CHATHAM, N. B. --- JANUARY 23, 1890. GENERAL NOTES AND NEWS.

The Ladies and Streets. Official notice has been given at Ottawa that the notes issued will expire on February 15th.

Prevalent Sicknesses. THE most prevalent sicknesses at this season are rheumatism, neuralgia, sore throat, inflammation and congestion.

Worn out and run Down. A stump of a lead pencil lay on the table. She went into the other room.

It was a problem too deep for her to solve; she was not even aware of an enemy.

Her thoughts instinctively turned to Holbrook. He would assist her if he knew of her distress, and he would know because of her failure to meet him as arranged.

She thought a moment. "What, right down dere, missy?" "No, no, but in what street?" "Oh, in Mott street, tree doors from Bayard's."

She folded it up. But how to get it to the boy? He put his arm through the broken pane and she tried to throw it to him.

Several ineffectual attempts showed her the futility of this effort. She thought a moment.

"Wait," she cried. She ran into the other room and dragged the table after her and put it directly under the table.

She was still too far away, stretching as she did on her tiptoes. She clambered down and brought in a chair, which she placed on the table.

Climbing up on it at the risk of a tumble, she found her face on a level with the downstreathed hand of the gamin.

She put the paper in his hand, and he gave him directions how to go. The touch of the softest hand he had ever felt moved the little vagabond.

Then she kissed the dirty paw of the youngster as he promised to be fleet of foot.

In a moment more she heard the patter of his bare feet on the slate roof. She climbed down and restored the table and chair to the places where she found them.

But she was too much disturbed to think or to sit. She began pacing up and down the floor.

She had taken but a few turns when she heard a bolt drawn back and a key inserted in a lock.

The door opened. It was the one opening into the other room.

A step or two on the floor. A man stood before her. He was dressed in shabby black clothes. A battered black derby hat was on his head, under which showed the straggling and matted locks of his brown hair. His

THE DIAMOND BUTTON

FROM THE DIARY OF A LAWYER AND THE NOTE BOOK OF A REPORTER. BY DAROLAY NORBE. [Continued]

This thought touched a tender chord, and she wept violently. The storm of tears nearly like a storm on a sultry day, it cleared the atmosphere.

When she recovered herself she began to think. She made a close examination of the room; it was similar in size and appearance to the one she had first found herself in.

A mattress lay in the corner with a pillow and a horse blanket tumbled on it, as if some one had slept there. Two chairs stood near the dormer window. On one was a newspaper. She picked it up.

It was of the date of the 14th of September. That was the day she was last at home. It must still be that day. The newspaper was new and fresh; it had not been opened.

A round table stood in the center of the room, a plain, wooden top table, not particularly clean. A plate, a cup, both dirty and some crumbs, showed that not long before some one had eaten there.

A stump of a lead pencil lay on the table. She went into the other room. It was bare of everything save a chair and the bed on which she had lain.

Apparently there was no hope of escape. She listened. She could hear no sounds in the house. Only the noises from the street—the cries of hawkers, the shouts of children at play, the roll of vehicles—all these came to her deduced by the distance.

What was the meaning of her seizure and confinement, she asked herself. Who was the enemy of her family who first killed her brother and then abducted her? Why were these calamities so suddenly precipitated upon them, who had always lived so quiet and uneventful lives?

It was a problem too deep for her to solve; she was not even aware of an enemy. Her thoughts instinctively turned to Holbrook. He would assist her if he knew of her distress, and he would know because of her failure to meet him as arranged.

Ah, a thought! She had been trapped by forged notes from him. She grew more frightened by the thought. "He'd better get out," he said, as he turned away, "for yer's a long ride before yer to-night."

With that he strode hastily out of the room, locking the door and barring the door after him. Her heart failed as she heard the bolts shoot.

She saw bolts and bars on the inside. With a quick impulse she put up the bars and shot the bolts. She flew to the other door and bolted and barred that door as well from unwelcome intrusion.

Then she sat down to wait for Holbrook. CHAPTER XXXI. THE SENSATIONS ACCUMULATE.

OM knew that the cry of joy which Holbrook had uttered meant that the news of Annie had been received. Just what he didn't know, but that the messenger who had brought the information would be valuable to them he quickly appreciated.

He hastened after the lad, and as he reached the head of the stairs he heard the pattering of bare feet several flights below, going at a rapid rate of speed.

He called to him, but the owner of the pattering feet took no heed of his call, and, perceiving the uselessness of attempting to follow him, he desisted and returned to Holbrook's office.

As he passed the door of the elevator shaft, it opened to discharge a cartload of passengers, and among them Tom recognized the man who had watched them in Lexington avenue.

He made no sign of his discovery. In the same cartload was the Shadow, and to him Tom gave a sign to follow.

As he entered the office again he met Holbrook going out. "Where are you going?" he asked.

"Going? To help Annie. To rescue her, of course. Where else would I be going?"

This reply was made in a tone of the supreme contempt. "Wait a moment. I want to have a moment's conversation with you."

"Don't stop me, Tom. You've been particularly irritating today, and I am hardly in a condition to be responsible for my acts."

"That's the truth," replied Tom, calmly, "or else you have a desire to make the rescue of that girl impossible."

"What do you mean?" cried Holbrook beside himself. "Have a care. I am in no mood to be trifled with."

"Perhaps," said Tom, looking him steadily in the eyes. "But you are in a mood to make an eternal ass of yourself. By heaven, Holbrook, if you leave that door in the frame of mind you are in this minute, I predict you will regret it to the very last hour of your life."

Holbrook looked at him angrily, but nevertheless, he was somewhat staggered by Tom's sudden exhibition of energy.

Seeing that he had made an impression, Tom continued: "You want to rescue the girl, but you are going about it in a way to make it an impossibility—your own have taken leave of your usual good common sense. Now give me five minutes and I'll convince you."

He laid his hand upon Holbrook's arm. The lawyer sullenly submitted to being led into his private office. Tom closed the door after them.

"Do not know but the damage is done already. The man I suspected of watching us in Lexington avenue is in the hall now. If he was within earshot he has heard your injudicious talk."

"Point him out to me," said Holbrook, springing to the door, "and he'll never watch any one again."

Tom placed himself between Holbrook and the door, crying: "In the name of heaven how can you be so stupid a lunatic?"

Holbrook glared at him. Tom turned the key in the door, took it out and put it in his pocket, saying: "I am positively ashamed of you, Holbrook; you act and have acted in this matter like a madman. I tell you, man, this is a case where the lion skin will not do; the fox's skin is the one we want."

Dress the Hair

With Ayer's Hair Vigor. Its cleanliness, beneficial effects on the scalp, and lasting perfume commend it for universal use. It keeps the hair soft and pliant, prevents its color from fading, and, if the hair has become weak or thin, promotes a new growth.

Efficacy

of this preparation.—"Mrs. P. H. Davidson, Alexandria, La. 'I was afflicted some three years with scalp disease. My hair was falling out and what remained turned gray. I was induced to try Ayer's Hair Vigor, and in a few weeks the disease in my scalp disappeared, and my hair resumed its original color.'—(Rev.) S. S. Sims, Pastor U. B. Church, St. Bernard, Ind.

"A few years ago I suffered the entire loss of my hair from the effects of scald. I hoped that after a time nature would repair the loss, but it waited in vain. Many remedies were suggested, none, however, with such prompt merit as Ayer's Hair Vigor, and I began to use it. A growth of hair soon came out all over my head, and grew to be as soft and heavy as I ever had, and of a natural color! I feel compelled to testify to the success of this preparation with enthusiasm."

Continued from 1st page. Let me see that note. Holbrook handed it to him with bad grace. "Of course, where were you going? To Mott street, three doors from Bayard."

"It's another part of the plot," cried Tom. "How could the old lady have been so foolish as to go after the key?"

"Do you think it's a part of the plot?" "I am sure of it. But this is getting to be a deep one."

"No," said Tom, "the sounder would never dare two abductions in the open daylight in the same neighborhood."

"What shall we do now? This complicates the matter." "We'll do just what we were going to do. Find the girl first, and the finding of the mother will not be difficult."

"You just bet we are," said Tom. "You want us to, don't you?" "Oh, my eye, don't you?"

"Cos he's kicked me over and often." "What is he to you?" "Nothing. He's a vulgar, low-down fellow."

"Ah," said Tom. "How did you see the lady?" "I got on a roof and talked to her to do skylight."
