing wrong with it, but it was never thought of by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings when he was minister of transport. It simply was not done in those days.

It paints a rather misleading picture just to take that figure. It is as though we carry forward the original investment cost. The fact of the matter is, of course, that Mirabel airport was built because of the clear signs that Dorval could not be expanded with the pleasure of the people in that area, just in the same way as Malton has limitations on it because of what people who live around it feel must happen.

We went along with Mirabel in order to produce an airport which would allow for long-term expansion. I am happy to tell the hon. member that steps to encourage cargo to come there are moving along very well in the airport, because it can be operated on a 24 hours per day basis without inconvenience to people in the vicinity. It is a superb airport for that purpose. Over the next number of years it will prove to have been a tremendously worth-while investment as more and more traffic goes there.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out to the hon. minister that when I was minister of transport, we showed profits, and these profits are possible—

Mr. Trudeau: There were no airplanes in those days.

Mr. Hees: —by businesslike administration of our airports. As more and more Montrealers are showing a preference to travel overseas via Toronto, rather than using Mirabel and undergoing the inconvenience and inefficiency of that airport, would the government not reconsider the matter and take into consideration the fact that this airport, at a minimum, is costing Canadian taxpayers $50 million per year out of their pockets, and in future they will fly overseas from Dorval? Dorval could handle the traffic easily for the next 25 years, as the minister will find out if he talks to the air traffic people in his department.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, that is not a fact—

Mr. Hees: Yes, it is a fact.

Mr. Lang: —if one takes into account the desires of the people in the area not to have major expansions take place to things like runway capacity and the like.

As I say, in the same way as is the case with Malton—which the hon. member may understand a little better—we find that the interests of the people in the vicinity of airports must be taken into account in the way in which the airport is operated. The fact of the matter is that Mirabel is required and will play an increasingly important role. There will be rapid increases in the number of passengers moving through that airport.

The figure to which the hon. member refers includes interest and depreciation. It is true that acquiring the land and building the airport cost in the order of $325 million. The figure of $50 million is related to that original cost. At the same time, it must be put into the perspective of the $130 million we have just spent on the Calgary airport, and the very large, similar sums spent on Toronto international airport must be considered as we go forward with what is a very good airport system throughout Canada.

POST OFFICE

EFFECT OF CUTBACKS ON MAIL DELIVERY

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General. Since the estimates for his department in the coming year indicate a reduction in the number of staff by some 1,850 workers, and since mail between cities in Canada is now regularly taking four to five days to reach its destination, would the minister indicate whether he expects the mail to be delivered even more slowly as a result of these cutbacks, or does he expect that the more than $1 billion spent on automation and computerization will finally begin to work and the mail delivery will be speeded up?

● (1450)

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I should even answer such an allegation, because it is completely false. From 95 per cent to 97 per cent of the mail is delivered within one or two days across Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lamontagne: That is true. If the hon. member would like to have more details about the Post Office, our estimates will be tabled in the transport committee on Monday night and at that time I will be able to give him all the figures. Also, what I just said about delivery of the mail, I can prove to him.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary along the same lines as the question asked by the hon. member for Halton. In every city in Canada there are tens of thousands of people living in newly built areas in the suburbs who do not get door-to-door delivery. Some of them have been waiting for three or four years. Will the minister urge his colleagues in cabinet to hire as letter carriers at least the 1,800 people—the number by which his department will be reduced?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, the curtailment of 1,800 people in our department will not stop us from giving proper service to the people. As the hon. member for Halton asked, I am aware of the fact that many growing areas, especially suburban areas, are without door-to-door service. I am also aware that in Scarborough, Calgary and other areas there is restraint in door-to-door delivery. I can assure the hon. member, as I said before, that as soon as money is available it will be my top priority in these urban areas to give Canadians door-to-door delivery.

CRIMINAL CODE

GUN CONTROL—FIREARMS ACQUISITION CERTIFICATES

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General and it relates to the gun law which was passed by this House. According to this legislation, section 105, the attorney general of a province may apply to the governor in council in order to declare any hunting licence, certificate, permit or other relevant document to be a valid firearms acquisition certificate.

My question to the minister is this: Have any provincial attorneys general so applied, and has the minister done anything to encourage this course of action which would help to make the gun law more acceptable to those regions of the country where hunting is a necessity as well as a way for life?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I fully recognize the preoccupation of the hon. member and, indeed, the preoccupation of other hon. members who live in rural areas.

When this bill was introduced, there was a provision within it—which the hon. member has identified—that would permit the provinces to issue firearms' acquisition certificates through the issuance of licences for recognition of proper training. However, because it was strictly within provincial jurisdiction, these provisions were left unproclaimed until such time as the provinces chose to opt into the specific provision.

At the time of passage of the legislation and subsequent proclamation, Quebec was the only province ready to accept proclamation of the act and put in measures that would permit the sort of training envisaged by the act. Unfortunately, as a result of some technical defects we were unable to carry that through. As a result of some initiatives we have taken, including the creation of the Firearms Advisory Council, we will be able to encourage the provinces to now take on the training program and thereby facilitate implementation of the provisions of the act.

AGRICULTURE

SALE OF GRAIN ELEVATORS—FUTURE OF EMPLOYEES

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that bids on government elevators closed on February 1, can the minister advise what bids, if any, have been accepted and what elevators will be sold? If no decision has been made, will he tell us when the decision will be made by the Grains Commission.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, no decision has been made at this time with regard to the sale of the elevators. We are reviewing the tenders. Meetings are still going on. As far as we are concerned, most of them are not satisfactory; that is the first impression or opinion we have formed. However, we are reviewing them further. At the present time we are providing bridge financing to carry them over.

Mr. Neil: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture is probably aware that late last fall letters were sent out to all employees of government elevators declaring their positions surplus, I believe, as of March 31. In view of the uncertainty that exists, what steps has the minister taken with regard to these employees? Is he going to extend the period of employment? What guarantee is he prepared to give these employees with regard to pension rights and other rights which they have under their terms of employment?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, they will be treated the same as any other employees of the government where operations are phased out. The employees are fully aware of what is going on at the present time. The Grains Commission has been instructed to inform them.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR SYDNEY STEEL PLANT

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Can he provide the House with a report on the progress being made between the Government of Canada and the Government of Nova Scotia with regard to financial assistance for the rejuvenation and modernization of the Sydney Steel Plant?

I ask this apropos what the Prime Minister said a few moments ago, that ministers are anxious to give all the information they can. I trust the minister will give us some encouraging information, thereby alleviating the fears of the steelworkers, their families and the public in general.

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that the matter is under intensive consideration. In fact, it is now before cabinet for consideration. I hope within a few days we will be able to make our position known to the province.

[Mr. Blais.]

Mr. Muir: In view of the fact the Prime Minister says the government is so anxious to give all the information possible, I will direct this question to the same minister or to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who is also involved and who I know is vitally interested.

Has there been an approach by any officials of either department, or in fact officials of any department of government, to the Tree Island Steel Corporation as to the possibility of renegotiating the supposed contract that has been announced time and time again by cabinet ministers and representatives of the government, so that financial assistance will be forthcoming and they can get ahead; or will we lose the contract with Tisco in Vancouver?

[Translation]

Mr. Lessard: Mr. Speaker, as it has been indicated and as I have indicated myself to the hon. member on a number of occasions, we did indeed set up a small task force. The Nova Scotia premier and I had agreed to put three of four people on this particular matter in December, so that all aspects might be reviewed, and there have been indeed meetings with Tisco officials to clarify some clauses of the contract. Since then our officials have submitted a report to us concerning the contract as such, and it is on the basis of the findings of this task force that we have been able to make proposals to the cabinet on which it will have to act.

ENERGY

CASH INCENTIVES PROGRAM TO PROMOTE DEVELOPMENT OF ALTERNATE SOURCES OF ENERGY

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and Minister of State for Science and Technology. It is pursuant to my motion in this House last Thursday.

In view of the apparent sustained energy problems in motive power that now exist in this country, will the minister and the government devise some form of cash incentives program which could offer national prizes to encourage our inventors and scientists to develop and attain more efficient uses of fossil fuels as motive power and also to develop alternate sources of energy for the same purpose?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I will be very pleased to take that representation under consideration and to discuss the specifics of it with the hon. member.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ILO RECOMMENDATION THAT OLDER WORKERS SHOULD CHOOSE AGE OF RETIREMENT

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. The International Labour Organization meeting in Geneva has expressed very deep concern at the rapidly increasing, aging labour force which will put a severe strain on resources, social security and pension systems, and have recommended that older workers should be free to choose when to retire, depending on their health and capabilities. Has the Department of Labour made any study, or does it propose to do so, and does it have a labour representative at Geneva?

● (1500)

Hon. Martin O'Connell (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as the House knows, the government established an interdepartmental committee two years ago to examine pensions both in the public and in the private sectors. Any announcement to be made with respect to this matter will be made in due course. The proposal concerning a flexible retirement age is one which is under consideration by the interdepartmental committee here in Ottawa.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it being Thursday perhaps I might ask the government House leader some questions with respect to the business of the House.

First, may I ask him whether he will designate Wednesday of next week as an allotted day in accordance with the schedule he and I have discussed. I understand it is the intention to call Bill C-29, the National Housing Act amendments, today. With respect to government business, can the hon. gentleman tells us what he plans for tomorrow and the coming week? Further, is he in a position today to give the House a definitive statement as to the government's legislative priorities looking down the road toward the Easter adjournment?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, to begin with, I am quite agreeable to designating next Wednesday as an allotted day. As the hon. member has stated, today we shall continue the debate on the housing bill and, if necessary, tomorrow as well, although I should like to raise privately with the representatives of the parties the possibility of dealing with the Judges Act amendments at the beginning of the day tomorrow. After the housing bill I would consider taking Excise Tax Act and Income Tax Act amendments arising from the budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien).

If the hon. member would like me to project a number of other bills, I would certainly want to mention Bills C-6, C-22, C-27, C-32, C-41, C-44, C-13, S-2, S-4 and S-7.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: Happy Easter.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Just one question: The hon. member went through that list so fast that I could not follow all the numbers. Was the Arab boycott bill among the bills he mentioned?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-32. That is the bill to which the hon. member has referred and if we could reach some agreement to deal with it quickly I would call it at an early date.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I believe some amendments were being proposed by the government. Would they be available? As I understand it, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) has one amendment to make. Would that be available at the same time? Also, would the hon. gentleman tell me whether there is any sanctity attached to the order of legislation or is this still a matter of discussion? The answer would be very helpful in terms of planning.

Mr. MacEachen: I have never detected any sanctity in my immediate presence as far as the opposition is concerned, whatever may be said of the legislation. No, there is no special ranking; these are the bills which are on the docket. As to Bill C-32 about which the hon. member inquired with respect to a possible amendment, whatever amendment may be in mind would be available to hon. members before the bill is called. If we could agree to pass this bill in all stages in one day, I would consider calling it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in so far as some of these matters require consultation among the parties we are, of course, prepared to participate. May I say with respect to the proposal to call the second reading of the bill amending the Judges Act tomorrow that we would go along with it, and the likelihood is that that debate would be short provided that the bill we shall be dealing with is the reprinted version and not the original copy. The original bill contains proposals for salary increases which I am glad to see are not in the reprint. I see I get the approval of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lalonde). Speaking of sanctity, I thought the burial of Bill C-22 had been sanctified. Is it not a mistake on the minister's part to put it back on the list?

There is one other question I would like to put to the minister. A few years ago in another capacity he promised a certain piece of legislation before the end of September of that year. He did not make it and his excuse was that he had forgotten that September had only 30 days. I wonder if he would speak to his colleague the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald), who promised us a statement on the review of the War Veterans' Allowances Act in February. Well, February has only 28 days and those days have gone. I seriously hope the government House leader will prompt the Minister of Veterans Affairs to make that statement very early in the month of March.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Bellechasse on a point of order.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, in spite of the speed with which the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) replied to the question asked by the Leader of the Official Opposition in the House, I tried to take note, as best as I could, of the numerous bills on which the government intends to seek approval before Easter. I was wondering if the Deputy Prime Minister intends to table a motion to postpone the date of the Easter recess.

Seriously, Mr. Speaker, I would like to assure the government House leader of our utmost co-operation in the consideration of all these bills. I would also like to ask him if there have been any new developments concerning Bill C-12 now before the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, and if the government intends, when the bill is brought back to the House, to have it examined seriously at the report stage and seek passage on third reading before the Easter recess.

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the question asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), I have had discussions with the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) and I have assured him that when and if he is ready to bring forward legislation affecting veterans I will co-operate with him.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear! So will the whole House.

Mr. MacEachen: In reply to the hon. member who just a moment ago mentioned Bill C-12 and asked me whether it was the intention of the government to proceed with that bill before the Easter recess, may I say this: that bill is now in committee and when it comes from committee we shall want to deal with it at report stage and on third reading.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre questioned whether it was a mistake on my part when I referred to Bill C-22. It was not a mistake. That bill is still on my list. When it will be called is, of course, another matter, but it is still on the list at the present time.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) was going to consult his colleague, the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais), with respect to bringing before the House a motion to expand the terms of reference of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs so as to enable the subcommittee on penitentiaries to be reconstituted. In keeping with the unanimously expressed desire of all members of this House and in view of the increasing unrest again in our prisons, has the Deputy Prime Minister had that discussion, and is he going to bring forward quickly that motion to expand those terms of reference?

● (1510)

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, in a sense I believe I owe the hon. member an explanation, if not an apology. Although I have made a number of attempts to be in touch with the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais), I have not yet succeeded in discussing the matter with him. I will attempt to do so as quickly as possible and I will advise the hon. member.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen). It has to do with the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) and, I believe, the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). I do not think those hon. members have had sufficient time to advise the government of what happened this morning in the committee dealing with Bill C-12, the indexation bill. We heard from what is still known to many of us as the Canadian Forces Long Service Pensioners Association, but for some reason the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Danson) has advised the association that it can no longer use that name and that it should operate under the title "90358 Canada Incorporated".

The important thing is that we received very concrete assurances from the hon. member for Ottawa West and, I believe, the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier that the government is not opposed to this particular organization's reverting to its former, time-honoured name. As a result of the input of those very excellent members, who seem to be on top of the situation, I hope after consultation that the government will be prepared to accept this, given the assurances which came from the hon. member for Ottawa West. We will move a motion again tomorrow after the Deputy Prime Minister has had an opportunity to discuss this matter with his colleagues.

Can the Deputy Prime Minister give me the assurance that he will at least discuss this matter with the two hon. members to whom I have referred? I see that the Deputy Prime Minister is nodding his head in the affirmative, and I want to thank him for that.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) when he will be able to introduce the freedom of information legislation which has been in the process of drafting since May of 1976, a fairly long period of gestation even for this government. When I last heard of the bill it was in the process of four-fifths having been accepted and one-fifth still being discussed, a favourite formula. Perhaps the Deputy Prime Minister can give us some idea about this.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I too have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen). It concerns the commodity tax review reference which has been requested for several months by this side of the House. I am somewhat surprised that the Deputy Prime Minister did not tell us that the reference would be forthcoming shortly, bearing in mind that in the budgetary papers it is specifically referred to as being something to be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. In one of the 46 responses to the overview statement the government states that it has in fact been referred to the standing committee and that the government is waiting to hear from that committee.

I know the Deputy Prime Minister would not want to leave that misrepresentation in its present form and that he will hustle that reference over to the committee without any further delay. I wonder if he would confirm that.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DANSON—CANADIAN ARMED FORCES LONG SERVICE PENSIONERS ASSOCIATION

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) has indicated that I denied the Canadian Armed Forces Long Service Pensioners Association the right to use that name. This matter has been raised and I believe it is in the hands of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I will certainly discuss it with my colleague. I have also received representations from the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) and the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Lefebvre).

I look forward to meeting with these people. They have not asked for an appointment, to my knowledge, but I would be happy to take the matter up with them and with my colleague. They have met with the assistant deputy minister, personnel, Lieutenant-General Smith, who has been very sympathetic to their concerns. They make a very strong case in some areas. Their talents are not appreciated fully by the private sector when they retire from the armed forces. I should like to point out to the hon. member that 6 per cent of the skilled tradesmen entering the Canadian labour force come from the armed forces, and I hope that fact and others will be appreciated by the employers of this country.

I will certainly be very sympathetic, but there may be legal implications with regard to the question of the name. I will discuss this with my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Allmand).

MR. DICK—LOTO CANADA—PRESIDENT'S REPORT INTO LOTO SELECT PROJECT

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I am rising today in response to the question of privilege raised yesterday by the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick).

The essence of the hon. member's question of privilege relates to the fact that one paragraph was omitted in the English language copy of a letter dated June 26, 1978 from Mr. Guy Cousineau, president of Loto Canada, to myself concerning Loto Select. With respect to the omitted paragraph I have consulted Loto Canada on this matter and I have received a response from Mr. Cousineau, the president of the corporation, which reads as follows:

> May I on behalf of Loto Canada apologize to you for the omission which occurred in Appendix B of the English copy of my report submitted to you and tabled in the House on February 21, 1979. The total report consists of a covering letter, an itemized account of the costs incurred in settling the Loto Select game, a copy of the settlement agreement with GIC and my letter to you dated June 26, 1978 on the Loto Select game. The material was tabled in both official languages.
> In order to produce a report with typing uniformity, we employed an electro-mechanical process referred to as a Word Processing Machine. This process does not contain photocopying ability, therefore all the material had to be retyped into the Word Processing Machine and was re-signed with my signature stamp. Through a human error, the paragraph in question from my letter of June 26, 1978 was unfortunately omitted in the processing of the Appendix B of the English copy of my report. For this, and for any inconvenience caused to members of parliament, I again apologize.
>
> The Appendix B in the French copy of my report did include the paragraph in question from my letter of June 26, 1978 which repudiates suggestions that there was any intent to mislead.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Campagnolo: The response continues as follows:

> For your additional information, Madam Minister, I would like to advise you that my officials sent to Members of the House of Commons, Members of the Senate and to the media, copies of the total report on February 21, 1979 of which the Appendix B of the French copy of this report did contain the information in question.
>
> I would further advise you that my letter dated June 26, 1978 to you and which is specifically in question, was shortly after that date issued to the media across the country, and I attach a copy for your information.
>
> It should be clear, through this wide distribution to the House and the general public of the information in question, that there was no intention by Loto Canada to mislead parliament in this most important matter.
>
> Yours sincerely,
>
> Guy Cousineau
> President

With the permission of the House I would like to table copies of this document in both official languages.

The hon. member stated yesterday that he had given the Chair notice and "notice to the minister involved". He also stated that he had left a copy of the letter in question with Your Honour's office on serving notice. What he did not say was that he did not provide my office with a copy of this letter. Nor, in fact, when he served notice to my office, did he advise me of the specific nature of his question. He referred simply to anomalies and omissions in the report.

When the hon. member and I discussed his pending question of privilege in the House on Tuesday evening, he did not advise me of the topic. In fact, he said his researchers were looking for one. He did not consult yesterday either my office or Loto Canada about what was clearly a simple oversight, a human error, as has been stated by the president. He did not see fit to grant me the courtesy yesterday of advising me of the specific nature of his question of privilege.

● (1520)

If, at any of these times, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member had cared to bring this oversight to my attention, the matter could easily and simply have been resolved. Instead, the hon. member has seen fit to rise on a most specious argument and accuse me—either directly or by implication—of "deceiving the House", "fabricating a document", "breaching the privileges of the House", and "acting in contempt of parliament".

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mrs. Campagnolo: These are serious charges, Mr. Speaker, most serious charges, and I would think it incumbent upon any member of this House who is considering levelling such charges at least to attempt to check his facts. Not only did the hon. member—and I use that title only out of respect for the institution of this parliament—not attempt to check his facts, but he went out of his way to avoid checking them fully.

Also, he did not give me specific notification of what his question of privilege was about. He carefully avoided reference yesterday to the official French language version of this document, which would have shown just how specious his case was. At no time has the hon. member shown interest in the facts of this issue. His only interest appears to be in headlines and innuendo.

The hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton stated yesterday that I sent him a letter on June 28, 1978 pertaining to Loto Select and that in this letter I asked whether he wanted a briefing and so on. Instead of so summarily dismissing that offer, he might have, at any time during the last eight months, accepted that offer and met with me or officials of the Crown corporation to discuss this important matter. Again he has not done so, and again it would indicate he prefers not to have his mind confused with the facts.

I owe the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) a little bit of an apology. I took him out of context today. The hon. member for Yukon said:

Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to get into the merits of the facts.

I want to put that firmly on the record. Therefore, I submit this letter for tabling and I trust it will resolve the issue because I cannot find any attempt to mislead the House in this matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I can understand the feelings of the minister but I cannot support the point of view that, whenever she is questioned in the House, the attack that is made is a specious attack and that questions that may be asked of her are specious. This is the place for questioning. It is questionable parliamentary language which she used in any event, but I am not relying on that. I am sure that the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) will consider the source from which it came.

It seems to me that there was a precedent set in this Houe not too long ago involving the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Allmand) when he was solicitor general. You will recall that at that time, although it was recognized by all parties in the House that the minister was not charged with intentionally deceiving the House by producing for the House and for the reliance of the House a record that was improper, it was none the less found by you, sir, that even without the intention to deceive, the very placing of a document on the table of the House of Commons—or the delivery of a letter to a member of the House, not using the method of tabling—was such that there was a prima facie case of privilege found.

In this case the matter relates to the question of tabling, and I think it takes on a different aspect. So despite the fact that the minister displayed anger with respect to the matter, I think the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton has acted assiduously in this case. I think the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton would be remiss if he had not done what he did. I do not think it helps, in the conduct of public business in this House, for there to be that kind of attack on an hon. member. Moreover, I think it is extremely important that we recognize and that the minister recognizes that there has been, despite the smokescreen, a tremendous loss of public funds, and that is the issue.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The comparison has been made in respect to the case raised by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence). If anybody, on the basis of the facts which have been disclosed now, wishes to consider and put forward an argument that there was similarity in the two cases, that is to say that there is some indication that the action in respect of the official of the minister was in any way a deliberate or contrived action—that was the allegation in the case involving the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham, which was a departure from our previous practice in that it did not involve a question of privilege in respect of the minister directly but rather an action of the official of the minister in deliberately attempting to mislead the minister—then the facts are now disclosed and that point is open to argument.

But at the moment that is not the case that is before me. I think we should close the case before me, leaving it open if there is to be an argument; as some hon. members said yesterday, they hoped to have a chance to argue it. I leave that point open to argument, and if hon. members want, having received this information, to give the Chair notice of an intention to argue it, they can do so tomorrow or on the first possible date after they have had an opportunity to examine this case and to examine the precedents. I would not expect them, just having received the facts at this moment, to be prepared to deliver that argument. So that case rests open.

I do call to the attention of the House the fact that in the case of the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham there was at least the allegation that the official involved had said at some time or other that the action on his part was in some way contrived to mislead the minister. I think that will be quite important.

In respect of the case of the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton, he has put before the House a motion which relates to an action of the minister in tabling this document. On the basis of the reason put forward by the minister at this moment, I have to close the book on that procedural point. The action of the minister has been explained, that the minister has not done anything which was in any way contrived to mislead the House. I leave the matter of the comparative argument open in respect of the action of the official of the minister, but so far as the action of the minister is concerned, we must be clear that the explanation by the president of Loto Canada today, which explanation has been read into the record and tabled here by the minister, is the complete explanation of the action of the minister, in my opinion. That matter in respect of any action of the minister should be closed at this time.

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief because I had not intended to get into this matter and there will be others who, I am sure, will want to reply tomorrow in respect of this matter. So I do not intend to close it off. But I merely ask you this, sir: What is the purpose of a minister tabling a document in the House under his or her name? Certainly there has to be some responsibility for that. I do not care whether it is inadvertently or intentionally misleading; the point is that if there is to be cabinet responsibility, if there is to be accountability in the House, if any of us here are honourable members of the House, we have to be responsible for our actions in the House.

Apart from whether it is inadvertent or intentional, surely the special powers given to a minister of the Crown to table a document in the House indicates some responsibility on the part of that minister. Quite frankly, I am certainly willing to listen to the minister, as I did quite carefully this afternoon, but the one aspect that I found deplorably absent was the fact that the minister herself was obviously in no frame of mind to apologize to this House or to any member of the House. Surely, if there is going to be any responsibility, any accountability, the House, at the very least, requires that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If I did not make it perfectly clear, let me point out that for me to find a question of privilege the minister would somehow have had to contribute to an action which has misled the House.

Mr. Clark: She tabled the report.

● (1530)

Mr. Speaker: The minister has tabled two copies of a document, one of which was distributed. I do not know whether or not it went to the hon. member, but the minister filed in the House two copies of a document, one in English and one in French. Both are official languages of this parliament and both are official languages of this country. I cannot thereby determine that the absence of a paragraph from one text and not from the other text in any way could be construed as a deliberate act.

Therefore I have found—

Mr. Lawrence: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Well, the fact of the matter is whether that may be an action involving some carelessness respecting the minister's failure to compare the two texts. That may be, but it is not a procedural point. I must decide this matter on procedural grounds. If the paragraph had been missing from both texts, I might say the case would be different. Since the text has been distributed widely in both languages, one containing the full text and one missing a paragraph of one sentence, obviously it was accidental and not intentional, as the minister said today.

Furthermore, it is the minister's official who has apologized for that accidental omission. The minister has tabled that report and that apology in the House. I do not think the minister is required by precedents or practices to do anything more than that, and certainly on procedural grounds I cannot find any question of privilege based on the actions of the minister in those circumstances.

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, before Your Honour finalized the matter, I attempted to seek the floor as I felt the minister went beyond what was necessary. The minister spent approximately one quarter of her time dealing with the point in issue and three quarters of her time making a direct attack against myself. The minister revealed that she would not want to refer to me as an honourable member but for her love of this institution.

I have gone over what I said yesterday, and I did not accuse the minister of one thing other than the fact that she tabled a document. I did not say that the minister had altered the document. I said that it was an altered document, and that the committee would find what official did what. With all due respect, I find it very interesting in her comments today that the minister admitted the signature on the document is not the signature of Mr. Cousineau, and is now a forged document.

The minister said that it was a stamped signature, whereas yesterday at 4.30 Mr. Beauchemin reported to the CBC radio announcer that he had signed Mr. Cousineau's name. Whether it is a stamped signature or whether it was signed by somebody else, the signature of Mr. Cousineau was not put to that document. The best it can be is a facsimile. In the document tabled, the apology of Mr. Cousineau, it was indicated that there was a stamp there, whereas Mr. Beauchemin said yesterday to the radio correspondent that he had signed it. This morning a newspaperman said that it was stamped. Perhaps stories change overnight. We cannot start filing things without somebody putting his or her name to it with pen. At least I did not think we could in the House.

The fact that they give the excuse that they were retyping to make uniformity—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Dick: There is no uniformity in that regard.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I want to be clear of the grounds on which the hon. member is addressing the House at the moment. I have accepted the explanation of the minister. That has been filed; that question of privilege is closed. I have left open if there are any points to be argued which raise privilege or procedural matters resulting from the explanation tabled by the minister today. That can be done at a time after hon. members have had an opportunity to prepare argument. But the issue raised by the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) yesterday respecting the actions of the minister is closed.

Mr. Dick: Perhaps I should leave it open for tomorrow and Your Honour will have an opportunity of reading it. But I distinctly heard that it was a stamped signature, which is not the actual signature, and therefore it may be a facsimile.

I feel an apology should be forthcoming for the attack made. I do not think it was warranted because I never attacked the minister yesterday in my comments. If the minister feels she has no defence other than to attack people, that is her problem. It is interesting that the automatic typing machine can skip a paragraph.

MR. BEATTY—ALLEGATION BY MINISTER OF STATE (FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT) OF DELIBERATE MISLEADING

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a separate question of privilege. Today in her question of privilege the minister made great point of the fact that someone on this side claimed she had misled deliberately the House or Canadian people. I can understand, if such a claim had been made, that the minister would be quite properly upset. That is why I am particularly disturbed by the fact that during oral question period today the minister made exactly that charge against me.

In response to a question which I put to the minister during oral question period today, she said that I appeared continually to refer to the amount of $13.15 million expended on Loto Select as a loss, that I attempted to attribute it to the General Instrument contract alone, and then she said "which he knows well is false".

At this point I will not digress into the question of the veracity of the minister's statement where she claimed that I indicated all of the $13 million she wasted had been wasted on the General Instrument contract. I well know that figure is $8 million and that she wasted $5 million elsewhere. Of course, I at no time indicated that the whole of the $13 million wasted was wasted on the one contract.

The procedural point here, which I think is very important, is that the minister claimed I deliberately gave information which I knew to be false. On the basis of all the precedents I have seen, an imputation made by one member against another that a member deliberately would mislead the House constitutes a breach of privilege. I think the onus is upon the minister to withdraw that statement and enter an apology for it.

If it would be useful, I could make available various precedents in which it is made quite clear that it is totally improper for one member to accuse another of deliberately misleading the House or deliberately making statements which he knows to be false. I would be prepared to do that if Mr. Speaker felt it was useful, but I am sure the precedents are so well known to all members of the House, including the minister, that they do not need to be cited by me now. When the minister said "which he well knows is false", no other construction can be put on it than that she is accusing me of having misled the House deliberately. Clearly that is a breach of my privileges as a member of the House.

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I will answer the last question of privilege first, that of the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo (Mr. Beatty). When he asked the question in the House today, he addressed the cancellation clause of the General Instrument contract. It was to that that he addressed his question and not to any other contract. There were a number of other contracts involved. In fact, the hon. member was saying that the cancellation clause should have been included in the General Instrument contract. I regarded this as an address to the General Instrument contract alone and not to the other contracts. So that is why I replied as I did.

Also I reminded the hon. gentleman that a clause regarding termination for convenience of the Crown was a proper title, and I was addressing that again to the General Instrument contract. If the hon. gentleman in fact was addressing contracts other than General Instrument, I did not hear correctly and I would apologize to him. If he was addressing more than one contract, I was in error. If he was addressing one contract, my remarks stand.

MR. DICK—LOTO CANADA—PRESIDENT'S REPORT INTO LOTO SELECT PROJECT

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): If I may, I should also like to answer the matter which was brought up by the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick). It is a normal business procedure for documents to be signature stamped, particularly when they are produced in quantity. It is a normal practice, and it was carried out with respect to copies of the Loto Select report which were distributed on February 21. The original copies of this report in English and French were signed personally by Mr. Guy Cousineau. These are the ones I tabled.

I have a note from Mr. Cousineau which I brought along just in case the hon. member should be disposed to cry "forgery", which unfortunately he did. It reads as follows:

> My personal signature stamp was incorporated into the process of producing the reports. The authority to use my personal signature stamp was delegated by me to the person responsible for producing copies for release.

This note is signed personally by Mr. Cousineau. I guess I will have to table this also. I regret the extended time taken in this matter.

● (1540)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think we had better establish a clear pattern of procedure here. There seems to be the impression that whenever someone raises a question of privilege and puts the case forward and it has been replied to an opportunity is given for the hon. member to reply. This has happened twice already. The hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton sought the floor and I recognized him for a moment. The hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo (Mr. Beatty) is now seeking the floor to rediscuss the matter. I do not think I can grant a second opportunity to the hon. member in that way unless I am prepared to grant two opportunities to hon. members addressing the other side of the question. I must consider that both members have now made their interventions in respect of this last question. I see there are others who want to enter the discussion.

I again say to the House that matters which relate to a tabling by a minister ought to be taken under consideration by members and, if they see there is something which gives rise to some procedural argument, they should examine it, prepare the argument and present it at a time in respect of which they have given notice to the Chair. If hon. members want to settle the matter now, I am perfectly prepared to listen.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I listened to what the minister said in respect of the remark made against the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo (Mr. Beatty). No member when he is accused of uttering a falsehood has to accept a qualified apology or withdrawal. The minister has qualified this. There are certain rules of this House that apply even to Iona Campagnolo.

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Due to the sensitivity about referring to members as "hon. members", I think we ought to reserve that nicety.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I refer to the reply by the hon. minister. I have read the question which dealt with losing $13 million of public funds of which she is the trustee. No matter what the minister understood, whether she understood the question correctly or misunderstood the question, or even heard it all, she has no business, and neither has anyone else in this House, calling any member a liar, or accusing any member of making statements he well knows to be false.

An hon. Member: That is quite different.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Hon. members over there say there is quite a difference. I suggest that if the shoe was on the other foot the hon. member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail) would not see the difference. I think it is just about time this kind of exchange was stopped. Members should not call other hon. members liars, and that is the position here. I think the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo is entitled to an unqualified apology from this minister, as he would from anyone else in the House.

Mr. Speaker: I think we can probably solve this procedural point very quickly. It is not uncommon in this House when withdrawals are made that they contain riders. I want to address myself to this. I suggest it depends on the nature of the subject. I grant that sometimes members have said they have used an unparliamentary term and feel they should change it to something else. That is a sort of qualified withdrawal.

However, what the minister has said, it seems to me, in respect of the question of privilege of the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo is that she may have misunderstood him, and if he has said that this was only in relation to a certain and particular—

An hon. Member: It does not matter.

Mr. Speaker: Order; I wonder if I might be allowed to conclude this point. I think we can conclude this matter quite properly. The minister has indicated that she may have misunderstood the hon. member, and that if the hon. member was talking about a matter in a certain context then her accusation was not a proper one.

I think we can solve this quite simply if the minister will now, knowing that the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo has clarified his statement, and in any case out of an abundance of caution for the niceties of this House, make a withdrawal in those terms. The use of the word "false" in almost any context is very dangerous, and its use is almost always getting us into trouble. It would help me and help the House greatly if the minister would simply make an unqualified withdrawal.

Mrs. Campagnolo: Mr. Speaker, I am happy to do so; and having my name mentioned in this House, I recognize more than ever the niceties of this chamber.

ELDORADO NUCLEAR LIMITED—URANIUM REFINERY—SASKATCHEWAN

Question No. 229—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

Did Eldorado Nuclear Limited, or any other agency on its behalf, undertake measures in the past year to inform or educate the residents in the vicinity of any proposed site in the Province of Saskatchewan where the corporation intends to construct a uranium refinery?

Mr. Pierre Bussières (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Eldorado Nuclear Limited reports that in the past year it has announced through press releases and statements from its Saskatoon office that the company is proceeding with environmental assessment studies for the purposes of investigating the feasibility of establishing a uranium refinery at a site near Warman, Saskatchewan.

POST OFFICE—ENFIELD, N.S.

Question No. 418—Mr. Nowlan:

1. Was the Post Office in Enfield, Nova Scotia moved out of the building it occupied from 1961 until December 31, 1977 and, if so, for what reason?
2. What was the cost to (a) transfer the postal equipment and furnishings (b) renovate the new location?
3. What portion of the cost was borne by the (a) Post Office Department (b) Department of Public Works?
4. Under the new lease, what (a) is the monthly rental (b) are the services and amenities provided by the landlord (c) are the terms of renewal?
5. Does the Post Office Department intend to provide a permanent facility for the Post Office in Enfield?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Post Office and Public Works as follows: 1. The post office in Enfield, Nova Scotia was destroyed by fire on May 15, 1976.

2. (a) $300 (b) $31,408.

3. (a) and (b) 100 per cent of the costs was borne by Public Works Canada.

4. (a) $937.50 (b) The lease provided that the landlord pays for all repairs, taxes, water and sewer charges, hot and cold water, air-conditioning and heating, electricity, replacement of burnt-out lamps, ballasts and fuses, venetian blinds and drapes, washroom facilities, ice and snow removal and garbage removal. (c) The lease does not include a renewal option.

5. Yes.

[Mr. Watson.]

"THE TAX SYSTEMS OF CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES"

Question No. 954—Mr. McKenzie:

1. What was the total cost of the booklet The Tax Systems of Canada and the United States published by the Department of Finance?
2. How many copies were (a) printed (b) distributed?

Mr. Alan Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): 1. $26,770.

2. (a) 40,000; (b) 36,705.

PLEBISCITE—1942

Question No. 1,182—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

What was the question posed in the 1942 plebiscite?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): I am informed by the Chief Electoral Officer:

"Vote by marking a cross, thus X, after the word 'Yes' or after the word 'No'.

Are you in favour of releasing the government from any obligation arising out of any past commitments restricting the methods of raising men for military service?"	YES NO

NOTE: The foregoing is an extract from No. 227, Vol. LXXV, (Extra) of The Canada Gazette dated Monday, March 9, 1942.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Wednesday, February 28, consideration of the motion of Mr. Ouellet that Bill C-29, to amend the National Housing Act and Central Mortgage and Housing Act and to make other related amendments, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, just prior to calling it six o'clock last evening I was speaking about the CHIP program which provides grants for insulation.

I am delighted to see the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) here this afternoon and I welcome him.

Let me point out again that this is a program in respect of which we should be spending more money. I hope the department is doing a good job publicizing the advantages of this program, as I have been trying to do.

I am also hoping that the minister will relent and treat the rest of Canada in the same way he is treating Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island by allowing the full $500 grant. The minister can wipe the tears from his eyes. There are many people in other parts of Canada who are just as much in need of the $500 grant. I might also point out that the $500 grant in other parts of Canada is subject to income tax. It has to be added to taxable income and I certainly do not think that is fair. I hope the minister will give serious consideration to changing this provision. It is very difficult to get an application processed. I am still receiving a great many phone calls and applications, all of which have to be channelled through Montreal. As I have stated before, I think this whole thing would be handled more expeditiously if the minister would allocate this insulation program responsibility to the CMHC offices throughout the country.

I spoke this afternoon to people at two of these offices in my riding, one at North Bay and one at Barrie. I was told their only input was, in response to requests on a hit and miss basis, to make inspections in respect of allowed grants.

Let me emphasize the need for public housing in rural areas. A large segment of our population is still living in rural areas and is still in need of adequate housing. My own village of Burks Falls, where I served as reeve for 26 years, was one of the first municipalities in the area to take the initiative in providing housing for senior citizens, as well as low rental housing. Over ten years ago, and this probably is not very much, four senior citizens' units were built along with four low rental housing units. Just prior to my election to the House of Commons in 1972, our municipal council had obtained approval to build an additional senior citizens' apartment complex of 23 units and five low rental housing units. I am delighted to say that these units are completed and fully occupied.

I mention these examples to drive home two basic and important points to the government. The first is the case to be made for the forgotten or non-urban part of Canada—in other words, the rural areas. The second point is that these exemplary initiatives on the part of this small village serve to point out the need for a social element in the housing policy. Our senior citizens have devoted many of their best years, their young and dynamic years, to building this country. Many have made significant contributions in the defence and security of this country through service in the armed forces.

I would like to take this opportunity to pay special tribute to the Canadian Legion in my village of Burks Falls, which is sponsoring another senior citizens' complex of 25 units, and I hope that it will receive approval. We of later generations owe a debt of deep gratitude to them and also comfortable living during retirement. It is for this reason that I have on a number of occasions spoken on improved conditions for our senior citizens. Today I would urge the government not to neglect the many in this group who do not have the means to acquire satisfactory and adequate shelter, and to render every assistance possible.

There is another element of society which is having difficulty, and I believe that it is a problem which is occurring more in the smaller towns and villages rather than in the cities. I refer, of course, to the physically handicapped who find it difficult to get houses in which they are able to get around satisfactorily. I have with me a news item from the Gravenhurst News dated February 22. I would like to point out to the Postmaster General (Mr. Lamontagne) that, while I realize that the delivery of weekly newspapers is not very good across Canada and particularly not in Ontario, this particular newspaper left Gravenhurst on the 22nd and lo and behold arrived in my office yesterday. I know the Postmaster General will be delighted to hear that this weekly paper arrived within a week after posting, whereas many of them are delivered considerably later than that.

The news article takes the form of a letter to the editor and is headed "Physically handicapped face desperate housing problem". It reads:

> I am writing to you to inform the residents of Muskoka of a problem that exists in this area.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, there are many other areas where there is this problem of suitable housing for the physically handicapped.

> There has been provisions made for the senior citizens, mentally handicapped, physically handicapped that cannot take care of themselves and for people on low incomes.
>
> The government and municipalities have done a good job for these people, although it took some persuasion.
> I now feel that the physically handicapped who are married with a family need single level housing or apartments that have elevators so that the ones in wheelchairs or who are unable to climb excessive amounts of stairs have proper housing.
>
> Most people that are physically handicapped are on pensions. These pensions are usually very small, similar in fact to the senior citizens. Some of us are, in fact, on welfare where a family of four are given $429 a month to live on.
>
> Some of us are injured on the job trying to do what our employers want, like myself lifting equipment that's too heavy and injured my back. Others through auto accidents; the ways to get injured are too many to mention, but it shows it could happen to anyone.

The article goes on to outline the needs of these people:

> Luckily for me there was an area that I could put a bed in.

He is referring to his own house, and he goes on to describe how he was able to make do. The article continues:

> This along with the rent, utilities and other bills, a place that is one level and geared to income would be a blessing. I don't know how many more are in the same situation as I am but we that are in this situation need help. If people would write to their member of parliament, mayor, town council or anyone that might be able to help, I know I would appreciate it and I think many more would also.
> Thank you for reading this and be thankful for your health.

The article was written by William Manary of Gravenhurst. He will certainly find that his letter has received some publicity. I personally have not received a letter from him, but in all probability I will be writing him in answer to his request.

Another important area of housing where the government ought to provide encouragement is in the building of energy saving devices into new homes in Canada. The federal government should provide the lead and assistance in this area. I will relate one disturbing example of the bureaucratic set-up which some manufacturers of energy saving devices are up against. One could import an energy-saving device package from the United States, an item which is exempt from federal sales tax. But if parts of an energy saving device are bought individually in Canada, they are subject to federal sales tax. This is grossly unfair, not only to the consumer but to the small manufacturers in Canada. The government could easily require assurances from suppliers and users that a part sold will be used as a part of an energy-saving device and thus be exempt from federal sales tax.

Solar heating along with heating pumps should also be encouraged in the form of tax exemptions or deductions, or possibly in the case of new homes grants could be paid out. The Progressive Conservative party has already gone on record that they will bring to parliament, after the next election when they become the government, legislation which will allow tax credits for owner occupied homes that instal solar heat up to a maximum of $2,100.

CMHC is in the process of becoming a land-owning baron with control over large and luxurious pieces of property. Given the minister's lust for power in any form, the desire to acquire as much inventory for CMHC as possible comes as no surprise. The establishment of the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs has not in any substantial way alleviated many of the hardships resulting from inadequate or poor shelter. When 280,000 families in Canada pay more than 50 per cent of their family income for housing, 500,000 families pay more than 35 per cent, and another 820,000 families pay more than 25 per cent, and when two-thirds of those Canadians in need of housing cannot afford to buy or rent a home without a government subsidy, one begins to question the policies of the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs, and specifically, of CMHC. The state of housing in this country is a serious problem and affects each one of us in a very human and financial manner.

The unhealthy state of the economy has had its effect on the housing sector as well. The desperate attempts by the federal government to salvage the declining Canadian dollar has resulted in higher interest rates to attract foreign funds. In the process, however, mortgage rates have also skyrocketed. The graduated payment mortgage program involving a payment reduction is merely a juggling of figures and not a solution to the root of inflation and mismanagement in housing. This scheme may serve as a rude awakening to many at a later time, if they become accustomed to low monthly payments and then are later confronted with high monthly payments.

Another important facet in housing is our native and rural housing. In the field of native housing the federal government has a long way to go to meet its obligations to native people in Canada. I recall that some years ago the government made the great promise that 50,000 units would be allocated for native housing. I have had the privilege of serving on our housing committee for as long as most members, almost six years, and over those years the government has conducted one survey after another to determine housing needs on Indian reserves. The native people are still awaiting the implementation of the results of these surveys. The money designated for upgrading housing for native people has probably been spent by the federal government on building palaces across the river in Hull to house 20,000 civil servants.

● (1600)

The federal government should encourage funding and subsidy housing programs at the band level which will create job opportunities on the reserves. The government has failed to award the majority of contracts to those willing to generate employment among the residents of reserves.

To meet the goal of adequate housing for our native people an annual construction rate of 4,500 new units and approximately 6,000 major renovations per year are required. Currently, the annual average construction rate is merely 2,400 units and only a small number—1,800 units per year—are being renovated. This obviously falls far short of the necessity to meet the goal of providing adequate housing for our native people.

There has also been a housing program for native and non-status Indian and rural people. In my area there is one such subdivision. The individual who was going to develop the property purchased it and made his first overtures to the government in 1961. He was told there was no need for it. Finally, it got under way about 18 months ago after consultation with the CMHC office in North Bay. Five homes have been completed and another three are almost complete, but so far the builder has not received any money from CMHC.

I concede it is not all the fault of CMHC because other levels of government have participated in the project. The Ontario government held up final approval through the Department of the Environment. Those of us who are aware of the problems of builders and developers know that in a great many cases the municipal governments are the culprits. It would be a good thing if a limit could be put on the length of time a government department may hold up a subdivision, and if they did not provide a proper answer within a reasonable period of time, then automatic approval would be given.

The subdivision I refer to entailed an outlay of $300,000 with the homes being in the $35,000 to $36,000 bracket. The local builder and developer has had to pay all the bills and be responsible for the financing for the past 18 months. Naturally, these costs will be levied against the ultimate homeowner and in all probability will cut down on the profit. I am delighted to be able to inform the House that some units were also built in Parry Sound in the same period.

In my riding the AHOP program is too expensive and very few, if any, houses were built, although the RRAP programs have been successful. In Muskoka 120 different RRAP programs were approved and in Parry Sound 25 RRAP programs were approved. I commend the government for this.

It is interesting to note that in the town of Gravenhurst there was an aggressive program to make certain that they took advantage of every government program and every housing project that was available. They are to be commended for this. The former clerk-treasurer, Mr. Ted Soucie, was an expert in this field. Perhaps he was too good because Gravenhurst lost him to the city of Orillia where he is now co-ordinator of housing. I am sure Orillia will do very well under his direction.

I understand that the municipality of Bracebridge is getting housing programs under way. I hope that one of the banner towns in my riding, Huntsville, will look into this and take advantage of any opportunities.

We are all well aware of the confusion brought about by the federal government's move to introduce metric conversion, or probably I should say metric confusion. Beginning May 1, it will be mandatory for all applications under the National Housing Act to use the metric system so as to conform to the directive issued by CMHC.

My colleague, the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil), expressed concern on behalf of the housing and lumber industry very eloquently in the adjournment debate last Monday, February 19. The concern is very legitimate and obvious. About 80 per cent of our lumber trade is with the United States and they have not yet converted to metric. They are being allowed the option whether to convert to metric or not, while we in Canada have been told it is mandatory. I could mention the millions and millions of dollars this metric program will cost Canadian businessmen in every walk of life.

I want to refer briefly, Mr. Speaker, to the remarks by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs in Toronto about a week ago. The minister made desperate attempts to spell out a housing policy on behalf of his Liberal colleagues. Needless to say, he fell flat on his face. When cornered by the press to further explain the specifics of his statements, the minister took shelter by stating that he was merely "thinking out aloud" some of the concepts which as yet have not been discussed by the federal government. This clearcut confession on the part of the minister, Mr. Speaker, comes closest to affirming the fears of many Canadians that this government lacks any well thought out policy on housing.

In the same speech, in trying to make a case for a shelter allowance system, the minister stated that this will be done "in the near future, as soon as our economy permits". Mr. Speaker, I ask how can the minister in all honesty proceed to announce the implementation of certain policies while at the same time introduce a clause such as "as soon as our economy permits"? I hope the minister does not tell his landlord that he will pay the rent as soon as his personal finances permit, or go to a store and purchase items with a promise to pay when the minister gets rich—or perhaps, I should say richer.

Canadians have responded overwhelmingly to the housing policies outlined by the Progressive Conservative party. Our housing policy will benefit both home owners and tenants and, as well, provide much needed economic stimulus.

Nothing could be more beneficial to the housing industry than the proposal by my party to allow deductibility of up to a maximum of $5,000 on mortgage interest payments. Under this far-reaching proposal local property taxes will also be made deductible up to a maximum of $1,000 a year.

I take great delight in our mortgage and tax deductibility plan, Mr. Speaker. I was a member of a municipal council for a great many years. I served as a vice-president of the Ontario mayors and reeves—which is now the Association of Municipalities of Ontario—association for some years which continuously brought this resolution before the convention which comprised 900 municipalities in Ontario. The resolution was passed every time and I certainly had something to do with bringing it forward in the first place. It referred to municipal tax deductions only but I welcome the fact that this party, because of the high rate of mortgage interest at the present time, has seen fit to include mortgage interest also.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1610)

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I took great interest in the comments of my good friend from Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling). Perhaps I might comment on one portion of his speech with regard to the apparent lack of progress on the issue of native housing. I wonder whether the hon. member is aware that for the first time in the history of Canada, through Bill C-29, loans may be insured when made to Indians living on reserves, be they individuals, groups or bands, to help them buy, improve or build housing projects on those reserves.

Up until the present time, and until this bill is passed, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Faulkner) is charged with the responsibility of guaranteeing loans made to bands, individuals or groups and making payment should default occur. The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has had a problem in this area, because the finances of the department are not set up in such a way as to enable the department to enter into large scale housing projects.

Under Bill C-29—and I hope the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka agrees with this concept—this responsibility will be taken out of the hands of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and placed where it rightly belongs, under the guarantee program of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. This means that when loans are made for use on reserves, whether to individuals, groups or band councils, CMHC will be the guarantor. Therefore, CMHC will be able to have more construction go ahead on reserves. Some of the constraints previously placed on the program due to the fact that housing on Indian reserves had to be guaranteed by the Minister of Indian Affairs will be removed. I hope the hon. member will agree that that is a step in the right direction. I see he is nodding his head.

I do not want to give a political speech on the question of mortgage deductibility. However, I ask the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka and the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway) in all seriousness whether they would stand up in this House and say on the question of native housing on reserves whether the interest deductibility brought forth by the Conservative party will apply to Indian housing. I think both hon. members would have to agree that the deductibility of mortgage interest would not affect Indian housing one iota. Bill C-29, whereby CMHC will guarantee loans on reserves, is a far better method of attacking that problem.

Mr. Whiteway: It is not the only way.

Mr. Anderson: Hon. members are no doubt aware that through the department of Indian affairs we already have a $12,000 grant system for each home that qualifies to be built on reserves where funds are available. What I am speaking about is in addition to what CMHC guarantees. We all agree that housing on reserves is inadequate. Therefore, the government has addressed that problem. There will now be a better weapon to attack it by making much larger funds available to Indian housing.

I would like briefly to review what has occurred to bring us up to the point where Bill C-29 is now in front of the House. In 1978 the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) announced a series of changes in federal government housing policy which were the result of a number of consultations that had taken place between the provinces and the federal government.

The first objective of government housing policy at that time was to maintain a high level of housing production. Hon. members will recall in the 1974-75 period the former minister of urban affairs set up a four-year program. The target was to construct 250,000 houses per year over a four-year period. That program was announced in order that contractors could be made aware of the government's policy. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Danson), who is now in the chamber, was minister of urban affairs at that time. The government of Canada said it would build one million homes over a four year period. That objective has been met. The present Minister of State for Urban Affairs says that he wants to maintain that high level of housing production started by the former minister.

It was also targeted in May, 1978 to increase the number of non-profit housing units to be constructed per year from 19,000 to 30,000. The philosophy was that the government thrust in housing policy should be in those areas where people have the greatest needs and the least income. That was the second point brought forward in May, 1978.

The third point has not been discussed during the debate on Bill C-29. It is something we all agree is desirable. I refer to the disentanglement of the complex set of arrangements under federal and provincial housing regulations which had been operating over a number of years.

The fourth point brought forward by the Liberal government—and my friends across the aisle will be very surprised to hear this—was to utilize the capital that exists in the private sector. I think even the Conservative party could live with that objective. The capital sitting in our banks and trust companies would be utilized to the fullest possible extent rather than using government funds.

What did we propose to meet those four objectives? First, we brought in new non-profit housing programs. We said at that time that we would operate a program through non-profit corporations, whether they be private corporations such as the Lions Club, Kiwanis and organizations like that or whether we deal through municipal or provincial governments. The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka brought up a good point. Very seldom in this House are organizations such as the Lions Club, Kiwanis or Rotary Club recognized for the great contribution they make.

Mr. Darling: And the Legion.

Mr. Anderson: And the Legion. They sponsor senior citizens housing projects, organize them and accept the lead thrust in setting up those programs. I thank the hon. member for bringing this to our attention. These organizations have sponsored a great number of projects for senior citizens across this country.

What did we say we would do? At the present time CMHC through government funds provides 50-year mortgages for senior citizen housing complexes at a rate slightly below the prime interest rate. That has been going on for the past number of years. They get 90 per cent financing. In other words, the organizations had to provide up to 10 per cent of the cost of the project. The other 90 per cent was financed by the federal government under CMHC with 50-year mortgages repayable at a rate of interest in the neighbourhood of 9 per cent.

We said that 19,000 units per year were not enough, that would bring in a better bill and utilize funds from the private sector by cutting off CMHC funds to those organizations. The banks and trust companies told us they had adequate funds on deposit to handle the situation. So under the new arrangement the banks and trust companies would provide not 90 per cent but 100 per cent of the financing.

Most hon. members are aware that interest rates are high these days. If we had just left it at that, with the banks and trust companies lending the money at these high interest rates, it would have been very difficult to provide housing for senior citizens or others whose incomes are restricted. What the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) undertook to do was to subsidize through the Bank of Canada so as to bring down the current rate of interest, whatever it was, to as low as 2 per cent. In other words, the Kiwanis, the Legion branches or any of those groups which do this great work would benefit from a subsidy which would reduce the current interest rate to 2 per cent.

We believe an initiative of this sort would make it easier for the organizations concerned. First, they will not have to worry about paying interest rates of 10 per cent or so and, second, they would be able to reduce the length of the mortgage. Because if they are not paying 9 per cent or 10 per cent, more funds can be devoted to repayment of principle. This, we believe, will stimulate the construction of senior citizens' housing.

The solution which hon. members opposite have proposed is to allow deductibility of mortgage interest and municipal taxes paid by senior citizens. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, whether the plans which have been put forward by the government in Bill C-29 are not a better source of funding, a better way of stimulating the construction of senior citizens' housing. I suspect even hon. members opposite will agree that our plan is better because it goes much further to assist people living on low or fixed incomes than the proposal advanced by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark).

There is a second aspect to Bill C-29 and it concerns community service programs. Many of us are aware that an assistance program for municipalities has been in place in the form of the Canada Works program. We have been putting in sidewalks, rural electrification, scout halls, a variety of items which are of assistance to municipalities, providing 100 per cent funding for labour on selected projects. We realize this does not meet the need completely because we are not dealing with capital cost for such things as the erection of libraries, museums, parks, swimming pools and skating rinks, for example, which are so important a part of the facilities communities try to provide for their residents.

We have on a number of occasions provided programs to assist municipalities, realizing that in many cases provinces were not able to address this need. In May, 1978, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs announced a global approach in assistance for community services. For some years the federal government had been providing assistance to provinces and municipalities with respect to neighbourhood improvements, sewage treatment plants, the installation of water lines, medium density housing and so on. What the minister is proposing in Bill C-29 is an expansion and consolidation of this assistance under a program called the community services program. The object is to provide increased flexibility and wider latitude to the provinces and their municipalities in using federal funds, to enable federal assistance better to respond to local needs and conditions and to reduce duplication in administration by disentangling the federal government from project-by-project scrutiny.

What is even more important is that it seeks to enhance the degree to which federal assistance meets the priorities of the provinces and the municipalities and ensure that it is available equally to all provinces. Funding under the community services program will be used not only for neighbourhood improvements and water and sewage treatment for medium density housing, but for building social, cultural and recreational facilities, such as day care centres, community centres, libraries, neighbourhood ice rinks and parks.

Most members here have been asking for some method of funding recreational activities, day care centres, community centres, libraries, parks and so on. Well, there was a program a number of years ago called the winter works program which was capital intensive. That program was dropped, but I believe that with the community services program, the Canada Works program and the Young Canada Works program we shall be able to address the needs of communities to a much greater extent than in the past.

Most hon. members recognize that communities do experience a real and pressing need for services to be provided to their people. However, in larger cities such as Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver this need may not be so pressing as in smaller communities because, after all, they do have a large tax base. I see I have the Minister of National Defence on my side; I have probably got him offside now! But there are many communities with populations of 500, or not much more than 1,000, which do not really have a tax base large enough to enable their residents to enjoy some of the amenities which Canadians in the larger centres sometimes take for granted.

It has always been my contention that if the government wants to see more people living in the smaller centres, it will have to make a conscious effort to assist these small communities so that they can retain their populations. Unless some of the amenities of life are provided, people will likely move to the larger centres. I might point out that it was only some 18 months ago that television service was brought to the northern part of my riding, and I would remind the House that I do not represent a constituency in the Yukon or in the Northwest Territories cities; I represent upper Vanvouver Island. It is only within the last 18 months that the lumber and mining communities of northern Vancouver Island got a CBC repeater. Small though they may be, these communities have a very important role to play in our society. We should be attempting to attract people to these communities to work in the mining industry.

● (1630)

On northern Vancouver Island there is a mine called the Utah mine, which is the largest open pit copper mine in Canada. However, it was only 18 months ago that we got a repeater in there. It is hard to tell people to come and live on northern Vancouver Island when only a few months ago there was no road connecting northern Vancouver Island with southern Vancouver Island. There was no television to watch. Many of the communities did not have community halls for recreation. I think this part of Bill C-29 will assist such small, remote communities perhaps to an even greater extent than it will assist larger centres, because I think we will be able to provide services to those small and remote communities. I hope it is the intention of the federal and provincial governments to maintain these areas.

I suspect that in coming parliaments, regardless of what the government of the day might be, there will have to be direct assistance to people living in small and isolated communities. Otherwise we will have a group of city states where the population will be centred and where crime will be on the increase because of jamming more and more people together. I hope future parliaments in conjunction with the provinces will look very closely not only at maintaining small rural centres but also enlarging their roles and enhancing their facilities so that people will continue to reside in them and not be drawn like a magnet to the city states of Vancouver, Montreal and Toronto. I suspect that if we were to look at Alberta we would find the same thing happening in Edmonton and Calgary, and if we were to look at Saskatchewan we might find the same thing happening in the cities of Saskatoon and Regina.

I have heard federal and provincial governments paying lip service to the idea that we do not want all the people in Canada living in small city states or large city states. We have said that. The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka and I have both debated this. Both of us have brought this to the attention of the House on numerous occasions, because there is a concern in rural Canada about people being drained off.

Let me give an example. We talk about a decentralization program for the federal government under which we move civil servants out of Ottawa. Where do we move them to?

Mr. Darling: Hull.

Mr. Anderson: We move them to cities like Edmonton, Calgary, Saskatoon, Regina—

Mr. Darling: Hull.

Mr. Anderson: —or Vancouver. We who make decisions, presumably for the benefit of the country, in our own wisdom are furthering a centralization program, not in Ottawa but in the city states I have named. There is absolutely no need to transfer civil servants out of Ottawa to Vancouver. Vancouver already has a housing problem. There is a shortage of land.

The provinces also have a role to play. All industry seems to be located in areas such as Hamilton, Toronto and Vancouver. When it comes to setting up new facilities, whether they be brand new plants or expansions, some consideration must be given to the idea that every plant and every branch plant cannot be built in already crowded cities. I think the provinces have a very large role to play in this.

In my province of British Columbia the concentration of population and industry is within a few miles of the lower mainland and the greater Vancouver and greater Victoria areas. There has to be a change. If jobs are not created in small communities such as Nanaimo, Port Alberni, Courtenay, Campbell River or Port Hardy, which are small communities on Vancouver Island, the sons and daughters of the people living in those areas will be forced to leave. They will be forced to seek work in such places as Victoria and Vancouver. That will cause more problems for transit systems. It will cause policing problems, problems for fire departments and urban planning difficulties. There is a role for the federal government in this, and there is also a role for provincial governments.

In Bill C-29 an attempt is being made by the federal government to provide community service programs which, I re-emphasize, will benefit small communities with small tax bases more than it will benefit larger communities. For that reason I am pleased to support this legislation.

There are other aspects of the legislation which are important but upon which I have not touched. I will leave those aspects to other hon. members.

I would like to say something regarding the question of mortgage interest deductibility and municipal tax deductibility of up to $1,000 which is being proposed by the Conservative party. I suppose many Canadians look at politicians with some jaundice. I suppose there are good reasons why Canadians look at us somewhat askance. In 1978 we had a federal deficit of which most of us on both sides of the House were not very proud.

In 1978 the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Government of Canada announced that government spending would be reduced by $2 billion in 1979. I have sat in this House for the last four and a half years and listened to hon. members opposite tell us that we are financially irresponsible and spending too much money.

An hon. Member: Right.

An hon. Member: Right.

Mr. Anderson: There were two "rights" there but no "wrongs." When an election looms on the horizon those same proponents of financial responsibility jump up on their hind legs and say that they would have twice the deficit we have now. The point is that the boy who would be king is attempting to win an election by bribing the electorate of Canada. He would allow the deficit to be increased, and he would pass it on to our children and grandchildren. Hon. members opposite propose that. Are they telling us that a mortgage interest deduction and a municipal tax deduction will not create a higher deficit? The Leader of the Opposition told the people of Canada that what his party is proposing is a constructive deficit.

Mr. Whiteway: Don't talk about ours. Tell us about yours, all $12 billion.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I thought hon. members opposite were at least—

Mr. Whiteway: Let's hear about your deficit.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order.

Mr. Anderson: I realize the hon. members opposite do not like being criticized, but all I am asking is that the people of Canada ask themselves whether they want a higher deficit at this point. That is the paramount question. Even the Leader of the Opposition admits that this program would cost in excess of $2 billion initially. Total cost after a four-year period when the entire program would be in effect can only be estimated. It has been estimated by one source that it would cost the people of Canada up to $4 billion.

• (1640)

It is said often in Canada that there is very little difference between the Liberal and Conservative parties.

An hon. Member: Vive la différence.

Mr. Anderson: I suppose that is one example of the difference in philosophy that exists between the two parties. The government says that our housing policy should be directed at people on the lower end of the income scale. The programs about which I spoke were for the senior citizens. It is our attempt to answer the very real need for housing of our senior citizens. When I referred to what was happening on the reserves, this is our approach to dealing with a very difficult problem. I repeat that the Liberal government's housing policy is aimed at helping people at the lower end of the income scale on the assumption that people at the high end of the income scale do not require the same assistance.

The difference between the two parties is that the Conservative party has come up with the brilliant idea that it is not the native people, the senior citizens and young couples starting married life who need that assistance. What the Conservative party in its wisdom has come up with is that it is people who earn more than $20,000 a year who need that assistance. I hope that the people of Canada on election day, which I hope will come shortly, will decide whether or not this is an election gimmick and who will benefit from that scheme. I will campaign on Bill C-29, and I suppose the hon. member will campaign on giving more money to those people who already have it.

Mr. Whiteway: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Would the hon. member entertain a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): That is not a point of order. Would the parliamentary secretary entertain a question?

Mr. Anderson: I would be very pleased to entertain a question, except that I am catching a taxi at a quarter to five to get back to my riding.

An hon. Member: This is not Friday.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, the housing bill that is before us today is an example of the withdrawal of the Liberal government from the serious commitment to help Canadians with affordable housing. It reflects the acceptance by the Liberal party of the Conservative idea of restraint and cutback in government spending. Because when you analyse what is in the bill, Mr. Speaker, you can only conclude that the government has reduced the amount of money for certain programs to assist the development of housing in Canada and has further restricted the scope of programming that is already on the books. Having listened to the debate I must conclude that it is a case between Liberal and Conservative members of Tweedle-dum saying to Tweedle-dee "I am different from you." In reality there is not that much difference.

When one looks at the bill, one finds that government is initiating a withdrawal of its lending policy through CMHC and letting the private sector take over the responsibility. It also shows that the government has embarked on a withdrawal from supporting and building public housing and cutting back on low income housing. The bill shows clearly that the government intends to cut back on assistance to middle-class housing.

I will discuss the details of the bill more thoroughly in committee, but let me point out that we find, in summary, that the bill ends the generous aid to co-ops and non-profit housing which was initiated during the minority parliament in response to the pressure that the NDP was able to put on the government at that time and replaces these programs and this assistance with less expensive or less generous subsidies to co-ops and non-profit housing. This program will bring an end to rent supplements on the fifty-fifty federal-provincial sharing basis for co-ops, non-profit housing and provincial or municipal housing.

It will also end loans to provinces or municipalities for the construction of public housing and the fifty-fifty sharing of operating losses in such projects. CMHC will continue to offer provinces a partnership arrangement in public housing. The federal government will pay 75 per cent of capital cost and operating losses. The trouble is, of course, that the provinces do not care very much for this option and their initial response has not been very enthusiastic.

As I said, this bill will bring an end to assisted home ownership and assisted rental programs. It will introduce the graduated payment mortgage, insured but not offered by CMHC. Like AHOP, it simply postpones the monthly mortgage payment you cannot afford to make anyway.

The bill expands the type of mortgages which CMHC can insure to make up for the fact that CMHC no longer lends money. The bill will expand the residential rehabilitation program, but without sufficient funds to implement it in the way it should be, and it will end the municipal infrastructure program for water and sewers, the municipal incentive program and grants for medium density housing. It will end the neighbourhood improvement program and replace it with the community services program which, contrary to what the previous speaker said, provides less money for a wider range of projects.

In my constituency of Sault Ste. Marie, our municipality is quite concerned about getting federal aid to expand and develop a second sewage treatment plant in the western part of the city and also to extend the water main services to areas in the northern part of the city. I am afraid that because of the Liberal government's policy of adopting the Tory philosophy of restraint and cutback, the funds for our city will be pretty tight if it wants to implement these much needed improvements in sewer and water main construction. I am continuing to lobby with the government and the minister to give our city some priority on this and I pledge to my constituents that I will continue to do so.

When we look at the housing situation today, we find that there is only one phrase which can accurately describe it, and that is that we are facing a housing crisis, a crisis in terms of affordable shelter. Government statistics show that over one third of Canadian households, or over one million Canadians in actual numbers, are suffering from some kind of housing deprivation; that is to say, either inadequate or overcrowded housing or housing which costs more than 25 per cent of the total income. The figure of 25 per cent is a universally accepted standard. If you pay more than 25 per cent of your income for shelter, it is unacceptable in terms of your budget; you are spending too much on shelter and having to go without other essentials such as food and clothing.

It is a shameful situation in Canada today. Many citizens of large municipalities such as Montreal, Toronto and some others where there are many problems with finding adequate, affordable housing are spending more than 25 per cent of their income on shelter. We find that 547,000 Canadians are in that category. It is a shameful situation in terms of the reality of housing today. The Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) has stood up in the House and said what great progress has been made; but the reality, those cold, hard figures which represent human beings, cannot be denied by this government, and I hope that during this election campaign we will be able to drive that message home.

● (1650)

The reality is that home ownership is becoming or has become too expensive for thousands and thousands of Canadians. It has become too expensive especially for young couples. I have talked with many young couples and parents of young couples, and they said that they do not know how they will ever attain the goal or dream of owning an individual family household, a home in which to raise their children with some sense of comfort and decency. Even if young couples have incomes of some $14,000 to $17,000 a year, how many of them can afford the $385 a month mortgage payment it takes to pay off a 25-year mortgage of $40,000 at the current interest rate of some 11 per cent? That is the reality for young couples today who want to own homes.

In my constituency of Sault Ste. Marie the average monthly mortgage payment is $400. For most home owners it means that both the husbands and wives have to work if they are to meet their mortgage payments. Indeed, the manager of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in Sault Ste. Marie said that 99 per cent of the couples or individuals coming to him for mortgage assistance are faced with situations where both spouses have to work in order to make ends meet. Many young couples today cannot afford the mortgage costs for an average home because of their actual incomes or because one spouse cannot find a job. Therefore, in many cases they raise their children in a crowded environment.

Another group really hurt by the housing situation today, of course, is senior citizens, pensioners and those on very low incomes. They need assisted housing and senior citizens' apartments. They need rent geared to income units built by governments at all three levels. Yet we see what is happening at the federal level. The government professes to have some concern for and commitment to Canadians, but we find it gradually withdrawing and pulling out of an active and meaningful involvement in building housing units and accommodations which many people desperately need.

If we are to get at the central problem of high housing costs, we must analyse what pushes these costs up and then try to deal with the factors in a rational and sound manner. In the course of my speech I should like to examine the key factors and whether government can take any action to bring down or hold down the rising costs which are making housing unaffordable.

First we can look at some recent statistics. Housing prices doubled between 1971 and 1976. We must look at some of these factors, one being the cost of construction. One cannot deny that the cost of building a house has gone up. In the period from 1971 to 1976, the cost of materials rose 65 per cent. Recently in the House I raised the issue of the high cost of lumber. The price of lumber has gone up 70 per cent in the past two years. This adds approximately $1,200 in cost to the average size house with a floor space of 1,800 square feet.

I have pressed the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Allmand) to take some kind of action to stop this price rip-off. The cost of production for lumber has not gone up. What has happened is that the world and American markets are demanding wood at such increasing rates that companies are charging whatever those markets will bear, as well as charging the same prices in Canada. The government sits by and does nothing about it.

There are various policies and initiatives which could be taken. Perhaps the best would be to implement a two-price system so that we in Canada will not be paying the high world price for something we produce here. The cost of materials has gone up. The government could take action to stop that escalation, but it is a toothless tiger when it comes to protecting consumers and home buyers.

The second cost is that of labour. Wages in the construction industry have gone up some 80 per cent in the period from 1971 to 1976. Some hon. members, especially Conservative and Liberal ones, would say, "Perhaps we should have held down the wages of these workers". They would argue that despite the fact that during the same period of time the cost of living rose 75 per cent. Somehow these workers would have been required to bear the burden of inflation by not trying to keep up with it. Of course, that is an unacceptable solution. Nevertheless, that fact is that the cost of labour has gone up, as everything else has.

The third reason housing is so expensive today is what has happened to interest rates. In 1971 interest rates ranged around an average of 5.25 per cent. In January, 1978, the interest rate was 11.25 per cent. That is some record during this Trudeau administration! It should be noted also that while these interest rates were going up, something dramatic was happening to bank profits. After all taxes had been paid, bank profits increased some 159 per cent during that same period of time. The increase alone in 1978 over 1977 was some 33 per cent in profits, representing almost $1 billion. Yet that trend was never countered, nor were any attempts made by the government to slow it down or to bring to bear some type of moderating influence on actual interest rates.

The government has implemented various kinds of subsidy programs for certain groups in terms of Canadian taxpayers subsidizing the person with a mortgage by giving him a lower mortgage, with the bank receiving the going rate. But that is not a solution for the majority of people who want to own homes. Thus we see the cost of money has been a major factor in this tremendous increase in the cost of home ownership.

There is another reason for the current housing cost, and that is the cost of land. Mr. Speaker, may I call it five o'clock? I will resume debate later this evening.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale)—Air Transport—Request for regular jet service into western Manitoba; the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga)—National Defence—Suggestion overseas armed forces personnel receive free mailing privileges; the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Shymko)—External Affairs—Government's instructions to Canadian delegation at Belgrade conference.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills, notices of motions for papers and public bills. As there are no private bills under this heading, the House will proceed to the consideration of notice of motions for papers.

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think there is unanimous consent that we proceed with notice of motion for papers No. 12 and that preceding notices of motions be allowed to stand.

Job Studies

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House agreed on the hon. parliamentary secretary's suggestion that we proceed with consideration of motion No. 12 and that the other notices of motions be allowed to stand? Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

JOB STUDIES IN CONSTRUCTION TRADES

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil) moved:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the approximately 1600 job studies in the construction trades across Canada prepared in order to update the Canadian Classification and Dictionary of Occupants and contracted to Southam Business Publications, Don Mills, Ontario.

He said: Mr. Speaker, when I became aware that this study was going on, my interest was activated because, as many of the members of the House know, before I came here as a member of parliament I was in the construction industry. Possibly some members would suggest that I should go back to the construction industry. I was interested because I wondered what they were doing and why they were doing it, so I asked for the papers and was told by the parliamentary secretary that he could not comply with the motion since the information on jobs that they had asked the contractors to gather for the studies may in many instances be regarded as confidential. I know that on many occasions I have found that the persons answering had not seen the papers in question, and in many cases some of us have seen papers that are marked confidential. The problem I have arises often from the fact that no one is willing to make a decision that the papers really are not that important and could quite easily be released.

My interest stemmed originally from looking at the document for which the study was being made. I read in the information section of the Annual Guide to the Canadian Classification and Dictionary of Occupants, put out by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen), that within the next few years a series of books will be replacing the present CCD volume, and the first book in this series, "Construction Occupations", is being published under separate cover. I assumed this study is in connection with the production of this particular book.

I wondered what would be produced because in looking at the document to which I have already referred, I saw something I found interesting under "Tree Trimmer". It tells me that a tree trimmer trims trees, climbs trees, prunes tree tops and branches, using saws and pruning shears. He trims damaged trees and paints stumps. He removes broken limbs and he fells trees. Then in relation to occasional duties it says that he works from a bucket on an extended truck boom to reach the branches. If that is the kind of information that is considered confidential, then the House will understand why I suggest that these documents should be produced.

Looking at this book, quite by coincidence I noted that under "Cook (cater. and lodg.)"—that is, catering and lodging, the first item—there are 38 different kinds of cooks, including everything from catering and lodging down to the thirty-eighth "cook, vacuum kettle"; but nowhere in the list does it mention a plain, ordinary cook. I inquired and found out that they are going to correct this deficiency, and I shall be able soon to tell my wife what is a plain, ordinary cook.

Just to continue in this same vein—and maybe I am being a little lighthearted this afternoon—under "Hair-curler maker" we find five groupings down to "hair stylist", but it does not mention hair grooming.

Another interesting one covers everything from aquarium attendant down to an aquatic-biology technologist; but I find they have forgotten aquacultural technician. Hon. members can understand why I was interested in seeing what they were going to produce for the construction industry.

My interests stems—and now I am going to be serious for a moment—from the fact that most of us, whether we are federal members of parliament or otherwise, look upon construction generally as being a provincial area of responsibility. I wonder why the federal government should be mixing into what is generally accepted as provincial jurisdiction.

To get back to something a little lighter, I notice in this book a "guide to qualifications profile factors", something which I presume is used in categorizing these various groupings. I find a very interesting group referred to as "physical activities". I mention this because it could be of interest to members of parliament in that it groups various workers in categories of sedentary work, light work, medium work, heavy work and very heavy work. I presume that we as members of parliament are in the sedentary work category. We are permitted to lift, carry, push or pull up to 10 pounds but no more. We also see in this same list reference to climbing and/or balancing, stooping, kneeling, crouching and/or crawling, reaching, handling, fingering and/or feeling, talking, hearing and seeing in various terms, and control of the hand and control of the foot. I think we should put all members of parliament through this questionnaire.

To be serious, Mr. Speaker, there are many questions I want to ask about this study which might have been answered had I been able to get my hands on these papers. Obviously I want to ask why the study was considered necessary, how often such a study is done, and I would like to know how up-to-date it is to be kept. I would like to know who uses this Canadian Classification and Dictionary of Occupants, and who in construction trades is going to use the book when it is put out. I would like to know how many are going to be printed, how many are going to be distributed and to whom they are going to be distributed. I would like to know how they are going to be used by other departments and whether other departments of governments are really interested in construction workers.

I should also like to know why Southam Business Publications was picked. I am not objecting at the moment, but I would like to know if there was a tender call. I would like to know what price was paid in terms of this reference, and I would like to know why 1,600 was the figure adopted. I would like to know who decided on 1,600. I assume it was the Department of Employment and Immigration, but why 1,600, and what kinds of jobs were the 1,600 to cover? Was it all trades in the construction industry? How many in each province? Are we comparing the differences from province to province? Did the provinces agree and co-operate? Was every trade covered in every province? Because as everyone knows, each province handles the construction industry differently. I wonder if apprentices were covered. Apprenticeship is quite an issue at the present, particularly in the province of Quebec.

If I might interject a point of some concern here, it is that the control of apprenticeships is also affecting the number of persons in a particular trade which can enter into the work force. Obviously, one way of controlling the supply of that type of labour is to control those who are entering at the bottom, the apprentices. Another important point is that since the provinces are responsibles and since they set up the apprenticeship centres, the provinces can also control the language used, and this has become quite a factor to persons who wish to enter into the construction industry but are barred because of language restrictions.

I wonder if in this study the apprenticeship levels of competence were considered from province to province. Once again, because it is a provincial concern the different provinces make their own decisions as to the number of years of apprenticeship required in each particular trade. I do not know the situation in each province, having only been a member of parliament for some seven years now, but with regard to Quebec I wonder if the persons who were being considered were all holding competency cards and if the problem of issuance of competency cards was dealt with in the study.

Was a study made of the comparison of union and non-union construction workers in those provinces which are not fully unionized? Was any comparison made of the differences in qualifications between a unionized carpenter and a non-unionized carpenter? Also, did they consider self-employed construction workers? I mention self-employed construction workers because it is my experience that the productivity of this type of worker is similar to the productivity of the self-employed construction worker of some 25 years ago, whereas the production of the regular construction worker, unionized or non-unionized, is considerably less than what it was 25 years ago. This is one of the reasons field construction today is so much more expensive and why there is less field construction going on than there is factory construction.

I find it quite extraordinary that this situation has developed to the point where a factory-made house today, for example, can be produced at about half the price of a field constructed house. I do not wish to get into the bill which is presently being discussed in the House, but it is apropos to my motion when discussing the construction worker who works in the factory and who is generally considered unskilled as compared to the man who is working in the field doing almost the same job. I wonder if this has been taken into account. In other words, a man operating a gun which shoots nails into plywood and who works for a factory is probably not considered in this study as being in the same grouping as the construction worker in the field who uses a hammer to beat nails into plywood.

I wonder if the problems of these overlapping responsibilities which often result in union disputes were a consideration. Quite obviously, the union worker is finding that there is less work available to him because of the increase in the amount of work which is taking the form of factory production today. From a construction point of view this is easily understood. To illustrate, three weeks ago I visited a factory that produces prefabricated houses. These are houses of which all of us could be proud, containing three bedrooms, a fully equipped kitchen, carpeting, hardwood floors, tiles, all that one would expect in a nice house. The opposition may also be interested to know that these houses are being sold in the province of Quebec on a serviced lot for a total cost of $32,000.

I wonder how these people who conducted the study looked at the limits of a particular trade. I wonder if they concerned themselves with the different wage rates that pertain particularly in areas where there are union and non-union workers working side by side. Most of all, however, I am concerned about the apparent interference—and I would like this explained—of the federal government in what I consider to be an area of provincial jurisdiction.

That is why I ask for these papers. The federal government is studying these construction trades and considers that it has the right to do so, whereas it stated categorically that it would not express similar interest in education. I am inclined to the view that if we are going to mix in provincial responsibilities, perhaps education would be a good place to start.

I have one last point which I consider of major importance with regard to the province of Quebec. Since the study was authorized by the Department of Employment and Immigration, I wonder what their attitude is with regard to the use of hiring halls in the province of Quebec and the fact that the construction companies are not able to go to the Ministry of Employment and Immigration for the labour which they require. In fact, the Department of Employment and Immigration has been effectively shut out in the province of Quebec. I am not saying that this is wrong; I am only pointing out that in Quebec the Department of Employment and Immigration can have very little interest in the employment of construction workers because the hiring is done through the hiring halls.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, though I have been somewhat lighthearted in my approach to this particular motion and though I have no doubt that the government will continue to refuse to produce these papers which I consider are of relatively little importance to them, my chief concern in bringing this matter forward for debate is this apparent interference in an area of provincial jurisdiction. I have asked a great deal of questions and hopefully the parliamentary secretary will have noted some of them and will be able to refer some answers back to me.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, my intervention will not be very long. I would like to thank the hon. member for introducing this motion. It just goes to show one why it is so important to have leadership, as has been provided by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), in the area of freedom of information.

• (1720)

As I understand it, this government is committed to this sort of thing, yet I hear the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) blasting the parliamentary secretary because that hon. member says the type of information that is required is confidential. Even though his remarks were lighthearted, I think that was an attempt to cover his anger at what the parliamentary secretary was doing.

He says he wants to see jobs studies in the construction industry. He should understand that the construction industry is one of the most important in this country. I do not intend to get involved with provincial jurisdiction as my hon. friend did; he has researched it and I have not. One of the main problems with this industry at the moment is the lack of work. There is no industrial strategy which would create a climate of confidence and put people to work.

Between 1977 and 1978 there was a decline in construction employment. In 1978 the average unemployment rate in the construction industry in Newfoundland was 31 per cent, in Nova Scotia, 22 per cent, in New Brunswick, 23 per cent, in Quebec, 20 per cent, in Ontario, 12 per cent, in Manitoba, 12 per cent, in Saskatchewan, 11 per cent, in Alberta, 7 per cent, and in British Columbia, 13 per cent. Only in Alberta was the unemployment rate down.

It is significant that these figures do not show that there is a very high rate of unemployment within the trade union movement. Within this very vital and important industry there is a skill bank and we are not making sufficient withdrawal from it. I do not really want to blame the federal government but the fact is that they have no industrial strategy. There is no climate of confidence and consequently we find ourselves in a mess.

Another factor is the mobility of construction workers. I understand that the Department of Employment and Immigration has appointed a task force to look into this matter. I am given to understand that there are about 4,000 unemployed carpenters in British Columbia, though there is a shortage of carpenters in Calgary where business is apparently booming. This is the sort of thing we want to know. We want the information set out in these 1,600 job studies, some of which concern the construction trade. This is the sort of thing we need in order to cope with this enormous problem.

The president of the Hamilton Construction Association has indicated that there is nothing in Hamilton to sustain the industry after this year. Surely if this is to be a viable industry, one that can make a significant contribution toward a greater industrial nation, then the type of question that the hon. member has placed on the order paper must be answered. I will be very interested to see if the parliamentary secretary flim-flams and tries to justify refusing this information.

It is our position that the onus is upon the government to show why the information cannot be released. I think most information can be released unless it is in the line of security. On a simple question pertaining to job studies it makes no sense to be told that the information is confidential. I believe this is doing irreparable harm and is unwarranted. If a climate of activity and excitement is to be created in the construction industry, surely the information required to do this could be made available.

With these few remarks, Mr. Speaker, I want to let the parliamentary secretary know that, in my opinion, the construction industry is one of the vital industries in this country and every effort should be made to create a climate of confidence in it. This refusal on the part of the parliamentary secretary—whether the one who is going to speak now or his predecessor—was irresponsible and shortsighted. He has tunnel vision. I hope I am not directing my remarks to the parliamentary secretary who is going to stand up now. If I am, I do not mean in the way it sounds, and I will withdraw most of it. He will have to figure out which part.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the desire of the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) to get the documents to which he was refused access. I do so because we on this side of the House have had this experience on many occasions. It is good to know, although not very helpful, that we are not alone and that the government treats its own members in the same cavalier manner as it treats us.

It is part of the madness of this government that it refuses to give information to the public, members of parliament, the media and educators—information which is of the utmost importance if the problems which this country faces are to be dealt with in a rational manner and solved.

This government, which has been in power for 55 of the last 65 years, has come to believe it has all the answers and can refuse to give the most elementary and necessary information to anybody and everybody.

I have no knowledge of the study dealing with problems in the construction industry which the hon. member for Vaudreuil wanted. I have a copy, however, of a study made for the Department of Manpower and Immigration by Robertson, Nickerson, Group Associates Ltd., entitled "Case Studies in Aspects of Training Upper Skilled Blue Collar Workers". This is a study of the problems and needs in the manufacturing industry which is probably complementary to the study which the hon. member for Vaudreuil would like dealing with the construction industry.

Any minister or deputy minister who has read this report should hang his head in shame—if he did not immediately offer his resignation. The study shows that the opportunity for high level young Canadians to enter a skilled trade is so remote as to be described as non-existent. It points out that there is a shortage of upper skilled workers now and that the shortage will get more serious as the economy picks up. It also says that industrial growth in Canada will be inhibited by a lack of skilled workers. According to this study, government programs are not receiving industry support and need a massive overhaul. This refers to a department of government which has spent $2.5 billion on job training in the last five years. Last year we spent $680 million on the job training. Of that amount only $80 million went to subsidize on the job training, namely training in industry, in companies involved in manufacturing. The provincial educational institutions received $340 million, and $260 million was paid directly to individuals for income support while attending provincial technical schools.

We spent $2½ billion in the last five years and we still have a million unemployed. What did this group hired by the department to look into the situation in the manufacturing industries have to say? They said there is a crying need for skilled people.

Since World War II most of our needs for skilled workers have been met by immigrants. We have imported the people we needed. Because of high unemployment in Canada, one million unemployed, naturally Canadians are saying to government that we have to cut back on the number of immigrants we permit to come into this country. One cannot blame the people of Canada when they see one million unemployed. That is why they do not want more people coming here. The government has responded to that feeling. Last year it cut back substantially on the number of immigrants permitted to come to this country.

At the same time as we are wanting to cut back because we have unemployment, skilled workers who could come to this country if there were jobs available are not coming because unemployment in the industrialized countries, particularly in western Europe, is much lower than it is here. Their standard of living has risen compared to the standard of living in Canada.

A few years ago the average per capita income of Canadian citizens was the second highest in the world. We were second to the United States. Today, we are seventh or eighth. West Germany, Sweden, Norway and Denmark, just to mention a few, have all gone ahead of us. The result is that the skilled immigrants we attracted in the years after World War II no longer want to come to this country. That is the situation.

As the report to which I referred indicates, there is a grim shortage of skilled tradesmen. The report indicates a tremendous shortage of tool and die makers, machinists, and electronic technicians. They are and will be needed in large numbers all across the country. They will particularly be needed if this or whatever government is in power in the next few years can get the economy moving, and instead of having 83 per cent of our capacity being used we will use 90 or 93 per cent, which is what it should be. The shortage of skilled workers in Canada would then cause a real crisis situation. That shortage has been attested to by companies all across the country. The shortage in the manufacturing industry which I talked about is just as prevalent in the construction industry about which the hon. member for Vaudreuil was asking.

Something that everyone but the manpower department is agreed on is that our manpower training programs are tragically inadequate. They are a disaster. There are reasons for that, such as jurisdictional disputes between Ottawa and the provinces. Under the provisions of the British North America Act, the provinces have responsibility for education. The federal government has taken the responsibility for manpower training.

I believe, and I have expressed this view since the day the Department of Manpower was set up, that the division which the federal government insisted on between manpower training and education is an artificial division. It does not work in practice. The federal government has insisted on its jurisdiction. It has designed manpower programs to a large extent in a vacuum, without consultation with the provinces, industry and the unions. The result is what we predicted. When I have more time I will prove, by quotations and illustrations from industries and corporations, the kinds of shortages which I have indicated.

We have spent tremendous amounts of money, but we have no reliable information about our future needs in the construction industry, the manufacturing industry, and the service field. There are very few really good training programs on the job in the plants. Most of the money is spent in institutions which were built with the financial carrot of federal funding for construction and operations held before them.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Chair would explain to me what connection the hon. member's remarks have with the motion we are discussing here this afternoon.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member should listen to the speech and not ask the Chair to explain to him what the hon. member is saying.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would listen he would understand, which I doubt he has the intelligence to do from listening to his many interjections. He would know that I am supporting the request of the hon. member for Vaudreuil for documents pertaining to studies on manpower needs in the construction industry. I am doing that by summarizing a similar need for documents with regard to manpower needs in the manufacturing industry. There is a close relationship between what I am saying and what was said by the hon. member for Vaudreuil.

I was saying, before I was somewhat rudely interrupted, that there are very few good on the job training programs in industry. Where there are such programs, too few apprentices are being trained. The reason for that is that it is cheaper for employers to take the easy way out when they need skilled workers. They either depend on the educational system, which we now know has failed miserably, or they recruit immigrants.

There is no quick or easy solution to the problems we face. We need programs to meet both the short and long-term needs. The federal government should stop trying to make all decisions unilaterally as it has been doing since the manpower department was set up. We must stop turning the tap off and on by contracting for more or less seats in the community colleges. Decisions as to how many seats to purchase in our community colleges are not based on the needs of the region or the country, but on political and budgetary considerations. In this period of restraint we should at least partially turn off the tap because we do not have the money. In a period in which we think we need to prime the pump, we turn the tap on.

The federal government, the provinces, industry and labour must get together to work out programs to meet our needs. The one body which could secure that collaboration and co-ordination is the federal government, though it has not shown any inclination to do so up until now. The federal government should invite provinces, industry and labour to assess the need and, upon the basis of that assessment, to develop the necessary programs. But this cannot be done because nobody, except possibly the federal government, knows what the needs are. The only information available is in the possession of the federal government which refuses to give it to the hon. member for Vaudreuil, to other members on this side, to industry, labour, or anyone else.

I join with the hon. member for Vaudreuil in urging the government and the Department of Manpower to change its policy, its desire to keep everything secret. I urge the government to make available as much information as possible so that the people as individuals and through their organizations, whether trade unions or companies or manufacturers' associations, can really begin thinking about the problems we face and attempting to find solutions to them.

Mr. Frank Maine (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in responding to the request of the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) for the tabling in the House of approximately 1,600 job studies in the construction trades series which were prepared in order to update the Canadian Classification and Dictionary of Occupations (CCDO), and were carried out under contract by Southam Business Publications, Don Mills, Ontario, I am bound to say there is a very compelling reason why I cannot agree to that motion.

In many instances job information collected for studies such as these is considered to be confidential by the companies concerned. As a result, to reassure those establishment assisting in this program, the then Department of Manpower and Immigration gave an undertaking that the information supplied by companies would be treated as strictly confidential. Under the circumstances the tabling of these job studies in the House would constitute a breach of trust on the part of the government and I cannot condone such a course of action.

I am sure that my hon. friend from Vaudreuil knows that during the past two decades Canada has experienced a period of rapid economic development. The growth of a technological society produces numerous socio-economic changes. Although each economy makes similar responses to technological change, its job structures are largely a reflection of its own policies, developments and goals. For this reason it is desirable to establish and maintain an occupational classification system suited to its national requirements.

A multi-purpose standard classification of occupations is an important instrument for studying the development and utilization of employment resources. It needs to be standardized because, for research and analysis purposes, data compiled on the basis of one system cannot be compared satisfactorily with data compiled on the basis of other systems. It needs to be multi-purpose because standardization is worthless unless it meets the needs of various users and facilitates communications between them.

Experience has shown that the development of a standard occupational classification which completely satisfies the requirements of every probable user may not be possible but one that services as many needs as possible is invaluable. Statisticians or economists studying the labour force are normally concerned with wide groups of jobs rather than individual jobs. Their statistics are usually assembled in a limited number of categories designed to contain job groupings which are relatively homogeneous in terms of a particular characteristic. On the other hand, continuing labour market programs such as job placement, vocational counselling, training and immigration deal with individuals, and thus specific occupational definitions are needed. For statistical reporting purposes, however, the latter programs are also concerned with wider groups of related jobs. This common interest provides a link between persons concerned with otherwise different programs.

The concept of a standardized occupational coding system has been recognized by many countries as essential for effective labour market planning, employment operations and career development. In October, 1966, the Quadrennial Conference of Labour Statisticians at Geneva endorsed the concept of national multi-purpose classification systems and urged that these systems be related to the International Standard Classification of Occupations (ISCO).

Because Canada did not then have its own standard occupational classification system, a number of quite different systems had been used for many years. Statistics Canada used a classification system suitable for collecting and compiling information from census enumerations, but not for other purposes. The job placement operations of Canada Manpower Centres used the United States Dictionary of Occupational Titles (DOT) to code occupations, while the immigration service, for a number of years, used the International Standard Classification of Occupations (ISCO). It was difficult to compare data compiled from one system with data compiled from the other two systems. The use of a variety of systems tended to complicate planning and operational activities.

Social scientists require an occupational classification system that enables them to determine the actual changes which have taken place in the structure of the labour force. Such a system is essential for analytical studies and the preparation of projections and forecasts. The design of a Canadian classification system had to ensure, as much as possible, the historical continuity of statistical data. Statistics Canada, therefore, had considerable interest in and input into the initial design of an occupational classification system that was to be convertible to, and a replacement for, the 1961 Canada Census and compatible with the revised International Standard Classification of Occupations (ISCO) for international study and report purposes. The then Department of Manpower and Immigration required a system that was convertible to the American Dictionary of Occupational Titles (DOT) because past records were coded to this system. In 1966, to resolve these inadequacies, the Department of Manpower and Immigration and Statistics Canada launched a joint project to develop a standard national classification.

The main objective of the Canadian Classification and Dictionary of Occupations, or CCDO as it is familiarly known, is to provide for Canada a standard multi-purpose instrument for use in labour market research and analysis, for statistical survey purposes including census taking, and for operational activities such as placement, counselling, training and immigration. It is designed to facilitate analysis in various manpower fields, for example, job market analysis and worker mobility; it is a useful tool in career counselling and placement services; it provides essential data for the planning and evaluation of educational and training programs; and it has many uses for personnel operations in business and industry.

The census occupational classification which is now based on the Canadian Classification and Dictionary of Occupations is widely used throughout Canada in many statistical surveys. Thus, the CCDO has achieved the most important function of a multi-purpose classification system, for example, increasing the quantity and improving the quality of occupational information in Canada by standardizing the occupational categories and definitions used in different programs and, consequently, the occupational statistics and other information derived from various sources.

● (1750)

Internationally, CCDO is recognized as the leader in systems of this kind. In such diverse countries as Japan, Mexico, Algeria and Fiji, CCDO has had a direct influence on the development of national systems. Recently, after having reviewed the major systems available, Australia has opted to base its own system on the CCDO approach and has asked the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission for assistance. The United States, which is only now moving toward a system comparable to Canada's, recently published the "Standard Occupational Classification Manual", and in the foreword it says:

> In its work, the project staff also considered new developments on occupational classification at the international level. In this regard, the International Standard Classification of Occupations (ISCO), the Canadian Classification and Dictionary of Occupations, and the British Classification of Occupations and Directory of Occupational Titles were major references.
> Extensive use was made of the Canadian Classification; we are grateful to the Canadian government for their permission to use concept, definitions, and phrases from their publications in this classification.

Canada's lead in this field is being maintained and expanded as the system adjusts itself to face an automated future. This lead and excellence could well be jeopardized if we dried up the sources of valuable detailed data volunteered to us under the protection of confidentiality.

The actual nature of work performed was selected as the basic principle in the CCDO because it is significant to all users of the multi-purpose classification system. Other criteria such as "training time required" or "working environment" were considered and rejected. Such criteria are related more closely to the worker than to the occupation and are thus more subjective in character. For this reason they are not acceptable as basic criteria to all users of a multi-purpose classification structure.

The CCDO classification is a coded taxonomic structure that organizes occupations into distinct categories. The first category consists of 23 major groups which describe broad fields of work. The second category consists of 81 minor groups which are further subdivisions of related fields of work. The third category consists of 498 unit groups which describe closely related groups of occupations. These three categories permit the aggregation of statistics at three different levels and are designed for the common statistical reporting requirements of all types of programs dealing with occupations. Within each of the three category or unit groups we find several individually coded and defined related occupations. This latter development serves the needs of job placement, immigration, counselling and training.

The important basic principle of using "work performed" to develop categories at all levels in the CCDO was determined by the duties and tasks indicated by job analyses conducted in private and public establishments and institutions, and through a variety of associations across Canada. In order to gain the co-operation of these establishments and institutions it was first necessary, as I have already mentioned, to give an undertaking on behalf of the federal government that all data gathered by our analysts would not be directly linked to the establishments which co-operated. If these 1,600 studies were tabled in this House, this undertaking would be severely shaken and I am, therefore, opposed to the tabling of these studies.

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, it was not over a month ago that I stood in my place and supported the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert), who was then seeking information on an entirely different subject. At that time I sat and thought perhaps there was something very secret in what he was seeking. I thought that again today. I thought perhaps there is something which should not be made public. However, the situation is the same now as it was then. What we got again today was gobbledygook, bafflegab and flimflam.

I have to say that the parliamentary secretary reads exceptionally well. I do not know that in 12 or 14 minutes I could handle all those 35-cent words one after the other. It used to be that they were 25-cent words, but this government has pushed inflation so high that those words now cost 35 cents.

I have never heard such nonsense in all my life. No one expects the government to make known in this House the fact that John Jones is working for the Dow Construction Company or what he does. That is not the point. We are not in the least interested in that. I have spent all my life in construction. I am not directly involved now to the extent I was years ago, but I am still involved in construction in a peripheral way, and I know that the information which has been discussed would be very valuable.

I commend the hon. member for Vaudreuil. As the hon. member ticked questions off his list, I thought to myself that that information would be worthwhile to a contractor or a construction man. I do not care whether Mr. Jones works for Dow Construction, but I would like to see the results of all this study. I would like to know the answers to the hon. member's questions. If the Department of Employment and Immigration received answers, it should give us those answers. We are not interested in names. We do not need to know that a job on the corner of Gladstone Avenue and Bank Street was done in a certain way. We do not need to know that, but if the department got answers to all those questions, why in heaven's name can we not have them?

Surely in our enlightened age we know that if the government gets information from certain contractors, it will not pass it on to another contractor to help him bid in opposition. I cannot believe that as he stood in his place the parliamentary secretary believed that nonsense. However, he stood there for 12 minutes. He spewed out words about CCDO, ISCO and all kinds of things. He has not the foggiest notion of what they mean. I have a great deal of respect for my friend from the Wellington area. He is an excellent scientist, but I would bet that he has never done a bit of construction work in his life. If he had, he would realize the value of this information. He would realize that the possession of this information by contractors would produce tremendous results.

I know this government gets involved in this sort of thing. In the last few days we have seen some indications of what the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) (Mrs. Campagnolo) and her department can do with computers. The Department of Public Works has a computer specification coming out, and it is a dandy. By golly, you can push a button and get a 15-page specification for a push-button on an outhouse door. However, if we are going to do all of this and if we are going to put all this information into a computer, why can we not get it out?

Why did the hon. member for Vaudreuil not receive an answer to his question? He is not asking for names or details. I did not count them, but I think there were 25 or 30 questions, all of them legitimate questions. Let us see if we cannot get the answers. They would be valuable to the whole of the construction industry. Surely to goodness there is no justification for hiding the answers, unless it is the innate sense of secrecy of this government.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that hon. members opposite, with the exception of the last speaker, should get up and demand information without knowing what they are talking about. They are asking that the government release information it promised industry it would keep confidential. It surprises me even more to hear an experienced member like the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) talk for ten or 15 minutes all around the subject but refer to it directly only at the opening and closing of his remarks. The hon. member for Winnipeg North spoke about something else and pretended that what was at issue was a report instead of the date on which the report is based. The hon. member was being either devious or dumb, and the House can be the arbiter of that question.

There is a vast amount of information here. The opposition is always complaining about the government's wasting taxpayers' money, but on the other hand it says it would spend more. Now hon. members opposite want somebody in the employ of the public to go through the interviews upon which these 1,600 job classifications were based, remove all names or references to companies or individuals, and then table all that information in the House.

Who would use it? Certainly not the hon. members we have heard from today.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert), a Liberal, would use it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has expired. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Ouellet that Bill C-29, to amend the National Housing Act and Central Mortgage and Housing Act and to make other related amendments, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, before we moved on to other business at five o'clock I was speaking on the housing bill before us today and the criticisms I have of it in terms of the Liberal government moving away from an activist role to the degree that is needed for providing affordable housing to Canadians. I began analysing what were the reasons behind the high cost of housing and I elaborated on the fact that the cost of materials is increasing, the cost of labour is increasing, and the interest rate on mortgages is going up. The fourth factor on which I should like to comment is that what is pushing up the cost of housing is the cost of land. It is only by understanding what the causes are that we can hope to come up with solutions to the problems.

[Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi).]

• (2010)

The cost of land in Canada for housing has been rising at astronomical rates over the past few years. One study shows that the cost of lots in any moderate-sized community from 1971 onward at least has doubled, and in some cases has moved higher in price than that. Of course there are a number of developers assembling land in urban areas. They are sitting on that land, holding on to it, and allowing the price to increase through speculation and lack of supply. They only release a certain amount of land at a time. Also studies have shown the control of land in major urban centres is in the hands of a very small number of developers.

What has happened is that we do not have much competition any longer in terms of land development. Certainly this is no exception in my community of Sault Ste. Marie. Indeed certain prominent members of the Conservative party are involved very heavily in land assembly in the Sault Ste. Marie area.

One study shows just what is happening with land developers. Profits gained by large suburban land developers have added some $7,000 to $10,000 to the price of new $50,000 homes in cities such as Regina and Winnipeg. In Ontario, the Peel Housing Task Force found that profits on lots were 22 per cent of the final selling price of houses. One can only conclude that certain developers are making windfall profits, and that is a major factor in forcing up the cost of housing.

Of all the reasons I have given for the increase in the cost of housing, I think two stand out above all others, namely, the cost of land and the cost of mortgage interest rates. If we are to have any kind of meaningful government policy to deal with rising prices in housing, we must tackle those two key problems, the cost of money and the cost of land. Throughout the history of housing policy of the Liberal government, and even its Conservative predecessor, we do not find any policy or legislation addressing itself to those key problems.

I do not think we would find much initiative on the part of the Liberal government, or for that matter a Conservative government, in terms of attacking the banks and telling them they must bring down their interest rates for certain income groups. There is a very cozy relationship between the two old line parties and the Canadian banking institution. I was interested in reading the reports of the 1977 Election Expenses Act which listed the contributions political parties received from various sectors and interest groups. What caught my eye was the amount of money donated by Canadian banks to the Liberal and Conservative parties.

For example, in 1977, according to the official returns, the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce donated $25,000 to the Liberal party and $25,195 to the Conservative party. The Bank of Nova Scotia gave the Liberals $21,500 and the Conservatives $20,000. The list goes on and on. There is a rather vested interest on the part of the old line parties and the banks which charge these interest rates. I would be very surprised to see any kind of meaningful government initiative to attack such generous donators to its political causes.

In terms of dealing with the horrendously high cost of mortgage interest rates, one must recall that over a period of a 25-year mortgage in the amount of $40,000, with an interest rate of 10 per cent, $4,000 a year is paid in interest alone. That is forgetting about even reducing the principal amount borrowed. Over the term of a 25-year mortgage, a $40,000 or $50,000 house costs in excess of $100,000, and of course the great bulk of it is interest charges.

We in the New Democratic Party say that the only way to attack that major contributor to rising costs of housing is for the government to become tough with the banks and to say to the lending institutions, which have been making incredible profits over the past few years, that they can afford to absorb a less high profit by reducing or offering 8 per cent mortgages to families earning $25,000 or less. There are ways and means by which the government, through the Bank of Canada, could direct the lending institutions to make such lower cost mortgages available to Canadians who want to own homes. Of course this would help renters, the majority of our people who live in apartments. It would provide them with an opportunity to own homes, the dream of many couples. Especially it would help young couples who must face mortgage payments of $400 a month under the present situation. It would bring down dramatically the monthly mortgage bill if 8 per cent mortgages were available. Surely that is a much more progressive means of dealing with high interest rates than any of the proposals I have heard from either of the old line parties.

The only way we can deal with the high cost of land is by the implementation of certain taxation legislation to make it very unattractive for land speculation on the part of developers. It would be more important to move into the idea of public land banking by municipal or provincial governments assembling land which will be released when needed, at prices people can afford, rather than it being left in private hands and suffering the price escalation I have described.

Government funding for low rental housing and senior citizens' units must be enhanced and increased. As I said earlier, I am dismayed the government is pulling back and not offering the needed funds for this very worth-while housing.

In the course of my speech I would be remiss if I did not examine with some seriousness the proposal of the official opposition, the Conservative party, offering a mortgage interest deduction up to a total of $5,000 and a property tax deduction up to $1,000 as a solution to the high cost of housing. I can only conclude that it is a pre-election gimmick on the part of the Conservative party. Every study I have seen shows that it would be just too costly to implement such a program, that it would cost Canadian taxpayers $2 billion to $3 billion a year in lost revenue, which would only increase the deficit.

It is ironic that the Conservative party, which daily attacks the Liberal government for a huge deficit, would advocate a policy to increase the deficit even more. If members of the Conservative party argue its proposal will not increase the deficit, the only way it would do so is if taxpayers pay for it in terms of higher taxes in order to make up the lost revenue through the mortgage and property tax deduction scheme. If we did not take that course in raising taxes to put this scheme in place, then the only other course would be to reduce government services which are now in place further, and in that way reduce spending. Of course, that would only make those who need these vital government programs suffer from the lack of them. I think this is a gimmick and I hope Canadians are not taken in by it. As I said, we can not afford it.

There is a built-in unfairness to this program because it does nothing for tenants. About one third of all households in Canada are described as renters and they would get absolutely no tax benefit from this home owner interest deduction scheme. Nor, of course, would senior citizens, who probably have paid for their houses and are not holding active mortgages. This is unfair as well because it would probably mean interest rates would rise as there would be a greater demand for mortgage funds. More people would probably re-mortgage their homes in order to obtain the advantages of the tax break. In addition, the interest rate could be written off against taxes and there would be no pressure, and there is little now, to keep interest rates down. I imagine the banks would seize the opportunity of increasing mortgage rates even more.

The major default in terms of unfairness in the program is, of course, that it benefits upper income Canadians more than middle or low income Canadians. Surely we do not need any more inequities built into our present tax system than are already there, courtesy of a decade of the Trudeau Liberal policy.

When we look at the inspiration for this mortgage deductability scheme we see it comes from the United States which has a plan already in place. Most United States housing experts, and many government officials, would like to get out of that program because it costs so much and because, as I say, it is so unfair.

The U.S. Treasury Department conducted a study in 1977 of this program which the Conservatives want to bring into Canada and discovered that the highest income group, that is to say, 15 per cent of U.S. taxpayers, derive 75 per cent of the benefits from the plan. It works in such a way that the more you make and the higher your mortgage payments, the more of a deduction you get from your taxes.

What would happen in Canada is that middle income taxpayers would save a couple of hundred dollars under the Conservative plan, but someone in the top bracket would get a windfall of $4,000 when calculating taxes in the way that this system operates.

Surely if any party in this House, particularly the federal Conservative party, is concerned about a fair tax system, it should follow the Conservative counterpart in the province of Ontario. That government does not have a tax deduction system but a tax credit system for home owners and tenants. The advantage of a tax credit system is that it is on a lower income scale and is cut off at the upper income level. The tax credit system has fairness built into it, and statistics show that the greatest benefits go to the lower and middle income wage earners.

Under the present scheme with the federal Conservative plan, the greatest benefit would go to upper income Canadians and not to those who need them the most. In other words, the Tory philosophy is, the more you earn the less taxes you should pay. I think any honest political party would reject that as a proper base for a tax system. What we have in terms of the old line parties is a gimmick by the Conservatives, and general indifference by the Liberals, when it comes to implementing a viable housing policy for Canadians, especially designed to get at the two key problems, high mortgage rates and high cost of land.

The policies that my party has outlined during the debate, and elsewhere, on the whole issue of bringing interest rates down and the cost of land down, make more sense and offer much more hope to tenants, young couples and others who desperately want and need affordable housing. This is the direction in which we should be moving, not in the direction that this bill proposes, or in the direction of the gimmickers of the Conservative party.

Mr. Whiteway: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I refrained from interrupting my colleague in the NDP, the hon. member for Sault Ste Marie (Mr. Symes), during his speech, but in the course of his remarks he made reference to prominent Conservative supporters in his constituency. It is difficult to know what he means because most Conservative supporters are distinguished. He went on to say that they made a great deal of profit. I am sure that, with a sense of fairness, he would want to name those Conservatives who made these astronomical profits he alledged to be somewhat—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. That is hardly a point of order. Perhaps the hon. member could raise the matter during the course of his own remarks, or speak to the hon. member.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Lavoie (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, I hope that the opposition party will soon put an end to their foolish tricks to delay the proceedings in the House and will finally let us speak once and for all. I am therefore pleased to speak once again in the House, especially about Bill C-29 on housing. Since I have been sitting in the House, I have always been hoping for a housing policy governing corporations and non-profit housing co-operatives. So I am quite pleased to see that we are now considering amendments to the legislation which will allow us to fill some gaps and make improvements.

First, Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate and thank the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) for having agreed to introduce this bill in parliament and I hope it will be passed before the next election. And before going further I have a short message to give to the Progressive Conservative party. They will probably be disappointed but I must say to them that I will be a candidate in the next election. Well, Mr. Speaker, it is a fact that this legislation will fill some gaps.

There are experiences that have been lived through. I remember that before I was elected to Parliament, when I was with the Workmen's Compensation Board, I used to take mornings or afternoons off to go to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to try to do something because in the district where I come from, in Hochelaga-Maisonneuve, Ste. Marie, St. Jacques, La Salle or even in Verdun, there certainly is a housing problem, it is obvious. Being conscious of these problems, like any good citizen having lived in slums, having lived what the people are living today, I thought I must do something.

There is a National Housing Act, so I will ask that the law be enforced and I will request a starting fun whose maximum is $10,000, as hon. members knows, or 10 per cent of the cost, as the case may be, just as my friend Mr. Joyal did in his riding. We have established non-profit corporations.

● (2030)

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Lavoie: Mr. Speaker, this concerns housing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I want to remind the hon. member that he must not refer to one of his colleagues by name but by his riding.

Mr. Lavoie: I apologize, Mr. Speaker. I withdraw what I said, but there are other members who have done what I just did. I hope things are restored. So then we needed this type of grant for rehabilitation purposes. Obviously this amendment will correct the situation, I am sure, but there is still one thing and that is that CMHC officials do not want to co-operate. I want to relate to the House, as I did a few years ago in committee, something which actually happened. If we had been listened to, not only me but also certain CMHC officials, we might not have today in Hochelaga a vacant $50,000 lot, at 8 per cent interest a year, which CMHC has to recover and add to its assets and liabilities. Of course, we were thinking of senior citizens, families, we wanted to develop low rental housing, but at the time that was not possible, because things were going too slow. It took at least two years to build a unit.

Two out of six units were occupied during a period of a year and a half. Why? Because costs were too high and because of the slowness not only of CMHC, but also of the city of Montreal, because there are regulations, the National Building Code, the Municipal Building Code, all of which create confusion and slow things down. Building costs increase and in the end, what can we offer people? Not low rental housing, but high price housing.

Naturally, I do not blame the minister for that. Nor do I blame the National Housing Act: it is just there. But what happens too often is that those who administer the act are obsessed with setting up regulations that often run counter to our wishes as legislators, I feel we must some day find a way, when we pass a law, not to be exposed to being laughed at later on by the people or the civil servants who say: Sure, you are the legislators but come the next election and you may no longer be there while we will still be here. Those are the answers we get, Mr. Speaker. But it does not matter, these people need not worry because after the next election we will still be here on this side of the House. That I can guarantee.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lavoie: Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to address myself to a certain point and I will do so briefly, of course. We know that the National Housing Act allows any home owner to apply for a grant to repair his house. So what happens in my riding and obviously in others is that people go to Montreal, more particularly on St. Paul Street, to apply for grants and are told: "Sure you will get a grant, but it will take a year and a half before you are paid". Considering that everyone in my constituency is not a millionaire, people get discouraged and forget about the grant. Meanwhile the whole neighbourhood is deteriorating. I invite any of my colleagues from this House who are interested to come and spend one day in the riding of Hochelaga, in Maisonneuve or in Sainte-Marie to visit one street after another. We see more and more derelict houses. What happens then? We all know that a number of aged people live in slums although their pension is reasonable. But it turns out to be expensive for people living in slums. Indeed, medicare is higher because people get sick, heat is higher and so on and so forth. If those who were here before us in this House as well as in Quebec City and in Montreal had thought of the future we would certainly not have ended up with a situation where neighbourhoods like ours are disappearing. And I think that in the case of a ward like mine everything should be undertaken to protect it, not to protect it in a narrow sense but to revive it and keep the traditional image which it has always had and to give its inhabitants decent houses. I suggest that in this society which claims to be just and civilized, we should be able to demand from our governments decent housing and security for our people. I suggest also that if we fail to do so, we should not go and say to the faces of Canadians that we are civilized people, for I should be the first to deny it and say that on the contrary we are heartless people who do not care for our senior citizens.

Mr. Speaker, let us take the case of the low rent housing situation in Montreal. Last year the city of Montreal had a supply of 600 housing units to meet the demand of some 6,000 applicants. This supply represented only 10 per cent of the demand. I feel therefore that all interested parties should join hands to increase the number of units, and I am sure that some members in the opposition are afraid this bill will cost too much. Well, I have news for them. I shall not go into details, that would be too simple, Mr. Speaker; if they do not understand them, I hope the voters will take advantage of the forthcoming election to send them packing. It is not complicated. Mr. Speaker, when amounts of money are invested in non-profit corporations or co-ops, it is clear that after 25, 30, 40 or 50 years, they will say: "So what! In 30 years, the hon. member for Hochelaga will not be here any longer". It is true he will no longer be here. As a matter of fact, it is quite certain. But today, he is here. He is here to pave the way, like his hon. colleagues. That is what we are going to do, Mr. Speaker.

And you will see that all the figures which the opposition can produce are wrong, because we will invest in housing; after 30, 35 or 50 years non-profit corporations can make no profit whatsoever, and they will continue collecting rents which, after all, only represent contributions by the active member in the corporation. Then one-third of this amount can be paid to the city of Montreal and another third to the province of Quebec—and if they ever decide to separate and still want to co-operate, well, they will get a third of it—and the other third, of course, will go to the federal government. Then everybody will realize that housing, neighborhood improvement and other programs will pay for themselves. But first, of course, we have to invest. If we do not invest, the situation will clearly keep on deteriorating. That is for sure, Mr. Speaker, but I will have more to say about non-profit corporations.

• (2040)

The government has been very active in recent years. Let's take for example the old Montreal area with its harbour and grain elevators; the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) made a statement last year about it and work is already under way. No sooner said than done. Work has already started. Montrealers will be able to get close to the port, walk through the Vieux Montréal section, and see what is going on there. The federal government has invested plenty of money in that area. Members of the opposition may have forgotten that. I hope not but in any case, I am reminding them. Now, let us go back to last april. In my riding, there is what we call Place Frontenac, a complex consisting of three high rise 15-storey buildings. My office is now located in one of them. Of course, that was in 1971. At that time, I may not have been a member of the same party but today I am on the right side and all is going fine.

An hon. Member: You have learned.

Mr. Lavoie: You are right; I have learned. At that time, Mr. Speaker, I said that Place Frontenac was not an asset for the people of the Hochelaga-Maisonneuve neighbourhood. Over the years, there were many problems and it was nevertheless the Minister of Urban Affairs who had to bear the burden.

Last May, the minister announced a special policy for Place Frontenac so that senior citizens could at last get housing according to their income. I was pleased with the decision at that time. Now, that is a few weeks ago, Place Frontenac became the property of the tenants of those three 15-floor high rises, that is a non-profit corporation, which should certainly enable them to pay reasonable rents with the new policy of the government. Of course, Mr. Speaker, our constituents talk about low-rental housing. Of course, to them, low rental housing means extremely low rents. Building costs being what they are today, the situation has changed considerably. Anyway, I read in La Presse this week that the minister said the shelter allowance will cost between $450 million and $1 billion a year.

It is obvious that the provincial government was supposed to go along. In fact, last year, I met the minister's assistant in Montreal. Mind you, he did not want to see me. But when I told him: If you do not, the press will know about it, I do not know if he was scared but he said: Yes, I shall meet you. I discussed with him and at some point he simply said that it was the policy of his department to establish a shelter allowance. Fine. But he added: It is not the government's policy. So you immediately see the image projected by this government which does not want to co-operate and leaves old people in ghettos, which does not want to help us help them and also leaves families in ghettos. Again last night, Mr. Speaker, when I arrived at my constituency office I had lots of people and it lasted until 11.30 p.m. There again I had housing problems, people coming to me for help. They go and see their alderman who says: Go and see your member of parliament, he is going to fix all that. I understand perhaps, Mr. Speaker, that Brother André was performing miracles but I am Brother Jack who just rings the morning bells.

Mr. Speaker, we met a few times with the Montreal mayors conference which is now in session. We talked about urban transport because that falls under urban affairs. Well, obviously, if we want to improve the economic situation in eastern Montreal—I think, of course, that I asked the question and the answer was extremely logical and I understood it as an intelligent man—we will have to follow the situation closely to determine sooner or later, as I put it to the Minister of Transport some time ago, whether it would be possible to continue the Mirabel line as far as the Angus shops. There is a big vacant lot where 8,000 housing units could be built. There is a project by Marathon, a subsidiary of Canadian Pacific, under which those units could be offered to non-profit corporations and we could also have one of the biggest shopping centres in Canada, and that shopping centre would operate on a co-operative basis.

Right now, according to the latest news, I am told they decided to make an industrial park out of the Angus shops and put up houses along the east-west expressway. So they are against it. I do not know if the whole world has turned topsy-turvy, but it is a fact, Mr. Speaker, that such a project with respect to the Angus plant would be very beneficial to building in the city of Montreal which is almost at a standstill. Jobs could be created in the building trades, and after the project is completed some 4,000 permanent new jobs could also be created, of which 3,000 at least do not require any special skill.

I think it is important, Mr. Speaker, to keep this in mind. Of course, this does not depend only on the federal government. I put this question before to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet). He agrees on this project. However, there is still the provincial government as well as the municipal government which controls zoning. Let us wait and see. Anyway, since we will meet with the Montreal executive council next Monday, I shall certainly raise the matter. So, I am referring to this in the House in the hope that the message will be relayed to the Quebec authorities, and as for Montreal, I will make sure to broach the subject next Monday. I usually make no bones about raising such matters.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would like to return to a point I mentioned rather briefly earlier. The rehabilitation or building of homes requires electricity, of course. Therefore I hope nobody will ever tell me some day that there is a shortage of electricity because I will start asking questions, namely whether there is still water running in the rivers. On the other hand, if we are successful, Mr. Speaker, we will have found a way of conserving energy. There is much talk about oil or other shortages. Well, if houses are electrically heated, we may then keep on using oil for other purposes as we do now and we will no longer have to worry about oil.

Mr. Speaker, people live in old houses that are not necessarily shacks. Everyone knows how much it costs to heat a home. Many families heat their homes with oil or natural gas besides electricity. Of course, this is costly! Obviously, in a constituency like the one I represent, when we consider that nearly half of the population is idle—and I hasten to add through no fault of theirs, Mr. Speaker—people have problems. In my area, we have suffered the consequences of the actions of some people, members of parliament like myself and my colleagues, who were there before us, especially in the Quebec government. We have seen nearly all the buildings on Notre-Dame Street being demolished, many businesses go bankrupt on Sainte-Catherine Street and many companies disappear. The poor guy who has lost his job and only has grade seven or eight is too old to go back to work after he has collected his unemployment insurance benefits and has to go on welfare. Imagine his problems when he finds himself in another tenement.

Mr. Speaker, I believe it is very important to be positive. Therefore I hope that if the opposition has certain amendments to suggest, they will do so now. This would be the time to do it while we are sitting in this House. We must not be content to criticize. For my part, I could criticize a lot of things if I wished, just like the opposition wants to do. I could criticize the minister and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. This is why I am here. But what is important is to suggest solutions. For my part, I have some to suggest and I hope that I will have the time to submit them before my time is up.

It is quite obvious that socially and economically, the amendments to this act concerning an increase in the number of non-profit organizations will be very useful. I hope that the city of Montreal and CMHC will "thaw out" as winter is almost over and we hope that the weather will be warm enough to "thaw them out". Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few suggestions. It is rather strange, but it has always been like that in my riding. An end should come to that farce one of these days.

Mr. Speaker, when you look after your house, you tell yourself that you will make it more congenial, more comfortable. Of course, whatever happens is not to be blamed on the federal government but rather on the municipal government. They come by and raise their property taxes. I could even mention something that occurred recently in my riding where a co-operative was set up. Last summer, those who had repaired their houses, put up lovely flower boxes, had their rent increased. They are really discouraged and ready to give up.

I make this suggestion which I will repeat next Monday before the executive committee of the city of Montreal. I make it here before parliament as the federal government might participate in this project. I think that in such cases, the municipality should, when a taxpayer wants to effect improvements to his house, whether it is in Montreal or in any other municipality in this country, grant him a tax rebate to encourage him to keep his older house, and also to promote a good neighbourhood spirit.

Besides, municipalities should raise their tax rates for those who do not want to upgrade their houses for one reason: in Montreal East, the majority of shabby and dilapidated houses are owned by trusts, multimillionaires, who will have nothing to do with our working poor or senior citizens. In the meantime, their taxes are next to nothing. But the small home owner who wants to join a co-op, do something, help, get involved in the life of his community what do we do to him? We tax him. So, I feel this would first prevent speculation, and second, it would force those big corporations to do something, because we know they hate losing a buck. They would rather sell at a discount than lose money. So this could be suggested to local authorities, and the Canadian government could contribute.

To enlighten the opposition, work out the figures correctly. They are not that high. This means that if those people pay less property tax, I mean the people who improve their houses, and if the others pay more, it will even up. The Canadian government could contribute, and even the provincial government if they wanted to. So in the end this would not be that much more expensive. It is an investment, no more, no less, and whole urban areas would be saved.

Any way this sounds quite sensible to me, and I hope the suggestion will work its way through. The opposition may also bring other suggestions.

Mr. Speaker, there is another point I would like to make: We have non-profit corporations or co-operative housing corporations. For quite some time people going to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation have been given a huge pile of papers. There is a table there, the references to two months or two months and a half. A time frame is provided. You do that voluntarily, you realize that? This is voluntary. But you are given a schedule, and it takes six months before you can consider renovating a house. Think how many houses will be built at that rate! This is not in the act, it is in the regulations put out by CMHC officials. I set up another non-profit corporation in my constituency, Hochelaga. I went to the Central Housing and Mortgage Corporation and I said: We are asking for starter funds; not me personally, I only sponsor the project since, as a member of parliament I am obviously not entitled to subsidies. So I said to them: Gentlemen, we are given only $500 to start; we are given instructions, so much for this, for that and for that. I said: Gentlemen, you are way off the ball. This makes no sense whatsoever. All I ask is that you apply the National Housing Act. It is there as clear as can be.

This makes me laugh, Mr. Speaker, because all these experiences are worth relating. This makes me laugh because you submit plans which you have to be redone over and over again. And this is an expensive process. I remember the first non-profit corporation I created in Hochelaga. A building contractor kindly offered to lend a hand. He had to redo the plans a great many times. Imagine what that would have cost us, if he had charged each time, besides the shortfall of $50,000 at 8 per cent interest per annum. It was no piece of cake, Mr. Speaker. But there is another suggestion I would like to make. I have already suggested this to CHMC. We know that non-profit corporations hire building contractors or someone to oversee the whole project, award sub-contracts, etc.; these people pocket 20 per cent of the profits. I think that we could grant by means of the National Housing Act and its regulations a certain amount of money which would go to a person who would be called the project co-ordinator and who would manage the repairs and later find a responsible person who could hire subcontractors, and it could well cost 10 per cent instead of 20 per cent. Immediately, at that very moment, costs would be reduced, because it is important, Mr. Speaker, to be cautious. You must keep in mind that even though I say those things in relation to the administration of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act and its regulations I cannot entirely blame them, because they have to be careful and I will tell you why. I think that in this House I have a right to say certain things and it is my privilege to do it. I will not mention any names. I will simply say that some people belonging to the organization of the Progressive Conservative party, who were part of my own organization at that time, did try to entice me into a gimmick involving $10,000 in pay-offs in connection with non-profit housing, and that I never accepted such offers. But it would seem that somebody got these $10,000. I even asked the RCMP to investigate but nothing could be done in that case. So I certainly hope that public interest will still be protected, but there should also be more flexibility and it should be possible, Mr. Speaker, to get housing to move faster because it is much too slow now. It is a never ending process.

What is happening now is that people working on a voluntary basis are discouraged by these procedures and stop working. The law is there to provide for everything needed, but appropriate formulas have to be found in co-operation with the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to make housing procedures easier and faster. There is also an important point, probably one of the last, Mr. Speaker, about which I am very happy. It is obvious that the bill before the House is aimed at increasing the participation of the private sector, that is credit unions and banks, by allowing mortgages on non-profit housing.

Of course, through the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation the federal government will guarantee these loans up to 100 per cent. I intended to put a question to the minister, and I suppose that he expected it. I hope that with these guarantees the private sector will co-operate and will not have the nerve to turn down non-profit corporations. Certainly, it could say no to a corporation which is not serious, because the authorization of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation would still be needed. There are obviously many people working for the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. It is not necessarily because of that that the process takes so much time. It is because when you go there with a document, it has to go through the hands of about eight people. They must obviously have enough time to examine it. But it seems to me it is possible to speed things up.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I urge the parties of the opposition to support this bill. Naturally, the government is open to any amendment to the bill; that is why we are here, to find solutions to problems. But, above all else I hope we will think of the old, of those among us who are less fortunate, who are in need of housing.

If, at some point, we could considerably increase the number of non-profitable corporations, if every hon. member in this House could set up that type of committee, in his riding, specifically to increase the number of housing corporations or co-operatives, I feel we could help one another speed up the construction of houses. Indeed, when you live in a house where you are cold, where you have to pay twice as much as others for heating, especially this year when winter has been rather severe, life is not easy for people.

I trust that the first goal of hon. members in this House is, first and foremost, to put the interest of all Canadians ahead of party or personal interests. That is the wish I express for the benefit of all hon. members trusting they will do the same.

[English]

Mr. David Crombie (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to intervene in this debate on Bill C-29. I might say that when I read the bill I was not surprised at the contents. Everyone who has been on the receiving end of the government's policies over the past seven or eight years is well aware of the difficulty the government has had, first, in shaping its policies and, second, in implementing them.

Essentially, the bill does three things. First, it disentangles the mess which the government has created in housing at both provincial and municipal levels over the last seven years; second, it cuts out the government's financial commitment to housing and urban affairs and, third, it winds down the Ministry of Urban Affairs after its death was announced in 1978. That is really what the bill does on behalf of the government. It disentangles, it cuts losses, and it winds down the ministry. That is what most people thought would be the case.

I was surprised, though, to hear the minister speaking in defence of the bill. Despite what the legislation was saying, he seemed to approach the subject with no sense of humility about what has happened in the last seven years. I read his speech again to make sure that I had fully understood it. This was not a minister trying to explain why things had gone wrong. It was not a speech in which he sought to indicate there were other ways in which things could be done. Here was a minister trying to shine up the unshineable and to polish up the unpolishable. It was unbelievable.

In attempting to draw a rosy picture of unsullied success in the last seven years, in order to put some flesh on these bones, what did the minister do? He took credit for making sure we had hot and cold running water. That is to be found in black and white on page 3544 of Hansard. As recorded on the same page, the minister took credit for stabilizing the price of housing. It is true he only picks out one year—1977—and it is correct to say that prices went up only 3 per cent in that year. But would he dare tell us by how much the price had gone up since 1968 when this government took over, or since 1970 when this ministry was established?

Every Canadian knows that the price of housing has doubled in ten years, and more than doubled in some areas. It is appalling that the minister should try to polish up the handle of the big brass door by saying it went up 3 per cent in 1977.

I think it is important that what this legislation says is put into perspective. What does it say to the people of this country? First let us talk about the things it says to people who live in substandard housing. That is a concern of the minister. He said he was worried about that. In 1973 a good philosophy was introduced. A good program, the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program, was introduced. I recall being here in a committee of this House in 1973 and urging the policy on the then minister. It was a good concept and a good philosophy. Basically what it said was that increasingly in the older areas in the cities of this country—

Mr. Darling: And towns and villages.

Mr. Crombie: —and towns and villages as well, including Burks Falls, there was housing stock which needed to be rehabilitated. At the outset there were certain restrictions placed on RRAP. First, it was available only to people who earned less than $11,000. Second, it was available only in certain designated areas in those cities, towns and villages, primarily areas which were known later as neighbourhood improvement areas for non-profit and co-op housing projects, and therefore usually older areas.

Those two restrictions were very important. The first one, the $11,000 income cut-off level was cut out, I think, in 1975. I am not sure of the year, but it was a couple of years ago. However, the money was still confined to designated neighbourhood improvement areas. There was one small difficulty with that designation, and that is that there were some areas, some streets and some housing just outside those NIP areas which also should have received some of the money. So there needed to be written into the legislation some small amount of flexibility. What the minister did about that small need was unbelievable. On December 12 of 1978 he announced that from then on in, the rehabilitation program would not be confined to NIP areas. RRAP was going to be universal. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) will remember that. A universal program for RRAP was announced on December 12, 1978.

The minister was cautioned by CMHC officials. Hon. members may recall the letter written on January 3 by a very worried president of CMHC, Mr. Hession, to the minister. The first paragraph says, and I quote:

I am writing in regard to the availability of funds under the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program. Since the announcement of December 12, 1978 about the proposed removal of statutory area constraints on the program, we have been receiving calls from the media and members of the public at large on this subject, and it is important that we know how best to respond.

You bet! Poor old CMHC had to take all the calls from people across Canada saying they would like to have their RRAP money because the minister said it was universal. Poor old CMHC had to say it did not have the amount of money required. In fact on January 3 the president of CMHC pointed out to the minister, and I quote:

The 1979 capital budget is $56 million. We will need $37 million to maintain activity in the existing designated areas where work has already begun. A further $3 million will be needed to deal with areas already designated but where work has not started. This leaves $16 million of the 1979 budget for new initiatives. However, 68 areas have already submitted final applications for designation under the 1978 rules. After the new law comes into effect, they will not need order in council designation, but they will warrant some priority attention . . . Thus, only $9 million for some 2,250 units remains for work under the terms of the new program criteria once the bill is passed.

The president of CMHC also told the minister the following:

This is a fairly modest amount and we should avoid raising expectations which we cannot satisfy.

What does the president of CMHC propose once this bill is passed?

I would like simply to note that it would appear virtually impossible to establish a system which does not involve the selection of areas for priority action, even though accommodation can be made for scattered site applications too.

Well, son of a gun! We are right back to designated areas again. In fact, so concerned is Mr. Hession—not was, but is—that he was pleased to offer the minister a backgrounder so that the minister would at least get some grasp of what he was saying. He sent the minister a backgrounder, a ten-year plan to modernize and rehabilitate Canada's housing stock. He wanted the minister at least to look at it. I will not go through the four pages. I will just read the last part. It says, and I quote:

What it means in the briefest terms is that while a considerable number of people can take action in the near future, because their areas and homes are in bad shape, others will need to wait for a while. It also means that the rehabilitation effort will continue to be concentrated in specified action areas as in the past—

That could not be any plainer. There is a reason why CMHC has to do that. It does not have the money to have a universal program. That did not stop the minister, by the way. He said in December that it is a universal program. The president of CMHC wrote him a letter and said, in effect, "Please don't do that, sir; we don't have the money, and you are just going to raise expectations and disappoint people." Yesterday when the minister spoke in the House he did not use the word "universal". He went further, if one can go further than universal. He said that it is a program, and I quote, "available to all of Canada." He said that in the face of the letter he received from the president of CMHC.

The reason I dwell on that is because in so much of the housing and urban affairs policy of this government since 1970 it has not been policy which has dominated. It has been public relations which have dominated and motivated pronouncements, announcements, and ultimately retractions, because of the way this government has proceeded with respect to urban Canada. That has hurt people. Many people say that a certain program is good and that because the minister says they can get money they would like to fix up their houses. The fact is that there is no money. Public relations are not policy. People who are interested in rehabilitating their homes do not trust the policy of this government.

What does this legislation say to the neighbourhoods and communities of this country which want to improve themselves? I speak now of the so-called community services grants program. The community services grants program is really a merging of three previous programs. The first is the Neighbourhood Improvement Program which expired last March. It was a very good program since its inception in 1973. In fact, since 1975, $200 million has been involved. I give fair marks to the government on a very good program. That was the first program. The second program is the Municipal Incentives Grants Program which was to offer incentives with respect to the medium-density, low-cost housing in municipalities in this country. That expired last December. The third is the Municipal Infrastructure Program. Although the minister took credit for it, it began in 1961. If I recall history—and of course the Minister of Agriculture can correct me—I think we had a Conservative government at that time. Since 1961 $1.5 billion has been coming from that program in the last 17 years to the municipalities of this country.

● (2120)

The minister could have taken credit for these three things. Those are things that have really happened and that have helped people and helped neighbourhoods. In fact, there was some thought about taking the three programs and merging them into a community services grant program, block funding, and using those funds as well for rinks, community halls and community centres. In fact, block funding was recommended to the ministry in the standing committee in 1973. I know because I made the recommendation myself. So I am glad to see the principle of block funding finally there six years later. But again, what is the way to deal with the problem? Offer the policy, implement it, and try to be known by your good works alone? Not this government. Here is the press release of May, 1978, put out by the minister on this matter. The bill was only brought here in March of 1979, but in May of 1978 the press release from the minister stated the following:

Quietly, without a lot of fanfare, the hon. Andre Ouellet has moved with his provincial counterparts to decisively alter the relationships between the federal and provincial governments in the housing and community services fields.

By the way, that is not new, that came out in the press release last May. What happened since last May? Knock on the door of any municipality in this country right now, or telephone them, and they will tell you that in the last 18 months or almost two years there has been nothing but delay, anxiety, and confusion in the municipalities as to what the heck this government intends to do and when they will do it. They do not know what assistance is available under the community services program. They do not know what assistance has been withdrawn and they do not know anything about the implementation dates of any assistance that might still be there. If you do not believe that, call the municipalities in your own riding, because essentially what the government did do was to paralyse the ability of the municipalities to plan both in terms of land use and in terms of their capital budgets, because you cannot plan if you do not know how much money you will get for sewage, for medium density low cost housing, or for NIP. So every municipality in this country which has those programs available to them has been unable to implement them for what amounts to two fiscal years.

Interestingly enough, as most people know, capital budget time for municipalities come just about now. Most municipalities have already prepared their budgets, so it will not help them this year. What the government has given the municipalities is delay and confusion with regard to the community services program. In fact, when you read the fine print, you find that at least the old Neighbourhood Improvement Program gave 25 per cent in front end money, that is to say, you have 25 cents on the dollar early on so you can use the money to plan with it. That is cut out now. We are back to the old urban renewal idea of the municipality doing it, charging it, and then recovering the money. That is not great, but it is okay for a city like Montreal or Toronto, it may be all right for Winnipeg or Calgary, but it is not very good for medium-sized or small-sized municipalities. They cannot put the money in the budget. That is why NIP provided them with an opportunity to do their planning early. Read this bill and you will find that such a provision is not contained in it. That is why you will not need much money for the NIP portion of the municipality services program because people have not been able to plan for it.

What does this mean? The government brought this program to a standstill. The municipalities are not using it. Do you know what that means, particularly when you deal with NIP in any neighbourhood? You have to put together an organization of people and you have to keep them going and interested in their work. The only way they keep on being interested is when they have the bucks to do the job. Nobody likes to continue talking forever and have nothing done. If you get to a situation, as is the case in Toronto, in Montreal, and in all major cities as well as in medium-sized cities—there is a mayor or two across the way who knows from previous times the point I am making—where you want to keep up interest in neighbourhood improvement, you must make sure the money is flowing. I am telling you, it is not flowing now. Telephone any municipality in your own riding. The hon. member for York South (Mrs. Appolloni) can phone City Hall in Toronto and find that out right now. In fact she can phone Paul Ringer and find out.

Mrs. Appolloni: Call the province of Ontario.

Mr. Crombie: Third, what is this legislation saying to the people who pay more than they should out of the income they have for the housing they get? These people pay more than is reasonable, according to home economists, more than they should be paying for housing, given the size of their income. We are advised that there are 438,000 people in this country who pay more than 30 per cent of their income, and there are 800,000—it does not seem like much if you say it fast but it is a lot if you say it slowly—800,000 households paying more than 25 per cent. What do you say about that? What does the bill say about it, and what does the minister say about it? At page 3546 of Hansard of February 23 the minister is reported to have said the following:

But in their case, and I say it again, theirs is not so much a problem of housing as one of income.

How do you like that? I know the Minister of Agriculture would agree that if prices of food went up 300 per cent, he could use the same argument, that the problem is not one of food but one of income. If there were a 1,000 per cent increase in the cost of furniture, it would not be a furniture problem but an income problem.

The minister went on to say the following, and this is the best part:

For them, as hon. members know, I announced earlier this week, in a speech I made in Toronto, that there was another solution to their problem,

So he announced a solution. He is the minister responsible, he is not a backbencher like myself, he is not like the Minister of Agriculture, so as the minister responsible in this area, can he go and say, "Well, this seems like a reasonable idea to me. I will do a little wool gathering, I do not have to promise anything, I do not have to do anything about it. What I can do is try to stop people from worrying"? What was so galling about that was that he announced this solution as though he was struck on the road to Damascus, as though he had never heard about it before, as though he uncovered something new for people. In 1972 the department received a series of recommendations in a wonderful book called "Programs in Search of a Policy". It is a title at which the government should look. It is a book on low income housing in Canada written by Michael Dennis and Susan Fish. At page 354 of that report there is a section called "Shelter Allowances". That is what the minister was talking about the other day. I cannot read the entire section because it is approximately ten pages in length.

● (2130)

The first sentence indicates the difficulties of making a building subsidy program work. This leads the authors to recommend a shelter allowance program as the only workable alternative. Also it is indicated that there are many variations in the form such assistance could take. It could be a rent certificate, a rent rebate, a generalized allowance. It could be made payable in the case of tenancy or ownership. It could be payable to an individual or his landlord. It might be payable only to families with children, the elderly, the disabled, or it could be paid to all households. It might depend upon living in adequate housing. It might vary with income, size of family or size of community. These are some of the variations to which the co-authors referred. Then it goes on to offer comments on the experience in Germany, Holland, Sweden, Denmark, Italy and a few other countries.

Shelter allowances which the minister talked about in Toronto are not new. In fact shelter allowances were recommended to the government six years ago. For the minister to suggest that it is somehow an alternative which he thought up for the election, is something for which he will have to answer. By the way, if I had not read from that publication, I could have offered another one. The Canadian Council on Social Development came out with a report on the matter a couple of months ago. They made the same argument as Michael Dennis and Susan Fish six years ago. It has been around a long time, and I might add that it is a good policy. The idea of a home shelter allowance is a good one. It has certain advantages. Essentially it would assist people rather than buildings. That is the basic philosophical difference between it and home subsidy. It would assist people rather than buildings.

An hon. Member: What are the advantages?

Mr. Crombie: The advantages are many. It would cut out waiting lists. There would be no more waiting lists, no more interviews, no more walking around and waiting for someone else to decide where one can live. It would offer an increase in choice. One could live in a number of places. It diminishes the consequences. It broadens the choice. It diminishes socio-economic ghettos. Also it diminishes the stigma of assisted housing which unfortunately still exists. It is more cheaply done. There are studies to show that. If the costs are added up, all the ones which can be seen and all the ones which cannot be seen in terms of subsidizing buildings, it will be found that subsidizing people is cheaper. I might add that it reaches more people in need.

There are difficulties as well. It is with considerable regret that I indicate the government did not spend time studying all alternatives available respecting shelter allowances in the last six years. Approximately six years after the government received the recommendation, airily the minister said that it is a germ of a good idea. We could have been on to a program of home shelter allowances previously. There are a number which have been established partially in the country. I think the minister should have started some years ago by saying, "Let us begin with senior citizens".

There is a program in British Columbia which other hon. members have mentioned already, Safer. Not only is there a program in place, but the government had studies available to tell it how well the program was doing. It is a very good program. The minister could have studied that program. In fact the minister could have monitored that program over the last three years, and he could have brought in one by 1979. The program could have dealt with senior citizens as well as people below the poverty line. We have shown that subsidizing buildings for people below the poverty line is not the way to go. The way to go is with home shelter allowances. The speech of the minister in Toronto typified the manner in which municipal affairs, urban affairs and housing generally are treated by the government.

The government is interested in public relations. It has no policies. What does it say to tenants in the country? Nothing. The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) has mentioned that already. One can go through the bill. What does it say to tenants anywhere in the country? Absolutely nothing. There is no shelter allowance program. The minister had six years to bring in such a program. There is no shelter allowance program for tenants. There is no longer an assisted rental program. Most hon. members are not aware of the fact that there is no ARP any more. The vacancy rate in the city of Toronto is .9 per cent. In the rest of Ontario it is somewhere between 1.5 per cent and 2 per cent. Major cities are closer to the Toronto percentage of .9. I am not aware of the figures in other parts of the country. I can dwell only on Ontario figures. The only way to relieve the low vacancy rate, and therefore be able to contribute something toward reducing the price of rental housing, is to produce more. Thus, tenants would have cheaper rents. There is no allowance. There is no ARP. There is nothing for tenants in this bill.

What does it say to home owners? It says nothing to tenants, and what it says to home owners is worse than nothing. The single most important thing which happened to home owners as a consequence of this bill is that the Assisted Home Ownership Program has been knocked out and the Graduated Mortgage Payment Program put in. AHOP out, GMP in. I think some hon. members have dealt already with the Graduated Mortgage Payment program. I should like to put one or two thoughts forward. One economist said the following:

> Administered by the CMHC, GMP's are designed to give a house buyer one of the major advantages already provided by AHOP: during the first five years of a graduated payment mortgage, monthly payments are much lower than a conventional mortgage would allow. From then on, payments are stepped up gradually until after the tenth year, when they reach a plateau.

Of course this allows the person to get in earlier with a low downpayment.

The economist continued with the part the government does not want to mention. He said the following:

> But the unpleasant, less obvious fact is that over the life of the debt, the GMP will cost the borrower $9,324 more than the standard mortgage would—$105,024, compared with $95,700.

He borrows $35,000 and he will pay back $105,024. Bad farming, bad farming.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That comment is for you, Eugene.

Mr. Crombie: In fact it is so bad that Peter Carter, the past chairman of the mortgage committee on Canadian banking calls it "permadebt". That is pretty chilly. It is like stagflation. Permadebt applies to the individual; stagflation apparently applies to society. It is no more or less than an economic bondage, that is what it means. It is economic bondage. Hon. members should think of themselves being involved in it. It is all right to talk about other people, but how would hon. members like to be in it? There was a time up until approximately seven or eight years ago when people regarded buying a home, particularly first time buyers, as a way of getting ahead in the country. With permadebt, the government's mortgage answer, it is becoming a way to get behind. That is what has been done to housing. It is not how people see it in terms of getting ahead, it is how one puts oneself behind. Not only that, but the banks will have difficulty because it does not make any economic sense. The government comes along and says what it is going to do is pay off all the debts after 90 days. Nobody likes to be in debt. Even the banks do not like to be in debt.

● (2140)

What this bill means to home owners is that they will be in bondage. Secondly, it perverts the principles of good banking in order to cover this government's act. Thirdly, and perhaps I should mention this as I have not heard anyone else refer to it, the graduated payment mortgage plan also has built into it, depending on taxes and fuel, a five per cent to seven per cent inflation factor. How is that for wrestling inflation to the ground? The government is building inflation into its own mortgage plan. This is what it does for home owners.

What does it do for the construction industry? There is no AHOP program left so the industry can not use it. There is no assisted home ownership plan left at all, and there is no assisted rental program, so you cannot take advantage of that. This means, of course, there will be no multi-dwelling projects constructed.

There is the suggestion that somehow the market is already supplying enough. As someone has pointed out, we have the wrong kind of housing in the wrong places and we do not have the right kind of houses in the right places. What this essentially means to the construction industry, and let that industry here this loud and clear, is that there will be no construction and no jobs. The unemployment level in the construction industry, certainly in Ontario, is at a record high since the depression. What this bill says to the construction industry is that there will be no development, no construction, and no jobs.

When listening to members speak, particularly those of the other two parties, I heard them repeatedly say they are universally against the mortgage interest and property tax deductibility policy. I took that phrase from the minister, but these people have spoken in condemnation of that program. Indeed, one day the minister had a little fun with me when he referred to my statement that it required some further thought. Indeed, I did say it required some further thought. It requires some further thought, in my view, in relation to the shelter allowance. It seemed to me, and still does, that a shelter allowance, particularly for senior citizens and those living below the poverty line, is a policy worthy of any government.

When one member after another stood and talked about the mortgage interest and property tax deductibility program as a bad thing, I concluded they had not read it and did not care to read it. At least this program offers something to the home owners and to the people who want to own homes and want their children to own homes. Indeed, knock on the doors of senior citizens and I suggest they will tell you they would like to see their grandchildren own homes. If you ask them, I expect the answer you would get is yes. At least this policy offers something to home owners and those who would like to be home owners. It will not put them into economic bondage. What it does is offer the hope of home ownership in this country. The program does offer something to those who pay too much of their income for housing. This bill does absolutely nothing in this regard, and the government has said nothing about this, with the exception of that fly-by-night speech of the minister last week.

What our program suggests is that it will be cheaper to own a home, that it will reduce the amount of income the people have to pay to own homes, and that this will make home ownership more affordable. There is absolutely nothing in this bill in that regard. Not only does it offer nothing to home owners, it offers nothing to everyone who pays more of their income than they should for housing.

I would like my colleagues in the NDP to think of this. Our proposal will benefit the construction industry. After removing the anxiety in respect of the oversupply in the market in those areas where units have been built in the wrong places, our policy will stimulate construction, which in turn will create more jobs in that industry, and in other areas such as furniture manufacturing, appliance manufacturing, textiles, the needle trades and so on. These sectors need the jobs which will only follow stimulation in construction activity.

What does this bill do in respect of co-operatives and the non-profit organizations? I have been very impressed by the new love affair people are having in respect of service clubs, labour councils, cultural groups and religious institutions now engaged in non-profit housing. I have been involved for 12 or 13 years with non-profit housing and co-ops, indeed at a time when people did not talk about them in polite society. I do not think I have to offer my credentials, or point out the significance of non-profit corporations and co-ops in large cities and neighbourhoods.

The minister says this is the best part of the bill, and the non-profit organizations and co-ops want this legislation. They really do want it. Their tongues are hanging out for it because they have been held up in some cases for almost two years waiting for the minister to bring this into the house. That is why they want it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: I do not agree because it is rubbish anyway.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There does not seem to be unanimous consent.

Mr. Donald J. Johnston (Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my intervention in this debate will be quite limited. I have been concerned, as have other members of my party and of the government, about the insistence by hon. members in the opposition, and I do not refer to the NDP, on the value of the mortgage interest and real estate deductibility program in having a stimulative effect on the housing industry, and in achieving the great American dream, as the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mrs. Pigott) is often wont to call it, of owning your own home. I do not suggest that because I think their hearts are not in the right place, but because I believe that, on serious examination of the type we have conducted on this side of the House, they will see the program is not one that will achieve those objectives.

It is reasonable to presume that we in Canada would not even be considering such a plan or program were it not to exist in the United States and not to have been popularized, if you like, by our American neighbour to the south. Because of that I welcomed the opportunity to visit Washington several weeks ago in a bipartisan parliamentary group consisting of, from our side of the House, the hon. member for Stormont-Dundas (Mr. Lumley); from the other side of the House the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton, the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke), and the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Rae). We had the opportunity of examining in depth with a very wide cross-section of American officials who are responsible for the administration of this particular law and, of course, all other fiscal laws. For example there was the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the policy division of the Department of the Treasury, the Congressional Budget Committee, the Joint Committee on Taxation, as well as independent economists from the Brookings Institution, the American Enterprise Institute, and various other experts in the field.

This was done in the spirit of objective examination to determine whether or not the deductibility of mortgage interest and real estate taxes is a valuable device in achieving the objectives that have been put forward by the opposition for examination, namely, home ownership, stimulation of the economy, and perhaps some fiscal relief to create more tax neutrality in the income tax system.

I think that I can say, without fear of contradiction, that the opinion of all informed observers in the United States is to the effect that mortgage interest deductibility and real estate tax deductibility does not accomplish any of those objectives and that those objectives can be better achieved by other techniques. Going further than that , I believe it is important for us in Canada to understand why interest in the United States is deductible in computing income and why real estate taxes are deductible. I would like very briefly to provide this House with some of the background of the American experience.

Beginning with the Internal Revenue Code of 1913 it was recognized that interest in general, not just interest on mortgages, all interest, should be deductible, as well as local taxes. Hence it was built into the very structure of the American income tax system from the outset. That, to begin with, is to be contrasted dramatically with the situation in Canada where local taxes are not deductible. So, it is apparent to even the most unsophisticated observer that rendering real estate taxes deductible, for example, would automatically at the local level create a shift of local taxation into real estate taxes.

It seems to me that nothing could be more obvious, and it was pointed out to us by our American observers that such would inevitably be the case.

But over the years, because of these deductions, our U.S. neighbours have designed standard deductions across the board applicable to U.S. taxpayers. I believe that at the present time in 1978 or 1979—I may be speaking in 1978 figures, I am not certain—a single taxpayer in the United States is entitled to a basic $2,300 deduction, and a married couple is entitled to a $3,400 deduction. That deduction absorbs this wide variety of local taxes and interest which they would otherwise have to itemize and, hence, 75 per cent of U.S. taxpayers who file returns in the United States file them on the basis of unitemized returns taking that basic deduction. On the other hand, 25 per cent of the returns that are filed are filed on the so-called long itemized return.

We were advised by the internal revenue authorities that in such cases the returns are necessary because of these specific deductions, that the deductions for mortgage interest and real estate taxes push people into such high deductions that it is worth their while to claim these deductions on the long form. In fact were it not for these specific deductions the entire U.S. tax system could be considerably simplified. I might add that the cost to the U.S. treasury in 1978 for this specific deduction was estimated to be $12.8 billion.

Before dealing with some of the specific problems which are inherent in the scheme, I think it is very important to underline the fact that in the United States 63 per cent of housing is owner occupied and 37 per cent is rented. The figures, of course, vary from area to area. For example, in New York state the rental percentage is higher and the ownership percentage is lower. It struck all of us in the group, interestingly enough, that those figures corresponded indentically with the numbers that have been furnished to us by Statistics Canada 1976, namely, 63 per cent of the housing in this country is owner occupied and 37 per cent is rented. Again there are variations from region to region, and in my particular province the percentages are almost 50-50. As a matter of fact, I believe the figures are 49 and 51.

It is interesting to note that notwithstanding the existence of this so-called benefit of mortgage interest deductibility over all these years, owner occupied housing in this country has kept pace with that in the United States, and we were further advised, although I have not verified these numbers, but I intend to do so, that upon their analysis in the United States the lower income groups in Canada had a higher percentage of home ownership than in their country, and the reverse was true, of course, in higher income groups. All of this speaks well for the experience that Canadians have had in housing people in this country and in providing that great American dream which the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton refers to, namely, home ownership.

I for one subscribe to the value of home ownership and I think that most of us do. It is not something which can be defined. Again, in the course of discussions with economists and others who had conducted an analysis in this area, it was felt that there was no demonstrable evidence that home ownership per se had inherent value. Nevertheless, my own feeling is that home ownership is a good thing. I think that a stake in our country and our communities, an asset of that kind, is bound to create and encourage stability and responsibility.

[Mr. Johnston (Westmount).]

Let us assume that members on all sides of this House are in agreement that home ownership is a desirable objective. As I have said, I certainly endorse that principle, as do, I am sure, all members of my party. But how can it best be achieved? That is the question to which we must address ourselves. I have noticed that in most of the comments made by the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton in the press she has stated on many occasions, and I think sincerely and basically with the best of good will, that home ownership is desirable and that this plan is designed to achieve home ownership. Let us look at the plan for a moment and let us determine whether it really does accomplish its purpose.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Perhaps this is a good time to intervene, because I could only allow the hon. member a few seconds more. It being ten o'clock, we must proceed with the adjournment debate.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

AIR TRANSPORT—REQUEST FOR REGULAR JET SERVICE INTO WESTERN MANITOBA

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, on Friday 16 I pursued yet another time the question of jet air service into western Manitoba and eastern Saskatchewan. I directed my question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). He was kind enough to indicate that he realizes that improved air service is needed. This was on the basis of the warm reception he received when he was in Brandon for the opening of the Winter Games some two weeks ago. He said, finally, that he did not understand why the people of Brandon should want to leave such a fine centre quickly. Unfortunately, I was not able to ask a supplementary. Had I had that privilege I would have responded that it was not a case of leaving the city of Brandon or the area of western Manitoba, but rather, as the old adage says, all wise men come from the east, and the wiser they are the faster they come! It is because there is a great demand to get into this part of the country that we need the jet service for ingress and egress.

The problem simply is that we have in place at the moment—and I suppose it was put in place so that the government would be able to say there was air service available for the Winter Games—and, incidentally, as everyone knows, the community of Brandon, which is the smallest ever to have staged the games, did the best job that has ever been done in this respect—we have in place a commuter air service provided by Perimeter Aviation Ltd. This does not operate from the main air terminal in Winnipeg. Passengers are bussed to the back of the airport where they climb on board a small aircraft. It is almost necessary to get into the aircraft on hands and knees. On the occasions that I have tried it, senior citizens have not been able to get in, and it would be absolutely impossible for handicapped people to use the aircraft.

This service will only be successful, as was demonstrated when we had a commuter service before, if it is linked into the direct air service in the excellent, brand new terminal facilities at the western Manitoba airport directly south of the city of Brandon. We cannot make it economically viable if we are merely a satellite of the international air terminal that services the city of Winnipeg.

The irony of the situation is that all major airlines fly over this lovely new terminal facility. Pacific Western, Air Canada and CPA have regular flights daily over the airport. If we had a sky hook that would hook on at 30,000 feet, we could use the facilities.

I have examined the timetables of these airlines, Mr. Speaker. Air Canada flies out of Ottawa, Toronto, London and into Winnipeg, directly over the city of Brandon. I have taken the flight on many occasions to see how great is the passenger load. Passengers are not available for that flight in any greater numbers than would be provided by the 200,000 citizens who live in the western Manitoba area.

I flew Pacific Western out of Yellowknife recently. It picked up passengers at Yellowknife in a 737, to go to High River, Pine Point and on to Edmonton. Those communities are much smaller than the 200,000 population that is available for jet service in the western Manitoba and eastern Saskatchewan area.

I am interested in the CPA schedule. It at least recognizes that there is a city of Brandon because it links it with Winnipeg. Neither PWA nor Air Canada acknowledges that there is even such a community as Brandon. During the Winter Games it was necessary to bring in some 3,000 amateur athletes from all parts of Canada by charter aircraft. It was amazing to see the efficiency with which those airlines of all types flew into Brandon and were handled by the fully equipped airport. The manpower is there and the terminals facilities are there. All we need is the aircraft.

● (2205)

It was certainly demonstrated during the Winter Games that this airport is fully equipped to provide the best level of service that is available. It should also handle charter flights. The Sunflight business in the winter is a tremendously profitable activity. This service could easily be handled with our large parking area.

The international terminal at Winnipeg requires expansion. No longer can the parking facilities there meet the demand of the large number of passengers using that airport. The Government of Canada has invested in the terminal. It is there. All we ask is a service similar to that offered to the community of Dryden. I have looked at the new Nordair schedule of service. They fly in and out of Dryden at least twice a day, even though it is a much smaller community and has a much smaller population than the 200,000 in the western Manitoba area.

I discussed this matter with the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, now the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations (Mr. Reid), who represents a community in a position similar to the western Manitoba area. He is sympathetic.

Now that it has been demonstrated that there is a real need and that the facilities are available, I hope that at long last the government will discharge the promise it made during the 1974 election and that western Manitoba and eastern Saskatchewan, including Yorkton which has no air service, will be provided with service on the scale promised in 1974.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Dupont (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale), suggests that during the electoral campaign of 1974, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) promised a regular jet service to western Manitoba. I think he is referring to the speech the Prime Minister made in Winnipeg on May 23, 1974. I would like to quote part of that speech to show that the government has kept its electoral promises. The Prime Minister said:

> Now, I would like to talk about another sector of the air service, about the air policy, about industrial development and job creation. Indeed, I would like to announce that the government has approved in principle the establishment of an air service between Winnipeg, Brandon, Dauphin, Yorkton and Saskatoon in order to try out new policies for third level air services. Air services will be established between these centres of Western Canada.

The Prime Minister certainly did not suggest a jet service, but rather a local carrier or third level carrier type of service which never uses jet aircraft. Although nobody on the electoral campaign trail promised a jet service for Brandon, my hon. colleague knows full well that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) has done his utmost to try and get such a service for that community. In 1977 the minister announced that the government was prepared to grant financial assistance up to $1.1 million for the operation of a jet service between Brandon, Toronto and Regina. He asked interested carriers to file an application with the Canadian Transport Commission. Unfortunately, his offer did not meet with the expected response.

Despite the position taken by carriers on this matter in 1977, once again late last fall the minister tried to obtain a jet service for Brandon. As the minister himself explained, he has had repeated disucssions with airline representatives to encourage them to file an application for an east-west jet service. He also stated that he was ready to give all necessary assistance to ensure that such application would be granted. Yet no carrier took heed. At present, Brandon has an excellent air service, operated twice a day by Perimeter Airlines, which receives financial assistance from the government.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—SUGGESTION OVERSEAS ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL RECEIVE FREE MAILING PRIVILEGES

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, February 21, I put a question to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Danson) having to do with the free mailing privilege which some of our armed forces personnel engaged in United Nations peacekeeping operations receive. I was making inquiries into the possibility of this privilege being extended to all Canadian servicemen overseas.

The minister told the House he was not aware that any of our armed forces personnel were receiving those privileges. I did not have an opportunity to get back to him with a supplementary question assuring him that my information was correct, but the minister rose on a point of order on February 23 to clarify the matter, stating that though, as he had indicated, the Canadian government and the Department of National Defence do not accord free mail privileges to service personnel, the United Nations Emergency Force in the Middle East does benefit from free mailing privileges provided by the United Nations.

Recently, I was in the Middle East along with five other members of this chamber. We had the privilege of touring the various posts at which Canadian forces are stationed and we found this question of mail facilities was a bone of contention among those to whom free mailing privileges had not been extended. I raised this matter so that the Postmaster General (Mr. Lamontagne) could give consideration to extending free mailing privileges to all members of our armed forces who do such a commendable job as a peacekeeping force. When these men are absent abroad for tours of six months, communication with their homes is essential if they are to keep in touch with their families. In view of the fact that the dollar has fallen considerably in value, and since responsibility for this decline must fall squarely on the shoulders of members opposite, it seems fair something should be done to minimize its effect upon them. Our armed forces are doing a superb job in the Middle East and I would ask ministers seriously to consider offering free mailing privileges to our armed forces personnel posted overseas.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Dupont (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I must point out that the men and women of the Canadian armed forces now offer their expertise and leadership abroad. In this unique field of international responsibility, and this is a well known fact, Canada continues to receive praise and encouragement, and I have come to understand why through my work as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Danson). This is reflected in the pride of each member of the Canadian armed forces.

Those among us who have had the opportunity to see them in action can understand the pride felt by Canadians when they travel in Europe and can note for themselves the excellent reputation that Canada has gained through the peacetime efforts of our armed forces. This is something we cannot and would not want to forget. Mr. Speaker, I would also like to make a comment concerning the thousands of men and women in the Canadian armed forces, many of them with their families, who serve Canada abroad. Many of these Canadians are members of our NATO forces and they are treated in the same way as any other Canadian citizen abroad.

We are aware of the fact that inflation affects Canadians serving in Europe and that our service people are no exception to this rule. I must however note with great satisfaction that our military personnel is very well paid, at a level equivalent to the employees of the public service of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I want to reassure the hon. member that the interest he has shown as well as other very important things—that we consider continuing in our efforts to ensure that our servicemen in this country will keep on getting the benefits they deserve in addition to what they earn. My colleague mentioned in this House on February 23 last, when he raised a question of privilege that UN Forces in the Middle East get free mailing privileges for their members for up to five letters a week not exceeding one ounce per letter, under a special arrangement. Such letters are mailed free under arrangements entered upon by the UN Emergency Forces and postage is paid by them.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say to my colleague that according to the minister each force had its own procedural rules. However, he will follow up on this thing and find out whether other UN forces could be allowed the same privileges. I can assure the hon. member that this is going through the appropriate channels to see what might be done to arrange that. As the hon. member probably knows, our Canadian servicemen have served with distinction and pride as UN members engaged in peace-keeping operations ever since our former Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson, showed leadership in creating the United Nations Peace Force. For this excellent work which everyone can look upon with pride, the Nobel peace prize—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to have to interrupt the hon. member. The time allotted to him has now expired.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—GOVERNMENT'S INSTRUCTIONS TO CANADIAN DELEGATION AT BELGRADE CONFERENCE

Mr. Yuri Shymko (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) to answer a very simple question. I wanted the minister to tell parliament and the people of Canada if it was true that our Canadian delegation in Belgrade, reviewing the Helsinki Accords, was instructed not to protest the violations of the accords by specifically naming the violating states and the victims of their violations. The minister could easily have answered yes or no. He could easily have explained. The minister has acquired a reputation for his agility and ability as an excellent speaker in the House. He is quite capable of manoeuvring his way out of the toughest questions. Yet there was no answer. There was only silence, the silence of excuses, of insecurity and doubt, the same silence that dominated the negotiations at Belgrade. It was the silence of hesitancy and fear to stand up boldly and speak out. It was the eternal silence of cocktail diplomacy, fearing to stand firm on one's principles and convictions with the courage to speak the truth from the heart and from the soul because it may insult the violator. Violators are not insulted, and we must confront them with truth, for it is they who insult the humanity and the honesty of men of good will who trusted and believed that agreements would be respected.

So, equally, our silence is an insult to Canada, whose people do not want to be partners in lies and deceit. Canada has contributed in a major way to the struggle for human rights. It was this country which provided leadership in formulating and including the humanitarian clauses of the Helsinki Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe in 1975.

Our country, and its government, more than any other of the western democratic states which signed the accords, have moral responsibility for the fate of those human beings who genuinely and honestly believed, as we did, that what was signed in Helsinki was to be implemented and respected. Yet for those human beings incarcerated today in Poland, Czechoslovakia, the U.S.S.R. and other countries, Helsinki became a trap in which they were caught because they had faith and confidence that the world would lend them some legal protection when they, as members of public organizations, sought to do what the accords themselves demanded of them and promised they could do.

What irony, Mr. Speaker, that in the course of the deliberations of this parliament of free men, a parliamentarian such as I can only find seven minutes to decry the plight of human beings serving a total of approximately 150 years of incarceration, human beings who have risked their lives to entrench fundamental human rights and civil liberties for their peoples, the principles of brotherhood, of justice and of peace, in their countries, and who are now serving prison terms of up to 15 years! I refer to all the arrested members of the Helsinki Public Monitoring Groups in Russia, Ukraine, Lithuania, Armenia, Georgia, Poland, Czechoslovakia and other countries: To name only a few, they are: Victoras Petkus, Gajauskas Palys, Mykola Rudenko, Oleksa Tykhyj, Myroslav Marynovych, Mykola Matusevych, Levko Lukianenko, Petro Vins, Yuri Orlov, Anatoly Shcharansky, Alexander Ginsburg, Zviad Gomsakhurdia, Merad Kostava, among many others.

Among the proposals jointly submitted by our Canadian delegation and 14 other states in Belgrade, the participating states recognized the right of individuals and organizations to point out to their governments instances of non-implementation of the accords. If this was indeed our proposal, then it is our duty to ensure that, prior to the Madrid conference, such individuals as I have mentioned are granted legal protection to monitor the implementation of the Helsinki accords, in freedom, without persecution, and that those who have been arrested be released. If that is not done, the final act itself will be a mere circus, and all credibility in detente will be destroyed, not only among the participatory states but, above all, among the citizens of every country, among them the citizens of Canada.

Canada's position prior to and at the Madrid conference must change drastically so as to expose, protest, and condemn openly and without shame and hesitation, to stand firmly on our principles in our protest against those regimes for whom diplomacy, unfortunately, is but a game of lies and deceit in pursuit of their political and international interests.

I should like to point out that very often this demands a sacrifice on the part of Canadian citizens, the sacrifice perhaps of our economic expediency. When I see that the Canadian Export Development Corporation has extended to the Soviet Union over $500 million in credit, or that $9.3 million worth of Canadian oil equipment is being sold to the Soviet Union, I conclude that there might be some economic expediency in our silence. I must remind the House that President Carter placed an embargo on the sale of computers. He demanded that the sale of oil equipment should be granted a presidential veto when Shcharansky was arrested. He took a drastic and open stand with regard to the arrests of these individuals who were incarcerated and caged because they believe in Helsinki. We have a moral responsibility toward them. It will demand a sacrifice, and there is no question that serious decisions will have to be made, but if political and economic expediency becomes the base and foundation in our diplomatic relations with human beings and countries, we will be moving in the direction of the Orwellian world of 1984 where human beings became mere robots, mere machines dependent on the fickle will of the state. Such is the trend in many regimes.

I appeal to this parliament of free men to emphasize before the government and before our citizens that a drastic change must be made. There is no question that the Madrid conference will be held at the same time as the Moscow Olympics. The Soviet government is faced with the decision either to arrest these people en masse or to free them en masse. Our stand can save them, and can release the incarcerated.

[Translation]

Mr. Louis Duclos (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to throw some light on the instructions given to the Canadian delegation which will represent Canada at an international conference on the Helsinki Accords to be held in Madrid. I would, by the same token, reply to a question raised in the House yesterday by the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Shymko).

The Canadian delegation to the Belgrade conference had received instructions reflecting the particular importance the Canadian government and the Canadian people attach to the provisions of the Final Act of the Helsinki Accords concerning human rights and other humane matters. We did not give specific instructions urging our delegation to avoid mentioning the names of victims and violators in cases such as those involving members of the Helsinki Accords monitoring groups in the Soviet Union. We did ask the delegation, however, to frame its interventions in objective and impartial terms and to endeavour to maintain a climate in which a dialogue would remain possible without controversy or confrontation.

Past experience has taught us that discreet representations usually give better results than forceful statements. Of course, we are tempted to make party politics with those matters, Mr. Speaker, but any person who is aware of his responsibilities and who has a minimum of experience in international matters and diplomacy knows full well that vociferous statements are not very fruitful as a rule. Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that the hon. member will agree that both the victims and those who made such violations could not ignore the position of Canada on those matters.

Besides, if the hon. member read the statements of the Canadian delegation, and in particular that of October 31, 1977, as reproduced in the brochure Canada At Belgrade which was published after the conference, he will realize—I am pleased to see that he has already read it—that Canada has never concealed its positions. With regard to individual cases implicating the Soviet Union, special instructions were given to our delegation: it was asked to underline to the Soviet delegation the concern of both our government and the Canadian people, and to present our proposals for solving those unfortunate cases.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until 11 a.m. tomorrow.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.28 p.m.

CHILD TAX CREDIT—REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF TELEVISION COMMERCIAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity.

In light of the continued support by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) for a child tax credit commercial on television which in my view is totally election-oriented and an affront to the intelligence of Canadian mothers—and all Canadians, for that matter—I move, seconded by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger):

That the minister immediately discontinue this obscene abuse of taxpayers' money for partisan purposes.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion could be introduced at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FISHERIES

REQUEST THAT PERMANENT OBSERVERS BE REMOVED FROM CANADIAN SHIPS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

In view of the fact that observers placed on board Canadian ships fishing in zones 4VN and 3PN have authority which supersedes that of the captain, thereby causing fish which are unfit for processing to be landed, and that said observers are not provided with a food allowance by the government, thereby placing an additional financial burden on the crew who must pay the food account, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan):

That licences to fish in these areas be given to the captain of the ship and that permanent observers be removed from Canadian ships, since the tonnage caught and the species can be inspected by shore-based fisheries officials when the ship docks.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for discussion at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

INTRODUCTION OF AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE EQUITY FOR PERSONS AGED 60 TO 65—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, and seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), I move:

That this House urges the government to introduce, without delay, an amendment to the Old Age Security Act to end the discrimination therein against persons between the ages of 60 and 65 who are of single status by providing for the equivalent of the spouse's allowance to be available to all persons between the ages of 60 and 65, regardless of marital status, provided they are out of the labour market.

Mr. Speaker: This motion can be presented for debate at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

PLAN TO INTEGRATE FEDERAL EMPLOYEES INTO QUEBEC CIVIL SERVICE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Given the fact that it is reported that the Quebec minister of public works is working on a plan to integrate 53,000 federal public servants into the civil service of Quebec, and is at the same time preparing an inventory of federal buildings to prepare for negotiations for transfer of this property to a sovereign state, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander):

S.O. 43

● (1110)

That the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Public Works explain on motions whether these matters under their respective jurisdictions fall within four-fifths which can be implemented into the federal system or the one-fifth which can be negotiated, which formula was adopted by the Minister of Justice on behalf of the government.

Mr. Speaker: The introduction of such a motion for debate would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

LABOUR DISPUTES

REQUEST FOR SETTLEMENT FORMULA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with an urgent question of pressing necessity.

Considering that it is important to settle conflicts between the government and its employees, that it seems unacceptable to resort to walkouts to speed up negotiations and that most people will no longer tolerate those continuous labour unrests which disturb everybody and from which no advantage is gained, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise):

That the House direct the government to introduce as soon as possible a general formula for the settlement of conflicts between employers and employees which would eliminate walkouts or strikes.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, such motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

PRIME MINISTER'S FORTHCOMING VISIT TO WASHINGTON—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski), under the provisions of Standing Order 43:

That this House, in view of the Prime Minister's impending trip to Washington to visit President Carter, register its support for the reported initiative to be taken by the Prime Minister in going to the United States to make a deal on a one-for-one basis to trade Jim Coutts for Billy Carter.

STATUS OF HAMILTON, ONT., AS HOST CITY FOR PAN AMERICAN GAMES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity involving the Pan American Games of 1981.

In view of reports that Venezuela could withdraw as host country as early as March 12, 1979, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling):

That this House requests the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) to make a statement at the earliest opportunity on the Pan American Games situation and include in that statement the status of the city of Hamilton as runner-up applicant to Caracas as the site of the Games.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for discussion only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

GATT NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES—EFFECT ON NEW BRUNSWICK—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): As it is generally accepted that the huge natural market for New Brunswick and the New England states is impeded by tariffs and trade barriers, and that a softening of these regulations would greatly assist New Brunswick's efforts to attract new industry and manufacturing facilities, I move, seconded by the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie):

That this House instruct the government to get on with the negotiations with the United States on the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade so as to alleviate this obvious deterrent to New Brunswick's development.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be introduced for discussion at this time only with unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

AIR TRANSPORT

PUBLIC HEARINGS BEFORE CTC ON APPLICATIONS FOR RATE INCREASES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. I wish to move, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the Canadian Transport Commission be required to hold public hearings whenever airlines seek to raise their rates, and to hear presentations from public interest groups which wish to oppose the increase in rates, without these organizations having first to establish a prima facie case against an increase before they can obtain a hearing into the increase; and, further, that the CTC require the airlines to disclose the financial data on which their application for fare increases is based, as is now required by the CRTC from Bell Canada when it asks for increases in telephone rates.

NORTHERN PIPELINES

PRIME MINISTER'S MEETING WITH PRESIDENT CARTER—DISCUSSION OF ALASKA HIGHWAY PIPELINE

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. There is real apprehension in this country that, after great expectations for Canada's economy as a whole, the Alaskan pipeline project is a dead duck and that we have all been led up the garden path, perhaps by the Americans or perhaps by our own government which should have known better.

● (1115)

The Prime Minister is going to Washington to have discussions with President Carter. On the assumption that this is not merely a public relations exercise, may I ask the Prime Minister if the pipeline project is on the agenda and, if so, what presentation will the Prime Minister make to the President about it?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I expect to discuss the whole question of energy with the President of the United States. Naturally, I will express the concern of the Canadian government, having acted diligently, as it has with the support of parliament, in getting the pipeline legislation through, that now the United States does not seem to be very certain of its course.

That is the line I will take with the President, and I will attempt to ascertain from him and Mr. Schlesinger, whom I also hope to meet, what intentions and what strong volitions they have of proceeding with the pipeline project.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRADE

PRIME MINISTER'S MEETING WITH PRESIDENT CARTER—DISCUSSION OF COUNTERVAILING DUTIES

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question also relates to the discussions of the Prime Minister with the President.

The United States countervailing duties are negating any Canadian effort to build up our own businesses and industries in Canada's depressed areas. Is this on the agenda for discussion as well? If so, what will be the thrust of the arguments of the Prime Minister?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this matter is being discussed at the GATT negotiations. It is part of the multilateral trade negotiations. The Canadian government and other governments in the world have expressed their concerns generally about the United States' policies. I do not know if we will have time, or if it will be opportune, to discuss this subject with President Carter.

PRIME MINISTER'S MEETING WITH PRESIDENT CARTER—DISCUSSION OF GATT NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister: it deals with his visit to the President of the United States.

As we know, a broad agreement was reached approximately one week ago between Jake Warren and the American negotiator respecting certain bilateral aspects of the GATT negotiations. Does the Prime Minister intend to raise the substance of that agreement with President Carter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there has been no expression on the part of the Americans or myself that we would pursue the GATT negotiations bilaterally. It is being dealt with on our side by government ministers, notably the Deputy Prime Minister. We have Mr. Jake Warren who has been meeting regularly with the Americans and his counterparts in other countries. Mr. Strauss will not be part of my meeting with President Carter.

TOURISM

PRIME MINISTER'S MEETING WITH PRESIDENT CARTER—DISCUSSION OF CONVENTION EXPENSES AND AIRLINES

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, again my question is directed to the Prime Minister. As there has been a great setback to our tourist industry since the Americans chose to make certain convention expenses non-deductible, would the Prime Minister indicate if he intends to raise this problem with the President? If so, what will his position be?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have reported already to the House that I raised this matter with the President at my last meeting, and what his response was. I must inform the House that my meeting with President Carter will be a couple of hours' duration at most and, personally, I intend to spend most of it talking about energy and international affairs related to energy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, it was reported in Washington today that one of the questions which might come up, in addition to the energy question, is the fact that the American de-regulation of its airlines' industry has had certain consequences for our airlines. Would the Prime Minister indicate if he intends to raise that question with the President?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker.

BUSINESS TAKEOVERS

PROPOSED ACQUISITION OF HUDSON'S BAY BY THOMSON INTERESTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister also. It arises from the announcement today indicating that the Thomson interests are seeking to secure control of the Hudson's Bay Company, which only recently acquired control of Simpsons and Zeller's.

● (1120)

In view of the fact that last January the assistant deputy minister of consumer and corporate affairs, who is also in charge of the combines investigation and research branch of that department, said that the takeover by the Hudson's Bay Company of Simpsons was against the public interest because it would mean department stores sales would be 35 per cent under the control of this company—and if we include Simpsons-Sears, it would be 60 per cent—will the Prime Minister indicate when we can expect the competition legislation which the government has repeatedly told us it intends to introduce?

I refer particularly to last Tuesday, when the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs said that instead of a fair prices commission, the federal government's preference was proper competition legislation. Can we expect that legislation during this session and, if not, what action does the government propose to take in light of this announcement by the Thomson interests?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, there is in fact combines legislation existing now and there is, as he mentioned, a director of investigations and research under that act, a combines commissioner.

I again talked with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs this morning, and because of the very magnitude of that proposed takeover, the facts are being looked at by the director of investigations.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, last January, in a speech which the director of investigations made to the Canadian Club in Montreal, he said that the present combines legislation was not adequate to cope with the takeover of Simpsons by Hudson's Bay.

In view of this very much larger takeover, I would ask the Prime Minister whether he would be prepared to follow the example of Premier Bennett of British Columbia, who persuaded the Canadian Pacific Railways to put off its acquisition of MacMillan Bloedel until such time as effective legislation could be put in place by parliament.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure I follow the hon. member in his suggestion that Premier Bennett was justified in suggesting that one Canadian company would not be able to take over another Canadian company. This is not our view of the Canadian economic union, where some people are disqualified in Canada because they are from another province. I am surprised that the hon. member is supporting the attitude of the provincial premier.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: However, I leave him with his own views of Canada.

In so far as the legislation is concerned, we know it can be improved and, indeed, that is why the government now has a bill to deal with and improve the anti-combines legislation which presently exists. I do not know in what particular context this statement was made by, I believe, the director of investigations, but if he was saying that the present legislation could be improved, indeed this is the position of the government and that is why we proposed to go ahead with the new bill.

As to whether it would be passed by this parliament, I think the hon. member is asking only a rhetorical question, because he knows that would depend on the willingness of the opposition to co-operate in respect of various bills before the House. Some have high priority and are before the House now. If they can be passed, and if parliament will sit a few more months, then indeed we will pass that bill.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the acquisition by the Thomson interests of the Hudson's Bay Company, which takes in Simpsons and Zeller's, plus the control of a large area of the Canadian economy covering mining, oil, gas, real estate, newspapers, radio and 35 per cent to 60 per cent of the control of retail sales by departmental stores, does the Prime Minister not consider that this constitutes a national oligarchy through which a handful of individuals will be able to control the economic life of millions of Canadians?

Does he not think that is serious enough to warrant the government bringing down that legislation now and asking parliament to give it quick passage?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I obviously cannot understand sophistry, even though it is covered in some words of feigned indignation. There is legislation now which can be used.

● (1125)

The director of investigations is investigating the facts. The facts give us as much concern as they give the hon. member. The difference is that the government has its officials acting, rather than making speeches as the hon. member has done.

PUBLIC SERVICE

LAY-OFFS—INQUIRY AS TO CRITERIA

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Last October, for reasons which have not been made clear, he decided to lay off 381 civil servants including 279 who were French language teachers employed by the Public Service Commission. Can the minister tell the House what criteria his department used to select the teachers who are now considered as surplus at the general language training branch?

[English]

Hon. Judd Buchanan (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to provide the precise information for the hon. member, but fundamentally the situation is, as the hon. member is aware, that over the past decade during this transitional phase we have made significant headway as far as establishing French as a second working language in the public service of Canada is concerned and that henceforth there will be a diminution in the amount we will be earmarking for this program.

This is because there has been a transfer of the responsibility for this policy out of the Treasury Board into the departments. The object is to orient the policy more toward departmental needs and their specific technical requirements, rather than having the broad policy throughout the government of general second language training.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Following the lay-off, the department organized a career program to assign these teachers other duties within the public service or to find them jobs in the private sector. Could the President of the Treasury Board indicate now why that program has been frozen until April 1 when it will no longer apply to the language teachers of the public service?

[English]

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, that is not my understanding, but I will verify it with the Public Service Commission which is actually carrying out this program.

FISHERIES

PRIME MINISTER'S MEETING WITH PRESIDENT CARTER—DISCUSSION OF FISHING BOUNDARIES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister. On February 14, the Secretary of State for External Affairs announced outside this House that agreement had been reached on Atlantic coast fisheries and boundary disputes, and that two treaties—one on the third party settlement of the boundary and the other on fisheries arrangements—will be completed and ready for signature by the beginning of March.
