MISS M. L. HART'S ABLE ESSAY.

The following paper was read by Miss M. L. Hart, representative of the C. Y. L. A., Toronto, before the recent meeting of the Women's National Council in Montreal:

In this paper I do not intend to speak of literature as it now exists in Canada. I do not wish to mention any of the names whose possessors are rising or have risen to prominence and perhaps fame; I intend merely to point out one or two respects in which Canada is favored as a field for literature, and to touch on a few ways in that sense of themselves whereby we, as writers of Canada may help on the work in our very life.

How Canadian women can promote Canadian literature is a question that is answered only in the application of a few general principles to a particular case. There is no "royal road" for the special development of Canadian letters, the only exclusive part in the process being that which local characteristics and conditions suggest.

As long as the case is not so very different from that of other peoples, and then by comparison we may see of what essentials we are already possessed, either in part or in full, and also those, if any, in which we are entirely deficient, the goal of which it is necessary to seek.

We need not go back to the nations of the East whose literature in many cases bloomed, reached its zenith and died, while Europe was still in the cradle of barbarism and the American continent unknown, but let us begin with Greece, the culture of which eventually overspread all Western civilization, and whose far-reaching influence is felt by all civilized peoples, even at the present day.

The use of letters which deluged the land during the epoch of Greek culture was due to the emotion called forth by the gigantic struggle of the Greeks for their independence; in this struggle against the Persians the Greeks worked most successful and the peace which followed was the opportunity for the long pent-up fountain to overflow.

Had Greece been conquered her literature would not have been. Captivity is no nurse for the muses. Freedom is the spirit that animates the soul of a nation, filling it with that enthusiasm of love that forces it to share its emotions. This gives birth to literature.

Here then are two essentials which we in Canada possess in a pre-eminent degree—freedom and freedom of thought. As the products of a distinctive Roman literature three men stand forth conspicuously, and the means they used can be adopted by others; the names of these three are Cicero, Caesar and Varro.

Cicero did the work by using the Roman language of the language of science—though prior to this the custom had been to use the Greek tongue for all intellectual purposes—and by doing all in his power to make the Roman language the language of science as well as that of eloquence.

and at present very prominent portion of the continent. Mr. Bryce's careful paper is in itself an adequate preliminary to the study of the present political complications, upon which he will enter in the concluding paper.

The June Atlantic begins with another installment of the letters of Dante Gabriel Rossetti, edited by George Birkbeck Hill. This installment contains the letters for 1855. Striking features in this issue are an article upon "The Politician and the Public School" by G. L. Jones, Superintendent of Schools, Cleveland, Ohio, and "Restriction of Immigration" by Francis A. Walker.

Other practical means of encouraging literature are by the offering of prizes both for high school and in the school, as well as for night schools, and by extending the influence wherever it exists to have the number of Canadian selections in our school text-books increased.

One of the most potent means for the promotion of literature is travel. Where possible go abroad, with your eyes open, see life in numerous places. Nothing is so powerful in broadening the mind and consequently in producing literature, as the opportunities presented in voyaging from place to place.

And lastly, that our writings may be elevating and ennobling, let all that is beautiful in music, painting and architecture be cultivated and part of our daily life—for as we live so we write. Let religion be the basis of our work, and let our religion not be that of Sunday only, or of a half-hour once or twice a week, but let it permeate our actions so that we may literally fulfill the precept "whether you eat, drink or sleep, or whatsoever you do, do all for the honor and glory of God."

Whoever possible visit those shrines and temples that the reverence of man has raised in honor to the majesty of the Most High, and in the construction of which love and duty have conspired to give birth to symbols that are but the outward types of that interior worship which is the first principle of man's being.

In the sacred Scriptures we have even in an aesthetic sense the greatest product of the human mind. No poem can excel in beauty the psalm of the "Sweet Singer of Israel"; no other song ever written could peer through cathedral vaults with the sublimity and pathos of the "Magnificat."

To sum up, let us guard and cherish the purity and dignity of our mother tongue; let us gather into our homes as seed for a native harvest the best books that can be garnered from the productions of other lands; go abroad, see the world, develop the imagination by the recital of all the beautiful history books that encourage a spirit of patriotism by a study of the natural grandeur of our vast Dominion; nurture true art wherever found; let religion be the main-spring of all our actions; let us do this and we will be the children of the future.

Among the topics of the paper are: "The First Dark Horse," "Convention Sayings," "Modern 'Stampede' Tactics," and there are entertaining details concerning "Clay Webster, Seward, Greeley, Blaine, and others."

Elsewhere we give the full text of a newspaper interview with Dr. Burwash, head of the Methodist College, not because we agree entirely with the views expressed, but in order to show our Catholic readers how various are Protestant opinions on the Manitoba school question.

The Presbyterian Witness, of Halifax, says: "THE CATHOLIC REGISTER is careful to point out all the faults of the Public School system, and it reproduces, sorrowfully of course, Mr. Street's association against that system."

ligious teaching in Canada to enquire whether or not our useless discussion about an impossible common or undenominational system of religious teaching is not forcing the Public schools in the direction of Godlessness.

The National Convention.

We publish to day from the Dublin Freeman's Journal the detailed report of the scheme adopted by the Irish Parliamentary Party for the summoning of the great National Convention of the Irish race in Dublin.

It will be seen, therefore, that there is no time to be lost by the Irishmen of Canada if the Dominion is to be rightly represented at this important gathering.

An Object Lesson for Liberals.

The cable correspondents have been emphatically stating that the Irish members and the Liberals of England are finally divided on account of the position of the former on the English Education Bill.

In view of the serious development of the split between the English Nonconformists and the Irish Nationalists as disclosed by the articles in The Methodist Times and The British Weekly the editor of The Daily Chronicle addressed the following telegram to Mr. Gladstone:

Mr. Gladstone it will be noted, declines to mix his politics with sectarianism. The Westminster Gazette, another Liberal paper, contained the following:

We telegraphed to Mr. Gladstone at Hawarden this morning to ask if we might say anything on his behalf in reply to the threats of the Nonconformist leaders, and newspapers that they would abandon Home Rule in consequence of the action of the Irish members on the Education Bill.

Mr. Gladstone has replied to us as follows: "I am indisposed to interfere, as I am unable to take part with either side."

Mr. Laurier is an English Liberal, he tells us. If so, why does he not take up a position similar to Mr. Gladstone?

In a sharp letter to The Daily Chronicle a Liberal elector gives the Nonconformists a nice dressing down. He says: "Mr. Hugh Price Hughes and others threaten that they will not play any more, because the game does not go to their liking."

The fact of the matter is that by the manly, consistent and independent vote on the English school question the Irish members have shown England what manner of men they are.

Ex-Priest Slattry.

There is good reason to believe that the "ex-priest" has been found out by the Protestant people of Canada. Last week Toronto was favored by "ex-priest" Slattry, who announced, in addition to his usual themes, lectures upon the Manitoba School question.

Slattry came. He had been advertised profusely; and considering the political situation in Toronto, he put his prices down pretty low at 15c. A representative of the Truth Society attended the opening lecture. The audience was insignificant in numbers—not more than 200 at the outside and those of the lowest class of citizens.

To the editor of The Witness:

Sir—In your paper of Tuesday an advertisement appeared announcing that a lecture would be delivered in the Orange Hall, St. James St., that evening by Rev. William Bluest, a Baptist minister from New Brunswick, an "ex-priest," who would unfold his experiences when at the Jesuit College. Also, a letter appeared in the same paper signed "G," inviting the Protestants and Orangemen of Montreal to attend the lecture to be delivered by this eloquent "ex-priest."

Unlike Bluest, Slattry is an expelled priest through drunkenness. In 1888 he appeared in the United States at Colgate University (Baptist), Hamilton, N. Y. The claim to respectability advanced by him to his Toronto audience last week was this: that he is a Baptist minister in good standing. This was not true.

A Week of Death.

Except in time of war it is not easy to recall a brief period so crowded with tidings of death and disaster as the week which terminated on Sunday last. It began with storms in the northwestern states of the neighboring republic in which many lives were lost.

It is all very dreadful; dreadful to think of a people so governed; dreadful to think of a generous young man and woman beholding at the threshold of their imperial station the grim skeleton in the Russian closet.

Winning Ground in Belfast and Derry.

We congratulate the Catholics of Belfast, especially the Most Rev. Dr. Henry, Bishop of Down and Connor, and we congratulate Mr. John Dillon and the members of the Irish Parliamentary Party, upon having won a grand moral victory in regard to the Belfast Corporation Bill.

are accustomed to tell ourselves, can only happen in America. Certain it is that the people of no other country seem capable of accepting without lamentation such awful occurrences. This was a visitation: the act of God. Is it possible to doubt that the spirit of the people upon whom it came is one of Christian resignation and Christian courage?

One refrains from committing to writing the feelings of bitterness that arise in the heart from a contemplation of this barbarous feeding of the moujiks and its direful wind up. It is not too much to say, however, that the spectacle of Saturday last should press home to the soul of the young Czar, who is himself as yet responsible for none of the Russian miseries of famine in the past, that hunger and serfdom have brought the peasantry of Russia as near to the level of animals as it is possible to human beings.

The committee will resume on June 9, and in the meantime the Orange Corporation have not decided to accept the Catholic conditions of compromise, the opposition to the bill will be continued. The Derry bill, which has yet to come before the committee, will provide more instruction for the people of England than the Belfast bill.

Mr. Gladstone and Anglican Orders.

A cable despatch on Monday brought the information that Mr. Gladstone has addressed a letter to Cardinal Rampolla on the subject of Christian re-union. The despatch mentions that Mr. Gladstone's letter is two columns in length, but all we are told concerning it is the following:

The cable correspondent succeeded in making quite clear what Mr. Gladstone's contention really is. The first part of the contention represents the venerable statesman as being of one mind with Lord Halifax, who has made it known that he would deplore an adverse decision by the Holy See to investigate the question of Anglican Orders.

evidence from the Orange officials of Belfast. The details were re-almost with amazement by the Irish public. Finally Sir W. Houldsworth, chairman of the mittee, stopped the proceedings plainly intimated that the Mayor Corporation that it would be policy for them to come to an understanding with the minority.

Mr. McLarnney.—Yes, sir, I have written a letter to Mr. Pope setting out my views and my own views personally. I am most anxious that the matter should be settled by friendly compromise.

Even before half the affliction brought to St. Louis had been made known horrifying news from Moscow told that the week's fatalities were not yet complete. The oppressive rejoicings that have been going on at the capital of Russia in connection with the crowning of the young Czar have now given way to grief—among the poor subjects of his Majesty at least.

The letter continues: "Our clients have already indicated upon a map furnished to you the four proposed wards, but they would be willing to consider any reasonable modification of the boundaries. It appears certain that the bill cannot pass till after Whit Sunday, and we suggest that the recess would find a fitting opportunity of finally settling these wards, and enable them either to be incorporated in the bill or set out in a schedule."

The committee will resume on June 9, and in the meantime the Orange Corporation have not decided to accept the Catholic conditions of compromise, the opposition to the bill will be continued. The Derry bill, which has yet to come before the committee, will provide more instruction for the people of England than the Belfast bill.

the Anglo-Irish run the risk of the investigation at all, if they were not prepared to accept the finding either way? Were they certain of their case? They have never pretended as much as that. Did they expect a compromise? That would have been absurd. The decision can only be for or against them. There is not such room to doubt that it will be given the latter way. According to the latter part of Mr. Gladstone's alleged contention he expects advantages to accrue from the investigation in any event. If correctly represented he is nearer to the Catholic view than Lord Halifax. Catholics have no other expectation than that the decision will be adverse to the Anglo-Irish; and from such a decision only can good result.

The Church and the State.

In The Globe of Tuesday appeared the condensed report given below of a sermon delivered in St. Mary's Cathedral, on Sunday, by Vicar-General Kelly of Kingston:

Politics is a science by which the good of the community is secured and safeguarded by legislation without encroaching more than can be avoided on the rights of individuals. The common and incorrect idea of the meaning of the word is a struggle between parties for power and place, and the spoils that can be secured by the gaining of the victory. In the Gospel of the day Christ tells his disciples to go forth and teach the nations. The Roman Catholic Church claims the right to say when an injustice has been done to the community or to a part of it just as well as she claims the right to say that it is wrong for one man to steal from another. All parties admit that a wrong has been done to a portion of the community in the New West. The Church claims the right to say that a wrong has been done and that the wrong is there. There must be some teacher of the moral law, for parties and governments are not above this law. What teacher can be there then but the Church, to which was deputed the authority and the power to direct men in this law? History shows that the Roman Catholic Church has always declared when wrong has been done. The mandement of the Bishops of Quebec is an able document. But it does not instruct the people to vote for one party's candidate rather than that of another. It simply states that an injustice has been done, and that those who are opposed to such injustice should be supported. The State has no right to enter a man's house and dictate to him what he shall eat, but it has the right to enter his house to see if he is conspiring against the common good. Who is to say what is for the good of the community if not the Church to which Christ gave the authority to teach His law? To this declaration of the true position of the Church towards the State we beg to give our heartiest approval. At the present moment all sorts of erroneous partisan errors are being raised, and it is most desirable that the right of the Church to teach the moral law should be emphasized by those who are competent to speak.

"Ex-Priest" Slattery's Record.

[FROM THE SYRACUSE CATHOLIC BOX.] Ex-Priest Slattery is now out west where he punctuates every lecture with a three days' drunk. The Sun received four letters last week from Arkansas asking for Slattery's history. Two of the letters were from Protestant ministers. The Rev. J. V. McDonnell and the authorities of Colgate University are continually receiving letters of inquiry concerning Slattery. The Sun has been requested to republish the following which appeared in an issue of May 5th, 1893: Editor of The Sun:

Sir—I see that Father Slattery, the deposed priest, is advertised to lecture in Syracuse this week. This unfortunate man has been going through the country for the last few years endeavoring to support life by reviling the Catholic Church, pandering to the prejudices of bigotry and acting as the apostle of falsehood. Probably he represents himself as a conscientious convert from errors of popery, and will give few facts connected with this poor man's life which may discount the value of his so-called "lectures." In the spring of 1889 it was rumored through the village here that one of the students in the Theological Seminary of Colgate University was a Catholic priest who renounced his church through conscientious scruples and was studying to be a Baptist minister. The college paper stated so, and further, that he studied in Maynooth and belonged to Father Slattery. I was interested in the statement, and I wrote to Archbishop Walsh the facts in the case and received the reply of which the following is a copy:

4 Rutland Square, E., Dublin, May 22, 1893.

My dear Father MacDonnell: You or any other person, ecclesiastical or layman, will be perfectly safe in consulting inquiry as to the antecedents of a fortune teller Slattery. In Cardinal McCabe's time he broke down very badly from intemperance. About a fortnight before the Cardinal's death he received an appointment as a condition of his own resignation. I wrote a distinct written intimation—the original of which I hold—that this was to be "the last chance." Well, he broke down again.

I thought it right, even after all this to give him one chance more—of course with the intimation that it would be the last, so far as I was concerned. He broke down again and I was unable to have anything more to do with him. I may add that he was not educated in Maynooth.

I remain, dear Father MacDonnell, Sincerely yours, W. J. WALSH, Archbishop of Dublin.

During "commencement week" in Colgate University the following June I sent the original of this letter to Dr. Dodge, president of the University, to let him see if he was a convert. They had in the person of Father Slattery. He said himself and the Rev. Edward Brailin of Brooklyn were discussing the case of Slattery when my letter arrived. It appears that Rev. Mr. Brailin had a special priest in the vestment into the Baptist fold, and after some instructions had him sent on to Colgate at the expense of the Baptist Education Society. Slattery represented himself to Mr. Brailin as having grave doubts about his baptism since the priest who baptized him was a convert. Mr. Brailin had some grudge against his (Slattery's) family, and may not have had the proper intention. He also represented himself as not believing in the doctrine of Purgatory, as he did not see why the Pope could send any Purgatory in half an hour if the doctrine were true. Slattery was summoned to the conference between Dr. Dodge and Rev. Mr. Brailin, and asked by the former if he had any trouble with his authorities in the Dublin diocese on account of intemperance. He denied it, but when Dr. Dodge confronted him with the letter of Archbishop Walsh, he broke down and confessed and whined for mercy, and pleaded he had nowhere to go, for he would not be received back to the Catholic Church since he had a "wife" to look after. Dr. Dodge believed he burned his boats, as far as the Catholic Church was concerned, when he went into the wife business. He was then expelled from the Baptist Seminary. Since like Dean Swift, the Irish poet, did not think it fair that when the Pope weeds his garden he should throw the weeds into his neighbor's plot. If the Rev. Mr. Brailin cares to speak he can tell of some transactions of Mr. Slattery in the New York diocese, at the time the ardent convert was supposed to be filling with religion and piety under Baptist instruction, hotel-keeping, thought to be an Irish priest collecting for a church in the old land. In October of the same year Doctor Dodge again called on me in reference to the case of Slattery. It seems he sought to get a foothold among the Baptist brethren in Philadelphia. The Rev. Mr. Brailin refused a letter of membership after the revelations which showed Slattery to be the same drunkard. Yet so hard pushed was Mr. Brailin that he found it necessary to satisfy the Philadelphia people by showing the original letter of Doctor Walsh. The following explains itself.

WASHINGTON AVE., BAPTIST CHURCH, BROOKLYN, 306 ST. JAMES PLACE, OCTOBER 30, 1893. My Dear Dr. Dodge: Would you do me the great kindness to get for me, if possible, the letter of Archbishop Walsh, concerning Mr. Slattery, which you permitted me to read in June last. It may be necessary for me to use it as evidence in determining what ultimate action should be taken in regard to his membership in the church. In case you can't get the letter will you please state in writing the facts of the existence of such a letter, and the purpose of its being in your hands. The matter may not rest solely upon his pastor's word. Accusation ought not to con- from me unsupported. I do not think we should have any public trial, but we must do right for the Church's sake, and Slattery must acknowledge and confess to certain things before we can grant him a letter elsewhere. He is now conducting missions among the Catholics of Philadelphia. Hoping your year at Hamilton opens auspiciously and that yourself and family are well, I am affectionately yours, EDWARD BRAILIN.

Dr. Dodge thanked me for use of letter from Archbishop Walsh, saying it went through hundreds of hands in the Eastern part of the States and did immense service. These facts are the only ones concerning his connection with Hamilton. The next I heard of Mr. Slattery was in the New York Sun that the Chief of Police Gamble in Boston arrested a Rev. Mr. Slattery for selling immoral and obscene literature on the streets; but of course this might possibly be another Mr. Slattery, yet since the chief of Purgatory it would be perfectly natural to find him in the hell of obscene literature. The wretched woman who travels with Mr. Slattery and who lived with him here in Hamilton claims to be an "escapee nun," but a common concubine, because according to the laws of the Catholic Church and to his own vows, Father Slattery knows well he can never get married, in no sacrosanct ceremony, no matter what civil laws say or do. No responsible minister will recognize this man after the above facts. Of course, fanatical ministers who seek and love notoriety of "the leap-frog" order and run their meeting houses on the dime museum plan will welcome him as the latest and most sensational freak. It is remarkable that when the Catholic Church receives converts from the Protestants such these converts come over from the pressure of conscience and not the pressure of strong spirits. They are irreproachable and sincere, whereas the recruits from the Catholic ranks to the other side are usually damaged goods and of as little use as unsound vegetables in a swill barrel. For Father Slattery ought to be the object of our pity rather than our scorn. The stings of conscience and the pang of remorse that he must feel will form his greatest torture and it will take many a year of the Recording Angel to blot out for ever the deeds of apostasy and shame that have marked his trail through the States. J. V. McDONNELL, HAMILTON, N. Y., May 14, 1893.

Leo XIII. as a Poet.

The following is a translation of Pope Leo's poem on the Blessed Virgin, which appears in The Liverpool Catholic Times: But now, thou Virgin most potent, that triumphs achieved by thy aid Are the theme of our lyre's highest strains, Is a source of unmingled delight. Of thee in the days of our fathers The fierce storm of battle was laid, And victory set on their banners to herald the end of the fight. Of this France wert thou a witness when erst with unespoken guile The powers of darkness infernal were leagued in dire plots 'gainst thy race. And though once in thy faith and thy virtue The grace of heaven did smile, Then, alas, both the light and the glory of aid faded off from thy face. Like a deluge that fouls where it passes, did error and vice, far and wide, Spread havoc amid thy fair borders from Dunkirk to the mouths of the Rhone, But thy Virgin Protectress 's a watchful; she summoned a man to her side, A Spaniard who, praying and working, a harvest of merit had sown. Her gaze resting on him benignly, a chaplet she placed in his hands, Saying "Salvation's assured through this weapon; for the French 'twill be both shield and spear."

CATHOLIC SOCIETIES. Catholic Truth Society.

A very objectionable evening was spent by the members and their friends at the regular meeting of this branch, which was held Monday evening last. After the business of the meeting was concluded a programme of music and readings was given by the following ladies and gentlemen: Misses M. A. Thompson, of the Neff School of Oratory; Cunningham, N. McKenna, McCullen, C. Rolteri, the Misses O'Donoghue and Mr. Delahaye, clouctinists. After the programme was finished ice cream, etc., was served and altogether the members and friends enjoyed themselves thoroughly. Amongst the visitors was Rev. Father Walsh, C.S.B., who gave a short address. The branch reports as a result of the meeting the addition of some thirty extra names to the roll and can now fairly claim to be the banner branch of this city, having over 100 members, ladies and gentlemen. FARM AND GARDEN.

It is one of the best business methods of any producer to get as close to the consumer as possible. The price paid for products then all goes to the farmers, and it is quite possible in the days of rapid and easy transit for a farmer to take even such a perishable product as ice cream a hundred or two hundred miles to a city and have it in the finest possible condition for distribution early in the morning of every day in the hot season.

This, of course, applies to every desirable product of farms. In some cases it is necessary to employ the services of an agent, but to a large extent the farmer at this season may be the purveyor of his own produce, and, dressed as he should be, his presence will tend to sell what he has to dispose of without question as to the character of it, while once a customer is made that business will be permanent.

A young calf for the first month of its life should have the milk of the cow or the skimmed milk warmed to 80°. When it is a month old the quantity of milk should be increased to ten or twelve quarts a day, and as soon as it takes a little fine meal and some fine hay or grass, it should get what it will eat.

The manger is of the easiest culture if the land be free from weeds. This is the only troublesome part of their management. But it is not difficult to get over even this common trouble. The land best fitted for the crop is a corn stubble or after potatoes, as the clean cultivation helps to clear the land of weeds.

Plaster is so easily soluble that it may be wasted by sowing it when there is no growth of crop to take it up. So that it is usually sown when the clover or other crop is started to grow and able to make use of it.

The old fashion of planting corn in check rows is not practiced now, except where the land is very weedy. It is so much better to plant in drills that all the best farmers do it. The land may be kept quite clean in this way by beginning the cultivation before the weeds appear, and keeping at work at it until the corn is too tall to get through.

There are few tranquil souls, because there are so few souls who pray.

Faith alone preserves souls in the right path: she alone has the secret of true consolation.

Continued prayer is the best and most fruitful exercise of the virtues of patience, faith, hope and charity.

Whoever does not love and honour Our Lady with a singular love and a very special honour is no true Christian.

Man is very apt to contemplate himself out of all proportion to his small surroundings.—Christina O. Rossetti.

The female sex seem to be specially obliged to follow the Blessed Virgin, for she has raised up women and honoured them exceedingly.

The Blessed Virgin was endowed with the innocence which the first Adam lost, and she enjoyed in an eminent degree the redemption which the Second Adam wrought.

Were we to live for a hundred years, double the span of an ordinary life, had we attained a high degree of perfection, there would still be work for us to do in our own hearts.

Prayer cultivates the field of your soul, because by prayer the grace of God renders fruitful the seed of your life. You must refer your life, and every action of your life to God.

Any one who points to the life of any one saint at whom people did not take scandal while he was being seen? Why do we not remember to be continually this fact and the lesson it teaches us?—Father Faber.

The longest night as its end is light, And for gloom comes the rich adorning Of the earth and skies as the starlight dies In the smile of the radiant morning.

I look upon the habit and use of reading some devout work as of the greatest importance; it is the basis of prayer, in what forms and consolidates piety.

There is a moment when a soul decides upon becoming sanctified, makes law out of this decision of the will. You remember the reply of St. Thomas Aquinas, that great doctor of the Church, when he was asked by his family what one must do to become a saint.

Let the first moment of the day be for you one of firm resolution, of a steadfast will to lead a serious Christian life. If you hesitate, if you deliberate with grace, all is lost; believe me, you must will. There is not a single obstacle, not a single temptation, which may not be overcome by this means; to will is that over which we have power.

In all our noble Anglo-Saxon language there is scarcely a nobler word than worth; yet this very term has now almost exclusively a pecuniary meaning. So that if you ask what a man is worth, nobody ever thinks of telling you what he is, but what he has. The answer will never refer to merits, his virtues, but always to his possessions.

Look back on your life and see what blessed influences have come to you to form character, to enable you to aim to inspire you with a true spirit. All this is only a preparation for a deeper and fuller life of love, which God means to give to us, which is the condition of faith. Believe that what He has begun He means to carry on and finish. That is, trust Him. Do not doubt His nearness. His influence, His good will.—J. F. Clarke.

We ought never to speak of the saints, and particularly of the Blessed Virgin without much reverence and respect. Indeed, when we mention them, our hearts should lie prostrate in veneration, because there is a greater difference between those blessed spirits and ourselves than can easily be imagined, and nevertheless, there is so close a connection that just as the earth has need of the influence of the heavens to produce her fruit, so we stand in need of the assistance of the saints to bring forth the work necessary for our salvation.—St. Francis de Sales.

HOW TO SAVE THE DUTY.

FIRESIDE FUN.

"That new baby of Youngfather's is a remarkably wide awake child." "So I've heard. We live next door to it."

He: "I beg your pardon. I forgot myself." She: "That's all right. People are liable to forget the trivial and unimportant things of life."

"So she favours his suit, but she is certainly in love with his overcoat; it is trimmed with real beaver."

Mrs. Wobbles: "I shall never forget, dear, how idiotic you looked when you proposed to me." Mr. Wobbles (with emphasis): "I was idiotic."

"This is a nice time to come home," she said. "I am glad to hear you say so, dear," he answered. "I thought you might think it was rather late."

"She waved her umbrella and caught his eye," said Hawkins. "Did it put the eye out?" asked Smithers, who had seen women waving umbrellas before.

"You've been in my mind all day. Miss Angle," he cooed sweetly. "Great mercy!" groaned the girl in agony, "can it be that I am as small as that?"

A Good Fighter.—(She after a tiff): "Before we were married you called me Lily of the Nile." He: "I never was very good at geography. Guess I was thinking of the Amazon."

She had risen several times to let a gentleman pass out between the acts. "I am very sorry to disturb you, madam," he remarked apologetically, as he went out for the fourth time. "Oh, don't mention it," she replied pleasantly, "I am most happy to oblige you; my husband keeps the refreshment bar."

Visitor: "We're raising a subscription for poor Scribbs, the playwright—softening of the brain, you know—mind almost entirely gone, and a family dependent on him." Theatrical Manager: "I'm a little short of money just now; but I'll tell you what I'll do, I'll give him an order to write me the libretto of a comic opera."

Wife: "That insurance agent who dined with us last night seemed a very gentlemanly fellow. Is he going to take you, dear?" Husband: "No, he says I am too great a risk." Wife: "Why, there isn't anything the matter with you, is there?" Husband: "No, no; but he accidentally learnt that you cooked the dinner."

"So you have got twins at your house, said Mrs. Besume to little Tommy Samuelson. Samuelson: "Yes ma'am; two of 'em." "What are you going to call them?" "Thunder and Lightning." "Why? Those are strange names to call children." "Well, that's what pa called them as soon as he heard that they were in the house."

Lawyer: "You said you made an examination of the premises. What did you find?" Witness: "Oh, nothing of consequence; only a boggerly array of empty boxes, as Shakespeare says: 'Never mind what Shakespeare says. He will be summoned later and will speak for himself if he knows anything about the case.'"

Smith, landscape painter, hard up (only one pot-boiler sold in six weeks): "I'll tell you what it is Brown, old chap, art is a hard mistress to serve. What do you say to giving it up?" Brown (a figure painter, still harder up): "You have anticipated my thought; I am going to give up art to-morrow." "And then?" "And then I shall paint landscapes."

"I suppose, doctor, that a large proportion of the ills of your patients are imaginary?" "Yes, sir, quite a large proportion." "And your treatment of such cases, I suppose, is by imaginary pills?" "Well, I suppose you might call it that." "Then, of course, for treating imaginary ills with imaginary pills, you send in imaginary bills?" "Oh, my dear sir, nothing of the kind. There's nothing imaginary about the bills, I have to draw the line somewhere."

His Way of Putting It.—Paul Louis Courier, when bitterly assailed by the French professor, quietly remarked: "I fancy he must be vexed. He calls me Jacobin, rebel, plagiarist, thief, poisoner, forger, leper, madman, impostor, calumniator, libeller, horrible, filthy, grinning, rag-picker. I gather what he wants to say. He means that he and I are not of the same opinion, and this is only his way of putting it."

your child

You note the difference in children. Some have nearly every ailment, even with the best of care. Others far more exposed pass through unharmed. Weak children will have continuous colds in winter, poor digestion in summer. They are without power to resist disease, they have no reserve strength. Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil, with hypophosphites, is cod-liver oil partly digested and adapted to the weaker digestions of children.

A great deal of dust-throwing is done during the present electoral campaign, as is, indeed, too often the custom at every general election for the purpose of clouding the real issues before the voters. HOW LOUIS SAVED THE QUEEN OF MAY.

The Angelus bell rang in the first of May amid the joyous carols of the birds perched on the eaves of the village church. It awoke Louis L... and at its foot, in a clump of trees nestled the pretty white church. Louis' room was in the front of the house. Its window commanded a fine view, but he had chosen it because from it he could see the church.

As he looked, hardly believing his eyes, a brand fell from the wall, and actually lit a candle as it passed. The candle set fire to a rose that lay against the wall of the statue, and in a second the veil was in a blaze.

FACING A GRIZZLY.

It was in September—and the Colorado sun had done its duty and made Phil as brown of face and stout of limb as any of us—that the geology class, consisting of the professor and ten pupils, made an excursion into the range with it's object of taking a practical lesson among the limestone beds at the neck of Lincoln Peak.
