Then hope appeared, with smiling mien And wined the tear with fairy hand ; Anon, with his mates, the boy is seen, Gathering pebbles along the strand.

A frowning youth at a table sat, And far away his books did spurn ; Said he, " I'll study no more, mark that ! This horrid Greek I can never learn." Then Hope, with magic whisper, came, And the wayward boy his task resumed Hope cheered him on, till at length his name With the halo of learning is illumed.

A vigorous man in the prime of life Beheld his fortune in ruin laid ; And his aching heart with despair was rife, As he shrank into Poverty's gloomy shade. Hope proffered him a cordial that made him

To run in the race of life once more ; He toiled as she warbled her cheerful song, Till again his coffers with wealth ran o'er.

On a couch is reclining a weary man-His face is wan, and his locks are grey-And he murmurs " Alas ! I am under the ban I have lived to myself, and I dare not pray. Hope bade him look up to the Lamb of God. Whose blood can atone for every sin ; He obeyed, and Justice withdrew the rod, And the penitent soul did glory win.

But oh ! 'tis a fearful risk to run Repentance to waive till a dying day ; For the crown of glory is seldom won By those in health who neglect to pray. Full oft Hope leaves the presumptous soul, And it falls to the keeping of grim Despair, Who points where the waves of perdition roll, And bears it to dwell eternally there.
