THE MONARCHY

ACT OF VIOLENCE AGAINST HER MAJESTY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I wish to move a motion relating to the wanton act of violence perpetrated against Her Majesty the Queen, during her official birthday ceremonies. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House expresses to Her Majesty its extreme shock at the violence which occurred, that this House expresses its admiration to Her Majesty for her outstanding courage during the ordeal, and that this House condemns all such violent acts, especially those acts against public figures during the discharging of their duties.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

POLITICAL PARTIES

LIBERAL PARTY TWINNING CAMPAIGN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 as a proxy for the thousands of Canadians who do not have access to adequate mail delivery. The government and the Liberal party have exhibited an exuberance and enthusiasm in communicating with Canadians in ridings they do not hold, by flying Liberal "twins" around the country, mailing greetings and plaques from Liberal "twins", etc. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That the Trudeau government and the Liberal party divert the funds expended on their partisan political "twin" program to purchase site mail boxes for Canadians who are deprived of first-class mail delivery service.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

PROGRAM TO MEET SHIPPING NEEDS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, I, too, rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter that is truly of national and urgent necessity. Whereas the maximum capacity of the St. Lawrence Seaway will be reached by 1985, just four years from now, all users of the Seaway are agreed that early government decisions are necessary with respect to both facilities and charges, so that they might themselves properly govern their own affairs accordingly. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz):

That the Minister of Transport immediately commence a program of action and improvement to the St. Lawrence Seaway system compatible with the marine and shipping needs of today.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

TEXTILES AND CLOTHING

CALL FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The report of the Textile and Clothing Board inquiry was tabled on June 30, 1980. In spite of numerous speeches, motions and questions in this House, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) has persistently refused to act in announcing government policy in this important area. In view of the fact that the minister's inaction is causing frustration and alarm within the textile and clothing industry and to the 500,000 Canadians directly or indirectly employed therein, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce announce forthwith the policy of the government pertaining to the clothing and textile industry or, in the alternative, resign, having demonstrated such incredible ineptness in discharging the duties of his ministry.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

PERMISSION TO ENGAGE IN COLLECTIVE BARGAINING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. We note that Treasury Board, under considerable pressure to return to the January 1, 1981, retroactivity RCMP contract date, restored to each member of the force from $750 to $1,600 in back pay, but at the same time cancelled fringe benefits announced two weeks ago. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That since the federal government has again exhibited its inability to deal fairly with the RCMP, the paternalistic divisional representatives system be abolished and that this House urge the government to bring forth a bill to permit the men and women of the RCMP to engage in collective bargaining.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SELECTION OF RALPH GOODALE AS SASKATCHEWAN LIBERAL PARTY LEADER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Given the acclamation on the weekend of one of our former colleagues, Ralph Goodale, as leader of the Liberal Party in Saskatchewan—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Evans: —I move, seconded by the hon. member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis):

That this House extends its best wishes to Mr. Goodale and his party and expresses its desire to see a Liberal government in Saskatchewan.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE CONSTITUTION

INCORPORATION OF MAGNA CARTA PRINCIPLES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Today, June 15, being the seven hundred and sixty-sixth anniversary of the signing of the Magna Carta at Runnymede, clauses 4 and 5 of which established the basis in British constitutional law, practice and convention, of which we in Canada are fortunate in being able to count ourselves the beneficiaries, for the right to property and the guarantee against its arbitrary seizure by the state, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp):

That this House condemns the government for having rejected a Progressive Conservative amendment to the constitutional proposals which was designed to guarantee to all Canadians the right to the enjoyment of private property and full legal protection against the government's arbitrary seizure or alienation of that property, even 25 per cent of the property of others as provided for, through retroactive application, in their Bill C-48.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

CALL FOR TRIPARTITE DISCUSSIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas a recent study by the Ontario government's Great Lakes-Seaway Task Force indicates that tanker traffic in the Welland Canal will grind to a halt by 1985 thereby causing a complete collapse of major commodity shipments through the Seaway, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid):

That the government recognize the serious urgency of this problem by taking immediate steps to prevent the possible collapse of commodity traffic in the Seaway and that, as a first step, the government open in-depth discussions with the government of Ontario and Seaway authorities in the United States in order to begin implementing the task force recommendations designed to stop further erosion of the Seaway's capacity.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE CONSTITUTION

POSITION OF MUNICIPALITIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Last week the minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation indicated to the Federation of Canadian Municipalities that he would do his best to get municipalities "a secure place in the Constitution". Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid):

That the minister issue a position paper as soon as possible to explain to this House how his ministry feels this "secure place in the Constitution" can best be resolved.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE PRIME MINISTER

MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, on June 9, 1981, in this House of Commons the Prime Minister said with regard to energy pricing:

We would like the over-all result to be the federal government sharing 23 per cent or 25 per cent of the take, and the provinces and the private sector sharing the rest.

He is telling the Canadian people that the federal government gets only 10 per cent of the action. Out of the $1.66 charge on a gallon of gas in Ontario, the Alberta government gets 22.7 cents, the Ontario government gets 25 cents, the federal government gets 56 cents, or 33.7 per cent of the amount being charged; the producer gets 19.3 cents, the refiner 33 cents, and the dealer 10 cents. It is obvious the Prime Minister is somewhat misleading in his figures. Under Standing Order 43 I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer):

That the Prime Minister of Canada refrain from giving false information to the Canadian people, designed to pit the east against the west so he can continue to hold power for his own selfish means.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

EFFECT OF STRIKE ON NORTHERN COMMUNITIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas isolated and northern communities are being deprived of English, French and all native language programming due to the NABET strike, thereby creating a situation of almost total isolation in relation to communication links with southern Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House direct the CBC management to move expeditiously toward a fair and just settlement of this strike.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PUBLIC WORKS

PRECISE TERMS OF REFERENCE GIVEN TO SOCIÉTÉ IMMOBILIÈRE DU CANADA, MIRABEL LTD.

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. Last February the minister announced the establishment of a new corporation, namely the Société immobilière du Canada, Mirabel Ltd, and its chairman stated that the mandate of the organization was far from being confused. In fact, he said that their preliminary mandate was to draft a more precise mandate. Can the minister say whether the white elephant has finally come up with a precise mandate?

[English]

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): I am sorry, Madam Speaker, I did not catch the name of the corporation the hon. member mentioned.

[Translation]

Mr. Clarke: Madam Speaker, it was the Société immobilière du Canada, Mirabel Ltd.

[English]

Mr. Cosgrove: Madam Speaker, the first objective of the corporation which was announced last year was to review the history of the project in Mirabel, taking a look at government activity in conjunction with provincial activity in the area, and to return to cabinet with a request for a mandate for the corporation, and to assit the government in bringing a resolution to some unhappy claimants, for example, people who were originally expropriated in that area. The local communities feel that a long-range plan is needed to revitalize the area and would like assistance in the deregulation of the ownership of some of the outside or peripheral lands.

INQUIRY CONCERNING DETAILS OF SALE OF 80,000 ACRES OF LAND

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Madam Speaker, this file has now been gathering dust for twelve years. Does this corporation intend to take more time still to review once again how to proceed with the sale of the 80,000 acres of land which were needlessly expropriated?

[English]

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): On the contrary, Madam Speaker, the corporation has not been in place for one year. The first task given to the corporation was to return to the government, assist in setting up the mandate for such a corporation, and to recommend to government the procedures that corporation should follow—for example, how would the local community, namely the municipal officials, the provincial government and many private individuals, be engaged? What process would be followed? My understanding is that the new chairman and the officials of the corporation have met with a number of local interested citizens. I further understand that they are in the process of coming forward to government with a design. I expect it will be made available to the government before the end of the summer.

REGULATORY REFORM

INVOLVEMENT OF PARLIAMENT

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the President of the Treasury Board. On Friday last the Prime Minister announced that the President of the Treasury Board would be the co-ordinator for regulatory reform within the cabinet touching on the recommendations of the report of the Economic Council of Canada. The minister will know that the Economic Council of Canada in its report on the effect and cost of regulation on the consumer touched on three or four departments, including transport, fisheries, and agriculture. Given the importance of that report, its impact on consumers, and the savings that could be effected by consumers, does the minister on behalf of the government intend to involve Parliament in this regulatory reform and either set up a committee on regulatory reform, or refer the report of the Economic Council of Canada to a standing committee of this House?

• (1420)

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, first let me point out that the office of the co-ordinator of regulatory reform has been in existence for some time. The mandate for co-ordinating regulatory reform across the government is a mandate which I received shortly after my appointment to my present post as President of the Treasury Board. Clearly we have important work to do in this entire area. We have been waiting with great anticipation the tabling of this report by the Economic Council of Canada. I might point out at the same time that we have been moving very rapidly in the area of regulatory reform.

When the hon. member speaks about the involvement of Parliament, I would draw to his attention that we already have the report of a task force which was very well received that dealt primarily with process. In the area of process, the report of the Economic Council also, as you and the House know, Madam Speaker, has moved forward and suggested numerous improvements that can be made, all of which I might say for the most part are already under way. I am frankly delighted with the progress we are making and I can assure hon. members that the report of the Economic Council will receive full consideration by the government.

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL OF ECONOMIC COUNCIL REPORT TO PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, the minister may be very well satisfied with the progress they are making in government on regulatory reform. Parliament has no way of knowing what goes on in cabinet, and only the government can refer a report to a committee. Therefore I would repeat to the minister, given the fact that this report of the Economic Council of Canada, commissioned by the government, touches on three or four departments, including transport and fisheries, and given the fact that this is the only way Parliament can have access to members of the Economic Council of Canada who frame these recommendations, will the minister, on behalf of the government, refer that report to a standing or special committee of the House on regulatory reform so members of this House will at least have the chance of determining whether or not any progress is being made within the cabinet on regulatory reform?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, clearly the involvement of Parliament in this whole area of regulatory reform is of utmost importance, and I will certainly pay great attention to the suggestion of the hon. member.

HOUSING

ESTABLISHMENT OF DEBT MORATORIUM BOARD—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, last Wednesday we heard the Minister of Finance say he was ready to aid those people facing foreclosure because of abnormally high interest rates. I would ask the minister responsible for housing whether he has considered establishing a debt moratorium board similar to the one set up in the 1930s by the federal government? Such a board could aid bona fide applicants reduce their monthly payments, extend payment periods, and generally help slowdown the unacceptable present day home eviction rate. This legislation would also make banks readjust their loan payment schedules.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, only in a peripheral way have we considered that request. I would think our response should be that under present circumstances, with the housing industry regenerated and very active in addressing supply, with supply eventually affecting affordability, we think that measure is not warranted.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, I would address my supplementary question to the Acting Minister of Finance. Has the acting minister or the Minister of Finance given any thought to introducing legislation, as was introduced in the 1930s by the federal and provincial governments, to assist individuals having problems with their mortgages? This legislation would require banks and lending institutions to readjust loan payments due to the 20 per cent interest rate which is causing record business bankruptcies. This readjustment of monthly loan payments could help reduce the business sector's extremely high bankruptcy rate.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, that is a suggestion which the Minister of Finance may want to study closely and which he might consider when preparing the next budget.

THE ECONOMY

WEEKEND MEETING OF CABINET

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister I should like to address a question to the Acting Prime Minister having to do with the meeting of cabinet which took place on the weekend.

After the meeting the Minister of Finance indicated that there were no new measures being contemplated by the government to deal with the problem of inflation and that any economic measures would have to wait until the fall. How can the minister justify that kind of systematic inactivity when we have so many increasing problems of bankruptcies facing farmers, when we have problems of bankruptcies facing small businessmen, and when we have a crisis in the housing industry across the country? How can the government possibly justify that kind of inactivity?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I understand that the question posed by a distinguished member of the press was whether the Minister of Finance intended to bring in a mini budget in the coming days. Apparently the answer was that there was not such an intention but, of course, the Minister of Finance will continue to make statements on the state of the economy, as he did over the weekend at the convention in Saskatoon which chose such a good, young and dynamic leader for the Liberal party in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Rae: Madam Speaker, the minister may have had an amusing time in Saskatchewan. The minister may have had an amusing time at Meach Lake, but millions of Canadians are not having a very amusing time because of the government's policies and because of the problems inflation and high interest rates are causing the average Canadian.

INQUIRY CONCERNING GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance, and quite apart from statements, will the acting minister indicate whether the government intends to bring in any programs which will provide relief to farmers, to small businessmen and to home owners, prior to the summer?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the meeting at Meach Lake yesterday was not an amusing meeting in the sense that few jokes were made. It was a very serious meeting, and the problem of inflation particularly was well reviewed. The Minister of Finance or the Prime Minister will be here later on this afternoon and, if they care to, they will answer in more detail the question raised by the hon. member. Obviously I am not in a position to do that at this time.

Mr. Rae: Madam Speaker, when 30 clowns are put together, I am sure there is bound to be an amusing time.

COST OF LIVING TAX CREDIT

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, my final supplementary question has to do with the fact that on Friday the industrial wage figures for the year were released by Statistics Canada. Those figures showed that the wages of an average worker in Newfoundland fell some $700 behind the rate of inflation in one year. In Ontario wages fell behind by $350; in Saskatchewan, $400; and in British Columbia, $119. The average shortfall in Canada was some $245.

In light of the fact that in this last year wages have fallen well behind the rate of inflation, I would like to ask the minister whether he can now make a commitment that the government will stop its consideration of wage and price controls, which would have the effect only of further reducing the standard of living of the average Canadian faced with inflation, and will the government make a commitment to introduce a cost of living tax credit, which would have the effect of providing some assistance to those Canadians hardest hit by the inflation we are presently going through?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, no economy in the world today of which I am aware is in a perfect situation. If my hon. friend wants to choose statistics to offer, of course he can find some which are not particularly agreeable to contemplate, but there are others which are extremely good. The extent of growth in Canada at this time is substantial. The number of jobs being created is exceptionally good. It all depends what statistics one wants to use, but we all agree that no perfect set is available at this time in Canada, or elsewhere in the world for that matter.

HEALTH

SITUATION OF JAMES BAY CREE—REQUEST FOR MEETING WITH PROVINCIAL AUTHORITIES

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. As the minister knows, a great many members of Parliament, especially those who serve on the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, have been deeply concerned, and still are, about the situation facing the people who live in the James Bay area, following the signing of that historic agreement.

On May 26 a motion was passed in the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs asking the minister to set up a meeting with the province of Quebec, with the Cree people and with officials from the Ministry of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the minister's own department. I would like to know from the minister whether she followed up on that motion. Was such a meeting held and, if in fact it was held, what if any progress is the minister able at this time to report to the House of Commons?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, further to the standing committee meeting on the James Bay Cree health situation, I did speak with the hon. Pierre-Marc Johnson, the minister of health in Quebec, the same afternoon. One or two days later I confirmed by letter the problem, and made a request for a joint meeting.

My colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and I had a meeting last week of officials of the three federal departments involved, in preparation for the meeting we are trying to set up with Quebec and the Cree to review the situation locality by locality, community by community, in terms of help, infrastructure, and every aspect of sanitation relating to health, which I think is the thrust of the committee's recommendation. Now that all of us are prepared for it, I am of course hoping to have the meeting of all the players, as was recommended. I will report of course to the House and make it public as soon as we have the chance.

HEALTH

DANGERS OF USE OF CANNABIS

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): My question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the sobering scientific research that supports earlier evidence that cannabis can cause devastating and irreparable damage to brain cells, as well as genetic damage to first and second generations, and recognizing that this new research is not part of the material being studied and circulated by the government, will the minister assure the House that she will update departmental research and refer the subject matter to a select standing committee of the House before introducing any legislation changing the status or penalties relating to cannabis?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, with regard to the introduction of legislation by the government to provide a more equitable treatment of Canadians, especially young Canadians, who have a criminal record because they have smoked marijuana, I would like to tell the hon. member that, in my opinion, what he recommends in his question would not exactly be the best solution.

Regarding health problems, we always prepare an update of scientific literature on a given matter. This material should be made available to hon. members when considering the bill so that they can make a more in-depth study and have full knowledge of what the government intends to do. I believe that the best way to proceed is to have all tools in hand at the same moment.

[English]

Mr. Wenman: If the minister was in fact aware of the newer research material I doubt she would allow the legislation to be introduced.

CRIMINAL CODE

LAYING OF CHARGES FOR IMPORTATION OF CANNABIS

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): My supplementary is directed to the Minister of Justice. The minister's department has just dropped guidelines calling for the laying of a charge of importation if a person brings in 20 kilos of cannabis, the equivalent of 80,000 joints of marijuana, or more into Canada. Surely someone bringing 80,000 joints or more into the country is in fact importing and should be so charged.

Recognizing the contemporary health hazards involved, and the dropped guideline is a de facto dropping of the seven-year prison term, will the minister, in consultation with his colleagues, the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Solicitor General, review and reconsider both the guidelines and the introduction of any legislation prior to further discussion of the health hazard?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, this guideline policy given to the Crown attorneys in marijuana cases has been in place for several years, and the discretion used by the Attorney General was also used by my predecessor two years ago and by the others before him so that the problem could be solved satisfactorily. I do not believe that it would be appropriate to change these guidelines for the moment, but I shall give consideration to the suggestion made by the hon. member.

NATIONAL SECURITY

REVIEW OF TASCHEREAU-KELLOCK COMMISSION PAPERS

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Privy Council in the absence of the Solicitor General.

The Solicitor General stated in the House on May 28 that he was in receipt of the interim report by Mr. Branscombe on the possible release of the so called Taschereau papers dealing with national security. He also said the complete review by Mr. Branscombe would be finished, he used the word "soon", and the government would make its position known "soon". In view of the fact that Mr. Branscombe has now apparently finished the review, is the minister in a position to tell the House the current status of the situation? Can the government's position be made known now, or when will it be made known?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I am not informed that Mr. Branscombe has made his report yet. The hon. member says "apparently". I have no indication that this is correct and accurate. I can verify this with the Solicitor General, but I can confirm to the hon. member that Mr. Branscombe has not made his report to me as yet.

DECISION ON MAKING REPORT PUBLIC

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): I am somewhat surprised that the President of the Privy Council apparently does not know what is going on in his office because I am assured that the report has been completed.

As a supplementary I ask the minister is one of the problems the government is facing in making this report public, or in reaching a decision, the fact that certain names are of a delicate nature and it is naturally trying to determine a way that the report can be made public in detail, but using some sort of pseudonym system to protect the human rights of certain persons named therein?

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, if I had been given a report, I would know it. I do not want to speculate, and I am not here to feed the gossip press of the hon. member. However, I shall check with the Solicitor General, and when he confirms that he has the report, he will be able to follow up on the questions of the hon. member.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SANITATION FACILITIES AT PAINT HILLS, P.Q.—AVAILABILITY OF FEDERAL FUNDS FOR CREE COMMUNITIES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The people of Canada have a continuing concern for the terrible health situation of the James Bay Cree and the failure of the government to live up to its obligations. I understand the minister's department has been telling people they have been doing something to correct the contaminated water situation in Paint Hills, a situation which has been documented since January. However, the Cree Housing Corporation has had to borrow money to institute an emergency program in Paint Hills and has not received any money from the department. We all know the work cannot be done without funding.

When can we expect that the department will move beyond issuing false assurances that it is doing something? When will some money be forthcoming to provide decent water facilities in Paint Hills and other Cree communities?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I met last week with my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, at the same time I was meeting with some of my senior officials from the Quebec region to assess the cost of doing something permanent, as well as something immediate in terms of a temporary solution to the matter this year. We are going to get on with what can be considered a quick job this year; it is not adequate in terms of a more permanent water and sewage system at Paint Hills. We are budgeting it for next year and will do as much of the preparation work as we can this year.

We have pretty well identified the cost and we are going to try and find the money this year. If the Cree are spending some of their own money, and my assistant deputy minister was talking to them all last week, then we can look at that from the point of view of possibly reimbursing them at a later stage. I can assure the hon. member we are doing everything possible to try to correct this situation as fast as we can.

REFERRAL OF REPORT TO PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, the summer season is now here when the health needs of the people are most real. I understand the report the minister requested, to review the spirit and intent of the James Bay agreement, is now finished. Could the minister inform the House as to the major contents of the report? Will he request a special reference to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development so that the committee can study the report in some detail?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact the report is under preparation and we have all co-operated to obtain it, I do not think it should be or will be kept secret in any way. The fact of the matter is that it is not yet completed; it is almost completed. When it is completed we will all have a chance to review it, possibly at the standing committee where most of these discussions regarding the matter have taken place.

IMMIGRATION

FUNDING FOR VOLUNTEER AGENCIES

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Madam Speaker, over the past six months or so representations were made by many volunteer agencies in Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg and Vancouver for increased funds to help them provide services to immigrants. Will the Minister of Employment and Immigration inform the House whether he intends to fight for an increase in the allocation to immigrant settlement and adaptation programs?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, as hon. members of the House may know, when the decision was taken to undertake a major refugee program for the Vietnamese, the government authorized an additional sum of money to deal with the problems of immigration adaptation. When the program came to an end last year, the money for immigration settlement reverted to its normal level. Because of the representations mentioned by the hon. member, and the assessments of our officials, it was clear there was still an ongoing need for continued work in the area. As a result, the government authorized an additional $4.3 million to deal with immigration problems, an additional $927,000 million for the ISAP program, and $3.37 million to deal directly with the needs of refugees to supply them with necessities such as housing and other luxuries—

An hon. Member: Luxuries?

Mr. Axworthy: —until such time as they become self-sufficient. I think those representations have now been met.

TRADE MARKS AND PATENTS

PROTECTION FOR TELIDON

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, could the Minister of Communications confirm a published report indicating that the Department of Communications attempted to receive a trade mark for the name Telidon but failed because it applied too late and, as a consequence, it had to settle for a certification mark?

Hon. Francis Fox (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): No, Madam Speaker, I cannot confirm it. My understanding is that the advice we received from the Department of Justice, and from an outside expert in this area who was retained by that department, was that the proper manner in which to proceed was the one indicated by the hon. member, that is, through a certification mark.

STATUS OF SOFTWARE

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, is the minister denying the published report indicating that the government tried to obtain a trade mark in the United States and failed? In addition to not having very much security over the use of the name Telidon, could the minister confirm that only a portion of the hardware for Telidon can be protected and, further, that there is no protection for the software which could be copied and possibly enhanced by others who would intend to introduce a similar system?

Hon. Francis Fox (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, there are applications pending in both Canada and the United States. In the case of Canada, it is for a registered certification mark. In the United States, an application for trade mark is proceeding. As I understand it, Canadian Patents and Development Limited has filed lengthy patent applications in both countries.

It is not patent protection as such which is the main advantage for Canadian industry. In many cases the Telidon system can be described as being the state of the art. It is a question of know-how. In many cases these questions cannot be protected by patents.

In the case of Telidon the Canadian industry has benefited from an advance of approximately one year over its competitors in other countries. No one really believes that this system cannot be duplicated or that it cannot be processed in other countries. At the moment Canadians have a 12-month lead over their competitors which is due in good part to the policies adopted by the government.

THE CONSTITUTION

RECOGNITION OF MUNICIPALITIES AS GOVERNMENTAL ENTITIES

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. In a speech last week in Regina to the urban municipalities of Canada, the minister decried the fact that the municipalities were not recognized as legal governmental entities in the new constitutional proposals of the government. Was that proposition discussed in cabinet? Was the minister expressing government policy, namely, that municipal governments should be recognized as a third level of government within the Canadian Constitution?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I indicated at the meeting of the Canadian Federation of Municipalities that hopefully, with the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada on the Constitution soon, the issue of continued negotiations between the provinces and the federal government, which is called for in the resolution passed and forwarded by the House, and the issue of the relationships of all governments, would no doubt be a matter for agenda between the federal government and the provinces in the near future.

In doing so I felt with some confidence that I reflected, in so far as the municipalities are concerned, the view of one in three members of the House of Commons who at one time or another held elective office at the local level. I am sure those members, together with many others in the House, agree that a very significant role is played by local governments in the scheme of governmental activity in Canada and that they should be a part of the discussion on a future governmental scheme for Canada.

FUTURE STATUS OF MUNICIPALITIES

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Those of us who have held positions in municipal governments feel that there must be ongoing dialogue and a position for municipalities, but obviously this matter must be discussed between the federal government and the provinces. The municipalities are subject to provincial legislation and provincial governments. Is it the policy of the government, as expressed by the minister, that the federal government will advocate at future conferences with the provinces that municipalities should be recognized as legal entities within the Canadian Constitution?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, this question has been raised several times with many of my ministers and myself. We have taken the position generally taken by the hon. minister. We agree that under the present Constitution it is a matter under provincial jurisdiction, and that any change in it would have to be the result of consultation.

We think there is a significant array of arguments for giving the municipalities status under the Constitution. Of course this must be discussed with the provinces. We feel the discussion will come at some time or other when we get to discussing the division of powers. We have no actual plans to begin that discussion now, but I think the municipalities have every right and that the ministers have every occasion to support them when they say they want to be recognized as significant entities.

You will recall, Madam Speaker, that when the House was asking that at the constitutional conference last September we bring in representatives of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, we pointed out in the House that the municipalities were also elected and that they represented people. Therefore we posed the problem in much the same terms as the minister.

NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

INVESTMENT IN MAJOR PROJECTS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. On May 28, 1981, Hon. Bud Olson, the Minister of State for Economic Development, said that the federal government envisaged the need for major investments in a northern transportation system and in hydro power generation. Could the minister indicate to which specific projects in the field of transportation—which roads, railway, harbours and pipelines—was the Minister of State for Economic Development referring and, similarly, to which hydro projects?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, if the hon. member wishes some indication of what priorities there are in terms of infrastructure of this kind, hydro and roads, I would be pleased to go into it, as I have been willing to at standing committee, in some detail. If the hon. member wants to know exactly what was in the mind of the gentleman from the other place, Mr. Olson, I think that it is best that the hon. member ask him.

QUERY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): I would submit, Madam Speaker, that the Minister of State for Economic Development has an over-all view of Canada, and it would be the minister of northern development who should know the specific details in the area which comes under his jurisdiction. Am I correct in thinking, Madam Speaker, that this is another one of these promises, something like the western development fund, the $4 billion fund, which everyone over there refers to, but which never seem to materialize? Are these just promises, or is the minister really going to do something about these questions?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, if the hon. member would like to see the whole history of federal government expenditure in the Northwest Territories which has reached up into the hundreds of millions this year, and in past years, and how it breaks down with respect to infrastructure, I would be more than happy to send it to him. If the hon. member would like to see what commitments there are in terms of what will be necessary in the future for development—when that development takes place—I will be more than happy to show him that. If he thinks that during the question period I can indicate every road which requires construction, the hon. member knows—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: Name one.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I could name several in the Yukon on which there has been significant federal government expenditure, which the hon. member for Yukon has never given us any credit for whatsoever.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton-East): I would be more than happy to send all that material to the hon. member this afternoon or tomorrow morning.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

COMPOSITION OF FUTURES SECRETARIAT

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. While commending the minister on the appointment of the Hon. David MacDonald as president of the newly established futures secretariat, I cannot understand why, of the 27 directors, eight are from Toronto, six are from Ottawa, and five are from Montreal. In effect 70 per cent are from the Ottawa-Toronto-Montreal axis. Only one director is from British Columbia. Is it the minister's view that British Columbians are incapable of engaging in public education on the problems of the developing world, or is it simply a case, once again, of ignoring British Columbia?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the explanation for both parts of the hon. member's question is the same, namely, that this is an independent, non-governmental organization for which I can only take credit for having inspired. The choice of Mr. MacDonald as the president was made independently, and the choice of directors was made independently. I can tell the hon. member that I did hear from the president, in a report last week, that the secretariat did expect to enlarge the board of directors, and that it had begun with this board to get the operation going as quickly as possible.

Miss Jewett: Madam Speaker, the figures I gave include the enlargement. I just received word today that those are the figures. If, indeed, this new futures secretariat thinks so little of the rest of the country, it already discourages me. The minister, at least, could have suggested that it have a better representation. However, let me move on to a related question.

CONTRIBUTION TO EDUCATION

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): I would like to ask the minister if he will be saying today whether the government will specifically adopt the recommendation of the North-South task force, namely, the recommendation that one per cent of official development assistance be devoted to development education.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): If I could catch Your Honour's eye at the proper time, I will present the government response to the task force. I can also undertake to pass the hon. member's comments on to the futures secretariat.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

TASK FORCE REPORT RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. One of the most important and far-reaching documents which have been presented to the Canadian public and the government in a number of years is the document entitled "The Great Lakes Seaway Task Force", which deals with setting a course for the 1980s. That document outlines some pretty frightening things, in terms of the St. Lawrence Seaway. I wonder whether the minister, his department or the government has made any decision as to whether they will accept some of the recommendations in that particular document which says that traffic on the St. Lawrence Seaway will be pretty well clogged or jammed by 1985, in just four short years.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): I have had discussions on that subject with a number of people, and it is generally held that capacity on the Great Lakes will have to be increased in the coming decade. The year 1985 was not generally accepted. The choice of means is not generally accepted, either. There are a number of possibilities, and discussions are going on regarding this subject. There is also uncertainty about some of the commodities being shipped on the Great Lakes now; just to mention two, iron ore and coal. In view of that uncertainty, the two authorities, the Canadian and the American, are now sponsoring a study on the conjuncture as it exists now. I will report on that when I have it.

All this is to say that capacity is generally accepted as being in need of increase—choice of means, twinning of the Welland Canal, changes in speed of traffic, extension of the season, and so on. I was reading on the subject just a few days ago and was impressed by the gains which can be made by the improvement of the management of the seaway. I remember that the figure for April was 5 per cent on the Welland. Obviously, there is some progress which can be made without the bigger, mega-projects of twinning the Welland, for example.

TIMEFRAME FOR ACTION

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, the minister seems to be uncertain in terms of the direction that he wants to go in this particular matter. Coming from western Canada, a grain producing area which ships virtually all of its grain down through the St. Lawrence Seaway, we become very alarmed over the kind of inaction which the minister seems to be saying may lie ahead. What kind of time-frame, then, does the minister have in terms of starting to do something concrete, in terms of the added expansion which will have to take place within the St. Lawrence Seaway itself?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I referred to the study being done by both authorities, the Canadian and the American Seaway authorities, as being one on the present conjuncture of traffic on the Great Lakes. I would submit that I should wait to get this one before making further comments on the subject.

ROLE OF LOCAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, I would like to follow up on the question to the minister of housing regarding his comments to the Federation of Canadian Municipalities. In that speech the minister suggested that the role of local government warrants a more secure place in the Constitution. I would ask the minister if he could elaborate on those remarks to the House.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I could probably assist the hon. member by referring to my earlier answers in the House, which is to say that I view the process as being one which is almost as important as any effects altered or any changes made. The process is one which is very important. I said in the speech, and to other hon. members and to the media after the speech, that the process is one which must involve the provinces and the municipalities in discussion before any specific way, any specific method, any specific institution or any specific relationship is altered or proposed for consideration by other governments.

MINISTER'S VIEWPOINT

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, once again, the minister referred specifically to security. I would like to ask the minister, through Your Honour, exactly what point of view is he putting forward as far as the security of municipalities under the Constitution is concerned? Where are the insecurities?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, as I indicated in my last comments, my thought was that from my experience in local politics the thrust should be to have a somewhat more structured relationship between the municipalities, the provincial governments, and the federal government, than that which presently pertains. For example, at the last meeting between myself and ministers of housing from across Canada there was only one province which invited observers from that province to attend such a convention. My feeling is that such a relationship should be strengthened in the sense that it should be more frequent, and there should be some certainty in the type of relationship which would pertain in the future.

SOCIAL SECURITY

RECIPROCITY WITH GREAT BRITAIN

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In reply to a question that I put in committee two and a half years ago about reciprocal arrangements on pensions between the United Kingdom and Canada, the minister replied as follows:

> That is my priority. Italy was a priority, Great Britain was one. Italy is done and I am very proud of it, but I want to unblock the Great Britain dossier. It is very important.

In view of the fact that the minister considers it important and a priority, I wonder why there has been no action in two and a half years?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, very unfortunately, it is because the government of Her Majesty in Great Britain decided to refuse any agreement with Canada. I met again, I think it was late October, in London with the minister for Great Britain, literally pleading for an agreement with Great Britain to increase the pensions they pay to their former residents now living with us in Canada, and to have reciprocity on pensions. That was rejected without any possibility of compromise by the United Kingdom. I regret it very much.

We have since proceeded to signing an agreement with Greece and we have signed with the United States. That will help a lot of Canadians, both here and those having to live and work in these countries. Unfortunately, Great Britain has completely refused any possible assistance to its people living with us in Canada.

INTERNATIONAL TAX AGREEMENTS

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, may I put a supplementary question to the Minister of National Revenue. In December an international taxing agreement was signed whereby nations could tax pensioners from other nations, and exemptions were made up to $10,000 for all countries, except for British pensioners living in Canada. I wonder why there is this discrimination against British pensioners living in Canada as well as the blow they received about reciprocal pensions?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I think the same situation applies. We have bilateral agreements with various countries. I think the answer to that is, in substance, the same as the answer given by the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

AVIATION INDUSTRY

MANPOWER TRAINING—NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN GOVERNMENTS AND INDUSTRY

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It concerns co-ordination of a manpower training program in the field of aeronautics where there is now a shortage of specialized labour and where a demand for 13,000 workers is expected by 1983. Since the province of Quebec now accounts for 50 per cent of the labour force in this industry, does the minister intend to draw up a planning agreement between both levels of government and the industry to ensure that we can provide a qualified Canadian manpower, not only in Quebec, but throughout Canada, where we will need 13,000 additional workers in the next few years?

[English]

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the hon. member points to a very important area of skill shortage in this country. We have responded to it with two initiatives. First, we have signed an agreement with the aerospace industry to develop long-term planning for human resource needs and to introduce, right now, a number of new training initiatives. We are also beginning negotiations this summer with the provinces to look at the whole area of training agreements so that we can begin to allocate our resources and target them at those areas where high skills are needed. We understand that the shortage of workers in this area is very critical to the economy of the country. We hope that these initiatives will provide solutions. We look forward to the co-operation of the provinces in this very important achievement.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. FLIS—COMMENTS OF MR. RAE

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Madam Speaker, my point of order relates to the question period. It refers to the comments made by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) when he said that when 30 clowns get together, something funny is bound to happen, or something to that effect.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I am afraid that does not constitute a point of order.

RAILWAY ACT

EXTENSION OF STATUTORY GRAIN RATES TO TRITICALE

Hon. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-634, to amend the Railway Act (rates on triticale).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Reid: Madam Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to add triticale and triticale flour to the list of cereal grains which have the benefit of the Crow rate. Triticale and triticale flour do not have that status at the present time and are unable to compete with other grains that do have it.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

RAILWAY ACT

EXTENSION OF STATUTORY GRAIN RATES TO TRITICALE

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-635, to amend the Railway Act (rates on triticale).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Murta: Madam Speaker, my bill is virtually identical to the previous one. The purpose is to include triticale, which is a bread and feed grain of a very high yield, in the Crowsnest Pass rate so that it may be sold in our export markets under the same competitive conditions as wheat.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

POST OFFICE CONTRACTS—MR. GERALD McKEE

Question No. 70—Mr. Cossitt:

1. In each of the past five calendar years, what were the amounts of all contracts received from the Post Office Department by RPR Associates Ltd. or by anyone associated therewith and, in each case (a) what was the amount of the contract (b) what was the purpose of the contract (c) what are the names of all persons who signed the contract on behalf of the government?

2. Was Mr. Gerald McKee a senior employee of the Post Office Department at any time that RPR Associates Ltd. received such contracts?

3. Did Mr. McKee terminate his services with the department or were his services terminated by the department and, if so (a) on what date (b) for what reason?

4. To the knowledge of the government, was Mr. McKee an employee of RPR Associates Ltd.?

5. Was any branch of government approached, directly or indirectly, for business for Gerald McKee Enterprises or for Gerald McKee and, if so, what are all the details?

6. Is it the intention of the government to appoint Gerald McKee to the Public Service and, if so, to which position and department?

7. Has Mr. McKee applied for a position in the Public Service?

8. Will any government decision in regard to Gerald McKee or Gerald McKee Enterprises be in any way based on the fact he was a Liberal Party candidate in Leeds-Grenville in the general elections in 1979 and 1980?

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. In so far as Canada Post is concerned:

2. Yes.

3. Mr. McKee terminated his services with the department.

(a) March 26, 1979.

(b) For personal reasons.

4. Canada Post does not have a record of the subsequent employment of Mr. McKee.

5. No branch of government was approached and Supplies and Services Canada has not awarded any contract for its customer departments to Gerald McKee Enterprises or Gerald McKee.

6. No.

7. In order to respect the intent of Part IV of the Canadian Human Rights Act ("Protection of Personal Information"), it is the Public Service Commission's policy not to disclose this type of information.

8. Not applicable.

SUPPLYING OF INFORMATION CONCERNING CBC

Question No. 2,217—Mr. Cossitt:

What was the name and job designation of each CBC radio and television employee assigned to the Progressive Conservative Party's annual meeting recently held in Ottawa?

Mr. Peter Stollery (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: it has not been customary to require the CBC to provide such details of its internal management and administration as the names and positions of employees assigned to specific program projects. The background to this custom is explained in detail in the reply to question No. 2,530, November 6, 1975.

CBC—VIEWING AUDIENCE

Question No. 2,245—Mr. Cossitt:

1. In what locations are CBC and CTV television in direct competition?

2. In each location, does CBC's viewing audience outdraw CTV's viewing audience over a weekly period and, if not, what steps has CBC taken to improve their share of the audience?

3. Does CBC's 11.00 p.m. news "The National" have a higher viewing audience than CTV's 11.00 p.m. news and, if so, in what locations?

4. Is the CBC taking steps to improve the calibre of its national news coverage and, if so, what are they?

Mr. Peter Stollery (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. St. John's, Sydney/Glace Bay, Halifax, Montreal, Ottawa/Hull, Toronto, Winnipeg, Regina/Moose Jaw, Saskatoon, Calgary, Edmonton, Vancouver.

2. A. C. Nielsen's preliminary estimates for the 1980/81 season, which reflect the CBC's performance during the complete season in the country as a whole, show that CBC-owned and affiliated stations had a 24 per cent viewing share. The audience is so fragmented in a number of centres that U.S. stations had a greater total viewing share than either CBC or CTV.

It should be noted, however, that the share of Canadians' viewing time spent watching Canadian programs approximately equals the share of Canadian programs, or choice in Canadian TV programs, available to them—as opposed to the American and other foreign programs available.

Since the information requested on the CTV network is provided by a syndicated ratings firm, statistics required on CTV viewing shares should be requested from that network.

In its over-all schedule, CBC is not in direct competition for audiences with CTV because of the corporation's specific responsibilities under the Broadcasting Act and the resulting variety of program fare. All broadcasters would naturally like to see their audience share increased, and the CBC will continue to make its productions even better as staff and funds permit.

3. The CBC's share of the audience for the late evening national news is greater than CTV's in Ottawa and Winnipeg. Over the course of the 1980/81 season, the audiences to the two networks' late evening newscasts were equal in absolute terms on a national basis.

4. The CBC considers that the national is already a superior, world-class newscast. However, in September, 1981, it will move from 11 p.m. to 10 p.m. and will be followed by a daily, satellite-based national affairs program. The total package, shown in prime time, will give Canadians a nightly sense of their country and the world.

CBC—EVENTS ON PARLIAMENT HILL

Question No. 2,312—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What is the number of persons who work in any capacity for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in the reporting of events on Parliament Hill and in government departments and what number are (a) technicians (b) newsmen or reporters?

2. What is the number of persons working in the (a) French (b) English (c) foreign section of the Corporation?

Mr. Peter Stollery (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: it should be noted that the following figures represent staff working for four radio and two television networks in English and French, plus Radio Canada International.

(b) 29.

Note: Those not included in (a) and (b) above are producers, editors, directors, production assistants and clerical support staff.

2. Of the above:

(b) 44.

CONSTITUTIONAL RESOLUTION—REFERENCE TO GOD

Question No. 2,424—Mr. Cossitt:

Did the Minister of Justice receive letters and representations on the subject of a reference to God not being made in the original constitutional resolution and, if so (a) how many, including numbers of names on petitions (b) did the representations have a bearing on the reversal of the government's decision in this regard?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Yes, from many Canadians and many members of Parliament on all sides of the House.

(a) To April 22, 1981, 8,033 pieces of mail, no figures were kept on the number of names on petitions.

(b) Yes. It will be recalled that a reference to God was proposed in "A Statement of Principles for A New Constitution" which was submitted by the Prime Minister to provincial ministers at the meeting of June 9, 1980, and tabled in the House of Commons on June 10, 1980.

DND—CONTRACT TO CAE ÉLECTRONIQUE LTÉE

Question No. 2,472—Mr. McKinnon:

1. Did the Department of National Defence place a $515,708 contract with CAE Electronique Ltée. for repair and overhaul of the magnetic anomaly detector system for the CP-140 avionics system and, if so, for what period has the detector been in service?

2. How often does the department expect the system to require repair and overhaul?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. On behalf of the Department of National Defence, the Department of Supply and Services Canada placed a contract with CAE Electronique Ltée, in the amount of $515,707.50 for the repair and overhaul of magnetic anomaly detector (MAD) systems. The first system went into service in June, 1980.

2. Based on previous experience with MAD systems, an estimated 74 sub-systems are forecasted to require third-line maintenance (at contractor's facilities) over the course of the contract, however it is not possible to provide a definite answer to this part of the question. The MAD system is installed in all CP-140 aircraft and in some training simulators; each system is made up of 28 significant sub-systems. The units will be forwarded to the contractor for repair and/or overhaul as the need arises and under the conditions of the contract. The government will only pay for the work actually carried out. The contract includes provisions for some up-front charges to cover the contractor's requirement to set up his facilities; it also includes allowance of $307,400 for CAE to purchase those types of spares only used for third-line maintenance and not carried in the Canadian Forces Supply system. Third-line spare purchases are for multi-year use.

IAN MARTIN ASSOCIATES CONTRACT

Question No. 2,555—Mr. Stewart:

Did the Department of National Defence and the Department of Communications purchase technical service-communications equipment valued at $277,900 from Ian Martin Associates, Ottawa, and, if so, what was the equipment and what technical services were provided?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): The Department of Supply and Services on behalf of the Department of Communications purchased technical services valued at $277,900 from Ian Martin Associates, Ottawa. The services of individuals were provided under nine separate contracts. No equipment was purchased.

The services provided involved the operation and maintenance of the David Florida Laboratory at Shirley's Bay on behalf of the Department of Communications. It has been government policy to contract out to industry for the skills required to operate this facility since it was opened in 1974.

DND—PURCHASE OF SCREWS

Question No. 2,557—Mr. Stewart:

Did the Department of National Defence purchase screws valued at $58,790 from Rolls Royce Canada Inc. and, if so, how many and for what purpose will they be used?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): A contract in the amount of $58,790 was awarded by the Department of Supply and Services, on behalf of the Department of National Defence, to Rolls Royce Canada Inc., for the supply of 15 items of different types of screws. The total quantity ordered was 11,700. The screws are to serve as lifetime spares for the maintenance of the NENE 10 engine manufactured by Rolls Royce and installed in the T33 trainer aircraft.

Mr. Cossitt: I rise on a point of order, madam Speaker. As I have on a number of occasions, I would like to draw the attention of the parliamentary secretary to three questions that have been unanswered for a long time. The last time I raised this matter he promised he would look into it and see if he could facilitate answers.

The first question I refer to is question No. 30, which asks for the number of members of the Canadian Transport Commission and their wives who have passes on Air Canada. The question has been on the Order Paper for about two years. It seems to me a relatively simple thing to answer. The lack of an answer leads, obviously, to one asking what is being hidden.

Question No. 136 is very simple. I was assured by officials of Air Canada that the answer had been prepared for months ago, so I do not know what has happened to it. It is a very simple question and asks when the Liberal party paid Air Canada for the DC-8 it rented in the May 22, 1979 election and points out that it had not paid the bill by the time the February, 1980 election came along. When was the bill paid and how much was it? Apparently there was a dispute between the Liberal party and Air Canada, a Crown corporation. The question has not been answered in over a year.

Finally, question No. 121 asks for the number and names of defeated Liberal candidates and defeated Liberal MPs who have received appointments from the government to various positions in Crown corporations, on boards and so on. That, also, would seem fairly straightforward. We heard a member on the other side today boast about the fact that one of our former colleagues, Ralph Goodale, had placed one foot in the grave by being made leader of the Saskatchewan Liberal party. I would think that if the Liberals are so proud of their former members, they would give us a list of what they have done to all of them.

The theme song of this government is a very old tune; it is called "Roll Out the Barrel". If it comes to rolling out—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, the hon. member has asked this question before and I have assured him that I am getting answers. I would like to point out that of the over 2,000 answers we have provided to date, the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville has been the recipient of the greatest proportion. I am sure he would not want to convey the impression that he is ungrateful because today, out of the eight questions answered, five were in the name of the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville.

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point or order. I want to draw question No. 588 on the Order Paper to the attention of the parliamentary secretary. I asked this question on April 18, 1980. It concerns the cost of the Metric Commission and its operating expenses in 1979 and since its inception. That should be an easy matter of public record. I would appreciate the parliamentary secretary directing the officials to give us an answer as soon as possible.

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, I will undertake to do that.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the hon. parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Knowles: Madam Speaker, I ask the government House leader's pardon if we are getting up on the same point. There have been some discussions about the length of speeches today. Although I am not completely happy with what we have agreed to, I believe there is an understanding that the speeches for the first part of the debate be under Standing Order 31, which will give the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) unlimited time—that is an awful thought—and would also give the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) unlimited time. It would then give the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett) 40 minutes. We understand that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) also wishes to speak. Even though he is the mover of the motion and is not the lead-off speaker, we would be willing to permit him to speak for 40 minutes. Our hope is that after that all speeches could be reduced to 30 minutes, or even to 20 minutes.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I was wondering whether you would recognize me. It is true that Standing Order 31 notwithstanding, we have agreed that speeches would only last 30 minutes instead of 40 minutes. However, I want to clarify a point following the comments of the House leader of the New Democratic Party. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, even though he is the sponsor of the motion, does not, with due respect, have to speak first. The Chair recognized that last week. He could speak later during the debate for an unlimited period of time. However, we have agreed that he will speak for 40 minutes today.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I wish to confirm the discussion and the agreement.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: Order. It will be done as ordered by the House.

NORTH-SOUTH RELATIONS

REPORT OF PARLIAMENTARY TASK FORCE

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs) moved:

That this House take note of the present state and future prospects of Canada's international relations and endorse the broad thrust of the report of the Parliamentary Task Force on North-South Relations.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, it is obvious to all of us that our world has become unpredictable and unstable. We would also agree that it has become more dangerous. Mankind is living in a state of more or less extended crises. Violence and disorder have become banal. Injustice no longer causes indignation.

This global instability has many causes. There are many more countries in the world community than there used to be, and each is vigorously asserting its own particular needs and ambitions. Economic problems and international disputes have increased in both number and severity. While the superpowers have grown stronger, they often seem to have lost control over events. We have seen international law and economic systems break down more frequently, causing people to believe that things are out of control. There is a generalized condition of crisis expectation.

We usually think of crisis as a sudden shock, as a surprise, a burst of violence, an invasion. Obviously, the world needs to prevent such incidents when prevention is possible, and to contain them when they occur.

It must be understood, however, that such incidents usually result from pent-up tension. They are the flash-points of deep-seated problems. If the world hopes to prevent such shocks, we have to deal with the basic conditions which cause them. The only effective way to manage a crisis is to go to its roots.

Unfortunately, a succession of jarring events can so monopolize the attention and energy of governments that they neglect to deal with the persistent, underlying problems in world affairs, thus guaranteeing more shocks in the future. Effective management of crises means getting at the basic causes of the conditions we deplore, and really changing them. The challenge is extremely complex and difficult, but not hopeless. If we can muster the will to do the job, it can be done.

The necessary strength of will and sense of common purpose which is required of the industrialized democracies will not likely be forged out of any perception of immediate physical danger to ourselves, posed by the anger and frustration of the suffering peoples of the world.

The starving refugee lying in the hot dust of the Sahel can scarcely summon the strength to help himself, let alone strike out at us. If his children survive they will remember us, and with fury in their hearts, you can be sure. But that is a threat for another time. It does not frighten us into action today.

[If the more powerful countries are to summon the will to respond in a more effective way, and with greater unity, to the problems of a chaotic world, it will be because of two things: first, a decision to give practical application to the human values which we in the West say we hold in common; and second, a better understanding of the less noble-sounding but no less compelling imperative of our own self-interest.]

What are these values that we hold in common? Surely the most basic is freedom, the freedom of individuals and of nations, the political freedom which distinguishes East from West, the freedom of the market system upon which our economies are based. The freedom of which I speak is not an abstract concept divorced from our daily lives, or reserved for patriotic speeches on national holidays; it is the very foundation and life-giving spirit of the societies which we have built in the various countries of the West.

[Within our own borders we have long realized that there can be no freedom for some without freedom for all. An assault against the basic rights of my neighbour inevitably places in jeopardy my own rights, my own security and freedom. We have little trouble accepting the truth and the implications of that statement within our own borders.

We have more trouble in giving a modern answer to the very old question: Who is my neighbour? Is she the woman rummaging for food in the back streets of an Asian shanty town? Is he the man in South America in prison for leading a trade union? The people dying in Africa for lack of medical care, or clean water, are they my neighbours? What about those who are dying in the spirit in the villages of India for lack of a job, or an education, or hope? Are my neighbours the children running from the sound of gunfire in the streets of Beirut?

If we, the peoples of the North, say yes, then we will act; we will act together to keep hope alive. If we say no, then they are doomed and so are we.

The urgency of those problems constitutes one of the major reasons why this government has been eager, as has the New Democratic Party, in arranging time for this important debate on Canada's foreign policy.

I began, Madam Speaker, by saying that we live in an unstable world where we no longer enjoy the comfort of being able to predict future events with a fair degree of certainty. Though political and economic instability may be most visible in the Third World, we must remember that all the great problems of the world are interrelated. The problems of East-West and North-South relations, of energy, nuclear proliferation, the Atlantic alliance, the law of the sea, the environment, refugees and sporadic outbursts of violence and war—all of these form a complex of cause and effect.

There will continue to be shocks and confrontation between cultures and technology, between rich and poor, between generations, even between neighbours, as the world community attempts to live more successfully with the one predictable factor on our planet, the inevitability of constant and rapid change. That is the theme of my remarks today: the management of change, the management of the crises which change can represent.

These are troubled times for the world. Economically, the eighties and nineties will not have much in common with the fifties and sixties, when we became convinced that rapid growth was as certain as the sunrise. Now, after having been psychologically conditioned to expect constant expansion, countries have to learn to manage the experience of economic compression.

That is another example of the instability which we must learn to manage. It will surely be one of the major preoccupations of the summit meeting here in Canada next month. In that perspective, the Ottawa summit could be more crucially important than any of its predecessors.

The impact of a summit on world problems is not immediate, largely because it is not meant to be a policy-making occasion. Its great value is that it permits the leaders of the principal industrialized democracies to share their analyses of problems, to strengthen their sense of common purpose, to assess where they can come closer together or move forward together.

Originally, the subject matter, as we know, was limited to economic issues. More recent summits have turned also to international political issues. The Ottawa summit will undoubtedly continue this trend, if only because of the preoccupations of the leaders themselves. Our meeting will derive added importance from the fact that most of the participants will be gathering together for the first time.

The international press will probably place a lot of emphasis on the ideological differences of leaders who stand on the right, or the left, or in the centre. It is true that the electorates of various countries have been sending very different signals to their respective governments. But I do not expect that we will be overly preoccupied at the summit by our differences; I think that we will be trying to chart a common course, whether on North-South questions, on approaches to East-West relations, or on international trade, for example. We shall be trying to identify the broad areas where our countries can proceed together toward shared goals, transcending the differences among our national policies.

All of the summit participants know that the world looks to them for leadership. From the Third World, the look will be skeptical. But I believe leadership is emerging, and that it will be sensitive to the priorities of our times. The test of the summit, therefore, should not be whether we come out of the meeting with specific decisions. The true test will be whether all summit participants believe that we are defining together the best approaches to the great issues of the day, based on the objectives and values which we share in common.

This summit will be not only of the most difficult ever held, but will also be intentionally different. It is designed to be relatively unstructured, so as to give leaders the maximum opportunity to discuss the broad themes of crisis and opportunity, and how both can be effectively managed.

At Venice last year we agreed that we had to get back to these basic issues of international life, so as to strengthen our sense of common purpose. We are attempting, therefore, to free ourselves from a set agenda this year. It is for the same reason that the meetings are being held in the relative seclusion of Montebello.

The most fundamental problems we are up against at the international level are tied up with the instability of our economic and political environment. And the management of the various economies of the industrialized world is not the least of those problems.

Right now, the western industrialized nations must cope with slow rates of growth, high levels of unemployment and rampant inflation. On top of that, due to the variation in the exchange markets, in recent weeks the European currencies suffered unprecedented devaluations as compared with the American dollar.

That devaluation of European currencies, coupled with the over-all increase in interest rates, adversely affects the economic growth of several countries which will take part in the summit. It is now feared that the expected economic upturn may be delayed at least until early 1982.

Certain participants in the summit, including Canada, are worried about the negative international spin-offs of the American domestic policy and about its consequences on interest rates for instance. The role of the summit is to ensure that the various national policies aimed at common objectives are not incompatible and counterproductive. Any action by a country must be undertaken while keeping in mind its impact on other nations. That implies first an awareness of the economic and political situation of the partners and then a decision to co-ordinate the efforts so as to minimize the conflicts and the negative spin-offs.

[English]

Another source of great instability is the state of East-West relations. Here there is no denying some basic facts. The Soviet Union has invaded Afghanistan, implicitly threatening all of the countries of western Asia and ignoring the call of the Third World to get out. In addition, there is no denying that the Soviet Union has both expanded its military presence in the oceans of the world and increased dramatically the weaponry which is arrayed against the West.

These challenges constitute another more traditional form of crisis to be managed. Western countries must develop the means to take a united stand, so that in the event of a direct threat, there will be a swift and concerted response, in the defence of our own interest and the interests of those countries which look to us for strength and support.

Personally, I believe that the good sense of Soviet leaders will prevail. I believe they will not feel themselves so threatened by events that they have to respond to the challenge of change by the force of arms. We all watch the crisis in Poland. The Soviet Union should know that recourse to arms is a losing game, for them and for all the world.

That being said, unfortunately we must act in the full knowledge that we are living in a dangerous world. Our security and that of the western alliance must rest on reality and be credible in our own eyes and in those of others. Experience over the past five years has shown the fragility of the "détente" as a basis for East-West relations. But I believe that the events in the coming months and years will determine what will be the next phase of the East-West relations. I think that all the countries involved recognize that we all have a stake in stabilizing those relations, particularly the southern nations which ought to be kept clear of the tensions between the eastern and the western worlds. But the U.S.S.R. is a superpower which claims the right to be heard on the same terms as its rival on the problems which affect any region of the world. The Russians claim that right for reasons of national interest but also, obviously, for reasons of an ideological nature. Consequently there is a potential element of rivalry among the superpowers in every troubled area of the developing nations.

One of the shortcomings of détente is, paradoxically, that it was conceived in a relatively balanced and stable European context. Even though this concept was firmly implanted in Europe, its value had never been fully tested outside the continent. Now it has become obvious that this concept is even harder to implement outside Europe. More serious still, the tensions arising from the failure of détente in Third World countries have had an impact on the main scene of the action between East and West, namely Europe. It has become clear that East-West relations cannot follow certain rules in some areas of the world and totally different rules elsewhere.

Is there no way out? There are some conditions more conducive to improved East-West relations that come to mind. The role of superpowers cannot be denied, but it must not be exclusive. To survive, détente must be recognized as indivisible, yet it is a fact that it is interpreted differently in the western and in the eastern allied countries, as well as the developing and non-aligned countries, which, of course, has been a constant source of misunderstanding. The policy to be followed is to refuse to involve developing countries in the military rivalry between East and West, as this would only aggravate tensions in this no-win situation in which neither North nor South would win.

It is in the best interests of the Third World that developing countries not become involved in the competition between East and West. That is exactly what Tito and Nehru were trying to achieve through non-alignment, and we can only hope that the movement of non-aligned countries will return to its basic philosophy. Western countries must re-examine their relations with the U.S.S.R. in order to promote stability throughout the world. A strong military alliance is essential to the achievement of this goal.

We must also recognize that a good sine qua non condition of stability would be a basic agreement between the superpowers. In this respect, the superpowers must reactivate the best arrangements between the United States and the U.S.S.R. in the early seventies, when the "red phones" were installed and when the world could rely on a basic compatibility of interests between the two countries.

We will also witness an increased number of crises which, should the worst come to the worst, could degenerate into an all-out confrontation between the superpowers. Moreover it seems that a large proportion of these crises will arise in the undeveloped areas of the world, where the West has provided no set of arrangements to protect its own interests such are those between North America and Japan or Western Europe. We would be well advised, therefore, to ascertain what are the means at our disposal to meet crises everywhere and especially in Third World countries, where the interest of the Western world would be at stake.

As far as Europe, the principal theatre of confrontation between East and West, is concerned, we are in a position today to reply to this question with more confidence than we were a year ago. This is not due so much to a lack of tension in Europe, but rather to the fact that at least the political consultation process within the NATO allies has greatly improved to meet the challenges of the future. The willingness of the allies to develop a concerted strategy to deal with East-West relations in Europe has increased. The policy of reinforcing NATO defence preparedness, while proposing again to the Soviet Union to negotiate the arms limitation agreements, is supported by the whole organization, as confirmed by a recent meeting of NATO ministers. Thus, NATO remains an indispensable instrument to the maintenance of cohesion and strength which ensure stability and balance in Europe, which is clearly in the interest of the West. And the Soviet Union, in spite of its open criticism of the organization, would undoubtedly concede that stability and balance in Europe rank among its higher priorities.

It is more difficult, Madam Speaker, to feel confident about emergency arrangements made for situations that arise outside Europe. Neither East nor West is on its own territory there. The rules of the game have not been established. While a few firm lines have been drawn, such as in the Gulf area, the situation remains ambiguous, and this ambiguity can be dangerous. Western leaders must continue to ask themselves what is the best way to protect western interests in these areas while respecting the sovereignty of the countries involved. East and West must try to redefine a mutually acceptable code of behaviour for international relationships, but before this can be done, an answer must be found to the crisis in Afghanistan, whose invasion goes against everything that the western world as well as the Third World consider acceptable.

The Ottawa Summit should provide the opportunity for western leaders to bring into line their general views on this matter. This is undeniably a concern which should come foremost on the agenda of any meeting on international affairs. The prospect of a new arms race when billions of people are starving to death is truly shocking. If we decided to use for peaceful purposes the amounts we spend in two weeks for military purposes, we could provide drinking water and basic health care to the population of the entire world. However, people feel the need for even more protection, and an increase in our military spending to offset the increased amounts allocated to armament by the U.S.S.R. seems inevitable for the moment. It is up to the western world to find an answer to this serious problem, if possible in consultation with the Soviet Union.

Moreover, SALT negotiations should resume as soon as both parties have enough confidence in each other to conduct such talks effectively, and I must say that the sooner, the better. Putting an end to the nuclear arms race involves tremendous difficulties. However, the Government of Canada still believes that as discouraging as these difficulties might be and as small as any immediate chance of progress might seem, the superpowers must be urged to reflect with all due gravity on the consequences of a resumption of nuclear escalation. The government still firmly believes that the nuclear arms race must be stopped and reversed, and that a new balance must be sought to increasingly lower arms levels. The stifling strategy which I suggested at the first special session of the UN on disarmament in 1978 remains valid in this regard. Nothing has occurred in the meantime to weaken my convictions on this point.

The Canadian nuclear safety policy, revised in 1974 and 1976, sets high standards. However, we apply it pragmatically in a spirit of respect for the sovereignty and sensibilities of our partners in the nuclear field. We shall continue to refine this policy so as to develop an effective national system of non-proliferation and guarantee as much as possible that Canadian nuclear exports do not contribute to nuclear proliferation.

[English]

I have spoken about the global macro-economic situation, which affects all our lives, and about the decline in the state of East-West relations, which also affects us all. Less understood is the potential impact of North-South tensions on Canada and other industrialized countries and the need to give priority to the management of that latent crisis.

The first step should be to understand what we mean when we refer to the North and to the South. One can legitimately question whether there is a distinct North and a distinct South in every sense. Within the Third World there are as many differences as in the world itself. From the outset it needs to be emphasized that the South is not a homogeneous group of countries. It contains countries with the highest per capita income in the world and those with the lowest, countries with the fastest growth and those suffering negative growth, countries with the world's biggest financial surpluses and those with the greatest deficits, countries with abundant natural resources and those with none and countries with sophisticated, modern industrial economies and those with rudimentary, tribal, agricultural societies.

Yet the South is not a myth. It is a group of countries, most of them former colonies, held together by a shared perception of their status in relation to the rest of the world. In their view, solidarity among themselves is the way to exert countervailing power against the weight of the industrial North. Their vision of a new international economic order proceeds from their common view that the old rules have nor permitted equal opportunity or an equitable sharing of the fruits of effort.

They are right. Justice is on their side. But even if we were not moved by justice, common sense and self-interest should tell us that if we want growing markets for our products, an orderly global economy and peace in the world, we should support reform. We should enhance the growth of opportunities of the South, selecting the best bilateral and multilateral techniques to do the job. That effort should include a process of global negotiations.

The picture today is not one of unremitting gloom. Since World War II living standards in many Third World countries have improved dramatically. New economic power centres are emerging. The newly industrialized countries must find the markets and the means to permit them to develop.

Some countries of the South are growing stronger every day. Let us help them grow. But there are other countries, the poorest of the poor, which are struggling just to survive. Their situation will be critical for as far ahead as the eye can see. Eight hundred million people live on the margin of human existence. They live with overwhelming deprivation, with despair and in a state of perpetual crisis. The management of this crisis is a test of both the humanity and the credibility of governments in both North and South.

The best tool with which to help the poorest is outright aid. We have to assist them to develop the potential to feed themselves and provide for other fundamental needs like health and shelter. It is a ghastly cynicism which pretends that international co-operation cannot bring these lives closer to minimum standards of human dignity.

The overwhelming fact which governments must face is that international aid efforts are inadequate. The gap between rich and poor is not closing but opening wider, in spite of everything that has been done.

The Canadian aid record can be improved and is being improved. My government is committed to that. But I do point out that we have made a lot of progress since the sixties. Our efforts have done a lot of good, and we have won ourselves solid friends in the world. In Canada and throughout the developed world there is a need for even greater public involvement—not just through round table discussions among the knowledgeable and already involved, but in communities and schools—so that growing public support will encourage governments to do more and to do it better.

I firmly believe that the world can and must grow enough food, provide clean water, decent housing, health care and real hope for all its people. It can be done, but it will require a gigantic effort. That is the message of the Brandt commission, reflected eloquently in the report of our parliamentary task force on North-South relations. I congratulate the chairman of that task force, the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau)—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: —and the members of all the parties in this House who contributed to that most compelling report.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Its message is one which the government can endorse and support.

I believe that despite bleak political prospects for greatly increased aid flows from the recession-prone North, reason will prevail and a major assault on world poverty can still be launched in earnest.

The need to assist the poorest is one emphasis of Canada's efforts in international co-operation. But the primary need of those countries with growing export potential is, as the slogan says, "trade, not aid". These are the countries which are arguing that the world's economic structures work inherently to their perpetual disadvantage. The process which is required to redress their grievances involves the sharing of power, not power in the classical sense of armies and empires but in the sense of access to the means of development. Gaining that kind of power means gaining access to the international institutions where the decision-making process should take greater account of developing countries' specific difficulties: access to international capital markets, greater security in commodity prices and access to technological skills and to markets for manufactured products.

Other specific and urgent needs will require the concentrated attention of governments as well. Energy and agriculture are priorities because of the severity of the impact of energy costs on oil-importing developing countries and because of the danger of food production not being able to keep up with population growth.

I do not expect a sudden breakthrough toward solutions in the series of important international meetings scheduled for the coming months, but I do expect a better political focus on the major priorities. I do not expect that the world's sense of crisis will be entirely eased by whatever collective response we make to the problems of development; but I do think that the basic economic causes of instability in the Third World can be successfully attacked through a co-operative international management effort.

I have spoken of Canada's role and purposes in world affairs. I have spoken particularly of the compelling need for progress in North-South relations. I have placed the issues involved in the context of the need for the international community to mobilize itself to manage crises more effectively. The summit meeting in Ottawa in July will have a particular importance in determining our collective ability to deal with the problems I have described.

Those are the issues that I wanted to discuss in the consultations I have undertaken in the last several months with the leaders of some key developing countries. I considered it important that the views of major nations such as Brazil, Mexico, Saudi Arabia, Algeria, Nigeria and others I have visited, be taken into account by the summit leaders. I am very conscious of the Canadian role and interest in these matters. Canada alone cannot come up with viable solutions. But we can contribute to them. Moreover, we need to strengthen relationships with a variety of countries whose interests in economic development correspond to our own. These include the countries I have visited.

For Canadians, the state of the world is of deep importance, and not least because a healthy international environment is vital to Canadian economic growth. We need stronger economic links not only with developing countries but also with our summit partners. Fundamentally, it is these economic partnerships which will stimulate the pace of development, both here and abroad.

I have not covered all aspects of our foreign policy, Madam Speaker. Many other vital Canadian concerns will be addressed by my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. McGuigan), later in this debate and by other members sitting on this side of the chamber. I have sought to focus the attention of the House on those areas of crisis and of opportunity where the most basic interests of our people, as human beings and as Canadians, are at stake. I have done so with confidence that Canada will rise to the challenge of our times, and in so doing will contribute to justice, stability and peace in this still wonderful world.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased today to be able to take part in this critical and important debate, and I say to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) at the outset that I appreciate his sharing with us the plans and preparations for the summit meeting to be held next month. I listened with care to his discussion of the management of crises and the management of change and how they apply to both East-West and North-South relations. I had hoped, however, that perhaps he would have been more specific in dealing with the responses that Canada would offer to certain of those crises which now confront us, and as a result I shall be raising questions which I feel have not been adequately dealt with.

As we try, Mr. Speaker, to grapple with the broad sweep of Canada's relations with other states, it is striking that this government has provided no comprehensive statement of policy to give direction to or to increase the understanding of Canadians. As welcome as this debate, no single speech or series of speeches can substitute for the evaluation in a comprehensive way of what our foreign policy is.

The last white paper on defence was exactly ten years ago. Indeed, the last comprehensive review of foreign policy was more than ten years ago and it is now entirely irrelevant to the conditions of international politics. The last aid strategy paper was for the years 1975 to 1980, and in the absence of any successor document must we assume that there is no strategy for aid for 1980 to 1985?

I am therefore delighted, Sir, to see that one of the recommendations of the North-South task force is that the government carry out, and I quote:

—comprehensive evaluations of the impact of its policies on developing countries.

Now, I would say, Sir, that we should go further than that and suggest that we also require a comprehensive evaluation of the over-all direction of our foreign policy, the kind of evaluation we have not had in the past ten years. That evaluation, when completed, should be submitted for debate to the Canadian Parliament.

Let us be clear what the central issue before us is. We have entered into a decade which will be marked by great transformations in international politics and in our foreign policy. I would like to think that, with the decade of the 1970s behind us, the inward-looking defensive attitudes that characterized Canadian foreign policy in that period are also behind us.

[Translation]

How unfortunate it would be if we do not have new ideas or new policies to meet the challenges facing us in matters of international policy, and if we always have the consensus of the western countries before acting to solve international problems. In some cases, we should try to act as a responsible member of the western alliance, that is, as a member who can be depended upon. In other cases, we must be willing to act on our own initiative and, as the task force indicated, in keeping with our well-established tradition of contribution and leadership in world affairs.

[English]

Let me turn first, Mr. Speaker, to some basic considerations about our role in NATO, although this will be dealt with in more detail by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon). It is clearly true, Sir, that at the heart of our foreign policy is the commitment to the collective defence of the western industrialized democracies. During the past decade, after a rather shaky start Canada has reconfirmed its commitment to NATO and bilateral defence arrangements with the United States. After considerable political and diplomatic effort, we have also found our place in the highest council of the West, the economic summit of the leading international states. These are vitally important undertakings. I accept without reservation that we must play an appropriate part in collective defence, and that we cannot influence our friends if they believe that we are failing to do our fair share.

The government of which I was a part made it clear to our NATO partners that Canada could be counted on to re-equip and strengthen Canadian forces in Europe and to make our contribution to joint endeavours such as the airborne early warning system. While I accept the importance of these obligations, I wonder now to what use we are putting our membership in the alliance. Surely it is not enough to lie low and always wait for consensus of the other nations to emerge. Yet that seems to be the policy of the present government. Where do we stand, for example, on questions of arms negotiations with the Soviet Union? The Prime Minister dealt with this in part but not in specific detail.

I would like to know what suggestions Canada has to offer which might further the success of that enterprise. What is our response to the Soviet build-up of forces in central Europe; and, I ask how do we intend to play our part in the western commitment announced at the recent NATO meeting to require restraint and reciprocity on the part of the Soviet Union?

Imposing some restraint on the Soviet Union has never been more necessary than at present in regard to Poland. The ominous Soviet moves in the last week have once again underlined the gravity of the situation. Nothing is more threatening to the process and future of détente. It is therefore incumbent upon us to persuade the Soviet Union, in every way open to us, to refrain from an attack upon Poland.

Poland is a signatory to the Helsinki declaration on which we have placed so much emphasis in our foreign policy toward eastern European countries. It will not be enough to condemn mildly a Soviet invasion after it occurs, as happened in the case of Afghanistan. The NATO allies must individually and collectively use every instrument and every channel of diplomacy to induce restraint on the part of the Soviet Union. Our wish is that the Poles be allowed the possibility of determining their own political future.

Unhappily, the post-war history of Europe has seen the acceptance of a Soviet sphere of influence in eastern Europe. But this cannot mean that we are indifferent to the fate of Poland; nor is it the case that we are without influence on the Soviet Union.

What we require is a collective allied determination to exert that influence to the utmost, so that we help preserve the limited freedom of action which the Poles have struggled so hard to achieve. We should not believe we can achieve that only through quiet diplomacy. It requires the expression of open public concern, and that has been in short supply from this government.

While we do our part to help the people of central Europe, we should also remember that we have an overriding interest in the pursuit of arms control and disarmament. What has happened to the government's initiative on disarmament announced in the Speech from the Throne? Yes, we have an ambassador for disarmament, but what opportunities has he been given to advance new policies or to publicize the issues?

Over the years I have been impressed by the number of committed, serious analysts of foreign policy who have come to the belief that dramatic steps must be taken to curb the growth of the arms race. Most recently, in an article in the Wall Steet Journal, George Kennan, the most distinguished of American analysts, pleaded for a new approach to the problem of controlling nuclear weapons. He asked us to put aside the fine points and technical arguments which invariably lead to the demand for more weapons. He suggested that the United States should approach the Soviet Union and, in all sanity, seek out the common interest in reducing the destructive power of nuclear arsenals.

Where once, in the 1950s, several hundred nuclear weapons were thought to constitute a massive deterrent, it is now the case that thousands of warheads are deployed by both superpowers. Thousands more are being built, and still both superpowers are apparently insecure and uncertain about their own capabilities and, indeed, the capabilities and intentions of the other side.

It is clear that some within the Reagan administration in Washington would like to see arms control policies delayed, but that is no reason for us to abandon the task as well. Indeed, it places a greater obligation upon us to seek out new policies and to keep interest alive in what is ultimately the most fundamental task ahead of us.

What I look for, then, is not the weary observation that arms control measures will be unfashionable for the next four years, but rather some greater commitment of resources and interest by the Canadian government which will focus attention on this politically catastrophic situation. It is not an issue which can be ignored. If the superpowers want to ignore it, then our task may well be to insist, through the strength of our ideas, that they return to it.

Let me now turn to the related problem of regional instability. At the recent NATO council meeting it was agreed that the NATO members would co-operate and consult in regard to matters of regional instability outside the NATO area, but there would not be a formal extension of NATO's area of responsibility. This leaves us squarely with the decision as to how we Canadians intend to respond to problems of regional instability. Canadians should be aware how directly important to Canada is this question.

We are now seen by others as a country with an energy exporting potential—that is, if the National Energy Program does not fritter away our potential. Since crucial problems of regional instability involve the disruption of energy supplies, it is clearly the case that no serious international conflict will be without repercussions in the country.

The prospect of such international conflicts are great. It goes without saying that they exist in the Persian Gulf and the Middle East; they exist in Africa, where there could be increased military intervention by regional and outside powers. As recent experience has indicated, we know that they exist in the Caribbean and Central America, where the issues come a good deal closer to home for Canadians. How are we to contribute to the stability of such regions? In regard to the Middle East, it is surely important that we do not follow the American lead without carefully considering alternative strategies.

What is the government's position—and it has not been spelled out—in regard to the American-sponsored force in the Sinai? it is time to recognize that our distinguished long service with United Nations peacekeeping missions earned us enormous good will around the world. Before we ignore that tradition and participate in an American selected force for the Sinai, we should ensure that every means to bring the force under the auspices of the United Nations has been exhausted. Has the government done that? If so, let it explain what it has done and what is the present position. And let us in the process reaffirm a fundamental commitment to the peace and security responsibilities of the United Nations.

In other regions we must recognize that there may be a serious conflict between the security interests of the United States and the economic and social development of the region.

For example, in the Caribbean, in Central America and in Africa, the United States has served notice that it sees the Soviet Union as an interventionist power and intends to oppose populist movements on the grounds that they are sponsored by the Soviet Union or other outside powers. Here is yet another case where it will be vital for Canada to determine its own interests and its own interpretation of events. If we have the capabilities to help stabilize a region or a friendly country, then on what grounds will we choose to exercise those capabilities? We have not even begun to debate that question in Canada.

At a recent meeting with President Reagan, President Lopez Portillo of Mexico indicated that on a range of issues Mexico was anxious to co-operate with the United States, but that in respect to other matters, particularly those involving the interpretation of political and social developments in Central America, Mexico disagreed with Washington and intended to pursue its own policies. Canada should be no less determined to pursue its own foreign policy in that region.

Why is it so difficult for us to indicate our areas of disagreement and to take appropriate action in pursuit of our own views and interests? The recent and continuing case of El Salvador is surely to the point. We see an ongoing story of violence, assassination, and the all too familiar flow of political refugees into neighbouring states.

Are we really without the means to judge the causes of this problem? When this question was debated in the House earlier this year, members on this side impressed on the government that the basic problem was not one of intervention by the Soviet Union, but rather a class conflict rooted in the extreme inequalities of the El Salvadorean society, inequalities which the military junta is only too willing to accept and protect. In the past we have been involved in helping to absorb and relocate large numbers of refugees from societies fraught with conflict similar to that found in Central America today. Can we really then say that the situation in El Salvador is irrelevant to us? I regret to say that the response of this government to the plight of the El Salvadoreans, and to the situation in Central America, has been timid and grossly inadequate.

Regional instability has yet another aspect which has been brought home to us in the last week in a truly historic and startling manner. The Israeli attack upon the nuclear reactor in Iraq is the clearest evidence yet that nuclear proliferation is a potentially catastrophic development on this planet. We do not need to determine the rights and wrongs of that particular situation to understand that, for the first time, one state has judged that its security requires a military attack upon the nuclear installations of another. Other states will now surely follow suit. Without a doubt, we have crossed a threshold in nuclear proliferation. The spectre that the spread of nuclear technology hastens the incidence of nuclear war is clear for all to see. I want to repeat and underline that the spectre that the spread of nuclear technology hastens the incidence of nuclear war is now clear for all to see.

As a nuclear exporting state, Canada has an overwhelming responsibility to take whatever steps are necessary and possible to control the spread of nuclear weapons technology. For many years I have been a strong advocate of stringent safeguards on the sale of nuclear technology. Nothing short of a dramatic effort by the United States involved in the sale of nuclear processes will now bring this problem under control.

The two states that sold nuclear technology to Iraq, France and Italy, are participating members of the summit in Ottawa next month. That summit will bring together the leading exporters of nuclear technology. Could there be any more appropriate subject for discussion at the summit than the problem of nuclear proliferation? We must assume collective responsibility for this problem. If we cannot use summit meetings to stress the urgency of a response to this potential disaster, then it is hard to know what the utility of these meetings can be.

There is a stark choice before us, and it is this: Are commercial interests and competition to win the day, or will we co-operate in an effort to control nuclear proliferation? Indeed, we shall watch with a sense of concern and urgency to see if the summiteers confront this situation.

In discussing international conflict I have not so far raised the question of human rights. But the plight of political refugees in Central America and elsewhere in the world raises this next area of concern about our foreign policy.

[Translation]

Less than two years ago, we had to face the massive arrival of Indo-Chinese refugees. They became an enormous challenge for Canada which had to live up to its international reputation of a country sympathetic to the refugee problems. I am pleased to say that all levels of government acted with generosity and openness. However, it should be acknowledged that such events put our resources and organizations to the test. Consequently, we should entirely review our policy on human rights as well as our capacity to respond to emergencies involving refugees.

[English]

For example, at the national level we should now be considering ways to monitor more closely situations of instability and of human rights violations, having in mind, among other things, their potential for generating massive refugee movements. We should also consider whether our resettlement plans are sufficiently flexible to allow the forward planning necessary to deal with the nature and scope of the problems likely to arise. And as we consider our capability in this regard, we should also be examining the co-operation of governmental and private groups, for it is clear from the experience that we have had, that the support of private groups is essential to the successful relocation of refugees. Those are things we can do at the national level.

At the international level we should recognize that the United Nations covenant on human rights, drawn up in 1951, is now quite inadequate. Indeed, the very definition of a refugee is no longer pertinent when it does not apply to the displaced Thais or fear-ridden Cambodians who are internal refugees in their own countries. As I argued in my speech to the 34th session of the General Assembly, the United Nations must find better, more certain ways to deal with gross violations of human rights, no matter where they happen.

We must be able to take effective action immediately, not years after the abuses occur. And to achieve this, it must be recognized that wholesale abuses are not now the unfortunate byproduct of a war situation, but, with disturbing frequency, are used as a deliberate instrument of government policy, as in Kampuchea, Viet Nam and Uganda.

A corollary need, Mr. Speaker, is to establish both national and international agencies to monitor the distressingly large number of disappearances of individuals in the world. A knowledge of these disappearances is the essential prerequisite if the governments responsible are to be held accountable. Only a major collaborative effort will permit pressure to be brought to bear to prevent these large-scale assassinations.

Moreover, as we examine the role of human rights in our foreign policy, it will again be necessary for us to understand that our policy may not be compatible with that of the United States. Surely no one can have missed the thrust of President Reagan's policy on human rights. As we have seen in the last few days, there was an attempt to obtain Senate approval for the appointment of Ernest Lafever as assistant state secretary for human rights, a man who is on record as favouring a two-side approach to human rights. His idea is to criticize and condemn publicly all Soviet left-wing violations of human rights, but to use quiet diplomacy with those right-wing governments which are guilty of violations.

We must reinforce and let it be known that a cornerstone of Canadian foreign policy, declared and open, is that human rights are human rights. Let us monitor the violations and raise our voice in protest against them with scrupulous fairness and with total indifference to the political nature of the government which practices the violations.

The resolution before us today also asks us to endorse the broad thrust of the North-South task force. I do not intend to dwell at length on this important question, for my colleague, the hon. member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche), who was a member of the task force, and, indeed, its co-chairman, will take it up at greater length later in the debate. But in light of the comments that I have made on the need for clear initiatives in foreign policy, I think it is important to note that what we need is not simply agreement with the broad thrust of the task force report, but commitment to those recommendations the government has accepted and which will be elaborated upon later in this debate.

We all understand the severe difficulties that are involved in any partial restructuring of our national economy and of the international economy to meet the needs of Third World countries. But it is also clear that in the decade to come we have an absolute obligation to make this effort.

For the very poorest countries, who are becoming progressively poorer, we need to make greater efforts to provide them with minimal economic security and with the capital transfers that are a prerequisite to their economic development.

To those Third World countries who are successfully developing, the newly industrialized countries, we in the North need to show imagination and courage in finding the trade relationships which will be to our mutual advantage. For this will lead not only to mutual economic improvement but to the enrichment of our social and cultural life.

I am pleased the government intends to place North-South issues on the agenda of the summit. But I must also register my dismay that it has taken it so long to express its concern for this issue. After all, it has been on the international agenda, at least on the agenda of those countries of the South, during the whole of the tenure of the present Prime Minister. His recognition of this issue, though belated, is welcome.

However, it is not sufficient—and I say this is all seriousness—that the travel to Lagos, Brasilia, and Algiers to address this question, important though those visits are. When has he explained it to the steelworker in Hamilton, or the housewife in Regina, or the textile worker in Shawinigan? The greatest selling job needs to be done here at home, a task largely ignored to date.

By choosing to make North-South issues one of the focal points of our foreign policy in the decade to come, we will be taking a large step to define the areas in which we intend to concentrate our efforts. In my comments today I have sought to point to some of those areas. It should be clear that our foreign policy cannot simply be a series of well-intentioned, high-minded actions. We must protect our economic and security interests by close co-operation with our like-minded allies in western Europe and North America. We must be sure that we take the appropriate steps to play our part in those allied activities which establish the common purpose and common interests of the West.

On the other hand, each state, however much committed to the alliance, must be free to analyse and respond to the great issues of international politics which lie ahead. Each member of the alliance must be free to choose the areas in which it will take the lead and implement fresh ideas.

Today I have tried to suggest the directions Canada should take. We must ensure that a clear and persistent voice is heard in support of the ultimate objective of arms control in reducing the prospect of the resort to nuclear weapons. We should be willing to lead the way in order to achieve a more effective control over the spread of nuclear weapons through the exploitation of civilian nuclear technology.

I have suggested that we have a traditional interest in human rights that we must apply without favour to all states—yes, including ourselves. And with others, I am enthusiastically in favour of initiatives and long-term policies which will reduce the gap between the rich and poor nations of the world. In emphasizing these initiatives, I do not ignore or disregard the importance of our military contributions to western European and North American defence, or to the protection of our own national interests.

But if we also allow ourselves the opportunity to pursue internationalist policies, then we will not only be returning to an honourable tradition in Canadian foreign policy but will be creating the grounds for popular support of foreign policy, even, perhaps, evoking the admiration of other states.

I want to quote from the task force report, Mr. Speaker, as follows:

> Leadership cannot come from governments alone. It must flow from, must involve all Canadians. The challenge of international co-operation must enter our every-day concerns.

I fully support that view and the parallel recommendation that Parliament be given a continuing mandate to play an active role in overseeing and evaluating foreign policy. The time when foreign policy could be left to the dictates of anonymous bureaucrats is long since past. The success of policy now depends on the co-operation and support of many individuals and private groups. That was the approach I tried to take as minister when I initiated the review of foreign policy through the parliamentary process.

As the task force has so well shown, Canadians, as individuals and groups, have found a forum for their views in presenting evidence to the committees of Parliament. As with the sub-committee on Latin America, Mr. Speaker, I hope to see that process continue and become as an essential element in the renewal of our foreign policy.

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I was indeed glad that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) opened the debate today, the second debate we have had in the past decade in this House on foreign policy. It is only the second. I was very sorry indeed that he did not give to the subject matter the same kind of rigorous thought and attention that he clearly gave to an earlier speech in this House on the Constitution. I do not think that is because the Prime Minister is not interested in foreign policy; I think he is. It is probably because he has not yet decided, nor has the government decided, what route they would like Canada to go. I am sure everyone in the Department of External Affairs would have been as grateful as I had we had something more than vague generalities from the Prime Minister today, whether he was talking about the East-West, the North-South, or a combination of the two, in Canadian foreign policy.

I was particularly distressed, as I was when listening to the hon. member for Kingston and the Island (Miss MacDonald), by the tendency of both the governing party and the official opposition to talk a good line but to do nothing in practice, whether talking about the arms race and our complicity in it, or about the North-South and the absence of any improvement in our own aid policies and assistance policies generally, over the past decade.

I want to say a further word or two about this lest the public be under the impression that both the government and the Conservative party, when it was the government, have policies that are concretely addressed, not to trying to find some agreement in some major council but, to what Canada should be doing explicitly.

I will start with the arms race. It is all very well to say that we do not allow nuclear arms on our territory, although there are still some available at Comox. The Prime Minister reiterates this. Every time we ask a question on the neutron bomb, first strike capacities or the Cruise or Pershing II missiles, he says, "We don't allow them on Canadian soil." That is very true. We do not export nuclear technology unless it falls within very rigid safeguards.

But fact is that we are up to our ears in arms weapons technology and in arms sales. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) excuses this by saying that most of it goes to the United States. As if that made the difference. It is as if the nuclear weapons technology produced by Litton Industries in Toronto, for example, for the guidance system of the Cruise missile is okay because it is going to the United States. Indeed, I expect that some of our uranium and other sales are going to the Soviet Union as well.

In committee I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether or not he was concerned about the horrendous increases in the U.S. military budget. His answer to my question was no. If we turn to page 36:37 for April 2, the secretary of state is reported as saying:

With respect to American increases in their arms budget, I do not really think that is any affair of ours—

Except as it might affect their development assistance. We, and by we I mean the government—and the Conservatives when they were in power—have allowed Canada to be totally involved in the nuclear arms race. They say we are not, but we are, whether it is in the development of the new theatre nuclear weapons in Europe, which they condone, whether it is in the possible development and deployment of a neutron bomb, which they condone, or whether it is selling parts for the new Cruise missile system, which they encourage. In fact, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is anxious to get us even more deeply involved in arms production and arms sales. Yet we have the nerve to say that we are a non-nuclear power.

I do not take the Prime Minister very seriously when he talks about the initiatives he will take to try to bring about arms control talks, arms limitation and arms reduction, when we ourselves are so very deeply involved. Furthermore, I do not think the rest of the world, and I include many democratic-socialist parties in the Third World and elsewhere, is going to take Canada very seriously or does take Canada very seriously when the Prime Minister goes on, as he did today, about the arms race continuing while billions are suffering, while we are so involved and so complicit in that very arms race. The hyprocrisy of the Canadian government's position is unbelievable.

At least the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) did suggest in her speech that we should be paying more attention to restraints on nuclear weapons development. I know the Conservatives were in power for only a short time, but I saw no evidence of restraint during that period. I remember asking the hon. member when she was minister whether Canada, in the councils of NATO, would join other smaller countries in Europe and protest the possible deployment of the Cruise and Persking II missiles. She answered no, that Canada would not be joining other smaller nations in protesting those first strike weapons going into the nuclear arsenal in Europe. We have watched and we have stood by while the nuclearization of western Europe has been going on all these years. We talk a good fight, but our actions are entirely different.

What might we do? I thought about this many times during the hearings of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. First, we could try to have some influence in those military alliances to which we belong, namely NATO and NORAD. As far as I can see, we have not tried. We do not want to try because we are so deeply involved in the nuclear strategies that we are supposed to deplore. We could, lacking any wish or ability to influence those councils, be honest with the people of this country and with other people who look to us and believe, or want to believe, what we say. We could be honest and unalign ourselves from great power dominated military alliances if we really wanted to behave as we say we want to. We could do that.

Every now and again the Prime Minister has suggested that perhaps we could contribute less to NATO. He has, with a sort of small effort, said that if we give a little less, then we will not be so involved or we will not be seen to be so involved. That is a sort of back-door approach. That does not seem to be the case any more. Perhaps it is time for Canada and the other parties to look seriously at whether or not the nuclear holocaust, which we all know perfectly well may be upon us, will be prevented if we as Canadians dissociate ourselves from the great powers that are going to take us into this nuclear holocaust. We should join other like-minded nations and peoples in a genuine peace race. We should get out of the arms race.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Is it your policy to withdraw from NATO?

Miss Jewett: Yes, it is. If the other parties, the government and the opposition, are not prepared to take the kind of action which would give meaning to their words, then I wish and hope they would stop spouting the words.

The same is true in many respects when we turn to other aspects of the government's foreign policy. The government talks a good deal about the importance of human rights and political freedoms in the Third World as well as in the industrialized world. The government, and particularly the Secretary of State for External Affairs, seems to have swallowed completely the argument that the conflict in El Salvador is part of a Russian conspiracy. Without any question, he has followed the U.S. white paper. I am sure he will be interested to know that the Wall Street Journal for Monday, June 8, has pretty well demolished the so-called white paper on reds in El Salvador. He literally pulled his forelock over whatever General Haig said about El Salvador when he was here. He persuaded the Americans we could be taken for granted about their particular approach to Central America. So much so that the other day the U.S. Secretary of State announced that an alliance of Mexico, Canada and the United States had been formed on Latin American affairs, focusing on the communist and Cuban influence in El Salvador and the Caribbean, without our Secretary of State for External Affairs even knowing that there was an alliance.

We have shown quite properly the government's approach to El Salvador. I believe "quiet acquiescence" was the minister's description of his attitude toward U.S. arms shipments there. That once again belies the words of the government on other occasions when it was concerned, as the Prime Minister was again today, with human rights and political freedoms everywhere.

We have seen the government again talk a good talk about North-South. It may well be that the Prime Minister will take some initiatives at the summit on this matter. However, in his speech today he did not address any of the tough questions that Canada will have to face if we are going to do more than pay lip service in helping to resolve some of the problems of the developing world.

The Prime Minister did not suggest that if Third, Fourth and Fifth World nations are going to participate more in the new international economic order, this will involve a fundamental restructuring of the Canadian economy. Maybe he is waiting for some other country to suggest that there will have to be some restructuring. I am sure he knows that if we are actually going to have a new world economic order this will require substantial change in our own industrial structure. Very important measures will have to be taken and thought through now to offset the disruptions that they involve. He never mentioned them at all. If you do not realize what the implications are, talk about them and plan for them, you are giving lip service and nothing more to the restructuring of the world economy, to providing greater benefits and opportunities to the have-nots.

Nor did he say anything about the role of the multinationals in the Third World, a role even worse in many respects than their role here, which is bad enough. Multinationals operate in their own self-interest, moving capital from country to country where they think it would be most advantageous to do so, leaving communities and labour forces abandoned. An unfettered right to operate is what they ask for and what they get. They export what they think the western economies need from the Third World, not focusing on the food and agricultural needs of the Third World countries but on what they think the export markets need and want in the industrialized world.

The great power of the multinationals in the Third World, which I am sure some hon. members have read about, particularly in the book "Global Reach", was never addressed. I doubt very much if it will be at the summit either, unless François Mitterrand has something to say about it. However, our Prime Minister has not. In my view, it is a key to our making something more than rhetoric out of the North-South dialogue, to start thinking now of home-based and international controls on the operations of the multinationals in the Third World.

Did the Prime Minister say anything about another incredibly important and urgent matter in the Third World, the position of women? Perhaps I should not be surprised. He has not said very much about the position of women in Canada.

Mr. Dupras: Oh, come on!

Miss Jewett: Well, he is getting better.

An hon. Member: He has been overgenerous.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rae: You have just said that he has been overgenerous. That will be on the record.

Miss Jewett: He has not said a word about the role of women in the rural economy of developing countries. When the Prime Minister was talking about human rights, he mentioned in addition to political freedom the freedom of the market. If he has the view that the North-South relationship can be developed, improved, and made meaningful by relying on the freedom of the market, it just will not happen. It will not happen for the rural woman, it will not happen for any of the Third World, particularly the poor in the Third World.

I believe it is important not only for Canadians but our government officials, particularly those in external affairs, to know what direction the government is going in foreign policy, and above all in matters of war and peace, poverty or well-being, human freedom or despotism.

Canada must have a consistent policy and it must apply it consistently. That means it does not fool around trading with Chile, providing export development credits there. It does not fool around by saying that the Nicaraguan government may not be quite as good as the Somozan government. It does not fool around by wondering if there is going to be a better buck or deal in one part of the Third World than another. If Canada is going to have a clear, coherent and consistent policy, it must stop just talking peace and war, human liberty, the developing world, and start putting its policies and approaches in those directions. As my colleague says, it should put its actions where its mouth is.

I want to emphasize, although it has been mentioned once this afternoon, an initiative that the Government of Canada might take. There are many I have suggested it could do on its own to become a more independent, respected, powerful and influential nation, but the initiative that was proposed by George Kennan in his acceptance speech on receiving the Albert Einstein peace prize in Washington on May 19 bears repeating. I read of this in the Manchester Guardian Weekly of May 31. The article was entitled "The only way out of the nuclear nightmare".

I would like to quote from this article at some length because it might not otherwise appear on the record and because it comes from a most distinguished American and may have an influence with the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who has been influenced out of all proportion by another American, General Haig.

George Kennan talks about the stockpile of nuclear weapons, how it has proceeded steadily, relentlessly, without the faintest regard for all of the warning voices, with the result today that we have achieved in the creation of these devices—and by "we" he means the Russians and the Americans—and their means of delivery, "levels of redundancy of such grotesque dimensions as to defy rational understanding". He continued:

I say redundancy, I know of no better way to describe it. But actually, the word is too mild. It implies that there could be levels of these weapons that would not be redundant. Personally, I doubt that there could. I question whether these devices are really weapons at all.

● (1650)

Later he states:

To my mind, the nuclear bomb is the most useless weapon ever invented. It can be employed to no rational purpose. It is not even an effective defence against itself. It is only something with which, in a moment of petulance or panic, you commit such fearful acts of destruction as no sane person would ever wish to have upon his conscience.

Then he goes on:

There are those who will agree, with a sigh, to much of what I have just said, but will point to the need for something called deterrence. This is, of course, a concept which attibutes to others . . . the most fiendish and inhuman of tendencies. But all right: accepting for the sake of argument the profound iniquity of these adversaries, no one could deny, I think, that the present Soviet and American arsenals, presenting over a million times the destructive power of the Hiroshima bomb, are simply fantastically redundant to the purpose in question.

He goes on:

How have we got ourselves into this dangerous mess? Let us not confuse the question by blaming it all on our Soviet adversaries. They have, of course, their share of the blame . . . But we must remember that it has been we Americans who, at almost every step of the road, have taken the lead in the development of this sort of weaponry. It was we who first produced and tested such a device; we who were the first to raise its destructiveness to a new level with the hydrogen bomb; we who introduced the multiple warhead; we who have declined every proposal for the renunciation of the principle of "first use"; and we alone . . . who have used the weapon in anger against others, and against tens of thousands of helpless non-combatants at that.

That quotation from George Kennan I do believe is worthy of our serious consideration when we look to the possibility of Canada, and like-minded peoples and nations who want to see an end to the nuclear nightmare, operating much more independently of the great powers than we do now, powers that are so intimately involved in the nuclear nightmare. This might give us much greater leverage in promoting the really radical answer that Kennan is proposing. Kennan does not propose, by the way, just a continuation of SALT II and III. He sees them, indeed, as very limited. Indeed, SALT II is almost part of the problem. He says:

—I have . . . no illusion that negotiations of the SALT pattern . . . could ever be adequate to get us out of this hole. They are not a way of escape from the weapons race, they are an integral part of it.

He goes on to state:

I can see no way out of this dilemma other than by a bold and sweeping departure—a departure that would cut surgically through the exaggerated anxieties, the self-engendered nightmares, and the sophisticated mathematics of destruction, in which we have all been entangled over these recent years, and would permit us to move, with courage and decision, to the heart of the problem.

What he proposes is that:

—the President . . . with the Congress . . . propose to the Soviet government an immediate across-the-boards reduction by fifty per cent of the nuclear arsenals now being maintained by the two superpowers—a reduction affecting in equal measure all forms of the weapon, strategic, medium range and tactical, as well as all means of their delivery—all this to be implemented at once and without further wrangling among the experts—

He says:

Whether the balance of reduction would be precisely even—whether it could be construed to favour statistically one side or the other—would not be the question. Once we start thinking that way, we would be back on the same old fateful track that has brought us where we are today. Whatever the precise results of such a reduction, there would still be plenty of overkill left—so much so that if this first operation were successful, I would then like to see a second one put in hand to rid us of at least two thirds of what would be left.

I would like to see the Government of Canada proposing that kind of initiative, saying to the people of Canada that we are going to try more seriously, more rigorously and with fewer contradictions in our public statements, to pursue peace, security and justice, not only for ourselves, not only for other industrialized nations but, above all, since without peace there can be no life at all, for the developing world, for all other parts of the world which we want to share a larger place in the world.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

NORTH-SOUTH RELATIONS

REPORT OF PARLIAMENTARY TASK FORCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacGuigan:

That this House take note of the present state and future prospects of Canada's international relations and endorse the broad thrust of the report of the Parliamentary Task Force on North-South Relations.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has dealt eloquently with the question of instability and poverty in the world; of the need for nations to find ways to improve the conditions of the nearly one billion people on this planet who live on the margin of human existence. At the same time, he has underlined Canada's growing interdependencies with the world.

All Canadians have a huge and growing stake in what happens outside our borders. There is hardly a community in Canada which is not in some way or in some manner affected by developments outside this country. The same could not be said only a few years ago. Our economy and that of the world are now firmly intertwined. Our destiny and that of the world have become inseparable as never before.

The quest for world stability and order takes on an added sense of urgency under the circumstances. It is no longer an abstract concept. We are not simply a fortunate and remote country surrounded by three oceans and occupying one end of an isolated northern land mass. We are a country which is vitally dependent on the world. The ripples resulting from events elsewhere do not stop at our borders. They carry on past and have an impact on all parts of our country.

The world presents a mixture of constraints and opportunities for Canada, as it does for all countries. The realization of our national goals is enhanced or diminished by what happens outside our borders. Growing global interdependence alters the balance of these constraints and opportunities. How world problems are dealt with becomes of vital importance to a country like Canada whose links with and dependency on the rest of the world are great.

Foreign policy can be said to begin in national interests and to end in international action. It is the extension abroad of national policies, as the government stated in its "Foreign Policy for Canadians" in 1970. Even more, it is the expression in the world of our fundamental national values—values such as freedom, democracy, civil liberties, peace, justice and economic and social progress.

To be sure, we have to pursue our national objectives in an international perspective. National aims can no longer be realized in isolation but require international consensus and united action through the principal associations to which we belong—the United Nations and its agencies, NATO, NORAD, the Commonwealth and la francophonie.

This is not the occasion to address conflicts between the national interest and the international good, except to note that the ultimate safeguard is the intrinsic appeal of the common good of all mankind. But Canada has less reason than most countries to anticipate conflicts between its national aims and those of the international community. In fact, from the time of our full emergence as an independent state with the Second World War and well before our present economic interdependence with the rest of the world, internationalism has been a trademark of our foreign policy. I believe that almost all Canadans accept it as one of our foremost national values.

The foreign policy review of 1970 divided Canadian values, as applied to foreign policy, into six categories which could thus be treated as the main themes. The events of the 1970s required the review and adjustment of many of the policy directions within that over-all framework. But as a framework for our aspirations, I believe these themes remain valid.

In my view, these themes—fostering economic growth, safeguarding sovereignty and independence, working for peace and security, promoting social justice, enhancing the quality of life and ensuring a harmonious national environment—continue to reflect the aspirations of Canadians and indicate a continuity in Canada's foreign policy goals. The strategies required to realize these goals today are different from the strategies of the seventies. The relative priority of the goals may also differ, but the goals themselves remain.

What sort of world were we facing at the outset of the seventies when that review took place? It was a different world, a world which was, frankly, more hopeful. There was more confidence then about our economies. We believed that money and technology transfers could overcome a number of global problems and advance the development of developing countries. Social programs could easily be expanded both at home and abroad; the disfavoured people in our own societies and the disfavoured countries of the world could be helped simultaneously. The term "oil shock" would have brought a blank stare. We were entering a period of economic expansion on a global scale. The fruits of this expansion would allow progress to be made on a number of fronts. Meaningful disarmament initiatives appeared possible. The Soviet Union appeared to be moving toward greater co-operation with the West.

I do not have to go through a litany of things which altered our views during the seventies. It is not necessary to describe the incredible global impact of two oil shocks and two recessions as well as other developments which diminished the early hopes of the seventies.

However, much was accomplished internationally in the seventies on which we can build in the eighties. The seventies saw a vast increase in international co-operation and the establishment of new frameworks to facilitate international transactions. Increases in trade and human contacts developed on a wider scale than ever before. There were attempts to develop crisis management mechanisms which could lessen threats to the international system in a wide variety of areas.

And the seventies saw a greater degree of stability returned to relations between the European states, particularly between the two Germanys. China joined the community of nations. The states of ASEAN formed a new nucleus for mutual co-operation.

A significant foreign policy challenge for the global community and for Canada will be to use those positive elements of international co-operation which were built in the seventies to help deal with the uncertainties of the eighties to which the Prime Minister referred. Canada cannot—nor can other responsible states—turn inward when faced with the difficulties of the eighties. The seventies would have been far more difficult internationally without the safety net of institutions and procedures which have been built up with such difficulty and in which we have invested so much. We cannot now turn away from these institutions and frameworks. We need them to a greater extent than ever before.

I should like to look ahead at the eighties through the prism of the six principal Canadian values to which I have already referred. The eighties will require more emphasis on some of these themes than on others in order to deal with new realities. All these values are important. Any one from time to time can require the highest priority from the government.

The goal of Canadian foreign policy is to create a just and peaceful world in which all nations can achieve greater well-being and prosperity. In order to attain this goal, particular priority has to be given at the present time to promoting social justice and fostering economic growth.

There are two themes—working for peace and security and safeguarding sovereignty and independence—which are fundamental to everything else. There can be little hope for economic growth or social justice if one's security or sovereignty is threatened. Themes interlink.

Canada defends its sovereignty and independence through a variety of means—through boundary and territorial negotiations, for example—but working for peace and security represents the most important way for Canada to defend its sovereignty.

Canadian security policy in the past 30 years has been based on three foundations of peace: first, deterrence of war through collective defence represented by participation in NATO and NORAD; second, verifiable arms control and disarmament agreements; and third, mechanisms and arrangements for the peaceful settlement of disputes.

When it was clear that the collective arrangements for peace provided for under the United Nations charter were not going to be allowed to work, it became imperative to make other security arrangements. Canada joined with others in creating the North Atlantic Alliance in 1949 and has since contributed to the collective deterrence and defence capacity of NATO.

I remarked a few moments ago that the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett) commented extensively on our participation in the nuclear strategies of our alliance. I know hon. members in the House generally will realize that this has to be set against the background of rejection in her party—again, I understand, being reiterated, to the great embarrassment of its leader—of the NATO alliance. I hope the hon. member is prepared to make the same points she has made here to the New Democratic Premier of Saskatchewan, Premier Blakeney, and I hope others here from that province will carry the message to her, since she has left the House.

Miss Jewett: I am right here.

Mr. MacGuigan: She is just now returning. I hope the hon. member will carry the same kind of message to Premier Blakeney of Saskatchewan, that good New Democrat who is sending Saskatchewan uranium all over the world for the purposes which she says she so frankly detests.

Miss Jewett: Are you still reading, Mark?

Mr. MacGuigan: For the Canadian government, along with defence capacity, security also requires the search for arms control. If the armaments spiral is ever to be broken, verifiable arms control and disarmament agreements must be concluded. Arms control and disarmament is the pursuit of undiminished security at lower levels of armaments and expenditure. The step by step approach takes time, beginning with the mutual perception of security which can lead to agreements to limit arms and to control their development and deployment. Once arms competition is contained, efforts can be focused on reductions, which would continue to reflect that same approximate security balance.

The prospects for concluding arms control and disarmament agreements continue to be limited. The postponement of consideration of ratification of SALT II by the U.S. Senate followed the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan in December, 1979. The review of arms control and disarmament policies by the new U.S. administration should result in a new start in the SALT process. At the last NATO foreign minister's meeting in Rome, which I attended, the United States reaffirmed the intention of the previous administration to go forward with discussions on the limitation of theatre nuclear forces. Negotiations on a comprehensive test ban treaty and on a ban on chemical weapons have continued to be protracted.

It is, indeed, in the process of peacemaking that real disarmament progress is likely to be registered. Many of the crisis spots in the world are not cast in ideological and imperial terms as is the current case between the East and the West. The vast majority of disputes, particularly in the Third World, are regional in scope and often reflect deep-seated and historical quarrels in relation to local and ill-defined issues. Canada has been active in seeking solutions to international conflicts.

A major focus of Canada's recent arms control activities was the Prime Minister's proposal at the first United Nations special session devoted to disarmament in 1978 in the context of restraining the technological momentum behind the strategic nuclear arms race. The elements of the "strategy of suffocation"—a comprehensive test ban treaty, a ban on the flight testing of all new strategic delivery vehicles, a ban on production of fissionable material for nuclear weapons purposes and an agreement to limit and then progessively to reduce military spending on a new strategic nuclear weapons systems—were not new to the arms control discussions. What was new was the concept of their interaction in combination to prevent proliferation of nuclear weapons among heretofore non-nuclear weapon states or the nuclear weapons states themselves.

Three years later the concept of the strategy of suffocation remains valid. The government takes every opportunity to reaffirm the importance it attaches to the continuation of the SALT process and to the realization of a verifiable comprehensive test ban treaty. These priorities, together with assisting in the preparation of a convention ban on chemical weapons and the promotion of the evolution of an effective non-proliferation regime, will guide Canadian preparations for the second United Nations special session on disarmament next year in which Canada intends to take an active part.

As the Prime Minister has indicated, in the 1980s we must look for new ways of dealing with tension and threats to peace through new forms of consultation and crisis management, including ways of dealing with regional crisis. Peacekeeping has been an important Canadian contribution to the search for international stability in the 1970s. We are hopeful that the wide range of multilateral machinery built in the 1970s will provide us with a good basis for developing these new ways of approaching security-related issues. It is particularly important to recall that the instability of our world, which we expect to deepen in the 1980s, is of a different, less predictable character, centred to some extend in the growing interdependence between industrialized and Third World nations.

The peace and security of Canada thus is becoming increasingly linked to regional tensions and crises. Regional crises are rarely contained in one particular region. There is a growing spillover effect. There are wide-ranging repercussions that have a multidimensional impact far from their points of origin. A regional crisis of a military or a political nature in one region can have an economic impact on the other side of the globe; witness the economic impact of the Arab-Israeli war and the Iran-Iraqi war on the West. On the other hand, the shock waves from an economic crisis in one region can trigger a military or political crisis elsewhere.

Closer interdependence means that Canada cannot remain isolated from the crises which erupt elsewhere in the world. We are particularly concerned about certain unstable areas. The crisis which threatens the stability of the Asiatic subcontinent has got us greatly concerned. I have already mentioned the mounting East-West tensions and the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) dwelled on that subject. I am convinced that Canadians would find it unacceptable if their government were to maintain a policy of détente towards the U.S.S.R. while closing its eyes on Soviet activities in foreign lands. The invasion of Afghanistan had a very negative impact on the interests of the world community. The Russians' refusal to change their position on that question has seriously jeopardized the situation. For all practical purposes, the Soviet Union ignored world opinion as expressed in two resolutions which gained very wide support in the General Assembly. The peace and stability of that area and of the community of nations will be endangered for as long as Afghanistan has not regained its sovereignty, its independence and its status of non-aligned nation.

The situation in Southern Africa enables us to entertain hopes and fear deceptions. Hopes because there seems to be a possibility that Zimbabwe might evolve towards a democratic and multiracial society, but deceptions as well because the policies of South Africa remain unchanged. Last fall at the United Nations I spoke of the permanent affront to humankind which the apartheid policy represents. The government feels it is despicable.

We also maintain that South Africa must loosen its grip on Namibia. The mere fact that the Namibian issue remains on the list of critical problems in foreign policy proves it. The intransigence of the South African government is the only obstacle to a negotiated settlement, one which would allow the Namibian people to gain independence through a free and fair election in which all Namibians could take part. Such an election under the supervision of the United Nations is the focal point of Resolution 435 of the UN Security Council and Settlement Plan. Our support in this regard is unconditional. However, new elements may have to be added to Resolution 435 to win over all the parties involved to its provisions and the terms of the UN Plan. But I must point out that any addition must be in complete agreement with the basic principles of the resolution. In our view, there is therefore no question of amending the resolution, but rather of ensuring its implementation. The addition of new elements with the agreement of all parties involved should aim not at weakening it, but at giving it full effect.

I want to point out to our African friends that Canada has only one purpose in this matter, that is independence for Namibia. We have nothing to gain and, indeed, much to lose as long as Namibia is occupied illegally by South Africa. We have indicated to the latter that only an international solution can be a lasting one and that only an international solution will bring stability and security to the region. The resolution of the Namibian issue is as much in the interest of South Africa as of the other parties involved. Canada will continue to work for a negotiated solution, but in the final analysis, South Africa will have to make the decision. It was not ready to proceed last January at the Geneva conference. I hope that on reflection it will agree to a direction and a plan which has the approval of the entire world community.

The Middle East is an area of the Third World which is of vital and direct interest the West as a whole. It is the focus of the convergent interests of North-South and East-West relationships. The economic development of a large part of the world is intimately linked to the Middle East and the issues of concern to this area should be given priority by all international organizations. This government's policy is, whenever possible, to facilitate understanding and promote dialogue. Tension in the Middle-East is multidimensional and its most important aspect is the Arab-Israeli crisis for which a long-term solution has to be found. Israelis and Palestinians have legitimate rights and concerns which must be taken into account. Among other things there is the security of Israel and its right to be readily accepted by its neighbours. But the world must also recognize the rights of the Palestinians and these include their right to a homeland, within a clearly defined territory, and by that I mean the West Bank and the Gaza Strip.

Madam Speaker, there are other regions of the world where tension and instability prevail, like Central America, the Caribbean, and South-East Asia. Canada must recognize that development in those areas and elsewhere is getting even harder to control especially if East-West confrontations spill over into the Third World. We ask that Third World countries be sheltered from these rivalries and we support their legitimate desire to return to a true spirit of non-alignment. We also ask that the Soviet Union respect such non-alignment.

[English]

I have mentioned the link between peace and security on the one hand, and sovereignty and independence on the other. But our relationship with the United States could be considered a special case of the exercise of the latter value. Indeed, this relationship is perhaps Canada's greatest foreign policy challenge. The reasons go beyond the sheer magnitude of the relationship, with the $90 billion in trade last year and its enormously complex network of personal and business links. The more profound reason why Canada-U.S. relations are so important has much to do with how we as Canadians want to shape our destiny.

In many ways, Canada and the U.S. are similar societies. We are both liberal democracies of the new world, lands of almost unlimited opportunity and personal freedom, whose people hold in common a range of cultural and ethical values. Yet in vital respects—and this is the crucial point for Canadians—we are very different nations with our own approaches to nation-building and some clearly distinguishable economic interests and social features.

For Canadians, the art of conducting relations with the United States is to co-operate in the development of what is in most ways a fruitful and mutually beneficial relationship while safeguarding Canada's paramount national interests. A vital, economically strong and unified Canada is in the economic and security interests of both countries.

This is the purpose of Canadian government measures to promote the Canadianization of the national economy, including the several steps in this direction which have already been taken, such as the establishment of Petro-Canada and most recently the framing of the National Energy Program.

An irony of the relationship is that the very similarities which exist between Canadians and Americans can make the inevitable problems which arise more difficult to resolve. There is a difficulty sometimes in the United States to grasp that different policy methods are used in Canada, despite the similarities which exist, because our respective experiences and structures are in some other ways different. In order to minimize the friction in the relationship, therefore, a premium must be placed on explaining policy approaches to one another as effectively as possible.

Some observers believe that at the moment Canada and the United States seem to be headed in different philosophical directions. I would rather suggest that in fact the two countries are developing national policies suitable to their own particular circumstances. In the case of Canada we all believe this to be an entirely healthy and understandable phenomenon which can in no way affect the foundation of good will and common interest which form the bedrock of Canada-U.S. relations.

Inevitably, we will have to be prepared to face opposition from some American quarters on some issues. No independence worth having is completely costless. Broadly speaking, however, I am confident that Canada and the United States will continue both to co-operate on questions of primary interest to the two of us and to work together to support peace, security and human dignity abroad.

One issue requiring co-operation between our two countries relates to a principal Canadian foreign policy theme, namely, working to ensure a harmonious natural environment. Since 1970 there have been important developments in this sphere, both positive and negative in character. Modern technological development has had environmental consequences of a magnitude and complexity which were unforeseen ten years ago. Today, phenomena scarcely recognized in 1970, such as acid rain, ozone depletion and the accumulation of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere, have become issues of both domestic and international concern. Hazardous waste disposal and the health effects of new chemicals have acquired increasing international significance. Traditional, although no less significant, concerns such as air and water pollution, urban growth, deforestation, and soil degradation are becoming more internationalized; these phenomena do not recognize international boundaries.

On the positive side, both the Canadian government and the international community have recognized the seriousness of these issues and are planning various measures to deal with them. Progress at both the domestic and international levels has been encouraging. Two examples come to mind in which this country has been particularly active. Canada played a major role at the Stockholm conference on the human environment in 1972 which established the United Nations environment program. It also hosted an international conference on human settlements, "Habitat", in Vancouver in 1976 which led to the creation of the United Nations Commission on Human Settlements. There were a number of other successes, including the 1979 Convention on Long Range Transboundary Air Pollution.

Closer to home, the Canadian government has to work out environmental protection agreements with our neighbours. Negotiations are commencing this month with the United States for the formulation of an agreement on transboundary air pollution. A successful outcome is literally vital to Canadians. This is another issue on which the government will be vigilant in the Canadian interest.

Solutions to the problems we confront in the environmental sphere must be found although they are not easy to come by. Yet there is no question that Canada and other nations of the world have to focus now on the sort of planet we need to live in a decade or two or three away. We cannot ignore the active potential for ecological disaster that is building. We cannot, to coin a phrase, deregulate our responsibilities.

It is significant that this House recognized those responsibilities when we recently voted unanimously to provide the authority, through amendments to the Clean Air Act, to meet our obligations to the United States vis-à-vis transboundary air pollution. We are hopeful the United States will take the same step.

As "Foreign Policy for Canadians" pointed out, there is a close link between environmental ills and the quality of life in Canada and abroad. This theme covers the promotion of a sane and livable social environment as well as that of the ecology. Terrorism is a contemporary phenomenon which only determined international co-operation will control.

International drug trafficking is another area where the concentrated effort of all countries is necessary. But Canada can also promote the quality of the lives of Canadians through expanding and enriching our cultural links abroad, through human contact in science and education, as well as in the arts, binding and reflecting the bilingual and multicultural character of Canadian society.

Canada's economic development is inextricably linked to the overall international environment. External factors and how we deal with them will be of central importance to our economic growth. Every economic goal which we have in this country is subject to the influence of external factors. Whether we are talking about regional development in Canada, industrial adjustment, skill upgrading, finding markets for our goods, all are influenced by what takes place outside our borders. Canada must pursue policies which defend, support and promote our domestic economic growth.

Canada is increasingly dependent on the world economic system. Canadian exports as a percentage of GNP are greater than at any time in the past. We have a network of economic links with the world which are central to our economic well-being.

Canada is vitally dependent on an open and stable multilateral trade and payments system. We must work with our major trading partners and others to strengthen this system. The system at present is under considerable protectionist pressures from many directions. No member of the trading community can claim to be blemish-free in this regard. Who would have foreseen at the outset of the 1970s, for example, that in the 1980s there would be demands and pressures in the international trading system for restraints and adjustments forced on major industries which are too successful? This is an unfortunate sign of the times and a challenge facing the trading world.

North-South Relations

A greater diversification of Canada's economic partnerships has been a principal cornerstone of Canadian foreign policy for a number of years. These efforts have been directed in particular at our industrialized partners, but the 1970s have seen the considerable economic growth of the so-called newly industrializing countries. These countries offer the possibilities for mutually rewarding economic partnerships for Canada in the 1980s. And they themselves are actively seeking such diversified trade relationships.

For Canada, not a member of any trading bloc, it is necessary to build a global network of trading partners. As Canada does not have traditional relationships with many of these countries, efforts must be made to build long-term and stable relationships with them from the ground up. Stable and long-term relationships will be particularly necessary for Canada in a world which threatens increased instability. A strong policy of strengthening bilateral relationships with key countries is necessary.

The improved technique of concentrating our bilateral relations which I announced on behalf of the government in January is in effect an updating and extension of the third option policy of 1972 by projecting our economic links beyond our traditional trading partners—the United States, Europe and Japan—to the Third World.

To illustrate how important the Third World has already become to Canada in trade terms, the following figures will be of interest to the House. Canadian exports to the developing countries constituted 9.7 per cent of total domestic exports in 1979. This figure rose to 11.6 per cent in 1980. From 1979 to 1980, while the value of total Canadian exports increased by 16 per cent, the rate of increase to the developing countries was 37 per cent. Particularly dynamic markets are China, Algeria, Brazil, Mexico and Saudi Arabia. Our exports to Brazil in 1980 rose by 111 per cent; those to Mexico by 104 per cent.

Furthermore, for several years our manufactured exports to developing countries have been of greater value than our manufactured exports to Europe. The Third World now also is the recipient of roughly 25 per cent of Canadian investment abroad. At the same time the rate of growth of imports to Canada from developing countries between 1979 and 1980 is greater than the average rate for all countries. This statement is true even if the export figures for the oil-exporting OPEC countries are eliminated from the statistics.

Specifically, where in the Third World does Canada look for new partnerships of mutual benefit? The countries of the Pacific Rim, and more specifically those of ASEAN, offer many potentially new partners. The annual growth rate of the ASEAN economies of some 7 per cent over the last ten years has been twice that of North America and the EEC countries. The economic prospects of these countries remain particularly bright. There are growing links between Canada and ASEAN which, in particular, are stimulating the Pacific dimension of Canada's foreign policy.

Latin America offers another region of potential partnerships. Geopolitically, Canada has been screened from Latin America by the bulk of the United States. Our relationships with Latin American nations have tended to be one-dimensional, based largely on trade. We intend to broaden our relationships, in particular, with Mexico, Brazil and Venezuela, with an accent on a mutually beneficial relationship of the widest possible scope.

Canada has two regional relationships which are integrally linked to our interests in both the Commonwealth and la francophonie. If I had more time, I would speak about both the commonwealth Caribbean and francophone West Africa.

Canada's growing economic links with developing countries are not Canada's only interests in seeking the economic prosperity of the Third World. This would be a betrayal of how Canadians see our responsibilities towards the developing world. Promoting social justice is an important domestic objective of this government. It has a clear international dimension which finds its reflection in Canada's foreign policy. It is central to our approach to the North-South dialogue, to Canadian development assistance, to human rights issues and to humanitarian questions. It is a major theme of emphasis in Canada's foreign policy. The government is, indeed, pleased to endorse the broad thrust of the report of the parliamentary task force on North-South relations.

A few moments ago, I heard what I can only call the politically motivated attack of the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) on the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) leadership on North-South issues over the years. I think the world would find such criticisms laughable. At Commonwealth meetings and in his Mansion House address, which is considered a classic throughout the world in the statement of the responsibilities of northern countries, in the development and implementation of policies which are among the most favourable in the world to Third World countries, the world has recognized the leadership which the Prime Minister has brought to this field.

Because of time limitations, I shall leave the full range of my comments on North-South issues and the Breau report for tomorrow's debate. At the moment I would note only that the theme of social justice in Canada's foreign policy is clearly apparent in questions touching the rights of the individual. The rights of the individual are at the basis of our political system. It is therefore essential that the promotion of human rights be part of the framework of Canadian foreign policy.

In general, our approach to the Third World is to insulate it as much as possible from East-West confrontations; in other words, to treat Third World countries on their own merits. Of course, when a developing country applies a foreign policy approach which actively aims at subverting the independence of other countries, our policy has been to terminate aid relations and to restrict economic relations to non-strategic commodities. However, for countries like Angola, our policy is to maintain open relations and to avoid punitive measures.

May I say in conclusion that I think it is important for Canadians to realize that foreign policy is not something secret or esoteric. It represents, internationally, what Canadians are and what they value. If fairly presented, it can be understood by all Canadians. I must say it is one of my personal goals to so open our foreign policy to the public as to make it generally understood. If the public can be persuaded to participate in the formation or carrying out of our foreign policy, so much the better. The businessman who fosters our commerce abroad and the aid administrator or field worker who spends part of his or her life helping the poor in developing countries are participating in our foreign policy, just as are the overworked and underpraised veterans of our foreign service.

Foreign policy is shaped by the value judgments of the government, based on the values generally shared by Canadians. In this way, Canadian foreign policy not only promotes democracy but also expresses the democracy that constitutes our national life.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): This debate on Canada's foreign policy in the international community is held at a momentous time in history, for mankind is in trouble. There has been a ceaseless buildup of nuclear arsenals and conventional weapons. We are experiencing chaotic imbalances of food and population, violations of human rights, depletion of resources, economic disorders and an upsurge in violence and terrorism. All these problems make the 1980s the most dangerous decade that the human community has ever faced.

No indicator more graphically shows the incredible destructive power that is loose in the world than the existence of 50,000 nuclear weapons and the ever-rising flood of arms trade through the developing world.

The whole world is painfully off balance, opulently rich in arms, poor in providing for the needs of human lives. Behind the statistical shadows of income disparities, inflation and retarded growth, are millions and millions of individuals trapped by shocking neglect. They suffer from hunger, the darkness of illiteracy, illness and desperate poverty.

This social deficit is itself a threat to world security because the festering problems of today, neglected in favour of armed might, promise rising public anger and social upheaval, against which no national military fortress can be made impregnable for long.

The U.S. presidential commission on the year 2000 predicted that if present trends continue, the world of 2000 will be far more crowded, more polluted, less stable ecologically and more vulnerable to economic, social and environmental disruption than the world we live in at present.

But this future chaos is not inevitable. Although the balance sheet of the human condition today is heavily weighted on the negative side, there is also a powerful positive theme characterizing modern civilization. The fantastic advances in science and technology could, if we had the political will, ensure a life of human dignity for everyone, and not just the privileged few. We are entering a totally new period in our planet's history.

For the first time, there is the opportunity to bring about a better life in greater freedom for all the world's people. We are now a dynamic world community, capable of sustaining life on a global level.

The situation, then, is tragically ironic: never have people possessed the potential to free the world from the ageless threats of hunger and war, but never was the world so hungry or the threat of war more monstrous.

A few moments ago, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) said that the goal for Canadian foreign policy now, in the 1980s, is a promotional adjustment in a stable world. I support that enunciation, and add that the establishment of global institutions capable of preventing war and of confronting global problems is today's practical need and ought to be a primary object of Canadian foreign policy.

I am not arguing that Canada, a country of 24 million people, could or should remake the world in our image. But it is in our own interests, as the second largest country in the world possessing enormous resources, land and technology, to play a leading role in building the planetary conditions for peace.

Some say that we cannot focus on foreign policy until we get our own house in order and until our national unity and domestic economy problems are solved. This is short-sighted. The world is changing rapidly and will not wait for Canada. Moreover, a new understanding of Canada's role in a world seeking more security, trade and development would itself be an important contribution to our internal struggle over national understanding of ourselves. In short, planning and explaining to the public a constructive role for Canada in the world community in the next decade can help us find a renewed sense of purpose and direction in this country.

That sense of purpose is found in John Holmes' phrase, "enlightened internationalism." By this I mean that we stop separating the traditional issues of war and peace from the new global questions of justice, equity and human rights. The new issues of foreign policy include the escalating arms race, nuclear proliferation, food and energy shortages, the problems of international development and world-wide inflation and unemployment.

Mr. Speaker, it is commonly said that Canada's "golden age" in foreign policy is over. This is because we have become sluggish and uncaring in the past decade. We have lost our vision. We have failed to realize that in the new North-South dialogue, Canada has an influence out of all proportion to its size on the world community and can play a bridge-building role because we are trusted. If today we ask where are the Pearsons, Wrongs, Ignatieffs, Legers, Reids and that other band of distinguished Canadians in foreign policy, let us point to the MacGuigans, Gotliebs, Masse's, Smiths and McWhinneys and say to them: produce policies that will enable Canada to take its rightful place—centre stage—in North-South negotiations. I say to these government officials, to all members of this House, to the development community throughout the country that we must combine the idealism of the past with the pragmatism of today and lift up Canada so that this nation becomes a driving force for peace and development and justice. Is war necessary in order for a nation to have its finest hour? Let us make of this pursuit of development and peace in the North-South Dialogue Canada's finest hour.

The place to focus our attention is the first world summit of leaders from the North and South to be held in Mexico in October.

The report of the parliamentary task force on North-South relations has provided a basis for Canada's policy for the North-South summit. I was proud to represent, along with the Hon. Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz), the Progressive Conservative Party on that task force. We worked hard—with lots of compromises—to achieve a unanimous report. And the fact that the government has today endorsed the broad thrust of that report is at least a hopeful sign that a Canadian policy on the North-South dialogue will be projected along the lines I have indicated.

Before offering some criticism of the government's response to the North-South report tabled in othe House today, let me summarize what the essential issue is: despite significant development efforts in the past two decades, the problem is growing faster than the solution. The problem is the world economy. The world economy is now functioning so badly that it damages both the immediate and the long-run interests of all nations. The problems of poverty and hunger are becoming more serious; there are already 800 million living in extreme poverty and their numbers are rising. Shortages of grain and other foods are increasing the prospect of hunger and starvation. The addition of two billion people to the world's population in the next two decades will cause much greater strains on the world's resources. Meanwhile, the industrial capacity of the North is underused, causing high unemployment, while the South is in urgent need of goods that the North could provide. Rapid inflation, high interest rates, and unpredictable interventions by governments are seriously disrupting international trade and investment.

I recently saw in Africa one of the direct results of this abstract subject of balance of payments. More children are dying of malnutrition and water-borne disease than a few years ago because development budgets have been cut as a consequence of the balance of payments crisis. In Kenya, one of the better-off countries, the five-year development plan, though only in its second year, has been cut in half. Unemployment in Africa is soaring, subsistence farmers are migrating in search of fertile soil and access to firewood.

These conditions are robbing the rising generation of prospects for future employment, robbing those who survive. Of the 122 million children born in 1979—the International Year of the Child—a year later one in every ten was dead. During that same year, up to another 5 million small children, one to four, also died. The great majority of these children died from quite readily preventable diseases caused by gross underdevelopment.

The challenge, as I see it, is to build the political will necessary to promote advances in energy, agriculture, technology and communications throughout the developing countries while protecting the ecology, culture, religion and family structure inherited from the past. In all of this, new thinking is required to turn mutual interests into creative partnerships. Barbara Ward spent her life trying to infuse this new thinking into political leaders. I would test Canadian policy coming out of the North-South Task Force Report against the five principles that follow.

First, international food security through increased food production, increased food reserves, and the ability to respond effectively to emergency situations.

Second, international energy security, highlighting conservation, investment in energy development, particularly in the developing countries, and stabilization of prices.

Third, economic stability to address the deficits of the oil-importing countries, ensure smooth recycling of oil surpluses and to correct current imbalances.

Fourth, self reliance through trade. Freer trade would encourage industrial and agricultural development in the developing countries, but adequate adjustment measures for certain sectors in the industrialized countries must be worked out.

Fifth reduction of the disparity between arms spending and development spending.

We do not need to cry out in frustration about what to do. The international development strategy for the 1980s, adopted by the United Nations, conceives of development as an integral process and has accorded the objectives of social and human development a major new emphasis. Even the World Bank is now using this line of argument.

Arguing whether our motivation should be humanitarian or self-interest is a waste of time. Both concepts are valid and they are intermingled in the North-South dialogue. It ought to be clear by now that the evolution of developing countries, some of which are industrializing rapidly, has important implications for the future of the Canadian economy. Although there is still much human suffering in the developing countries, the continuing image of the Third World as poverty-Stricken has obscured the dramastic economic improvements that have occurred in the middle-income countries. The "Harvard Business Review" recently reported that 34 of the 500 largest international companies are now based in developing countries.

So far, Canada's economic links with developing countries are weak. We heard that 11 per cent of Canadian exports go to the Third World, a figure that is still low, compared to that of our main industrial partners, yet more than 37 per cent of U.S. exports go to developing countries, 45 per cent of Japan's and 18 per cent of the European community's.

The same story applies in the field of investment. We are lagging behind our industrial partners in our relations with developing countries. We were warned by the Economic Council of Canada as far back as 1978 in a study entitled "For a Common Future: A Study of Canada's Relations With the Developing Countries" that the mere fact many foreign corporations were investing in the developing world made it likely Canada would suffer a loss of markets and, consequently, of employment and profits if its firms did not do likewise.

As John F. Bulloch, President of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, has recommended, the Canadian business community should probe the new opportunities for trade links and joint ventures in the developing countries, especially those that are rapidly industrializing. Without a doubt, more trade links with the developing countries means more jobs for Canada. Canadian exporters will be able to pick up major contracts for infrastructural work in areas such as communications, transportation and resource development. Already 2,500 Canadian businesses both large and small, have won CIDA contracts in the past few years. That is only a beginning.

CIDA's industrial co-operation program encourages Canadian firms, with funding for starter and feasibility studies, to establish or expand operations in developing countries. Recently that program has been expanded, and I support that expansion.

Canada is well placed to assist developing nations with the following: in utilizing computers; in satellite monitoring; in breeding techniques to improve the world's food supply; in adapting microelectronic technology to decentralize production so that new manufacturing techniques can be integrated into rural societies; and in dividing limited resources between tele-communications and transport, enabling villages and small industries to derive more benefits from new developments in communications technology. The future for Canadian business in developing countries is not only imaginative, it is exciting. I believe that we have to do much more in our country to acquaint Canadian businesses, not just the large businesses but the small businesses, to the vast potential involved here. Our business should be stimulated to that end.

For all these reasons, the Progressive Conservative party has adopted a policy on Canada's role in international development.

I shall now put on the record the core of that policy for which our party stands. First, we believe that Canada, in its own and general interest, should respond constructively to the need to reduce trade barriers to the common progress of developing nations. Second, with respect to Canada's aid program, the program should be raised to at least the agreed target level of 0.7 per cent of our GNP by 1990. Third, this program should be concentrated in fewer countries and consideration for aid should be based on greater need. In other words, the greatest opportunity of benefit should go to the people of a country based on effective use of aid tools, proper application of programs in co-operation with government agencies operating in the particular country and political, economic and human rights conditions. Moreover, opportunities for economic benefits to Canada and the need and opportunity for Canada's political influence in the country or region are also affirmed as important principles in Canadian foreign policy. Fourth, Canada's aid program should include readiness to respond to the survival needs of peoples facing famine or disaster. Fifth, the aid program should be continuously assessed and modified to ensure a meaningful contribution to the long run well-being of those people in the recipient countries.

That is what our party stands for, and these are the broad criteria we will use to establish how far the government will move in implementing its own response which was tabled today.

I will take a moment to mention what I consider to be the main recommendations in the report of the parliamentary task force on North-South relations, to which the government has responded today. There are 38 recommendations. Time does not permit me to go through them all. I shall just mention what I consider to be the six principal recommendations in what the government has said. The following are what I consider to be the most important recommendations.

The first is a commitment that Canada's official development assistance be raised to 0.7 per cent of the gross national product by the year 1990. The government responded today that it will take that recommendation into account, but it has not made a commitment. I remind hon. members that our party has made such a commitment.

The second is that the World Bank double its gearing ratio in incremental stages. That is a mechanism now being planned within the World Bank. The new president of the World Bank has given approval to steps to move in that direction. The North-South task force report stated that it would enable the World Bank to double its gearing ratio yet again. The World Bank has doubled its capitalization in recent months from $40 billion to $80 billion by doubling the gearing ratio under which it lends money to developing nations. This would mean a quadrupling from where the World Bank has been operating presently, that is to say, from $40 billion to $160 billion. The government said that would be inferior, but it recognized the need for further exploration. I believe the government should have moved on that recommendation.

The third recommendation I would mention is that the International Monetary Fund show greater responsiveness to the externally caused debt situation in the least developed countries. I have mentioned the African experience of the oil importing countries which are running up horrendous deficits as a result of conditions over which they have no control. The government responded today that the current IMF measures indicate a willingness to respond and that Canada would support further evolution. I believe that is not a sufficiently strong enough recommendation for Canada to give some leadership in the North-South dialogue. I say to you, sir, that the North-South summit in Mexico will succeed or fail on the single issue of whether or not a mechanism is found to repair the horrendous debt of the least developed countries as a result of oil importation.

Fourth, we recommended that a greater voting strength be given to OPEC in the international financial institutions. How can you expect OPEC to recycle huge surpluses of money if they do not have a stronger share in the voting of the World Bank and the IMF? The government said it agreed with this recommendationm and encouraged a higher profile in the World Bank affiliate for the OPEC nations. That is a good response. I wish it were stronger, but at least the government has responded affirmatively.

Fifth, we recommended that Canada support the World Bank energy affiliate by which under a new concept a new mechanism would be established making it possible to go into developing countries to find oil and gas for them so as to reduce the importation of energy. The government's response to that recommendation is the strongest of any response it has given to any recommendation. The government said it would continue to support the concept and do whatever it could to persuade OPEC and the north of the advantages of the World Bank affiliate. I commend the government for that strong response. I wish the rest of the responses today had been as strong as the one enunciated in that paragraph.

Sixth, we recommended that the government instigate a major public inquiry of the industrial sectors likely to be at long-range disadvantage. The government has rejected that inquiry saying that the information about industrial adjustments, for instance in the textile industry, is already known to the government. I say it is not known to the Canadian people, and we need a sense of direction.

If I had to summarize the direction of the North-South task force report, it would be to plead that the Canadian people become much more knowledgeable and involved—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, I could finish my speech if I were granted two minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member may finish his speech only if there is unanimous consent.

Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, I thank hon. members for their courtesy.

I believe the government has made a mistake in rejecting the recommendation for 1 per cent of official development assistance to be focused on development education in Canada. I believe that if, as we heard earlier today, we are going to influence the Hamilton steel worker, the Regina housewife and millions of Canadians about what this whole multi-dimensional complex North-South issue is all about, we must do a better educational job.

• (1800)

I am sorry that the government did not give a commitment to a new five-year strategy for international development. I believe that it should have. The last one, 1975 to 1980, had 21 points. It is unfortunate that, as the North-South Institute said, 13 of the 21 points were given a failing or unsatisfactory grade. Nonetheless, it would be better to at least have a strategy by which we could then measure the government's progress.

Finally, the proof of the government's response to the North-South report will be in how successful Canada is in persuading our industrial partners, particularly the United States, the United Kingdom and Germany, in the forthcoming summit that new economic partnerships with the South must be established. The proof will be in what kind of instructions the government gives its negotiators for the round of economic global negotiations that must follow the North-South summit.

The proof will be in how well the government follows the admonition of Lester B. Pearson in his Nobel Peace Prize acceptance speech that economic and social progress is a political imperative in every quarter of the Globe. Mr. Pearson said:

If we ignore this, there will be no peace.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: At six o'clock the hon. member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche) had finished his remarks.

I recognize the hon. Minister of Economic and Regional Expansion.

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour for me to outline in this House the policy that the Canadian government has followed for many years to promote the progress and development in all its national and international elements of what I could describe as the community of fully or partially francophone countries and peoples. In short, I should like to assess the present situation and future direction of the francophone community.

Mr. Speaker, Canada has played a basic role and continues to be at the forefront of the creation, support and implementation of this cooperation and dialogue among the peoples and nations which make up the international francophone community. Canada has acted and continues to act jointly and simultaneously both multilaterally and bilaterally with all these countries which share the French language as a means of communication.

This expression of closer ties, co-operation and mutual assistance required in a world of complex and interdependent relationships in all its human and technical aspects has led to the creation on the international level of many intergovernmental institutions, of which the most important is the Agency for Cultural and Technical Co-operation, without forgetting the annual conference of ministers of education and that of the ministers of youth and sports, as well as to the creation of non-governmental organizations and associations which are also very active in the international francophone movement.

The Canadian government has been very active within the francophone community from its very beginnings. It has played a major role in the creation and development of its many institutions since the 1960s. The development of the French fact in Canada and its extension externally has been a profound motivation for Canadian involvement. The extension of Canadian bilingualism on an international level and the participation of Canada in the international French-speaking community are a fundamental and permanent element of its foreign policy. The existence and vitality of French language Canadians provide a means and an opportunity to develop relationships and bonds of solidarity and co-operation with many countries in Europe, Africa, the Near East, Oceania, North America and Asia, which for a diversity of historical reasons and to various degrees, use French as their language of communication. The same can be said about the opportunities for fruitful contacts and exchanges with a great many countries throughout these same continents which, like the English-speaking community of Canada, speak the language of Shakespeare. It seems to me that for a young and dynamic country, Canada is placed in an exceptional situation by having what could be described as natural bonds of understanding with more than half the countries of the world.

In this context, we have established a network of bilateral diplomatic representation with all French-speaking countries. We have developed with them an important program of co-operation for development purposes. We have initiated a political dialogue on major international issues and we have finally become members of all multilateral French-speaking organizations.

In fact, the central government is not solely responsible for this effort at creating closer ties. This concers all Canadians and indeed benefits all Canadians, since the Commonwealth implies the Canadian population as a whole. While Quebec naturally became interested in the French-speaking community very early, the federal government on the other hand has tried to urge the governments of the other provinces with large French-speaking populations to also play an active role in this regard. For instance, representatives from the four provinces,

Ontario, New Brunswick, Manitoba and, of course, Quebec were part of the Canadian delegation to the conference that established in 1970 the Agency for Cultural and Technical Co-operation. The major centre of French language and culture in Canada, the province of Quebec, in agreement with the Canadian government, has held from the start a special place in the governmental francophone community, through its status of participating government.

In December 1977, New Brunswick, as a 42 per cent French-speaking province, applied to the Canadian government for that same status of participating government. What exactly is involved by the participating government status? That status allows the Quebec government and the New Brunswick government to participate on their own behalf, but within the Canadian delegation, in the agency's activities and programs. That status allows them to have a seat and an identification plate at the discussion table, with the right to speak. It allows them to communicate directly with the agency on matters involving program planning. These two governments contribute financially to the agency's budget. Their contributions, also identified, are computed as a fraction of the Canadian contribution of which they are an integral part.

That kind of status developed by the Canadian government is absolutely unique. Nowhere else in the world is to be found a similar arrangement, under which the federal government grants to the government of one of its provinces or federated states a special status to participate on its own behalf in an international or regional organization. This is to be found nowhere else in the world, and I suggest it is the most perfect example of the flexibility of the federal government to allow provincial governments, within their own fields of jurisdiction and to the extent compatible with Canada's foreign policy, to fully participate in international organizations.

Information and consultation mechanisms have been established between these two participating governments and the national government to ensure active and genuine participation from the three governments, while ensuring united Canadian action within the community of the agency's members.

Canada is involved in all of the agency's programs, with a view to maintaining a balance between cultural and technological activities. To that end, in 1975 Canada proposed the establishment of the Special Development Program, or SDP for short, patterned after the Commonwealth Fund for Technical Co-operation. Financed through voluntary contributions, the SDP reviews and carries out modest technical assistance programs geared to the needs expressed by any ACTC member, especially in the fields of education, training, research, agriculture, health and social communications. By establishing the SDP Canada wanted to revitalize the ACTC and turn it into a concrete instrument of solidarity to complement more significant bilateral and multilateral aids.

I might even say, Mr. Speaker, that in the twelve months I have been acting as advisor to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) on relations with French-speaking countries, a number of them told me that their interest in the agency is directly related to that aspect of co-operation at the social, technical and economic levels, and a great many of them would be much less interested if the agency were to restrict its activities solely to the defence and the renown of the French language. That is another way of saying that Canada was right to insist that the agency be also directly involved in socio-economic co-operation in addition to its cultural vocation. Very recently the agency has become the site for sectorial ministerial meetings. The first of those meetings was held in Luxembourg in 1977 for ministers of science and technology. The second took place in September 1980 in Paris where justice ministers gathered and there I acted as representative of the Canadian government; similarly, there was a conference of agriculture ministers in March 1981 and I had the opportunity to attend as spokesman for my colleague who holds that portfolio. The ministers for cultural affairs will get together in Cotonou this coming September. Other ministerial meetings are scheduled for 1982 and the following years. Slowly but surely the ACTC is getting to be the foremost and privileged centre for French-speaking communities. One of the objectives of the Canadian government is to have the agency regroup, under various forms, most of the activities of international French-speaking communities. However, when we speak of international French-speaking communities we must be very careful not to see today's reality solely through the prism of language.

Many of my counterparts whom I had the honour to meet during my various trips, a great number of the participating countries which are full members of the agency told me that on several occasions. Several of those countries have barely 2 or 3 per cent of their people who speak French. It would therefore be a serious mistake to try to look at reality solely through the prism of language. To the extent that language will help us to communicate and draw closer together, we will extend, enrich and deepen those relations which should be developed and bear fruit in all areas.

On the other hand, it must be kept in mind that the international French-speaking community emerged from various private French-speaking associations, some of which go back to some forty years. Most of them had a professional basis, such as the Association internationale des parlementaires de langue française, the AIPLF of which I have been appointed delegate for the Americas, or still l'Institut de droit d'expression française, or IDEF, which will hold its fourteenth convention in Montreal in September following the joint invitation of my colleague, the Minister of Justice of Canada (Mr. Chrétien) and the Quebec Minister of Justice. Others regrouped according to their common goals such as AUPELF, the Association of partly or fully francophone universities, which is to hold its convention both in Quebec City and Ottawa in September of this year, or CIRTEF, the International Council of francophone radio and television stations, which was created in 1978 at the suggestion of the Canadian government. CIRTEF regroups most of the francophone radio and television stations in the world.

The government of Canada of course provides financial assistance to a large number of these organizations which are either Canada-inspired or include a major Canada participation. At a time when co-operation among the people and cultures of the world is ever increasing, the importance of non-government international organizations is also increasing, and our financial contributions are a tangible encouragement to various Canadian groups actively involved in international activities.

While this new form of multilateral co-operation was developing, Canada was therefore establishing diplomatic relations with all the francophone countries, and slowly but surely we have set in motion a program of co-operation which, I hope, will be in full swing very soon. So will it be with all exchanges at every level, whether commercial, economic, social or cultural, and to crown this effort at rapprochement based on a better knowledge of and co-operation with these various countries, it will surely be possible eventually to consider jointly with these countries means of bringing about a rapprochement in the world and ensure peace on earth.

What are in fact the goals we are pursuing in our bilateral relations with these countries, especially African countries to which I feel particularly attracted? Our first goal is obvious: Canada seeks to affirm and show its French personality as well as its sincere interest in the cutural development and enrichment which we are likely to get from contacts with others. Needless to say, Canada as a whole should be involved in this undertaking. Our second goal is also clear: to help these countries which are among the neediest in the world. It is both our duty and our responsibility within the world community.

The third objective is to promote Canada's interests in major areas tied up with political, social economic and commercial elements. Therefore we must establish with these countries relationships that will be as extensive and varied as possible. As advisor to the Prime Minister and to the Secretary of State for External Affairs for relations with French-speaking countries it is a pleasure for me to give you some detailed information regarding the state of our relations with these francophone countries and prospects for the future.

In behalf of the Secretary of State, I have already been on official business to France, Belgium and above all to a great many countries of Africa. Last January, for instance, I went on official business as Canada's representative to express our goodwill and intentions of co-operation to four countries in the Sahel, namely Mali, Upper-Volta, Niger and the Ivory Coast. I just returned last week from an official visit to Guinea and Gabon.

I can tell you all the admiration and esteem that these countries feel for Canada and the Canadian people. Everywhere no matter in which countries I had the honour to represent my fellow citizens, there was a tremendous expression of sympathy for Canada because all these countries acknowledged that neither by tradition nor by inclination we were interested in a sphere of influence but simply to express in a concrete manner our feeling of solidarity towards mankind. Canadian aid which amounts presently to about $150 million per year just for francophone Africa is appreciated because as I just stated it is given with no ulterior motives and it meets needs and priorities as defined by the governments with which we enjoy close relationships. Canadian aid, which is administered by highly capable Canadian representatives and experts, is considered to be very effective in all those countries. Besides this bilateral aid, Canada contributes substantially to multilateral and regional organizations operating in Africa. For instance, for a long time Canada was the greatest contributor to African development funding and I think that today we rank second or third with regard to our contributions to the entire African continent.

I must also add that our relations with those countries have been open and friendly. Everywhere I have been, like my predecessors, I have had open and constructive discussions with local officials. Canada's advice and support are sought and solicited everywhere. The meetings that I have had with each head of state of those friendly nations, and only last week I spoke with President Ahmed Sekou Touré of Guinea and President Albert-Bernard Bongo of Gabon, show that our relations are diversified and that we are aware of all the latest problems. Guinea is reaching out for Canada while at the same time Canada, through this African state, is widening its audience in Africa. My meeting with the President of Guinea marked the first official visit by a Canadian minister since the country became independent in 1958. I saw that the president of Guinea is considered, not only in his own country but also throughout the continent and the islamic world as a great leader who was able to forge a nation in his country, where private Canadians interests have been represented for many years. He was kind enough to grant me four meetings with him and we discussed various current issues. I also met with the President of Gabon, and of course all the signs of friendship which were expressed were not directed to me personally but to the Canadian people as a whole.

There exists between Canada and the French speaking countries, both at the bilateral and the multilateral levels, common grounds for co-operation and understanding. In this world which is divided in rich and poor nations, industrialized and developing countries, along a North-South or an East-West axis, Canada is a in a good position to effect a rapprochement between both sides, and to define, with those countries, the means to help achieve harmony and make development a success. The trips of the Prime Minister as well as my own trips have convinced me that we stand to gain in every way from building closer ties with french speaking countries like Canada. In closing, Mr. Speaker, I should like to emphasize that many Canadians, missionaries, volunteers, businessmen, have worked and invested everywhere throughout the francophone world. Whether they come from Quebec, Western or Eastern Canada or Ontario, all those Canadians have made a significant contribution to the co-operative efforts made by the Canadian government. In addition, I am proud to note that the Canadian government policy with regard to the international francophone world is non partisan and involves all parties in this House. Indeed, I want to congratulate the former secretary of State for external affairs and his government who, in this regard, were as active as the preceding government and also, in this field, performed in exemplary fashion.

I intend to pursue my work especially in Africa, I urge my hon. friends, ministers and hon. members to go there and concretely foster ties that are not only dear to us but let us admit it, useful in every way. I have had the opportunity to discuss topics which are of common interest to ourselves and our African hosts in a very positive way, such as the United Nations, the law of the sea, disarmement, trade, peace in the world, first and foremost on African soil, because Canada is implementing a policy of co-operation, mutual aid, assistance and friendship with those countries, in short, one of concrete political presence. Mr. Speaker, we must strengthen our role in support for and contribution to the international francophone world and our co-operation with all the countries involved. Every part of Canada will be the richer for it.

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the hon. Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. De Bané) who has just spoken. I assure him that as puzzled as we might be as to how it falls under his responsibilities in the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to tour Africa, most of us on this side are glad he did because his interests are well-known and his sincerity is unquestioned in this area.

I listened with interest to all the speeches thus far today. I think the speech of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was perhaps very thoughtful. I will read it carefully tomorrow. I rather think his coach, Senator Davey, perhaps told him to give a flat speech today, not to hit any high points. I was surprised by the number of absentees on the other side. That party usually has a very, very good turnout for the Prime Minister's remarks, yet today I counted only 42 members, which means that there were over 100 missing. Considering he only speaks perhaps once a year in the House, I would have thought they could have done better for him.

As usual I was pleased with the remarks of the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald). She and I have been working together in the closely allied areas of external affairs and defence for several years without a single difference. We both seem to know exactly where the fine line is which divides the two departments. Of course the hon. member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche) is much like the Minister for Regional Economic Expansion, his credentials are such that everyone listens to him with a great deal of attention on this subject.

The hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett) gave a very interesting speech. Her answer to the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) was particularly apt when she said that it was the policy of the NDP to withdraw from NATO. I hope the leader of the NDP will be here tomorrow to give his version of it. I understand that the hon. member was speaking this time for the party, not the way she spoke a year and a half ago when she and her leader were speaking out of opposite sides of their mouths about the same party. I had the foolish notion that the NDP settled these matters at its annual conferences, but it is nice to have it settled already.

Of course the policy of withdrawing from NATO would upset some of their party's colleagues in Norway, Belgium, Denmark, West Germany and France. I would have thought the NDP would have a link with international socialism, but perhaps not. In any case, I look forward to hearing the hon. leader of the NDP tomorrow. The last time he spoke in the House he came out four square for closure; I think the House leader of that party has been somewhat pale ever since. He gave a rousing speech in support of the Prime Minister's use of closure in the Constitution debate. Perhaps tomorrow will be as interesting as today.

The Canadian defence policy is tied inextricably to the foreign policy. Because of our geographic location, economic interests and cultural ties with the western world, we have a foreign policy which has as its cornerstone the maintenance of a defence force and a military alliance with 14 other nations of the western world.

The North Atlantic Treaty Organization provides us with increased security and economic benefits. Also it provides us with a voice in international decision-making, if we care to use it, sometimes we appear not to care to use our voice. These benefits do not come to us very cheaply. Membership in the NATO alliance carries responsibilities with it. Unfortunately, while we have been only to eager to accept the advantages of our alliance, we have been lax in shouldering our share of the burden. In 1978, the members of the NATO alliance agreed to increase defence spending in real terms to 3 per cent annually over a five-year period, ending in 1984.

Canada currently spends 1.7 per cent of its GNP on defence. The only country in the NATO alliance which spends less on defence is Luxembourg. Even Portugal, with all its economic problems, manages to devote 3.4 per cent of its GNP to defence. In terms of per capita spending, in United States funds Canada spends only $166 compared with the United States which spends $527 and the United Kingdom which spends $276. In 1978 when the 3 per cent decision was taken, Canada was already low man on the totem pole in terms of defence spending. It is interesting to see how we have done since then.

In 1978-79 Canada increased its defence budget in real terms by 2.79 per cent. In 1979-80 the defence budget decreased in real terms by .23 per cent. That was the year the Conservative government was in power and spending Liberal estimates. The final figures have not yet been made available for 1980-81, but it is estimated that the budget increased by 3.5 per cent. That was last year when the Liberals were spending Conservative estimates. It appears as if we might be pulling up our socks, but let us look closely at 1981-82.

When the estimates were tabled in March of this year, the minister appeared before the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence and explained that the increased budget contained provisions for a 3.1 per cent increase in real terms, plus an increase due to inflation of 11.7 per cent. This was based on the November, 1980 economic model, as it is called in the Department of National Defence. The May, 1981 economic model revises the inflation figure upward to 13.4 per cent. The extra 1.6 per cent to cover inflation can only come from the funds allocated to the 3.1 per cent real growth.

Since we are operating under the envelope system and that no further funds except to cover higher than anticipated pay raises can be allocated to the department, the real growth for 1981-82 can only be a maximum of 1.5 per cent and in all likelihood will be much less. This funding problem is exacerbated by a minister who at times does not seem to know what funds he needs to meet his commitments.

I should like to say at the outset that the Senate committee on defence has done a much better job this spring than the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence in the way it has heard witnesses, gathered information and formed opinions. Frankly, I read the minutes of the Senate committee to get much of the evidence we seem unable to obtain in front of the standing committee of the House of Commons. At a Senate committee meeting in December, 1980, the minister listed what equipment the Department of National Defence will need to purchase between now and the year 2000. It was a long, expensive list but when questioned about the costs, the minister said:

> If we had 3 per cent till the year 2000, I think you can say we can cover that.

However, at a meeting of the standing committee in May, 1981, the minister appeared to change his mind because he said:

> Obviously, I do not think that with a 3 per cent growth for the next 19 or 20 years that we could have all that—

He was speaking of the list of equipment he had mentioned before. When figures are published showing how little Canada contributes to defence, the standard government story is that money does not tell the whole story. We are upgrading the quality of the forces commitment to NATO, and that is just as important.

Well, it behooves us to have a look at what we do contribute in manpower and equipment to the defence of the free world. At first glance it may appear that we have an 80,000 strong fighting force to contribute to the defence of Canada and the West; but that is not entirely accurate. According to the 1980-81 military balance which is published by the International Institute of Strategic Studies, our forces, at the time of compilation, had a total strength of just over 78,000. However, 45,317 of that total are support staff. While these people are vital to the effective operation of the forces, they do not make up the fighting arms of the forces. The other 33,000 in forces personnel are divided into army, 12,675; navy, 5,327; and air force, 15,327. That is an interesting figure in itself. Canada is the only country which has more manpower in its air force than in its army. Despite this fact, our air force has a very serious shortage of pilots.

The army, our mobile command, is comprised of three brigade groups and the special service force. One of the three brigade groups, 4 Canadian Mechanized Brigade, is stationed in Germany and has a peacetime strength of approximately 3,400. In times of crisis, that group will be brought up to a strength of 5,600. The 4 CMBG, the Canadian Mechanized Brigade group, operates with only two infantry battalions instead of three; so, while it is called a brigade group, it is actually incomplete.

Mobile command also has committed 4,000 troops to Norway. Part of that commitment is formed by the special service force which, Your Honour may remember, is currently serving in Cyprus on peacekeeping duties. In times of tension, these 4,000 troops will be carried over by airlift to northern Norway; their equipment will arrive by ship three weeks later. One does not have to be a tactician or strategist or genius to see that there is something that does not quite balance in these figures. The fact is that we do not have sufficient numbers in mobile command to carry on peacekeeping duties and at the same time to send the 4,000 troops to Norway, which we might be asked to do.

Adding these figures up, in times of tension, Canada will have 10,000 troops overseas, including those on peacekeeping duties, out of a total of 12,600. Therefore, in Canada, we are left with 2,600 troops to provide reinforcements for our brigage in Europe, to protect our borders and to cope with any problems, such as an apprehended insurrection in Canada. Your Honour may recall that this government, at times, declares apprehended insurrections with very little evidence.

Obviously, mobile command needs more troops if it is to handle all the tasks which are assigned to it. General Paradis, the former commander of mobile command, estimated that he needed 5,000 more men in the army alone to achieve a balanced organization and realism in our tasks.

In the event of war, our troops in Europe will have to be reinforced. Our reinforcement plan is based on various statistics. Admiral Allan, now deputy chief of the defence staff, told the Senate committee:

If you are asking whether I think those factors are realistic, I have to put on my operational commander's hat and say that I have some doubts about the veracity of some of those statistics.

The important point to remember here is that any future war will be fought with the forces in being. There simply will not be time to recruit and train the additional hundreds of thousands that we did in World War II.

Reinforcements to Europe will be ferried over by ship. Canada's maritime commitment to NATO involves, by the use of our destroyers and long range patrol aircraft, keeping the Atlantic sea lanes free of enemy ships and submarines so that allied ships carrying reinforcements and supplies can reach Europe.

According to Admiral Timbrell, retired commander of maritime command, in order to fulfil our maritime role adequately, we need 36 destroyers, of which we currently have 23, with only 20 operational; we need 12 minesweepers, of which we have none; 10 submarines, of which we have three; four supply ships, of which we have three; 36 long range patrol aircraft, of which we have just purchased 18, and four of them will be on the west coast; 40 short range patrol aircraft with an antisubmarine warfare capability, of which we have none; and 40 helicopters, of which we have 33 for military tasks. These figures indicate that we should be doing more. The government protests that it is doing more, so let us have a look at what it is doing.

We are supposed to be buying six new patrol frigates to replace our six oldest destroyers, but we are already two years behind schedule on that purchase. Beyond that initial six, the government has no plans as yet to replace the rest of the fleet. Even with the destroyer life extension plan now under way, unless there are new orders placed, by 1992 we will be down to 15 destroyers and in 1996 we will have a 10-ship navy, the four DDH-280s and the six frigates.

In addition to this downgrading of our destroyer force, the government has no plans to buy any minesweepers and no plans to increase the size of our submarine force. Our LRPA or long-range patrol aircraft purchase is at an end, and there are no plans for additional purchases. New short range patrol aircraft are on the books for a future purchase, but no definite arrangements have been made. I would heartily recommend that some reading be done of the danger, in a high technology field with a small force, of purchasing planes as technologically advanced as the LRPA or the F-18, as the costs soon run away with the entire budget for a service, if one is not careful. That is what has happened with the LRPA and will happen with the F-18.

This brings me to the last aspect of our NATO commitment which concerns 1 Canadian Air Group based in West Germany. Currently it operates with three squadrons of CF-104s which will be replaced by the new F-18A. What is interesting about this commitment is that we have repeatedly used the NFA purchase to impress our NATO allies with our qualitative upgrading. However, at the moment, there are no definite plans to replace our low level air defence equipment, which currently consists of vintage 1940s Bofors anti-aircraft guns and blowpipe missiles. This equipment is so inadequate that Financial Post writer, Robert English, was forced to conclude:

—our bases can only be defended if the enemy gives us lots of warning, picks a sunny day and promises to fly slowly.

The ridiculous part of this is that while we are committing an expensive and technologically advanced aircraft to the front line defence in Europe, we have no way of protecting those aircraft. Chances are, in the event of war, our F-18As would have a rather basic difficulty: their own airfields would be untenable and unusable.

Therefore, while the listing of our manpower and equipment commitment to western Europe may look respectable on paper, what it actually comes down to is that we have insufficient manpower, inadequate and outdated equipment, and are spreading ourselves too thinly. While this may appear to be a Canadian problem, it actually is more far-reaching than that. Because we are a member of an alliance, other nations are depending on us. If we are unable to perform our roles adequately, we become a liability to the NATO alliance. I do not believe for a minute that we can carry out the commitments we have made.

The tasking of our military with several roles is not based on any military appreciation of the situation. Military men know that we have a ludicrous scenario in front of us. Rather, this whole plan is the result of political and economic factors. Whether or not we are making a solid contribution to the alliance is not important to this government; rather, we must make a good showing. In order to show our faces in international circles, we must at least look as if we were doing something to protect the western world's interests.

But there is another side to this as well, and that is, we are not fooling anyone. As Nicholas Stethem told the Senate committee:

The nature of the international diplomatic beast is such that no one will say Canadians have let the side down. They are going to say nice things if we make any effort at all.

A fine example of this was the comment made by Sir Jack Harman, DSACEUR, at this year's conference of defence associations. He was talking about our 4 CMBG in Europe when he said:

Indeed, our senior officers in ACE are unstinting in their praise and consider it to be the best formation of its size in Europe.

Notice that he said, "of its size". You can read this as meaning "Why isn't it bigger?".

In the final communiqué issued after the May, 1981, Defence Planning Council ministerial session, recognition was given to "situations outside NATO's boundaries" which may "threaten the vital interests of the west". While extending NATO's boundaries was not considered to be the answer, the NATO ministers decided that individual countries may decide, in order to protect their vital interests, to deploy forces outside the NATO area. The U.S. rapid deployment force (RDF) was given as an example of such a force.

This raises at least two questions to my mind. We are continually being treated to philosophical statements in matters of defence, but we get very little of substance. In this instance, what does Canada consider a threat to its vital interests? In the absence of any definite statement from the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) or the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne), are we to assume that if any one NATO nation considers its vital interests threatened by, for example, an insurrection in one of the oil-producing countries of the Middle East, then we too would consider our vital interests threatened by virtue of our alliance, and thus deploy forces to the area?

This question is especially in need of an answer since the minister told reporters that Canada was willing, in principle, to contribute to a U.S. rapid deployment force in the Middle East. Why would we contribute to the RDF, and is this actual government policy? I have never received an answer to this.

The final communiqué of that NATO meeting also noted as follows:

> National Defence planning should make provision towards compensating for changes in the availability of forces committed to NATO because of diversion or tasking on a national basis to carry out operations outside NATO's boundaries in support of the vital interests of allied countries.

Again, the question arises in light of this broad, insubstantial statement: What plans does Canada have? Will we increase our NATO commitment if European or U.S. forces are deployed elsewhere? Will we buy more tanks, increase the size of mobile command's forces in Europe or send more F-18s over? Will any increase in our European commitment come from our forces in being, or will the government allocate more resources to our overtasked, undermanned defence department? This is a very good question and no one seems to have an answer that they want to share with the House of Commons.

I would now like to turn to another one of our international commitments—peacekeeping. Canada has a good record in this area and, as has often been noted, Canada heads the list whenever a new peacekeeping force is being considered; as it should, because of the fine quality of the troops we have sent almost everywhere in the world on peacekeeping missions.

Mobile command is the service arm that provides the peacekeeping troops. Hon. members will remember that that is the command I spoke of earlier as being strained by manpower shortages. Currently, we have approximately 750 troops out on peacekeeping duties, and it appears we may be asked to contribute up to 1,000 more for duties in the Sinai.

The government's present policy is to have no more than 2,000 men out on peacekeeping duties at one time, so participating in the Sinai force appears to be within our means. But let us not forget that in the event of increased tension, it is Mobile Command's troops that have to be sent to Norway and central Europe.

Even when all is "quiet on the western front", to use an old phrase, Mobile Command feels the strain of deploying troops around the world. Here is how Brigadier General Beattie explains the problem:

> When one picks an infantry battalion, it goes as a unit . . . But, when one starts providing support troops, one has to denude a whole formation of all its support in order to provide a service battalion, for instance; and yet, if one takes a service battalion as such from one of the brigades, that deprives the brigade of all its support services. Thus, one should try to take elements from various brigades across the country in order to spread the strain rather than concentrating it in one or two areas.

I may be jumping the gun, worrying about our involvement in Sinai peacekeeping. The ministers to whom we look for direction in this area, the Minister of National Defence and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, cannot seem to agree between themselves. The Minister of National Defence has stated that any request for troops will be listened to sympathetically because he does not think "Canada wants to refuse to keep the peace in any way we can in any part of the world." The Secretary of State for External Affairs, however, is not so co-operative. He told reporters that he did not want to become involved in a process over which we have no control and which may not be going anywhere.

A former secretary of state for external affairs, Hon. Mitchell Sharp, set out eight precepts that he wanted to be followed before our troops went overseas on any peacekeeping duties. The first was that it should always be under the UN auspices. The one that is now the subject of discussion comes under the agreement reached among the United States, Israel and Egypt as a result of the Camp David talks.

If this keeps up, we will have 1,000 troops on peacekeeping duties in the Sinai before the Minister of National Defence and the Secretary of State for External Affairs know they have gone.

Canada has chosen not to stand alone in an armed world but has chosen to ally itself with like-minded nations. In return for increased national security, Canada must pay its dues. As our Prime Minister once said in his elegant style, "put up or shut up".

The men and women of our Armed Forces are doing the best they can with the resources available to them. As many witnesses before the Senate committee hearings have noted, it is a "can do" attitude. But that is not enough. These professionals need support—support from the government, and support from the people.

Changes need to be made within the Department of National Defence, structural changes and functional changes. More funds need to be allocated to the defence of this country. If we were unable to protect ourselves, we would be unable to follow a separate foreign policy, which means even our domestic policies would be under the control of foreign nations.

Too often, when constructive criticism is levelled at the defence policy of this country, the Minister of National Defence and his department close ranks as if under seige. Rather than look closely at the problems facing them, they adopt a "kitty bar the door" attitude for maintaining the status quo, as witness their recent decision to brief the senators on their personnel deficiencies but only if the meeting was held in camera. I was shocked a week ago today when defence officials would only give evidence on personnel strategies to the committee if the meeting was in camera.

Having some experience in this area, it is my opinion that if the minister and the Department of National Defence do not develop an ability to become self-analytical and stop being so self-protective, then sometime, sooner rather than later, there will need to be a royal commission of inquiry into the administration and structure of that department. This country is not getting $6 billion worth of defence this year. When I say that, I am thinking particularly of the troops that are up front, the number of ships we have and the number of sailors to man the ships; the number of aircraft we have and the number of people we have to fly the aircraft; the number of tanks and other army weapons we have and how many men we have to man them. It does not seem to me that we are getting $6 billion worth of defence. The Canadian people are willing to pay, but they want to, and have a right to, know that their money is being spent wisely.

To become an equal partner instead of a reluctant ally in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, Canada must review its defence policy. It must bring the defence policy to the people for approval and support.

Our way of life depends on the western world being able to protect itself. If we are not willing to defend what we consider to be right in this world, then we could well lose it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chas L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to express my support for the motion before us and to congratulate the government and the NDP for making time available for this two day debate on foreign affairs issues. It is unfortunate that members of the official opposition played the role of Scrooge in this respect, by refusing to donate one day for this purpose despite their great declaration this afternoon in favour of making Canadians more aware of foreign affairs issues. It is typical of the Conservative party to preach in one way and to act in another.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): What a distortion.

Mr. Caccia: I realize from the silence into which the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche) has sunk, that he is inclined to agree with me.

What I have to say this evening is this, in summary, Mr. Speaker. It is a three-way plea to the government in connection with the July summit and the United Nations, starting from the premise that can there can be no successful North-South dialogue and policy without East-West relations in good shape and without peace in the world. I will also make an up to date, brief report on the CSCE in Madrid. Finally, I will put on record some passages from the United Nations report on nuclear weapons and conclude with some brief questions flowing from it.

Let me start with my first plea to the government which has to do with the July summit. The monetary policy pursued these days by Washington is putting the economic health of the western nations in serious danger because of the effect that monetary policy is having on Canada and on western European nations. As hon. members know, the tight money policy has driven interest rates to an all-time high. In addition, the policy pursued by Washington is coupled with a tax cut, which really puts more consumer money into circulation. The combination of the two has created a situation whereby capitals in neighbouring countries find it very attractive to take advantage of the interest rates which prevail at present in the United States. This has put quite a strain on our currency and on the currencies of western European nations. I plead with the government to put this issue on the July summit agenda for an airing and to establish what will happen if this policy is not reconsidered.

At present, there is nothing wrong with the economic situation in Canada except one thing, namely, the monetary policy being pursued by Washington.

My second plea has to do with the summit and with the question of political will in East-West relations. This afternoon we had several interventions. All of them helped to cast some light on this problem and different approaches were taken concerning this rather complex issue. Hon. members should look at what is happening in Madrid and in Vienna at the disarmament conference, and as well at what the committee on disarmament is doing in Geneva. They will notice one common trend, namely, that in all three places where East meets West everyone is stalling. In other words, no progress is being made. What is going on in these three places is a highly organized and very interesting form of a modern minuet whereby alternative delegations make highly sophisticated interventions on a number of complex subjects motivated, I am sure, by good will, but when it comes to the crunch, no progress is made.

Why is progress not being made? It seems to me there is no political will. Where is the political will? Political will is an important aspect which ought to be explored and established.

Because of what happened in Afghanistan two years ago, the Western nations, Washington among them, have to make a decision as to what should be done in the light of the Afghanistan situation. Two years later it still seems to be the major bone of contention standing in the way of modest progress in relations between East and West. I agree with those who say that the invasion of Afghanistan was a reprehensible act; it was condemned by Canada and the west, and rightly so, and in Geneva, Vienna and Madrid at every forum and at every meeting which has taken place since that invasion it has been condemned. That invasion has damaged the Afghan people. It has also seriously damaged East-West relations. Serious damage has been done to detente; otherwise we would not be talking about it even in this House of Commons today.

The question that comes to mind in June, 1981 is how long should the world suffer the damage flowing from this action? That question leads to a number of different conclusions. I can put forward only those at which I have arrived after serious thought. I can submit them only for your consideration, Mr. Speaker, and for the consideration of the House, not claiming, of course, that they are the ultimate or the correct ones. In all frankness, I cannot help but come to the conclusion that whether we like it or not, the Soviet Union saw a certain danger along its border. As a result, the Soviets decided to move in, probably taking an enormous risk and hoping that they could get away with it, or hoping that the invasion would not be related to the Helsinki Act or other major understandings between East and West. That was a very serious miscalculation. With the the Soviets there, the probability is that eventually Afghanistan will become another Soviet republic. It is a reality in the historical evolution of the Soviet Union. Once the Soviets move in, they are unlikely to move out unless circumstances change dramatically, and circumstances have not changed in that part of the world. As a result of that action, we saw the Soviet Union losing ground in detente vis-à-vis the west. The Soviets lost ground in the United Nations and they lost ground in relation to the Third World Nations.

But is there a point where the west should take advantage of a situation when the U.S.S.R. seems to be in a position of wanting to regain lost ground? Here we can do two things. We can continue on the road we have followed so far, develop a hard line position and tell them that we will not deal with them until they move out of Afghanistan. Or we can, at a certain point, take advantage of a situation of weakness in which the Soviets find themselves now, in a sense, because they wish to regain lost ground. This can be turned into an opportunity in favour of establishing a better understanding in that part of the world. Alternatively, perhaps we can achieve a certain kind of neutrality which is badly needed, particularly in that part of the world. This could lead to a resumption of detente negotiations.

I am inclined to believe that a point has to come when we must move onward, just as the world does. It is a question of timing. It is extremely difficult to decide when to move ahead. I do not think we will achieve much more by maintaining this element of stagnation and this prevailing lack of political will on the part of the West by not taking an initiative in relations between East and West on which the North-South dialogue hinges, in good part, by continuing too far along this road.

I said I would make a few pleas. My last one concerns the next conference of the United Nations in the spring of 1982, which is the special session on disarmament. In 1978 we came forward with an outstanding policy proposal which has become known under the name of policy of gradual suffocation of nuclear armaments. This, in part, has been put into practice. A number of aspects have become evident that need to be re-examined. We still have a good year ahead of us. I urge the government to look at the position we took in 1978 to see how we can put forward a renewed, typically Canadian innovative position that will win the respect of all the nations at the United Nations, as we have done since 1978 and in light of the experience in the intervening three years.

I will move on to give a quick report on where the Madrid conference stands at the present time. The fact that the Madrid conference is still on, having started under the most difficult circumstances, is a measure of the difficulty of reaching agreement between East and West. Nevertheless, the conference has served a very good purpose, that is of reviewing the obligations that nations undertook in signing the Helsinki Final Act. Canada placed great importance in 1975 on this review of the implementation of the Helsinki act for it makes little sense to go on formulating new agreements and new promises when old ones are broken, unkept or ignored.

We have taken a look at our own record and at those of other states. Together with other western nations we have been forthright in our criticism of the Soviet Union for its actions in Afghanistan which violated virtually every one of the principles set out in the Final Act: non-use of force, non-intervention in internal affairs, self-determination of peoples, human rights and fundamental freedoms.

We have also taken a firm stand on the importance of the respect for human rights by all participating states, and have protested at the Madrid meeting the denial of the right to leave one's country, harassment for applying to do so, the denial of religious and intellectual freedom and the persecution of individuals, such as that of the members of the Helsinki monitoring groups who have been imprisoned simply for seeking to know and act upon their rights. In so doing, we have attempted to reflect the deep concern which exists among Canadians, particularly those whose roots lie in eastern Europe, for the human rights' situation in the Soviet Union and certain other of the participating states.

There have been improvements since 1975. Although the record is mixed, the reunification of families divided by frontiers between East and West has benefited from the impetus provided by the CSCE process. Negotiators at Madrid are attempting to build upon those benefits which détente has produced and which still remain. They are also attempting to rectify the shortcomings in the fulfilment of the Final Act.

Among the principal preoccupations of the Madrid meeting is the question of security in Europe, and specifically the holding of a conference on disarmament. The western approach is that this conference should take place in stages. The first would develop certain measures to build confidence between East and West. In order to create confidence, these measures must be militarily significant, verifiable, binding and extend throughout Europe from the Atlantic to the Urals. While some progress has been made in bringing the Warsaw Pact position favouring a more declaratory and general approach to a disarmament conference closer to our own, differences still remain.

Seeking agreement to hold a disarmament conference has dominated the Soviet approach to the Madrid meeting. The West has sought to widen co-operation in the other areas. We have sought to improve contacts between western businessmen and their eastern counterparts; to better the conditions under which they may set up business offices in east European countries and gain access to financial and commercial information; to improve further the record on family reunification and travel for family meetings; to improve working conditions for journalists; and generally to try to achieve a freer flow of people, information and ideas across frontiers between East and West. Many of these ideas came up in the presentations made last autumn to the parliamentary subcommittee of this House on the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe in preparation for the Madrid conference, and appeared in the recommendations that were tabled in this House.

The Canadian position at Madrid is that progress should be made in developing co-operation and restoring confidence across the whole range of provisions of the Helsinki Final Act. To do so we must also make progress in a further area where confidence between East and West is woefully lacking and which directly affects Canadians' perception of détente, and that is in human rights.

The western nations have put forward proposals at Madrid for the protection of Helsinki monitors, for the right to practise religion, individually or in a community, and this is Canada's idea, for holding a meeting of experts of all participating states to discuss the approaches to human rights and the role that individuals and governments play in the exercise and protection of those rights.

After months of discussion and negotiations, eastern and western approaches to the key issues of security and human rights have not yet been reconciled at Madrid. We believe, however, that the negotiations must continue as long as there are some prospects of substantive results. Here the question of the political issue comes into the picture. With those words, I will move on to my last topic.

This has to do with the report that was published last fall by the United Nations entitled "A Comprehensive Study on Nuclear Weapons". That report, among other things which time does not permit me to put on record, notes that from 1968 to 1979 the total number of strategic nuclear warheads increased from 4,500 to at least 9,200 in the United States and from 1,000 to at least 6,000 in the U.S.S.R. These figures are probably outdated by a year and a half if not two years.

The report further points out that the exact number of nuclear warheads in the world today is probably not known by any single person or institution. Estimates cannot be verified officially. Published figures indicate, however, that the total may be in excess of 40,000. In terms of explosive power, these warheads are reported to range from about 100 tons up to more than 20 million tons equivalent of chemical high explosive.

The largest weapon ever tested released an energy of approximately 4,000 times that of the atomic bomb that levelled Hiroshima. There is in principle no upper limit to the explosive limit that may be obtained. The present total strength of arsenals may be equivalent to about one million Hiroshima bombs, some 13 billion tons of TNT.

I will stop there because enough has been quoted to raise the following question that came to my mind when reading parts of this report which was made public last fall. Against this nuclear background, the question that comes to mind is how can a claim be made that we will resume negotiations, or that any side can resume negotiations once it no longer perceives itself to be in a position of weakness? How do you measure and achieve a perfect degree of balance in this kind of business?

Let me put it a different way. Who is to assure us that the other side is prepared to negotiate with us when they are in the position of weakness when we are superior, when we are not willing to negotiate with them when they are superior to us in strength? If we are not prepared to negotiate out of a position of weakness, what makes us assume that the other side would, or, to put it in another form—and I will conclude with this—if each side is prepared to negotiate with the other side only when in a position of superiority, when, if ever, will both sides perceive to be superior to the other side at the same time? Here, in conclusion, I say to you, are the elements of a modern Greek drama entitled "The Nuclear Spiral". Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I should like to express my appreciation at this time for the opportunity of taking part in a debate on a government motion on the matter of external affairs. This really is almost unique. It is not unique to the extent that it is the second opportunity we have had in my lifetime in Parliament, which is almost eight and a half years—I repeat, the second time within eight and a half years—to debate external affairs in this House on a government motion. We note the condescension and hypocrisy oozing from that side this afternoon because of what they perceived to be their magnanimity in having brought forward a motion of this sort to be debated in the House on this occasion. No one to my knowledge, and I have sat through all the speeches, has read this motion into the record with all the inflaming words used in it. It is really earth shaking. Let me read it. It states:

> That this House take note of the present state and future prospects of Canada's international relations and endorse the broad thrust of the report of the Parliamentary Task Force on North-South Relations.

I might add that there is no vote on this motion but we are to take note and endorse.

When the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) rose to speak today, he did endorse the broad thrust of the report. Without going much further than that, he endorsed it. It was also notable that it was the first time in this House, to my knowledge, and I stand to be corrected on this, that this Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has taken part in a debate on foreign affairs.

Let us recognize as well that this government demolished an opportunity for this House to make an inquiry into foreign policy, as drawn up by the government of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark). Not only did this government demolish that opportunity, it destroyed by fire thousands of documents and studies from the Privy Council office that were destined to be distributed across the country and for study by the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

Mr. Caccia: I rise on a point of order. The hon. member has just made a very serious allegation. I challenge him to prove it.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): That is not a point of order, but it is true. Where are the documents now, I might ask that interloper who has just stepped into the debate? He has just had his time, said he concluded his remarks, but he is back on his feet. What has this government done now? Instead of permitting a thorough review of Canada's foreign policy, it has condescended to allow us one day's debate. We have had two days' debate in eight and a half years. This is the second day of debate during that time.

There was a foreign policy study in which I participated in 1969-70. The foreign policy review which was to have been undertaken by the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, or possibly a special subcommittee of that standing committee, was to have examined foreign policy and updated it in light of all the developments in foreign policy thrusts since the 1970s, for the 1980s, and on into the 1990s.

As I say, I find it difficult to accept this hypocritical washing and wringing of hands about the plight of the Third World by members on the other side, and I will come to that in a moment.

In view of the decision to give us one day's debate, the fact that the Prime Minister has taken part in it, and the fact that members of this government have demolished and destroyed those documents intended for a serious review in depth, I cannot help but ask myself, and I have been asking myself this question for about 48 hours, why the government has chosen this particular time for this particular debate. I ask myself this, particularly in view of other matters which are before us at this time such as legislation at the second reading stage, policy matters affecting Canadians, including interest rates, energy and inflation policy. They have all been put aside for this one day's debate. Why did the Prime Minister get involved in this debate? Is he setting himself up as the great manitou for the summit meetings which are to take place in July and, I think, in September in Ottawa and Mexico? Is he setting himself up as the great spokesman? If this is the way his spokesman's qualities are to be displayed, I cannot believe that those who will participate next month will be thrilled.

Having regard to energy policies which we might have been discussing, there is one incidental comment I should like to make at this time. When the Secretary of State for External Affairs was on his feet this afternoon he was chiding the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett). He said he hoped "the hon. member would carry the same kind of message to Premier Blakeney of Saskatchewan, that good New Democrat who is sending Saskatchewan uranium all over the world for purposes which she says she so frankly detests". I would think a comment of that sort would be beneath the dignity of a minister. He knows perfectly well, and if he does not I will tell him now, not one milligram of uranium in any form leaves this country without federal permission. He knows that, or I am ashamed for him that he does not.

An hon. Member: Hypocrisy again.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Hypocrisy, yes, that is what it is. I say this not to defend Mr. Blakeney. It is directed particularly toward the Secretary of State for External Affairs, just in case he did not know there is no export of uranium from this country without federal permission.

● (2130)

I feel called upon at this stage to make another comment about energy. Further along in his remarks the minister spoke about the incredible impact of two global oil shocks on the Third World. No one argues that the Third World has suffered more than any part of this globe. It has suffered more than any population as a result of the sudden increase in the price of crude. We all regret that, but here is where the hypocrisy of this government comes in. This government could easily alter that situation by making Canada self-sufficient so that we would not have to draw down offshore resources, so that we could increase the global supply of offshore resources and thereby cause prices to go down and reduce the impact of high prices on the countries of the Third World. If what the government is doing is not hypocrisy, I do not know what is. I have a funny notion in the back of my head that this government had not even thought of that. However, instead of doing that, what does the government do? It indulges in demeaning internecine strife in this country. It exacerbated federal-provincial relations as never before, and I hope as never again.

I find these two comments of the Secretary of State for External Affairs this afternoon unworthy of him because I know his record. He has a good academic record, but somehow that integrity which typifies the academic seems to have been tarnished somewhat in recent days. With all these thoughts in mind I wonder, whether this particular debate we are having today is not something of a smokescreen or a treading of water while the government waits for something. What could this government be waiting for? I do not know, but I suspect it might be the Supreme Court ruling on the Constitution.

In this connection I am constrained to think about Canada's relations with Britain. This government has set itself up as the great defender of Canadian independence as a sovereign country, and yet it is asking Britain to do a demeaning job which this government does not want to do and which, within constitutional convention, Britain should not be asked to do.

There are parts of the constitutional package on which, of course, Britain is required to act. In 1931 Britain was requested by Canada to do certain things. However, Britain was not requested at that time or at any time, until now, to establish in Canada—by a British statute—a Canadian charter of rights, which will be a British statute. I do not know whether members of this government thought of that either.

In the course of doing what it is doing, this government is embittering the relations between this country and Britain, and for no good Canadian purpose I can see. Perhaps it is to meet the whim of an overzealous government which claims to be the great deliverer of Canada out of the bonds of colonialism. However, in the course of its action this government is turning on one of its principal friends and allies and destroying relations which have been built up over centuries with a country in whose traditions we live.

My motion under Standing Order 43 today, for example, referred to one of those traditions. Today is the 766th anniversary of the signing of the Magna Carta. We are among the beneficiaries of the provisions of that charter, and here we are having this debate today in order to mark time until the ruling of the Supreme Court and the ensuing debate here so that we can pass the resolution to Britain and thereby foul up the good relations which exist.

I feel I ought to make another not very pleasant reflection on the manner in which this resolution has been presented today. The proposal to have this debate came out during the exchange between House leaders on Thursday in the usual question. The proposal was that there would be a debate today. No mention was made at the time of a report on the government's reaction to the North-South report, yet today after having given the appropriate notice on the Order Paper—it must have been entered on Friday—that we would have this debate, there was no mention of the government's commentary on the North-South report. At two o'clock that commentary was tabled by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in a most cavalier fashion, as if it were of no importance. Just out of courtesy the minister might have passed that commentary around to spokesmen in the other parties so that they might have prepared their comments in the light of the comments of the government. The hon. member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche) was able, by missing part of the earlier session, to look at the report and make some comments on it, but I can only describe this behaviour as sleazy. It has been a sleazy and devious method of dealing with a matter of such importance.

The prospects for Canada's relations with Britain do not appear to be good. The motion before us refers to the future prospects of Canada's international relations. One aspect of those relations is our relations with Britain. I do not think our relations with Britain will be anything of which we will be proud. Our ties with Britain date far back. Those ties relate to the family, to social organizations, to constitutional matters and even to our ethical values. Many of our ethical values are derived from our British connection, and now we are prepared to throw that connection aside.

However, there is another country—a close neighbour—with which we have ties which are somewhat different. They are simplified, and yet complicated, by the nearness of that neighbour. They are also vital to the well-being of Canada. I speak, of course, about the United States.

There are two areas at least in which this government has been neglectful, negligent and deserving of a round of adverse criticism. One affects the conclusion of bilateral treaties, and the other deals with the failure of this government to co-ordinate its economic relations with the United States. I would like to comment briefly on these two matters in connection with the Canada-U.S. relationship. We have a very good organization in the Canada-U.S. interparliamentary group. I think it is one of the most valuable interparliamentary groups in existence. I am very pleased that as secretary to that group I was present at the inaugural meeting and some of the succeeding meetings, and I now have the honour to be a member from time to time. I missed the Halifax meeting but I was at the meeting in San Diego about a year ago. I do believe that meetings of this sort deserve more time in the House and time ought to be found, if only at six o'clock, to make the reports of those meetings—I am talking about our relations with other countries and one way of pursuing those relations, and it was not because of a government with a Liberal stripe that that institution came into being. It was the result of the action of one John G. Diefenbaker whose name may be recalled by some members of this House.

One of the matters to which they have not done justice is to deal on bilateral issues on the basis of equality in the economic field. Everything is ad hoc. If a problem arises, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) or the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) will rush down to Washington. That is not dealing on the basis of equality, because the shoe is pinching us. If we were to do something, would there be a minister from the Reagan administration, or its predecessor the Carter administration, rushing up to Canada?

There are courtesy visits, certainly, but on the basis of equality I think these matters should be dealt with in a much more organized way. For example, there ought to be regular annual meetings of ministers, or first ministers depending on the gravity of the situation, to resolve disputes that were not resolvable in the course of regular meetings. I would suggest that those meetings at the ambassadorial level with the assistance of officials ought to be held at quarterly intervals. Acid rain is certainly one of those matters, but there are a number of others. There are the fishing agreements on the east and west coasts and boundary agreements and the Law of the Sea. The Law of the Sea issue has recently been raised in a very critical way, and we have the advantage of an outstanding negotiator in Geneva, New York and Caracas in the person of Mr. Alan Beasley. He led our delegation and had brought matters almost to the point of fruition when the U.S. administration backed away from some of the clauses, thereby threatening the future of that operation.

These are matters, Mr. Speaker, that ought to have been dealt with on a regular basis by a Canada-U.S. economic commission. As I suggested, they should be held possibly at quarterly intervals, at the ambassadorial level with officials. When matters cannot be resolved there, then they should be taken to a first ministers' meeting.

Another matter, which will require a considerable shift in attitude of this government toward the whole nature of government, has to do with the manner in which treaties are negotiated, ratified and implemented. Negotiations, I think, are pretty well standard around the world. Ratification differs, however, from parliament to congress, parliament to assembly, and parliament to parliament. The ratification of the east coast fisheries agreement, let us say, ought to have been approved by debate in this House and there should be provision for this within the Standing Orders of this House. The government has not called on the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization to examine such matters. There could have been a Standing Order which permitted the discussion and regulated its length depending on the seriousness of the matter. The east coast fisheries agreement ought to be debatable and discussible in this House, not just ratifiable by executive edict.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Ratification is an executive act under the parliamentary system of government, no question about that. Implementation, if any, of treaties will be done by government legislation, and that is fine. However, there is that ratification procedure which is lacking in our general bilateral relations with the United States and, I might add, with other countries. Multilateral agreements might, as well, be debatable before ratification. There should be a vote if it is important enough, and if the government does not secure a majority, then I think it might very well have to decide what it is going to do. Is it going to renege on its commitment or is it going to resign? These matters, I think, deserve careful study in the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization with respect to our international relations, which my friend sniggering on the other side obviously does not consider to be within the ambit of this particular debate.

The next matter that I wanted to talk about, Mr. Speaker, had to do with—I just heard some sort of muttering over there about having something new. This new notion probably hit him so hard between the eyes that he is still reeling. It never occurred to someone who follows so slavishly the pronouncements of his government that there might be another view.

Mr. Caccia: Take a drink of water.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): The other area of foreign policy noted in the wording of the motion but not commented on is that of the refusal to come clean and reassure the Canadian people that everything that needs to be done has been done to ensure that the threat represented by Soviet communism and its attempts to infiltrate our system of government have been met adequately. Combined with this, of course, is the threat from the same source to the nations of the Third World, a threat we have recognized only partially if at all.

You are becoming uneasy in your chair, Mr. Speaker. Does this suggest my time is about to expire or has expired?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member has one minute left.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): In this connection I commend to all those present or listening two books which outline the matters in clear detail, a matter which causes me some concern, namely, the disappearance of certain documentation from the files of the government. The first book is by V. Sakharov and Tosi entitled "High Treason"; the other book is entitled "The Terror Network" by Claire Sterling. Those two books reveal, in the most lucid and frightening terms, the possibilities of infiltration that we in the country somehow or other choose to neglect.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to comment on the remarks of the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro). He should have known that, according to the Votes and Proceedings of December 6, 1968:

> A total of 25 allotted days spaced throughout the session would be placed at the disposal of the opposition . . . On these allotted days the opposition would be free to select for debate any matter coming within the jurisdiction of Parliament—

If the hon. member had been serious, he would have convinced his party or Parliament to choose one of these 25 days. If the opposition really wanted to discuss external affairs matters, it had the last 13 years at its disposal.

I am the chairman of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. If we have not discussed some of the subjects the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) would have liked to discuss, it is up to him to have told us so. He is a member of the steering committee. I have never turned down any of his requests. All he had to do was to ask for the witnesses he wanted, and I would have been only too happy to accommodate him. Perhaps he now finds a lot of virtues in the Senate; perhaps he aspires to some nomination to that place. I would recommend him with great pleasure.

I am surprised the hon. member took all of 30 minutes and only touched upon the subjects which should have been debated today, such as the Law of the Sea. He only referred to it. I would have liked to hear about it because it is very important from the Canadian point of view and for the security of the West, but what is more, it would have provided a more equitable sharing of the world's wealth and resources with the Third World. It is too bad that the United States withdrew at the last moment. But we are hopeful, as is the hon. member, that after reassessing its views about the Law of the Sea, the U.S. will participate.

The hon. member could have spoken about Canada-U.S. relations because it is also a very important matter. We know that there is an exchange of 60 million persons per year between our two countries; he did not touch upon that subject. He could have talked about Canada.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Why don't you?

Mr. Prud'homme: He only left me three minutes, I am very sorry to say. He could have talked about our trade with Europe. In 1980 it went up to $9.4 billion from $7.2 billion in 1979. From 1962 to 1980, it went up from $1.3 billion to $9.4 billion. He could have talked about——Canada and Western Europe. We could also have mentioned Japan and our extraordinary trade relationship with that country which accounted for $1 billion in the past and has now reached the level of $7 billion. Unfortunately, time does not permit us to do everything in the same day. On the other hand, I wish to thank the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. McGuigan) who asked our Committee of External Affairs and National Defence to study relationships between Canada and Latin America. We immediately undertook this review, which was urgently needed in my opinion because Latin America is a new territory for us in Canada, and I am very happy that my colleague, the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Dupras) was chosen as chairman. First of all, I had suggested it to him. He agreed to act as chairman for this committee, and I believe this is very important because we have overlooked Latin America for years. We now have a committee. I know that the former Secretary of State sits on this committee, and I hope that the department will develop a new approach concerning relationships between Canada and Latin America.

I would have liked to speak about something else, and I shall do so in the last two minutes of my speech, if the House grants me two or three minutes more as it did in the case of the hon. member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche), but first, I would like to say a few words about the Department of External Affairs. The minister is here, and I appreciate it. I want to tell him—and this is something that he knows about and I know that he makes constant efforts with this in mind—that if one department should reflect bilingualism in the great federal machine, it is the Department of External Affairs. This department must reflect cultural duality, as I have always emphasized. We must spare no effort in this regard, concerning both recruitment and promotions. And speaking about promotions, I would like to see a great many more women in the higher echelons of the department.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell the minister that we must see to it that departmental officials can adjust to a changing world. This is a very important issue in my opinion. Our universe is changing constantly, and the United Nations in 1981 are not what they were in 1945. They are no longer an exclusive club. They now have hundreds of new members. I hope that the Department of External Affairs can be sensitive to such changes, which go against what used to be the way in the old Commonwealth club, and adapt to such concepts as the French-speaking community and this whole new attitude, and I know that the minister is very aware of this issue. I would also like to take a few moments, since the House did not show enough generosity as far as I am concerned, to emphasize what I have pointed out every time I went to the United Nations, namely the importance of the Canadian mission.

Again in a changing global environment, we owe it to ourselves to have at the Canadian delegation to the United Nations people that have the understanding, awareness and knowledge of the friendship and an extended hand to these new nations that over these last few years applied with much difficulty, that might irritate older members by proclaiming their misery, their poverty, but it is the only forum in the world where they can be heard. I say we must be patient and understanding, we must know how to welcome them, how to understand them. In this year 1981, the United Nations is the number one priority of the Department of External Affairs. I would have liked of course to refer to our relations with the United States, however in conclusion I will deal with a subject that has been driving me for over 15 years, although I have been a member of Parliament for 18 years, namely the Middle East issue.

[English]

I am absolutely astounded that no member of the official opposition thought it wise to refer to one of the most remarkable pieces of work carried out by one of their own. I am talking about the report of the special representative of the Government of Canada and ambassador-at-large, Mr. Stanfield, the Stanfield report on the Middle East. I have read it six times, in French and in English, to ensure that I understood all the nuances Mr. Stanfield was trying to put intelligently to the Conservative government at that time.

I would not like to be cut off at this point because shooting from the hip when talking about the Middle East is always very dangerous. I have known that in the past. If I might have the indulgence of Mr. Speaker and the consent of the House to continue for five more minutes, I should like briefly to put my views on record on the question of the Middle East.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent of the House for the hon. member to have an extension of five minutes' time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Prud'homme: My views are very simple. I do not understand people who have never understood me or the position of my party.

Anyone who has been to the Middle East, anyone who has visited Jordan, Syria, Iraq, Egypt, Lebanon, Israel and the other coutries, knows that unless you solve the Palestinian question, you cannot solve the problems of the Middle East. I have not been able to understand, for the last 13 years of my life, how people do not understand that. Is it asking too much to expect people to understand that there is a group of people called Palestinians who live, breathe, multiply and who also have a right to an existence and a country? Is it anti-semitic to express these views? Those who think it is anti-semitic should read the report of Mr. Stanfield. Is it anti-Israel to say that we could be friendly also with the Arab countries? I have always held that view. We must find a way with patience, with love and with understanding. Do we have to go through another Zimbabwe to end up having an independent country only after killings and killings? Will we have to go through the same thing in Namibia? Why did we have to go through the same thing in Algeria and Angola? Why do we not understand?

• (2200)

How is it possible not to understand that as long as we persist in not recognizing the existence of people who are alive, who have historical rights, who also want justice, we are wrong?

[English]

Positively, without a shadow of a doubt, I reject any kind of anti-semitism. I have always called that, both privately and publicly, a cancer, because once one is an anti-semite, one is anti-French, anti-Catholic, and anti anything else. We must understand that peace in the Middle East will only come when the people will accept that, next to Israel, there is a group of people who will stay there. These people who arrive in my country—

[Translation]

—as I say in French, dear Lebanon! What country in the world has been more generous than Lebanon? The Lebanese greeted the Palestinians on their soil generously, and what happens now? Palestinians in Lebanon are in the process of destroying that nation. It is my submission that there should have been over these last 35 years more seasoned, more pioneering politicians with a better knowledge of the Middle East problem. They know that inevitably people who exist will have to be recognized. One day the Palestinian problem may be solved, Lebanon's problem may be solved that dear country suffering from its generosity. This is the main thing to understand in the Middle East situation. I therefore urge hon. members——without partisanship, but, I say, with passion. Why not? I am not a robot. I feel and I think. I think that when one feels, one can also see how marvelous it would be if there were peace and co-operation in the Middle East; if the Arabs, on one side, would recognize the state of Israel and its right to survival and to security, and, on the other hand, the state of Israel would recognize that it cannot have a complete settlement that would last forever. It is a real provocation for a group of people to be sent to a settlement in the occupied territories. How would hon. members feel if I were to send 50 young French Canadians to Edmonton South, Toronto, Victoria or Esquimalt-Saanich who would say, "We are French Canadians, Catholic Quebeckers, and we are coming into Victoria to raise hell"? Of course, that would be provocation. Hon. members should read about the Israeli practices. This is a United Nations report on the Israeli practices.

[English]

We must not be afraid. However, sometimes some of us are unable to make people understand. Therefore, I am calling upon Canadians and Americans of Jewish faith to exercise their influence on the government of Israel to show some restraint and some understanding. The Jewish people have gone through hell, and we all know and recall that every day. Even this morning, on radio station CJAD, as I was coming from Montreal at seven o'clock, I heard that today there was a ceremony commemorating the Holocaust. There will be a nuclear holocaust for all the world, if we do not realize the extreme importance of the Middle East, if we do not understand that there are people there who will not disappear, who are spreading what I call this cancer all around because they are there and no one wants to look after them.

I will conclude by saying with sadness that although there are people who have more responsibility than I do, I am asking Canadians of Arabic origin and Canadians of Jewish faith to get together and talk to each other. This is in the report of Mr. Stanfield. I share that view; I go along with it. I think we should do as the report says.

I will conclude in two minutes—one minute, with your patience, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Stanfield recommends there should be—

However it is of the utmost importance that we should recognize that in most Arab countries the role of the government in the economy is generally more significant than in Canada and that the Arabs like to meet and get to know the people with whom they do business. Ministers and spokesmen for our government must make frequent visits to those countries, and there must be more frequent exchanges of well-prepared commercial delegations.

He also recommends that we send groups of students, academics and MPs so that this country, which might become the wealth of the Middle East, will get to know the relations. One can imagine what might happen if we could get the co-operation of what I call the Israeli know-how, or technological knowledge, Arab co-operation in the Third World, the new funds from certain Arab countries in addition to technology and knowledge. Is that not something to make anyone dream? Is that not something which prompts us to rise today and say that we must examine that question? I also urge my colleagues to read the Stanfield report.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

FINANCE—(A) PRICE PAID FOR TREASURY BILLS; (B) REASONS FOR PRICE PAID

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, on June 12, last Friday, I asked the Acting Minister of Finance why the Government of Canada, at its treasury bill auction on Thursday, had to pay 18.82 per cent for its 90 day money when the previous Tuesday, the government of the United States had to pay slightly over 14.9 per cent for the same money on the same type of instrument, a treasury bill. The same type of arrangement, the same type of ratios took place with respect to the 180-day-old bill. The effect was that last week, Canada paid 4 per cent, an average, more than the government of the United States did on treasury bills.

At 5.30 this afternoon I checked the situation in New York. At that point, the U.S. treasury bill rate at auction was running at 13.72 per cent. Comparing that to the Canadian rate of 18.82 per cent, Canada has, of today, paid 5.10 per cent more than the Americans for treasury bill money on 90 days. On the 180 day bills, the Americans were paying 13.46 per cent and Canadians were paying 18.22 per cent, or 4.76 per cent difference. We will average that and say 5 per cent more. Since I asked the question on Friday, the position has become 1 per cent worse.

I did not want just to compare treasury bills, although I did ask the minister why that was the case—if it was a question of Canada's credit. The minister did not seem to want to answer. He thought that perhaps I was attacking the New Democratic Party. I was not; I was asking him a serious question.

I then turned to the London interbank rate. At the same time, three months' money was 17¾ per cent for 90 days and 1716 per cent for 180 days. In other words, the London interbank rate was at least 1 per cent less than what the Government of Canada has to pay on its treasury bills. That is the rate at which multinational corporations borrow on the international market. Indeed, a multinational corporation called Petro-Canada borrows at the London inter-bank rate, as my friend, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Evans) knows. Petro-Canada, with its tremendous assets and its lack of equity, is able to borrow at least 1 per cent cheaper than the Government of Canada was able to do last Thursday.

I had the chance to look at the banker's acceptance rate in the United States. Last Thursday, that rate was 16.5 per cent for 90 days. The Government of Canada paid 18.82 per cent. In other words, the Government of Canada paid 2.75 per cent more than an ordinary commercial corporation—the U.S. Widget Co.—had to pay for its money. That is the nature of the credit of Canada; it must pay more for its money than ordinary commercial traders in the United States pay for theirs, or ordinary multinational traders pay for their money. Canada pays very much more.

Going further, I looked at the Eurodollar rate. The same type of ratios took place. For three-month bills, the Eurodollar rate was 17.11 per cent. The Government of Canada's treasury bill rate was 18.22 per cent, for a difference of 1.71 per cent. If we go to the 180-day bills, the difference is a little over 2 per cent. The averages are very close to 2 per cent more. One wonders why this has happened. Normally, when a borrower has to pay more for money than his neighbour does, he pays more because his credit is poor. Why is Canada's credit so poor? I suppose part of the question has to do with what people think of the Canadian dollar. All one has to do is to look at the futures market for the Canadian dollar. The betting on the market is that the Canadian dollar will be worth 82 cents in three months and 81 cents in six months in terms of the U.S. dollar. That is the bet. That is what the futures market says. It is no wonder people lending money to the Government of Canada say they want more from Canada than they want from anybody because Canadian money will not be worth anything. Why is this so with the resources and with the educated people this country has? The answer lies in the government this country has.

What is happening in the United States? A boom is taking place there. Business is roaring ahead with enthusiasm, and with optimism led by a Reagan administration. What do we have in Canada? We have a government which turns business off. We have a government which deliberately nationalizes property and deliberately seizes property without paying compensation. That is the kind of government we have and that is why we have problems.

We have a national energy policy which causes problems. We are all paying for that policy. Every small business is paying for it. Every one of us is paying every day for ineptness and incompetence. This government has better come up with a new economic policy soon or our interest rates will go up even higher.

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the question is based on an incorrect premise in that the Canadian treasury bills and U.S. treasury bills are not sold in the same market place. While it is true that Canadian interest rates are responsive to levels in the United States, and we have admitted that since we are so dependent upon capital inflows, it is simply not true that interest rates in Canada are tied to those in the United States in any way. The movement of interest rate differentials between the two countries over the past 18 months shows clearly that the pattern of interest rates in each country has been quite different. Thus, while the Canada-U.S. differential on treasury bills was some 130 basis points on May 20, the differential increased, as the hon. member indicated, to 400 basis points last week. Similarly, while the 30-day commercial paper rate in the U.S. was over four percentage points higher than that in Canada in December, it is now some two percentage points below the comparable Canadian rate. Short-term interest rates in the United States over the past few months have moved over a much wider range than those in Canada. Indeed the hon. member should know that chartered bank prime lending rates in Canada and the best rates charged by banks in the U.S. are almost identical right now. There are some similarities as well as great differences.

It is also evident that current high levels of interest rates have not slowed down the rate of credit expansion or the Canadian economy. Data recently released by the Bank of Canada shows that chartered bank general loans continue to grow at very high rates and there have been similar high rates of growth recorded in other credit aggregates.

Canadian prices and costs also appear to be increasing at faster rates than those in United States. Statistics Canada reported that the consumer price index continued to rise quite strongly in May. By contrast, the inflation rate in the United States is running at a lower level. This will be reflected in both inflationary expectations and the prevailing level of interest rates.

There are good and valid reasons why there should be differences between the rates charged in Canada and the rates charged in the United States. While we would like to see interest rates in Canada as low, if not lower, than those in the United States, there are currently very real factors at play in Canada which do not allow that.

EMPLOYMENT—(A) ADULT ACADEMIC UPGRADING AT NIAGARA COLLEGE, (B) REASON FOR DEPARTMENTAL DECISION

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, it is a Progressive Conservative philosophy and a basic responsibility of government to provide whatever opportunities are necessary to enable each individual through education to develop his or her potential to the fullest degree and to employ those talents to the greatest advantage. Education should be for full time as well as part-time students, for adults as well as the youth, for upgrading and updating as well as for the unemployed. That is why I was so distressed when I attended a meeting of Niagara College students involved in academic upgrading, a most basic course of education leading to a higher form of skill training. For these students it was their last opportunity to upgrade their academic education. The door has been closed. Without that higher level of academic training, they will be refused enrolment in a course which will give them an opportunity to develop a skill or trade.

One after the other those students stated that they just had to be given the chance to make something of themselves, and now that chances was being taken away. I am not certain why that basic course of adult training was terminated at Niagara College. The answer of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) did not assist to any degree.

When the minister decreases the number of sponsored seats in a course of that nature, the province of Ontario will only sponsor 20 per cent of that number. A chain reaction is started by the Department of Employment and Immigration. Where there are fewer students, there are lay-offs, dismissals, and reassignments of academic upgrading and structures.

It is not good enough to say that those students can return to established schools of elementary and secondary training and education. These students had to steel themselves in order to return to a course established and promoted by this government. We cannot ask them to do more.

It is not an answer to say that there has been a reallocation of funds. There is no doubt that the apprenticeship program must be supported and funded. I hope the day will soon come when we can discontinue looking overseas for skilled workers because we will have enough trained people here to fill the jobs.

To say that we are diverting funds to programs where there are established job opportunities condemns forever a segment of the population to a status that we as a nation should not accept or condone. Students hit hardest are women, those on mother's allowance and welfare. There are many more in an urban riding such as mine who are seeking the opportunity to participate in such a course. They have been waiting for such an opportunity. That opportunity is no longer available to them. They are being condemned to a job as a waitress, bartender or babysitter.

The need for such a basic training program was emphasized in this college. The joint government approval to assist adults in below grade 12 levels raised enrolment of fee-paying students from 31 in December 1979 to 151 in December 1980. There is a current waiting list of over 200.

• (2220)

The advantages of adult education, the advantage of an adult setting, the opportunity of working at their own pace, the availability of financial assistance and support, counselling and instruction, gave hope to those students and offered a challenge and a chance which so many thought would never come to them. Now it may never come again, for in the Niagara College, a community college, that opportunity or that chance has been taken away from them. I suggest the minister should make a reassessment of his priorities so that this very basic organizational adult education training can continue at community colleges where it can do the most good.

Mr. Dennis Dawson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would like to start off by correcting the impression given by the hon. member. There is no question of phasing out the adult academic upgrading program at Niagara College. There was indeed a reduction in the number of training seats purchased from that college under the Canada Manpower Training Program, but contrary to the statement of the hon. member the program is not about to be abolished.

During the fiscal year 1980-81 the Employment and Immigration Commission had purchased 82 seats which, for all practical purposes, made it possible to enrol 147 students. For the current fiscal year, the commission bought 64 seats and expects some 115 students. The reason for this reduction is that the government has put the emphasis on employment-related programs. That decision was taken in 1977 as a result of the publication of a report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance which pointed out that basic education falls essentially under provincial jurisdiction. Subsequent studies have demonstrated that basic training for skilled development did not prepare graduates adequately for employment or further education.

Changes in the policy which have been implemented are spread over a three-year period as follows: BTSD must not be given to any one who has not completed the 8th grade; age and total school attendance as elegibility criteria must be tightened up. BTSD must be more occupation oriented and the need for training courses must be emphasized.

Mr. Speaker, I think that this is the direction the government must follow in the future.

HOUSING—REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF PROGRAM WITH REASONABLE INTEREST RATES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, on April 9, in my question to the minister responsible for housing and CMHC I pointed out that 70 per cent of loggers in coastal British Columbia faced lay-offs or short work weeks. There is no doubt that part of the reason for these employment cutbacks was the fact that the industry wanted to soften up union membership for contract talks. As a matter of fact, the contract expired for the IWA on the coast of British Columbia today. It is evident from the militant strike votes that woodworkers have not been intimated. They intend to get a good contract.

Quite apart from any attempt by the companies to sap militancy, some mills are, indeed, very short of orders, and while the long-term outlook for the forest industry in British Columbia is supposed to be good, there are immediate problems. Some of the methods the companies are using to deal with these problems are not healthy. For example, they are pulping logs that should be sawn into lumber. A recent survey showed that up to 40 per cent and over of logs in a boom that was going to a pulp mill were logs that should have gone to a sawmill. We have evidence of whole logs being exported for process in other countries, or logs that just had a slab taken off. At the same time we are facing an imminent shortage of logs for the future in the industry.

The industry has traditionally depended upon the export market for up to 70 per cent of the production in British Columbia. We simply should not wait for export markets to take up the slack when we have problems in the industry today. We should be developing industry in Canada which can deal with this, and the most basic industry that needs developing here is our housing industry.

Today, because of record interest rates, most Canadians are no longer in a position where they can afford to buy homes. The situation is quite the reverse. Many Canadians who own homes and have been paying on mortgages for a number of years are now losing their homes when they have to renegotiate their mortgages at these killing interest rates. It is a chilling statistic that 11 per cent of the Canadian people are now forced to pay more than 50 per cent of their incomes for housing. And our housing stock, especially for low-income people, is dangerously low. People are being forced to move into accommodation which ten years ago we would have considered to be very clearly inadequate.

We can look at the example of our failure with regard to Indian housing. While the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has announced that it has made money available, it just recently sent out a directive to Indian bands which requires that the bands give guarantees that any houses which are started must be completed. However, there is no labour component program which has been instituted by this government, and the funding which is provided for these houses is clearly inadequate. Yet no money is being released until the bands can give some kind of guarantee that the housing starts will be completed. The government is pushing on to the Indian bands the problems it has allowed to accumulate over many yeas. Obviously something is terribly wrong.

It should be plain even to the Liberal cabinet that there is a connection between lay-offs in our forest industry, the lack of decent housing and the ridiculously high interest rates this government has imposed upon the people of Canada. There is a need for an imaginative program, and there could be an imaginative program. In co-operation with the provinces and with municipalities the federal government could use some of its resources for land assembly projects. This would cut out some of the massive profits being made by real estate companies. Low interest mortgages could be provided so that people could buy homes without committing themselves to long terms of poverty and uncertainty. The public and co-op housing sectors could be developed.

The minister pointed to the failure of the British Columbia government to take initiatives in its budget to help the housing sector, and for once I agree with the minister. Along with other British Columbians, I work for the day when that government will be replaced by one which does care about housing and which will act to meet the housing needs of its people.

However, the federal government cannot hide behind the failure of provincial governments. The federal government has a responsibility for interest rates. It has the power to take the initiative to develop a rational land program and a rational housing policy. This would not solve all the problems of our lumber industry, but it would go a long way toward taking the slack out of the present situation, and I urge the government to develop a program which would begin to meet these needs.

Mr. Dennis Dawson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would like to give a more detailed answer to the question asked on April 9 by the hon. member. The high interest rates on mortgages have no doubt made it more difficult for people to own their homes and they have had a negative impact on the housing industry, yet, despite the rise in interest rates it is becoming more and more evident that housing starts will be on the increase in Canada in 1981. According to interim statistics during the first quarter of 1981 there has been an increase of about 43 per cent in individual housing starts compared with the corresponding period in 1980. Since more timber will be used as a result of individual housing construction such an increase will undoubtedly have favourable effects on the forest industry especially in the area represented by the hon. member. The upsurge in the housing sector during the first quarter of 1981 took place at a time when mortgage interest rates had indeed reached a higher point, more than 15 per cent, than in 1980 when it was below the 14 per cent mark. After four consecutive years of decrease, we predict that housing starts will increase by 13 per cent in 1981 to a total of 179,000 units.

I am, Mr. Speaker, personally more concerned about rentals and the effect that the tightness of some of the markets will have on low-income tenants. The hon. member will no doubt recall that last year we managed to get an extra 5,000 subsidized units for those areas with a low vacancy rate, for instance Vancouver, Toronto and St. John's. This helped the situation, but I nevertheless stated that more had to be done so that provisions regarding rental housing units be included in the October 1980 budget. These provisions will enable the building of some 10,000 extra rental units and will stimulate the construction of multiple unit projects in places like Vancouver where the market is tight. The Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corporation has agreed to increase the maximum portion of guaranteed loans to approximately 70 to 80 per cent from the previous 50 to 60 per cent. In this manner, CMHC may help solve the housing shortage in the Vancouver area without overly risking the mortgage insurance funds and committing the government to major expenditures.

I would like to thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the extra few minutes, as well as the staff who had to stay here.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

DIRECTION OF GOVERNMENT POLICY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I wish to introduce the following motion. Whereas the Grit cabinet at its Meach Lake plotting session held last Sunday has opted for greater governmental control over Canadian industry and the nationalization of key sectors of the economy, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko):

That this House deplores the socialist direction being pursued by the Liberal government in opposition to the wishes of the people of Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SUGGESTED ADOPTION OF FREE ENTERPRISE POLICIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under Standing Order 43. Whereas Prime Minister Trudeau told the maritime premiers that if they needed money not to call him but to call Premier Lougheed; and whereas Alberta was once a have-not province with a debt of some $169 million, with 52 cents out of every tax dollar going to pay interest charges—most of this debt was the result of policies by the only Liberal government the province ever had and probably ever will have—but by living within its means and creating a good investment climate under a free enterprise system, Alberta now, under Premier Lougheed, has a Heritage Fund and is a have province, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper):

That this House urges Prime Minister Trudeau and his government, instead of being jealous, to adopt free enterprise policies and to follow the example of Premier Lougheed, his government and his PC administration, and start living within its means, start paying its debts and creating an investment climate so Canada too, may have a Heritage Investment Fund.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

CALL FOR ABANDONMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In a recent speech to the Energy and Chemical Workers Union in Winnipeg, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) stated that one of the inherent purposes of the National Energy Program is to create employment. Since to date all calculations point toward a net loss of close to 60,000 jobs in Canada, and countless others as a result of the spin-off effects, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That the minister of energy scrap his energy program which is costing Canadians their very livelihood and develop one which will truly live up to his idealistic expectations.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADA OIL AND GAS ACT

HEARING FOR NATIVE PEOPLE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the government has applied closure to debate in committee on the oil and gas bill, C-48, now with support of the Conservative party, they being in bed together—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: —and whereas the committee has spent 90 per cent of its time hearing industry and government representatives and has amended the bill to their wishes; and whereas this is solidarity week for the native people of the north who are opposing Bill C-48, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie):

S.O. 43

That this House deplore the fact that while the Prime Minister speaks about the North-South dialogue, his government and MPs are not even prepared to give Canada's northern and native people a fair hearing on Bill C-48.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HUMAN RIGHTS

TRIAL OF VICTOR BRAILOVSKY IN U.S.S.R.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Smith (Don Valley East): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Victor Brailovsky is a prominent Jewish scientist in the Soviet Union and has attempted for ten years to emigrate to Israel with his family. Yesterday, after seven months of imprisonment without formal charges, Mr. Brailovsky was informed that his trial would take place tomorrow. He has been charged with disseminating fabricated material which is defamatory to the Soviet state. He could face a three-year sentence.

In view of the fact that the Soviet Union seems determined to make an example of Dr. Brailovsky, and determined to make a mockery of the principles of the Helsinki Final Act, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow):

That the House convey to the Soviet government its concern and growing apprehension in the Victor Brailovsky case.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the presentation of this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

NORTHERN QUEBEC SERVICES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. The CBC services to northern Quebec have recently suffered from a drop in morale as well as a high rate of staff turnover. In light of the tremendous importance which this service has to the Cree and Inuit of this region, and in light of the role of the CBC as a vehicle for the transmission of language and culture, I move, seconded by the hon. member from Prince George-Bulkley Valley (Mr. McCuish):

That the Secretary of State for Communications undertake to review the northern Quebec services and examine the relationship of the style and actions of the non-native management of the service to the problems of low morale and high staff turnover.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON DOLLAR EXCHANGE RATE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, it is obvious from the operation of the money markets that the government's obsession with maintaining an 83-cent dollar in the face of an economic program and a fiscal stance that tend to depress our currency on money markets is the principal cause why interest rates in Canada are as much as 5 per cent higher in some cases than they are in the United States. This obsession with the exchange rate is causing undue hardship to all Canadians. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid):

That the government cease paying attention to the exchange value of the Canadian dollar and allow an interest rate to prevail in Canada appropriate to the economic well-being of Canadians generally.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

ENERGY

FUTURE OF ALBERTA MEGAPROJECTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, I too rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas officials at both Imperial Oil's Cold Lake Project and the Alsands project near Fort McMurray have announced that the government's current pricing offer for synthetic crude production is insufficient to make either project viable, and whereas both plants could be cancelled completely for lack of a suitable pricing agreement between the federal and provincial governments and the industry, and whereas approximately $20 billion of private investment, hundreds of technology experts, and unique tarsands and heavy oil technology stand to be lost if these plants do not proceed, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga):

That the government table immediately its proposed pricing regime for oil sands and heavy oil production so that when a comprehensive agreement with the producing provinces is reached it will mean an immediate go-ahead for the two megaprojects in northeastern Alberta, Alsands and Cold Lake.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PERPETRATORS OF WAR CRIMES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, this week in Jerusalem thousands of survivors of the Holocaust are meeting in silent remembrance of the murder of millions of Jews by Nazi war criminals. This commemoration focuses the attention of the world not only on the Holocaust itself but on the fact that many of the perpetrators of war crimes are still at large, some of them in Canada. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow):

That this House calls on the Minister of Justice and Attorney General for Canada to begin proceedings against Canadian residents whom he has substantial reason to believe were responsible for the commission of war crimes.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

NATIONAL UNITY

ALLEGED STATEMENTS MADE BY LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION AT QUEBEC—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Témiscamingue): Madam Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 about an urgent and especially important matter. We all know that yesterday the Leader of the Official Opposition was in Quebec and, as usual, he made totally unacceptable statements which are altogether incompatible with the objectives we all strive for, namely the unity of this country. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mrs. Beauchamp-Niquet):

That in the future, when the Leader of the Official Opposition intends to travel to Quebec and make such statements, he ought to seek the advice of the Prime Minister or of members on this side of the House so as to avoid making such mistakes.

CALL FOR CHANGE IN FISCAL POLICY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I rise to underline the alarming rate of bankruptcies in Canada caused by the fiscal policies of this government which are creating chronic double-digit inflation, resulting in record high interest rates and a feeble Canadian dollar.

Comparing the first quarter of last year to the first quarter of the current year, consumer bankruptcies have increased 17 per cent, business bankruptcies 19 per cent, and what is most alarming, farm bankruptcies are up 31 per cent, not to mention any of the unreported businesses which are now closing their doors. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer):

That the Minister of Finance change his fiscal policy and co-operate with the Bank of Canada in an effort to curb the inflation which is causing high interest rates in order to return sanity and stability to the money market.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Mr. Jim Schroder (Guelph): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of pressing and urgent necessity. Whereas the Conservative party in the past has played a proud and honourable role in helping to strengthen Canada's position in the global community of nations, and whereas the present Conservative opposition has refused to contribute time thoughtfully to this important North-South issue, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith):

That this House urge the opposition Conservatives to rise above partisan preoccupation when dealing with this issue.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON FIGHTING INFLATION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister, who will know that after the most recent Meach Lake meetings his Minister of Finance indicated that the government is intending no change in its economic policy. The stated purpose of the high interest rate policy which the government is following is to restrain borrowing and to limit the recourse of Canadians to credit. In fact the Prime Minister will know that that policy is not working and that from mid-1980 to mid-1981 the use of credit by Canadians—borrowing by Canadians—has increased a full 17 per cent.

What we have here is not a tight money policy which is limiting borrowing but, instead, a high-cost money policy which is feeding inflation. In light of that fact, I wonder if the Prime Minister will tell us whether his government intends any change in policy which would have the effect of fighting inflation head-on, rather than simply having the effect of causing more Canadians to pay more for the money they are borrowing.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, as the Minister of Finance has had occasion to explain in this House a few times, there are many reasons and causes for the high interest rate policy. One of the main and recognized ones is that the American government is practising a very restrictive monetary policy and has set the pattern for very high interest rates. As the Leader of the Opposition would know, Canada has a choice of either seeing the Canadian dollar fall drastically, a flight of Canadian capital because of the higher interest rates in the United States or, alternatively, having an interest rate policy which is somewhat a mirror of the American interest rate policy.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, what the Prime Minister is admitting is that his high interest rate policy—and it is his; he cannot blame it on other countries—is not having the effect of reducing borrowing or fighting inflation here. It is simply creating high-cost money for Canadians who are borrowing here. He may also well know that it is having other serious effects on Canadians, particularly those who are running businesses or farms. The Prime Minister should know, and I—

—I am astonished that the members from Quebec remain silent and do not want to hear the statistics here in the House of Commons. However, the Prime Minister must know that the total number of bankruptcies in Canada went up 20 per cent in the past three months. And the rate of bankruptcies among Canadian farmers shot up by 70 per cent.

[English]

The Prime Minister is now following a policy which is driving Canadians into bankruptcy. He refuses to do anything to stop that plunge toward bankruptcy.

QUERY RESPECTING POLICY CHANGES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, let me ask the Prime Minister of Canada how many Canadians he intends to drive into bankruptcy before he changes policies which are damaging the fibre of this country and the ability of people to create jobs across this country.

[Translation]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, in all likelihood the Leader of the Opposition drafted his questions and he insists on putting them without listening to the answers. I explained to him what has been said many times in the House; there is an international phenomenon which can be seen by all those who have eyes to see, Madam Speaker. The monetary policy of the United States has led to very high interest rates and several countries suffer because of that. The Minister of Finance expressed his regrets about that policy here in the House. We hear most of the major European countries express the same concern because, like us, they must choose between high interest rates along with the regrettable consequences which we can see, or a sharp decline of their currencies, which is indeed very dangerous with respect to inflation. We have witnessed that in Germany, we see that now in France where the franc has lost considerable ground as compared with the American dollar, and we see the same thing in the other major countries of the world. The Leader of the Opposition is very skilful when asking questions, I admit that, but he should make an effort to listen to the answers before delivering speeches which are totally alien to economic theory and practical reality.

REFERRAL TO PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, as always, the Prime Minister is trying to blame anyone and everyone for his own policies, but it is his government which is responsible for the number of bankruptcies in Canada, and it is his government which must take the blame for the present interest rate; it is neither President Reagan nor the French. No one else is to blame except the Prime Minister of Canada.

• (1420)

[English]

We now have a Liberal policy which is not effective in fighting inflation or stopping borrowing. It is only effective in driving Canadian farmers and Canadian businesses into bankruptcy; that is the effect of the Liberal government policy. Frequently the government tries to blame the Governor of the Bank of Canada. The Prime Minister will recall that in an earlier life a couple of years ago, the present Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce suggested that the Parliament of Canada should have an opportunity to review—

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Clark: —other approaches to high interest rates than the approach recommended by the Governor of the Bank of Canada and followed by the government. The Prime Minister will know that, when the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce made that recommendation, the government established a parliamentary inquiry into other policies to deal with high interest rates and the problem of inflation.

Will the Prime Minister of Canada follow the advice of his ministers and make a reference to a committee of Parliament with a mandate to look into other means to fight inflation than the means being followed now, means which are driving Canadians into bankruptcy, which are causing high-cost money, which are not effective in the fight against inflation?

[Translation]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, by saying that I am trying to blame others, including President Reagan, the Leader of the Opposition only shows once again that he has misunderstood the nature of my answers. If there is anyone to blame, it is certainly the Leader of the Opposition for failing to understand that the economies of all countries are interdependent. When I say, for example, that several European countries are experiencing the same problem as we are with regard to the American policy, the Leader of the Opposition prefers to change the subject. He knows, or at least he should know, that if we want to have economic policies entirely separate from those of the U.S., then we would have to resort to exchange control. That is not an option the government is prepared to entertain. Nor is it an option that the Leader of the Opposition has the courage to put forward as the sole consequence of the rather far-fetched theories he is advocating. Had he been in the House yesterday, he would have heard the speech in which I made it clear that we intend to submit these issues to the U.S., among others, during the economic summit that will be held here in Ottawa, because many industrialized countries are experiencing the same problem. It is not a question of blaming others, Madam Speaker, it is a question of taking our own responsibilities, while realizing that the policies of a country as important for Canada as the U.S. are not made in a vacuum and that they necessarily have an impact on us.

[English]

INVOLVEMENT OF PARLIAMENT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, will the Prime Minister of Canada empower a committee of Parliament to consider anti-inflation policies other than those recommended by the Governor of the Bank of Canada, anti-inflation policies which, in the hands of the government, are not working to fight inflation? They are only working to cause Canadians to be driven into bankruptcy and to pay much higher interest rates. Will he let Parliament do its work? Will he make such a reference to a committee?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, that is the final cop out that is well known on the part of the Leader of the Opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: That party does not know what economic policy it wants to follow, whether it is the policy followed by the hon. member for St. John's West, the former minister of finance, who wants to cut spending, or the policy of higher spending advocated by so many others.

• (1425)

When they do not know what policy they want to follow, Madam Speaker—

An hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Trudeau: I am answering the question. I am advised to empower a committee of this Parliament to study the problem of inflation, just as this House was asked a few days ago to empower a committee to study capital punishment, because that party does not know what position it has on either of these questions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: The hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre.

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister referred to courage. I think he should refer that comment to his current Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who, a year and half ago, said he would resign if interest rates went any higher than 14 per cent. They are 20 per cent now so he should resign.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member going to ask a question or make a speech?

ENERGY

POSSIBLE CHANGES IN GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Many observers have attributed the current high interest rates to the low level of and weakness in the Canadian dollar, and have directly linked that weakness to the Liberal energy policy, the lack of confidence resulting from that, the outflow of money for exorbitant purchases of Belgium oil companies—

An hon. Member: Speech.

Mr. Wilson: —and the loss of capital to other countries.

Since governor Bouey stated that one of the reasons for the high interest policy he has been following is to protect the Canadian dollar, and because of the weakness caused by the energy program, can we expect any significant changes in the energy policy that would reduce this pressure on the Canadian dollar, improve the level of confidence in Canada and result in lower interest rates some time down the road?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I would have to answer the hon. member by saying that many competent observers completely disagree with his analysis of the situation. I would say that we should try to work for an energy agreement, not for those reasons, but for the reason that it is important that in this country we have an energy program upon which both orders of government will agree and will recognize to be in the best interests of the Canadian people.

Mr. Andre: How many people are you going to allow to go bankrupt in the meantime?

Mr. Lalonde: This is what this government has been concentrating its efforts on since last year. We recognize that the previous government in which the hon. member served did not succeed in getting an agreement. Unfortunately we did not either.

An hon. Member: We were there nine months, you have been there 16 years. Where have you been?

Mr. Lalonde: However, we are working hard at it and I am confident that with good will on all sides we will be able to do so.

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, I refer the minister to articles by Wood Gundy, Greenshields, and Rodney Anderson, all within the past week, each of which have attributed the weakness in the Canadian dollar to his energy policy, and that is the reason for the high interest rates we have today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON INDUSTRIAL STRATEGY

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): My supplementary is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Since there has been much speculation arising out of the Meach Lake meeting last week to the effect that we will see greater government intervention in the economy somewhat along the lines of the National Energy Program, and since that program has caused the weakness in the Canadian dollar and the high interest rates we have today, would the Prime Minister make a commitment to the House that before this industrial strategy discussed last weekend is introduced and implemented, he would table a white paper outlining the full extent of the industrial strategy so that Canadians will have an opportunity to comment on this and hopefully avoid the mistakes made in the energy program?

Mr. Lalonde: You had high interest rates before the energy program.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I could answer the hon. member most simply by saying to him that the premises on which his question is based are completely false, as was the statement made in a motion under Standing Order 43 before question period. The premises of that question about the highly interventionist and socialist government are completely without foundation.

An hon. Member: Read your own books.

Mr. Trudeau: Nothing of that nature was discussed at Meach Lake, and if the hon. member wants to have an opinion on who is socialist in this House, he should ask the best witness, the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

STATISTICS CANADA

SURVEY OF FOOD PRICES

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, my question is for a non-socialist minister, the Minister of Supply and Services, in his capacity as minister responsible for Statistics Canada. The Agriculture Canada retail price survey was released today and shows that the cost of food for home consumption in May increased .73 per cent, while the Statistics Canada report released on Friday showed a decrease of .7 per cent for last month. Incredibly, it would appear that the May food price figures put out by Statistics Canada actually relate to the last week in April, while Agriculture Canada's survey covered food price averages for all four weeks of May. Can the minister confirm that the Statistics Canada survey for May actually took place in April? Can he also confirm that if we took the May figures we would see an increase of 12.6 per cent—still a record level—rather than the much-vaunted decrease to 12.3 per cent which was bandied about by the Prime Minister on Friday?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, I will have to take notice of that question and give the hon. gentleman a reply later.

Mr. Rae: Madam Speaker, that was the first answer.

AGRICULTURE CANADA

RETAIL FOOD PRICE INDEX

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, my next question is for the Minister of Agriculture if I can get his attention—I know it is lonely at the top but I will just make it one question.

The minister knows that in January his department made public the release dates for the monthly retail food price index. When the figures were released in January we were told that the retail price index would be released last Thursday. They did not come out Thursday, they came out today. It would appear that the May figures were not released last Thursday as scheduled because they showed an increase in food prices, whereas the CPI, which on Friday reported the May figures which were really collected in April, showed a decrease. Can the minister explain to the House the apparent cover-up, or collusion, and why he did not report his own department's food price index last Thursday as scheduled? Why were the figures not released as they were supposed to be?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I will have to check into that matter and find out.

INITIATIVES TO BE PLACED BEFORE PARLIAMENT

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I will make this next question as easy as I can. It is for the Prime Minister who, I know, does not like talking about economics.

Quite apart from the mix-up which has taken place with respect to these figures, it is clear that the mix-up itself is less important than the hard fact that the cost of living has reached the level of a national economic crisis, and new initiatives are definitely required. On Sunday when the Prime Minister came away from Meach Lake he said:

> We talked about inflation a fair amount, and we think the Minister of Finance . . . will be implementing policies which will have a beneficial effect.

Quite simply, can the Prime Minister tell us what these new initiatives are which the cabinet will be putting before Parliament? Can the hon. gentleman give us the assurance that these initiatives will be put before us this month so that the Canadian consumer, farmer, small businessman and home owner can obtain some relief from the inflationary and high interest rate policies of his government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I believe the Minister of Finance made it clear at the same meeting that he was unlikely to be considering anything in the nature of a mini-budget before the summer. When I was alluding to the policies of the minister I was alluding to the policies which he has already discussed in various forums and in this House. I am told he discussed them in an excellent speech he gave in Saskatchewan last Saturday. I recommend that the hon. member read the minister's speech and he will find out that one of our former colleagues in this House was chosen as the new leader of the Liberal party in Saskatchewan, Mr. Ralph Goodale.

As the hon. member said, I am not all that anxious to speak on behalf of the Minister of Finance. But I might be able to shed some light on the question he asked of my colleagues a moment ago. It seems to me that the important thing about statistics is that you always compare statistics taken at one period with a like period. It would be completely wrong to skip a month, as the hon. member says, in order to get the CPI figures, and to try to compare them with the figures given at the same date by the Department of Agriculture. The virtue of gathering statistics—if the hon. member can understand this—is that they are gathered at set periods. They are not brought forward or backward in order to prove the case put forward by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood.

COMBINES

DETAILS OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In his typically sanctimonious attitude the minister has been travelling across the country asking Canadians for support in strengthening combines legislation. The minister has produced a discussion paper, part of which recommends, curiously enough, a ban on participation in international cartels.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speyer: Specifically, the paper says:

> —the increasing concentration in world trade has given rise to concerns over the dangers of the cartelization of world trade and a number of countries have taken action recently against international cartels—

Can the minister tell the House whether or not the formation of international cartels with undertakings similar to the uranium cartel will become illegal if this proposed legislation is passed by Parliament? Second, can the minister tell the House whether or not there will be any teeth in this proposed legislation to make it illegal for Canadian government officials to participate in co-ordinating cartels?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): Madam Speaker, it is true that I am now attending a series of meetings with representatives of various national organizations to discuss possible amendments to the Competition Act. I am pleased to see that the hon. member is concerned with the question and that he has constructive suggestions to make. I hope that when the bill is considered in the House, he will see to it to use his influence so that the legislation may pass quickly with the support of Conservative members.

[English]

Mr. Speyer: Madam Speaker, this is another example of a minister refusing to answer a direct question.

PUBLICATION OF REPORT

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): My supplementary question is to the same minister and it pertains again to the strengthening of the competition laws in Canada. Does the minister envisage giving to the director of combines investigations the power to table in Parliament, and to make public, his reports on the investigation of international cartels, as the hon. gentleman promised on March 4? Second, can the minister tell us whether or not he will permit the director to have access to cabinet minutes so that there will not be a situation in which there is the type of massive government cover-up which is presently going on?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): Madam Speaker, I answered the member a moment ago. I did not try to elude his question. On the contrary, I told him that we were having consultations, that it was a working paper and that the views not only of the business community but also of consumer representatives and of members opposite as well were welcome. We have not yet taken any decision or a final position, and any suggestion the hon. member may want to make would be given favourable consideration. As for the second part of his question, however, I would refer him to answers already given in the House in that respect.

NATIONAL SECURITY

TASCHEREAU ROYAL COMMISSION PAPERS—REVIEW RECOMMENDATIONS

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Because Mr. Ralph Branscombe was retained by the Privy Council Office, could the Prime Minister inform the House if Mr. Branscombe's recommendations about removing the secrecy classification from the transcripts of the Taschereau Royal Commission on Espionage have been presented to the government as yet and, if so, what are those recommendations, and what action is the government taking?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I should like to inform the House that Mr. Branscombe has not as yet completed his work. He is at a stage now where he is obtaining legal advice on privacy matters from the law officers of the Crown. Recently I asked how much more time his work will require, and I understand that he expects to complete it within two or three weeks from now.

DECLASSIFICATION OF GOVERNMENT DOCUMENTS

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, perhaps I can get an answer from the Prime Minister with my supplementary question. At his Friday press conference the Prime Minister indicated a desire to have more specifics about certain security risks that occurred over ten years ago. Because the government is already in possession of these details, I wonder if the Prime Minister would undertake to declassify and make public the reports and documentation that the government already has relating to these individuals and events?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is talking about "these" individuals. He did not mention any names and I do not know if he intends to.

ACCEPTANCE OF PRINCIPLES BY OIL COMPANY EXECUTIVES

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and is supplementary to that raised by the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre. It concerns statements made in the past few days by Mr. Jack Armstrong of Imperial Oil Limited, and Mr. Robert E. Kadlec, chairman of the Canadian Gas Association, both of whom have accepted, from a corporate point of view, the main principles and goals of Canada's National Energy Program, and have intimated their optimism for the long-term success of the program. My question, therefore, is can the minister indicate whether the reactions of these two gentlemen is typical of those in Canada's energy industry today?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I cannot vouch for all members of the industry, but I think the view expressed by these two gentlemen appears to be shared certainly, by the most dynamic and most enlightened members of the industry.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

HEALTH

FUNDING FOR NATIONAL HEALTH RESEARCH DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Considering that the Health Research and Development Program, NHRDP, is the only federal source of funds for applied research into health care, and includes such important areas of research as environmental and occupational causes of disease, disease prevention, and the evaluation of existing health programs, would the minister please tell the House why the 1981-82 budget for the NHRDP has been increased by a paltry 1.9 per cent, an effective decrease of 11 per cent when inflation is considered?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, the question is under review. When we are ready, we will make a relevant announcement.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question. It is incredible that the government, which is spending some $8 billion on health programs and health care in 1981-82, should only spend some $10 million on the evaluation of health services. The Medical Research Council received in increase of 22 per cent, and I congratulate the minister and the government for that move. Surely the NHRDP program is an integral part of that and the two must work together on research. Again I should like to ask the minister when will she inform the scientific community that the funding for this important and much needed program will be increased?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member has said, the estimates for scientific medical research have just been increased by 22 per cent.

[English]

The budget on the other hand of the NHRDP program, which is another program of medical research, is, as I said, under review. I will be announcing tomorrow the exact budget for it. The hon. member may be interested to read the clippings and the press release that I will send to his office as usual. We have lots of complex dossiers and we do our fights one at a time.

REGULATORY REFORM

ECONOMIC COUNCIL REPORT

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Madam Speaker, I should like to put my question to the Prime Minister. We heard the Minister of Finance say that the answer to much of the economic dilemma we face in this country today lies in greater productivity. I think that pretty well all the members of the House would agree with that statement. We have the Economic Council report on reforming regulations, which shows that our productivity can be substantially improved by reducing the burden on those producing goods and services. Yet on the eve of this report we read about discussions that have taken place at Meach Lake to the effect that the same high level of ministerial involvement can be expected as we have had in the energy program. Do we infer then, Madam Speaker, that the government is rejecting the Economic Council report on regulation reform, and are we to expect more government structuring and intervention in our economy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, in reply to a previous question I indicated that the hon. member's information on the Meach Lake meeting is completely fanciful and fabricated.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: It is from Lalonde.

Mr. Clark: Lalonde was wrong again.

Mr. Trudeau: I regret that the hon. member has been misinformed.

Mr. Clark: You cannot believe a thing Lalonde says.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Madam Speaker, the information I have comes from the official Liberal organ, the Toronto Star, or the Trudeau Star. In light of the Prime Minister's reply would he clear up some of the confusion that remains in government policy toward the important subject of productivity? For instance, according to a headline in the Vancouver Province in December, 1975, the Prime Minister said there was "no way that the free market system can be made to work now or when the anti-inflation program ends."

On the Prime Minister's return from the Bonn Summit he said:

> We will remove the intrusions of many government policies and regulations from individuals and businesses; in some cases this will mean returning functions to the private sector, in others it will mean removing the heavy hand of government and its drag on personal initiatives.

The situation in the country is serious. It is time the Prime Minister—

Madam Speaker: Order. Order, please. It is high time for the question too.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I think the speech that the hon. member refers to, in 1975, indicated that the free market system is not perfect and that indeed some regulation of it is required. That is precisely the position being put forward today by members of his own party when they were enjoining the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to get along with his competition policy so that we could ensure that the monopolistic powers which exercise control over the economy are somewhat regulated through an anti-combines policy—

Mr. Clark: Will it affect Jack Austin?

Mr. Trudeau: —to prevent that control of the economy by the private sector where the free market system does not operate.

EDUCATION

FEDERAL GRANTS TO PROVINCES FOR POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Right Hon. Prime Minister in the absence of the Secretary of State.

Last week, the Secretary of State announced that the federal government would maintain its financial assistance to post-secondary education and in conclusion he said this:

> The federal share of post-secondary financing exceeds that of the provinces, but it is not sufficiently directed towards national objectives . . . and is hardly likely to underline the federal presence.

Can the Right Hon. Prime Minister explain to what extent his government is willing to invade this area of provincial jurisdiction?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not really understand the question asked by the hon. member, Madam Speaker. Since the mid-sixties, I think, the federal government has played a major role in financing post-secondary education in the provinces, and this because the provinces had been clamouring for very generous grants. In the past, the federal government has paid around 50 per cent of the costs of post-secondary education, and the rest was paid partly by the provinces and partly by the students themselves. If the hon. member approves this policy, as I believe he does, he should not wonder about the federal government's interest in educational problems, at least as concerns footing the bill. What the Secretary of State was saying in his reply was that it is not normal that in an area essentially under provincial jurisdiction, the federal government should pay not 50 per cent, but up to 60 per cent of financing while the provinces have reduced their own grants in the last few years for post-secondary education, which of course forces the students to pay more. What we suggest essentially in this regard is that if those provinces which claim jurisdiction in this field, as the hon. member was saying, can look after their own field of jurisdiction, they should be able to pay at least 50 per cent of the costs.

Mr. Kilgour: I have a supplementary, Madam Speaker. I am of course talking about the Liberal notion of renewed federalism or, if you prefer, of Liberal imperialism. Is the Right Hon. Prime Minister willing to define the contents of post-secondary studies under the twelve objectives of his national colleagues?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, once again, the Progressive Conservative party should make up its mind! Do they want us to pay or not? I cannot understand the hon. member when he suggests that we are imperialists because we pay between 58 and 60 per cent of the costs.

MANPOWER

ONTARIO WOMEN'S OUTREACH GROUPS—REQUEST FOR MEETING WITH MINISTER

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It concerns the Manpower outreach programs, which are some of the better programs of his department. Ontario women's Outreach groups have requested a meeting with the minister eight times now because of their concern about the future of the Outreach programs. Will the minister tell us why he is afraid to meet with these women? Will he also tell us what his plans are for the future of the Manpower Outreach programs?

Mr. Paproski: He hates women.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the hon. member may be interested to know that meetings are planned with representatives of the Outreach groups next week.

Mrs. Mitchell: Madam Speaker, it is my understanding that those meetings are with his officials, and my question concerned the future of the Outreach programs, both for women and other important groups.

SUPPORT FOR PROGRAMS AND SERVICES

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, the stringent regulations which are being proposed by the minister's department and the plans for assimilating these services in Manpower offices is just another way of terminating these important programs. Will the minister give us his assurance that he will support the kinds of programs that have demonstrated a permanent need, such as the program for the ethnic workers in Chinatown, and will he make sure that these programs are continued as permanent services.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, in response to the hon. member, she may be interested to know that one of the primary directions we have taken in the department is to provide specialized counselling services to special groups in the community. Just a month ago we established eight major counselling units for women in employment centres across Canada. This is a pilot project aimed at demonstrating how we can re-orient the full range of government services to concentrate on that very important need to help women gain entry into the work force. What we are doing is re-allocating our resources and targeting at the real needs. An Outreach program will play a very important role in that new orientation of our department.

HUMAN RIGHTS

TRIAL OF VICTOR BRAILOVSKY IN U.S.S.R.—REQUEST FOR ATTENDANCE OF OBSERVER

Mr. David Smith (Don Valley East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It relates to the Victor Brailovsky case. Considering the importance of the Brailovsky case in terms of human rights, and in view of the slanted information one gets from Soviet news agencies which cover these show trials, does the minister plan to instruct the Canadian ambassador to seek official observer status for one of our diplomats, as was done in the Shcharansky trial, in order to ensure impartiality of the information which the minister and his department will receive on this matter?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Brailovsky case is one of those on which we have already made representations to the Soviet Union. I have already instructed our ambassador to seek this status at the trial in Moscow.

I should point out that on a previous occasion when observer status was requested during the Shcharansky trial, our observer was not allowed into the courtroom. In any event, we intend to seek such status and attempt to have him attend the trial.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

RELOCATION OF RADIOACTIVE SOIL NEAR BANCROFT, ONT.

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. It concerns the contaminated radioactive soil from Scarborough and its proposed relocation to the Madawaska mine site near Bancroft in Hastings County against the wishes of the local residents. Does the minister concur with his colleagues, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister of Public Works on this proposed relocation? Also, can the minister confirm or deny the existence of arsenic in this soil?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is yes, and the answer to the second part is that I will have to check and find out.

POSSIBLE DANGERS TO ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also addressed to the same minister. In light of the minister's apparent strong stand on the problem of acid rain, will he use his offices to look into the possible serious consequences of this other threat to our environment, namely, the dumping of radioactive wastes in the Bancroft area?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, I believe it is true to say that the Atomic Energy Control Board is looking into this matter very carefully. I will be very happy to express an interest and to find out for myself just what the facts of the situation are and to make some assessment of it.

AVIATION SAFETY

COMPOSITION AND TERMS OF REFERENCE OF TEAM DEALING WITH DUBIN REPORT

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. For the first time in history the ten aviation associations in Canada are unanimous in their approach to the formation of an aviation safety tribunal. Last week they asked the minister to table the terms of reference of the implementation team and to include representatives of the industry on this team and to exclude Mr. McLeish from it. Given this unanimity, would the minister now take the necessary steps to change his implementation team, and will he also table the terms of reference?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, on the last subject the terms of reference have been sent to the group either yesterday or today. They are going out, and there is no secret about these terms.

On the substance of the question, as I said in the House the other day, those associations which came to see me made the case that they, as associations, should be part of the committee for the implementation of the Dubin report. I begged to disagree with that because if that were to take place we could have a repeat of the Dubin inquiry, and that is not what is needed at this time. Then I made the case that, because my department is going to be involved in the implementation of the Dubin report, the head of the air administration had to be a member of the advisory committee in order to help me with the implementation of it.

Incidentally, I was very pleased to see the degree of unanimity that existed among the air associations on the quality and the value of the Dubin report.

TIMETABLE FOR INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, there is that degree of unanimity, but it is only in an attempt to get the report implemented. It is their very clear opinion that Mr. McLeish and the team will delay the implementation. If this indeed is, first, an implementation team, will the minister give us a timetable for that implementation?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the committee will work as one, and even if Mr. McLeish wanted, he could not hold-up the consensus that will develop within that group of people.

As for implementing the Dubin report, and I have already referred to this, whether it will be 90 per cent, 95 per cent or 85 per cent, there will be discussion on that. I have already said in the House that I very much hope legislation can be brought forward in the fall. However, when I say that, I have to turn to my colleagues in the cabinet and pay attention to their views on the subject. Therefore, I have to qualify what I say by saying, "Subject to the approval of cabinet". Nevertheless, in the fall I should have legislation on the subject of an independent agency to investigate the case involving air safety.

MANPOWER

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET WITH WOMEN'S OUTREACH GROUPS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Earlier in the question period the minister was asked whether or not he would meet personally with women's Outreach groups. Will the minister stand up in the House and commit himself to meeting personally with women's Outreach groups in the next 30 days? Will he also make a commitment to the House that the budget available to women's Outreach groups will be at least as much this year as it was last year? Will he make those two commitments here and now?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, it may be of interest to members of the House that the number of Outreach programs for women have increased from 13 to 21 since we took power. This is almost a 40 per cent increase over the position taken by the hon. member's government. I can say that we are working very diligently to make sure that the trend we established will continue.

As I indicated previously, we plan two days of meetings with Outreach groups next week, with officials in charge of the programs. When I receive their reports and have had a chance to read them, we will then take the next step as we see fit.

Mr. Hawkes: The minister carefully avoided answering whether or not the budgetary amount in the year ahead would be equal to the year just past. It is possible to have 21 projects with one staff person each, whereas there were 14 with ten, and that is a considerable budget cut.

LEVEL OF FUNDING FOR WOMEN'S OUTREACH PROGRAMS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Will the minister indicate whether the funding in the year ahead for women's Outreach programs will be at least as great? Will he promise this House that that amount will be at least as great in the year ahead as it was for the year just past?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): As I indicated in my previous answer, Madam Speaker, we have substantially expanded the ability to provide counselling and Outreach services to women across this country, steps that the hon. member's government did not even contemplate when it was in power, such as establishing separate centres. The fact is we have increased those budgets and we will continue to place emphasis on women's projects.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Knowles: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order relating to the business of the House. Last Thursday when the business for this week was announced, it had not yet been decided what we would be doing tomorrow. Is the government House leader now in a position to tell us what the business will be tomorrow and also what the plans are for Thursday and Friday?

Mr. Pinard: Tomorrow, Madam Speaker, we will be considering Bills S-10, C-66 and S-19 in that order. I hope there will be agreement to dispose of all stages of those three bills with one speaker per party in each case. In so far as Thursday and Friday are concerned, on Thursday we intend to proceed with report stage of Bill C-57 and have the divisions at nine o'clock. We have worked on a House order which is now ready, but I would prefer to have it approved by the House tomorrow. On Friday we will be dealing with third reading of Bill C-57. We have already made an agreement to defer any vote until next week if a vote is required on Friday.

Mr. Knowles: Madam Speaker, I share the minister's hope that we can deal with those three bills tomorrow, and I believe we can. However, in a couple of cases we just learned today that they will be called. Therefore, we have not had time to check to see whether they can all be considered with one speaker per party. I did not want silence to mean consent, although I share the minister's hope.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: That is right, Madam Speaker; as a matter of fact, the Progressive Conservative House leader to whom I talked on the phone has made the same request. We will be in a better position to determine later today whether or not there is agreement to limit the debate on the two bills I have mentioned.

PRIVILEGE

MR. McKINNON—MOVE OF RCMP HEADQUARTERS "E" DIVISION

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. You will recall that on Friday I gave notice that I would be raising this question of privilege today. I have complied with your request that the documentation be sent to your office.

This comes about because I asked for the supplying of copies of all letters, papers and studies concerning the move of RCMP Headquarters "E" Division from Victoria to Vancouver, British Columbia. The House agreed to the motion, which was No. 51, on June 3 and the papers which have been supplied by the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) came into my possession on June 11.

The paper that he supplied to me consists of five pages. The front page is a kind of cover sheet signed by someone, I have no idea who, for the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard). The next page is another order sheet which reiterates what I said when I put down the order for the production of papers. At the bottom it says, "Attached—Summary of Organization Study "E" Division". It then goes on for two and one third pages with something that is unsigned. The heading is "Summary of Organization Study "E" Division". It is unsigned, undated and for all I know might have been written by somebody in the minister's office the night before it was tabled. This is all that the Solicitor General provided to me in response to this House order.

I would like to point out two things here. First, I already have in my possession several documents concerning this move. Two are of some note. The first is called "Organization Study, "E" Division". It is 35 pages long. Another one, 66 pages long, is called "Reorganization—British Columbia". It is filled with facts and figures. I might say that none of the figures represents costs, but I do not wish to get into the merits of moving or not moving at this time.

I have as well letters from mayors of some of the municipalities involved addressed to the Solicitor General, letters to and from Deputy Commissioner Reid, a press release put out by Deputy Commissioner Reid and a two-page document marked confidential, although I am rather puzzled as to why it is so marked.

I notice that when the parliamentary secretary spoke on the production of these papers, he said they were subject to the usual reservations about confidential documents; but the other documents which I have received in such quantities are not confidential. I note in this regard that Beauchesne at page 138, paragraph 390(2)(b), exempts "Papers, the release of which would be detrimental to the security of the State". I trust this is not meant to include documents which might cast some doubts on the infallibility of the Solicitor General or the RCMP.

Because I consider the meagreness of the documents to be in direct contempt of the House order by the Solicitor General and his failure to supply all documents in this matter hinders me in my duties in representing the federal constituency of Victoria, I will move, subject to your finding of a prima facie case, that this matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for consideration and a recommendation.

I can read the motion I have prepared if you would like, Madam Speaker. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald):

Privilege—Mr. McKinnon

That the matter of the failure of the Solicitor General to table all letters, papers and studies concerning the move of RCMP Headquarters "E" Division from Victoria to Vancouver, B.C., when required to do so by an order of this House, be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for consideration and recommendation.

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, since I was the one who tabled these documents in the House, perhaps I should reply to the hon. member.

With respect, this is not a question of privilege. The hon. member is disputing information that was tabled. He uses the words "House order" to give the impression that all members of the House ordered the government to release these documents. That is not entirely true, if my understanding of the rules is correct. The hon. member made a request under motions for the production of papers. The government complied on June 3. I stated, and the hon. member correctly quoted me, at page 10220 of Hansard that "notice of motion for the production of papers No. 51 is acceptable to the government subject to the usual reservations about confidential documents".

The hon. member went on to quote Beauchesne's citation 390(2)(b). He did not read on page 139 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition citation 390(2)(1) "Cabinet documents and those documents which include a Privy Council confidence." They too may be exempted from the criteria of tabling in the House.

It is a normal custom in the House that all documents with respect to internal workings of a decision or internal working documents or memoranda are exempt from tabling in the House. It is for this reason that the government stipulated, as I did, that the motion for the production of papers was being presented subject to the usual reservations about confidential documents.

Madam Speaker: I would be enlightened if the parliamentary secretary could tell me a little bit more about the documents which were quoted by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) and which I understand he received from other sources. I would like the hon. member to comment on whether those were part of the documents which were requested by the motion, or whether there are any particular reasons for failing to produce them, such as the fact that these documents do not belong to the government or were restricted for some other reason for which the government cannot table the documents. I think it would be helpful to my ruling if the hon. member could enlighten me on that particular aspect of the case.

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, I really can only speak to what I received and what came to the Privy Council Office by way of my responsibility to table. The hon. member did quote the names of those documents. I have a copy of the motion for the production of papers, No. 51, in my hands, a "Summary of Organization Study "E" Division" in both official languages, and that was it. Whatever other documents the hon. member may have of a confidential nature he did not receive by a tabling in response to a motion for the production of papers. As one knows, very often confidential documents are released from unnamed sources; but, Madam Speaker, it is not really within my purview to comment on the accessibility the hon. member has to any other documents. I can only speak to the fact that these documents were tabled. The normal practice is that internal memoranda and working documents are not usually tabled in the House, and this has ample precedent in Beauchesne's Parliamentary Practices.

Madam Speaker: Usually members do not speak twice on a question of privilege, but if the hon. member can very shortly provide some enlightenment so I can rule on this question of privilege, I will make an exception and give him the floor for a few minutes.

Mr. McKinnon: Madam Speaker, I would just like to comment that none of these papers or documents is the kind generally referred to as arriving in brown envelopes. I got most of them at the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. They are not confidential documents; they are simply documents containing information, correspondence and studies that were done which I asked through a privilege of the House to see. In no way are they of a confidential nature at all, unless it has become confidential to point out a lack of freedom of information in this House.

This document in my hand is one of the things that cause me concern. It is called "Organization Analysis and Development Branch". It was approved by Superintendent Fuchs and prepared by Staff Sergeant Langille. It says among other things that they considered numerous memoranda, and audit reports and statistical data were also reviewed in the course of the study.

These are the kinds of things I would like to see to determine whether this move, which is a crippling matter to the economy of Victoria, was well advised. I cannot see how we can conduct public business here if everything we want to see or read is to be classified for the benefit of government members.

Madam Speaker: I will take this particular question of privilege under advisement. I would like to look into the whole question.

OFFICIAL REPORT

PRACTICE RESPECTING CORRECTIONS MADE BY MEMBERS

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order simply in reply to the intervention by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy). I think when he was here he was asking to correct some things he said in the House. I do not think there was any dispute that the minister in fact said those things, but I hope it will be clearly understood that what he actually said as recorded will be left in the record, that what will be corrected will appear in today's Hansard simply as a correction. Because in fact he did use the word "luxuries". If Your Honour looks at Hansard, page 10584, you will note an interruption from an hon. member—I do not know who that might be—saying "luxuries", and the minister carries on. There should be no attempt to change the record of what exactly the minister said.

Madam Speaker: The usual way to handle these corrections is to do as the hon. minister has asked the House to do. On the day he made his statements, I suppose he was making them in good faith, but on checking with Hansard he seems to have realized there was some discrepancy in the figures. What is usually done, I believe, and I stand to be corrected by the officers at the Table, is that the actual statement of the minister on that day is corrected.

Mr. Rae: No. Madam Speaker. I rise on a point of order.

Madam Speaker: I stand to be corrected if I am wrong, but my understanding is that when a minister or someone rises and says "I had said $2 million but I realize now it is $1 million", the $2 million is changed to $1 million.

Mr. Rae: On that very point, Madam Speaker, I have no objection to the minister's stating the next day, to be recorded at the front of Hansard, that what he meant to say was so and so, and then changing the figures accordingly. But I do object most strenuously to an attempt to change the record of what was said on the actual day. He did use the word "luxuries". The word "luxuries" was raised by way of an intervention by an hon. member from this side of the House, and the minister then carried on. Today he looks at Hansard and says: My gosh, I should not have said "luxuries", I should have said "items". That is too bad for the minister; he used the word "luxuries", and the word "luxuries" has to stand in Hansard, as do the figures he quoted. If he corrects himself the next day, I have no objection to the minister's making that clarification. But I do object to the implication that Hansard will be changed and that certain words will be expunged.

Madam Speaker: I understand that there will appear at the beginning of Hansard the correction as stated today, but that the bound volume will include the correction in the actual statement. That is the usual way in which these matters are handled in the House.

Mr. Rae: Madam Speaker, do I take that ruling to mean that we can then change what we said the next day and that that will appear in the final edition of Hansard? That has never been the understanding on which I have operated in this House or, indeed, other members of my party have operated. Hansard is sacrosanct in respect of what one said and it cannot be changed; but what can be changed the next day is a correction in terms of what one meant to say, and that appears in the bound edition as well. I understand that you cannot change what you actually said in the House of Commons. Once we start doing that, Madam Speaker, ministers can get up every day and say: This is not what I meant to say, and then change the whole record. I think that is a very important principle.

Madam Speaker: I have Hansard here. If the minister states, as he did today, that the figure he meant to quote was such, then that corrected figure will appear in the bound version of Hansard. However, as to the use of the word "luxuries", I think the minister did have a chance to change that word at the time of his statement, and I am afraid that will remain as it is now. Today the intervention of the minister will indicate that he would have preferred to say "items". That will also appear in the bound version because it is an official intervention in this House. But the figures, where the minister has indicated there was a slight discrepancy in those he thought were the correct ones, will be changed in the bound version.

Mr. Rae: Madam Speaker, I am happy to have gotten half a loaf, but I am concerned. If the record is to be an accurate record of what in fact happens in the House of Commons, surely it should indicate that ministers when answering questions often give figures which are not 100 per cent correct and which are not an entirely accurate reflection. Usually the inaccuracy occurs on the high side when they are giving away money and on the low side when they are talking about their deficits.

If Hansard is the reflection of what goes on in the House of Commons, it seems to me that that fact should be reflected in the record and the record should not be changed. I have no objection to something being starred the next day with the notation "see the following page"; but I do have an objection the figures being changed, and it seems to me that is the principle which is involved. If the minister says in the House in his own words—and this an electronic Hansard—the figure of $1 million and not $927,000, then the $1 million figure should stand as the record of what he said on that day.

Madam Speaker: I am afraid the hon. member will have to be satisfied with half a loaf because this is not a ruling I am making. I am referring to a long standing custom in the House that someone who makes a statement in the House and the next day discovers there is a discrepancy in the figures quoted is allowed to signal that to the House, and the bound version of Hansard reflects that correction. I do not intend to change this long-standing custom of the House in this respect.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 2,193, 2,230, 2,551, 2,552 and 2,556.

FEDERAL PAYMENTS IN LIEU OF CONSUMPTION TAXES AND FEES

Question No. 2,193—Mr. Herbert:

Does the government make payments to the provinces in lieu of provincial consumption taxes and fees on its purchases of goods and services and, if so, what amount was paid last year by the provinces as federal consumption taxes on their purchases of goods and services and what amount is estimated to be paid in the current year?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): The federal government makes payments in lieu of provincial consumption taxes and fees to six provinces who have signed Reciprocal Taxation Agreements. The four western-most provinces have not signed Reciprocal Taxation Agreements. With respect to the amount of federal consumption taxes paid by the provinces, these taxes are levied at the manufacturer's level and are in most cases already built into the retail price of goods. Revenue Canada-Customs and Excise, which is the department responsible for collecting federal sales and excise taxes, does not keep records of the incidence of tax by individual consumers, whether private, corporate or government. Thus, it is not possible to know the amount of federal consumption taxes paid by the provinces in a given year.

GRANTS TO CHEESE FACTORIES—QUEBEC

Question No. 2,230—Mr. Halliday:

Were grants given to (a) the Co-op in Granby, Quebec to assist in developing their new specialty cheese plant (b) other cheese plants in Quebec and, if so (i) in what amounts (ii) during which fiscal years?

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Regional Economic Expansion as follows:

Industry, Trade and Commerce

(a) No.

(b) Yes.

(i) and (ii)

Fiscal Year	Incentive Offers
1976-77	$133,000
1980-81	$207,000
	$340,000

Regional Economic Expansion

(a) Yes; $4,066,600 to Agropur.

(b) Yes.

(i) and (ii)

Fiscal Year	Incentive Offers
1970-71	$ 94,055
1973-74	242,406
1975-76	83,435
1976-77	77,000
1977-78	4,632,450	(Agropur included)
1978-79	1,018,450
1979-80	232,280
1980-81	295,050

(NOTE: All the projects which received grants are not necessarily involved solely in cheese production. In some cases, other dairy products can be manufactured in the same establishment).

PURCHASE OF BOEING SIMULATORS

Question No. 2,551—Mr. Stewart:

Did the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce purchase an airbus industrial A-300 flight simulator valued at $997,616 from CAE Electronics Ltd. and, if so, for what purpose?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): See reply to question No. 2,508 part (d) answered June 4, 1981, page 10262.

Question No. 2,552—Mr. Stewart:

Did the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce purchase a Boeing B-767 flight simulator for $1,237,850 from CAE Electronics Ltd. and, if so, for what purpose?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): See reply to question No. 2,508 part (b) answered June 4, 1981, page 10262.

Question No. 2,556—Mr. Stewart:

Did the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce purchase a Boeing B-757 flight simulator for $1,237,850 from CAE Electronics Ltd. and, if so, for what purpose?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): See reply to question No. 2508 part (a) answered June 4, 1981, page 10262.

[English]

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Cossitt: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order to correct a statement I made in the House yesterday on a point of order with reference to one specific question, namely, No. 30, which I said had not been answered for a little over two years. The reason I rise to make this correction is that I have checked the matter out thoroughly and I have found that the answer has not been forthcoming for five years and five days as of today. I think that is probably a parliamentary record for stalling by this government.

If Your Honour will permit me to do so, I propose to read the question into the record. It is very short but I would like to read it into the record to show how simple it is and then ask the parliamentary secretary why, after five years and five days, this question has not been answered. It reads as follows:

1. Since January 1, 1973, what are the names and job designations of all persons employed by, connected with, or in any way associated with, the Canadian Transport Commission who were issued passes by Air Canada?

2. Did the wives or personal associates of any such individuals hold permanent or temporary passes of any kind on Air Canada during the same period and, if so, what are their names?

I do not see why it should take over five years to compile a list as simple and straightforward as that.

Mr. Broadbent: Why didn't your government answer it?

Mr. Cossitt: My friend on the far left from points south off the coast of Florida, etc., is asking in a heckling way why our government did not answer it. Because of inquiries I made at the time I know an attempt was being made to put the information together, but before the present government went out of office, it spent four years doing absolutely nothing. There is no reason why the preliminary work in compiling the answer done by the previous administration could not have been finished by this government long ago.

I suggest it is a record in any Parliament when a government neglects to answer a question for five years and five days. I think it is disgraceful. It is indicative of an arrogant administration that lets on that it favours freedom of information—there is a bill on the Order Paper now respecting freedom of information which members of this government are crowing about across the country—yet does not answer a question as simple and straightforward as this. What on earth is the national secret? What is so terrible that the Canadian people should not know about it? Which people on the Canadian Transport Commission along with their wives have free passes on Air Canada? I do not understand this. Perhaps the parliamentary secretary could now tell us why this five-year-old mystery still exists.

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville (Mr. Cossitt) talks about a record but, without wanting to be too facetious, I think he sounds a bit like a broken record. He has been able to repeat this question today. This is not the first time he has repeated a question which has been on the Order Paper for some time.

The hon. member seems somewhat defensive about the fact that the government of which he was a supporter for nine months did not answer the very same question. I think his defensive remarks speak for themselves.

I note that there is a rule, referred to in Beauchesne, citation 299(2), about repetition. I ask whether one should be allowed to repeat day in and day out questions which have been put on the Order Paper in the normal way.

Mr. Cossitt: Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. It seems to me that any member loses his privileges if he does not have the right to repeat again a point of order of which this government has absolutely failed for five years to take note. We have privileges here. We have rights as members, but this bunch across the way has no respect for the rights of this House. Hon. members opposite have no respect for the rights of members of Parliament. They simply answer what they want to answer and hide the rest in the Privy Council Office. I think it is time something was done to stop this charade of a government putting it over on the House of Commons and the Canadian people and doing nothing about the real issues in this country.

Mr. Beatty: Madam Speaker, presumably the comments of the parliamentary secretary about repetition in the House of Commons could be directed at me too because this is the seventh time I have had to rise with regard to question No. 1,852. That question cannot claim the five years and five days record of the question of my hon. colleague, but I can invite the parliamentary secretary to join with me in the commemoration of the twenty-seventh week my question has sat on the Order Paper.

My question is a simple one. The minister who is supposed to be responsible for answering that question is the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox), who is currently before a parliamentary committee defending the government's freedom of information legislation and saying that the government has a commitment to freedom of information. Surely the government has a responsibility, in dealing with the House of Commons, to demonstrate that it is serious about this. Rather than simply saying there is no problem and rather than trying to prevent members of Parliament from bringing matters to the attention of Your Honour when he does not do his job, the parliamentary secretary has an obligation to tell Parliament for what reasons questions have not been answered. Is it because the minister responsible for freedom of information has chosen to suppress information, or is it that in this particular instance this parliamentary secretary is incapable of getting a lazy minister to do his job?

While I am on my feet, may I also bring to the attention of the parliamentary secretary question No. 1,439, which was put on the Order Paper on July 11, and question No. 1,450, which was put on the order paper July 16 of last year? Both of those questions deal with the government's advertising program. Again this is not something which should be confidential information. If the parliamentary secretary would have the courtesy simply to tell hon. members on this side of the House that he is refusing to supply answers to certain questions, we would be prepared to stand some of them down; but surely we are entitled to some explanation.

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, if I may, I would like to refer the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty) to my six previous answers to his six previous questions. I have assured the hon. member that I am doing my job in trying to get answers. Evidence for that is that we have tabled in this House over 80 per cent of the answers requested by the opposition. I think it is grossly unfair for the hon. member or any of his colleagues to accuse the government of not being willing to supply information. The government has never refused to answer any question on the Order Paper.

The hon. member knows full well that many of the questions asked are complicated and that many of them require replies which involve expensive research. I find it rather ironic that the party which champions restraint of government spending puts so many questions on the Order Paper which require millions of taxpayers' dollars to answer, and then hon. members opposite state in the House that the government is not doing its job. The government has done very well in the last year and a half by answering 80 per cent of the questions. We shall continue to press for answers.

In the last month or so certain questions standing on the order paper in the name of the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville for quite some time have been answered. I pledge to Your Honour and to all members of the House that I will do my best to obtain answers to all the questions on the Order Paper.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa) moved:

That this House expresses its continuing concern with respect to Canada's international relations and calls on the government to demonstrate a meaningful interest in South and Central America and, in particular, to initiate steps aimed at establishing a negotiated settlement of the tragic civil war in El Salvador.

He said: Madam Speaker, I want to begin my speech by quoting from a newspaper report as follows:

It was on a Sunday that Felix Jiminez decided to leave El Salvador.

He was in church near his home in the Salvadorean capital when suddenly a band of men drove up in unmarked cars. All along the street, people were ordered from their houses.

Soon after, two young men lay dead and 18 others had been bundled into the cars and driven away. They were not heard from again.

That, Mr. Speaker, was from last Saturday's The Globe and Mail. Two weeks ago tomorrow I was in the capital of El Salvador and on that particular day 27 bodies turned up in the capital, many decapitated, most of them tortured. The point I am making at this time is that terrorism is all pervasive in that small country to the south of us.

To put it in some kind of perspective for Canadians in particular to relate to, I want to say that the 22,000 men and women who have died so far in that brief war compare exactly numerically to the number of Canadians lost in total during the Second World War, from 1939 through to 1945. In that war we as a nation lost 45,000 killed. Our population at that time was roughly double that of El Salvador today. I repeat: In comparative terms that brief and tragic civil war going on in El Salvador has taken as many lives in roughly 18 months as Canada lost in comparison to our population in the period from 1939 to 1945. It is not a light matter, Mr. Speaker. It is something that should profoundly concern human beings all over this planet, wherever they may live.

I want now to say something about the causes of that conflict because it is very important, if we are going to come to grips in a serious way as a nation and play our role—I will get to that in a minute—and make constructive, workable proposals, that those proposals in fact correspond to the historical reality.

Contrary to what some of us have heard—and some of it has been said in this House—the conflict in El Salvador, that terrible civil war, is in its reality exactly the same as revolutionary situations that have occurred elsewhere in the past. The civil war now being waged is the byproduct of a classic class conflict, one which has arisen because a handful of people have had a disproportionate amount of power and wealth. A very small minority at the top of that small country have controlled the vast majority of wealth and virtually all of the power throughout this century.

Just as it has happened in the past, indeed in the eighteenth century in the United States when power was thought to be unfairly held by the then mother country over the United States, the United States had their revolutionary war. So have other countries in the past, such as the French. The French revolution was a class conflict war. The English had the same in the seventeenth century. Throughout the world historically you get an internally generated crisis of a particular kind that we know as a revolution, and it is a crisis because the vast majority of people finally rise up against those who are attempting to hold them down. That is precisely what is happening in El Salvador.

The conflict is being perpetuated in part because a particularly interesting historical group of Catholic priests in recent years have taken their Christian doctrine quite literally and have, under the profoundly important moral leadership of Archbishop Romero, started to teach a Christian doctrine that says that men and women have a right to certain liberties, including the right to organize their existence, their means of labour and the conditions under which they work in society. So the Christian church has played a profoundly important role, and is doing so today, in what is going on in that conflict in El Salvador.

Another way of expressing a cause of the conflict is by reference to the moderate political leaders, Christian Democrats as well as Social Democrats, who left the junta established some 18 months ago and joined the guerrilla forces because they saw that the junta was not building justice in that land, that indeed it was perpetuating the terror it had ostensibly been set up to deal with.

The conflict is also caused—and this is also very important to note in the context of yesterday's debate—by the indifference to such circumstances by the United States of America, a country which all too often has said vis-à-vis the countries of Central and Latin America that all they require is a government in those countries friendly to the United States. Well, Mr. Speaker, when I visited Central America recently I met a person—I am not at liberty to say where or under what circumstances—who was a man who would describe himself as a devout Christian. He said to me about his country: "The Americans have historically said to us: 'We want a government here friendly to us' ". He said to me: "We Salvadoreans want a government that is friendly to us". There is all the difference. He was saying that it is time that the United States began asking in Central America for governments friendly, not necessarily to themselves, but to the people in those societies.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The conflict, Mr. Speaker, is being caused by the departure of the humane civilian and military people from the junta established in 1979, people who have had to take up arms to protect themselves, their liberties and their families. They are, I say without exaggeration, in my experience the kind of men and women who would be sitting on both sides of this House, who would be found in the Liberal party, the Conservative party and the New Democratic Party.

The reality is that those who are committed to a civil order, to reform of the most moderate kind in El Salvador, have now been driven by their integrity into a guerrilla kind of operation. That is the reality, Mr. Speaker. It was Robert White, the former ambassador of the United States, who said about the regime that existed after the junta was established in 1979:

They have killed a minimum of 5,000 or 6,000 kids just on mere suspicion.

That is the kind of government which exists in El Salvador today.

I want to stress, Mr. Speaker, as directly and as humanly as I can, that it is time that we in Canada, those in Central America who have a sense of decency, those in western Europe and elsewhere in the Third World, said: enough is enough; this human slaughter must stop. Wherever mankind is needlessly suffering, we have an obligation to help. In particular, violent death must concern us all. If it does not, then those people who have said—and there are quite a number—that the twentieth century has made man into a totally insensitive and brutalized creature will turn out to be correct.

● (1540)

Before turning to what we in the country can and should do, I want to deal with some myths about this conflict which were partly created in Canada, certainly perpetuated in Canada, and partly elsewhere, certainly in the United States. The first myth is that the civil war was the product of a sinister sequence of events and personnel which can be traced from its terminal point in El Salvador back to Havana and ultimately to Moscow. Regrettably this idea or belief is wedged in the minds of certain policymakers. It is certainly in the minds of key policymakers in the United States of America. Nothing could reflect a deeper misunderstanding of the history of any country than the belief that a revolution, based on the profound rejection of an unjust order of the kind being experienced in El Salvador, can be exported from one country to another. There is no country in the history of mankind which has been able to export a revolution. Either the conditions for such a revolution exist or they do not.

The kind of argument one hears in the United States is false. I regret to hear it, even from intelligent human beings. It is exactly analogous to saying that the French revolution occurred in 1789 because a number of Frenchmen happened to have heard from a number of democrats who were very successful in the American revolution of 1776. Of course it is true that the war of independence had an effect upon European thought; it would be silly to deny it. But it would also be silly to suggest that the profound change through which France was going was caused by a few ideas that drifted across the Atlantic Ocean. So, too, in Central America the cause of revolution is not the exportation of Marxist ideas; the cause of revolution is the unjust life millions of people have to live.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The second myth is one in which I am afraid the present Government of Canada believes. It corresponds to certain views of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) and of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). It is that the present government of President Duarte is "a centre government" which somehow resides between the two extremes—the radical right, on the one hand, and the radical left, on the other.

I spent two weeks in that region. I talked with both sides in the conflict in El Salvador but, more important, I talked with people in other countries who were much more familiar with the area and the history of El Salvador than I could ever be because they grew up in that region and paid very close political attention. These political figures go all the way from Fidel Castro on the extreme left to the President of Costa Rica, who is a democrat but quite a conservative individual; ideologically he is on the right. They include the President of Mexico and, in short, a broad spectrum of political ideologies.

What is their view? Do they agree with the Government of Canada that what is in existence in El Salvador is a centralist government which is somehow keeping the forces of the right and the forces of the left at bay? The consensus I obtained from my trip is not that at all. In fact the consensus of mature people of judgment is exactly what I alluded to a minute ago—the government of El Salvador is a government of the extreme right. The people who control El Salvador today, as we debate this important topic, are not the handful of civilians, including President Duarte. The people in control are the army and Colonel Garcia. It is a right-wing, repressive regime; it is not a moderate, centralist government.

The government has lent some credibility to the third myth. I hope the Secretary of State for External Affairs is doing some homework, at least to apprise himself of some relevant facts in this regard. The argument is that the government of President Duarte is committed to democratic elections, next year at one level and two years from now at another level, and that we in Canada and those elsewhere in the world should encourage this alleged democratic process. I ask all hon. members of Parliament whether it is sensible to talk about a democracy in a land where approximately two weeks ago 25 people in one day alone were tortured and mutilated overnight? Every day the body count in the capital is roughly the same. One day it is 27, another day it is 29, but it goes on day after day. It is terrorist killing. It is not the killing between the combatants on both sides, between the guerrillas, on the one hand, and the army on the other. These are innocent victims. Can we talk meaningfully about an election under those circumstances?

I pose the following question to the democratically-elected politicians of the House: Who would become a candidate now in El Salvador? Would a Progressive Christian Democrat or a Social Democrat? Would anyone other than a member of the very extreme right dare to become a candidate? Surely the answer is no. I know it is from conversations I have had, because they fear for their lives and the lives of their families.

Even if they had the courage to become a candidate, would it make sense for any of them to expect that the army would respect the election results? In the late 1960s there were elections in El Salvador. They were turned over by the army.

In 1972 there was another election which was turned over by the army. In 1977 there was another election. Once again the army did not like the results and once again the results were denied. In one of those elections—and perhaps in two of them—a man named Duarte took part and had the pleasure of the army overturning his election.

The result of the present conditions has led the bar association of El Salvador to refuse to participate with the government in existence now in drawing up electoral regulations. Its bar association recognizes exactly what we recognize, namely, that elections under present circumstances would be a complete and utter travesty of democracy. This is something we must clearly understand as well.

Beyond that, beyond the factual reality that you cannot have elections in an atmosphere of terror, there is another concern which I have about governments, including our own. Our government has made statements—and I am looking for revisions in them—in support of the electoral process under circumstances which are totally unjustified to a person committed to democracy.

Our government does another and more subtle disservice to humanity in that country, and I had this pointed out to me, too, when I was there. This government says we must support the Duarte government because that government is committed to elections. In this argument a veneer of respectability is given to what is going on, which causes people who are genuinely concerned about elections to say, "Oh well, if the government is concerned about elections there, I guess it must be a pretty good government". So there is a more sinister aspect, conscious or otherwise, to the argument that the government in El Salvador is committed to elections and therefore we should support it. I repeat, this argument gives a veneer of respectability to a government, a junta, which civilized people would hold in utter contempt in terms of what is going on in that society.

Myth No. 4 which I would like to deal with is the claim that terror is being used equally by both sides. I wish to make the distinction here between violence and terror. Violence is an inescapable aspect of civil war. By definition, what is meant is that one part of society takes up arms against another part and, of course, there will be killing on both sides, which is regrettable. But when I talk about terror I talk about the killing for political purposes of innocent men, women and children who are non-combatants. They are innocent victims.

Therefore, when people have said that terror is being done by both sides, as a Social Democrat I was concerned to find out if it was being done by both sides. I spoke to people who I thought would have credibility, who would have a sense of integrity with regard to what is going on. In this case I spoke to people connected with the church. In Mexico City I met Mr. Roberto Cuellar, the director of the legal branch for the Archbishop of San Salvador. I put to him the following question: Who is practising terrorism? I asked him who commits the abominable acts—and photographs are available of the most grotesque kinds of torture which is going on. I asked him who is indulging in this kind of inhumanity toward man. The answer I received was that it was not being done equally by both sides. That is not the case.

I repeat, I received this information from an official of the Archbishop. He assured me that when he received the terrible information about a mutilated human being, man, woman or child, he would go out and verify the facts before they were counted. As a result, their body count, to use very unpleasant language, is much lower than other figures which I have seen. The figures are lower because an actual inspection has been carried out, and when that inspection is done it is found out who is responsible for the killing. The report I received from Mr. Cuellar was that 80 per cent to 90 per cent of the acts of terrorism are being carried out by the security forces in El Salvador. They are not being carried out by the Front, in the main.

Of course, there are some acts of violence of a terrorist nature which are isolated acts of terrorism being carried out by the Front. Mr. Cuellar pointed this out, too; but that is precisely what they are—isolated. They are not part of a systematic policy, a systematic, barbaric form of politics which is being practised, at least with the full knowledge and cooperation of the army in El Salvador by the security forces.

Myth No. 5 goes like this: Both sides are equally responsible for the continuation of the civil war. Once again, this is not true. There is only one side which has said that it is open to a negotiated settlement, and that is the Front, that collection of Social Democrats, Christian Democrats and, yes, Marxist-Leninists in the guerrilla movement as well. That broad spectrum of Salvadorean society represented in the Front has said—and they alone have said it—that under the circumstances they want a negotiated settlement. They want an end to the violence by means of negotiation. It is not the case that the government is interested in a negotiated settlement. It is committed to the present program to which I have already alluded—elections a year from now for part of their intended democratic structure, and elections two years from now for another part.

What is important to stress is that they are totally implicated, therefore, in a military victory. That is what is meant if they say they do not want negotiations now. To put it bluntly, they mean they want more killing. They want more violence until they emerge triumphant. I also want to say that if they are implicated in the perpetuation of violence, those who have come to their aid and who remain on their side are equally implicated. I refer specifically to the United States of America which is directly implicated.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I also say that the Government of Canada, when it says that it supports the Duarte government in its commitment to democratic elections, is equally implicated, by logic, to a violent solution to this civil war.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: To say that you are committed to democracy and to free elections when that entails the giving of your support to a government which refuses to negotiate, a government which wants to perpetuate the war, means that if you have moral consistency in your own arguments you, too, are committed to a violent solution to this civil war. I say to the Secretary of State for External Affairs that the people of Canada are committed to a peaceful solution to the conflict. They will have nothing to do with a government which supports, by any means whatsoever, a violent solution to the terrible problem which exists there.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Before coming very specifically to some measures which the Canadian government could and should undertake, I wish to stress one other important point which flows from what I have said thus far. If it is important to change the position of the Duarte government, and if it is important to get that government to accept the necessity to negotiate, to accept the desirability of bringing an end to the slaughter, it is of the greatest importance, in fact of fundamental importance, to get the United States of America to change its policy in El Salvador.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: As long as the United States props up the junta with military assistance, as sure as we are in this chamber taking part in this debate will the junta go on forever in terms of a military solution. A flexible attitude cannot be built up in the junta if it is built up militarily. The only way to get the junta and the army to negotiate is to take away some of their weapons, to take away their means of destruction. That is fundamental. The Americans are involved and we must do everything we can as a nation to change American policy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I now want to come to six specific suggestions which I think ought to be considered. More important than being considered, these are suggestions which should be acted upon by the Government of Canada. First, in my view the Government of Canada should now publicly offer to provide a mediation role in El Salvador. On the basis of my travels to a half dozen countries in the region, I can say that if the Government of Canada publicly did this there would be widespread support for such a peaceful gesture.

Second, statements supporting negotiations must be made soon to increase the visibility and credibility of a mediation proposal. Again the Prime Minister of Canada and the Secretary of State for External Affairs should show some leadership by making statements to this effect.

● (1600)

Third, Canada should actively seek out other possible mediators in Central America. I know that among the states that I visited there are some that would be willing to join in such an important mediating process. I also know that a very substantial consensus of all governments that I met, in their vast divergence ideologically, want a negotiated settlement. They want an end to the violence.

Fourth, Canada must encourage international organizations like the United Nations to play an important role in building international support for a negotiated settlement.

Fifth, Canada must promote the establishment of a multinational consortium of potential donors to establish a reconstruction fund contingent on the prompt resolution of the conflict through diplomatic means. There are serious economic problems in that land, no matter the outcome of the civil war, and we must do our part to provide some financial assistance to those people.

Sixth, the last but certainly among the most important points, Canada should join with all those states in Central America, those countries in Europe, those many states in the Third World which favour a negotiated settlement, in demanding that the United States cease supplying arms to the junta. That is absolutely crucial if we are to get a peaceful settlement.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank hon. members. I shall conclude shortly.

Yesterday, when participating in a debate on foreign policy and in particular on the North-South question, the Prime Minister said the following:

> Within our own borders we have long realized that there can be no freedom for some without freedom for all. An assault against the basic rights of my neighbour inevitably places in jeopardy my own rights, my own security and freedom. We have little trouble accepting the truth and the implications of that statement within our own borders.
> We have more trouble in giving a modern answer to the very old question: Who is my neighbour? Is she the woman rummaging for food in the back streets of an Asian shanty town? Is he the man in South America in prison for leading a trade union?

> Are my neighbours children running from the sound of gunfire in the streets of Beirut?
> If we, the peoples of the North, say yes, then we will act; we will act together to keep hope alive. If we say no, then they are doomed and so are we.

I want to say on behalf of my colleagues in this House, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure many more, that I agree with those sentiments. I also want to say that it is very easy to make statements of that kind; it is equally easy to agree with them. What counts in human affairs is action, not talk.

In his speech the Prime Minister called for a new kind of attitude by world leaders. He made an appeal for that. If this call is to be at all effective, it must be illustrated by action. This action must be bold and imaginative. It must reject some of our own outmoded policies, such as automatically following the United States even when the Americans are profoundly wrong.

Canadians want leadership on the tragedy that is El Salvador today. Since I have been a member of Parliament I have never received letters of such moral concern on an international question as I have on this matter. So I say that if the Prime Minister does not act in the direction that I have suggested, then other world leaders will appropriately turn a deaf ear to his persuasive rhetoric.

We in this party say that Canadians will not settle for words alone. We can and we must, as a nation, do much more.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in the government-initiated debate the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) spoke of the flashpoints of crisis in international life against the backdrop of global challenges and difficulties. In my own contribution I addressed specific foreign policy dilemmas that we face in the framework of Canadian foreign policy values. Today, on an NDP motion, we are invited to continue the debate on Canada's international relations, with particular reference to South and Central America, and, by way of example, we are directed to consider the tragedy of El Salvador.

The countries of South and Central America all, without exception, belong to the Third World, and in a general debate on foreign affairs I believe it is incumbent upon me to advance some generalizations about our foreign policy toward the Third World as a whole.

Obviously, my response must admit both diversity and nuance. The quality of Canada's relations is not the same with small, remote islands as with large, developing countries. Neighbours have a different priority from those remote from us. We protect and cherish the special links of the Commonwealth and la Francophonie.

Even though the process of decolonization has been largely completed, many developing countries remain highly volatile. Government methods and social forms are often still in formation or are fragile. It is in the interest of democratic countries like Canada that Third World states develop freely-created institutions which correspond to the needs of their own societies and form the basis for stable government, while at the same time providing adequate protection of individual human rights.

Whatever attractions Communist ideologies may have had in the first blush of post-colonialism, they have been overtaken since then by the self-serving record of the U.S.S.R. in the developing world and the poor economic performances of the most eastern European countries. There has also been a diminution of the compulsive anti-western sentiments which often characterized political views in the developing countries two decades ago. These trends have in fact all combined to create a more positive set of circumstances for co-operation between Third World and western countries.

However, Canada's first principle toward the Third World is the promotion of genuine independence, non-alignment and stability. Putting it another way, I can say that we want to immunize the Third World from, rather than involve it in, East-West confrontation. As I said yesterday, our approach is to treat Third World countries on their own merits. Our goal is, in fact, a pluralistic world in which there would be room for the Third World objectives of independence and self-determination.

Second, we do not believe forms of government or economic systems are matters to be imposed from outside. Obviously, we will seek to explain to Third World countries why we believe as deeply as we do in free and representative institutions; but their social, economic and cultural circumstances are totally different from ours. The example of the success of our societies will of itself be the most convincing argument we can present. But short of international consensus, as in the case of Iran, or the Soviet Union over Afghanistan, or Rhodesia, we will not impede trade flows to reflect our view of their choice. In extreme cases, trade facilitation measures may be diminished, as was the case with a developed country, South Africa, in 1977. But we have not traditionally cut off aid relations, directed as they are toward improving the standard of living of people, when governments adopt positions we do not favour.

The third principle is that we expect that governments of all countries will be vigilant in the observance of their first and fundamental obligation—to their own people. Gross violations of human rights are and must be a source of concern and action on the part of the international community. However, when considering the appropriate response, I favour action which is effective and which stands a real chance of influencing the government in question. I oppose hollow gestures and the withdrawal of mechanisms which benefit Canadians, withdrawals which will not change the minds or the practices of the offending government. Especially in cases where the momentum for democracy and human rights of the foreign government is in a progressive rather than a retrogressive direction, we must try to use private counselling and positive reinforcement rather than strident public denunciations.

Fourth, we believe that it would be inappropriate for our foreign policy to reward adventurism and interference. Countries of the Third World face desperate and formidable challenges. It is for this reason that we have withdrawn aid programs from those countries whose scarce resources are diverted to war and conquest.

These four principles may set us apart from some other developed countries, but that does not mean we cannot work with them. We will examine, for example, the invitation of the United States and Mexico to work together to promote economic development in the Caribbean and the Central American region. For our part, this task is well in hand in the Commonwealth Caribbean, and we expect that our major emphasis will continue to be on these islands.

We may well not endorse all of the foreign policy imperatives of the American—or indeed of the Mexican—government, in promoting this initiative, but we can, I am confident, find common cause in the overriding need to develop the region and therefore find ways of reconciling our differing objectives. National motivations need not be identical for a common plan of action to be established.

For too long there has been a tendency to consider Latin America and the Caribbean as a single area, ignoring the fact that it is an area made up of 39 independent countries, dependent colonies and territories where the languages spoken are English, French, Spanish, Portuguese and Dutch, in which at least 20 have enjoyed political independence for over 150 years and all of which were at one time colonies of the great European colonial empires. Almost the only common thing about them is their colonial heritage and the fact that in many of them Spanish is the common language.

But these countries are no more like each other than are Australia and Canada. Each has its own history, its own racial mixtures, its own social development and its own economic status and potential. We must, therefore, deal with them individually.

Some will be important to us as export markets; others as sources of needed imports. Some will be sources of immigrants; others the destination of Canadian tourists. Some will be important because of their role in international affairs; others because of their need for development assistance to which we can contribute. Some will have shared political values. All have cultural traditions to which we can relate and in which we can share for the mutual benefit of our societies and our peoples.

Looked at in economic terms, these Latin states are all countries of the South. What is Canada's role in Latin America, or indeed in other parts of the world, in promoting the North-South dialogue? The government agrees with the Parliamentary Task Force on North-South Relations that Canada should base the development of Canadian policy on North-South issues on two major principles. First, the mutuality of interest of both North and South in solving global economic problems. Second, the humanitarian need to focus attention and resources on the world's poorest peoples and countries. These concepts will motivate Canada's aid programs and govern our efforts in the search for compromise.

Neither countries of the North nor those of the South constitute homogeneous groups. In spite of their diversity the south countries draw their feeling of unity from the convictions they share and from a common perception of their position in the world. Among other things, they are convinced that the international economic system has been overly favourable to the rich countries, and that is why they are asking that the rules of the game be changed. They want the system to be more accommodating for them. The poorest among them entertain more limited ambitions: they only want to survive, to improve their lot to a certain extent, and to keep their societies intact, and that regardless of forces and situations over which they often have no control whatsoever.

We should not wonder if developing countries seek to use existing international institutions to achieve their aims. New industrialized countries, such as Brazil, are ever more active within the GATT. Canada itself did contribute to set up post-war international institutions because it looked upon them as a means of reducing its own vulnerability and opening new avenues for international co-operation.

Unfortunately, the poorest countries are the ones which will probably benefit the least from any change in the institutions or in the exchange and payment system which might result from the North-South negotiations. It is towards those poorest countries—Haiti, Honduras and Guyana—that Canada will continue to direct its bilateral aid. In fact, our bilateral public aid to development has always been concentrated on low income developing nations. During the seventies that concentration accounted for an average of 70 per cent of our funds earmarked for public aid to development. Canada ranks first among industrialized nations in terms of percentage of aid to development which it gives to the poorest countries. The main objective of the Canadian program of co-operation and development is to support the efforts which the developing nations are themselves making to meet the needs of their own people. To that end, the bilateral program will be focused on three priority sectors: agriculture, energy and human resources development. It is in those three sectors that Canada's resources are best tailored to the needs of developing countries. We will be giving priority treatment to those sectors in the coming years.

[English]

As far as Canada is concerned, our commitment to development assistance is now well entrenched. Let me simply reiterate the government's policy to allocate to ODA 0.5 per cent of our GNP by 1985 and to do our utmost to achieve the international target of 0.7 per cent by 1990.

As some members well know, I take particular interest in promoting consultations with NGOs, church leaders and business representatives, and I have been impressed by their strong moral and intellectual commitment to the over-all Canadian effort in favour of Third World development. I would like to pay tribute to the impressive work that is carried out by NGOs and the church groups in Latin America, and I would like to repeat the strong commitment of this government to continue supporting financially the initiatives taken by private citizens in this country.

I want just to mention a serious issue with a human face which is having an adverse impact on the economic and social development prospects of many developing countries. I refer to the international refugee situation, the dimensions of which are expanding at an alarming rate.

There are now some 10 million refugees in different parts of the world and many more millions of internally displaced persons. The situation in Africa, which has witnessed a quintu-pling of its refugee population in the past few years, is of particular concern and led to the convening of the conference in Geneva in April, in which I participated, on the subject of international assistance to refugees in Africa. At that conference Canada pledged, in this year alone, a $22 million contribution towards the longer term requirements of $1 billion to assist in humanitarian relief, and local reinstallation and possibly eventual repatriation of the five million refugees in question.

● (1620)

There are also major unresolved refugee situations in Central Asia, in Southeast Asia and in Latin America. These situations, apart from the grave humanitarian problems for the refugees involved, impose economic, social and political burdens on the countries providing asylum which tend to undermine the stability of the countries and regions affected. It is for this reason that Canada, while contributing in a major way to the humanitarian relief effort, has led the international efforts at the United Nations General Assembly, the UN High Commission for Refugees, the UN Commission on Human Rights, and within the economic summits to address the fundamental political and human rights problems which underlie most of the situations of massive exodus.

My department has further initiatives under consideration. I want to emphasize in particular my pleasure at the agreement of Prince Sadruddin Aga Khan to serve as special rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on the question of the relationship of massive exoduses and human rights abuses. This particular exercise is the result of a Canadian initiative, and during my visit to Geneva in April I assured the Prince of Canada's strongest support for his sensitive mission.

I am pleased that my colleague the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) will be able to participate in this debate today, elaborating on his department's concern over the question of resettlement of refugees from the Latin American region.

I spoke yesterday of the over-all importance to Canada of its trading relationships and the growth of trade with the Third World. Latin America provides a dramatic illustration: in 1979, five of our top 25 trading partners were developing countries in the western hemisphere.

In development assistance terms, in Central America, despite the absence of close political ties, Canada has recognized the pressing needs of the region and has been a leading aid donor, providing more than $60 million in bilateral aid since 1972. In terms of concentration, Honduras and El Salvador, as the poorest of the area, have received the largest portion of the funding.

I should like finally to deal with that illustrative part of the motion which calls on the government "to initiate steps aimed at establishing a negotiated settlement of the tragic civil war in El Salvador".

Canada's links with El Salvador in terms of historic, linguistic, cultural, commercial and other ties, are limited in comparison to those of other countries in the world or, indeed, in the western hemisphere. There are only 40 Canadians resident in that country and immigration has been about 100 per year. Canadian investments total less than $10 million and exports in 1980 were only $15 million. Our major involvement is in the aid field and even here all new planning has had to be halted because of the violence.

Although our direct links with El Salvador have historically not been great, this does not mean that Canada is not concerned at developments in El Salvador, in particular at the high level of violence and the continuing disregard for human rights which characterize the political scene. In dealing with these issues, our policy has been clear and consistent.

Canada's opposition to the supply of arms to competing forces in El Salvador was spelled out in my speech in the House of March 9. Canada's abhorrence of human rights violations has been and continues to be emphasized both in bilateral contacts and in multilateral forums. We also continue to believe that a political solution should be sought for El Salvador.

President Duarte of El Salvador has called elections for a constituent assembly for 1982. He has invited all political parties to register for the elections, including extremist groups willing to lay down their arms. He has indicated a willingness to open a dialogue with the left on the election process and the monitoring of it. He has also made clear that he would not negotiate the formation of a non-elected coalition government and has said that he would not accept mediation offers by third parties, whether from regional states such as Venezuela and Mexico or from the Socialist International, which is committed to aiding the Democratic Revolutionary Front, the FDR.

The leader of the NDP has said that he shares the feeling of the FDR that the elections proposed by the junta would be a travesty of democracy in current circumstances, not a viable political solution to the conflict. This view is not shared by many of Canada's friends in the area, such as Venezuela and Costa Rica.

We agree that the obstacles to holding elections are formidable. After all, El Salvador has no tradition of democratic rule and is beset by violent armed opposition from extremists of both left and right, none of whom has any real interest in seeing the implantation of liberal democracy.

It should also be recognized that there are many within the power structure of El Salvador, particularly in the security forces, who are not happy with the prospect of elections. President Duarte has made great progress in obtaining their agreement to abide by the will of the population as expressed in the elections called for 1982 and 1983. There is no doubt, however, that if the President were forced into negotiating the formation of a non-elected coalition government or some other form of power sharing as advocated by the FDR and the leader of the NDP, he could well be overthrown and the prospects for the institution of true democracy spoiled.

President Duarte's reluctance to be drawn into negotiations with the left is also understandable in the light of information contained in documents captured in April. The FDR has not denied the authenticity of these documents, which spell out the objectives of the left in negotiations as follows; first, to draw out the conflict, which is going badly for the revolutionary forces; second, to drive a wedge between the Christian Democratic Party of President Duarte and the armed forces; third, to enhance the image of the left as a peacemaker; and fourth, to seek to expose the Christian Democratic Party as a facade for a military controlled government.

However, Canada refuses to dismiss out of hand the feasibility of holding fair elections, as the leader of the NDP does. Elections were possible in Zimbabwe in similarly difficult circumstances. President Duarte is on public record as saying that the OAS would be welcome to monitor them. His words as quoted in the March 6 edition of the New York Times are:

> We are going to request from the Organization of American States not only to send us a protocol mission, but to send us contingents from all of the Americas to come and inspect and to really make these free elections.

As I said recently before the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, if requested, and if we believed we could be of assistance, we would certainly be prepared to consider participating in such a mission.

In our view, Duarte has earned the right to be given a chance to bring about a political solution in the most democratic of manners—through free elections. A founder of the Christian Democratic Party, he has fought all of his life for democracy. Together with the present leader of the FDR, Guillermo Ungo, he waged and won the 1972 election campaign in his country. This victory was blocked by the military and Duarte was jailed, beaten and tortured. Exiled to Venezuela, he was one of the leaders of the opposition movement whose efforts eventually led to the overthrow of President Romero in October, 1979. He returned to his native land only 13 days after the revolution and was appointed to government in March, 1980, becoming president in December, assuming the position he had rightfully won in 1972.

It is ironic that the FDR is pressing Duarte to negotiate with them, presumably to enter into a form of power sharing in advance of the people's support in the election, all in the name of democracy.

It is my belief that many men and women of good will made a tragic miscalculation in late 1979 and early 1980. They thought that the same circumstances prevailed in El Salvador as had prevailed in Nicaragua before the overthrow of Somoza. They gambled that the armed leftist groups would win, ignoring the fact that the repressive regime of General Romero had already been overthrown. These men and women of essentially moderate persuasion, many of whom are represented in the FDR—people who, as the leader of the NDP said earlier, who would be members of all political parties in Canada if they were here—are now stranded with their extremist bedfellows.

The FDR, if it is really interested in seeing democracy introduced into El Salvador and is not just a front for armed Marxist revolutionary groups, has a responsibility to join with the Duarte government to ensure that the elections scheduled to be held in a scant nine months are a success.

The leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) has also, I believe, a responsibility in this regard. Most of his proposed courses of action are based on a negotiated settlement, which is the cause of the revolutionaries. By supporting the revolutionary forces in their desire to share power before the holding of elections, he could contribute to the prolongation of the suffering in that country and thereby impede the political solution which all members in this House support. To use his own words, he adds a veneer of respectability to the rebel position.

Finally, what is our responsibility as the government? It is not to attempt to arrogate to ourselves, from the outside, the right to resolve El Salvador's problems and, even more, the form of their resolution. It is rather to be modest enough to allow the people of El Salvador to decide their own future through the processes of the ballot box. That may not lead to political power for the socialist opposition in El Salvador, to which the Socialist International and their distinguished investigator are committed, but regardless of the falling of political chips, I believe it is the right and certainly it is the democratic course.

El Salvador is a human tragedy. It is ours to express our fellow feeling, to offer aid, to encourage a solution which corresponds to the wishes and needs of the people and to rebuke perpetrators of acts of criminal terrorism. It is not ours to assume the principal role in solving the crisis. That way would lie another tragedy, our own. Third World governments are not prepared to admit without qualification that their tragedies are ours. Modesty, patience and a sense of our own limitations are sometimes the most difficult virtues to practise, but I commend them to the leader of the NDP and to my colleagues. Genuine independence for the Third World has to mean independence even from us. Our own independence is too precious for us to do violence to that of others. This is the course of action we intend to continue to urge upon all governments.

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I wish first of all to indicate my appreciation of the official opposition to the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) for his comments and his sensitive observations about the situation in Latin America, and more particularly in El Salvador.

I wish as an introductory comment to a House and a nation which have become almost desensitized by the overkill that it is held across this country and across party lines to be one of the great tragedies of our time that with all of our resources and with all of our capacity in our world for communication we cannot bring the instruments we have for understanding and communicating into the forum where there are resources to bring this travesty, this great illustration of man's inhumanity to man, to an end.

We could debate whether or not this is our moral responsibility, or whether we let a cock fight go on or two people in a corner fight it out to the bitter end; but in other areas where we would deal with animals we would not in the Canadian tradition follow in that way.

I hear, unhappily, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) suggesting that somehow these nations are independent in name, yet we cannot see the trappings with our eyes, or at least they are not apparent to the forums of our world. Let us not think this is just what Canadians think, but for a moment let us turn to see what the United Nations, the OAS and other forums in Europe are saying. Let us cross the frontiers of parties and find a way whereby Canada can be part of a coalition to bring this great human tragedy to an end.

I want for a moment to address the three concerns which today's opposition motion brings before this House. First, the motion expresses a concern regarding Canada's international relations. Secondly, it calls for a meaningful interest to be taken on the part of Canada in South and Central America, and thirdly, it calls for Canada to take steps toward a negotiated settlement of the civil war in El Salvador.

In relation to our concern for international relations, this was discussed at some length yesterday in the House. Let me suggest that already in our debate today we are seeing the lack of a foreign policy in terms of directions and initiatives as to how we will approach this changing world and this changing hemisphere of ours. We are also in great need of clarifying our relationships with our closest and greatest ally and friend, the United States. I am one who believes that good fences make good neighbours.

At the Progressive Conservative policy conference held some months ago, this resolution was a part of seeking to outline that term of reference:

> The Progressive Conservative party believes in the importance and the necessity of maintaining the historic friendship and mutually beneficial economic and defence relations between Canada and the United States, always recognizing the need for Canada to guard its national identity and political, economical and cultural independence.

Over the past weekend we have seen our Mexican neighbours spell out their agreements with the United States but reject the isolationist policy of the United States in Central America. Let me also make one other observation in terms of our concern for international relations; it is a concern about the future of our peacekeeping capacity which may seem only peripherally to bear on the subject at hand today. We are in need in our world of collective security, and yesterday's discussion focused on collective security. We need in the East-West relationship for Canada to be a part of those collective security arrangements and to contribute to them.

I want to suggest that there is a sense of security which is involved not just in Cyprus between Greeks and Turks, or in the Middle East, but a type of collective security which is involved in our capacity to be a peacemaker in the areas of ferment in our world. We need a refocussing of our foreign policy, for what we have today is far too broad for the changing world about which we speak. We need to see ourselves as part of the formation of a world police force to begin to deal with terrorism in all of its forms, whether it be the violence we see in El Salvador, the violence we see in Europe or violence wherever it is taking place.

Secondly, the motion today calls for a meaningful interest to be taken by Canada in South and Central America. Yesterday we heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) speak of his government's belief in peace, in development, in a new era of equality among nations. But in answer to the specifics of Central America, whether it be Guatemala, Nicaragua or El Salvador, we heard an uncertain sound; if the trumpet shall make an uncertain sound, it is written.

Unfortunately, this is what we have heard as the government has sought to spell that out. When questioned about El Salvador and the areas of Central America, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has responded: "It is an area in which we have no special interest". When pressed further, he has said: "We have no traditional Canadian involvement in that sphere". Yet we have been prepared to go as peacekeepers, which is part of our Canadian heritage, to the ends of the world to be a part of peacekeeping efforts and to be in parts of Africa, or wherever called, to supervise and to help bring about elections or whatever.

Yesterday in his intervention the minister spoke of our policy of having mechanisms and arrangements for the peaceful settlement of disputes. Rather, we have seen a bankrupt Canadian policy regarding Central and South America in the face of the disruptions and the tragedies of Central America. When questioned on the specifics, the Prime Minister says: "Why, of course if one side has arms, we will send arms to the other side". How can the Canadian government say that elections are possible if we have no knowledge and if we show so little sensitivity?

Maybe in this new day, of which the Prime Minister spoke yesterday and of which the minister speaks in terms of the evolution of our world, the time has come for us to take the symbolic action of joining the Organization of American States, no longer as an associate member somehow standing on the side saying: "This is something we can nod at when we choose to". If this is a new day, let us begin to build new working relationships. Let us also begin to realize that stability involves literacy, land use and all of the moderate reform which has been referred to already in this debate. If we do not have stability in that area, how can we hope to have effective economic relationships and to trade in the way we hope to trade in the future? If Central America continues to be up in flames, the prospect for our economic, cultural and immigration contacts seems very dim and only possible under emergency situations all the time.

The third part of this resolution suggests that Canada should take steps toward a negotiated settlement in El Salvador. In the March 9 debate in this House the official opposition, through the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), put forward the proposition that Canada undertake extensive consultations with El Salvador's neighbouring states. We continue to press for that. In its recommendations today the New Democratic Party joins with us—and we join with it—in calling for that type of consultation.

Second, there should be international action through the United Nations or other appropriate international agencies. If we cannot understand El Salvador—the question comes quite clearly into focus—how will we understand the complexities of the North-South dialogue, about which we have been talking so much and of which El Salvador becomes a case in point?

Let us think about that case in point for a moment. El Salvador has a population of 4.5 million to 5 million. That population is getting smaller each day, as the leader of the New Democratic Party has so graphically and brutally described. There are 207 people per square kilometre living on the land. The gross domestic product of the El Salvadorean economy is $3 billion U.S. a year, or $679 per capita per year. With respect to health care, there are 603 persons for each hospital bed and about 3,685 persons per doctor.

When we begin to look at the capacity for stability, we must realize that 3.6 per cent of the gross national product is spent on education. Only 65 per cent of those eligible make grade one. There is an illiteracy rate of 35 per cent. This means that less than one third of the population is economically active. The export ratio is marginally above imports. Food production has lagged far behind industrial productivity over the last ten years. This is the legacy of El Salvador. This is the background of stability into which we hope to integrate our lives as part of this global community.

We hear and agree with the rhetoric of the Prime Minister, but we find ourselves strangely uneasy because over these many years of Liberal government we have heard the same tune, but we have seen contributions to the ODA drop. We have seen opportunities lost again and again. The ball has been dropped when Canada could have continued the Pearsonian tradition of involvement and leadership.

We hear rhetoric from the government benches about the possibility for elections in today's world, but we are hearing from people who have a lack of sensitivity about legitimate struggle. As one who has lived through a period of civil war inside a country such as El Salvador, I know how little freedom there is, how little opportunity there is to speak and what great risk is involved in speaking, let alone standing for office or voting. If there are democratic elections, are there to be corpses voting?

When we begin to look at proposals and at what might be done, let us suggest that the government take strong initiatives to inform itself and to inform hon. members on all sides of the House. We are indebted to the leader of the New Democratic Party for his risk-taking. We are grateful for his interpretation. But because of party backgrounds there will be those who will be suspicious of the comments of the leader of the New Democratic Party. They may feel that the press has not been accurate or that the church has not been accurate. Why do we not send from this House those who will go and enter into discussion? Why do we not take the skeptics along with those who are already convinced?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McLean: I hope to propose that the subcommittee on Canada's relations with Latin America and the Caribbean, which is now at work, travels, even if it be in neighbouring countries, and begins to have the same conversations as the leader of the New Democratic Party has had, as churchmen have had, and as representatives of voluntary agencies have had, and then comes back and reports to us.

In case there are those who feel that this cannot be done because of security, about which we hear often from the government, let me inform this House that there will be a delegation from all parties of the Parliament of Europe—Social Democrats, Christian Democrats and all parties of the right and left in that House—which will travel to El Salvador, to Mexico City and to Costa Rica in order themselves, as a parliamentary committee, to hear people there. They will travel from June 22 to July 3.

Second, let us explore with Mexico, Europe and, by all means, with the United States—in the context of the minister's comment about the government's considering the invitation—taking part in working with these groups to find suitable joint action.

Third, in order to be helpful in El Salvador we need to affirm—and we need to hear clearly from the government—that El Salvador, Central America and Latin America are a part of the Canadian sphere of interest, that anywhere in the world where human rights are violated is an area of the Canadian sphere of influence.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McLean: Let me touch on a matter which the Secretary of State for External Affairs mentioned. I refer to the matter of refugees. In Newsweek of June 15 there is a report on our world's newest refugees. The report reads in part as follows:

> Perhaps 2,000 a week pull up stakes, according to social workers in the capital city of San Salvador, many heading north immediately on the bone-jarring bus journey through Guatemala and Mexico to the U.S. border. No one knows how many have made it, but estimates start at 60,000.

● (1650)

The article concludes:

> —the flow of illegal aliens from El Salvador is certain to continue until peace comes to that war-weary country.

Canada has a proud tradition, one in which this party when in government gave leadership, and others on all sides of this House have supported. When the Southeast Asian refugees were here we had an experience of learning what hurt there was and what needs there are, not only of welcoming but also of beginning to go and look at the root causes towards which we need to address more thought and effort. Is it not time that Canada, in the United Nations forum, began to take an active role in calling for the overhaul of the U.N. covenant on refugees in order that there can be an effective framework, not one of the 1950s but one of the 1980s, in terms of dealing with these most unfortunate people caught in large part in wars about which they know little?

It is our hope, Mr. Speaker, in the official opposition that the concerns expressed from this side of the House today about the importance of the mediation, the importance of making noises that Latin and Central America can hear, the importance of seeking out other mediators to join with us in Canada, about encouraging the instruments of the United Nations to be effective, about the multilateral consortium or about joining with our friends in providing aid to those who suffer most, will be listened to. Let us not wait until the situation is ripe; let us have our volunteer agencies, the Red Cross and others, take the food and medicines at this time until such time as we can find the answers. Let us also invite our closest friends, the Americans, to come and reason with us and others in the family of nations in order to continue that proud tradition, that of the peacemakers.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to participate in this debate.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie)—Veterans affairs—Suggested adoption of new index and provision of energy supplement; the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields)—Energy—Possibility of reaching agreement with Alberta; the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga)—Energy—Negotiations with province of Alberta on pricing agreement.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Broadbent:

That this House expresses its continuing concern with respect to Canada's international relations and calls on the government to demonstrate a meaningful interest in South and Central America and, in particular, to initiate steps aimed at establishing a negotiated settlement of the tragic civil war in El Salvador.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, like the member who just spoke, I consider it a privilege to be able to participate in this very important debate. It is a warming feeling to know that in this forum there are those occasions when members on all sides have the opportunity to address themselves to issues which are not part of the drumbeat of daily affairs, but in fact have a longer and deeper set of roots to them, one in which our own country can play a very important role.

I am particularly pleased, Mr. Speaker, that several of the members who have spoken have mentioned the issue of refugees around the world as an area in which Canadians can play a significant role. There is no doubt in my mind that refugee policy constitutes an area in which this country is in a unique and very favourable position to offer leadership.

The issue of refugees is not a new one to us, Mr. Speaker. I was reminded of that while reading the very interesting report produced by the Mennonite Central Committee called "Making Room for Strangers". They open with a word from St. Luke, chapter 9, verses 57 and 59, which says that as they were going along a road a man said to Jesus: "I will follow you wherever you go". Jesus said to him:

—Foxes have holes, and birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head.

It is clear, Mr. Speaker, that the issue of a displaced person goes back many generations, many centuries, but in terms of our recent memory we have had a particularly interesting history as a country. We have accepted well over 400,000 refugees since the end of the Second World War, and a major movement of displaced persons in the early period of close to 135,000. We had very large numbers of people who escaped the difficulties in Czechoslovakia, Uganda and Hungary. We brought in large numbers of people from Chile, and contrary to the opinion that some groups have about the interest of this country in South America, we were one of the largest sponsoring countries for Chilean refugees, bringing in close to 7,000 in the period 1975 to 1976.

The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, the issue of refugees, much as we make an effort to solve it and bring more and more people in, grows beyond our bounds. Every single hour of every single day there are far more refugees being created than this country and every other industrialized country could ever hope to resettle. Current estimates suggest that the numbers of refugees in the world are somewhere between 12 million and 15 million. As other members, including the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan), have pointed out, every time there is a major insurrection or political dispute in the world thousands more are left homeless.

What is even more tragic, Mr. Speaker, is that increasingly there are signs that refugees are becoming a political weapon. Certain countries almost deliberately export some of their problems, create problems by the expulsion of people. All of a sudden the world is faced with the tragic sight of boats bobbing and weaving on a hostile sea, people flinging themselves overboard for lack of room. Whether it is Southeast Asia or off the coast of Cuba or Haiti, the fact of the matter is the number of refugees grows apace.

There is no doubt in my mind, as one who has the responsibility of trying to deal with the issue of refugees and how to cope with them domestically, that many of the answers and many of the programs and policies we have in place have not been adequate. Yet we should be careful not to destroy what is in place by outright condemnation. We do have the United Nations High Commission on Refugees which this year has a budget of close to $500 million, with close to 1,700 personnel in its operation, which commission is strongly supported by Canada. We are one of the major contributors to that commission and we support its work and activities. They provide worldwide services, whether in El Salvador, Nicaragua, Somalia, Eritrea, the Horn of Africa or Southeast Asia.

The commission is there to provide a basic service, but what is oftentimes missing is the political answer to some of the root causes of the refugee issue. It is not a problem that can be solved by one country alone. We make a serious mistake to think that by climbing on the barricades and beating our breasts we will solve the problem of the refugees. It must be solved in co-operation and co-ordination with other like minded countries. It must be solved as part of the North-South dialogue. It must be a solution jointly arrived at by all countries, rich and poor alike, because it is a problem we share equally. No one is immune from dealing with the problem of refugees around the world.

However, I believe that we do have a particular role to play because of our traditions and our recent history. We have a country which has developed a reputation, going back to the Second World War, for having a strong humanitarian and compassionate feeling for those who are displaced and homeless. This reputation has stood us in good stead. It is a base upon which we can build a reputable set of initiatives for others to follow. I believe this policy has been supported by all political parties and by all groups. It is not a partisan issue; it is not one in which one should make political points. We all agree upon the necessity of the country developing political moves and initiatives to bring together the different countries of the world as part of the dialogue concerning the changing conditions of refugees around the world.

We have attempted within our country not only to go beyond the question of simple intake, but to try to demonstrate to other countries that we can develop a fairly rational and comprehensive plan dealing with refugees. Now we have an annual refugee program which we table in Parliament, and hon. members should recognize that it has become a worldwide refugee program. It is not simply a reactive program; it is not simply set up to react to crises. We have set target levels for Southeast Asia, Africa, eastern Europe and Latin America.

It is important for hon. members who have asked what we are doing in Central and Latin America to realize that under our refugee program last year we doubled the target. We have now set as a level close to 1,000 refugees coming from that area. Furthermore, we have adopted a number of initiatives within Central and South America in the last year to demonstrate our commitment. We offered to take in 300 Cuban refugees, even though our country was not an area to which they were particularly anxious to come because of the lack of strong contacts and roots. We have developed a major program for the resettlement of Haitian refugees this fall in co-operation with the Quebec government. Recently we adopted special measures to deal with Salvadoreans. These measures go substantially beyond those of most other countries.

I want to point out to hon. members that our decision on the Salvadorean refugee situation was made in very close consultation with the United Nations. The first priority of the United Nations is the necessity to provide for settlement within the immediate problem area. The advice we received from the United Nations was that until the problem clarified, until there was some sense of a political arrangement for settlement, it was not encouraging large-scale resettlement into host countries. Even with that measure we were prepared to relax the requirements for Salvadoreans who were in Canada, who had relatives here, or who were being displaced from other countries and had nowhere to go. We offered them asylum in Canada.

It is not fair for certain members to suggest that we have been blind and irresponsible in the area of Central America when it comes to refugees. We have been taking initiatives as they should be taken, in constant co-operation with the United Nations and with other countries. It is that basic principle upon which we should develop new initiatives in the international arena.

One problem which all countries will have to face is the issue of the definition of "refugee". The old definition of someone who is escaping for fear of political persecution no longer applies to the vast thousands of refugees who escaped from Cuba. In many cases they are escaping from countries where poverty is of a severe and tragic proportion. Are they refugees, or are they simply people who are driven by an enormous desire to escape from want and use the refugee route as a way to get around normal immigration practices? It is clear that we must establish different definitions and rules to apply to the definition of "refugee" in the world today.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs has begun such discussions. Certainly we will have an opportunity within the next year during the North-South dialogues, summit meetings and Commonwealth meetings, to use further our influence with other countries such as the United States, Australia and West Germany which provide the other major areas of host support and resettlement so that they will engage in a discussion about the general issue of refugee problems.

We have another important opportunity as Canadians. Not only do we have the opportunity to build upon our past reputation, but we can build upon the immediate experience which came our way as a consequence of one of the most fascinating and rewarding experiences through which the country has gone; that is, the large movement of Southeast Asian refugees. Approximately 60,000 people coming in over 18 months is a large swallow. It takes extraordinary efforts at resettlement to ensure that they have proper opportunities for work, homes and education.

One of the most important developments arising out of our major commitment was the tremendous involvement of private sponsors. Under the changes to the Immigration Act of 1978, we now have the power to join in partnership with a wide variety of voluntary groups, church groups and ethnic organizations, so that they can provide sponsorship, resources and support for the settlement of refugees in this country. It is satisfying to see the tremendous response to those groups throughout Canada. There were close to 7,000 sponsors for Southeast Asian refugees alone. Many ethnic groups are now undertaking sponsorship for eastern European refugees.

I have indicated to various organizations that I am prepared to sign agreements similar to the ones I have already signed with the Polish congress and the Czechoslovakian association. We are prepared to sign agreements with them so that they can bring in refugees under sponsorship agreements. The same offer to provide such resources applies to any group that wants to bring in refugees from Central or South America.

In almost the last 2.5 years we have built up a very strong and forward-thinking constituency of Canadians who are active and interested in the problems and plight of refugees. Now we are asking the questions: what do we do next; where do we go from here? Perhaps the most important refugee priority to mention would be to engage our interest and resources in developing programs in refugee camps around the world. We should draw upon the inspiration and the commitment of church organizations and voluntary organizations to bring their resources to bear upon the huge refugee camps in Africa and Central America.

When I met with the Somalian ambassador a few months ago, we talked about the refugee issue. He said that there were close to one million refugees in camps in Somalia alone. Somalia is one of the poorest countries in the world and it has to bear the full cost of almost a million refugees. He said that they needed people who could provide medical and agricultural services as well as technical assistance.

This is a tremendous opportunity for Canadians to find a new cause. Those many thousands of Canadians who have committed themselves to the resettlement of refugees at home now have a tremendous opportunity abroad. It is certainly my ambition—and I know it is shared by my colleagues—to begin providing such support and assistance for the outward reach of Canadians to deal with the refugee problem where it is most serious and most drastic; that is, the vast number of camps in various regions around the globe.

We have taken a major step toward restructuring the Canadian Foundation on Refugees to enable it to begin providing support for the co-ordination of technical assistance in the development of an international aspect of Canadian involvement in the refugee problem. We have met with a number of refugee organizations. For example, I met with perhaps one of the most prominent and effective groups, the Mennonite Central Committee, about two weeks ago.

Mr. Friesen: What was the name of that group?

Mr. Axworthy: They are a group which deserve full recognition.

• (1710)

As for the question about what we do next, the answer given to them was, "Let us begin to broaden the base". We have said to them, "Let us use the resources and the money that you can collect and the commitment of those who want to work abroad to begin working in the camps abroad". In a sense, we have a chance to set a different model, a different example in the area of refugee policy. Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that is something we intend to do. It is a commitment we are making to provide leadership in the outward reach of refugee programs and policies and to give Canadians the opportunity to become engaged, not in a passive way by reading about the tragedies in newspapers or by watching them on television, but by active involvement in a direct way with a vast problem which is growing by leaps and bounds.

I would say, in particular, that we recognize increasingly the importance of the issues as they appear in South America and Latin America. That is why we have taken a number of steps to begin developing approaches to the settlement of refugees from that area. We have indicated to the United Nations that we are prepared to accept Salvadorean refugees who cannot find homes elsewhere.

We are taking measures to strengthen our embassy connections, as the Secretary of State has said. We have taken measures to strengthen our reporting missions and our ability to organize and develop political control and contact. In effect, we are really talking about a two-pronged approach with regard to dealing with refugee aid and settlement. It is important to state that none of these initiatives is possible or probable unless we have an underlying consensus and agreement that we are prepared to do something in these areas.

I commend the New Democratic Party for giving up one of their opposition days in order to allow the government to continue this debate. It is only unfortunate that others did not have the same sort of zeal and commitment. There is a broad base of support in this area. We will be able to develop a better understanding among Canadians of these issues. It is necessary for us to go beyond our view and perception that refugees come as a result of a crisis. We must begin to develop an approach to the refugee issue which is consistent, cohesive and long term.

Refugees will be around for a long time and the problems associated with them will not be subject to easy solutions or panaceas. The problems are not subject to grandstanding or rhetorical flourishes. This situation requires a painstaking effort and an allocation of resources. As we well know, any foreign policy initiative will not succeed unless it receives a basis of support from the people.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I regret to interrupt the hon. minister but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to participate in this debate today. I also want to say it was a privilege for me to serve on the North-South Parliamentary Task Force, to be involved in the hearings and to listen to the many fine presentations which were made to the task force. I wish to pay tribute to the hon. member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche), who is not in the House at the present time. He has made many contributions in this House and, indeed, across the country with regard to Canada's role in aid and development, and to the entire theme of external affairs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fretz: One of the most important things which impressed me was the role of the non-government organizations. The task force heard many people from these organizations. They play a very important role in projecting Canada to the many parts of the world. The self-sacrificing manner in which they work is to be commended. I am impressed by the non-government organizations in our country.

Along with four other members of the task force I was privileged to visit some countries in Asia in February. I was able to view first hand some of the work involved in aid and development, for we had the privilege of visiting the Philippines, Bangladesh and Singapore. I saw the development and aid projects which are taking place in these countries. We were able to talk with Canadians and to see the kind of work they were doing. The enthusiasm generated among them was self-evident. I returned from the trip being supremely proud that I am Canadian and proud of the work that Canada is doing overseas.

One of the recommendations our task force made was that there should be greater parliamentary input into the North-South debate. I am pleased to have the opportunity to do that today. There must also be input from members of Parliament. Members of Parliament must have the opportunity to travel, to see first hand the projects in which Canada is involved. We need to be able to question the people who are there in order to find out what is happening.

I believe that there is a grave danger that the party to my left, the New Democratic Party, and other socialist parties and their leaders, will try to turn legitimate problems regarding relations among nations into an instrument for promoting international socialism. That frightens me because I believe there is a danger of distorting the real needs of people in the world into the cause of world socialism. If the North-South dialogue is subverted into a tool of international socialism, an instrument to wage peace—another form of warfare—then this will only contribute to the conflict among the superpowers rather than assist the poor people of the world.

The NDP motion which is before us today was moved soon after the leader of that party returned from a mission abroad—perhaps it was "Mission Impossible". The critics and the cynics say that he went because of his unpopular support of the Prime Minister's constitutional proposals. They say he went because of his need to regain his popularity and his prestige as party leader, not only among his caucus but among members of his party as a whole. Rather, he went abroad, or perhaps amiss, as the vice-president of Socialist International.

The hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) met for more than four hours with President Castro, one of the Prime Minister's pals. But it was a secret meeting and reporters were forced to stay in a hotel. The Ottawa Citizen reported that the NDP leader obtained astonishing insight into the communist leader. The Globe and Mail reported that he said secret meetings were extremely important and extremely useful. In the name of freedom of information, let the leader of the New Democratic Party, who was in the House earlier to report to Parliament about his trip, tell us what took place with Mr. Castro. What offers did Castro make toward him? Did he invite Castro to participate in the economic development of the Caribbean and Latin America? We also know that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) never reports in this House about the trips he makes either.

Complexity makes understanding all the ramifications surrounding the so-called North-South dialogue almost impossible because such an immense topic covers subject matters such as the recycling of the OPEC surplus, the proposed changes in the gearing ratio of the World Bank and the allocation of special drawing rights. It is perhaps not surprising, therefore, that too often the whole question of the North-South dialogue is boiled down to a simple controversy over foreign aid. In these difficult economic times, when so many western nations are faced with double digit inflation and high unemployment, foreign aid is viewed with disfavour and increased foreign aid is viewed with extreme distaste.

In perspective, though, it can be easily seen that the target for foreign aid recommended by the North-South task force, of which I was a member, is not excessive. We argued that official development assistance should rise to .7 per cent of gross national product by 1990. When one discovers that federal support for the arts in Canada, a worthwhile venture in itself, amounts to 2 per cent of gross national product, the amount budgeted for official development assistance is seen to be quite reasonable, especially when such moneys are targetted to providing the following: clean water, health services and education. These three are simple necessities to the hundreds of millions in the Third World who are bereft of what we in Canada view as our inalienable right. However, although the contribution of foreign aid to the alleviation of human suffering should not be minimized, it is but a small part of the solution to North-South relations.

Another part of the solution is provided by the many individual Canadians who have been moved by humanitarian concerns to share generously with those less fortunate. This caring is represented not only by financial contributions but by contributions of time, energy and experience. These Canadians are members of the over 200 independent non-governmental organizations known as NGOs involved in assisting development in the Third World. The organizations range from small, effective groups such as Match International, which involves itself at the very basic level in teaching women in the south how to raise rabbits, to the Mennonite Central Committee, where years of expertise in farming are shared with newly-landed peasants, to CUSO whose members teach the illiterate to read.

Non-governmental organizations are enjoying wide financial support from the community at large, even to the point where private contributions are increasing in spite of the shrinking of the economic pie. In 1978-1979, NGOs raised over $63 million for projects in the Third World.

In light of these facts, the task force recommended that the government direct an increased share of ODA to support the activities of NGO. Additionally, the bilateral programs branch of CIDA should assign some of the funds it expects to spend on agriculture, health and rural development to small projects which would be operated by Canadian NGOs.

The North-South dialogue is further confused by calls for a new international economic order. Paramount in my mind are the attitudes that would be reflected in being party to such a fundamental change in the economic affairs of the world. I firmly believe that human rights, free will and the sovereignty of nations must not be placed in jeopardy in any move toward change. These nations which are blessed by already having such benefits should neither give them up nor avoid the responsibility of seeing that less privileged nations are assisted.

I also strongly believe that the developed countries should not redistribute wealth but should apply development programs in such a way that the less developed countries become able to create their own wealth.

I do not think that it is beneficial or desirable to foster dependency in recipient nations. We should as a nation undoubtedly concern ourselves with the less fortunate, but with an eye on the long view. Our main goal, I believe, should be to get the less developed countries to stand on their own, independent and self-sufficient. That goal may take some time to be realized, but it should always be our final target. It has been my observation that collectivism and socialism rob people of their initiative.

We need to ask ourselves, why is Canada not an underdeveloped country? The party to the left needs to ask the question, why are we not an underdeveloped country? It is because of our economy and through the free enterprise system which has allowed us to grow and prosper, even though it is now threatened by the present government. Our system has further allowed us to be in the position where we can share our bounty with others. I personally feel a strong responsibility to see that other nations are allowed to learn and benefit from the free enterprise system, as Canada and other western nations have.

In a number of important ways the situation of Canada is analogous to nations in the south. They, like us, were once colonies; they, like us, have an economy which is largely predicated upon the export of primary commodities and the import of finished goods; they, like us, are not major world powers and therefore have a stake in co-operation and working together without recourse to power.

All these similarities have conspired to put Canada in a position of trust in the eyes of the Third World. We are looked upon as a nation which can act as a bridge between the concerns of the South and the concerns of the North.

The bridge-building role which the parliamentary task force envisioned for Canada uses to advantage this position of trust, for not only does Canada have much in common with the South, but we are undoubtedly a member of the nations of the North. Canada is therefore uniquely situated to act as an arbiter, a go-between to aid in more meaningful dialogue between the North and South.

The Prime Minister's attitude to this crucial topic has trivialized it. He has not bothered adequately to explain to the Canadian citizen his concerns, his goals and his methods of achieving those goals. The Prime Minister should realize, Mr. Speaker, that he has a major problem with credibility out there in Canada, and oftentimes the mere fact that he says he is in favour of something is enough to turn people off. The people of Canada have been presented with the spectacle of the Prime Minister flitting around the world, bemoaning the lack of avocados and hobnobbing with world leaders. Granted these were the leaders of Third World countries; but for all we know the Prime Minister could have been talking to them about the new hem lengths in Paris, for he has not seen fit to take the people of Canada into his confidence. We are asked blindly to trust him when he assures us that the problems of North-South are of primary importance to him.

The members of the task force were convinced that North-South relations were critically important, but there are those of us who seriously question the Prime Minister's commitment. His actions, however, will determine whether that opinion is positive or negative, and I am deeply concerned that there will be negative public perception.

Mr. Speaker, in the course of our hearings, members were surprised to learn that Canada is involved in 89 countries, although 79 per cent of that involvement was in 27 countries. This massive but necessarily superficial involvement led us to question the effectiveness of our programs, as our Canadian personnel are spread extremely thin. We found that there are less than 100 CIDA personnel in the field, while in Ottawa CIDA is top heavy with about 1,000 employees. This can easily be seen to be an unsatisfactory situation.

The decision-making process is centred in Ottawa, far from the realities of the field, and is ponderously slow to respond to changes in field conditions. CIDA personnel in the Third World are hard-working and dedicated, I am sure of that, but they surely could do a better job with more support there and fewer officials at headquarters in Ottawa.

The task force therefore recommended that the government seek to reduce the number of countries in which it has aid programs. Further, it was recommended that the government strengthen the administration of its development assistance programs in the field.

Another area which the task force studied quite intensively dealt with the subject of food aid. The role of emergency food aid in disasters is one that is not questioned. It is the ongoing role played by food aid that is controversial. However, it should be pointed out that not all countries in the South are dependent on food aid. In fact, there has been some remarkable progress. For example, India suffered a major drought ten years ago. The response in food aid from other nations was immediate and massive, but thousands of Indians starved to death. Two years ago India underwent another severe drought, but because of gains made in agriculture production, India was self-sufficient and able to feed its people from grain grown and stockpiled in India.

The Indian government is joined by the government of Bangladesh in its determination to make food production one of its highest priorities. So it can be seen that self-sufficiency in agricultural production is an attainable goal. It is also the case that people can starve to death, not through lack of food but through lack of money to buy food. We urge that aid be given to the poorest of the poor, to avoid this type of situation arising.

We found in our discussions that food aid had often exacerbated problems faced by newly emerging nations. A dependence on food aid was fostered, sometimes upsetting market balances to the detriment of domestic production, which robs people of their initiative and self-esteem. We determined therefore that food aid from Canada should be used only as a transitional measure to fill the gap which exists between a country's food needs and its food production.

Food aid should be part of a detailed and well integrated food production plan in which food aid would gradually decline and assistance for food production increase.

I feel that this subject is too important to be left to civil servants, who are cautious and careful not to put themselves into positions where they can be criticized. This issue of North-South relations needs to be handled with imagination and verve, qualities not called for in the job descriptions of most bureaucrats.

I think it is time for new blood, and that is why I call for an ongoing mandate for members of Parliament to involve themselves in this topic. As members of the task force, we found our travels greatly beneficial in bringing home the realities of the situations faced in the developing countries. We had a first-hand opportunity to observe the Canadian government's involvement in development and were, therefore, able to suggest practical alternatives to present procedures. Travel is a valuable educational tool and members should be allowed to visit countries where Canada is involved in aid or development projects. Members should be allowed not only to view first-hand what Canadians are doing, but to question and to criticize.

May I ask how much time I have left, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): One minute.

Mr. Fretz: I shall conclude by saying it is ironic that the Prime Minister supposedly has such a keen interest in world affairs and the North-South issue when he is unable to resolve the Canadian east-west problem. Apparently he delights in paying world prices for oil to Mexico, OPEC or Venezuela rather than paying 75 per cent of that price to Canadians.

I say it is ironic because he appears to want to solve world problems but cannot successfully deal with domestic problems. There is no doubt that there are real needs in the world. We as Canadians can be proud of our efforts, but more Canadians would be willing to rally behind the Prime Minister for this cause if he showed more sympathy, more concern and more understanding regarding our own problems.

Mr. Louis Duclos (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, before speaking to the motion moved by the New Democratic Party, I would like to draw the attention of hon. members to the fact that our friends in the official opposition have refused to give up to the House one of their allotted days. I suspect that decision will sadden the thoughtful Progressive Conservatives, and I know some among my friends across the floor who do not suffer from tunnel vision, who are greatly interested in international political issues, and who will be all the more upset because in the past their party made a significant contribution in the definition and the preparation of Canada's foreign policy.

It is unfortunate that they were unable to set aside their purely partisan considerations, if only for one day. This being the second day of the first debate on foreign policy held in the House in many years, it is disappointing to see that the New Democratic Party have deliberately chosen to ignore certain issues which are crucial at this time, such as the North-South dialogue which was so aptly set in its proper perspective yesterday by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan). Similarly, they have chosen to ignore other important questions, including disarmament, nuclear non-proliferation, the law of the sea, as well as the situation in Africa and in the Middle East, simply to enable their leader to rehash the same arguments we have already heard in the debate of March 9 last on El Salvador. According to the motion moved by the New Democratic Party, Mr. Speaker, this House ought to express the continuing concern which hon. members feel over Canada's international relations. It is rather strange that the New Democratic Party should want to concentrate on only one question which, as I just said, was debated at length hardly three months ago, and that they should decide to remain silent on other issues which are even more important to Canada and world peace.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs has just reiterated the policy of the government on El Salvador. As he pointed out, that is a region where traditionally Canada has not been very active. In fact, before the Nicaraguan revolution in 1979, Canadians generally knew precious little about a region which basically left them rather indifferent. When the revolution broke out in that country, the then secretary of state for external affairs and now the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) maintained that Canada should not get involved and that she did not expect Canada to take any special measures to straighten out that country's difficult situation. However, the turn of events in Nicaragua, and more recently in El Salvador, led Canadians to show a growing interest in that region of the world, and we all regret the escalating tension and violence which have characterized the situation in that country for several months.

However, pitiable the situation may appear to us, there are limits to what Canada can and should do in El Salvador or Central America. Canada should not do as the frog in La Fontaine's fable which wanted to get bigger than the bull and did finally burst. This does not mean, Mr. Speaker, that we should ignore this region. Indeed, that is certainly not what the Canadian government is doing. In the past, we have established economic development assistance programs for Honduras, Guatemala, Nicaragua and El Salvador. Only a few days ago, the Secretary of State for External Affairs announced that Canada would provide over $4 million worth of wheat to Nicaragua, and we hope that peace will come back to El Salvador so that we may, in co-operation with other countries, help in the economic development of this country which is now rent asunder by savage conflicts which are very costly in terms of human lives.

The hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) has insisted that Canada should take action to allow a negotiated settlement in El Salvador. Mr. Speaker, a negotiated settlement by way of an election is precisely what the government of El Salvador is suggesting. We know that some elements of the conservative forces in that country object to this process, but we are also aware that the socialist forces with whom the hon. member for Oshawa associated lengthily during his recent visit there are also against such a settlement. The government of El Salvador has indicated that it is now willing to have political discussions about the terms of an election to form a constituent assembly in 1982 and a government in 1983. The government of El Salvador has also indicated that it would willingly consider foreign assistance to make it easier to set up the electoral process in acceptable conditions; specifically, the Organization of American States has been mentioned as being able to ensure the holding of an election according to generally accepted democratic standards.

I therefore wonder, Mr. Speaker, whether the hon. member for Oshawa is right in stating bombastically that an election held under international supervision would be a travesty of democracy. The hon. member has also been very critical of the military and economic assistance provided by the United States, contending that this was the equivalent of supporting a military regime. The government of Canada has clearly stated on several occasions that it disapproves of arms deliveries by any side, but we also believe that if revolutionary forces are determined to overthrow a government, it is quite legitimate to help this government, which actually wants to establish a democratic regime, to protect itself.

Mr. Speaker, much has been said about the military assistance provided by the United States to the government of El Salvador. What we should know in this regard is that this military assistance accounts for a mere quarter of the $126 million in economic assistance that the United States does provide to El Salvador in the form of credits and balance of payment assistance to allow this strife-ridden country to import goods to feed its people and equipment to operate its industries. It is strange, Mr. Speaker, that the same people who request international economic assistance for Nicaragua denounce at the same time any economic assistance to El Salvador. Apart from the political hue of their respective governments, is there something exclusive to the Nicaraguan people which warrants it being provided with goods and basic necessities that should be denied to the people of El Salvador? Perhaps the hon. member for Oshawa could explain this point later on. The hon. member also maintains that he can see only three possible options in Central America in the years to come. First, a radical change to a regime of the moderate left with a mixed economy in which both the public and private sectors would participate and which would probably remain neutral in its relations with the United States and non-aligned in its relations with the major political blocks. In fact, this seems to be direction in which the government of President Duarte wants to go. The two other alternatives suggested by the hon. member for Oshawa are a radical marxist-leninist non-democratic state dominated regime, hostile to the United States and aligned with the communist block, or else, as a third option, a very oppressive military oligarchy where social change would be met by violence and all human rights would be held in abeyance in order to maintain the status quo.

On the basis of his recent article in the Toronto Star I suppose that the hon. member for Oshawa does not favour that last solution not any more than we do. However, as he does not seem to favour the first solution, which is the direction the Duarte government seems to be taking, we must conclude that he would rather accept the second one. I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that the people of El Salvador would agree to that solution. Mr. Speaker, we have already had a debate on the conditions prevailing in El Salvador and I would like to take this opportunity to make a few comments on the whole economic and social conditions in Central America. My comments of course are aimed at El Salvador, but I think that they are also quite relevant in the context of the North-South dialogue and I am convinced of the imperious necessity of considering critical social and economic problems of emergent countries in a climate of sympathy, generosity and understanding.

The situation in Central America is a good example of the problem which may arise when the social and economic needs of the people are disregarded. The tensions and terrible disturbances which occurred in Nicaragua two years ago, which are occurring now in El Salvador, and which may occur in Guatemala in the near future are only early signs of what may occur elsewhere in the world if the international community fails to soon take the necessary steps to meet the economic and social needs of developing nations.

I was quite pleased when the Secretary of State for External Affairs started by placing the issue in the larger context of the social and economic situation in Central America, both during the March 9 debate on the situation in El Salvador and today. He was quite right in insisting that Central American countries are in a transition stage between traditional authoritarian regimes, with the people at the top hardly concerned about the needs of their people, and new regimes of a different type little known in that area of the world, where the people at the top are more aware of the needs of modern societies and more eager to meet present challenges.

Unfortunately, these regimes are facing innumerable difficulties. On the one hand, there is the opposition of the old guard as well as of the political and economic interests which stubbornly refuse to accept change or to look to the future, or at least appear unwilling to do so, and which try desperately, sometimes resorting to force or violence, to hang on to their old priorities and privileges. On the other hand, the left and the extreme left in their attempt to exploit the legitimate grievances of the people to promote their own political objectives, seem to hinder the reform process in order to take over and assume power on a wave of popular dissatisfaction. These new regimes are also exposed to outside factors, such as oil and energy prices and their impact on the price of other imported goods as well as the fluctuating prices of their main exports.

Mr. Speaker, in the course of their history, most of the countries of Central America have known long and painful spells of military dictatorship and social shortcomings for which they are now paying dearly. It is in those countries that the highest rates of overpopulation and the greatest instability are found. The lack of health care, illiteracy and malnutrition relegate those countries to the lowest ranks amongst nations, while population growth is perhaps the highest in the world. They are also up against unequal sharing of income, persistent agricultural problems, unemployment, illiteracy, and systems of income distribution that create wide gaps between the rich and the poor, to the extent that people in the lowest income brackets under present circumstances, may never see any improvement in their lot. The unrest born out of those needs is fostering internal pressures for change in Central American countries, as well as the abuses and violence which shock us so.

Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, Canada has traditionally no close ties with the countries of Central America: as I pointed out, our interests there are rather limited. I am happy that we should have been amongst the first countries to recognize the pressing needs of that part of the world and that we should not have rejected the whole question out of hand under the pretext that we were simply dealing with a demonstration of East and West rivalry. I am also happy that the modest assistance programs implemented in the last few years and our trade relations are increasing.

If, as some Canadians advocate, we should increase our involvement in Central America in terms of aid, trade and other areas, the government will have to invest more financial and human resources to this end. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to say, as far as El Salvador is concerned, that I hope the voices of reason will prevail in that country torn by conflicts and that militants, both right and left wing, will cease their fighting, kidnappings and slaughter in order that the government of El Salvador can get on with the monumental task of ensuring social reform and securing political democracy.

[English]

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes I have before we adjourn for the six o'clock dinner hour, I should like to discuss briefly one particular item and then, after the dinner hour, possibly two others. I want to vary somewhat the context of my remarks from those of most other members who have spoken today. I do not intend to talk about El Salvador to any great extent. I think the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) and the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean) have dealt with that issue adequately.

There are three areas I should like to touch upon. I want to inform the House, and through the House the country, of the work which is nicely under way in a special subcommittee on Canada's relations with Latin America and the Caribbean, a committee of which I am a member. Then I want to touch, also briefly because of the shortage of time, on the whole question of population and whether there is anything we, and I say "we" in the global sense, can do in terms of population. I also want to touch on the question of agriculture in the context of being able to feed the world as it will be between now and the year 2000, a world in which there will be over six billion people, as well as in the context of our relations with the Caribbean nations and Latin America.

The first matter I should like to speak to is the whole question of the recent committee that has been set up to take the first in-depth look at Canada's relationship with Latin America and the Caribbean. The committee has been empowered to look at all aspects of our relationship from immigration to trade, which is certainly the main thrust of our committee's work, and also the question of humanitarianism, and whether Canada as a country can, should, or has the wherewithal—the knowledge and expertise—to mediate, as has been suggested before in the House of Commons in terms of a situation such as that in El Salvador.

The questions of economic development and economic promotion are of prime concern to the committee which is hearing witnesses and briefs at the present time. As an example of that philosophy, in 1980 we sold more to Brazil than we did to China, we sold more to Venezuela than to Norway and Sweden put together, and more to Argentina than to Spain. Our total exports in 1980 amounted to some $3.7 billion, an increase of 32 per cent over the previous year, and we can expect further increases in 1981. Some 33 per cent of those exports were in the form of processed or manufactured goods, many in high technological areas. So it is not hard to see the economic importance we in Canada attach to various countries of Latin America. This is something which I think the Canadian public generally has a tendency not to realize.

The committee will also endeavour to look at our relationship with Latin America to move us out of what could be considered to be merely a one-sided relationship which consists in effect, of only trade. Trade will have to be supplemented by industrial co-operation and technological exchanges, and there is a greater need to give further attention to the political relations on both global questions and population questions between the two areas.

Economically Canada obviously views Latin America as a substantial market. In 1980 our exports to Mexico, for example, amounted to $482 million which represents an increase of 104 per cent over the previous year. Agricultural commodities are a big part of that, as are processed and manufactured goods. Imports from Mexico increased by some 65 per cent to a total of $344 million and will, of course, keep increasing as the years go on.

Canada has not had a history of a great deal of activity in Central America, but we should be moving steadily to increasing trade and development assistance in that area. There is, of course, in countries in Central America like Nicaragua, El Salvador and Guatemala, a substantial degree of uncertainty because of political turmoil, economic underdevelopment, abuses of human rights and military violence, of which everyone knows and is aware. The committee is also going to be looking at this particular aspect.

The Caribbean area is also going to be viewed with special priority as far as this particular committee is concerned, and certainly it is viewed with special priority as far as Canada is concerned. We are now working actively both bilaterally and multilaterally, to increase economic assistance to the Caribbean countries, and we intend to take a closer look at this particular aspect during our committee hearings. Our aim in Latin America and the Caribbean, as elsewhere, must be to contribute to the improvement of human rights either by private or public means, or both, by increasing trade between the two areas where trade is beneficial to both.

The area of Latin America and the Caribbean has been neglected by Canada for just too long. What the committee will try to do is to enhance the knowledge and interests of Parliament in this area, increase the awareness of Canadians generally as to the benefits of trade between the two areas, and also the awareness of the whole area of human rights about which Canadians do not appear to be overly concerned at this time. For too long there has been a trend on the part of Canadians to look at Latin America and the Caribbean as basically a single area, ignoring the fact that in this particular area there are some 39 independent countries, and dependent colonies and territories where the languages spoken are as diverse as English, French, Spanish, Dutch and Portuguese. We must deal with countries in Latin America and the Caribbean on a more individual basis than we have done up to this point. Some no doubt will be important to us as export markets, others as sources of needed imports; some will be sources of immigration and others destinations for Canadian tourism. Some will be important because of their role in international affairs, and others because of the need for development assistance to which we can contribute, and still others because of the great need for humanitarian contributions Canada can make.

It will be incumbent upon the committee to take an in-depth look, or as much so as a parliamentary committee can, into the whole question of human rights and the violation of human rights in some of these countries, and El Salvador I suppose is a perfect example. Canada may be able to fill a very needed role in this particular area because of the status, standing and good will which we enjoy in the Latin American area.

Because this will really be the first in-depth look at this particular region, the committee will offer Canadians a window on Latin America and the Caribbean. This will act as a challenge not only to committee members but to Canadians in general to get to know this very important region better and to come to understand it, which we hope will result in us all being drawn closer together. I think this is a very important part of the committee's work.

May I call it six o'clock, and ask that I be allowed to resume my remarks after the dinner break, Mr. Speaker?

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At 6 p. m., the House took recess.

[English]

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, I would like to continue where I left off at six o'clock. In the last few minutes I have available to me, I would like to try to put into perspective the whole question of world population and our ability as a developed country and the ability of other developed countries to try, in some way, to feed that growing population.

To put population figures into some perspective, let me say that there has been a population increase from about half a billion people in the sixteenth century to 1 billion by 1820. That number grew to 2 billion by 1930, to 3 billion by 1960 and to 4 billion by 1976. It is a virtual certainty that a further 2 billion will be added by the end of this century. The United Nations Fund for Population Activities has stated that world population rose by 80 million last year alone and will go up by an estimated 90 million each year for the rest of this century. That is the type and size of the problem confronting us when we talk about world population.

It has been said by many people that family planning programs will be one of the main keys to the survival of the world in the future. I happen to believe that is true, yet less than 50 cents per capita per year is currently spent on family planning and population programs in developing countries, and the demand far outstrips available funds.

One of the big problems the world will face in the next few years will be in the cities. Cities will be a major problem, first, because they will contain tremendous concentrations of people in relatively small areas and, second, they will occupy valuable land which could be used for agricultural production. It is estimated that large cities will grow more rapidly than smaller cities, and some of the former are likely to reach proportions which are totally unfamiliar to city planners. In 1950 only four of the largest cities were in the less developed countries. In 1975 this number rose to seven, and it is projected that 12 of the 15 largest cities will be in the less developed countries by the year 2000.

In 1950 there were six cities with populations of over 5 million, and their combined population was 47 million. In 1980 there are 26 cities with populations over 5 million, with a combined population of over 252 million. Projections indicate that will increase to over 60 cities with an estimated population of nearly 650 million by the year 2000. Figures reflecting the size and growth of cities are truly alarming. There is absolutely no question in the mind of anyone who has looked at the whole question of population and population growth that there will be six billion people by the end of this decade and eight billion or ten billion in the years after the year 2000.

The question which must be asked is whether, given that population, we will be able to feed all those people. The hard fact is that the developed countries—and Canada is obviously one—cannot or will not be expected to be able to feed the world. It is just not possible, even though we would like to think it might be. There will not be enough production because on a world basis population is growing faster than the agricultural production to feed that population. If we did have the production, we do not have the transportation capabilities. If we had that, in most cases the countries that really needed the food cannot buy it. Oil price increases have made this problem much worse because there now has to be a trade-off in the developing countries as to whether to spend money on food or on energy.

An example of the situation I think is most graphically illustrated right here in Canada. We set a target of exporting 30 million tons of grain by 1985. I frankly do not know whether we will reach that target. It is quite a modest figure, yet farmers in Canada are hesitant because of rising fuel prices and the substantial and increasing costs of production. Another problem is that most of our land is already in production, as is the case in a good many other developed countries in the world. In addition, because of transportation sector difficulties it is doubtful whether we will be able to meet that export commitment. These are just Canadian problems. When you multiply those on a global basis in terms of the developed countries, it makes the whole situation seem very dark and frought with all kinds of dangers.

What can governments do? That has to be the question we ask in terms of increasing agriculture production. Obviously it means that countries like Canada, the United States, Australia and countries of Europe keep up food aid to the very maximum possible. That has to be done, but we have to realize that will not solve the problem. Obviously another step in that direction which I think has to be taken is the setting up of grain storage capability for emergencies. That also has to be done. However, the real emphasis in my opinion has to be on money, time and effort in terms of plant and animal breeding, producing plants that in effect supply their own fertilizer. I think countries like Canada can make a big contribution in money, time and effort on those kinds of projects.

Credit for countries to buy fertilizer, machinery and insecticides has to be increased, and we also have to provide technical help. We have to realize, Mr. Speaker, that countries which need food the most somehow must be encouraged to produce it themselves. International relief and help can and must help poor countries, but the bulk of the work must come from the countries themselves.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that all the policies and strategies outlined by the people concerned with this problem here today and throughout this long debate which has taken place over a number of years, problems of people, of food and the environment, will not mean one iota if the will between the developed and developing countries is not taken into account. In some respects we are at the very beginning of the kind of information program which will have to take place in the developing countries to get the awareness level up to the point where the citizens of these countries allow their governments to move forward. The central question obviously must be whether the rich and fortunate are imaginative enough, and the resentful and underprivileged poor patient enough, to begin to establish a true foundation of sharing, co-operation and joint global effort. If over the next few years the answer is a resounding yes, then of course we have something to look forward to in terms of life on this planet. If it is no, then I think this planet is doomed to a destructive fate. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, we will know the answer within the next decade.

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, this morning when I woke up I found that I had been dreaming about something I had read about last night. I was dreaming about a little boy called Alfredo Rampi. No one except his family knew his name last week, but most of Europe and practically all of North America knew it this week because Alfredo Rampi is the little boy who fell down the well in Italy and has since died. When I awoke this morning I found I was semi-dreaming about the little boy, the fear he must have experienced, the inability to move, the hopelessness and helplessness of being caught in that tunnel. Up above people were trying to help him. They tried to feed him artificially, give him a drink, and at the same time almost in a panic they tried to save him by digging another hole so as to reach him. But little Alfredo Rampi died.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I believe I know a lot of little Alfredo Rampi's. I believe I know a lot of little boys and girls, human beings around the world, who are trapped in the tunnel of oppression, poverty and misery, who must be experiencing and who do experience in a way what was expressed in the last emotional cry of little Alfredo. And so tonight I am going to address my remarks as much as I can to the personal problem confronting each human being on the globe today as it relates to something which has been very easily dropped into the phrase "North-South". North-South, as has been explained by others today, is simply a new set of words relating to countries that we ordinarily call developed and those we ordinarily call underdeveloped.

I have had the privilege, Mr. Speaker, of having lived a good part of my life in the North and a part of my life in the South. I have deep personal friends who are part of the North and deep personal friends who are part of the South. I have deep feelings for both sides of the question at a very personal level. I feel today that our world, our country, you and I and all the people in the world, are caught up in a moment of history that literally has never happened before. Statistics cannot explain what is happening, and a vision of where we are going has not really been clearly seen by anyone.

Let me try to put this in context. I am 52 years old, having been born in 1928, and with a little bit of luck I could live until the end of the century. It is a possibility. If I live the next 19 years, half the people who have ever lived on this planet will have lived while I was alive. They were either alive when I was born or they will still be living when I die. So in a way people my age or those now living on this planet will live through half the history of humankind. To put that into the bread and butter words of everyday life, half the food, water, air and literally half the products which the world has ever produced will have been produced and eaten or used by people living during my lifetime.

We are caught in a moment of history which has not happened before, and problems that were solvable in one way before cannot now be solved by the old solutions. In the debate tonight, and each one of us I am sure can speak for hours, we want to say and we will say something about the importance of so many things involved in this little phrase "North-South". I think it is important that we bring to the debate the question of what is development, because development seems to be what distinguishes the North from the South. The word "development" is understood and used by many people in different ways. As I use that word in my speech, I will use an understanding of the word which I think is extremely important if it is to be put in the North-South context. Development today is often used by some people who would, in a sense, tear down a set of old buildings and raise up a new building; they would call this development. In a sense it is a kind of development. Then there is the other group of people who would say we should just go up, take over the north and put in the pipelines; they would call this development. To me development is those things which make it possible, in a certain place, in a certain context, and in a certain culture, for a human being to live as a human being in what I would call frugal comfort. It does not mean that they will have all the material goods of the world or even a great part of the material goods of the world. It means that they will have enough in their lives to live in frugal comfort.

As we talk about the notion of development, it is extremely important to constantly keep in mind that development concerns human beings. We must develop, build and create a situation in which human beings can live and be human. Things that work against the possibility of a human being living as a human I call underdevelopment or anything but development. Things that work for and build up the situation and the climate in which a human being can live and be a human being, I call development. This is what the question of North-South is about. We must continually put underdevelopment at the bottom of our equation. If we are not bringing about the situation and the climate which will create a world in which people can live as human beings, it is not development; it is exploitation or something else, but not development.

I believe every human being is the most precious element which exists in creation as far as we know it. No matter where persons are, no matter how intelligent they are, no matter how much schooling they have had, no matter what colour they are, no matter how rich they are, no matter whether they are old, young or whatever, they are human beings and they deserve to live as human beings.

When the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) began his speech yesterday afternoon, he used an image which I felt was very important. I heard it again several times today. It is the image of the good neighbour. In my first speech in the House of Commons I used that same image. I would like to repeat what I said at that time because the ability to be a good neighbour to one and all will be involved in bringing about the process of development. The phrase "good neighbour" comes from the Scriptures. On a certain occasion when the Lord was challenged about what was the greatest of all commandments, he simply replied, "You know what you are talking about. You are a lawyer; tell me." The lawyer replied, "Love the Lord, your God, with your whole heart, your whole mind, and your whole soul; and love your neighbour as yourself". The Lord said, "You have spoken rightly". And the man replied, "But who is my neighbour?" That is where the story comes from. The story is very simple but it is well worth telling over and over again because it talked about today as well as about the world in which the Lord lived 2,000 years ago.

A man was going down from Jerusalem to Jericho and on the way he fell among thieves who beat him, stripped him and left him half dead. It so happened that a priest was going by on his way to the temple, and he saw him and passed by. Then a Levite came and did the same. Finally a Samaritan, a person who did not really belong to the society at all, came by and saw him there. He stopped his beast of burden, dismounted, bound up the wounds of the person, poured in oil and wine and looked after him. He took him down to the inn and left him there. He gave the man who kept the inn a denarius and said, "I will pay you for tonight. When I come back, if there is something else owing, I will pay for that too". And the Lord said, "Among these, who was the good neighbour?", and everybody said, "The Samaritan".

It is a simple story but a profound principle. There are basically three kinds of people in the story. The first are the thieves. They are the ones who came along, took, robbed, beat, stripped and left the person in the ditch. The second group was the priest and the Levite. They are the ones who saw the problem but they were unwilling to get their hands dirty; they would not look after the person in the ditch. Finally the Samaritan, the one who came last, stopped, took the risk and gave up everything. He took all the chances; he was willing to give what he had. He took the man and he looked after him; he was the neighbour.

In the North-South we are dealing with neighbours. In those three different groups of people who approached the man in the ditch, I believe we have the principles by which our world still works. The first group came and said, "What is yours is mine", and they took from that person or anybody at all, no matter who they are. Their land, their wealth, their labour, their sweat or whatever it is, they took and said, "What is yours is mine".

The second group came and said, "What is mine is mine", and they did not care about anybody else. The third group came by and said—and I am calling upon the House of Commons and the people of Canada to put us into the third group—"What is yours and what is mine is ours". It is an old story, but I believe the elements which make up the story are being lived out in the world today. I believe that story has a lot to do with what must happen in the Third World, the South and the North and the way we all relate to it.

Sometimes when we talk about the North-South, we sort of feel that we have it all and the South has nothing. Because I have had the privilege to live in the South as well as in the North, I know it is a completely false idea. The South has great values to show the North. With its richness and multitude of cultures all over the world, the South has many things to show us. I believe it is necessary in the North-South dialogue to listen extremely carefully to what the South has to say about many things—about ways of life, about values and many other things.

The consumer society builds upon the fact that we have a lot of things and that we have the ability to get more things, and more and more, until the graveyard finally tells us that it was not worthwhile after all. There are no Brink's trucks in funeral processions. It is important to realize the elements and goods which make up this planet. There is enough for everybody, if we find a way to share. It is not just taking a little bit out of my pocket; it means taking the super risks of stepping out into the world of today and making profound changes in our systems so that distribution to all the world is possible.

The Prime Minister indicated his deep concern in relation to the North-South dialogue. I wish him well and I trust that his efforts will bear fruit. I also suggest to the Prime Minister that when he takes trips around the world, he should take more care in planning them. It is important to care, but it is also extremely important to look as if you really cared. I do not think it a good idea to put a Third World trip on the tail end of a skiing holiday. There is nothing wrong with skiing and there is nothing wrong with putting it in the right place, but that is not the way the South sees it. The people in the South see that as a flippant way of treating them after we have looked after ourselves. I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but that is the way it is.

I would suggest to the Right Hon. Prime Minister that he make sure he is extremely well briefed from many sources on what is actually taking place in the countries he visits. I know some countries in Latin America. I know a little bit about the great country of Brazil. When the Prime Minister visited Brazil, he should have done as President Carter did when he visited Brazil, and he should have seen people other than the Canadian business community and a few diplomats, besides spending a few hours on the Amazon. He should have seen some of the people who are leading the movement of liberation in that country, as President Carter did when he was there. He should have spoken to the lawyers' society and other people, such as the trade unionists. The whole movement that is taking place in that country is not often shown to visiting diplomats. They are not always made familiar with the political situation.

I was happy to have the privilege to work with the North-South task force. It is a beginning but there is still a long way to go. Two areas were not touched that are extremely important to the whole question. One was the area of multinationals, which probably control more of what is happening in the North-South dialogue than all the countries involved.

The other area is the link between armaments and underdevelopment. That was not touched upon either. I feel that the report, which I was glad to work on, has value. Yesterday the government supported almost all of its recommendation—and we will see that it lives up to its word—but there are areas that were left out of the report. I hope that we will be able to continue working in those areas.

I should like to make a few recommendations here, Mr. Speaker. Canada is going to buy 138 fighter aircraft. I really do not believe that we will feel any safer with 138 planes, but I am willing to let the government buy 137 planes, and instead of buying the last plane, I should like the government to take that $30 million or $25 million, or whatever it is going to cost, and put it into a separate fund to finance research on peace.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ogle: Development and peace are like two hands washing each other. If there is no development, there will be no peace. We have to find how peace can be achieved. We have to research and use every human ability to do that.

I should like to congratulate the government for appointing an ambassador for disarmament on a full-time basis. At the same time, I should like to ask the government to give him a budget and make it possible for him to do something above and beyond a little bit of visiting. He should have a real budget.

Finally, I should like to ask my friend, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) to reconsider his position on Central America. I felt very much like the little boy, Alfredo Rampi, as the minister made his speech this afternoon. I felt I was confined in a tomb. I ask the minister to seriously reconsider the situation. Six months or more ago I wrote to him asking him to visit Latin America, Central America, so that he could meet the people and see the situation for himself.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

The hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle) had not concluded and I believe there was agreement to let him conclude his remarks.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Gloucester. There is no unanimous agreement.

An hon. Member: Who said no?

Mr. Friesen: I did.

Miss Jewett: Benito Friesen.

[Translation]

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate. In my opinion, a good debate was held yesterday and it riveted the attention of almost all members of the House. I think that is an encouraging fact. I have always believed, Mr. Speaker, that our political system did not provide enough opportunities to discuss international issues, especially with respect to international development and co-operation. It is normal, since we are elected to represent certain interests, whether they are the interests of our constituencies or philosophical and political interests and we normally tend in politics to centre on the problems of such groups in our constituencies. Our concentration on—Mr. Speaker, I wonder if we could not have some order in the House.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Gloucester has the floor.

Mr. Breau: It is normal, Mr. Speaker, to centre our political efforts and our political discussions on the interests of our constituents, as I said earlier, as on our philosophical or political interests. Unfortunately, our parliamentary system, our political system generally does not provide enough opportunities to discuss important questions outside our immediate interests. This is why I am pleased that the government decided yesterday to devote an entire day to a debate on international affairs and I am pleased to see that the New Democratic Party has decided today to devote one of their allotted days to deal with them. I had the opportunity for almost a year with six other members from both sides of the House to belong to a working group on North-South relations which I chaired.

I want to say how much I appreciate the co-operation I was extended as chairman, first of all from the spokesmen of both the opposition parties, the hon. member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche) and the hon. member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle), and from the other member of the opposition, the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz). From this side of the House, I was also extended a good deal of co-operation and dedication to the cause by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Dupras), the hon. member for Guelph (Mr. Schroder) and the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith). This has been a valuable and rewarding experience for the seven of us, and I feel that we have made the point that our parliamentary system, when there is a strong will to . . . We often talk about the need to reform our parliamentary institutions. I suggest that we should be concerned more with the need to change our attitudes as members of Parliament, for when there is a will, there is a way for members representing different parts of this country, various political formations, to agree on a statement of policy such as the report of the parliamentary task force, a document which does not necessarily represent the views of a particular member or group of members or party in the House, but is the result of an honest and sincerely negotiated effort. In order to achieve such a result, we had to reconcile several of our views, in some cases there was some give and take we had to defend our points of view, and the result was a coherent statement of policy comprising several recommendations. I am happy to note that in general the government has accepted the directions of the task force. Yesterday the government said and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) repeated that the government accepted the main directions contained in that report and which are as follows, Mr. Speaker. They are quite simple. It is that we should show concern as individuals, humanitarian concern, when making important policy decisions and that it should not be our only concern. What this report says is that there is a mutual interest, there are practical benefits for the North, for the West, for Canada in meeting the people's needs in the Third World and the South.

I think that our constituents are not very interested in the matter. They have heard too much about it in the past. They have been told that there was a hunger problem in the world, that they had a moral responsibility, that they should not let such things happen as human beings. That is quite true. But what is important in politics is to convince our political, social and economic agents across Canada, in all walks of life, that it is in the best interests of Canada and the western world to take part in the changes that are going to happen, like it or not.

Mr. Speaker, for years, ever since the beginning of mankind, there has been change in various parts of the world throughout the evolution of mankind. You cannot stop the aspirations of people who want to be free, to develop themselves and have better opportunities. Like it or not, change is bound to take place, and if we fail to act now—it is always too late to act in such situations, but if we do not grab the opportunity—At the present time, there seems to be a momentum, a desire at least in some parts of the world, both in the North and in the South, to initiate a process of discussions and negotiations. That is the important thing.

I think we should take the opportunity of being partners in that changing process because, if we do not, in any event, Mr. Speaker, the change will take place and we will have to respond later on. We should learn from the past, from the history of humanity, the recent history of the past 30 or 40 years in almost every area of the world. Emerging powers, whether political, economic or merely social, were not always recognized as such. But the mere fact that they were not acknowledged for what they were does not mean that those people did not continue to strive for their freedom and independence. The end result is that the Western world, at times embarrassed, had to respond to the changes involved. We say in our report, Mr. Speaker, and I am glad to see the government accepted that recommendation, that we must be positive agents in this changing process.

[English]

I would like to deal with two aspects of the whole issue of the North-South dialogue as it is emerging this year. I would also like to deal with aspects of international development and co-operation, which I believe are most important, not because I believe they are exclusively important or because other issues are not important, but because I want to be brief. I want to give other members an opportunity to speak.

If I were asked what would be the most important event of this year in international development and co-operation, with regard to North-South dialogue, I would say first that the North and the South must make compromises to agree on a process. People do not realize that the institutions are not yet at the point of discussing substance. That is bad enough.

So the first point I would like to make is that we must agree on a process. There must be a process of global negotiations this year which will work. There will be disagreements in substance, but we must learn and try to manage the disagreements and move forward with some action.

There are two policy aspects with which we must deal urgently. There is the food problem, both the question of food production and security of supply, and the energy question. These two matters are very much related.

I would like to quote from two passages from the report of the Parliamentary Task Force on North-South Relations. At page 48 of the French section it says:

[Translation]

World grain supplies have fallen to 14 per cent of all grain consumed in 1980-81, bringing them down to about the same level they were during the 1972-73 food crisis. Imagine.

Eight years later we are back at the 1972-73 levels.

Production has dropped and it is expected that prices will increase 20 to 30 per cent.

The report also states, Mr. Speaker, that in some regions of Africa especially, food production increases at a slower rate that population growth.

That is one of the most urgent issues. Also, the energy question is related to this because unless we help developing countries, which are importers of oil, finance their balance of payment deficit, which is huge, these countries may face balance of payment deficits of around $80 billions. That is a huge amount, Mr. Speaker. Eighty billion dollars. There is no way any corporation, or any Third World government can be expected to solve its food production problems when it must find $80 billions to finance its balance of payment deficit.

Bangladesh, for example, must spend 70 per cent of its foreign exchange to buy the oil it needs. Most of the poorest countries, which are oil importers, must spend on the average 50 per cent of their foreign exchange to buy oil. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, world organizations, especially the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund must realize that unless we go ahead with this energy affiliate idea—

[English]

What is most important to me is that the world institutions and the governments of the North try to take an active part in the summits of this year, not only in the summits but in the negotiations of the central institutions themselves.

I would again like to quote from the report of the Parliamentary Task Force on North-South Relations at page 57. I believe it is important to put this passage on the record, since it is not realized to what extent the problem of energy deficiency exists in the Third World. The problems of high balance of payments deficits which stifle the efforts of poor countries in food production are not realized. I read the following from page 57:

The oil importing developing countries are experiencing severe difficulties in this new energy situation. Many poor countries are now entering the phase of industrialization which is fueled by increasing amounts of energy. The World Bank estimates that the energy requirements of the developing countries will grow at a faster rate than those of developed countries. In the agricultural sector, increased productivity depends in part on supplies of petroleum-based products such as chemical fertilizers. This was a major factor in whatever success has been attributed to the Green Revolution. The transport sector, which is vital to better distribution of agricultural products and the development of industry, is still largely dependent on gasoline powered vehicles. Thus the very process of development and modernization has made the oil importing developing countries extremely vulnerable to problems of energy supply and price.

This predicament illustrates the vicious circles of development: countries, already too poor to invest adequately in human or industrial development, require both for development; their ability to invest is diminishing daily because of mounting oil bills; and aid donors often offer assistance in the form of technology and equipment which consume even greater quantities of oil.

That is the most important thing which the central institutions can decide this year.

• (2050)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Gloucester has the floor.

Mr. Breau: I am happy that the government has accepted the basic thrust of parliamentary task force report. I am happy particularly that the government has accepted the position that the energy affiliate is one of the most important things that can be accomplished in the short term.

I mentioned earlier that the task force, comprising seven members of Parliament, could agree on a coherent political statement which has now been accepted in its basic thrust and orientation as government policy. I believe this augurs well for Parliament. This concept of a parliamentary task force, which was started by the Clark government when it was in power, was seeded at that time and now is being developed further, is a concept that will work well, where elected members of Parliament can really get together and negotiate their differences, whether they are party differences or philosophical differences. When that is done, the government will study the recommendations and if it accepts them, we will fulfil a role as elected parliamentarians by orienting policy which the bureaucracy will then follow. That is the way Parliament should work. It can work when there is a will to make it work.

As I said before, we should realize that the whole question of reform of parliamentary institutions sometimes has to do with the reform of attitudes. When members can get together with this kind of mandate and authority, it is good for the future of Parliament.

I want to touch briefly on a point raised by the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent). He made a good, eloquent speech. He explained the history of the problems encountered by most countries of Central America, particularly instances where there has been revolution. However, I have two comments to make about his speech. First, I do not think it is good enough continually to build political support for a position against the United States of America.

Miss Jewett: Who is doing that?

Mr. Breau: The United States of America is our neighbour; it is our ally. The new administration has just received a mandate. Although I disagree with that administration, I have to respect the fact that the people of the United States of America elect governments the same way as we elect governments here.

Miss Jewett: So what?

Mr. Breau: It is the same way as members of the New Democratic Party are elected here. It does not help the situation in El Salvador or in the South to have people basing their positions on some anti-American feelings. That is not good enough for the formation of foreign policy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Jewett: A lot of Americans are critical too. What is wrong with being critical?

Mr. Breau: Of course. But I would like to remind the spokesman on foreign affairs for the New Democratic Party that she is not in the Congress of the United States. There are people in the United States who can speak—

Miss Jewett: It is an independent country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Miss Jewett: Let him continue.

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I know that the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) has exceeded his time, but with the consent of the House and with the consent of the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday), is it possible to put a brief question to the hon. member for Gloucester?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to extend the time allotted to the hon. member for Gloucester?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Miss Jewett: On that point, I would like the hon. member to continue his speech.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the hon. member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche) to put a question to the hon. member for Gloucester?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to participate in what amounts to a debate on North-South relations. I am even more delighted because at last we are having such a debate. It is high time that international development were given a thorough hearing and discussion on the floor of the House. The infrequency of foreign policy debates in this chamber is worth noting and lamenting. As the Brandt commission observed, for some time in the developed world, including Canada, the air has been thick with alibis and it has been rife with rhetoric. Now is the time to act.

It has been six years since the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) impressive Mansion House speech and seven years since the Prime Minister proclaimed that if Canada's presence in the world were to be judged by a single criterion, it should be Canada's humanism, its pursuit of social justice. If concrete actions and specific commitments are not made, and soon, there is the danger of our Canadian statements expounding social justice having a very hollow ring to them. That danger may not be far off. Witness the Brazilian newspaper which, in January of this year, speculated that the Prime Minister's stop in Brazil was nothing more than a mutual publicity stunt on the part of the Brazilian and Canadian governments. For despite impressive advances in the early 1970s, Canada's aid is now down to .43 per cent of its GNP, a far cry from the low .7 per cent suggested by the Pearson commission and a long way off the 1 per cent allocation proposed by the Parliamentary Task Force on North-South Relations.

I am reminded of a newspaper article in January which discussed the Prime Minister's world tour and which reads in part:

> Like a nineteenth-Century Russian nobleman in one of Chekhov's classics, Mr. Trudeau had the cosmos on his mind; poverty and affluence; violence and disorder; tradition and change; the future of the human condition. He discussed these worthy subjects in lofty, sometimes philosophical, often moralistic ways, but ultimately he failed to put much effort behind answering the question, "What is to be done?"

We know of the Prime Minister's fondness for abstractions. We were treated to the famous hexagon in the foreign policy review, the six policy themes, which were to provide the framework for Canadian foreign policy but which were so general as to offer no guidelines for policymakers. We have seen major initiatives, such as the third option and the contractual link fizzle and die.

North-South relations now is the issue and the government has promised that it will pursue an active role in fostering a constructive dialogue with developing countries. Mention was made in the government's report of Canada undertaking a bridge-building role, which is most praiseworthy and marks a welcome departure from the Prime Minister's attitude in the foreign policy review period during which the government's handbook entitled "Foreign Policy for Canadians" held that the opportunity to pursue sensible policies, one firmly anchored in domestic concerns, had been squandered in the quest for roles, influence for its own sake, and international applause.

That was not true of Pearsonian diplomacy and I hope that it will not be the case today. I support a bridge-building role for Canada and can see the potential for Canadian leadership in North-South relations. But, as I said, the time has now come to act.

I share the Brandt commission's premise that mankind wants to survive and that mankind has a moral obligation to survive. It is imperative that we, as citizens of the world, work to overcome the tragedy of world hunger, mass misery and the gross inequalities which exist between rich and poor. However, rather than succumb to the intellectual vice of oversimplicity and rather than rely on abstract concepts, such as the quality of life and international social justice, laudable though they may be, the time has come for a strategy which focuses on a concrete specification of human needs, a strategy which is specific in terms of attempting to channel particular resources to particular groups in particular ways.

The facts and statistics, such as the figure of 800 million destitute people on this earth, are striking and alarming, but they seem all too unreal and for some reason fail to spark a groundswell of public support for international development, particularly when Canadians themselves are facing varying degrees of economic hardship. It is important to realize that development means very simple and basic things; enough food, a job, somewhere to live, a future for one's children, some basic security. Cast in these terms, development becomes understandable and nowhere is development more sorely needed than in the Third World and in countries like El Salvador, which are beset by many problems. In light of the civil war in El Salvador, one should make the point that development which does not touch the majority of the people is not development at all. It is our moral duty and it is in our interest to eradicate the suffering in the Third World.

I believe, and I am not alone, that we need a comprehensive, multidisciplinary, sectoral development approach, the vanguard of which should be population policies. Population seems to have been a forgotten factor in the work of the Parliamentary Task Force on North-South Relations, and it is not addressed in the government's response to the task force report tabled yesterday. This omission is a most significant and unfortunate oversight, deliberate or otherwise.

Since the Bucharest Conference on Population in 1974, most countries have come to recognize that population and development are inextricably bound together. Just as no population program should be considered in isolation from policies and plans on such issues as health, housing, education, employment, the environment and the use of resources, so too must all development projects incorporate a population component. This conclusion was reached unanimously by parliamentarians from 58 national parliaments at the Colombo conference in 1979, which included four Canadian representatives, and this view was adopted unanimously at the subsequent meeting in Caracas of the Interparliamentary Union where 82 countries participated.

Moreover, the Brandt commission report, which appears to have served as a guide for the parliamentary task force, devoted a chapter to population issues and strongly emphasized their importance in any effective over-all international development strategy. Further, the need for population policies is recognized worldwide and many committees on population and development formed by parliamentarians in Canada,

Great Britain, Japan, West Germany and elsewhere can attest to this fact.

Population problems are not confined to one area of the world and the implications of population increases are staggering. More important, they directly affect individuals and both perpetuate and exacerbate present inequalities in the world.

There is the problem of employment. In the developing countries between now and the end of the century, 800 million additional jobs need to be created. Indeed, the labour force in the less developed countries was projected to expand by over 90 per cent between 1970 and the year 2000, nearly doubling within the span of a single generation.

There is the problem of per capita consumption of resources, mostly by the developed world, which has engendered much pollution and waste and has contributed to worldwide shortages of key resources. Worldwatch Institute director, Mr. Lester Brown, has pointed out that human needs have already begun to outstrip the productive capacity of many local biological systems as presently managed. He has calculated that the world production per capita of key commodities peaked for wood in 1967, for fish in 1970, for beef in 1976, for mutton in 1972, and for cereals in 1976. In addition, crop lands are being diverted from essential food production for the purposes of making fuel. There must be a reduction in population growth to buy time to make new adjustments and develop new technologies.

Finally, population growth can affect peace and stability, of which we see all too little nowadays. Uncontrolled population increases will give rise to social unrest and despair. There may be forced migration and greater numbers of refugees, which are disruptive to the world's economic and political stability. The Brandt commission dealt with these problems in some depth.

Aside from the aggregate effect of uncontrolled population growth, costs are paid within societies. These costs include a decrease in the growth of per capita income and, more important, impede efforts to eradicate inequality. The World Bank Report of 1974 makes this point clearly:

> For many countries population growth appears to affect the rate of growth of average per capita income less than the quality of the development process. Population growth contributes significantly to inequality. It has made social targets, such as universal literacy or full employment, much harder to attain and slowed down improvements in health and nutritional standards. It diminished an individual's chances for education and, in the competition for entry into the educational system, children from poorer backgrounds do relatively badly.

In addition, population increases push against limits of arable land, leading to smaller holdings and perpetuating poverty and malnutrition. Population growth, it can be seen, is an important cause of poverty. Trends of population growth, structure and distribution must be kept within the balance of social, economic and environmental factors. Population growth trends must be reversed for development efforts to take hold.

What is required is a multidisciplinary, comprehensive development approach with a strong population component. I must concur with the World Bank's conclusion that:

> Direct population policies and general development policies reinforce each other in raising per capita incomes, especially among the poor, and in reducing fertility. Neither can adequately address the problem of rapid population growth alone. Direct population programs can accomplish much in most developing countries, but even the most elaborate programs will not reduce fertility sufficiently unless standards of living of poverty groups are significantly improved. It is therefore essential that population programs be integrated with over-all development strategies, and that the design of social and economic policies whose major objective is not demographic take explicit account of how they affect fertility.

For instance, it is known that healthy families tend to be smaller families, so to achieve this end programs may be set up to improve the health of mothers and children. Other programs might involve improving education or sanitation or providing for uncontaminated water, or for effective distribution and instruction in the use of contraceptives. In another case, a government may wish to know for its future planning the rate of urbanization and the rate of growth in different areas of the country. International organizations, such as the United Nations Fund for Population Activities, can provide this service.

It is important that population activities cover all population aspects of development which pertain to fertility rates, mortality and morbidity as they affect developmental aspects and human well-being. Population activities involve the collection of basic population data, population dynamics, population policy formulation and implementation, contraception and child spacing, communications and education. For UNFPA and other organizations, population assistance must be tailor-made for each recipient country, responding directly to its particular conditions and concerns.

Canadians have learned from the recent census just how important it is for governments to have reliable population statistics on hand while formulating policy. As recently as 1971, UNFPA was assisting 21 African countries to carry out a full or partial census on their populations, which in most cases had not been previously done.

Many countries in which economic development is being hampered by population growth are already drawing up developmental strategies and legislation aimed at influencing people to have smaller families. According to Dr. Salas, director of the UNFPA, a recent UN survey covering 114 developing countries showed that 83 of these have entrusted a central planning authority with the task of integrating population factors with development planning, while 69 countries were said to believe that their current rate of natural population increase imposed severe constraints on the attainment of developmental objectives.

Many successes have been recorded in reducing the rate of population growth. In each case, policies were implemented which suited the unique condition of each country. In Sri Lanka, a reduction in infant and child mortality has led to a decline in the birth rate. In Korea, increased economic growth and increased distribution of wealth has similarly led to a reduction. In India, there have been 11 million sterilizations. In China, a drastic reduction in the birth rate is due to the use of incentives and disincentives. Incentives can have wide application and might involve housing, maternity benefits, tax deductions, pensions and subsidized education, where the incentives are geared towards convincing people to have small families. Education is an important tool. For instance, in Latin America, women who have completed primary school average two children less per family than those who have not. Raising the status of women, by providing education, developing skills in women and offering wider opportunities for women, all improve the chances for a lower birth rate. I applaud the government's support for this issue in its program.

Still, one cannot be complacent. There is a sense of urgency. Some 35 per cent of the present world population is composed of people under the age of 15 years. The World Bank reported in 1974 that countries which offer family planning services in their health programs now account for over 80 per cent of the population, but the proportion of women who, when exposed to the risk of pregnancy, use a method of contraception, is less than 20 per cent. The recent world fertility survey showed that nearly one-half of women who said that they did not want any more children were not using any method of contraception.

Finally, of the approximately 500 million women in the world today who are capable of bearing children, 70 per cent use no contraceptive methods at all. The desire to control fertility is there, but the means to do it are absent or not well understood. As a result there are millions of abortions. More should be done to stem population increases and to cut back on abortions. The need and demand for population assistance is great, but as the Brandt commission reported, the UNFPA can only handle two-thirds of the requests it receives.

If we look at El Salvador, for instance, we see a real tragedy. El Salvador's population statistics are intolerable, and no doubt they have played—perhaps the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) can tell us about this—a role in the present crisis. El Salvador has a 3.2 per cent annual increase in population, meaning that its population will double in only 22 years. The figure for Canada is 89 years. The average number of children per woman is 5.8 in El Salvador compared with Canada's 1.8.

Forty-five per cent of the population of El Salvador is under 15 years of age, and already in 1981 there are 383 people per square kilometre of arable land in the country. El Salvador faces real structural problems, which undoubtedly have a definite bearing on the present hostilities there and do not augur well for the future.

Population policies and programs of action touch upon the most intimate of human relationships—the act of love and the family—and involve other basic institutions such as the church and school. For this reason population assistance operates best on a personal, grassroots level, showing respect for the feelings of those concerned and suited to fit the needs and cultural values of the recipients. To be successful a policy must reach and affect the behaviour of individual people and be accepted by them. This decentralized grassroots approach is quite different from a loan for a factory or an airport, the effects of which, good or ill, operate indirectly.

A continuing role for multilateral assistance in population through international organizations must remain. These organizations, particularly UNFPA, are able to transmit and collect information, lend experts to needy countries and propagate certain technological advances. I ask our government to increase its support to UNFPA.

I approve of the government's intention to increase funds to the NGOS, and I ask that the International Planned Parenthood Federation receive increasing financial assistance. After all, the IPPF is the second biggest international voluntary organization in the world, after the Red Cross.

Finally, I share with the task force the view that Canada has great potential for leadership in North-South relations. I wish to point out that there exists ample Canadian resources in the field of population studies. I hope that our highly trained demographers, sociologists, geographers, and physicians with expertise in the population field might be given a larger role to play in matters of population assistance to the South. Similarly, the statisticians at Statistics Canada and the demographers with the International Development Research Centre here in Ottawa could and should play more active roles.

Population should no longer be a forgotten factor in Canadian or world development strategy. Rather, I hope that the government will incorporate a population component wherever possible in new development projects financed by official development assistance.

Before closing I would like to say that it would be my hope that the government would see fit at either or both the upcoming summits here in Ottawa and the one in Mexico to give serious consideration to putting this subject on the agenda.

I will close with the words with Dr. Salas, and I quote:

> Interest in population is not a concern with the figures on a chart or the curves on a graph alone, however important they may be, but essentially an involvement with the future of humanity itself.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF FORMER PREMIER OF NEWFOUNDLAND

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): With the permission of the House I would like to draw the attention of hon. members to the presence in the Speaker's gallery of a very distinguished visitor, namely the former premier of Newfoundland, the hon. Joey Smallwood.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

International Relations

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Broadbent:

That this House expresses its continuing concern with respect to Canada's international relations and calls on the government to demonstrate a meaningful interest in South and Central America and, in particular, to initiate steps aimed at establishing a negotiated settlement of the tragic civil war in El Salvador.

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, just like my colleagues who spoke before me, it gives me great pleasure to take part in this debate on the North-South dialogue, the relations that we could establish in Latin America and the Caribbean, and finally the tragic events in El Salvador.

As concerns the last element of this motion, the tragedy in El Salvador, I have listened very carefully to the Leader of the New Democratic Party, and this has led me to realize that my own sources of information, since I had the advantage of spending about ten days in El Salvador, did not correspond with his own. There are contradictions in many areas, especially as concerns arms deliveries. I have always believed, Mr. Speaker, that a conflict always involves two elements and that it was impossible to start a conflict unilaterally.

Mr. Speaker, I heard the comments made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who made a few corrections as concerns the Canadian position, and as mentioned by my colleague for Gloucester (Mr. Breau), this was certainly a good opportunity to urge the United States once again not to interfere in an increasingly unfortunate situation, which I would not want to exploit more than need be.

Mr. Speaker, I particularly want to speak about the experience of the task force on North-South relations and about that part of the motion which concerns our relations with Latin America. The task force report has been very well received everywhere. The Canadian government tabled yesterday its response to approve it, and it is reassuring to know that the efforts of a number of members of the House have been appreciated and I think that this will help other ad hoc committees to develop some credibility for the research work to which we have committed ourselves. The substance of the task force report will lend weight to the initiatives and the efforts that the Canadian government and the Prime Minister himself have made these last few months to give Canadians and the heads of states who will be here in July an increased awareness of some of the problems of the developing countries.

Mr. Speaker, the task force does not pretend to have covered all aspects of international development. Of course, we did examine certain important aspects, we discussed them, and my colleague for Gloucester, the chairman of the task force, has already talked about them. There are also certain very important elements with which we unfortunately did not have time to deal. Among those, I would like to mention the outflow of expertise, the brain drain as it is usually called, which is causing more and more problems for developing countries when young people who have received some type of training which could help their own country decide to remain in the country where they have been trained. I have found that the Canadian government is often blamed for having kept these new talents, and I believe that this is an unfair judgment since it is up to the country of origin to see to it that if these young people really want to work for the economic development of their country, they return urgently to their country to make their contribution. This is an aspect of development which is enormously costly for developing countries.

Mr. Speaker, there is another problem related to this one, namely the increase in administration and registration fees that Canadian universities must charge foreign students. I believe that this is unfair for those countries which depend on Canada to give adequate training to their young people. I think that this is a marvelous opportunity for us to develop and train in Canada the future leaders of developing countries. Those people will be allies of Canada in 10 or 15 years; they will be the decision-makers, the leaders of their societies who, quite naturally, could be favourably disposed towards Canada if they have studied here. I think it is most unfortunate that an increase in tuition fees should have been imposed on foreign students.

A closer look at North-South relations has also given to most of the members of the committee the opportunity of finding out through our travels that the Canadian International Development Agency and the International Development Research Centre enjoy considerable prestige throughout the world, and just how happy people are to welcome Canadian parliamentarians who are concerned with the problems of the developing world, because of the high calibre of the representatives of those two Canadian institutions, the work those two institutions have achieved and the help they have given developing countries. I was particularly impressed with the work done in the Philippines and Bangladesh.

I believe that one of the recommendations of the task force was that more funds be set aside for the International Development Research Centre. I suggest that it ought to be done without delay since that is not the type of assistance which developing nations find hard to accept. Indeed it is not simply a handout but rather technological aid to help developing countries raise the level of the technology they need so badly for instance, to boost rice and wheat production, to launch a food growing industry, to devise ways of conserving and storing foodstuffs and process them so they will produce more food for their people.

Mr. Speaker, there is another topic on which we did not have enough time to dwell, and I refer to the policy concerning multinational undertakings. A number of the most pressing economic questions of this and the forthcoming decade are related to the efforts of the world community to solve the problem of multinational companies. The major multinational companies' income and productive capacity exceed those of most of the member countries of the United Nations and those companies are beyond the control of national governments. Even in times of economic austerity and despite the restrictive policies of their host country, many of those companies are so successful that it can only reflect the outstanding efficiency with which they transfer technology, develop resources and know-how, and promote world-wide marketing and distribution techniques. The multinationals are the institutional incarnation of the interdependence which is the hallmark of the world economy, a fact which prompted the head of a nation to say that certain industries should be nationalized rather than be allowed to grow into international giants. I fully appreciate the urgency which some countries see in the nationalization of their industries.

Throughout the seventies, the OECD and the United Nations held negotiations concerning the standards that would make it possible to assess and improve the conduct of those undertakings. The 1976 OECD guidelines for multinational companies proved to be a major milestone in that respect, and the government is keeping a close eye on the negotiations which are going on before the United Nations Commission on Multinational Companies concerning an international code of conduct for multinational companies.

Canada probably knows more than any other country the problems and frustrations associated with the regulations of multinational subsidiaries. It is therefore in a good position to help other host countries and to make exporting countries aware of the problems than can crop up. At the same time, some important Canadian multinationals in the resource field have made Canada a large exporter of capital in the last few years, with no less than $27.3 billion of long-term investment capital going abroad in 1977. Developing countries might be concerned that their economy will be controlled by multinationals, but Canada's level of technological development and sophistication is comparable to those of investing countries. That puts in us in a good position to require a balanced and efficient code agreeable both to corporations and governments.

The Canadian position is based on a double premise. On the one hand, host countries have the right to expect that foreign companies will comply with the national legislation and policies defining the behavior of a good corporate citizen. On the other hand, they must also recognize the generally accepted standards of international law and sound management practices. Canadian spokesmen carefully avoided endorsing proposals that would make the exporting country responsible for the conduct of foreign subsidiaries of corporations under its jurisdiction. It is indeed up to the host country to determine what is appropriate and legal in terms of business practices within its boundaries. Our experience with foreign control as exercised by other countries, in the case for example of trade with China and Cuba and the implementation of anti-trust measures, has only reinforced our views in this regard.

We can easily understand some of the problems and concerns which developing countries ascribe to multinationals: transfer costs, exchange distortions, lack of local framework, slow technological change and lack of sensitivity to local conditions, since we must face them ourselves. However, some of the more extreme solutions put forward in developing countries would result in stopping the flow of private investments in the countries which would implement those measures, which would be most unfortunate indeed. Many developing countries feel that they do not have enough bargaining power to negotiate effectively with multinationals, that they are controlled by firms which are ahead of them as far as information, know-how, capital and market control are concerned. The governments of developing countries tend to ask for an automatic and total right of access to information and to technology as well as to the other assets of multinationals.

The government of Canada, Mr. Speaker, has attempted to deal with that inequality in bargaining power by developing a greater awareness among developing countries of the structures and rules of competition in exporting countries, by giving them better access to current sources of information and by trying to reach an agreement on the type of information which might be reasonably required from firms. The fundamental problems arising from the disparities in size and wealth cannot obviously be eliminated or dealt with readily. Furthermore, they should not be magnified. Most big firms are responsible. Far from seeking only short-term profits, they try rather to establish with their hosts relationships that are mutually profitable in the longer term. The uncertainty created by vague or arbitrary rules of the game can shy away desirable investors and make room for unscrupulous profiteers. On the other hand, the experience of co-operation with responsible multinationals can help a country learn to make better use of new foreign investments. That is a major objective of Canada in negotiating a code for multinationals and in establishing its general assistance and development policies.

In view of all the prerequisites to national sovereignty, it is quite unrealistic to expect the early emergence of some form of supranational code applying to multinational corporations. Indeed any such code should most probably be based on guidelines coming from the parent country by way of the headquarters of these companies. That is certainly not desirable. But it is a realistic and useful exercise to seek an agreement on the legal and political requirements that the host and the parent countries can reasonably impose on multinational corporations and that the latter will consider in their best interest to comply with both the letter and the intent of these agreements. I am quite happy to be able to say that in that area Canadian policy is strongly based upon our own experience and that it has decided on that realistic approach.

Before concluding my remarks I would like to refer again to the speech made by the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) who called for Canada to play the role of intermediary in the present conflict in El Salvador. I find this motion quite interesting, because the Leader of the New Demcratic Party seems to have departed from an apparently well-established rule whereby mediation is something asked for, and not just something offered by a branch of the labour movement. And since President Duarte has already indicated his opposition to any such interference on the part of Canada, or on the part of any other Canadian or American citizen, I cannot see how we could impose our services as a mediator, because this is not the proper approach, for instance in the area of labour relations. And I am quite surprised to hear this from the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

[English]

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, I planned to speak directly to the text of my remarks, but I think I owe the House an explanation for the encounter earlier this evening. Spontaneously I wanted to give the hon. member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle) extra time, but as I listened to and reflected upon his speech, I remembered his speech last Thursday when he launched into a personal attack on an hon. member of the House. He compared the member to Pontius Pilate, but tonight he talked about compassion and the good Samaritan. We are supposed to give him extra time when he assassinates people in character one day and talks about compassion on another day.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Friesen: I was present all afternoon for the debate. I heard the hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) make his speech. I enjoyed his speech, I thought it was a good one, it was well presented. But I did not agree with everything he said. When his 45 minutes had run out he needed extra time and no one objected.

Mr. Knowles: It was 30 minutes, not 45.

Mr. Friesen: Yes, thirty minutes, but no one objected to giving him extra time.

Miss Jewett: Are you apologizing?

Mr. Friesen: Then the hon. member for Saskatoon East wanted extra time. The two members of the NDP who were entitled to speak in this debate wanted extra time.

Miss Jewett: Why don't you read the dictionary?

Mr. Friesen: When I protect the right to speak of other hon. members of the House, the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett) calls me Benito Mussolini.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Friesen: The cheapest retreat of members of that party is to talk fascism when anyone else does not share their point of view. I know the good people of New Westminster-Coquitlam will be interested in the kind of retreat their member goes into if someone disagrees with her. It seems to me we face the old adage—members of the NDP love humanity; it is people they cannot stand.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Friesen: I hope Your Honour gives me extra time because hon. members of the NDP are interrupting me.

I enjoyed the speech of the hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party. One phrase he used captured my attention because it graphically described what is going on in El Salvador. He said that terrorism is pervasive. I think all of us would agree with him on that assessment. It reminded me of a quotation I read a few days ago in a book entitled "The Terror Network" by Claire Sterling. She quoted Lenin as having said that the purpose of terror is to terrorize. It does not matter whether it is the left or the right, both sides do it. It is no better if the left does it or the right does it; it is the same. There is no morality in terror regardless of what side it comes from.

Also I was reminded of the statement of Che Guevara not too long before he died. He was quoted at the Tricontinental Conference in Havana in 1966 as saying:

> We must above all keep our hatred alive and fan it to paroxysm. Hate is a factor of struggle, intransigent hate of the enemy, hate that can push a human being beyond his natural limits and make him a cold, violent, selective, and effective killing-machine.

This was quoted in the house organ of the Red Brigade of Italy in July, 1978. Obviously it was well learned. I am not taking sides in this. Regardless of whether it is the right or the left that does it, it is wrong. The extremists on both sides in El Salvador have learned how to fulfil the wishes of Che Guevara very well. It does not matter who is doing it.

The missing ingredient in the international debate on this subject is political disinterestedness. It does not matter to whom one listens. It does not matter what speech one hears. It is in defence of one side or the other. Everyone has an axe to grind. Everyone takes sides with one or the other of the protagonists.

I listened to the hon. Leader of the NDP today when he supported the revolutionary front which is calling for a negotiated settlement—they are the good guys. Then I heard the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) supporting Duarte and his call for elections—they are the good guys. It reminded me of a grade B 1952 western where the good guys wore the white hats and the bad guys wore the black hats, but it depended upon who was speaking who wore what hat. The trouble is that the world community has divided itself into two opposing camps.

Mr. MacGuigan: It is three.

Mr. Friesen: All right, it is three. Nothing can be gained any longer because there is no political disinterestedness.

When we have taken sides like this, the only certain thing is that there is one loser—the ordinary, common people of El Salvador. They are the losers. The left wants to paint the revolution there as a peasants' revolt, as a mass popular uprising against the rightist regime of Duarte. The right wants to paint that situation as a democratic agrarian reform movement, ready to restore all rights to the peasants. The peasants are squeezed in the middle between those two extreme protagonists. In terms of foreign aid, this unavoidably determines the level, the kind and the destination of foreign aid. Depending upon whose side one is on, those who favour Duarte will ensure that he gets military equipment, those who favour the revolutionaries will ensure they get the equipment they need, but the peasants will not get the equipment they need.

It comes to the bottom line. In all too many of these cases, government to government aid simply does not work. There are at least two reasons for this. One is that it is determined by people who have axes to grind. They have a motive, they have a reason tied to the aid program. As the Prime Minister said yesterday, it is in our self interest to give aid. The reason then is not that the people need it; it is that we will suffer if we do not give it. This is not the best of all motives in the world. We have an axe to grind. The simple truth is that donors in the northern hemisphere really cannot know or understand the needs of those people.

The hon. leader of the NDP went on a two-week tour of Latin American countries. I give him full points for that, but there is no way that someone from Canada can spend two weeks down there and expect to meet the people at their level. By the time the lists of whom he wants to see have been laundered—they have gone through so many checks to ensure that only the right people meet him—the people who are suffering the most are never heard from. It is not the fault of the leader of the NDP; it would have happened to anyone. Those of us who are designing aid programs in this country simply cannot know or understand how to meet the needs of the people in receiving countries.

The other half of the equation is that the receivers have their own bureaucratic programs to fulfil if it is a government to government operation. Every country has its own bureaucracy. I am sure that if we looked just a little more closely at the bureaucracy in El Salvador we would find that that government has vested interests in the kinds of aid programs which are given to it, which do not necessarily meet the needs of the people. Have we not learned that fact within Canada? Do you not think that what goes on in El Salvador also goes on in Canada? All countries have their bureaucratic games. Therefore, for aid to be effective, it must be people to people. As other speakers have said, that means the governments on both ends are avoided and the work is done through non-governmental organizations, such as private agencies, voluntary agencies and charitable organizations in Canada which have gone to the receiver country ahead of time and have become one with the people. The people from these agencies know what the needs are. They show compassion at the grass roots level and not at a distance of 2,000 or 3,000 miles. They are people who are willing to drink the contaminated water along with the people they are there to serve.

When non-governmental organizations get into the act, we can rest assured that aid will go to the people who need it most. There will be no filtering off to meet the backsheesh desires of government officials. It will not be filtered through graft, but it will be from the people in the homeland who care to the people in the receiver land who care.

The second reason why government to government aid does not work is shown in the 1980 report of "World Military and Social Expenditures, 1980," by Ruth Leger Sivard. I would like to read to you, Mr. Speaker, some of the statistics which come from that 1980 report. Using Canada as a base for comparison, I wish to point out that in 1977, which I believe was the year used for this report, Canada spent 2 per cent of its gross national product on military expenditures and at the same time spent 5.5 per cent on health care.

I would now like to give some figures for the government of Peru, which is a rightist regime. In 1977 the government of Peru spent 3 per cent of its gross national product on military expenditures and 1.1 per cent on health programs. In Cuba, in 1977, 6 per cent of that country's gross national product was expended on the military while 4.3 per cent was spent on health programs.

The next figures I would like to cite are for Tanzania, where the life expectancy is 51 years. In 1977 Tanzania, whose president is a great buddy of our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), spent 4 per cent of its gross national product on military expenditures and 2 per cent on health care.

Using Canada as a base, do you not think that there is a violent wrenching of priorities in these countries, to which we must address ourselves? We ought to take a look at what is happening with regard to the radical priority differences which exist in the countries to which we give aid and make loans. It is hypocritical for us to spend nearly three times as much on health as on the military and not expect Third World countries to do the same. That does not make any sense. Maybe that radical problem ought to be addressed. It seems to me that we are relieving those governments of the responsibility of spending money on health care so that they can spend it on the military. That also makes no sense. This matter must be addressed.

Perhaps there should be a second recommendation. On the one hand we ought to cut off government to government aid and work only through non-governmental organizations. On the other hand maybe we ought to have the UN establish a benchmark of a "reasonable limit" which Third World countries can adopt. Every country will have some kind of military spending. A reasonable limit which that country is entitled to spend on military expenditures ought to be established. But if the country spends beyond that limit, it should no longer receive foreign aid from our government, especially if health services are denied to its people while military spending escalates.

We cannot think of El Salvador, or any other Third World country, and the wrenching agony under which they are living, and leave our emotions behind. Nor can we leave our reason behind. We must approach this issue with some kind of understanding. We must demand some kind of commitment from those governments which will honour the values which are important to us, that is, human values.

The second point I wish to raise in the few minutes which I have left to me is the following. We have been speaking in circuitous terms of the new world economic order. But there is another new world order on which UNESCO is working, and that is a new world information order. Mr. Speaker, that is even more terrifying than the new world economic order, since the new world information order is based upon the recommendations of the McBride commission which worked mostly with Third World and eastern bloc countries. That commission has come out with recommendations which have the effect of calling for information agencies in each of the countries of the world. That in itself appears innocuous until it is realized that these information agencies will be the conduit, the funnel, through which all news agencies in each country will receive its news. As one newsman described the situation to me today if the news agency provides a piece of information, for example regarding a UNESCO report, to a reporter, or to UPI, that information must be accepted holus bolus. If that reporter wants to phone back to UNESCO headquarters or to another country to obtain more information, or contrary information, that is not allowed.

I come back to where I started, Mr. Speaker. It does not matter if it is the right or the left, both are attracted to the new world information order. Once information is controlled by an information agency in any country of the world, democracy is doomed. Freedom rests on information. If it is a rightist regime, as exists in Panama, or if it a leftist regime, as exists in Allende's Chile, it makes no difference. They both have the same goal—controlling information so that power can be consolidated.

The journalist with whom I spoke today told me of a friend of his in Panama who wished to attend a radio broadcasters' conference. He called to inform a friend that he could not attend the conference because the police, the military, had come to his studio and smashed his equipment. They put him on the first plane leaving the country, the destination was of no consequence. At the same time the journalist told me of a friend of his who owns a chain of radio stations in Chile. During the days of Allende's regime he gave a radio editorial which mildly criticized Allende. He drove home at seven o'clock that night. On the street in front of his house he saw jeeps, military vehicles, machine guns in place in the yard with soldiers camped there. They were there for 30 days. Did that owner of the radio station tone down his criticism of Allende? I think he did.

The Leader of the New Democratic Party said that terrorism is everywhere. If we allow the recommendations—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please, I am sorry, but I have to interrupt the hon. gentleman. The hon. member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant).

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, I must admit I was a little suprised by the self-righteousness and phony piety expressed by the last speaker. He is obviously a little sensitive at having his "right-wingedness" thrown in his face. This comes from a member of a party which, for the last week, has heckled the leader of my party simply because while on a mission of some importance, a mission which we are debating today, he happened to stop in Cuba. I might point out to members of the party to my right that Cuba is one of the major players in that region.

Mr. Gamble: You are right.

Mr. Sargeant: In opening my comments tonight, Mr. Speaker, I had planned to say that I am pleased to participate in this debate, but after spending most of yesterday preparing a speech that I was not able to give last night, and after spending the better part of today revising that speech and only having about eight or nine minutes available, I am a little disappointed. But as my friend, the hon. member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett) suggested, perhaps I should save the speech and if I am fortunate enough to stay in this game, in another ten years we might have another opportunity to debate external affairs in this House.

Mr. Gamble: The speech will be the same ten years from now.

Mr. Sargeant: Unfortunately, if members of the party to my right, or even the government opposite, is still ruling, I am afraid I will need the same kind of speech.

Mr. Breau: You won't be here.

Mr. Sargeant: Don't bet on it. I had planned to expand my comments to deal with the arms race, disarmament, and how these methods affect the Third World. I had planned to discuss the absurdity of a world that would spend $600 million on weapons of war while 1 billion or more people starve or do not have an adequate standard of living.

I wanted to expand on the ludicrous situation in which we find ourselves where the major powers maintain the capability of destroying the world some 14 or 15 times over, yet they want to add more nuclear weapons—to be able to destroy the world more than 14 or 15 times over. Surely once is too often. Unfortunately, in the few minutes remaining to me, I cannot get into that question.

Let me direct a few comments to how the arms race affects the Third World and perhaps a few comments to the way that Canada is part of that game, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle) in his comments earlier this evening.

I was struck by the comments of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) yesterday when he expressed concern for the 800 million or so citizens of this earth who barely manage to stay alive. The arms race, of which Canada is very much a part, has played an enormous role in this. Let us examine some of the reasons for this, Mr. Speaker.

Throughout the seventies, Third World military spending increased faster than the GNP. Today it represents over $100 billion in arms purchases—75 per cent of the world arms trade. This has led to the unfortunate and bizarre situation where governments, already badly in debt, have squandered precious foreign exchange on sophisticated weapons systems while neglecting the basic needs of their people.

Another reason is that the extraordinarily large amounts spent on arms by the developed countries—and increasing in the latest U.S. budget—has made it impossible for any of them to achieve the goal of 0.7 per cent of GNP for aid money, resulting in incredible, unmet, human needs in the Third World.

Yesterday the Prime Minister mentioned that the money required to provide adequate food, water, education, health and housing for everyone in the world has been estimated at some $17 billion per year. That is a reasonable amount of money, Mr. Speaker, but it is less than the world spends on arms in two weeks.

In yet another way the world arms race has already affected the Third World, and that is by fostering hostilities among Third World nations. Frank Barnaby of the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute has said:

> Since 1945 there have been 133 wars involving the territory of more than 70 countries and the armed forces of more than 80 states... Almost all of these wars took place in the Third World. The bulk of the weapons used in them have been supplied—through the arms trade—by the industrialized countries.

These wars have killed some 30 million people. We have failed miserably to maintain peace and security in our world, Mr. Speaker. We have allowed the insane growth of the nuclear complex. We have widened the gap between the rich and the poor nations of the world.

Canada's role in all this, I am sorry to say, has not been insignificant. We have encouraged Canadian participation in the manufacture of nuclear weapons. We have contributed to the proliferation of nuclear weaponry through our sales of nuclear technology. We are the ninth largest arms trader in the world. We sell some $30 million annually in military commodities to Third World countries. The Prime Minister stands in this House and talks proudly of his government's role in the Third World and in disarmament. The hypocrisy of this is astounding.

If the Prime Minister is sincere—if he wants to make believers of the many Canadians who have looked on with mounting skepticism over the years as he says one thing about foreign policy and then does something quite different—then let us see some independent thought and some independent action. Let us cut the ties to the aprons of Alexander Haig and Richard Allen. Let us show considerable concern at the alarming increase in U.S. military spending as well as concern at Soviet spending. Let us not acquiesce, or too quickly agree that the world needs more nuclear weapons, as we did in December 1979 with the LRTNF program in Europe.

Let us see some action, now, on the move to a goal of 0.7 per cent of GNP for foreign aid. This pap that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) fed us this afternoon about 1990 as the target for that percentage, is another example of no action.

Kurt Waldheim has called for all nations to devote 0.1 per cent of their defence spending for peace education and peace research. Mr. Speaker, 0.1 per cent is peanuts. If the Prime Minister was sincere yesterday, if peace is important enough to him—and Lord knows it should be—why not spend 1 per cent or even 10 per cent on peace?

Canada has had an excellent reputation in the past as a creative and independent participant in the pursuit of peace. We could do so again. But it will demand a lot of political will—the same will the Prime Minister spoke of yesterday—and a lot of guts. I am not sure that this government has that will, or the guts. But I fear that our time is getting short. If something is not done soon to turn around the insanity, we may have no world left to worry about.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, permit me to use a couple of quotations. The first occurred at a meeting of the American Society of Newspaper Editors in Washington in 1953. I am sure that a number of members of the House will have heard it before. Addressing that meeting, President Eisenhower said:

> Every gun that is made, every warship launched, every rocket fired, signifies—in the final sense—a theft from those who are cold and are not clothed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret I have to interrupt the hon. member.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—SUGGESTED ADOPTION OF NEW INDEX AND PROVISION OF ENERGY SUPPLEMENT

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, earlier this week I raised a question in the House directed to the acting minister of veterans affairs suggesting the adoption of a new index and provision of an energy supplement for pensioners because of the inflation rate of 12.5 per cent and the disastrous effects on the Canadian economy of the National Energy Program. I also asked the minister a supplementary question. As reported in Hansard at page 7554 for February 23, 1981, it reads:

The government energy pricing policy and the budget have hit particularly hard at recipients of veterans pensions. Would the minister consider an energy supplement to pension payments?

To which the minister answered:

This will be taken into consideration, Madam Speaker.

Perhaps we will have an answer tonight. This also ties in to another problem concerning veterans affairs, concerning a matter which has been raised time and time again. That is the need for immediate legislation to eliminate the phasing in of a section of Bill C-40, thereby making all veterans' widows eligible now for an increase in their pension.

I wish to put on the record an example of what the government is proposing for some widows. In 1986, the government proposed that some widows receive an additional increase of $25.35 and those with some dependants receive $1.52. I am sure that everyone in the House realizes that by 1986 that amount will be just the same as handing somebody nothing. We want all the phasing in to become effective immediately. I hope the parliamentary secretary will announce tonight that a piece of legislation dealing with the veterans' widows will be brought in before we recess for the summer. I hope that the parliamentary secretary will pass on to the acting minister the suggestion that he read the June issue of the Legion which has an excellent article on the veterans' widows and the problems they are experiencing.

This ties in with another serious problem we have within veterans affairs, a matter I raised recently. It concerns the delay in processing pension applications. It is taking from one to five years to process veterans' pension applications in Canada. I have described this a number of times as nothing but a national disgrace. In the United States they process veterans' pension applications in 60 to 97 days. I raised this matter on June 9, 1981. The answers I received came from the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Mines (Mr. Masters). I do not know how he got into the act. However, his answer to me with regard to the delay in the processing of the applications, as found on page 10443 of Hansard reads:

I would like to see the adjudication time reduced. However, I would not like to see it reduced at the expense of the veteran.

I found that to be a very strange sentence. The death rate is very high among veterans waiting for pension applications to be processed. The parliamentary secretary went on to say:

Steps have to be taken to improve the pension system and to curtail the delays in adjudication.

We have seen no evidence at all of any speeding up in this process. The parliamentary secretary also said that the veterans' organization support the present legislation and they do not want to see things speeded up too much. That statement is incorrect.

I would refer the parliamentary secretary and the acting minister to the submission to the House of Commons Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs presented by the Royal Canadian Legion a couple of weeks ago. There is a section in that submission on the delays of pension adjudications. On page 4 we find:

The veteran population is dismayed by the delays which persist in the processing of pension claims and ancillary benefits.

They do not say anything about supporting what is going on right now and they do not want to see any speed. They never made any such statement. In the submission at page 7, we find:

Other than to again put forward the thought of cancelling the move of the Canadian Pension Commission to Charlottetown, the Royal Canadian Legion can offer no solution to resolve this question of delays which quite obviously is related to the staffing situation. However, the government surely has to do something quite quickly to correct this issue!

That is why I am hoping we have something concrete from the parliamentary secretary tonight in regard to the delays in processing of pension applications, or some kind of energy credit to veterans to assist them.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General has run into problems in relation to the move of DVA to Prince Edward Island, and he points out:

—that less than 20 per cent of Headquarters personnel, on strength at the time of the relocation announcement, was planning to move to Prince Edward Island.

The Auditor General went on to say, in an audit he did recently into the Veterans Affairs Department:

Notwithstanding intentions to relocate with a minimum of disruption... Those not wishing to relocate have been given priority status by the Public Service Commission in their search for other employment in the National Capital Region.

The chairman of the Pension Commission has stated that this is causing him no end of problems with staff quitting and refusing to move. We also know that many of the veterans' service documents are in the archives and we want to know how—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I shall gladly try to answer the questions asked by the hon. member, but I must still restrict myself to the question he put on February 23. I am all the more happy as he raised all these questions quite coolly. He is often very aggressive, but it is interesting all the same to note that some members are bent on safeguarding the interests of veterans. Of course, we all do it in our own fashion. The hon. member may be more aggressive than I am, but not every member is blessed with a cheerful disposition like mine.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, in the question raised by the hon. member on February 23 he touched upon only one point, the question of indexing veterans' benefits to the rise in the real cost of living. This is the question I will try to answer.

For many years now all veterans' benefits awarded under the Pension Act and the War Veterans Allowance Act have been tied to the rise in the consumer price index. The consumer price index system of changing rates is used almost universally in government and in the private sector and has evolved by considering many factors including housing, food and energy costs. Of course, it is not easy to establish the exact increase in the cost of living. The present government shares the member's desire that veterans and their families not be adversely affected by inflation and has embodied in veterans' legislation some safeguards against inflation.

Disability pension rates are adjusted from time to time and the 1975 adjustment brought the rates into line with a formula which was established in 1973. In addition, the rates were adjusted last January 1 and increased by 9.7 per cent, thus bringing the amount payable to the unmarried disabled pensioner whose disability is assessed at 100 per cent to $811 per month or $9,737 per year, income tax free. To this you can add 25 per cent for the wife, 13 per cent for the first child and 9.5 per cent for the second child, and so on.

Mr. Knowles: How many hundred percenters are there?

Mr. Laniel: War veterans' allowances are adjusted four times a year automatically, thus ensuring that veterans and their families receive as quickly as possible any increases due to the rise in the CPI.

The government moved quickly last spring and introduced legislation that corrected some of the inequities contained in the War Veterans Allowance Act, and provided increased benefits to recipients of WVA who are under the age of 65.

• (2210)

Bill C-40 contained some $106 million in addition to what was offered by the previous Conservative government in Bill C-28. It is generally acknowledged that Canada has some of the best legislation as far as veterans affairs are concerned.

ENERGY—POSSIBILITY OF REACHING AGREEMENT WITH ALBERTA

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I refer the House to page 9337 of Hansard for April 21 when I asked a question of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde). Basically I asked the minister to accept his responsibility and to recognize that an energy agreement must be in place by June 30 or the equivalent of $20 billion to $25 billion of private capital ready to be invested in this country in the form of heavy oil and tar sands plants would go down the drain. The minister replied as follows:

—since last November we on this side of the House have indicated that we were eager to reach an agreement as soon as possible and that we were willing to show flexibility. Obviously any agreement would imply an equivalent amount of flexibility on the other side—

I would like to look for a moment at the flexibility which has been shown on the other side. The price of Canadian oil has risen by $8.55 per barrel at the refinery since last November. Albertans received only 43 cents of that price increase, or 5 per cent. The Liberal government here in Ottawa received $7.55, over 90 per cent.

Last July Alberta proposed that the wellhead price of oil be raised to $19.25 a barrel by June of this year. Instead, by order of the sitting Liberal government the price of oil today is $27.05 a barrel at the refinery and only $17.75 at the wellhead. What is the difference? The difference is federal taxes.

The difference is also thousands of jobs lost in Canada and hundreds of millions of dollars lost to foreign countries. The list of irrational economic costs goes on and on. The difference is also human. We now have political polarization appearing in western Canada. There is bitterness, there is anger, there is frustration, and there is even rage.

Meanwhile, in Ontario and Quebec the Liberals have a new chain of gasoline stations, all sporting the Petro-Canada sign. They have broken election promises to keep oil prices low, a promise whose breaking they blame on Alberta.

In Ontario gasoline sells for approximately $1.66 a gallon. Ottawa takes 56 cents of that, Ontario takes 25 cents and Alberta approximately 22 cents. But it is Alberta's fault! One might think that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources would get a lot in return for raising energy prices so high and so quickly, faster than Alberta would have raised them. But has he?

Is exploration for oil in Canada expanding? No. Is production of oil in Canada increasing? No. Is development of synthetic oil plants proceeding? No. Is national unity strengthened? No. What then is the minister achieving? He is shifting our energy search from Alberta to the Canadian Arctic. He is shifting our energy search from Alberta to the United States. He is raising energy prices through non-productive taxation, most of which goes to foreign countries. What an excellent policy!

What was offered by the provincial government of Alberta last July? Let us remember that what was offered was rejected. Let me put what was offered on the record. Alberta offered to raise Canadian oil pices at the wellhead in stages to 75 per cent of the North American price by 1984. Alberta offered to price existing natural gas at 15 per cent below relatively cheap Canadian oil. Alberta also offered to price new natural gas at 35 per cent below the price of Canadian oil for the first five years. Alberta also agreed to invest $7 billion in three new oil sands plants to assure at least 51 per cent Canadian ownership and to pursue a policy of continuous oil sands development. Alberta also offered to accept significantly lower royalty rates, particularly on the new oil sands plants, so that this would allow the Ottawa Liberal government to move in and impose extra billions of dollars in taxes on these plants. Alberta also offered to finance a natural gas pipeline to Atlantic Canada and to support other energy projects in Canada. They offered to provide $2 billion in grants for upgrading transportation in western Canada, particularly in B.C. and Manitoba where transportation is so vital for our agricultural industry. Maybe that was not the best offer in the world but it was certainly good enough to work with. The Liberals announced instead their unilateral national energy policy and the rest is really sad history.

Now the minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is meeting with the minister of energy for Alberta on June 29—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I suppose the first thing to say about the hon. member's statement is that he errs in stating that back in April, when he first raised his question, he referred to the date of June 30. In fact, if he looks at page 9337 of Hansard, he referred to June 1, and he referred to it repeatedly as a deadline for cancellation of the new oil sands plants. Well, of course, June 1 has come and gone and the sponsors of the plants have not cancelled their plans to construct them.

I suppose that among the various allegations and curious statements which the hon. member has made this evening, his principal purpose is to draw attention to the state of the Alsands and Cold Lake projects. If that is indeed his purpose, I should like to put on the record a few facts for the benefit of his constituents in particular who perhaps are unaware of the actual situation.

The hon. member did quote accurately the position of the minister in seeking with flexibility an agreement as soon as possible. That is against the background of the history of the initiative on the part of the federal government to ensure that oil sands and heavy oil projects take place. I have in mind particularly the initiative of the federal government in the Syncrude project which would not have occurred without the national government taking a determined lead.

As for the National Energy Program, there is obvious emphasis on oil sands and heavy oil development through such measures as the maintenance of the depletion allowance, provision of special tax incentives for heavy oil upgrading plants, and the application of reference prices at or close to international prices to encourage the development of these resources.

I should like to re-emphasize the efforts of the federal government in the last year to reach an accord with Alberta on the pricing of oil and gas and, in particular, on the basis for getting new oil sands projects under way. Throughout these discussions we have been willing to show great flexibility. In October, 1980, when it became evidence that an over-all pricing agreement with Alberta would be impossible at an early date, the minister endeavoured to guarantee the future of the oil sands plants. In a meeting with the Alberta minister of energy, the federal Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) offered a price of $38 a barrel for non-conventional oil, and $30 for enhanced recovery oil which would be escalated annually with inflation. When Alberta was not prepared to negotiate, the federal government then offered to loan $40 million to Imperial Oil so that the Cold Lake project would not be abandoned. On another occasion last June the minister—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

ENERGY—NEGOTIATIONS WITH PROVINCE OF ALBERTA ON PRICING AGREEMENT

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, it has been over seven months since the National Energy Program was bestowed upon the nation by the federal government in Ottawa. The oil industry and the producing provinces responded to it at the time with consternation, outrage and alarm, but the federal Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) confidentially reassured us that he had come to expect that kind of emotional reaction from the provinces and the oil industry. He said that very soon both the industry and the provinces would come to accept the new arrangements and that everything would return to normal. Now let us see what has happened since he gave us the National Energy Program. What does he consider normal? Here are a few symptoms.

First, oil and gas exploration activity in the western provinces has been reduced by more than half. Three thousand of the 20,000 men employed in the trade have been laid off by mid-May and another 6,000 are expected to be laid off by mid-summer. Where 370 rigs were drilling last year, 177 are drilling this year; 131 rigs have left the country. In short, an industry upon which both the economy and security of the country depend has been thrust into a depression.

Second, development of the heavy oil and tar sands plants has been brought to a hald, although there is enough synthetic oil in Alberta to meet the needs of Canada for 300 years at present rates of production.

Third, Alberta has reduced its supply of crude oil to central Canada and will cut back the supply by 15 per cent by the end of September.

Fourth, nearly $1.5 billion is being sent to Belgium to pay for the Petrofina Oil Company as a federal gift to Petro-Canada, an expenditure which will directly raise the price of gasoline and at the same time will not add a single barrel of oil to Canada's supply.

Fifth, per capita consumption of oil in Canada continues to rise because the National Energy Program holds Canadian prices far below prices charged in nearly all countries in the western world, in fact at about one-third the price charged in Great Britain which is self-sufficient in oil because of the North Sea developments. In the United States, by contrast, higher prices have had the effect of reducing imports by 24 per cent in a single year and cutting consumption by two million barrels a day. Meanwhile American cars stream over the border to fill up on Canada's cut rate gasoline.

Sixth, heavy oil wells in the Lloydminster area are shutting down because the National Energy Program does not provide enough money to keep them operating.

Seventh, unemployment stalks Ontario industry which is being deprived of machinery and equipment orders due to the cutback in Alberta conventional oil and gas exploration and the arrest of tar sands development.

Eighth, British Columbia and Saskatchewan have defied the federal government and refused to pay the tax it is attempting to levy on natural gas production. Nova Scotia and Newfoundland have announced they will not recognize federal laws leasing oil rights on offshore lands, a situation that could conceivably see both levels of government leasing the same properties. In the meantime, Alberta has set up three gas wells of its own and claimed the right to export gas to the United States without federal interference and the Alberta court of appeal has unanimously upheld the position of the province.

Ninth, the United States government is considering triggering the provisions of the United States mineral lands leasing act against Canadian oil and mining companies operating in the United States as a retaliation against the National Energy Program Canadianization measures, a move which would maim or bankrupt hundreds of Canadian resource companies operating in the United States.

In other words, the National Energy Program after seven months has managed to cripple the Canadian exploration industry and to drive it out of the country, to increase Canadian oil consumption, to disrupt the supply of existing oil, to ship millions upon millions of dollars overseas, to jeopardize relations with the Americans, to expose us far more to dependence on Arab oil, to halt development of the tar sands, to throw federal-provincial relations into chaos bordering on legal civil war, and to find no oil. All that in seven months!

This also means, moreover, that the reassurances of the federal minister of energy that everything would return to normal have turned out to be dead wrong. Apparently he had no idea whatever of the damage he was about to wreak upon his country. It was a case of too much power exercised in both arrogance and ignorance with calamitous consequence to the industry and the nation whose ill fortune it was to have been left in his hands. That is what history will write beneath the name of the present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member opposite, in raising the matter to which he has referred this evening proposed, as I recall, that the Petro-Canada team which negotiated the acquisition of Petrofina should additionally be charged with the negotiations with Alberta. Since there is great confusion on the Conservative side of the House with regard to their attitude toward Petro-Canada, I assume that the hon. member from Alberta either meant to make a joke—a very small joke indeed—or else he meant to make a serious proposition.

If we are to take it as a serious proposition that he would have the Petro-Canada team negotiate with the government of Alberta, then that is an interesting proposition and one which I assume he will want to advocate across his native province. On the other hand, if it is a frivolous suggestion, then it seems to me that much of what the hon. member said tonight, in that cacophony of confusion and contradiction, should be treated as equally frivolous and hardly worthy of reply.

I suggest to the hon. member that he look again at some of his so-called facts which he attempted to enumerate and consider that, on the contrary, the progress which is being made in the development of the Canadian petroleum industry, and the new endeavours which are being undertaken in the Canada lands, are indicative of the commitment of the industry and the private sector to ensure yet more rapid development of that very prosperous sector of our economy.

I should suggest, too, that the hon. member take a look at the progress which is being made, and remarkably swift progress it is, in the Canadianization of the industry, a policy which has wide support across our country. The hon. member opposite might also wish to consider that the possibilities of some agreement with Alberta have been enhanced by the willingness on both sides in recent discussions to show a degree of flexibility and mutual forebearance, which to my mind is encouraging and which hardly justifies the doom and gloom in which the hon. member opposite has indulged.

LABOUR RELATIONS

AIRLINE TECHNICIANS—CANADIAN LABOUR RELATIONS BOARD DECISION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, in view of a recent decision by the Canadian Labour Relations Board which once again denies 243 Air Canada technicians the right to form their own collective bargaining unit, independent of the International Union of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, and the biased, improper and indefensible reasons given for the CLRB ruling, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie):

That the Minister of Labour shall overrule and reverse the unacceptable decision of the CLRB which denies Canadian airline technicians the right to free association, as guaranteed in the Canadian Bill of Rights, and instead binds them to membership in a large international trade union.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

METHODS OF APPOINTMENT TO AND WITHIN ADMINISTRATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, in view of reported changes in the administration chart of the House of Commons without apparent approval of the Members' Services Committee or the bureau of internal economy, and in view of reported House of Commons appointments and promotions without competition, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer):

That members of the House of Commons affirm most strongly that they are masters of their own House by the evolution of the parliamentary system, and we respectfully request Madam Speaker that no additional changes in administration and senior appointments in the House of Commons will be made, such as the very recent appointment of Robert Desramaux as director of support services, without competition and without sanction of the Members' Services committee, and that particularly no such changes be made while the House is in summer recess by sneaking them in through the back door.

Madam Speaker: I am at a loss to know what to do with this motion. I think I can assure the House that some of the facts are not well founded. However, does the House agree to such a motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AIRPORTS

SERVICES AND FACILITIES AT BRANDON, MAN.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the new PWA jet service into western Manitoba, provided under the Mazankowski amendment, has been a great success and in spite of this the government is still displaying a lack of confidence in the service by delaying the upgrading of infrastructure until the service has proved itself over a two-year period, and because of the threat to safety inherent in this delay, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer):

That the government proceed immediately with its promise to upgrade services at the Brandon air terminal to ensure flight safety and the quality of service essential to meeting the air transportation needs of western Manitoba and eastern Saskatchewan.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE ECONOMY

SUPPORT FOR GOVERNMENT POLICIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Peter Stollery (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the clamour of right wing economists in the Conservative party and more recently the Economic Council of Canada, in pressing for excessive government deregulation, I move, seconded by the hon. member for York South-Weston (Mrs. Appolloni):

S.O. 43

That this House supports an activist government that will intervene in the economy in the best interests of Canadian industry and Canadian jobs.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

SUGGESTED APPLICATION TO MARINE WORKERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I wish to present a motion for which I hope there will be unanimous consent. In view of the fact that contract negotiations between shipowners and workers have broken off on the Great Lakes and the Seaway because of unresolved safety issues, and since the federal government could resolve this dispute by making safety equipment and procedures mandatory, for example by requiring ships to supply survival suits for the crews and requiring bilingual safety information, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose):

Recognizing that 11 seafarers have lost their lives since the signing of the last contract, this House calls upon the government to make safety equipment and procedures mandatory and to extend Part IV of the Canada Labour Code to marine workers so they have the same right as other Canadian workers to refuse dangerous working conditions.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE CENSUS

REMUNERATION OF RURAL CENSUS TAKERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter causing deep-seated anger and resentment among a group of Canadians who feel abused by the very government they seek to serve. In view of the very wide disparity in the expenses incurred in the course of carrying out their duties by rural as opposed to city census takers, a disparity not adequately recognized in the contractual pay scale, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Okanagan North (Mr. Dantzer):

That the government, in consultation with a broad representation of rural census takers, undertake a complete reassessment of the formula used in determining the remuneration of rural census takers, particularly as applied to expenses such as car mileage reimbursement, telephone and other expenses not now adequately recognized.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

MANPOWER

FUNDING FOR WOMEN'S OUTREACH PROJECTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration stated in March that he "has given high priority to Outreach community service projects which service women". As this high priority has resulted in women's Outreach receiving a mere 12.8 per cent of total Outreach expenditures in the past year, an increase of 1 per cent since 1977-78, and as all four Ontario women's Outreach projects have now been forced to sign three-month contracts and have had no budget increases since April 1, 1980, and since today there are indications that all non-government Outreach projects will lose their funding by the end of the summer, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid):

That this House calls upon the Minister of Employment and Immigration to live up to his commitments to women, not only by increasing the proportion of Outreach expenditures to women's projects, but also by extending their contracts so that effective long-term planning can be done.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

INTERNATIONAL WHALING COMMISSION

SUGGESTED MORATORIUM ON KILLING OF WHALES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, this is a very non-controversial Standing Order 43 motion.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rose: The International Whaling Commission meets in England next month. In 1979 Canada abstained from voting on a U.S. proposed ban on commercial whaling, and in 1980, even worse, Canada was the only non-whaling nation to vote against a similar U.S. proposal. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans):

That, since several species of great whales are on the verge of extinction due to overfishing by whaling nations and pirates alike, this House urge Canada's representative on the International Whaling Commission to vote for a total moratorium on commercial whaling until stocks have increased to the point where the future of great whales is no longer uncertain.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

CALL FOR APPOINTMENT OF FULL-TIME MINISTER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Federal-provincial co-operative relations have reached a new low resulting in a significant impasse in co-operation and accord between the two levels of government in Canada. The next few years will require intensive federal-provincial discussions, negotiations, co-operation and accord in regard to economic, fiscal, social, legal and constitutional matters. As the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien), with constitutional and other very heavy responsibilities, is overloaded, overworked, near exhaustion, and needs help, I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan):

That the Prime Minister immediately appoint a full-time minister of federal-provincial relations with senior cabinet responsibilities to provide continuous and intensive leadership and direction to federal-provincial relations.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EL SALVADOR—SUGGESTED ROLE FOR FEDERAL GOVERNMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Considering that many Central American states and, as was evident in yesterday's debate, leading spokespersons for both the Progressive Conservative and New Democratic parties favour a Canadian initiative in mediating a peaceful end to the civil war in El Salvador, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean):

That this House instruct the government to take immediate steps to indicate that the Government of Canada would be willing to play a mediating role to bring about a peaceful solution in El Salvador.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FISHERIES

GREAT SLAVE LAKE FISHING REGULATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, whereas it would appear that neither the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. LeBlanc) nor the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) have learned anything at all from recent happenings involving the native fishery at Restigouche, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon):

That both these ministers be condemned for making the exact same mistakes at Great Slave Lake where, according to a press release dated 15 June, issued by the Minister of Fisheries, local people have been denied entry to the fishery in contravention of long-standing traditions and laws.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

HOUSING

MEASURES TO HELP HOME OWNERS FACING INCREASED MORTGAGE PAYMENTS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the minister in charge of CMHC I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. There will be about 500,000 mortgages coming due this year, many of them by June 30. For the two million people involved, the mortgage payments will increase to the equivalent of their food budgets. Since they face either forced sales or foreclosures by the banks, what hope does the Prime Minister have for these two million people?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance answered that question last week after his meeting with the bankers themselves, and he indicated that they would be prepared to forbear and not bring on foreclosure in such cases as those to which the hon. member refers.

SUPPORT FOR CO-OP PROJECTS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, since first-time home buyers, most of them young people, do not have the capital required to buy homes at today's prices, especially in the greater Vancouver area, I ask the Prime Minister what additional support is the government proposing for such projects as co-op housing so that young families can afford homes?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, it is encouraging to see that the hon. member opposite, perhaps alone in his party, is encouraging this government to take an activist and interventionist role in the area of private housing.

BANKS' PROFITS ON PROPERTY TAX COMPONENT OF MORTGAGE PAYMENTS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, I hope the Prime Minister believes in intervention in relation to the subject of my next question. In relation to the hundreds of thousands of mortgages held by banks, moneys accumulate for the property tax component on which the banks pay 3 per cent compared with 15 per cent, 16 per cent or 17 per cent on savings deposits. The banks are using that $1,000 or $2,000 at 3 per cent and making unconscionable profits. Will the government take action to make sure that the banks will not rip off the mortgagees and that the banks will pay comparable prices for that money, as they do for any other kind of saving?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am sure the Minister of Finance will be happy to see that he has the support of the hon. member for the representations he made to the banks last week, and I think this added argument will be drawn to their attention.

SMALL BUSINESS

TREATMENT BY BANKS

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Prime Minister. On Monday night a three-generation family firm in the heart of my riding, E. R. MacMaster and Sons, went out of business and locked its doors the next day, due directly to the high cost of short-term money. The bank called its loan.

I now ask that the Prime Minister undertake to call the Minister of Finance on his undertaking, to which the Prime Minister referred earlier in answer to my hon. friend, that the banks start to exercise some humane treatment in such situations as the one in my area to which I referred. Sixty-five households are now without breadwinners due to the calling of a bank loan at usurious rates of interest. Is the Prime Minister going to do something about that when the Minister of Finance comes back?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member realizes that the undertaking of the minister was particularly related to the problem of mortgages. The hon. member raises the question of small businesses. He has been reminded many times that there is a special bond available to small businesses which permits them to pay only about half of the going commercial rate of interest.

Mr. Nowlan: Madam Speaker, I hope the Prime Minister begins to talk to the Minister of Finance, wherever he is and whenever he comes back, because the bond to which the Prime Minister refers is for new businesses. I am talking about businesses which are typical of my area and of my province. I am talking about small businesses, many of them family firms which have always been able to operate successfully, but they just cannot carry these usurious, unconscionable interest rates.

REQUEST FOR TRIPARTITE CONFERENCE

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question to the Prime Minister is to ask whether, in view of the government's insane policy of double-digit inflation and double-digit interest rates, the Prime Minister will consider, when the Minister of Finance comes back, asking the Minister of Finance immediately to convene a meeting with ministers of finance from the provinces and bank officials so that these three components can get together and so that innocent small businessmen, farmers or mortgage holders will not be caught in the squeeze in which they are presently caught because of the fiscal policy of the government?

• (1420)

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the hon. member should read again the provisions concerning the small business development bond in the Income Tax Act. He would see that they apply not only to businesses wanting to expand, but also to those that are hard-pressed. The particular case to which he has referred falls in the latter category and could be considered in that context.

As concerns farmers, the Minister of Agriculture has mentioned on many occasions that the system of farm loans is very generous to the farmers. If there were an especially hard case, I would be happy to refer it to the banking association for special consideration.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EL SALVADOR—COMMITMENT TO HOLDING OF DEMOCRATIC ELECTIONS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In debate in this House yesterday the minister indicated that the government has confidence that the Duarte government in El Salvador has earned the right, to use his words, to our belief in their intention to carry through with democratic elections. Well, I have a series of photographs which clearly show security forces under the control of that government turning over to the death squad two individuals who were subsequently murdered.

Since this evidence was turned over to the Duarte government before Christmas, and since that government has not even begun an investigation into these murders involving its own security forces, what reason at all have we to believe in its commitment to democratic elections?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, we are not familiar with those particular photographs, but not only do we not defend atrocities committed by any side in El Salvador, we strongly condemn them. In fact the situation, as the hon. member well knows, is a very difficult one. There is no perfect side or perfect group in that country. All we have said is that there is more hope for democracy in the long run through acceptance of the offer of the government, through President Duarte, for free elections, which he is prepared to negotiate with the opposition parties, than through any other way. One of the sources of our information and support is the Catholic church in El Salvador.

PROPOSAL TO MAKE POLITICAL PARTY PETITIONS MANDATORY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the minister knows the government in El Salvador is not prepared to sit down and negotiate a peaceful settlement of that war, or to sit down with the Front to negotiate truly peaceful conditions which would provide a sensible, democratic election. If the minister does not know that, he knows nothing at all about what is going on in that country.

In that context I would like to ask a question concerning one of the ridiculous proposals that the Duarte government is putting forward. One of the government's proposals in El Salvador is a regulation requiring a new party, before it is registered on a ballot, to submit a petition bearing three thousand signatures. Since under current circumstances in El Salvador, signing a petition as a member of an opposition party is equivalent to signing your own death warrant, how can the minister conceivably accept a government which calls this a democratic process?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, it is not for the Leader of the New Democratic Party and I in the House of Commons of Canada to negotiate over the conditions of elections in El Salvador.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacGuigan: However, I will say to him that President Duarte has offered to negotiate with the opposition parties, and he well knows Guillermo Ungo, as does the Leader of the Opposition. He has offered to negotiate with him the condition of the elections. I am surprised that the Leader of the New Democratic Party can so easily dismiss what is considered everywhere in the world to be the foundation of democracy: free elections.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1425)

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, I have rarely heard such sophistry. I talked to President Duarte—the minister did not—and he said to me what he said publicly.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: What did he tell you?

Mr. Hees: Tell us about the election in Afghanistan.

Mr. Broadbent: Some people are interested in the truth in this situation. President Duarte at no time, either publicly or privately, said that he wanted to negotiate a peaceful solution with the Front. This is absolutely crucial if they are to have subsequent free elections. I repeat, the minister should know that.

POSITION TAKEN BY BAR ASSOCIATION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): In asking my last question of the minister I should like to point out that since the debate yesterday, according to news reports this morning 20 additional people have been murdered, decapitated by terrorist squads, and according to police reports it was by right-wing terrorist squads associated with the security forces. If the minister does not want to rely on my judgment—

Madam Speaker: I think the hon. member should just be about ready to ask a question.

Mr. Broadbent: I appreciate your point, Madam Speaker. I will come directly to the question. The bar association of El Salvador has recognized, in the presence of terrorism and in the absence of a free press, that a free election claim is a travesty. For this reason, the lawyers of El Salvador have refused to participate.

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Broadbent: Considering this fact, why does the minister claim to have better knowledge about the conditions for democracy in El Salvador than the lawyers in its bar association?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, in his lengthy preamble the hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party has effectively obscured the issue by talking about negotiation. He is urging what he has urged consistently. What he urged before he went to El Salvador, and what he still urges, is that there be a negotiated settlement in advance of the election, which presumably would bring various parties into the government. This is certainly not what the government of El Salvador is offering. It is offering to negotiate the form and the means of the elections, with observers from the OAS and perhaps from other countries.

Mr. MacKay: How about Cuba?

Mr. MacGuigan: It has offered to negotiate that with the opposition parties. It seems that is a fair offer for free elections.

The hon. member talked about the bar association of El Salvador. What about the church in El Salvador, which is a standing witness to the happenings there—

Mr. Broadbent: I will tell you what the representatives of the churches said. I talked with them.

Mr. MacGuigan: —and the position of the acting archbishop? His position is that the best path to democracy at the present time is to allow free elections to take place as the junta proposes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE ECONOMY

EFFECT OF HIGH INTEREST RATES

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. It returns to the economic policy of the government and the situation in Canada today as a result of high interest rates and of the total economic policy of the government. My question follows on questions directed to the Minister of Finance last week. It relates to the situation of many farmers and small businessmen, as reflected by high rates of bankruptcies and foreclosures. The real point of my question is to see whether or not the Prime Minister knows that within two or three months from now those high rates will be multiplied by a factor of four and that a vital section of our economy will be lost forever.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I would invite the hon. member to examine carefully the figures concerning businesses that go bankrupt in Canada. He is making alarmist comments which will not help to improve the situation. Last week, the Minister of Finance indicated that he and the Minister of State responsible for Small Businesses had had the opportunity to meet with representatives of Canadian banks and ask them, as we have said many times in the House, to give special consideration to some hard cases. This initiative has certainly been effective. As it was noted earlier, the small business development bond is aimed not only at businesses wanting to expand, but also at hard-pressed businesses.

Existing statutes contain provisions to help the farmers to obtain special interest rates as well as provisions to assist homeowners. We are going through a difficult period, but we are constantly reviewing the situation. If the Minister of Finance were to decide to take any further action, he would announce it at the proper time in this House.

SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BOND PROGRAM

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. While I respect the efforts of the Minister of State for Finance to explain the situation, I must tell him that the measures available under the bond program now require a company to be almost bankrupt. There is a limit of $500,000, which will not accommodate the problems mentioned by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants.

There is a young beef producer in Ontario by the name of Marvin Black who identifies the whole issue of the interest rate policy of this government in a way which no one to date has done. I tell you right now, Madam Speaker, that the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, in spite of what the Minister of Finance has discussed with the banks, is in the process of foreclosure, a foreclosure which will affect several generations and which will leave the father of the family destitute. This whole issue has been focused on a man who can be criticized for his management, along with banks and governments for their policies.

I am asking the Prime Minister to undertake before the end of this session to discuss with the Minister of Finance the options available to open the small business development bond program so that it can be used properly in a way which will accommodate the difficulties faced by major segments of our economy.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is referring to a particular case—

Mr. Clark: For the benefit of inherited wealth!

Mr. Trudeau: Why don't you ask questions?

Mr. Bussières: If the Leader of the Opposition would take the trouble to listen, Madam Speaker, he could set an example for the members behind him and show some leadership.

The hon. member is referring to a specific case and using it to draw general conclusions. As I have indicated, the Minister of Finance has already stated in the House that he is looking into the situation with the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism and that he would take specific action if the situation so required.

[English]

SUBJECT OF CABINET DISCUSSIONS

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister, who is aware of the serious effects that high interest rates have had on the farming community. He is also aware of the fact that there have been many bankruptcies and many farmers have had to dispose of their assets to meet their commitments. I know that the Prime Minister met with his cabinet at a special meeting, which I believe was held at the weekend. He also meets with the cabinet weekly. Can the right hon. gentleman advise this House whether or not he has discussed this serious problem with his cabinet colleagues? Can he also tell us if any plans or programs are being formulated to alleviate this situation, and when will these plans be announced?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, if the hon. member refers to Hansard he will find that the Minister of State for Finance just answered that very question.

AMENDMENT OF FARM CREDIT CORPORATION ACT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Prime Minister, who just gave a nothing answer. Can the Prime Minister advise us whether or not the government has any intention of bringing in amendments to the Farm Credit Corporation Act? Specifically, would his government consider amending the Farm Credit Corporation Act in order that retiring farmers might be allowed to invest the capital gains portion of their farm sale proceeds in the Farm Credit Corporation at low interest rates, on the condition that capital gains tax and income tax be waived, thus ensuring the Farm Credit Corporation a source of cheap funds which it could lend out to its borrowers at reasonable rates?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member refers to my answer as being a nothing answer. I point out to him that it was a referral answer. I referred to the lengthy answer given by the minister a moment ago, probably while the hon. member was rehearsing his question. That is the simple answer—it was given to him before he posed his question.

In so far as the second question is concerned, I understand that it is a representation such as the Minister of Finance often receives. He will consider it, as he considers all other representations. I thank the hon. member for his ingenuity.

AGRICULTURE

SUPERMARKET BEEF PRICES—REQUEST FOR ACTION TO PREVENT RIP-OFFS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Yesterday an Ontario cattlemen's group charged that supermarkets have tripled their mark-ups on beef over the past five years, keeping consumer prices high even though farm prices have dropped. The minister should be aware of this situation since his own department had been reporting the date in its food price surveys. What action is the minister prepared to take to prevent processors and chain stores from continually increasing this rip-off of producers and consumers?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I am sure the hon. member is aware of the study which Agriculture Canada carries on and the publication of figures concerning food prices. I would even dispute the figures which were reported to have been used by one of the representatives at that meeting. But they are concerned, as are we, and I am at least gratified to see what the farmers want to overcome their problem.

Mr. Althouse: Madam Speaker, I remind the minister that just from 1979 to 1981 the mark-up figure has doubled, if one looks at the recent publication.

PROGRAM FOR PRODUCERS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, the minister has been a strong advocate of marketing boards over the years. He has argued that marketing boards provide more equal bargaining power to producers and that they can be operated to assure consumers a product at a fair price. Although we have heard about his support over these many years, and in spite of having the full and substantial resources of his department at his command, he has never produced a plan or a proposal for the producers of Canada. Does the minister now have such a program ready? When will he make it public? I ask this since he has been the long-term advocate of marketing boards in this government.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the National Farm Products Marketing Board has met from time to time with different producer groups in Canada who have requested information about the options available to them. We in this party do not believe in imposing upon a group any kind of plan or program for marketing products.

I am sure that the hon. member is aware that there are more farmers making those requests now, in the last two or three months, than there has ever been since I have been Minister of Agriculture. This is so since much opposition came from many different sectors of the beef producing industry, in particular the red meat producing industry. That situation is swinging around and changing rapidly because those producers want security and proper compensation for the products they produce. They will receive full co-operation when they come forward with anything.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

CANADIAN CONTENT OF CONTRACTS

Mr. Peter Lang (Kitchener): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Supply and Services. Now that Contact 81 has been completed, will the minister indicate what steps he will take to ensure that contractors with the Canadian government, both private and public, are subcontracting to Canadian companies who are capable of fulfilling their requirements?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question. I am mindful of the fact that he represents an area wherein there are a large number of Canadian manufacturers. I am pleased that he has brought Contact 81 to the attention of the public, a program which has permitted us to identify close to 4,000 new Canadian sources, new Canadian manufacturers, for some of the major suppliers of the Canadian government. It comes at a very opportune time in view of the joint announcement made by myself and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce about our new source development fund which will again enhance the creation of new Canadian manufacturing capacity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

BEEF PRICES AND SUPERMARKET PROFITS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, my question is supplementary to the one asked by the hon. member from Saskatchewan, although mine is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

It is abundantly clear, certainly to a good many people in this country, that marketing boards for livestock or beef cattle would not be the answer to the problems which the industry faces at the present time. These are problems which have been brought on by high interest rates and this government's inaction.

● (1440)

I would like to ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs whether his department is looking at or will be looking at the charge that supermarkets are making undue profits at the expense basically of the producer and the consumer.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): Madam Speaker, I must tell the hon. member that the officials of my department are now studying all those questions.

[English]

Mr. Murta: Madam Speaker, I did not quite catch the minister's answer. I will endeavour to get a clearer answer from the minister and maybe one not quite as flippant.

INVESTIGATION OF CHARGES

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Is the minister's department going to look into the charges that have been echoed in the press in this country that supermarkets in various parts of the country, and western Canada is a good example, have been making undue profits at the expense of the consumer and the producer of beef in this country?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): Madam Speaker, I replied that my department is looking into all those aspects. If the hon. member has specific accusations to make, he ought to do so rather than ask me an insignificant and meaningless question.

NATIONAL SECURITY

INFORMATION GIVEN IN NEWSPAPER ARTICLES—REQUEST FOR RELEASE OF GOVERNMENT FILES

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I would like to get back to my questions of yesterday with the Prime Minister respecting some of these older security cases, a knowledge and understanding of which will be essential for the members of this House if we are soon to discuss the future of the security service. Due to what I believe to be inspired and selective leaks from within the government itself, there have been a number of press references lately to ex-Ambassador John Watkins and some of his problems. Knowing, as I think the Prime Minister does—the Solicitor General does in any event—that there are a number of investigative reports and documentations still available within the government, will he agree that it is rather scandalous that the Canadian public have to learn about these events through newspaper articles only? Why in the world can the government not start releasing some of these old files that are at least ten years old when they will obviously serve the public interest and the interests of members of this House?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs dealt particularly with the question of Ambassador Watkins in an answer he gave a few weeks ago when he stated that the government and the security service had no cause to believe that Mr. Watkins had in any way assisted any foreign power in security matters. This being the belief and knowledge of the government, I fail to see how the public interest is served by allegations about Mr. Watkins' private life when he was an ambassador. Maybe the hon. member opposite has a different view of what the public interest is. I see no advancement to the public or the common weal by this kind of story. It may titillate the hon. member, but surely that is not the purpose of publishing personal data about people.

The point is, and I made it to the former solicitor general, if he has cause to believe the contrary, if he has cause to believe that the minister has been misled in some way, in stating that there is no evidence to incriminate Mr. Watkins, surely he should stand up and make that evidence public or else give it in confidence to the security service. That is the position of this government.

ALLEGATION THAT CANADIAN OFFICIAL WAS RECOMMENDED BY FORMER BRITISH SECURITY AGENT, KIM PHILBY

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my purpose in attempting to bring this matter to the attention of the Prime Minister, who I am sure is quite aware of some of the problems, is the existence of some of the administrative and procedural problems and lack of standards that still exist within the government and within the Department of External Affairs in respect of the appointment of some of the people to some of our foreign missions, and especially the infiltration of high government offices by people who have a loyalty to a foreign service rather than to our own. That is the nub of the matter.

For example, will the Prime Minister comment on the allegations and rumours that freely abound that one Leslie James Bennett was appointed to the security service of this country, and eventually retired from that security service, because he was highly recommended to the Canadian government by a British security agent named Kim Philby? That is the type of allegation I would like the Prime Minister to clear up.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I do believe we have the question.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, in his preamble the hon. member indicated or alleged that there were leaks presently within the security service, the RCMP or somewhere in my ministry. I would challenge him on that. The statements that have been made of a nature implying a knowledge of security service matters have been attributed, in press clippings that I have seen, to the hon. member himself. What I would like to know is whether the leader of his party, the former Prime Minister, has authorized him to make these statements notwithstanding his oath of office as a Privy Councillor.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

MANPOWER

NON-EMPLOYMENT OF STUDENTS IN ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, last week was national hire a student week. I am sure most members of this House have heard the commercials from employment and immigration. If the minister is so dedicated to student employment training on the job for our young Canadians, why did he not hire students to do the commercials?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, that is a question I will take up with the public affairs people who prepared the ads.

Mr. McDermid: With respect, I suggest that is another example of the minister saying one thing and doing another.

PAYMENTS MADE TO ACTOR AND ACTRESS

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Will the Minister of Employment and Immigration table in the House the amount of money Jane Eastwood was paid to do that commercial, one of the highest paid actresses in Canada, and the actor in the commercial, so that we in the House can find out exactly how many jobs were taken away from students in Canada?

Mr. McLean: It is just like he is doing to the women.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, what really is important in the hon. member's question is whether the Canada Student Employment Service provides the very important means of students getting jobs. I wish to inform the hon. member that this year we have the highest record of placements of any year until now, which proves that the program is working even better, perhaps with the help of those ads.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

BOARDING OF CANADIAN FISHING VESSEL BY U.S. COAST GUARD

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. Ten days ago the Canadian fishing vessel Sable Mist was illegally stopped and boarded by the U.S. Coast Guard's Storis over ten miles inside Canadian waters. To date there has been no formal statement, either by the Secretary of State for External Affairs or any member of the government to the U.S. State Department, or to this House. Since in fact the head of the U.S. command in Alaska has confirmed that the boarding was illegal, will the Prime Minister tell this House why no action has been taken to date regarding this matter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I will have to defer to one of the ministers for a detailed answer, but my understanding is that the Canadian government did protest at the appropriate level, that there were discussions between the two government representatives, and that the Americans undertook not to repeat such action.

Mr. Fulton: I can confirm to the Prime Minister that no formal action has been taken by External Affairs with the U.S. State Department. I think it is important that it be done since that boundary was ratified between Canada and the United States in 1903.

PROTECTION FOR CANADIAN FISHERMEN

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): If during the coming fishing season or any future fishing season Canadian fishing vessels are interfered with by U.S. vessels at or south of 54°-40′ or the A-B line, or the Dixon Entrance boundary as it is known, will the Prime Minister take all necessary actions to protect Canadian fishermen and Canadian sovereignty in that area?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, it would seem that the hon. member is really confirming my answer by pretending the contrary when he says that his information is that no action was taken by External Affairs. I said action by appropriate government officials. My understanding is that it was done by authorities responsible for the coastguard or the fisheries.

COMMUNICATIONS

EXTENSION OF DEADLINE FOR APPLICANTS APPLYING FOR CANCOM DISTRIBUTION LICENCES

Mr. Bruce Lonsdale (Timiskaming): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Communications. As the minister knows, today, June 17, is the proposed deadline for applications for terrestrial distribution of the Cancom television satellite package whereby distributors and municipalities in remote, rural and underserviced areas must apply for licences from the CRTC under the Broadcasting Act, and for Department of Communications technical certificates under the Radio Act.

In view of the fact that small communities have shown a strong interest in being their own distributors and wish to purchase the equipment and the Cancom package directly, would the minister allow an extension of the Department of Communications deadline, and would he ask the Canadian Radio and Television Commission to extend their June 17 deadline for processing the initial applications until no later than June 30 in order to allow small communities and municipalities extra time to discuss this Cancom package with their town councils and taxpayers?

Hon. Francis Fox (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question. It is indeed, a most important question for most Canadians living in remote or underserviced communities. As far as the Department of Communications is concerned, I am more than willing to extend the deadline to June 30 of this year. As far as the CRTC is concerned, I will be pleased to bring the hon. member's recommendation to the attention of the CRTC. I have already done so and I would hope to have an answer for the hon. member sometime tomorrow.

ENERGY

EXTENSION OF NATURAL GAS PIPELINE TO NOVA SCOTIA

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I have a question on the topic of energy economic development for the Prime Minister and it is with regard to the commitment he made in January, 1980, for a natural gas pipeline to Nova Scotia. He will be aware that there are labour developments in Quebec which are causing the schedule to be disrupted. He will also recall that in the House, in answer to my friend from Halifax, the minister of energy gave a commitment that, if necessary, a bill will be brought into the House as a matter of government policy to make certain this pipeline which he promised would, indeed, be built.

Will the Prime Minister now confirm that this commitment he gave still stands, and will he go one step further as a matter of government or national policy and make a commitment that an LNG site in the Strait of Canso area, which possesses so many attributes for that development, will be selected so that a petrochemical industry, which will provide great economic impetus to Nova Scotia, can be established in that area?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the National Energy Program did provide for the construction of a gas pipeline towards the maritime provinces. We stated that it was a project of national interest and the government is still in favour of seeing this project through. The pipeline construction project in Quebec is behind schedule as a result of a welders' strike, but I hope the government of Quebec will be able to end that strike within a short time. As to the extension of the gas pipeline towards the maritime provinces, my hon. colleague knows that the National Energy Board has completed its hearings on that subject, and we are waiting for its report with respect to the precise conditions concerning the extension of that project towards the maritime provinces.

[English]

FULFILMENT OF COMMITMENT

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the minister's answer, but I want to ask him this. In view of the unanimous support from so many levels of government and from so many public officials who are influenced, I am sure, by the great strategic and natural advantages of the Medford Point site in the Strait of Canso area, will the minister of energy, again pursuant to his commitment as a national policy for energy for eastern Canada and to fulfil the Prime Minister's commitment, go one step further and indicate his support for that particular site, so that Nova Scotia will not just be a keeper of pipelines but can get feedstock for a petrochemical industry which will provide a great deal of economic development for that province? I am sure the Minister of Regional Economic Development will agree that this is one area where Nova Scotia has great potential for development.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend surely knows that there are two questions to be answered with regard to the point he raises; one, whether the Arctic pilot project will go ahead and, secondly, if it goes ahead what would be the best site for a liquid natural gas plant. These two questions are before the National Energy Board. The National Energy Board has heard witnesses and will eventually make public its conclusions. At that time the government will consider its report. It would be not only premature but totally improper, either for me or for the government, to act or take a position until the Energy Board has reported on this very important issue.

I would also bring to the hon. member's attention the fact that we are confident natural gas will also become available from off Sable Island. It may well be that there is a possibility of a petrochemical industry in the maritimes on the basis of the natural gas that will come from the Canada lands off Nova Scotia.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

MANAGEMENT AND FUNDING

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Finance I direct my question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. The Minister of National Health and Welfare indicated that the Canada Pension Plan was under review. Would the Prime Minister indicate to the House what reform is contemplated to ensure proper management and funding of the Canada Pension Plan? Will he indicate to the House also what steps are being taken by his government to ensure that private pension funds are being properly managed?

Mr. Doug Frith (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, in response with regard to the Canada Pension Plan, the deputy minister of Finance was before the parliamentary committee last week and pointed out that there will be some changes to the Canada Pension Plan, and he expects that those changes should take place after the year 1985. My understanding is that at the present time there is a committee working with the Minister of Finance and his provincial counterparts, reviewing this whole area of CPP.

SPECIFICS OF PROPOSED CHANGES

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, will the parliamentary secretary be a little more precise and indicate to the House what specific changes are being contemplated? Is the government looking for more participation by way of funding from individual contributors, or what specifics are we looking at?

Mr. Doug Frith (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, those changes have not been finalized. I think I replied earlier last fall, with regard to the Canada Pension Plan, that since its inception it was realized there would have to be changes in the contribution rates somewhere in the decade of the 1980s. As a result, this committee was set up in 1977 and it has been reviewing this whole process since that time. I would assume that once negotiations have been completed there will be some answer in the House by the Minister of Finance.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

COMPLETION OF HOUSE CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, the money available to Indian bands for the construction of new housing has always been short of what has been needed so that many Indian houses have never been completed. Now the department is requiring Indian bands to guarantee that they will be able to finish houses before any funding is released. Did the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development make a commitment to Treasury Board that Indian bands would be able to complete construction of new housing with the present funding, when this only amounts to about half the money required? If he did not make this commitment, from where did this ridiculous policy come?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is aware of the situation, that for some time there was a subsidy of approximately $12,500 for each Indian home. That was the situation prior to about a year ago. This government, in terms of trying to be of assistance, upped that subsidy by approximately another $10,000 to an average of $22,500, give or take $100. That is the situation as it applies now to Indian housing across the country. Might I say that this was welcomed generally in the Indian communities across the country, that is, the additional subsidy, and it also meant a fairly substantial additional financial commitment by this government to Indian communities in Canada.

RELEASE OF FUNDS TO INDIAN BANDS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, the minister knows that the estimated cost for even basic housing on Indian reserves is approximately $37,500, and there is no program in place yet for the labour component. The construction season is moving on, and unless funding is released we are going to lose that season and the necessary Indian houses are not going to be built. Will the minister make a commitment to release funding to Indian bands for houses in accordance with the general principles of accountability which he accepted for other funding last summer?

● (1500)

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I will have to examine the particulars of what the hon. member is talking about, because certainly in talking to representatives of Indian communities fairly extensively in the last month or so, I have found that there is an acknowledgement that funds are being released in accordance with allocations for the number of homes on each reserve. The Indians are in receipt of the money. The housing is going up. If the hon. member has a particular reference to where this is not the case, I would be more than pleased to examine it with him.

RAILWAYS

NOISE FROM CN HUMP YARD IN EDMONTON

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Having regard to the many squeals and shrieks caused by the shunting of railway cars, which are upsetting the health of the worthy citizens of Edmonton North—I have written the minister a letter in this regard, and I am quite sure he is aware of the matter—can the minister tell us whether he is planning to move the CN hump yard or what he is planning to do about the noise between 87th Street and 97th Street and 127th Avenue?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am aware in detail of, and very much acquainted with, a number of relocations taking place in Canada at this time. There is one in Regina, for example, and there are others elsewhere. I am not very well acquainted with this one. May I beg for a meeting with the hon. member immediately after the question period so that he can give me all the information?

OTTAWA CENTRE FREIGHT TRAINS

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Madam Speaker, I have one short supplementary question. Ottawa Centre is not my constituency. Ottawa Centre does not have a hump yard, but freight trains go through the constituency between two o'clock and three o'clock in the morning. I wonder if there is any way by which the minister can see that the trains go through the riding during regular hours, such as between eleven o'clock in the morning and five o'clock in the afternoon.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, we will do our best to accommodate the hon. member's sleep when he is in this area.

VOTING ON AMENDMENTS TO EXCISE TAX ACT AND THE EXCISE ACT, BILL C-57

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, after consultations with my colleagues on both sides there is an agreement that, notwithstanding any Standing Order or other order of this House, if the government business called on June 18, 1981, is Bill C-57—and at this time it is our intention to call that bill tomorrow—to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to provide for a revenue tax in respect of petroleum and gas, no private members' business shall be taken up on that day and, at 9 p.m. on that day, proceedings then under consideration shall be interrupted and the yeas and nays shall be called on all questions necessary to dispose of the report stage of Bill C-57, to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to provide for a revenue tax in respect of petroleum and gas; and if any division is demanded on any such question, the bells shall be rung for not more than 15 minutes and shall be dispensed with on any divisions required thereafter.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, it is my understanding that this order is there on the basis that it is in fact the intention of the government to call Bill C-57. The government House leader is nodding his agreement, and in that case this is in accordance with our discussion and is in order.

Mr. Knowles: Yes, Madam Speaker, we also agree.

Madam Speaker: Does the House agree to the proposed order?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: So ordered.

PRIVILEGE

MR. LAWRENCE—ALLEGED IMPUTATION OF MOTIVES IN RAISING QUESTIONS RESPECTING AMBASSADOR JOHN WATKINS

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I believe I have a question of privilege today in that during question period a motivation in certain questions I asked of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) respecting the so-called John Watkins case was imputed to me by the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan).

Over the last few months especially there has been a number of press commentaries relating to statements made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacGuigan) regarding ex-ambassador Watkins and by ex-commissioner Kelly of the RCMP on at least one nationally televised program in respect of Mr. Watkins, in several articles which have appeared in national newspapers in this country. I made reference in my questioning to the Prime Minister to one particular set of articles which appeared approximately a week ago in the Toronto Star, a two-part newspaper article, I think, which appeared on a Friday and on a Saturday.

In my reference to these particular articles I said that I had reason to believe—and I reaffirm it before Your Honour and the House here today—that that was an inspired and selected leak from government indicating the part played by the RCMP security service in the unfortunate and perhaps tragic death of ex-ambassador Watkins.

Madam Speaker: Order. I believe the hon. member is continuing to argue the matter he brought up in the question period. If his question of privilege relates to imputing of motives, I might offer to look into the blues again, but it did not occur to me at the time that the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) was speaking in the House that he did impute motives to the hon. member, but I will listen to his argument. However, it should be very short, and I ask him not to argue the case and not to continue to give the House his interpretation of some of the facts.

Mr. Lawrence: Madam Speaker, I am sure the Chair will recognize that to lay properly the groundwork for what I consider an accusation made in the House today that I breached an oath, the facts are required for the proper understanding of the Chair in this matter.

However, as I heard the Solicitor General today—and if he did not mean this, then I am sure he will apologize to me and withdraw the imputation which I clearly heard today—the imputation was that the only references he had read in the popular press were references I had made in respect of ex-ambassador Watkins. First of all, I cannot believe that, if that is what he said today, but, second, he said that in making any reference to ex-ambassador Watkins I was breaching my oath. I am not too sure which of the oaths I have taken the minister indicated I was breaching but, in any event, he indicated I broke an oath—

Mr. Jarvis: Privy Councillor oath.

Mr. Lawrence: —presumably the Privy Councillor's oath—by referring to these matters. I want to assure the Chair and the minister—and I would like him to withdraw that imputation or correct me if my hearing was not right today—that I have broken no oath in that information which came to me as a Privy Councillor has been released by me up until now, nor do I intend to release any information which came to me as a Privy Councillor.

Any information on this matter or related matters has come to me from far different sources than internal Canadian government sources. The prime minister of the day may want me either to put up or shut up. I can say to him very clearly that unless the government starts putting up, I do not intend to shut up on this matter.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I would like to read the "blues" myself because I distinctly recall saying or conceding that a considerable amount of speculation came from other sources. I certainly do concede that, but a great amount of the speculation and statements about what information there is within the possession of the security service or the Ministry of the Solicitor General has come from the hon. member and has been attributed to him in the media.

Mr. Lawrence: He is repeating it.

Mr. Kaplan: Today we had another one. The hon. member indicated he put forward some possible contents of a job application by Mr. Bennett. I have never seen any statement of that in any public place. I have not read the job application of Mr. Bennett—

Mr. Lawrence: Neither have I.

Mr. Kaplan: —but he has made a statement about who provided a letter of reference for him.

• (1510)

He was for a period of time in charge of these records and could have called for any of them. As I say, I would like to read the "blues" before commenting further on the sources of his information.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, on the same question of privilege, what the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) has seen is not in question; what the Solicitor General has said is very much in question. We on this side of the House believe we heard him impute the motives of the former solicitor general of Canada, the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence), and impute my motives. We believe we heard him accuse the former solicitor general of breach of an oath, and accuse me of the sanctioning of the breach of an oath. We believe that is what we heard.

We, too, want to see the record of the debate in this House and I am sure that if our recollection is correct, the Solicitor General will have the courage and the respect for this place to stand in his place and withdraw those accusations. If he does not, I serve notice now, Madam Speaker, of my intention to follow this as a matter of privilege after a review of the record.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, in my opinion the Leader of the Opposition is too sensitive. The Solicitor General did not accuse anyone, but there is one thing we can see, namely that so far every member who has risen on this question would rather check the blues and see exactly what it is all about. Under the circumstances, I would suggest that it is rather easy to solve the problem. It is very simply a matter of checking the blues and everybody will see that the hon. member is brewing a storm in a teacup.

[English]

Madam Speaker: To clarify things a bit, I do not think we have grounds here for a question of privilege but there is certainly a point of order which has been brought up. Imputing a motive falls under the heading of unparliamentary language. We would have to look at the blues to see whether there was anything unparliamentary in what was uttered in the House in the course of the exchange during question period. I will look at them and I am sure that if I find there is something unparliamentary, and if the minister after looking at the blues feels he has been unparliamentary even before I point it out to him, he will do what is necessary under our rules.

There was an accusation of something having been done, the imputing of motives. However, I think we should look at the precise language in order to make up our minds about this.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. COSSITT—MADAM SPEAKER'S COMMENT ON MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order in regard to matters raised under Standing Order 43 in this House. It has been my understanding, and I seek clarification on this point, that the criteria by which such a motion is measured are whether it is of urgent and pressing necessity, whether or not it is couched in unparliamentary language, or things of that nature. However, I was naturally under the impression, as I am sure all members are, that the Chair, who I am sure will agree with this, is neutral on the merits of the motion. It is up to members of the House to decide after the motion is put whether they consent or not.

Now, Madam Speaker, I would like to ask clarification because today, when I moved a motion under Standing Order 43, if I recall correctly, and I admit I am paraphrasing because the blues are not available as yet, you stated something to the effect that although you could vouch for the fact that the contents contained in my standing order were not accurate, nevertheless you would put the motion. It would seem to me, Madam Speaker, if I am paraphrasing you accurately, that whether or not the House had given its consent is irrelevant. It means in effect they had been told by the Chair that my motion contains incorrect facts which would mean, therefore, that the House was being influenced on how it should vote.

I would like to seek clarification on whether the Chair is in a position to do that. It seems to me you would not want to be in that position in that the Chair was in effect arguing, as a member opposite might do or as a member on my left might do, that I was wrong and thereby entering into debate with a member. Therefore I am seeking clarification as to why that happened, or just what did happen.

Madam Speaker: Well, I would tell the hon. member that the two of us were wrong. First of all, I think the hon. member knows that matters pertaining to the administration of the House which are under the jurisdiction of the Speaker should be dealt with in a different way than matters dealt with in the House precisely because the Speaker cannot enter into debate with any member of the House, or explain or comment on any of the motions put forward by a member. So in this respect I was sort of taken aback by the content of that motion because I knew some of the facts perhaps could be disputed, and I would have preferred to discuss them with the hon. member before entering the House. I think in the future that is the course the hon. member should follow in matters pertaining to the jurisdiction of the Speaker.

Secondly, I was wrong in making that comment and I do apologize to the House. As soon as I made it I realized I was expressing an opinion, something that I should not do. However, the House dealt with the motion in the usual manner. I apologize to the hon. member for my comment but he can follow his own conscience or directive with regard to the fact that he brought these things up in the House when they should have been brought up in another place.

CMHC—RRAP ALLOCATIONS

Question No. 251—Mr. Herbert:

1. By province, what amount in the current fiscal year has been allocated by CMHC for the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program?

2. Have all the available funds been spent or committed?

3. Are any applications presently outstanding or have any been refused due to a shortage of funding and, if so, how many?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): I am advised by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows: 1. See list below.

2. No.

3. The budget available under the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program does not permit all eligible applications to be processed. Funds are allocated on a priority basis and some applicants may have to wait until next year to receive assistance. Administration of the program is undertaken in most instances by municipalities and CMHC does not have data on the number of applications deferred.

Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program (RRAP) 1981 Budget Allocation

Newfoundland	10,000
Prince Edward Island	5,200
Nova Scotia	12,700
New Brunswick	10,300
Quebec	58,700
Ontario	11,700

Manitoba	4,100
Saskatchewan	8,600
Alberta	7,300
British Columbia	13,300
Yukon	200
Northwest Territories	300
Total *	142,400

* This total does not include unallocated funds.

CMHC—ACQUISITION OF HOUSING UNITS

Question No. 2,404—Mr. Herbert:

1. For the past five years, in total and to the latest date for which the information is available, what was the difference between the cost of acquisition of housing units by the Canada Mortgage Housing Corporation and the amount obtained in subsequent sales?

2. What was the net cost to repair and maintain the units during the period they were held by the corporation?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): I am informed by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows: 1. The Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation portfolio consists of units acquired by the Mortgage Insurance Fund (MIF) and the repossessed units previously financed with uninsured CMHC direct loans. The difference between the cost of acquisition of both the MIF and corporation-owned properties and the amount obtained in subsequent sales is as follows:

Profits or (losses) in $000's:

($274,234)	($31,445)	($1,554)	$2,151	$1,907

2. The net costs (in $000's) to repair and maintain the units were as follows:

1980	1979	1978	1977	1976

CMHC—REAL ESTATE PORTFOLIO

By province, what is the number of housing units in the possession of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation and what number are to be offered for sale within the next year?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): I am informed by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows: the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation portfolio consists of Mortgage Insurance Fund (MIF) units and of repossessed units previously financed with uninsured CMHC direct loans. As at March 31, 1981, the MIF and corporation-owned inventory, by province, was as shown in the list below.

The anticipated sales for 1981 have been established as follows:

	Sales Target
M.I.F.	14,600 units
Corporation-owned	5,150 units
Total	19,750 units

CMHC Housing Unit Portfolio
as at March 31, 1981

Province	Number of Units
	MIF	Corporation	Total
Nfld.	240	159	399
N.S.	117	146	263
P.E.I.	61	3	64
N.B.	233	1,085	1,318
Ontario	9,270	2,516	11,786
Quebec	3,969	1,658	5,627
Manitoba	1,575	218	1,793
Saskatchewan	80	59	139
Alberta	369	456	825
British Columbia	217	895	1,112
Yukon and N.W.T.	111	214	325
Total	16,242	7,409	23,651

CMHC—ACQUISITION DELAY PERIOD

Question No. 2,408—Mr. Herbert:

What is the average delay period per housing unit between the initial default of the owner and the final acquisition by the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation of properties that have insured mortgages financed by the chartered banks?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): I am informed by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows: with respect to claims paid to chartered banks for the 12-month period ending March 31, 1981, the average time lag from the date a borrower defaults on payment until title is conveyed to CMHC under the terms of the mortgage loan insurance policies, is 414 calendar days.

DVA—DISABILITY PENSION APPLICATIONS

Question No. 2,468—Mr. McKenzie:

1. How many applications for pension are currently (a) awaiting hearings by the Canadian Pension Commission (b) filed with the Bureau of Pensions Advocates?

2. (a) What is the average period of time required to process an application for pension from time of receipt by the bureau until presentation before the commission (b) what is the step-by-step procedure at the commission's head office for the processing of applications from time of receipt from a pensions advocate until presentation before the commission?

3. How many applications for pension are currently (a) awaiting processing at the commisison's head office (b) awaiting consideration by the commission's medical advisory board?

4. What is the average period of time required for members of the medical advisory board to review the medical facts of an application for pension?

5. What is the current strength of the medical advisory board and what are the names of the members of the board?

6. (a) What schedule of priorities exists in the allocation of hearings for pension applications (b) how and by whom is the schedule determined?

7. How many appeals from decisions of the commission to assessment boards are currently on file and, in each case, what was the date of the original application and what was the date of the commission's decision?

8. (a) How many appeals from decisions of the commission to entitlement boards are currently on file (b) what was the date of the original application and what was the date of the commission's decision?

9. How many (a) assessment board hearings (b) entitlement board hearings are scheduled for the current year?

10. How many appeals from decisions of the commission, including assessment and entitlement boards, are (a) currently before the Pension Review Board (b) scheduled for hearings before the Pension Review Board for the fiscal year 1981-82?

11. (a) What is the average period of time incurred from the receipt of notice of appeal to the hearing of the appeal by the Pension Review Board (b) what schedule of priorities exists in the allocation of hearings of appeals before the board (c) how and by whom is the scheduling determined (d) what is the average period of time incurred from the receipt of notice of appeal to the promulgation of a decision by the board (e) are the board's hearings restricted to the consideration of documentary evidence only or is oral testimony permitted?

12. From 1979 to 1980, how many decisions of the Canadian Pension Commission were upheld by the Pension Review Board and how many were reversed?

13. What is the current strength of the Pension Review Board and what are the 1981-82 salaries of its members?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence):

1. (a) As at March 31, 1981, there were 4,956 applications for pensions currently awaiting hearings by the Canadian Pension Commission. This includes 765 applications for dependants, applications from widows whose spouses had been in receipt of pension at the rate of 48 per cent or more at the time of death, applications for proportionate pension, and applications for funeral and burial grants that were being processed at that date.

   (b) As at March 31, 1981—2532.

2. (a) During the year April 1, 1980, to March 31, 1981, the Bureau of Pensions Advocates submitted 6562 applications for pension, of which 4401 or 67 per cent were submitted within six months of initial contact with the applicants. The others were delayed because of difficulties in obtaining supporting evidence.

   (b) (i) The application is date-stamped on receipt because, in the event that the decision is favorable, retroactive pension may be paid to the date of receipt of the application, or three years, whichever is the later.

   (ii) The application is forwarded to the medical-clerical section of the medical advisory branch for examination and review.

   (iii) If a medical diagnosis indicating that a disability exists has accompanied the application, the application is entered into the process control system. The application is then acknowledged by the communications division of the Canadian Pension Commission.

   (iv) If no medical report indicating that indeed a disability does exist has accompanied the application, the application is sent to the appropriate district office of the Canadian Pension Commission (CPC) in order that the applicant may be examined to determine if in fact he does have the disability, and if so, to report on the extent of that disability. When this examination is complete, the application is returned to the medical-clerical section of the medical advisory branch so that particulars of the application may be entered into the process control system and acknowledgement of the application forwarded.

   (v) After acknowledgement, the veteran's file and application are returned to the medical-clerical section of CPC for preparation of a case précis which involves extensive research of all service records and medical records that can be obtained relating to the veteran's claim.

   (vi) Additional information may be required from medical specialists. If such is the case, this information will be requested from the veteran and his representative, and when received, will be incorporated in the preparation of his case précis.

   (vii) The file and précis are reviewed by a medical adviser who prepares a medical comment.

   (viii) The complete file, together with case précis and medical comment is then passed to a commissioner of CPC, who will review the application, case précis, medical comment, etc., and prepare a proposed commission decision. This proposed decision will be reviewed by two other commissioners of CPC, whose agreement is needed in all respect before it can be approved as a commission decision. If there is disagreement which cannot be resolved by the commissioners concerned, the claim is referred to a larger group of commissioners, who meet regularly for that purpose. When the decision is approved it is signed and passed to the communications division of CPC for promulgation.

   (ix) When promulgated, the veteran is made aware of his rights of appeal if the decision is unfavourable.

   (x) If the decision is favourable, in whole or in part, the appropriate district office of CPC will call the veteran in for a medical examination to report on the degree of disability. In most cases the senior pension medical examiner in the district office will recommend the level of disability assessment in accordance with the instructions contained in the table of disabilities maintained by CPC, as required by the Pension Act.

   (xi) The recommendation for degree of assessment is then forwarded to the head office of CPC, where it is reviewed by a medical adviser to determine that it conforms with the existing medical policy of the Pension Commission, and that similar disabilities are uniformly assessed across Canada in accordance with the table of disabilities.

(xii) If the medical advisory branch concurs in the recommended assessment of the disability, the file and the recommended assessment are then passed to a commissioner for consideration.

(xiii) Following approval by a commissioner of the Pension Commission, the file is passed to the communications division for promulgation of the degree of assessment of disability to the veteran.

(xiv) The file is then passed to the accounting division of the Department of Veterans Affairs for the necessary financial and pay action.

3. (a) See 1 (a) above.

(b) The commission does not have a medical advisory board. It is served by a medical advisory branch. There are approximately 4000 applications for pension currently in various stages of preparation by the commission's medical advisory branch.

4. From the time an application is first received at the head office of CPC, until it is passed by the medical advisory branch to the commission for decision, approximately 9 and one half months elapse.

5. The current strength of the medical advisory branch is 61. Of this number, 16 are medical doctors. The names of the medical advisers are:

Chief Medical Adviser—Dr. J. Mutch

Deputy Chief Medical Adviser—vacant

Dr. J. Carberry	Dr. E. R. Keirstead	Dr. D. M. Muir
Dr. J. F. M. Cullen	Dr. M. G. Kinghorn	Dr. J. M. O'Brien
Dr. J. A. Forrester	Dr. H. A. J. Lister	Dr. M. Panneton
Dr. W. A. Howell	Dr. F. J. McEwan	Dr. A. J. Pineau
Dr. R. F. Jackson		Dr. E. Pollonetsky
Dr. N. Kanjilal

6. (a) The following categories of claims receive the greatest priority in the consideration of applications for pension.

(i) Applications received from World War I veterans.

(ii) Applications received from widows of veterans.

(iii) Applications made by veterans who are in severe medical or social distress.

All others are dealt with on a first in, first out basis in the respective medical specialty division.

(b) The schedule of priorities listed above has been determined by the chairman of the Canadian Pension Commission.

7. As at March 31, 1981, there were 922 appeals from decisions of the commission to assessment boards currently on file waiting to be heard. Of these, 251 cases have been certified by the applicant or his representative, as being ready to be heard, 187 are with the applicant or his representative awaiting certification of readiness to proceed, and 484 are awaiting preparation of the documentation. Because of the volume and the time involved it is not readily possible to identify the date of the original application for an assessment board in each case. Decisions have not yet been rendered on these appeals.

8. (a) As of March 31, 1981, there were 1,929 appeals from decisions of the commission to entitlement boards currently on file waiting to be heard. Of these, 647 have been certified by the applicant or his representative as being ready to be heard, 780 are with the applicant or his representative waiting for certification, and 502 are awaiting preparation of the documentation.

(b) Because of the volume and the time involved it is not readily possible to identify the date of the original application for an entitlement board in each case. Decisions have not yet been rendered on these appeals.

9. (a) 700.

(b) 1,800.

10. (a) 1,960.

(b) The estimated number of hearings to be held during the current fiscal year is 1,900.

11. (a) Nineteen months.

(b) Priority is given to veterans of World War I (CEF), widows, seriously ill veterans, and veterans in serious economic circumstances.

(c) Under the direct supervision of the chairman of the Pension Review Board in consultation with the Bureau of Pensions Advocates, the Royal Canadian Legion, and The War Amputations of Canada.

(d) Twenty months.

(e) The Pension Review Board is restricted to the consideration of documentary evidence only.

12. 1979-1980: Confirmed—858 Varied—250.

13. The board is presently at full strenth. It consists of a chairman remunerated at the SX-2 rate of pay ($41,900—$57,100) and a deputy chairman and five members remunerated at the SX-1 rate of pay ($36,800—$50,600).

CORPORATIONS AND LABOUR UNIONS RETURNS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services) moved that Bill S-10, an Act to amend the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

He said: Madam Speaker, I rise today for the second reading of Bill S-10, which has already been passed in the Senate.

[English]

Bill S-10 is an act to amend the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act, known as CALURA. This act, which was originally passed in 1962, provides for the reporting of financial and other information relating to the affairs of corporations and labour unions operating in the country. The information collected under CALURA has been reported annually to Parliament. It has been a valuable and unique reference on the extent and effects of non-resident ownership and control of corporations in Canada, and on the association of Canadians with international labour unions.

During the 18 years the act has been in existence, many changes have taken place in the marketplace. The economy has become much more complex and, as a consequence, policy-makers have had to request additional data to keep abreast of developments. The last several years have seen a proliferation of requests for financial data by other government departments which, under the present act, have no access to data of individual corporations collected by CALURA. This has imposed a burden upon respondents, especially smaller enterprises where the resources to cope with this paperwork are severely limited.

Moreover, since the act covers corporations of a certain size, the number of corporations which must send in a return has greatly increased, even though a great many of them did not originally fall within the purview of the act.

In this time of advanced technology, the administration feels that it urgently needs to keep abreast of technology transfers, even more so since Canada wants to play a role in the ever growing area of technological advances. This need is becoming more acute because of the fact that, more than in any other industrialized economy in the world, corporations in Canada belong to non-residents and are controlled to a large extent by them. In fact, Madam Speaker, there is presently no system which can indicate the level of technological transfers from Canadian corporations to foreign interests or vice versa. Of course, this deficiency will be corrected. With regard to the labour community experience has shown that there are certain deficiencies in the act. Under the terms of the act the definition of a union has been too restricted, as well as the scope of financial data obtained from international unions.

[English]

With these problems in mind, the government has made several attempts over the past three years to bring in appropriate amendments to the act. Generally we have had support from both sides of the House. Our long, consultative process with representatives of business and labour indicated to us that they, too, welcomed these proposed changes. Indeed, the proposed amendments were extensively considered by a committee of the House in 1978. The present bill includes further improvements in response to concerns expressed during those proceedings and in recent deliberations in the other place.

I should like to express my appreciation for the very serious deliberations which took place in the other place and for the co-operation we received from both witnesses and members of the other place.

Time was not on our side in these previous attempts to enact these changes, but I hope the bill will now be disposed of in the House. Therefore I am pleased that Bill S-10, which I believe reflects present-day conditions and will streamline our methods of collecting and disseminating business and labour information, has been introduced early in this session of Parliament and has already received passage in the other place.

The prime objective of Bill S-10 is to alleviate present and potential response burden on many firms reporting to the federal government. The amendments will allow us to eliminate duplication of requests for information and to improve the quality and timeliness of the reports to Parliament. They will enhance the government's understanding of the flow of technology into Canada, supply vital data on the extent of foreign ownership and control, and provide a more comprehensive picture of union activity in the country.

CALURA was passed 18 years ago to collect data, financial and otherwise, concerning corporations and unions operating in Canada. The aim was to report to Parliament and the public on the scope and the effect of the ownership and control by non-residents of corporations in Canada. The act provided that any corporation with assets exceeding $250,000 and/or sales amounting to more than $500,000 must file a return. At that time, these were considered large businesses. Since then, inflation among other things has weakened this definition, and throughout the years, over 90,000 additional corporations have fallen within the purview of the act, most of which were small Canadian-owned businesses which were not originally supposed to be covered by the act. Bill S-10 should dispense more than 70,000 such businesses from having to send in a return pursuant to the act by multiplying by 20 the original threshold for a mandatory return, which was, in fact, completely unrealistic.

Businesses with assets of at least $5 million and with minimum sales of at least $10 million will have to file a return. The bill will also require all corporations with a measure of foreign ownership to file such a return. In order to avoid any duplication and minimize the number of replies, eight existing questionnaires will be combined into one and the returns will have to be consolidated. Bill S-10 provides that the returns should be filed on a modified calendar year basis, March 31 being the filing date. It will thus be possible to provide consistent information and to table annual reports in Parliament within 12 months following the end of the reference period.

[English]

At present, only aggregates of financial data collected under the act are available to users. In many instances, this does not satisfy the needs of government policy departments that require data by individual companies to prepare policy recommendations and analyse their effect. As a result, companies continue to be faced with ever increasing information requests by various government departments.

Bill S-10 proposes to re-establish the conditions which existed prior to the 1965 amendment to CALURA when officials of the federal government had access under the act to financial information provided by individual companies. In this way, the growing needs of policy departments in examining critical economic issues will be met without creating new demands upon business.

However, access to identifiable data for both financial and technology transfers proposed in this bill is more restrictive than it was prior to 1965. First, regulatory agencies, or parts of government departments having regulatory or investigative powers, will be excluded from such access.

Further, this access will be tightly controlled. The information will only be available to analysts for policy purposes upon request of a minister and with the approval of the Chief Statistician who will further specify the manner and conditions of such access. In addition, the bill provides severe penalties to both collector and recipient of such identifiable data in case of disclosure to unauthorized persons. In this way, Mr. Speaker, we are alleviating the concerns of the business community whose views were obtained in discussions earlier.

To improve the government's understanding of the flow of technology from abroad—and this is one of the areas of complete novelty—the bill provides for the collection of selected data on technology transfers. Collection of any data in this area will be preceded, of course, by consultation with business. To alleviate business concern, this bill provides that data to be collected will not include any scientific or technical description of any product or process. It was evident that industry was concerned when it made representations to us that the data which would be collected would not be, in effect, such as to impair in any way commercial or technological information which could be useful to a competitor. Therefore, we have eliminated information of that nature from the reports which must be filed. Returns on such transfers will be made available within the federal government for policy analysis but, as with financial data, this access will be tightly regulated.

CALURA has given us considerable insight into the area of foreign ownership and control of companies operating in Canada. For instance, from the 1978 CALURA annual report just tabled, we learn that the top 500 non-financial enterprises in Canada account for 53 per cent of sales, 66 per cent of assets, 66 per cent of profits and 70 per cent of equity. Some 274 of the 500 were foreign controlled corporations.

In addition to ownership information collected under the act, we have produced a highly popular directory entitled Inter-Corporate Ownership, which shows who owns and controls business in Canada. This publication has served executives, market managers, investors, journalists and economists by providing detailed information on the corporate structure of the Canadian economy. Those of us who have paid some attention to the relatively recent publication entitled The Canadian Corporate Elite will see a large number of citations within that publication which are owed to CALURA.

Ownership information collected under CALURA is not confidential and is available to the public through the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In the interests of such public information, Bill S-10 proposes the following improvements: corporations having 50 or fewer shareholders will be required to report to beneficial shareholders. All other reporting corporations may use their share registers to report on shares held. In addition, all corporations will report on options and voting rights held by their directors and the names of any corporations where they have 10 per cent or more of voting rights.

These measures are designed to provide Parliament and the public with accurate and up-to-date information on the ownership and control of corporations. Further, these measures, when integrated with financial information, will achieve a more accurate determination of foreign control and the concentration of corporate power.

Changes affecting labour unions will also lead to significant improvements in the administration of the act, the quality of data and the timeliness of reports. In order to give a more comprehensive image of labour union activity in Canada, the definition of a labour union will be extended to cover any association that has as one of its purposes the regulation of relations between employers and employees. The new definition will include the returns of independent, unaffiliated unions having no premises. In order to give a more comprehensive image of the financial activities of labour unions in Canada, international unions will be required to report all the direct revenues from their Canadian subsidiaries, as well as all expenditures directly related to their Canadian activities. Moreover, financial data pertaining to special funds, such as pension and strike funds, will have to be reported separately from the labour union income and general expenditures. Therefore, actually published financial data will give us a clear picture of the nature of economic and financial activities within labour unions; the quality of the annual report on labour unions will be improved significantly, which will facilitate the preparation of the comparative analysis provided for in the act.

Further, international unions will be able to file a return, in the form of a note, concerning all the expenditures incurred on behalf of their Canadian members. Such returns will be examined by the CALURA administration with a view to developing an efficient reporting and analysis system for these types of expenditures within two years after the coming into effect of the act. As far as membership is concerned, Bill S-10 will include a number of improvements leading to better information and enhanced usefulness of the data collected. In the first place, unions will be required under the act to submit reports on membership on a calendar year basis. And, finally, data will be immediately made available to federal and provincial departments for the preparation of statistical reports, which will reduce the need for overlapping requests.

Finally, with a view to reducing the time needed to submit the annual report to Parliament, unions will be required to file their returns within 90 days after the year under review. Mr. Speaker, before concluding, I would like to emphasize that Bill S-10 is the outcome of tremendously important studies and discussions. This is an improved bill, reflecting a number of concerns expressed when its predecessor, Bill C-7, was considered by a committee of this House. For instance, the clause providing for a 90-day notice in The Canada Gazette before regulations come into force is another feature of the bill now before us. This measure should reassure to a large extent business and labour, which will now know that consultations will be held on any contentious aspect of the CALURA questionnaire.

[English]

As I pointed out earlier, the bill was further improved by an important amendment made in the other place in response to business concerns. It reflects many responsible suggestions expressed along the way. I am confident that Bill S-10 is a sound bill which merits the support of the House.

In conclusion I simply say that we have been well served by an initiative which is now 18 years old but in effect has proved its worth. In Canada we have a particular position, being so close to a major political entity, an economic entity and a union entity, such as the United States. Our correspondence and communications with that country have created specific concerns among Canadians. A large number of these concerns have been alleviated as a result of CALURA in the past, and the substantial improvements we are proposing will improve the system as it exists now.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) will be our first speaker, and I may speak a little later. However, would the minister entertain a question at this time?

Mr. Blais: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the hon. minister has referred to Bill S-10 as being the fruit of study. He states he has taken into consideration many different factors. Could the minister tell the House whether any evaluation was made during that study of what is the cost of complying under the act for business and for consumers throughout Canada? Is there some estimate as to what it is costing businessmen to comply with the act as it now exists, and can the minister give us any estimate as to what it will cost businessmen to comply with the new act if it is passed in its present form?

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, the amendments that we are proposing will remove a large number of the smaller corporations which have perhaps felt that complying with the act or conforming to its exigencies was an expensive proposition. The raising of the threshold to $5 million in assets or $10 million in gross sales and the requirements that are imposed under the act are very slight indeed when you compare them to the total revenues of the companies.

I do not have with me any information in terms of the total cost to any individual company of completing a form on an annual basis. However, I would suggest to the hon. gentleman that it would not appear to have been a concern of any of the companies with whom we have had exchanges.

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I have listened attentively to the soft salesman's tones of the minister responsible for Statistics Canada who has just finished introducing Senate Bill S-10.

This bill is one of the omnibus amendment bills. I was made aware yesterday afternoon, sometime after four o'clock, that it has been selected to become the business of the day. In other words, I guess the House leaders treat these types of bills as Friday bills, and this happens to be a Friday bill which has been inserted on a Wednesday in the hope that it will slip through.

I first became aware of CALURA in the thirtieth Parliament when I was preparing, over a period of nine or ten months, a submission to the Bryce Commission on Corporate Concentration. As most hon. members know, my experience is with small to medium business in Canada and I believe rather strongly that a sense of individualism should survive in the country. Therefore, as I watch us drift closer and closer into a corporate society where we will be collected into larger and larger masses of units, I keep struggling both through my work in the House and with bills, such as this one in the hope that as a result some sense of individualism will survive in our society.

The practice of allowing this type of bill, which is full of amendments, to slip in as a Friday bill in the hope that it will pass through the House in one day and not be noticed, is a very dangerous practice that we are allowing the government to follow. By listening to the minister, as we did today, I came to the conclusion that he really should be a soap salesman. His product is so slippery that it will not even stick to the body. He quietly told us that the bill basically has three parts. It requires corporations to report.

Very lucidly he gave some statistics to show the value of this reporting to society. We have so many corporations in Canada and so many of them are foreign controlled, but never think of thanking foreigners who invest or bring technology to the land. What we want to do today is to punch them out. That seems to be the emphasis.

The minister also told us that the government wants to bring unions under control and it wants to collect information on unions and on union information movements, that is, Canada vis-à-vis the United States. That is all very well and good and I think most of us understand that.

The minister then very quietly introduced the information aspect of the bill. He told us how important it is for us to get some kind of inventory and handle on technological information, intellectual property, trademarks and patents, and so on. If some of us were not aware of what is going on in this country, we might let that slip by us.

I hope the gentlemen behind me on this side of the House will assist me in demanding that there be a full and lengthy debate on the intent of this type of legislation. What we are really dealing with is the beginning of a move to an interventionist, highly structured type of society. We are moving away from the rule of law and away from a respect for property. We have seen that in the constitutional debate. We are moving now into a situation where this is the beginning, the essential element, before the competition act can be brought to this House, when things as important as this are being slipped in through an amending bill which even lawyers cannot read or make any sense out of.

This is an extremely difficult bill. I was belittling myself last night in trying to get through this bill and to understand it. Usually the first thing that happens is that someone over there says, "well, the hon. member hasn't even read the bill." I will put it on the record right now that I have tried to read this bill. I did not understand it. Last night and early this morning I got copies of the Senate debates and Senate committee reports. In all the spare time I had today, I got only that far, but I still have a long way to go. The minister has talked about an important amendment being made in the Senate. With all the deliberation that took place in the Senate, I think the Senate essentially has missed the point and the intent of this bill.

Some members in the other place were suspicious and were asking key questions. However, they did not have the knowledge or the awareness of the grand design and the grand plan which will take us beyond where we are into a highly structured form of government. It is interesting that there is an increasing use of omnibus bills for masses of amendments in which there are some biscuits and cookies, like the minister's little gift, and I believe it was the former president of the Treasury Board who announced it, whereby 50,000 small Canadian corporations will be eliminated from reporting under CALURA.

In the thirtieth Parliament when I was doing work on a view from the street of corporate concentration, what attracted me to CALURA was four or five small businesses in Quebec which had been taken to court and fined under the powers of CALURA. Some of those businesses no longer exist. In fact, I do not know if any of them do. Those little businesses had to pay fines of $700 or $800.

On the other hand, while doing my work on corporate concentration, I found that the holding company for Power Corporation had never filed under CALURA. If Power Corporation or the holding company had been treated in the same manner as these small businesses, which the government likes to talk about protecting and reducing the burden on so much, the holding company for Power Corporation would have been subject to fines of over $3 million. However, they were not taken to court.

CALURA has been on my mind for some time. It is an important piece of legislation that has not been attended to for some time and that needs amending.

Since coming here I have developed a very suspicious nature and my whole personality has changed, but never did I realize that under the guise of Statistics Canada would information be collected which would be the trigger and the key to the sections of the new competition act and competition policy pertaining to intellectual properties and patents. Until this act is passed, the government cannot move to the second phase of their structured society, and bring in the competition act for full and meaningful debate.

As I stand here today, I could speak fast, in emotional, excited terms and conclude in 20, 30, 40 or 50 minutes. However, I am going to take my time because I do not want this bill to be given second reading until members have been awakened to what we are dealing with within this very confused type of legalese.

I find it offensive that more and more often notification of this kind of legislation comes to us late the previous afternoon and is given low priority by the government House leader. He slips it in hoping it will pass. I do not think this bill should pass until members are aware, and use the opportunity to debate the intent of this bill, of just what is going on in this country.

Basically I will direct my remarks to the information sector of the bill because that is where my concern lies. I am reminded by this type of technique of the omnibus bill on metric measurement being slipped through the House back in 1976. Members became emotionally tied up in hectares and tonnes of grain because of all the emotionalism and populism that existed on that subject. There was a sentence in one clause that not one single member of the opposition understood. However, when we started to study metric some two years ago, we found that that clause made Canadian standard measurement illegal.

That is what is going on with legislation in this House. As members, particularly of the opposition, we should stand on guard to expose this type of practice. We should make sure we do not let innocuous sentences, or anything covered with the minister's soft soap, slip by. The hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) advised Your Honour that he will be speaking on this bill. I hope other members will do so as well.

What we are dealing with in terms of type and style is a structured society, which is the whole thrust and design of the present Liberal government and has been for many years. It is a behaviourist type of society where laws are designed to restrict rights, where people are expected to be involved in widely diverse activities and live under the rule of law, and where respect for the rule of law is absolutely essential. They can work within the laws of the land with a degree of freedom, without arbitrary acts and decisions by bureaucrats interfering with that freedom and the desire to be free, energetic and to create wealth.

For the past 15 years we have seen a slow, steady deterioration of that aspect of life in Canada which I was brought up to respect and revere. It was full of faults and flaws, but it evolved from and came out of the Magna Carta. We in Canada are grateful for our freedom. It is the one system that has enabled men living through the ages under a type of parliamentary system to survive the forces of change and still remain free.

As the government moves away from the rule of law and into structure, which this bill starts to do, it loads the breech, putting in the pellets. In my opinion, by doing that, however sincerely, we begin to threaten the very foundation of our freedom.

There are strong moves taking place. Canada has become the laboratory for centralized power and centralized government. We are trying to remove and negate the checks and balances that are at the second level of government in the country, the provincial level. For some of us it is very worrying, even frightening.

The United States has survived because it has had checks and balances built into its system between its federal and state levels of government. I cry out when I see the checks and balances in this country being interfered with, as they are through the constitutional debate and under the guise of a bill of rights in which we are all interested. To me, a bill of rights is protection for minorities and individuals against arbitrary acts on the part of government. That is where it should stop. When we go beyond that, we start to say what our rights are and we start to wipe the blackboard of our common law heritage.

I should like to make it known now as I make my comments at the start of this debate, that I believe in a behavioural type of society. The problem the government is trying to address with its competition law, with its inventory on patents, trade marks, copyrights and all that is contained in Bill S-10, would be unnecessary if we had a strong anti-trust law. Those who stepped outside that strong anti-trust law would be clobbered. In the United States there is a fear of stepping outside their anti-trust laws. The multinational corporations and the large mass of corporations that have almost as much power as the government are terrified of it. That is the way it should be. That is the only way to handle that class of power.

What we have here is an inventory of the owners of all the rights. They are extremely interested in all the intellectual property rights that are transferred to Canada. They are not limiting themselves or dealing with the intellectual property rights and areas of only the multinationals and foreigners. They want all the private owners of these rights registered and in their files as well. I wonder if we have figured out what is coming down the pipe next? Some of us might be labelled as being very suspicious. I can see, without having to be too intelligent, and I have never posed as that, that we are delivering ourselves at a hell of a rate as we are now going with the Constitution, acting on that, with the attack on property rights within the Constitution, with the national energy policy, which is confiscation, although they say it is Canadianization, which is hogwash.

You can Canadianize in Canada with fiscal policy, to which the people react. All that we talk about having happened can be done with fiscal policy, which allows the people to work, create and have a little more of the results of their sweat for themselves. We put in laws that have made it almost impossible for those few people in Canada who are capable of managing and co-ordinating all the aspects and factors of business life for the creation of jobs and payrolls to continue, and we have done this with high interest rates and the 83-cent dollar. Perhaps that darn thing should be down around 75 cents. It only benefits the resource industry and makes more and more draw and pull out of the wage packet. I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that managers and owners of small and medium business enterprises today are working for paper pushers, working for the government, working for landlords, scratching and trying to keep a balance sheet solid, working for payrolls and getting no thanks at all. Labour laws make it almost impossible to remove people who will not pull their fair share of the load. No wonder more and more people who have tried to dedicate a good part of their life to the public service are having to return into that sector in order to handle the pressures there are today.

It would be blind and foolish of me to say these pressures do not exist throughout the world and throughout different western societies, but these pressures are caused by governments which want to distribute more wealth than the system can create. We have gone beyond the point of no return. Sooner or later, somehow, we must have a corrective reaction, but it does not have to be a bust.

The government provides no leadership at all in warning the people or in delivering to them an industrial strategy or plan that will let us understand the problems of human nature within a free society. Therein lies the problem. We all want more than we are prepared to give or to put in. The socialists, with envy—I guess it is envy—continually attack those people who were born, educated or put into circumstances whereby they could put a combination of education and fact together into the bloodstream, risking savings, taking a chance, creating jobs. All of that is static in Canada.

As I have watched the last ten years in Canada, I have almost cried, because every single major project we have has now been put on hold or on stop, and has been attacked by our NDP friends to the left. Every single major project that could create jobs in Quebec, the Atlantic provinces, across the prairies and in B.C., including new transportation systems with new trucks, new steel, new pipes, new communities, new pumping stations and new taxes; every single one of these projects today which could relieve the billion dollars of draw in unemployment insurance on the federal treasury has been stopped or placed on hold. What a tragedy.

We have had two days of debate on North-South relations. There is a great world debate about how much progress the world can stand, for the injustice of progress is that the first world, the western world, the second world and the communist world depend completely on progress, on growth in gross national product for the well-being of their citizens and for the sustenance of the anticipated levels within those respective societies, so 20 per cent of the world's people are drawing and calling on 85 per cent of the world's resources.

Canada is playing a game. We cannot settle our problems internally, we cannot get an industrial strategy that has any forward planning, but we are drawing non-renewable fossilized resources from the other world. These resources could be available to the Third World because we are capable of providing our own energy internally. The greatest single donation we could make to the Third World—

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I simply want to advise the hon. gentleman, the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington), that this bill is to amend the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act, and that act is to provide for the reporting of financial and other statistics relating to the affairs of corporations and labour unions carrying on activities in Canada. I have listened with a great deal of attention to the hon. gentleman's comments and I have still to hear any comment that relates to any of the amendments we are proposing or any of the principles espoused under CALURA.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, I am the first speaker to reply to the government. I have stated that I am offended by the government trying to sneak this bill through—an omnibus amended bill—an issue as serious and as important as the control and inventory of intellectual property, and that is what this bill is doing. If the minister does not understand that, instead of getting up on his feet maybe he should sit around and listen. He acknowledged and thanked members of the other place for all their work. I have told the minister that they missed the essential issue. Perhaps the minister does not understand the game plan. Maybe if he listened, he would understand. I am not going to rush through and deliver this all in 40 minutes, so he has a bit of listening to do.

I was saying, and all this relates to what I am going to say, that we in Canada can make the largest single donation possible to the Third World by getting our act together at home and withdrawing our demand on the Third World for non-renewable fossilized resources. We are totally capable of doing that internally, except for the fact that the process of doing that is caught up in this revolution, in this structured and interventionist society which this incumbent government is now trying to design and impose on us. This started with the constitutional debate, and the other big hammer was the national energy policy. Now we are starting to get into the nitty-gritty, the sleazy, sticky stuff, sold by the softsoap salesman who just finished introducing the bill. We have a trademark package, right on the line. We have Bill S-10 before us in the House now presented as a private bill so it can slip through so nobody will notice it, and right behind it comes the competition bill.

It is interesting to look at the competition bill and the memoranda which have been leaked out and slipped out. Some major changes have been made in the draft of the competition bill. But they are not going to follow the behaviourist pattern of which I have acknowledged I am in favour, in that we should have strong anti-trust legislation, and we should clobber anyone who does not abide by that legislation. Rather than that principle—and this is the philosophical, political debate which is going on, and that is why the minister does not understand what I am saying—what we are now doing is moving into the grand design, the plan for structure and intervention not only in the multinationals, not only in the large corporations, but also in business of the private owners of intellectual property. What is interesting is that in spite of all the additions, changes, amendments and redrafting of other aspects of the bill, the patents clause in the competition bill is pretty well taken verbatim from Bill C-13, so there has been no change in that area.

Here we are with Bill S-10 as the key to the delivery of the competition bill into the House, and a major thrust of that strategy is going to be in intellectual property. I link that back to the debate on property in the constitutional debate because what they are after in that debate is corporate property and intellectual property.

It is interesting that Bill S-10 comes right in after we have had two days of debate on North-South relationships because the North-South question is very much involved in this whole issue. And here comes Bill S-10 right in behind it.

I remind hon. members of a speech I gave some time ago. I will not repeat it, but I referred in a speech in this Parliament to what I consider to be a very important paper, namely, "The Fate of Empires," by Sir John Glubb. This was originally published in Blackwood magazine in November, 1934, volume 320, and in December, 1976, permission was given to the Canadian Law Society Gazette to reprint it. Sir John Glubb gave us a very interesting analysis of the rise and fall of societies and civilizations from the year 800 B.C. all the way through to the present time. He related the problems of human nature in societies, connected up some ten civilizations and said that these stages of the rise and fall of great nations seemed to be the age of pioneers, that is, the outburst of the nation when people are pioneering and not heavily in demand of material goods. They are pretty close to the basics of life, and they have that dream and future ahead of them. It is an outburst. That is where the vitality and strength of new nations start. Then there is the age of conquests and the age of commerce, and we have seen all that through Europe. We just have to go back through some ten civilizations to follow this.

Then there is the age of affluence. That is where our trouble starts. That is where the rot of human nature starts in social man. From the age of affluence Sir John Glubb identifies the age of intellect. I wanted to raise that because the designers of the strategy I am putting before the House right now are intellectuals. They are very bright men. They have not wasted their time. They were gifted with good minds and good memories. They studied hard, and they have acquired senior positions in the bureaucracy of this democracy.

We go through the age of intellect in all of these ten civilizations, and then we come to the age of decadence. In each of those ten civilizations, intellect preceded decadence. Then Sir John Glubb went on to say what decadence is marked by and so forth. I put that on the record and into this speech because what we are dealing with is the design of intellects.

We have passed through the age of intellects in Canada—we are still dealing with it—and we are well advanced in this society into the age of decadence. We do not learn from history. Someone said that if we do not learn from history, we are bound to repeat the mistakes of the past. I would like to see some of the intellects and some of the brains in this House in all parties apply themselves to the problem of human nature so that we do not have to continue to move into a highly structured interventionist society of which this Bill S-10 represents the pellets in the gun.

There is a linkage. I have talked about the inventory of information which will be demanded. It is a non-voluntary inventory of information. It is going to be mandatory. In the future, after the competition bill is passed that information will be facing foreclosure if it does not meet certain demands. It will be facing revocation because the writings are all in the background literature to all this. It is in aid of Third World countries, and believe me, we have to assist them, but how far do we go in our assistance without having the economic community of the land aware of what the game plan is? That is why I am on my feet taking some time to make a few points here today.

There is a linkage between all of this legislation. There will be Bill S-10 and the information aspects of the CALURA bill. There will be inventory and control. Once they have that, they know where they are, and they have the inventory for the next phase in the competition bill, but there is another bill which is linked with this too, and it relates to FIRA. Mr. Speaker, I know you do not have to read as much as some of us because of your new duties, but you will have to be aware that the FIRA bill is under revision as well, and the drafters of that bill will be linking up Bill S-10, the proposed competition act, FIRA and the new patent law. They are all interrelated. This will deliver the structure and potential for arbitrary rule over the wealth-creating sector of this country. I do not know whether as a member I can do anything about it, other than to use my privilege here in the House to stand and make my colleagues aware of what is happening, but I do not want to live under a structured society.

Mr. Collenette: Anarchist.

Mr. Huntington: Anarchy is so close in this country, my friend, that you cannot see it.

Mr. Collenette: You are an anarchist.

Mr. Huntington: I am not. You called me a racist back in December of 1974, and you have been proved wrong. Mr. Speaker, the hon. member tells me I am an anarchist. He does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. Collenette: You do not want structure; you are an anarchist.

Mr. Huntington: I do not want structure. I want laws which spell out behaviour and rules we can live under without the threat of arbitrary intervention in the lives of our citizens and in the lives of the wealth creators of the land. That is what I want.

Mr. Collenette: Dictator.

Mr. Huntington: The hon. member says "dictator". He is so conditioned and inbred in terms of his opinions and in terms of political gains and political strategies that he just cannot let a crack of light in through his eyes to open up his head a little and see if the other guy could possibly be right. That is all I am asking. See if I could possibly be right. Perhaps the hon. member has not done as much reading on this subject as I have, but that is one of the reasons I sit in this House. For many years I have seen the forces of change on society in a country for which I have always carried a very deep love and respect.

Mr. Collenette: What is wrong with change?

Mr. Huntington: There is nothing wrong with change. We are dealing with it every day in our lives, but I do not fully understand why this government is changing a system which has been very successful in protecting liberty and freedom. I do not fully understand why we do not impose change on the flaws and faults in the common law. That is what we should be addressing, not structure and not the threat of arbitrary intervention. We should address the possibility of some fisheries officer saying, "If you do not do as I say, I have a friend in the income tax department".

If other hon. members have not experienced that, I probably have five documented cases of it. I have another case of a civil servant who threatened a supplier with friends in the income tax department. That is the kind of thing I am talking about, not when there is justification for my case whereby I can react under a fiscal policy, an incentive that will allow me or shareholders or partners to go out and risk money in the hope of putting together an economic unit that will have staying power. Today this government wants us to come in and ask for grants, tax credits and everything else. Well, Mr. Speaker, the problem there is—and again minds like the hon. member opposite will not let a thread of light or knowledge into their heads because only the big guys, the big corporations, the multinationals burying earnings in overhead for their own benefit can afford the staff, the lobbying and the time necessary to deal with the bureaucrats behind the scene—

An hon. Member: The member is blinded by ambition.

Mr. Huntington: That is a serious issue today. I asked a question of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) yesterday but I was a little too long in the supplementary and Madam Speaker did not allow me to finish, but on that very issue, Mr. Speaker—I hope it is not my wetness, sir, that is causing you all the trouble in the chair. However, yesterday I noticed that The Globe and Mail editorial picked up on the issue I was raising, the curse of intervention. The hon. member opposite might just think about the contents of that editorial. I know he probably never gets below the three inch print on the front page of a newspaper, but sometimes back in the editorial pages is the heart and core of public concern.

I am using my time here, Mr. Speaker, to reiterate my concern for the threat to my freedom and liberty and that of the people I represent when we allow a structuralist and interventionist motivation and thrust by this government to deliver that arbitrary, come-cap-in-hand, yea or nay situation in our lives. That just brings more and more control over individuals. I know full well, because I am standing here saying these things and have said other things in the past, and have the courage to do so if I might say, Mr. Speaker, I know that I cannot go and get a grant, a privilege or a tax credit because I am a bad boy. That is the way it is going to be. They are going to bring us all as individuals to heel starting with Bill S-10, and the constitution and energy bills. We are delivering ourselves to a controlled and structured society and it is time members of this House woke up to that fact. It is time the public out there woke up to that fact. Bills like S-10, with their amendment confusion and their omnibus nature, are intended to hide the type of activity that is carried therein.

They come out and tell us that 70,000 small businesses will not have to report, that we have removed this paper burden. It seems to me that the hon. member for York-Peel said that at the last election, and here we are recycling it. We have moved the threshold, as of course we should, from $250,000 in assets or $500,000 in sales, up to $5 million in assets and $10 million in sales. We have relieved 70,000 corporations from reporting under the act, and that is the big headline, the big issue that the minister shovels out into this House.

However, underneath that camouflage is this other cynicism. I repeat, I am aware that the section requiring reporting of technology transfers into Canada will open up a whole new can of worms. If the minister thinks he is going to have a good time with this, I sincerely hope he is mistaken because I can see that what was missed in the committee proceedings of the other place is being opened up now. I think it is a very sleazy game they are playing.

What they are in fact doing is trying to copy an act already in place in Mexico. I also assume they have had a good strong look at Japan. I think the minister mentioned that in his speech. What Japan does is to take another tack. They want to have an inventory, a register of the intellectual property going in and out of that country. But boy, they are tough. If they are going to receive property and manufacture it, they are going to demand that their manufacture be sold in other markets. I do not see this bunch of great industrialists and businessmen over there ever having the guts to do that. I did not see any trade-offs with Japan in terms of the infrastructure required for northeast coal. I will be one that will support an initiative to trade-off Candu reactors in Japan for the availability of a non-renewable resource like northeast coal, one of the most valuable coal beds in the world. Why should we be selling off our resources when we do not have the maximum value added?

Do you know, Mr. Speaker, that you can electrify the city of Vancouver with the exothermic reaction from the coking process? Do you know that coke is worth about twice as much as coal in raw form? We do not want necessarily the coking process because it affects our environment and we have those concerns, so we make these kinds of trade-offs. However, do we really sit down with an industrial strategy and deliver intelligent, forward looking, strong trade-offs when we are dealing with the selling out of our resources? In our greed and selfishness we want it all today and we do not give a tinker's darn about our kids tomorrow.

I have been waiting for this industrial strategy of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) because, boy, if it does not have the guts that this country deserves—he has been talking about it forever. He is the guy who was going to resign, Mr. Speaker—or have you forgotten—when interest rates went up to 14 per cent.

Maybe while I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, we should talk about that a little. The structural need in Canada today should not be patterned on the needs of the United States. The history of our needs and growth is different to that of the United States. Why do we not have a debate in this House on what would happen if we lowered interest rates and let the dollar fall? Why not have a standing committee sitting continuously with a hammer and tong draw on all the debate of the economists and others not so formally trained in this country? We cannot continue to go the monetarist route and survive with any semblance of freedom under the rule of law.

Mr. Rae: Tell that to Crosbie.

Mr. Huntington: Is that perhaps part of the design of the structuralist, interventionist government? The initiatives are there. The tools are available all over the Hill to conduct exciting debates on issues of importance. Do they initiate them? Do they use them? The answer is no. They talk about an industrial strategy. Where is it?

I am very pleased to see the hon. Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe) in the House. I should like to ask him: where is the study on the small business financing review? Is it buried in the industrial strategy? Is there not an hour of need right now for this study which has been ongoing for so long that I think the ink on the first pages has faded? Where is the study? Most of us know the answers which need to be put in place. It is difficult to create any new wealth today out of the earnings of the small businesses sector. It is difficult for small businesses to develop new plants, to remain productive and modern. They cannot accumulate the equity they need. Why is the minister not picking up this hour of need in Canada and coming out with creative and thoughtful initiatives?

The work in this regard was carried out by the previous Liberal government and the Clark government, and now it is being carried out by the present government. If the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism wants an audience, or if he wants to draw on some of the brains and talent in the House and the business community for the final drafting of the report, there is nothing we would be more pleased to do. In the palm of his hand, in his ministerial power, he has one of the best chances to make a donation to the community on top of which he is supposed to be sitting. I am sure he finds the peak of the pyramid sharp and uncomfortable right now.

Why are they delaying that issue, with interests rates running at 21 per cent to 22 per cent and the dollar at 83 cents? Have we debated in the House what a 75-cent dollar would do for awhile? Would it bring down interest rates four or five percentage points? Who would benefit? Who would make windfall profits to offset the other costs? They are drowning initiatives and they are drowning individuals in preparation for a structuralist, interventionist society.

There is a great deal of sincerity in the New Democratic Party. I can relate to much of what members of that party do, but when they continually raise their concern for the small businessman, I become concerned. Will their concerns help us to get to the issue upon which the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism is sitting or perhaps sleeping? Will their concerns help us deal with the issues of interest rates and the value of the dollar? We are playing political games with each other and we all know it. We do not do a service to Canadian constituents at large. We are all working away at narrow political points. It is beyond me. Their constituents are the labour unions and the big unions bosses who are expert at grabbing more than their fair share from the system, and all the unorganized can go to hell.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Huntington: That is about the way it is. We are not doing anything in the House about the absolute absence of any discretionary spending for those people who spent their lives working and are now on fixed pensions, but we have destroyed multibillions of dollars of capital by allowing interest rates to rise as they have.

Perhaps we require a debate on how to fill the coffers of an international reserve fund which will stabilize the pressure on the dollar and give us a chance, with a sound industrial strategy, to get back on track. We have ten years of hard, disciplined work to do if we are to avoid a collapse of the system. The hour is upon us. It behooves us all to become involved in the issue, but the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism is sleeping on one of the most valuable and perhaps one of the most important studies to the small and medium enterprise sector. There is a crisis, there is a need right now, but the study is buried in his boss' industrial strategy. They have to complete all the work on intellectual property, on the inventory and on the competition law; they have to get the constitutional law passed. Their priorities are so screwed up it is unbelievable. It discredits the whole system.

I read the speech of the hon. minister on Bill S-10. I understand some of the advantages he described, but I want those points made clear in committee. I want some of the intellectuals behind the drafting of this pyramid of bills, this interconnected triangle of bills and legislation, in committee. I want some of the intellectuals from the community at large to assist hon. members of both opposition parties in preparing debate and questions for those intellectuals. This is where the system fails miserably.

The biggest problem in Canada is the structure of Parliament. We have lost complete control over the power of supply. Our committees system and structure will not let us work on any continuity of thought. We do not have a secretariat behind our committees to match the expertise of the bureaucrats. Therein lies one of our biggest flaws. This is what we should be addressing first. The constitutional issue is not doing that. We are not throughout any of the constitutional debate addressing regionalism, which is the biggest, single, most serious problem in Canada. There is regionalism in metropolitan areas, in provinces and at large in the land. This structure fails to address and link up the regionalism. It wants to destroy regionalism through a central unitary state and it will not work.

I am taking this time because I feel the great debate in Canada can be resolved with an industrial strategy. It can be resolved under the behaviourist philosophy wherein we design laws which tell people what they can do. If they do not obey, we must have the courage and guts to enforce it. If we are to do that, we must address the needed legislation to improve the respect for the rule of law in Canada.

In closing, I should like to talk about the research and development policy.

An hon. Member: There is not one.

Mr. Huntington: That is correct, there is not one. For years we have listened to all corners of the private sector tell us what we need in the way of research and development. Basically we need an incentive in our fiscal policy which will allow the entrepreneurs in the boardrooms of the nation to make decisions and to invest high-risk money in unknown areas and in unknown frontiers of technology, on the chance that there will be a reward down the road.

To offset that decision risk, all they ask for is a 25 per cent credit; in other words, 125 per cent of cost. There is no sense doing this for multinational organizations which are already spending millions of dollars of research money, but we could give them an incentive to increase their activity. We could give them the 125 per cent rate on incremental increases over their respective bases. But no, all energy and talent at large in the land is frustrated. They must come cap-in-hand with polished shoes, make appointments, wait in waiting rooms for some civil servant to process an application. Then they must lobby the whole system, and as the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism knows, the small and medium-sized business sector do not have the time, nor can they afford it, for their businesses would go bankrupt.

Give R and D a chance. Give the brains and talent outside the government in this country a chance to prove that they can get it going. Our dilemma today started with the Benson tax legislation of 1971. That is when we started to move into the interventionist society. That is when our bureaucracy started to build. That is when incentives ceased in any savings process in Canada, other than turning every single Canadian who puts his money into a tax shelter into a future debtor of the state. That is what we have done. We have locked up all our savings in pension funds and RRSP funds and none of it is available to the world of work where the need for that dormant capital exists. The rewards are no longer available in Canada for the managers. The rewards are there for the paper pushers, the landowners and the absentee capitalists, not for the talent which can create jobs and add to the value of goods and services.

I would urge all members to read the editorial which appeared in The Globe and Mail today. It deals with the curse of intervention. We have been hearing this for five, six, seven, or ten years and the government will not allow a glimmer of light into its mind. I stand here and say to you, Mr. Speaker, that the path along which it is leading us will turn out to be one of the most tragic eras in Canadian history. We alone in the western world, the western industrialized nations, have the opportunity to be energy self-sufficient. We have the opportunity to put in place massive transportation systems in the form of pipelines. We have the opportunity to electrify railroads across the mountains and the west; and all that diesel fuel which is consumed by those railroad locomotives can be put back into the bank. All we have to do is give the railroads a tax incentive to convert from a non-renewable fossilized source of energy to a renewable electrical source of energy—I think 150 per cent would have done it. We would have had all of that in the bank. That is where the activity is.

The Cold Lake plant has been backed up, as has the new tar sands plant, as has the transportation system, and as have the pipelines for the flow of energy from the Arctic downward. We will be in trouble with a small pipeline to get the oil from the Mackenzie delta down south. We have sent missionaries out into the field who have created activists in all of the outlying communities. And where a strong centralized state is wanted the government has worked harder to create a fractured state, particularly in the north. All of that was ours.

We were one of the few western nations which really could sustain a 5 per cent or 6 per cent growth in our gross national product without a draw on the Third World. We are one of the few countries in the western world with that gift of nature—and we throw it away. What will this government do when the national energy policy is finally settled? It will release the reins on two, three or four megaprojects. We will not have the skills, the trade, the labour, the steel, the transportation, or the people who are used to working. We will create shortages which will compound strikes. We will just drive up the price of everything. We will never have a secondary manufacturing operation in place with that kind of an industrial strategy.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce said that he would resign if interest rates went above 14 per cent while he was a member of any government in power. He is still sitting in the House and interest rates are at 21 per cent. He has talked about an industrial strategy ever since I have known him. Now is the time for an industrial strategy. Where is it? Instead of an industrial strategy this government would rather bootleg in bills like Bill S-10, which are a direct attack on intellectual property and on the future freedom of Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rae: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the hon. member for Capilano would entertain a question?

Mr. Huntington: If I can answer it.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member can answer it since it refers to the article by Sir John Glubb which he quoted once again. He referred to this article on December 18, 1980, in his speech during the emergency debate on the economy. As the hon. member pointed out at that time, Sir John Glubb lists a series of ages. When he comes to the age of decadence, as reported at page 5919 of Hansard for December 18 he said:

> Decadence is marked by:
> Defensiveness,
> Pessimism,
> Materialism,
> Frivolity,
> An Influx of Foreigners,
> The Welfare State,
> A weakening of religion.

Can the hon. member tell us if he agrees with that since he quoted the passage once again today? Can he tell us which foreigners are responsible for Canada's decadence?

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, earlier I was accusing the NDP of making cheap political shots when there is an opportunity to deal with very serious issues. Sir John Glubb's article is very valuable, if one reads it in its total context. I was not thinking of any specific type of foreigners. Sir John was pointing out that that has been a fact in ten previous civilization cycles before this one. He was pointing out that it is a fact of history. He says decadence is due to there being too long a period of wealth and power, selfishness, love of money and the loss of a sense of duty, which is the reason civilizations bring in people from outside. They no longer want to do their own work.

Mr. Rae: You agree that foreigners contribute to Canada's decadence?

Mr. Huntington: I will not answer the hon. member's specific question, because he is simply playing political games with a serious issue.

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on Bill S-10, an Act to amend the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act. I have quoted the motion since it appeared to me the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) was speaking about everything but the bill before us. When he did refer to it he referred to it in a negative way. I remind the hon. member that it was the Conservative government under Mr. Diefenbaker which brought in the original CALURA bill about which he spoke against so adamantly this afternoon.

Mr. Huntington: I was not speaking against his bill, I was speaking against the changes in this one.

Mr. Parker: As the New Democratic Party critic for labour relations I intend to limit my remarks to those aspects of the bill concerning trade unions. I am sure that other members from my party will quite adequately cover the provisions respecting corporations. My only comment regarding that portion of the bill would be that if CALURA has been as bad at reporting the true financial relationship between Canadian branches of U.S. companies and their parent firms as it has been in reporting the true financial picture respecting international unions, then we are probably completely foolhardy to base any of our economic forecasting or policies on those figures.

I am in a very difficult position in debating this bill. We in the New Democratic Party opposed CALURA from day one because we felt it was structurally designed to present an untrue picture of the way in which international unions operate in Canada. We knew from the first day that the figures from CALURA would be used by those people who would like to destroy the trade union movement in Canada. We knew that because the legislation was designed seriously to overestimate the amount of money leaving Canada while at the same time seriously underestimate the amount of money coming into the country, it would be used as a weapon against organized labour in this country.

My dilemma over the bill which is before us today is very simple. This bill contains provisions which will change

CALURA from being a very bad law into just a bad law. If we oppose these amendments then we are put into the position of supporting CALURA as it presently exists, which is completely untenable. However, if we support these amendments, which are only a series of poorly designed half-measures, we will be giving the new legislation credibility which it does not deserve. We will also be voting seriously to increase the workload on volunteer trade union members. Volunteer trade union members have a lot of work on their hands with regard to reporting transfers of membership throughout the various areas. But the reporting provisions in this bill will require that more information be tabled in less time.

We heard the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) ask a question of the minister regarding corporations and the workload they may have. I, too, want to ask that question regarding volunteer people in the many trade unions across Canada, in international trade unions, such as the railway workers. Volunteer people in the unions are not only trying to keep up with the secretarial work and the treasurer's work and the movement of memberships from one place to another, but they will now be requested to get their information into headquarters.

What we on this side of the House would like to see is not a debate over wallpaper amendments, but rather a debate on CALURA itself. We in the New Democratic Party do not oppose the principle that the true financial picture of trade unions should be publicly available. We would be as distressed as any group in this chamber to learn that union dues collected in Canada were being diverted outside of the country. We feel that Canadians have a right to know how their trade union dues are being spent, just as we feel that Canadians have a right to know how their tax dollars are being spent or how the income generated by companies operating in Canada is being spent. But we are not prepared to support a law which only tells half the story, a law which exaggerates how much money is collected and does not even bother to concern itself with how that money is used.

We also feel very strongly about the autonomy of trade unions in Canada. We have always supported the notion that Canadian workers should be in complete control of their own affairs, that Canadian workers should be able to decide how their union operates. But we reject the very simplistic notion implicit in CALURA that the level of Canadian autonomy in a union is a direct function of how many of its dollars are kept in a bank in Canada, as opposed to a bank somewhere else in the world.

Imagine if we used that very simplistic idea in determining the Canadian level of ownership in a company. Instead of concerning ourselves with how that company makes decisions, with how its board of directors is composed, or with what percentage of its stocks were owned by Canadians, imagine basing our decision on what constitutes a Canadian company solely on the basis of where it invested its earnings.

Would the CPR, which has holdings all over the world, then be viewed as a foreign firm? Would Imperial Oil of Canada, which operates exclusively in Canada, then be viewed as a Canadian firm? That sounds silly, but that is exactly the logic behind CALURA. We would be saying to the trade unions: "We don't care who makes your decisions, we don't care whether you are controlled by your membership, we don't care whether you are democratic, we don't care whether you have complete autonomy; we just care whether or not you happen to keep some of your money in a bank outside of Canada".

Of course, that is not what any of us would say. But that is not to say that we in the New Democratic Party are not concerned with where the money is kept. Speaking quite frankly, we would like to see as much of that money as possible staying in Canada. We would like to see Canadian pension funds invested in Canada. We would like to see Canadian dues and strike funds invested in Canada so that Canadian workers can borrow that money.

Those are concerns, but those concerns are not our greatest ones. We are most concerned that Canadian unions have the full protection they need to fight the sometimes terrible struggles with which they are confronted. We recognize that when Canadian autoworkers, for instance, are fighting Ford, or General Motors, or Chrysler, they need tremendous financial resources to win those battles. When Canadian workers are fighting the huge multinationals which dominate our economy, they need some pretty huge pools of money. The unfortunate reality is that there are not enough union dues in all of Canada to win some of these battles. That is when we recognize the necessity for international ties between workers.

I often wonder about the position of other parties in this chamber on this question. If I were slightly more cynical, I might feel that other parties here are not really interested in keeping our trade union movement strong. I might conclude that they would be most happy to see a small Canadian union fighting some huge American company. Those people who say that our trade union movement should be completely Canadian, that we should break all links with international unions, fall into two camps. A very small percentage of them are truly concerned with what they feel is foreign domination of our union movement. They are usually not acquainted with the facts. They do not know that Canadian trade unions, for the most part, are completely independent: that they elect their own leadership and make their own decisions. But the rest of the people who would like to break up the international unions have a hidden agenda. They know that in many industries the international union is the only salvation for Canadian workers. They know that when General Motors is bargaining in Canada they are bargaining with an international union with over one million members, not with a Canadian union that barely has 10 per cent of that number.

We in the New Democratic Party will be moving many amendments to this bill when it gets to committee. Frankly, we do not understand why on the one hand the law is going to require unions to file a report on their income, but on the other hand there is only a request that they file their expenditures in Canada. We want the law to require international unions to spell out in very clear language how their money is spent in Canada. We want them to itemize such things as the Canadian share of the costs in running the international headquarters. We want them to itemize the Canadian share of the cost on the depreciation of fixed assets. If they do that, then maybe we will get a true picture of exactly how much money is either flowing into Canada or, in some rare cases, flowing out of Canada.

Finally, we are concerned about the impact that all these extra forms will have on the volunteer staff who must fill them out at the local level. I have often heard my friends to the right complaining about the paper burden which many small businessmen face when having to fill out government forms. I sympathize with those concerns, but I would suggest that in this case the burden is even more overwhelming, since in many cases the forms must be filled out by elected officials at the local level in their own time. I would like to see these officials remunerated in some way for work which they will be doing on behalf of the government.

In conclusion, let me just repeat what I said earlier. We in the NDP favour a law which will provide for the fair and accurate reporting of money spent in Canada and of money collected in Canada by the trade union movement. The present law does not come close to doing that. The amendments are an improvement, but even if they are passed in their present form, CALURA will not be providing a fair or an accurate assessment of how unions operate in Canada.

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the speeches from all sides of the House. When my colleague for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) referred to legalese, there were some smiles and chuckles from some of the intellectuals in the gallery. This rather interested me. They were sort of looking down upon us in such a way as to indicate, "We will erode your rights, we will take them away slowly but surely. That is our instruction and this is the way we will accomplish it." Eventually, under the plan of this government we will become slaves of the state. Each bill that comes before us slowly but surely takes something away.

There is a continual erosion and we have to put a stop to it. We on this side must do everything in our power to stop the destruction of this country, eliminating the free spirit which created it. People had to walk across this country behind caravans. We must protect them. That is why we are here today.

All that the amendments in Bill S-10 will do is create a great deal of employment for lawyers and accountants. If the assets of a holding corporation are $5 million, they must report. The act will have to be changed when I throw in this one. What is to stop them from changing the corporation into five corporations owned by the original owners of the one corporation? This is what the entrepreneur in this country will have to do. It is an expense. It is an indirect tax. It is an erosion of our wealth and of our rights.

What we have been getting in this House is regulation rather than reform, interference and control by this government with regard to the rights of every corporation, every individual, every home. It is taking away the free enterprise system that brought this country to where it was up until 1968. From that point on it has been straight downhill with one goal in mind, the goal of state ownership. The government wants to try in this country what has failed so dreadfully in Sweden and England and is in trouble in Russia. Why does the government impose this on us, taking away our freedoms and our rights?

The government keeps on spending money. That is the politically acceptable thing to do. It is now at the point where it is borrowing capital funds from foreign sources in order to meet its social objectives. Those objectives are important. But when this erodes the private sector of this country, it erodes the entire economy.

This government does not care about the private sector. It wants to get its hands on it. It wants to intrude upon it and erode it. I referred to other countries which tried this. Look at the Swedish model. Anyone who has been to Sweden will confirm that it is not looking well. Look at the British disaster. The present Prime Minister of Britain had great goals of trying to turn it around. I am afraid she is fighting a losing battle. Everything had been taken away from the private sector and given to the government.

It is too late for her, but I do not believe it is too late for the United States. That country is fortunate in having a leader who is communicating with the people, not telling them untruths. He is again giving them a spirit of freedom. The Americans are in the fortunate position that their private sector has not been eroded. They have the opportunity to bring that country back to the original system they were working under.

I cannot say that we should accept any other model. Our country is different. It is half a continent spread over 3,000 miles. It is not a cohesive country for geographic and regional reasons. It is not like France which has Paris as a hub around which its economy revolves. It is not like half of Germany with its hub around Berlin. It cannot be treated like England with its hub around London. The proximity and the thinking of the people is so close to those centres that they can communicate the common purpose. In this country it is different. We have different cultures, different languages and a much more serious problem which this government is not addressing. With its mandate, it has an opportunity to develop an economic system that would be unique to Canada. It must be unique to Canada because we are different from other countries.

The previous speaker talked about the inventory of rights. Our inventory is slowly eroding and washing away. The government is slowly but surely taking it or pushing it away. Look what it is doing with the National Energy Program, Bill C-48 and Bill C-57. It is forcing the wealth out of this country or underground and removing the funds from the private sector. By removing the funds as a result of borrowing at extreme rates, the private sector cannot get its hands on any funds. The government is gobbling up all the capital available to Canada. This government should do an analysis to determine the total debt per person of federal, provincial or municipal debt. That would indicate the rights that individuals have left.

Your Honour seems to be indicating I am getting off the track so I will return to Bill S-10. I cannot believe that any individual or group of individuals would set up a corporation in Canada with assets of $5 million or sales of $10 million. There are too many other places in the world where freedoms have not been eroded, where there are greater benefits without great grandfather looking over their shoulder. This bill destroys the private sector.

Many times in this House we have talked about property rights. Property rights do not only include home ownership but general property, anything a person owns. They are going to be taken away from us.

Mr. Collenette: Absolute nonsense.

Mr. Fennell: The hon. member may think it is rubbish but when he sees the bottom line he will see that is precisely where we are going. They continually say rubbish, but the facts are there. They keep on saying they are right, but papers keep coming out, hobbled by regulation. The Economic Council of Canada, this Government of Canada agency, keeps requesting reform of regulation. This is what these agencies should be doing instead of changing regulations and getting the private sector tied up again.

• (1710)

Just as an aside, when talking about property rights and people losing their businesses, many people are losing their homes. This government is taking their homes away as a result of these inflationary rates. People cannot afford to own homes at 20 per cent interest rates. This is just another confiscation which is taking place, but many Canadians are not aware of this. What the government is doing is getting into our books and checking things out. The government says this applies only to certain people, but it then says Statistics Canada can give the information to any other branch of government. There is no provision for secrecy. The Canadian press will probably have the information next. As soon as you send your report in, the Canadian press will pick it up and report on it. Look at what happened in the thirtieth session when one reporter phoned up and got the income tax returns of several people in this House. There is no secrecy or privacy. This is a total erosion.

The National Energy Program is part of the package the government is putting together. It is nationalization and it states that right in the name "National Energy". It is nationalization; it is socialism in its most disastrous form, as is this bill.

The next bill which will somehow be sneaked into this House, and I will be terrified when that happens, will remove the right to vote. The leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) will probably go along with that in view of his associations with his friends in the south. The government has almost removed our rights in this House. The next thing it will do is take away a person's right to vote. That is what I am afraid of. The government is removing people's incentive and the rights of Canadians.

Why bother having an industrial strategy? This bill takes care of that. This bill gives the government the right to go into every business's books to check where the money is coming from, how to make money and where it can grab the money. The government is nationalizing the oil industry, and all it will have to do is nationalize the businesses which are really profitable. As I have said before in this House, the government will nationalize and create non-profit organizations. That is what this government does; it buys up corporations—Petrofina is the last one—and immediately turns them into non-profit organizations.

An hon. Member: Pop Shoppes.

Mr. Fennell: Pop Shoppes; let's not, because we are fighting right now to keep them private. The government is trying to take them back but I would like to keep them private. That is another example of what the government has done through the Canada Development Corporation. The government has seen what they are doing, has seen their returns and now thinks there is lots of money there; but as soon as the government gets its hands on them they will go broke.

Part of the reason for this bill and the adaptation of the bill is that there is no real industry in Canada relative to our size. The government is just looking for another way of grabbing things after looking through the returns. The government has jumped on the resource industry and next it will grab the farms. It will grab the agricultural base of this country, the one constant we have in this country. That time is not very far away and it is coming. As I said before, the government is going to end up with a lot of people's homes unless it does something about the situation.

Really Bill S-10 moves very rapidly into the private sector. It is moving so rapidly it is going to destroy the last remnants of the private enterprise system. That makes me very sad. That has been a very successful system. We have a free country, we have rights, we have freedom of movement, freedom allowing people to come to this country and enjoy it, freedom to work at will, and I regret that this bill will take that away.

I referred before to the potential confiscation that exists in this measure, particularly when it is tied to Bill C-48 and its confiscation of 25 per cent of the rights of oil companies. This frightens me. I just wonder why we are here. I wonder why the government is trying to sneak these things through on us. The government brings these things through in saddening ways through different bills; a little bit here, a little bit there, a little bit through the Constitution, a little bit through Bill C-48 and a little bit through Bill C-57.

By Bill C-57 the government is taking away the rights of the provinces. The provinces enjoyed the right of royalty on natural resources. The government is being specific in that regard, but in this measure it is no longer being specific. The government is going to go after all other resources. It will get the statistics and the information. The government will watch growth and will have a chart on each corporation that is growing. As the corporations grow the government will say: "Aha! The nickel industry is looking good this week; let's go after it". I am very concerned.

We have talked about patent rights, and I guess copyrights could be included. What the government is trying to do through a bill is tax a Canadian corporation which has the intelligence, the aggressiveness and the wherewithal to go out and buy rights from somebody else who has done the development. The reason that development takes place somewhere else is that most countries in the world are very aware of research and development. They provide a very strong incentive to encourage research and development in the private sector. This government figures, why should it subsidize the private sector? It feels it should not have to subsidize the private sector. It will go after the companies that buy these rights and bring them back to Canada. It will nail the companies that way and get patents free. From a private point of view I think this is commendable. These are the kinds of things the private sector does through ingenuity. What this government is doing is beyond ingenuity. We in this country have a responsibility to contribute to research and development. We have a responsibility to help people develop new products. We have a responsibility to help the industrial base modernize and to help labour become more productive. We are doing nothing for them.

Japan and Germany are far ahead of us right now in robotizing the auto industry. General Motors in the United States is moving very quickly now. It is doing the reverse of what Japan did before the war. It is stealing ideas from Japan and perfecting them. Once General Motors perfects robotizing of auto production the government will turn right around and collect all that information here in Canada through Bill S-10. That is a parasitic clause in the bill, together with many of the others.

This bill worries me. As I said before, perhaps some ingenious entrepreneurs will find ways to get around this bill. It will create lots of work for lawyers and accountants, but again it is an indirect tax. This bill is a total erosion of the rights of Canadian citizens who are entrepreneurs. It is very similar to leaving property rights out of the Constitution. It is very similar to taking away royalty rights under Bill C-57. It is just a continuation. When we put the whole package together, all we see is a government destined to take away the rights of corporations and individuals.

I plead with the government to read some of the excellent documents being produced by some of its agencies. They are saying, "Remove regulation". I have said before in this House, how about some imaginative plagiarism? Why not steal some ideas from south of the border where they are trying to get the private sector going? Do not continually erode the private sector. It is our spirit. It is our country. I feel very strongly that we will lose what our forefathers created. My grandfather was an Irish immigrant. My other grandfather was a German immigrant. They came over here with nothing. This country gave them opportunity, and will we take it away with bills such as Bill S-10, which removes the right of the Canadian citizen to build even a home and, more particularly, to build wealth?

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have been listening attentively to the hon. gentleman. I would like him to identify from where in the bill before the House all these terrible consequences flow. How will we be depriving individuals of their homes and the private sector of the opportunity to make a dollar? The hon. member has not addressed any of the provisions of the bill in order to support his claims. We are either a house of serious debate or this is a place where comments are made without any foundation. I therefore feel that the whole speech of the hon. gentleman is out of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): As he did not do in the case of the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington), the minister has now questioned whether the proceedings are orderly. I listened carefully to the hon. member for Capilano, and in view of the fact that this is second reading and the purpose of second reading is to debate the principle of the bill—and that encourages wide consideration—I felt he was perfectly in order.

There has been a bit of difficulty with the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell), who has perhaps moved away from the principle of the bill. The whole question of relevance at second reading is a difficult one. We might solve the problem by my suggesting to the hon. member for Ontario that he try to approach the bill more closely if he can. However, this is second reading, and the Chair intends to recognize the principle that at second reading debate is on the principle of the bill, and that allows a fair scope for imagination.

Mr. Fennell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am referring to proposed section 4.1 which reads:

Every holding corporation to which this part applies shall, for each reporting period—

I do not need to read them all out, but I refer to proposed sections 4.1(1)(a), and 4.1(2)(a),(b),(c),(d) and (e). I am referring to proposed section 4.2. I am referring to those parts of this bill.

Mr. Evans: How do they relate?

Mr. Fennell: They relate because they erode the rights of private corporations to exist. Once the government gets hold of this, tied in with the other bills, it gives itself the opportunity to check out what everyone is doing.

As we have seen, the government has taken over the oil industry. Now it will move into the next sector, which might be the nickel sector, the copper sector, the wine sector or whatever. That is the point I am making. This is only part of a total strategy by this government and its leader. I say I am in order. Perhaps I am being general, but I am concerned. I may be terribly emotional about this because I know the people affected. Many of my constituents have small businesses.

One of the reasons for putting the amount up to $5 million in assets and $10 million in sales is very simple. This is the same thing as a corporation of 20 years ago with $500,000 in assets and $1 million in sales. We are referring to small business here. Small business is not $25,000, $100,000 or half a million. Small business is anything up to $25 million. There is no differentiation. In this day the competition between world markets is so severe that you cannot be a mini corporation any more; you must be at least a $25 million corporation. Through this bill this government is removing the rights of Canadians and taking away the opportunity to invest in this country. I refer to proposed sections 4.1 and 4.2.

When this bill gets to committee, I will take a very active part because I would like to fight so that it can be adjusted.

I am absolutely delighted that the government is looking at some of the international unions. I am not critical of the unions of Canada; I am talking about international unions. I am delighted that this government is attempting to nail them down because they do not have assets of $10 million; they have assets of $10 billion. One good thing about the bill is that through it the government is attempting to catch up with them.

I appreciate the opportunity to talk about this. I hope I will have another opportunity after the bill has been to committee and we have made extensive revisions.

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I think this bill should be considered in the context of freedom of information. I find it contradictory, strange and ironic that the party to my right, which has so strongly espoused the policy of requiring the government to provide greater information to the public—a policy which we have advocated for a great many years—should now appear to be opposed to the principle of the right of citizens to know the nature and structure of those corporations and the nature and structure of those trade unions which exercise such a substantial degree of power in our society.

I find it quite fantastic to hear the tremendous rage—the sincerity of which I do not question and with which I continue to be impressed—expressed with respect to the nature of the corporate world out there and the nature of the trade union world, which I am quite happy to talk about, and to hear the concerns expressed by members of the Conservative party. I think this is a departure from the historic traditions of that party but, nevertheless, there is a feeling, expressed by a wing of the Conservative party that any requirement with respect to the reporting of critical financial information is an act of impending totalitarianism and simply one more step on the slippery slope toward a totalitarian state.

That position is one which, as I say, has been expressed with a great deal of sincerity. I know it is deeply felt but I just do not think it conforms to the nature of the world in which we live. All I can say is that it is an understandable reaction to the frustration which all of us in the opposition parties feel about the inactivity of the present government with respect to the economy. It is an understandable frustration which I certainly feel.

When I heard the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) talk about the absence of an industrial strategy and the foolhardiness of the government of British Columbia in deciding to sell off lots of coal very cheaply, I could only say "hear, hear!" It is a position I share. When I hear criticism of the government's high interest rate policy coming from the same member, I agree with him. Unfortunately the person he has to convince is his colleague, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), who just ten days ago defended the high interest rate policy of Governor Bouey and said if he was minister of finance he would be defending it as well.

With respect to what he had to say on those matters, I was in substantial agreement. However, when it comes to looking at the principles involved in legislation of the CALURA type first introduced by the Diefenbaker government in the early 1960s, it seems to me the question is this. In addition to requiring a government to respond to the demands of its citizens, their right to know what is going on in government, the nature of the power being exercised by the government and our rights as citizens to access to critical information with respect to decisions being made, how can one then turn around and say that corporations whose power, even on the admission of the hon. member for Capilano, has grown substantially, who are exercising substantial power over the individual, should be even further increased? I think I heard the hon. member say that in many instances their power rivals that of government. The hon. member for Capilano and the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell) both made passing references to the power of trade unions which I do not entirely accept. I think they exaggerate the power of the trade unions. Listening to the hon. member for Ontario talking about the billions in assets that international unions have, it demonstrates an ignorance about union finances which is astonishing.

Nevertheless, despite that fact, if you say these groups exercise substantial public power, surely at some point we abandon the mythological notion that we are simply talking about interference with privacy. Some other principles have to be established. At some point those groups have a responsibility to the public to give up information which is of concern and direct interest to the public. I say to the members of the Conservative party, who I know will be participating at great length in this debate and with some interest, that surely the question is not that all of this is on the slippery slope to totalitarianism; surely the question should be: What information do we really want and need to know—

Mr. Huntington: Like what?

Mr. Rae: —and why do we need to know it? What purpose is served by our knowing it, and what purpose is served by our not knowing it? There will always be those people who will say: "To ask this question is to interfere with my privacy". In many instances that is a justifiable concern. Certainly we are moving into a society where privacy is being threatened every day. Indeed, I would say it is substantially under attack even in this House by the activities of certain members with respect to those matters.

We need to be concerned with why people want to know certain things, and what purpose is served by knowing about matters which are private, or indeed matters of state security, for which suddenly there is a demand to know. It seems to me that is the question that should be addressed, not to sort of take the blanket approach that anything the government wants to know with respect to trade unions or companies is an act of incipient totalitarianism.

I had occasion, Mr. Speaker, to work for an international trade union and I must say that I was always proud of the fact that that union was not afraid to disclose information with respect to its finances. Indeed, it had to be audited, the information was available to the members with respect to how much was paid to union directors, how much was paid to all employees of the trade union, precisely how much money was in the strike fund. All that information was public and I do not see why it should not be. Of course it should be public.

We had a fight in Ontario, which I am sure the minister who introduced this bill will recall, where there was a requirement that came through the United States that trade unions had an obligation to represent their members fairly, the duty of fair representation which was imposed in the United States. This was opposed by some trade unions because they say the state should not be interfering in the life of trade unions.

I have always felt, and I have argued it publicly and will argue it again, that where bodies exercise a substantial amount of public power with respect to their members, even if they are voluntary organizations like trade unions, society has a perfect right to impose duties on those organizations provided the administration of that duty is perfectly fair.

Now, any individual trade unionist in this country, because every province and the federal government requires it, has the right to take his trade union to the labour board if he feels he has not been fairly or fully represented. That right is not resisted by the trade unions because they recognize they are public bodies and they have a responsibility to society and society has a right to know. The objection voiced by my colleague in speaking on behalf of our party, the hon. member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker), is this. The kind of information being asked of trade unions under this act and the way in which it ascribes and compiles this information with respect to international unions can be misleading. This is because it underestimates the provision of services by international unions in Canada. It is misleading because it underestimates the extent to which funds are indeed expended in Canada on a variety of services, including the expenditure of strike funds. So that we often get a picture of trade union activity and financing in Canada which is misleading.

This is a debate which has been going on within the trade union movement itself. It is a subject which I do not want to preoccupy the House with; I simply want to indicate to the minister that when the bill goes into committee I think that the very real and practical concern that a large number of our trade unions have with respect to this information should be taken seriously, perhaps in the way in which it is presented in the annual report, so that there is a more accurate assessment of what is really collected and spent in Canada. Then we as a society can see the international trade union movement undergoing dramatic internal change. There is no resistance in any international union of which I am aware or have knowledge of to the idea that Canadian union members should have a complete, clean and exact picture of what is going on in their union. What is objected to is that the presentation of information with respect to the activities of international unions in Canada is misleading in its description of how much money is really expended on behalf of members. As I say, that is not an ideological question; that is a factual question which I think we should be able to reach some consensus on.

The hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell) said that he was really glad the government was nailing international unions. This is an attitude toward what is going on here which, if it were expressed by a member of my party, I would find quite amazing. The government is not out to crucify or nail anyone. It should be put in the context of what members of the public, members of the trade union movement and members of corporations have a right to know. What kind of protection should we afford to the important principle of privacy? How can we ensure that the presentation of this information is as fair as possible?

I want to turn to another aspect of the bill which concerns me. It is the question of the salaries of corporate executives. Not long ago in the House I directed some questions to the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) concerning a comparison of the wage rates of average employees with the compensation paid to certain executives.

Because of wage and price controls, the imposition of the Anti-Inflation Act and the workings of the Anti-Inflation Board, there are really two moralities in the country with respect to compensation—who gets what, when, where and how. The negotiated wage rates of the organized worker or even the unorganized worker are published the day they are ratified. They can be found in the collective agreements. They turn up in the material of Statistics Canada. They are available for all to see. We can track every month the nature of settlements—how high they have gone; whether they have risen 7 per cent, 8 per cent or 9 per cent; the calculation of the COLA and of the cost of fringe benefits. All of this is exercised under the clearest and harshest glare of publicity. One can say that we do not actually know what the individual makes because he may rent a room in his house or have a part-time job, but one is able to calculate in a very rough and ready but clear way exactly what an average employee earns.

In the publication of Statistics Canada figures last Friday, we discovered that the industrial composite wage rose 10.9 per cent. We all know that inflation for the same period has risen 12.5 per cent. Once again it is clear that this year the average employee has fallen behind the increases in the cost of living. This is one morality.

Other people who are subjected to the same morality are members of Parliament. Dare I say on the floor of the House that our salaries are public knowledge? Our increases are negotiated in public. The salaries of public servants are available. If one wants to know how much a deputy minister makes, one can find out. It is public knowledge, it must be published, it is well-known. The vast majority of trade union salaries are public knowledge. They are published at conventions. They are usually known and voted upon by members at conventions. They vote upon whether the salary should be $50,000 or $60,000 for the president of a large trade union.

When it comes to information with respect to corporate executives, the most senior executive officers of corporations, we do not know how much they make. We do not know how much they earn, we do not know other forms of compensation they receive.

Mr. Orlikow: Their shareholders do not know.

Mr. Rae: As my colleague points out, their shareholders do not know. That information is secret. I am not surprised hon. members of the Conservative party resist the intrusion of the searchlight, the torchligh or even the mildest flicker of a candle into this field. They put up the argument that the information is private, that it is an interference into the private world of corporations. Individual shareholders might want to know this information.

Since raising this matter, I have heard from a number of shareholders who have said, "I would like to know. I do not know. I have raised this matter at shareholders' meetings, and I have been told where to get off. I have tried to find out about the number of interest free loans with respect to buying stock options until the year kingdom come. I have tried to make these inquiries and I have gotten nowhere."

If we want to talk about property rights, I would have thought individual shareholders would have certain rights with respect to the information they are entitled to know about the corporations into which they are putting money. Are they not entitled to know whether a corporate executive is earning $250,000, $500,000 or $750,000? I will demonstrate that those figures are not fanciful. I think shareholders are entitled to know that information.

Along with my concern about the manner in which trade union returns have been calculated, I have a major concern about what is missing from the bill. There is another reason we have the right to know such information. The hon. member for Capilano will not like to hear this because it will probably represent another view of why we are living in a decadent age. Envy is not the motive here. It is a concern about fairness and it is a recognition that as a society we have an obligation one to another. Society has become more complex and regulated. The nature of that obligation or what is our sense of community one to another is very difficult. It is very difficult because sometimes when the state imposes it, it becomes an infringement of privacy. I am very sympathetic to those concerns, as I have said on several occasions.

In other cases one must say that we know the wages of the average fellow walking down the street, the average longshoreman or the average worker in Capilano. Statistics Canada knows what they make. This information is available to the whole world. The information is public so that if the Minister of Finance wants to address the Conference Board, as he did the other day, he can say, for example, that there have been a number of settlements in British Columbia which have been a little lush. He can recite the exact percentages and exactly what people are earning. When the Minister of Finance speaks to the Conference Board, does he know how much the person who introduces him is making? No, he does not know because that information is private; it is no one's business but the person introducing him.

As I said, I disagree with the hon. member for Capilano. I respect him for the sincerity of his views, but I think he is expressing a yearning for the return of something which cannot come. The search for that return will prove to be very destructive to important things which have been won for people of all ages and incomes.

In a society which has a sense of community there must be a basis of comparison for a whole range of reasons and for a whole range of policies; not, God forbid, wage and price controls because we know who is affected by them more harshly than anyone. They affect the wages of the people who are in the glare of the public eye. We must have a sense of fairness in society.

It seems to me that we want to be a community. The increases which go to one group do not go to other groups. I have heard Conservatives and Liberal speakers often indicate that there is no free lunch. I agree that there is no free lunch. If society decides to give more to pensioners, it means other people will receive less. There is a sense of society with limits. Of course we should provide for growth, of course there must be incentives for society to grow. I am not talking about a society which is stagnant or decadent. I am talking about a society which recognizes the civil obligations of each of its members to one another, a society which realizes that there are limits to some kinds of growth. If a particular group of people want more, that means others will receive less. If a particular group of executives want more, that means the shareholders will receive less. It means other groups will receive less because there is a sense, a reality, in our society that each of us cannot simply make money off someone else without there being a cost.

As I said to the hon. member for Capilano, the search for his society will be a destructive one. The notion that one can somehow go back to a society where there is no concept of social cost and no sense of what the obligations of the community are to itself and to each member of the community, is a fruitless and, as I said before, an ultimately destructive quest.

I would like to use Massey-Ferguson as an example to make my next point. I do not know any of the people associated with that company and I have no particular gripe against them. As the hon. member for Capilano might think, I certainly do not envy them. I am not a particularly envious, and some might say a particularly enviable, person. I am certainly not envious of what the executives at Massey-Ferguson are making.

What kind of society are we trying to create? Massey-Ferguson, which is a large corporation, has fallen on hard times for a variety of reasons—because of a number of bad corporate decisions, very difficult interest rates, and the transformation of the farm implement business, not entirely dissimilar to the problems facing the auto industry. At the same time that this is happening, the company comes to the government. I am sure the hon. member for Capilano, when he was minister, heard rumblings about what was going on with respect to Massey-Ferguson. But at the same time that those rumblings were going on, the income of the chairman and president of that company was increased substantially. His salary went from $272,773 to $390,591—a pay increase of 43 per cent. The first vice-president accepted a 40 per cent increase bringing his salary to $281,818. Another vice-president had his salary increased by 30 per cent to $227,580.

Mr. Kristiansen: That is restraint!

Mr. Orlikow: Where did you get your figures?

Mr. Rae: Two of my colleagues, in a gospel-like manner, are calling on me to make two points.

We recognize that the minister, when he was a Tory, was saying that we must have restraint. We must have a sense of what is fair. All of us now recognize that as a society we must make some difficult decisions with respect to who gets what, when, where and how. These are not individual decisions. These are no longer decisions which are allocated by the marketplace because the marketplace no longer allocates them. Where the marketplace allocates them it does not often do it very well, effectively or fairly. There has always been this fight in western civilizations since the collapse of the moral order in medieval society between the notion of a moral economy and the notion of a market economy.

Mr. Huntington: You are back in the Vanderbilt age.

Mr. Rae: The hon. member says I am back in the Vanderbilt age. I will not do him the disservice of telling him what age I think he has been living in for the past while.

That is the nature of conflict; it is the consistent return in our society to the question of a moral economy and to the question of why people should be earning this much. Why should there be this disparity of wealth of ten, 20 and 30 times between one individual and another for performing work? That question is back and it will not go away. It will not disappear. You can not ask people to remove it. It is not a question of envy; it is a question of justice and fairness. It is the continual return to that question that we simply cannot tolerate any longer.

We cannot tolerate the Minister of Finance going to a conference and telling senior executives that trade unions must show restraint when we know what trade union increases have been in the last year. They have been 10.9 per cent; Statistics Canada tells us so. That agency also tells us that inflation is at 12.5 per cent. I do not care if it compiles its CPI figures in the last week of April, the first week of May or the last week of March for May or April, or however it is done, you cannot conceal the hard fact when it comes out. It is a fact which everyone knows—the cost of living is going up faster than the average individual's income.

At the same time, side by side with that, we have corporations which are not doing very well. You can hardly call it a reward for success. Where is the market punishing failure? Was the chairman of Massey-Ferguson punished for his failure? Was the company punished in any way for its incompetence? Where was the rugged, muscular individualism which is supposed to mete our punishment and give rewards? It did not function. It is not functioning. That is why it is so absurd that we must go to the United States to find out what the directors and chief executive officers of Canadian companies earn—as my colleague for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) implied.

Our society must find some way to recognize that the auto worker who lives in my riding, or one who works at Massey-Ferguson, has as much right to a decent wage and to a sense of property as anyone. He wants to own property. Who is protecting his right in a society where interest rates are at 22 per cent, where our largest institutions are only too happy to see smaller companies go to the wall, where the individual's right to property—be it a farm property or his home—is threatened, not by socialism, not by the NDP—certainly not in Ontario—but by the system itself? I believe in private property as much as the hon. member for Capilano. But I believe in it so much that I think everyone ought to have some. That is why I am in this party and not in his place.

Mr. Huntington: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I have enjoyed the remarks of the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) very much. Much of what he says in terms of fairness I agree with. But he has labelled me with probably belonging back in the age of the dinosaur, and I rise on a point of order to protest that.

Is not the problem he and I face today, the issue we are debating today, the problem of paying for the welfare state? For years I have heard Sweden, Norway, Denmark and Great Britain used as examples, and now Canada. They are all in trouble, with perhaps the exception of Norway which has the bounty of North Sea oil to assist it in its problem. That is the dilemma we face. I do not think the hon. member should label me as being back in the dark ages because the system or structure being put in place in those countries is not delivering the solutions. What we on this side are appealing for is debate and delivery, a resolution of the dilemma we face here in Canada. It will certainly not come from—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. There is a custom in the House where an hon. member sometimes rises on a point of order to inquire whether or not he might ask a question of another hon. member. There is no custom whereby an hon. member can enter into debate at a time of his own choosing and interrupt another member to do it.

Mr. Rae: I do not mind the hon. member's interruption at all, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I would enjoy the opportunity of being in a forum where we had the opportunity to debate these issues.

Before I call it six o'clock I want to say to the hon. member—

Mr. Blais: Hurry up.

Mr. Rae: The minister wants me to hurry up. But I am a little slower on my feet at six o'clock than I am at four.

I am saying to the hon. member that it is because this question has to be debated that we need to have the information. If we do not have the information then we do not have all the facts at our disposal which allow us to reach decisions. If we are going to give more to savings and less to consumption—and I know the member's view is that we should, because I heard him express that view when he was a minister—that is fine and it is something which one could argue. Any society has to make those difficult decisions about future investment. But you cannot do it on imperfect information because partial information does not tell you who is getting the savings. That is all I am saying. If we are living in that kind of society, we will be arguing those things, so let us have the information. We do not have it, nor is the government going to give it to us.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being six o'clock, the House stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6.01 the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

IMMIGRATION

APPLICATION OF REGULATIONS TO DOMESTIC WORKERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that immigration officers have been instructed to require formal training before awarding points under the revised point system to domestics and occupational groups applying for landed immigrant status, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes):

That this House instruct the minister to issue a directive indicating that experience shall be treated as an equivalent to formal education for the purpose of administering the Immigration Act as it affects domestics, housekeepers, and children's nurses.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ALLEGED SHIPMENT OF ARMS TO EL SALVADOR—POSITION OF LEADER OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I too rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the support given by the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) in his interview on "Canada AM" this morning for the shipment of arms from Cuba to the guerrilla forces in El Salvador and his condemnation of the U.S. for its arms shipments, I move, seconded by the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens):

That this House condemn the Leader of the NDP for having set himself up as a mediator while holding a hypocritical double standard in his approach to the El Salvadoran question by favouring, on the one hand, the shipment of arms from Cuba to El Salvador and, on the other, a need for a negotiated settlement.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Paproski: Stanley Knowles said no.

Mr. Knowles: Yes, Madam Speaker, I did.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

POST OFFICE

SUGGESTED ISSUANCE OF STAMP TO HONOUR TERRY FOX AND YEAR OF THE DISABLED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to propose a motion, seconded by the hon. member for London West (Mr. Burghardt), and the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose) representing the constituency of Terry Fox. In view of the very real concern by many millions of Canadians that the post office make an exception to honour an exceptional human being, I move:

That this House requests the government to consider issuing a commemorative stamp in honour of the Year of the Disabled featuring the famous run of Terry Fox.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EL SALVADOR—POSITION OF CANADIAN GOVERNMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, on this important day, the seventy-third birthday of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: —I want to place before this House a motion which has absolutely no relationship to that, but one I am sure will gain the support of everyone. Today there will be a petition placed before the House on behalf of 4,000 persons from the area of Hamilton, with regard to El Salvador.

We, as members of Parliament, know that all Canadians are saddened by the knowledge that for hundreds, perhaps thousands, of innocent people living in El Salvador the proposed elections scheduled for 1983 will come too late. In light of the fact that Canadians desire a peaceful and speedy resolution to the conflict in El Salvador, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Hudecki), and supported I know by the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Scott):

That the Government of Canada should reconsider its position on El Salvador.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: Having regard to the preamble to that motion, I am sure the House would want me to wish a happy birthday to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CALL FOR INQUIRY RESPECTING SERVICEMEN EXPOSED TO AGENT ORANGE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Yesterday the United States Senate voted 98 to zero in favour of federally financed medical treatment of Vietnam war veterans who were exposed to the defoliant Agent Orange. Last January 27 the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) evaded questions regarding the damaging effects of Agent Orange on servicemen stationed at Gagetown base in New Brunswick by implying that, since U.S. experience had not yet been settled, there was no reason why the Canadian problem should be remedied. In light of the recent progress made in the United States I move, seconded by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett):

That the Minister of National Defence immediately set up a strictly federally-sponsored inquiry to determine whether servicemen employed at Gagetown during this testing have in any way been affected by Agent Orange and, if they have, that the minister introduce legislation that would provide medical treatment financing for these people.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

GRAIN

REQUIREMENT FOR ADDITIONAL HOPPER CARS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, since the director of grain transportation at Transport Canada has said recently that the federal government will not decide whether to buy new hopper cars until early next year, but the director of the Grain Transport Authority has called on the government to order 1,300 new cars by the end of this summer if there is to be sufficient rolling stock by next year, I move therefore, under Standing Order 43, seconded by the hon. member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight):

That the Minister of Transport immediately place an order for sufficient hopper cars to meet the pressing grain transportation requirements for next year.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

MANPOWER

FUNDING FOR OUTREACH PROGRAMS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, evaluations of Outreach programs show impressive records of innovative and flexible approaches in providing community-based employment related services. Outreach is also a notably cost-effective program. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens):

That this House instruct the Minister of Employment and Immigration to spend at least as much to fund Outreach programs this year as he spent last year.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PARTICIPATION OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE MEMBERS IN PARLIAMENTARY VISIT TO CUBA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas 13 members of the Progressive Conservative party, including such well-known red baiters as the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie), applied to be part of the IPU delegation to the sunny climes of revolutionary Cuba this September, and whereas those selected include the hon. comrades from Durham-Northumberland and York North, both of whom have recently demonstrated great political contortionism by criticizing one member of this House for visiting Cuba while secreting their own desires to go there, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae):

That since their lives will clearly be endangered by their rubbing shoulders with raving Cuban commies, this House instructs the Solicitor General to send along three RCMP officers to ensure the safety of the Gamble-Lawrence brigade.

THE CENSUS

INFRINGEMENT OF PRIVACY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, because of the many infringements on the privacy of Canadians during the taking of the census and whereas many Canadians feel the information requested is highly sensitive, discriminatory, and possibly available from other sources, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields):

That this House instruct the government to allow individual Canadians the discretion not to answer questions they feel infringe on their privacy in this year's census and in all censuses in the future.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

LITIGATION AGAINST FARMERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The Canadian Wheat Board lost its case against a Stavely farmer in a court of appeal in Alberta. This farmer, along with others, had rented available space in an elevator rather than store grain on the land, and this was considered a criminal offence by the Wheat Board. The Wheat Board used producers' money to prosecute the farmers. The farmers were put to needless expense to defend themselves. Now the Canadian Wheat Board is going to start the whole case over again.

Whereas the Canadian government, through CIDA, has given Grenada $475,000 to build a garage so that vehicles will not have to remain outside in the weather, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger):

That this House urges the Canadian government to extend the same generous treatment given to the communist regime in Grenada to the farmers in Canada by ordering the Canadian Wheat Board to cease and desist from this costly and needless litigation.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

AGRICULTURE

AID TO FARMERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that the government has recently approved a grant to the Marxist state of Grenada through CIDA of some $7.5 million to assist the cocoa plantation farmers replace existing trees and plant abandoned or neglected acreage, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain):

That the government recognize the plight of Canadian farmers in replanting their acreages because of high interest rates, labour costs, etc., and make available to them the same sort of generous monetary aid it is so anxious to extend to Marxist-dominated Grenada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

INDIAN AFFAIRS

POLICE RAIDS ON RESTIGOUCHE RESERVE IN QUEBEC—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Last week the Micmac Restigouche reserve in Quebec was raided by the Quebec Provincial Police. The raid was a blunt attempt to keep the Indian people from fishing. Today the reserve is again facing possible raids, as the police have once more surrounded the reserve.

The executive of the National Indian Brotherhood has gone to Restigouche in support of the Micmac people and to attempt to avoid any violence which might be sparked by another raid. As the Fisheries Act is a federal statute and the responsibility for Indian rights and lands is in the jurisdiction of the federal government, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar):

That this House condemns the Restigouche raids and demands a full inquiry into the role of the federal government to protect the Micmac people.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE SENATE

CALL FOR ABOLITION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my motion under Standing Order 43 does not arise out of the fact that the journalists beat the MPs in the ball game last night; it arises out of the fact that today is the seventy-third birthday of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). In recognition of his great contribution to this House and his service to Parliament and the people of Canada, as a birthday gift I call upon the Government of Canada, in full consultation with the provinces, to initiate the process leading to the abolition of the Senate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

AGRICULTURE

AID TO FARMERS FACING FORECLOSURE

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Minister of Finance requested that individual cases be referred to when discussing farm bankruptcies in this House, and I would like to refer to a case from my constituency pertaining to a couple who have farmed for 40 years, paid off five bank mortgages during that period, raised nine children, some of whom have gone into agriculture, and were encouraged by a local lending organization to expand their operation in 1973.

In the last year and a half, Madam Speaker, this family have been faced with all their operating funds being cut off by their bank; their son has had his farm foreclosed by his bank; and now this family have been given 30 days' notice to repay their loan or face foreclosure. This leads to this couple, now of retirement age, selling their farm and their retirement home in Delhi, Ontario, to meet these demands. My question to the Prime Minister is this: what do you propose to do to help this couple and others like them in agriculture in Canada today?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I remember the Minister of Finance made an offer to the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands, and I make the same offer to the hon. member. If he will forward the name to the minister he will see what he can do in talking to the banks about it.

An hon. Member: Can they all do that?

SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BOND PROGRAM

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Madam Speaker, I am sure my colleagues on this side will forward all their letters again to the minister, as this letter has been forwarded both to the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Finance without response. I would think, Madam Speaker, when a member of this House rises to ask a specific question appealing a case for some of his constituents to the Prime Minister, that possibly we could have an answer of substance.

My supplementary is that the Prime Minister will know that the Minister of Agriculture stated some three weeks ago that the small business development bond would be extended to include unincorporated small business and farms. Can he tell us if this is a fact, is it a reality, is it happening, or is it another Whelan pie-in-the sky statement?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member expresses disappointment that he did not get an answer of substance. I think he is realistic enough to know that I could not possibly, without advance notice, know about a particular case of a particular family in one part of Canada and their troubles with the bank. That is why the Minister of Finance made the suggestion that if a particular case were drawn to his attention he would undertake to let the banks understand that this case had been drawn to his attention, and would ask them to exercise the kind of compassion that he talked to them about when he met them, with his colleagues, two weeks ago here in Ottawa.

As to the specific question of the hon. member, I think the Minister of Agriculture indicated this kind of consideration was one which had been drawn to the government's attention and to that of the minister, and that if he had any answer to it he would be making it known in this House.

● (1420)

GOVERNMENT AID TO PRODUCERS

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Prime Minister, and it relates to the same topic of the problems farmers are having in financing. I also can refer to many cases from individual constituents who are having problems and going out of business, but I would like to ask the Prime Minister if he could hold out some hope in terms of government programs or assistance, or hope in the sense that interest rates would come down, to those people who have now either cut back on production or are in the process of going out of business, or those who have been forced to take jobs off the farm. In the process they are cutting back on production. This will show up in the form of increased food prices to the consumer in years to come. If the government had some programs to help these people, they would have some incentive to try to hang on, to stay in business, and to produce food for the consumer for another year.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member approaches the problem from a different point of view. I think it is a very valid point of view. Perhaps the hon. member did not hear that the government announced this morning it would be paying out $81 million, mainly to western grain farmers.

Mr. Epp: Four hundred dollars each.

Mr. Trudeau: Perhaps it was not made known to the hon. member opposite this morning, but I am announcing it now if he has not heard.

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for Portage-Marquette.

Mr. Trudeau: I indicated that it would be $81 million. Obviously—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. member does not have the floor.

APPLICATION OF LOWER INTEREST RATES

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, certainly that announcement is welcome. I know it will be well received, but we have some concerns about this announcement.

I could indicate specifically to the Prime Minister that there are programs available to the American farmer through the so-called federal intermediate banks and production credit associations which are now making credit available to farmers at 16 per cent simple interest. If we take prime plus one and calculate it on an annual basis, it looks like we are paying something like 6 per cent more for farm credit than the Americans.

Would the Prime Minister be willing to use the Farm Credit Corporation or the FBDB to look at some of these new and imaginative ideas the Americans have been using, and some of the ideas we may have, in order to bring down interest rates to the farming community?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, this is the purpose of the Farm Credit Corporation; it subsidizes interest to farmers in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

SHORT-TERM CREDIT

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, my further supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. He should know that the money made available by the Farm Credit Corporation is not for financing on a day-to-day basis, for example, to buy fertilizer and to feed cattle. Those are the kinds of things about which I am talking. We are not so much concerned about long-term interest rates. It is the short-term interest rates. I think we could come up with some of these concepts, if the government were really serious about looking at them.

Again I urge the Prime Minister to see whether we could use the Farm Credit Corporation or the FBDB to look at some of these instruments to bring down the cost of operating credit, not only to farmers but also to small businesses.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member's question has already been answered by the Minister of Finance.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EL SALVADOR—NEGOTIATIONS OF PEACEFUL SETTLEMENT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. On Monday in a speech in the House of Commons the Prime Minister raised the question "who is my neighbour", and quite correctly asserted that when children are being murdered, or trade unionists are being jailed anywhere in the world, appropriately we should all be regarding them as our neighbours.

Considering that the former United States ambassador has said that the security forces under the control of the government of El Salvador have murdered 5,000 children and that trade unionists are being arrested daily in that country, including three who were arrested the day before I arrived in San Salvador, I should like to ask the Prime Minister quite seriously whether his vocabulary concerning ideals for the Third World means anything? Should he not now show leadership and join with the Government of Mexico in attempting to negotiate a peaceful settlement of the violent conflict in El Salvador?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member knows, because he was in that country, that acts of violence are being committed by both sides. I would not attempt to balance statistics for either side. I would recognize that both sides have extremists who are committing needless acts of violence.

• (1425)

As a solution, the hon. member proposes a negotiated settlement. The Secretary of State for External Affairs yesterday quoted the words of President Duarte which indicated that he, too, wanted negotiations. He wanted negotiations which would result in a free election. That does not seem like something which is unacceptable to this side or to the hon. member's side. Surely we both agree that a political solution is what is necessary in El Salvador; and I believe those words have been used by the Leader of the New Democratic Party himself. The question is whether you can have a political settlement without a democratic election. I think the answer is that that is the best course, if it is possible.

What distresses me in the apparent attitude of the Leader of the New Democratic Party is that he does not put the accent on the election, he puts the accent on a negotiated settlement, as if somebody should form the government as a result of some kind of coalition.

We say that if an election is possible, and we know that it was possible even in Zimbabwe, and under very difficult circumstances, we hope it would be possible in El Salvador. We believe our government is on the right course in encouraging the parties in the field to negotiate the conditions whereby that election could be a fair and open one.

ESTABLISHMENT OF CIVIL ORDER

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I would first point out to the Prime Minister that the legal adviser to the Archbishop in San Salvador, who did the verification of the terrorist killings under his direction, said to me that 80 per cent to 90 per cent of the terrorist killings are being done by the security forces. The evidence is clear that they are being done overwhelmingly by one side. I do not deny that some are being done by the other side, but it is the policy of the security forces to carry them out. It is not the policy of the Front.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I say to the Conservative members to my right—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should remember that he must ask questions of members on the government side.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, considering that the bar association in El Salvador, as well as virtually every other interested group of citizens, has said that under present circumstances elections would be a charade because of the degree of terrorism, would the Prime Minister not agree that, as a pre-condition for elections, which we all favour, what must be established first is a minimum degree of civil order? Since the Front has offered to have unconditional negotiations to bring this about, would the hon. gentleman also not agree that the first priority ought to be the establishment of peace, which should then be followed by elections?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member assures us that terrorism is not the policy of the Front. I think we can make the assurance that terrorism is not the policy of the Duarte government.

An hon. Member: It is so.

Mr. Trudeau: I regret to say that if hon. members opposite say that, then they are not well informed. Mr. Duarte is not in control of some of his extremists any more than the Front is in control of some of its extremists. I think it would be fairer to say that both sides want to get rid of terrorism rather than to say that only one side condemns it. Both sides condemn it. But both sides have extremist elements which do practise terrorism.

The hon. member says that the bar association has stated that under present circumstances—if I noted his words well—elections would be a charade. We agree with that, and President Duarte agrees with that, which is why he is not proposing elections "under present circumstances". He is proposing that the elections be prepared by rules and meetings which would permit them to be held fairly.

I do not think there is a great difference between the position of the Leader of the New Democratic Party and the position of the government. The Leader of the New Democratic Party says he wants to see elections held one day, so does Duarte, and so does this government.

The Leader of the New Democratic Party shakes his head that he does not want that. I do not know if I misunderstood him. I understood him to say that he wanted to see elections held.

Mr. Broadbent: Yes.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I do not think the members of the New Democratic Party are very serious.

● (1430)

ROLE OF CANADIAN GOVERNMENT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I frankly do not believe the Prime Minister believes what he has just been saying about the position of the government in El Salvador. The position of the government in El Salvador is, indeed, to proceed with elections now. The government has set the date within the year, and it is that date which the bar association, in effect, has said is ridiculous.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister, considering that before elections were feasible in Zimbabwe it required the outside pressure of dozens of states to make that a possibility, does he not think the Government of Canada should join in a similar kind of outside pressure to create peaceful conditions before elections take place in El Salvador? Second, I would like to ask him, since there is obviously some difference of views about what is taking place in that part of the world, will the Prime Minister agree to send his Secretary of State for External Affairs, along with representatives of all the parties in the House of Commons, to make an on the site inspection in El Salvador and Central America itself, so that they can bring back the truth to the people of Canada?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I do not think I can or should make that undertaking any more than it could have been made in the days of Rhodesia when the revolution toward Zimbabwe was taking place. We think that outside pressure is useful, and we are using what measure of pressure we can to ensure that the elections will be fair. We participated as observers in such an election in Rhodesia. We would be prepared to do the same thing. Certainly the OAS has been invited to do the same thing by President Duarte. I concede that the one-year deadline does seem very short to set up the conditions for a fair election, but I can understand also the government of that country wanting to have the elections as soon as possible so that there be a clear electoral mandate for some government.

The difficulty is not with the fact that time is short. The difficulty is presumably with the parties themselves who do not even see the means of getting together to discuss or to begin to discuss—

Mr. Broadbent: That is why they need a mediator.

Mr. Trudeau: —conditions of such an election.

Well, the hon. member attempted to mediate on behalf of the International Socialist Party, a body much more prestigious than the mere Government of Canada. He knows what—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member knows what success he had. I suggest that when the Leader of the New Democratic Party went to El Salvador, he had behind him the moral authority of a recognized party in a great number of countries. How can he compare that to the mere Secretary of State for External Affairs, the hon. member from Windsor—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: —going to El Salvador? It is not the lack of will. The hon. member's own backbenchers realize that he went there and he drew a dud. That is the reality.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GRAIN

COMPENSATION TO FARMERS FOR EMBARGO ON SHIPMENTS TO RUSSIA

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, I would like to address my question to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. In light of his government's documented reluctance to compensate the farmers fully for the embargo placed on grain sales to the U.S.S.R., further confirmed by the announcement today, I would ask the minister if he would explain to the farmers of Canada and to this House why they should have suffered the cost of 25 per cent to 30 per cent in additional interest; and why it is $40 million short of any study done by any other economic body, when inflation has removed about $16 million because of the delay in that payment, so that farmers only receive $65 million. Finally, why were rye, rape and flax not included in the compensation payments?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am quite sure that the opinion of the west will be different from the opinion indicated here. The amount of $81 million is certainly a considerable one, and everyone will understand the circumstances, which were quite difficult to assess. There was no effect on the quantities of grains sold last year. The effect was only on the price. There were all kinds of other compensating factors to take into account. On another fact, my hon. friend is wrong, because the assessment the University of Saskatchewan made was at a level of $71 million, which is certainly less than the amount that the Government of Canada is paying.

Mr. McKnight: Madam Speaker, the compensation was promised by the Conservative government. The farmers would be fully compensated for any loss.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

LEVEL OF COMPENSATION

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): This government has said that a case cannot be made for the producers of rape, rye or flax; but it can make a case for the corn producers and winter wheat producers. As a matter of fact it goes far enough to make a case that the Canadian Olympic Committee suffered a loss by not going to Moscow. The Prime Minister asked for compassion from the banks. How about some compassion from this government for the problems of the farmers? If I could say this, $81 million, on an average, in western Canada works out to $400 a farm, which does not buy any more than a ton of nitrogen fertilizer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am surprised by the question because my information is that the off-board sales which have been made through the commercial system will be compensated on the same level as the on-board. That is the information I have.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

USE OF AGENT ORANGE AT CAMP GAGETOWN

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. On Tuesday the U.S. Senate overwhelmingly approved a federally financed medical treatment package for Vietnam veterans who suffered the consequences of Agent Orange. As the minister knows, this poison was tested in the Camp Gagetown area prior to its use in Vietnam. Five months ago the minister promised an investigation into the possible effects the tests had on service personnel in the Camp Gagetown area at the time, and also the 5,000 or 6,000 civilians who live in the immediate vicinity of the camp area.

Will the minister now tell the House what the result of the investigation was, and in light of Tuesday's decision in the U.S. Senate of the dangers of Agent Orange, is he now prepared to recognize that there is a strong likelihood of adverse human reactions to those tests of Agent Orange in the Camp Gagetown area?

[Translation]

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I must say that the matter concerning the spreading of Agent Orange at Camp Gagetown was taken very seriously when it was raised a few months ago. I think it is unfair to compare the spraying of Agent Orange in a test involving only a very limited number of Canadian or American servicemen with the massive spraying of the same agent in Vietnam.

When this matter was raised a few months ago, our officials tried to contact most of the servicemen who had taken part in this test. Their findings were minimal.

The House will also remember that at the time, I offered the government of New Brunswick, which was spraying its own forests, and various specialized medical groups to co-operate with them, if necessary, to ascertain the effects of Agent Orange on those involved in the test. The opinions differ greatly on this, some medical authorities even claiming there is no danger. Others say that it is indeed dangerous. We are still prepared to co-operate with the provincial government or the medical organizations.

[English]

Mr. Corbett: Madam Speaker, the fact of the matter is that this is a federal government responsibility. It is not the responsibility of the provincial government or any other agency. This is a federal government responsibility. The federal government approved the tests back in 1966. A Liberal government did that, and it is time that this government stopped shilly-shallying around and recognized that the people, the civilians in that region, are not to be expected to act as laboratory animals for tests that this government has perpetuated upon them.

● (1440)

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): This government promised an investigation. Again, I ask the minister if he is prepared to take his responsibilities to the people who are under federal jurisdiction in that region around Camp Gagetown and to initiate that investigation, forgetting about any provincial responsibility because it does not exist, and get a report back to this jurisdiction, the federal House, as quickly as possible, within the next few weeks and tell us just what we can expect, and what the people of the region can expect, as a result of the tests which are its responsibility?

[Translation]

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I suggest that this government fully assumed its responsibility when it refused to carry out an investigation on the very few people who had participated in this test, but instead to do so with the co-operation of the province or provinces which are using the same defoliant, and also with medical groups which may have much more expertise in this area than the hon. member of the opposition.

GRAIN

DETERMINATION OF AMOUNT OF COMPENSATION TO BE PAID TO FARMERS FOR EMBARGO ON SHIPMENTS TO RUSSIA

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture I should like to put a question to his parliamentary secretary, in the hope that he knows a little more about the embargo than the Minister of Transport.

Given that the embargo payments were established at $81 million today in Winnipeg, and as the parliamentary secretary knows yesterday the University of Saskatchewan study—and here I disagree with the Minister of Transport—showed $117 million, and the Wheat Board study was over $100 million, could the parliamentary secretary explain the discrepancy between these studies and the level at which the government decided to put this compensation?

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Ostiguy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): As the Minister of Transport explained a moment ago, Madam Speaker, a first study had been made. It was about $61 million. The Canadian government has now offered $81 million, and I think that what the Minister of Transport said earlier is quite accurate.

[English]

FACTS USED IN ARRIVING AT DECISION

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, in light of that answer and the discrepancies between the position of the parliamentary secretary on these studies and our understanding of them, would he assure the House, as did the Minister of Agriculture when he said, and I quote:

> At the time of finalization of this program all the facts with respect to how it came about will be made public.

—that all the facts about how this amount was arrived at will be put before the Standing Committee on Agriculture or the House so that we can examine them?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, if I may answer that, all the different studies which led to different amounts from $71 million to $125 million, will be given to members to read. They will be available and hon.

members can make their own assessment. One thing is certain. A great number of factors went into the analysis. That is why there were different results from different groups of people who analysed the subject. That is quite normal. I might say we have that on almost any question that is raised in the country over any number of years.

POST OFFICE

STAMP TO COMMEMORATE TERRY FOX

Mr. Jack Burghardt (London West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and refers to the motion offered today under Standing Order 43 concerning a commemorative stamp for Terry Fox. I wish to ask the Minister why this motion was rejected.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): Madam Speaker, I want to say in the House that Terry Fox has received the highest award given to a living Canadian, and that is the Order of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ouellet: There is a law and tradition among all the world-respected postal administrations not to honour living persons with a stamp but only their heads of state. This is a tradition which it would be improper to break, notwithstanding how good may be the reasons. There is also, in addition to these procedures, an additional ten years rule that has been followed in the past. Nevertheless, there have been a few exceptions to this ten years delay, particularly with reference to Pierre Laporte and Jules Léger. I want to assure the House that I am sure that such an exception would be made for Terry Fox by the Post Office. I am absolutely sure of this. At the same time, I am sure and certain every member of the House wishes that Terry Fox will live many, many years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Traditions can be changed, just like unilateral constitutional changes; they are there to be changed.

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT PROGRAM FOR THE 80s

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and it is supplementary—never mind jerking the thumb to somebody else. Never mind the thumb jerk.

My question is supplementary to the first two questions of the day. Since the Prime Minister resumed office in March, 1980, interest rates have gone to 20 per cent, we have had a big increase in personal, farm and small business bankruptcies, mortgage interest rates are up to 18.75 per cent, and inflation is 13 per cent.

On January 12, 1980, the Prime Minister said in Toronto, "We have an economic program for the eighties which will enhance dignity, create opportunity and provide security." My simple question is: where is it? When will it be produced?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, it is always a delight to listen to the questions of the hon. member for St. John's West, especially when they have to do with inflation, because he is an inflation expert himself—verbal inflation, that is! He should remember that when the Prime Minister spoke those words, we could very well see just where the former finance minister was leading the Canadian economy. We inherited that situation. As early as October, the Minister of Finance set the stage to steer the Canadian economy on a better course. The hon. member should know that we have to bring down the inflationary pressure by trying all together to convince ourselves that inflation is indeed enemy No. 1. It will serve no useful purpose to shout and go on a rhetorical rampage since Canada's economic situation will not be improved by miracle solutions drawn out of a hat on a day to day basis, but indeed by applying the principles and the fundamental solutions set forth in the budget last October.

INTRODUCTION OF PROGRAM

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is not to the minister in charge of jerking thumbs or thumb jerks, it is to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister is a specialist in betraying solemn election pledges, so I will ask him the supplementary question again. When will we have the economic program for the eighties which will enhance dignity, create opportunity and provide security? Is that the program now in effect where hundreds of thousands have to renew their mortgages at 18¾ per cent, where hundreds of thousands are paying 21 per cent to 23 per cent interest, where farmers are going out of business and where personal bankruptcies are up? If there is such a program, why has the Prime Minister waited over a year and a half to bring it in? When are we going to see this program? When will he take the economy seriously?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is right. The minister is not in charge of jerking thumbs, but he is in charge of jerks' questions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Oral Questions

INCREASE IN GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, it is perhaps not surprising that a Prime Minister who shows no concern about Canadians facing bankruptcy, Canadians facing loss of jobs, Canadians forced to leave their homes, that he, the millionaire from Outremont, sits there and smiles while Canadians lose their homes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: It is perhaps not surprising that he should show a similar contempt for the House of Commons. Let me ask him a question about the priorities of his government. Why does his government believe that it was justified in spending an extra $15 million last year on government advertising and propaganda when it will do nothing to help Canadians facing bankruptcy, foreclosure, and a loss of their homes, jobs and businesses?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jim Fleming (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Madam Speaker, I am not sure that the right hon. member's figure of $15 million difference is correct. The figures for when his government was in power are not available because there was an offshore private sector company that both assigned the agencies and assigned the time and space placement. Nor do we have from previous governments accurate figures for the totals. In any case, I make no apology, and I am sure my colleagues do not, for trying to relate better to Canadians the programs of the Government of Canada. If we have a crisis in this country it is that Canadians do not well enough understand the role of their national government, and all that people on that side of the House want to do is tear it apart.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

TIMING OF PROGRAMS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, one role of the national government that Canadians very well understand is that when Canadians are forced into bankruptcy by federal policy, forced to leave their homes by federal policy, forced to shut down businesses which cost jobs by federal policy, they have a right to some response from the national government of Canada. We would like the Prime Minister of Canada to stand in his place, not jerk his thumb at his various ministers, and tell this House of Commons when the Government of Canada intends to introduce programs that will help Canadians being forced into bankruptcy by the Trudeau government policies, when measures will be introduced in this House to help Canadians who are forced to surrender their houses because of the policies forced by this government, and when an equal priority will be given to the needs of the people of Canada as the government gives to its own propaganda.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I accept humbly the lecture from the Leader of the Opposition. He should be concerned with another type of bankruptcy, that is the moral bankruptcy he has shown in this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

HOUSING

QUERY RESPECTING AHOP PROGRAM

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the minister responsible for housing I wish to direct my question to the Prime Minister. Yesterday the government of Nova Scotia moved to assist AHOP home owners suffering under the double burden of more stringent income criteria and high mortgage interest rates, and among other things fixed the mortgage interest rate of 14 per cent. The Nova Scotia housing minister stated that he made two special trips to Ottawa to seek federal government help, but was refused. Since the federal government created the AHOP program, why is it bailing out of its responsibility at this time?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I have no recollection of ever getting support for that program from the hon. member or his party. Now he is saying we should do more of it. I will refer him to the hon. member for St. John's West who is always complaining that we should be keeping the deficit down and be spending less money. I wish they would meet together and get their policies on the same line.

Mr. Lewis: Surely once a program is committed you have to follow through on it.

ASSISTANCE TO LANDLORDS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): The government recently moved to assist apartment owners who participated in the assisted rental program by increasing the maximum subsidy per unit from $120 a month to $180 a month. The reason given for the increase was that landlords are faced with an increase of 6 per cent or 7 per cent in mortgage interest rates. Why is the government moving to help landlords faced with bankruptcy, and refusing to help home owners faced with the same problem?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I indicated earlier that the representations that the minister had made to the banks applied to people who were in difficulties, such as bankruptcies, whether they be in one category or another.

MANPOWER

FUNDING FOR WOMEN'S OUTREACH PROJECTS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. On March 30 the minister expressed strong support for the women's Outreach program. Given that support, why has he moved to terminate the program? In particular, why has he refused to fund four excellent projects for women in Ontario beyond September?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, we have answered many of these same questions before, but I will repeat to the hon. member that we have increased the Outreach budget this year. We have substantially increased the number of Outreach projects that are allocated to women's concerns, almost 40 per cent above those of the previous government. We are finding new allocations of funds for Outreach projects. We have established eight additional women's counselling centres in our employment service. I think that demonstrates our very strong commitment to aiding women in the work force.

CONTINUATION OF FUNDING

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): The reason why a Liberal government in 1972 created the Outreach program was the realization that the existing structure of the minister's department was not fulfilling the job properly. Given the fact that the need still continues, will the minister at least commit the government to continue full funding of the existing 19 projects for more than the next few months?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, one of the basic principles of any Liberal government is that it can always improve upon things. We are using our ability to improve upon the delivery of services of the employment service. As the hon. member well knows, and I will repeat so that other members get proper information, we have established a major computerized job placement centre in major metropolitan areas across Canada which provides a much more efficient and effective way of placing women in jobs, and all other Canadians.

AIRPORTS

RENOVATION OF TERMINAL 1 AT TORONTO

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact Transport Canada has announced it will spend $27.2 million on extensive renovation of Terminal 1 at Toronto International Airport over the next three years, including $2.7 million to remove the asbestos coating from the ceiling, will the minister advise when this asbestos insulation problem in Terminal 1 at Toronto International Airport will be resolved so that this potential health hazard will be alleviated?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, it is a three-year program. Therefore, the asbestos will be removed as the program progresses. The short answer is over three years. I want to emphasize that the asbestos at the airport has been tested. The Department of National Health and Welfare and the Department of Public Works have stated there is no danger in the present situation.

FINANCE

MEASURES ENVISAGED TO CURB HIGH INTEREST RATES

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I shall ask my question of the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Every Canadian knows that an interest rate of 20 or 22 per cent is a perfect way to strangle our economy, and on the long term to force many individuals and companies into bankruptcy. For instance, during the first quarter of 1981 the number of loans granted under the Small Businesses Loans Act decreased by 50 per cent compared with last year. Madam Speaker, I simply want to know what action the government will take to help those Canadians who are faced with interest rates so shocking that they are literally strangled by them, and when it will take this action.

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the hon. member seems to have drawn certain conclusions from the figures which he quoted. I would invite him to check, for instance, the economic growth rate for the last quarter of 1980 and the first quarter of 1981. He will see that there is evidence of growth in the economy. He can take certain indications and draw conclusions from them, but he should check to see whether these conclusions agree with the facts.

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, my supplementary is for the same minister. He is certainly aware that the Maislin transport company has asked its 15,000 employees in Canada and the United States to lend it a certain percentage of their wages to pay the $12.5 million in interest which it has to pay this year. Does the minister intend to wait until this company and a hundred others like it are bankrupt, before taking action, or does he really want other companies to use the same type of loan as the Maislin company?

Mr. Bussières: Madam Speaker, I think that every time he mentions a specific company the hon. member should explain the particular conditions which surround the financial problems of that company, because otherwise such a reference will mean absolutely nothing. This cannot justify drawing generalized conclusions. Let him find and explain the causes of the specific problems involved, and then he can draw valid conclusions.

PRIVILEGE

MR. McKINNON—MOVE OF RCMP HEADQUARTERS "E" DIVISION—RULING BY MADAM SPEAKER

Madam Speaker: I would now like to rule on the question of privilege that was raised on June 16 by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon).

The hon. member set out the facts of the case with reference to Notice of Motion for the Production of Papers No. 51, and he alleged that the return to the order tabled on June 3, 1981, could not be considered to be "all letters, papers and studies concerning the move of RCMP Headquarters".

The practice in the matter of returns to such notices of motions for the production of papers was enunciated 20 years ago by one of my predecessors, Hon. Speaker Michener, when he pointed out:

—there has been a well recognized practice established in the House that a minister, who does not wish to be bound by an unqualified order of the House to produce documents which he does not propose to produce or does not wish to produce for some recognized reason of public policy, may rise and state his objection so that his objection will be a matter of record. This statement is, to some extent, a protection of the minister against the unqualified order of the House calling upon him to produce the documents mentioned. It is a practice which has commended itself to the House and which has been well established. Whatever the significance of such a statement may be . . . it is an established practice . . . when these orders are passed by the House they are noted in Votes and Proceedings without any reference to the reservation made by the minister. He is, therefore, confronted with an order of the House in unqualified terms if he has not risen in his place to claim that certain documents are privileged as interdepartmental communications, confidential documents, private papers or whatever good reason there is, in the public interest, for not calling upon the minister to produce the documents. He might very properly be said to be in contempt of the House if this reservation were not noted.

I quote from Journals, February 27, 1961.

The only change that seems to have been made in this practice is that the parliamentary secretary rather than the minister now makes the reservation concerning confidentiality or restrictions on certain documents. The reservation is nevertheless made, and the House also accepted this reservation in the usual way. Accordingly, the order of the House on June 3 last must be read subject to the customary reservations in respect of confidential documents.

The expression "confidential documents" has never been defined for this purpose and I do not think it would be proper for the Speaker to attempt to do that. Furthermore, while the government, when preparing a return, may govern itself by the principles it tabled in 1973 and which were set out in citation 390 of Beauchesne's fifth edition, the House has not adopted these principles, and in any event it seems to me that it would still be up to the government to decide whether any "letters, papers and studies" were of a confidential nature.

Accordingly, while the hon. member may have a complaint about how the expression "confidential documents" has been interpreted by the government in this return to his motion for papers, this does not constitute a question of privilege because, according to the practice of the House, a proper return was made to hon. members' motions for the production of papers.

Hon. members might also be reminded that, in connection with practice and custom, the distinguished author Redlich in his work "The Procedure of the House of Commons" pointed out the following:

—the Journals are by no means the only authentic sources of information as to what has been established by custom. A large part of what concerns procedure is never recorded in them; for not unfrequently usages have been formed and long observed without giving rise to any definite decision of the House or the Speaker, which would constitute a precedent. Long-continued practice, moreover, is not always required for the creation of customs in procedure. In all such cases the only proof of a customary rule is the actual practice adopted, it being, of course, always in the last resort a matter purely for the decision of the House itself whether it accepts its customs as binding or not.

Therefore, in accordance with the foregoing, I cannot find a prima facie case of breach of privilege in the question raised by the hon. member for Victoria.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I thank you for recognizing me. I did send you a note in this regard, but I thought that it would be more courteous to let the House Leader of the Progressive Conservative party ask me the usual question concerning the business of the House before we went on to questions of privilege.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, with respect to House business, we know what we are dealing with today and tonight, but would the minister be in a position to designate the business for next week, and would he designate an allotted day? I think there is one more day in the supply period. If he would do that I would be very grateful.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, as everybody knows, we will be voting tonight. The bells will start ringing at 9 p.m. tonight until 9.15. Tomorrow we will have third reading of the same bill, C-57. There is an agreement among representatives of the parties that any vote required tomorrow will be deferred until next week. I suggest it be deferred until next Monday night at 9.45. If the House leaders agree I would appreciate confirmation in the next few seconds.

In so far as the business for next week is concerned, I wish to designate next Friday, June 26, as the last allotted day. Monday we will try to achieve what we failed to achieve yesterday, and that is to deal with three non-controversial bills, S-10, C-66 and S-19, in that order.

Following that, and if there is agreement—and we have had some representations made in the House on this subject—we on this side are willing as the government to agree to have one speaker per party and to dispose of all stages of the following four bills, and this will answer requests which were made before. The first is Bill C-53, the sexual offences bill. If we can agree to one speaker per party and go through all stages within the same day, the government would be agreeable to providing one day next week, either Tuesday or Thursday. The same applies to Bill C-37 making July 1 Canada Day. Then Bill C-67, to amend the Adult Educational Training Act, and Bill C-65 dealing with the Public Service Superannuation Act, could be dealt with expeditiously if that is the desire of the opposition parties.

If we fail to agree on those bills, we will go on with bills on which debate has already started in this House, namely—and in this order—Bill C-58, Bill C-12 and Bill S-6. That is the business for this week and next week.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, that will be quite a week. In any event, I am prepared to confirm now that the deferred vote on Bill C-57 on Monday at 9.45, as suggested, is agreeable. I naturally have to consult with respect to all the other matters my friend mentioned.

Is the minister putting forward the list he has put forward as the list of business the government expects to complete before the adjournment? Is there other business he intends to add to that, and has the government House leader set a tentative date for the adjournment of the House? It might be helpful to us to know in terms of planning.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, the list I spoke about is only an appetizer. I hope we can agree on it. If we cannot agree on the appetizer—I understand there may not be agreement—and if we do not succeed in dealing with all the legislation I talked about, the main course will come later on. This is not the list I talked about last week.

As far as the date of adjournment is concerned, we are hoping it will be as soon as possible. If it is the end of this month, that is fine with me, depending on the progress we make; but if that is impossible, obviously we will have to go into July.

Mr. Knowles: Madam Speaker, first may I join with the opposition House leader in saying that that is a fair plateful for next week, especially when it is only a four-day week. I believe the House will not be sitting on Wednesday, June 24.

With regard to the program the minister has outlined, may I say first of all that we agree to the vote at third reading of Bill C-57 being scheduled for 9.45 Monday evening.

With regard to Bill C-53, I can repeat the undertaking I have already given, that we would be prepared for the second reading debate on that bill to be limited to one speaker per party. I shall have to consult before I can give an answer on the others.

There is something else I should like to say. If Your Honour will pardon my immodesty, I note that the House has already—and so has Your Honour—said kind things about this being my seventy-third birthday. When one reaches that age there are not many of the usual things which are given as presents which one needs or wants.

Miss Jewett: Here we go!

Mr. Knowles: However, there is a birthday present I want. I ask for it, and I hope the minister will give it.

Mr. Broadbent: A pay increase.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: A seat in the Senate.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles: Madam Speaker, all of the guesses I have heard are wrong, and the minister knows it. I am speaking on behalf of 15,000 or 20,000 widows of disabled veterans who are still waiting for the oversight in last summer's Bill C-40 to be corrected.

This does not come to the government House Leader as a surprise, nor does it come to the Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs as anything new. In my bones I feel that legislation must be ready, and I hope the minister is in a position to announce today that it is ready and that it will be presented to the House. If it is ready, I would even suggest that we might sit an extra hour tomorrow. Perhaps the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney) would be willing for her private member's bill to be put off to some other time; we could start a bill to amend Bill C-40 at four o'clock and finish it tomorrow afternoon before we adjourn. On behalf of the 15,000 or 20,000 widows for whom I speak I ask for that birthday present today.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I am surprised that the hon. member wishes for the gift. He should have talked about it earlier.

Mr. Nystrom: He has talked about it for years.

Mr. Pinard: In any case, I can assure the hon. member that failing giving him that kind of gift today—because he failed to ask for it, as I just mentioned—the cabinet is looking at the situation very seriously. I can assure the hon. member that we should be in a position to give a much more precise answer within the next days and weeks before we adjourn.

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the President of the Privy Council whether he is in a position to indicate what the plans of the government are with respect to correcting the legislation, estimates or whatever following the decision reached by the Chair. It would be useful information to have, in view of the fact that Supplementary Estimates (B) came down yesterday and in view of the fact that action might be initiated by me, depending on what plans the government might have. Perhaps the government House leader could indicate what the intentions are.

Mr. Pinard: Yes, Madam Speaker, and I thank the hon. member for his question. That is part of the main course about which I was talking to the hon. member for Nepean-Carleton.

In fact, we are working on drafting legislation at this stage in order to cope with this situation. I intend to meet with my colleagues opposite to discuss the kind of debate we could have on this legislation. I want to meet with them at the beginning of next week, either Monday or Tuesday. At this stage the information I have is that the legislation will not be ready for introduction before next Thursday or next Friday. That means that if we cannot come to some agreement to deal with that legislation within a very short length of time, that is, at the beginning of the following week—that is, June 29 and June 30—it is likely that we will have to sit in July. That is why earlier in my answers I had to leave the impression that it was perhaps not too realistic at this stage to think we could be in a position to adjourn on June 30. It is still technically possible, as hon. members can see, but if we are realistic I think we can see we will have to sit a few days in July.

I want to assure the hon. member that I will be talking to his House leader and, if he is interested in participating in the discussions because of his interest in this matter, I would be glad to have him around and to negotiate with him a reasonable length of time to debate the legislation about which I am talking.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the President of the Privy Council if he is in a position to tell the House whether the government proposes to bring in the report stage of Bill C-48, the proposed oil and gas act, before the House adjourns until the fall. I understand that third reading will take place in the fall, but there was what I have called a sweetheart deal between the Conservatives and the minister on this matter which seems to have turned sour, and I would like to know whether the President of the Privy Council proposes to bring in the report stage of Bill C-48. Because, as the minister knows, the government is imposing closure on that bill in the committee on June 25.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I am not aware of any closure. I think I can say that after many months the committee has decided to limit debate at this stage on Bill C-48. As far as the report stage of that bill is concerned, I will take the representation of the hon. member into serious consideration.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BROADBENT—S.O. 43 MOTION OF MR. MUNRO (ESQUIMALT-SAANICH)

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. In recent days concerning the important question of what is taking place in El Salvador members from all parties—I am thinking particularly of the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. McLean), the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) and the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Hudecki) as well as others—have revealed a distinguished, non-partisan approach, so to speak, to this question in the House.

In this light I was deeply disturbed to hear the motion moved under Standing Order 43 today by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) in which there was something which was not just misleading but blatantly false. When I explain the circumstances as to why that is the case, I hope the member will get to his feet and say that he was in error and withdraw the accusation contained in the motion under Standing Order 43.

This morning on the television program—

Madam Speaker: Order, if the member's question of privilege is related to the motion under Standing Order 43 that we dealt with in the House earlier, I am afraid I have to tell him that, had there been unanimous consent to the motion, I would have put it to the House and he would have been able to debate it. It was not debated but the House did deal with it. There was no unanimous consent to that motion and I am afraid that one must not come back on what the House has already dealt with. If that is the substance of the question of privilege of the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), I will not be able to hear it.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, I certainly respect your judgment but I would ask perhaps for some further consideration. I have consulted the oracle on the rules to my left and I am indeed told—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is two reasons why it is not allowable.

Mr. Broadbent: —that it is within the rules to properly raise—

Madam Speaker: Order. Is the hon. member trying to influence the Chair by citing this very competent oracle on procedure?

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, there is only one oracle in this House inferior to yourself on the rules, and that is the gentleman on my left.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Nonetheless, on a serious point, a charge has been made against me in the House by another member. The proceedings of the House—and this was done under the provisions of Standing Order 43, which I have some personal concerns about in terms of its propriety—do not enable me in that context to deal with an accusation which, I repeat, is not only misleading but is factually completely false.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Madam Speaker: I do have to call the hon. member to order. Charges, accusations, are made from one side or the other of this House. That is what happens in the normal course of debate. The hon. member is debating, he does not have a question of privilege, and I have to tell him that he cannot pursue it.

MR. LAWRENCE—NATIONAL SECURITY—REMARKS OF MR. KAPLAN DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, when I attempted yesterday to raise a question of privilege in respect of certain matters raised during question period and others attempted to join in, you quite wisely cautioned us all to make sure of the basis or foundation of what we were saying. I believe you cautioned us to wait until Hansard was available.

I have now had the opportunity of perusing Hansard, and if I may just draw your attention to page 10697 of yesterday's Hansard, the words I am complaining about were spoken by the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan). I quote the last four lines of what he said on that day:

What I would like to know is whether the leader of his party, the former prime minister, has authorized him—

That is me.

—to make these statements notwithstanding his oath of office as a privy councillor.

I merely reiterate to you, Madam Speaker, and the House that nothing I have said publicly in this context in any manner, shape or form offends any oath I have ever taken as a privy councillor.

Therefore, I think the Solicitor General has simply two courses of action open to him: he can either apologize and withdraw those words today; or I suggest to you that he must be made by you and this House to detail anything I have said publicly about this matter which was presented to me by departmental officials or any other agency of the government while I was solicitor general.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Prove it.

Mr. Lawrence: Yes, prove it.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, there have been a lot of so-called revelations in the House and elsewhere recently about national security operations. Some but not all have been attributed to the hon. member. Yesterday in the House he said, as reported at page 10696 of Hansard, that there have been, and I quote:

—what I believe to be inspired and selective leaks from within the government itself—

My officials, Madam Speaker, are entitled to be deeply indignant about this suggestion. They cannot speak for themselves here or elsewhere and it is my responsibility as their minister to do so. Therefore, as he was the minister responsible for the internal security of Canada, I ask him to come clean with me and the House and indicate if he has any grounds at all for his belief that there—

Point of Order—Mr. Rose

Madam Speaker: Order. Hon. members are continuing debate on this question. I have looked at Hansard very carefully and have found that none of the words recorded there would seem to impute motives to one member or another. That is quite clear to me from reading the record pertaining to that particular exchange in the House.

The minister on one side and the hon. member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence) on the other side did state to the House that they had made a certain statement. The hon. member for Durham-Northumberland did say to the House that he had not broken his oath, and it is the custom of the House to take the hon. member's word for that.

I think that puts an end to this particular question of privilege. There was nothing unparliamentary in the words uttered in this House or recorded in Hansard; therefore I must rule that matter is closed.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. McKNIGHT—REMARKS OF MR. PEPIN RESPECTING COMPENSATION TO FARMERS

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, I will be very brief. I notice that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) is not here, but I am sure that he would not want to have left the impression in answering a question I asked that the producers of rape, rye and flax would be compensated under the embargo payments when in fact the release from the Department of Agriculture states oilseeds and other grains are not covered under these payments. I am sure the minister would not want to leave the impression with the House that the producers of those grains would be compensated.

Madam Speaker: That is up to the minister, and I am sure the point of order will be noted by him.

MR. ROSE—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF RULING BY MADAM SPEAKER

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I would be grateful if you could perhaps provide the House with a clarification of the ruling on the question of privilege of the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). Is it in line or congruent with the Speaker's ruling that a member of Parliament, moving a motion under Standing Order 43, can from now on get up and say anything, truthfully or untruthfully, make any kind of charges against another hon. member, and that once that motion has been disposed of, by unanimous consent or otherwise, there is no protection and the member has no recourse to have the record changed or demand an apology? I find that to be an incredulous ruling and I think we should do something about that rule.

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, obviously I do not propose to question your ruling, but I do have a question along with the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose).

I have been concerned for some time now, as have my colleagues, about certain statements left on the record which then become public and perhaps do constitute the imputing of motives or unparliamentary language, or in some way are not dealt with at the time but are left on the record.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Most of them on your side.

Mr. Collenette: If an hon. member is not on his feet at a particular time or not in the House to raise the question, what is one then to do to correct what obviously could be construed as a question of privilege? It is very serious, Madam Speaker. This occurs not only in motions under Standing Order 43, but it occurred most recently on an alleged question of privilege by a member of the Conservative party. In the course of exposing that question of privilege, my friend the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Hudecki) objected to certain innuendos alleged about members of Parliament from Hamilton. Because you had already ruled that the Conservative member did not have a question of privilege, the hon. member for Hamilton West could not join in further debate.

● (1530)

With all due respect, perhaps you and your officials would give some consideration to what is becoming a frequent occurrence. It leads to the problem outlined by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) which occurred earlier today.

Madam Speaker: First, I must make it quite clear to hon. members that, aside from what happens during the course of motions under Standing Order 43, the fact a member complains that something said about himself in the House was true or untrue does not constitute a question of privilege. As long as unparliamentary language is not used, the Chair can do nothing about forcing one member to be more or less truthful about something. The Chair has no responsibility with regard to the substance of the interventions of hon. members in the House.

Second, I should like to address myself to the matter of Standing Order 43. One of the weaknesses of Standing Order 43 is that one either receives unanimous consent to put a motion to the House or one does not. If one receives unanimous consent to put it to the House, it can be debated. Then hon. members may rise and complain about the motion or its preamble. It is one of the weaknesses of that Standing Order, but the only way the House can deal with it is by giving or not giving a member unanimous consent to put a motion to the House.

I was victim of the same thing the other day with a motion which related to matters under the jurisdiction of the Chair; there was not much I could do about it. If hon. members want to change the Standing Order in order to allow the Speaker to determine what is adequate as a preamble or as a motion, I am in the hands of the House. But I cannot do anything more about motions under Standing Order 43 than what is provided within the scope of that Standing Order.

PETITION

MR. HUDECKI—SOCIAL INJUSTICES IN EL SALVADOR

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, it is my honour and privilege to present to the House a petition signed by over 4,000 citizens of Hamilton and area, drawing the attention of Parliament to the social injustices which are prevailing in El Salvador, urging the government to oppose military support by the United States to that country, and requesting a clear and independent policy on El Salvador.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD DAY ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-636, respecting Sir John A. Macdonald Day.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Miss MacDonald: Madam Speaker, I am moving for leave to introduce a bill intituled "An act respecting Sir John A. Macdonald Day". As the House is well aware, there has been a proposal for some time now that the third Monday of every February be observed as a statutory holiday. My bill would establish that day as a legal holiday and would determine that it be observed as Sir John A. Macdonald Day, in lasting tribute to the man who had a vision that there should come into being a country stretching from coast to coast on the northern half of this continent, and who went on to become the first Prime Minister of the country.

This bill will not only receive overwhelming support from my constituency of Kingston and the Islands but from all across the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 2,409, 2,423, 2,477 and 2,510.

[Text]

MANOIR KIRKLAND, KIRKLAND, QUE.

Question No. 2,409—Mr. Herbert:

1. Did the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation acquire the Manoir Kirkland, Kirkland, Quebec and, if so, on what date and at what cost?

2. Was the property sold and, if so (a) to whom (b) on what date (c) at what price?

3. (a) How many apartments are in the buildings (b) were the occupants eligible for a rent subsidy and, if so, was an agreement concluded to continue the subsidy (c) in what manner were the occupants notified of the change of ownership?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): I am informed by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows:

1. Yes, CMHC acquired the "Manoir Kirkland" project on December 12, 1979, and the claim paid for its acquisition was $5,564,300.

2. (a), (b) and (c). The "Manoir Kirkland" project was sold to Acquilini Investors Group on September 1, 1980, at the market price of $3,194,000.

3. (a) 198 apartment units.

(b) No, all tenants were paying market rents.

(c) Occupants were notified of the sale of the project by individual letters delivered simultaneously with the usual letter of introduction of the new owner/landlord.

POSTAL SERVICE DELIVERY DELAYS

Question No. 2,423—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the Postmaster General receive a letter from the hon. member for Leeds-Grenville enclosing evidence of correspondence mailed on April 9, 1981 in Toronto to the member and received 13 days later at the House of Commons and, if so (a) what are the reasons for this type of postal service (b) for what reason did it take 13 days for a first-class mail item to travel from Toronto to Ottawa?

2. Did the minister receive other complaints of a similar nature and, if so, what action was taken to deal with the complaints?

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): 1. Yes. (a) and (b). First, it should be explained that with the exception of those registered, records are not maintained for individual pieces of mail. For this reason, we are often unable to determine precisely why or where most irregularities occur. In addition, the cover provided did not bear any endorsements or markings which might indicate the handling accorded and furnish some clues to the reason for the late delivery.

2. Yes. Unfortunately, inquiries into individual cases of delay where the cover or envelope bears no indication of abnormal handling generally prove fruitless. Nevertheless, we concentrate our efforts on analysing statistics gathered from reported service failures in order to identify areas with serious and recurring difficulties. In this way, our operating people can focus their attention on resolving the identified problems.

OIL CONSUMPTION ON A REGIONAL BASIS

Question No. 2,477—Mr. Herbert:

Is there an appreciable variation in the consumption of all forms of oil on a regional basis and, if so, can this be illustrated on the basis of barrels of crude oil used by province per annum per 100,000 of population?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources reports as follows: Yes.

Oil Consumption In All Forms *
[litres per capita]

Alberta	4,968
British Columbia	4,069
Manitoba	3,159
New Brunswick	7,145
Newfoundland	4,483
Nova Scotia	5,866
Ontario	3,627
Prince Edward Island	4,331
Quebec	4,294
Saskatchewan	4,102
Northwest Territories	10,000
Yukon Territory	9,141

* Computed on the basis of 1980 sales of all oil products and estimates of mid-1980 population.

CANADA FITNESS SURVEY

Question No. 2,510—Mr. Howie:

Is a Canada Fitness Survey being conducted and, if so (a) over what period of time (b) what will be the cost?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of Labour): Yes, a Canada Fitness Survey is being conducted at the present time. Data collection in the field will take six months from January to July of 1981. The final report should be ready in the spring of 1982. The cost of the survey, which employs more than 180 previously unemployed physical education graduates across the country, will be $2.9 million.

SOVIET DIPLOMATS—TRAVEL RESTRICTIONS

Question No. 1,607—Mr. Cossitt:

Since the answer to question No. 31 was prepared, how many additional requests have been received from Soviet diplomats to travel outside the National Capital Region and, in each case, what was the (a) name of the diplomat (b) date of the trip (c) destination of the trip (d) duration of the trip (e) purpose of the trip (f) mode of transportation used?

Return tabled.

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

EXCISE TAX ACT AND EXCISE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from Wednesday, June 10, consideration of Bill C-57, to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to provide for a revenue tax in respect of petroleum and gas, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Madam Speaker: On May 26 I expressed some doubt as to the acceptability of motion No. 10 in the name of the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis). On June 10 the hon. member presented argument in support of that motion. I must confess to the hon. member that on procedural grounds he did not convince the Chair his motion ought to be put to the House. Therefore I regrettably confirm my comments of May 26 and rule the motion out of order.

Motions Nos. 27 and 28 could be grouped for debate, and a vote on motion No. 27 will dispose of motion No. 28.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South) moved:

Motion No. 27.

That Bill C-57, to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to provide for a revenue tax in respect of petroleum and gas, be amended in Clause 29 by striking out line 9 at page 39 and substituting the following therefor:

"apparatus for use in".

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap) moved:

Motion No. 28.

That Bill C-57, to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to provide for a revenue tax in respect of petroleum and gas, be amended in Clause 29 by striking out line 9 at page 39 and substituting the following therefor:

"apparatus that are used in".

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, I will speak very briefly on this motion. Because of the unrealistic time limit imposed upon this debate, I think we should discuss the significant amendments with respect to the petroleum and gas tax.

This particular amendment will broaden the exemption for universities and others doing laboratory work to enable them to buy utensils, equipment and instruments which may be used for some purpose other than experimental work.

If we want to encourage research and development, it is realistic to encourage it by allowing equipment which is not necessarily designed for experimental work to be purchased for use in classrooms and elsewhere. The intent of the amendment is to allow items which are used in classroom instruction and in other places to be purchased in the normal course. This would not involve any problem concerning administration. In my view, the amendment should be immediately granted by the government.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I will keep my comments very brief in consideration of what little time remains under the closure brought in to limit this debate. We want to emphasize the matter of the natural gas and petroleum tax.

This particular amendment was introduced because of the important times in which we find ourselves today. The various groups representing the technical services and the scientific community of Canada have made it perfectly clear to all hon. members of the House that, within this decade and the one following, the necessity for training individuals to participate in scientific research and to serve in a technical sense Canadian industries is absolutely mandatory.

We felt it important to include this particular amendment so that universities, technical schools and institutions of one kind or another would have access to research related materials at a reasonable and fair rate. It was the universities which suggested the wording change. It is a minor change but it attempts to identify not tax exemption for materials which may be used for scientific research and for educational research but materials which, in fact, will be used for that particular use. That is the reason behind this change in wording, Mr. Speaker.

We urge the government to give it consideration, again to focus the attention of manufacturers on this particular use of apparatus and also to recognize the leadership role which the federal government may play in encouraging scientific and technical research in Canada.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would like very briefly to remind hon. members that the provisions which excluded some of the material used in universities from the excise tax were related to the fact that to impose or not to impose the tax on this material was dependent upon a tariff number. Everyone knows that the principles which are basic to a tariff policy are not the same as those which generate a taxation policy. For instance, the major objective of a tariff policy is to develop measures for promoting domestic production of certain goods while a taxation policy is aimed at collecting excise tax on all goods sold in the country.

It is said that this provision will discourage research, development and academic initiatives. We are wondering, Mr. Speaker, whether the best policy for promoting research and development is to resort to excise tax exemptions or whether it is not better to use far more important fiscal measures, such as the one included in the Income Tax Act which provides tax credits for whatever amounts are invested in research and development. We are also wondering whether we could not do a lot more to provide support and direction to research and development activities by allowing grants in certain specific fields of research. We are all aware of the many research councils financed by the federal government and we know that these councils, whether we are talking about the Medical Research Council of Canada, the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council or the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada, provide grants that make research possible in very specific fields, such as health, social sciences and humanities, natural sciences, physics, aeronautics and many others.

Thus, rather than providing excise tax exemptions for certain items, we believe that it is much better to support research and development with appropriate measures such as research and development tax credits, for instance, or else through major grants or major financing through agencies such as our own research councils. By restoring consistency in the excise tax area and keeping it apart from tariff policy, we are providing our excise tax system with a better organization and a better rationalization than we had before, and I would ask hon. members to reject the amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The question is on motion No. 27, and a vote on motion No. 27 will dispose of motion No. 28. It is the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Pursuant to Standing Order 75 (11) the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred. This also disposes of Motion No. 28.

The House will now consider motions Nos. 29, 30, 31, 32, 33 and 35, each of which is to be debated and voted on separately.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap) moved:

Motion No. 29.

That Bill C-57, an act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to provide for a revenue tax in respect of petroleum and gas, be amended in Clause 33 by striking out lines 40 and 41 at page 41 and substituting the following therefor:

"made to order for a crippled, deformed or otherwise debilitated person; parts of"

He said: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few brief remarks since this is the International Year of the Disabled. In recognition of this fact we were encouraged to look very closely at this particular item in the bill with regard to disabled persons. The present provisions in Bill C-57, in addition to artificial limbs and related accessories, spinal and other orthopaedic braces, only provides exemptions for specially constructed appliances made to order for a person having a crippled or deformed foot or ankle. It seemed to members on this side of the House that, if we are to recognize those persons with problems associated with an ankle or a foot, the same recognition should be given to persons who experience difficulties with their elbows, shoulders, hips, or whatever.

The nature of motion No. 29 recognizes what obviously must be an oversight, a technical one, in this legislation. Because this is the Year of the Disabled, I think we are all concerned about disabled persons. All members of this House are on record as recognizing the plight of disabled persons. We have seen activities around Parliament Hill which give evidence to Canadian society that changes are certainly in order to assist those who are disabled. This particular motion which is before us is one more way for us to recognize the concern of disabled citizens, and by making a small change in the wording we can expand the provisions of this particular bill not only to people with problems associated with feet and ankles but all parts of the body.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): We support this motion, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to express the government's concern with this matter. Hon. members will remember that a task force studied in depth the problems faced by the handicapped in our society. I must emphasize however that this is not a new exemption. It is a technical amendment which explains, under the specific terms of the Excise Act, provisions that were correlated with the Customs Tariff Act.

In principle I would be favourable to these proposals. Unfortunately, I cannot support them for three reasons. First, there already are tax reductions for the handicapped, those in particular with physical disabilities that hinder their movements, in respect of a number of items made specifically for their use, to help them overcome such problems. Secondly, I am not convinced that an excise tax reduction on a particular item is the best answer to the handicapped person's needs. I am not saying it could not be so, only I am not convinced it is. Thirdly, I referred early in my remarks to the report on the handicapped people. A number of members in this House have worked on it. All hon. members recall the efforts made by the hon. member for Don Valley East (Mr. Smith). Officials within the Department of Finance want to take time to have a closer look at each of these proposals, and if there is a need to better adjust our tax system to the proposals made by the task force, we will be inclined to do so at the conclusion of the study.

[English]

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to what the minister had to say in defence of not accepting this particular amendment. As a member of that Special Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped, to which he also referred, I can assure him that of the 643 witnesses that the committee heard from as we went across this country, we heard particularly from people with physical disabilities, people who have mobility problems.

If not wholly, at least the majority of the technical aids which are used in this country have to be imported into Canada. If the minister cares to take a look at the report on obstacles again, he will recognize that, considering the recommendations which were made by that committee after listening to those witnesses, it is an absolute necessity that the government side agree with this particular amendment.

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, just so the House understands exactly what is going on here, we are now looking at a number of items which the government has decided should be exempted from the 9 per cent sales tax. There are a number of areas where, for a number of years and for a number of reasons, the government has decided that it will not impose a sales tax on particular items because it would impose a hardship on a group of people. Our society decides that because items respond to a vital need, quite apart from the area of commerce, the arguments in favour of a sales tax do not apply because those items are, by any definition, necessities.

We do not have a sales tax on food. What could be more of a necessity than the provision of prosthetic and other devices for individuals who are physically handicapped? What could be more of a statement by this Parliament, particularly in a year in which Parliament has established a committee which has made a report, which report has made a substantial impact on public opinion? This is the Year of the Handicapped. What could be a more simple and clear gesture on the part of the government than that it recognize that our laws have not always been in keeping with this fact, and that there is a need to exempt particular areas?

Particular groups of people are buying these items, not in the order of commerce, not because they want to make money from selling or because they want to engage in the commercial life of the country, which we all recognize should be subject to sales tax, but because these items are basic, fundamental necessities for people who, through the cruelty of nature, are handicapped.

People want to know why the opposition gets frustrated. People want to know why, when they deal with their government, they feel that they are talking to a brick wall. All of us who have dealt with the minister know him to be a man of intelligence, compassion, a man capable of understanding basic and simple arguments. We wonder why he would not be able to say: "All right, the officials do not understand how Parliament and how the people of Canada respond to this kind of an issue; and we as a government are going to accept this amendment because it makes sense. It responds to the very basic, fundamental feeling of the people in Parliament. Where items are not being purchased for commercial reasons but are being purchased because they are necessities, we as a Parliament will not impose a sales tax. The government is not interested in collecting taxes of 9 per cent off people who are handicapped."

Why could the minister not make that kind of a statement? I see him there, I heard his answer today, and I was in a state of disbelief. He said: "Oh, there are other ways, and I read the brief from my officials; this may not be the best way". The notion of a government not making a distinction between things which are necessities, which should not be subject to a commercial sales tax, and items which should be subject to a commercial sales tax is an elementary one.

If people want to know why, in a sense, Parliament really does not work very well, it is because there is an officialdom in the Department of Finance which has decided who and what will be taxed, and it does not matter what any group, any member of Parliament, or anyone says. It goes through, because we have a government which is not prepared to listen.

I am glad we are forcing 12 votes tonight, or 13 or 14 votes. I want to see all the Liberal members opposite get up and tell every handicapped person who has to buy a prosthetic device that they will have to pay the 9 per cent tax and that they are the government which is imposing it. I want to see them tell the artists of the country upon whom they are imposing this tax, and every other little group, that they do not have the compassion and the guts to say that they will make an exception in their case.

That is why we are forcing the votes. That is why it is high time that this government started listening to people who want a fundamental issue dealt with. I am simply asking that the government respond with a little bit of compassion.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Very briefly, I am wondering whether the minister had the figures as to the tax loss which the country would suffer if we accepted motion No. 29. After all, the present bill before us exempts limbs with or without power, accessories and devices therefor, spinal and other orthopaedic braces. All the motion does is say, generally, devices which are:

—made to order for a crippled, deformed or otherwise debilitated person;—

It is not much of an extension. Surely, the minister and his departmental officials have looked closely at the amendment. I think the minister has a duty, in this Year of the Handicapped, to say to what extent the revenue is impaired by refusing this motion. I suggest to the minister that the loss of revenue is so inconsequential as to not even form a change in the estimated revenue received. That being the case, in the interest of the Year of the Handicapped, and in light of a report on obstacles about which the minister spoke highly, this motion ought to be accepted, and I demand that the minister give us the figures.

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Speaker, on this point of order, I would like to point out to the hon. member that the grounds for imposing a tax should not rest mainly on the revenues it will generate, if that tax is to be collected on a specific item. That is not the only reason. First, the kind of rhetoric used by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) is quite easy. It is simply a matter of referring to the extremely difficult situation of the handicapped. But this is not necessarily the best way to help them. I have indicated that a report has been prepared, and we must ask ourselves which is the best course of action, even within our taxation system. We know that excise tax is but a very narrow aspect of the general taxation system. Within the over-all taxation system, what is the best way of helping the handicapped? Such is the question to be addressed. In the light of the committee report, once it has been thoroughly examined, we will give a much more exhaustive answer to the needs of the handicapped, and by adopting the best answer we will give still more emphasis on the concerns of the government and the response of society to the Year of the Handicapped.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The House will now deal with motion No. 30.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West) moved:

Motion No. 30.

That Bill C-57, an act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to provide for a revenue tax in respect of petroleum and gas, be amended by deleting Clause 34.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this really is a motion that my friends from the Atlantic provinces are interested in. It means that fishermen will have to pay the sales tax on a good deal of their equipment. They will be permitted to draw back but they will be dealing through their regular outlets, the small stores and outfitters. The paperwork involved will make it self-defeating. My colleagues from Newfoundland tell me that this will be a pest for the fishermen; it is another handicap. The only beneficiary will be the government. If it is too difficult to claim a draw back after the equipment has been purchased, then the government will be the beneficiary.

In these circumstances, why does the government have to go after sales tax on this type of equipment? It was not done before. Now not only the Newfoundland but the Quebec fishermen in the gulf are in the same boat.

[Translation]

I wonder why they are being treated like that! In my opinion, it is just another nuisance in people's life especially those involved. What is the reason for it? For instance, they may suffer a disaster and have to replace their lines and other equipment. An additional tax of 9 per cent is a considerable amount for those people. They must find a place where they can get credit and afterwards they will have to fill an application to get a refund from the government. In such circumstances, the government usually takes up to three or four months to process the application for refund and, upon final approval, the whole matter is referred to the Department of Supply and Services which in turn takes over a month to issue a cheque. Now, why should those people be treated in such a way? The government will not be making any money, since they will be entitled to a refund. Therefore it is an exercise in futility. On behalf of my colleagues from Newfoundland and Nova Scotia, I am introducing this amendment and I would ask my colleagues to support it.

Excise Tax

[English]

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I want to indicate that we will support the amendment with respect to fishing and fishing equipment. I want to remind the House that the government's amendment is based on the illusion that one can readily distinguish between equipment which is used for commercial fishing and equipment which is used for sports fishing. The amendment replaces an existing section which is different and enumerates all the items to be exempt from the sales tax, as follows:

Fishing nets and nettings of all kinds; specially designed needles for use in repairing fishing nets; metal panel devices for use in keeping nets open; metal swivels; fish hooks, lures, jiggers and artificial baits; sinkers and floats including trawl kegs;

The section goes on to say:

—none of the foregoing for sports fishing purposes:

This is based on the illusion that one can readily distinguish between equipment which is sold for the purpose of fishing for sport and equipment used for commercial fishing. Who makes the distinction? Is it the store owner who decides that someone is going to be engaged in sports fishing, or is it the manufacturer who decides what equipment is going to be used in one domain and not the other?

I find it a little strange that the government would exempt an objective number of items that are described in such detail. It describes the interstices of each piece of twine and says which will be exempt.

At the end of this objective definition it introduces an entirely subjective notion, which is the purpose for which the article is intended. That is the kind of thing that can lead to invidious distinction and petty hardship for many inshore and offshore fishermen. I think it would be easier if this particular clause was dropped and the previous legislation retained.

As I am from a land-locked constituency—the old constituency of Broadview once opened on to Lake Ontario so I was not land-locked all the time, but Broadview-Greenwood has been cut off from the sea so I do not get extensive correspondence from fishermen—I would appreciate it if the minister would tell us how many complaints have been received from the industry and from the fishermen involved about the previous section and why it is necessary to replace it with this one.

I suspect that the accountants in the Department of Finance decided that they had discovered some discrepancy between this and the perfectly rational system they are looking for with such almost absurd persistence, and they are responsible for this amendment rather than having concern for the needs of the people in the industry.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that a quick look at the new provision of the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act makes one wonder why such an administrative nightmare is created for so many wholesale dealers dealing with fishermen as well as for the Department of National Revenue. There have been many representations made directly or indirectly by those involved in the fishing industry and as a result of those representations, the Department of National Revenue has set some administrative standards.

First of all, some equipment which clearly can be used only for commercial fishing, such as the large nets, various kinds of needles of a special design, sinkers and floats, will be automatically exempted from the excise tax. A second measure has been proposed by Revenue Canada. Storekeepers will be able to purchase other items which are normally used in commercial fishing, such as strings and fish hooks, provided they agree to collect the tax when they sell these items for non-commercial use. And finally, a third measure has been taken by Revenue Canada whereby wholesalers of fishing gear who meet certain requirements previously established by the department may obtain a permit enabling them to import the items duty-free and to declare the tax only when they become taxable under the excise tax, that is to say, when they are sold for non-commercial fishing purposes.

I believe, therefore, that these new arrangements made by Revenue Canada should solve most of the technical problems which may arise and allow more flexibility in the application of this section.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred until later this day.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap) moved:

Motion No. 31.

That Bill C-57, an act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to provide for a revenue tax in respect of petroleum and gas, be amended in clause 36 by striking out line 34 at page 43 and substituting the following therefor:

"20. Paintings, original prints, drawings and pastels, all".

He said: Mr. Speaker, I must say that I find it quite incredible hearing members opposite yell out nay most of—

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Perhaps the hon. member has already realized he was going beyond the intentions of the Standing Orders.

Mr. Riis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This motion recognizes a very important group in Canadian society, our artisan community. I do not expect there are many members of the House who do not have in their ridings a number of artists, people who participate in the artisan community. Those of us who know artists of one kind or another I suspect are always quite amazed at the commitment these people have to their work and the price they are willing to pay for their commitment as an artist.

What I am trying to say is that artists are not usually the most wealthy folks in society, not the most highly rewarded financially. Of course, they are motivated and moved for reasons other than financial.

The present legislation suggests that the prints we find in a gallery, original prints, are virtually the same as the posters we send to our constituents with various pictures of Canada, the various statements about the possibilities of becoming a citizen of Canada and so on; in other words, mechanical prints. I do not expect that anyone who has visited an art gallery believes that a mechanical print is the same as an original print.

An artist may make 20, 50, or perhaps as many as 200 prints, number them and sign them, whereas hundreds of thousands of mechanical prints may be run off. This legislation does not distinguish between these two types of prints.

I do not know if we can continue to call this an oversight in the legislation or simply a bureaucratic miscalculation. I suspect that many of us have had the opportunity of attending gallery openings, witnessing the showings of artists of one kind or another in the various parts of Canada. We are familiar with the whole matter of original prints. Now it is proposed to tax original prints.

We as parliamentarians recognize that the artist community is not encouraged as much as we would like to see. It is a struggle to be an artist in Canada today. It is a struggle for people in central Canada to show their goods in western Canada and vice versa. It is a struggle for maritime artists to show their works in central Canadian galleries. It is costly.

Few government programs exist to facilitate the development and encouragement of the artisan community. However, this legislation is a slap in the face to the artisans. It is going to tax original prints in the same way that it will tax a mechanical print. I cannot believe that members opposite in a few moments will yell out against this amendment because they want to see original artists' prints taxed.

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I realize that my colleague for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) and I are beating our heads against the wall, but I want to take a little of the time of the House to go through and point out precisely what this government is doing.

It is an established tradition in Canada that artists are not to be treated like manufacturers and that original works of art are to be exempt from sales tax. This tradition is not unique to Canada; it is a policy which is common to all western industrialized countries. In taking the position the government is taking today, Canada will stand alone with respect to a sales tax on original works of art.

Up until the present time, there was an exemption for lithographs and wood plates. The government said it was having a hard time dealing with new mediums such as serigraphs. Instead of trying to deal with these new mediums, it said it would exempt only paintings, drawings and pastels.

What was the response of the artistic community when it heard what the government intended to do? The government has a reasoned, lengthy memorandum giving details of what other countries do and pointing out how it is in breach of commitments which Canada may be making if it joins the Florence agreement. That agreement calls for the free exchange of cultural, scientific, artistic and educational goods throughout the world. Countries which sign it will commit themselves to the free exchange of works of art, among other things.

We have had an extensive discussion on what the effect and impact will be on ateliers, co-operative workshops, our native communities, and whole groups of people who have come to rely on the production of original prints of one kind or another not only for monetary support for their way of life, but as the key to the expression of their personalities.

Earlier we spoke about the problem regarding prosthetic devices. The reason those items should be excluded is that they are out of the world of commerce; they are items of necessity. Governments in Canada for generations have also said that artistic works, works which are the expression of the human personality, the world of culture which is the expression of our collective and individual personalities, should not be subject to sales tax. The government is not interested in making money off somebody who produces what is called a work of art. But the minister and the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) know better now.

The Minister of Finance has decided that he knows best; he knows what the definition of art is far better than all the ministers of culture throughout the world, better than UNESCO and better than the Florence Agreement. The Minister of Finance really has an appreciation and knows that what we are doing here is in no way harmful.

I want to say to the minister that if he takes a little walk around the corner to the National Gallery he will see outside a large sign advertising the current exhibit. It is an exhibit of the art of the lithograph in the nineteenth century in France.

[Translation]

L'art de la pierre; how convenient that the minister's name is Pierre!

[English]

But the minister says: "No, no, no, no, no, that is not art; no, no, no, no, that should have been manufacturing in France in the nineteenth century". That is the exhibit that is in the gallery today. He says that that is not art, that they are reproductions which are being shown and they are not art. Because the Minister of Finance knows much better than the National Gallery, or generations of governments and scholars as to what is art, this is what the government is going to do. It is going to impose a 9 per cent sales tax on lithographs, on wood cuts, on serigraphs, on zinc plates, on lead plates and on any original print which up until the present time has been exempt from sales tax.

The assumption seems to be that it is very difficult to make a distinction between what is an original print and what is a mechanical reproduction. If it is difficult, let the error be made on the side of the artist. If a customs official or a government tax collector has difficulty distinguishing between an Elvis Presley poster and an Alex Colville print, because he does not know whether one is a mechanical reproduction or does not know the means of reproduction, let the error be made on the other side, not on the side of the artist.

I want to say on behalf of our motion that there have been extensive submissions to the government in respect of what is an original print, which is a term that is generally understood in the industry. It is a concept which is understood by artists, which has meaning and substance, and one which is generally understood. It was described most recently in an article written by Walter Jule which appeared in the Print and Drawing Council of Canada Newsletter, Volume 3, number 3, on page 4, and I should like to quote from it. It says:

> An original print is a work of art that fulfils the following four requirements:
> 1. The artist alone or in collaboration has created the master image or images in or upon the plate, stone, wood block, or other material for the purpose of creating the print.
> 2. The image is conceived and develop within the print medium and does not constitute a reproduction of any image which existed previously in total in another medium.
> 3. The print is made from the said material by the artist or pursuant to his directions.
> 4. The finished print is approved by the artist.

I have discussed this matter with the Minister of Finance, with the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) and with officials in the Department of Finance, and so have representatives of the artistic community and Canadian artists. The minister has also had extensive correspondence with Mr. Robertson from the Professional Art Dealers Association of Canada. At any time any of these individuals, or those of us who put forward this amendment, would have been only too pleased to sit down with the minister and say, "If you do not like our amendment and there is something bothering you about it and you want to improve it, we will be happy to discuss it and to go through any process of negotiation and discussion that is possible in order to protect that important principle."

This is not a principle that is going to grab headlines. It is not a principle that is going to grab headlines. It is not a principle that is going to cause great gnashing of teeth within the country. The government is right, it can get away with this. The artistic community will be upset, art dealers will be upset and so will a few art collectors; but the government says that is a minority of the population so what does it matter? The government says it will go ahead because it is easier and it is administratively more convenient just to tax everybody anyway.

I suppose if we were living in a totally monolithic society one would just say fine, that is a decision of the government and one has to just sit back and take it. I want to say to the minister that when the Secretary of State for Canada (Mr. Fox) stands up tonight and votes against this and says, "no, no, we are not going to accept this principle", he is flying in the face of the obligations of ministers of culture which are generally accepted across the western world. Even though he and the government might say, "no, no, we are not going to do it today", they are flying in the face of logic and in the face of what every person who has ever thought about this problem has concluded, and that is that there is a distinction between a work of art, which is the product of the direct application of the creativity of an individual in the print medium, and the mechanical, photographic or other reproduction of another work of art. There is a distinction between those. There is a distinction between the art of the stone exhibit which is going on currently at the National Gallery of Canada and the reproduction of an Elvis Presley poster. There is a distinction between that and the geese and ducks which the government has been paying so many millions of dollars for in order to tell people they are Canadians, as if they did not know that already.

I say to the minister that in a small way my experience in dealing with this problem has taught me more about the way in which the government operates and does not operate than many other experiences I have had. We have had meetings with the groups themselves. We have had discussions with the officials involved and we have tried to explain the very basic, simple distinction which is fundamental and which has been generally accepted and is part and parcel of our tax system as it has grown up over so long, and I find it absolutely amazing that the government would be unable to make that distinction.

Do you know why the government could not make that distinction, Mr. Speaker? It is because it decided it was administratively too difficult to make distinctions to keep up with the number of media being developed by artists. All that is saying is that the administration of our tax system cannot keep up with what is really going on in the world. Rather than applying its mind, imagination and sense of culture to this problem, the government takes the easy, Philistine approach: "If it walks, we will tax it!" That is the approach.

• (1630)

In the government's mind there is no difference between a Xerox copy and prints which are produced in Eskimo co-operatives and native co-operatives throughout this country. This provides them with the only income they have, and it is a vital source of income. If that is not unbelievable, I do not know what is.

Where has the Secretary of State (Mr. Fox) been? Has he been here to defend this policy? Has the Secretary of State come in here and said that the reason the government is doing this is because of its view as to what art is? Has any member of the government said that this is an aspect of its cultural policy?

Mr. Riis: Not one person has spoken.

Mr. Rae: The minister has not spoken in this debate, and yet matters of tax are fundamental to a cultural policy. The government has moved in all sorts of areas to encourage production in certain media because it is concerned about what happens to Canadian artists, because it is concerned about Canadian jobs and because it is concerned about the impact of the American mass media on our way of life, our sense of identity and on the way in which we express ourselves in the world. Yet when it comes to a very simple and basic problem as to whether to tax artists who produce original prints, the government takes the basic and simple Philistine approach. That is what I have called it; it is probably too good a word for it. The government is not even conscious in the sense of understanding the nature of the distinction. The government just says, "Go ahead, we will tax it". It is easier to tax it than not to tax it, and this government cannot be bothered making a distinction.

All I can say about this proposal by the government is that it is so inane and flies so much in the face of what makes any sense that I can only hope and expect that, because of its inanity and its absurdity in the face of what is needed and what makes sense, the government will have to change its mind, if not this year then next year. Posters will all have to be changed. All the concepts will have to be changed. All the exhibits in Canada and the rest of the world will have to be changed. The government will have to tell all the art gallery dealers and all the cultural historians that really an original print is not a work of art but a piece of manufacture. The government will have to say that what the Inuit are producing is not art but simply mechanical reproduction, that they are engaged in manufacturing and might as well be producing nails, bolts, nuts or screws rather than expressing their heritage, their culture, their concern and their humanity in a unique way. To say that an original print is not a cultural activity, not an expression of a way of life and not an expression of one's humanity is absurd.

This is a small thing. It will not add a lot of revenue. But in a small way the government is doing just what I have said and it deserves to be ridiculed for it. It deserves to be condemned for it. It deserves to be the subject of publicity. We should let the artistic community know that when it came to make representations on a very simple matter, on a very fundamental matter, on a matter which is not one of earth-shattering or treasury-shattering principle but one which is absolutely fundamental to one's notion of culture and one's appreciation of cultural life, this government sat on its hands and did nothing. Let the record show that. I am glad the record will show that.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, we support the amendment and, in the interest of getting on to more important parts of the bill, I trust that we will move expeditiously toward the next clauses.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I will not hold the House up for long, but I do want to say that man does not live by bread alone, and surely to goodness we do not expect a painter to repaint the same scene time and time again. If his only means of making a living is through original prints, surely it is unfair to tax them. If we do that, we kill initiative and kill creativity.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I confess that I am somewhat amazed at the relentlessness exhibited by the member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) in his effort to explain to us the cultural policy of the New Democratic Party and to link it up with a 9 per cent excise tax. I suggest it is not only a matter of making the distinction between what is a work of art and what is not, but rather of wondering what is the best government policy to support the arts and encourage artists to create original productions.

Precisely because the government is always endeavouring to tailor its cultural policy to all artistic circles in Canada, it has set up the Applebaum commission which is studying the problems inherent in artistic circles and will make its recommendations to the government. We will see what recommendations the commissioners make in their report. Will they say that the cultural policy ought to be geared to the excise tax and that encouragement to the arts should be restricted by repealing the excise tax on materials used by artists, or else will they recommend that the government expand the significant measures already being implemented both by the Secretary of State and by other organizations such as the Canada Council, and that we make more extensive use of those mechanisms with a view to promoting artistic production in Canada? I think it is within such a broader scope that we must examine how a government can lend its support to the artistic community and to the production of works of art instead of concentrating on a 9 per cent excise tax on a given production.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11), the recorded division on the motion is deferred.

Hon. Pierre Bussières (for Mr. MacEachen) moved:

Motion No. 32.

That Bill C-57, an act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to provide for a revenue tax in respect of petroleum and gas, be amended in Clause 38 by striking out line 13 at page 45 and substituting the following therefor:

"Governor in council, which regulations may be made effective with reference to any period commencing on or after November 17, 1978."

He said: Mr. Speaker, quite briefly, this is a technical amendment, subparagraph (r) that is found on page 45 of this bill, which amends section 38 by allowing the Governor in Council to make regulations in order to identify certain manufacturers entitled to tax exemptions for machinery.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Bussières, for Mr. MacEachen) agreed to.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap) moved:

Motion No. 33.

That Bill C-57, an act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to provide for a revenue tax in respect of petroleum and gas, be amended in Clause 39 by striking out line 20 at page 45 and substituting the following therefor:

"cially designed for off-highway use, but including explosives for construction or demolition purposes) where,".

He said: Mr. Speaker, while this amendment is perhaps not as important as the debate we will be entering into shortly, for many construction firms in Canada it deals with a very important issue. Traditionally construction items have been tax exempt. This has reflected an effort by the federal government to encourage the construction industry. That industry operates in every single community across Canada. For some particular reason this very important commodity, dynamite, used in the construction industry is now going to be taxed.

● (1640)

The construction industry made it clear to the finance committee that in many parts of Canada this can be a very important cost. Across the board with the industry as a whole the cost of dynamite is not a crucial cost element, but in British Columbia changes in elevation of 10,000 or 15,000 feet are not uncommon, such as in the Rockies or the coastal range, and blasting rock is a very important aspect of the housing construction industry.

What this amendment does, Mr. Speaker, is simply include in the legislation a clause that would exempt dynamite from the 9 per cent federal tax. This is in keeping with a tradition which has existed in the construction industry I suppose from the beginning, that items such as dynamite ought to receive tax exemption, which is simply what this motion does.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I just want to make one comment. I agree entirely with the comments of the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis). Not only in the Rockies, but in the case of Chipewayen in the Fort McMurray area there is almost solid rock and it is very expensive to get dynamite up there. There are many places like this where dynamite is as essential as a tractor or grader or any other equipment. It is a vital part of construction and I certainly support the amendment introduced by the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I urge members to reject this amendment and I remind them that if explosives among all other building materials were previously tax exempt, it was under the provisions of the Excise Tax Act related to the tariff item granting tax exemptions. It restores the balance, and the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) tells me that it is the case of several of the items discussed, and he is quite right. A distinction is made between the principles underlying a tariff policy and the policies underlying the Excise Act and the Excise Tax Act. These changes in the tax will make dynamite a taxable item as well as other equipment used for dynamiting, such as detonators and pads. Like all building materials, they will be subject to the excise tax. That is the explanation Mr. Speaker.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I should recognize the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), but perhaps I can shorten the matter by saying that he has indicated the official opposition supports the amendment.

The question is on motion No. 33. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion, the nays have it.

Some hon. Members: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I declare the motion negatived on division.

Motion (Mr. Riis) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The House will now proceed to motion No. 35 standing in the name of the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen).

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (for Mr. MacEachen) moved:

Motion No. 35.

That Bill C-57, an act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to provide for a revenue tax in respect of petroleum and gas, be amended in Clause 42 by striking out lines 14 to 20 at page 49 and substituting the following therefor:

"diesel fuel" means fuel oil that is suitable for use in internal combustion engines of the compression-ignition type." "

He said: Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief. To my mind, this amendment will do away with the need for the various types and grades of gas to be set and defined by an order of the Governor in Council, as was done until now by regulation, by defining and classifying within the act itself the various types and grades of gas. That should satisfy many hon. members who feel existing regulations under our various acts are far too vague and gave far too much leeway. We thus do away with a provision that used to be implemented by regulation.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I have no objection to it.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I declare the motion carried.

Motion (Mr. Bussières for Mr. MacEachen) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The House may now wish to consider motions Nos. 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42 and 43, which have been grouped by the Speaker for debate with the question to be put on motion No. 36. After that it may become complicated.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) moved:

Motion No. 36.

That Bill C-57, an act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to provide for a revenue tax in respect of petroleum and gas, be amended by deleting Clause 43.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I have been listening to the debate over the past hour and a half and I think it illustrates very clearly the odious nature of this closure motion brought by the government on this very complex bill.

We have heard a number of very worthwhile proposals for changes in the bill as it has been presented. In looking at the number of motions we have to consider as yet in the next two and a quarter hours, there is no possible way we can give proper consideration to the very important oil and natural gas elements of Bill C-57 as well as the fuel alcohol amendments. For us to rush this through, have a vote and then an abbreviated third reading consideration tomorrow is entirely inappropriate to the importance and impact this legislation will have in this country. It is a sad day for Parliament and this country that these very important elements of the government's energy program will be rushed through without proper consideration.

In Bill C-57—I am addressing the natural gas tax but my remarks also apply to the production tax—the government has put forward the most important legislative elements in its National Energy Program. They are the elements which have the most immediate impact in that the taxes will be felt right away. But they are also those elements which will have the most far reaching and long-lasting impact since the taxes levied as a result of Bill C-57 will cause action to be taken over the next one, two or five years that will affect us for years and years from now.

We had in committee a very abbreviated consideration of this legislation. We had witnesses covering all aspects of the bill, but the government would not allow it to be considered by the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works where the oil and natural gas elements should have been considered.

When we look at the very short consideration, the report stage here and third reading tomorrow, it is shocking to consider what we are doing in such a short period of time. I have to wonder why the government is rushing these things through so quickly, particularly when one considers that the natural gas tax has been declared unconstitutional by the Alberta Court of Appeal. Just yesterday the Supreme Court of Canada heard arguments as to whether that ruling should be upheld.

This tax is obviously the most odious part of the whole energy program as far as Alberta is concerned, because it is the one tax they took to their Court of Appeal and which is now in the Supreme Court. They have opposed it right from the start of negotiations between the two levels of government, and to force closure at a very sensitive part in the negotiations to me is totally wrong and insensitive to the considerations of the various participants in those negotiations.

The excise tax on natural gas represents a triple whammy on natural gas producers in this country. Later today we will be considering the PGRT, the production tax. The natural gas tax itself, together with the fact that prices for natural gas at the wellhead will not increase over 1981, represents a compounded three-way penalty on Canadian gas producers. It will set back production as well as exploration of natural gas for a number of years.

Prior to the issuance of the Liberal energy program, we heard about the severe cash flow problems many gas producers were facing. Today we are discovering that wells will be shut in for five to six years from now. The federal government price policy has priced Canadian natural gas out of the United States market. The result is that gas discoveries today are treated with a shrug of the shoulders. Companies really do not want them, but they are making discoveries because there are ample amounts of natural gas in Canada.

The excise tax has been called by most observers an export tax as it relates to sales to the United States. The Alberta Court of Appeal has ruled in favour of that, and its constitutionality is now being considered by the Supreme Court of Canada. It is an important factor in the deadlock between Alberta and the federal government which has resulted in many of the adverse reactions of the province of Alberta to the Liberal energy program.

When one sits back and wonders whether it is a fair tax, one must ask what other forms of energy are being exported. If a tax is to be put on the export of natural gas, why is it not put on the export of electricity, which amounts to approximately $1 billion a year, or on the export of coal and uranium? These are all forms of energy which are being exported, yet only one element is being singled out. One must question the objective approach of the government toward taxation in order to assess whether it is an appropriate tax. If it is the only source of energy which is being taxed at the border, it is not equitable. This is why we are proposing a deletion of this tax in its entirety.

The government has indicated that it will steamroll ahead and force this tax through by the use of closure. Then I must ask myself where the government has been over the last three or four months when people came forward with suggestions on amendments. For example, the co-operative gas association of Alberta indicated that it did not receive the moneys on the sale of gas in Alberta for 45 or 60 days. The association asked the government if the payment period could be extended from 30 days to 90 days, but there was no response. The government has not paid any attention to the fact that this is causing a cash flow problem for that important element of the gas distribution system in Canada, particularly the critical element of it in the province of Alberta.

Other people have suggested that the new tax should not apply on natural gas used in the food producing industry, particularly in the manufacture of fertilizers. I hope the minister of state will respond to these questions. Why has the government not put forward an amendment to exempt natural gas used in the manufacture of fertilizers? It would keep food prices down and lower the costs of farmers in the production of food.

Inflation is running at 12 per cent to 13 per cent, food prices are in excess of that, and fertilizers are a very important element in the production of food, yet no consideration is given to the very important request to remove the excise tax. It is another illustration of the insensitivity of the government in the whole battle against inflation. The government is much more the cause of inflation, this is becoming clearer every day.

Another result of this gas tax is that the exploration budgets of gas producers have been chopped by 30 per cent and, in some cases, by as much as 40 per cent. It is not only the gas tax, it is the pricing policy of the government for natural gas, as well as the impact of the production tax. The only element of the country which is benefiting from this tax is the federal government. It is part of the massive tax grab introduced on October 28 in the National Energy Program.

Another result is that independent companies not as strongly capitalized as the multinationals have found their capacity to obtain financing from the banks and from the marketplace has diminished significantly. These are the companies which were supposed to be helped by the Canadianization program of the government. They are sending money out of the country because the environment in Canada is not favourable by a considerable margin when compared with the environment in the United States, the most readily available place in which to invest that money. The netback to producers in the production of natural gas is approximately one-fifth or one-sixth of the netback in the United States. The United States has not moved to deregulate the price of natural gas as yet, which, if it did, would increase the disparity between the two countries.

One of the objectives of the National Energy Program is Canadianization, and the tax in itself is hurting the companies which were supposed to be helped. This clearly points out the inconsistency between the objectives of the program and its actual impact. We have said time and again that we accept the objectives of the program. We think they are laudible and we support them, but they are totally undermined by the taxation policies. I will illustrate another element in this regard later on when we deal with the production tax.

This tax is a very important factor in the deadlock between the two levels of government in terms of reaching an over-all pricing agreement for oil and natural gas. If we do not achieve an early resolution of the deadlock, the megaprojects, the Alsands and the Cold Lake project, will be scrapped; the Syncrude expansion will be deferred for a number of years or possibly scrapped; our reliance upon imported oil from countries such as Mexico and the more unstable ones of the Middle East will increase; our over-all objective of self-sufficiency in energy will be set back. I will return to that area in the debate on the production tax.

It is critically important that this government rethink and withdraw this tax on natural gas and gas liquids if we are to move ahead and achieve some rational approach, some understanding within the country as to the over-all objectives which can be accepted by all parts of the country, not just here on Booth Street in Ottawa. It is important during these negotiations between the two levels of government that consideration be given to that point.

I understand that a letter or telegram was sent by the Alberta government to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) asking for the natural gas tax and the production tax to be withdrawn until the negotiations are completed. I ask the minister of state why that request was not honoured when we are right in the most sensitive part of the negotiations, particularly when the Supreme Court was considering yesterday whether that tax was legal. I question whether this House should be debating and voting on a tax which has been declared illegal, but that is the position in which the government has put us.

I will complete my remarks here, Mr. Speaker. What I have said clearly sets out why we are opposed to this tax. There will be others in my party who will be discussing certain other elements of this issue. I urge the government to seriously consider the amendment which we have put forward to delete the tax entirely.

Mr. Cullen: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) is rising on a point of order with respect to the other motions which have been grouped for debate, is that right?

Mr. Cullen: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I will try to dispose of that and an additional problem which has arisen, particularly with respect to the hon. member's motion No. 38 and the motion standing in the name of the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), who is not in the chamber at the moment. Perhaps one of his colleagues will take note of what I have to say.

To begin with, when I indicated to the House that we were dealing with motions Nos. 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42 and 43 I did not think it was necessary for me to indicate in whose name each one of those motions stands. For procedural purposes, if hon. members prefer I will do that. I understood that each and every one of those motions is up for debate, including that of the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton.

I have a second problem, that is, that Madam Speaker's ruling relating to motions Nos. 38 and 39 does not leave me completely clear in my own mind as to whether or not, should the House defer the vote on motion No. 36, the result is that I should put the question to the House on motions Nos. 37 and 38. I do not think, whether or not the question is put, that will have any adverse effect on the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap or on the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton since, in my view, they would have to come forward again this evening for consideration on yeas and nays following the House order put forward yesterday.

If either of those two members makes it clear to the Chair that for some reason they have some concern with the ruling I am making now, I would rather assure them of their right to have their motions brought immediately to yeas and nays, and regardless of the outcome with respect to motion No. 36 I would, following that, put motions Nos. 37 and 38 to the House on nays and yeas, if those hon. members feel that their rights are better protected in that fashion.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, in my discussion with the Chair my one concern was that I thought these motions were all grouped together and that it was necessary to put them, we could debate them and the votes could come in due course. If motions Nos. 36 and 37 were not in fact carried, then the Chair would move immediately to motion No. 38. If they were carried then obviously my motion would have no authority because there would not be a section there to amend. I thought that the Chair would have to put the motions first, naming the mover and seconder, in order to have them before the House for discussion, and then the votes would follow in the normal course. But I am in your hands, Mr. Speaker, as long as I can speak on my motion during this particular stage.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair is satisfied that there is no question of the hon. member having lost his right to speak as a result of the way in which I introduced the motions. Lest there be any problem we will dispose of that issue immediately. I will deal with each of the motions and put them before the House. I referred to them by group and by numbers. Now I will deal with them individually.

Pursuant to the order of Madam Speaker motion No. 36 standing in the name of the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) is now before the House. Also before the House is motion No. 37 standing in the name of the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose) (for Mr. Waddell), seconded by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae); motion No. 38 standing in the name of the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen), seconded by the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Demers); motion No. 39 standing in the name of the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (for Mr. Riis), seconded by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood; motion No. 40 standing in the name of the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (for Mr. Waddell), seconded by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood; motion No. 41 standing in the name of the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (for Mr. Waddell), seconded by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood; motion No. 42 standing in the name of the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (for Mr. Waddell), seconded by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood; and motion No. 43 standing in the name of the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (for Mr. Waddell), seconded by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood.

To assure the rights of hon. members the Chair will undertake to put yeas and nays on motions Nos. 38 and 39 regardless of the outcome on motions Nos. 36 and 37.

Mr. Mark Rose (for Mr. Waddell) moved:

Motion No. 37.

That Bill C-57, an act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to provide for a revenue tax in respect of petroleum and gas, be amended by deleting clause 43.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton) moved:

Motion No. 38.

Mr. Mark Rose (for Mr. Waddell) moved:

Motion No. 40.

May 14, 1981—That Bill C-57, an act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to provide for a revenue tax in respect of petroleum and gas, be amended by deleting clause 44.

Mr. Mark Rose (for Mr. Waddell) moved:

Motion No. 41.

May 14, 1981—That Bill C-57, an act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to provide for a revenue tax in respect of petroleum and gas, be amended by deleting clause 45.

Mr. Mark Rose (for Mr. Waddell) moved:

Motion No. 42.

May 14, 1981—That Bill C-57, an act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to provide for a revenue tax in respect of petroleum and gas, be amended by deleting clause 46.

Mr. Mark Rose (for Mr. Waddell) moved:

Motion No. 43.

May 14, 1981—That Bill C-57, an act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to provide for a revenue tax in respect of petroleum and gas, be amended by deleting clause 47.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member who preceded me, I am sorry that we do not have more time to debate this particular issue. I do not think it is because the government brought in time allocation on this particular part of the bill; it is because of the fact that we have something in excess of 130 amendments to consider. Of course, using up the time of the House for this piece of legislation and suggesting that we have a long debate on each section would be impractical, so the government has taken the only approach it could take by bringing in time allocation. Thus, we are required to debate the motions in which we are particularly interested. Had the opposition moved a more reasonable number of amendments, which is the normal course at report stage, I think we could have had a better debate.

My remarks deal primarily with my motion No. 38. When the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) presented his budget last October, it included a notice of a ways and means motion which established a natural gas and gas liquids tax. That motion exempted from tax the fuel gas used to fraction-ate natural gas liquids, as long as the fractionation took place in a "gas reprocessing plant"—I am reading from the notice. In the notice a gas reprocessing plant was defined as "an installation in Canada at which natural gas liquids are removed from marketable pipeline gas".

Only two plants in Canada, including Dome's Sarnia plant and Chevron's Fort Saskatchewan plant, limit their operations to fractionating natural gas liquids, and as such the exemption provided for in the October motion missed these two plants.

On January 22, 1981 the minister tabled a second notice of ways and means motion which amended the definition of gas reprocessing plant, as the department's news release suggested, to clarify that the exemption "will be available only in respect of fuels used in producing marketable pipeline gas or removing natural gas liquids from gas".

If that in fact was the case, I would not be presenting the amendment today. The fact is that the fractionation of natural gas liquids is a necessary part of producing marketable pipeline gas. Furthermore, those plants that remove the liquids from the gas and then fractionate them are not only capable of but are in fact allocating part or all of the waste heat generated from the removal process to the fractionation process, thus substantially reducing, and in some cases totally eliminating, the need for fuel gas to carry out the fractionation process; and hence, substantially reducing, if not eliminating altogether, the incidence of the fuel gas tax.

This opportunity to allocate the waste heat to the taxable fractionation process does not exist for Dome's plant in Sarnia or Chevron's plant in Fort Saskatchewan, because distance has intervened, making it impossible to recover waste heat from the removal process. In Sarnia's case, 2,000 miles separate the fractionation of the liquids from their removal from the gas stream in plants out west. The net result of both motions is that Dome's Sarnia plant and Chevron's Fort Saskatchewan plant will bear the brunt of the tax on the fuel gas used to fractionate natural gas liquids.

Here, then, lies the discrimination. The amendment that is presently before Your Honour in my name will cure the discrimination without in any way extending the exemption. Singling out Dome's Sarnia plant, a highly fuel-efficient operation accounting for 40 per cent of Canada's production of natural gas liquids, and Chevron's Fort Saskatchewan plant, for imposition of the fuel gas tax, will be viewed by the industry as a disincentive to locate such facilities in eastern Canada, or for that matter anywhere away from where the liquids are removed from the gas stream. Firms that look to Sarnia to build or expand their fractionation facilities should not be faced with the disincentive that Bill C-57's definition of "gas reprocessing plant" would create.

Indeed, as I speak to you today, those plants in western Canada which carry out the dual processing and fractionation function, together with Dome's Sarnia plant, accounting for over 90 per cent of Canada's production of natural gas liquids, are in fact allocating secondary heat recovery to the fractionation function and are apparently doing so with the knowledge and tacit approval of the Department of Finance.

For example, Petro-Canada's gas reprocessing plant at Empress allocates 100 per cent of its secondary heat to the fractionation part of its operation, thus entirely eliminating the impact of the fuel gas tax on fractionation of the natural gas liquids. Neither Dome's Sarnia operation nor Chevron's Fort Saskatchewan operation have had that opportunity.

I have raised this issue with the department. I am not certain about Chevron, but I know that Dome has raised it with the department. It seems to me that when they recognize the flaw, if you will, in the first notice of ways and means motion, that was the reason for bringing in the second notice of ways and means motion; but it, in effect, is as discriminatory as the first one.

I am not suggesting that any plant dealing in this particular way with the fractionation of material would not locate in Sarnia, eastern Canada or away from the original plant simply because of this tax; but certainly, it is a disincentive. Plants move to areas like Sarnia because there is a market in the immediate environs, and particularly in the United States. There is a better market for them there, and they can work hand in glove with other petrochemical industries in the Sarnia-Lambton area. However, this is a disincentive which impacts solely on two plants in Canada at the present time—as I said, Dome in Sarnia and Chevron in Fort Saskatchewan.

For that reason, we have suggested an amendment, and I have put it on the books, which would eliminate this discrimination, would not in any way extend the exemption which is granted, and would be fair to all plants concerned. They would be able to move or to locate either at the site of the original plant or would be able to move, as in the case of Chevron and Dome, several miles away from the original source. Therefore, I commend this for the House's attention.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to raise a matter of correction as to what the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) has said. He is usually an honest, straightforward member of Parliament.

Mr. Cullen: Usually?

Mr. Towers: However, this time he seems to be just completely off the rails. The reason there are so many amendments to this piece of legislation is simply because it is such an obnoxious piece of legislation. I have never seen anything like this in the House in nine years. Never before has a government implemented a piece of legislation which is as inflationary as Bill C-57 which is before us. The multiplying effect on the cost of living which will result will be tremendous in the next few years. I hope that the backbenchers opposite will see the error of their ways and stop supporting the minister in what he is trying to do, not only to the service industries which we are talking about, but to the Canadian people as well.

The very basic requirement of life, that of heating our homes, will be taxed. Everyone must heat their homes in one form or another. If one does not use gas, one uses oil. It is a requirement; and yet this government sees fit to tax it.

My colleague, the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), referred to people from Alberta who came down and pleaded with our committee, with the minister and with the cabinet not to tax natural gas, but that if the government was bound to go ahead with it, to please give them at least 90 days to collect the tax rather than force them to borrow money at the bank to pay the tax to government before they even had an opportunity to collect it. Your Honour is a fair-minded person and I am sure that you would agree with me that it is deliberately dishonest for a government to do that to a segment of our population.

The hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton just said that it was discriminatory. I would ask the minister what other piece of legislation has this government or any government ever put in place which forced the people involved to pay the tax before it was collected? I am sure it has never happened before. It is wrong. I am simply amazed that the government would not give some consideration to that aspect of the bill.

Further, as I said, the tax in the bill itself is inflationary. At this particular time we hear cries for help. I see the chairman of the Standing Committee on Agriculture in the House this afternoon. He knows the situation of farmers. The Ontario Federation of Agriculture made a presentation to us. They explained the serious condition which farmers are in financially. What does this government do? It puts a tax on natural gas so that the price of chemicals will go higher. Does that make sense? How can the government go back and face its farm friends when it is doing that? It was stated earlier today that as far as costs are concerned, fertilizer is just going through the roof. Fertilizers use natural gas as a base and so do chemicals. The deputy minister of one department in this government, the Department of Agriculture, has stated that the farmers will have to increase production 50 per cent in the next ten years. I have news for Your Honour. I will wager that the farmers will not be in a position to do that if the government continues to allow these costs to escalate as it is doing. It is not only allowing this to happen, but it is also causing and creating the problem. Farmers have enough problems with weather, climatic conditions, high cost of machinery, repairs and labour. However, when the government puts an excessive load on, it changes what it is doing. It changes its plans. Everyone will suffer as a consequence.

● (1720)

I do not plan to take too much time this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, as I know my colleague from Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave) wants to speak along the same lines. I wanted to bring to your attention and that of hon. members opposite what is happening to the agricultural industry in the province of Alberta. Not only will Albertans suffer, but farmers across Canada will suffer. The Alberta Gas Co-operative is the group that will be hurt by the imposition of this tax when it turns out that they have to give it to the Department of National Revenue prior to having collected it.

At this late date, I hope that the minister will change his policy and give a little bit of relief to those who are going to be hurt the most.

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a loud "hear, hear" to the remarks of my colleague, the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers). I also want to indicate to the House why this party is opposed to the export tax on natural gas, why it is opposed to the government's general taxing policy on natural gas, and in particular I want to deal with the problem of the co-operatives.

As has been indicated, this party has moved an amendment which would require the government to give an extra 90 days to the Federation of Alberta Gas Co-ops Ltd. and to other co-operative enterprises, so that they will not have to borrow from the banks at 23 per cent or 24 per cent, or from the credit unions at a little less, in order to pay their taxes.

With respect to the amendment moved by my colleague the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), we are concerned that the government is, in a sense, doing two things. First of all, it is relying for a substantial amount of revenue on a commodity which, in our view, should not be exported in such amounts.

Second, in an incoherent, a selective and discriminatory way, it has chosen to levy a tax against the export of natural gas but not against the export of anything else. I want to correct that statement, Mr. Speaker; there is a tax on the export of oil. At this time in our history, when the tensions between producing provinces and consuming provinces are as great as they are, to say that we are going to single out a commodity which is of value and importance to producing provinces and tax it, but that we are not going to tax the export of hydro-electricity, for example, is unwise. Imagine the consequences in the province of Quebec if the federal government decided to export hydro-electricity! Imagine the consequences in the province of Ontario if the government decided to tax the export of hydro-electricity!

What makes it so clearly discriminatory is that in that part of the country where the government has no support, no political base, no constituency that it is afraid of alienating, that is where it decided to go after the tax on exports. If the government had decided that all exports of energy would be taxed, I would have thought it would do it in a way that is fair. But the government is responding to its own immediate, short-term political interests, its own immediate, short-term political constituency.

I do not challenge the legal or constitutional right of the government to tax an export. Of course it has the legal right to do that. But if it taxes things in a way that is discriminatory and that is bound to increase the feelings of tension and hardship that exist between and among Canadians, then it should be condemned. The government deserves a chance to change its mind, which we are attempting to do this afternoon in this vain exercise of trying to get it to move.

I do not want to deal in any detail with the National Energy Program or to the taxation PGRT problem and its effect on provincial revenues and on federal-provincial economic relations. We will deal with that when those motions are before us.

I want to agree profoundly with what the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) said about the effect of the natural gas tax on agricultural costs, on the problem of inflation, and in particular the impact on one group of producers, the co-operative producers.

The illusion of government policy, both with respect to interest rates and higher prices for natural gas, is that somehow these policies will combat inflation. How often have we heard the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) say that high interest rates are necessary in order to combat inflation? If we look at what is going on in the agricultural industry in Canada today and if we speak to farmers, no matter what commodity they produce, we can see that policies which force them to cut back production because they cannot afford to continue will reduce supplies. Any policy that reduces supply will have a disastrous effect on the price of fuel in Canada. The writing is on the wall, Mr. Speaker.

Recently I talked to beef producers in the province of Ontario and to the Ontario Federation of Agriculture. When they are asked what will happen to beef supplies in this country as a result of interest rates and the pricing policies of the government, they have plenty to say. In the years to come we will find out what is going to happen. It will not take long for that cycle to come home to the government. We should take note of this, Mr. Speaker—the matter was raised today in the House, as it has been raised in the past. If policies are introduced which have the effect of restricting production, that is a recipe for inflation out of control. The writing is on the wall, clear as day. We can see the effect on concentration; we can see the effect on the destruction of the family farm; we can see the effect on reducing competition and income security in agriculture because of the interest rate policy. It will have an effect on inflation as sure as the sun comes up in the morning, Mr. Speaker.

Try as it might, there is no way that the government can convince the farmers to continue production flat out, and to continue investment flat out, when they are paying 23 per cent, 24 per cent or 25 per cent for the money invested in their operation. For the government to claim that that kind of policy is anti-inflationary is a bogus argument, it is nonsensical and it is discouraging to the forces of commonsense in this House.

Quite apart from the interest rate policy, Mr. Speaker, we have the additional fact that the increases in the price of natural gas, which are a result of the government's taxation, are having a dramatic effect on the cost of fertilizer. The hon. member for Red Deer questioned the logic of this. The cost to the farmer is increased across the board; the cost of financing of fertilizer and items absolutely essential to his production is increased. As a result, the farmer either buys less, in which case he produces less, or his productivity increases less, he goes out of business or he passes the increased costs on to the consumer; otherwise he cannot survive. I do not see the logic of this, Mr. Speaker.

I have never accepted the principle, nor has this party, that the price of natural gas should be arbitrarily tied to the price of oil. Nor have we accepted the principle, which I will come to later when I talk about the PGRT, that it necessarily makes economic sense for the federal government to increase its take at the expense of the consumer or at the expense of the producer, simply in order to gain revenues. When you come to the items of principle, the items of grand policy, such as the PGRT and the export tax, there are basic divisions of opinion in this House over that policy. One does not always expect the government to move. We have had a number of these items going through.

There was a very detailed, practical presentation from the Alberta Federation of Gas Co-ops. They made a very specific presentation. They came in with their bills and showed us how much it cost. They showed what the revenue was and what their collection pattern was. They came to the government with a very simple, basic request.

They do not like the tax and do not want to pay the tax. However, they are law-abiding citizens and as long as the tax is legal, they will pay it. All they are asking for is a little bit of time, in this case 90 days, so they will not have to borrow from the bank in order to pay the government. This is co-operative enterprise. They are making a simple request for time. Just as with the artists, to all the requests, the ones that are reasonable, the ones of principle, which cause a division in the House of Commons and on which one does not always expect the government to move, items big and small, the government has one response, no.

I hope the minister has an explanation for the gas co-ops in Alberta that makes a little more sense than the explanation he has given us at this time. The convenience to the government is what is primarily and obviously fundamental. The concerns of a group of people who are not trying to make a few bucks but simply trying to face the problem of being asked to pay money they have not yet collected are not important to this government. They are being asked to pay revenues for the use of gas which they have yet to collect themselves. It is a sales tax on sales which have not yet been collected. It is the equivalent of that. It is like asking a manufacturer in the province of Ontario to pay a tax on goods which he has not yet produced. That is the illogicality of what the government is asking the gas co-ops to do. I would have thought it more reasonable for the government to say it will give them time to collect this money and then they can pay after it is collected. They are not asking for unlimited time; they are asking for 90 days.

I thought the government would see the wisdom of not causing undue and unnecessary hardship to taxpayers who are prepared to pay a tax even when they object to it strenuously. They are prepared to be law-abiding citizens. All they want is a little understanding of what goes into making their industry. As is so often the case with this government, it does not care what goes on in the working of any particular industry. All it is interested in is collecting the money and devil take the hindmost.

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a very short intervention on motion No. 36 which deletes clause 43 providing for the natural gas and gas liquids tax. I will raise just two points, the impact of this gas on my home city of Medicine Hat, and some comments to add to what we have heard about the implications of this tax on rural Alberta, in fact the effect of the tax on every farmer who uses either natural gas or fertilizer. There is an incredible impact on that group.

This is one of the two natural gas taxes that is unfair and unreasonable to my home city of Medicine Hat. As a modern city of 40,000 today, it owes its very beginning of almost 100 years ago to the discovery, development and use of natural gas. Medicine Hat is probably the only city in Canada that had the good sense and farsightedness to develop its own public utilities, and that includes the development of electrical power.

I remind the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) of the very reasonable brief presented to the committee by Mayor Ted Grimm and Alderman Dr. Ken Sauer of Medicine Hat on the implications of these two taxes, especially this one, on our city. They pointed out quite properly that there is no precedent for such a tax on a city-owned public utility.

This specific tax has amounted to approximately $3 million since being implemented. It has been paid monthly by the city, but under protest. The mayor and city council take the view that the city is not liable for this tax.

I want to refer very briefly to the government's appraisal of the city council's presentation to the committee. It reads:

> Exempting the city of Medicine Hat would set a precedent for exempting all other public utilities such as B.C. Hydro and Saskatchewan Power Corporation. This would severely restrict the general application of the tax.

That was the government's appraisal on the city's presentation. I submit it would not set a precedent since B.C. Hydro and Saskatchewan Power are not a separately owned city utility or anything like it. That is a rather ridiculous comment to make about a reasonable presentation that came before the committee.

I want to make a few comments on the impact of this tax on rural Alberta or, essentially, on the farmers there. I remind the House, especially the minister, of the appearance before the committee of the members of the Federation of Alberta Gas Co-ops and their concern about the immediate and very severe increase in fertilizer costs since the manufacture of most fertilizers involves natural gas. They pointed out quite properly that the end result of this is to add significantly to food cost production, which is so important these days. They also made a very reasonable request for an extra 60 days to pay the tax. I again refer to the government's appraisal comments on this request which was referred to by two other members. It reads:

> While it is easy to sympathize with this request, other taxpayers could also make similar claims. For example, gas distributors often receive gas during the summer on which tax is paid and then store it for later distribution to consumers. To extend the time of payment for the tax for all taxpayers would be costly in terms of lost revenue.

I suggest with the greatest respect that no revenue would be lost by extending the time. It would extend the time for the beginning. After that, the regular income would come to the government. It is as simple as that. Again I quote from the appraisal as follows:

> Given that the federal tax is not imposed at the retail level, it is not possible to match the timing of the tax remittance with the actual receipt from the final consumer. The average 45 day lag in remittance has generally been found acceptable by the business community for federal sales tax purposes.

I should add that rural gas co-operatives and rural gas users do not store gas before they use it. It comes in through an enormous gas distribution system where it is flowing all the time. They use it constantly. The appraisal comments of the government on this request, which is very reasonable, entirely miss the boat. I urge the Minister of State for Finance to reconsider this.

Finally, I want to make a brief additional comment about the Federation of Gas Co-ops presentation. They pointed out that this particular tax and the PGRT work against the National Energy Program and the gas conversion proposal which is now being implemented, if only because the government is increasing the price of gas at the very beginning. Surely this is not the way to go about promoting an otherwise commendable part of that program to convert to natural gas. If you are going to boost the gas by two taxes before it ever gets into the pipeline, I think you are making this all the more difficult to begin with, and that is not the way to promote an otherwise commendable policy.

I should like to close by reminding the House of the very generous offer made by the Federal Gas Co-ops in Alberta to assist other provinces in the conversion, in the rural areas especially, as a result of their experience in providing gas to over 80 per cent of farm users in Alberta. They made a very generous offer and I think they should be commended for that very worthy gesture.

While I appreciate the fact that the Minister of State for Finance is in his place participating, I would ask where the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) is. His absence is conspicuous. This is the time of the debate, when we are down to the final stages, when he of all people should be in the House to hear the debate.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I too take a great deal of pleasure in rising to speak to this collection of motions and once again register for our party virtually the rage we are feeling when discussing these kinds of problems. What motivates that, Mr. Speaker, is that I recall very vividly the two groups that appeared before the finance committee, chaired by a most able chairman who stood out in my mind as being serious and having spent a great deal of time and effort preparing thoughtful briefs. They presented briefs in a very positive and, I would say, somewhat optimistic way. Those representatives were from the city of Medicine Hat, referred to by the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave), and the natural gas co-ops from Alberta.

The co-ops were before us again to protest against having to pay this particular tax, but recognizing that it was likely to be inevitable, they asked for some consideration in terms of the frequency of payment. They asked for 90 days within which to pay this tax in order to avoid going to the chartered banks of Canada to borrow the money. How on earth could anyone, let alone the government, say no, knowing it would collect the tax in the end and force the co-ops to go to the banks to borrow at excessive interest rates to make the payments? How could anyone say in all seriousness that that is an appropriate step? We will be waiting with some anxiety for the Minister of State for Finance to respond to that particular concern.

The municipality of Medicine Hat appeared before us. That is a city whose council a number of years ago had the foresight to recognize a valuable resource and develop it to advantage. That was a city council which had the vision to utilize a resource at hand, and as a result was able to provide a very attractive feature to industry for consideration in their decision-making process as to where they would or would not locate. They were attracted to the area of Medicine Hat because of the relatively low cost of energy, and also because of the fact the municipality used natural gas to generate power and light the street lights of the community and so on.

I cannot for the life of me understand why a government would say it was going to tax a municipality that is unique in Canada; it does not care, it is going to tax that municipality anyway. This is a small municipality relative to the rest of urban Canada, but the government says it does not have any particular compassion, it does not recognize the efforts of the municipality over the decades to develop this resource, it is going to impose the tax. I do not know why we do not have a government which could show a little more compassion, a government which says it appreciates and recognizes the wise decision that city has taken in developing the resource over the years to the benefit of its citizens and, indeed, the residents of Southern Alberta and indirectly the citizens of Canada.

My colleague, the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) spoke eloquently at some length about the multiplier effect of this tax and how it is going to touch the lives of so many Canadians; one could almost say all Canadians because it will result in higher food costs.

Just the other day we witnessed a demonstration in front of the Parliament buildings by a group of women protesting rising prices. They told story after story of personal incidents of which they were aware of families having difficulty putting food on their tables. This is occurring in what is probably the richest country in the world. Families are having difficulty in many cases in many parts of Canada putting food on their tables. This particular tax on natural gas will result in even higher food prices.

In the last number of weeks I have had the opportunity of visiting with a number of cattlemen, dairymen, orchardists and market gardeners in my riding, and every single one of those individuals is extremely concerned about the viability of their venture in the next number of years. Right now they are simply making payments and they are certainly not considering expansion in the food business. They are cutting back almost to the last individual, selling off land and reducing production simply because the interest rates are killing them. Now we are going to hit them with this tax which will make their costs even greater.

As the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood stated, this is going to come back to haunt us in a few months just as certainly as the sun is going to rise tomorrow. This is the beginning of a process and we will see the impact of this on Canadian families in the next number of days and weeks.

As a western member let me ask why it is that the government is taxing these particular resources, natural gas and oil? Why is the government not putting a tax on water and why is it not putting a tax on electricity? I suggest it is because this would have implications which would raise the ire of certain provinces of Canada. Why is it the government is essentially choosing two, or three provinces in Canada in this particular legislation, saying it is going to levy a tax on the people living in those three provinces? Why does the government not tax electricity?

Mr. Cullen: We did.

Mr. Riis: Why don't you place a tax on hydro resources?

Mr. Cullen: We did.

Mr. Riis: Well, we do not any longer. In my own province of British Columbia hydro resources are not taxed, and hydro resources in Ontario and Quebec are not taxed, but natural gas and oil are. What about coal, do we levy a tax on it as an energy form? We do not. We just levy a tax on very selective energy resources. Can anybody explain why that is not discriminatory, identifying two resources out of many and saying those two are to be taxed but not others? Coal and hydroelectricity are resources which are not taxed in this country. They are energy sources which are found across the country, but we have selected out essentially one province—at the most, three—and are taxing it. Is that fair? How on earth can anyone suggest we are treating the regions of Canada equally? As a western member of the House of Commons I feel extremely bitter about what I see as a very discriminatory act.

• (1750)

During the constitutional discussions our party wanted to make the case very strongly that we felt that resources should come under provincial control. We moved an appropriate motion to see that that would occur in the ultimate statement of Canadian law. Yet we see here an obvious infringement in that area. It has been taken to the courts, and the courts have ruled. As the hon. member who spoke previously this afternoon said, even now it is before the Supreme Court of Canada. Here we are during these very delicate and sensitive times of negotiation ramming this through and obviously not caring particularly about this infringement into this provincial area of jurisdiction.

I could go on and on just on this matter, let alone discussing what Bill C-57 would do to the artists of Canada, the disabled and many others. Quite frankly, it is difficult to understand the motivation across the aisle. I read with interest the justification presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) as to why the government ignored all the briefs presented. On page after page the justification was that one proposal was silly and another inappropriate. It was suggested that a certain group had obviously not done its homework. The justification amounts to a very arrogant set of statements. It is a reflection of that attitude when we hear hon. members opposite shout "nay" to motions which any rational and sensible person would have to agree are certainly credible.

With that I will allow other colleagues to comment on this very crucial part of Bill C-57. We will have more to say about other motions when they come up after dinner.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, briefly with respect to the natural gas tax, this tax of 30 cents an Mcf now, another 15 cents to come due on July 1, another 15 cents on January 1 and another the following January 1, to run to a total of 75 cents per Mcf, is unrealistic and wrong.

First let me deal with the export tax feature. It was intended when the budget was introduced in October that we as Canadians would be able to raise our export price of natural gas by 30 cents an Mcf very quickly after the imposition of the tax and that by February we could do that so that in effect the foreign purchaser would be paying that 30 cents. What in fact has happened is that it has not been possible, and consequently the tax has come back on the producer of the gas.

With respect to the tax against the producers of the product, what we are really doing is taxing the producer, and taxing him almost on a royalty basis. Surely any royalty which is attributable to a natural product should be collected by a province. I am not saying for one moment that the federal government has no right to levy taxes, but the federal government's basic right to levy taxes on products is at the manufacturer's level. This tax is levied on virtually a raw product or an input, so it winds up being passed on and on.

For example, we do not charge tax on wood cut for pulp. We charge a sales tax on paper. The reason we do not charge a tax on the input is that we want to bring about further production and further improvement in the product. We do not want our tax at the initial level passed on and on in higher prices so that people must obtain markups on products, so we charge tax at the manufacturer's level.

This tax is bad because it attempts to tax natural gas and natural gas liquids. It does not tax on a separate basis the end product from the manufacturing use of natural gas. For example, if we are going to use natural gas for the manufacture of fertilizer, it is perfectly proper, if this government wants to tax fertilizer, to tax fertilizer by the pound or tonne or however it wants to tax it. If the government wants to do that, it can do so, but when it taxes fertilizer by taxing the input into a fertilizer plant, then it is doing it very indirectly. What it is doing is increasing the cost of the fertilizer to the consumer far beyond what it should really be. What we are really saying is that we are not concerned that the government levies taxes, because government must levy taxes. We are not concerned that governments levy taxes on manufactured products, but surely this government should not levy taxes on the inputs into manufacturing. That is what the government is doing here.

Mr. Evans: How about labour?

Mr. Blenkarn: The government levies taxes on labour all the time. Every person who pays income tax is being taxed on his labour.

Mr. Evans: Is that not an input?

Mr. Blenkarn: What we should be doing is levying a tax on the product of the manufacturer so that if a person buys butane, for example, and makes something with it, the tax should be levied on that. That would be a proper tax. The government can raise the sales tax if it wants to do so on that type of product, but what we have here is a tax at the input level. Then there is a further tax at a later date. The trouble is that that tax becomes built into the system, and overhead, profit, and transportation costs are added to the tax levied on the raw product.

The tax is not just a tax of 30 cents an mcf or eventually 75 cents an mcf; it is a tax which has to be reflected in price, in interest costs and other costs, and those costs have to be passed on. This tax is on input; that will cause the end product to be much more expensive.

Certainly governments must obtain revenues, but surely this is not the way to levy a tax because this is the most inflationary way to do so. It is very damaging to our manufacturing industry to levy tax this way. It is not in the industrial interest of Canada.

If the government wants to tax consumers on the gas they use to heat their homes, then the government should deliberately say it is going to tax consumers on their heat. I suppose the government has a right to do that. I do not think that is the right thing to do in a cold climate, but that is the way it should be imposed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I have the impression the hon. member will want to use the remainder of the time available to him. If he does not mind, perhaps I should interrupt him, in view of the time, and he can continue his remarks later.

I must leave matters clear for the House at eight o'clock. The hon. member for Sarnia (Mr. Cullen) and the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) have received a ruling from the Chair that they are entitled to yeas and nays on their respective motions Nos. 38 and 39.

If the hon. member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) wishes to continue his remarks at eight o'clock, he will, of course, be recognized.

It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. When the House rose at six o'clock, the House was considering motions Nos. 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42 and 43 which are grouped for debate. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is being put on motion No. 36—the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson).

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) is going to respond to a number of questions that have been put to him on these particular amendments. They are important questions which are of great concern to people in western Canada and across the country in terms of the impact this tax has on food. I would like very much to hear the comments of the Minister of State for Finance.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member—and I hope he is listening—will have an opportunity to rise later on. He will take ten minutes to criticize the government because he does not have the time to speak. When we speak, he is not satisfied, but when we do not, he is not satisfied either. He is never satisfied. It is my duty, and his too, to co-operate and see to it that the House can function.

One of the questions raised by the hon. member is why there is no exception for fertilizers or for other sectors. Obviously, in certain spheres of activity or for certain goods, we have to consider input factors, production costs, as well as the possible effects on other sectors of trade, and in this case, the sector to be considered is that of food production. Several industries have asked to be exempted from the tax on natural gas and, of course, the industrial sectors that are major consumers of natural gas would also have liked to be exempted. However, we have to consider the purpose of this tax, which is to yield revenues to the federal government by other means than by increasing the well-head price, and if we were to justify an exemption for one sector, we could also find justification to exempt another one and finally, we would have a very great number of exempted sectors, and there would be no reason to maintain the tax.

However, because the tax must be maintained and is fully justified within the framework of the National Energy Program, we are maintaining it and we are not granting any exemptions. The hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) has made some interesting comments, and I would like him to remember that Revenue Canada is still investigating to ensure that liquid gas substitutes in the fractionating process are not used to avoid the tax. Obviously, at first glance, one might think that there is a certain kind of discrimination. If one goes deeper into the matter, it becomes clear that, if granted, the exemption asked by the hon. member would reverse the problem and create a distinct advantage in a very special case.

Taken as a whole, amendments Nos. 36 to 43 aim quite simply at removing completely the tax on natural gas liquids and deleting the sections which provide for the imposition of such a tax. As I have indicated, this tax is part of the National Energy Program. I do not want to go over the major elements of this energy program which, I am certain, has the support of most Canadians. We recognize that some parts of the energy program may cause certain problems to certain groups of individuals. For instance, I am certain that the New Democratic Party is 100 per cent in favour of the Canadianization program and certainly of the basic objectives of the National Energy Program, but it finds it hard to accept taxes on natural gas, in this case, Mr. Speaker, and on oil, which aim at redistributing the revenues generated by this production sector.

The hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) says: Very well, you are taxing a resource involving three provinces. Let me ask him if he accepts the fact that in these circumstances, not only in Canada but all over the world, some natural resources cannot be a source of wealth, of much greater wealth than some other resources that certain provinces may develop in other parts of the country, and consequently, if we try to analyse— The hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) asks if the price of gold has not increased. It has, and since then mine operating subsidies have ceased. Because the hon. member must remember that over a long period of time there have been gold mine operating subsidies in this country. Fortunately, with the increase in world gold prices, such subsidies are no longer needed.

I wanted to indicate that some natural resources may generate more wealth than other resources. It is normal, under the general sharing principle that is basic to the Canadian federation, that those revenues be used first to establish a better domestic price in Canada for Canada's oil products, second to use that surplus wealth to Canadianize oil research, exploration and development operations in Canada, and finally that we pursue the much broader goal of oil self-sufficiency, in keeping with our national energy program of oil self-sufficiency for Canadians, in the near future. This is why I propose to reject most amendments and maintain taxes on liquid substitutes for natural gas.

[English]

Mr. Hargrave: Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) that before the House rose for the dinner hour at least four or five members on this side of the House raised a very reasonable point about the extension of the time from 30 days to 90 days in the payment of the gas tax. It was a very genuine and sincere request. They did not request a reduction in the tax by even one cent. I hope the minister will at least respond to it.

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the same point of order, I apologize to the hon. member. I had it in my notes. I wanted to speak of the request for an extension, from 30 to 90 days, of the time granted for payment of the natural gas tax in the case of co-operatives. However, as one can see, in all cases, we have a 30-day period. It could always be argued that an exception could be made in the case of co-operatives. However, should we have an exception? Is it warranted? Or else should the period in all cases be extended from 30 to 90 days? Finally, it should be noted that this extension could appeal to other groups, either individuals or manufacturers, who must comply with the 30-day period.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. minister takes into account the fact that on the average it takes the post office ten days to deliver bills and even with all the good will it will take another ten days to send the cheque in for payment. Therefore, that only leaves a margin of ten days. Moreover, the co-ops would in fact be able to pay the outstanding tax, within the 30-day period, long before their customers have even received their bills and had the opportunity to pay them. Is the minister aware of that?

● (2020)

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's questions seem to imply that neither I, as an individual, nor the government are concerned about the needs of the people. The problem is not concern about people's needs but the respective merits of universality versus individual cases. The hon. member is asking about the time lag between sending and receiving a bill. As he is well versed in accounting, he is certainly aware that there exists a billing procedure which eliminates everything, which eliminates—

Mr. Lambert: Even in rural areas?

Mr. Bussières: Surely I know more about rural areas than the hon. member who lives in the city of Edmonton. Bell Canada uses the same billing system whether its customers live in Normandin, Charlesbourg or Edmonton. Equal billing means setting a monthly average with adjustments at the end of the year which permit tax refunds and regular revenues on all sorts of consumer goods, such as fuel oil, gas, telephone or electricity.

[English]

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. It is a pretty poor show when the minister rationalizes a simple request about simply delaying the payment. Because of that the co-ops must go to the banks, borrow money and put more debts on the backs of the producers. Who is this government working for, the banks or the people?

Mr. Evans: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Speaker, there is a very fundamental point here which hon. members opposite seem to be missing. Let us consider the manufacturers' excise tax which is very similar—

Mr. Wilson: We are talking about natural gas.

Mr. Evans: Let us talk about the principle which underlies this matter. I know the hon. member does not talk about principles very often. Let us use an automobile dealer as an example. He buys cars, and built into the price of those cars is a 9 per cent manufacturers' excise tax. The automobile dealer must go out and borrow the money to carry his inventory. Should we say that it is not necessary for him to go out and borrow the money and therefore we should extend payment on the tax until the dealer sells the car?

What about the gas distributor in Sarnia who must bring in the gas and hold it for six months before it is distributed? It is not distributed but the tax is paid. Should that distributor also have up to six or seven months to pay? Why does the hon. member think that since it happens to be a co-op it should receive special treatment?

Mr. Wilson: That is not the point.

Mr. Evans: The principle is that the tax is paid at the time the product is transferred to the distributor. That is the principle which has been followed in all other cases and there is no reason why it should not be followed in this case.

Mr. Taylor: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect, the Chair has recognized hon. members on more than one occasion. This is not Committee of the Whole. We are at report stage.

Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Taylor: I have a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Bow River on a point of order.

Mr. Taylor: I do not pay income tax until after I make the money. Why—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member is on a point of argument, not a point of order.

Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on motion No. 36. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to the agreement made earlier the vote stands deferred.

Motion No. 44 will be debated separately and voted on separately.

Mr. Rae: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. There was an earlier ruling by Mr. Speaker this afternoon that although we would have a voice vote on motion No. 36 we would also be entitled to a voice vote on motions Nos. 38 and 39 as well. Therefore, I would ask that we be allowed to have that vote now, prior to moving on to motion No. 44.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the wish of hon. members that the voice vote be put now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This is a deviation from Madam Speaker's earlier proposal.

Mr. Rae: We agree on the deviation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on motion No. 37. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Rae: No, motions Nos. 38 and 39.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion negatived on division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on motion No. 38. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Some hon. Members: On division

Motion negatived on division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on motion No. 39. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to an agreement made earlier the motion stands deferred.

Now we will go to motion No. 44.

Hon. Pierre Bussières (for Mr. MacEachen) moved:

Motion No. 44.

That Bill C-57, an act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to provide for a revenue tax in respect of petroleum and gas, be amended in clause 55 by striking out line 34 at page 66 and substituting the following therefor:

"section (1).

(6) Any regulation made pursuant to subsection (5) may be made effective with reference to any period commencing on or after March 31, 1981."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on motion No. 44. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to on division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Motions Nos. 45 and 54 are to be grouped for debate. They will be voted on as follows: questions will be put on motions Nos. 45, 46, 48, 49 and 54 separately.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) moved:

Motion No. 45.

That Bill C-57, an act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to provide for a revenue tax in respect of petroleum and gas, be amended in clause 76 by substituting the words "a special licence" for the words "a special temporary licence" wherever the latter words occur.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this group of amendments is a package approach which our party has taken toward the extension of the use of fuel alcohol and the production of fuel alcohol in Canada from the experimental stage which had been set out in the bill by the government to a limited production. My hon. friend for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin) will be speaking more extensively on this measure. I will simply say at this time that we are extremely disappointed that the government has not found itself in a position to have really considered these amendments that we have put forward. I spoke to the staff of the minister earlier today, and they claim that they need further study. I think that this is further evidence of the fact that this legislation is being pushed through far too quickly, without sufficient consideration of the amendments which have been put forward, and have been well thought out.

● (2030)

We have had a great deal of support from the various interest groups which have an interest in the production of fuel alcohol. I believe that if the minister would sit back and consider the context of these amendments within the context of the energy policy and within the context of the task force on alternate energy, there would be very little hesitation in his acceptance of these amendments. I believe it would be done very quickly. However, we are being rushed here because of the odious closure motion which has been laid on us here. We have simply not had the time to consider these amendments which will move us from the very tentative experimental stage, as put forward in the bill, to the production stage that we are urging upon the government.

Therefore, I do not propose to speak further on this matter. I will yield the floor to my friend, the hon. member for Bruce-Grey. However, I will just comment very briefly that these amendments will move us closer to self-sufficiency in our total energy picture, reduce our reliance on imported oil, and we will be moving in a very consistent way with the national energy policy as put forward by the government.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to start off by trying to put this bill into context in light of the comments which the minister has just made regarding the whole issue on energy, the tax on natural gas, and government policy in general. The tax on natural gas is a very good example—as is the grouping of recommendations which have been made in Sections 75 and 76 in Bill C-57—of the narrowness of vision which really amounts to tunnel vision and the focus which the government takes on one aspect of the problem when the problem really includes a number of different aspects, taking the energy picture, economics and the country at large into consideration.

I think the natural gas example is a good one when one looks at the impact it has on fertilizer. It has been well pointed out that this will run through the system adding to fertilizer costs and increasing costs which are being borne particularly by farmers. In the end, they are bearing not only increased costs of production, energy and fertilizer, but also the costs of other government programs. Those economic costs are reaching a crisis point, and our agricultural community is really very vulnerable. Indeed, many farmers will go out of production because of the combination of these costs and the fact that they cannot continue to bear them. This, in the end, will leave us vulnerable in terms of food costs which will again increase our dependence on imports. The whole inflationary spiral will continue and feed itself.

This is where I have a great deal of trouble in accepting the comments of the Minister of State (Finance) (Mr. Bussières) because he seems to segment this, taking it as one aspect when it must be a combined, total picture. This is not unusual for the government to do. Indeed, this whole bill is a measure which is designed to increase the revenue to the government at a time when it is feeding off our natural resources and when we are without an economic policy to give the business world any sense of confidence to invest in Canada. We have to prop our dollar up. We have to do unusual, extraordinary things to improve revenue. We have to keep the interest rates up, the government says, because of inflation. We know it is because the dollar is weak. If the government does not continue to keep it up there, the dollar will weaken further and will, in fact, fall precipitously. That is because of a lack of general understanding of the integration of economics with agriculture and energy. If that is something which the minister does not understand, hopefully some of the people in the rest of his department might; but certainly they do not focus on it when they draw up these bills.

I would like to spend my time mainly commenting on Sections 75 and 76 of Bill C-57. These are really designed to help promote the development of gasohol, denatured spirits or denatured alcohol, whatever one might call it. The bill has done one good thing. It has removed the excise tax so that gasohol or ethyl alcohol can be produced without the $17.50 tax per gallon which is placed on spirits which are for human consumption. That is a good provision in the bill.

The other things which the bill does is to start to address the problems of the small producers who make alcohol for fuel purposes. This is done by providing what is called a temporary licence. The unfortunate fact is that as it is a temporary licence, it is really only good for one year. What has really been done is that, in combination with the money aspects of the bill, a system of regulatory control has been set up, including a temporary licence which must be renewed every year and including diagrams which must go to the department when a person wishes to make a still.

There are a whole set of regulations which would delight any bureaucrat but which would frustrate the heck out of anyone who was really serious about producing alcohol. Who can build and set up an economically viable still from spare parts, different pieces of equipment from different areas, when he must submit diagrams to someone sitting in Ottawa who will judge whether it is correct? Who will build a still if, at the end of the year, he must have another review and face the fact that his licence will either be withheld or not renewed? Who will do it when he knows he has only a temporary licence when, indeed, what he needs in a sense of confidence that the whole issue will be dealt with in a reasonable and realistic way?

What we have really done with this measure and the amendments which the government has brought forward so far is to go back to the position in which the Americans were during 1978 or 1979. In the several years since that time, the Americans have moved forward. They have what is almost a deregulation of the whole issue in the United States. An individual or a small producer, defined according to certain quantities, can go ahead and start producing ethyl alcohol for fuel consumption simply by making a telephone call. There are many arguments as to whether this is something we should promote in a grand way in Canada.

I think that there are arguments for being able to use a renewable source for the feedstock and arguments regarding the environmental effects. We know that the products of combustion of ethynol are much safer for the environment than are the products of gasoline. There are arguments that we can use the waste products. Indeed, in Prince Edward Island there is a program right now which is using waste potatoes, and ethyl alcohol is developed from that. There are many different aspects to this argument.

I think that the essence of it, though, is that we can look to this for an extension of the transportation fuels which are so desperately needed in this country. I say that there is a desperate need. We know that as a direct consequence of the National Energy Program, in some ways, and as a direct consequence of the dwindling resources of conventional oils in Alberta, we are indeed facing a real shortfall, a critical crunch, sometime in 1983 or 1984. In fact, one of the most recent publications has shown that we might be facing up to a shortfall of about 30 per cent in the reasonably near future if we continue with the same kind of programs in the same focused way under the National Energy Program.

We can look to the production of ethyl alcohol, by individual farmers or individual groups of farmers, in small quantities for personal consumption; but when that production exceeds their consumption, particularly if it is in waste, they must also have the ability to dispose of the excess amount of alcohol. This is another critical aspect of the bill that has not been addressed in the amendments put forward by the government. There is no provision for an individual producer to dispose of excess production. This is a very limiting factor and will make economic production of ethyl alcohol very difficult.

There are many technical aspects to the production of ethyl alcohol and if people begin to produce in a big way we will see the development of technology. New organisms will be used for fermentation processes, new equipment will be developed to make use of the product more simple, and a host of other good things will happen.

The bottom line is that we are looking for an extension of our transportation fuel in order to provide security of supply to farmers and those people who really need the economies that can be gained from individual production. It is important that the energy that is required for food production be available.

The Special Committee on Alternative Energy and Oil Substitution which reported to the House recently, had an opportunity to compare this form of energy with others.

The comments I have just made roughly reflect the conclusions of the committee. The committee report recommended that people be permitted to sell their excess production to retailers. This bill, which I suppose will not be amended for a long time, imposes the constraint that people can only produce enough for their own needs. That is a severe constraint, Mr. Speaker, and one that needs to be and should be removed. The alternative is a limited number of people engaged in a limited production and the potential of this source of fuel will not be achieved.

The amendment offered by this party would do several things. First of all, it calls for the temporary licence to be replaced by a special licence. We suggest a five year licence that could be renewed or even removed by the minister at his discretion. A one-year licence is very confining and restricts development.

We also recommend that the individual producer be allowed to sell his surplus production to other farmers or people off the production site.

No member of the House should have any difficulty at all in supporting our amendments, Mr. Speaker. The only money aspects that are involved were dealt with by the government. The provision concerning the bonding issue has been changed from the $200,000 level to $4,000 to $10,000 and perhaps it could even be removed altogether. We do not argue about this and have not included it in our amendment. The excise tax has been removed so that is not a consideration either. There is nothing here that would be a cost to the government.

We have an opportunity here, Mr. Speaker, to allow production of this fuel to expand if we adopt the amendments put forward by this party. Opportunities abound, Mr. Speaker. We have the opportunity to provide Canada with an additional source of energy that will complement existing systems and can be integrated into the use of gasoline. It can extend gasoline and allow us to achieve many advances in agricultural production, the use of marginal lands, improving the environment and all the things that the National Energy Program aspires to and that Canadians would like to see come about. There is no reason why any member of this House cannot support those amendments, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, we in the NDP lend our support to these particular motions. They are good motions and the movers have obviously done a great deal of work in preparing the precise and thoughtful wording of them. We endorse the motions 100 per cent.

The previous speaker made it clear that there is an opportunity for Canada and the government to take a leadership role in the drive toward self-sufficiency. We can join with New Zealand, with the United States, with Brazil to develop technologies that will promote the use of ethyl alcohol and offset the increasing and tremendous costs of transportation fuels.

We can visualize a still on every farm, Mr. Speaker. We have an opportunity to open up marginal farmland. Anything that rots can be turned into an alcohol that will prolong the life of an automobile engine. Many people already add alcohol in one form or another to their gas tanks, with the result that the lifespan of the engine is not 40,000 or 50,000 or 100,000 but 200,000 or 300,000 miles, this, by the simple addition of alcohol to gasoline. We should be working toward this goal in Canada.

Many jobs would be created through the manufacture of stills. Presumably the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gray) would be pleased to initiate a whole new set of manufacturing opportunities and job-creation programs across Canada.

Hundreds of thousands of farmers, using marginal agricultural land could take advantage of the opportunity to produce this fuel. It would give them an alternate source of income, would lead to the development of marginal farmland, and would be another step towards energy self-sufficiency for the country.

In the United States, one of the few programs that was successful for President Carter, was the move to the production of gasohol. It can be purchased in various States today. Within a few years Brazil plans to use gasohol for the major portion of its transportation fuel. What is Canada, a major agricultural producer, doing to show leadership in the development of this industry? I think we would have to admit that we are doing very little in this direction. There is an opportunity today, through these motions, to show the leadership that is required, and to say that we are prepared to move into this area. A still on every farm could be used as a theme.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I shall not speak long on this matter but I do want to make some very short and pertinent remarks.

I believe the government has put restrictions on this legislation with the sole objective of preventing bootlegging. But I cannot think of any legislation more likely to promote bootlegging than this bill, Mr. Speaker. It would partially legislate the use and production of ethyl alcohol as a fuel by means of the one-year licence. To me that suggests minimization of capital investment; the lowest amount of money that can possibly be put in the system. It would also promote the use of the illegal still as against legal ones. People could hide them.

If I were to promote the use of ethyl alcohol as a fuel, I would seriously look to a process that would promote larger capital investment and a longer licence, thus reducing the risk to the investor. It could be done on an area basis with special licences so that farmers and others growing certain stuffs could sell to a central point where alcohol could be produced. It could be policed and controlled and even watched, if desired, by the fewest number of civil servants possible. However, that is not what the government is doing. It brings in a piece of legislation saying "you shall minimize your capital investment because you may lose it next year as you will only get a one-year licence."

● (2050)

That is the worst of all worlds. Indeed, it could promote bootlegging in a major way. If one person gets a licence for a small still, and begins to put the product in his car, the farmer down the way, even though he does not have a licence, will put in a still and do the same. Soon there will not be enough inspectors to look after the stills.

The government has gone in the opposite direction from rational movement, that is an installation with a large degree of capital investment in one plant producing under proper control denatured alcohol and so forth. This opens the door to all sorts of illegal stills which will crop up all over the place.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out that the objections raised against the amendments moved by the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson, which I had an opportunity to discuss at length with the member for Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle (Mr. Lefebvre) and which have to do with gasohol production, are not basic objections because they are prompted by the economic situation or the circumstances.

Should one consider the intent of the legislation, one would realize that the measures adopted were only transitory. They are aimed at promoting the existence of a situation similar to the one just described by the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) in his remarks, namely to make it possible to continue the development of experimentation in the fields of production and use, while making sure that the production control mechanisms are operational. Indeed, it is an open secret that alcohol control in Canada has always been rather well structured and tight enough, so that before liberalizing our alcohol production potential and diverting it to fuel uses, as the hon. member for Etobicoke Centre would have it, the Departments of Energy, Mines and Resources, National Revenue, Finance and even Agriculture should jointly draft a policy and continue to follow the evolution of research and use of gasohol as an energy source for automotive vehicles, and then we will be in a position under the Excise Tax Act to come up with measures which will be better adapted to the evolution, the application and the use of gasohol. I would therefore urge hon. members to reject the amendments, not because they are not worth while, but because the existing transitory measures we now have will do nicely until we reach the degree of expertise which will enable us to opt for greater liberalization.

[English]

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, I will attempt to be brief on this amendment. It seems strange to those of us from the farm communities that, although there is an opportunity here for the producing farmer to conserve energy and lower production costs, two things very important to the national economy of this country, the government says no. When we point to examples in the United States, the minister says yes, for one year at a time. No one will make an investment in the necessary size still for one year. Experience in the United States shows that a $25,000 investment is needed to make it economical.

What we see in this amendment is something that is seen throughout the bill. Any bill that goes before a committee with over 130 amendments must be a poor bill. Mistakes must have been made in drafting the bill. Even the government has presented amendments, so there must have been mistakes.

Why is it that only the government can have amendments accepted when we all know there are other mistakes in the bill?

Look at what the National Energy Program, the tax and the PGRT are doing to the province of Saskatchewan. Sixty per cent of the Saskatchewan producing wells have been rendered uneconomic. Fully one third of the wells in Saskatchewan are now shut in, not because the producers want that, but because of the insidious 8 per cent tax.

In 1980 the tax on Saskatchewan heavy crude alone gave to the federal government $600 million. That is $600 per man, woman and child in the province of Saskatchewan. It is more money than the province and the producers combined received. Even if the federal government took half from the producing province, it would not be overreaching. However, as I said, it is taking more than the province and the producers received in total.

In southwestern Saskatchewan, a 100 barrel a day well loses 13 cents a barrel, a 45 barrel well loses 13 cents a barrel and a 10 barrel a day makes $1.46. This government thinks we should have all ten-barrel-a-day wells, which are strippers, virtually worthless. The minute there is a problem well, the producer refuses to bring in an overworked rig, which runs around $1,400 to $1,500 a day. That is why the wells are shut in. No company wants to continue to lose money.

This government says this province should remove its tax and bring it in a better perspective, but the oil resources belong to the provinces. We received that right in Alberta and Saskatchewan in 1931 and, I may say, under a Progressive Conservative government. This government has decided to remove that by taking an additional 8 per cent after the producers and the province had jointly reached an agreement on how to share the wealth of the resource of that province.

If this continues, we will not reach energy self-sufficiency by 1990. This is the second time in the last ten years that a Liberal government has made a commitment to self-sufficiency. The last time was in 1973 when the then government brought in another energy program. At that time the prime objective was "to reach before the end of the decade self-sufficiency in oil and oil products". That was in 1973, so it meant self-sufficiency in 1980.

Now we have another National Energy Program brought in by a Liberal government. It now says we will reach energy self-sufficiency by 1990. With the present program and the grab by the federal government of the resources which belong to Saskatchewan, Alberta and other producing provinces, we will not reach energy self-sufficiency by 1990, and, in all likelihood, not by the year 2000. I do not see any reason that the people of Canada should expect this government to honour its agreement to have energy self-sufficiency by 1990, any more than it was able to reach energy self-sufficiency through the last energy program by 1980.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (for Mr. MacEachen) moved that Bill C-57, to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to provide for a revenue tax in respect of petroleum and gas, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

[English]

Madam Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time, at the next sitting of the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: It shall be read the third time at the next sitting of the House, pursuant to order made Tuesday, June 9, 1981.

It being after ten o'clock, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

At 11.11 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CALL FOR MINISTER TO VISIT RESTIGOUCHE RESERVE IN QUEBEC—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, I am rising under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter which is more than pressing and urgent; it is critical. Yesterday the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) received the following telegram from Restigouche, Quebec:

An immediate intervention is requested to bring about a just solution in the problems facing the Indian people of the Restigouche reserve in the province of Quebec and their present jurisdictional dispute with the Premier of the Government of Quebec.

Furthermore, we request that you direct the Minister of Indian Affairs . . . to immediately visit the chief and band council of the Restigouche reserve and the other assembled Indian delegates from across the country.

The explosiveness of this situation at Restigouche is mounting by the minute. Just as I entered the chamber I was informed that another invasion of the reserve is imminent. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Erie (Mr. Fretz):

That the Prime Minister immediately despatch the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to Restigouche in order to make every effort to settle the dispute before the situation becomes violent.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

POLITICAL PARTIES

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY TELEPHONE SERVICE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. An Ottawa journalist, Frank Howard, reports the following conversation when he telephoned the headquarters of the New Democratic Party in Ottawa yesterday:

Me—Je voudrais parler avec M. Robin Sears.

NDP Woman—He's in a meeting.

Me—Pardon?

NDP Woman—He's not here.

Me—Je voudrais parler avec Robin Sears.

NDP Woman—Just a minute.

(At this point the line was cut and I was switched to a second person).

Second NDP Woman—What do you want?

Me—Je voudrais parler avec M. Sears.

Second NDP Woman—He's in a meeting! (louder)

Me—Pardon?

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Kilgour: I am coming to the motion, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: I am sure this kind of crank preamble cannot be allowed. Does the hon. member have a motion?

Mr. Kilgour: I move, seconded by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen):

That the NDP consider engaging a bilingual telephone receptionist at its national headquarters.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

BANKS AND BANKING

BANKS' PROFITS ON PROPERTY TAX COMPONENT OF MORTGAGE PAYMENTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that a policy of the chartered banks is to offer on home mortgages a maximum interest rate of 3 per cent on the property tax component of monthly home mortgage payments, compared with a 16 per cent plus interest rate offered on savings accounts, and in view of the fact that this policy not only blatantly discriminates against the home owner but also renders to the banks millions of dollars in excess profits, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday):

That this House deplores this practice of the chartered banks which gouges the Canadian consumer and urges them to review their existing policy with the purpose of returning to the consumer of a home mortgage a rate of return on his dollar which is fair, rather than continuing a practice which serves only to increase their own profit margin at the direct expense of the home owner.

NAVIGATION

CLEARANCE OF HAZARDS FROM FRASER RIVER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of very urgent and pressing necessity, and I am sure my motion will have the unanimous support of the House. In light of the federal government's guarantee that a facility would be provided on the Fraser River for the removal of navigation and fishing hazards to replace the snag removal vessel the Samson V, in light of the government's total failure to provide such a service since the removal of the historic vessel from its duties last year, and in light of the hardships already faced by Fraser River fishermen due to federal fisheries department closures and fishing restrictions, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose):

That this House instructs the Minister of Public Works to find a replacement facility immediately to take up the task of clearing the Fraser River for navigation and fishing.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

DEMONSTRATION OF SUPPORT FOR POLICY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas yesterday a prominent group of Canadians of all political persuasions, representing the Committee for the Canadianization of the Oil Industry, came to Ottawa to demonstrate support for the National Energy Program, I move, seconded by the hon. member for York South-Weston (Mrs. Appolloni):

That this House commends the activities of this group and invites other Canadians to demonstrate their support for this vital national policy.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

LEADER OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Canada is today faced with the worst economic conditions since the depression, adversely affecting all Canadians, in particular those on fixed incomes, small businessmen, farmers, and home owners. Yet the Leader of the NDP has abrogated his responsibilities as the elected representative of his constituency of Oshawa in order to deal one-sidedly with internal politics in El Salvador.

In view of the fact that the self-proclaimed central American expert has at every opportunity taken up the time of this House with matters of little interest or concern to his constituents, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That the Leader of the New Democratic Party be instructed to give up his seat in this House and seek a permanent position with Socialist International, a move that will be welcomed with open arms by his revolutionary friends in Cuba, and would allow his constituents in Oshawa the opportunity to elect someone who was interested in and able to represent their interests in Ottawa.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

UREA FORMALDEHYDE—RESPONSIBILITY OF GOVERNMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Given that the government's response to the urea formaldehyde foam insulation problem is nothing more than a $5 million public relations job which does nothing to alleviate the distress of the 100,000 Canadians who are affected, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That the Government of Canada own up to its legal and moral responsibilities and help those thousands of Canadians who trusted the government's advice and insulated with UFFI, and who now find themselves faced with either a threat to their families' health, or financial hardship.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

ANNOUNCEMENT OF INITIAL PRICES FOR 1981-82 CROP YEAR—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, since 1971 it has been the policy of the Canadian government to announce Wheat Board initial prices prior to seeding. This year Senator Hazen Argue, minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, stated that there would not be an announcement of initial prices until seeding was completed. Seeding is now complete, and I therefore move under the provisions of Standing Order 43, by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That this House instruct the government to announce immediately the Wheat Board initial prices for the 1981-82 crop year so that grain producers may be in a better position to plan their financial affairs for the remainder of the 1981 growing season.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE ADMINISTRATION

MINISTER OF THE ENVIRONMENT—MOTIONS UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43, and I hope I will be supported by my colleagues to the right here, although they obviously have other ideas about Standing Order 43. Yesterday the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) politically desecrated the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) by rejecting Progressive Conservative and NDP amendments designed to give to the Minister of the Environment administrative authority for environmental studies provided for in the government's Crown lands gas and oil development legislation, Bill C-48. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan):

That the Minister of the Environment resign from the cabinet since much of his authority has now been usurped by his colleague, the minister of energy, and thus he no longer has any real mandate either in the government or in this House.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Yesterday the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) politically desecrated the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts)—

An hon. Member: It is the same motion.

Mr. McMillan: —by rejecting PC and NDP amendments designed to give to the Minister of the Environment administrative authority—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. McMillan: —for environmental studies provided for in the government's Crown lands resource development legislation, Bill C-48.

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. McMillan: I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That the Minister of the Environment resign from the cabinet since much of his authority has now been usurped by his colleague, the minister of energy, and thus he no longer has any real mandate either in the government or in this House.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

AID TO GRENADA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the "bleeding heart" of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), CIDA, provided Grenada's communist government with $475,000 to build a garage—its vehicles could not stand being out in the heat—but the same government will do nothing to protect Canadians who are being evicted from their homes into the cold because of exorbitant interest rates, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen):

That this House reminds this Liberal government that charity begins at home and that Canadians of all colours are more important than "red" trucks.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

AIRPORTS

TORONTO—BAN ON LANDING OF LIGHT AIRCRAFT

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The Minister of Transport has done it again. After putting a $5 fee on light aircraft landing at metropolitan Toronto airport, he has now completely banned light aircraft for a further seven hours per day from landing at that airport. Is there any possible justification for that order, other than just keeping light craft out of the airport?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the hon. member should check with a number of his friends on the other side of the House and those on this side who complained about the noise at night in the area. This is the reason we tried to control the use of the airport during night hours.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER REVIEW SITUATION

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, the minister should know that the hours being prohibited are daylight hours—in the morning and in the afternoon. Perhaps the minister is in the dark, but it really has nothing to do with aircraft flying in the dark. It is simply a matter of keeping them out of there during some fairly busy hours. I say "fairly busy", not exorbitantly busy hours. Perhaps the minister would take a moment to look into the situation to see if he could come up with another answer.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I will in this particular instance but, generally speaking, general aviation at main airports in Canada presents a problem in terms of the maximum use of the airports by scheduled travellers. In every instance of which I am aware, be it in Vancouver, in Toronto or what not, there is an idea of rationalizing time in order to maximize the use of the airport by scheduled aircraft.

AVIATION SAFETY

TERMS OF REFERENCE OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON IMPLEMENTATION OF DUBIN REPORT

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Transport. It arises out of the advisory committee the minister appointed for the implementation of the Dubin report. In the tabling of the terms of reference, it is quite clear that the minister established the committee for the purpose of advising only rather than implementation.

In view of the fact that ten aviation associations have taken serious objection to the process and to the terms of reference, is the minister not now prepared to amend the terms of reference to give a clear mandate to that committee to implement the major recommendations of the Dubin report, rather than simply to review the work of the Dubin inquiry and to advise the minister?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I have said a number of times that the purpose of the advisory committee is to implement the Dubin report. However, I have said that 90 per cent to 95 per cent—I have used figures of this kind—of the Dubin report might be implemented in the legislation which I hope to introduce in the autumn.

On the subject of the air associations which came to see me approximately two weeks ago, I told them that I would see them again if we deviated substantially from the Dubin report. I will explain myself: if the legislation we prepare for the autumn deviates substantially from the Dubin report, I committed myself to see them again and to debate the subject extensively with them.

● (1120)

Mr. Mazankowski: Madam Speaker, since the minister's own terms of reference indicate that the committee is an advisory committee rather than an implementation committee, I think that the terms of reference clearly speak for themselves.

MEMBERSHIP OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, the other point which is in contention is the apparent conflict of interest of some of the members of the advisory committee. I bring to the attention of the minister one Bernard M. Deschênes, who is also perceived in the industry as having a conflict of interest inasmuch as he is a legal member of the Aircraft Accident Review Board, the very subject of which is part of the Dubin inquiry. Would the minister not reconsider the appointment of Bernard M. Deschênes along with those of other members of the committee who were, in fact, subjects of the investigation by Justice Dubin?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, there is a basic difficulty in the question. The Dubin report will not be implemented by the advisory committee. The report will be implemented by the government as a whole through the Minister of Transport. That is a fundamental truth which the hon. member neglects to take into consideration at this time.

I have created this advisory committee not to implement the Dubin report of its own capacity but to advise me, as Minister of Transport, and to advise the cabinet, how to implement the report. I think there is a basic misunderstanding in the question raised by the hon. member for Vegreville.

VIEWS OF GROUPS IN INDUSTRY

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, it is very clear in the minds of those who represent the aviation industry that, first, they want the implementation team to be provided with clear terms of reference which should be directed solely toward the most expeditious and unqualified implementation of the Dubin Commission recommendations and, second, that the implementation team be given a proper balance by the inclusion of representatives from interested participants in the Dubin Commission. The minister has failed on both counts to satisfy the aviation industry. After all, they should be the experts in this matter since their views are represented in total by the spokesmen for the ten different organizations which have met with the minister on different occasions.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is sufficiently experienced in these matters to know that the proper way to have implemented the Dubin report would have been to rely exclusively on the department. But because of the consideration that justice should be seen to be done—

Mr. Mazankowski: The department which is being investigated?

Mr. Pepin: —I have created the advisory committee, which is not the normal practice in these matters. The advisory committee is working extremely well and much faster than one could have even hoped. In the coming weeks I will be in a position to detail what part of the Dubin report we will be implementing in the legislation in the fall. The hon. member will be pleased by the work done by the advisory committee among whose members there is a pilot and a lawyer who is very experienced in these matters and who does not have a conflict of interest.

Mr. Mazankowski: What about Deschênes?

Mr. Pepin: He does not have a conflict of interest. He is in the business of advising on legal matters pertaining to the investigation of accidents and incidents.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

EFFECT OF STRIKE—MINISTER'S MEETINGS WITH CBC PRESIDENT

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. I hope that I can anticipate a more courteous reply than the one I received the last time I directed a question to him.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rose: Madam Speaker, our $700 million broadcasting corporation is being crippled. Thousands of Canadians are being deprived of news and entertainment, especially those in northern Canada, because of an eight-month strike by Radio Canada journalists and a five-week management dispute between CBC and its NABET technicians. Surely this dispute cannot go on for ever. If it does the CBC could end up like the Toronto Telegram of the Montreal Star.

Is the minister currently meeting with CBC president Al Johnson, or has he met with him recently, in order to ensure that the CBC bargains in good faith so that the strike can be settled before the upcoming economic summit conference? If he has not been consulting with Mr. Johnson, can the minister tell us why not?

• (1125)

Hon. Francis Fox (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I would like to be very courteous in my answer to the hon. member. The last time he asked me a question, the reply was "No." The next time, I will say, "No, thank you." Perhaps it will not hurt his feelings.

I would like to tell the hon. member that I have, indeed, been following the matter closely. I met with the president of the CBC this week and reviewed the CBC's position on the question of the strike. As the hon. member knows, there are about 22 or 23 bargaining units within the CBC. There are about 17 or 18 which have come to terms with the CBC during current contract negotiations. Just last week the CBC settled one of those important contract negotiations with the STRF, which is the French-speaking technicians' unit of the CBC. The French-speaking technicians accepted the offer which was negotiated with the CBC. We are all hopeful that the CBC will be able to come to terms with the English-speaking technicians as soon as possible.

POSSIBILITY OF UNION BUSTING

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, is the hon. minister aware that the issue is no longer one of simply independent production or increased Canadian content? NABET has given in on that. The CBC has half a loaf, and now it wants the whole loaf, including the use of in-house independents and the use of independents in jobs normally assigned to NABET technicians. What is likely to happen if this is allowed is that the best of NABET people will go independent, and the number of CBC technicians belonging to NABET will dwindle. This is really a question of union busting. I would like the minister to look into that part of it and discuss the matter thoroughly with President Johnson to see that President Johnson himself is, in fact, aware of it, and that it is not something which he does not know about and his negotiators are pushing.

Hon. Francis Fox (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I know that the hon. member has been very supportive of the CBC in the past, and I know that he is still most supportive of the CBC, in a general way. I have reviewed the matter with the president of CBC this week. He repeated to me that he has given guarantees to NABET that there would be no loss of jobs on the part of NABET employees, and that the number of in-house hours of production would not be diminished. If the hon. member has other points he would like me to bring to the attention of the president of the CBC, I would be more than pleased to do so.

BROADCASTING OF SUMMIT CONFERENCE IN JULY

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, turning back to the coverage of the July summit, the minister knows that only the CBC has enough technicians to act as host broadcaster. However, the minister should know that as host broadcaster contingency plans include the use of the CTV technicians, that strike-breaking is forbidden in the CTV-NABET contract, and also that the technicians and broadcasters and similar supportive unions from the U.S., British and European networks will support the CBC-NABET strike at the summit.

Since the Minister of Labour's own conciliator has already supported NABET's position on jurisdictional matters and has supported the NABET stand, will the minister use every reasonable means to achieve a fair and just settlement in the weeks to come?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Francis Fox (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, obviously the role of the CBC is to negotiate with the union, and the chairman of the present CBC is, of course, interested in achieving a reasonable and just settlement for all parties concerned. It is quite obvious that all of us in this House and all the people in the country would like to see the strike settled as soon as possible. There are matters of importance at issue. Hopefully, as a result of the ongoing negotiations which I trust will proceed at a brisk pace, we will be able to have the strike settled before the summit is held.

AIRPORTS

FUTURE OF PICKERING PROJECT

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. I hope I get some better answers from him than my colleagues have this morning.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fennell: Madam Speaker, I have in my riding one of the great disasters of federal policies in this decade.

Some hon. Members: You are!

Mr. Fennell: No, no. The government has left a disaster of 18,000 acres.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fennell: This has left the people in the riding in a state of anxiety. It is similar to T. S. Eliot's "Wasteland". The minister's predecessor, in four months, came up with a policy on that land. That is the Pickering—question mark—airport. This minister has had 16 months to do something about this. Would the minister please present to this House a long-term program of what he will do with the illconceived Pickering airport?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, this will be done in the early days of next week.

• (1130)

LEASING OF EXPROPRIATED LAND

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, we heard that around the middle of May. I should like to make a small suggestion in a brief supplementary question. Would the minister consider putting this land into long-term lease and encouraging young farmers—at least looking after part of the agricultural community—allowing them to lease this land and also putting the minds of all my constituents at ease?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, this is exactly the purpose of what I am going to announce next week. I do not know if I can put all the electors of the hon. member at peace because they may have other reasons to be troubled. As far as rental duration is concerned, however, they should be at peace next week.

PENITENTIARIES

RIOTS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA INSTITUTIONS—REFERRAL TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. In answer to my question in the House on June 8 the minister stated that he had no intention of referring the matter of the recent prison riots in B.C. which, I might say, now involves three institutions, to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. Outside the House on the same day, the minister apparently told the media that he was considering a reference to the committee. May I ask the minister if we can expect a reference in this particular matter in order to try to get to the root of the problem as far as the institutions are concerned?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I am not contemplating suggesting that the matter be referred to the justice committee. I do not as yet have the reports of the special inquiries that are being conducted into those three incidents. When I have the reports, I believe that the necessary action can be taken within the mandate that the Correctional Service of Canada already has. If issues of a policy nature arise of the sort that the justice committee might want to turn to, that would be a possible course of action. I really do believe, however, that the recommendations that will be made by the special inquiry will fall within the present mandate of the Correctional Service of Canada.

REQUEST FOR RELOCATION OF MATSQUI INSTITUTION

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In view of the fact that the municipal councils of Abbotsford and Matsqui have unanimously voted to request that the Matsqui institution be moved out of the area and have indicated this by a telegram to the minister that is still awaiting a reply, can the minister advise the House if he will give careful and serious consideration to this particular request made by the councils of those two communities?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I am not prepared to consider moving those institutions. Wherever they are moved to, they remain, and the problems associated with them are problems that Canadians have to face up to and with which the Correctional Service has to deal. I do not see how we solve these problems of incarceration simply by moving an institution, at great expense, from one part of our country to another.

The approach I should like to take is to reduce, as much as possible, the risks to the surrounding community. I do not think that is achieved simply by picking up the problem of one community and making it the problem of another community.

PIPELINES

ALASKA GAS PIPELINE—FINANCING OF PROJECT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. One year ago today—I think it was on a quiet Friday—I asked the Minister, in fact I warned the minister not to approve the pre-build of the Alaska Gas Pipeline as there were not sufficient iron-clad guarantees in place for the financing of the whole line. Last night, one year later, there appeared the following headline in the Toronto Star, "Jittery Bankers Put Alaska Gas Pipeline in Jeopardy". So we are a year down the line and still no further ahead, in spite of the iron-clad guarantees.

What new scheme of iron-clad guarantees does the minister propose to bring forward so that we will have iron-clad assurances and guarantees that will finally get the whole pipeline built from Alaska and that we do not have a permanent pre-build pipeline that just sucks out Canadian gas?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the arrangements and assurances that Canada can provide have been provided under the treaty and under the implementation of the pre-build project. A lot of progress has been made in the last few months. The rest of the issue lands in the hands of the United States authorities, utilities, and producers concerned. A lot of progress has been made in this regard in the last couple of months. An agreement has been reached between the producers and the utilities in the United States as to the financing project and participation by producers in the project. This plan is being proposed now to the banking community and the financial community. Some requests have been or will be made to Congress to make adjustments to allow producers to participate in the project.

These are very encouraging developments. Obviously the financing of the project is still being debated and discussed. We will see how this evolves. There has been significant progress in the last few months. When the President of the United States was here a few months ago, he reiterated the commitment of the United States administration to completion of the project, which will be of great benefit to Canada.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, compared to what the minister told us last year, he just does not look credible on this issue at all. Perhaps I shall have to ask him the question a year from now.

NORMAN WELLS—NATIVE COMMUNITY INTERESTS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Let me ask the minister about another matter with respect to his credibility, Madam Speaker. Today he is meeting with representatives of native and northern people with respect to the Norman Wells Pipeline. In the government's bill on oil and gas in the north, Bill C-48, the minister specifically excludes Imperial Oil's $640 million expansion at Norman Wells. How is he going to tell the native people today that the bill is neutral toward their interests, as he has been telling the committee? What does he propose to tell them that will give them some iron-clad guarantees that there will not be this expansion right over their native land claims?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I have already had a meeting with representatives of the aboriginal peoples this morning and we reviewed this issue. As a matter of fact, as the hon. member knows, some of those representatives would like to suspend or avoid the application of Bill C-48 to themselves.

In effect, by amending Bill C-48 and making sure that Norman Wells does not come under it, we are answering, at least in part, some of their concerns, in that the Norman Wells situation would not be affected by Bill C-48. I explained that to them this morning. I said that the amendments that will be introduced to Bill C-48 will make it quite clear that, as far as the Canada Oil and Gas Act is concerned, Bill C-48 does not affect the agreement under which Norman Wells is operating. The people in the Western Arctic can be assured that nothing is changed by Bill C-48, concerning Norman Wells, at the present time.

Oral Questions

NATIONAL SECURITY

INFORMATION RELATING TO FRANK SALES

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, yesterday outside the House the Solicitor General left the false impression that I have taken secret papers that I was not entitled to and not returned them when requested, in an untrue, crude attempt to divert attention from the real issue, that the government should be declassifying and releasing these old security cases so that everyone can understand the problems involved. My question, therefore, is for the Prime Minister who should have knowledge of this case because it first appeared in public print in Toronto newspapers in 1979, and has been repeated elsewhere since.

Could the Prime Minister inform the House why all of the information in the government's hands concerning an ex-Department of National Defence employee named Frank Sales, who now, I believe, lives in Victoria, B.C., who allegedly admitted giving Canadian secret information to the Soviets from both our Moscow embassy and our Tel Aviv embassy, who was never prosecuted but was later rewarded with a government pension—why all that information and all those files should not now be released in full?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I will look into the matter and see if I can make any statement on it to the House.

LEAK TO TORONTO STAR NEWSPAPER

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question, then, is to the Solicitor General, if the Prime Minister does not want to sully his hands with these matters.

Why would the Solicitor General go outside the House yesterday afternoon and make allegations that if I had any information whatsoever about what I called an "inspired leak" to the Toronto Star of two weeks ago, about certain allegations concerning ex-Ambassador Watkins, why I would not make those representations to him in private, give that information to him in private, when yesterday afternoon, five minutes before he went out to the press and said that, I did just exactly that in this House, in that corner of the House?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I was not referring to the subject we talked about in that corner of the House. I was referring to the fact that there are some materials missing from the records of the ministry and the RCMP. They were shown as having been given to the minister's suite, and there is no record that exists in our files showing them as having been returned.

● (1140)

I was not talking about documents that a minister either generates in his own office and puts "secret" on them or about those he receives from one of his colleagues. I was referring to official secret and top secret documents generated within the government. If the hon. member will simply indicate that he does not have such documents, or copies of such documents, that will be the end of it.

Mr. Trudeau: Go ahead.

EXPLANATION FOR MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, what I was referring to in my second supplementary question to the Solicitor General was an allegation that he made outside of the House yesterday, namely, that if I had information about what I called the inspired leak to the Toronto Star two weeks ago, which was published in the Friday and Saturday editions, that I should have the courage to tell him privately what that information was when he knew full well five minutes before he went outside of the House to say that I had given him exactly that information. What is the explanation for what I consider a very terrible breach of confidence on the part of the Solicitor General to that allegation?

Mr. Trudeau: Do you have the documents or not?

Mr. Clark: Have you sought them?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I invited the hon. member to make a statement on a very important matter touching secret and top secret documents. In so far as our discussion in the corner was concerned, he can make his statements about what took place. We did discuss that subject but I am not satisfied that we got to the bottom of it.

Mr. Clark: Have you sought them?

FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT

GOVERNMENT GRANT TO CANADIAN OLYMPIC ASSOCIATION

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the parliamentary secretary to the minister responsible for fitness and amateur sport. Yesterday the government announced that the Canadian Olympic Association received some $1.2 million in compensation for losses resulting from the boycott of the 1980 Summer Olympics in Moscow. Could the parliamentary secretary indicate to the House how the $1.2 million was arrived at, if he has that information, and does that amount cover the so-called costs incurred by the Canadian Olympic Association?

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, the hon. member knows that the Canadian Olympic Association is in a unique position in that it chooses the athletes to go to the Olympics. Also, the Canadian Olympic Association voluntarily chose to carry out the boycott of the Olympic Games in 1980 on Canada's behalf.

As to the way the amount was arrived at, we calculated that the Canadian Olympic Association would have raised $1.2 million from private sources had the athletes been able to attend the Olympics, and the government, through this department, decided to compensate them for that. I might point out that in view of the fact the hon. member represents a farming community, this coincided with the $81 million that we provided to the farmers who suffered losses incurred by the situation in Afghanistan.

Mr. Murta: Madam Speaker, I hope the Canadian Olympic Association is more satisfied with the $1.2 million than the farmers are with the $81 million, because in effect the farmers are being shortchanged by some $20 million in terms of the amount of money they should have received.

Mr. Pepin: You said before that $72 million would be good enough.

DATE OF PAYMENT

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the parliamentary secretary. Can he indicate when that money will be handed over to the Olympic committee? Could the parliamentary secretary also tell us what the $1.2 million will be used for?

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, we would hope that members of the Canadian Olympic Association will disburse this money to the athletes as they see fit, but it will surely go to the training of many of our athletes who are preparing now for the next Olympic Games. This money will be put into their hands in a matter of days.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION TO COVER INTERPROVINCIAL WATERWAYS

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. When the Canada Water Act was passed in the early 1970s it was with the understanding that the act would cover environmental problems in the Ottawa River basin. But such measures have never materialized. The minister informed me recently that no such federal legislative authority gives his department jurisdiction over these interprovincial waterways.

Because of the great importance of the Ottawa River basin to both eastern Ontario and western Quebec, is it the intention of the Minister of the Environment to bring in legislation that will provide jurisdictional authority to enable the federal government to address environmental matters with relation to important interprovincial waterways such as the Ottawa River?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, we do have legislation under review and we are considering legislative initiatives to strengthen and clarify the mandate of the Department of the Environment. I would be happy to look at the very interesting suggestion which the hon. member has made as we undertake that review.

FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT

DECISION RESPECTING GRANT TO CANADIAN OLYMPIC ASSOCIATION

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Madam Speaker, my question is for the parliamentary secretary to the minister responsible for fitness and amateur sport. Can he advise the House who made the decision on the $1.2 million which is to be handed over to the Canadian Olympic Association?

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that we did not have all the money we would have had had we had Loto Canada at our disposal—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp: Are you promoting gambling?

Mr. Parent: —the decision to give the $1.2 million to the Canadian Olympic Association was made by the minister in consultation with other members of the cabinet and his other advisers.

USE TO BE MADE OF GRANT

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Madam Speaker, I am surprised, and I say through you to the parliamentary secretary, and to the Prime Minister if he is listening, that here is a perfect example of giving $1.2 million to 12 or 14 people who will have cocktail parties across the country, and yet a mass participation, such as the Western Canada Games which is requesting $166,000, has been refused by this particular cabinet.

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, I say to the hon. member that members of the Canadian Olympic Association are held in higher esteem by this side of the House than by either the hon. member or his party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Parent: I would say that members of the Canadian Olympic Association have, through the years, served this country, and the athletes of Canada well, and I am sure they will be able to use this money for Canadian athletes to better our already good performances, in future Olympics.

PARLIAMENTARY REFORM

ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMITTEE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It concerns the Prime Minister's speech to the Liberal party in Manitoba. On June 3, 1981, in Winnipeg, he said:

> We've announced that a Parliamentary Committee will be established to study and make recommendations on how to make the Senate and House of Commons more effective—

No announcement has been made in the House of Commons that I am aware of. Is it the intention of the government to establish such a committee? Does the government have in mind a parliamentary task force in the sense that we have experienced task forces thus far?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the matter was announced as part of the government's program in the Speech from the Throne and I want to remind the hon. member of that. We intend to carry forth with that idea in the way it was expressed in the Speech from the Throne.

● (1150)

INTER-PARTY CONSULTATIONS

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I thank the Prime Minister for that answer. This will involve the preparation of terms of reference for that task force or group, as well as representation. Could I have the undertaking of the Prime Minister that before terms of reference are placed on the Order Paper there will be an opportunity for consultation, with input from the opposition parties on those terms of reference, the composition, and number of members of Parliament who would be involved in such a task force?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I would not want the hon. member to think that a task force is necessarily the way in which it would be set up, but I think his suggestion about previous consultation is a most excellent one, and I think it would correspond to the wishes of the government to make sure that any reforms of this House or in the other place should at least begin with a decision to consult on the scope of that work and the general orientation. I will make sure the hon. member is consulted as well as the House leader of the NDP about such a committee, either through the House leader on this side or directly by officials who will be working with the minister.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INCARCERATION OF CANADIANS IN PERU—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General.

As the minister knows, over 30 Canadians are being held prisoners in Peru. Many of them are still waiting for their trial after more than a year. A number of those prisoners have declared that they were interrogated and sometimes beaten up and mistreated by the Peruvian police in the presence of RCMP officers. Could the minister say precisely what is the policy of his department with respect to the role played by the RCMP during such interrogations by foreign police officers? Does the minister also intend to order an inquiry concerning the statements made by, in this specific case, Canadian prisoners in Peru?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I would say to the hon. member that I do not need an inquiry into this case because I have already questioned the Royal Canadian Mounted Police about this, and I can deny categorically that RCMP agents were present during the incidents described by the hon. member.

[English]

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I trust the minister will be prepared to release to the House the full details of these inquiries. A number of these same Canadian prisoners who are presently languishing in prison in Peru have stated they were approached by agents of the RCMP in Peru, after their arrest, and urged by them to sign prepared written confessions. Will the minister explain just exactly what the relationship is between the RCMP and local police forces in Bolivia, Chile and Peru, and specifically why the RCMP is apparently involved in attempting to extract written confessions from Canadian prisoners in Peru?

[Translation]

Mr. Kaplan: Madam Speaker, again I categorically deny that the RCMP have brought such pressures to bear on Canadians in Latin America. I should like to say to the hon. member, because I believe it is true, that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police co-operate in foreign countries with police officers of other countries to fight against drugs. That is being done mostly in Latin America which, generally speaking, we consider as a major source of the illegal drugs entering Canada.

COMMUNICATIONS

TELEVISION PROGRAMMING FOR CHILDREN

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, with advancing technology allowing the proliferation of channels, there is a danger of further decreasing the ratio of the few existing child-oriented TV programs. Would the Secretary of State and Minister of Communications voice the recommendations of the Commission of the Year of the Child that priority be given, if necessary, to creating a special channel on a national network to provide children with programs which would aid their education, expose them to new cultures, provide appropriate entertainment, and so fill a vacuum that exists in the broadcast spectrum relating to young people?

Hon. Francis Fox (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member's suggestion is an excellent one. I would like to tell him that there is a children's social programming service operating on some 15 cable systems at the present time. It is the Galaxy system which is a four-hour per day, seven-day a week service provided to the Canadian satellite network by the Ontario education and communications authorities. In February of this year the CRTC heard an application by CSN for a specialized channel which would have included Galaxy. This request was turned down because the CRTC felt there were a number of policy issues associated with that request that have to be examined further. However, in the denial the CRTC did encourage further applications along the lines of the Galaxy proposal.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT MINISTER VISIT RESTIGOUCHE RESERVE IN QUEBEC

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development relating to a motion under Standing Order 43 raised earlier by the hon. member for Cariboo-Chilcotin, having to do with a very difficult situation at the Restigouche Reserve.

The minister will know there has been a representation to the Prime Minister by at least the president of the Union of New Brunswick Indians, and probably other native groups, requesting that the minister visit the Restigouche Reserve. Would the minister indicate if he has any plans to visit, either personally, or have senior officials of his department visit the reserve today or this weekend? While he is answering I wonder whether he could also tell us if there were any members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police involved in any way in the incidents that began last week at the Restigouche Reserve, and would he outline to us the extent of the federal presence now in monitoring the situation existing at that reserve?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, in answer to the Leader of the Opposition I would say that as of very, very recently the Quebec region of my department has been in touch with the Quebec government requesting in effect the adoption of a mediating role, and requesting that government to sit down with the Indian leadership at Restigouche to see if a solution can be worked out.

In a few minutes I will be meeting with Sykes Powderface of the NIB. He was endeavouring to see me this morning but I was tied up at another meeting. We will endeavour to see if there is anything further that I or my department might be able to do to resolve this really very unfortunate situation.

May I say as far as the RCMP are concerned that I have examined the situation. The RCMP were not directly involved. This was mainly an operation, as the Leader of the Opposition perhaps knows, of the QPP. There were some officers adopting a watchdog role, if you like. There were some RCMP officers on the fringes, so to speak, especially on the New Brunswick side, but as far as I am aware at the moment, they did not get involved directly.

NATIONAL SECURITY

COMPOSITION OF 1946 COMMITTEE

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General who has of late been interested in documents. He will know that as far back as 1945 and 1946 there was a committee set up by the then Privy Council to examine the problems arising out of the Gouzenko affair. I am wondering whether he is able to indicate the composition of that committee and whether it kept records of its meetings.

[Translation]

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I should like to take note of that question. I will answer at the earliest opportunity.

[English]

AVAILABILITY OF COMMITTEE'S RECORDS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, this was a committee of officials to advise the government of the day on matters arising out of the Gouzenko revelations. While the minister is doing that, I wonder if he would find out whether records of these meetings were kept and are intact, and why those records are not now available for public view?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I will try to answer that question, but I should take the occasion to point out that until recently there was no systematic recording system of documents within the Privy Council Office or of meetings at the level the hon. member suggests, so it may well be that minutes were kept of the work of this committee which met back in 1946 and 1947, about which the hon. member is asking, with no record having been kept of the fact that there were minutes.

I will look and try to find the minutes. However, it will be very difficult to know whether minutes ever existed because of the way records were kept at that time. Nowadays if a document is there or not there, there is a record of its having been generated and of its being in existence. From what I have learned so far, there was no similar type of recording system back in the 1940s. I will do the best I can on that.

THE ECONOMY

RATES CHARGED FOR CONSUMER LOANS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask an economic question and direct it to the Minister of Finance. I welcome him back from the OECD. I want to speak to him about the policy of his government of tacitly accepting usurious interest rates.

I want to give an explanation. This morning I checked with chartered banks and consumer finance companies in Ottawa and found that the lending rate of the chartered banks now is about 22 per cent to their better customers and 21 per cent on fully secured loans, whereas the consumer finance companies lend money at 24 per cent. It appears that the government is involved in a policy at Avco and Household Finance interest rates but with nothing beneficial to consumers.

In view of the fact that the minister has approached the chartered banks with respect to home mortgage forbearance, I would like to ask him whether, with respect to the consumers of Canada, who are under great stress regarding repayment of loans at the present rates, he is prepared to intercede and use his good offices on their behalf as opposed to only on behalf of the mortgage holders of this country.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am glad the opposition has returned to a discussion of the economy. I wondered whether the hon. member would get to that today.

I am ready to tell the hon. member that the Canadian banks have already provided an assurance not only to assist mortgage holders—or at least to be considerate of their need of homes, in the present circumstances—but also to assist farmers and small business. These three groups were the subjects of my discussions with the chartered banks. I already have under consideration whether it is desirable to seek similar assurances from other institutions in the country, and I will therefore give consideration to the hon. member's suggestion.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, I appreciate the consideration the minister will give because there does not seem to be any possibility that interest rates will be going down for a very substantial period of time.

POSITION OF MINISTER OF INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who is involved very intimately with the economic development committee of the cabinet and who should be one of the leading spokesmen with respect to policy in this country.

I want to quote a statement made by the minister on October 23, 1979, in the House of Commons. The quotation is to be found at page 510 of Hansard. The minister said, and I quote:

> —government bear the responsibility for the damage these interest rate increases are doing and will do to the economy, particularly to small business, the farmer and the consumer.

The minister has now been in his portfolio for a year and a half. He told Morton Shulman that any time interest rates went over 14 per cent he would resign. Has the minister put forward any policies with respect to reducing interest rates, or is the minister now going to resign after not being able to have any weight at all?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, I do not think my hon. friend has correctly stated what transpired in the interview in question. In any event, there was a considerable period after this government came to office when interest rates declined and when they remained behind those in the United States. In addition to that this government has taken substantial action on this issue, and I make particular reference to the extension of the small business development bond program.

Finally, when the Canadian people look at the damage which was done to the economy and would have been done to the economy if my hon. friends had stayed in office, I think they will be very pleased to see the continuation of the present government compared with the mess on the other side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to advise the parliamentary secretary that fitness and amateur sport is receiving $32 million from lotteries this year—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 2,171, 2,220, 2,305 and 2,306.

[Text]

TRADE COMMISSIONERS

Question No. 2,171—Mr. Herbert:

1. Are any trade delegates in the employ of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and, if so (a) how many (b) how many are based in Canada and which countries did they visit in the last year?

2. Are Canadian businessmen invited to join the delegates when they travel and, if so, what means are employed to ensure appropriate knowledge of such trips?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of State (Trade)): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned:

1. Yes.

(a) Two hundred and twenty-nine trade commissioners and 166 commercial officers posted in 67 countries.

(b) In addition, 81 trade commissioners presently posted in Canada, many of whom will have travelled outside of Canada including 67 countries where we maintain posts.

2. Canadian businessmen frequently visit foreign markets with the support of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce under various programs for participation in fairs, missions and export market studies. When participating in fairs and missions, they are usually accompanied by representatives of the department. In all cases, our officers at the posts provide assistance. Businessmen are informed of the various programs in which they can participate through contact with the department's regional offices and business information centres across the country and branches in Ottawa, contact with provincial trade and industry departments, and direct advertising.

CBC—PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE ANNUAL MEETING

Question No. 2,220—Mr. Cossitt:

1. (a) Did a CBC employee identify himself as a member of the staff of CBC Radio and approach a delegate or alternate from Leeds-Grenville at the recent Progressive Conservative annual meeting and inform the person that he looked unhappy and did he ask him why (b) did the delegate or alternate reply that he was very happy and did the CBC employee state to the delegate or alternate "Don't you think this is the worst organized convention you have ever seen?" (c) did the delegate or alternate advise the CBC employee that he disagreed with him entirely and, following this statement, did the CBC employee express disgust and depart elsewhere?

2. Is it the policy of CBC to instruct or to allow employees to ask questions designed to provoke statements from members of other political parties that would damage such parties and, if so, what are all the reasons?

Mr. Peter Stollery (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister of Communications):

I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. The CBC has no way of identifying which, if any, of its employees had the conversation cited in the question.

2. If the conversation quoted in part 1 of the question did take place, the CBC would not condone the expression of a personal opinion of that kind by one of its on-duty employees. However, in the context of an interview, it is in the nature of interviewing for broadcast or print that a reporter will try to elicit as much information as he can from his interviewee, and in the course of such interviews it is possible that the interviewee will volunteer statements that others might consider damaging to their cause or group. In this latter context, CBC news policy would not be contravened.

CBC—MR. MARK STAROWICZ

Question No. 2,305—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is Mr. Mark Starowicz employed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and, if so (a) what is his position (b) does he have any control or authority of any kind over the content of CBC national news broadcasts or telecasts and, if so, what are the details (c) has he ever received security clearance and, if so (i) what are the details (ii) by whom was the clearance given (d) at any time was his security clearance in question and, if so, what are all the details?

2. (a) Did Mr. Al Johnson, president of the CBC, play any part in the appointment of Mr. Starowicz to his present position and, if so, what are the details (b) what are the names of all persons who were involved in this appointment?

Order Paper Questions

Mr. Peter Stollery (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister of Communications):

I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. Yes.

(a) Executive producer, TV Current Affairs.

(b) Mark Starowicz is involved with the development of the new program which will follow "The National" after its move to 10 p.m. in September, 1981. He is not connected with newscasts.

(c) Not applicable.

2. It has not been customary to require the CBC to provide such details of its internal management and administration as those referred to in the question. The background to this custom is explained in the answer to question No. 2,530, November 6, 1975.

CBC—PARLIAMENTARY LIAISON OFFICER

Question No. 2,306—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Does the CBC maintain a parliamentary liaison officer in Ottawa and, if so, what is the (a) person's name (b) annual salary and all costs involved with maintaining this officer?

2. With reference to the answers to various Order Paper questions concerning the CBC which include the phrase "It has not been customary to require the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to provide such details of its internal management and administration . . .", for what reason does the CBC maintain a parliamentary liaison officer if it is not prepared to make full disclosure of its operations to Parliament?

Mr. Peter Stollery (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister of Communications):

I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. (a) The CBC maintains a parliamentary services section whose members co-ordinate the CBC's day-to-day relationship with Parliament.

(b) With regard to salaries and costs, see the reply to parts (a) and (b) of question No. 2,530, November 6, 1975.

2. The CBC does disclose information about its operations, with the exception of certain categories of information relating to its internal management and administration. See the reply to parts (a) and (b) of question No. 2,530, November 6, 1975.

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

EXCISE TAX ACT AND EXCISE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Yvon Pinard (for the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-57, to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to provide for a revenue tax in respect of petroleum and gas, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Knowles: Is there no minister to speak on this bill?

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There was an arrangement whereby the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) would be the lead speaker followed by someone from the New Democratic Party, and the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Evans) would be here this afternoon to respond on behalf of the government.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is right.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, I wish to confirm what has been told to us by the parliamentary secretary to the government House leader. The minister has excused himself. He is unavoidably absent today because he is on other business. The parliamentary secretary will be responding for the government at this stage.

We are at the last stage of a very infamous and, I would say, contemptuous move by this government regarding this particular bill. On the initial debate we had about half a day on a Friday so that the bill could get into committee, with the understanding that there would be witnesses and a full examination, but there was a deadline. More witnesses appeared than had been forecast.

The net result was that the committee had very little negotiating and discussing of the proposed amendments, as we did with respect to many other important bills. The deadline resulted in almost a guillotine falling on the amendments to the clauses as they were considered in the committee. I am not faulting the chairman of the committee in any way. It was just a matter of logistics. There was no time to put or consider any amendments in the committee. There was no time for negotiating any amendments or developing negotiating positions with regard to some very contentious matters contained in this bill.

• (1210)

The net result is that the government shut its eyes to almost all questions of amendment except with regard to a ceiling on advertising in newspapers and inserts. However, that was a minor point, albeit very important to the weekly newspapers. There was very little else of any consequence. It dealt a little with distributors of cosmetic products, shifted the incidence of the excise tax, but for the rest of it the government's reaction has been entirely negative. Therefore, by mutual consent it would almost appear, the New Democratic Party and ourselves filed some 135 amendments, many of them duplicates, as provided for by the rules. The Chair reduced this number to 49 possible amendments for a vote, but realistically 35 votes.

In the interest of sanity with regard to voting, it was agreed that an effort would be made to concentrate votes on the more important amendments. As a result, last night we had 12 votes. The House does not often vote that long but 12 votes plus a number of verbal votes in just over two hours is a pretty good record. If hon. members feel they were abused in any way last night, I would remind them that when the Income Tax Act was amended in 1970 we voted from eight o'clock in the evening until 2.30 in the morning in order to get through a much more voluminous act. Those things happen from time to time.

Having finished that anecdotal background I want to reiterate that we are today in the closing stages of a black chapter as far as discussion of very important matters is concerned. The government had no business introducing closure under Standing Order 75C as it did. We had only discussed the report stage in a general way for two ordinary days and one short day. Now we are coming down to discussing individual amendments. Somehow somebody, maybe the government House leader—in his usual precipitate way he likes to see debates of one day for any and all bills, with one speaker from each party; that has been his predilection from the time he landed in this House—but somebody panicked over there. We would have made essentially the same type of progress but with an opportunity to discuss a matter which is before the courts this week, that is the legality of the petroleum and gas revenue tax and whether it is a direct infringement upon provincially-owned property. We would have been able to explore in much greater detail the implications of the 30 cents a thousand cubic feet excise tax on natural gas, including export gas.

The government does not get away with the sham of saying: "Oh, no, we are not putting on an export tax on natural gas". They put it on for everybody. And for those unreconstructed Liberals and undeluded Canadians bemused and befuddled by the government's programs during the 1980 election, with their so-called Canadian price and attacks on the 18-cent excise tax proposed by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) when he was minister of finance, that tax did not apply to home heating fuel, including natural gas. There was a refundable portion for farmers.

We have heard the tripe which has come forward from the government benches in that regard. Deliberate misrepresentation, Mr. Speaker, in and out of this House. The refunds due to fishermen: again, misrepresentation in and out of this House. There was the total refusal to refer to the rebate for lower income families, including all those senior citizens who moaned on television: "Oh, I will not be able to go and see my children or grandchildren any more". Nonsense! This bill imposes a tax of 30 cents a thousand cubic feet on natural gas, an 8 per cent tax on revenues from both petroleum and natural gas, and the indexing of a tax on liquor, wine, beer and tobacco which is a self-generating snowball that shows the government's vested interest in increasing inflation.

That is the record and the policy of this government with regard to the public and petroleum prices. Not only has there been an increase in the cost of a gallon of gasoline of 60 cents in a very short time, far in excess of what had been proposed—

Mr. Kelly: Wrong, wrong.

Mr. Lambert: —but more increases are coming.

Mr. Kelly: You are wrong.

Mr. Lambert: The hon. member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson), who is not in his seat, is hollering.

An hon. Member: That is Scarborough Centre (Mr. Kelly).

Mr. Lambert: On the prices we are totally right. They are far in excess of what anyone ever anticipated and are the result of the excesses of this government.

We have a so-called Canadianization contribution of $1 a barrel to change Petrofina to Petro-Canada. Now we see who is going to line their pockets and who have lined their pockets with this deal, which has not produced one additional barrel of petroleum for Canada. This has caused tremendous equity losses by Canadian oil companies and the Canadian oil industry at large. The neophytes and the socialistic bureaucrats in Ottawa are behind the program on the grab on funds. They have an absolute desire and passion to control the petroleum industry and resources of Canada, notwithstanding the fact that aside from the expropriation of the Canada lands, the federal government does not have one iota of interest in those natural resources.

• (1220)

We are being asked, without any debate yesterday, about the petroleum and gas revenue tax and how it will affect the development of the Canadian industry. It is a straightforward revenue grab. If we look at the amount of money which has fallen into the federal coffers since December, 1979, if we look at the percentage of every dollar obtained from the price of a barrel of Canadian crude and from an equivalent measure of natural gas, we will see who has benefited from the increases in prices. It is not the petroleum companies; it is not the producing provinces. It is the Government of Canada that has discovered a herd of well-producing milk cows to which it wants to attach every teat and every grip it can to cover its ineptitudes in other programs, such as the idiotic continuation of depending upon foreign oil and paying subsidies of billions of dollars per year, which will increase.

There is stabilization now because the price has not risen, but the government is paying for junk from Mexico. Canadian refineries are refusing to accept it. I am not able to describe it because it is not polite to use such language in the House. It is being sloughed off on the Canadian government. It is the same situation as in 1973 when the former minister of supply and services, Mr. Goyer, paid $33 for some spot oil in some panic buying. The stuff had been going around the world for a long time because of its high sulphur content. No one would buy it, except the ducks and drakes in the Canadian government. Eventually it was sloughed off at a tremendous loss to Canadian taxpayers.

These are the same people who are now buying from Mexico and trying to shove it down the throats of Canadian refiners who are saying, "No thanks, it is not fit to be refined". This is the way the brains of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources run the Canadian oil industry. They should know better. They cannot tell the difference between one grade and another at the pump, yet they want to control the Canadian petroleum industry. They want to fatten up Petro-Canada.

Petro-Canada has distinguished itself by the number of employees it has handled and by participating in the race to see who will have the highest building in Calgary. This race is at a cost of millions and millions of dollars, all to be paid for by you-know-who—the poor Canadian taxpayer. It will be well over $50 million for an office tower at the same time as $1.46 billion for Petrofina, which is at least half a billion too much.

Members opposite are handling government funds, and there is no control. The poor people of central Canada bought themselves a real pickle when they bought that deal. To think that the government of Ontario lines up behind it. What a miserable delusion! Boy, they will really have to skate to get out of that mess!

I do not want to review everything in this bill; some of my colleagues will deal with particular subjects.

[Translation]

I would like to see this morning all the members from Quebec call the editors of their weekly newspapers to justify their vote on amendment No. 20 last night. These editors are having a convention, and they know what they had suggested to the government. Some of them have privately opposed the provisions of Bill C-57 concerning newspapers and advertising content. Well, we supported, yesterday evening, amendment No. 20 of the New Democratic Party, because it was nearly identical with our own.

We had shared the amendments among us, and naturally, the members opposite voted in their usual sheep-like manner without asking themselves what they were doing, but now they will see what will happen. The hon. member for Willowdale. (Mr. Peterson) should be interested in the use of alcohol as fuel and the possibility of experimenting with alcohol manufactured from vegetable products without having to provide a security of $5,000 or $25,000, as well as temporary licenses which can be withdrawn. Under the terms of its program, the government seems to be afraid of stills and the possibility that they could be used to manufacture spirits rather than alcohol to be used as fuel. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, the government will encourage the illicit manufacture of spirits for drinking purposes if it continues to increase its taxes in this way! We shall also see tobacco and cigarette smuggling like there was after the war when an excessive tax was levied on tobacco. There is some smuggling going on. It begins to be interesting when you see what it costs in the liquor stores. Of course, provincial governments follow suit. Then, in a year or so they will wonder why they have problems apart from illicit stills and tobacco and cigarette smuggling. No, Mr. Speaker, this is an effort on the part of the government to squeeze out every available penny. There is an increase in the airport tax. There are tax increases everywhere in this bill. But hon. members opposite do not protest. Nothing is said over there to oppose excise tax increases provided in Bill C-57.

• (1230)

[English]

It is amazing how the Canadian public has become inured to the idea of indexation of taxes. In the question of this additional tax on alcohol and tobacco the Minister of Finance is taking a mere $60 million. Has there been one word of protest from the Canadian public? No. I suppose they are too busy consuming it. It is amazing.

The administration says that it needs the money. Why? Because it has put in place programs and money is needed to carry them out. Who on earth says you put programs in place first and then scramble about to get more money? You spend money when you have it, not before. It is like "Travel now and pay later". Or it is like "Gamble now and pay later". If you tell the public the hard facts of life, as my colleague from Newfoundland did when he was minister of finance, people object. They have been lulled into living in a clouded cuckoo-land, the land of the lotus-eater, if you want to use another metaphor. They have been lulled by the bread and circuses put forward by the administration since 1968. All we get is more bread and more circuses.

What do hon. members think a subsidy on fuel oil and gasoline is? It is a straight giveaway. It is jam an inch thick. We are the only people who have increased our consumption of gasoline and oil. Our cousins to the south, who are much more mechanized than we are and who we thought were more profligate with gas and oil, have reduced their consumption by 20 per cent. Instead of our doing that we buy their Cadillacs and big cars and see how quickly we can burn the rubber. They are muscle cars. Every young guy and woman wants to have a Corvette or a Trans-Am. Why shouldn't they? They are encouraged by subsidized gasoline prices. It is too much to pay 18 cents a gallon more so you eliminate the subsidy as far as our general revenues are concerned. But since that subsidy has been put in place we have paid well over $20 billion as a charge on the public purse. How was the first part achieved? By placing an export tax on oil and petroleum products shipped from Alberta and Saskatchewan to the United States.

In the mid-1970s it was interesting to see the government taking with one hand and giving with the other. It took money from the Canadian petroleum industry and the producing provinces and gave it to the OPEC countries. If man could devise a more witless policy I would like to see him try. We are now paying for that and this is why it is relevant to this bill.

These are the programs for which the government says it needs more money. It almost makes you want to break down and cry when you see the mismanagement, the misrepresentation and the befuddlement of the Canadian public and the fact that they stand by and clap. They do not know when the knife has gone into their backs or when the purse has been cut from under their arm by this government. This bill is a perfect embodiment of fulfilling that type of program. There will be billions of dollars spent per annum as a result of this bill. Who will pay? The dear old unsuspecting Canadian public who have been befuddled, beguiled and lied to.

Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche):

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-57, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to provide for a revenue tax in respect of petroleum and natural gas, be not now read a third time but be referred back to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs for the reconsideration of Sections 43 to 47 inclusive and Sections 60 to 117 inclusive respecting the excise tax on natural gas and the petroleum and gas revenue tax, for possible amendment and report back to this House.

● (1240)

I do not want to take any further time because unfortunately there is a guillotine which falls at five o'clock. Is it private members' hour today?

Mr. Nystrom: Yes.

Mr. Lambert: They even steal that, under the guillotine. Therefore, under those circumstances I will curtail my remarks immediately. I trust that hon. members will pay attention to those areas which were not debated hitherto in this House, and that they should be persuaded as to our amendment, because that part of it certainly requires another good, long look.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am quite pleased to have the opportunity this afternoon to rise to discuss the points included within Bill C-57. Unfortunately, it is for the last time. I must say that I will be looking forward with a great deal of pleasure to the response of the Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance (Mr. Evans) later this afternoon as he replies to the points raised by the previous hon. member and myself.

First of all, I want to indicate that this bill is clearly the work of a very desperate government, a government which is desperate to acquire additional funds from just about any source possible. One is hesitant to walk slowly about Parliament Hill this day for fear that a tax will be slapped on one's back in some way or another. However, it is certainly the reflection of an insensitive government and a government which is inconsiderate to the point of arrogance.

When I say that the government is insensitive, it must be recognized that we have been discussing 135 amendments over the last number of days. I think it begs the question, why would anyone feel motivated to put 135 amendments before the House I think the short response to that inquiry would clearly indicate that this has been an ill-conceived piece of legislation, that adequate thought, discussion and reflection did not go into the preparation of this bill. It is a sloppy bill. It is a careless bill. It is really a bureaucratic statement reflecting the vocabulary, and the views of a heartless bureaucracy.

When one looks at the terms which have been used in the last number of days in discussing Bill C-57, one notices that a great deal of the critical vocabulary lacks a human element. The humanity of Bill C-57 has not really been considered. We use terms such as "excise tax," "PGRTs", "CPIs", "marginal manufacturing tax," "indexation" and so on. But how often do we ask ourselves, how will this bill impact on Canadian individuals, on Canadians per se?

At the outset, I want to congratulate the chairman of the finance committee, who saw fit to invite a whole number of witnesses to the committee to discuss and react to the proposals set forth in Bill C-57. In the committee we held 23 different sittings and listened to briefs from the city of Medicine Hat, from the Hobbema Four Indian Band, from the Canadian daily newspaper publishers, the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada, the Brewers Association of Canada, Dome Petroleum and many more. We also received countless written briefs indicating the concerns of individual Canadians and different organizations as to the proposals encompassed in Bill C-57.

What did we do with all of these witnesses? How did the government react to their concerns and proposals? I might add that these were not individuals or organizations or agencies attempting to avoid legitimate tax. These were voices from Canadian society, coming forward in the finance committee to say "This is an error. Have you considered the ramifications of this particular legislation?" Indeed, it became clear in those discussions that we had not, and that the government per se had overlooked a number of critical areas.

Therefore, the 135 amendments were an effort on behalf of the Progressive Conservative Party and the New Democratic Party to meet the concerns of and react to the issues raised by these countless individuals, organizations and agencies before the finance committee. They reflect the concerns of the oil and gas industry. The small business communities spoke out loudly about their concerns regarding the marginal manufacturing tax. The educational and scientific communities spoke out regarding their concerns on the importation of research facilities and appliances. The small independent newspapers of Canada spoke out regarding a number of their concerns relating to Bill C-57, as did the handicapped of Canada, the artistic community in Canada, the construction industry of Canada, wineries, distilleries, breweries and many more.

It is unfortunate that we have had to use this particular procedure to bring to the attention of Canadians the fact that this is an ill-conceived bill. It will be a slap in the face to many Canadian individuals and groups. I cannot believe for a moment that Bill C-57 was discussed in the Liberal caucus. I cannot for a moment believe that there was a thorough airing of Bill C-57 with Liberal backbenchers, and even within the Liberal cabinet, because if there had been, how could the members of the Liberal party impose a 9 per cent sales tax on the disabled people of Canada, those hundreds of thousands of Canadians who fight for their lives every day of the year and who experience discrimination in a variety of ways? Yet here is a gesture from a government which is obviously insensitive to disabled Canadians.

Why do I say that? Recently, the government decided to pay some attention to the disabled of Canada. This is the International Year of the Disabled and the government has set aside $1 million to assist disabled Canadians across Canada. One million dollars were to be distributed to the disabled of Canada. The provinces responded as well. Does Your Honour know where the leadership came from? It came from the provinces, not from the federal Government of Canada. In the province of British Columbia alone there have been requests from the disabled of that province in excess of $12 million. The federal government saw fit to spread $1 million across the entire country. Surely, the federal government could have indicated its concern for the disabled of Canada in this very special year by at least matching the grants of the individual provinces which are prepared to contribute. Yet a paltry $1 million is to be spread across nearly 25 million Canadians to assist and recognize the plight of the disabled.

An hon. Member: Where is the tax on the disabled?

Mr. Riis: The tax on the disabled is what I want to refer to in this bill. This bill says that if someone has a leg brace on one's ankle or foot, or if one has a deformed or malfunctioning ankle or foot, one is not subject to the 9 per cent sales tax on that brace. But if you require a brace anywhere else on your body, the neck, back, thigh, elbow, knee, you are going to pay a 9 per cent sales tax. You will be taxed on what the government presumably considers a luxury item.

• (1250)

Mr. Speaker, the disabled of Canada wear braces on their necks, backs, elbows and so on, and they do not consider them luxury items. What is the difference between an ankle brace and a hip brace? Yet the goverment intends to impose a 9 per cent tax on braces other than for the foot or ankle. That is meaningless and silly, Mr. Speaker. It is obviously an oversight in the legislation but it was brought to the attention of the minister by both parties on this side of the House. It is obviously a clerical error. In this Year of the Disabled, surely such an oversight could be corrected.

The Liberal party voted against that amendment, however, and I know the reason was that they did not know what they were voting on. Surely hon. members opposite should not vote against an amendment designed to treat fairly people who have disabilities in a part of the body other than the ankle. Yet they did, Mr. Speaker, and that is why I say this is a sloppy piece of legislation. Hon. members opposite have not considered the implications of it carefully enough or perhaps not at all.

I will give another example which is perhaps a little less problematic when one considers the disabled. I refer to the artists of Canada. I am sure that as a regular part of our lives all of us visit art galleries and are concerned about supporting and assisting the art community of Canada. Just the other day the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) said in the House that it is important that we encourage the artistic community in Canada and my colleague, the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae), also said that we should be seriously encouraging this community.

It is recognized internationally that works of art should not be taxed, that the artist who creates a sculpture or paints a picture should not be taxed on that item, in an effort to encourage that kind of talent and creativity. It is the kind of thing that will reflect Canada's present past and future and we want to support it.

With this legislation the government will tax artists in Canada who create original prints, such as members of the Eskimo Co-operatives in northern Canada whose prints are considered highly valuable works of art around the world. They are not posters such as are found in Canadian Tire stores or Woolworth's, with pictures of fancy ladies or Elvis Presley or Superman. There is a difference between a Superman poster and an original artist's print, surely. We tax the Elvis Presley and Superman posters, and we should because they are manufactured by the hundreds of thousands. They are not the creation of a particular artist. An artist produces perhaps 20 or 50 prints from his original and the work is supervised by him. Now the government proposes to tax the original print and thus it would not be considered an art form in Canada.

Hon. members opposite voted against an amendment that would exempt the original print, recognizing it, as all other countries do, as a work of art which should not be taxed. The Liberal caucus voted unanimously to tax the artists of Canada who produce original prints. Hon. members opposite smile. It is beyond me, Mr. Speaker, how anyone could consider an original print as a mechanical reproduction and thus taxable. It is a reflection of the carelessness with which the bill has been approached by members opposite and of the insensitivity of the government to the people. It affects thousands of struggling artists. There are very few rich artists in Canada today; they commit themselves and their lives to their profession. Surely we should recognize them and encourage them.

I want to deal now with a matter that is very close to members of this party, Mr. Speaker, and that is the small community newspapers that really reflect the views, the issues and concerns of the communities. They are not part of the national chains that often reflect the point of view of central Canada or large metropolitan areas. With their editorial restrictions and so on, the large chains often reflect a certain ideology. Instead, I am referring to the newspapers in communities of 2,000 or 5,000 people that struggle to make a living. They act as the voice of the community and raise issues of local concern. They advertise for the local entrepreneurs and make people better aware of their business. Surely we should encourage the small independent newspapers. Other countries have all sorts of legislation which recognize the role they play and assures their place as a vibrant expression of the community voice.

In Canada we see the growing monopoly of newspapers and the expression of the community voice being thwarted. This legislation will place a greater burden on those very small and often unprofitable operations in small communities. I appreciate that the government has adjusted the advertising and news ratio from 75 per cent to 80 per cent. That is a small step in the right direction but, as we have pointed out many times, the definition is an arbitrary one. The Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) indicated in the House that it was arbitrarily set at 80 per cent and could be 90 per cent or 100 per cent.

There are two fundamental problems with this approach by the government, Mr. Speaker, that have not been discussed adequately. The content rule discriminates against small independent community newspapers in many ways. It will raise administration and production costs for them proportionately more than it will for the large metropolitan newspapers, many of which have access to computers. The computers help reduce the cost of production, but small community newspapers cannot usually afford such technical innovations.

The large metropolitan newspapers have greater flexibility to adjust their news content. The breadth and diversity of culture in our cities provides proportionately more news material for the dailies than is available to the independent weeklies that are the community voice. The large chains can afford the specialized staff to cover, for example, the much broader range of sporting events.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair until two o'clock p.m.

At 1:00 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, when we rose for the luncheon break I was commenting on the role of small community newspapers and why the government should be doing everything possible to encourage the development of small community newspapers to ensure that we, as a nation, work as hard as possible to avoid the monopolistic type of newspaper reporting that we see emerging in Canada. We should work against the merging of newspapers which will restrict, if you like, the voice of Canada to fewer and fewer newspaper companies. It is in all of our interests to ensure that as much freedom of speech as possible exists in Canada, which is reflected in small community newspapers probably as much as through any other medium.

I mentioned that the large metropolitan newspapers are not quite so worried as the smaller newspapers about the 80 per cent arbitrary figure set for the ratio between advertising and news. The large chains can much more easily afford the news content of the newspapers because of the specialized staff they have. For example, staffs of the larger papers can cover a much broader range of sports events, art exhibits, craft fairs, drama festivals, film and play reviews. Also they are able to provide reports on the latest fashions, business and finance and in depth, specialized analysis of topics in areas such as foreign affairs, science and technology, gardening and so on.

The second major implication of this legislation derives from the distinction drawn by the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) between news and advertising or, as the Minister of State for Finance said, between information and advertising. With interest rates hovering now in the 20 per cent range and the cost of living rising above 12 per cent, some of the best news people can read today in a newspaper advertisement is a flyer informing them of the relatively good buys in meat at the corner store or that winter clothing is being reduced 30 per cent at McAllister and Howard, or that building supplies are reduced for the weekend at a certain building supply company. I suggest that this is the kind of news which the consumer of Canada is interested in hearing about.

I do not mean this in a flippant or casual way. When the Minister of Finance stands up in the House and says that he is fighting inflation by increasing interest rates, by actions which result in decreasing the value of the Canadian dollar, which result in an increase in the cost of living for Canadians, is this the kind of news Canadians want to hear? Wouldn't they rather hear that the Sorrento market is going to be offering substantial sales that weekend for different foods? That is the news Canadians would rather hear. In a highly inflationary environment where there are significant costs associated with acquiring market information, the market's performance is improved and the cost of living for Canadian families is reduced when consumers are better informed about the availability and price of goods in different marketplaces, the location of sales, etc. It may be ironic that a member of the New Democratic Party is defending measures that will improve performance in the marketplace, but, indeed, I have often felt that in the traditional sense of the term, the best friend of the new enterpriser in Canada is the New Democratic Party; the best friend of the free enterpriser.

• (1410)

An hon. Member: That does it.

Mr. Riis: If we look at this from the point of view of Canadian families, they benefit when Canadian small businesses and Canadian newspapers, can reduce the cost of living and save money. We on this side would like to see measures that would strengthen the small newspaper community rather than additional hurdles such as this particular legislation places on those small independent newspapers of Canada. We should go beyond Bill C-57 and consider removing federal excise tax on informational advertising flyers and supplements which are not produced for distribution through newspapers for the same reasons I have articulated earlier.

Enough of community newspapers for the moment, Mr. Speaker. I want to talk for a few moments as a western Canadian member, as a member of the House from that part of Canada who is becoming very, very concerned. Some months back we saw, when the voices of concern in Quebec were growing in volume, the federal government in its wisdom taking a number of steps to recognize that concern of the people in Quebec with their feelings of alienation. Right or wrong, a number of steps were taken, and we see from the results of polls and referenda that in fact the people of Quebec responded to that at least perceived sensitivity by the federal government.

I am talking about a growing feeling of alienation in western Canada. I am not pleased to see or say this, but there is a feeling in western Canada that this particular government is insensitive to the concerns of westerners. Recent polls carried out over the last number of months have indicated very clearly that those westerners who see the federal government as not doing very much for them relative to other areas in Canada are looking more and more favourably at some other political arrangement.

I am not talking separatism. I do not believe in that for a moment and I do not believe many western Canadians do, although 10 per cent do. I would ask members opposite how many people in Quebec would register in a poll as being separatists. I suggest it is not much greater than 10 per cent, so when we talk of only 10 per cent of westerners registering that complaint we are talking of a significant number of people who are concerned about the way Ottawa, this particular federal government, is treating westerners.

What is the federal government doing about this? What kind of gestures or policies is the government implementing to show western Canadians that, indeed, it is sensitive to their concerns, that it recognizes westerners have a special set of concerns in that part of the country and is meeting them?

I do not want to get into a large elaboration of the western development fund that was held up as the gesture by this particular government to westerners, but where is that western development fund and what is it? By this piece of legislation we are debating today, what this federal government is doing is taking $38 billion from western Canada, laundering it here in Ottawa and returning $4 billion. That is the kind of perception, right or wrong, that is emerging in western Canada. From the information I have, I have to articulate that $38 billion is being collected by the taxes we are levying today on natural gas and oil. That $38 billion is to be taken to Ottawa, laundered and sent back through a pork-barrelling system to the extent of $4 billion.

An hon. Member: What's wrong with that?

Mr. Riis: That is the kind of perception western Canadians have. Right at the moment there exists infrastructure for this particular government to assist the west without the politically orientated western development fund. In principle we on this side oppose that kind of approach. Already the infrastructure exists to get money into western projects. I do not have to articulate anything other than, let us say, the DREE program if we are serious about this.

What does the PGRT do? Really, when you look at what the PGRT is, you will clearly see it is a revenue grab by the federal government. It is clearly the imposition of a royalty on a certain energy resource.

One has to ask the question, why is it that the federal government has selected only a restricted number of energy resources to tax? Why is the federal government not taxing hydroelectric power? Is it because of the implications of that move in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec? Why is the federal government not taxing uranium as an energy resource in Canada? Why is the federal government not taxing coal as an energy resource in Canada? These are legitimate questions a member of Parliament would want to ask. Being from western Canada one becomes slightly suspicious when one sees a particular resource that is restricted to perhaps three provinces being taxed and not the other energy resources. That certainly begs the question why. People wonder why there is a growing sense of alienation by westerners.

Mr. Evans: I explained that to you last night.

Mr. Riis: We will be looking forward, as all westerners will, to the answer as to why it is that hydroelectric power is not being taxed while oil and natural gas are. It seems to me that western Canada very, very clearly is being discriminated against.

Members have previously spoken more eloquently than I of the precise result of these taxes being levied. What kind of a government would identify a number of wells, let us call them marginal or stripper wells, and say that because of the policy it is prepared to implement it is going to close down all those wells? And there are thousands of them. I grew up in the Turner Valley oil fields of southern Alberta and I know what a stripper or a marginal well is and the importance of the role those old wells play today in our move toward energy self-sufficiency. Yet under this particular legislation those wells are going to be closed. Those marginal wells will be closed because they are expensive to operate and this new tax being levied makes the difference. We will see wells that could successfully be providing us with energy resources for years to come being closed off because they will no longer be economically viable. Why on earth would a government want to do that? We will wait with eager ears for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance to stand up and explain why this government is closing off the marginal, stripper wells in western Canada.

There are many other items one could speak of, including the whole matter of indexation that we on this side find a repulsive concept to be introducing. The Government of Canada is saying it is going to index the taxes on alcohol, including wines and beer, and tobacco. Does that not tell Canadians that this government assumes inflation is going to continue at the present rate if not higher? Does it not demonstrate clearly to Canadians that it is necessary to index these particular commodities because the government knows inflation is going to continue?

What else does it do? If the value of the Canadian dollar drops relative to the Swiss franc, or relative to the currency of a number of countries from which we import materials in the sub-group within the CPI, that will result in an increase in the price here in Canada. If, for example, by implementing the PGRT there will be an increase in fertilizer costs and in chemical costs to farmers, which will result in an increase in the price of grain, which will then mean an increase in the price of beer and food—and the same applies to products of the vineyards—this will result in an increase in the sub-group within the CPI which will bring about an increase in terms of the taxation levy on those commodities.

We are introducing the PGRT, on the one hand and guaranteeing, on the other hand, that the taxes we levy on certain beers and on tobacco will be increased. We are guaranteeing it. This gives the government a vested interest in inflation.

Mr. Young: And it never has to be accounted for publicly.

Mr. Riis: As my colleague the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young), says, it never has to be accounted for publicly. It is a way to sneak in or bootleg tax in behind the scenes. The government never has to appear before Canadians to tell them this tax is to be raised. Canadians will never know.

A very reasonable request was made by the Alberta natural gas co-ops. Because of their complex procedures and the time it takes to send out bills and get them back from our post office system, the co-ops said they want to have 90 days to submit their taxation payments. They said they would pay the tax. They said they do not like it, but they said they would pay it. However, they want a 90-day period. Otherwise they have to go to the banks and borrow at exorbitant interest rates. All hon. members of this House will agree that interest rates are exorbitant. The co-ops will have to borrow from the banks to pay federal tax.

The Tories and New Democrats in this House agree that this is unfair. It is an unfair requirement of the gas co-ops of Alberta or anywhere else. Let us give these people 90 days to pay their taxes. Surely that is not an unreasonable request, yet hon. members opposite unanimously said no. They are going to force these people to go to the banks of Canada to borrow money at very high interest rates—the highest in Canadian history—to pay their federal taxes.

Mr. Orlikow: They claim they are friends of co-ops.

Mr. Riis: And they claim they are friends of co-ops in western Canada and elsewhere. What a myth!

I want to refer to the motions put forward last night respecting the creation of ethyl alcohol. The creation of ethyl alcohol on the farms of this country makes nothing but good sense. Other countries around the world are demonstrating leadership. In their efforts to bring about energy self-sufficiency and in their efforts to reduce costs for transportation fuels, they are encouraging farmers to use their marginal agricultural lands to create alcohol for use as transportation fuels. Is that unreasonable?

I understand that before the end of this decade Brazil plans to have virtually 100 per cent of its transportation fuels coming from ethyl alcohol derived from converted vegetable material. Brazil is taking energetic steps in this regard. Canadian farmers need an alternate source of income. They need to take advantage of land which is not used to produce food. Their marginal land could be cultivated, and crops which could be converted into ethyl alcohol could be grown. Why not? This government has just completed a series of examinations of alternate forms of energy. Why not say to the farmers of western Canada and other parts of Canada that this is an opportunity for them to grasp? The government should want to provide this opportunity for them. However, there has been no consideration of that at all.

Finally, I want to mention a provision in this bill which, quite frankly, is unacceptable. That provision is the tax on dynamite used in the construction industry. As a member from British Columbia I am very aware that when townsites are built a great deal of blasting is required in order to provide the infrastructures for factories, houses, warehouses and so forth. Dynamite is important to the construction industry. Construction components have traditionally been exempt from federal sales tax, and this has encouraged the industry. I credit the government for that, but why are we changing it now and telling contractors who use dynamite, which is a major component of their construction costs, that dynamite will now be taxed? Why is the government making this change and moving to tax that construction component? We will listen anxiously to hear why on earth we have selected one construction component and left other components exempt from federal tax.

I have left my most challenging comments for the end, and I know others will take this up. I see that my time is drawing very near to an end, but I want to mention the marginal manufacturing tax. In principle we agree that, in order to encourage Canadian manufacturers, this marginal manufacturing tax makes sense in certain areas; there is no question about that. But the way it is implemented is indicative of the approach of this whole piece of legislation.

One day some people in my riding received notices saying that they were now manufacturers. They were probably not aware of that, but they were told they were now classified as manufacturers. They were told they could not take advantage of manufacturing grants by the federal government but that for taxation purposes they were marginal manufacturers and should change their prices because of this additional tax. They did that.

Four days later they received another notice saying that the government had made a mistake and that there were changes and so forth. They telephoned their member of Parliament asking what was going on with this marginal manufacturing tax. I had to say that I was not aware of the details. I told them to telephone their regional taxation office, which they did. The regional taxation office was also not aware of the details. Here we are imposing a tax and asking people to co-operate but it is impossible to get information on this marginal manufacturing tax anywhere.

I use this matter as an example to show that this piece of legislation, Bill C-57, is ill-conceived. The people of Canada see this as an insensitive piece of legislation. It is sloppy and unnecessary. That explains why 135 amendments from this side of the House were required. The people of Canada will be very disappointed when information about this bill gets out. It will be a sad day for Canada, and hopefully for this government, when people, manufacturers, newspapers and other become aware of the details of this legislation.

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have heard a wide range of comments from the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis). I know the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap has to leave to catch a plane to go back to his riding. I would therefore like to respond to the issues he has raised first, and then I can turn my attention to the comments of the hon. member for Edmonton West, as time permits.

A number of issues have to be dealt with when we are talking about taxation generally and this piece of legislation in particular. After all, the bill does deal with the Excise Act and the Excise Tax Act. The excise tax is a percentage tax. It is a flat tax; it is not a progressive tax like the income tax. It is a tax which applies everywhere to everyone at a percentage rate. It is not part of the wealth redistribution mechanism which is associated with the income tax. That is an important distinction to make. We are talking here about a flat percentage tax which applies equally everywhere irrespective of income levels or any other considerations.

On the other hand, the income tax is the progressive side of our tax system. It taxes the wealthy much more heavily than the poor and gives us the fiscal ability to redistribute income. This excise tax—

• (1430)

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Is a regressive tax.

Mr. Evans: It is a regressive tax, of course it is. No one ever said it was not. The sales tax is a regressive tax.

Mr. Nystrom: It is a regressive government.

Mr. Evans: All taxes that apply equally irrespective of income are termed regressive. The distinction is quite clear. It should be kept in mind when we talk about these kinds of taxes and their impact, because that is the nature of the tax.

Mr. Nystrom: Regressive Liberal party.

Mr. Evans: Now, argument can be raised—and if hon. members wish to do that at some point in time the government would certainly be willing to listen to what they have to say—regarding eliminating altogether taxes of this nature. However, that is not the case we are dealing with here. We are talking about a tax which applies equally everywhere.

This bill contains amendments to this act. It is not a new act, let us make that clear; it is amendments to an act. Why do these amendments come forward, as they have since 1978? The Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) was then minister of finance and he brought forward some amendments primarily because of inequities in the tax system. There were people who were not being treated fairly. What I mean by that is that if it is a flat tax it applies equally to everyone, but it did not apply equally to some. The minister at that time, in bringing in these amendments, was trying to ensure that all people pay their fair share of this particular tax.

In 1979 the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), then minister of finance, brought forward amendments to the Excise Tax Act and Excise Act for precisely the same purpose—to close loopholes and improve the equity of that particular tax. Again, in April of 1980 the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) brought forward amendments to those acts, some of which had been proposed by the hon. member for St. John's West.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You are not suggesting it is a Crosbie index, though?

Mr. Evans: No, I am talking about certain proposals. Then again in the October 28 budget the Minister of Finance brought forward further changes to these acts. All of those proposals that had been brought forward, a great many of which were implemented, are incorporated in Bill C-57, amendments to the Excise Tax Act and Excise Act, the first bill of this kind to my knowledge to be before this House in some five, six or seven years.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I apologize to the hon. member for interjecting. He was not by his remarks suggesting that the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) was going to the principle of indexing those excise taxes? I want to make it clear—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Evans: I welcome the hon. member's interjection, my neighbour and friend, because if I left that impression I did not intend to.

Mr. Cullen: He probably would have.

Mr. Evans: My friend the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) says he probably would have. That would be imputing motives and I cannot do that in the House.

An hon. Member: Bud can.

Mr. Evans: The hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton can if he wishes.

So, Mr. Speaker, there were amendments brought in over a long period of time by ministers from both sides of the House, because when they examined these two acts they found there were anomalies, loopholes and inequities. The amendments were therefore designed to try and ensure this particular tax applied as it was supposed to be applied, so that all pay their fair share equally and equitably. That is the basic principle of an excise tax. You may agree or disagree with it, but that is the principle and that is what the amendments were meant to do; to plug loopholes or make application of the tax more equitable. Those were the reasons for the amendments, regardless of by whom they were proposed.

With that in mind, Mr. Speaker, perhaps we can look at some of the specific criticisms levelled by the opposition at the government for the ways in which changes were put forward. Specifically, I will try and deal with the various concerns brought forward by the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap.

It was pointed out by the hon. member at the outset that the government had given inadequate thought to the legislation. I hope I am wrong, but I think the reason the hon. member felt that way is that when the bill was put forward to committee a great many people wanted to make representations. Now, to my knowledge this is the first tax bill ever referred to a standing committee of the House, at least in recent history. Tax measures and measures dealing with supply are always dealt with in a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Riis: Never again.

Mr. Evans: As a result, Canadian citizens do not have an opportunity to make representations except through their member of Parliament. When you are dealing with a tax bill and it goes to a standing committee and representation is asked for, it is not surprising that you get people who want to make representations. However, Mr. Speaker, it is also not surprising that you have representations because you are dealing with taxation, and any time you do that you are saying flat out that you are going to take something away from someone in order to finance programs or whatever. Someone is going to have a tax imposed on them that they did not have before, or they are going to be heavier than before. Of course, others might have a reduction in taxes. However, if I am a businessman, consumer or ordinary citizen and I find that a new tax is going to be imposed, or my taxes are going to be increased, I will want to make representations.

It does not surprise me at all that Canadians made representations. However, the question we as parliamentarians have to ask ourselves, which we did in looking at the representations that were made, is this: in light of the principle of tax equity and fairness is the burden being placed on this group of Canadians unfair? Is it inequitable? Is it heavier than the burden being placed on others in the same occupation, profession or industry?

An hon. Member: Yes, it is.

Mr. Evans: That is the guiding principle, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nystrom: Terrible Liberals.

Mr. Evans: That is the question we asked ourselves and which guided us in determining whether or not certain proposed amendments could be acceptable.

Mr. Taylor: Why did you put it all on the west, then?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, that has to be the foundation upon which the government determines whether it will accept this amendment, whether it will or will not make this change. Because to make that change would take some of the proposed tax burden off this group but leave it on others. As a result these people would be unfairly treated relative to other Canadians in the same field.

Now, Mr. Speaker, some of the groups that came before us said that because of their particular circumstances they should be treated differently from others doing precisely the same thing as they do. That is what parliamentarians were doing in committee, and I think we did our job well in asking: is the request being made by this group fair and equitable in light of the nature of the tax, the principles we are dealing with, or is it unfair? Would it give them an advantage which other groups do not have and as a result put them in a favourable light within the over-all tax system? That is certainly the kind of thinking I tried to bring to bear, and I am sure that the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap, the hon. member for Edmonton West, the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton and others tried to look at these requests for change, amendment and exemption in that way. Clearly, Canadians looking at the same thing from different points of view are going to come up with different conclusions, and that is the reason for the 135 proposed amendments by the opposition. I think 49 were actually unique because both opposition parties had areas of similar concern, and as a result they proposed overlapping and duplicate amendments.

The concern over the impact of these taxes upon Canadians is precisely the concern of the government which gave rise to the amendments in the first place. The government did not sit down in isolation and say that it should change this tax in this area, for whatever reason. In the vast majority of cases, representations were made to the government regarding the impact of the Excise Act and the Excise Tax Act. These representations showed the government that at that moment the tax was being imposed inequitably, that some groups were bearing a heavier burden than other groups of Canadians. As a result the government brought forward amendments to try to remove the inequities. This process goes on all the time. We change the Income Tax Act, the Excise Act and the sales tax in some way to try to maintain the original principle of equity which was established in the first place.

Let me go down the list and look at some of the representations. For example, the Hobbema Four Indian band came before us and said that it should be exempt from taxation because of the nature of its relationship with the Government of Canada. The band felt it should be exempt for all time in the legislation. Because of that relationship, the band received the essence of its request; the tax does not apply to the gas produced on the Hobbema Indian reserve or on any other reserve.

It asked us also whether we would say once and for all that the government would never tax gas on Indian reserves. We said that this was not the piece of legislation in which to include such a broad exclusion of any taxation ever, but it is the place to say that the excise tax will not apply on Indian reserves. We did it in response to the request of the Hobbema Indians. The hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap said that we did not respond to the demands of the Indian bands. I say that we did respond—the tax will not apply to them.

The second area in which I was interested was the representations of the scientific and university communities. They said that because we were separating the excise tax from the Customs Act, so that the two acts would no longer determine the nature of the tax, some of the technical equipment they used for research and teaching purposes in the universities would be taxable. The other side of that is: by exempting the goods imported by the scientific and research communities from any tax or duty, in essence we were ensuring that Canadian manufacturers would never spring up to produce those kinds of goods. Because of the competitive advantage of the very large multinational producers of some kinds of scientific equipment, in terms of their sale forces and so on, the research facilities in Canadian universities were not aware that very similar goods were available from Canadian producers.

In the case of the marginal manufacturing tax, we wanted to ensure that importers did not have a competitive advantage vis-à-vis Canadian producers which create jobs for Canadians; we wanted to do the same thing with regard to scientific equipment, but they were being put at a competitive disadvantage to imports.

For the purposes of economic development, we said that Canadian producers should be put on an equal footing with the imports and that they should be given an additional advantage. As a result the tax was changed and our scientific equipment manufacturers will benefit from it. It will mean long-term jobs for Canadians in highly paid positions.

I do not apologize for doing that. I used to be a university professor and I know the costs and the troubles faced by the universities. I am saying that in the vast majority of cases there are Canadian-produced goods of equal quality which will do the job as well. Now those Canadian-produced products will be in a position to compete fairly and effectively.

I cannot indicate the background of the tax on the handicapped, but certainly if there is an anomaly in the tax which cannot be clearly justified, I assure the hon. member we will reconsider it before the next budget. I am not making any promises, but I will tell him that right off the bat.

I met with representatives of the artistic community with regard to lithographs. It was a problem area from the outset in terms of this particular tax. The difficulty was coming up with an equitable definition of an original print. The hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap made a very valid point. He indicated that original lithographic prints signed and numbered by the artist are totally different from Elvis Presley posters and such. The creative process runs from the individually created, one-off print all the way to multiple copy prints, mechanically produced prints, and the ones reproduced on an offset press. The difficulty which Revenue Canada is now trying to work out with the representatives of the art community is how to define "original". If someone makes 5,000 copies of a print, then signs every one and numbers them from one to 5,000, do they qualify or not?

The Secretary of State (Mr. Fox) and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Rompkey) are continuing to work on this particular problem. It will be considered for adjustment in the coming budget within the context of "original". We do not want to tax original art, but we do not want to say that something by art community standards, or even very loose standards beyond the art community, would possibly fall into that area and not be taxable. We want to avoid that and the art community wants to avoid it. We are working with them to arrive at a clear definition to ensure that the tax does not apply unfairly to artists who are lithographers as opposed to others.

Turning to the area of newspapers, this point was raised at second reading and at report stage by the hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap. As well, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) raised it this morning. I should like to deal with the concerns of both members in that regard. The hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap said that we should encourage small, independent newspapers. I could not agree with him more. I am sure no one on either side of the House would disagree. There is nothing in this piece of legislation which will impact in any way upon the ability of small, independent newspapers to operate profitably and to operate as they have in the past.

At one time a newspaper was defined to be any publication in which there was no more than 70 per cent advertising. I believe it was in 1978 when this area was questioned in the courts and it was eliminated, for whatever reason. When this particular legislation was brought forward the question we were trying to get at was if you have an advertising flyer which contains absolutely no printed words by an editor, a writer or by anyone, is it a newspaper? And is it then subject to the tax-free provisions? That is the question we were asking.

What was the original intent of exempting newspapers from taxation? The intent was that we wanted to have free and open access to information for Canadians. We wanted Canadians to be able to hear the criticisms of anyone who wished to set up a newspaper or a radio station, within regular guidelines, that is, the limitations associated with airwaves, etc. We wanted to give Canadians the broadest possible access to different ideas, to criticism of government and of the business community and to criticism of each other. That was the original intent many years ago. I think that intent must be considered with regard to what is going on here.

Let us look at the definition which has been proposed. It says that if any one issue of newspaper is more than 90 per cent advertising, then it is not tax exempt. That certainly cannot be considered unreasonable, since I think all of us have some concept of the difference between news and information. Advertising is certainly information but should advertising in that form be tax-exempt? It is not tax exempt when you see it on television or when you hear it on the radio. Why should it be tax exempt because it is printed on a piece of paper? If the intent of a publication is to be a newspaper—and I think we can all agree on the general concept of news—then let us not exempt those things which do not fall into some very reasonable definition of what a newpaper is.

Another aspect of this matter is that if any one issue is more than 90 per cent advertising, then it is taxable. If more than half of all the issues in a quarter of a year are more than 80 per cent, then it is taxable and it does not fall into the exemption. But that means 49 per cent of the issues can be 80 per cent advertising and that 51 per cent can be 79 per cent advertising, which means an average of 85 per cent advertising over the quarter. And it is still exempt from tax. In a 15-page newspaper you are talking about very little news and an awful lot of advertising.

I think our definition is fair. The Quebec weeklies and the weeklies in the rest of the country have looked at the question. They have said that they are still concerned but it looks as if they will be able to live quite well within that definition.

As I mentioned earlier in the House, when this issue was raised before the Senate committee the Quebec weeklies brought in a sample of ten newspapers—and this was before we had the more generous exemption provision. This was when the rule was 75 per cent. If your paper contained more than 75 per cent advertising, then it was taxable; if it was less than 75 per cent it was not. The Senate committee went through the ten sample newspapers which were placed before it and not one of them would have been taxable under the 75 per cent rule. Now, with the more generous 80 per cent on 50 per cent of the issues, or 90 per cent on any one issue, it is virtually certain that the dailies will not be affected by this tax. That was the intent. The intent is to plug the loopholes but not to affect the legitimate operators. This is precisely what I think this measure will do.

With regard to the inserts, I tried to explain this once before. Advertising inserts have always been taxable. The tax is the manufacturers' excise tax which applies to printed material. What has happened over the last few years is that newspapers found out that, because of the newspaper tax exemption, if printed material were inserted into a newspaper and distributed by the newspaper company, it was tax exempt. But if it was distributed by a group of boy scouts or a small distribution company which hired young people to distribute the material in the neighbourhood, it is taxable.

There is a company in my riding which hires young people in the neighbourhood to distribute material. A flyer came around the other day from a distribution company asking whether young people were interested in distributing advertising material for such companies as Shoppers Drug Mart, the A & P, IGA or Home Hardware. It offered to pay something for this work. It is an opportunity for young people to make money. They do not have to be newspaper carriers; they can earn money by distributing flyers from time to time. It is not a regular job but one which supplies some income for young people. The government was approached some time ago by a number of these small distribution companies which indicated to us that, because the newspapers were not taxable and the newspapers could take this printed material without the tax and distribute it, then they were at a significant competitive advantage over the small, independent distributors. We said that if the tax is on printed material then the nature of the distribution system should not have any impact, on the grounds of equity, as to whether or not the tax is paid. Newspapers should pay the same tax as the small distribution companies pay.

That was the basis of the discussion surrounding this issue and it seems to me to be fair and equitable. It is not a tax in any way, shape or form on newspapers. It is precisely what it has always been. If the newspapers choose to move into a new area of business then they should not expect that they can carry their tax-free status under their arm and say that because they are newspapers and are competing in this new area of business therefore they are tax-free, while anyone else carrying out this undertaking is taxable. I think that is a legitimate objection for the government to raise. There is no doubt that this is not an attack on the freedom of the press in any way. That is the biggest red herring I have ever seen drawn across the path of any piece of legislation.

A point was raised about gas co-ops. The gas co-ops in Alberta came to us and said, because of the nature of their distribution system they do not get paid by those who purchase gas from them until at least 40 or 45 days after the gas is purchased from the original supplier, at which point the tax is applied. What the gas co-ops would like to see is the payment of the tax being delayed for 90 days after receipt of the gas so that they would not have to carry inventory and finance it. That sounds reasonable on the surface. The problem is that every business in the country carries inventory in one form or another and every business person in this country has to finance that inventory.

In the case of the co-ops, if we were to say that because they are co-ops, or because they are nice people, they do not have to pay the tax for 90 days, then there is no reason or logic why any other businessman should not pay the tax until after 90 days. We have said that all our business people must pay this tax after 30 days, and why should it be different for gas co-ops in Alberta. That was the reasoning which took place in the minds of the government.

We said, "No, I am sorry. We cannot do that, because if we do it for you, automobile dealers will say that we carry inventory and pay this tax before we get paid by the people who buy our cars." When gas distributors, such as Consumers' Gas, here in Ontario, or B.C. Hydro—or whichever company distributes gas in British Columbia—buy gas and store it for winter use, they pay the tax when they receive it. They are distributors; they are not the producer. They would be saying, "We hold this inventory of gas and we should be exempt from paying that tax until we sell it to the consumer."

The problem, when one gets into tax legislation, is that one is dealing with something which is extremely complex, and matters of equity are not clear, they are not easily seen. One has to look beyond the surface into the depth, the meaning, the effect, the implication and the impact of the tax before one can determine whether a request for relief from one group is equitable in light of the over-all tax system.

There were other issues which were raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West. I am not sure how much time I have. I think I have ten minutes. The hon. member for Edmonton West raised the question of the legality of this tax at the outset of his comments. I think he implied that in this House we were passing a tax which had been ruled illegal. That was another red herring. This particular tax, the gas tax, the gas export tax or export side of the tax—

An hon. Member: It is not the export tax.

Mr. Evans: The export side of the tax—

An hon. Member: Oh, I see!

Mr. Evans: —has been ruled by the Alberta court of Appeal to be illegal if it is applied to one of three wells which are owned by the province of Alberta and which have not exported one cubic foot of gas to this date. It is a hypothetical case. If one of these wells were to produce a cubic foot of gas and it was exported, could the federal government's tax apply? That is the case. There could be very peculiar circumstances. A well might be owned by the province, transported by the province to the border, and never change hands until it crosses the border. That kind of question might be considered. The court of appeal in Alberta said that in that circumstance this tax could not be applied. It is now being appealed. However, there is certainly no question that in other circumstances, the federal government has the power to apply a tax on natural gas, whether it be exported or whether it be consumed here in Canada. The honesty of that particular case, I think, should be well known by Canadians.

The hon. member for Edmonton West also raised an issue which I do not really want to deal with in depth because it does not specifically apply to the legislation. However, he mentioned the fact that this is a tax on natural gas, and the budget of the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) did not have a tax which applied to natural gas, and that as a result, Canadians will pay far more for natural gas under this government than they would have under the other. I really think, that is a mug's game, in all honesty. However, the fact of the matter is that the price of natural gas under the government of the hon. members opposite was tied to the price of oil, and the price of oil was to go to 85 per cent of world price in 1984, and that would have pulled up the price of gas. Therefore, one can take one point of view and run down the line with it. If one forgets about all these other factors, one can wind up with one conclusion which is not necessarily correct. It tends to have a misleading effect on the understanding of Canadians.

The issue of indexation has been raised. This government has been accused of trying to profit from inflation, that we are going after this particular area unfairly, and that we are imposing a tax which will grow exponentially and will take money out of the pockets of Canadians. First of all, all taxes take money out of the pockets of Canadians. I have explained this before. When we are talking about indexation, what are we doing? The alcohol and tobacco tax has always been a flat tax, in dollar terms. In other words, the tax was explained in the following way: the federal government tax or the provincial government tax, because both place taxes on certain products, will be 35 cents per pack of cigarettes. That is an example. That being the case, it was a very unusual tax. A fixed dollar levy is a tax which does not apply in many other areas in our society. Most taxes are on a percentage basis. The sales tax in Ontario is 7 per cent. The manufacturers' excise tax, which was formerly 12 per cent, is now 9 per cent.

There are other forms of taxes. The income tax provides that if one makes a certain amount of money, a certain percentage of that will come to the federal government and a certain percentage will go to the provincial government. The taxes are stated on a percentage basis. These two taxes, alcohol and tobacco, are stated on a dollar basis. As a result, as the price of the product goes up, the tax stays precisely the same. To keep the same tax burden on those products, every couple of years we come back and say, "Let's see. We're going from 35 cents to 40 cents a package of cigarettes or from two cents to eight cents on a bottle of beer", whatever the impact, but we keep coming back and changing the dollar amount. The logical thing to do is to change it to an ad valorem tax and to say it shall be a percentage. Whatever the price, add on 8 per cent or 10 per cent or whatever, and that is the tax. That keeps the tax at exactly the same percentage burden as it has always been. The way to do that is to do exactly what we have done. It was such a good idea that the hon. Frank Miller in Ontario, of the Conservative party, immediately brought in the same legislation for the Ontario tax.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That does not make it any better.

Mr. Blenkarn: It is not the same legislation either.

Mr. Evans: I am saying that it is fair and equitable way. The tax is tied to the sub-index of alcohol, and the tax will increase in the same proportion as the price, and will stay the same, with the same percentage burden, as it always was.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It is a bad example.

Mr. Evans: If the hon. members opposite say that that is indexation of taxation, then they should be against the income tax, the sales tax and the manufacturers' excise tax, because they are all stated in percentages and they will all have precisely the same impact which the indexation of this particular tax has because of the nature of the tax.

An hon. Member: Trying to kid the troops now?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): We index the income tax to the benefit of the taxpayers.

Mr. Evans: We were not talking about the indexation of the income tax. That turns it around and it goes the other way.

Cosmetics was another area which was brought to our attention. The difficulty there was that the government had moved the incidence of the tax to the cosmeticians level because of the understanding that the cosmetician was, in fact, a wholesaler. We found out that such was not the case, and we responded because it is a manufacturer's excise tax, after all, and the tax should be collected at that level. The cosmeticians said, "Look. We use these products, whether they be shampoos or other forms of cosmetics, in our beauty salons. Therefore, we are a retailer of these products, not a wholesaler. Therefore, the tax should not be applied on our sale price. It should be applied on the sale price of the person before us." We said, "That being the nature of the cosmetics business here, which we are talking about at this time, that is fine. Therefore, that tax should be back there."

The amendment was put forward, and we met their concerns. Therefore, when a group could show that there was not equity in this particular legislation, when they could show that the government was imposing a tax unfairly on them which was not being imposed on another group under exactly the same circumstances, it was changed. The government has examined these taxes very carefully and has tried to make sure that they are applied equitably and fairly to all Canadians.

• (1510)

I support the bill 100 per cent, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I have listened patiently for 40 minutes to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Evans) saying that this government is so fair that it can say, in effect, "We are the heart of human kindness; we are the people of equity and reasonableness."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thomson: That is a joke. It would be laughable if it were not so sad. I think the parliamentary secretary actually believed what he said. Bill C-57 imposes a gas tax that discriminates against one industry in Canada, Mr. Speaker. The gas tax is applied to one industry; is that fair and reasonable? Is that equitable? That is a petroleum gas revenue tax that has wiped out all of the marginal oil production in western Canada. That industry is no longer producing because it is losing money. The petroleum gas and revenue tax has virtually crucified and wrecked the industry.

It is clear to most Candians that we are running out of oil and that we desperately need to find some alternative energy resources or we will have to produce a lot more oil. Surely, in the short run, we have to produce more oil. We should be encouraging, not discouraging, the oil and gas industry.

The parliamentary secretary talked about jobs in the scientific area of the industry that could be done quite well in Canada, and I do not dispute that. I would ask him to remember, however, that the National Energy Program has cost this country something like 60,000 jobs.

Mr. Cullen: Nonsense.

Mr. Thomson: How can anyone claim to be concerned about jobs while implementing a program that will cost the country 60,000 jobs? That is just the start.

Mr. Cullen: Nonsense.

Mr. Thomson: Is it nonsense? The government will not listen and will not believe the facts.

Mr. Cullen: We know the facts.

Mr. Thomson: I invite hon. members opposite to come to my riding of Calgary South to see the devastating effects of this program, or to Red Deer or to Bow River. They should come out and see what is happening to the oil industry in western Canada.

I want to address my remarks this afternoon to the impact of Bill C-57 and the petroleum gas and revenue tax on the oil and gas industry. The National Energy Program has received as much debate as any piece of legislation to come before this House, in my memory, since Mr. Benson's white paper on taxation. Indeed, I would say that the National Energy Program is probably as disastrous as was the Benson white paper on taxation, and is very likely more so.

It has taken me some time to realize that the National Energy Program is not a program at all. It is part of an over-all design by the Liberal government to control all aspects of the Canadian economy. It has nothing to do with energy. The oil and gas industry just happens to be first on the list for government control.

How can the Liberal government be so callous in its approach to the Canadian economy, the Canadian worker, the Canadian consumer and the Canadian householder? I have come to the conclusion that the Liberal government does not really care. It is flush with power and believes it can run roughshod over the Canadian people. I think there are those in the Liberal cabinet who have said, "We are not going to be around for the next election, so let's bite the bullet and push Canada as far down the socialist road to nationalization and federal government control as we can get away with." That is the purpose of the National Energy Program—nationalization and federal government control. Those are the primary objectives of the Liberal government, not only with respect to the oil and gas industry but the whole of Canadian society.

I have spent a good deal of time examining the pricing situation in the oil and gas industry today—the price of gasoline, of crude oil at the pump, royalties, and taxes taken by the federal and provincial governments. I have the benefit of over 20-years experience in the oil and gas industry.

The energy dispute in this country could be solved tomorrow morning by adding a nickel to the price of a litre of gasoline; 5 cents a litre and the problem could be solved, Mr. Speaker. The Liberal cabinet knows that, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) knows it and the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) knows it. They do not want the conflict resolved as long as they can lead Canadians to believe that Alberta is the fall guy. The Liberal government does not want this energy dispute solved. It believes it can lay the blame for the energy conflict in Canada at the feet of the Alberta government. This is a lie; it is a deception. We could move to 75 per cent of world price at the wellhead and the government could have its 25 per cent share of that price. That could happen tomorrow morning by raising the price of gasoline by 5 cents a litre.

If this were done, Mr. Speaker, it would mean that revenues flowing to the federal government in the form of corporation taxes from the oil industry, would triple. The fiscal deficit could be reduced by $3 billion. We would have 75 per cent of the world oil price at the wellhead tomorrow and the federal government could increase its revenues by $3 billion and thereby reduce the fiscal deficit by $3 billion. This would cost the Canadian people one nickel per litre more at the pump tomorrow morning.

In Toronto today, regular unleaded gasoline costs 36.7 cents per litre. At a downtown Ottawa service station the other night, I paid 42.3 cents per litre for regular unleaded gas. Mr. Speaker, 36.7 cents per litre is equal to $55.30 per barrel at the pump and 42.3 cents per litre is equal to $64.15 per barrel at the pump.

The world price for oil today is $43 per barrel. That is what we are paying in Montreal every day, to buy 400,000 barrels of oil. If we take 75 per cent of the world price of oil, that is $32.25 or half the equivalent cost of a litre of gasoline at 42.3 cents at the pumps. If we add one nickel per litre at the pump, we would be paying the equivalent of $64.15 per barrel; and 75 per cent of world price of $32.25 would be half the cost we are paying at the pump.

A price of 42 cents per litre would allow the federal government to move to the wellhead price of 75 per cent of world price. The Alberta government would have to reduce its royalty from 42 per cent to 35 per cent of the wellhead price. Other provincial governments would have to freeze their taxes at the present level. Is it too much to ask this government to raise the price of gasoline a nickel a litre so that it can solve an energy dispute costing 60,000 jobs and putting out of reach any hope of attaining self-sufficiency for the Canadian people? The federal government would triple its revenues. It would get 25 per cent of the wellhead price, and the oil industry will be able to get on with the job of finding oil. Yes, that is too much to ask because the federal government does not want to solve the problem. It is no longer a question of price or revenue sharing. The problem has nothing to do with price and revenue sharing. The problem is that the federal government wants to control the oil and gas industry, and it wants to do it two ways.

It wants to take a royalty, which is exactly what the petroleum revenue and gas tax is. It is a royalty on a provincially-owned resource. The government then wants to distribute that royalty in the form of grants as the federal bureaucracy deems appropriate. The object is interventionism. This is government bureaucratic control. What we will hear is "line up at the public trough, fellows. We will tell you where to look for oil, and we will tell you if we like you and what you are doing. Maybe if you are a good Grit, we will give you some money to look for oil because we know where to find it better than you do". The federal government bureaucracy will be the oil finders in this country. They will take it from you with one hand and give it back to those they see fit with the other.

The other main objective of the National Energy Program is nationalization under the cloak of Canadianization. The government has made a lot of Canadians believe that this is Canadianization. It has nothing to do with Canadianization. The acquisition of Petrofina had nothing to do with Canadianization; it had everything to do with nationalization. It is a government-controlled, government-owned company. I say to the Canadian people, or to anyone who wants to listen, "do not be fooled by this Liberal government". The federal government can disclaim all it wants that its aim is not nationalization, but its actions and its legislation in every area confirm the government's intent to intervene in your life, to control your life and to control every aspect of this economy.

The National Energy Program is a tragedy. This statement has been expressed before by many other people. It is a tragedy for this country of staggering proportions. Not only does the National Energy Program deny Canadians the opportunity to be self-sufficient, it denies them the opportunity for an improved standard of living. It is burdening Canadians with the highest interest rates ever experienced in this country.

Hon. members may well ask, how does the National Energy Program relate to our high level of interest rates? We have high interest rates in Canada because we must follow the level of U.S. interest rates as long as we have to borrow money to cover our fiscal deficit and the debts we incur with other countries on trade. That is why we have to have high interest rates today. The governor of the Bank of Canada has said that. We cannot lower our interest rates. If we do, the value of the Canadian dollar will go down and our rate of inflation will go up. There is probably some consensus in this House on that point, if on no other.

But interest rates in Canada could be lowered by 5 per cent. Interest rates could be lower than they are now if the government took the following four simple actions. Our interest rates would be lowered by 5 per cent, perhaps not immediately but certainly within a period of one year. I will cite the four actions.

First, the government should move the price of oil to 75 per cent of world price which will reduce the oil import subsidy by $3.5 billion. That is all the government has to do. People will have to pay a nickel a litre more at the pump. By doing that we can reduce the federal subsidy that we are paying for oil imports by $3.5 billion. Why does Canada want to pay $5 billion of Canadian workers' wages, our wages, for imported oil from Saudi Arabia and Mexico? What in heaven's name are we thinking about when the Canadian economy is on the ropes? Why do we want to pay $5 billion to people outside our country? It is madness. Therefore, I repeat, Canada should move the price of oil to 75 per cent of the world price and so reduce our import subsidy by $3.5 billion.

Second, we should move the price of oil to 75 per cent of world price to stop the $4 billion or more flowing out of Canada. I suspect there is a great deal more money than that flowing out of this country as a result of the National Energy Program. I know that in the oil and gas industry alone because of the National Energy Program $3 billion is leaving Canada for the United States and being used to look for oil there. I also know that the Germans are no longer investing in oil and gas in Canada. I know many foreign investors do not like what is going on here. They do not like what is happening to the Canadian economy, nor do they like the interventionist approach of this government, and they want to get out.

Again I say that if we moved the price of oil to 75 per cent of world price tomorrow morning, the entire attitude toward investing in Canada would be changed, not only of foreigners, but of domestic companies, Canadian companies. Do hon. members realize that the National Energy Program hurts our own domestic Canadian-owned companies far more than it does the foreign-controlled companies? The larger companies that are foreign controlled and foreign dominated can ride the situation out. The situation will not hurt them because they have downstream operations and chemical operations. But the small Canadian-owned oil and gas independent operators cannot ride out the situation. The small companies are the ones going to the United States with their money, their people and their drilling rigs. Therefore, we should move the price of oil to 75 per cent of world price to stop this hemorrhaging.

Third, if we move the price of oil to 75 per cent of world price, we would reduce the federal fiscal deficit by $3 billion by increased corporate taxes on the oil industry. As I have said, moving to 75 per cent of world price, or $32.25 a barrel tomorrow morning, would allow the government to take 25 per cent of that price and increase its share of corporate taxes by $3 billion a year.

Fourth, we should move the price of oil to 75 per cent of world price, drop the petroleum and gas revenue tax and allow world price for the oil sands plant. Alsands and Cold Lake together amount to an investment over the next five or six years of over $20 billion. More likely that figure will be $25 billion or more. If we dropped the petroleum revenue and gas tax and gave the oil sands plants just what we are paying to the Mexicans and Venezuelans, we could proceed almost immediately with the two plants which are going to produce 280,000 barrels of oil per day for Canadians for the next 25 years. That means a $25 billion capital investment alone over the next 5 years, which amounts to another $4 billion to $5 billion a year.

In summary, we have four actions which the government could take right away, and I suggest those four actions would have the consequence of so strengthening the Canadian dollar that we would not have to keep Canadian interest rates at the same level as the U.S. interest rates since the need to defend the dollar would be at a minimum. I am absolutely convinced that if the government took those four actions, we could have interest rates 5 per cent below the level today.

We cannot solve our inflation or interest rate problems in this country simply by monetary means, by controlling the rate of money supply. That is impossible. What we have to do is to reduce the federal fiscal deficit. Until the government comes to grips with its own demands on the money market, inflation in this country will never be solved.

The effect of those four proposals I made would be a reduction in the federal fiscal deficit of $6 billion; a $3 billion increase in corporate income taxes and a $3.5 billion reduction in import subsidies. Inside one year we could reduce the federal fiscal deficit by more than $6 billion. I do not know how much the rate of inflation would go down as a result of reductions of those kinds, but I think it would be darn significant.

Furthermore, think of what would happen. Do you know that the government is paying out $10 billion a year in terms of interest costs on its debts?

An hon. Member: It is $12 billion.

Mr. Thomson: Pardon me, $12 billion. I stand corrected. It is $12 billion in interest costs on the money the government has borrowed. The government went to the bond market the other day and paid 16⅛ per cent for its money. Let us just assume we could reduce interest by 3 per cent. Think of what a 3 per cent reduction in interest rates would be on $80 billion. That is another means of reducing the deficit and thereby reducing the rate of inflation.

The current wellhead price per barrel of oil is $17.75. This is shared as follows: $6.42 of that goes to the producer, the fellow who goes out and finds it and puts all the equipment in place to get the oil to the surface; the Alberta government takes $7.56 out of that $17.75; $2.63 per barrel is paid by the producer in the form of corporate taxes to the federal government, and on top of that the petroleum gas revenue tax proposed in this bill will take another $1.14 per barrel, which I might add is non-deductible for tax purposes.

I can tell you now that I left the oil and gas business three years ago and I know that you cannot find oil for $6.42. Nobody is going to look for oil at $6.42 a barrel. Incidentally, a producer in the United States now, after windfall taxes, profits and everything, gets close to $25 a barrel. What man in his right mind would go and look for oil here when he knows he cannot make any money at $6.42 and he can go across the border and get $25 a barrel? That is the madness and the insanity of this National Energy Program.

The finding cost for conventional oil in Canada is probably well in excess of $10 a barrel, and it is certainly much higher than that in the frontier and offshore areas. The petroleum and gas revenue tax we are talking about here this afternoon is totally counterproductive to our objective, an objective which I think should be foremost for Canadians today, that is the objective of self-sufficiency.

Many people have said we cannot depend on the Middle East, and that is true. I think all of us know what a critical situation the Middle East faces. But, do we really want to commit Canada to Mexico and Venezuela, apart from the Middle East? Does this make any sense when we have the reserves here in Canada? Does it make any sense to rely on foreign sources of crude and have our economy controlled by foreign interests? That just does not make any sense.

The government forecasts through the National Energy Program a reduction of 20 per cent in crude oil use in Canada by 1990, and the government says this reduction can be accomplished by off-oil incentives, namely, conservation and substitution of natural gas for oil. Let us just look at that for a moment.

To achieve a 20 per cent reduction in crude oil demand means that over the next ten years we will have to reduce consumption per unit of economic output by 50 per cent, and that is taking into account a normal growth rate in our gross national product of 3.2 per cent a year. Let us hope we can get somewhere near that because we will not achieve that this year. It also means a reduction of 30 per cent in the per capita oil consumption, the consumption of every Canadian over the next ten years, taking into account normal population growth. That means every Canadian will have to reduce the use of oil products by 30 per cent over the next ten years. It also means that all our manufacturing concerns using oil today will have to reduce their usage by 50 per cent.

I do not think there is a credible authority I have yet read, including the minister of energy and officials of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, whom I have repeatedly questioned, who can supply me with a factual base for that forecast reduction of 20 per cent. They do not have it; it is a pipe dream and they know it. Ask the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and ask our own energy minister to give us the support for that 20 per cent reduction forecast. It does not exist because it is a myth, a falsehood.

I have said this is a major reduction over a relatively short period of time, and I have been generous. It seems to me something will have to give. Either the economy will have to grow at less than the projected levels or, more likely, our oil consumption target will be exceeded. Therein lies the problem, because that is what I think is going to happen. I think that forecast is just a bunch of baloney. I think our need for oil will far exceed that presented in the forecast.

Let us assume that the demand has not grown, by 1990 and this again is a highly contentious assumption, and using the National Energy Program's most optimistic supply forecast, which does not provide for any frontier production but does include oil sands production, Canada will experience a shortfall by 1990 of 330,000 barrels per day. That is making the assumption, which is highly contentious, that demand does not grow. Furthermore, it is also based on a very optimistic projection in the National Energy Program.

Let us make another assumption. I say it is very doubtful that we will have any oil sands production by 1990 by virtue of the National Energy Program. As a matter of fact, it may very well be that we will not have any oil sands production, at least from Cold Lake and Alsands, because they are really getting ready to walk away from those projects. They just do not make any economic sense. When I first came here two years ago, the Cold Lake plant was to cost $6 billion, and today it is going to cost $12 billion. The cost of the Alsands project has gone from something like $4.5 billion to $11 billion. Here we are, still arguing about whether they should get $43 a barrel. It is crazy. In any event, I and most authorities do not think there is a chance in the world that we will have any oil sands production by 1990. If this is the case, we will not be experiencing a shortfall of 330,000 barrels a day but rather one of 740,000 barrels a day.

• (1540)

To put some numbers to that, the Canadian Petroleum Association estimates that the cost of these additional imports due to the National Energy Program will be $180 billion. That is a staggering figure. It is twelve times the current fiscal deficit. It is two-thirds of our gross national product today. That is what it will cost over the next ten years, and it will increase our total import needs to the staggering sum of $270 billion.

I am trying to bring a point home here; I am not trying to exaggerate. This is what knowledgeable people are telling us, and the government will not listen. It is all wrapped up in its interventionist and control philosophy. It does not want to look at the economic realities of this country. It does not want to deal with the fiscal deficit. It does not want to deal with interest rates, as I have said before. But I say I do not think this nation can stand payments of the magnitude of $270 billion without incurring at least serious long-term damage.

The Canadian economy is under severe strain. Productivity has been declining for the last two years, and much of our manufacturing industry is no longer competitive. Canada at this time desperately needs at least one healthy and vigorous industry which can get us moving and can move us ahead in the right direction to fill the gap and to put us in a competitive position where we can sell our products abroad. However, the National Energy Program is wrecking an industry which could provide that growth and could improve the standard of living of every Canadian over the next ten years.

I am not asking for something because I belong to the oil industry or because I am from Calgary South. I am saying that, given an opportunity, that industry can improve the standard of living of every Canadian.

The damage done by the National Energy Program to other sectors of the economy today is difficult to measure. I referred to 60,000 jobs, but there is no question that the National Energy Program has seriously hurt the oil-servicing industry, and it is just beginning to have an impact on eastern manufacturing concerns. How can a government so callously sacrifice the jobs of Canadians for the sake of its interventionist policies? That is what really gets to me. At a time when Canadians are losing their homes and businesses by the thousands we see a government transfixed in its pursuit of a socialist philosophy which has failed in every country where it has been tried. I say this is tantamount to criminal negligence.

In conclusion, I suppose it is only fair to say that in 1975 the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) told us the way things will be. He said we have not been able to make the free market system work; the government will have to take a larger role in running institutions; that means there is going to be not less authority in our lives but more.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being 3.45 p.m., it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings pursuant to the order made Tuesday, June 9, 1981 and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the third reading and passage stage of the bill.

The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand there is agreement among the parties that the recorded division be deferred until 9.45 p.m. on Monday, June 22, 1981. Is that agreed?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is agreed, Mr. Speaker. That is the essence of the agreement.

Mr. Knowles: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is so ordered.

It being 4 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, public bills, notices of motions and private bills.

HUMAN RIGHTS

PROHIBITION OF DISCRIMINATION ON GROUNDS OF SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre) moved that Bill C-242, to prohibit discrimination on grounds of sexual orientation, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

She said: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to move that Bill C-242 be read the second time and sent to committee. The explanatory note in Bill C-242 points out that the 1979 annual report of the Canadian Human Rights Commission recommended to Parliament that, and I quote:

—sexual orientation be added to the proscribed grounds of discrimination under the Canadian Human Rights Act.

The purpose of this bill is to implement that recommendation and to extend the same principle to all areas of federal activity by making the appropriate amendments to the Canadian Bill of Rights and the Criminal Code.

I should add that following this report, Mr. Fairweather, the chairman of the commission, appeared before the constitutional committee to urge that protection from discrimination be extended to all Canadians, regardless of sexual orientation.

My purpose in presenting this bill is to help ensure that a minority group, which is estimated to number about two million people in Canada, has the same access to employment opportunities, to housing and to public services as do their fellow Canadians.

I am aware that the issue of sexual orientation is not a high priority for the majority of Canadians at the present time. It does not rate in the public mind with inflation, high interest rates and the restructuring of Confederation to give some provinces more rights than others, but it has become an important issue to those Canadians who are concerned about human rights, and since it deals with a phase of human rights which most Canadians ignore, I would like to tell the House how my own interest in the subject came about.

Before I ran as a candidate in the last two elections in Vancouver Centre, I had very little interest in the homosexual community and no awareness of the extent of the discrimination against this minority group. My attitude, if I thought about the issue at all, was a mild sympathy that these unfortunate individuals were not heterosexual. I believe that this attitude is common among those Canadians who consider themselves to be moderate, tolerant citizens.

However, during my campaign I came to know members of the homosexual community in my riding and became aware of some of the very real discrimination they face. When he was prime minister, the leader of our party, the hon. member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), asked me to develop a policy position on the issue of homosexual rights. After my election in 1980, I formed a Human Rights Advisory Council with representatives of the homosexual community to help meet my campaign promise to introduce a private member's bill to prohibit discrimination on the grounds of sexual orientation. Given the dismal failure record of private member's bills, our objective was, and always has been, to have the subject matter of this bill sent to committee so that the homosexual community across Canada can share with their fellow Canadians some of their experiences, frustrations and hurts before a three-party parliamentary committee so that this issue could be fully aired by all who have an interest in it.

I want to use my time today to share with you some of the things I have learned on this issue as the MP for Vancouver Centre, which has a large homosexual population. First, I learned that minority problems that have been highlighted recently in the press, for example, police raids and so-called gay-bashing, are not reflective of the majority of homosexuals who are neither criminal nor outcasts of society and who feel they deserve the protection of the law.

The second thing I learned was that several of my friends and colleagues were members of the homosexual community, a fact previously unknown to me since the issue had never arisen. One environmentalist was known to me as professionally very competent before I was aware he was homosexual, and the quality of his work has not diminished in my view on learning of his sexual orientation. I still rely heavily on one of my public relations advisers because of the excellent quality of the advice offered, and not just on this issue. A doctor friend of mine who told me he was bisexual remains, in my eyes, a loving, caring person. An acquaintance that I disliked before I learned of his sexual orientation, I still dislike to this day. I make the point, Mr. Speaker, that the majority of Canadians probably do not care about the sexual orientation of their friends or colleagues. They may have concerns as parents, as landlords, or as employers, but within their own family and friends they are relatively indifferent to it. It is only when we become personally aware of the discrimination that this minority faces that we become concerned. Let me give you some examples.

In my first year as an MP, two young men came to see me to tell me that they had been stopped at the U.S.-Canada border and turned back because in their luggage was the address of a homosexual club in Seattle. They were not concerned about being refused entry to the U.S., but they wanted me to have their names removed from the U.S. immigration's computer. I could not believe that two young Canadians without criminal records, contributors to their community, would be banned from the U.S. because they were suspected of being homosexual. But in checking with the U.S. consul's office in Vancouver I found that this, indeed, is the case. The U.S. does not allow suspected homosexuals to enter the country. It is reassuring to know that Canada changed its attitude on this issue in the 1967 Immigration Act which removed the barrier to homosexuals seeking entry to Canada.

In another case a young man told me that he had been compulsorily released from the Canadian Armed Forces without any opportunity to have access to the nature of the information which led to his dismissal. Instead, he was visited by two military police, taken to a Holiday Inn and interrogated by another military policeman for some time. At the end of the interrogation he was told that although there was no breach of security involved, he would have to resign his commission because he was a homosexual. My constituent emphatically denied that he was a homosexual and said there were no grounds whatsoever to the allegation. The file shows that the military police told my constituent that he was not to discuss the interrogation with anyone whatsoever. He later found that his telephone had been wiretapped.

It stretches ones' credibility to believe that in this country a Canadian citizen can be picked up by the military police, have his phone tapped, be interrogated and dismissed without any access to the information on which the dismissal was based. I would like to add that this man's professional record was deemed excellent by his commanding officers. I will call him Captain X, because he wants his privacy respected. One superior wrote:

> Captain X has earned the respect of my staff by his professional attitude towards the completion of his responsibilities. This in turn has revealed him to be a dedicated officer with good perception and excellent potential.

Another commanding officer wrote:

> Captain X's service was outstanding.

Another wrote:

This man is now in the civilian labour force looking for a job, wondering with considerable anxiety if the unknown allegations on his military record will prevent him from getting a job in his profession. I cannot convey to you the extent of his anxiety and his desire to clear his record so that he can be a functioning member of our society.

Still another constituent of mine, whom I recommended for his job, recently told me he had resigned because the company for which he worked did not appear to realize that he had a long term, stable homosexual relationship, and he was in daily apprehension of being fired when his employers became aware of the fact. Now his fears may be unfounded. He passed his company's security test and quite possibly the company took the legitimate view that his homosexuality was not a company concern, provided his work was good. But he could not stand the suspense of living in this shadow world.

Members of this House will probably be aware of the case of John Damien who was fired in 1975 from his position as a racing steward with the Ontario Racing Commission, a job he had held for five years, because he was homosexual, even though his employers admitted that he had performed his job well.

These constituents of mine, Mr. Speaker, do not want special rights. I do not like the term gay rights, because it assumes that the homosexual community wants something extra. That is not correct. What they want is protection, tolerance and the human rights enjoyed by other Canadians. The whole basis of human rights legislation is that society should respect the diversity within it.

As George Hislop, a member of one of the homosexual associations, told the Constitution Committee in December:

> We are not asking for more, we are asking for the same. We are asking for the right to be able to say, without fear, I am not heterosexual.

I think it is important to bring forward the fact that we really do not know how one's sexual orientation is determined. It is believed to be a combination of a variety of elements, biological, social, environmental. But we have reason to believe that once sexual orientation becomes part of one's basic personality, it cannot be easily changed. Nor can it be contracted, like measles. Freud, the father of psychoanalytical theory, wrote:

> It is assuredly no advantage, but it is nothing to be ashamed of, no vice, no degradation; it cannot be classified as an illness; we consider it to be a variation of the sexual function ... many highly respectable individuals of ancient and modern times have been homosexuals ... it is a great injustice to persecute homosexuality as a crime and a cruelty too—

There are some people in Canada who view the issue of homosexuality as morally reprehensible. They are, of course, entitled to their view, but I do not believe that is the majority of feeling among Canadians. A Gallup poll conducted in June, 1977, suggests that 52 per cent of Canadians polled supported the extension of civil rights to homosexuals, while only 30 per cent were opposed. This was a statistically small sample, and possibly a more impressive measure of the prevailing attitudes is the long list of religious and secular organizations that have gone on record as opposing discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation. They include the Anglican and United Churches and, the government of Quebec which in December 1967 amended its charter of rights and freedoms to include sexual orientation as an unfounded motive for discrimination. In addition to the Canadian Human Rights Commission, provincial human rights commissions in four provinces, Alberta, British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Ontario, have recommended that the human rights legislation be so amended.

Despite this measure of support, there are some very real concerns voiced by many Canadians about extending human rights to homosexuals. One concern is the teaching of young children by homosexuals. But, Mr. Speaker, the issue here is morality, not homosexuality. As Mr. Hislop said before the Constitution Committee:

> We are not asking anyone be given a hunting licence to prey on anyone else. We have a Criminal Code to protect people from unwanted, unsolicited sexual advances.

● (1600)

As a parent I am much more concerned about the fact that under our existing Canadian law there is no adequate protection for children from sexual exploitation by adults, heterosexual or homosexual. I am hoping that Bill C-53 which is before the House of Commons will give legal protection to young children from sexual advances by any adult. As a mother of two children I worry far more about whether my children pass their grades, whether they drink or smoke pot, whether any of us will survive their adolescence, or whether they will smash themselves in a car accident. The issue of their exposure to homosexual teachers is not on the top of my list of concerns.

I should add that the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) and other colleagues, such as the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour), are not wedded to this bill. There may well be other alternatives. The hon. member for Rosedale suggested that possibly the protection of homosexuals from harassment and discrimination might be dealt with separately in human rights legislation, rather than being added to the proscribed list. These are the concerns and issues which must be faced. These are arguments which are best dealt with before a three-party parliamentary committee which could hear both sides of these issues.

In summary I should like to quote the words of our colleague in the Ontario legislature, Sheila Copps, who proposed an amendment on May 15, 1981 which would include anti-discrimination in this area. Because of time I will abridge her remarks. She said:

> I do not ask you to wear a turban to allow free expression of various religious beliefs in our province. I do not ask you to live in a wheelchair to understand that the disabled must get a fighting chance at jobs and accommodations in our province. I do not ask you to condone a sexual orientation different from your own. I ask you to consider that if we are to survive as a free nation we must cast aside all differences in guaranteeing freedom from discrimination.

That freedom from discrimination for all Canadians is the basis of the bill before the House today.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, first and foremost I commend the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney) for presenting this particular bill and endeavouring to see to it that at least the subject matter of the bill, if we cannot agree with the clauses in it or the format in which it has been drawn, is dealt with by the committee.

In this day and age despite the 52 per cent figure she quoted, although admittedly from a small poll, it takes a great deal of courage to raise an issue such as this. As she said, in the minds of some people it is considered to be morally reprehensible. I do not share that view. I share with the hon. member the view on the right of these people to have the same rights, nothing additional, as are available to all Canadians.

I had a similar experience to that of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre. I really did not give too much thought to the situation. Probably I was as guilty as the next person in telling homosexual or gay jokes, making fun of the limp wrist or the way we thought they talked; in any event, the stereotype. When I was practising law, an individual came to see me. He had been thrown out of his own home. He had gone to his church in the interest of receiving some guidance or help. He was mildly rebuked and in effect told almost the same thing he had heard from his parents—"Let us get you to a psychiatrist or a doctor; let us get this disease or sickness cured". He attempted to obtain a job, to be forthright and honest and to come out of the closet, but no one would touch this individual. I spoke with him as a lawyer; he wanted to know his particular rights. I looked up the legislation and indicated that he did not have the same rights as I. Subsequently, that individual committed suicide.

I felt a heavy onus because I was unable to help him. He did not want anything extra. He simply wanted to be accepted and to have the same rights and benefits which I as a heterosexual enjoyed in the community. He was looking for guidance and help from his family which, unhappily, turned him down. Then he turned to his church for assistance, and again he was turned down. He did not really know where to go for help other than to do what his family told him—"Go to see a doctor and get this sickness cured". Of course the doctor told him what he had already known. But he was prepared to follow the advice of his parents, and subsequently met his tragic end.

Within almost a week a similar type of representation was made to me, and that individual is now dead. Although he was killed in a car accident while driving alone, no one can really say whether or not the individual killed himself. On the basis of the way in which he conducted himself while in my office, there is strong evidence to the effect that that is exactly what happened because society was not prepared to accept his particular sexual orientation.

I remember as a child that we used to have names for people who came from foreign countries and could not speak our language. We called them "DPs" and we looked down upon them. It seemed to me that mental midgets in that day and age, as in this day and age, needed someone to look down on or to take advantage of, at least in their perception. There was a tendency to make jokes about people who spoke broken English. Quite often it was a fellow French Canadian who attempted to speak the English language or an English Canadian who fractured the French language. There was a tendency to show discrimination.

Even today it is a sad commentary on great stars such as Johnny Carson and Carol Burnett that they see fit to participate in discrimination by performing skits which hold old people up to ridicule. Someone must get to those people who are, after all, leaders in the cultural field to explain to them that such jokes are just not funny any longer. Hopefully we can change the thinking of people to accept other people for being different yet equal. In many cases we know the strength of the handicapped person.

I think the hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) read a splendid article by Miss Green which appeared in the report of the task force on the handicapped. She spelled out the strength of the handicapped person and the hurdles they have to overcome. In her article she indicated the things that she could not do, as well as her toughness. Unhappily this is not the case with many people who are too old, who speak languages differently from others, who are handicapped, of different colours or sexual orientation. They do not have the strength they need to help them overcome the hurdle of the mental midget in Canadian society. Until we can change that situation, until we can change the thinking of people, a change in the law will not do it.

In my view implementation of this bill would certainly be a giant step forward. I commend the Canadian Human Rights Commission and its chairman for leadership in this field. After all, it is a field about which it is easy to make jokes. It is easy to taint people with a particular image such as "the protector of", etc. If we do not show the leadership of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre and of Sheila Copps in the provincial legislature, we will not be accepting our responsibilities.

In my view it is very easy for a government to take action to help people who are handicapped, blind, deaf or mentally retarded. Various steps have been taken at provincial and federal levels of government in the interests not so much of protecting people but of giving them the same rights you and I enjoy.

Bill C-242 is an act to prohibit discrimination on grounds of sexual orientation which the hon. member for Vancouver Centre is sponsoring. It would ensure, by amending the Canadian Human Rights Act, that individuals would not be discriminated against on grounds of sexual orientation in matters of employment, in the provision of goods, services, facilities or accommodation customarily available to the general public, and in the provision of commercial premises or residential accommodation. As the hon. member said so eloquently, it is not asking for more; it is just asking for the same treatment.

I do not think there is any question in anyone's mind that the present government is known for its concern about human rights. The mere establishment of the Canadian Human Rights Commission and other government actions are evidence of this. Proof of this can be seen in the proposed charter of rights and freedoms which the government hopes to see incorporated in the Constitution. However, it is too simple to equate a government's concern over human rights with legislative initiative. Although no one can honestly gainsay the government's legislation record in the area of human rights protection, the various programs designed to enhance human rights and carried out under its auspices, cannot be ignored.

I would like to refer to various programs carried out in the public service. In this respect reference can be made to the efforts undertaken to increase the participation of certain groups at various levels within the public service. One of the most disadvantaged groups in Canada is that of the handicapped. To facilitate their access to the public service the Public Service Commission has acted, in co-operation with other government agencies, to remove some of the existing difficulties, if not outright barriers, facing them in the areas of recruitment, selection and advancement.

It was interesting to hear the hon. member for Vancouver Centre comment on the situation of the homosexual who may or may not have been a homosexual but who at least had documentation in his luggage indicating the site of a gay bar in a city in the United States. We do not practise that kind of discrimination in our immigration laws. I found it incredible that in the old immigration act there was a provision that an individual who was epileptic was considered by some to be mentally deficient or to have something terribly wrong or terribly catching. In our immigration law there was still a prohibition against someone coming into the country who suffered from epilepsy. Happily that provision was ignored by most officers in the field and officers at the border. They, in effect, were breaking the law by allowing these people to enter. Fortunately, we were in a position to change that law. We must change the thinking of Canadians. As recently as the second last immigration act we had that kind of provision in our legislation. So we cannot say that we are Simon Pure in this particular area. Much remains to be done.

Native people are another disadvantaged group. In order to give effect to a statement made in 1971 by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that the government would assist all cultural groups to overcome barriers to full participation in society, the commission has devoted a considerable amount of attention and effort toward increasing the amount of native participation in the public service. Similarly, the commission has sought, in line with a government commitment, to foster the employment and advancement of women in the federal public service.

The commission is also aware that groups might be disadvantaged on a regional basis. In 1973 the black employment program was set up in the Atlantic region. This began a long term effort to reduce the historically rooted disadvantages of the black community in Nova Scotia.

I mention these efforts, Mr. Speaker, to indicate that probably there is more genuine support and sympathy for that kind of change in our legislation than there will be for the kind of legislation and ideas proposed by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre today. I commend her for raising this subject. It is a delicate and difficult one, but it is one which must be aired in the House of Commons if we are really to do our duty as members of Parliament.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the bill presently before the House and to commend the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney) for her initiative in introducing this important bill, as well as to commend the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour).

I hope to be not too long, because, of course, I have no intention of taking part in any attempt to talk this bill out. Naturally, I commend the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) on his remarks. I will be looking with great interest at the response of Liberal members opposite to ensure they put their money where their mouths are and that they do not talk this important bill out. If they are serious about the principles underlying this bill, even though they may have different views in terms of the specific details of it, I know they would not for a moment seriously consider talking this bill out. I know that at the very least they would want to see the subject matter of this bill referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

As has been pointed out by the previous speakers, this is a subject which has been addressed by the Canadian Human Rights Commission in its last two annual reports, those of 1979 and 1980. The Canadian Human Rights Commission recommended that all legislation at the federal level in Canada should prohibit any discrimination on the grounds of sexual orientation. This was not a recommendation which was made just on the spur of the moment. In fact, it was a very detailed study which was conducted before this recommendation was made.

Why was it felt that this particular subject should be considered? In 1978, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in response to a letter from a gentleman who was active in the gay community in Ottawa, stated that this was a subject which should be discussed before it was included within the context of the Canadian human rights act. He indicated he believed that the appropriate means of dealing with this issue was to have the Canadian Human Rights Commission study the question and, following that, the commission could make recommendations for government action. I would like to quote from a letter which the Prime Minister wrote in February, 1978. He said that it was necessary that there be "further comprehensive examination of the problems which might be involved. It is for these reasons that the Minister of Justice has proposed that the question be examined by the Canadian Human Rights Commission which could then make recommendations for further government action".

That study was completed, of course, and the Canadian Human Rights Commission made its recommendations on two separate occasions. They have been met with silence. No action has been taken by this government to implement that very important, very basic recommendation.

What is the purpose of the bill before the House this afternoon? Essentially, as the title indicates, it seeks to prohibit discrimination on grounds of sexual orientation wherever that might occur within the federal jurisdiction in Canada. I noted with some interest, Mr. Speaker, that the first clause of the bill would seek to amend the Canadian Bill of Rights to prohibit discrimination in the bill on the grounds of sexual orientation. There was an opportunity for the Conservative party and the Liberal party, if they were serious about including prohibition of discrimination on the grounds of sexual orientation, to act. That opportunity came when, at the constitutional I moved committee hearings on behalf of the New Democratic Party, I moved an amendment which would have prohibited discrimination on the grounds of sexual orientation in clause 15 of the charter of fundamental rights and freedoms. That would not have applied just at the federal level but, of course, would have applied at all levels—federal, provincial and municipal.

What was the response of the Conservative party and the Liberal party to my amendment? The vote was 22 to 2 against the amendment. While I commend the hon. member for Vancouver Centre for her personal initiative in introducing this bill before the House today, I must say that I wish her party had taken that position when they had an opportunity to vote on this proposition before the constitutional committee.

What was the response of the constitutional spokesperson for the Conservative party when this issue was raised? I should perhaps quote what he said. He said that he did not believe we should go too far where we want to hang every barnacle and every eavestrough and every coat of paint on a charter of rights. In voting against this amendment, which would have included sexual orientation in the charter of rights, the constitutional spokesperson for the Conservative party suggested we were dealing here with barnacles and eavestroughs.

We are dealing, of course, with fundamental human rights. Surely that is the issue before the House today. It is a question of basic human rights. Can a person who is of a different sexual orientation be arbitrarily fired from his or her job with no recourse? Can he or she be removed from their place of residence with no recourse whatsoever? Can he or she be denied access to services or goods, access which is afforded to all other Canadians, solely on the basis of their sexual orientation? That is the purpose of this bill as I understand it.

As I have said, I welcome the proposed amendment to the Canadian Bill of Rights. However, I regret that this sentiment was not supported by the Conservative party and by the Liberal party when they had an opportunity to do so in the course of the debates on the Constitution of Canada.

The other amendments in the bill relate to the Canadian human rights act and would include a prohibition of discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation in the Canada human rights act itself. Once again, we certainly welcome that provision. The final sections of the bill referred to prohibition of discrimination in the Criminal Code itself. They would repeal sections 155, 156, 157 and 158 of the Criminal Code, and would also include within the hate propaganda section of the Criminal Code a prohibition of hate propaganda on the basis of sexual orientation.

I note in passing, and I am sure that it was an oversight on the part of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre, that in repealing section 155 of the Criminal Code, she would also repeal the offence of bestiality. I am not quite sure that that was the intent of the hon. member, but that is certainly the type of technical detail which could be examined by the committee if the subject matter of this bill were to be considered by the committee, as I certainly hope it will be.

I have referred to the Criminal Code, and there are a number of provisions in that code which I believe should be considered. One of the provisions which the hon. member has not addressed is the section of the Criminal Code relating to bawdy houses. We all know the recent history of the raid in Toronto by some 200 policemen, armed with crowbars and sledge hammers, into a number of bath houses there. We know of the agony which that must have caused, not only to the 330 men who were involved but also, of course, to their families and friends. What was their offence? There was no suggestion of any prostitution or of any payment of money. There was no suggestion of the involvement of juveniles. Their offence was engaging, behind closed doors, in an act which is legal. Certainly, in this day and age, people should not be subjected to that kind of harassment and intimidation for something like that. That kind of raid, and a law which would tolerate that kind of a raid, a raid which has been referred to as bully-boy tactics by at least The Globe and Mail in its editorial, should certainly be addressed in any consideration of the Criminal Code changes which should take place in that area.

There are a number of other changes as well. I mentioned the hate propaganda provisions in the bill, and those are good provisions. We welcome them. As we know, there are certain forces in this country which we have seen operating, particularly in the recent municipal election in Toronto, which would deny the right of gay men and lesbian women to exist. What can the impact be? What might the impact be on a young person living at home who perhaps receives one of these scurrilous leaflets which suggests that such people have no right to exist? Surely, in a society which is tolerant and which believes in civil liberties and human rights, young people should not have to grow up being afraid to even express their own sexual identities. Of course, that is the way it stands now. A bill such as this cannot change attitudes; but what it can do is to ensure that there is no discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation at any level in the federal government.

What are some of the areas which are covered by this bill? One of the areas which would be covered would be the Canadian army. I was recently approached by a young woman who was a private in the Canadian army, based at Canadian Forces Base Borden. She indicated that she was subjected to tyranny—I use that word advisedly—when it was suspected that she might be a lesbian. In fact, as it turns out, although of course it is really irrelevant, she was not a lesbian. However, what was done in these circumstances was to harass her, was to take her in and subject her to interrogation by the security police, by military police, without any form of charge; to go to her friends, to go to her boyfriend, to visit her neighbours and to suggest that, in fact, this girl was not worthy of continuing in the Canadian Armed Forces.

What is the policy of the Canadian Armed Forces? They say that homosexuals and lesbians must not be permitted in the Canadian Armed Forces. Why is it? I quote the following from a letter from former Admiral Falls, which Admiral Withers has adopted as his policy:

> Because in such a milieu persons having unusual behavioural traits may attempt to inflict them upon others, there is only one method of assuring our servicemen and women that their rights will be respected: by denying employment to homosexuals.

Of course, if there is a particular behavioural trait which is inflicted upon another person, that is a criminal offence; but to deny men and women the right to serve in Canadian Armed Forces merely because of their sexual orientation must surely be wrong.

There was one other excuse which was given by Admiral Falls. He stated:

As a matter of fact, experience has shown that the presence of homosexuals can be most disruptive. Such disruption often takes the form of physical attacks on the homosexual(s) concerned, and it is possible to prevent this sort of thing only by avoiding the employment of homosexuals in the first place.

Where have we heard those arguments before? We have heard them with respect to blacks and with respect to other minorities. We would like to employ them, but they are not very popular and they might be hurt. That kind of reasoning must be rejected. That is one of the purposes of this bill.

There are other provisions in the bill as well. I will not go into them in detail. However, we certainly know, as has been pointed out by other hon. members, that the Quebec human rights act has been amended, and I believe it was in 1977, to ensure that at the provincial level there will be no discrimination in that province on the basis of sexual orientation. Therefore, what we are talking about here is a fundamental question of human rights, of the right to live and the right to love without fear of persecution, without fear of discrimination, without fear of the loss of one's job, one's livelihood or one's home and without fear of being denied access to goods and services. We are talking about the right of young people in Canada, for example, not to be afraid, not to have to be silent, and not to have to conceal their own identities. We are talking about a fundamental question of basic civil liberties.

As I say, I commend the hon. member for Vancouver Centre in taking this important initiative. I welcome the support of the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton. I can assure the House that certainly all members of this caucus will support this initiative. I await with interest the response of the Liberal party to the suggestion that this particular bill or, at the very least, the subject matter of this bill, should be studied by the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, because if they talk this bill out, what they will be saying is that persons who are discriminated against on the basis of sexual orientation deserve no protection whatsoever. I challenge them to send out that message to the people of Canada.

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to commend very sincerely the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney) for airing this extremely important issue in the House of Commons, and particularly for her wisdom in framing it under the human rights legislation because, in fact, what we are talking about is a question of fundamental human rights. However, to many the question of homosexuality is a moral one. In the last seven years in which I have been in this House, I have noticed an increasing tendency on the part of some sectors to seek legislative solutions to what are essentially moral dilemmas. I do not for one moment advocate or even imply that there should be total separation between the moral and the legislative process. Indeed, I believe the legislator or the politician, if you will, can have a prophetic role to play in fostering the moral health of society.

The point I am trying to make is that surely the most basic of all moral tenets is to do unto others what you, yourself, would wish to be done unto you. Yet this most basic of all moral tenets is not being upheld, particularly as it regards the homosexual community.

There is a growing feeling that "wrong" must be punished even before that wrong has been properly defined or even proven. In such cases, one must fear for the very existence of justice. Bill C-242 is before the House simply because a certain segment of our community needs to be protected against discriminatory practices. Mention is made of employment from which this segment can be and, indeed, very often is, precluded because of its sexual preferences. I find it sad and passing strange that in an age of cultural, social and scientific enlightenment, this question even needs to be debated in the House at this time.

• (1630)

Let us consider what has happened in the past. We can ask ourselves, if Pope Julius II had given credence to the rumours and conjecture surrounding the sexual preferences of Michelangelo and had prohibited Michelangelo from working, would the whole world not be the poorer for lack of the Sistine Chapel.

I might even ask myself if the Dominican priests, who have never in history been known for great liberalism, had denied access to the Church of Santa Maria Delle Grazie in Milan, would all of us now be denied the beauties of the Last Supper by Da Vinci.

I have before me a list prepared by researchers of the U.S. National Gay Task Force, supplemented by the almanac of researchers which includes names of celebrated persons who were both homosexual and heterosexual; in short, bisexual. I shall refer to only a few of these people, Mr. Speaker. What would have happened to society if they had not been allowed to work because of their sexual preferences? Would we have been denied the poetry of Sappho and of Emily Dickinson? When we speak of homosexuality, we must also include the females, the lesbians. We would have been denied the powerful and innovative writing of Gertrude Stein and Virginia Woolfe; the philosophy of Socrates and of Aristotle; the military achievements of Alexander the Great and of Richard the Lion Heart; the statesmanship of Queen Christina and of Frederick the Great. Our children would have been denied the fantasy and sheer beauty of Hans Christian Andersen, not to mention the wit of Oscar Wilde. This is just a short list of what we would have been denied if our ancestors had been only as "enlightened" as we think we are today.

Let me stretch this point to a consideration of the nature of homosexuality. The article I now cite appeared in the Toronto Star on February 17, 1981, following a week of often devastating criticism levelled at the homosexual community in my own city. It was written by Joan Sutton and is entitled "Taking a Good Look at Homosexuals". I should like to read this into the record in the hope that it will help change some of the attitudes now all too prevalent in our society. It reads as follows:

What is a homosexual?

Human Rights

To many people in Toronto, a homosexual is someone to hate, someone to ridicule, someone to ostracize, someone to push around, someone who should not be allowed to even live in this city.

I am always puzzled by any kind of group labelling, be it of Jews or black or homosexuals. I have known many homosexuals over the years. Some of them I liked, some I didn't. But the liking or the disliking had everything to do with what kind of people they were, and nothing to do with their sexual preference, which is none of my business.

I suspect that most dislike of homosexuals is based in ignorance or fear, so I asked Ron Longevin, a research psychologist at the Clarke Institute, to answer some questions. Longevin is involved in a program that is examining the origin and nature of homosexuality.

He says, "We are still several years away from having all the answers. We cannot tell you for sure what makes someone become a homosexual, but we can tell you what does not.

It has nothing to do with having a dominant mother and a Milquetoast father, as is popularly believed. That may be true of some homosexuals who turn up in psychiatric clinics, but it is also true of some heterosexuals in the same situation."

Longevin is convinced that when research is completed, it will prove that homosexuality is linked to brain waves, blood chemistry, and hormones.

He says, "Homosexuality is not a matter of choice, and it is important for the public to understand that. People think that it should be easy for someone to change a sexual preference pattern but it is not. The true homosexual cannot change his erotic preference—I have yet to see a case where, no matter what was tried, there was any true change."

Longevin says there is no way that a person can be seduced into a life of homosexuality. "We have to differentiate between isolated homosexual behavior, and having a fixed preference for one's own sex. There is an important difference.

"According to the Kinsey studies, about 25 per cent of the population has had a homosexual experience at one time or another. It's common among boys in school, or jail, or other situations where men are separated from women for a long period of time. But once those men go back to a normal life, where women are available, their real preference for heterosexual sex prevails.

"About 4 per cent of men, however, have a fixed sexual preference for their own sex. The percentage in women is still unknown. That preference cannot be created, and it cannot be taken away."

Longevin says "Homosexuals fall in love in the same way the rest of us do. There is an idealization of the partner, and an emphasis on romance. And when a relationship ends, there is no difference between a broken-hearted homosexual and a broken-hearted heterosexual."

Because society has ostracized the homosexual community and tends to joke about its attempts to create stability and exchange public marriage vows, there is a tendency to promiscuity and one-night stands that leads to a higher incidence of venereal disease.

"Until homosexuality can be institutionalized, there can be no constraining norms. I suspect that the young heterosexual would also go from partner to partner, if there wasn't some expectation on the part of society to marry. When the homosexual gets older, he has a need for some stability, and he can be very lonely."

Longevin says the true homosexual usually feels revulsion about the idea of sex with a woman: "When he's a teenager, and begins to realize that he is gay, he may try very hard to date women to prove that he is not, but he will have an aversion to that. The married homosexual will have sex with his wife, but he doesn't enjoy it. It's a job, a chore that he compares to masturbation. Sometimes he gets through it by fantasizing about another man."

Accepting the inevitability of the sexual-preference pattern is essential to any true understanding of the homosexual community. Longevin says, "When I started out as a clinician, I had read all the theories, and I saw homosexuals as people who were sick. I soon discovered that they are just like the rest of the population—some of them are sick, some are normal. My perspective on the problem has changed completely.

"There is no one personality that is a homosexual. They include laborers, teachers, politicians, priests, some very fascinating people. Some of the greatest geniuses the world has known, including Leonardo da Vinci and Tchaikovsky were homosexuals. They have an important contribution as people to make to society and it is a shame to persecute them and alienate them."

Longevin wishes that we would see homosexuals as people rather than queers. "I suppose it is easier to want to destroy than to understand, but when we try to suppress homosexuality we only create rebels."

I can understand why some people might feel repulsed by the idea of homosexuality. But I am convinced that the hate and intolerance that was unleashed last week within the straight community poses a far more serious threat to the soul of Toronto. Labelling and hating groups can get to be a habit, and that could destroy this city.

The purpose of my intervention is not to condone homosexuality but to deplore, in the strongest possible terms, what amounts to a vicious hate campaign against those who are different from me. My purpose is to urge that the homosexual community be accorded the same rights and responsibilities as other members of our society.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I believe this debate ends in approximately six minutes. Would the hon. member be candid enough to indicate that the real purpose of her talk is to talk this bill out because she and her party disagrees with it?

Mrs. Appolloni: Mr. Speaker, I think it is against the rules of the House to impute motives to any member. If the hon. member has something meaningful to add to this debate about the homosexual community, I would suggest that he get on with it instead of wasting his time and everybody else's by trying to impute motives to others.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, has the hon. member finished her speech?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes.

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, in the approximately five minutes remaining, I wish to speak in favour of the bill in the name of my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney). I commend her for wishing to refer this bill to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs so that the homosexual community can have a forum in which to discuss openly issues concerning themselves and to make a case for the protection of their rights like any other group of Canadians.

Before I get into some of the issues, and I know time is extremely short, may I say for the record that I was informed by a member of the Liberal caucus that the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen), the hon. member for York South-Weston (Mrs. Appolloni) and the hon. member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Kelly) were here, either having volunteered or having been assigned, to talk out the bill. We have heard two members of the Liberal caucus—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect to the hon. member, the rules of the House forbid the imputing of motives. This is the second time this matter has been brought to the attention of the hon. member. I suggest that the hon. member get on with his speech.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, it is not a question of imputing motives, it is simply a statement of fact with respect to two speakers, and we will soon see that it is the case for the third speaker, the hon. member for Scarborough Centre when he rises to speak on the bill.

We now have three minutes left. I believe the hon. member for Vancouver Centre has stated the case far better than I am capable of doing. I would simply like to move: that the subject matter of the question be referred to the justice committee for consideration.

However, I predict that the hon. member for Scarborough Centre will stand up when I sit down and finish the job begun by the other two members of his caucus.

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, I understood the hon. member would like to move that the subject matter be referred to the committee. But I think his motion, as it was read, was incomplete and inadmissible.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, if the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Collenette) wishes to see the subject matter of this bill referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs I am sure that unanimous consent would be accorded to frame that motion in the proper terminology, and the hon. member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Kelly) would not want to impede that motion from being passed by talking out the bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I call attention of hon. members to the fact that if hon. members wish to move a motion, they are at liberty to do so. The rules require that the motion be put in writing to the Chair. At this stage no hon. member appears to be observing the rules. Therefore, under the circumstances, the Chair recognizes the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Kelly).

Mr. Norman Kelly (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, it is my role this afternoon to offer a detailed technical analysis of a number of clauses of the hon. member's bill, specifically clauses 5 through 8. But before I do so, I would like to comment briefly on the challenge issued by the hon. member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) who said, as members of his party are often wont to do, that if we do not agree with their interpretation of this bill, it must mean we are against either the substance or the attitudes expressed in the bill. He reminded me of arguments that children often bring to bear in debate with people senior to them, that if you do not agree with me on this argument, then you do not love me.

I point out that there may be many areas of agreement between him and his party and myself and my party but it does not mean, because I do not vote in favour of this bill, that I do not share or sympathize with him in the larger areas. I do, and we do. This is a very complex bill.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Send the subject matter to committee.

Mr. Kelly: For that reason, I want to look at a number of clauses and share with the House some of my personal feelings about the contents of those clauses.

The principle that the state has no business in the bedrooms or boudoirs of the nation is a valid principle. It is one with which I am sure all members of this House would agree and with which I think most of the public would agree. But as with all principles, there must be limiting conditions. For example, the limiting condition neglected by clauses 7 and 8 of Bill C-242 which, in effect, repeal the offence of gross indecency—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. According to interpretations normally extended, private members hour has now expired at this point.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In view of the interest in this debate and the several very good speeches that have been made, would there be unanimous consent for us to proceed until five o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to continue the sitting until five o'clock this afternoon?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There being no unanimous consent, this House stands adjourned until Monday next at two o'clock in the afternoon pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 4.46 p.m. the House adjourned without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

AGRICULTURE

RECORD RAINFALL IN LOWER MAINLAND OF BRITISH COLUMBIA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that the 1937 record of 258 millimetres of rainfall has now been surpassed in the lower mainland of British Columbia by a new record of 331 millimetres, which has caused severe problems for farmers in the Fraser Valley, as many fruit and vegetable farmers are unable to plant their crops, while others are having seeds rot or wash away, and recognizing the $81 million paid to grain farmers, subsidies to the textile industry, etc., I move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon):

That the Minister of Agriculture take immediate action to ease the plight of the Fraser Valley farmers who face a minimum $15 million loss and are in a disaster situation because of the record amount of rainfall.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT

FUNDING FOR NORTHERN GAMES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas the Government of Canada expects to receive a whopping revenue from the resource development of the north, lands mostly occupied by native peoples, and whereas the funding of the Northern Games has been cut off because of ministerial disputes and miserly considerations, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson):

That this House impress upon the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development the fact that without funding the Northern Games will not take place and that this will be a grievous and not to be forgotten slap in the face by this Liberal government to Canada's native peoples.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HOUSING

REGISTERED HOME OWNERSHIP SAVINGS PLAN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, because of the rapidly rising costs of housing, and in view of the record high Liberal government induced inflationary rate, and whereas the tax exemption levels for the registered home ownership savings plan have not been increased since the plan originated for the 1974 taxation year, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That this House instruct the Minister of Finance to raise the levels that one may contribute to the registered home ownership savings plan on a prorated basis comparable to the rate of inflation since 1974.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CONDEMNATION OF LOWERING OF UNITED STATES CLEAN AIR STANDARDS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of very urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that the United States Environmental Protection Agency has defended recommendations that the U.S. Clean Air Act be weakened to such an extent that individual states will be able to compete for the lowest possible air quality standards in order to attract acid rain polluting industries, and in view of the fact that these proposals are a sellout of the environmental heritage of Canadians and American and fly in the face of work being done to achieve a clean air treaty between Canada and the United States, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

S.O. 43

That this House severely censure Anne Gorsuch, the U.S. EPA administrator, and strongly urge the Minister of the Environment to communicate the outrage of this House and all Canadians at the attempt to scuttle the work of the Canadian and U.S. governments in their attempt to reach a treaty on the limitation of long-range trans-boundary air pollutants.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADA DAY

PYROTECHNICS IN THE LAND OF THE MIDNIGHT SUN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I would like to introduce the following motion. Whereas the Department of the Secretary of State has insisted on spending $83,000 of the taxpayers' money on a fireworks display at Yellowknife, and a similar amount in Whitehorse, to celebrate the ill-fated, ill-considered, and non-existent Trudeau Constitution; and whereas at the same time the government is cutting down on funding to sports events such as the Northern Games, to education, to public works, and needed programs to combat personal economic hardships caused by policies of the Liberal government, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen):

That this House begs to advise the honourable the Secretary of State that there are better uses for his $83,000 and, secondly, that fireworks do not show up too well at mid-summer in the land of the midnight sun, and even Grits should know that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

FISHERIES DISPUTE AT RESTIGOUCHE RESERVE, P.Q.—REFERRAL TO COMMITTEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, and in view of the very serious situation which has developed on the Restigouche Indian reserve in Quebec, particularly as it concerns this government and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro), and in light of the urgent need for a mediated solution to this escalating fisheries dispute, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That this House immediately provide the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development with a reference to investigate the situation forthwith, travel if necessary to the reserve, and report its findings to this House.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

HOUSEHOLDER MAILING BY MR. BOCKSTAEL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. A recent householder put out by the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Bockstael) praised the National Energy Program as stimulating security, opportunity and fairness.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKenzie: Whereas to date this policy has completely shut down Manitoba's 10,000 barrels per day oil production, driven hundreds of businesses out of Canada, forced Canadians to pay world prices for oil rather than buying it at $23 per barrel cheaper in Canada, and will cost a projected 60,000 Canadians their jobs, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga):

That the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs initiate an immediate investigation into the completely misleading nature of this publication which violates all accepted codes of honesty and objectivity, and also that the hon. member for St. Boniface re-examine the true meaning of the words security, opportunity and fairness.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

SMALL BUSINESS

CALL FOR RAISING OF PREFERRED TAX RATE CEILING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a small business matter I have discussed with representatives of all parties, for which I request unanimous support. Since the preferred tax rate ceiling for small businesses and the accompanying limit on retained earnings for small businesses were set in 1976 and ought to be adjusted now for inflation, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That this House urge the Minister of Finance to give consideration to raising the preferred tax rate ceiling and the accompanying retained earnings limit for Canadian small businesses.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

PETRO-CANADA'S ACQUISITION OF PETROFINA—CALL FOR JUDICIAL INQUIRY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I rise to underscore allegations which have arisen from the purchase of Petrofina by the federal government. There is strong evidence of handsome windfall profits to insiders who may have benefited from advance information. There is a report that 91 senior employees of Petrofina netted over $10 million in profits through a company stock option plan. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) is on record as promising an internal investigation. This is tantamount to placing the cookie monster in charge of investigating missing cookies. This is far too serious a matter for a departmental or ministerial whitewash. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga):

That the Prime Minister act immediately to commence a judicial inquiry into the allegations that insiders profited from the sale of Petrofina to the Government of Canada, with the Canadian taxpayer picking up the tab.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BILINGUALISM

APPLICATION OF TWO OFFICIAL LANGUAGES POLICY IN OTTAWA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to request the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion concerning a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

SECOR, a private firm commissioned by the federal government to compare the French presence in the private sector in Montreal to that in the federal public service, has concluded that in many major Montreal companies there is French and English parity at the communications level and that there is a higher proportion of French-speaking executives than in the federal public service. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That this government finally implement, through its official languages policy, what it has been preaching for so many years and that federal departments with headquarters in Ottawa apply this policy which consists in operating in both official languages and offering better job opportunities to French-speaking executives.

Madam Speaker: Such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

MEASURES TO DEAL WITH INFLATION

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It concerns a letter which one of my constituents wrote him. It is a "Dear Allan" letter, asking for his suggestions on how Canadians should deal with inflation. My constituent, a single parent, asked the Minister of Finance:

Since I am now working at two jobs, seven days a week ... I would much appreciate your suggestions on how to tighten the belt that I cannot afford to buy.

She indicated that she buys her clothes at thrift stores, and that working seven days a week means there is not any recreation. She asked what other items she can do without, or how she can add some hours of work to earn a little more income.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has read from a letter. I will be glad to answer letters in the normal way. On orders of the day I do not intend to adopt a new practice of replying to letters. They should be dealt with in the normal way.

• (1415)

CONCERNS OF MEMBER'S CONSTITUENT

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Minister of Finance. I am sorry he cannot be more explicit to my constituent, but I suppose his mind is still clouded by his attempts to explain to his OECD colleagues why our economic performance last year of 0.0 economic growth rate ranked twentieth out of 24 nations.

Since there is a great deal of national interest in the nature of the minister's advice, I would like to pursue the question raised by my constituent in her letter. She goes on:

When the owners of the apartment block in which I am living refinance their mortgage I expect my rent to go up quite significantly. Unless I can find some way to pay this increased rental, my daughter and I will have to leave the apartment, and believe me, in Vancouver there is no place to go.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Miss Carney: What measures is the minister prepared to introduce to deal with the concerns of my constituent?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): I have already indicated, with respect to individuals who may be confronted with mortgage payments which are beyond their capacity, that the financial institutions would bend over backward to assist them over this particular situation.

Mr. Clark: This is a rental situation.

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member has raised the question of rental accommodation. It is not my intention at the present time to introduce a new program, because of the financial circumstances of the government.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

INCREASE IN INTEREST RATES

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. On Saturday a young couple visited my office. In 1976 they bought an AHOP home with a 10 per cent CMHC mortgage. Financial assistance from the government brought the mortgage interest rate to 6 per cent. Last week CMHC graciously offered to renew the mortgage at 18 per cent. The monthly payments will leap from $174 per month to $444 per month. The minister has suggested that he has talked to the banks. I would ask him if he has talked to CMHC since it is the mortgagee in both cases. What does he expect a young couple to do without losing their home?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, it was in direct response to situations such as the one the hon. member has specifically referred to that the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, with the assistance of the government last year, and again this year, introduced a program to protect people who might be faced with costs which were unreasonable, too high, or above the average which most Canadians are required to pay toward maintaining shelter needs.

In the case outlined by the hon. member, or in other cases where the amount of a person's income, or family income, required to meet shelter costs which go toward principal, interest and taxes that exceed 30 per cent of their income, the program provided for the government to continue its assistance to those needy couples. I hope that the specific case mentioned by the hon. member will be brought to the attention of the local officials of CMHC, to see if they qualify for aid.

BANKS AND BANKING

QUERY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Finance. It is about the Minister of Agriculture who is on a crocodile tear tour across the country. He spoke in Nukko Lake, British Columbia a few days ago, and he said this:

—some serious work is being done about changing the banking system in this country.

He also said:

—the government will change the banking system if the chartered banks don't do something to help farmers.

My question to the Minister of Finance is this: who speaks for the government in matters affecting the banks, interest rates and fiscal and monetary policy? If it is still the Minister of Finance, did he authorize that statement of the Minister of Agriculture? Would the minister tell us if the government is seriously planning to change the banking system in this country? Would he tell us what it is the chartered banks are supposed to do to help farmers, particularly when the government's own bank is charging 21 per cent to 23 per cent on its loans? I wonder whether the minister would answer and clear this up because the Minister of Agriculture is usurping his position, or pretends to, across the country.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, a similar question was asked several days ago. I stated then, and I repeat now, that if there is any plan or any new announcement to be made about the banking system, it will be made in the normal way.

However, I want to tell the hon. member that we have already completed, just in this session, a revision of the Bank Act, which took several years. It is not my intention to reopen that act at the present time. That is a statement which I have already made, and which does not contradict in any way, as I read it, the comments made by the Minister of Agriculture which may have—

Mr. Clark: Except 100 per cent.

Mr. MacEachen: —which may have been erroneously reported. It sometimes happens.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, the minister, then, is saying that the Minister of Agriculture was incorrect, if he did make these statements that the government plans changes in the banking system. The minister knows that the Minister of Agriculture is going around the country trying to pretend that the government is concerned about interest rates for farmers.

INCOME TAX

PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY'S STATEMENT ON INDEXING

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): In addition to the Minister of Agriculture, the minister's own parliamentary assistant has said, on the weekend, that the government is not seriously considering abolishing the indexing of income taxes in its October budget. He said the subject has never been regarded as a realistic option. The minister has said to this House, and his deputy has said to senate committees, that this was a serious option. Is the parliamentary secretary to the minister now setting government policy? Will the minister tell us is his parliamentary secretary correct, and that the minister is not seriously considering the abolition of indexing, and that it has never been regarded as a realistic option? Who is the minister? Or is the minister just a Deputy Prime Minister who is paying no attention at all to financial matters?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): It is obvious, Madam Speaker, that the hon. member is not paying very much attention to the accuracy of the comments he uses in his questions. I have a quotation from the parliamentary secretary, which is in quotation marks—

Mr. Nielsen: Source?

Mr. MacEachen: —and which reads as follows:

"I can tell you with total and complete honesty that I have not seen anything—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: He is as dishonest as André Ouellet.

Mr. MacEachen: This is a quotation from the Montreal Gazette of Monday, June 22, 1981, attributed to the parliamentary secretary, which goes on to say:

—I have not seen anything that would lead me to believe that the government is seriously considering this at this time—

If that is not a very guarded statement, I do not know what is.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION AGAINST INDIAN AND METIS WORKERS AT OCHRE RIVER, MAN.

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Madam Speaker, my question, in the absence of the Minister of Transport, is directed to the Minister of Labour. Considering the fact that a number of Indians and Metis in Manitoba are planning to blockade the CNR tracks outside Dauphin today because of alleged discrimination while working for the CNR, is the minister prepared to investigate independently the incident at Ochre River where 25 CNR extra-gang employees left their job due to discrimination?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question. I must quite honestly say to him, through Your Honour, that I am not aware of this incident, but that I certainly will make inquiries in relation to the department. The hon. member will quickly recognize that, if these are unionized employees, they have remedies under the collective agreement, and also of course under human rights. However, not having enough background, I am unable to say to the hon. member at this moment that I would have a formal investigation made. What I would undertake is to make inquiries immediately into the situation, and based upon the facts, as they are ascertained, take whatever action is appropriate.

● (1425)

ACTIONS OF RAILWAY FOREMAN

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Madam Speaker, these are extra-gang employees who would not be unionized. However, my supplementary question is for the same minister. Indian and Métis employees on the extra-gang at Ochre River state that they were called "dogs and pigs" and that the CNR foreman carried a stick or club while making his rounds among the men while carrying out his investigation. Would the minister specifically address this issue of Indian harassment and the CNR's handling of this incident, with a mind to redressing the grievances that have been expressed?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, the hon. member will note that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is now also in the House. I will seek an opportunity (a) to discuss the issue with him, and (b), I would appreciate any further information that the hon. member is able to give me after question period. I will see to it that appropriate steps are taken.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PROTECTION FOR MICMAC FISHERMEN ON RESTIGOUCHE RESERVE, P.Q.

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and it concerns the situation at Restigouche. The minister was asked on several occasions, as was the Prime Minister, to send aid to the Micmacs at the Restigouche reserve. He went down over the weekend and told them that he could not provide help to them in the form of protection, but that his very presence on the reserve offered protection. Now that he is not on the reserve, could he tell us what protection the Micmac Indians have at Restigouche at the present time?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I do not think the hon. member's preamble is very accurate. What I said is that I could not afford protection of the kind that I think some people, in their justifiably concerned state, were asking for, in terms of more alarms and talk about guns, tanks and so on. I do not believe that that was going to assist the situation in any possible way.

There is no question, though, that there is a good deal of fright permeating that entire community. I indicated that on my return here I would talk to my colleague, the Solicitor General, with respect to the return of the nets to the band. I have not had an opportunity to do so yet. Also, my officials had talks with the Quebec provincial police. They indicated that probably as of today they would be withdrawing the very heavy contingent of Quebec provincial police that are not on the reserve—they have not come on the reserve since June 11, but they are surrounding the reserve—that they would be withdrawing those people today. I am checking, and I am told that they have not been withdrawn yet. We are still hopeful that they will be withdrawn today.

As far as any further action that may be required is concerned, we are monitoring the situation each day. I had indicated that on my return I would be getting together with my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, to examine the nature of the application of the regulations under the Fisheries Act. I have not had a chance to do that, but I will be doing it later today. It is on that basis the Quebec police are founding their jurisdiction to take the action they have. I indicated to that delegation that I would like to have an opportunity to review and examine the situation with the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): I wish to ask a supplementary question, Madam Speaker. The Minister knows that according to the constitutional resolution the question of aboriginal rights is to be settled or at least to be discussed at the first two first ministers' meetings. In view of the fact that the provinces will have a tremendous amount of input into these discussions in describing aboriginal rights, and that the whole question at Restigouche is over aboriginal rights, if this is the way that the Quebec government sees fit to deal with people on the question of aboriginal rights, what hope do the Indians of Canada have as far as having aboriginal rights described in any way that would be beneficial to them?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I have not had an opportunity to get into any type of philosophical discussion with the Quebec government with respect to aboriginal rights, certainly not at this stage. I would hope that the question would be addressed and that we would find out how that province and other provinces feel with respect to it, during the second stage. The Indian people on the reserve, as well as I myself, feel that in the interval a more adequate way to deal with it on an immediate basis is through an examination of the application of the regulations under the federal Fisheries Act which is being enforced by the province of Quebec.

TRADITIONAL FISHING RIGHTS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, as a supplementary question, is it the position of the Government of Canada that the native people of Restigouche have existing rights, under treaty, to carry out traditional fishing as they have carried out that fishing for years?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, to remove all doubt with respect to that is one of the reasons that the government went along with, and is quite happy with, the provision that is in the constitutional resolution now before the Supreme Court, that would ensure recognition of aboriginal and treaty rights. I think it is unfortunate that the official opposition could not see fit to be more enthusiastic with respect to that position.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, what the official opposition was anxious to do was to ensure that the courts of Canada had the right to consider that question before the Constitution was shipped off to another country.

• (1430)

POSITION OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, if I might come back to the particular matter having to do with the controversy at Restigouche, with the rights of the native people and the obligation of the federal government to protect those native people, I asked a very specific question about the view of the Government of Canada concerning fishing rights under treaty of the native people at Restigouche, I would appreciate an answer as to the position of the Government of Canada on that specific matter.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, the independent legal advice I received, and I took one lawyer with me who is an expert in his field for the federal government—I just heard an interjection which I think was most unbecoming from an hon. member in view of the total retraction of The Toronto Sun. It did not seem to deter that member from involving himself in innuendo and smear comments about two weeks ago.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): In any event, the Indian lawyers who were on the reserve, together with our own legal advice, coincided with respect to this particular matter, that a by-law passed by the band would supersede the regulations under the Indian Act. However, the courts have interpreted now that this would not apply out into the Restigouche River, five or six feet offshore. Obviously that would not solve the problem with regard to fishing in the Restigouche River.

The courts have not been overly helpful from the Indian perspective in terms of recognition of their treaty rights. The feeling on the part of the Indian people and ourselves is that the solution lies in the application of the fishing regulations for now until constitutional provisions of the nature I have just discussed are firmly enshrined in the Constitution.

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the minister will know that earlier today my colleague, the hon. member for Cariboo-Chilcotin, moved a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43 suggesting that the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development be given an assignment, directed by the Government of Canada, to interest itself in this question. This is a matter which is of interest to the whole House of Commons, not just to the government, because the federal government has a traditional, historical and essential role in the protection of the rights of Indian people. Would the minister give us an undertaking now that he will make such a reference to the standing committee so that representatives on all sides of this House, representing the federal interest in protecting the rights of native people, will be able to be involved in this question?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I do not think a formal reference is necessary because of the nature of the committee. The chairman and members of the steering committee are here in the House. During the discussions and my appearances before the committee, if they had wished to, hon. members could have gone thoroughly into questions of this kind. I believe members of the opposition leader's own party would agree there has been no hesitation about thoroughly examining that question, and I am quite prepared to do so with them.

PROTECTION FOR MICMAC FISHERMEN DURING REMAINDER OF SALMON FISHING SEASON

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the same minister on the same important subject matter. The minister knows two important things with regard to the Micmac Indians at Restigouche, first, that the issue of treaty rights and regulations is involved and, second, there are only three weeks left in the salmon season.

Would the minister give the House the federal government's unequivocal assurance, because it is the federal government's responsibility, that it will ensure Micmac Indians have the right, for the next three weeks, to finish out the current season in safety, to be followed by a period of negotiations in which the Micmac Indians have indicated they are interested, dealing with, among other matters, conservation for the future? Surely these people's rights should be protected for the next three weeks.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, that is the very objective I have under way on my return today. I tried to indicate that earlier. There has been some indication, I hope solid indication, from the Quebec government and the provincial police that they are prepared to withdraw. There is an offer on the table for discussion between the Indian leadership and the Quebec authorities, which discussion I hope will take place in the interval. It is my intent, during the course of today and tomorrow, to discuss the immediate question of affording the Indian people an opportunity to carry on fishing there for the remaining short time which the Leader of the New Democratic Party just indicated.

I have not had an opportunity to get those discussions under way, but I will be talking to my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, and to my colleague, the Solicitor General, hopefully today and tomorrow, to see just exactly what can be done to attain that objective.

Mr. Broadbent: We hope those rights will be protected for the next three weeks.

LACK OF EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES ON RESERVE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have another question which has a direct bearing on the Micmac Indians. Considering that unemployment on that reserve is in excess of 80 per cent, could the minister tell the House why his department has not yet replied, indeed has not even acknowledged, a request from the Micmac, made in April, for a housing project which would have provided both housing and jobs? Furthermore, why has his department made no progress at all on a two-year-old request for a sawmill on that reserve which would have provided employment opportunities for the Indians?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, as far as the chief and the band council are concerned, the question which the Leader of the New Democratic Party is asking now, in terms of all my meetings, was not high on the list of priorities during the past weekend. That is not to indicate the unemployment situation on that reserve is not serious. It is.

I am sure the Leader of the New Democratic Party must be aware that there is a capital amount for the Quebec region for this fiscal year, voted by Parliament, which is applicable to all the reserves in that province on the same basis as all the other reserves, and the funds unfortunately have to be rationed. There is an endeavour to make those capital funds, whether for sawmills or any other economic activity, equally proportionate among all the reserves in the province. I believe the chief and the band council recognize that. I believe there have been discussions with the Quebec region with respect to the allocation in the capital budget for that reserve during this fiscal year.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, it is pretty obvious that during the past 48 hours there was not discussion of this particular point because they were interested in preserving their fishing rights for now. But I can tell the minister the Micmac Indians brought their general economic situation, the terrible situation that it is, to my attention, and that is why I have brought it before the minister today.

INTRODUCTION OF GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my final question is for the Minister of Finance. He indicated last week that he was tired of dealing with general economic questions and was more interested in particulars. Since almost every aspect of existence of our native peoples of Canada, whether it is unemployment levels, conditions of housing, or average life expectation, is right at the bottom, could the minister name one special program which the government is prepared to bring in soon that will improve their general economic condition?

Mr. Crosbie: Go and see the banks, Allan.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is obviously correct in his assessment of the condition which prevails among the native people of Canada. No one disagrees with the big job that is facing this country in attempting to raise their living standards and to provide for greater economic development. I do not need to be told this by the hon. member.

Mr. Broadbent: When are you going to do something about it?

Mr. MacEachen: I have Indian reservations in my own constituency.

Mr. Crosbie: There are a lot of reservations about you.

Mr. MacEachen: I know first-hand about conditions. The responsibility for the allocation of funds for all social programs within the government is assigned to the committee on social development. In the envelope system over the next number of years, an increase in total social expenditures has been projected of about $8 billion. It is within that over-all amount that ministers must make the difficult choices as to how they will allocate these funds among many pressing priorities, including the needs of the Indian people.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): And purchasing Petrofina.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

JOURNALISTS' STRIKE—REQUEST THAT MINISTER STUDY THE PROPOSALS OF UNION AND MEDIATOR

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State and Minister of Communications. First I should like to commend the minister for the representations he made to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation with a view to ending as soon as possible the journalists' labour dispute. However, a CBC spokesman, Mr. Rousseau, has stated that negotiations broke down on two minor points. Since a settlement is so near, is the minister prepared to urge the CBC to make a last ditch effort and seriously consider the proposals from both the union and the mediator?

Hon. Francis Fox (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, if I heard correctly the question of the hon. member concerning the striking CBC journalists and the latest offers made to them, I should like to inform him that, according to the information given to me by the corporation, the union, of course, now has the latest offer from the corporation and wants to consult its members tomorrow, June 23.

COMMUNICATIONS

BROADCAST COVERAGE OF ECONOMIC SUMMIT MEETINGS

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, we are not asking him to settle the dispute personally, for we are sure he could do so if he wanted. As a supplementary question, I would like to ask the minister whether he knows what the CBC French network intends to do about the French news coverage of the economic summit if unfortunately this labour dispute should drag on. In addition, are there any plans to use the Ottawa based parliamentary reporters and freelance reporters to cover that event? Finally, what about coverage by the English network?

Hon. Francis Fox (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, the CBC French network had to discuss that matter with the union of English-speaking technicians. The corporation asked the union if it would be possible to secure a guarantee that the CBC will be able to play its role on the occasion of the summit. The corporation has informed me today that it was unable to obtain such guarantees from the union and that it will have to revise its position. I expect that Crown corporation to make an announcement on the subject perhaps today or tomorrow.

HEALTH

TESTING OF PESTICIDES

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Madam Speaker, there was a report over the weekend of improper safety tests conducted by some 2,000 laboratories in the United States. The results of these tests have been used by governments around the world to register pesticides for sale. Will the Minister of National Health and Welfare inform the House whether the results of any of these tests conducted by these companies were used in Canada as the basis for approving certain pesticides? If so, what steps are being taken to examine these products so as to determine which should be withdrawn from the market?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, we are familiar with the problem referred to by the hon. member. We expect to receive, probably at the end of the calendar year, the assessment of the studies done by these industrial laboratories other than IBT which have been assessed by the American food and drug administration as not being valid. We do not yet have these reports. However, we have been informed that they are short-term studies not central to our registration process of pesticides. As soon as we receive these assessments, we will identify the Canadian companies and those products sold in Canada which used this data for their registration process. We will then act accordingly.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

STEPS TO INCREASE ENROLMENT IN RESERVES—TAXATION OF SALARIES

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. The reserves in Canada, which play a very important role in our armed forces, are under strength, some would say dangerously so. Has the minister given consideration to encouraging increased enrolment by recommending to his cabinet colleagues that the income tax on salaries of reservists be discontinued? If not, why not?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, it has been stated several times by the Chief of Defence Staff and myself that one of the priorities of the armed forces and my department is to try to improve the status of the reserves. I can advise the hon. member that some units that previously were not up to full strength are now up to full strength. We are trying to encourage businessmen to help in any way they can to facilitate their employees joining the reserves.

With regard to the hon. member's question about discontinuing the income tax, I suggest he direct that question to the finance minister because it is related to financial policy. However, I would again stress that we are doing everything possible to encourage people to join the reserves. We are well aware that it is very important to our regular forces to have the proper back-up.

Mr. McDermid: I think the answer is no, it has not yet been considered. This policy is now followed in Australia and their reserves have increased by 14,000.

I will direct my supplementary to the Minister of Finance. Will the minister and his cabinet colleagues give consideration to such a proposal so that our reserves in Canada might be increased?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, all tax changes are reviewed prior to the budget. I will be pleased to add that to the other matters that will be considered.

BANKS AND BANKING

CREDIT ALLOCATION SYSTEM

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The minister will know that with the restrictive monetary policy restricting the growth of the money supply, with his demands on the money market for money to finance the government's deficit, and with the increased demand by the private sector, in view of perhaps the improving business conditions, the only method of determining who gets the money is to determine who can pay the price. Has the minister had any discussion with the banks with regard to some credit allocation system to ensure that farmers, small businessmen and home owners are able to get their share of the credit supply without having to bid against the multinationals, business people making big takeovers, and the government, for that money supply?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have already had discussions with representatives of the banks in which I pointed out to them the difficulties that might be faced by certain home owners renegotiating their mortgages, and by small businessmen and farmers. I have received assurances that in particularly difficult cases the banks will, to use their expression, lean over backwards to be accommodating. The hon. member raises another particular point, namely, the reallocation of credit, which is somewhat different but related to the main subject.

FINANCING OF CORPORATE TAKEOVERS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, the minister will know that large borrowings of over $1 million from the banking system are up 36 per cent this year, that a great deal of that borrowing has been to finance takeovers, and that today with inflation it is cheaper to buy an existing asset than to create new one. That is why the government bought Petrofina. Rather than create a new oil company, it bought an old one. That type of thing does nothing to increase productivity in Canada. Is the government prepared to direct the banks not to continue financing these kinds of takeovers but to use its credit to ensure that new business, new activity and new productivity in Canada are enhanced and improved?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, it is obvious from statistics on the rate of growth and production, both in the first quarter of this year and in the last quarter of 1980, that the very large volumes of funds which are being borrowed at the present time are adding to the over-all production of the country. That is evident in the statistics which were released at the weekend with respect to the first quarter, which show that, depending upon which series of statistics one accepts, real growth in production was either 4 per cent or 6 per cent, and that is very considerable at the present time.

THE ECONOMY

STATEMENTS MADE BY LEADER OF LIBERAL PARTY IN ONTARIO

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance. Is the minister aware of the statement made over the weekend by the leader of the Liberal party in Ontario to the effect that inflation is a Robin Hood in reverse; that it robs the poor and benefits the rich? Is he also aware of the suggestion made by the leader of the Liberal party in Ontario that therefore the federal government should collect more taxes from the rich so that it will have the funds to increase pensions and provide benefits for the needy?

Will he in particular accept the suggestion of the leader of the Liberal party in Ontario that there be a full capital gains tax exempting only the home one lives in, and will he do something about the fact that there are more than 2,000 wealthy Canadians who pay no income tax at all?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the hon. member knows that at the present time there is a progressive income tax system in Canada, and that is very much in line with the objectives of the leader of the Liberal party in Ontario. However, I remind the hon. member and other hon. members that, because of the type of taxing system and indexation system we have in place at the present time, in a period of inflation the poorest groups, those most exposed, are virtually fully protected against inflation, and the amount of that protection each year exceeds hundreds of millions of dollars. We have in place a safety net which accomplishes a good part of the hon. member's objective.

Mr. Knowles: Madam Speaker, I think it is time my friend assumed the role of minister of myths. He keeps handing us this nonsense about the poor being fully protected. He tells us we have a progressive income tax system. How does he square that with the fact that more than 2,000 wealthy Canadians pay no income tax at all?

LOW INTEREST RATE PAID ON GOVERNMENT ANNUITIES

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, with respect to one particular group which is feeling the pinch and getting no indexing, may I remind the minister that the holders of Canadian government annuities had the basic rate for calculating those annuities increased to 7 per cent in 1975 but that that rate has stayed at 7 per cent ever since? Since the minister has so much to say about indexing and protecting people, will he arrange for the rate on government annuities to be increased so that those pensioners will also be protected?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, one would hesitate to compete with the New Democratic Party in the creation and proliferation of myths. The hon. member is up to the same old game his leader played the other day when he talked about the taxes paid by banks. Obviously the taxes in certain circumstances paid by banks are less than they would be if they were not asked to support desirable social policies like the small business development bond. That is one of the big reasons why the banks in these circumstances are not paying the tax they otherwise would pay.

Hon. members in the New Democratic Party get up one day and ask me to extend the provisions of the small business development bond, and then the next day they complain because the banks are not taking a full tax load.

Mr. Knowles: What about government annuities?

IMMIGRATION

INCREASE IN AID TO VOLUNTARY COMMUNITY ORGANIZATIONS

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Last week in a press release the minister announced that an additional $4.3 million had been approved to assist Indo-Chinese refugees. He also announced that of that amount $927,000 would fund activities of various voluntary community organizations under the Immigrant Settlement and Adaptation Program. I wonder if the minister can tell the House whether the increases announced last week will bring funding under ISAP to the various immigrant services associations—and I speak specifically of those in the province of British Columbia—up to the rate of funding of last year, or will it still be under that rate of funding?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the additional moneys which were allocated for the ISAP will in fact raise the level of funding beyond that of last year. We have written to the different ISAP organizations indicating that there has now been an augmentation of the funding and that our regional offices will be in touch with each of the voluntary organizations to work out their budgetary requirements. That does not mean to say that every organization will necessarily receive the same amount because I believe that, for reasons of accountability, we should go back and review the performance of each of the organizations. However, certainly the total sum is larger than it was last year, and most of the organizations will be receiving funding comparable to what they received so that they can continue a very important service.

Mr. Fraser: Madam Speaker, I thank the minister for his reply and, in posing the next question, I am sure it would be appropriate to point out that the increased load these immigrant services associations are carrying is such that even added on last year's funding this will not be sufficient.

TIMING OF PAYMENTS

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, may I ask the minister how soon these various organizations will know definitely how much money they are getting? They are running out, and they are in serious difficulty.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, letters from my office went out last week informing them of the additional moneys, and in them I also indicated that our regional offices would be looking at each of the proposals and applications, reviewing them and getting back to those organizations as soon as possible. I do not expect any long delay because we already know about most of the programs, so they should be informed within a very short period of time. I hope it will be within a matter of about a week or two.

INCOME TAX

TAX AUDIT OF FISHERMEN IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, and it has to do with the special audit of Atlantic fishermen by his colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, and Revenue Canada. A telegram today from the government of Newfoundland to the minister's colleague indicates that over 1,400 fishermen have received their party demands by which 50 per cent of their gross incomes are being deducted, leaving many fishermen, some of them with large families, with as little as $60 a week to get by on. That does not seem to be fair, I am sure not even to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. I am sure he would agree that situation cannot continue.

The minister was in Newfoundland last week with his colleague. Was this matter discussed? Is he prepared to intervene on behalf of these fishermen to see that they receive fair and equitable treatment?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is correct. I spent two days—Thursday and Friday—in Newfoundland. We had public meetings with four or five groups of fishermen, which went on for an hour and a half or two hours. There were questions from the floor on a whole variety of issues. In most of those meetings my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, was present with me. This question was not raised. The fishermen did not raise the question. If the minister of fisheries of the government of Newfoundland has sent a telegram, I have not seen the telegram. I can only say to the hon. member that I have seen the fishermen. They did not raise this question with either my colleague or myself.

TREATMENT OF FISHERMEN

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, the minister knows that he has in fact received representations from the Newfoundland fishermen's union. He now knows that there has been a telegram from the minister of fisheries of Newfoundland to the Minister of National Revenue in which he points out the seriousness of the situation. Many fishermen will be forced to go on social assistance. They could very well be deprived of the right to provide for basic essentials for their families. We must assume that the situation is correctly described by his provincial colleague.

Therefore, notwithstanding the minister's reply to my previous question, is he prepared to get in touch with his colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, to determine just exactly whether there is this kind of what I would call harassment of the fishermen taking place during a season when they have all kinds of other problems to contend with, including high interest rates and high fuel rates?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I have not seen recent messages from the fishermen's union. I, of course, would read them very carefully when and if they are brought to my attention. As for the avalanche of telegrams that I get from my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries for Newfoundland, I must confess that I assume nothing until I check the facts very carefully.

Mr. Clark: What contempt.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 1,546, 2,426, 2,458 and 2,475.

I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

PAYMENT OF CONTRACTOR'S FINAL ACCOUNT

Question No. 1,546—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What is the average length of time, after the completion of a contract allotted by the Department of Supply and Services, between submission of the contractor's final account and the issuance of the necessary cheque to the contractor?

2. Is the government aware as to whether or not a number of members of Parliament are receiving complaints alleging that in many cases a number of months elapse?

3. Will the government take steps to speed up the process and, if so (a) in what way (b) on what date?

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Supply and Services as follows:

1. During 1979-80 fiscal year, the payments made out of the supply revolving fund amounted to about 7 per cent of the value of the contracts allotted by the Department of Supply and Services. Of this, 76.5 per cent was paid between 0-30 days, 23 per cent between 31-60 days and 0.5 per cent over 60 days. The average length of time, from the date invoices were received in the department to the cheque date, was 29 calendar days. It should be noted that cheques are issued by Supply and Services Canada on the average within three days upon receipt of a requisition for payment from government departments. Supply and Services Canada has no control over the time it takes for supplier invoices to be processed by other government departments prior to forwarding of requisitions for payment to our district services offices for cheque issue.

2. It is only very seldom that we hear either from the suppliers or members of Parliament complaining about delayed payments.

3. The government, of course, is very concerned that it may be causing hardship to some firms that supply it with goods and services due to a slower than necessary payment process. Officials of the office of the Comptroller General, the Department of Supply and Services, and of the small business secretariat are currently examining a number of alternative approaches to streamlining and otherwise improving the payments process. Any comment on the timing and details of possible changes would be premature at this time. However, the government intends to take action on this matter in the near future.

OPEN HOUSE PROGRAM GRANTS

Question No. 2,426—Mr. Herbert:

2. Did the Department of the Secretary of State grant monies under the program to L'Ecole Secondaire de Vaudreuil and, if so (a) on what date (b) in what amount (c) for what purpose?

Mr. Peter Stollery (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): 1. See summary of grants below.

2. Date	Amount	Purpose
April 26, 1978 (trip took place in April)	$8,468	Travel grant for an exchange visit with the Port Moody Senior Secondary School, in Port Moody, B.C.

HEALTH CARE

Question No. 2,475—Mr. Herbert:

1. What is the latest estimate of the cost of all health care in Canada as a percentage of the gross national product and, of this expenditure, what is the percentage contribution of all levels of government?

2. Is the government aware of the comparable percentages in the United States?

Mr. Doug Frith (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. It is estimated that in 1980 total health care spending in Canada accounted for approximately 7.3 per cent of the gross national product. This represents an increase from the 1979 level of 7.1 per cent. Aggregate government health expenditures last year accounted for about 73 per cent of national health spending.

2. Comparable American figures published by the health care financing administration establish total health spending in the U.S. at 9 per cent of the gross national product in 1979. It is estimated that government health spending in the U.S. accounts for about 43 per cent of national health spending.

CORPORATIONS AND LABOUR UNIONS RETURNS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Wednesday, June 17, consideration of the motion of Mr. Blais that Bill S-10, to amend the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, when I last spoke on this bill on June 17, I commented on the fact that the information we have with respect to corporate salaries and executive compensation in general is totally inadequate, indeed non-existent. It is not simply the Canadian public who do not have access to this information, it is the shareholders of our largest corporations. This information is of direct concern not simply to the public and government, but also to shareholders of these companies.

We go through an annual ritual in this House, Madam Speaker, when the Securities and Exchange Commission in the United States releases certain information respecting executive compensation. That commission is required by law to release figures on executive compensation by companies subject to its jurisdiction. We as Canadians have access to that information, as any individual does, and so every year we get a glimpse of the extent of increases in that compensation and some idea as to what executives are being paid these days. The figures are indeed shocking. They show that for the last year the increases amounted to some 30 per cent on average; that the most senior executives in our largest companies are paid anywhere from $250,000 to $1 million a year in salary and benefits. We also discover that there is another class of benefits which is harder to measure but nevertheless has to be declared on the SEC form, that of deferred compensation and deferred benefits which excuse the executives from paying income tax.

We have these schemes in Canada and it was with respect to some of them that my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), was asking today: Well, why does not the government stop deferring this compensation, start collecting the taxes and provide benefits for those Canadians in need? The minister then went off on a tangent talking about the small business development bond and the banks, two totally unrelated subjects.

By the way, Mr. Speaker, the small business development bond has not existed long enough to have any effect on the rate of taxes paid by the banks. If he does not know and understand that, and know that the reason the banks are paying such a low level of tax has to do with the income debenture system which has been part of the Liberal system of taxation throughout the entire decade of the Trudeau government of 1968 to 1978, then he simply does not know some of the most elementary facts of taxation which are his responsibilities.

The hard fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that we do not have provision in this bill as it now stands to get the most basic and elementary kind of information on the question of who gets what, when, where and how in our society. We do not have equality of information because we are faced with the fact that salaries and benefits of Canadians of low and middle income are known. We know what welfare benefits are, we know what wages are because they are published in collective agreements, and we know exactly how much the average working person makes. But we do not know, and this bill will not tell us, how much executives are making.

What is the nature of the system of compensation in our society? How great in fact are the inequalities? If we are to have any degree of equality in our society, if we are to have decisions with respect to redistribution of wealth, decisions with respect to policies which will help Canadians in need of help, we simply have to have information with respect to the distribution of wealth and opportunity in our society.

• (1510)

This is why I find it strange that the government would take so long to bring in a bill on corporations and labour unions and do nothing to deal with a major gap in our legislation. This gap has been raised annually by hon. members of my caucus with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet). Most notably it was brought forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). For years he has been campaigning for the need to provide Canadians with information which is theirs by right. It is important to know just how serious the inequalities of wealth in our society have become and just how great is the gap between the rich and the poor.

Canada has the lowest rate of taxation on wealth of any country in the OECD. Canada also has the lowest rate of taxation on inheritances and on capital gains of any OECD country. These rates are lower than the ones of the Americans who are frequently cited by my friends on the right as being the wave of the future.

I find this animal called Liberalism strange. In its Ontario manifestation over the past weekend, it talked about the problems of distribution of wealth and opportunity in Canada and in Ontario. It talked about the need to bring in new legislation respecting capital gains, when it is the Liberal beast on that side of the House that is responsible for the taxation system which create this inequality. That Liberal beast created the loophole in capital gains taxation which allowed some people to benefit from inflation while others are hurt by it. It would be horrendous if it were not so funny.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) said in British Columbia on Thursday that the Liberals were considering major changes in the banking system. This is the message the Minister of Agriculture is trying to get across to the audiences he is addressing throughout Canada. The leader of the Liberal party in Ontario told people that the distribution of wealth in Canada is a disgraceful situation. We know where the bottom line is; we know what really happens. The government brought in the Bank Act which did nothing to reform the banking system. It resisted every step of the way every progressive amendment put before it. It only accepted a minuscule number of them because the government was forced; it wanted to get the bill through. This is the reality.

The hon. member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), the hon. member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) and myself were present in the committee during those summer months. We know how interested the Liberal party is in reforming the banking system. Perhaps the Minister of Agriculture would do well to study the minutes of the committee meeting to know what the real Liberal party thinks.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. He may continue if there is unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments on Bill S-10. The bill has been nicknamed "CALURA", or as my hon. colleague behind the curtain just said, perhaps it should be nicknamed "cholera". It sounds like the name of a perfume, but it does not smell like perfume when I read the bill.

I should like to deal with a few items in the bill so that the House will know exactly with what we agree and disagree. The object of the bill is to provide for the reporting of financial and other information of corporations and labour unions. That, in itself, is a worthy objective—the Government of Canada should know certain information about corporations and labour unions. The information should be available to the government for its own purposes. It will not be used for financial purposes because people report such information in their financial returns. When companies and labour unions are filing returns, there should be some guarantee that this information will not become the topic of conversation in coffee shops or beer parlours.

It is quite proper for information to be gathered, but another item in the bill which bothers me somewhat is the transferring of technological information from Canadians to foreign interests and from foreign interests to Canadians. I have searched the act and the bill in vain to find a definition of "technological transfers". It may be a very innocent item or it may be a very important item hidden by the fact that it is not very conspicuous in the bill.

A few years ago the House heard the metric system being discussed. In that bill there was a hidden section indicating the the standard or imperial system would be done away with; it was not emphasized. It should have been the major part of the bill because it concerned Canadians. I am wondering whether technological transfers is something similar. The minister mentioned that it was in the bill and that was all. As far as I can recall, he made no other comment with regard to technological transfers.

Technology is how we do things. For example, one company from the United States came to the country and spent millions of dollars developing a process for separating sand from the oil in the Fort McMurray area. The process belonged to that company; it was not required to give it to anyone else. It spent millions of dollars of its money to develop it. When Syncrude came on the scene, the great Canadian oil sands shared the information and received compensation for that sharing. In other words, it gave up part of its land it had secured through the proper process to Syncrude. It is a very important item. If technological transfers mean that these processes must be brought into the hands of the government through this board, and then they will be made available to others—and there may be leaks—it is very, very important to know exactly to what we are agreeing in regard to the bill.

Technological research is the basis of advancement. We must have research. When research is developed by an individual or a company and they apply under the laws of the country for protection, they should have that protection. It should not be passed on to a government body. This is the part that worries me.

• (1520)

An hon. Member: Is Nova Scotia under a government body?

Mr. Taylor: Why do you not stand up and talk once in a while instead of muttering from your seat? The man has nothing to say so he keeps shouting like a foghorn.

Mr. Knowles: That is no way to address the Chair.

Mr. Taylor: You had a chance to speak a few minutes ago. Why did you not get up and speak then?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Remarks should be addressed to the Chair. I would invite hon. members on both sides of the House to comply.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member opposite is the one who was foghorning. I have the floor.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): That is precisely what I just reminded hon. members. The hon. member for Bow River has the floor.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the findings in science and research, or whatever field, must have some protection, otherwise the initiative which brought it about in the first place is destroyed. Here there are these technological transfers without any definition, without saying what it is supposed to do or who is supposed to do it. Again, this is something about which I certainly disagree. If technological transfers were defined in the act, then we would know exactly what is involved. But it is not defined. This government is getting into the habit of doing just that. It included aboriginal rights in the Constitution and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) said today that it is not known what the term means so it must go before the courts for definition. He was deploring the fact that the courts decided against the Indian people before, yet he is saying that the courts much decide again. When will this government learn that when legislation is written that is the time to define the terms? That is an elementary principle in the writing of laws.

In 1978 the CALURA report which was tabled in this House reported that the top 500 non-financial enterprises accounted for 53 per cent of sales in Canada, 66 per cent of the profits and 70 per cent of the equity. Of that 500 some 274 were foreign-controlled corporations. In other words, without those foreign-controlled corporations the gross national product in this country would have been a great deal lower than it was.

Canada was made up of people who came from all countries of the world. Money, unions and corporations coming from the nations of the world combined together to make up Canada. They all came under Canadian law. We set the conditions. Alberta was a "have-not" province in the hungry thirties when some 52 per cent of our taxes went to the financiers to pay interest charges alone. What was the principle then? The money was going out. There was no control over that situation.

Then we wanted to get some money in order to develop. We went to eastern Canada, to the Bank of Canada, to Canadians, to England and to Germany. No one was prepared to invest their money in the province of Alberta. We then went to the United States. The Americans were prepared to invest their money in Alberta. They developed our oil and gas industry. That was the beginning of what we have today. Had that course not been followed we still might be a "have-not" province—the way this government likes to keep our provinces.

If the money had not come in the oil would not have been developed. We invited the Americans to come. They did so and worked under the conditions set out by the government of Alberta. They did not try to establish the rules; they obeyed them and became good corporate citizens.

This is an area in which the government shows day by day that it is lacking. It talks about Canadianization when it means nationalization. Which means that if you have a good thing you are liable to lose it in a short time because the government may take it over. Why does this government not have people come in, work under the rules of Canada and develop our gross national product? That is the way to develop the country. That is the way in which this country was developed, but now the government asks for all kinds of reports and information. Its own report, tabled in this House in 1978, indicates that over one half the sales, the profits and equity in non-financial enterprises would not have occurred had it not been for foreign-controlled companies working in this land under the rules and conditions which we set out.

What use will be made of the information for which we are asking? I think this is a very important item. Right now only the aggregates are available to other departments. They are then made public, as set out in the bill.

Bill S-10 re-establishes the conditions which existed before 1965 when the federal government had access to the financial information provided by individual companies. That provision was done away with in 1965. The government of the day wanted to give some credibility to the companies. It wanted the companies, the corporations and the trade unions to believe in it so it made the aggregates available to other ministries. But it did not make the financial statements of individual companies available.

That is not good enough for the government in power today. It wants to go back 16 years to 1965 in order to make the whole financial statement available to other departments. The bill sets out who will receive this information. It says that an official who is an officer, or another person taking his place, shall, where authorized by the Chief Statistician of Canada, on the request of any minister of the government, for any purpose relating to the determination of policy, make this information available.

The bill provides that, upon receipt of an application for inspection, payment of a fee not exceeding one dollar is required. I suppose that if the information is to be made available it should be available to everyone. I do not think any individual wants to have his financial statement published in the press or made available for inspection to people off the street where it can become the talk at the coffee counters and the beer parlours of the nation. In the case of trade unions, all the information must be made available free of charge.

Who will be required to make these reports available, to provide this information? This is a good point in the bill. If the bill has any good points at all, this is fit. A corporation with assets exceeding $250,000 and/or sales amounting to more than $500,000 must file. That is the situation now. If enacted the bill before us will raise that amount to $5 million. It provides that any corporation with assets exceeding $5 million or sales amounting to more than $10 million must now file. Companies which had to file under the old legislation will not any longer have to go to the expense of filing, while the larger corporations and the labour unions will have to do so. According to the minister, there will be some 70,000 businesses affected which will have some redress from filling in all of these forms.

When we come to the labour unions part of the bill, the minister says Bill S-10 will lead to significant improvements in the administration of the act. I have searched to find out whether these significant improvements are for the unions of our country. I cannot find them in the bill. Perhaps the hon. minister will outline them when he is closing the debate. However, the one thing I did find is that the definition of "union" has been extended, and not restricted, to any association which regulates relations between employers and employees. Under the old bill, there are some stipulations under which a union did not have to comply. Now any and every union will have to supply the information. The international unions will have to report all direct revenues from Canadian subsidiaries, and also financial data of pension and strike funds, and report on their membership on a calendar year basis. I do not suppose there is anything particularly wrong with reporting on their membership.

I do not object to labour unions being required to give information on membership and other important matters to the government providing those items are then kept somewhat confidential. However, it seems to me that international unions are being pinpointed for special abuse. International unions have done a real service in this country. Anyone who knows the situation knows that the international unions have done a great deal. As a matter of fact, there have been times in this country where, had it not been for international unions, many of our workers would have gone hungry. I refer to the United Mine Workers of America.

I was raised in a coal mining area and I know what goes on in a coal mining area. There were times when we had no work, when Ontario was buying its coal from the United States and Canadian mines were idle, pretty much the way it is right now. We still buy large amounts of coal from the U.S.A. Not all mines stand idle, but all miners do not get the work. In addition to that, we have coal in Alberta, in Canada, which has low sulphur content. But does one think we could use that to reduce acid rain? No. We keep on buying coal with much higher sulphur content from the U.S.A. to aggravate the acid rain problem.

However, the point I am making is that there were times when workers, through no fault of their own as there was no work available, would have gone pretty hungry had money not come from the international unions, from their American offices, to assist coal miners in this country. That is not a fairy story, that is the truth. The international unions have also shown a great deal of responsibility. I do not know of any union in this country which has been more responsible to the United Mine Workers of America. Did one ever hear of a union saying to the mine operator: "We are going to forgo even the cost of living increase in our wages this year because we know you are having a tough time keeping this mine open; we will forgo any increase just to keep our jobs? That happened in a mine in this country. The union showed responsibility as an international trade union. I think we should recognize that there is a place for unions and that we believe in the autonomy of unions. If the miners of this country want to work under the auspices of the United Mine Workers of America, why should we tell them that they cannot do that?

I remember one of the worst strikes I have ever seen, and I have gone through many of them. A union called the Canadian Union, which was simply the mouthpiece for the communist organization, tried to oust the United Mines Workers of America from authority in the coal mines in Canada. The coal miners caught on to the idea. They are autonomous. They have complete rule of their unions in this country. They do not take orders from another country. They objected to a communist inspired union, as its final and ultimate objective is to do away with unions altogether, under a communist regime. The Canadian Union lost out because the United Mine Workers held together. I remember the difficulties, trials and tribulations during that strike, when women with axes, brooms and shovels and men with clubs stood along the road to try to stop people from going to work in a strike which was called by this communist union known as the Canadian Union. The United Mine Workers were loyal to their own union and loyal to their own country and they refused to stop at that time. Therefore, do not tell me that international unions are all bad. Maybe some are bad, but a lot of them are good. I think we should give them credit where they deserve credit.

Again, in this country we have always had some freedom of choice. Why should our workers not decide what union they want and whether they want a Canadian union or an international union? There are disadvantages to both. However, our workers are not illiterate any more. They should have the choice. We should not be pinpointing an international union, requiring it to do things that we do not require of our other unions.

The international unions will have to report all direct revenues from Canadian subsidiaries and financial data pertaining to their pension funds. If other corporations have to report their pension funds, then I think international unions should also.

I would like to comment about strike funds. What concern is it of the government how much money workers put into a strike fund? I want to know why the government wants to know that kind of information. It is like a census form wanting to know how many toilets there are in a house. It is ridiculous information. No wonder our people are riled up about that long census form.

While I am on that subject, I am wondering what authority there is for the government to ask some people to fill in a short form while others must fill in a long form. Again, this is discrimination of some kind. Why do we not all have the same form if the government must have that information? What good is the information coming from one tenth of the population? What does that prove? We might as well let Gallup poll do it. It would not cause the taxpayer all the agony which is being caused through this census information. I believe in the census, but why is there a difference between Canadians, where some have to work hours on it and others can fill in the form in five minutes?

An hon. Member: Ask your leader.

Mr. Taylor: The hon. member is yapping again. If one throws a stone at that side and hits someone, they start to yap. It is like throwing rocks at a bunch of dogs. If one of them starts yapping, one knows they were hit in a vital point.

An hon. Member: He authorized the form.

Mr. Taylor: This strike fund is something I want to know about. What business is it of this government how much they have in their strike fund? It is not the government's money, it is the unions' money. It is none of the government's business. I know why the government wants to know. If there happens to be a strike, the government wants to know how long they can stay on strike, and maybe it leaks the information. No one believes in this government any more. It has no credibility. People will not trust it as far as they can see it or throw it. The government is concerned about a strike fund, but it is none of the government's business. This is the workers' own money. It is not the employer's business either. It is coming out of the pockets of the workers, and it is their business only.

The government has no right to this information by asking them to report how much money they have in a strike fund. That is ridiculous. It is their money. That can be resolved in the union meetings. It is none of my business and it is none of the government's business. I object to this type of thing being carried on in the name of government. It is just another one of these things, like the technological information, where the government tries to get information to which it is not really entitled and which it may well misuse.

Another section of this bill which is of concern is the penalties provision. We put the penalties in to try to force people to do exactly what we want them to do. The penalty under section 12(1) of the act is that the guilty party is liable, on summary conviction, to a fine of $50 per day if the form is not filed. The bill provides for up to $250 per day. A very large corporation with bookkeepers, researchers and accountants would have no problem finding the information that is required but many of the smaller unions that rely on volunteer workers would not have the time to do this. The people there work after hours or give up their Sundays to do this type of thing. A $250 per day fine for failing to file a return would be difficult for them. The government has no business asking for all this information anyway and I do not think it is right. The fine is exorbitant and ridiculous for small unions. Because it has the law on its side, the government is trying to threaten people into doing something it knows they should not have to do.

We pass many of these laws in the way we passed some the other day. I have never seen anything so ridiculous as going through scores of pages without a chance to debate the legislation. We wonder why people do not want to obey the laws and we make it an offence if they do not, yet we do not have enough time to discuss them. They have not been carefully thought out, yet the government brings in closure to stop the House debating the bill properly.

This penalty is too high for many small unions, Mr. Speaker, and I want to go on record as saying that it should be reduced. The fine should vary in accordance with the offence. All offences are not the same and there should be no difficulty in setting out a range of fines instead of simply saying not exceeding so much. If the offence is committed in one province there may be a $10 fine, while in another part of that province or in a different province the fine could be $250. The government has given discretion to the courts but has not given them any guidelines.

Clause 8 of the bill provides to whom the information may be made available. A few moments ago I dealt with the matter of the unions providing the information free of charge.

In my view, this bill simply brings the government more into the lives of the people. Just the other day the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications (Mr. Stollery) praised the government for wanting more and more intervention and more and more regulation and defamed anyone who wanted deregulation.

Another thing that bothers me, Mr. Speaker, is that this bill will not create one job outside government. It will make things more difficult. Perhaps I should not say it will not create one job, as some large corporations may have to hire a full-time man to put together all this information that the government wants, to report the technological advances and so on. It will not create any work for labourers, however. Those people whose unemployment insurance is running out today cannot hope for a job as the result of this bill. The government could have brought in all kinds of bills that would create jobs in the country.

Mr. Kelly: How many jobs is it costing?

Mr. Taylor: I will tell you how many have been eliminated—thousands and thousands. If the hon. member had enough sense to go out into the sticks where the people are unemployed, he would not be so glib with his tongue.

Mr. Kelly: You do not know the bill, do you?

Mr. Taylor: He should go to the places where people are losing their jobs and going hungry. Then we would see if he would be so glib. It is all right to talk here when drawing a big salary. He should go out and see those people who are losing their jobs. The National Energy Program is costing jobs all across this country. He should go out and see that, but he sits there jabbering away. Just the other day a businessman in Standard said that he had cancelled his orders for machines and is not bringing them in any more. Hon. members opposite do not care as long as they get their salary, but a lot of people are going without jobs. Why should they spend their time trying to create jobs in this country instead of thinking up ways of getting more information, more forms more regulation, more government and less gross national product?

The government talks about high interest rates stopping inflation and producing a higher gross national product. Why is that not happening? I do not see any increase in the gross national product. The government should encourage people to invest their money instead of making it almost impossible to do so. It should discourage the flight of capital into the United States. It should find a means to keep our rigs and money in this country instead of sending them to the United States to find oil for that country. If we kept them we would keep enough jobs as well; but this bill does not bring about any jobs. It is complete bureaucracy.

Small business in this country will receive some little benefit from this bill. If we take the minister's word, 70,000 of them will not have to fill out forms in the future. Many of them will still go under, however, because they cannot pay the high interest rates.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) has said that the small business development bond will be helpful. It might if it were made available to everyone, but so many stipulations are attached that it is valuable to only a handful of people. A company has to be incorporated before it can receive benefit from that legislation. But thousands of farms and businesses in this country are not incorporated, Mr. Speaker, so they cannot make use of the lower interest rate of the small business development bond.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) made reference to the Farm Credit Corporation. That is a good organization and is useful to those who qualify for loans. But thousands of people do not. Sometimes it runs out of money before it can even start to deal with the line of applicants who want to develop their farms.

Small business is looking in vain for some help from this government but all it is getting is a regimented society. The inequalities and the gap are becoming greater and greater all the time. That situation was outlined a few moments ago by the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) so I will not go over it again.

Instead of being anxious to get hold of Alberta's wealth, I wish the government would show a little interest in helping the other provinces to develop their resources and get things going in those provinces. That is what we need in this country. Thousands of other people would do the same thing if they were in this House today. They are sick and tired of regimentation, sick and tired of the government wanting to distribute wealth all the time.

Why does the government not help the provinces to create wealth? Each province in this country has a lot of potential. Would anyone invest their money under this government? No. It talks about Canadianization and nationalization and about how much it can get hold of, how much it can take. It takes and takes and takes, as it is doing from gasoline prices today. People are now waking up to the fact that the government has already gone way beyond the 18 cents per gallon that it denounced so wildly in the PC budget. It denounced that and now it is collecting far more.

The government talked about the "Tale of Two Cities" when it wanted to take one pound of flesh. It will take the pound of flesh and the blood and the bones and the grit as well. It wants the whole works and that is what is destroying this country today.

If the provinces were encouraged to develop their natural resources and if the people were encouraged to keep their money in the country instead of investing it in other countries such as the United States, and if our rigs were encouraged to stay here, things would be better. But the government will not even enter into an agreement with Alberta for oil at $20 per barrel. It is quite prepared to pay foreign countries $40 and $45 a barrel. But that would interfere with the government's plans for disunity in this country. The government would find out that small business would develop by the hundreds in this country if the incentive was there. We should have a bill to help develop our resources and do away with some of the inequalities.

The CALURA bill is going to make more book work for our unions and companies. It will not create any jobs in the country. The CALURA bill is not that important. I would rather have had a bill which would create wealth instead of bills that snatch on to some of the wealth after it has been created. We need a bigger gross national product, not a smaller one. That will not be done by regimentation but by encouraging people to invest their money in this country. That will be done by encouraging our people to use their creative abilities, our technological advances and our research. If we can do that, we can get this country moving again. But people look in vain for anything like that from this government.

Encouraging people to invest and use their creative abilities will build stronger provinces and a greater nation. But this government wants a central government which is going to control everything. This government does not care two hoots what it does in trying to reach that objective. It will destroy the provinces. It will separate the country if necessary.

That is the sad story of what is happening in Canada today. It is a sad story about a government which does not care, that does not listen but is determined to build a centralist organization. The longer this government can keep each province in poverty, the better it likes it because then the government can say, "We will give it to you." Then when you get your bread from the government, you do what the government tells you to do.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, one of the great fears that we as members of Parliament have in opposition is the method of intrusion that this government is embarking upon into the Canadian way of life. This is not only in intellectual property or corporate property, but into the very privacy of our lives. Every aspect of our way of living is now being scrutinized by some government official. This has never happened before in Canadian history, but it is certainly very obvious that the government is now making a very major intrusion into the sanctity of the Canadian way of life.

For instance, the Constitution is a perfect example of what the government is up to. Bill C-57, which is to be voted on this evening, is the last chance, our last swing, that we will ever get as to what the government is doing in that legislation. It is very obvious what the government is up to. It is trying to get total control of our Canadian way of life.

It started some years ago in our armed forces. We saw centralized control. The three commanding heads of three departments were taken away and put under one head. Therefore, it is much easier for a centralized government to control the armed forces. This is happening all the way through our system. There are suggestions in this bill. I will read a portion of it to show what the government is doing. On page 11, Clause 2, we find the following sub-paragraph:

"(viii) the name and address of each employer resident in Canada with which the union or a local union or branch of the union has a collective agreement, and the number of male members and the number of female members of any local union or branch of the union covered by the collective agreement—

What difference does it make whether a member of the union is male or female? Surely they are entitled to be classed as a Canadian citizen and they are entitled to the right to membership in a union if they so desire. Why should the government want to know that? It means the records are always changing. As my colleague from Drumheller said, in some corporations there will have to be an extra person charged with the responsibility of keeping all the data up to date and filling in the questionnaires. All the costs associated with that will have to be added to whatever business it is. If it happens to be a labour union, the dues will have to go up. If it is a corporation or whatever, the cost will be passed on to the consumer. In summary, this is an added cost to our over-all system.

We have a government which has promised to do away with some of the paper burden. It is not doing away with it fast enough. There is a suggestion that raising the amounts to $150,000 and $5 million will eliminate some people. Yes, it will. But with inflation as it is, for how long will they be eliminated? This is the question we have to ask ourselves when we are dealing with this type of legislation.

I think it would be much better if the government were to set some guidelines in the area of where it is going to cut back on the demand on the backs of Canadians. The load becomes too heavy. We have to recognize that this is a non-productive part of our business and our economy. What is happening to a greater degree in Canada is that too many are riding on the backs of business and there is not enough productive capacity. There has been too much of this tax taking and extra work in paper burden. If the government would change its policy to a greater degree, and much more quickly than it has up to the present time, then we would see Canadian business move ahead more quickly.

We have a $17 billion deficit in manufactured products in Canada. We have over one million unemployed. We have a tremendous amount of potential and we have a tremendous amount of natural resources. All we have to do is put those three together and we will start to resolve some of our major problems. This is the direction in which the government should be going. It should not be putting the extra load on to corporations that are struggling as a result of having to comply with government policy. This is one of the reasons we see so many of our corporations moving out of Canada, either going to the United States or, in some cases, to South America.

If many of these people involved in the corporations were assured that the information being given was relevant and would be used properly, that information would be given much more graciously than it is being given at the present time. We have to be careful. I must warn this House that, in my opinion, we have to be very careful when we allow governments to collect information, in view of what can be recorded now by various methods. Various people are able to have access to a computer system of knowledge. Who knows what will happen as a result of bringing all this information together? It has not been proven to us in the opposition nor to Canadians generally that there is a requirement for the massive interventionist attitude upon which this government has embarked. It is not only destructive to our Canadian way of life but it creates a fear. There is a lack of confidence on the part of many Canadians as to what the government is doing by collecting this information. I do not like what is happening.

● (1600)

As I said earlier, tonight we are passing Bill C-57. That bill makes a major intrusion into our Canadian way of life in a manner never witnessed before in Canada. One of the best examples is the newspaper industry. For the first time ever, civil servants with their rulers will be making assessments in the newspaper industry. For the first time ever we are going to have government inside the press rooms of our country.

I must impress upon hon. members the danger that creates for our Canadian way of life. Freedom of the press is one of the basic freedoms of this country. However, we are now going to have a bureaucracy moving into our press rooms. That is very wrong. No doubt this data will all be collected so that when the time comes, and we hope this will never happen, a centralist government will have when it wants this centralized power. We have seen in our lifetime the dangers of centralizing power, knowledge and important information. I am convinced the Canadian people are travelling in the wrong direction under the administration of the present government and the centralist way they are being led.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the privilege of bringing this to the attention of the House. It is something I hope members opposite will give consideration to because their freedom is as much at stake as mine.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few comments on this very important bill. It is not receiving the attention in the media that it should. Perhaps many of them do not understand the seriousness and the complications of the legislation, which was pointed out by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers).

Our lead speaker, the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington), gave an example of what is happening under this government's regulations. I quote from his speech of June 17:

> In the Thirtieth Parliament when I was doing work on a street view of corporate concentration, what attracted me to CALURA was four or five small businesses in Quebec which had been taken to court and fined under the powers of CALURA. Some of those businesses no longer exist. In fact, I do not know if any of them do. Those little businesses had to pay fines of $700 or $800.

Here is the startling point in the hon. member's remarks:

> On the other hand, while doing my work on corporate concentration, I found that the holding company for Power Corporation had never filed under CALURA. If Power Corporation or the holding company had been treated in the same manner as these small businesses, which the government likes to talk to about protecting and reducing the burden on so much, the holding company for Power Corporation would have been subject to fines of over $3 million. However, they were not taken to court.
> CALURA has been on my mind for some time. It is an important piece of legislation that has not been attended to for some time and that needs amending.

For many years it has been Liberal policy to be on the backs of small business. That is a classic example. It takes from the little guy and gives to the huge Power Corporation of Quebec.

We agree with the reporting part of the bill as well as that of union reporting, but not with the information aspect which demands that an inventory of technological information, intellectual property, trade marks and patents and so on be reported. It is highly interventionist.

This is an omnibus bill just as so many others have been. One example is Bill C-57, which automatically increases taxes for the handicapped, the beer drinkers and other groups across Canada. The element with regard to fines is overpowering for small business. There are excessive fines of $250 per day for not providing information. Under the metric law to be forced on the Canadian people, there will be heavy fines and jail sentences for those who do not comply.

Because the Liberals had to have their Constitution passed, Parliament is being forced to rush through important legislation such as this without giving it proper attention. It is not so much the bill we are opposed to but rather the way the Grits will use the information. This bill will curtail individual rights and freedoms by unduly restricting and overextending the requirement of the reporting responsibility of small business.

I will give a few examples of over-regulation. The National Energy Program is having an absolutely devastating effect on the nation's economy, especially in my province of Manitoba where it practically closed down the whole oil exploration industry just as it was getting going. There could have been a real economic boom in Manitoba but this ridiculous NEP over-regulates the oil industry in the province of Manitoba and other provinces and is bringing the industry to a grinding halt. It only helps the economy in OPEC countries such as Venezuela and Mexico.

This is an interventionist policy of ill repute which threatens the theory of free enterprise. It is completely non-voluntary and requires an overly large amount of information. There is some connection between this bill, the strengthening of FIRA, the Competition Act and some provisions of the Constitution which impede the natural rights of Canadians. This type of legislation will make the empire builders within the Liberal government happy. It will give them a lot of work to do.

● (1610)

To give another example of what the National Energy Program will do and what it will cost the Canadian people, I want to quote from the June 6 edition of the Edmonton Journal:

> It should be clear that Canadians are paying $43 a barrel for oil we had offered to sell last year for $20 a barrel.

That is a quote from the Alberta energy minister, Mr. Leitch. We can see what all this regulation is doing. It is a fantastic cost to the Canadian people. This overregulation interferes with the free enterprise system across the country. The literature being distributed in the ridings across the country of Liberal members of Parliament gives a completely false interpretation of the National Energy Program and the serious effects of the regulations contained in it. This literature talks about security as follows:

> Canadians will again control their energy future through security of supply and independence from the world oil market.

That is a false statement. We are importing more and more oil. It is costing Canadian taxpayers $500,000 an hour to import foreign oil. Under the regulations made under the National Energy Program, by 1990 it will cost Canadians an additional $182 billion a year to import oil at heaven only knows what price per barrel.

The Liberal propaganda says the following about opportunity under the new energy regulation program:

> Canadians will now have real opportunity to participate in the energy industry and to share in the benefits of industry expansion.

That is absolute rubbish. I have documentation here which shows that over 100 businesses in Alberta—and this is a statistic just for one individual area of Alberta—will be experiencing layoffs and cutbacks because of the new regulations contained in the National Energy Program. Where is the opportunity for them? This energy program provides a great opportunity for the United States, and that is where most of the industry is going. Under "fairness" the propaganda says, and I quote:

> Canadians will have a petroleum pricing and revenue-sharing regime that will be fair to all Canadians regardless of where they live.

What is fair about Canadian taxpayers having to spend $43 for a barrel of oil brought in from Mexico or Venezuela or other OPEC countries when it could be bought here in Canada for $20 a barrel? That is highway robbery. This is the kind of documentation the Liberals are distributing around the country. It is completely false and misleading. Why are they not telling the people about the businesses they are chasing out of the country? Why are they not telling Canadians about the adverse effects their energy policy has on businesses in eastern Canada? Why do they not tell that to the people of Ontario and Quebec? They should not be bringing in these ridiculous regulations which do absolutely nothing about energy self-sufficiency in this country.

I would like to give another example of how Liberal regulation affects various businesses. The Chevron oil company in Vancouver volunteered the following information recently: Chevron Canada Limited has to complete 491 monthly, quarterly and annual reports for the federal government which are then inspected by 14 federal agencies, 19 provincial agencies and 8 municipal departments; this apparent duplication of government inspection and excessive paper work must be monitored more closely.

As far as we in the Conservative party are concerned, it should be reduced. We had taken steps to deal with this. Duplication and all this regulation was on the agenda for the first ministers' conference of December 15, 1979. The government of our leader, who was then the prime minister, was going to do away with this waste, duplication and overregulation. We were going to do something about it, but are the Liberals doing anything about it? No, they most certainly are not.

Just recently I learned from the Manitoba Teachers Society of another example. That society informs us that there are over 70 federal agencies involved in education and educational research. The Canadian Parks Association points out that there are over 66 federal government agencies duplicating services provided in the area of recreation. Why on earth do we need that many regulations and that many departments at the federal level involved in recreation and teaching? The bureaucracy has complete control of this Liberal government. This government has allowed the bureaucracy to continue its overregulation and empire building within the departments. If bureaucrats can come up with new regulations or new programs to set up new departments or Crown corporations, they have the full co-operation of the Liberal party.

It is predicted that the National Energy Program and the new regulations I mentioned earlier will cause the loss of 60,000 jobs by mid-summer. I did not see that in the Liberal propaganda being sent out to constituents. Liberal backbenchers should be telling their constituents what the ridiculous program they are forcing on Canadians is doing in relation to jobs being lost. I would like them to explain to me how the loss of 60,000 jobs will benefit us.

One of the regulations in Bill C-57 imposes another 9 per cent tax on prosthetic devices. These devices are used by the handicapped. Prostheses used on legs and ankles are excepted. This tax was soundly criticized in the House last week as a blatant slap in the face of the handicapped during the International Year of the Disabled. This government is imposing additional taxes through regulations which will be passed year after year. Taxes will be increased by order in council. This government will not have to come back to Parliament. There will be more regulation and more taxation without even having to come to this House. The government is going to tax artists who create original prints. This will affect members of Eskimo co-operatives in northern Canada whose prints are considered highly valuable works of art around the world.

Nobody escapes the clutches of this Liberal party. The newspaper industry has expressed grave concern about a 9 per cent tax on advertising supplements which, the industry says, threatens its livelihood. This government is threatening everyone, regulating everyone and taxing everyone.

They say a picture is worth a thousand words, and I would just like to refer to a cartoon which was in the Winnipeg Free Press last week. It showed three thugs in a jail cell along with a little Canadian citizen. He had just been put into the cell with them. The three thugs asked what he was in jail for. "Oh," he said, "I would not tell the government how many toilet seats I have". The census which is being taken now and other individual surveys in the past have required information respecting how many bathrooms people have and how many toilet seats they have. This is absolutely ridiculous. We never get any explanation of what this information is needed for. This will not create jobs, lower taxes or do anything of the kind.

The ECC recently released a report about regulation. It pointed out, and I quote:

> The question is, are the hurts worth the gains you get, can you properly concentrate or take it easy?

The council pointed out that what we need is more productivity and less regulation.

A report in the Toronto Star said this about this Economic Council report:

> —while the Economic Council's provocative report sounds a timely note of caution on the subject of government regulatory involvement in the economy, it also underlines the importance of those regulations that ensure all Canadians a better quality of life. Reform should be on the agenda, but not hastily.

The ECC also point out in an article in the Montreal Gazette of June 15:

> Overregulation of the Canadian economy costs several billion dollars a year. That is perhaps $120 per Canadian, perhaps more—say, $500 a year for a family of four. Most of that money comes straight out of our pockets, not governments'.

All it is is job-creation programs thought up by empire builders. I do not know why the Liberals are not commenting on this today. It would be nice to know how many Liberals in the House support these regulations, how they can justify costing a Canadian family $500 a year. Do they actually support this type of program? If they do, let them get up and give us an explanation why. We do not see the need for them at all. We do not see a need for finding out how many bathrooms and toilet seats people have, Mr. Speaker.

● (1620)

The Winnipeg Free Press, in an editorial on June 11, has pointed out their feelings on the reforming of regulations, as follows:

> —the Economic Council of Canada has offered some sensible recommendations aimed at creating compatibility in the marriage that exists between the Canadian economy and the regulations that affect it. The recommendations suggest moves that could make the marriage work to the better satisfaction of both parties, rather than advocating a quick and final divorce.
> It urges the abandonment of regulations that have lived longer than the problems they were designed to correct, and the provision of flexibility in others to reflect the changing conditions of the marketplace.

Most people feel this document on reducing regulations is going to be put on the shelf to gather dust. I certainly hope that is not the case.

I have referred to this before, Mr. Speaker, but I think it is worth mentioning again. Some citizens are so concerned about government regulations that they are putting full page ads in newspapers. The Citizens' Coalition had an excellent one recently: "Do You Believe This Man?", and his ridiculous NEP and regulations costing Canadians billions and billions of dollars to pay for foreign oil. There are a lot of people examining what this Liberal government is doing, and they are putting their money where their mouth is by paying for ads concerning these ridiculous programs and regulations.

An excellent document has been brought to my attention recently concerning the impact of the federal budget and the rules and regulations regarding the NEP. This document shows 41 oil service companies in Nisku Park in the Wetaskiwin area of Alberta affected by the NEP regulations. It goes into some detailed explanation as to the effects in branch offices where there will be lay-offs and closings. The document points out a loss of operations in Canada and gives statistical information on companies being driven out of the country because it is going to be more beneficial to operate in the United States. I do not know how on earth that is supposed to help Canada.

The document also points out how the regulations are going to affect employment, and it gives one example of 255 jobs lost amongst Nisku firms with an additional 173 jobs lost at branch operations. Considering the large amount of oil service and related firms in Alberta, these figures from only 41 firms represent a great loss of jobs throughout the province. There is no loss of jobs in the OPEC countries, Mexico or Venezuela because of these regulations. They are very beneficial to other countries.

It then goes on to list the effect on other industries. These are not general statements, Mr. Speaker; companies are named. Here are just a few of the affected eastern Canadian suppliers: Algoma Steel, Allen-Bradley—maybe some of these businesses are in Liberal ridings and they could check them out. AMP of Canada, Arnie's Trailer Sales, Atlas Chemicals, Atlas Steel, Border Brokers, Brown Boveri Canada, Browning Manufacturing, B. & W. Heat Treating, Canada Cement, General Electric, Canadian Industries, Canadian Liquid Air, Canadian National Railways. Nobody escapes their clutches, Mr. Speaker. Canadian Timken, Cessco Ltd., Cooper Energy, Dacro Industries Ltd., Dominion Bridge Company Ltd., FAG Hearings, Federal Mogul, FMC Link-Belt, Ford Motor Company, Gates Rubber, GMC, Hay's Trucks, IHC Truck Assemblers, Kenworth Trucks, King Tractor Manufacturing, Nelson Building Components, Penn Dome, RHP Canada, Roadmaster Trailers, Safety Supply Canada, Steelco Steel, Stelco Canada Ltd., Steldor, SKF Canada, Timkin Ltd., Tarrington Inc., Volcano Boilers and Westinghouse Canada Ltd.

That is just a sample of 43 eastern Canadian businesses affected by the situation in one federal constituency in Alberta. There are 18 more. Then there is Saskatchewan, Manitoba and all the rest of the areas affected by these ridiculous regulations of the NEP.

These are some of the general industries in eastern Canada affected by the NEP. Electrical suppliers, hose and fittings manufacturers, lumber firms, oil field equipment and suppliers, packaging, paints and supplies, steel building manufacturers, steel mills, tire companies, trailer companies, wire rope companies. The people in Ontario should be up in revolt and hounding every Liberal MP out of his seat. This Nisku group also pointed out:

> As a result of cutbacks or cancellations of purchases by the 41 companies responding to our survey, $1,470,000 in revenues was lost by eastern suppliers in the last quarter of 1980. Forecasted cutbacks in purchases to eastern suppliers in 1981 will amount to approximately $20 million from these 41 firms.

Then 55 Alberta firms affected are listed, Mr. Speaker. Every type of industry is affected by the ridiculous regulations of the NEP. They also list the general industries in Alberta that are affected. Building contractors, electrical contractors and suppliers, fabricators, fittings distributors, lumber firms, oil well firms, plumbing suppliers, trucking transportation companies, warehousing and welders. It also spills over into area motels, restaurants and truck service stops which rely on the oil industry.

So you can see the importance of removing a lot of these ridiculous regulations. This is just an example of how it affects Canadian industry, Canadian workers, and the cost to the Canadian people of the Liberal party's programs. If we are wrong, if all these firms are wrong, if everybody in Alberta is wrong, then some of these Liberals should get up and tell us what benefits there are in this ridiculous program.

The Nisku group also point out the multiplier effect of the NEP. Shown losses of revenue are direct—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The Chair has been listening quite attentively to the hon. member and I hope in the remaining minutes he will be able to relate what he has said concerning these companies and so on to Bill S-10, which is now before us.

• (1630)

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I can explain it quite easily. It is the regulations contained in the new National Energy Program, and the bill we are debating today deals with regulations. This is an opportunity for us to talk about regulations and to point out how they are hindering Canada's growth, with lay-offs and businesses being driven out of the country.

In conclusion, I should like to give an example of the multiplier effects of these regulations upon small Canadian businesses. Earlier I referred to the Chevron oil company and the Manitoba Teachers' Society and how they require additional staff. It is just a quagmire for them. The shown losses of revenue are direct and do not include multiplier effects. For example, a loss of sales by Algoma could lead to a lay-off in Ontario, which in turn could lead to a new car or other durable not being purchased. Subsequently a lay-off by automotive manufacturers could occur and so on. It is impossible to generate accurate figures on the loss to the Canadian GNP which might be directly or indirectly attributed to declining purchases by the 41 companies surveyed. However, the total will be far in excess of the $50 million estimated for 1981.

I hope I have made clear the effects of the regulations in the National Energy Program and all other regulations, whether they are concerning education, oil companies or whatever. I hope we hear a government announcement one of these days that it will pick up the program the Conservative government would have started, that is, meeting with the provinces to eliminate excessive regulations and duplication among all levels of government. It would be an excellent start. At their Liberal caucus meeting this week, they should band together to get the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) to withdraw immediately the National Energy Program. It would be the greatest contribution they could make to Canada in their lives as parliamentarians.

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to speak this afternoon on Bill S-10. CALURA was first passed in 1962 to collect officially information on certain corporations and labour unions in this fair Canada of ours. I understand this is the fourth time the bill has been before Parliament; obviously it is in need of much debate. It looks innocuous but it is not. It should have afforded uninterrupted debate in the House because of its complicated nature. I am sure hon. members have not had time to digest fully the entire bill in the short time it has been before us.

The present government has the undesirable habit of allowing this type of legislation full of amendments to slide by Parliament. It also adopts the dangerous practice of invoking Standing Order 75C. We have seen bills such as this omnibus style bill in the House. We have seen them many times before, vis-à-vis amendments to the Criminal Code in 1968 and the metric bill. This legislation requires a lot of debate.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order based upon the comments of the hon. member. There is still committee stage and third reading in which to discuss this particular bill. Everything is not done in the House on second reading.

Mr. Knowles: There is the report stage as well.

Mr. Blais: Yes, there is the report stage.

Mr. Stewart: That sounds like a Liberal point of order.

Mr. Blais: That sounds like a Tory comment.

Mr. Stewart: Particularly small business has been fined under CALURA, not the bona fide large corporations such as the Power Corporation which was mentioned a few moments ago. As I said, we are sliding down the slippery road to a unitary state. We are becoming a controlled society. We are controlled more and more by the present government.

When we received the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in the House in 1968, we also received 1984 early. Since he assumed office, the state has encroached more and more upon business and upon our citizens, as per this bill. "Big Brother" is constantly looking over our shoulders, with a survey here and a questionnaire there, just as this bill indicates. Consolidated financial statements will be obtained directly from enterprises through questionnaires—state interference. Approximately eight existing questionnaires will be integrated into one, supposedly to reduce the paper burden. The point is that they are questionnaires and they represent going into patents and other such items—straight intervention in our system.

We have heard much about the need to lessen the paper burden on business, but it is only lip service, as any businessman will tell us if he is questioned. It is only government public relations in action. There is a lot of it going on now and government has become the biggest advertiser in Canada. The fact is that the paper burden is not being lessened, it is being increased.

The private sector of the country keeps the country in spending money. It generates the wealth which unfortunately the government dearly loves to redistribute. The government fails to realize—especially those members opposite who have never been in business—that it has been slowly strangling the goose which lays the golden egg with overregulation, big brotherliness, government interference, crippling taxation, direct and indirect, and the lack of an industrial strategy. Where is the industrial strategy about which we have heard so much? I have not seen it. Also it neglects research and development. We all know what a half of 1 per cent in research and development will do for the country. It will do a lot more than Bill S-10.

Through its ambitious social programs, more ambitious than those of our wealthy neighbours to the south, the government has chipped away and eroded the work ethic of the entire country. It is a sad thing to see in the youth. The government has made it more attractive financially to collect UIC than to work. Now we are faced with Bill S-10. It has placed a staggering debt load on the backs of Canadians. Our taxes are high enough but our real tax toll is the combination of corporate and personal income taxes, the accumulated debt, and the oil and service charges which must go to discharge the tremendous borrowings of this great Big Brother.

I do not believe anyone in the government actually calls out for the business community. No one in the government understands what it is like to attempt to make it in the cold, corporate world of big or small business. Canadian business needs a hand up, not handouts. It does not need Bill S-10 to overregulate it. Canadian business needs the government off its back. Canadians need an end to the Big Brother phenomenon.

I have a speech which was made by the former president of the treasury board. It is entitled "How we became a socialist state". It pointed out the encroachment of government, through legislation such as Bill S-10, to compile information which is not needed to run the country, for it to be rich, powerful and strong again. It is encroachment of government; it is intrusion of government. It is the imposition of government will against that of the business community. Bill S-10 is just another law restricting our rights. We do need acts restricting corporations and the creation of wealth. We need greater production, not another paper burden.

Every move of the government is toward centralization. This was pointed out time and again under Bill C-48, another form of overregulation. As a small businessman I am confronted with capital expenditures. It is bad enough to cope with a 20 per cent interest rate, let alone cope with the bureaucracy of increasing paper burden and less rights.

This bill is more interference in the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act. It is government poking its nose into the business of private corporations. It is regressive, not progressive, legislation. I presume Bill S-10 is the preamble to the introduction of the Competition Act, and Lord knows what we will find in it.

The information aspect of CALURA frightens me. Will the financial statements of corporations be made public? Who will get their hands on this information? Multimillion dollar corporations file, others do not. It makes one ask why. Who can have the information in this bill? Obviously the government, but who else under section 8? I do not know.

The current definition of "labour unions" liable to report under the act is being improved to cover all labour unions with one hundred members or more resident in Canada. Supposedly, this was to ensure the widest possible coverage and, hence, completeness of data on labour unions. This is nothing but more government interference.

Why does the government need such information? International unions will report all direct receipts from their Canadian affiliates and all expenditures directly attributable to their operations in Canada. Is this not denigrating some of the great labour unions? Also, all unions will report information separately on each of their special funds, such as pension and strike funds. Why is this necessary? It is just more government interference. This provision was supposedly to broaden the reporting of financial data. I guess it will. It will permit a better presentation of union finances. It will interfere with every union in this country. The government will be in their hip pockets and looking over their shoulders every waking minute. Membership data of individual unions will be made available to federal and provincial government departments for analysis and publication purposes, thereby reducing possible duplication of reporting by union locals. Where are the magnificent benefits to the unions in this bill? I fail to find any in what I have just stated.

From looking at this bill it appears to me as though international unions are coming under special reporting conditions. Even their strike funds will be affected. I do not think we want that situation in Canada. The government says that 70,000 small businesses will not have to report, that the paper work will mysteriously disappear. I think everyone on this side of the House knows for sure that will never happen. The provisions have been changed from reporting $250,000 in assets and $500,000 in sales to $5 million in assets and $10 million in sales. In my view, that is not an improvement. It smacks of crass socialism, of government riding shotgun on technological transfers. It all adds up to one thing—government intervention, stateism, centralization, nationalization, whatever you want to call it.

Bill C-48 was mentioned by my colleague from Winnipeg. He said the provisions therein were not for Canadianization but purely and simply for nationalization. Bill C-48 smacks of government interference, just as Bill S-10 does. This is overregulation, which is driving our Canadian dollar crazy and causing our interest rates to climb. I am wondering what this House is all about if it is not to debate bills to tremendous importance such as Bill S-10. In my view, Canadians are over-regulated and we will be more so once Bill S-10 is enacted.

It has been estimated that every man, woman and child in Canada could be regulated by government up to a value of $500. It is estimated that the cost of importing foreign oil to every man, woman and child in Canada is $150. Recently a representative of General Motors came to speak to our caucus. If people understood the costs of a General Motors car which are directly attributable to government regulation, they would be staggered. We have socialist, stateist policies. Our country was not built by overregulation or by government interference in our unions.

If we took the earth's surface and reduced it to one little country of a square mile and one tenth, with a population of 1,100 we would find that of those 1,100 some 22 would be communists, 440 would be under the direct control of communism, and 814 would be ignorant, poor or hungry. Only 286 would have sufficient food, clothing and shelter. Of the 1100 some 66 would be North Americans. Those 66 North Americans would own just 6.6 per cent of the land and 58 per cent of the wealth. They would produce 37 per cent of the food and electrical power, 50 per cent of the copper, iron and steel and 34 per cent of the coal. They would own 66 per cent of the automobiles, telephones, radios and televisions.

That will not be allowed to carry on if we have much more overregulation of our industries through measures such as Bill S-10. Those 66 North Americans would have 11 times more orchestras, groups, schools, museums, books and laboratories. That has been our legacy as a free enterprise system. The 66 North Americans would have 17 times more personal possessions than the other 1,034. A full 99 per cent of them would own a refrigerator, a telephone and a television. Some 80 per cent would own a washing machine and 92 per cent would own at least one car. Some 55 per cent of the goods in the world in the last 10,000 years have been produced in North America over the past 200 years.

Those are amazing facts, Mr. Speaker. Is this the result of socialism, state control and such measures as Bill S-10? No, Mr. Speaker. It has been accomplished by free enterprise, something the government across the way has forgotten. We must remember that as Canadians we are 10 per cent of the population figure I have just mentioned.

Why have Canadians been great? And we are great. It is because so far we have been free. We have not been overregulated. We have not had socialistic points of view forced on us in the past, as we are having them forced upon us now. We have been free to live and work under the free enterprise system.

Another word which I think members opposite have forgotten in their zeal for overregulation is the word "profit". It is a sad thing that too many people today have forgotten that word, including high school and college graduates, bureaucrats, members of Parliament including the entire New Democratic Party. Bill S-10 is designed to overregulate on the one hand and deregulate on the other. It does not assess what we really need, which is an increase in production. A great many people in this House, especially hon. members to my left, think that a capitalist is an elephant jumping up and down in a yard full of chickens screaming "Every man for himself". To them, making a profit is a vice.

Winston Churchill is a great favourite of mine. One of the best quotes of his was not the one about fighting on the beaches or "Never in the field of human conflict has so much been owed by so many to so few", but "It is a socialist idea that making profits is a vice; the real vice is making losses". This government is making a loss by overregulation, by centralization and by taking us down the slippery road to socialism. The facts of life are that nothing happens until something is sold. By overregulating industry you do not sell things. You do not have a productive country. The socialistic policies in the handouts which this government makes are in some cases much needed, but we cannot afford to make them in this country because of the huge deficit we have incurred unless we increase productivity and meet the situation head on.

The facts of life are that profits make everything happen in our society. Without profits nothing happens. Our present government is not profiting. It must be made to take a look at the economic fiasco it is making of our free enterprise system. It is hitting at industries by giving more paper burden to corporations such as General Motors. Our gross national product is at a standstill, and now we are faced with Bill S-10. We are in a deficit position of $15 billion this year alone and we owe another $101 billion in gross debt. Isn't that a great legacy for my children?

• (1650)

Right now it takes more than 20 cents of every tax dollar to pay the interest on the national debt. And we want more regulations, we want S-10! It is suicidal. We have an energy bill to nationalize the oil industry. It is a good job it was amended, because before it had actually got to the point of confiscation of 25 per cent of the private enterprise land rights. Thank God for small mercies on that one!

We have before the Supreme Court of Canada a resolution, not a bill, to patriate unilaterally. Again it is overregulation. It is another form of S-10. Have we not learned what happened in the U.S.S.R.? It was once a net exporter of food, the bread basket of Europe; but what is it now? It is a net importer. Look at the difference between East and West Germany. How many S-10s do you suppose they have? They do not have very many, I will grant you that. Free enterprise is plenty in the West, but there is a downtrodden, state-controlled, near-starvation populace on the other side of the wall in East Germany.

Look at Britain. Will we not learn what happened to it when there was state control? I do not think we have learned our lesson very well. The leader of the Labour party, Aneurin Bevan, once said of Britain:

This island is almost made of coal and surrounded by fish.

Only an organizing genius could produce a shortage of coal and fish in Great Britain at the same time. After a few years of that overregulated, S-10 style government of those socialists in Britain, there were shortages of both fish and coal in Britain. By 1976—

[Translation]

Mr. Blais: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. the Minister of Supply and Services on a point of order.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to indicate to the hon. member that Bill S-10 has nothing to do with regulations as such. I am delighted that he should be making a great speech on the recent report of the Economic Council of Canada but Bill S-10, on the contrary, is intended to reduce the obligation of Canadian and foreign companies to file various forms and therefore corporate organizations will have fewer obligations to provide additional information to the Government of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The remarks of the hon. minister have been fully understood. That is precisely what I did earlier when I urged the hon. member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) to limit his remarks to the bill under study, Bill S-10. I would therefore invite the hon. member who now has the floor, the hon. member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart), to do the same thing.

[English]

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, the corollary between S-10 and what I have been saying is very evident to anyone who sits on this side of the House. It is overregulation.

Mr. Blais: You did not even read the bill.

Mr. Stewart: I have read the bill, believe me!

Mr. Blais: Show me where it deals with overregulation.

Mr. Stewart: The hon. member will get his chance. I am on my feet at the moment; just listen.

An hon. Member: Oh, my goodness, the arrogance!

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, overregulation in S-10 or in any other form of government is what is killing us in Canada. It is centralization. The bill kills the spirit of unionism and it kills the spirit of everything we are trying to do in this House.

I mentioned the fact that profits are very definitely tied to a bill such as S-10. We have to the south of us a President who wants to control and balance a budget. He wants to reduce inflation. But this is not the case here. Our present government is leading us down the garden path of socialism, not to Utopia but perhaps to Armageddon.

Mr. Blais: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would like the hon. gentleman to indicate in this debate where the issue or the question of socialism versus capitalism is affected by any of the provisions of this bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It is very difficult for the Chair. I invited hon. members on two occasions to address their remarks to the bill. Perhaps those who read Hansard later will analyse it in their own way. The hon. member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart) still has the floor. Again, he is invited to address his remarks to Bill S-10.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I thank you very much. My whole preamble was directed directly at the bill and taken apart. Now I am referring, through overregulation and state control, to that bill.

I would like to make in conclusion six points. If we are ever to get anywhere in this country and come back to deregulation, to profitability, and to the matters which this bill and others should be addressing themselves, we must recognize that we are in the hands of a socialist government and do something about it. We must support all kinds of things which will cap the teeth of inflation and government spending, stop the overregulation of our wonderful industries, and which will not interfere with unions doing their job to increase productivity, which this type of bill will do.

The causes of inflation are myriad. We have too much regulation by government. That is the real point. Thomas Jefferson summed it all up by saying:

The government's job is to keep men from hurting one another but to leave them otherwise free to regulate their own affairs.

Is that direct enough, hon. member? Too much government is the cause for many business failures today, and also increases inflation by 2 per cent. Check that.

There is too much expansion of government. Too many of our people are eating from the public trough. There are too many free lunches. The job of government is not to confer happiness upon us but to give us opportunities to work out happiness for ourselves. Any government which is big enough to take things away through a bill such as this is also big enough to destroy us. Let us turn government away from the big unions, the big educators, the big consumer advocates, the big interest groups, which are the regulators, the welfare recipients and all those who espouse big government, and turn it toward the great percentage of Canadians, the small businessmen and the free enterprisers who provide the production and pay the bills in this our society.

My goal sitting in the opposition is to stop the socializing of your country and mine, Mr. Speaker, to support a strong defence policy—if I might pop that one in—to fight inflation, to reduce taxes and lessen government regulating influences, and to stop the expansion of big government through bills like S-10. In other words, fish or cut bait.

Mr. Blais: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. Again on a point of order, dealing with relevance it is evident that the hon. gentleman has not read the bill. This bill aims to return CALURA to the status it was in prior to 1965, namely, the bill which was passed by John George Diefenbaker. Unless the hon. gentleman wishes to equate John George Diefenbaker with creeping socialism, I think that the hon. gentleman should withdraw every one of those allegations that he has just made.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I am sure the minister would not deliberately mislead the House, but John George Diefenbaker to my recollection was not the prime minister in 1965.

I would also like to point out, relating to a previous point of order, that this bill did not create difficulties for business. Several sections of the bill require a return comprising a set of financial statements, a balance sheet, a statement of income, and the entire bill goes on with additional returns required for business. Surely the minister has read the bill, I would hope, and would have noticed this.

Mr. Blais: On a point of order, please—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Blais: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Blais: The bill was passed in 1962, it was amended in 1965—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Now hon. members want to enter into a debate. The hon. member for Simcoe South.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I have read the bill with interest and I quarrel with the formula of it, as I have stated continuously throughout this speech. I will conclude with the old saying, as a former salesman, that "Old salesmen never die, they just go out of commission". That should make the hon. member happy! These things that I have mentioned cannot happen to us.

Mr. Blais: That is as relevant as his comments.

Mr. Stewart: However, Edmund Burke, a conservative philosopher of the eighteenth century, once said:

The price of freedom is enternal vigilance.

That is what we are trying to do on this side of the House, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I was involved in a debate last week which caused me at the time to raise the question of why the government should decide at that time to introduce the matter then before the House. This was either on Monday or Tuesday of last week. It was Monday, because that was their allotted day, so to speak, and they decided to talk about foreign affairs, and to go on from that to the North-South dialogue.

I asked a question right at the outset of my speech then. I asked why the government should have decided to introduce at that time for the second time in a decade, by a government motion, a matter for debate covering foreign affairs. I did not get a very satisfactory answer and I suspected that it had something to do with the delay in the ruling to be handed down by the Supreme Court of Canada.

I am forced to ask again why it is that today, June 22, a bill should be introduced to this House, presumably on the basis of the government's set of priorities, that was passed by the Senate on December 11, 1980. I am not complaining about some of the matters that intervened, but I would ask if the government has nothing more important than this to introduce as we approach the summer recess. It causes me to speculate a little bit about the intentions of the government in introducing a measure of this sort at this time and to regard its priorities as being weird and beyond the comprehension of an ordinary citizen such as I.

I should like to draw attention to another aspect of the preparation and presentation of this bill, Mr. Speaker. When I examined it to see if there was something I wanted to say about it, I took it for granted that it would deal with amendments to the Corporations and Labour Unions Act and, as with other bills, assistance would be provided on the right hand facing page regarding the existing legislation being amended. It may be that bills that come to us from the Senate do not contain such provisions. Nevertheless, I think it ought to be the rule that when dealing with an amending bill there should be readily available to us, on the right hand page, as is normal with Commons bills, the provisions now on the statute book which the bill is intended to amend.

In order to see what this bill aims to do, I had to go back to the Revised Statutes, which are in themselves invaluable but a little bit cumbersome. The text of the act that is being amended appears in the Revised Statutes of Canada, Chapter 31. That chapter, with all its attachments, is 17 pages long while the amendments contained in this bill run to 15 pages. To a considerable extent there are deletions from the original act, but there are also some lengthy additions. All the complaints we have been listening to about reducing the need to report are an oversimplification of the amendments being suggested to the Revised Statutes of Canada, Chapter 31.

The paper burden notion has been before us on many occasions. It is within my recollection as a member of this House that a new committee was set up called the Joint Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments. I am not a member of that committee. It deals with the amount of regulation of our society that is achieved by ministerial discretion or by statutory instruments which regulate. I shall come to the matter of ministerial discretion and the regulation which the minister may or is required to produce under the amendment before us. Members of that committee ought to be wondering, as I am, why we are adding to, rather than subtracting from, the number of regulations under which we suffer in this country.

The government put up one speaker on this bill. As well, there were complaints and specious points of order in the last half hour by a minister who suggested that the member then on his feet had not read the bill. I wonder whether the bill has been read by anyone at all on the other side.

Is anyone over there aware of any super-regulation being imposed by this bill? The hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) mentioned one or two items in the bill and the returns that will have to be made as a result of them. They include the very matters already provided in the Income Tax Act by corporations and unions, and now another element comes into it.

We have just finished the 1981 census, Mr. Speaker. I am sure that every member of the House received complaints of one kind or another about the questions asked in the census. Some of the complaints were like this: "Only a month ago I filled in my income tax return. Why do you have to know the details again? How well are you going to preserve the confidentiality of the information?" The confidentiality assigned to statistics obtained and presumably analysed and incorporated into graphs by Statistics Canada is of great concern to many people. The secrecy element is another concern, and if someone had to fill out the long form, all the particulars of a family, which are none of his business, would be known to the census taker. One wonders whether it is really any business of Statistics Canada to require the information. If someone's income falls within the $10,000 to $20,000 bracket, that is fine; but particulars of gross income were required in some census forms. Therefore, I think we are entitled to ask, and we would be remiss in our duties if we did not ask, the purpose for which all the information required to be produced by corporations and unions under Bill S-10 is going to be used.

I am looking square at a couple of officials who will probably be able to answer that question, but I doubt if there is anyone here in the House who would be able to answer it.

Have these additional bits of material been required of the Canadian people, corporate or trade union, in order to increase the bureaucratic power of some because he finds that he is not quite fully occupied with the material he has available to him, that he would like to get a little bit more? I think that is a possibility. Much of the information could be obtained by cross-checking in a confidential manner with the income tax department. It is within the walls of the Government of Canada. The information is provided in income tax returns. I see no reason why, if it is needed for any particular reason, it should not be transferrable on demand and under conditions of confidentiality from one department to another. But no, we want it all again. Take the small business person who runs a florist shop on the corner. The requirement to produce statistics to the government add overhead in an immeasurable way. I use "immeasurable" in the sense that it is beyond measure. There is no reason why that florist should either have to hire an accountant, on the one hand, or spend hours after closing time to fill out the forms that are demanded by Statistics Canada in order to fulfil their petty dreams or their petty requirements.

There is, as has been said on more than one occasion, an invasion of the privacy of the small enterprise, the corporation or the union in this particular bill. I do see a fairly large component of Parkinsonianism entering into the rationale behind these amendments. It is very difficult to check, of course. Still, I cannot understand why it is there.

With specific reference to the text of the bill before us, I notice Sections 3 to 6 of the original act, Chapter 31 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, are repealed. The replacements are given. Sections 3 to 6 occupy pages 2 to about page 7 in the original document, but the replacement occupy pages 3 to 10. So we have seven pages to replace three. And this is a simplification, we are old, of a bill so as to reduce the amount of reporting required. I question that, given the particulars required. Ones mentioned by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) are: the name of the corporation, the address of the head office and the manner in which the corporation was incorporated. Surely these particulars are on 80 files in this country, and yet Statistics Canada requires it again? For what purpose? Surely the name of the corporation would suffice?

In addition to that, the bill goes on to ask the manner in which the corporation was incorporated, the amount of the share capital, the number of issued shares and, in the case of corporations having 50 shareholders or less, the number of shares of that class held by persons having addresses shown in the relevant records of the corporation, and so on. The very reading of these amendments, these shortenings of the original act, in themselves tax the imagination. Let us take the case of a florist, a wholesale flower distributor, or a nursery. Under this act these businesses would be required to produce this material once a year. I ask hon. members why. Why are they being burdened with this nonsense material?

There is another element here which concerns me. It goes back to a matter of ministerial discretion and regulation. On page 8 in clause 4.1(3) we find first:

The minister may, where he considers it advisable, authorize or require any holding corporation to file separate sets of financial statements in respect of itself and its subsidiaries—

Here we have the minister intervening for the first time with a discretionary power. I have already mentioned the problems we have had, and the need to set up a special committee about ministerial discretion. But in clause 4.2(2), again on page 9, we find:

—a return in the prescribed form specifying such information as the governor in council may prescribe relating to transactions involving transfers of technology—

What is this all about? Supposing that a transfer of technology is from Algoma Steel to Ipsco. Is that a concern of any government? This is a business transaction, a transaction between two corporate entities within Canada. Why should they be required to report that? What about a transfer of technology outside of Canada? I see, reading further, the following:

—to the holding corporation or any of its subsidiaries from persons not resident in Canada.

These are business transactions. What is Statistics Canada going to do about this? Is it going to report to the Foreign Investment Review Agency? Is that its policing function? Has it taken on this function? Therefore, we have a dual complaint: ministerial discretion, on the one hand, and the requirement to report transfers of technology, on the other.

Again we find in Section 4.2(2) the following:

—the governor in council may prescribe relating to transactions involving transfers of technology in the reporting period to the corporation from persons not resident in Canada.

Supposing Algoma Steel does get a process from Bethlehem Steel in the United States. Is it required under law to report it to the Government of Canada? I am at a loss to understand why it should. There is no reason at all. I hope some members on the other side will realize what is being asked of our various industries and trade unions. Their privacy is being invaded as never before.

● (1720)

We are now confronted with technological transfers. This bill used to be known as CALURA, which sounds like an Irish folk song, "Calura-lura-lie". With the introduction of the transfer of technology I suppose we will now have to call it CALUTTRA, the corporations and labour unions and technical transfers returns act. I cannot see any other name for it. It destroys much of the harmony of that beautiful, lilting CALURA, but CALUTTRA I suppose it will have to be.

With regard to this technical transfer notion, I realize in one clause there is no requirement—"shall be deemed not to include any scientific or technical description of any product or process". Thank goodness for that. At least copyrights, trade marks and patents are safe.

That still does not explain why Statistics Canada has to know about these transfers, whether in or out of Canada, when they are covered by patents, copyrights or trade marks. However, they seem to feel they need to know. I see the members over there sitting back and not worrying one whit about it, which disturbs and distresses me. I will leave the comments on labour unions to some others.

Section 7(1) of the original act has been amended. There on summary conviction the fine did not exceed $50 for each day of such default. It is not surprising to learn that inflation has set in and instead of $50 it will now be $250 a day. The fine has been increased fivefold since the original passage of the act. Now any corporation that fails to file with the Chief Statistician of Canada its return for the reporting period every year or to comply with subsection 6(2), that is the one involving transfers of technology, will be liable to fines up to $250 per day so long as the default continues. I see by jumping over to page 13 that that same fine, instead of being probably $25 with respect to a union, has gone to $250 for each day of such default on summary conviction if the report has not been produced.

All things considered, I have my misgivings about the need for this bill. I would have been quite happy to see an amendment withdrawing Chapter 31 because it really does not produce much of value except perhaps for the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) to know where he can levy his taxes. Maybe that is the reason. Maybe at the end of my speech I have discovered the rationale of the whole amendment.

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I do not often rise to participate in a debate on this subject. However, the minister having invited me to read the bill, I am unable to resist participating for a very few minutes.

Despite what the minister says, Bill S-10 is a confusing bill that is bound to add a fair amount of difficulty to conducting business in this country. I will try to stick as closely to the bill as I can. I will begin with the definitions and ask the House to note that the reporting period, which is spoken of quite a bit, is different for some businesses and some unions. The definition is a period that lasts not less than 12 months and not longer than 53 weeks after its commencement, and that ends between November 1 of one calendar year and January 31 of the following calendar year.

There are a few mysteries I hope will be cleared up when the minister speaks on this bill about the corporation, which is defined as a holding corporation.

A corporation is the holding corporation of another corporation if that other corporation is its subsidiary.

One should not be surprised that the next section puts it backwards:

A corporation is a subsidiary of another corporation if it is controlled by that other corporation.

That is fine except a little later on in the bill one finds:

—one corporation is affiliated with another corporation if one of them is the subsidiary of the other—

It rather confuses one as to how this could be true if a corporation is a subsidiary of another corporation that is controlled by that other corporation. They should really decide if it is a subsidiary or affiliate and preferably not have both at the same time.

When looking at page 8 of the bill, I became rather concerned about the role played nowadays by the Chief Statistician of StatsCan. My thought here was, "StatsCan, what are you doing?" StatsCan are apparently doing what the Department of National Revenue did heretofore. There was a time when business details were considered confidential to business—industrial confidential. One could ask the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) about details of the business conducted between McDonnell Douglas and the Canadian government. He would say he cannot tell you what the bids were on this, or what the bids were on that, or the offers on one plane or another, because it is industrial confidential.

The government insists in this bill that each business must produce, not for the Department of National Revenue but for Statistics Canada, the following:

(a) a balance sheet showing the assets and liabilities . . .

(b) a statement of investments of the corporation . . .

(c) a statement of income for the reporting period,

(d) a statment of retained earnings . . .

(e) a statement of changes in financial position—

Why does StatsCan need this information? The Department of National Revenue would refuse you flatly if you asked for this information of any company or individual in Canada, yet we are going to entrust it to StatsCan which, as we all know, has the security of a leaky sieve. Businesses do not appreciate having anyone other than the Department of National Revenue ask for business details in this manner.

● (1730)

I am puzzled too about returns on transfers of technology which every holding corporation has to turn in. There is a definition of technology, but there are excuses by which corporations can be allowed out of that requirement. For instance, it says on page 9—perhaps I had better read it—the following:

Every holding corporation . . . shall . . . file with the Chief Statistician of Canada not later than March 31 . . . a return in prescribed form specifying such information as the governor in council may prescribe relating to transactions involving transfers of technology—

Two paragraphs later it says:

For the purposes of this section, information relating to transactions involving transfers of technology shall be deemed not to include any scientific or technical description of any product or process.

What on earth, then, is technology? It is baffling. In one place it says the transfer of technology, and in the next clause it excludes everything one always assumed was technology.

If you try to get out of sending in this return, there is a very uncharming, if I can use that word, or a very disagreeable clause, namely, Clause 6 on page 9, which says:

The Chief Statistician of Canada may, by notice in writing, request proof from any corporation that fails to file or fails to complete any part of a return required under this part that it is not subject to the application of this part in respect of the return or of the part of the return not completed.

In other words, you are absolutely guilty unless you can prove your innocence. I thought this assumption of guilt went out of vogue some one thousand years ago. I hope some way can be found by which the innocent-until-proved-guilty part of our common law can be retained, other than Clause 6 on page 9.

If you do not provide this notice, the notice is good only for ten days.

A corporation shall, within ten days after it receives a notice under subsection (1), furnish the Chief Statistician of Canada with the proof requested in the notice or file or complete, as the case may be, the return in respect of which the notice was given.

Ten days' notice to a business to produce the reasons it should not have to produce that file and proof of it is totally unrealistic. It is totally unrealistic to expect a firm of any size to do that within ten days.

I notice that labour unions do not have to comply if they have fewer than one hundred members resident in Canada. I suppose we can get this information at the committee stage, but I am curious as to how many unions in Canada have fewer than one hundred members resident in Canada and as to whether they might not prefer to break into branches of unions to ensure that they do not have to comply with some of the faulty law implicit in this bill.

At page 11 it says:

(a) a return in the prescribed form containing the prescribed information including the following particulars:

This is not later than 90 days. However, this deals with unions. Let us go back to where businesses are dealt within the descriptions of the reporting stage. For unions the period is between November 1 of one calendar year and January 31 of the following calendar year, yet in the case of businesses this return has to be in by the end of March. If their reporting period ends January 31 and the return has to be in by the end of March, that is only two months which is allowed instead of 90 days. It seems that some of these corporations being spoken of could be very large indeed, and they would have to do in two months what a small union would have to do in three months. I think there should be a little more equity in that respect.

I am pleased to have participated in this debate. There are so many things wrong with the drafting of this bill and there has been so much confusion created one could almost take this as a textbook example of the burden placed on businesses and unions to comply with regulations. There is no apparent need for many of the regulations. I am particularly concerned that Statistics Canada should be requiring so many returns—which are usually confidential—from firms which try to conduct business and keep this country going.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, in joining in this debate on Bill S-10 I suggest to many members in this House that if they feel that this bill is something of a routine nature or something the House might rubber stamp or pass without proper examination and debate, I feel they are overlooking some of the very serious implications inherent in the bill. It is a sleeper. In many ways this bill demonstrates the tremendous paper load the federal government places not only on businesses but also on labour unions in this country.

What I will try to point out in my remarks is that there is a serious question as to why we are passing this bill in its present form. I followed the minister's speech in the House, I read the Hansard report of his speech, and I was surprised to find that at no point did the minister attempt to justify the continuation of the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act. Instead, he tried to slide this bill through by saying it is going to be less onerous. Why should it be onerous at all to the Canadian businessman or to the Canadian labour union? I think a case can be made to show that this government should be taking steps we had intended to take when we were in power, namely, to trim government regulations regarding statistical information. The program we were putting into place was to relieve business of much of the paper work which governments and bureaucracies behind governments love to foster. There is a serious question as to why we should permit the government to bring in the bill in its present form.

I say that because I think we often overlook the true impact of what we are talking about here. Let us first ask ourselves whether this statistical data is relevant. If statistics are to mean much, they should be fresh, accurate and recent. And, of course, they must be relevant to what people are interested in.

On the first question—is the statistical information fresh—as we know, on December 15 last the minister tabled the last Corporation and Labour Unions Returns Act report. For what year? Was it for 1980 or 1979? No, it was for 1978, two years after the fact. In December of last year we were finally furnished with the report dealing with corporations as of two years earlier. At the same time two other reports were filed. One was on labour unions and was called "Catalogue 71-202 Annual". The other crafty little document was called "Catalogue 71-202S". It was a supplement dealing with labour unions which gave much more intimate details concerning the labour unions of this country.

I mention this because I suggest that any statistical compilation which is more than two years old before people who might be interested in the data have access to it cannot be represented as being fresh information which industry, labour unions and government anxiously await. I suggest instead that the type of material we have before us fits better into the general category of what is gathered in a census, which is what we went through on June 3; in other words, information catalogued from time to time but certainly not on a quarterly basis. There is probably no necessity to have it even on an annual basis.

When I take you through some of the detail, Mr. Speaker, on the cost to the Canadian consumer, the businessman, the worker, members of a labour union, I think there is a very serious question as to why we should continue the act at all. I say this because I note the minister, who has repeatedly interrupted some of our speakers, rose and said: "The bill was introduced in 1962 by the then Diefenbaker government." We do not deny that, but I would suggest that is reflective, if you like, of this rather stale, archaic type of government we have in power today. They suggest that because something was introduced by our government—and I would suggest to you that it was relevant in 1962—almost 20 years later it should be left on the statute books notwithstanding the tremendous differences there are on reporting by labour unions, corporations and individuals today a compared to 1962. That is the difference, and this sleepy old reactionary government is not up with the times. They do not seem to realize that in a modern day society it is government that is lagging, not business; it is government dragging business back because it just cannot keep up with them. Here you have an example where they suggest that something introduced about 19 years ago should be left on the statute books just because it was introduced 19 years ago.

Let me take you to my next point, Mr. Speaker, which is perhaps even more serious. It deals with the question of cost. What does it really cost the Canadian consumer? Let there be no mistake, people may say: "Well, what does it cost business, corporations or labour unions?" The ultimate person who pays when there is unnecessary cost is the consumer. Here is what the minister said in the House upon the conclusion of his introductory remarks on the bill. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that I asked him this:

> Could the minister tell the House whether any evaluation was made during that study of what is the cost of complying under the act for business and for consumers throughout Canada? Is there some estimate as to what it is costing businessmen to comply with the act as it now exists, and can the minister give us any estimate as to what it will cost businessmen to comply with the new act if it is passed in its present form?

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, the minister replied:

> I do not have with me any information in terms of the total cost to any individual company of completing a form on an annual basis. However, I would suggest to the hon. gentleman that it would not appear to be a concern of any of the companies with whom we have had exchanges.

In all fairness, Mr. Speaker, how can a minister come into this House and say it has never been of concern to any of the companies with which he has had exchanges when the self-same government in, I believe, 1978, in a return given to a committee of this House pointed out there were 124 corporations with assets of over $5 million each that had not complied with the various forms under this act. That was in 1978, in relation to 1976 data. There were 12,000 corporations in total that had not supplied the information two years after the fact back in 1978. Yet we have a minister with the audacity to come in here and say the government has heard of no troubles as far as corporations are concerned.

I point this out because I think it is relevant that we review exactly what we are talking about here. Many of the speakers have referred to questionnaires and the fact this data is prepared therefrom. What is the nature of these questionnaires? Let us take a look first at the eight questionnaires business is now asked to fill in which have some relevance to this bill we now have before us, namely Bill S-10. If you like, I will challenge the minister on this. I will bet that the minister has not read those eight questionnaires. In short, while he has been inferring that many of our members did not read the bill, I would suggest to him that he probably does not even know the questionnaires to which he referred in his statements before this House. If the minister has not done his homework, I think it is time that I at least read into the record the type of questionnaires to which they are subjecting Canadian business at the present time.

Let me point out, Mr. Speaker, that if you took those questionnaires and hooked them up end to end you would find you have 52 feet of questionnaires every time someone has to comply with the present act. On top of that, you would have 31 feet of instructions to go along with it. That means 83 feet of paperwork for people to go through every time this act is complied with. You will recall the minister said he thought there were about 90,000 poor souls out there, not counting the labour unions, that have to comply with this type of paperwork. So if you add up all those things, you will find he is inflicting on Canadian business—and add to it the labour unions, if you like—7,470,000 feet of paper. Think of how many miles that is if it were ever stretched out.

However, let me first of all touch on what these forms are supposed to be about. The first one, questionnaire No. 1, is called "Annual Return of Corporations under the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act". This is a kind of general form dealing with a lot of information that I would suggest is relevant today in many other places, relevant I suggest in the sense that it can be found. We have a new corporations act, the provinces have corporations acts in which, in virtually every jurisdiction, the type of information solicited here is probably available under the relevant corporations act, be it provincial or federal.

The next one is the annual return of corporations called "CLR 3". This one is a more particular form but a shortened version of the larger one I referred to. We then get into two marked "confidential". I am not sure why. One is called "The Annual Report", the other is called "The Quarterly Report". Both refer to selected information on companies in Canada wholly or largely foreign owned. Probably the reason they are marked "confidential"—we would never want to disclose anything about a foreign firm here—is that this is something for the minister's eyes only, or perhaps for FIRA.

Mr. Knowles: That is the best way for it to get out.

Mr. Stevens: In short, Mr. Speaker, here are a couple more forms the Canadian businessman has to cope with.

That then brings me to questionnaire No. 5, a four-page form which is a report of transactions between Canada and other countries for the calendar year 1980. They ask you to keep one copy for your file. It goes through a lot of detail as to what you have been doing in bonds, stocks, bank stocks, and activities in the United States and the United Kingdom.

• (1750)

Questionnaire No. 6 deals with the geographical distribution of ownership of capital. This deals with the balance of payments division of Statistics Canada. It is a green form. I do not know what the colours signify. I notice there are yellow, green, grey, white and pink forms. Presumably this form deals with what they call the geographical distribution at the end of the current period of the various items they ask corporations to set out in the form.

Then there is questionnaire No. 7 which concerns ownership in Canadian companies. It is another compilation of the type of information I would suggest is readily available in many areas at the present time. Incidentally, as we have probably noticed, much of the information in these forms to which I am referring is of no concern to the banking community, to insurance companies or to loan companies. They are all exempt because presumably they are on friendly terms with the government. But they are of great concern to small businessmen and to the labour union people.

Questionnaire No. 8 is the real dandy. If you, Mr. Speaker, were in business sometime and you heard that Statistics Canada wants questionnaire No. 8 filled in, duck, because you will not make much money that year after filling out the form. Look at its size! It has a white, a pink, a yellow, a grey and a green part; it is in technicolour.

I will not take the time of the House to go through each one of these forms, but I should like to refer to the various areas they touch upon. One deals with the construction industry; another one catches all general corporations; one touches upon durable goods manufacturing industries; one deals with the real estate, rental and development companies; one touches upon mining, petroleum and natural gas; then there is the gas pipeline transport form. In short, it takes a 34-page booklet to describe what they want companies to do in all the forms to which I have just referred. This is the minister in action, this is Statistics Canada.

I will throw out another challenge. I bet that the minister has never even once gone to Statistics Canada to go over these forms with its officials; he has never been in the building. Yet he has the nerve to rise in the House and say that he knows what is best for businessmen and labour unions. What absolute rubbish, or, if I may use the emperor's comment, what garbage!

This is an example of an institution, Statistics Canada, proposing various forms to compile data which are mainly stale-dated when the information is finally compiled and certainly are, in most instances, absolutely irrelevant to any current decisions we in business, in government or in the labour sector would want to make.

One justification used for the present approach in the bill is that somehow they will take all those forms and reduce them to one form, that is, the new form contemplated by Bill S-10. The minister has probably never had a peek at this, but I got a peek at the type of form of which the officials of Statistics Canada are thinking, if Bill S-10 is passed. Here is the draft form they are thinking of putting business and labour union people through.

Mr. Blais: We do not know what colour the new form will be.

Mr. Stevens: I hear the minister indicating that he does not know what colour the form will be. This indicates how pertinent he can be. The main thing he is concerned about is whether the new form will be pink, blue or green.

Mr. Blais: You have been talking about colours since you began your comments.

Mr. Stevens: If the minister has any input in the forms which will be devised by Statistics Canada if the bill is passed, his most important comment will relate to the colour of the form. It is certain that Statistics Canada will not pay much attention to what he says about what should be in the form or whether there should even be a form.

Mr. Evans: Tell us what is in the form.

Mr. Stevens: I notice the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) is shushing the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Evans). I do not blame the minister for trying to put him down after all the faux pas he has made over the last few months. I will not embarrass the Minister of Supply and Services by following up on that.

Mr. Evans: It is because you do not know what is in the forms.

Mr. Stevens: The parliamentary secretary insists. I will tell him what is in the forms.

Mr. Knowles: Don't pay any attention to him; he is not in his own seat.

Mr. Stevens: Form No. 1 is to be addressed to the "Chief Statistician of Canada" for the fiscal period ended—then there is a blank. It includes the corporate name as per charter, the postal address of the head office and the nature of the business. If the address in 1(b) is outside Canada, it will include the address of the principal office in Canada. It requests the end of the previous fiscal year. It includes the date of incorporation, day, month and year; the act of incorporation, whether it be federal, provincial or outside Canada; the manner of incorporation, be it by letters patent, memorandum of association or special act. The corporation is to be listed as public, private or other. Then the corporation directors will be listed with their initials, surnames, the positions they hold, their postal addresses, citizenship, number of shares of each class owned and the classes. Then it includes the share capital of the reporting corporation. As far as this area is concerned, the corporation must comply with items (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (f) and (g).

Then it deals with corporations, individuals and related groups on owning 10 per cent or more of the total shares issued of any class, items (a), (b), (c) and (d) which request the number of shares and various information. It goes on page after page. If Statistics Canada is not willing to give these forms to the minister, I will certainly send him copies.

I have referred only to the opening form. The next one is very weighty. It runs for approximately 20 pages. It deals with the geographical distribution of transactions corporations may have had in the United States, the United Kingdom and other countries. It asks for the retained earnings position; it even includes a fold-out which deals with any bonds, debentures, notes, mortgages, advances, bank loans, leasing liabilities and such.

In short, if we combine all these forms, we will find that the minimum length of these forms, according to our calculations, is 26 feet. We are really talking about passing forms tonight with which Canadian businesses will have to live that are 26 feet long. If we take the figures of the minister wherein he thinks that only 20,000 businesses will have to comply with these forms, it will generate 520,000 feet.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to see the Minister of Labour (Mr. Regan) has joined us tonight. Undoubtedly, he has come into the House in anticipation of joining in the debate. Since this debate touches so heavily on the unions of Canada, I could never anticipate that a minister of labour would sit in this House and stay mute for an entire debate which touches upon a form which is being so opposed by the labour unions in Canada. I look forward to the Minister of Labour making a contribution later on. I hope he will be patient for I will certainly try to be brief in my remaining remarks. I only touched on a few points earlier in my speech, as you will recall, and I have a few more points I wish to make.

Just before we adjourned at dinner time I pointed out that the three questions which will now be put to Canadian businessmen, and which amount to several pages as far as forms are concerned, will, if put end to end, actually stretch to a length of 26 feet. There are 26 feet of questions which we will, in effect, allow Statistics Canada—and I see officials from StatsCan sitting in the gallery wringing their hands, wanting to get this legislation in place so they can grind out more and more forms to Canadian businessmen—to put to businessmen.

On behalf of the labour unions and corporations of Canada, and businessmen generally, we must give some protection to those sectors of our economy as far as Statistics Canada is concerned. Anyone who wishes to review the activities of that organization knows that it allows data processing and the compilation of data to run rampant if no controls are placed on it. So, I am asking that the minister reconsider this evening the actual pressing of this bill and that he reconsider whether he even wants to offer it to the House of Commons for passage in its present form. We in the official opposition believe that it may well be that the bill should be withdrawn and that studies should take place to determine whether in fact we need this legislation any longer. The type of information which is spelled out in the various drafts forms which Statistics Canada has prepared is something that, I suggest, could be obtained from other sources. At the present time in the country we have a tremendous amount of data which is already available to government. I suggest that if that date were utilized in a way that Statistics Canada desired, there would be absolutely no need to subject the businessmen and labour unions of this country to the type of documentation and form-filling which is anticipated in the bill before us tonight.

I sometimes think that the magnitude of the requirements which government places on business is overlooked. It is a formidable task which we impose on business. The total number of forms or acts, if you like, which business must comply with include the following items. There is federal sales tax collection, there is provincial sales tax collection, excise duties, customs clearance, UIC deductions, workmen's compensation, hospitalization, loan applications, building permits, equipment operating licences, property taxes, vehicle registration, transport operating licences, communication licences, income tax forms, income deductions at source, detailed house surveys, bounding, business licences, restaurants and liquor taxes, CMHC housing surveys, safety inspections, tax audits, FIRA requirements, elevator licences, boiler licences, subsidy applications, development permits, waste control, minimum wage guidelines, Statistics Canada surveys—including the type of thing we are now reviewing—manpower training programs, employee hiring procedures, government contracts procurement, grants and incentive programs, consumer protection standards, census of population, drivers' licences, welfare and health benefits, and CPI samples.

I could go on with many other things that we seem to feel we can demand of business; and yet we assume, presumably, that there is no consumer consequence or cost. The fact, as we know, is that there is a very big cost. I could mention that those various items I have read into the record were not original with me. They were items which were referred to by a minister, Tony Abbott, when he was in power as a member of this government. At that time, he was the minister for small business. He was pointing out the need to relieve small business of much of that type of requirement.

Tonight we have a golden opportunity literally to do something about this problem, which people have talked about for years and years. In short, let us consider the possibility of not amending, but simply rescinding, the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act.

Having said that, I would like to go on to point out that in the spring of 1977 an Industry, Trade and Commerce interview team went across Canada and met with business people to listen to their views on how well government operates generally, and how well industry, trade and commerce specifically operates to meet their needs. Of the 5,000 businessmen interviewed, 35 per cent identified paper burden as the major irritant they had to live with. There was no other item that the businessmen reported to that team which bothered them so much as the paper burden to which they were subjected by governments. I would suggest that that observation is consistent with the findings of the Economic Council, which recently brought in its report, indicating its concern for the impact of regulations and paper burden on small business. The council found that for small businessmen—and I use their words as a direct quote—"paperwork was the major regulatory irritant—entailing an average of one to ten hours of extra effort per week—with federal paperwork demands exceeding provincial or municipal requirements in all provinces except Quebec."

In assessing the costs exacted by government paperwork, small business can undoubtedly be singled out as particularly hard hit because small businesses do not have the resources to hire specialized personnel or outside consultants to handle the paperwork. Often, paperwork represents a direct demand on the time of the principal operator, which is time he requires to work, plan and innovate in order to stay in business and grow.

I would suggest, in that respect, that most agree today that one of the great deficiencies in our country is in the area of productivity. Our businessmen are just not producing as much as most economists would like to see them produce. Let me assure hon. members and Your Honour that the passage of this bill in its present form will put a greater load and impediment on those very businessmen to whom we are turning to get the real growth in this country going up instead of down, as far as the average worker is concerned.

The proposed amendments to the CALURA are positive in that they will exempt numerous small businesses from having to report. On that we wish to agree. I think it is good that some businesses are exempted from having to fill in the present form. However, as I indicated earlier, our question is: why do any businesses, even at a $10 million threshold level, as far as sales are concerned, or $5 million in total assets, have to live with this type of documentation and data compilation when one bears in mind that it is done at tremendous cost, not only to those businesses but, most important, to the consumers who buy from those businesses?

I would suggest to Your Honour that the government claims that 70,000 businesses will be exempted, though one wonders if this figure, first used in 1978, is still realistic given, first of all, the high interest rates resulting in many small businesses going bankrupt and discouraging others from starting up and, second, the high levels of inflation, artificially increasing sales and assets.

In short, if the minister wants to continue with this type of legislation, our feeling is that the ceiling of $10 million in sales and $5 million in assets is too low. It was a ceiling which was first suggested in 1978. With inflation it becomes less and less as far as effective exemptions are concerned. In short, if we must have this type of legislation, let us increase the ceiling, certainly beyond the levels suggested by the minister.

For those companies which still have to report, the paperwork has been reduced, it is stated, by approximately 50 per cent. However, when one considers the over-all burden of government paperwork imposed on business, when examining CALURA one should ask the following questions: What is the purpose of the act? Has hope for benefits been measured against cost to business and government? Clearly, unless the minister misled this House, and I would hate to say that he deliberately misled the House—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Not him.

Mr. Stevens: However, unless the minister misled the House, he does not have the faintest idea as to what the cost of this amendment will mean to business in the country. Therefore, how can he say that some type of evaluation has been made as to whether the cost is warranted to business and to government? Is the same information being collected elsewhere? I have already indicated that I believe it is. If Statistics Canada were allowed to be a little more innovative in its approaches, it could pick up much of the data which companies and labour unions will be required to file if this amendment goes through.

Is the language used in the questionnaires clear and comprehensible? I would suggest that that is something which is open to interpretation; but I invite hon. members, especially those who I know want to speak on this bill and have not yet spoken, to read the actual forms which they, as businessmen, may have to fill out in the future if this bill goes through, and draw our own conclusions. I have no indication from Statistics Canada that they are backing down on any of the suggested forms which they want businessmen to comply with.

In short, I feel it will be a tremendous burden for labour unions and corporations to have to live with. Even if we agree with the objectives of CALURA, we must be concerned about the government's use of the information collected. In recent years, governments, and certainly those under the emperor, the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), have tried to exert more and more control, through legislation, regulation and industrial development programs, on the business sector of this country. The information provided by businesses through CALURA will undoubtedly be used by this government to continue with this interventionist approach to our economy.

I could go on spelling out the total impact of what I feel business will be subjected to if these forms become the law of the land; but may I simply conclude by inviting all hon. members finally to read the 1978 reports which are based, two years late, on information filed in 1976, and to ask themselves: "How much of the information in those reports, comprising three volumes, are really relevant to solving the problems which we live with in this economy today? I believe that if most hon. members reviewed those reports, they would see that they contain stale, dated information that will have virtually no impact on the means of solving the problems of inflation, the trade deficit and unemployment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, I have a few comments to make on Bill S-10, an act to amend the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act which is to provide for the reporting of financial and other statistics relating to the affairs of corporations and labour unions carrying on activities in Canada.

I should like to align myself with the comments made by the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) and share with the House my impression that a good many sectors of our society are opposed to this legislation. We see that it requires small unions and small businesses to be accountable in many areas, so it is obvious that they would be opposed to the legislation. To date, I have not seen the government demonstrate the need for this legislation. To my mind it is another case of government snooping or wishing to have records on practically every facet of our lives.

In its recent report, the Economic Council of Canada documented the need for deregulation rather than more regulation and reporting on that regulation. As the hon. member for York-Peel pointed out, an additional paper burden will be imposed on the small business sector. This government, as did this party when it was in power and during various election campaigns, committed itself to reducing the paper burden of the small business sector. But this legislation is another example of Liberal campaign promises being broken once it has assumed the role of government. Rather than reducing the paper burden of the productive sector of our society, the government is increasing it.

Not too long ago the Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Lapointe) did away with the offices that dealt with the paper burden that had been established across Canada, so it is obvious that this government is not concerned with reducing the paper burden that had been imposed on the small business sector.

This legislation will mean that the small business sector will have to fill out even more government forms and this, in turn, will decrease business productivity. As an hon. member who spoke earlier indicated, the government has not provided any figures to show what it will cost business to do this.

In the time that I have been a member of this House, it has been obvious that the government is concerned with the redistribution of wealth rather than with the generation of wealth. This bill is another example that the government is not concerned with the generation of wealth but is more than happy to place further restrictions on the business sector.

A good many members would like an opportunity to comment on this legislation and we hope they will have that opportunity when the bill is referred to committee so that there will be more feedback. I believe the legislation is worth a lengthy debate.

So much of the legislation that comes from the government attempts to structure our society so that it is aware of every move an individual makes. This is becoming a highly interventionist society because of the government's actions. It is attempting to dictate to the populace their rights and moods. We found that to be true in the wording of the constitutional proposal which indicated the government would grant certain powers to the people, rather than the reverse, that we as legislators would derive our power from the people who elect us. It is my belief that all the power and rights that we have are generated by the population.

Mr. Speaker, Jefferson said that men are naturally divided by temperament into two classes: those who fear and distrust ordinary people and want to concentrate power in the hands of a small, select elite, and those who trust and cherish ordinary people and think of them as the safest, if not always the wisest, repositories of power.

I think this illustrates the difference in the attitudes of the two major parties in this country. We have a party governing the nation that believes in the strong centralist approach; that believes that the elite few should govern and the people should do as it sees fit, rather than having input from the public at large. I am sure I speak for the majority of members on this side of the House when I indicate our belief that the Canadian people are the wisest repository of power and that we support getting more input from them.

During the constitutional debate, hon. members opposite criticized us for prolonging it. They brought in closure and choked off debate on the resolution. The excuse was that the House should be dealing with economic measures as the country was facing a severe economic situation. Mr. Speaker, the country is facing a severe economic situation and we must bring forward some measures to deal with high interest rates, but I would ask hon. members opposite where those economic measures are. The government indicated to us that when debate was completed on the constitutional resolution, it would bring economic measures forward. It has no economic measures, Mr. Speaker, to deal with the serious difficulties facing the Canadian population.

I would like to analyse the economic record of the government.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy) rises on a point or order.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. member that today we tabled a report on economics and the National Trading Corporation. The Tory party was against that. It is a vehicle to help small and medium-sized businesses in the export market.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member has a point of argument, not a point of order. The hon. member for Pembina has the floor.

Mr. Elzinga: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the information given by the hon. member. This is one of the few times I have heard him speak in the House so I appreciate his intervention. It is obvious that what I have to say hurts hon. members opposite. When we look at the economic record of the government we can see that it is not very impressive. It has set a number of records that it should not be proud of. I wish to share—

Mr. Collenette: Speak to the legislation.

Mr. Elzinga: This does relate to the legislation.

Mr. Collenette: No, it does not.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Pembina has the floor.

Mr. Elzinga: I wish to illustrate to hon. members opposite the importance of dealing with economic measures when we are facing the serious problems of today. The government has set records in spending. The same thing holds true of its budgetary deficit and unemployment. We have record high taxation rates as a result of the Liberal administration. The inflation rate has also reached a record level and everyone knows that interest rates are higher than we have ever experienced. The one thing that has not reached a record high is our dollar. It is at the lowest level we have seen it in Canada. I ask my friends opposite what they are doing to help. I say this bill should be withdrawn and legislation should be brought forward to help those individuals who are being hurt by the high interest rates, namely the small businessman, the farmer and the individual whose mortgage has to be renewed. Instead of putting increased paper burden on the small business sector, legislation should be brought in to relieve the high interest rates which people are facing.

• (2030)

I realize what I say hurts hon. members opposite because there is scarcely a problem which does not have their fingerprints all over it. I compare what this government is doing with what we attempted to do in the short time we were in government. We brought forward programs to alleviate some of the difficulties which the Canadian population was facing, and yet interest rates then were not as high as they are today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has been listening to the hon. member, and finds, with all due respect to him, he appears to be deviating from the subject matter of the bill before us.

Mr. Elzinga: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your admonition and henceforth my remarks will pertain directly to the legislation before us, namely Bill S-10. We have a piece of legislation before us that wishes to centralize power, that wishes to give the Government of Canada more authority over the lives of the individual because the government is requiring labour unions and corporations to fill out lengthy documents. This request is being made without giving any specific reason why the government wishes these forms completed.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words on this bill. I was shocked to see one form which will have to be filled out by businesses and labour unions as a result of passage of this bill. I hear an hon. member making a comment, but I say to him that he has looked at it, he should be shocked too. If the hon. member wants to speak on this bill, he should get on his feet and speak. That one form covers ten pages. If you take all the forms and put them end to end, they measure 26 feet. It is quite amazing. Some of the required items involving just a small businessman include purchases during the year of materials and components for manufacture and goods for resale. Many of the items will require changes to be made in the accounting systems of some companies. If this form is given to an auditor to complete, it will cost a considerable amount of money. For some time I have felt that this is really overkill. On one side of the argument we had a minister who was charged with the job of reducing the amount of paperwork which small businesses have to complete. We heard a great deal about that a couple of years ago when an hon. member was given the job. I believe the portfolio was that of minister of state for small businesses. When the hon. member left the portfolio, I asked him how many people he had in his department. Like many people in Canada I thought that the minister of state for small businesses who was in charge of reducing paperwork for small businesses would have a staff to help him. But I found out that the total establishment for that ministry consisted of the minister, two secretaries, an executive assistant and a public relations officer. Here was the minister in charge of reducing paperwork but he did not have the staff to do the job!

I recall seeing some letters that were sent out, publicity releases and copies of speeches that the minister made across the country wherein he said he would reduce the paperwork. Now we have this nonsense.

I have to relate to the House, as I have done before, an experience I had in my own business before I became involved in politics and was elected to the House of Commons. I started a small business. I had a large amount of paper coming into my office from various government agencies. I had to make a decision whether I was going to fill out the forms, as I am sure businessmen will have to do with these forms, or I was going to get on and do business to make some money to pay the bills, my staff, and so on. I took this massive pile of paper and divided it into two groups: one dealt with taxation, because we have to pay taxes, and the other was just a general information which was flowing in from Statistics Canada and other government agencies. The tax forms went to our auditor. In due course they were filed and returned to Ottawa. But the pile from the information seekers kept growing. They kept sending more and more forms. The pile got to be quite a height until it truly reached a crisis stage in the business. I had to decide whether I was going to spend the time filling out the forms or whether I was going to make some money or do something else in the business. I decided I would dispose of this paper. I went to the rubber stamp supply house in town. I bought a large rubber stamp with the words "not applicable" on it. I bought a red stamp pad. I returned to my office and stamped all these forms "not applicable". Then I sent these forms in their envelopes back to Ottawa.

In due course I received a computerized letter which said, "we are in receipt of form number so and so, which we understand is not applicable." The letter ended with one of those squiggly signatures which look somewhat like Arabic; you cannot decipher it nor do you know who the person is. It is just a mark on a paper made by a marking instrument. I then set up a series of files with the form numbers on the tab. I placed the letter I received in answer in each one. In due course, another form came. I xeroxed the computerized letter I received from one of the government agencies which said they understood it was not applicable. I stamped the document again "not applicable", stapled it and returned it to Ottawa.

In the course of a very few months I reduced the amount of paper flow by 40 per cent. I do not think the government feels any worse about this nor do I think the affairs of the nation ground to a halt, or anything of that nature. What this did was to prove how silly and nonsensical some of these forms are. When I read through some of what my colleague calls "gobbledygook" after looking at the census form, it makes me wonder whether we are supposed to spend our time filling out forms or doing some business. I can see to some extent the government's desire to get a handle on things as far as technology is concerned. It is concerned about the transfer of technology. The government should be trying to enhance the transfer of technology into this country. That is something we need.

• (2040)

In my own business in the last little while I have gone outside the country and licensed manufacturing within Canada so I would not have to import that particular product into this country. I wanted to get as high a Canadian content as possible, employ more Canadians and not contribute to the balance of payments problem. I wanted to get out of the foreign exchange hassle and so forth. I did that.

FIRA has restricted foreign investment in this country, contrary to what FIRA and government ministers will tell you. Ask the Minister of State what happens when he goes outside the country and talks about investment in Canada. He feels he must tell investors not to be afraid of FIRA.

If Canadian businesses are to be expected to sign licensing agreements or pursue patents and cross licensing with those in other countries for products or designs, we should not be discouraging them by requiring them to fill out these forms. There is a general suspicion with regard to filling out forms when it comes to information such as the transfer of technology.

Just looking through this form, I wonder whether I will be interested in putting down the details, the information regarding my licensing agreement, the terms, how long it is for, what the product is, what category it falls into, whether the information is to be kept secret or confidential or will be available to a lot of other people.

I hope that somewhere along the line we can have another look at this matter. I would like to see it discussed at great length. I know it has been kicking around for a number of years. The Senate had a look at it. However, before we rush into this, we should have the opportunity of having the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe) before us. Let him look at it along with those from Statistics Canada.

When it comes to forms, it should be the other way around. The minister and StatsCan should be required to convince an all-party committee of this House that the particular form is necessary. They should be required to come before a committee, show why it is absolutely vital that they have the form and give the reasons why. Perhaps if we had that approach, there would be a greater acceptance of the filling out of forms.

By the same token, some members of the committee will have had experience in the business sector and will have filled out such forms. People from the tax foundation, the chartered accountants' association, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, people from the John Bulloch group, the Canadian Federation of Independent Businessmen, and all others involved in filling out these forms should have some input. These people should be convinced through committee hearings that such and such information is absolutely vital for the government to function in the way it wants. If that were the case, there would probably be some measure of co-operation.

A tremendous amount could be gained from such a hearing. I am sure that each of these groups, organizations and individuals I have mentioned could contribute something to the construction of the form. I am sure that the same information is being collected time and time again. For example, I have run into many people who object to putting their income on the census form. They say that is their business and that of the Department of National Revenue, never the twain shall meet and there is no way they are going to put down that information. The same will be true of these forms. Businessmen have probably made quite legal arrangements with others regarding the cross licensing of technology.

I had occasion this morning to discuss with one of my colleagues a licensing arrangement with a company in Alberta. The transportation of that product to this market is too costly. It was decided to have a licensing agreement for a certain portion of the country. That company would be very reluctant to let that information become generally known across the country.

I hope others will speak to this bill and add something to the debate. I certainly do not feel it should go forward at this time. It should be withdrawn and put before an all-party committee or a task force such as the one on government regulations a while back which did a reasonably good job. That sort of approach could be taken with Bill S-10. Withdraw it and put it before an all-party committee, redraft it and bring it back here. If that approach were taken, I am sure it would receive reasonable passage through the House. The way it is now, I certainly cannot support it.

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to say a few words on Bill S-10 to amend the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act. As my background is in small business, I would like to relate some of the problems that exist in small business and the ramifications of those problems, particularly as they relate to information that StatCan wishes to obtain from small private entrepreneurs and unions. My colleague mentioned what occurs every five years when Statistics Canada conducts a census. I wish to speak briefly about the census because it will lead to what I want to mention about Bill S-10.

As a result of the census in my constituency, I received a number of telephone calls from small communities of 200 people where those appointed by Statistics Canada to do the census were actually neighbours.

Mr. Blais: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The bill has been before the House for two days. Surely we know what the essence of the bill is. The hon. member's comments relating to the census are out of order, being irrelevant to the principle of the bill.

• (2050)

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I do not for a moment wonder why the minister would rise on a point of order to try to stop me from saying what needs to be said, because he is responsible for the shemozzle respecting some aspects of the census. I would like to point out that in small communities of 200 people the minister responsible for Statistics Canada appointed people to do the census.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. With all due respect to the hon. member, the census is not the item before us for discussion. I invite him to return to the subject.

Mr. Shields: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to speak about Bill S-10, but what I was trying to do was to relate the whole matter. I will go on to Bill S-10 and talk about that first.

Mr. Collenette: Read the title again.

Mr. Shields: As a small businessman in a community, before I came to this honourable place I received in the mail quite regularly long forms such as the one I have in my hand. I had to fill them out properly and return them to Statistics Canada. I had to do this systematically. Some of the data Statistics Canada asked for were complicated to compile. I felt that some of the information requested was private and personal and should not be given to Statistics Canada because that same information was available from the Department of National Revenue. Depending on its size, a small business will have to hire one, two or even three people to do the paperwork this government will force on it because of this bill.

The small businessman will not absorb the expense involved. The expense will not be taken from his profit. He will pass the expense on to the consumer. A businessman must earn a reasonable return on his investment. If he does not, he will go broke. He must retain a reasonable return on his investment; therefore he must raise prices for goods and services to the consumer. When we are talking about inflation, contributing to inflation and what causes inflation it is my contention that the government constantly contributes to inflation, and this bill is just another example of that.

This government is putting small businessmen to some expense because of the census. In exactly the same way this type of activity creates a bureaucracy here in Ottawa. All this paperwork has to be done in order to compile statistics. I say that all we are doing is to create jobs in Ottawa. People will have to sit down and tabulate this information. It has come to my attention—I am not sure where I read it—that some 12,000 small and large corporations in Canada were delinquent in filing these types of returns. I am sure the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) will rise on a point of order and correct me if that is not so, but approximately 12,000 are continuously in default.

I would like to relate a little episode. My son went into business. He formed a company. My son probably had a little more courage than I because he absolutely refused to fill out any forms. His was a small two-man operation. They did not have time to sit down and fill out forms, so my son pitched them into "file 13", the wastebasket. He did that continuously. He received a very ignorant and abrupt telephone call from the civil service demanding that a certain form be filled out or he would be taken to court. He said, "Gee, I am sorry, I must have overlooked it". Forms were sent to him by registered mail. He continued to throw them away. I was horrified when he did this because I thought he would be in a lot of trouble. He has never been bothered since.

I would like to hypothesize that those who absolutely ignore forms—the 12,000 strong—are those who are never bothered. Those who diligently fill out forms receive more and more forms, until they are caught in a web of forms for Ottawa. If the small business community—12,000 strong—is not filling out forms, the statistics that Statistics Canada is trying to put together must be false. They cannot be anywhere near correct. Either the government wins the support of the business community from which it is trying to gather information, it wins the support of the unions across the country from which it is trying to gather information, it shows them how it is absolutely necessary to the functioning of the government that they fill out the forms, it makes the forms simple enough so that the information can be gathered and put together very quickly, or the matter is dispensed with. The amendment before us today should be putting and end to the idiotic system we have.

I want to refer for a moment to the bill itself to show hon. members the power we are giving our civil servants. I refer hon. members to Clause 4.1 which reads:

> Every holding corporation to which this Part applies shall, for each reporting period of the holding corporation, file with the Chief Statistician of Canada not later than March 31 following the end of that reporting period a return comprising
>
> (a) a set of financial statements in respect of itself and any of its subsidiaries carrying on business in Canada during that reporting period, in consolidated form as prescribed, consisting of the same statements in respect of itself and its subsidiaries as would be required in respect of itself if it were filing a return under subsection (2); and
> (b) a list of the corporations covered—

And it goes on. Then we come to 4.1(2)(a) which reads as follows:

> (a) a balance sheet showing the assets and liabilities of the corporation, made up as of the last day of the reporting period—

We all know that the year end of a company does not always fall on March 31. A fiscal year of a small company can be from January or February. It can be from any date a company chooses. Companies whose fiscal years end March 31 never have this information available until three months down the line. It is impossible because the cut-off date is March 31. What do we have? We have a two-pronged situation. A company has to employ a group of people to sit down, do the books and pull everything out so that these questionnaires from Statistics Canada can be answered. Then three months later the company has to repeat the whole process with the help of accounting people so that matters can be brought up to date and corporate income tax returns filed.

I say again that all we are doing is imposing more cost on the consumer because the costs of goods and services from these companies will increase. Someone has to pay for that. Corporations do not pay for it, unions do not pay for it, consumers pay for it. Once again the government is contributing very directly to inflation.

• (2100)

Let us go through one of these short forms and think for a moment. Perhaps some hon. members opposite are from ivory towers, as is their leader. Perhaps they have never been in business, but perhaps hon. members opposite should tell their leader exactly what he is doing. Clause 4.1(2)(a) says:

> A balance sheet showing assets and liabilities of the corporation, made up as of the last day of the reporting period,
> (b) A statement of investment of the corporation as of the last day of the reporting period,

Remember, the reporting period is March 31. It goes on:

> (c) A statement of income for the reporting period,
> (d) A statement of retained earnings, made up as of the last day of the reporting period,—

I personally have a small company the year end of which happens to be in June—

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Shields: —so some time in February or March I am going to have to try to get something like this going.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Shields: Yes, that is right, it is a shame. The Liberal backbenchers over there, the mouthy ones calling "shame" and grinning, you can tell they have never been in business. They do not care about that individual down there purchasing goods and services. They have shown that in this House time after time for the past month. So go ahead and call out "shame"; you are damn right, it is a shame, a terrible thing.

I would like to refer you, Mr. Speaker, to another part of Bill S-10—

An hon. Member: Stop reading and give us your punch line.

Mr. Shields: —clause 5, "return to be certified". It says:

Each return and each statement comprised in a return required by this part to be filed with the Chief Statistician of Canada shall be certified by the president or vice-president of the corporation filing the return and by one other officer—

If that certification is not correct, it empowers the civil service to walk in and demand proof. Shades of a police state.

The total bill, Mr. Speaker, should be amended. It should be brought under review and passed on by an all party committee so that people can have input into what is happening.

I received a letter from the owner of a small concrete placing firm, Western Shotcrete of Fort McMurray. He sent me a copy of a letter he wrote to StatsCan who are demanding he fill out these forms. He said he was absolutely not going to fill them out. To fill out the forms required of him over a period of one year would require the hiring of at least three additional people. He stated emphatically that he is not prepared to do that unless the government is prepared to pay their wages.

You hear it time and time again, Mr. Speaker. This is the constant complaint of small business, of being inundated with form after form in the paper war, because they know they must pass that on to the consumer and they are in a competitive market out there. The government must recognize that it and Statistics Canada have lost support for the information gathering they are attempting, whether it be the census, small business, or unions. They have lost support right across the country. We are here to pass laws at the request of the voters, not to pass laws to impose on them. Too often we forget this.

I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, that the Liberals across the way would not pause to listen for a few moments to a legitimate concern expressed to me time and again in my riding. I am sure if they sat down and read their own mail they would find they are getting the same kind of response to this continual interference in the marketplace by government. Information is gathered, statistics drawn up and shelved. Very few people need it. If the government needs information to launch programs, to assist small business or in any way assist the consumer, then of course they have to gather the information. However, it should be mandatory that the public, those affected by it, are convinced it is necessary. If the government cannot do that, then it is not necessary because, remember, we are here to represent the voter, not to dictate to him.

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, there have been approximately five occasions on which I felt it necessary to rise in this House to speak on bills which have created unnecessary paperwork in the business community. What is most disturbing is the fact that in all these debates that I can think of the minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe) has not been present to give at least some measure of support to the opposition parties as they put forth their thoughts in this regard.

I recognize, Mr. Speaker, that there have been four recent attempts to amend CALURA. It was passed first in 1962 to allow collection of financial and other information on certain corporations and labour unions operating in Canada. It was amended once in 1965. What has happened in recent years is that the government has made several attempts to amend the act, first, with Bill C-7 in the third session of the Thirtieth Parliament; second, with Bill C-3, in the fourth session of the Thirtieth Parliament; third, with Bill C-12, in the first session of the Thirty-first Parliament; and finally, with Bill S-10 in the first session of the Thirty-second Parliament.

In presenting Bill C-7 to the House, the minister of State for small businesses gave three main reasons why the amendment of CALURA was necessary. He said that since 1962:

—the economy has become much more complex and policymakers, as a consequence, have had to request additional date to keep abreast of developments.

His second reason was:

At present, over 90,000 corporations file ownership schedules under the act. The majority of these respondents are small, Canadian, privately owned businesses, originally not intended to be under the purview of the act. Bill C-7 is expected to relieve some 70,000 of these businesses from reporting under the act.

So said the minister in referring to Bill C-7. The third reason was:

As part of a streamlining process, Bill C-7 integrates six Statistics Canada questionnaires and two questionnaires collected by Industry, Trade and Commerce into one single questionnaire.

One significant new amendment has to do with trans-border technology transfers, and I will refer to that in just a moment. Let us take a look at returns filed by corporations under part one of CALURA as of June 15, 1978. We must bear in mind that there are many parts and many forms, some of them as long as seven pages, to be filled out, but let us just take a look at part one. It is somewhat shocking to learn, going back to 1974, that 77,869 businesses were filing. In 1975 it went up to 94,562. For the date year 1976, in which more than 85,000 filed, collection this year is still in progress.

● (2110)

The number of corporation returns outstanding is shocking. Let us take a look for a minute at how the business community reacts to CALURA and at some of the businesses which ignore the forms. Let us discuss statistics to see how we stand. We will deal with 1974 and 1975, because the government is still collecting the outstanding forms for 1976.

In 1974 a total of 1,610 businesses never filed, refused to file. What has the government done to those businesses in relation to the 77,000 businesses which took the time to fill out this multitude of paperwork? To my knowledge, the government has done nothing. For data year 1975, there are 1,517 businesses that have not filed as yet. For the data year 1976, collection is still in progress. It is estimated that returns from approximately 12,000 corporations are yet to be received. Of those, 124 corporations with assets of over $5 million have yet to file.

I should like to deal with the burden imposed by CALURA on businesses. The present situation is that there are eight questionnaires. There are 52 feet of questions and 31 feet of instructions, if the paper is measured lengthwise. On an annual basis, there are 83 feet of paperwork for a corporation. For the 90,000 businesses operating in Canada, times the 83 feet, there are 7,470,000 feet of paperwork. This is the same government that told Canadians if it was elected it would reduce the paper load on behalf of small business.

On an annual basis, government personnel handle 52 feet times 90,000 or 4,680,000 feet of paperwork to process CALURA questionnaires returned by businesses in Canada. This does not include the paperwork generated by CALURA questionnaires which are sent to unions. We would have to add that amount to the list as well.

I should like to give a few figures relating to the costs associated with personnel in the administration of CALURA. What is it costing the taxpayers of Canada to administer CALURA in Ottawa in this massive government bureaucracy? Under an amended CALURA, there are three questionnaires which I have. There are 26 feet of questions and a small number of instructions. With only 20,000 businesses reporting, the paperwork generated would be 520,000 feet. This is still a considerable sum when one takes into account all the paperwork businesses have imposed upon them by governments today. What does it cost Ottawa to administer CALURA?

I should like to indicate three basic examples in man-years. In Ottawa, 43.5 man-years were spent in the 1977-78 fiscal year to administer the corporation area of CALURA. What did that cost? In the one fiscal year of 1977-78, the cost to administer the corporation branch was $843,000. To administer the labour unions area, there were eight man-years at a cost of $128,000. To administer CALURA alone, it took 2.5 man-years at a cost of $87,000. What business would not consider it a plum to be handed $87,000 in return for 2.5 man-years? In 1977-78 it took a total of 54 man-years to administer CALURA at a cost of $1,058,000.

Who is featherbedding? Who is gaining advantage from CALURA today? It is certainly not the business community. I do not see the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism standing in the House and asking the government to show some compassion and consideration for the small business community.

This is only one more bill in a great number of pieces of legislation which have brought extreme costs to bear upon the Canadian business community. These costs are passed on to consumers, thus inflation is inflamed and our ever-growing cost of living is increased.

CALURA represents only a small portion of the over-all paperwork imposed upon businesses by governments at all levels in Canada today—municipal, provincial and federal. We are specifically discussing federal in this Parliament. We are asking the government to live up to its commitment to the small business community and to show some tangible evidence of its concern and interest in reducing the paper burden upon the small business community.

Paper burden is defined as information requirements established by government which can be judged to be unduly burdensome and very costly. They include application forms, reports, surveys, record-keeping requirements, and unnecessarily complex regulations and procedures. At the federal level numerous acts and their attendant provisions, procedures, standards, etc., all impose paperwork over and above the call of duty upon the small business community.

There are 16 departments and agencies—the Department of Agriculture, CMHC, CCA, CRTC, CTC, DREE, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, Environment Canada, the Department of Health and Welfare, the Department of Labour, Revenue Canada, Statistics Canada, The Department of Supply and Services, to name but a few. When will we receive some tangible evidence that the government is sincere in its intent to reduce paperwork?

In addition to federal department and agencies, provincial, regional and municipal programs generate massive amounts of paperwork upon the business community today. That is the reason there are 6,000 or 7,000 bankruptcies annually in the small business sector. This figure is growing on a monthly basis. This is one of the major reasons for small business bankruptcies. A one or two-person operation requires almost an equal number of staff to administer its operations today to keep up with the burden of paperwork. The magnitude of these requirements is formidable, as the following list of required government paperwork illustrates.

I have a list of 45 government agencies that all require reports to be filled out by the business community. We must give credit where credit is due—there are some exceptions, but by and large very little compassion is shown for the business community. Meeting these paperwork requirements imposes a significant cost upon the public as well as the private sector, but these costs have not been accurately tabulated in Canada. One United States estimates puts the annual dollar cost for federal government paperwork at $500 for each United States citizen. First there are the economic costs which vary from business to business, from person to person. They include the time cost to design, develop and instal information systems in businesses; direct and indirect costs of data collection; the costs of processing and analysis, filling out forms, hiring consultants, lawyers and accountants. What small incorporated business can operate today without the services of one or two chartered accountants? I suggest, Mr. Speaker, very few. It was not many years ago that a small businessman, an entrepreneur who wanted to open up a business, could do his paperwork in the evenings in an hour or two. I defy him to do that today. Even operating a business as basic as a service station requires countless reams of paper to be filled out for government agencies, both provincial and federal. This government has very little compassion for the small business community.

These costs are more difficult to measure, but they exist and are expressed in terms of anger and frustration, disillusionment and helplessness. Helplessness because they feel they have been betrayed by governments which made the solemn promise that they would reduce paperwork, show that they care and that there would be some action. And what do we do in this House of Commons week after week? We come in here and debate legislation which will put greater pressure on the strength of our country, the free enterprise system. Very seldom do we see a ray of light in this House of Commons to the point where we would conscientiously reduce the load we are bringing to bear on the business sector of our society which offers us a degree of hope in the future.

In the spring of 1977 the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce interview teams went across Canada and met with business people to hear their views on how well government operates generally and, specifically, how well IT&C operates to meet the needs of the business community. Of the 5,000 businessmen interviewed, 35 per cent identified paper burden as the major irritant. Who sits in this House today who did not campaign in 1979 and again in 1980 with the solemn promise to decrease that paper burden borne by the business community? I will agree that there are only some 47 people here on the other side of the House who know what it is like to be in business today. I doubt if there are even that many. But I know 47 businessmen who sit in this House of Commons. They said they would reduce paperwok. What we spend most of our time doing in this House is adding to the paperwork of the small business sector. This is consistent with the findings of the Economic Council of Canada in its concern for the impact of regulations and paper burden on small business.

Let us take a look at what the Economic Council of Canada said. The Council found that for small businessmen:

—paperwork was the major regulatory irritant—entailing an average of one to ten hours of extra effort per week—with federal paperwork demands exceeding provincial or municipal requirements in all provinces except Quebec.

Some credit may be given to the Quebec provincial government but no credit is due to the 75 members who sit in this House from the province of Quebec. The Economic Council says that this Liberal government has been remiss in its promise to the people to reduce the paper load.

In assessing costs exacted by government paperwork, small business can undoubtedly be singled out as particularly hard hit, because small businesses do not have the resources to hire specialized personnel or outside consultants to handle the paperwork. Paperwork often represents a direct demand on the time of the principal operator, the time he requires to work, to plan and to be productive. Why do we on this Hill have less than 60 per cent productivity? It is because the government does not know how to manage its own shop. Until we manage our own shop better and until we start doing the kinds of things we said we would do when the people elected us, we will not change the situation. It is no wonder that to a large degree the people of Canada have lost faith in governments today. I do not know of one of the five promises made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in January, 1980, that has been kept. That is why the business community has lost faith in Parliament, because it did not do what it said it would do when it campaigned in the 1980 election—

An hon. Member: Parliament did not campaign.

Mr. Domm: That is right, Parliament did not campaign, the Liberals campaigned. The Liberals who form the government today have not done what they promised in the election campaign of 1980.

Miss Bégin: The GIS increased.

Mr. Domm: Yes, the GIS increased.

Miss Bégin: Right on.

An hon. Member: Speak to the bill.

Mr. Domm: An hon. member opposite asks me to speak to the bill. He should ask his front benchers to speak to the bill.

Miss Bégin: Then shut up!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Domm: I can understand the uneasiness, the shifting around in their seats of members opposite. They have every reason to be shifty, sly and slippery. They are masters at it. We cannot let them fool the people of Canada into thinking that this bill is what they promised, any more than the excise bill is what they promised when they added that tax in an area which they had no intention of touching when they campaigned.

I would like to take a moment to put CALURA into perspective.

Miss Bégin: Again?

Mr. Domm: Maybe the minister responsible for the health of this nation would sooner I talked about UFFI and the health hazards which it causes. I do not know what she is talking about over there.

Mr. Kempling: She doesn't either.

Mr. Domm: The proposed amendments to CALURA are positive—this is what the Council says—in that they will exempt numerous small businesses from having to report. That is a lot of hogwash. There are 1,817 businesses which have not reported since 1976 anyway. In other words, in 1976 there were 75,000 businesses which should not have taken the time to fill out these 38 pages or 90,000 feet of paperwork.

This government is making fools out of the business community in Canada today. The government claims that 70,000 businesses will be exempted. In 1974 only 77,000 reported, and now this government is going to exempt 70,000? Who are the remainder? Are we going through this two days of debate to make 7,000 business people fill out all this paperwork and hire a bureaucracy, which will cost us a million dollars this year, to administer this act in Ottawa? The figures do not add up, Mr. Speaker. The small business community is receiving another snow job.

For those companies which still have to report the paperwork has been reduced by approximately 50 per cent. This is what the government says. What does that mean? According to the statistics, of the 7,000 which still have to report, only 3,500 will actually report. Or does it mean that the 7,000 will do half as much? If that is so, then I ask the government by how much it will reduce the bureaucracy to administer this program. Is the government going to reduce the staff which administers CALURA by 50 per cent? Not a chance. There is no sunset clause in this government. The expenses will go on as usual. Even if we agree with the objectives of CALURA and even if we agree that in order for the government to operate today it requires more statistics, we must be concerned about the government's use of the information collected.

This bill, before it is passed, should go before a group of people, namely, one headed by the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism. The minister, whose job it is to look after the business community, should appoint an all-party committee to scrutinize CALURA to report to the business community. Through whatever organizations it would like to report to, whether it is the Canadian Organization of Small Business or the Federation of Independent Business, it should report to them and justify the bill before it is passed. The bill should not be brought into this House and then shoved through under the guise that the government's taking the interest of the small businessman and the reduction of his paper load into consideration.

In recent years the Liberal governments have tried to exert more and more control through legislation, regulation and industrial development programs. We have seen it in the budget, we have seen it in the energy policy and we have seen it in the Constitution. The information provided by these businesses through CALURA will undoubtedly be used by this government to continue in this vein of gathering information for ulterior motives. It is sad to see this bill going through the House, with speaker after speaker from the Conservative party here speaking on behalf of a small business community and very little action from anywhere else. I think that any time we introduce paperwork into this House we are betraying the people who we campaigned to support if we were elected. We are showing a complete disregard for our election commitments to reduce paperwork by the setting up of offices to scrutinize and justify the paperwork before it is imposed upon the business community.

One of my colleagues has already pointed out to this House that those offices which were set up to scrutinize paperwork and to show that it was necessary before the legislation was implemented, are no longer in place. Why has this government presented this piece of legislation without first showing the business community that it was necessary and that there were offshoots from which would benefit the people who are most adversely affected by this paperwork? There is every reason in the world why we as a government and as a Parliament should oppose this bill, Bill S-10, as it appears now for second reading debate as amendments to CALURA.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have been listening to the debate. I am glad to see that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Regan) is in the House this evening. I want to speak to him briefly through Your Honour. I do not know whether he is aware of the impact of this bill upon those parts of the economy which fall under his partial jurisdiction in the House of Commons, in terms of reporting at least at the federal level. I am talking about labour unions. I think he has been here during two periods of the debate in the House. I was rather hoping he would inject himself into the debate with respect to this matter. I still remain with the hope that there will be time for him to do that. My understanding of the matter goes back some distance to the days when I was practising law and acting for national associations. I had concern then, and I still have that concern, with respect to the kind of information which is being requested.

Thus far the debate has focused on the impact of this legislation, particularly as it relates to difficulties of people who happen to be incorporated and engaged in small business, people who run the businesses by themselves and for whom accountancy help and legal help is a major overhead factor.

Viewing a bill such as this, which now requires the filling of some eight rather complicated forms, one could wonder if the government is doing anything other than lessening appreciably not only the number of forms, but also the kinds of businesses to which those forms apply. What has really happened is that instead of a member of a business being able to choose the kind of form which applies to the particular business in question, now everyone who happens to be in a small business must fill out all these forms, whether or not they are relevant to the kind of business being carried out. The government may have lessened the weight of the paper; but rather than lessening the onerous duty upon the small businesses to fill out forms, the filing has been made much more broad so that they apply to a larger number of businesses. Therefore, every business must fill out one of these forms whether or not that particular matter applies to them.

If the government will think about it for a moment, it will find that it has compounded the problems of the small businessmen with respect to filing. This is the first point I would like to make.

Second, I wonder if there has, in fact, been any consultation with the small business sector. Each one of us in this House receives correspondence each month from the members of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business who are largely small business people trying to make their way in a world which is tough enough as it is without also having to deal with paper. Was a consultative group ever established by the government to talk to such a group of representative businessmen—and there may be others in the community—to see whether this is really necessary or whether there is another way that this information, which is admittedly important to government, could be made available so that government would have it at its fingertips? I daresay that if the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) were to check the records, he would find that there has been very little consultation at all with the small business sector. There is no reason at all to worry too much about the multinational corporations, but one must be concerned about that. If there were some further consultation, having regard to the debate which has taken place in this House, it might lessen the burden on business. I hope that the minister will undertake to continue that discussion before this bill gets through.

The other matter I want to refer to now is the question of the information which is required in the forms themselves. By the way, Your Honour knows this is information which is filed with the government in confidence so that the government can plan. If that is the case—and I have no reason to doubt that—then it seems to me that it is the kind of information which is perhaps already within the knowledge of the government. Corporate information which is filed relating to directors' shareholdings and things of that nature is the kind of information which could be incorporated into and form part of government information. In fact, a great deal of it could be gleaned from the returns which are now filed annually with the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs from corporations and incorporated businesses, and that would cut down some of the duplication.

Another aspect which the government should perhaps consider, and may consider on second thought, is the availability of information within the Department of National Revenue. I happen to know that the Department of National Revenue is scrupulous in preserving the confidentiality of information filed with it by taxpayers. However, I daresay that if one would put the alternative of filing a form like this to any businessman, or allowing another department to consult with the Department of National Revenue on the basis of confidence, and if a waiver were signed to that effect, and if that businessman could be assured that he would not have to fill out one other form or deal with another pile of papers at the same time as he is trying to sell, I am sure that that businessman would opt for the simpler method of granting the waiver on the understanding, of course, that it would be confidential. I think this would go a long way toward reducing the amount of paper that the small business community has to deal with and about which it is always cursing governments.

Governments have made great strides, Mr. Speaker. When I was minister of national revenue I gave credit to officials of the department for streamlining import procedures on the customs side of the operation, so that people did not have to file for each transaction but could file over a longer period of time and thus facilitate matters.

Within government itself there is a desire to cut down on the number of filings that are necessary, although many people do not believe this to be the case. If it would take advantage of the expertise that is available in the public service, it could do a great deal in this direction, but sometimes I think it does not realize this. The business life of the small businessman could be relieved of further complications if, for instance, he did not have to file an international trade form when he is not engaged in international trade. The system, which was complicated enough before, has become more complicated, and I think it could be changed.

The government ought to be given an opportunity to reconsider this bill, Mr. Speaker. It is not urgent. I suggest it withdraw the bill and consult with the business community to see whether, by marrying the expertise that there is in the private sector with that in the public sector, something more relevant, not just for government, but for small business, could be devised.

I am not going to carry the debate any further, Mr. Speaker, except to say that I think the government ought to consider withdrawing the bill and dealing with the question in another way. We would be happy to assist it in that undertaking.

I hope this view is shared by members on the other side, although sometimes I have my doubts—that the small businessman ought to be burdened as little as possible. He is overloaded with paperwork as things stand now. I am sure there is not one member of the House who does not have a constituent who complains about the amount of filing that has to be done to government. I think we ought to be attempting to lessen this instead of increasing it.

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I have some concerns about the bill as well.

Mr. Blais: You have 60 seconds.

Mr. Mayer: I see the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) is in the House and he wonders if I can get all my concerns on record within 60 seconds. If a proper bill had been produced, I probably could have done so.

I note that on June 17, in rising on a point of order questioning some of the things said by the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington), the minister said as follows:

—that this bill is to amend the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act, and that act is to provide for the reporting of financial and other statistics relating to the affairs of corporations and labour unions carrying on activities in Canada.

It is fine to ask for additional information but I am not so sure that the government has justified the reason for asking for the additional information.

I represent a constituency that is largely made up of farmers and small businessmen. For them paperwork is a major problem; it is more than an irritant.

Earlier today a colleague quoted from the report of the Economic Council of Canada to the effect that excess paperwork caused problems and that the regulation itself was a major regulatory irritant. I think it is more than an irritant; it is a genuine impediment to small business in this country being as productive as it might be. I myself farm and I represent people engaged in farming. One of the things that bothers us is the amount of paperwork that is involved. I could give some recent examples of the things that government requires. It seems to me that if the government is interested in regulatory reform it should set a good example.

I have been concerned about some of the things requested by the Canadian Livestock Feed Board which regularly requires information that is available from other sources.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

EXCISE TAX ACT AND EXCISE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Friday, June 19, consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen that Bill C-57, to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to provide for a revenue tax in respect of petroleum and gas, be read the third time and passed, and the amendment thereto—Mr. Lambert.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please, it being 9.45 p.m., pursuant to agreement made Friday, June 19, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the third reading and passage of Bill C-57.

Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Lambert) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Paproski: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. The hon. member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) was in the chamber, voted and left before the count was completed.

Madam Speaker: If he left the chamber, then his vote will not be recorded.

Some hon. Members: Out, out!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Where is the hon. member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan)?

Some hon. Members: Out, out!

Madam Speaker: Then one cancels out the other.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

FUNDING FOR NATIONALIST PARTY IN ALBERTA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, in view of reports that the Liberals are funding the newly-formed Nationalist Party, headed by a former Liberal member of Parliament from Alberta, for the purpose of splitting the Progressive Conservative vote in western Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That this House deplores this type of underhanded politics and instructs the Liberals to come clean and not fund the Nationalist Party now or at any time in the future.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

PLANNING FOR ENLARGEMENT OF WELLAND CANAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Given that the St. Lawrence Seaway system is a direct employer of up to 15,000 Canadians, that industries which depend upon the Seaway employ hundreds of thousands, and that an international task force on the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Seaway system warned that the Welland Canal will be at capacity by 1985, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin):

That this House urge the Minister of Transport to begin immediately the necessary planning and design for a major enlargement of the Welland Canal and thereby avoid throwing thousands out of work.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

UREA FORMALDEHYDE—CALL FOR IMPLEMENTATION OF FULL TESTING PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. On April 23 the Progressive Conservative party called on the federal government to provide testing in all homes insulated with urea formaldehyde foam insulation. On May 29 we again called on the government to carry out a full national testing program. The Ontario government has now moved to provide testing for all Ontario home owners who have homes insulated with UFFI. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That the federal government live up to its responsibility in the UFFI fiasco and immediately implement a testing program for all homes insulated with urea formaldehyde foam insulation under CHIP.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

THE ECONOMY

COMMENDATION OF POLICIES OF MINISTER OF FINANCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ray Chénier (Timmins-Chapleau): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Given the fact that so often the opposition dwells on negative economic indicators such as high interest rates and inflation and not on the positive facts that real growth of the GNP is now at 4 per cent annually, and that unemployment is the lowest in four years, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith):

That this House commend the Minister of Finance for introducing economic policies which have helped the ordinary Canadian reap the benefits of high economic growth and low unemployment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

FORMATION OF CO-OPERATIVE ENERGY CORPORATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the co-operative movement first approached the government to become involved in oil and gas exploration and development around about the time of the possible privatization of Petro-Canada, and whereas money has been allocated to form a co-operative energy corporation, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse):

That this House supports the initiative of the co-ops and urges the government to bring in as soon as possible the necessary legislation to get this corporation off the ground.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

CALL FOR INTRODUCTION OF EMERGENCY BUDGET—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas bankruptcies and other business failures have increased by at least 30 per cent over the last year, and whereas the government has displayed a total lack of compassion and consideration for the small business sector, the agricultural community, and the Canadian home owner, in its economic and energy policies, and whereas record high interest rates place an incredible burden on all Canadians and are the result of government policy and not bank policy, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger):

That this House direct the Minister of Finance to quit looking for scapegoats to shoulder the responsibility for his economic mismanagement and direct him to introduce an emergency budget immediately to restore economic sanity to Canada and to alleviate the threat of bankruptcy which plagues so many hardworking Canadians.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

INDUSTRY

POLICY TO PROMOTE MINERAL RESOURCE UPGRADING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that Canada is annually exporting billions of dollars worth of raw and semi-processed mineral resources, and in view of the fact that this is being done in the absence of a meaningful national incentive policy promoting resource upgrading in Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen):

That the national government, in consultation with the provinces, establish immediately a federal-provincial task force to evolve a comprehensive incentives policy for promoting mineral and natural resource upgrading in Canada as an integral part of a national economic strategy.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

MEASURE TO FACILITATE EXPORT OF NEWFOUNDLAND HYDRO POWER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South-Weston): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the bold announcement made yesterday by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources I move, seconded by the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans):

That this House commends the government for introducing a measure which will permit the export of Newfoundland hydro power to Canadian and U.S. markets.

ment has decided to transfer to the Quebec government the Camp Bouchard site in Blainville, to be used as a toxic waste dump, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the federal government, together with its Quebec counterpart, carry out the necessary studies to make sure that the Quebec local populations are not exposed to contamination hazards.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

OPPOSITION TO LOOSENING OF UNITED STATES AIR POLLUTION STANDARDS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of extreme urgency. News from the United States has revealed that the environmental protection agency of that nation proposes in a draft document a repeal of air pollution standards which restrict acid rain, and suggests that decisions regarding pollution control be left to individual states. In light of the fact that such a move would have disastrous consequences here in Canada and, if approved, would have to be considered a deliberate rejection of last year's bilateral memorandum of agreement concerning trans-boundary air pollution, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the government immediately contact the United States administration to protest strongly the proposed loosening of air pollution standards and declare its intention to take legal action, if necessary, to prevent such changes.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

PROPOSAL THAT MUNICIPALITIES OF BERTHIER-MASKINONGÉ-LANAUDIÈRE BE MADE PART OF DESIGNATED AREA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Antonio Yanakis (Berthier-Maskinongé-Lanaudière): Madam Speaker, under Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to move an important and urgent motion. In the last three months, five requests for DREE grants have been turned down in the riding of Berthier-Maskinongé-Lanaudière, which I represent, under the ridiculous pretext that there are too many manufacturers in the fields concerned, when the releases on the grants authorized, which I receive from the department, prove that similar requests have been accepted in other parts of Quebec for the simple reason that they come from designated areas, regardless of overproduction on a provincial basis. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Terrebonne (Mr. Comtois):

That the Department of Regional Economic Expansion review the regulations suggested by technocrats in 1977, and consider the municipalities of Berthier and Lanaudière as part of the designated area, which the third part of the riding, namely Maskinongé, already is.

If that injustice were corrected, Madam Speaker, it would allow that part of the riding to develop on natural lines instead of being at the mercy of the area—

Madam Speaker: Order. Presentation of a motion of that type requires the unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

RAID ON NEWSPAPER OFFICES IN 1978—REPORTED LEAK IN ADVANCE

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Would the minister inform the House whether, prior to the raid on the Thomson group of newspapers, 21 newspapers, on July 24, 1978, there was a serious leak from the department that indicated to the Thomson group that the raid was to take place, enabling their officials to remove various documents from their offices across Canada? If he did have such knowledge, would he advise the House when he first became aware of it?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): Madam Speaker, I am not aware of the allegation of the hon. member. However, I must tell him that this question is now before the courts and that I am not in a position to comment any further on the subject.

[English]

RCMP INVESTIGATION OF DEPARTMENT

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, I refer to the investigation which took place under the Combines Investigation Act of 1978. I am surprised that the minister does not have knowledge of that particular investigation, seeing how the Combines Branch or the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is currently investigating the missing documents which were not in the Thomson offices at the time of the investigation of the raid on July 24, 1978, and the fact that the RCMP is currently conducting its own investigation, at the initiation of the attorney general, into the minister's department, concerning the alleged leak. I would like the minister to comment on that, please.

Mr. Crosbie: Nothing to do with the courts.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): Madam Speaker, I repeat what I said in answer to the first question of the hon. member. This case is now before the courts and I am not in a position to comment on it, whether or not it pleases hon. members opposite. I suggest that we must respect the discretion of the courts.

[English]

REMOVAL FROM OFFICE OF DIRECTOR OF COMBINES INVESTIGATION

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, first we have the scandal of the oil rip-offs; second, we have the disgrace of the uranium cartel. Now we have strong evidence which indicates that there was a serious leak from within the minister's department, and possibly a subsequent cover-up, days after which Mr. Bertrand, the chief investigations officer of combines, was removed from his job by the government.

Surely the minister will inform the House of the real circumstances surrounding the removal of Mr. Bertrand from his job, and make a statement in the House now, which I am inviting him to do, revealing the exact truth of the entire matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): Madam Speaker, what is absolutely clear is that the opposition is using question period to make all kinds of false allegations before putting their questions.

Some hon. Members: Answer the question.

Mr. Ouellet: I think it is absolutely a disgrace to see members of Parliament abusing the rules of the House the way they are doing.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: The hon. member for York-Peel.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Madam Speaker. In truth, it is most amazing that a minister, in answering a question, first of all says that he has no knowledge but then says that the matter is before the courts. How he can reconcile those two statements, I cannot understand.

• (1420)

QUERY RESPECTING POLICE INVESTIGATION

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, I should like to put my question to the Acting Attorney General in the absence of the Attorney General. Would the minister indicate if, in fact, the Attorney General's office has asked for an inquiry to be made with respect to the leak of information at the time the Thomson newspaper chain was under investigation through the combines branch of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs? Would he also indicate if, in fact, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police have an active inquiry under way at the present time?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Obviously, Madam Speaker, on both those questions I will take notice of them, and draw the former to the attention of my colleague for a reply. As to the ongoing investigations of the RCMP, I do not, and deliberately do not, keep myself informed about investigations of a criminal nature that they are carrying on, but I will inquire.

TIMING OF REPORTED INVESTIGATION

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, perhaps I could go to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Would the minister indicate to the House if there is any relevance to the fact that the investigation we are now referring to and in which, to the best of our knowledge, no charges have yet been laid, was ordered immediately prior to Mr. Bertrand's removal as director of the combines investigations section and, if there is some relevance to that, would he indicate to the House the nature of it?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): Madam Speaker, I want to remind the hon. member that Mr. Bertrand was not asked to hand in his resignation. I think that question has already been discussed long enough in the House for the hon. member to be aware of that. When he asks a question to make such an allegation, he unconsciously or deliberately misleads the House. As to the inquiries made by the director of investigations, the law and the practice are quite formal in that respect. We are not expected to confirm or deny that an investigation is under way, and when it does become public knowledge, it is always extremely difficult to begin speculating. Madam Speaker, hon. members opposite would show a minimum of responsibility if they were to respect the confidentiality of such investigations. If we were to report to the House on all investigations which may be going on, it is obvious that the people responsible for making them will be particularly handicapped in the proper discharge of their duties.

POST OFFICE

INSTITUTION OF PAID MATERNITY LEAVE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. The minister knows that as of Monday we could be faced with a postal strike which is desired neither by the inside postal workers nor by the people of Canada. One of the major issues in the dispute concerns paid maternity leave. Considering that the minister responsible for the status of women, at an international conference almost a year ago committed the Government of Canada to institute paid maternity leave, and considering that the chairman of the conciliation board in the postal dispute has recommended a fair formula, why does the government not live up to its commitment to women, on the one hand, and postal workers on the other, by accepting his recommendation?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I thank the hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party for the question, which is a very important one. The government has demonstrated in the past, particularly last year during negotiations with the clerks, that it was committed to the principle of maternity benefits. In fact during the course of those negotiations, as hon. members will recall, the benefit that existed was extended, namely, the 60 per cent of insurable earnings was extended to cover the two-week waiting period. It is a very important area and one that we believe has to be addressed. Whether or not it should be addressed during the course of these negotiations is another matter.

● (1425)

MEDIATOR'S RECOMMENDATION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, if I understood the minister up to his last Liberal line, he was saying that he thought the idea was fine in principle but was not to be implemented yet. Considering specifically that on this issue the chairman stated as follows:

—discrimination deriving from maternity is surely one of the most obvious ones but, at the same time, one of the easiest to abolish.

—and since that is a key issue in the dispute which could head off a postal dispute and strike, why does the minister not lay it on the line now and say that the government will accept the recommendations?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I hope the parties will be back at the negotiating table forthwith. That is my attitude. I do not intend to negotiate these issues in public. I have indicated the government remains committed to the issue of maternity benefits. I think we have demonstrated that in the past. We have already, I believe, implemented a very generous package across the public service. This is a matter not only of concern, I suggest, to workers in a particular union, but surely it is a social issue of major importance and one, frankly, in which members of this party have already stated they believe, and are prepared to move forward with it in certain areas, as we have already done with respect to the unemployment insurance program and with respect to our own employees.

Mr. Knowles: By the year 2000?

Mr. Johnston: I think we have demonstrated not only our concern but the thrust of our thinking and the thrust of our policies.

APPLICATION OF PRINCIPLE TO ALL DEPARTMENT'S

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the unemployment insurance benefit program for maternity leave is not, and I emphasize is not, what is meant by the international declaration that the government signed last year in Europe. It is an entirely different concept, and the minister knows that, Since the minister has just said that he agrees in principle with the program and that the government should be implementing it, presumably if it has any principles, why does the government not make the program available to all its employees in all departments now? In particular, why does the minister not give us a clear-cut commitment today for the inside postal workers so that they would know where the government stands and, therefore, head off the potential strike next week?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I am interested in the hon. member's comments with respect to our obligations under the UN convention, and suggesting that what we have already put in place does not meet those requirements on the spirit of the convention. I would be interested in knowing what his interpretation of the terms of the convention actually are.

Mr. Broadbent: I would be delighted to tell you.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

FISHING RIGHTS OF MICMAC INDIANS ON RESTIGOUCHE RESERVE IN QUEBEC

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Until and if the constitutional negotiations define an aboriginal right, does the minister feel that the Restigouche Micmac Indian band is in fact practising a traditional fishing right? Given the minister's statement to reporters as follows:

The central government can flex its muscles if peaceful negotiation with Quebec fails and there is accumulating evidence we may have reasonable ground—

Could he state why he has not been able to convince the minister of fisheries that he should move in this direction?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, there is such a long list of misinterpretations in the hon. member's question that I will try to give him the type of answer that he really wants.

First, do I think that the Micmacs are exercising a traditional right as they perceive it in terms of fishing in the Restigouche? Yes, I do. Second, they have always been successful in the past in negotiating an agreement. Perhaps I should qualify that by saying they have been relatively successful in the past in terms of negotiating the number of days they fish. There has never been this serious a problem before.

I think I should state quite clearly to the hon. member, despite what he may have read, that there is no difference between my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, and myself.

Mr. Crosbie: Yes there is.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): He has indicated to me, and confirmed it just a couple of minutes ago, that indeed there are reasons that warrant a review of the delegation of this authority under the fisheries act of the province of Quebec.

Perhaps on a more positive note I should indicate that I had advice, in the last few moments, that Mr. Lessard, the relevant minister in Quebec, is in the region now and that he is willing to meet with the chief and the band council to see if they can work out a solution to this matter. Our Quebec region is involved. It has urged the Quebec minister and the chief to meet. It is our hope that the meeting will take place some time this afternoon. Maybe as a result of that meeting we can find a resolution to this whole question. That is our hope, and I am sure it is the hon. member's also.

● (1430)

ASSURANCE SOUGHT RESPECTING TRADITIONAL RIGHT

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, is the minister stating that negotiations have gone on in the past regarding this traditional fishing right? Will he give an assurance that he will get involved in these negotiations, because this difficulty may occur in other regions of Canada as well? We need to know that the minister will give assurances to the Indian bands that they in fact have a traditional right and need not negotiate through a third party when he has responsibility for this.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, the hon. member should be aware that negotiations go on every year depending on the stock as the parties perceive it. Therefore this is not an unusual occurrence. As far as the involvement of myself and my officials is concerned, I have already indicated that talks with Mr. Lessard took place this morning with regard to the Quebec region. The minister is now desirous of sitting down and talking with the chief. Our regional officials will be involved to the maximum extent possible in so far as they can be helpful. I might indicate that from my own office Michel Bouliane is already on his way there at the request of the band. He will be present on the reserve for the remainder of the week.

REQUEST THAT NEGOTIATIONS BE RESUMED ON ABORIGINAL FISHING RIGHTS IN QUEBEC

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Since the government of Canada has always wanted to negotiate in good faith with the native people, would the minister agree to negotiate federally the salmon fishing rights in the various rivers of Quebec? I know for instance that in the Escoumins and Moisie River areas this problem could arise. In order to avoid violence and the government overstepping its authority, would the minister agree to meet with representatives of the Quebec Indians in order to achieve some kind of consensus which would bring about a peaceful settlement and especially respect for the traditions and rights of those Indians, in view of course of the present situation, which forces more and more Indians to go salmon fishing for economic reasons? In view of the fact that fishing is an important economic activity for Indians. would the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development be prepared to negotiate a federal settlement, which would involve not only the Quebec Minister of Tourism, Fish and Game, but also the Quebec Minister of Fisheries, and the federal Minister of Fisheries and Oceans?

[English]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): The short answer to that is yes, Madam Speaker. My colleague and I have agreed that there is some merit in the review of this delegation. Obviously that implies that there are problems elsewhere. If I may be presumptuous enough, perhaps wider spread discussions to iron out these problems from the point of view not only of my own department but of the Department of Fisheries, would be helpful.

ACTION TAKEN BY GOVERNMENT OF QUEBEC

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Given the fact that the government of Quebec operates under authority delegated to it by the Fisheries Act and the Minister of Fisheries by virtue of the 1923 agreement, and given the reply to my colleague from the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, has the minister satisfied himself that the Quebec government has acted prudently in terms of the conservation measures it is now enforcing in Quebec? If not, what steps does the minister propose to take to exercise the authority which is his and which, in this particular case, he has delegated to another government?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, although I have been here a number of years I did not delegate the authority. It has been done by order in council since 1922. We have not tried consistently to second guess the authorities in the province of Quebec. I said so publicly, and I want to say it again. Generally the province of Quebec has administered those fisheries with a considerable degree of wisdom and conservation. There are some areas, outside the salmon issue, where we found that Quebec tended to stretch the extent of its jurisdiction. In fact in some cases I had to indicate I did not find acceptable certain attitudes vis-à-vis licensing or implications for fishermen from other provinces.

The question of the salmon is an extremely difficult issue because it is a fairly short season. When there are incidents such as there are now, it is very often difficult to pacify the situation before the salmon run has either escaped those who are entitled to catch it or it has been hurt by over-fishing.

The province of Quebec has taken an attitude on the salmon fishing which has been slightly more harsh than the attitude I have taken. For example, it did not reopen the fishery to commercial fishermen. That was its right to decide under the present legislation. I did not wholly agree with that position. However, I cannot on one hand agree to the delegation of authority and, on the other hand, do the day-to-day management over somebody else's shoulder.

My colleague and I are re-examining the implications of the 1922 agreement as it is presently applied. We will review this. If we come to the conclusion that it should be changed or altered, then we will do so according to the tradition, that is, by order in council.

HOUSING

UREA FORMALDEHYDE—REQUEST FOR EXPANSION OF TESTING PROGRAM

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The Ontario government has announced plans to begin a testing program of all homes in the province in which urea formaldehyde foam insulation was installed. Ontario health minister Timbrell, and thousands of other Canadians, feel the federal government's plan to test only 2,000 homes across the country is insufficient. In light of the fact that the Ontario government considers examination of all homes using the product to be vital, will the minister reconsider the limited number of home testings under the federal program and expand the test to include all Canadian homes which used the product under the CHIP program?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): Madam Speaker, I welcome this initiative by the Ontario government. We have already written to them indicating our willingness to co-operate and to support them in their endeavours. This measure is complementary to the initiative of the federal government. We do not intend at this time to change our program. We are very happy that Ontario, and possibly other provinces, are doing this.

COMPENSATION TO HOME OWNERS

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is also to the same minister. Will the minister confirm to this House that should the federal government provide compensation to the many owners who, because of serious medical problems associated with the foam, will have to remove and replace that insulation, such compensation would be made retroactive to cover those people who cannot wait for a later decision, and because of health reasons, are going ahead on their own and having the insulation removed, in some cases at very exorbitant costs?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): Madam Speaker, I cannot confirm this because no decision has been made in that regard. As I indicated in the House some time ago, the federal government took a first step with a series of initiatives. It would be premature to jump to conclusions. Therefore I cannot tell the hon. member that we will do this.

POST OFFICE

NEGOTIATIONS ON PAID MATERNITY LEAVE

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the President of the Treasury Board. In light of the conciliation report handed down yesterday in the Post Office dispute, I wish to follow up on comments the minister made regarding pregnant women, and also with regard to health and safety in the work place. The minister says he is not prepared to accept the fact that this is a responsibility of the government but that it must be negotiated. When will the negotiations take place? Will the minister assure the House that they will begin immediately so that these problems can be ironed out and we will not be faced with a postal dispute?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I believe I indicated quite clearly in my first answer that I hope to see the negotiators back at the table in the next several days. That is our purpose. Our intent is to bring this to a rapid conclusion with a fair settlement for both the postal workers and the taxpayers of Canada.

• (1440)

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ACTION

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, the conciliation officer has indicated very clearly in his report that discrimination is there. In light of the fact that a strike vote is being taken and will probably be reported tomorrow and a strike could take place as early as Monday, will the President of the Treasury Board, the Postmaster General and the Minister of Labour make themselves immediately available to the postal workers to try to iron out this very serious dispute? We have had co-operation from all sides of the House to form a Crown corporation to try to bring some order into this Post Office and I urge the minister to carry out that request.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, let me assure the hon. member that we are anxious to bring this, what he calls dispute, to an amicable and fair settlement as soon as possible.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

REPORTED REPEAL OF UNITED STATES AIR POLLUTION STANDARDS

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. In view of reports coming out of Washington during the weekend that the United States Environmental Protection Agency intends to repeal its air pollution standards which restrict acid rain, I ask whether the minister was advised of this during his recent visit to Washington and, if so, what reaction did he express on behalf of the Canadian government to this startling statement, and what weight does the government now place on the solemn assurances given to the government by President Reagan when he visited this country a few months ago that the United States intended to support vigorously Canada in its fight against acid rain?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, to take the last part of the question first, the assurances which were given on negotiations for an international agreement with us on the transportation of air-borne pollutants have been met. These discussions and in the sense of formal negotiations began today. I must say to the hon. member that we are extremely concerned about reports coming out of Washington, leaking what appears to be a draft recommendation of the Environmental Protection Agency. If that draft is indeed confirmed and these are the proposals that are placed before Congress, we would consider this to be an extremely retrograde step.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER VISIT WASHINGTON

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, does the minister plan to make a visit in the very near future to Washington to express in person the consternation of the Canadian government and the Canadian people at this change in attitude, completely unjustified, which has taken place, and to remind the American Congress and the American government of just what President Reagan said when he visited this country a few months ago and gave us a very solemn assurance that they would fight side by side with us in this battle against acid rain?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of State for Science and Technology and Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, we have indeed been making representations most vigorously in a continuing way, as recently as last Friday. Those representations are continuing by every means possible. I do hope I will be able to renew my representations. I have been to Washington several times recently in order to do that, and I hope the hon. member opposite will make use of his contacts in Washington to make sure that our similar viewpoint is well known to people in Congress.

INCOME TAX

TAX AUDIT OF NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERMEN—ATTACHMENT OF EARNINGS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. The minister has received a telegram from the minister of fisheries of Newfoundland which says that in excess of 1,400 fishermen have had their gross earnings attached at various fish plants in the province for in excess of 50 per cent of all their gross earnings, and that this is causing considerable hardship to them and their families.

I know of the case of one man whose gross pay was $150 and he was left with a take-home pay of $9 after 50 per cent of his gross was attached, UIC premiums taken out, along with union dues and cost of fuel supplied by the company. He was left with $9 for the week. He owes $918 to National Revenue. Is the minister checking into this and will he direct his officials not to attach more than a reasonable amount of these gross earnings? We know that the taxpayer who owes taxes has to pay them, but is the minister taking special steps to have this checked out? This was done by survey with the various fish plants, and this is what the report has been on the attachments at these fish plants of 1,400 fishermen.

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, with regard to telegrams from various ministers, I think my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans dealt with that yesterday. I might say to the hon. member that when I visited Newfoundland recently to meet with not only two ministers of fisheries from the Atlantic provinces but, indeed, with unions, I had my officials meet with them and we set in motion a plan to contact each fisherman who received a 50 per cent garnishee. Of those, we have come to an accommodation with almost 50 per cent, and we are attempting to contact, either by letter or by phone, all fishermen to ensure that a reasonable and fair settlement is arrived at with them on an individual basis. If the hon. member has any details with regard to individual problems, I would be glad to look at them myself.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MR. ROONEY

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, I notice that the Minister of National Revenue is prepared to look at these cases himself and there may be 1,400 of them who may be interested. The MP for Bonavista-Trinity-Conception, and I quote from the St. John's evening Telegram of June 3, "has declared that he does not wish to associate himself with the insensitive and heavy handed methods being used by the minister's department to extract back taxes from Newfoundland fishermen." He is also reported to have said that in his own riding 250 fishermen have had over 50 per cent of the gross value of their catch, before expenses and shares to crewmen, seized. He does not like this. He does not want the department doing it and he does not want to associate himself with this.

Will the minister inform the House whether he has now satisfied that hon. member that the 250 attachments have been withdrawn so he can associate himself with the insensitive and heavy handed methods, or just what has the minister done about that public complaint by one of his own caucus?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, the hon. gentleman is a member himself and knows that the law must be applied whether it is a pleasant or an unpleasant law. It has to be applied, but it must be applied fairly and equitably. There were 1,457 fishermen in Newfoundland who received a 50 per cent garnishee. Of that number, in the case of at least 50 per cent we have contacted them and come to an acceptable arrangement with them. We are attempting to contact the others and we will approach each one on an individual basis, depending on their ability to pay.

ENERGY

MEASURE TO ENCOURAGE POWER DEVELOPMENT IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Yesterday the minister tabled in the House a discussion draft of the energy security act. In view of the loud and unfounded criticism of the minister by the Premier of Quebec and by certain members of the opposition, will the minister assure this House that he will pursue the amendments to the National Energy Board Act for the benefit of Newfoundlanders and for all Canadians, and that he will respond in detail to the Premier of Quebec?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, first of all I would like to tell the hon. member that the member for Vancouver-Kingsway, who was worried that this draft bill would hurt the negotiations, was out of his depth again. This draft bill was tabled after discussion with my colleague, the minister for energy for Alberta, and he understood exactly how we were proceeding and why we were proceeding in this particular instance, and our negotiations are going to carry on as planned.

[Translation]

As for the statement made by the Quebec premier, Madam Speaker, I would like to point out that what we are now proposing to do is the same thing that we have been doing for many decades for the transmission of natural gas and oil in Canada. Quebecers in general have always gladly relied on Alberta gas and oil without any province being able to prevent that gas and oil from crossing its territory and reaching Quebec consumers. What we are proposing is that the same rule be applied to electricity as to natural gas and oil from which Quebec as a whole has benefited for a long time.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

IMPACT ON VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, I do not know where the minister was a few weeks ago because it is quite clear that under the Constitution he has the ability to do that now, and does not need this additional legislation, but that is not my question. It relates to a question I put last week on the impact of the NEP on the level of the Canadian dollar. Since then I have calculated the total impact over a 12 month period is somewhere between $8 billion and $10 billion—that is the Petrofina purchase, the lost production based on fields becoming uneconomic, the Alberta cutbacks, investment outflows by independent Canadian producers, rigs leaving the country, and a diversion of capital from this country.

Since this is having and will continue to have a significant downward impact on the level of the Canadian dollar, I ask the minister is the government considering any changes in the energy policy, either to alleviate this pressure or to spread it out over a longer period of time?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am very surprised that my hon. colleague would suggest the government should act because we have the constitutional power even if Parliament has not given the government the legislative right to act. We need the legislation to implement the powers that exist under the Canadian Constitution.

As for the second part of the question, I am surprised that in the hon. member's calculations he forgot to mention the great benefits which have resulted for the industrial and manufacturing sectors in this country over the last year—

An hon. Member: Where are they?

Mr. Lalonde: —by the fact the Canadian dollar was at a discount. This has meant that Canadian industry is able to export competitively to the rest of the world like never before, and has created thousands and thousands of jobs in this country. I am amazed he does not seem to recognize that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INCREASED CAPITALIZATION OF PETRO-CANADA

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I was looking for an answer to my question, Madam Speaker. But what the minister neglects to say in his response is that the negative impact on business as a result of the deadlock, as a result of rigs leaving the country and lost production, is much greater than anything he referred to in his answer. We are looking at $25 million a day leaving the country, jobs leaving the country, and it is a direct reflection of the high interest rates in this country.

Yesterday the minister introduced his energy security legislation which smuggled in a two and a half times increase in the capital of Petro-Canada, effectively removing about—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is really quite long in both his questions. I would ask him to be brief.

Mr. Nielsen: So are the answers.

Mr. Wilson: Is the minister proposing to direct Petro-Canada to spend that capital in ways that will not have a continuing downward impact on the level of the Canadian dollar, such as takeovers of foreign companies at exorbitant prices as in the case of the Petrofina acquisition?

Some hon. Members: Yes or no?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is looking through very dark glasses these days. He should take the trouble to read the papers. Yesterday the president of Gulf Canada, an international company, announced plans to spend $675 million in the Beaufort Sea alone in exploration and drilling over the next few years. As far as Petro-Canada is concerned, it remains the objective of this government that it should become as large as any of the multinationals that have been operating in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: We intend to equip Petro-Canada with the means and powers to achieve this particular objective. As far as takeovers of foreign multinationals are concerned, that means the dividends and profits of those companies are going to remain in Canada over the next few years rather than being shipped abroad. That is the policy of this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

HEALTH

SHARING OF PESTICIDE DATA BETWEEN CANADA AND UNITED STATES

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Recent reports have revealed fraudulent or deficient testing of chemicals by about 25 U.S. laboratories in addition to Industrial Biotest, and I understand that at least another 31 are considered suspect. In the past, officials of the minister's department have been quoted as saying that the IBT affair was an isolated one and that they had no information at all on investigation of other labs. Yesterday in the House the minister said she expected to receive information on studies done by other labs by the end of this calender year and that she would make the information public, identifying the companies and products involved. By the way, Madam Speaker, I have asked reporter Peter von Stackleburg to send the minister the U.S. report so that we can speed up this process.

Would the minister care to tell us if Canada has a memorandum of understanding with the U.S. to share pesticide data, and if so, why the U.S. would not inform Canada of the problems associated with products which may be on the Canadian market?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I fear that the hon. member might once again be on a witch hunt. He must have read the reply I gave yesterday—and I gave an accurate answer, as I believe that we must all do in this House. I can today confirm that the reports of the United States Food and Drug Control Agency are on their way to our offices. However, the number of reports which would be invalid seems rather high according to the figures quoted by the hon. member. I can only repeat what I said yesterday. As soon as we have received our own copy of these reports which are now on their way, we shall identify the Canadian companies and the products used in Canada which may correspond to the invalid studies. This will take us until the end of the year as the missing tests for these products will have to be completed.

[English]

INCREASED TESTING CAPABILITY

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is for the same minister. It is distressing for me to hear that she considers my attempts to make this information public—a witch hunt.

Yesterday four top officials of IBT, including the president, were indicted in Chicago for fraud in the testing of chemicals. Now we are told there are at least 24 other laboratories that have been doing faulty testing. Does the minister not feel that we need to increase our toxicological assessment capacity in Canada, and at the very least require labs to meet good laboratory practice standards before we accept their studies for registration purposes?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, of course, Madam Speaker. This is our objective. Early in my mandate, many months ago, the hon. member asked me whether we would open in the very near future a toxicology centre in Canada. I had replied, quite rightly I believe, that as long as we could do so, we would work jointly with the United States and Great Britain in particular, because there is a tripartite committee for the exchange of scientific information, so as to avoid additional costs for Canadians. We are now considering various relatively vague proposals which could eventually lead to the establishment of a truly Canadian toxicology centre. The details still have to be finalized. We are trying to prevent a waste of public funds.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

APPOINTMENT OF FULLTIME MINISTER

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Some time ago he stated he would be appointing a fulltime minister of veterans affairs. My reason for raising the question at this time is that we have some very serious problems in the Department of Veterans Affairs, especially dealing with the length of time it takes to process pensioners' applications. The present minister has not been able to find a solution to the problem, so can the Prime Minister inform us when he will be appointing as a full-time minister someone who can deal with this very serious problem in the department?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The information I was able to gather in my inquiries, Madam Speaker, was that, on the contrary, the minister was doing a remarkably good job as minister of veterans affairs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Why didn't you jerk your thumb?

Mr. Trudeau: However, that does not deter me from my general intention, Madam Speaker, of appointing a minister expressly for that portfolio. I have no intention of doing it at this time. I usually consider—

Mr. Crosbie: The byelection is over.

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member for St. John's West has views on this as he has on most things, but as on most things they do not make much sense. Madam Speaker, a byelection has nothing to do with the appointment.

● (1500)

DECENTRALIZATION OF DEPARTMENT

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister or to the acting minister. I received a letter today from a veteran in British Columbia who has been waiting for his application to be processed since April, 1977. He feels that it will take up to another two years, which will mean that it took from five and a half to six years to process his application.

The chairman of the pension commission and the Auditor General have stated that the staffing problems involved in the move to Prince Edward Island are causing delays in the processing of claims. The Auditor General stated that only 20 per cent of headquarters staff are prepared to make the move and that many trained personnel are resigning or leaving to take jobs in other departments. Is the minister considering leaving the pension commission in Ottawa so as to rectify the one to five-year delay in processing the applications of veterans?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. member is raising a particular case of which he has not given the minister or myself notice. It would be our concern to settle the particular case. A particularly outstanding one such as this should be drawn to our attention. If the hon. member was really sincere in getting results, he would have perhaps tried that route before raising the question in the House.

In so far as our program of decentralizing federal services is concerned, including the services of the Department of Veterans Affairs, our policy is well known. I find it remarkable that hon. members opposite, who are always accusing us of trying to centralize the country, should object to a policy which on the contrary is meant to bring federal services to the various regions.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

POLICE RAIDS ON RESTIGOUCHE RESERVE IN QUEBEC—PLIGHT OF INDIAN WOMEN AND CHILDREN

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. While the subject of the alleged abuse of salmon fishing was well aired this afternoon and it was encouraging to hear the remarks of both ministers, I should like to receive assurances that an investigation is also taking place into the abuses in the raids carried out on women, children, and defenseless people in that particular reserve.

Point of Order—Mr. Andre

Are we concerning ourselves with civil liberties and the rights of Canadians in such a case where the heavily-armed and overly-armed police of a particular government used a heavy-handed approach to a matter which might have been investigated in a much more reasonable manner? These people were defenseless. Will we attempt to determine exactly who were the perpetrators and the wrongdoers in this particular case?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, photographs were handed to me depicting what happened on June 11. They showed a tremendous number of police personnel and a tremendous number of cruisers, buses, and other heavy equipment and armament in that general vicinity. These pictures are being sent to the Solicitor General.

I had an opportunity to talk with the Solicitor General respecting signed affidavits which were prepared on the reserve. They are being forwarded to me by the National Indian Brotherhood. The affidavits claimed that some very excessive force was applied to various Indian persons on the reserve. The Solicitor General indicated that he is waiting to receive that documentation and will be more than happy to look into the claims of excessive use of force. I think any further questions along this line would be more appropriately directed to my colleague, the Solicitor General.

Mr. Paproski: Send in Marc Lalonde as a negotiator, Madam Speaker.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. ANDRE—PROPRIETY OF SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A)

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order respecting supplementary estimates (A) that were deemed to have been reported last evening and from which will arise an appropriations bill this Friday. I talked to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) about this particular period, and he agreed that this would be an appropriate time to raise the matter.

Supplementary estimates (A) are very simple in that they consist of a single item, namely the energy program of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. The estimates contain two separate money items. The first is vote 20a, which is described as follows:

—Payments to refiners and other importers of crude oil and petroleum products for the purposes of Part IV of the Petroleum Administration Act—$2,143,300,000.

Then the second part is a statutory item entitled "Petroleum Compensation Revolving Fund" in a negative amount of $2,143,300,000, which is identical to the amount in vote 20a. Therefore the net budgetary expenditure is zero, because one has been netted against the other or has been subtracted.

Further in the estimates there is an explanation of the requirement which shows that increased oil compensation payments require the additional $2,143,300,000. Then there are increased revenues to the Petroleum Compensation Revolving Fund in that amount. Thus it is a negative amount of $2,143,-300,000. Then there is an explanation of the objects of expenditure in the amount of $2,143,300,000, less increased revenues of the same amount. The net expenditure is supposedly zero and the net requirement is supposedly zero.

I believe these estimates, particularly the item entitled "Statutory", the Petroleum Compensation Revolving Fund, are out of order and inappropriate for these estimates for three reasons. In fact, I believe the estimates as presented are false in terms of what they are supposed to be. They are misleading and out of order according to the precedents and standards required of estimates, as indicated by decisions of Your Honour's predecessors and as set out in Beauchesne's fifth edition.

I believe there are three separate reasons why the item is out of order. First, the statutory item is not an expenditure; it is a revenue item. In fact it is described further on in the estimates as increased revenues in the amount of $2 billion, as well as "Less: Increased Revenues" of $2 billion. On two occasions the item is described as a revenue item. The estimates are intended to present to Parliament the spending program of the government, not its revenue program.

The revenue program is handled in a different manner. It is handled through taxation and presented to the House in the form of a public account at the end of the year in terms of total revenue. However, during the course of the year we have other sources of information from the government as to its revenue intentions. The estimates are not intended to indicate revenues.

I should like to bring to the attention of the Chair Section 484 of Beauchesne's fifth edition, page 169, under the section entitled "Estimates", wherein the following is indicated:

The purpose of the estimates is to present to Parliament the budgetary and non-budgetary expenditure proposals of the government for the next fiscal year. These estimates include Votes, which Parliament is asked to approve through Appropriation Acts, as well as other items called statutory items, for which the required expenditures have already been approved through existing legislation and are included only for information purposes.

Very clearly, according to Beauchesne's fifth edition, the estimates are supposed to include only expenditure items—two types, votes requiring an appropriation act, and "statutory" where there is an existing legislative authority. They are not intended to include revenues for which some legislative authority might exist.

Section 487 on the same page of Beauchesne's fifth edition reads as follows:

(1) The Estimates are limited to setting out only the sums which it is calculated will be required in the current year,—

It is just a reinforcement of Section 484 in terms of the intention of the estimates. I maintain that, as a result of this being a revenue item and not a spending item, that statutory item should be ruled out of order.

● (1510)

My second and additional reason why this statutory item is out of order has to do with the purpose of the petroleum compensation revolving fund. The supplementary estimates do not contain a description of what the purpose of the fund is but the main estimates for 1981-82 do. I refer the Chair to page 7-32 of the main estimates. There the objective of the petroleum compensation revolving fund is defined in this way:

To provide incentives for the development of designated classes of high-cost domestic petroleum through the payment of compensation to first users of such petroleum—

In other words, the petroleum compensation revolving fund is for the purpose of subsidizing or making payments to users of high cost domestic petroleum—not imported petroleum but domestic. Further evidence is contained on page 7-34 of the main estimates and, indeed, may be found in Chapter 34 of the Adjustment Accounts Act as well as Chapter 72(4) of the Petroleum Administration Act.

It is very clear that the statutory authority for the petroleum compensation fund is to subsidize domestic high-cost petroleum. At present Syncrude is the only one to fall into that category, with oil produced from the tar sands in Northern Alberta. If you look at vote 20a, Madam Speaker, it clearly states that it is for the purpose of "payments to refiners and other importers of crude oil and petroleum products for the purposes of Part IV". My point is that this estimate nets off the petroleum compensation fund, which is a revenue item, from vote 20a, the moneys required to subsidize imports. It is an inappropriate mixing. Vote 20a deals with the subsidization of imports. The statutory item deals with the subsidization of Syncrude oil produced in Canada.

They are apples and oranges. It is inappropriate to suggest that on the one hand, since we require a dozen more apples, we can subtract the dozen surplus oranges we have and reach a net requirement of zero fruit. They are not the same thing; they are two different items. I submit that it would be equally inappropriate for the government to take corporate taxes and in the estimates subtract those from fiscal transfers to the provinces, for example, and therefore say that the net spending on fiscal transfers in this new figure. They are two different items; they do not belong on the same side of the ledger paper. Even if they did by some peculiar reasoning, you should not subtract the two anyway because they are different items.

My third reason for submitting that that statutory item is out of order has to do with the fact that the item is itself anticipatory. In fact, there is no legal authority for the amounts contained therein. I refer the Chair to Citation 484 of Beauchesne which states:

These estimates include Votes, which Parliament is asked to approve through Appropriation Acts, as well as other items called statutory items, for which the required expenditures have already been approved through existing legislation and are included only for information purposes.

Clearly, a statutory item must be backed up by existing legislation. Even if the statutory item was a true expenditure, as opposed to a revenue item, it would be out of order for inclusion because the necessary legislation allowing the government to raise these funds has not yet been passed. Indeed, the necessary amendments to the legislation have not even been introduced.

I refer the Chair to notice of ways and means motion from Votes and Proceedings of July 11, 1980, and also to notice of ways and means motion of June 2, 1981, which is a notice of ways and means motion to amend the Petroleum Administration Act in a way which would provide the authority for the government to collect those revenues which would go into the petroleum compensation fund, which is supposed to be used to subsidize synthetic crude oil. The ways and means motion has not been introduced or voted upon in this House. Nor have there been amendments to the Petroleum Administration Act.

Indeed, yesterday the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde) tabled in the House a document entitled "Discussion Draft of the Energy Security Act 1981". Contained therein are those provisions which would give the statutory authority to collect the moneys which are indicated as being in the supplementary estimates as a negative expenditure, whatever that is. So there really is no legal authority yet for that measure.

You will recall, Madam Speaker, that when this issue was first raised on July 11, 1980, we on this side of the House raised a point of order having to do with the appropriateness of using a notice of ways and means motion for this particular device. It really is not a tax, it is a revolving type of fund. At that time Your Honour ruled that this was a legal question beyond the competence of the Chair and inappropriate for the Chair to decide upon. Subsequently we sought legal advice on this matter and were advised that, in fact, it was illegal. We were also advised that were we to pursue the matter we would be achieving a pyrrhic victory, since all that would be required would be for the government to pass retroactive legislation, which is what is being done in this energy security bill.

The language in that proposed legislation shows on page 22, I believe, that the provisions will become effective on July 10, 1980. This is an indication that some time in the future an act will come before us which will apply to a period about a year and a half ago, which will give statutory authority to an item which is placed into these estimates, subtracted from another item. So there is net spending even though they are apples and oranges and even though it is inappropriate to have revenue items in the estimates in the first place, since the estimates are supposed to talk about expenditures.

For all of the reasons I have set out, Madam Speaker, I humbly submit to you that it would be appropriate to request the government to strike out this item. It does not affect the government's appropriations. We will not have to sit here all summer while remedial action is brought in. The net effect will be to put the supplementary estimates in order, making the information contained therein accord with the rules as established by Beauchesne and Your Honour's predecessors. I believe this will contribute to a better understanding of what is being spent, what is being raised, and how many apples and oranges we have as opposed to the mismanagement that we see.

Point of Order—Mr. Andre

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, there seems to be some confusion in the mind of the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) with respect to what is intended by supplementary estimates (A). Last night I commended the hon. member as a chemical engineer having turned his hand to law, but I will have to qualify that commendation this afternoon.

If you look at the vote in question, vote 20a, essentially it seeks additional spending authority under Energy, Mines and Resources, vote 20. Energy, Mines and Resources, vote 20, called for payments to refiners and other importers of crude oil and petroleum products for the purposes of Part IV of the Petroleum Administration Act of $3,015,400,000. The purpose of supplementary estimates (A) is simply to increase that amount in the amount indicated, namely, $2,143,300,000.

Madam Speaker, one does not vote statutory items. The statutory item which appears beneath that, the petroleum compensation revolving fund, is inserted for the information of hon. members, to show that if and when legislation is adopted, there will be a netting of these amounts. Because it is the intention, as indicated by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lalonde), to create a fund which will be net. However, at the moment this is not the case, and no one is seeking that to be the case. We are simply seeking additional authority to extend the further amount for the same purposes, namely, payments to refiners and other importers of crude oil and petroleum products for the purposes of Part IV of the Petroleum Administration Act.

If one looks to the contribution at the bottom of page 2 of the estimates, one will see that increased payments to refiners and other importers of crude oil and petroleum products is expressed as a gross amount of $2,143,300,000. Therefore, I suggest to Your Honour that the hon. member for Calgary Centre has not understood the purpose of showing netting, which is done for information and factual presentation to hon. members of this House. It is done to provide additional information. Unfortunately, in this case it appears to have caused some confusion in the mind of the hon. member for Calgary Centre.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: First of all, I thank the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) for bringing this matter to the attention of the Chair. I thank the hon. minister for his remarks. Obviously, this question is highly technical and I would like to take it under advisement.

ATLANTIC CANADA—PROPOSED GULF REGION

Question No. 2,098—Mr. McGrath:

What is the jurisdiction of the proposed new gulf region in Atlantic Canada and where will the headquarters be located?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): The gulf region will encompass all of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, extending in the north to include the Strait of Belle Isle and in the south to a line extending from Cape North Nova Scotia to the Ramea area on the south-west coast of Newfoundland. It will include the whole of the 4R, 4S, 4T and 3Pn statistical areas of the North Atlantic Fisheries Organization. The land boundaries of the gulf region will include all of the provinces of Quebec and Prince Edward Island, and the headwater areas of all rivers in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland which flow into the Gulf of St. Lawrence as defined here.

The headquarters of the new region will probably be permanently established in the general area of Moncton, New Brunswick.

INTERDEPARTMENTAL DUTY REMISSION COMMITTEE

Question No. 2,269—Mr. Herbert:

1. (a) What is the mandate or term of reference of the Interdepartmental Duty Remission Committee of the tariff section of the Department of Finance (b) can interested parties make representations to the committee before decisions are rendered and, if so, by what means (c) is it necessary for a company to be in financial difficulties before an application for the remission of duties can be considered (d) are applications for remission of duties made public?

2. For each member of the committee (a) what is his/her classification and salary (b) is he/she an employee of the Department of Finance (c) was he/she seconded from another department and, if so, which department?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)): 1. (a) The Interdepartmental Remission Committee is composed of representatives of the Departments of Finance, National Revenue, and Industry, Trade and Commerce. Depending on the agenda, representatives of other departments may attend particular meetings (e.g., Department of Agriculture in the case of duty remission applications on agricultural products). The committee is chaired by Finance; National Revenue provides its secretary. The committee was established by senior trade policy officials to provide an interdepartmental forum for the review of requests for the introduction of orders in council, pursuant to Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act, to remit duty and/or sales tax on imported goods. The committee gives advice to ministers on the policy implications of remitting duties or taxes in particular cases. Its decisions and the general policy framework within which it operates are subject to review by senior officials of the noted departments.

(b) Decisions and recommendations by the committee are made in response to representations from individuals, companies and other applicants. Requests are usually made in writing but applicants are free to make supplementary oral presentations to the committee if they so desire.

(c) There are no pre-conditions to be met by an applicant before making a request for duty or sales tax remission. Each request is judged on its individual merits. The impact of the duty or tax on an applicant's financial position is usually taken into account in reaching a decision and may be a deciding factor in some cases.

(d) As a rule, applications for remission are not made public although in some cases other interested parties are asked for their views on the substance of an application.

2. (a)

Committee Member	Classification	Salary Range
Chairperson (Finance)	ES7	$43,921-47,859
Secretary (Nat. Rev.)	PM5	$27,540-31,056
Finance	Various but usually ES5	Various but usually $34,552-39,532
National Revenue	PM 5	$27,540-31,056
Ind., Trade & Commerce	CO 3	$32,490-41,619
Other Departments	Various	Various

(b) As noted above, only the chairperson and representatives of the Department of Finance are employed by the department.

(c) Members of the committee are not seconded from their departments. Rather, their membership is part of their regular departmental responsibilities.

SKILLED IMMIGRANTS DESTINED FOR QUEBEC

Question No. 2,281—Mr. Herbert:

What percentage of (a) professional and technical (b) worker immigrants entering Canada were destined for Quebec in 1980?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Statistics collected on new immigrants to Canada destined to the labour market, do not distinguish between technical and professional workers.

The following table gives preliminary figures for persons admitted as permanent residents to Canada destined to Quebec, according to intended occupational group.

	Admitted to Canada	Destined to Quebec	Percentage

CENSUS—SOURCES OF CONTACT NAMES

Question No. 2,344—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to Question No. 2,000 which states in part, with regard to the taking of a census, that the office of the minister responsible for Statistics Canada provides Statistics Canada with the name of a contact for each federal electoral district, what are all the sources from which the office of the minister or the minister obtains the names of such contacts?

2. Of the present contacts for each district, what number are Liberal members of Parliament and what number are presidents or officials of Liberal constituency associations?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Statistics Canada reports: 1. The names of contacts for each federal electoral district are obtained by the minister from government party M.Ps.

2. Of the present contacts, eight are Liberal members of the House of Commons and the Senate. Statistics Canada does not have information which would permit it to determine what number are presidents or officials of Liberal constituency associations.

Question No. 2,346—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to Question No. 2,001 which states in part, that candidates' names for census commissioner positions may be obtained from several sources, what is a description of the sources?

Order Paper Questions

2. For the 282 constituencies, what number of the sources are Liberal members of Parliament or presidents or executive members of Liberal constituency associations?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Statistics Canada reports: 1. The names of candidates for the position of Census Commissioner are obtained from local constituency contacts, through unsolicited direct application to Statistics Canada, through employment and immigration offices, from lists of persons having previous census experience.

2. See question 2,344, part 2 answered this day.

ILLEGAL IMMIGRANTS—CONTROLS

Question No. 2,350—Mr. Flis:

1. What was the estimated number of immigrants illegally in Canada for each year 1975 to 1980?

2. What mechanism or method of control does the government employ to monitor the entrance and exit of visitors and immigrants to Canada?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. There is no way of estimating the number of persons illegally in Canada.

2. There are no exit controls for immigrants or visitors leaving Canada. All persons seeking entry to Canada are examined on the primary inspection line and those whose intent or purpose is judged questionable are referred to immigration for further consideration.

Those visiting for over three months are documented on the form IMM. 1097. Others visiting for under three months may also be documented on IMM. 1097 at the discretion of the examining officer. Those with approval to work here for a specified time in a pre-arranged job are documented on the form IMM. 1102 and overseas students intending to attend school here must complete a form IMM. 1208.

All immigrants are documented on their visa and landing records on form IMM. 1000, which is retained as a permanent record of their permanent residence status in Canada.

PAYMENT OF MEMBERSHIP DUES IN PRIVATE CLUBS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Question No. 2,428—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to question No. 1,591, for what reason do the heads of Crown corporations have the privilege of their dues being paid to private clubs when such privileges are not extended to cabinet ministers or deputy ministers of departments?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): The policy of the government with respect to the payment of membership fees by Crown corporations listed in Schedule B of the Financial Administration Act is to pay membership fees only when membership in a particular organization is in the direct interest of the government or when membership is a legal prerequisite for the individual employee to continue carrying out his or her duties.

Policies with respect to the payment of membership fees by individual Crown corporations listed in Schedules C and D of the Financial Administration Act are established by the individual boards of directors of those corporations.

The Treasury Board directive does not permit payment of membership fees for a public servant of any rank if such membership is primarily in the interest of the individual or not directly related to the departmental program.

Treasury Board directives, such as payment of membership fees, do not apply to members of Parliament, including cabinet ministers, who come under the rules of the House of Commons.

CONTRACTS TO LEIGH INSTRUMENTS, PATLON AIRCRAFT & INDUSTRIES AND REXNORD CANADA LTD.

Question No. 2,592—Mr. Stewart:

Did the Department of Labour purchase bearings from (a) Leigh Instruments valued at $10,167 (b) Patlon Aircraft and Industries valued at $17,270 (c) Rexnord Canada Ltd. valued at $11,868 and, if so, for what purpose will they be used?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): No. However, three contracts were awarded, on behalf of the Department of National Defence. The details are as follows:

(a) Leigh Instrument valued at $10,167. The bearings are to be used in radar equipment installed in Canadian Forces ships.

(b) Patlon Aircraft and Industries valued at $17,270. Two types of bearings were purchased, one to be used in the airframes of the Tracker Aircraft, the other for use in the rear fuselage controls of the T33 aircraft.

(c) Rexnord Canada Limited valued at $11,868. The bearings purchased are to be used in the under carriage of the C130 aircraft.

CIDA—JOHN DEERE LTD. CONTRACT

Question No. 2,593—Mr. Stewart:

Did the Canadian International Development Agency purchase a baler valued at $13,421 from John Deere Ltd. and, if so, for what purpose will it be used?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): The Department of Supply and Services, on behalf of the Canadian International Development Agency, awarded a contract to John Deere Ltd. for a baler, a mower and a rake plus a supply of spare parts. The total cost was $13,420.91. The equipment is to be supplied to Zambia as grant aid for a wheat development project.

ACF COMMUNICATIONS LTD. CONTRACT

Question No. 2,594—Mr. Stewart:

Did the Privy Council Office award a contract for $140,000 to ACF Communications, Ottawa, for media information services and, if so (a) what services were provided (b) what are the names of the principals of the Company?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): DSS awarded a contract, on behalf of the Privy Council, to ACF

Communications Ltd., Ottawa, Ontario, in the amount of $140,000. The contract was for the provision of daily summaries and analysis of major national electronic and print media news. The only principal officer of the company is Mr. A. Fraser, president.

CORPORATIONS AND LABOUR UNIONS RETURNS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Monday, June 22, consideration of the motion of Mr. Blais that Bill S-10, to amend the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, when we rose last evening to vote on the very important Bill C-57, I had just begun my remarks on Bill S-10.

I see the minister is in the House. So that he does not think that all we in the opposition do is criticize, I must congratulate the minister on two or three counts. First of all, the short title, which has come to be known as CALURA, has a kind of exotic and almost intoxicating ring to the name. I think that it is an interesting way to put together a bill so that one can come up with an acronym which makes it sound exciting.

Mr. Knowles: Credit for that goes to John Diefenbaker.

Mr. Mayer: However, when one looks at the bill, it is anything but intoxicating. It is a very long and very complicated piece of legislation, even though the pages are very short.

I would also like to congratulate the minister on a couple of matters in the bill. First of all, he raises the threshold under which corporations are required to report. I think that is a welcomed part of the bill. In addition to that, apparently it will be easier to consolidate statements, and therefore easier for corporations to comply with the regulations under that bill.

However, having said that, as might be expected I think there are a lot of concerns that we have relating to the bill. It bothers me that there is really no justification given as to why we need some of this information and regulation. What I think does concern all of us in this country, which is a very large country, is that the government should take into consideration collecting some of the information that it needs in conjunction with some of the provincial governments. I can give the minister an example which I hope he will take into consideration, and I hope we raise it at committee.

The province from which I come, Manitoba, is now in the process of revising, or has just revised, the Manitoba agricultural lands protection act. This is an act which is in place to protect the lands of Manitoba from being purchased by foreigners; at least, people who do not choose to reside and work on the land. The minister stated that one of the purposes in the bill, as reported at page 10707 of Hansard of June 17, is as follows:

—there is presently no system which can indicate the level of technological transfers from Canadian corporations to foreign interests or vice versa.

It seems to me that, in addition to talking about technological transfers, the minister is also interested in finding out how foreign corporations operate in this country in terms of ownership. One of the things which could assist the government, and which could also cut back on the amount of paperwork required by individual corporations at the same time, would be for the federal government to set an example and try to work with the provincial governments in areas where the provincial governments would be involved in gathering the same kind of data the federal government is interested in under this bill.

Mr. Blais: They will be using this data. We have arrangements.

Mr. Mayer: The minister says they will be using this data. It seems to me that this is a suggestion which can be used by both the federal government and the provincial governments in the sense that everyone should be working together to see that when information is collected, it is collected for a purpose and in such a way which is the least painful and therefore the least expensive to the people from whom that information is being extracted.

I checked with the Manitoba government this morning to find out if there had been any co-operation or any indication that this bill was coming forward at the provincial level, so that when there are bills passed which will be collecting the same kind of information from the residents of Manitoba or, for that matter, any other province in Canada—after all, a citizen of Manitoba or a citizen of Prince Edward Island is also a citizen of Canada—that both levels of government do what they can to see that this information be collected in the most inexpensive and expeditious way possible.

It seems to me that this would do a couple of things. It would lessen the cost to the individual who is collecting this information. By the way, in some cases when this information is collected the responsibility of providing the information falls on some of the chartered accountants. I have had conversations with accountants who find it very difficult, in some cases, to comply with the requests which come from the Department of National Revenue. I suspect the same criticism would apply to whoever is collecting this information, in the sense that information is asked for and it has to be charged against the accountant's time. He really cannot bill it back to the individual client per se. Therefore, what results is that the over-all level of charge which the accountant must put on his customers has to be raised. That is something I would hope the minister would take into account. I am pleased to see that he is in the chamber this afternoon.

Very briefly, as I do not particularly want to take a long time, I have two or three concerns which I want to raise. One of the concerns, which I think has been expressed previously, is that we are in the process of developing a very large system of paper burden in this country. As an example, I do not know whether I will get a hernia from lifting this bundle of paper I have in my hand, but this is the kind of regulation which is in front of this House. This is the number of bills which are in front of the House.

● (1530)

I think we have to be careful to see that the regulations and laws we pass do not become excessive. Some time ago I read that the first five-year plan in Russia weighed several tons! The small business community in this country is concerned that the information collected be relevant and useful.

Early in the session I had a letter from a constituent about the monthly ES-1A report, which reads in part as follows:

> We have been sending this report for over a year and we have only twenty-one (21) employees.
> Who is benefiting other than a few statisticians who can say they bamboozled the Government to allow a 100 per cent sample?

As a result of that letter I wrote to the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Lapointe) expressing my constituent's concern, specifically asking him if he could give some reason for the information being collected. I received a reply which I appreciated but unfortunately it did not give me any specific reason except to say that in the public sector the information is used by such agencies as the Bank of Canada, the system of national accounts and the Department of Finance in the determination of fiscal and monetary policy. That is a very heady reason for collecting information from a firm that employs only 21 people. I think this example illustrates that the government should see to it that the paperwork for small business does not become burdensome.

Clause 4 of the bill deals with the return to be filed with the Chief Statistician of Canada by corporations and labour unions. It seems ridiculous to take one quarter of the 16 pages of the bill to set out the information that the government is asking for. Clause 19 provides that the governor in council may make additional regulations.

I hope that we can take these matters into consideration when the bill is considered in committee to make sure that the information gathered is used.

Through technology, methods are available that would allow us to collect weather information at one-foot intervals between Ottawa and Edmonton. The amount of this information would be horrendous, and simply because it is possible to collect it is no real reason for doing so. It seems to me that this is the kind of labyrinth of paperwork that could result from this bill, which devotes four pages to enumerating the information that will be required.

Then, in addition, another section sets out the kind of information that the governor in council may require. We really do not know the purpose for which the information is sought.

It was pointed out earlier that a lot of federal government agencies and provincial governments collect basically the same kind of information. If we need all this information, and I am not sure that we do, then surely we should see that it is collected in the least expensive way possible.

Those are the concerns that I have with the bill, Mr. Speaker. Last night, the hon. member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) suggested that the bill should be withdrawn and a more straightforward one brought forward. Perhaps some of the recommendations of the task force on government regulations that reported to the House last fall could be adopted. That all-party committee came up with some interesting and useful ideas about government regulations and information. The government should take its recommendations seriously and, if it does not withdraw this bill, should allow major amendments to the bill when it reaches committee.

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, I too wish to express my concern about some parts of this bill which has been with the Senate since December, 1980 and now, within weeks of adjourning for the summer recess, for some reason it has acquired urgency. That is apt to make members on this side a little more suspicious than they would ordinarily be.

My colleagues have spoken at length about some reasons why they find the bill more repugnant than it would appear at first glance. Their points have been well made and I should now like to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, some points made by members of my constituency, businessmen who feel that they are overburdened by government regulation. They see this as another step in the regulation of the Canadian economy and do not think the information is very relevant to government.

I have with me three letters from businessmen in my constituency who have asked that I not use their names. They have a justifiable fear that the information the government is continuously seeking from private companies and information compiled on the daily lives of individuals may lead to some form of recrimination. I am not sure that such a thing would happen, but they think they have a justifiable concern and they express it by their wish to conceal their identity.

A corporation is asked to provide its name, address of head office, the manner in which the company is incorporated, the amount of authorized share capital, the number of shares, description of voting rights and the number issued. This information is already available to the government so there is no need to burden taxpayers and the corporations that contribute to the wealth of the federal government through taxes with more paperwork. As a matter of fact, I understood that this government was committed to lessening the burden of paper work on corporations, but I do not think that Bill S-10 will accomplish that. Indeed, the amount of information collected will be doubled and this will involve extra cost for corporations.

A question put to the minister by the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens), which is reported at page 10859 of Hansard, reads as follows:

> Could the minister tell the House whether any evaluation was made during that study of what is the cost of complying under the act for business and for consumers throughout Canada? Is there some estimate as to what it is costing businessmen to comply with the act as it now exists, and can the minister give us any estimate as to what it will cost businessmen to comply with the new act if it is passed in its present form?

The minister replied:

> I do not have with me any information in terms of the total cost to an individual company of completing a form on an annual basis. However, I would suggest to the hon. gentleman that it would not appear to be a concern of any of the companies with whom we have had exchanges.

The government has imposed an additional cost of doing business upon private corporations, yet the minister has no idea how much it will cost them. I think if he had concern for his portfolio and the corporations for which he is responsible, he could find out how much it could cost them to complete the forms he has requested. After all, he has the resources of a department at his disposal.

The bill also requires trade unions to furnish the name and address of each employer resident in Canada with which it has a collective agreement, and the number of male and female members in the local union. I do not understand what difference it would make to the government whether a trade union member was male or female. I do not see that as information which this government would not be able to exist without. It requests the total number of employees covered by the collective agreement and the balance sheet, showing the assets and liabilities of the union. That information is already available. It is available to members of the unions and it is available in other forms to this government.

A statement of income and expenditures is also requested. In addition, a financial statement with respect to each special fund of the union is requested. If I were a union member, I would be very suspicious of the government, or of anyone else, who requested information which showed what I had in my strike fund and so be able to see how long the union would be able to last, how long I would be able to stay on strike and how long members would be able to be fed and clothed. I do not see any other reason for the government to be requesting this information unless it is to make judgments as to how long the government could expect work stoppages to continue and how flush the union strike funds are.

There is a clause in this bill asking international unions to make a statement containing amounts paid or credited to the union in the reporting period. I do not understand the necessity for this information. Again, information is requested about expenditures made by the union and recorded as being directly related to its operations in Canada. This information is available. It is not something which has been withheld from governments in the past. It is not something that any responsible union tries to withhold. The information is available. But now we have a bill, apparently very urgent, which the government wants to have passed asking the trade unions to comply in this manner.

On reading the speeches made in connection with this bill and the speech and interventions made by the minister, I find that he was the only speaker, to my knowledge, on that side of the chamber. He was not content to be the only speaker, but he continued to interject while other members were speaking. His interjections were on spurious points of order pertaining to who brought in the bill originally and why. I would think that if government members wish to partake, they could ask the minister responsible to share a little bit of time with them, giving members opposite the opportunity to discuss this bill in the House.

It has been said by other members that this bill does not seem to do anything productive. All it does is reward the bureaucracy with the ability to have another piece of paper in its hands, something that can be moved back and forth. The bill does not reward the individual. The bill does not add anything to productivity in Canada.

When companies and labour unions are filing returns, there should be some guarantee that these returns will be kept confidential.

This bill does not bring about any extra jobs. All it does is continue to fill the bureaucracy with paper. The bill will make more bookwork. In other words, more company time will be spent complying with this bill. If a company does not have its own accounting department, it will have to hire outside help and pay additional costs, costs which will be passed on to the consumer.

When I look at the bill, it goes against the grain of the government's proposal to do away with the paper burden. Overregulation has been called by a number of economists one of the greatest costs to Canadian business, at about $120 per Canadian. That figure may rise to $150, and next year it may be $200. This money comes out of consumers' pockets. I do not see how that information can be used in any constructive way by the government. It seems to me, and I do not fault the minister, that someone in his department has said that this information is needed and he has neglected to ask why. I think he is remiss in that. Financial statements that corporations will have to file should be made confidential and remain so.

While I know there are other things in this bill that I and members of the business community in my constituency find repugnant, I would be remiss if I did not say that increases in the value of assets which require to be reported is a move in the right direction. But while moving properly in one direction, I find the government has moved improperly in another. For that reason I look forward to discussing this bill when it goes to committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before recognizing the minister, I should inform the House that if he speaks now, he will close the debate on second reading.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be brief. I thank the hon. gentlemen who have spoken this afternoon for their contributions.

I am sure when the bill gets into committee they will help greatly. However, I want to bring precision to some of the comments that have been made in the spirit of attempting to clarify some issues, so that we will be knowledgeable as to what this bill is about when we are in committee.

Basically this bill is a statistical one. It was deemed necessary as early as 1962 because of Canada's particular position vis-à-vis the United States, the large number of subsidiary companies existing within Canada, the large amount of foreign investments and the great number of international unions in Canada. Because of these things Canada needs a system to collect information and therefore know exactly the extent of foreign investment and how many international unions are operating within the country.

This was not a bill initiated by a Liberal government. It was initiated in 1962 by Mr. Diefenbaker, who was prime minister at the time. I have been advised by those in the House during that period that it was basically a cornerstone of his policy on economic nationalism and it was strongly supported by the Tory members of the government at that time. I am very pleased that initiative was taken and brought forward.

What we are attempting to do is to remove some of the amendments which were made in 1965 by a Liberal government in order to simplify the process. The hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood (Mr. Rae) indicated in his intervention that what we were proposing would create some disadvantage or some problem for international unions in terms of their reporting. Quite to the contrary, what we are attempting to do is to put more fairness in to the reporting system so that international unions will be able to report more of the expenditures they are making for the benefit of members of Canadian unions who belong to an international organization.

In effect, what has developed is a report which was filed in 1977. In that report we saw a $45.4 million deficit. In other words, more money was going to the United States than was coming back into Canada in terms of the exchanges between the locals of international unions which operated within Canada.

As we are now preparing the amendments and as we are proposing in this bill, we will be permitting international unions to show a much more realistic picture of the money flowing into the United States or to the international unions from Canadian locals and also how much money is being invested by international unions in services and benefits available to members of Canadian locals. I trust those comments will, in some way, permit the hon. member for Broadview-Greenwood to review the provisions of this bill so that he can make his contribution in committee.

Yesterday we heard the hon. member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) make an issue of the colour of the various forms that were attached to the former legislation, or the legislation that I am seeking the consent of the House to amend. It is true that they are multicoloured. The argument he was making was very helpful to the case to be made by the government in the sense that, of the eight forms that he was mentioning, we are combining those eight forms into one basic form that will have to be filed by the corporations under the corporations returns portion of the bill.

In effect, the forms that he was referring to yesterday were not only Statistics Canada forms. There were also two forms that are required by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce which will no longer have to be filed with that department by the corporations. I am referring to questionnaires Nos. 3 and 4. The information that was sought by these questionnaires will be included within the major universal form that is contemplated under clause 4 of this bill.

The hon. member for York-Peel made a strong case about the quarterly surveys required of various types of corporations by Statistics Canada. Each of these surveys applies to a different sector of the economy. All corporations do not have to file all eight of the multi-coloured forms. Quite the contrary; each corporation belongs to an industrial sector and there is a special form for that sector.

What is to happen now is that one of the quarterly reports will be included within the consolidated form. Because these are quarterly surveys there will be an ongoing obligation on the part of the corporation to file three other quarterly reports as previously required by Statistics Canada.

I would like to assure hon. members that this is not a regulatory bill. That is a misconception. There is nothing regulatory in this legislation. We are attempting to provide authorization to collect information, not to regulate it. It is quite clear that the purpose of the total information we require is not to regulate but to permit the Government of Canada, and indirectly the governments of the individual provinces, to adopt certain policies that are in the provincial or national interest.

So much for the forms. I will now deal with the question of technology transfers. I am surprised that members opposite did not comment more on that aspect of the bill because it is new. As I said in my opening remarks, there are no provisions at the provincial or federal levels where national statistics can be obtained in terms of technology transfers.

One of the major factors to be taken into consideration in terms of future economic development is access to technology. Every developing nation, middle nation and developed nation is very jealous about being able to obtain and guard its technology in order to foster its technological development. Canada has had the major advantage, as a result of having a large number of multinational subsidiaries within Canada, of having access to the technology being developed by the parent company. That is a major advantage.

There is also a requirement for our own national development and the future of international trade for Canadians that we in Canada know what sort of technology has been transferred to Canada and what sort of intentions there are in terms of developing technology within Canada so as to create a better and wider industrial and manufacturing capacity within this country. There is a recognition that, without our being able to seize upon and develop our own technology, we will not be able to develop an international capacity in trade. Basically what we will be doing is requiring companies in Canada to identify for us not the nature of the technology nor the substance of the technology that is being transferred, but the arrangements for the technology transfers that are made between companies outside and within Canada.

I wear different hats as Minister of Supply and Services. One of the major thrusts of my ministry in terms of minister of supply is to use every procurement dollar in order to improve Canada's capacity in the manufacturing sector. As the report that was tabled yesterday by the task force on the National Trading Corporation shows, in 1980 we had an $18 billion deficit in end products. That was $1 billion more than in 1979. I am led to believe that in the very near future it will be over $20 billion in end products. Therefore, we as Canadians have an obligation to reduce that deficit. We will only be able to do that if we create a better Canadian manufacturing capacity.

Within my ministry I am using every procurement dollar as best I can to encourage the Canadian private sector to develop additional Canadian capacity. Recently I announced the source development fund. It is there to try and create additional Canadian manufacturing capacity, the potential of which is identified as a result of the procurement process.

I have within my department what we call the unsolicited proposals fund, $20 million a year. It is not a large amount of money. I wish I could have $40 million or perhaps $50 million. The purpose of that unsolicited proposals fund is to encourage the development of Canadian technology, encourage the private sector, increase research and development efforts to create new technology and new marketable products, not only for the Canadian marketplace but the international marketplace. The secret behind everything I do is to try and identify technology.

[Translation]

A technology that we could develop and improve in Canada not only to meet Canadian requirements on the Canadian market but also those of the international market. That is why I support this bill and am very anxious to have it passed because we will then have some knowledge, which we do not have now, at the level of technology transfers from multionationals and other sources to Canadian branches as well as from Canadian corporations to other foreign companies. It seems to me that it is actually a major need in our economy, and I am quite surprised that no member opposite has said that it is essential for Canadians to have such information and that indeed the only way to obtain them was to use Statistics Canada, a most efficient tool not only in Canada but throughout the world.

[English]

Statistics Canada is the agency that will be collecting all the information that is required under the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act.

With those very brief statements, I hope that this bill will now proceed to committee where we can have a very intelligent debate on the contents of it. I have indicated to members of the opposition that I am open and flexible in terms of amendments that they may wish to present so long as they fit within the bill and the intentions I would like to espouse. Having said that, I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and hon. members for their attention.

Insurance Companies

CANADIAN AND BRITISH INSURANCE COMPANIES ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING EXPENSES OF SUPERINTENDENT

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-66, to amend the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this short bill is primarily intended to amend the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act so as to clarify the power conferred upon the Superintendent of Insurance to incur certain expenses in exercising control of a company for its rehabilitation or in carrying out its winding up under the provisions of the Winding-up Act.

The provisions of the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act prescribe that when a company is experiencing financial difficulties the Minister of Finance may give the Attorney General of Canada the responsibility of seeking from a superior court an order authorizing the Superintendent of Insurance to take control of the company for its rehabilitation or winding-up pursuant, as I just said, to the Winding-up Act. Section 113 of the act, which will be clarified by the bill which we are studying now, provides that when the superintendent takes control of a company for its rehabilitation or winding-up, the expenses incurred in exercising that control must be paid by some or all of the insurance companies registered under this act or under the Foreign Insurance Companies Act.

The payments made by the industry to cover the expenses thus incurred by the superintendent in managing the operations of a company for its rehabilitation or winding up will ensure that the assets of the company which is experiencing financial difficulties will be used solely to settle the claims of its policyholders.

The federally chartered Strathcona General Company, which had to face outstanding claims of roughly $39 million, had financial difficulties earlier this year. It will be remembered that the Supreme Court of Ontario ordered the superintendent to assume control of the company for its financial rehabilitation, and a project aimed at enabling the company to meet its obligations was drafted by a consortium representing certain sectors of the insurance industry and other interested parties. In order to see this project through, the consortium agreed to underwrite a bank loan so that the company would have enough funds for its cash requirements and thus be in a position to pay off its claims while it would attempt to recoup the money it had loaned out. It was agreed that the interest on that loan would be an integral part of the expenses incurred by the Superintendent of Insurance in exercising control of the company for its rehabilitation.

Payment by the superintendent of the interest on the money borrowed by the company and the subsequent sharing of these costs by the industry seemed to go much further than the spirit of the legislation, under which the superintendent is authorized to do all that is necessary to allow the company under its control to meet its commitments for rehabilitation purposes. At the present time, when winding up the company, the term all "the expenses incurred" is mentioned in the act. However, in spite of the intent of the law, the Department of Justice believes that the present wording of Section 113 is such that the payment of interest and other costs as well as the expenses shared by registered companies could be questioned.

The bill aims therefore at eliminating any doubt concerning the power of the Superintendent to pay, at the time of the rehabilitation or winding up of the company, the interests on loans obtained to meet the cash requirements of the company as well as the costs of terminating the leases or employment contracts or other similar expenses. The bill also amends Section 113 of the Act to establish clearly that when the expenses are incurred in respect of a company which transacted only the business of property and personal risk insurance, only premium income from this category of insurance shall be taken into account to be shared in by companies. Mr. Speaker, this is not a very thick bill. However, as you can see, it is of major importance. I have had discussions with representatives of both opposition parties, and it seems that we could refer the bill to the committee of the whole and then proceed to third reading. This is what I hope will happen, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The minister has suggested that the bill be referred to Committee of the Whole—

[English]

To proceed to the Committee of the Whole would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is agreed by unanimous consent that following second reading this bill will be referred to Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I was wondering when the changes were to be made to the wording of the Order Paper regarding this particular bill. I am glad the minister has made the proposal and the House has accepted the suggestion that we go from second reading to the Committee of the Whole.

One might ask how on earth it is that at this stage of the session such a bill can have such priority, not only within the cabinet pecking order but within the pecking order of the House. This is a housekeeping bill required to clear up some doubt in the Department of Justice about what you and I would consider to be proper expenses in the liquidation of an insurance company, including interest costs on money borrowed by a consortium. Such a change is necessary in somebody's mind regarding this aspect of the ordinary liquidation of the assets of a company in order to pay off some creditors.

Sometimes one has to wonder about the thinking of the Department of Justice. This is the sort of bill which always gives me cause for doubt, just as I have doubts when a minister of the Crown says he has been advised by the legal officers of the Crown that certain bills or certain proposed steps are quite in order. Then I say yes, but what about things like Bill C-66? Little wee doubts are expressed for what you and I, Mr. Speaker, would agree are perfectly legitimate purposes. On reading the act we are mystified as to why the proposals were brought forward. Well, if the Department of Justice is wrong on this particular little wee peanut bill, how can they be right on major issues? This is precisely the type of situation we face.

The ultimate purpose of this bill, of course, is perfectly reasonable. There is no doubt in my mind that if an insurance company should get into trouble the superintendent has the power to organize a syndicate to liquidate the affairs of the company in order to save the creditors from unnecessary losses. He has the power to pay certain expenses which ultimately, if there is a deficiency of assets, are chargeable against the industry. There will in no way be a charge against the public purse.

However, what is he entitled to include in those expenses which the industry will ultimately have to pay? Naturally one would have thought that interest costs on funds borrowed by the consortium in order to keep the company going for a time so that it can be liquidated in an orderly fashion would be an appropriate expense. However, somebody raised a doubt about it so this is why we are into this sector.

The insurance company in question was in this local area and that may be what has prompted the government to get on with this bill and put it into this timetable. The shareholders or participants in this company are no different from anyone else. They merit no more consideration than anyone else. As a matter of fact, I think they were gullible to the point of being negligent. They thought they had a free ride to profit.

This company which went into liquidation was frankly nothing but a reinsurance broker. When they got into trouble and efforts were made to get the industry to bail them out, the industry said: "These people came out with ridiculous rates on ridiculous terms, they undercut us, and now you ask us to bail them out. Have you got a hole in your head?" And quite rightly so. I am absolutely astounded at some of the major reinsurance brokers in this country—and I will be charitable beyond all reason by not using their names—who placed large amounts of insurance with this company simply because the rates were low. They should have known better. It was an open secret in the industry that all Strathcona was doing was engaging in some frantic reinsurance, laying off, and just skimming through the commissions. That is all they were living on, the reinsurance commissions.

Well, on a couple of rather major claims that did arise the reinsurance people abroad simply told them to take a flying jump and to take their chances on legal proceedings. In other words, they simply said lump it. Of course, the game was over and that is all that has happened.

Now, that having been taken care of, the question is: which costs of cleaning up this mess can be properly charged against the assets? Ultimately the residual will be paid by the industry, and that is all we are dealing with this afternoon. There is not one cent of public money involved, otherwise I think we would have had a great deal more to say. However, I am in agreement that the public trustee should not be put in a position where he has to counter an opinion from the Department of Justice as to what expenses he can authorize in an orderly liquidation. It is not only a matter of interest costs, but it is the cost of liquidating any leases which might exist.

This points up one final factor. It may be that in this case, where not too many people are going to get hurt, certainly not the public, we and the superintendent should take a look at the requirements of those people filing a proposal for a licence as a federal insurance company. I think there has to be a tightening up here. We have to look at the industry. The insurance industry in this country is predominantly owned—even more so than some sectors of manufacturing or those involved in the exploitation of minerals—and operated by foreign interests. Canadian investors have been notorious in their reluctance to organize into responsible general insurance firms. There are over 300 companies involved in general insurance, a handful of which are Canadian. There is no way that the Government of Canada is going to say: look, we are going to institute statutory requirements that those people in the insurance business in Canada shall comply with, like the banks, newspapers and broadcasters; Canadianize by saying that no more than 25 per cent of any insurance company will be owned by foreign interests.

There is no market. No Canadians are willing to buy. That is the state of the market. There is no money around. I do not care what political party wants to espouse Canadianization, there is nothing in the law which will force investors to buy interests from foreign insurance companies under any circumstances.

The answer is not public ownership. God help us if we fall into that trap. There is no way that either the federal government or the provinces can become successfully involved in the general insurance business. Those attempts at becoming involved in the general insurance business are now a disaster as far as policyholders are concerned.

Mr. Rae: Name one.

Mr. Lambert: In Saskatchewan it was a disaster. In Manitoba it was a shocking performance. British Columbia has had to go to the rescue with public funds. It is a shocking area.

Are Canadians prepared to go into the general insurance field? Do they have the expertise? A lot of people seem to think that all one must do is start an insurance company and out of some sort of God-sent manna inspiration will descend so that it becomes successful. There are such things as the market with regard to insurance. The insurance market of the world was built upon the degree of confidence in solvency in the industry as a whole.

For example, with a claim resulting from the loss of a major airline company, we could be talking in terms of $50 million to $60 million. The industry has been organized over the years. Its experience goes back over centuries, but we are just a peanut, skimming the surface. We must organize our affairs so that there will be confidence in the solvency of insurance companies. This will benefit the question of rates. A cut-rate operation operating in the free market always comes a cropper. Government insurance schemes operating on cut rates always come a cropper, or there are losses about which they do not talk that must be fed back into the hopper. Who pays for them?

I suppose the young driver of a really powerful car, who is the biggest risk on the market, thinks it is great to obtain cut-rate fees. He does not worry about the millions which must be fed into the deficits of insurance companies such as the Saskatchewan Insurance Corporation, the Manitoba insurance system and the British Columbia insurance system which have had the misfortune of becoming involved in public insurance. If the millions are not fed into these deficits, we have to absorb greater losses. There is no magical money tree in the whole business despite what some people think. Losses are always at the expense of someone else.

We have run into a situation where there is a mess. It is being tidied up. Someone has to take care of the expenses. The industry will take care of all the expenses, and we have to tidy up the legislation. I am quite prepared to see this bill go through expeditiously. Hopefully we will get it cleaned up with a minimum of further discussion.

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), I am somewhat surprised the government chose to take up time, as we are approaching the end of a session, to bring in this type of legislation. That is not to say that we are opposed to it in any way. It would be very difficult for us to be opposed to legislation as innocuous as this. Its purposes and intent have been well summarized by the minister and by the hon. member for Edmonton West.

As the minister pointed out, the main purpose of the bill is to remove any doubt about the ability of the superintendent to pay and assess against the industry, in the event of the rehabilitation or winding up of a company, interest costs incurred in borrowing to meet a company's requirement for liquid funds and costs involved in terminating employment contracts and property leases.

I cannot resist taking this opportunity to follow up on what was said by the hon. member for Edmonton West about the collapse and the difficulties of the Strathcona Insurance Company which prompted this bill—how it is that we allowed this to happen. Also I cannot resist pointing to another group of companies which are subject to the general supervision of the Superintendent of Insurance. I am not directing any personal criticism at the superintendent himself; he is a public servant of distinction and perseverance. But I say simply to the minister that we need a clearer understanding of how it is that a company such as this was allowed to conduct its affairs in the manner described accurately by the hon. member for Edmonton West for such a period of time and was not dealt with by those responsible for the supervision of the act.

Mr. Lambert: They were.

Mr. Rae: I hear the hon. member for Edmonton West. This is true, just as Astra Trust and Re-Mor eventually were. The key is when, how and how long does it take, and how many people must buy insurance from the Strathcona Insurance Company while its activities are being supervised by the government before those people finally receive protection? In the case of Re-Mor National Trust—the facts have emerged, yet they have really never been recognized by the minister. In the case of Astra Trust there was a lack of information, which in my view was caused by the fact that, although the Superintendent was carrying out his responsibilities as he saw them according to the act, there were activities which were being conducted with respect to the establishment of Re-Mor, for example, which went for over a year without the federal government even being aware of the existence of a provincially incorporated company whose activities were directly linked to the Astra Trust federally incorporated company.

● (1630)

I say to the minister that rather than seeing this kind of housekeeping measure, which is necessary to provide for a very minor clarification of the law with respect to this problem, I would much prefer to have seen a number of measures.

First, I would have liked to see a willingness on the part of the government to establish an inquiry into the circumstances surrounding the granting of a licence, the operation and collapse of Astra Trust and the related company of Re-Mor. It simply is not good enough for the minister to say, as he has said on a number of occasions, that the opposition does not know what it is talking about, that we want to go on a fishing trip or that there are criminal charges which have been laid with respect to some of the principals in the company and, therefore, we have to let that criminal trial go ahead.

The reason that is not good enough is that I do not want to go on any kind of a fishing trip. I really believe that before we can effectively change either the insurance legislation or the legislation pertaining to trust companies, we must know what it is that went wrong in the supervision of Astra and Re-Mor so that we can make sure that kind of problem does not happen again. We hoped to have this legislation in this session, but we have not yet had it. Then we hoped to have it in the next session, but I am sure the minister will indicate today that we will have it manana.

In the case of this particular problem with respect to Strathcona, it would be very useful for us to know how this situation was allowed to happen and what the consequences have been for the policyholders, mainly in the province of Quebec. I think there is a tremendous tendency, which is quite natural on the part of any group of individuals who are responsible for the administration of something which has gone wrong, to say, "We did all we could in the circumstances; there is nothing more we can do. We admit no responsibility for what has gone wrong."

In addition to the need for an inquiry into what happened, there is a need, in my view, for a clarification of exactly what the responsibility is of the Superintendent of Insurance and of the government. The superintendent is there as a representative of the public when something has gone wrong. Obviously this is a question which will be settled by the courts.

The minister of consumer and commercial relations indicated at Queen's Park yesterday that the activities of Re-Mor were directly and intricately linked with the activities of Astra, that Astra was serving as a front for Re-Mor and vice-versa. In those circumstances the question we must ask ourselves is: What is the meaning of the federal licence? What is the consequence of the granting of a federal licence and what is the responsibility of the government to those individuals who rely on the granting of a federal licence? The minister has consistently answered the question by saying that it is a provincial responsibility when it comes to Re-Mor. I do not accept that answer. I do not think the court will accept that answer either. Time alone will tell.

With respect to those investors who put more than $20,000 into Astra, that is a question which strikes directly at the heart of the federal obligation. It involves the question whether there is a responsibility on the part of the federal government, when it grants a licence and when it supervises the licence, to see that individuals are not taken in by the mere granting of a licence but that the licence itself has some meaning, in addition to the simple principle of an individual being insured up to $20,000.

Does this mean that, no matter what the government knows and no matter what information it has with respect to the conduct of those companies, it has no additional responsibilities and its only responsibility is the $20,000 liability? Or, in the instance of the insurance companies act, which is what we are dealing with, are we saying that the liability of either the industry or the government with respect to the activities of the Superintendent of Insurance is strictly limited to what is specifically set out in the statute? Or are we saying, is there not some additional obligation on the part of the federal government to inform investors, potential savers and policy holders, if there are some questions in their minds or if they have some information which has come to them with respect to the companies involved?

I say to the minister that were the members of the Liberal party from Ontario in this House as concerned as their counterparts in Queen's Park, we would have some answers to these questions. In the province of Ontario we really have a one party state. We have the natural governing party, the Tory party, and we have the same party federally, the Liberal party. It just goes by a different name. We are suffering.

I see the minister shaking his head. This is absolutely true. I have correspondence in my office from people all over southern Ontario in their seventies and eighties who have lost thousands of dollars, and in some cases tens of thousands of dollars, their life savings, because of what has happened to Re-Mor and Astra Trust. They have not received a single answer to any of their questions from either their federal or provincial government. If Liberal party members in this House from the province of Ontario were prepared to be as vigilant in this House as those in Queen's Park, we would have some answers, because the minister would have to provide those answers.

There are several questions. How is it that this company was allowed to get a licence when there were so many questions posed over five years about the characters, the abilities and the qualifications of the principals involved in that company? There was a pattern of political interference, both at the provincial and at the federal level, from both provincial and federal politicians, which was referred to in the report of the standing committee on justice in the provincial legislature when there was a minority government in Queen's Park. How is it that the questions about that have simply been brushed aside by the minister?

How is it that as soon as the company Astra Trust was incorporated, it was allowed to engage in investments which were contrary to the Trust Companies Act, which were contrary to the Ontario securities act, and which were known to the Superintendent of Insurance?

I wrote to the minister concerning the breaches of the Ontario securities act. When my letter was answered by the Superintendent of Insurance, I asked him, "When you knew there were breaches of the Ontario securities act, why did you not do anything about them?" He said, "We are not responsible for breaches of provincial legislation". I have that answer in a letter from the Superintendent of Insurance replying to a letter which I wrote to the minister. I am telling the minister that that answer is not satisfactory. In this realm of trust companies and in the whole financial field, there is something very wrong indeed if the answer of someone who is responsible for the administration of the federal government is simply, "It is in someone else's ballpark; we are not responsible for that".

One would like to know, and one would have to have an inquiry to know—and there needs to be an inquiry to know—what communication there was between the Superintendent of Insurance and the Ontario Securities Commission. When they wanted that information at Queen's Park, when they had the select committee on justice meeting, the minister said, "No, we are not going to allow the Superintendent of Insurance to even appear before that committee." There has been one meeting of the finance committee in which we had an opportunity to question the Superintendent of Insurance. That was not any kind of an investigation. Indeed, I am not particularly keen on the idea of having partisan politicians engaged in a cross-examination of the people who are involved in a search for evidence. I am not interested in that. However, I am interested in knowing that a judge will be asking those questions and will be looking at those documents. He will be asking the question of the Superintendent of Insurance, "What were your contacts with the provincial authorities and with the Ontario Securities Commission?"

That is not a witch hunt and it is not looking for unfounded allegations. That is looking for some very specific answers to some very specific questions. I say to the minister that if there were, indeed, no contacts, and if, indeed, it was over a year before the Superintendent of Insurance was aware of the existence of Re-Mor, the provincially incorporated company, the question is, "What is wrong with our method of supervision that this was allowed to happen?" That is not a witch hunt question. That is a very specific question which has nothing to do with whether or not Mr. Carlo Montemurro was or was not a crook. Whether Mr. Montemurro was a crook, or whether the people associated with him were crooks, is a question which will be settled in the criminal courts of this country.

However, whether there was something wrong in the way in which the Government of Canada supervised the conduct of these companies is not a question of criminal activities on the part of people who are associated with the companies. That is a very separate question. Individuals who have been involved, who have invested, who have tried to save, and who have taken a risk have done so because they assumed there was a guarantee of some kind, even if they were not exactly sure what the nature of that guarantee was. The question of what is the responsibility of the governments of Canada and Ontario to these people is not, I would respectfully submit to the minister, a question of the individual taking the government to court, because that would be a very expensive, lengthy, protracted and difficult proposition for a number of people who do not have a lot of money. It is not a question of the private obligation between the Government of Canada and Mr. "X" or Mrs. "Y", whoever the investors happen to be. It is not a question of a purely private obligation. It is a question of the public obligation of the government with respect to the supervision of companies for which it has responsibility, for the bona fides of which it is making some kind of claim in the sense that it is granting them a licence and that licence has some kind of a meaning.

Because it is a question of public obligation, I am disturbed that the minister has gone back on the commitment he made to the committee that the government would publish and abide by the report of a group of lawyers who were trying to arbitrate this question of the responsibilities of the governments of Ontario and Canada with respect to investors in Re-Mor and Astra Trust. I say the minister has gone back because there was a very real difference between the answer which he gave me at the end of the hearing in the committee, which he will recall, and the answer which he gave me in the House some two weeks ago, when he simply went back to the old argument of the government instead of the strict legal argument which, in my view, will not eventually hold much water. The strict legal argument is, "It is not our responsibility; we are not responsible for Re-Mor; Re-Mor and Astra Trust are two separate companies, and we are not going to do anything for people other than the $20,000 responsibility which we paid and accepted because of the insurance provisions".

I say to the minister that the answer which he gave in the House is, in my view, going to prove wrong when it comes to the end of the day. However, more important than that, there is no reason why the people who have suffered as the result of the collapse of these companies should have to wait that long, should have to pay that much money in legal fees, and have to suffer that long before the government recognizes that it has some obligation to them.

I do not pretend to have all the answers to the questions I have raised. I have tried to make the questions, which I have raised at some length with the minister in letters to him, as specific as possible. Frankly, I am not concerned with any kind of witch hunt with respect to the activities of anyone who is responsible for the supervision of these companies. I am concerned with two very basic questions. How is it that a licence was granted and that the company was allowed to conduct itself for so long when the government knew that something was wrong? Second, why will the government not recognize that it has a responsibility to those people who have put their faith in the seal of approval, which is what a federal charter means? I say to the government that there are profound reasons in our political culture why these questions are not resolved. They have to do with the fact that we live in two one-party states in this province, the one-party state of Canada where we have perpetual government and a perpetual Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and the one-party state of Ontario where we have the same problem. That is the reason these questions are not raised.

Despite that, this amendment is a minor one. We want to know why Strathcona was allowed to operate in this instance, what actual damages have been suffered by some people and how they are being compensated. These are questions which will not be resolved by this housekeeping legislation.

Rather than seeing a bill like this one brought forward at the present time, I think it would make more sense for the government to say that something is wrong. This is the first time we have seen the collapse of a federally-incorporated trust company since the depression. Why did it happen? The criminal charges have been laid; but the question of how this could have been allowed to go on for so long, whether the government could have done something about it and whether the government will need extra power where it suspects such things are going on, are questions that will not be resolved by a criminal trial. They will not even be resolved by a civil trial between the government and individuals who seek compensation. Such questions can only be settled by a judicial inquiry. That is the only way we will find out how a licence came to be granted and what the relationship or communication was between the federal and provincial governments. I think the public ought to know the answers to these questions and that the minister ought to know them as well. I say to the minister, with great respect, that answers have not been forthcoming about the collapse of this company, and in my view they should be.

I will have some specific questions for the minister when the bill is in Committee of the Whole about the activities of Strathcona and the activities of the superintendent with respect to Strathcona. This party is concerned about the principles of superintending and supervision, and about the principles of insurance as they relate to the liability of investors and policyholders who put faith in the idea that the government was supervising and superintending the matter. These more fundamental problems lie behind my remarks today and I hope the minister will take them in that context.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

CANADIAN AND BRITISH INSURANCE COMPANIES ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING EXPENSES OF SUPERINTENDENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bussières that Bill C-66, to amend the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, be read the second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and, with unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon—Mr. Ethier in the chair.

On Clause 1—

[English]

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, I indicated to the minister that I had some questions for him with respect to the collapse of Strathcona. We had an account of why Strathcona was allowed to fall upon hard times. I wonder if the minister could indicate if he will be giving the House an explanation of how the company came to fail and what the consequences of the failure have been for policyholders. Could he also tell us whether claims are outstanding and have not been met as a result of the collapse of Strathcona, and how it is that the company was allowed to arrive at this state of affairs?

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Chairman, I will answer the first question as to whether the people who were insured will sustain losses as a result of the decision made by the office of the Superintendent of Insurance to proceed with the financial rehabilitation of the Strathcona Insurance Company. With the assistance of a consortium, no individual, no group or no corporation that was insured will sustain losses on amounts owed to them for risks covered by Strathcona.

As to the background of corporate difficulties, which is a much broader question raised by the hon. member, may I say that in 1979 the auditors from the office of the Superintendent of Insurance became aware that the company was beginning to sail on rough seas. From that moment on and on a regular basis, the superintendent's office would dispatch its auditors to make sure that the company would be taking corrective action. Company management did make some commitments but, unfortunately, they were not respected. When those facts came to light in January, 1980, the superintendent submitted a report to the minister who decided to renew the company permit for a limited time, that is until March 31, 1980, advising company management that they had to meet the requirements set for them by the Department of Insurance.

● (1700)

In May, 1980, a new president of the company was appointed and several changes were made, but as the problems of the company were known on the market, it could not attract enough new customers to ensure more receipts and thus improve its financial position. In short, Mr. Speaker, that is what happened.

I think there are two major factors which were raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). First, there is a basic defect at the management level which must be directly related to the rate fixing policy of the company. Secondly, there is a blatant lack of will to restore quickly the financial position of the company. However, under the plan proposed by the superintendent to rehabilitate the corporation with the assistance of a consortium, as I indicated in my first answer to the question, no policyholder will lose money as a result of the problems experienced by the company. I must also say that the reinsurance of the company with some foreign companies has also contributed to its financial problems. I have asked the Superintendent of Insurance to look fully into the manner in which insurance companies operating in Canada provide reinsurance and to suggest how the existing legislation might be improved so that insurance companies operating in Canada and dealing with foreign reinsurance companies would have firm guarantees with respect to the quality, solvency and soundness of these reinsurance companies.

Mr. Rae: Could the minister tell the House when we may expect the report of the Superintendent of Insurance on this reinsurance issue and when we will know the government's intentions with respect to the possible introduction of further amendments to the Canadian and Foreign Insurance Companies Act?

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Speaker, as soon as I have the superintendent's formal recommendations, I shall submit them to my cabinet colleagues and then advise the House. Unfortunately, I cannot give the hon. member any specific time frame, but I certainly hope it will be as soon as possible.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, since the minister is in the House, could he also tell us when the government intends to introduce the bill on trust companies?

Mr. Bussières: As soon as possible, Mr. Speaker.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Progress reported, bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not know under which rule I should do so. I simply want to thank the spokesmen of both opposition parties for their co-operation and also all members for dealing expediously with Bill C-66.

STATE IMMUNITY ACT

IMMUNITY OF FOREIGN STATES IN CANADIAN COURTS

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development) moved that Bill S-19, to provide for state immunity in Canadian courts, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Ron Irwin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Mr. Speaker, this is a bill for the clarification of the law and the better protection of Canadians and others who may find some day that they have a claim in Canada against a foreign government. The problems this bill is designed to resolve are that, at best, the present state of the law is quite uncertain concerning the legal responsibility of foreign states in Canadian courts, and, at worst, the law may be too protective of foreign governments and cause injustice to people in this country who suffer injuries or loss at the hands of foreign states operating in Canada.

What has developed in Canada is a tradition going back almost to the divine right of kings. The monarch was too dignified to be sued. This followed into the state and the state in relation to other states. This has changed significantly. What has happened in Canada is that the provinces and the federal government have made themselves subject to court action, like the ordinary citizen. Second, governments are deeply involved in commercial activity by their agents all around the world.

The growth and penetration of commercial activities carried on in Canada today by agencies of foreign governments makes it increasingly important that we have a law on this subject which is clear and fair to all. What happened historically with our important trading partners, for instance the United States, is that in 1952 the United States took this absolute immunity right and changed it by informal agreements in informal meetings. In 1974, the United States passed a foreign sovereign immunities act. In 1972, the Council of Europe adopted a convention codifying restrictive immunity. In 1978, Great Britain, a signatory to that convention, followed suit by passing the state immunity act of 1978.

Because we do not have any law, what has happened in Canada is that quite a bit of confusion exists in the minds of the public and in the minds of the courts. For example, in the Democratic Republic of Congo v. Venne, (1971) Supreme Court Reports, at page 997, the Supreme Court of Canada confirmed the absolute immunity of states. Then the appellate court of Quebec did not follow this ruling in Zodiak International Products Inc. v. Poland, 81 Dominion Law Reports, Third Edition, at page 656.

• (1710)

We would like to make it clear to the public, the average Canadian, who is dealing with a foreign country or its agents what to expect in the end regarding the collection of debts or the type of actions that can be pursued.

Bill S-19 was discussed in the other place. Witnesses were called, the provincial attorneys general were canvassed and their opinions were sought. I do not want to go into every clause of the bill but I would like to make some references.

In clause 2, "commercial activity" has led to some discussion. There is the English example which defines commercial activity in great detail. This has led to certain problems because of the large amount of detail. The English courts from our observations have tended almost to disregard their definition, which was too broad. The Americans, on the other hand, have a narrow definition of commercial activity, leaving it up to their courts to decide what is and what is not commercial activity. We have adopted the American example in our proposed bill and will leave it up to the courts to decide what is commercial activity.

In general terms, there is to be no immunity of foreign states operating in Canada from any proceeding relating to any commercial activity of the foreign state, clause 5; any proceedings relating to death, personal injury, damage to or loss of property caused in Canada by a foreign state, clause 6; actions concerning ships or cargo involved in commercial activity, clause 7; actions concerning property received by a foreign state through succession, gift, etc.; clause 8; proceedings for injunctions, specific performance, etc.; against separate agencies, no matter whether the agency is engaged in commercial activity or not, clause 10(3); execution against a separate agency, clause 11(2); other than when military property is involved, clause 11(3).

A procedure for the service of documents is set out. It is hoped that we do not run into examples such as Corriveau v. Cuba which involved damage to the Cuban embassy. There was a landlord and tenant relationship; there was a default and judgment was obtained. Another example is Edwards v. U.S.S.R. which involved the seizure of a Soviet vessel. There was a great deal of confusion on the part of the litigants as to what rights did or did not exist.

In conclusion, I am sure my friends across the way will have a great deal to say about the merits of the bill. It is hoped that by following the example of European conventions, Great Britain and the United States, we in Canada will be able to codify basically protection for the average citizen when dealing with a foreign nation. In the 1980s we do not think that the theory of the divine right of kings or the presumption of infallibility of the state should be followed. What we have in Canada is a collection of individuals from abroad who are operating in this country in order to earn profit. They should have no greater or lesser rights than the citizens of Canada in their dealings.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on this momentous bill in this full chamber with some trepidation—

Mr. Knowles: After great study.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —after great study and consideration of the provisions of this bill. I am sure the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) will agree with me in this connection. This place astounds me and mystifies me at the same time.

Just a few days ago the government in full dirge went ahead with its motion of closure with respect to Bill C-57. One would have thought that the economic future of Canada depended upon moving on with economic bills, that if Bill C-57 with respect to excise tax did not pass, the economy would stop and the country would stop in its tracks. Therefore we had an emotional, heated debate at that time as to whether closure should be invoked. Some felt it was an important matter and that the economy should be discussed in this House in the last few days before the summer recess.

As soon as the closure motion passed, the first items of business the government brought forward were such outstanding bills as the so-called CALURA bill, the bill dealing with the Canadian and British Insurance Companies and now a bill dealing with diplomatic immunity. I wonder aloud as to where the great urgency was on the part of the government with respect to rushing through and curtailing debate on an important economic bill, one that affects the lives of virtually every Canadian. The government cleared the decks so that we can spend two or three days talking about the question of diplomatic immunity, as important as that is.

I appreciate very much the learned dissertation of the parliamentary secretary as to the content and purpose of the bill. However, people might get the impression from the comments made by the distinguished parliamentary secretary that somehow this bill is going to codify and advance the rights of litigants and citizens of Canada with respect to being able to enforce judgments against foreign powers and representatives of foreign countries in Canada.

While I have to admit I agree with the parliamentary secretary that the bill does go a long way in codifying the present law, there are still some very serious questions with respect to how the bill will be interpreted in the courts, and the extent to which the rights of Canadians to sue, receive judgment and realize on that judgment against foreign states or their agencies will be advanced by the provisions of this bill.

One might get the impression from the title of this bill that it extends the right of diplomatic immunity while operating in Canada. Quite the contrary; it is an attempt to codify and set forth in statutory form the provisions, rights and limitations on diplomatic immunity, the rights of foreign countries to carry on so-called commercial activities in our country and the extent to which they are going to be held responsible with respect to contracts, tort liability or damages to Canadian citizens in the course of carrying on their commercial activities. There is an attempt here to specify the limitations which are placed on foreign countries represented in Canada and their agents.

The parliamentary secretary made reference to a number of cases, some of which received a lot of attention in the press. Because Canadian citizens were pursuing their claims in the courts, there was some interest in how the courts would interpret the right of the litigant to bring the action and the right of the successful plaintiff to realize on the judgment received in the Canadian courts against the property of a foreign country.

I can understand the interest of the government to bring forward this kind of legislation. There is a manifestation around the world of a greater growth of so-called centrally controlled economies where the state is involved directly in trading and business opportunities not only within their own borders but in other countries.

• (1720)

The question arises by virtue of the fact that they are foreign governments and why should the immunity which is afforded diplomatic representatives in Canada be extended to those people involved in commercial activities in this country. I think any rational person and people involved from other countries fully understand that if they are involved in commercial activities they should operate according to the rules of the place in which the business is carried on. That is understood in commercial terms and I think it is understood in diplomatic terms.

Having looked at this bill from that point of view, I think it deals with the whole question of establishing, codifying or declaring that Canadian citizens do have the right to bring an action against foreign governments or their agencies carrying on commercial activity.

The next step, of course, will be to look at the question whether a judgment can be executed once a Canadian citizen plaintiff does obtain a judgment in Canada against a foreign state. The parliamentary secretary will understand that it is one thing to get a judgment but quite another altogether to collect as a result of that judgment against any litigant, let alone a foreign state.

There are other questions which arise regarding this particular bill. I do not propose to spend a lot of time discussing the bill itself at this stage, but it is our view that this bill should be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs for at least one sitting in order to obtain answers to some more or less legalistic questions that arise about things that have occurred, to me at least, and will occur I am sure to members of that committee, regarding its operation, even though the matter has been discussed before the Senate committee which has had the opportunity of doing quite a bit of work on it, obtaining some very excellent evidence by departmental officials, Mr. Strayer, and Professor Castel of Osgoode Hall of the University of Toronto.

In any event, I want to deal briefly with some aspects of the bill and raise a couple of questions which might be dealt with at the committee. I want to make absolutely certain that in passing this legislation we are getting ourselves in the best possible situation as far as Canadian citizens are concerned to realize on judgments, and that is the area I would like to have investigated by the committee.

Secondly, in passing this legislation I want to be satisfied that the whole matter of constitutional propriety is being observed and we are not getting ourselves into a hornet's nest with regard to jurisdictional questions when we ask the courts to set certain guidelines and rules in relation to the service process against foreign states. I will deal with those matters briefly in the course of my remarks in a few minutes.

In terms of this particular legislation, the principle underlying this bill is one of trade-off. Certainly Canadians want a right of action and also the ability to execute judgments against commercial activity carried on by foreign states. We all appreciate and fully understand and support the concept referred to by the parliamentary secretary, that is the pragmatic necessity, quite apart from the divine rule of kings and all those other historical considerations referred to in his introductory remarks, of foreign states having immunity for diplomatic representatives carrying out their duties in a foreign country. I do not think there is any question about that. The question is whether these interests can be balanced in legislation.

As I understand it, the current situation is that where there is a dispute or a matter that may lead to litigation, our external affairs department very often steps in and uses that very good office to mediate or negotiate between a foreign state and the litigant in Canada. Officials spend a lot of time very effectively in settling a good number of cases between litigants and foreign states carrying on commercial activities. This is an ongoing process and I understand from the record they have done very well in this regard.

Now we are to have a stature that will attempt to state or clarify better the situation with regard to the rights of litigants in this country. Reference has been made by the parliamentary secretary to the fact that this is a codification of the present law. I think it fair to say that the courts in Canada, particularly in Quebec and Ontario, have been moving through the process of judicial precedent toward the application of the concept of limited immunity in commercial activities. They have in fact applied in their judgments the restrictive theory, granting immunity only to the degree necessary for the free conduct of international relations by a foreign state. The matter has not really come as such before the Supreme Court of Canada, except indirectly, so there has not been a specific judgment on the law as it now stands by this high court of the land. That court is probably preoccupied with other things these days. There are a couple of items before it which I am sure are occupying some time.

The fact of the matter is that in the case of Venne v. The Democratic Republic of Congo, Chief Justice Laskin in his judgment indicated approval of the concept of limited or restricted immunity. It becomes clear to me from that particular judgment that Chief Justice Laskin would be inclined to approve of the state of the law and the judgments which have been brought forward in the lower courts that in fact recognize restricted immunity.

The aim of the bill is to establish a statutory guide for the courts in relation to actions against foreign states brought before them. If one looks at the impact of this particular legislation, one could say that conceivably there will be an expansion of jurisdiction in the courts as the bill does in fact clearly state that there is declared henceforth, on the passage of the bill, a restriction on a foreign state's immunity.

As I mentioned before, one of the results of this bill will be that the rules of the courts of the provinces will have to be modified to reflect the procedural provisions of the act. I simply raise this point because I would like to get some clarification from departmental officials, the minister or his parliamentary secretary on that aspect.

There may be a constitutional problem involved regarding the provisions of the bill in relation to service, deemed service and so on, which heretofore have been matters regarding provincial rules of court across the country. I know the evidence is that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chrétien) did in fact communicate with the attorneys general across Canada and received no particular objection to the legislation. On the other hand, he received no response from some provinces. It seems to me we should be clear in our own minds before passing this legislation that we are not going to get into a mixed up situation in provincial jurisdiction on the procedural side of the bill.

The other aspect I just want to canvass a little more thoroughly in committee deals with the definition of "commercial activity". I understand the evidence which was given and the reasons for the provisions of the bill relating to commercial activity and the definition of that term.

• (1730)

As the parliamentary secretary has pointed out, commercial activity is not defined in any particularized way in the legislation. Basically, as it says in the act, it is any transaction or act that by reason of its nature is commercial activity. In other words, commercial activity is commercial activity. So it is going to be left to the courts on a case by case consideration of the individual circumstances to develop the jurisprudence and a definition of commercial activity in that way.

The parliamentary secretary has made reference to the fact that this is based on the U.S. approach as opposed to that of the United Kingdom. The United Kingdom statute is the State Immunity Act of 1978, statutes of the United Kingdom of 1978, chapter 33. There the British have tried to set out certain—

Mr. Irwin: What chapter?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Chapter 33. I am surprised at the parliamentary secretary; he is usually prepared for these things. I was sure he had read that statute from cover to cover.

Mr. Irwin: I notice you did not have the right page on that Supreme Court decision.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Well, it is just that out west we get it a little late and as a result the pages are different. In Sault Ste. Marie, where they have up to date law libraries, I know he would have the current volume.

In any event, the approach taken by the British is to set out certain examples of commercial conduct. The evidence given by Professor Castel, an acknowledged expert in this area, before the Senate committee was that he preferred this approach as far as possible to give some definition or guidance to the people concerned. It is in effect a codification. If we are going to codify the law relating to the rights of litigants in Canada, then I suppose we should try to give them something to hang their hats on so they will know whether or not they are going to court, or whether they are taking a flyer in having to establish a cause of action, and will look at this statute and wonder of what assistance it is to them because it really does not tell them whether they are in or out of court.

Again, I understand the rationale; it is the traditional common law approach to the courts. Probably the most appropriate way to deal with this question is to allow the courts to look at it on a case by case basis to establish the principle that there is a right to bring an action, but I would like to canvass that a little more with departmental officials to find out whether or not we can look at a definition which is of more assistance to the citizen than this now is.

Professor Castel also suggested, as I recall, that non-governmental activities might be included in the definition of commercial activity. Personally I am not sure I am totally in favour of that limited amendment to the present definition. I want to discuss it with the officials because I can see that a government such as we have in Ottawa today, which is so enthusiastic about bringing this bill forward and having it pass through all stages before Parliament adjourns, is itself moving more and more toward a centrally controlled economy. Its philosophical bent is now in accord with that kind of philosophy in other countries. So they are very interested in establishing a reasonable precedent in case other countries reciprocate.

I want now to turn to the question of execution, because this is the one area which causes me the most concern. There are some aspects of this bill which may well have some basis in pragmatic consideration, as I said, or legal justification as to why the bill contains certain exclusions with respect to its operation. However, as Professor Castel said in the course of his testimony, one of the most important things that can be done under this bill is to define how a Canadian citizen can go about getting paid. He said the bill should try to clarify the right of a citizen to relief, a right to which he is entitled. It is one thing, as I said at the outset, to specify that a citizen has a right to bring an action and obtain a judgment, but that is only part of the whole process. The really important question is: once you have judgment, can you collect? That is where I think the bill requires further consideration.

By way of example let me refer to the discussions about collecting rent for embassy premises. Ottawa landlords will all perk up their ears at that suggestion. There are only two people watching this particular debate right now; the representative of the embassy landlords association, and the Ottawa chief of police who is wondering whether there is anything in this bill which will allow him to collect all the parking tickets they have been unable to collect because of diplomatic immunity. The parliamentary secretary is watching too—I should not count him out.

In a situation where embassy premises are damaged, the question arises as to whether or not the Canadian landlord can collect. Certainly he has a cause of action, but under the provisions of clause 11 unless the property is used for commercial purposes, it is exempt from execution of judgment. As a result, we are really no further ahead.

There are other examples. Clause 10, I believe, specifically deals with the remedies one has against a foreign state. It does not include specific performance, injunctions or an order for the recovery of land unless the foreign state consents. What I would like to find out is the basis for those exemptions, even in so far as they apply to an agency clearly involved in a commercial activity in Canada. One of the interim items of relief in a court of action often resorted to is an injunction to prevent the defendant from removing assets which are the subject of litigation out of the jurisdiction, or to prevent him from taking any steps with respect to the item under dispute. Apparently this relief will not be available. There may be a reason for it, but I would be interested in hearing departmental officials tell me why an interim injuction at least should not be available in the course of an action relating to property not otherwise available for execution of a judgment. As I say, these are legalistic and technical problems which cause me concern with respect to this legislation.

I have no particular objection to the idea of codifying the law if it makes it easier for average citizens to understand and pursue their rights, because I am in favour of the concept of restricted immunity and the enhancement of the rights of Canadians with respect to foreign commercial activities in Canada. What I want to ensure, however, is that we get the best possible bill because, to a certain extent, we are entering into unchartered waters with this legislation and we are speculating on its effect. As has been pointed out in the other place, it will be quite interesting to see whether this legislation will bring us any further ahead than we are now.

I raise these points because I know the departmental officials are listening to this debate and will be prepared to give me answers to the questions raised. The reason I raise them in the course of the second reading debate is to expedite proceedings in committee.

● (1740)

Clause 3(2) of the bill calls upon the court to give effect to the immunity conferred on a foreign state. In other words, it must established that the defendant in the action is in fact a foreign state. The bill does not specify who has the burden of proof, whether it is the state or the plaintiff. Possibly there might be some clarification with respect to who should bear the onus in that regard. It is possible to obtain a certificate from the Department of External Affairs which can be taken as proof of the fact that a defendant is a foreign state. It would be very simple to amend this particular provision to make clear how this matter will be established in any litigation.

These are some of my technical or legalistic considerations regarding this particular bill. Obviously the government considers it more important to get this bill through than to help Canadians who are facing usurious interest rates or to help pensioners or people on fixed incomes. It seems to me that the priorities of the government in this regard are badly placed. But I am glad for the opportunity to remind the government that it has a responsibility to govern the country, not to fool around with technical bills and codify existing laws, as important as they may be to a limited number of people. On the other hand, I assure the parliamentary secretary that I want him to deal with these specific legalistic questions. Hopefully we will get this matter through expeditiously.

I see the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is champing at the bit. He has worked on the bill from early morning until late at night in order to get himself ready and psyched up for this debate. Now that I have laid the groundwork, I will return to my seat and let the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre carry on with the debate and bring the government to its knees for its entirely useless behaviour.

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have had some interesting introductions in my day, but that one deserves a prize or a medal of some kind. I have not quite decided what the nature of the medal will be.

As hon. members must realize, there are others in my party who are more versed in this subject. In fact the hon. member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) is the one to whom we assigned consideration of this bill. He is the one who worked from early morning until late at night to be fully conversant with it. But apparently the meeting this afternoon of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs has lasted longer than he thought it might. He informed me that he was busy in that committee trying to improve the government's freedom of information legislation and that unless he succeeded in that, he might not be able to get here this afternoon. Therefore it falls to me to speak on behalf of my party, and I do so without any dissension whatsoever.

Before starting my substantial remarks on the bill itself, I must say that I agreed with the hon. member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatsyhyn) when he said that the list of priorities around here is somewhat astonishing. We spent most of this session on a certain subject which does not need to be mentioned because everyone knows what it was. It was the reason we could not deal with economic measures. When that issue was finally sent to the Supreme Court of Canada and we had some time to deal with economic measures, lo and behold we had before us an excise tax bill, Bill C-57. It did not seem to do much for the economy, but we had it and it took up a fair amount of time. In fact it took up so much time that the government decided to use Standing Order 75C to close off the debate so that we could deal with matters of concern to the people of Canada.

Now that we have a bit of time, with an adjournment in mind, what do we get? We get a bill to straighten out CALURA. We had an interesting debate in that regard.

Not only do I have a long memory, but sometimes I like to go back and look at things which happened here years ago. I was not in the House when CALURA was brought in. It was during my four-year vacation. I was with the Canadian Labour Congress at the time, but I remember that when the Diefenbaker government brought in the CALURA bill we did not like it. I followed the debate with some interest. The Tories of that day said that the bill was important, that it was the centrepiece to the government's idea to establish Canadian identity. Along with it Mr. Diefenbaker was to bring home the Constitution. The whole purpose of CALURA was to get the facts about the economic situation in Canada. The Liberals of the day thought it was a piece of bureaucracy, interfering in other people's business, increasing the overburden of paperwork and all the rest of it. It was rather interesting to sit here this week and see the two sides completely reversed—the Tories saying what the Liberals were saying 19 years ago, and vice versa.

Mr. Blais: But not the same players.

Mr. Knowles: No, not the same players. I believe they have all gone to their rewards, or whatever it is they have gone to.

Mr. Friesen: Not all.

Mr. Knowles: All right, but certainly the Liberals of that day are all gone. There are a few old Tories still with us.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Young Tories.

Mr. Knowles: I indulge in that just to underline what the hon. member for Saskatoon West said. When we had a bit of time, with all the issues facing the people out there, we got CALURA. Then we got the insurance bill, Bill C-66, with which we dealt this afternoon, to straighten out one or two situations affecting a company here and there. Now we have this interesting legalistic bill on state immunity.

I would have thought that when there was time at least we could get some bills dealing with economic measures. If not, I would have thought by now I have persuaded the House that something needs to be done to correct the injustice which was done last summer to about 15,000 or 20,000 widows of disabled veterans. If we could have put through a bill correcting that injustice in an hour or two, I would have thought it would have been the type of legislation we might have had now.

Some hon. Members: Right on!

Mr. Knowles: I am getting full support from my friends to the right.

Mr. Lambert: You could have done it in 1963. It was government policy then.

Mr. Knowles: In 1963?

Mr. Lambert: That is right.

Mr. Knowles: Well, some of these things take time. Last year we corrected something that was put on the books 50 years ago, and in correcting it we still left an injustice. That is something which could have been done. There is the whole question of the position of our pensioners who are slipping behind all the time. I asked a question yesterday about the holders of Canadian government annuities who are still receiving benefits based on a 7 per cent interest rate when interest rates are twice or three times that amount. These are things with which we could be dealing.

I do not know whether or not we will get to some of these issues before we rise for the summer. I hope we will get the bill respecting the widows of disabled veterans. If we do not, I can promise that the debate to adjourn the House without doing it will be a long one; I hope many of us will oppose it. I should not suggest that there is any need to make any threats. I believe the government is considering very carefully the correcting of that mistake and it is just a matter of deciding when that bill will be brought before us. But in the meantime we have this bill before us and, of course, if we get it out of the way, we will go on to discussing the length of elections, whether they should last 62 or 63 days, as they have been all my life, or whether they should be shortened. I would like to see them shortened. Then there is bankruptcy—that is a good subject. We will take up some time on bankruptcy, whether it be bankruptcy of persons, governments, or what have you. We will deal again with two-price wheat, though that is just some small correction to the legislation. There is also an adult education training bill, which has some flaws, but the government would like to put it through fast. Then there are one or two other items. It does not sound like a government or a House of Commons which is coming to grips with a country in trouble, where people are unemployed, where people on fixed incomes are having such a difficult time, and where more than 2,000 wealthy Canadians get by without paying any income tax at all. These are issues—

• (1750)

Mr. Collenette: Speak to the bill.

Mr. Knowles: The hon. member suggests I speak to the bill. It surprises me that my friend has let me go this long without suggesting that. He probably does not know what is in the bill any more than I do.

Mr. Collenette: We let you go because of seniority.

Mr. Knowles: It is nice to see that something has some value around here.

At any rate, I was hoping that the hon. member for Burnaby might arrive and make his speech with respect to Bill S-19 on our behalf. So far as the bill itself is concerned, we feel that anything which seeks to clarify matters and make the position more clear is a good idea. We understand that this bill will be a case of Parliament making it more clear to the courts how they should practise the principle of state immunity. It is true that more commercial operations than used to be the case come under the aegis of a government. It hardly seems fair that because they are government agencies they should receive immunity in the courts and not be bodies to which Canadian individuals or companies can bring an action. To the extent that it straightens that matter out and puts the parties who are engaged in litigation in our courts on equal terms, it is good. We are prepared to give our support to Bill S-19.

I say on behalf of the hon. member for Burnaby that we agree with the position taken by the hon. member for Saskatoon West that this bill must go out to committee. There is no suggestion that it should not go to committee. There is no need for it to spend a week or two out there. It needs at least an hour or two so members such as the hon. member for Saskatoon West and the hon. member for Burnaby can ask the kind of questions which have been put here today.

There is also the very important position which has been taken by the hon. member for Saskatoon West that it is not only desirable that Canadians appearing in court should be on an equal basis with a foreign company, even though it comes under the aegis of a government, but that means should be developed so that Canadians who win judgments in the courts can collect on them. In other words, this bill is like so many pieces of legislation around here: there is not much wrong with it except the matters which are not in it. We hope it is the beginning of legislation which will meet the various needs in this situation.

On that basis, and since it looks as though my friend from Burnaby is not going to arrive, he will just have to take what I have said on his behalf as being our position. We are prepared to give support to the second reading of this bill and for it to go to committee.

Had the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Collenette) not interrupted and called for me to be relevant, I could have kept going until six o'clock. But before I sit down there is a suggestion I should like to make. I believe it should come from some of us who come from other parts of Canada. Tomorrow, St. Jean Baptiste Day, is a rather important day to a great many members of this House. Many of our fellow and sister members from the province of Quebec like to get home to take part in that day's celebrations. It is wonderful what we have done with the rules here. If that holiday falls on a Tuesday, we shut down for both Monday and Tuesday. If it comes on a Thursday, we shut down for both Thursday and Friday. But when it falls on a Wednesday, we just close the House for the one day. Maybe what I have to say is not relevant to the second reading of Bill S-19, but after I sit down the question might be put. I wonder if the House would not be willing, out of respect for our colleagues from French-speaking Canada, to adjourn at six o'clock, and come back on Thursday, allowing our members who want to honour St. Jean Baptiste to have the opportunity to do so.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles: I am doing three things, Mr. Speaker, I have spoken for the hon. member for Burnaby, I have stated our party's position on Bill S-19, and I have made the suggestion that just maybe we could call it the end of the day at six o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Blais: Question!

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, following the comments made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, I would like to inform him that this evening we intend to sit, as has been arranged with House leaders. We plan to discuss Bill C-58 and Bill S-6. However, if we could dispose of those bills very quickly before six o'clock, I am sure we could probably take up the hon. member's eminent suggestion. I do not think there would be agreement from members opposite to deal with those two bills in the next two minutes. Therefore, unfortunately, because the opposition would like to speak to these two bills this evening, we will be here. Of course, we will not be sitting tomorrow. Since it is close to six o'clock, I hope we can now call it six o'clock and come back to the study at second reading of Bill C-58 at eight o'clock.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. We have two minutes left until six o'clock and I do not think I am in a position, without prior consultation, to say that we are prepared to pass those two bills. It is important to put on record that the suggestion made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is an eminently sensible one. In all fairness, many of the celebrations in the province of Quebec take place this evening. I am sorry the government has no interest in allowing members—

Miss Bégin: It is tomorrow.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is tomorrow, but many of the preliminary celebrations take place tonight.

For our part we would be glad to accommodate our friends from Quebec and our colleagues across the way to allow them to participate in the festivities. But if the parliamentary secretary insists on forcing us to come back to sit here until the bitter end, we will take our part seriously with respect to important legislation. I reiterate that I wish the priorities of the government were a little more clearly defined.

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, I made an offer. We have the ministers required. We could move the two motions, second reading of Bill C-58 and then proceed to Bill S-6 immediately. Perhaps then we could adjourn the House for the holiday. It is my understanding that members opposite want to put up speakers on these two bills this evening. I would not want it thought that it was the government that was keeping people here unduly. We have the ministers here. Let us move the motions—

Mr. Andre: You just want us to rubber-stamp them.

Mr. Collenette: We have had much debate on those two bills. The hon. member for Calgary Centre says we are asking for rubberstamping. We have dealt with Bill S-6 on three or four House days and we have spent three days on Bill C-58. So we cannot consider it to be rubberstamping. My offer still stands, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At 5.59 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT TO SHORTEN PERIOD REQUIRED TO HOLD ELECTIONS

The House resumed, from Friday, June 5, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bussières: that Bill C-58, to amend the Canada Elections Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I must say that it is rather surprising to be here debating this particular bill this evening. One wonders what goes on in the minds of the government House leader and his cabinet colleagues at a time when the interest rates are in the stratosphere, bankruptcies are reaching new records, inflation rates are at unprecedented levels. Also, the estimates are out of order and remedial legislation is required to put them in order. Parliamentary reform was promised in the Throne Speech, but there has been no sign of it yet. There is a disaster in the energy sector. The government is bringing forward in the energy sector a draft energy security bill which is out of order in terms of its composition—I suppose there is no harm in warning the government now—and the government will have to examine it. With all those priorities and all those important questions of which the government should be seized if it is at all concerned about the country, what are we doing? We are debating Bill C-58 amending the Canada Elections Act to reduce the writ period from 60 days to 47 days. How momentous! One can hear the crowds roaring their approval!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: Hurray for our government! It is doing this wonderful deed for us. Are we not getting full value for the money it is spending? Are we not getting full value for having these wonderful people guide our country and look after the priorities and after our problems and concerns? I am sure the people walking to receive their unemployment insurance cheques are very grateful that the government is going to reduce the election period from 60 days to 47 days! I am sure they are just ecstatic. I am sure the persons renewing their mortgages at the end of this month who are looking at interest rates of 17.5 per cent or 18 per cent, will be delighted beyond words that their government is seeking to reduce the election period from 60 days to 47 days. There is no question that the people of this country will be ecstatic over the recognition by this government of this vital and important issue of reducing the election period from 60 days to 47 days.

It has been hot and humid in Ottawa, as Your Honour is aware.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Absolutely.

Mr. Andre: It frequently is at this time of year. I know, coming from the drier part of the country, that it bothers me and it tends to make me go a little jagged. Occasionally, my wife thinks that perhaps I have gone a little crazy. Obviously the entire government has gone crazy, if this is its priority!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: Obviously, the entire government has gone crazy.

An hon. Member: It will not be the first time.

Mr. Andre: Is it the minister from Winnipeg who is saying, "He who lives in glass houses should not throw stones"?

The Elections Act is in need of reform; it is in need of amendment, there is no question about that. If one sat down and made a list of the things which needed changing in the Elections Act, one would have a very long list indeed. Somewhere near the bottom of that list, one would come up with an item on the necessity to re-examine the length of the writ period. It would be somewhere near the bottom of that list. The fact of the matter is that since the last amendment to the Elections Act in 1974, a committee, chaired by the Chief Electoral Officer, involving elected members from each of the parties in the House and involving representatives of the political organizations of each of the parties, has been meeting on a regular basis and discussing the Elections Act, examining it in detail and recommending changes to this act. I am aware of it because some four years ago I participated in that committee for about a year and a half. The committee produced a long list of desirable changes to the Elections Act. Any responsible government that felt that it might now be appropriate to reform, review, alter or update the Elections Act would start with the committee's recommendations. The committee worked on this matter for at least five years. It has gone over the list with a fine tooth comb, and has brought in an enormous list of recommendations. If these are not included in the proposed changes, then what was the purpose of the committee? When the government decided to change the Elections Act, why did it pursue this little change—the reduction of the campaign period to 47 days from 60 days?

• (2010)

I would like to see many kinds of changes to the Elections Act. For example, the act that we have been operating under since 1974 restricts election expenses. I think most people agree with that, but the levels established in the act are now, because of the uncontrolled inflation which the government will not address, no longer applicable.

Recently I examined some old election records, Mr. Speaker. In 1974 an election brochure, produced in sufficient quantities for my campaign, cost $1,000. A similar document was produced by my association recently at a cost of $3,500. Office space in downtown Calgary, which I represent, costs at least three times as much today as in 1974 when these figures were first produced. The cost of radio and television advertising for an election is now beyond the reach of a constituency campaign, given the umbrella figures that were appropriate in 1974.

For the perspective of someone concerned about the adequacy and the proper ventilation of issues, attitudes, views and policies of candidates at election time, the election expenses limit is far more important than is the question of 47 or 60 days.

If the government were interested in electoral reform and wanted to improve the democratic process at the constituency level, it would look at that particular item ahead of the question of 47 versus 60 days.

The provision in the act that requires a $200 deposit for a person to become a registered candidate, is hopelessly obsolete. It was put in who knows how many decades ago—perhaps the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) knows.

Mr. Knowles: I have been paying it all my life.

Mr. Andre: The hon. member has been paying it all his life. When he started, $200 could look after a family of four for several months quite comfortably. Today, $200 will perhaps handle a supper if one is not too extravagant and the wine is not imported. To use my own riding as an example, the consequence of that kind of deposit becomes ridiculous. In the last election there were seven candidates, three representing parties which are truly national in scope and which could hope to be represented in this institution and have an influence on the national government, with the remaining four getting tremendous value in terms of advertising and exposure, for a paltry $200. They had a ball, but in the process they disrupted the election considerably. It was impossible to have the debate, for example, between the serious candidates because with seven people on the stage, nothing could happen, so no one scheduled debates. It was impossible to have the type of media program that would expose the candidates and their views and their attitudes because it was a hopeless task when seven people were involved.

All this severely restricted the exposure to the public of the candidates for whom they might have seriously considered voting. It did not serve democracy in the way that we know it. If we are seriously interested in the electoral process, and in the election at the constituency level, we certainly would have to examine that $200-limit well ahead of any change in the election period from 60 to 47 days.

The redistribution formula is something that must be changed, Mr. Speaker. It was put in place as a kind of compromise after the delay of the redistribution that was supposed to occur in 1973. At that time we had three rather senior members of the House, the late member for Prince Albert, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre who all had reason to be concerned because in their respective provinces they would lose a seat. Being three very influential members of Parliament, they succeeded in having the redistribution delayed until after the 1974 election, at which time a new redistribution formula was introduced which catered to the Liberal party, in the sense of looking after the interests of the province from which the majority of its seats came.

There was great objection to that formula at the time, so there was a semi-compromise. It was allowed that after the first election when the formula was in place, there would be an opportunity to review the consequences of the redistribution formula and recommend change. Unfortunately, we then had a series of very quick elections and the committee reference to which the act refers fell between the cracks and nothing happened. That redistribution formula, however, after the census which is now taking place, would have the result of bringing an additional 30 or more members to this House. That is a change which will do nothing but damage this institution and damage the national government further in terms of its ability to represent the public. There is already such an incredible level of frustration in this institution, on both sides of the House because of the inability of the ordinary member to be heard, to ask questions or make speeches, that the addition of 30 new members will only compound the problem.

It would not be a bad thing for the executive, of course. If you are the king, it does not hurt to have a large Parliament. Any student of politics or sociology recognizes that it is much easier to control a large committee than a small committee and that a House of 300 members is easier for a government to manipulate than a House of 200. Of course, a House of 400 would be easier still to manipulate. It is easy to see the reasoning behind the desire for growth in the size of the institution.

If one is genuinely concerned about the people represented by the members of this House, or is generally interested in this House of Commons and wants to see it function as a real Parliament with real legislative ability and authority, then the last thing that one would be pursuing would be an increase in the number of members.

There are also inequities in that redistribution formula in the way seats are distributed as between provinces. I hate to impute motives to the draftsmen of that redistribution formula one of whom was the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen). By coincidence the result is a redistribution formula which means the largest populated ridings in the country are Alberta and British Columbia which, by coincidence, are the two areas where there are no Liberal members. It is a coincidence I am sure, and if you believe that, you believe the world is flat. It is no coincidence at all.

If you also believed that there are serious questions in terms of western alienation, and if you also believed, as any sane Canadian must believe, that there are serious people in western Canada who are considering separation because they feel so detached from this institution in terms of its ability to represent them, then you would not allow that inequity to continue on the books. Any government that really believed, not in a rhetorical but a real sense, that national unity was important and that it is important for the regions of this country to feel a part of the whole, would be addressing that inequity of the redistribution formula. The government would be addressing it now to ensure that there is not more fodder or more ammunition for West-Fed, western concepts, western Canada parties and the other groups springing into being daily to represent that frustration which exists out there.

There is a great need for change in the electoral system in this country through the Canada Elections Act. A committee has been meeting for years on a regular basis every two or three weeks with a long list of reforms on its agenda. In other words, the whole fence needs mending. But the government at this time of record inflation, record interest and mortgage rates and high unemployment brings in a bill to fix one fence post, a bill to reduce the election period from 60 days to 47 days. Why is the government doing that? Given this broad array of necessary reforms, why is the government bringing in this bill at this time? I think the answer is not that difficult to deduce. What the government wants is a quick campaign, the quicker the campaign the better. A quick campaign serves the interests of the incumbent.

In this country we have a system where the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) alone can decide the election date. He can decide when the House is to be dissolved and an election called. With the very sophisticated polling techniques that are available and primed daily with a minister for propaganda who sends out contracts on a weekly basis to keep the machinery in order, it is very easy for the Prime Minister to have very up-to-date assessments of public opinion. Therefore, he can have a very accurate assessment of how his party would do if an election were held immediately. Clearly if it were in his power to dissolve this House and have an election tomorrow it would be impossible to ever have a change of government. It would be impossible for any change to be made, given that ability to conduct polls to find out what the people are thinking. By calling an election immediately, that would be it.

Obviously, if an election were held six months after the Prime Minister called it, the election period would not make any difference because people's views change during that time. The shorter an election period, the greater the advantage to the incumbent. So it is very easy to see why we have this bill coming in from the government now. The government has no intention of making the other changes in the Canada Elections Act. The government has no intention of changing the redistribution formula. What we will get are pious speeches from the Prime Minister saying, "Now that I have the Constitution home, I will try to make the regions of the country feel that they are part of the whole", and all of that poppycock coming forth.

But we will not have any of those changes if the powers that be in the PMO and in the Liberal party are able to get this bill through. This bill gives them an advantage over what we have now. Who knows, there may be a change in leadership of the governing party before the next election. Would it not be great to have a leadership convention, with the accompanying deification of the winner, no matter who it is—some reporter digs up a former school teacher who says "I saw greatness when he was four years old" and all of that kind of nonsense—followed immediately by a very short election period, and you would never have to go through the nonsense of having perhaps some other party forming the government or winning a seat or two!

Mr. Nielsen: He would like to do away with elections altogether; they are a nuisance.

Mr. Andre: I am sure the government would love to do away with elections altogether. We can hear members opposite say "That might be a little tough, but we will work at it gradually." I hear one of the sheep baaing. We know you can talk. If you can demonstrate you can think, you will really be accomplishing something.

We have a limitation in the Canada Elections Act. It concerns the advertising period which is limited to the last 29 days of the election campaign. To the public, the only real involvement with the election is the last 29 days. The ads interrupt the soap operas, and sometimes the free time political broadcasts cut out Laverne and Shirley and other such cultural programs. But whether an election campaign consists of 47 days, 60 days or 75 days does not affect the Canadian public—it affects us. We partisans are out there pounding on doors, handing out literature, shaking hands and doing all those kinds of things, but the voting public is not affected. They do not know an election is going on until the last 29 days when the formal advertising period occurs.

Reducing the time of an election campaign from 60 days to 47 days does not save the public the pain of an election period. It does not affect the public at all. Perhaps we ourselves save shoe leather. I am glad to admit that I am an incumbent. Frankly, the 47-day period appeals to me in that sense. I say make it two weeks or even a week, and I will never be defeated. I am an incumbent. The shorter the period, the better. If you are really looking at the democratic system, if you are really concerned and you really think the ability to change a member of Parliament from time to time and the ability to change governments from time to time is an important part of democracy, then you do not sit back so complacently and so easily and say "sure, you want a shorter election period, then we will give it to you" because we are all incumbents. It is very nice for us to cut off our opponents at the pass.

We desperately need to reform the way this country functions. Unfortunately, this institution and its members of Parliament do not reflect this country. The national government here is not a national government to far too many Canadians. Ottawa is almost an adversary, a corporate body which is not the people's in any real sense. People from my region do not look upon this government as being their first government. Their first government is in Edmonton. I think that is sad and it bothers me. But that cannot be changed through some powerplay via energy programs, nationalizing of the oil industry, putting in Crown corporations or forcing a Constitution through. The way to change it is to let the people really have some influence here in the national government.

This bill is just another cute little game to give more advantage to the governing party. If the government is really interested in democracy and wants to make people feel they are Canadians, it should not be looking at these kinds of changes. I could suggest a lot of changes, but I know they would all be resisted by the PMO and the Prime Minister because human nature does not voluntarily give up power. Nobody does.

Since all the power rests with those opposite, we get into a Catch-22 situation. They have too much power for anyone to force them to give up any. No one voluntarily gives up power, so we are caught in a Catch-22 situation. We should seriously examine the possibility of fixed election dates in this country where an election is held four or five years after the previous election, unless a government is defeated by a vote of confidence.

That would be a tremendous change in the system and a tremendous reduction in prime ministerial power. It would not reduce the power of the House of Commons or the national government, only the power of one person in this country.

We need changes in the way this place operates. Canadians decry, and we do as well, the party system that requires its members to vote as a block. Many of us say privately, albeit not publicly, that we wish there was some way that members could vote according to their conscience without being mavericks. With the present voting system, the Speaker asks, "All those in favour". The Prime Minister or the Leader of the Opposition is the first to stand, followed by members of his party, row by row. The system is designed to focus attention on anyone who dares to be a maverick and take a position different from that of his leader. That is the deliberate effect. I think it should be changed.

Lately there have been a lot of editorials and columns by writers too lazy to look at the real problems of the day about the question of MPs salaries. About a year ago I saw a column in The Globe and Mail by Geoffrey Stevens who had an idea which I wonder why we cannot discuss some time. That is an examination of the differential in salaries between members and ministers. The Americans have a philosophy which says that in a democracy the most important people are the general public and the next most important are those elected by the general public. Their system states that no one shall be paid more than an elected official because he represents the people, and in a democracy no one is more important. Anybody who is appointed, therefore, must be of lesser importance in their government. If you believe in a democracy and in the people electing members, then the most important person should be the member, the person elected. Anybody appointed should be lesser.

Under the American system, no one who is appointed can get a higher salary than a congressman or senator. I wonder what would happen in our system if we had uniform salaries in this institution with cabinet ministers getting no more and no less than the other members of Parliament.

Mr. Nielsen: Gerry would be back in Nova Scotia.

Mr. Andre: A couple of things would happen. First, it would be much easier for the prime minister to change cabinets. He would not be penalizing someone he dropped from the cabinet or rewarding someone he left in.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect to the hon. member, the Chair is having some difficulty in relating what he is saying to the bill before us. The bill before us deals with the electoral period, not the pay of members. The Chair has some difficulty.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He almost got a standing ovation from the Liberals.

Mr. Andre: I was not talking about an absolute level for this figure, which would not be appropriate. Rather I was talking about how this place functions, the role of members as related to election periods, electoral reform and so on. I will take Your Honour's admonition and not go on with that subject. However, I still maintain that the subject has a lot to do with the way this place operates, and the way it operates is very important in terms of elections, electoral reform, the elections act and so on. Unless there are some changes in this situation, elections will become an exercise in futility.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: The sheep are baaing.

Mr. Nielsen: The Nova Scotia sheep.

Mr. Andre: There is no rational reason for bringing forward this bill to reduce the election period from 60 to 47 days except for the desire to give the incumbent that little extra edge which comes from a shorter election period. There are many reforms needed, including changes to the elections act. The list which the Chief Electoral Officer has is enormous.

The danger in giving quick passage to this bill is that we will never see the other reforms. If the government House leader was sincere in his earlier statements and indications about electoral reform and if the government would like to see those changes, my party would be ready and willing to participate in any form of committee, task force, what have you, to see whether we could reach an accord on the appropriate changes to make from the enormous list which the Chief Electoral Officer has. We would be prepared to work together as members of Parliament, not as adversaries but as members interested in the electoral process. The government should assemble the appropriate legislation and bring it forward. It could be given very speedy passage through this House of Commons. We would have a better election act to guide us in terms of the next election, whenever it might come. In the meantime, we on this side feel that the problems of this country are not the fact that elections are run for 60 rather than 47 days. There is no great clamour from the public to reduce the election period. I have not received a single letter or phone call about it and I would be surprised if anyone in this House has.

Frankly, it is baffling and embarrassing to be here—representing my constituents who are wondering how they can afford the 18 per cent mortgage they have to renew—debating a bill which is absurd in terms of the needs of the nation and equally absurd in terms of the electoral process.

The priorities of this government are beyond belief. The opposition does not have any authority, and maybe we should look at reforms in this regard, to bring in legislative programs to deal with the problems of the day. Perhaps we should look at a reform to allow the opposition in a situation like this to address the priorities of the country where the government refuses to do so. Perhaps that is the kind of reform we need and should be examining.

We are forced to debate the government's agenda. This afternoon the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) suggested we adjourn for this evening if the government had nothing to discuss so that the Quebec members could enjoy the celebrations on the eve of St. Jean Baptiste Day. That would be serving the country a lot better than sitting here discussing this bill which does not benefit the country one whit. It benefits our democratic process not one whit. It addresses the priorities, even on elections, not one whit. What does it do? It gives the incumbent some advantage, and therefore it is worth pursuing, at least in their priorities. I am sorry, it may be hot and humid in Ottawa; it may be getting to be the silly season, but it is not so silly that they are going to pull a fast one like that on this House. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

• (2040)

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to be either as long or as profound as the previous speaker. I must say that generally I find myself in agreement with the provisions of the bill we have before us. My objection to it would be that it does not contain those other things, some of which were referred to earlier by the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), that should be included in a bill to make all manner of amendments to the Elections Act.

I am in favour of the reduction in the period of the writ from 60 days to 47 days, and the main reason is that this is what I feel is the wish of the people, at least in my constituency. We have in this day and age virtual saturation coverage in election campaigns on the radio, television and in the newspapers. People get heartily sick and tired of listening to all this. Every time they switch the television set on there is the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or some candidate running for office.

Most members of the public have either made up their minds who or which party they intend to vote for before the writ is even issued, or they tend to wait until election day or a few days before to make up their minds. As long as you take it in reasonable terms, it does not really matter whether it is 30 days or 80 days. Many countries have an election period of only 30 days, and various provinces in Canada have only 30 days. So honestly I do not think it would have that big a bearing on the result of the election. I would support this measure because I feel this is what the public of Canada, particularly people in my constituency, would favour.

A number of people would argue that in large constituencies such as my own it is very difficult for members or candidates to travel to every community, but in the days of jet aircraft it is really not that difficult. It might be difficult to get to every little community with 20, 30 or 40 people, but it is not difficult to get to the vast majority of communities containing 85 per cent of the population.

It must be remembered that the situation is the same for every candidate. Every candidate has to figure out how he must use his time to what he considers his maximum advantage. No one person really has an advantage over the other. I guess the 60-day period goes back to the days of the horse and buggy, the days when it was necessary for the party leaders to travel from one end of Canada to the other and back perhaps several times by train. That does not happen anymore. We have instant communication with radio, TV and the wire services, so that a speech made in Halifax is reported the same day in Vancouver. There have been developments in printing technology that enable the Chief Electoral Officer to do his job fairly quickly. This also enables candidates to get their literature and posters printed fairly rapidly. I do not really think a reduction from the present 60 days to the proposed 47 days puts too much disadvantage in anyone's way.

It has been argued that a reduced writ period would favour the incumbents, both the incumbent member and the incumbent party which at present forms the government. If the period were reduced to a week, as suggested earlier this evening, that might indeed be the case. But with a writ period still in excess of that commonly used in most provinces and many other countries in the world, I do not think that is really the case. Any assistance it might give to an incumbent, either the individual or party, would be fairly marginal at best.

I can think of circumstances in which the very opposite might be the case. When a government chooses the time it wants to go back to the people, the advantage might be with a shorter election period. If we take as an example the opposite, as happened early in 1980, I think a longer election period would have worked to the advantage of the incumbent government. That election was the 18-cent election, and if the people had had more time to really look into the promises being made by what at that time was the opposition party, they would have realized what nonsense those promises were. They would have realized that the price of energy had to go up, so at that time a longer period would have worked to the advantage of the incumbent, which was the Conservative party. As long as changes are made within reason, any advantages or disadvantages are going to be pretty marginal. The public of Canada would be well served by not having to listen to and look at us and other candidates during election campaigns for the time they have to at present.

There are a number of areas in which the bill is remiss. There are a number of areas the bill does not cover. These were listed on several occasions during the earlier debate on this bill. I want to repeat one or two and maybe add a few, some of specific local interest.

One of the most important things not addressed by the bill is the ever-expanding membership of this House. The present number is 282, and I understand that if an election were to be held today, or within a short period of time, the number of members re-elected would be some 312. This number would escalate exponentially as the population of Canada increases. I do not think we should adopt the British system where they have 650 or so MPs. I always wonder what all those 650 people do.

Mr. Fraser: We wonder what all these do.

Mr. Nickerson: That is true too, especially those over there. I wonder what they do all the time and I have never yet been able to figure it out. I think probably we have too many members in this House now. Rather than an increase to 312 I would like to see a decrease to 250. Let us try that. The more members you have, the more the part played by an individual member is reduced. He finds himself relegated to being a number, to just standing up when a vote is called. If there was an equal allocation of the time of this House to members, and you took the number of minutes in a day that we sit on average and divide it by the number of members, it would come out to about one minute per day. Of course, the Prime Minister, the Leader of the Opposition and front bench members on both sides have, together with the Speaker, a disproportionate amount of that time, and rightfully so, there is no objection to that, but it leaves the average member of this House with something much less than a minute, or five minutes a week. If you give one 20-minute speech a month, you have used up your time. I think by expanding the number of members, you take away from the individual member and you relegate him to the position of one small cog in the wheel. At the same time you are increasing the influence of the executive and increasing the power of the Prime Minister and his cabinet colleagues.

● (2050)

We on this side of the House, and many members on the other side, have said that we desire a system whereby the ordinary member of the House would play a much greater part. That, sir, is my speech from the back row. Ten years from now, when I am in the front row, I might change my mind slightly.

I guess one of the main problems we have to face if we are to maintain or, hopefully, reduce the number of members, is the fact that certain provinces where the population has not been expanding at all will find themselves in a position where they would lose members. If I understand it correctly, the reason the rapid expansion was adopted the last time around was that no province wanted to lose members. That problem has to be addressed, and I am sure it is within our capabilities to solve it.

I would like now to extend some compliments to the Chief Electoral Officer of Canada, Jean-Marc Hamel. I was one of the members who took advantage of section 59(2) of the elections act after the last election and sent him correspondence with a number of views on how the election had been run and what could be done to improve the procedures, particularly in my constituency. I was most pleased with his response, his attentiveness and the way in which he dealt with my letter. He obviously gave the matter the attention that I at least thought it deserved. Most of the points I brought to his attention were technical matters and I do not wish to go into them in any detail right now. He assured me that he already knew about a lot of these technical matters and they were on the way to being cleared up. However, I have one or two comments to make about ways in which the election process might be made a little more effective. These should be, but are not, in the bill before us tonight and I would hope to see some of these matters dealt with during the term of this Parliament.

The first one deals with the appointment of returning officers. The system we now have goes back many years. The job of returning officer is handed out by the party in power; it is a patronage position. I do not think that is right. I think the choice of returning officer in each riding should be left to the Chief Electoral Officer of Canada. The returning officer should be directly responsible and answerable to him, and the appointment should not be made with patronage in mind.

The system we now have is really a nineteenth century system and I would hope we have progressed in this respect as we have done with many other public officials. These positions should not be handed out on a platter with the idea of some political return; rather, they should be filled by people who are technically the most proficient and able to carry on the work.

If that were to happen, the number of complaints levied against returning officers and their deputies would be much reduced. Election personnel are nominated by the party in power, and the people not of that party always have the suspicion that something might possibly go wrong. There is always the suspicion that the election officer might in some small way be going out of his way to help the representative of the party that appointed him. I would hope that could be changed. Perhaps it is not even necessary to change the legislation, just the practice.

The second point I would like to bring to the attention of this House is rather a parochial one, but it deals with section 61.2(1) of the elections act. This section allows for special publication and broadcast rules for the territories, those areas of Canada which unfortunately are not yet provinces. The idea behind this is quite reasonable. In the days when there were no real radio or TV stations in the north, when it took a long time for newspapers to circulate, when in fact there were not really that many newspapers, it was perhaps necessary. The first day you are allowed to advertise in the press or over electronic media is the twenty-ninth day before the election, and that restriction does not apply to the Territories. I think we have progressed sufficiently in northern Canada that we are now not much different from the rest of the country. There is no real need for this provision any more. It is difficult because if you go to a newspaper or radio station prior to the twenty-ninth day to place an advertisement, they have all had a notice circulated to them from the Chief Electoral Officer saying that this is prohibited. They are not aware of this little technicality in the bill which says that does not apply to the territories. If you do get something on the radio, somebody will pick it up down in Alberta and there will be all kinds of complaints because this guy is advertising before he should be. They are not aware of the exemption. There was so much difficulty with this provision in the last federal election in the Northwest Territories, that to the best of my knowledge none of the candidates took advantage of it. That, I think, is a good indication that the provision has outlived its usefulness.

My third point is with regard to aid to illiterate persons, and also persons who do not read the orthography used for printing in English or French; rather they use the syllabic method in which the Inuktitut language is commonly printed. This matter, at least the syllabic part of it, is of more interest to my colleague, the hon. member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar), who unfortunately is not here this evening.

There are many people in his constituency who do not read the normal orthography used in the rest of Canada; they use the syllabic system. Consequently, they are unable to read the names of the various candidates. It would be a fairly simple matter to allow, by some rule or regulation under the elections act, the names also to be printed in syllabics. It is no great difficulty at all, it is just a technicality. I hope that can be done.

My next point is on the use of photographs either on the ballot papers or on the walls of polling stations to aid people who are not able to read or write. There are many of these people in my constituency. This has been the subject of great local debate. I am referring not only to federal elections, but to territorial and municipal elections as well. That problem has been solved for all elections other than federal ones.

The various band councils first suggested the idea of putting the photographs of candidates on the ballot papers. It proved to be very successful, and the municipal ordinance was amended to allow that practice to be followed in municipal elections. It is quite a common practice in many communities in my constituency. There were some technical difficulties respecting the use of photographs on the actual ballot paper in territorial elections, but with the assistance of the Chief Electoral Officer acting as adviser to the territorial legislature, a system was adopted whereby the photographs of candidates could be displayed in polling stations with their names underneath. Thus people were able to memorize the name for the limited period of time it took them to go into the booths and mark the ballots.

There is great difficulty in this regard. People will come up to us on the street and say, "I would like to vote either for you or your opponent, but there is no way I can read the names. Could you tell me where your name appears on the ballot paper? Is it first, second or third?" If the candidate is number two, he or she is very lucky; it does not matter which way up they have the ballot paper because they will mark it in the right place. But, if the candidate is number one and they have the ballot paper upside down, he or she is out of luck. Certain exceptions to the general rule could be made for areas where there are large numbers of people who are unable to read or write. It has been demonstrated that it is possible. It is just a matter of putting our minds to it.

That is as far as I want to go. I could pursue this matter for a long time by repeating many of the arguments and by indicating the omissions of other speakers, but I do not really want to do that at this time. I have pointed out the most important general omissions and also some of the rather specific ones. In conclusion, I support the provisions of Bill C-58 which is before us, but I would certainly like to see it expanded to address some of the other unresolved problems.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments on this bill, particularly with respect to the comments of the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre). It seems the growing tendency in the House is to talk out a bill basically because it does not go far enough. If we were acting co-operatively in the House, we would realize the difficulties facing governments in power. Unfortunately, perhaps for the opposition but not for the country, the Conservatives were not in power long enough to come to grips with the fact that we cannot have everything we want at any given stage. When we have a relatively simple bill which has a positive effect, I find it difficult to understand why it is being opposed, yet I see this happening all over.

The hon. members of the NDP opposed Bill C-48, the oil and gas bill, because for some reason or other it did not go far enough. But there is probably no combination of hon. members in the House who could bring in a better or tougher bill. They are opposing bills because they do not get exactly what they want, therefore we do not get anything and too much time is spent talking these things out.

This is a good bill which does a very small but positive thing. As I travelled around the country during election time, particularly in my constituency, there is no doubt people told me that elections were too long. Of course they used some other words to express themselves, but they just did not believe that elections needed to be so long. I think this is a positive bill. I would like to see it go further. I would like to see a permanent list. I would like to see us reduce the time to 30 days or 35 days, which would be an adequate amount of time to run an intelligent election in any country.

We must remember that any election starts years before it is actually called. We are in elections all the time. We are debating where we are going and where the next government will go. It is never sudden. Although the last election was very sudden in one respect, it was a continuation of the debate which had been ongoing in the House for several years.

Basically we have a decent and good Elections Act. It is better than it was years ago. It does many good things. As the hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) just indicated, we still need some changes. I do not fault him on that. I think he made an honest effort to point out some of the things he wanted.

This is a good bill because it eliminates some of the abuses, for instance, in the province of Ontario where there is no limit on the amount of money a candidate can spend. With the kind of devices available to candidates and the money which can be spent on television and so on, it is almost possible to get anyone elected if there is no limit and one has enough money. One very positive provision of the act eliminated this by indicating that the amount of money a candidate could spend would be based upon the number of people in his or her constituency. I think it is a reasonable limit. For example, in my area the limit is approximately $26,000 per candidate. This provision makes a lot of sense.

Certainly there are other positive provisions in the act which tend to make elections a very orderly process, something that makes people believe there is a degree of honesty on the part of all concerned. But there is something seriously missing.

Before coming to the House, I spent 22 years as an educator, a high school principal and so on. I have seen young people growing up and spending ten years to 12 years on the average in school; of course a lot of them spend many more years than that. I remember on one occasion I went into a classroom to discuss a given subject with some young people. They spent some time trying to understand. There was a certain amount of teaching going on and there were questions back and forth. Certain information was being passed back and forth between teacher and pupil. Then I was put in an opposite situation when I became involved in the political scene, and I was confounded by the fact that I had to express myself in terms of the press and in terms of an election in 30-second jingles. There is no possible way that one can convey intelligent ideas in 30-second jingles. One reason most people say that the elections are too long is that they have heard the same jingles for 21, 26 or 28 days, as is the case in federal elections, and they have heard nothing else. There is no decent communication. Many of the candidates are chosen because of their ability to deal with the jingle. In many cases candidates are not chosen because they have good minds, or because they are thoughtful and have been looking at the situation for a long time. Very often there are other reasons why they have been chosen. Someone props them up and they run through an election.

I am told that one candidate in my area had six professional organizers working through an election campaign. They just walked around and told the candidate the right things to do. It was all managed. There is no way I can appear on television, unless I blow the whole $26,000 for 15 or 20 minutes, to take part in an intelligent debate where the issues are seriously dealt with.

Let us say that an election was held today and we had to deal with monetarism versus low interest rates. That is an important subject to Canadian people, yet it would be virtually impossible to discuss that issue in an election campaign because we have never managed to take the matter seriously. We have let the media take the situation over. We have said to the Canadian public who have been in schools for ten to 15 years, who are used to communication, "You do not deserve that. All you are worth is a jingle."

If democracy is to survive in this country, we must do something better than what we are doing. We must make sure that candidates who run in elections are able to express themselves as intelligent human beings in terms of the issues which pertain to the election. People say that they do not know where we stand after an election. How can I convey serious notions about monetarism, interest rates or federal fiscal arrangements in a 30-second jingle? I cannot do it. It is not possible. It seems to me we should be putting our time and energy into finding out how it is possible to have decent debate, debate that will involve people.

I hate to say this after nine years as a politician, but I do not feel that the public sees me as being very important, as being very relevant. I am not just talking about myself but about politicians in general. They see us in some kind of dirty way. They think we need all these rules, otherwise we would cheat. I feel a great deal of this is caused by the way we present ourselves, with the electoral laws which we have which permit us to be sold by jingle, something which contains all kinds of words but no real substance. It is no wonder the public sees us as not being worth $30,000, or $32,000 a year, or whatever our take-home pay is.

Somewhere along the line before I leave this place I hope to establish an image for myself which is a cut above what I have just outlined. I would like to see all politicians being able to talk seriously to the public about issues. I do not want to do it in a 30-second or 60-second jingle.

I feel this bill is something worthwhile. I hope other members share my views on this matter. We should really get down to running elections seriously in an intelligent way so that the people of Canada can become involved in what is going on and can try to make sure that their candidates understand what is happening.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity of following the hon. member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae). He rather cultivated my imagination when he said that he would like to create an image before he leaves this place. I would like to tell the hon. member, Sir, he has already created that image. I trust that he is speaking for himself when he says people do not know where politicians stand. I think it would have been better had he said that people do not know where Liberals stand. The public was promised there would be wages and price controls and they were promised that gas prices would not rise. We all know what happened.

Mr. Collenette: Speak to the bill.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, I will speak to the bill. The hon. member spoke about this, and surely members opposite will give me the opportunity to retaliate. What kind of one-sided outfit is this becoming?

The government is trying to give the impression that it is doing something for the Canadian people through this bill, Bill C-58. Imagine cutting 13 days off the election time. What saving will that mean to the Canadian taxpayer? I would like one hon. member opposite to stand up and tell me what benefit there will be to the Canadian taxpayers as a result of cutting 13 days off the Canadian election. It riles me to think that this government lacks the imagination to take advantage of so many opportunities to do something for the Canadian people.

If you will permit me, Mr. Speaker, I will list several of those points. First and foremost is the bill which I presented in this House of Commons. I trust that it will be debated some time in the not too distant future. I hope that there will be a limitation on the membership of this House. I recognize that other members have already referred to this point; but if there is one thing we politicians must do, it is to realize that the taxpayer cannot continue to accept the excessive load which is being placed on their backs by the political system. My friend, the hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) referred to the number of members in the House of Commons in Great Britain. I recognize that there are 635 members in that House. It must also be recognized that there are 60 million people living in Great Britain. We have provincial legislatures which also serve the 25 million people who live in Canada. We must not forget that. If the government wanted to bring in a worthwhile measure at this time, why does it not bring in a bill which will freeze the membership of the House of Commons until such time as it can be substantiated that there should be an increase in our membership?

I must ask what the priority of this government is. It brings before us a bill which will limit the election period by 13 days. There are so many opportunities which can be taken advantage of through the Elections Act. What about the swearing-in ceremonies for a great many of the people in our urban centres within that period of time?

The hon. member who had the floor before me mentioned that people get awfully tired of jingles. This bill will not change that at all. There will still be 28 days of advertising, which is another area with which I certainly do not agree. I do not think the government should be infringing on the rights of Canadians the way it is through the advertising which takes place through the campaigns. Editorial writers are frightened to comment because those comments may be construed as advertising. People are afraid to put anything on paper prior to that 28 days for fear of being charged. We recognize that there have been infringements of this regulation. I do not really see why that is so very important.

I would like to debate those kinds of issues rather than the matter of just cutting back the election period by 13 days. I know that people get tired of elections. People get tired of politicians. They get too much of it, simply because there has not been enough production from the system. We on this side of the House cannot do anything about it if the government does not provide the leadership and the imagination which is required. It is up to the government. Surely, the Canadian people must recognize the void which must exist in the minds of the government members in order for them to bring a bill like this forward at this time.

What about the people who are disenfranchised simply because there is no provision in some of the smaller rural centres for swearing in? Surely, those areas should be allowed to have that type of privilege which is granted to urban centres. What about those people who are disenfranchised because they are hospitalized? We are not doing anything about that, unless the government decides that it will change some of the regulations guiding the Chief Electoral Officer. Those are changes which would be of benefit to the Canadian people. Why are we not talking about that? The government does not say anything about that at all. No mention is made about that in the bill.

What about the handicapped? What is the government doing about making the polls accessible to those people too? What about the areas in large rural ridings where regulations make people drive 20, 30 or 40 miles to exercise their franchise? What are we doing about that?

What are we doing about the dictatorial attitude of the commissioners who set up the boundary lines? What consideration is given to that? None at all. There is nothing in this bill which would do something for that. What are we doing about the boundary lines coinciding with county lines within the rural areas? Nothing at all. What are we doing about the boundary lines coinciding with the social habits of people, their lines of communication and their travelling habits? Nothing at all.

There are so many areas in which we could be doing something for these people. Therefore, I have to severely criticize the government at this time for bringing in a bill which just limits the election period for 13 days. Does Your Honour know what will happen? The people who are involved in that election will start campaigning earlier, that is all. They will have their house in order, they will have their machinery geared up and ready to run, and that is all. It will not change anything. There is nothing in this bill which will change anything. There is nothing in this bill which will change the advertising regulations. Therefore, the people will still be subjected, whether it be good or bad, to 28 days of advertising.

One of the reasons this session of Parliament has been devoid of any constructive suggestion is that the government is apparently devoid of the ability to bring anything forward that is imaginative. Therefore members, especially those on the government side, should really take a look at these matters to see what we can do to improve the reputation of the House of Commons. Certainly I must emphasize this once again. Increasing the membership of the House of Commons is not the answer to our problem. I realize that is outside the purview of this bill, but we have to seize these opportunities when they present themselves so that we can present our case, because the more members there are in the House of Commons, the less effective is every individual member. It gives more power to the executive part of the system, which is the cabinet and, presumably, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). This is what is wrong with our system. We are not giving enough consideration to the Canadian people and what they require. Thank you very much for affording me the opportunity of presenting my views, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate, however briefly. I am somewhat surprised by the reaction of hon. members opposite who are complaining about the fact that the bill is not complicated. When we come up with a measure which contains many provisions, they feel justified to speak at length and they complain that we overload the circuit. When we are overly simple, they say that we are too brief and that we do not cover all the angles. In the end, any reason at all will do to filibuster at a simple stage of a bill.

[English]

I want to remind the hon. member who spoke before me that this bill was introduced by his own government a few months ago.

Mr. Crosby: So?

Mr. Pinard: We are doing exactly the same thing now, in dealing with this measure at this time—

An hon. Member: Shame, shame!

Mr. Pinard: —to demonstrate to our colleagues that it is not a partisan move but a change which is good for them, which is good for us and which is good for everyone. This does not mean that in the future we will not present this in a more elaborate form in due time, so far as the elections act is concerned; but at this time, we thought that this change that was required—

Mr. Crosby: Resign!

Mr. Pinard: —by their own government, this change which is required—

Mr. Crosby: Resign!

Mr. Pinard: I am sorry. I cannot speak with that hon. member being sick or showing that he does not feel well. He might just go out of the House. However, it is very difficult to speak while someone is roaring like this. It is not my style to—

Mr. Crosby: Quit! Quit!

Mr. Pinard: I think the hon. member is feeling better now, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mayer: I do not know why, if we are to look at you!

Mr. Pinard: Maybe the hon. member prefers to listen to me through his ear piece. In that case, I will speak in French.

[Translation]

I was simply saying that it is a bill which was introduced by his own government and that we are doing the same thing because it is a provision with which all members were in agreement. It seems to me that members opposite do not appear to be very sincere today, as was the case on an earlier day as well as another one just before the Easter recess, when they go on speaking simply to delay the adoption of such a simple bill. In fact, Mr. Speaker, what we are trying to do, and we have already said so, is to cut the much too long 60-day electoral campaign down to 47 days. Once again, this bill had been endorsed by their government. We are presenting the bill at this time because certain members have yet to understand that we must clean up the bills which have accumulated as a result of two elections in less than a year. If it is so simple, if all parties agree and if it was good for their government, then why put up speakers during three days to delay the adoption of this bill on second reading and put off its reference to the appropriate committee?

At this time, I want to appeal to the common sense and intelligence of every member—including the one who is not feeling well—so that the study of this bill will not delay the debate on the next bill concerning the double price of wheat. This is a basic agricultural piece of legislation, and I cannot understand how opposition members can find all sorts of excuses to delay a very simple bill, just because they definitely do not want to talk about agriculture in the House and therefore do not want to debate Bill S-6——which is called the bill on two-price wheat. Therefore, I do not understand why the hon. member does not want to speak on agriculture in this House or why he is delaying the second reading of this very simple bill on elections. That is why I will not talk much longer.

This bill is good for hon. members opposite. It is good for everyone. It is good for all the people in this country. I ask hon. members on both sides to collaborate in referring this bill to the committee as soon as possible so that later on this evening we can deal with another bill which is related to agriculture and which is very important to the Liberal members in this House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mayer: Good for Liberal members? Which ones?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to confirm the business of the House for Thursday—and I am doing it out of courtesy for hon. members opposite so that they can prepare themselves. We are going to consider Bill C-13, Bill C-65 and Bill C-68 in that order.

[English]

So I repeat to my hon. colleagues that the business for Thursday will be Bill C-13, Bill C-65 and Bill C-68, in that order.

Mr. Knowles: Would the hon. minister permit a question? Is the minister telling us that that is the business, regardless of what happens to Bill C-58 tonight?

Mr. Pinard: Yes, Mr. Speaker, because I presume there is good faith on the part of all hon. members in this House.

• (2130)

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, the government House leader missed one significant point in his point of order. That was the fact that the situation a year or 18 months ago was much different. We are now in the process of a new redistribution.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Towers: Just a moment, Mr. Speaker, please.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. These remarks could have been included in the hon. member's speech.

The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) on a point of order.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, in responding to the point of order raised by the government House leader, I should like to point out that he mentioned that this bill was good for everybody.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I did not hear the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) rise on a point of order. He rose to speak on the bill before the House. I think the hon. member for Bow River has spoken on the bill, so he cannot have a second round at this time.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I am not speaking on the bill; I am rising on a point of order. The government is very adept at bringing in closure. Now the President of the Privy Council is trying to tell us to stop talking because this bill is good for everybody. We have a right to speak.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hon. member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight).

Mr. McKnight: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to explain to the President of the Privy Council that the reason Bill S-6 is so important to the government is that if it is left out, a considerable amount of money will be owing to the farmers of Canada—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Order, please.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, thank you for giving me the opportunity to make some remarks on Bill C-58, to amend the Canada Elections Act. Before I commence my address, let me comment briefly on the remarks of the president of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) and reiterate these remarks made by my colleague, the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers). He said in very clear terms, and I should like to underline and repeat it, that the bill of the Progressive Conservative government, was introduced under much different circumstances. There was a minority government and an election could have been called at any moment, so it was regarded as a step that ought to be taken. Today, however, we do not contemplate a general election any earlier than two or three years hence so there is a lot of time to consider election measures. There is no comparison between what was proposed by the Progressive Conservative government and what is now taking place in this House.

It is a disservice to this House and to all members for the President of the Privy Council to get up and annoy members on this side as he always seems to do. I want to say to the President of the Privy Council, because I do not always get an opportunity to say such things to him, that if he would deal with matters with a more even and mature hand, the progress of legislation through the House would be much more even. His precipitous statements and actions are a continual annoyance to all members.

We are prepared now, and at all times, to defend our position. In this particular case it is easily defended. The problem started with the Speech from the Throne more than one year ago, when the government of which the President of the Privy Council is a member, said that it would introduce electoral reform and promised a broad-based change in the electoral provisions that apply to this nation. Where are these reforms? One year and several months later, the only electoral reform we have is Bill C-58. This is a minor change but a very important one. Without all the other changes that ought to be made, it is totally meaningless as are most of the statements made by the President of the Privy Council, to my way of thinking.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I did not mean to annoy the hon. member. If he wants to cool down, I apologize if I offended him. I did not intend to. I just ask him to keep cool and speak to the bill and we will be very happy to listen to him.

Mr. Crosby: Here we go again, Mr. Speaker. The pomposity of the hon. member who, I might say, comes from that great province where they automatically elect Liberals to the Parliament of Canada—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosby: —without any question of what their qualities are. I can tell you that the qualities evidenced by the hon. member in this House would not get him elected in most constituencies in Canada. Let him stay in his seat. We have heard enough from him. He has disrupted this House on too many occasions.

Now I shall speak to the bill, Mr. Speaker. The main force and thrust of this bill is very simply a change in the period of time that will elapse between the call of the election and the election day. Specifically, the government proposes to reduce the period from 60 days to 47 days. When we consider the public interest, we can hardly argue with that change because the people of Canada are sick of elections. They are sick of hearing the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) make promise after promise and not keep any. They heard him speak against wage and price controls and then saw him introduce them in this House. They heard him talk about lowering the price of gasoline and keeping it at a proper level and then saw the price of a gallon of gasoline rise beyond any level that any government ever proposed. In that sense, the people of Canada are sick of elections and I can understand that. If they are sick of elections, we can all understand that they would want the period of the election reduced from 60 days to 47 days.

What is the point of the reduction, Mr. Speaker? There are other ways that we could foreclose and cut off the speeches by people like the Prime Minister who promise things that they do not intend to deliver. There are other ways of achieving that, which are different from cutting down the period from 60 days to 47 days. If the President of the Privy Council does not know that, when I am sure the hon. member for Red Deer would be pleased to take him aside and, with his mature wisdom, tell that young man from the province of Quebec that there are other ways to do these things. We do not need to cut down the period of time in which a citizen who aspires to become a member of the Parliament of Canada, may present himself to the public.

What the public is concerned with is the advertising on radio and television. All of that could be cut out without reducing the period that elapses between the call of the election and polling day. I am very disappointed that the President of the Privy Council does not know that.

He asks why this bill should not go through as it is non-partisan, and he points out that it was introduced by the Progressive Conservative government. He should know that it flowed from the bureaucracy. The Chief Electoral Officer sat down one day and decided that he did not like the 60 days and that he was going to write a report and recommend a shorter period. That is very nice for the Chief Electoral Officer but I do not think he wants to become a member of Parliament. There may be people in the country who do and they may need more than 47 days to campaign. It is nice that the Chief Electoral Officer has given some thought to the subject and made a report, but that does not mean that we have to accept his word on the subject.

If we in this Parliament feel that there are other points that ought to be taken into consideration, then that is what we ought to do. We ought not to blindly follow the views expressed by the Chief Electoral Officer, whether or not they are endorsed by the President of the Privy Council.

What is the point of reducing the length of a campaign? The change would really cut down on the campaign techniques and methods that may be used, but there are many other ways that this could be done.

I have reviewed the history of this proposed change and have already indicated that the suggestion came from the Chief Electoral Officer who made a report in December, 1975. Interestingly enough, his major concern was the cost of printing the preliminary lists of electors which he said at that time would cost about $4 million. Now, in April, May and June of 1981, the Government of Canada is going to reduce the expenditures of the country by $4 million! Thanks a lot to all those taxpayers who have contributed $60 billion to the Government of Canada to spend on all of those programs which they think Canadians need. The government will reduce that by $4 million, so we will not spend $60 billion, we will spend only $59.9 billion and some odd million. I am sure the people of Canada will be duly grateful. What they may not be grateful for is the amount of time in which they have to consider which candidates and which party they ought to elect to the House of Commons. That is what they may not thank you for. Why would they not thank you for that? As those who run for office know, a certain amount of time is needed for candidates to introduce themselves to the electorate, to deal with the issues and to conduct their campaign. It does not mean that they have to be featured on TV. It does not mean they have to advertise in newspapers, periodicals and so on. All of that can be controlled. But why limit the period of time? That is the point of this bill.

● (2140)

The President of the Privy Council, that great man from the province of Quebec who comes here and tells us how to conduct elections, is the one who says we need this reduction in time. I have just one question. How does he know that we Canadians need this reduction in the period of time? Does he know what the situation is in Bow River? Does he know what the situation is in the Yukon? Does he know what the situation is in Prince Edward Island? What in heavens name does he know? Has he even travelled to those places? I have never seen him in Halifax, Nova Scotia. Have you seen him out west? No, but he knows. He is like all of those people over there. Some magical process tells them that they know. They have received a mandate from the people of Canada and they know what to do about all those situations. They know how to handle them. They know what to do. That is grand. But I do not have that kind of arrogance. I do not have that kind of pomposity which tells me I know what is good for the people of Canada.

I say if you have a provision in the statutes of the Parliament of Canada which affects all the people of Canadas, like the Canada Elections Act does, you have to be very careful about changing it. It is nice that the Chief Electoral Officer has looked at it and said, "We can save money by shortening the period." That is very good and that is a point in their favour.

How far has the government gone? Has the government consulted with the people? Has the government asked the people whether they want the period of elections shortened? I do not think the government has done anything like that. I think people have sat in the back rooms of government and made this decision for the people of Canada.

I am here to say without any trepidation that I reject that. If the government can tell me that the people of Canada want this change, I would be the first to join with the government to support this bill. The government has not done that. The government has not vetted this provision. The government has not asked the people of Canada, and the government does not know whether or not this change is desired across Canada. What is more important, the government has had all kinds of time to ask the people of Canada. The government can do it with the electoral reform commissions promised in the Speech from the Throne over a year ago. This promise has not been delivered. The government has all kinds of time and resources. The government can go across this country and ask the people of Canada what they want in the way of electoral reform. The simple question can be asked: do you want this period reduced or not? Why would the people of Canada want the period reduced? They want to see the candidates. They want to see the leaders. They want to hear the comments. They want to consider all of the factors that go into making up the vote in an election. Therefore, let us consult with the people. Let us take our time. Let us not get carried away with a bill that was introduced in the House of Commons a year or two ago by another government, recommended by the Chief Electoral Officer. Who the heck cares about the Chief Electoral Officer? Who is he? He is one man.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: He was appointed.

Mr. Crosby: There is the word, he was appointed by this House. He is not appointed by the people of Canada. Anytime we have the opportunity to consult with the people of Canada on the issue, which is an issue which belongs to the people, that is their issue and, that is what we should do. We should never rely on one man, be he Chief Electoral Officer, Mr. Speaker, or the President of the Privy Council, particularly with the attitude that man has who holds that office.

The government has promised electoral reform. No one asked the government for electoral reform. There was not a plebiscite; there was not a referendum. The government in the Speech from the Throne offered the people of Canada electoral reform. The government comes up with Bill C-58, which merely reduces the time that elapses between the issuance of the writ and the date of the election and makes the other mechanical actions, the preparation of the voters lists and so on, conform with that period of time.

Let me tell the government and the President of the Privy Council about some aspects of electoral reform. What about the number of seats following an election? What is the government going to do about that? Is that going to be put aside or put off to another day while we deal with this minor electoral reform? What about the financial provisions? Are the government and the people of Canada satisfied with that? Are they not concerned with the party that can produce the most money and win the most seats? Is this not a factor that should be vetted? What about swearing in urban voters? If you live in the city and are not on the voters list, you do not get the notice, and if you do not get the notice, you do not know that you are not on the voters list and you lose your right to vote. What are you going to do about urban voters and swearing them in during an election? Why would there be this discrimination and discrepancy between urban and rural voters? All of us in this Parliament support not the urban voters and not the rural voters, but the voters of Canada. We all think they should have equal rights. What is the government going to do about that? Let us see a bill dealing with that subject.

What about two enumerators in urban polls? How much would it cost? It is 282 times whatever it costs for an urban voter. The people of Canada spend that amount of money, but in rural areas they do not need to. They need only one enumerator. Who made that decision? I do not think the member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) had any part in that decision. I do not think most members in this House had any part in that decision. Surely that is a matter we should look at and reconsider. We should question whether it is right or proper to have two urban enumerators and one rural enumerator. Where is your bill on that, Mr. President of the Privy Council?

What about time of voting from east to west? What a ludicrous provision that is. You can turn on your radio in British Columbia and find out three hours before you vote what the result is in eastern Canada, Nova Scotia and now half an hour earlier in Newfoundland. We all know about that. What are you doing about that? Is that right? Should a person in British Columbia know in advance what the vote is? What about time? Are you going to do anything about that?

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sorry that I have to interrupt the hon. member because he seems to be quite wound up this evening. I was going to call for relevance but there is a point that I think is quite valid. There is a bill before the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections dealing with the electoral clock. My understanding of the rules tells me that it is improper for an hon. member to talk about a matter which is currently before another forum of this House.

• (2150)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I am sure the parliamentary secretary is referring to the rule of relevancy. I am sure that members of his House appreciate and accept the fact that the rules have been stretched quite a bit, especially on this bill, by all members. The bill is very narrow in scope. At the beginning of the debate I invited members to keep their discussion to the shortening of the election period. However, there has been argument from both sides stretching parts of the bill. It is a matter of members criticizing the bill and saying that another bill should be before the House. I think that is what the hon. member was doing.

Mr. Crosby: The government members are hurting over a few remarks I made. I do not speak that often in this House. It is reassuring that I can get to them in that way. Obviously if I were just palavering and swarming over these provisions and wasting time, they would not get up. However, they are hurting. They do not want these reforms that I have listed. They do not want to deal with the time of voting, the official count, two enumerators, swearing in urban voters, financial positions and the number of seats in the House of Commons, so I will pass over that. I will not embarrass them further with that. Let me just say this in conclusion. This bill, as I said at the outset, reduces the election period, but it does it in a way that is discriminating between the voters of Canada. Why? Because it continues that difference between urban voters and rural voters.

That ought not to happen. Why? Because those members across the way who are so certain of their position in relation to the electorate of Canada, so sure that they are the guardians of the rights of the people of Canada, have guaranteed a right to the people of Canada, that is the right that every citizen has the right to vote in an election of members of the House of Commons. They put that in the Canadian charter of rights and freedoms which they put through this House with all the power and authority of a majority government but without the consent and concurrence of the people of Canada.

The government says that everybody has the right to vote. Then what does it do? With the Canada Elections Act and this amendment the government says it is a little different, it is not exactly just the right to vote, but the right to vote in a certain way in an urban area and a right to vote in a certain way in a rural area. If you live in an urban area, you can only vote if you are registered and get on the list, but if you live in a rural area and can get on the list after. Therefore, the charter of rights that the government brought before the House of Commons and across Canada to make everybody equal is not going to make them equal just like that. It is going to be a little equal and different.

That is what the government is bringing before this House. It is going to perpetuate the difference that now exists even though the whole thrust and purpose of the constitutional resolution is to remove differences and to remove discrimination. There is no intention of removing discrimination, and the electoral law is one example. The government does not intend to remove discrimination for handicapped persons or with regard to regional disparities. It is all window dressing. The government in interested in fooling the people of Canada. It fooled them once on wage and price controls and it fooled them once on gasoline prices. It wants to fool them again on election provisions, but we are here to stop that.

Mr. Pinard: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member will permit a question. I know he will because he is a very wise man. He does not like the shortening of the electoral period by 13 days from 60 days to 47 days. By how many days would he like to see the electoral period shortened?

Mr. Crosby: I am glad the President of the Privy Council has asked me that question. I have a summary here of all the election periods right across Canada. They go from 28 to 35 and beyond. What I want to say to the President of the Privy Council is that it is the date that the people of Canada think is appropriate after they consider all the factors and a general electoral reform under the auspices of the kind of commission and committee that the government proposed in its Speech from the Throne. What I say very simply so that he can understand is: let him consult the people of Canada. They will tell him what period of time is appropriate. He does not need to ask us or anybody else.

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, I must first apologize to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) for the demotion I gave him when I referred to him as parliamentary secretary. I can understand the minister's rush to bring in Bill S-6 because it is legally binding upon the government to pay an additional $125 million to farmers in the Canadian Wheat Board area. As long as it sits there, the government is encumbered by that. Therefore, I can understand his concern that it be brought forward quickly.

I would like in the time allotted to me to address briefly members who do not have large rural ridings. Members from metro areas can go into an apartment block with a team and spend most of the afternoon there. My constituency measures 18,000 square miles. It is not the largest in Canada. Some members in the government benches and some of my colleagues have larger constituencies.

Mr. Nielsen: You better believe it.

Mr. McKnight: I hear some bemoaning the fact that theirs are larger. In a constituency structured like mine in rural Saskatchewan, there are no large centres. About every 12 miles there is a village of 40 to 50 people. Occasionally you come across a larger village of 500 people. Therefore, unlike the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields), the hon. member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) and the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), I cannot fly from point to point. There is no point in flying six or 12 miles. In that type of constituency it is necessary that members travel by road in order to communicate with the voters.

As an incumbent members of Parliament, I guess I should welcome this bill. In a constituency structured like mine, it offers a large advantage over someone wanting to become known. I will give just a little bit of history. I began campaigning in 1978 for the 1979 election. I had as opponents a member of Parliament who had been defeated in 1974, and a newly nominated candidate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—PROPOSAL TO CONSTRUCT PRODUCTION CENTRE IN TORONTO

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, on Friday, May 15, 1981, when the president of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation appeared before the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture, I renewed my question concerning the CBC plans to build a production centre in Toronto. Mr. Johnson's reply was as follows:

> That until there is an indication of a commitment of funds from the government for the construction of the Toronto broadcasting facility, which would be the equivalent of the one that was built in Montreal quite some time ago, we frankly have not been committing funds. There just is no money in the budget for Toronto consolidation and I am unable to predict to you when that money will be made available by government.

One week later, on Friday, May 22, 1981, I pursued the same subject with the government when I rose in the House to ask the Secretary of State and Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) what steps his department has taken, or plans to take, toward the construction of a Toronto production centre. The reply I received was that:

> It is up to the CBC to make recommendations to cabinet.

Thus we unfortunately have the present situation where both the federal government and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation are shunning the responsibility to each other on who is exactly responsible for the long overdue establishment of a production centre in Toronto similar to those already in operation in Montreal, Vancouver and the one soon to be established in Regina.

Before I pursue this matter again in the House I would like to add some facts of which I assume most Canadians are not aware.

During my recent tour of the 23 CBC buildings in Toronto at 19 different sites, I found the conditions and facilities to be absolutely appalling. To even think of the millions of dollars spent each and every year renovating these buildings with accoustics, lighting and other necessities is enough to give one indigestion. Can you just imagine the nightmare and waste of valuable manpower running from one building to another with tapes and scripts? It is a real struggle to co-ordinate the services of the CBC in Toronto with these facilities spread over such a large physical setting.

Further, it must be noted that the present situation, difficult as it is, is becoming much worse, especially when one considers that three-quarters of the space presently occupied by the CBC in Toronto is leased, and much of this rental accommodation is to come up for renewal. Given the present market conditions for rental space in downtown Toronto there is little doubt, if any, that the new rental leases will be sky high.

How is the CBC expected to develop or even maintain high quality programs when more and more of its budget is being eroded by rental expenses? Put simply, the CBC has become a victim of the marketplace where increases in budget are not keeping up with the increases in recent expenses, thus forcing many of the facilities into second and third-rate rental space, further away from each building.

I am not here to advocate a mere building to house all of the CBC's facilities in Toronto under one roof. Rather, I am here to urge the government and Canadians to develop the concept of establishing a world class broadcasting centre in Toronto on a 9.5 acre site adjacent to the CN Tower, presently owned by the CBC. This is a reality which would physically and symbolically meet the CBC's production needs as a world leader in radio and television broadcasting, as well as signal an international identity to the world in the fact that Canada celebrates its cultural wealth in architectural design, technology, production, craftsmanship, arts, innovation and imagination.

Toronto and Canada have many of the world's finest writers, producers and performers, and to deny Canadians this celebration is to deny them the cultivation of our human creative resources and culture.

It is here that I would like to drive home another concept, that is that, as Canadians we should not limit our options to traditional government capital expenditures of money. Rather, we should be exploring options and possibilities for the marriage of both public and private enterprises in bringing about this realization and celebration of the Canadian cultural dream.

Let me return to some of my earlier statements this evening. When I put the question in the House to the Secretary of State and Minister of Communications, "What is the government planning to do about such a facility?", the answer I received from him was that it is up to the CBC to decide whether or not it wants to build such a facility. When I asked that question of the CBC, it pawned off the responsibility to the government, and when I asked it of the government, it pawned off the responsibility to the CBC.

Therefore, I would like to know tonight once and for all just who is responsible for making that decision, when will it be made and what are the costs involved? If it is too costly to begin construction immediately, then surely we as Canadians should be putting so much aside each year so that two years, three years, or even five years down the line we will have the necessary elements and the necessary capital put together to build a CBC production centre in Toronto similar to the kind that Montreal, Vancouver and Regina boast.

• (2205)

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has its main English language facilities located in some 22 different buildings scattered across Toronto, some of which are badly substandard. Over the years, the CBC has imaginatively overcome some of the compromises of this situation. However, the optimum solution has long been recognized as being a consolidation of facilities. In fact, the CBC purchased a prime site on Front Street in 1978 and developed plans for a consolidation.

As the minister has stated, estimates for the construction of a new CBC facility on this site range from $235 million to $250 million, which by any standard is a considerable sum of money. A capital outlay of this magnitude must be considered in relation to the total level of CBC's parliamentary appropriation, which includes some $60 million for capital projects. As hon. members know, the CBC is required by Parliament to serve all Canadians, which it does according to an independent evaluation, with a level of efficiency which exceeds that of most other state-operated broadcasting services in other countries.

With this in mind, one could ask whether the CBC could devote the entirety of its capital budget to a single major project, such as a consolidation of Toronto facilities, and still maintain the same level of excellent service across Canada. I think it is clear that CBC management is doing its utmost to balance its obligation to provide both a high level of regional programming as well as quality radio and television programming for national audiences.

To enhance the CBC's ability to "serve the special needs of geographic regions", as the Broadcasting Act directs, the government has recently approved a new CBC broadcast facility for Regina, Saskatchewan. This major facility, to be located in the Wascana Centre, will entail three television studios, nine radio studios, plus associated production and administrative areas. It is a project which will cost over $16 million and will significantly improve the corporation's English and French radio and TV service in that province. Similarly, in Newfoundland the government has approved the construction of a new broadcast facility for Grand Falls.

Meanwhile, as a fellow Torontonian I share the hon. member's concern for the difficult circumstances under which the CBC now operates in our city. Currently, the CBC must lease the majority of its Toronto accommodation. As the hon. member stated, the economic situation is different now from what it was a short time ago. The cost of rental accommodation in Toronto is going up and terms for lease agreements are becoming shorter. The CBC is naturally concerned about this situation and has been exploring possible solutions.

Therefore, the CBC recently approached the government with a proposal to lease new facilities in Toronto. The intent of this project is to consolidate under one roof some of the activities presently undertaken at separate locations in the city such as editing facilities, variety production, computing facilities, etc. I think it goes without saying that a higher degree of physical proximity will aid operational efficiency of those units involved. Secondly, it will enable the CBC to vacate some of its current premises which are substandard. Clearly, it is with these objectives in mind that the government has approved this new undertaking which, at least for the immediate future, will facilitate CBC's operations in Toronto which are so vital both to the service it provides in southern Ontario and to much of the English language programming seen and heard nationally.

HOUSING—(A) MEASURES TO HELP HOME OWNERS FACING INCREASED MORTGAGE PAYMENTS; (B) SUPPORT FOR CO-OP PROJECTS; (C) BANKS' PROFITS ON PROPERTY TAX COMPONENT OF MORTGAGE PAYMENTS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, you do not know how I have to fight off the temptation to give the hon. member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis) some additional information about CBC that the departmental answer did not provide. However, I have to go on to the question that I have.

It concerns questions I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) a week ago regarding social housing. June is the month when probably half the mortgages in Canada will be renewed, and CMHC estimates there will be 500,000 thousands mortgages renewed in Canada this year. That affects about two million people, Mr. Speaker, and I think it would be conservative to estimate that the mortgage payments will increase anywhere from 30 per cent to 45 per cent and more for those families.

This means the mortgage payments on their houses will increase by $300 to $400 per month, which is the equivalent of their grocery budgets. But their salaries have not increased to meet this, so the squeeze will be on them. I might add that this affects all families from the young ones to senior citizens.

I asked the Prime Minister about social housing or the development of co-operative housing. A developer told me not long ago that the best deal for low-income families today was co-operative housing. When a developer tells me this, I know there is a serious problem in the housing industry, particularly in the greater Vancouver area. The Prime Minister fluffed off that one too.

Just last week I talked with a person who was trying to negotiate a project which would provide housing for handicapped low and middle-income families in the south Surrey-White Rock area, but the minister had already declared that the greater Vancouver area would not get more housing units this year. Thus, there was no sense in even trying to negotiate a project which was vitally needed in the area. The Prime Minister did not want to intervene on that one either.

Finally I asked the Prime Minister about the policy of banks and large lending institutions in Canada whereby they collect the money for property taxes as part of the mortgage payments. I have no quarrel with that arrangement; I have done it for many years. It is a good arrangement for home owners—while they make their mortgage payments, they pay extra money each month to pay for their property taxes. The banks offer a good service to home owners which enables them to make the property tax payments.

Something which I had not noticed before came to my attention last week. The banks pay 3 per cent on the property tax component of the mortgage payment. Property owners do not have to do it through the banks. They can set up their own trust accounts and do it on the side, but the banks do not advertise this very thoroughly and most of the time property owners assume that it is part of the procedure. Again I say it is a good service, I have no quarrel with it, except that the banks are paying 3 per cent. This is less than 20 per cent of the going rate. I think the parliamentary secretary will agree that one can now get 16 per cent to 17.5 per cent on a certificate, yet banks are paying only 3 per cent on the property tax component of mortgage payments.

If one million mortgages are being held by the banks on which they are collecting the property tax component, and if we cut in half the $1,000 or $2,000 they are collecting in property taxes to arrive at the average amount they are holding on behalf of property owners, we arrive at $500 million at 3 per cent. Therefore the banks are paying out to property owners $15 million per year. However, if they paid the going rate or even 15 per cent, which is below the going rate, they would be required to pay $75 million. This means that the banks made unearned profits of $60 million, which is a very low estimate, on the mortgages they are holding for property owners.

As I said the other day, it is unconscionable. The Prime Minister said that he would refer the matter to the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) and that the Minister of Finance would go to the banks and the lending institutions to make representations to them on that matter. I guess the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bockstael) will read the departmental answer tonight. Am I correct?

Mr. Bockstael: Yes.

● (2215)

Mr. Friesen: I wish to know two things, Mr. Speaker. First, did the Prime Minister refer that matter to the Minister of Finance and, in turn, did the Minister of Finance make a representation to the national banks? Second, what have the banks said, if in fact that has happened? What answer have those banks given to the Minister of Finance? Will they stop ripping off the property owners who are facing enough of a squeeze as a result of the escalation in mortgage payments? Will home owners receive some kind of return on the dollars invested which will be in some way relevant to the kind of payments being made on all other kinds of savings accounts, loans certificates etc? What does the parliamentary secretary have to say? Has that representation been made?

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to comment further on the matters raised by the hon. member on June 17.

With respect to the home owners who face possible foreclosure because of increased mortgage payments due to high interest rates, I should like to point out that the lending industry has indicated to both the minister and his colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen), a willingness to bend over backward to help those experiencing serious difficulties in meeting their mortage payments on renewal. I believe such cases can and are being given sympathetic consideration by the lenders. It is, after all, in their interest to avoid foreclosure.

As I have indicated, Mr. Speaker, last year the federal government extended assistance to home owners who received contributions when they bought their houses in 1975 under the Assisted Home Ownership Program, known as AHOP. In March of this year the government agreed to continue to apply the extended assistance to qualifying AHOP home owners. The maximum amount available to a home owner is $1,500 a year, up from last year's limit of $750.

In response to the hon. member's query and support for co-op projects, I agree that this form of housing has proven to be an effective way of providing adequate and affordable family housing. Last year the federal government allocated 5,000 social housing units for municipalities experiencing an acute shortage of rental accommodation. The minister is looking into the feasibility of increasing the unit allocation to such tight market locations this year.

The hon. member raised the question of profits made by banks on the property tax component of mortgage payments. I should like to point out that the mortgage form prescribed by the national housing loan regulations requires approved lenders under the National Housing Act to pay property taxes on behalf of borrowers. Officials of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation are presently reviewing the problem that current interest rates have created with respect to the interest allowable on tax deposits provided for in NHA mortgages, with a view to determining if this policy should be revised.

MARINE TRANSPORT—WITHDRAWAL OF DART CONTAINERLINE SERVICE FROM HALIFAX—DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, the matter I wish to raise this evening relates back to February and March of 1981. It concerns the decision of the Dart shipping group to move its container service from the Port of Halifax to the Port of Montreal in connection with a proposed liaison between the Dart shipping group and Canadian Pacific Limited.

In specific terms, on March 4, 1981, I questioned the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) with respect to the involvement of the Canadian National Railway Company in the operations of the Cast shipping group, which I considered, and which many in the Port of Halifax considered, to be interinvolved with the decision of the Dart shipping group to remove its operation to the Port of Montreal.

Mr. Speaker, one of the problems which has occurred in the last few years in relation to the North Atlantic container traffic is the competition which has driven many of the marine transportation companies out of business. It is apparent that there has been a consolidation of the marine transport service amongst a few international operators. One of these international operators is the organization which is apparently headed by a Canadian citizen who lives abroad, and who operates the Cast shipping group.

The decision of the Canadian National Railway Company, endorsed by the Government of Canada, to invest over $60 million in the Cast shipping group, has given the impression to the international marine transport companies that the Cast shipping group has the backing of the Canadian government. It was only reasonable then that the Dart shipping group, as well as other international marine transport companies, would seek to protect themselves from this kind of special deal which was provided by the Government of Canada through its agency, the Canadian National Railway Company.

Therefore, with that motivation in mind, the province of Nova Scotia, and other persons who were interested in the port of Halifax, sought the assistance of the Minister of Transport in reviewing the decision which was made by the Dart group and the Canadian Pacific Railway whereby the container service was removed, as I have said, from the port of Halifax to the port of Montreal. In specific terms, what the premier of the province of Nova Scotia asked the Minister of Transport to do was to hold an inquiry at which all of the factors which were relevant to this kind of decision-making would be reviewed.

The Minister of Transport indicated in this House of Commons and elsewhere that the whole matter could be reviewed by the Canadian Transport Commission at a hearing which was required under the National Transportation Act, because Canadian Pacific Limited, being a transport company, sought to acquire an interest in Dart.

That hearing was held last week in the city of Halifax; but unfortunately, at the very outset of the hearing it was stated in categorical terms by the representative of the Canadian Pacific Limited, that nothing will stop Dart's move to the port of Montreal. Consequently, Nova Scotians, from the premier of Nova Scotia right across to those interested in the port of Halifax and all citizens, were very disappointed because there was no way that this whole decision could be reviewed.

We have repercussions because in the U.S. Congress and before a committee of the United States Congress objections have been raised to the operation of the Cast shipping group. It has been described as a James Bond company, robbing traffic from U.S. marine carriers and taking them to Canadian ports. On the face of it, there might seem to be some advantages for Canada; but after all, we are a very small country dealing with the United States goliath.

I can guarantee Your Honour and all hon. members of this House that if the United States retaliates against these predatory moves by the Cast shipping group, which are said to have the support of the Government of Canada, and are said in that congressional hearing to be a flag carrier of Canada, it will be a disaster for the Canadian marine industry. It will be a disaster because the United States has that kind of power, so much so that our Canadian embassy had to send a diplomatic note asking that a bill proposed by the Congress of the United States to enact these measures which would protect the U.S. marine industry be delayed and not passed by the Congress.

This is the kind of problem that arises from the government's involvement. Encouraging Dart to move from the port of Halifax to the port of Montreal not only affects the port of Halifax, it has international repercussions as well. If allegations have been made, they must be answered by the Minister of Transport. The only way they can be properly answered is at a full hearing. We can review the whole marine transportation industry in relation to container traffic and get the answers—not only the answers necessary to protect the port of Halifax from the predatory moves of the port of Montreal, but also the answers that will stave off the criticism now being vented in the United States and which could have very serious repercussions.

The Minister of Transport has a serious obligation in this area. I can understand how he would seek to protect the port of Montreal by writing off $230 million in debts and by providing millions of dollars worth of infrastructure for that port, but by doing so he is going to create an international controversy and wreak havoc in the marine industry in Canada.

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on March 4 the hon. member asked the minister what he would do to equalize the treatment of the ports of Halifax and Montreal. At that time, and on several subsequent occasions in the House, the minister tried to show that it is impossible to demonstrate that one port is favoured over another. For each example of an advantage for Montreal, one can easily cite an advantage for Halifax.

I can understand the hon. member's reasons for bringing this issue up again. He has just attended hearings by the Canadian Transport Commission into CP's acquisition of one third of Dart Containerline. Given that the CTC has not yet rendered a decision, it would not be appropriate to comment on the submissions.

But I think that, in his concern for the port of Halifax, he has lost sight of the fundamental commercial reality of the situation. Dart and CP arranged this deal so that they could begin using larger, more fuel-efficient container ships in their service to Europe. He claims that government policies caused the move from Halifax. I suggest that government policies were quite incidental to the move, and in any case, it cannot be proven that the port of Montreal is favoured.

The minister made it quite clear that interested parties had several opportunities to state their cases. In Halifax last week, the hon. member had one such opportunity. It will be up to the CTC to determine if his intervention was relevant.

In a previous answer, the minister stated that the Premier of Nova Scotia and all other interested parties would have three opportunities to bring the subject forward in the coming months. Under section 33 of the act they could have an inquiry into the acquisition by CP ships of part of the Dart Company, and under section 27 of the act they could intervene if the CN should decide to increase its ownership of CAST in the coming months. There are two, and possibly three opportunities for members and the Premier of Nova Scotia to make an intervention on the subject of freight rates that he contends will be increased by the CNR.

Rather than painting a dark picture of his home town, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should be promoting it. He should be describing the active marketing of the port by Halterm and Ceres. He should be noting the new transshipment arrangements in Halifax by a large Puerto Rican line, and he should be announcing that the Polish ocean line, a new caller at the port, intends to double its visits to Halifax, starting in 1982. That is the sort of news that will give Halifax the good name it deserves!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. A motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until Thursday at 2 p.m.

At 10.29 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put pursuant to Standing Order.

INDUSTRY

IMPORTATION OF AMERICAN BAKERY PRODUCTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The Canadian bakery industry, representing some 30,000 jobs, faces a very real threat due to the rapidly escalating price of Canadian flour in the widening gap between domestic and American flour prices. Because this situation makes it much cheaper to produce baked goods in the United States, and has resulted in more and more baked products being imported from the United States, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin):

That the Minister of Agriculture immediately convene a meeting with representatives of the Canadian bakery industry in order to hear its concerns and consider ways of stemming the importation of American bakery products.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AID

SUPPORT FOR STATEMENT SIGNED BY NOBEL PRIZE LAUREATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Yesterday an historic statement of concern on the issues of hunger and underdevelopment, signed by 52 Nobel Laureates, was released simultaneously in Europe and at the United Nations. Among the signers was a distinguished Canadian Nobel Laureate, Dr. Gerhard Herzberg. The statement appealed "to all men and women of good will, to all those in power and to all ordinary people, whatever their responsibilities may be, to bring back to life the millions who, as victims of the political and economic upheavals of the world today, are suffering from hunger and privation". I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That this House draws the attention of all Canadians to an historic statement of concern on the issues of hunger and underdevelopment signed by 52 Nobel Laureates which was released simultaneously in Europe and at the United Nations, and commends the Nobel Laureates for this initiative to aid the plight of 800 million people who live on the margins of society.

Madam Speaker: For presentation, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

POST OFFICE

NEGOTIATIONS TO AVERT STRIKE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgency. It appears that little progress has been made at the bargaining table between the Canadian Union of Postal Workers and the Treasury Board. The government is apparently unwilling to accept many of the recommendations made by the conciliation board chairman, Pierre Jasmin. In light of the fact that the postal union is in a position to go on strike Monday night, and that such a strike would cause severe interruption of a vital service to the Canadian public, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale):

That the government undertake to negotiate in a meaningful way with representatives of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers in an effort to avert such a strike.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ASTRA TRUST

CALL FOR JUDICIAL INQUIRY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House calls upon the federal government to launch a judicial inquiry into the circumstances surrounding the licensing, operation, and collapse of Astra Trust and related companies, and in particular to answer the following questions:

(1) Why was a licence granted when reports were available questioning the bona fides of the principals of the company?

(2) Why did it take over a year for the Department of Insurance to learn of the incorporation of Re-Mor Investments if Astra was under "close supervision"?

(3) What contact was there between the federal and provincial governments throughout the period 1974-1980?

(4) What compensation should be paid to depositors in Re-Mor and depositors of over $20,000 in Astra Trust, who assumed a federal guarantee for their deposits?

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

TERPSICHOREAN ART

TRIBUTE TO CANADIAN AWARD WINNERS AT MOSCOW BALLET COMPETITION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Madam Speaker, under provisions of Standing Order 43 I rise to seek the unanimous consent of all hon. members of the House. Yesterday at the third Moscow International Ballet Competition, five Canadians received awards second only to the number of awards given to the host country. In light of this remarkable performance by these dancers from the National Ballet Company and the National Ballet School, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Guelph (Mr. Schroder):

That this House recognizes the outstanding achievement of the Canadian dancers competing in the Moscow Ballet Competition, and in particular Kevin Pugh and Kimberly Glassco, each winners of silver medals in the senior category, Owen Montague who placed second in the junior category and received a special award, and Martine Lamy and Serge Lavoie.

Madam Speaker: The House will want to show its appreciation by its applause.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENERGY

SUGGESTED STUDY OF URANIUM INDUSTRY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent importance under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The world will be moving more and more toward nuclear energy use, giving rise to increasing concern and apprehension as to nuclear weaponry proliferation. Canada is and will be playing an ever-increasing role in the supply of uranium fuel and safeguarding against the inappropriate use of such fuel. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bruce Grey (Mr. Gurbin):

That the government undertake a uranium inquiry by reviving the 1980 resolution of the Progressive Conservative government establishing a joint committee of the House and the Senate to examine and report on all aspects of Canadian uranium mining, processing, use and marketing, both domestically and internationally.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

TOURISM

EFFECT OF NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. American motorists coming to Canada for gas which is subsidized by the Canadian taxpayer account for 50 per cent of the tourism increase in the first quarter of 1981. According to figures released by Statistics Canada, a colossal surge in same-day border crossings from the United States to Canada in the first quarter accounted for about half the increase in all visitors from the U.S. to Canada compared to a year ago. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen):

That the House, once again, demand that the National Energy Program, which is aggravating oil pricing negotiations between Alberta and the federal government, be scrapped, and at the same time the House congratulate the minister responsible for tourism for his ability to manipulate Canada's ridiculous energy policy and the oil pricing impasse into his plans to expand this country's tourist industry at the Canadian taxpayers' expense.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PETRO-CANADA

LAY-OFF OF UNION OFFICIALS FORMERLY EMPLOYED BY PETROFINA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I rise under provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that on the takeover by Petro-Canada of Petrofina, both president Hopper of Petro-Canada and president Nadeau of Petrofina gave assurances that no workers would lose their jobs as the result of this takeover either before or after it, and that since the takeover both the president and secretary of Local 14, United Oil Workers, were laid off three days before the official takeover, and since this union has filed seven complaints against Petrofina for union-busting activities,

[Translation]

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom):

That the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources direct the boss of Petro-Canada to meet with union officials with a view to having the laid-off workers rehired.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF COMMEMORATIVE STAMP TO HONOUR TERRY FOX—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Burghardt (London West): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing business under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the announcement by the Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet) minutes ago that the Government of Canada will issue a stamp titled "Marathon of Hope", which recognizes the significant achievement of Terry Fox, I move, seconded by the hon. members for York East (Mr. Collenette) and Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen):

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TRIBUTE TO MR. DINSDALE, DEAN OF THE HOUSE, ON THIRTY YEARS OF SERVICE

Madam Speaker: Before I recognize the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) on orders of the day, I would like to say to the House that today marks the thirtieth anniversary here of the hon. member for Brandon-Souris as a representative of his constituency. His representation is continuous, without a break, and he has justifiably earned the title Dean of the House of Commons.

Editor's Note: At this point the hon. member for Brandon-Souris was accorded a standing ovation.

Madam Speaker: Since the return of the writ on July 16, 1951, the result of a byelection held June 25, 1951, as members know, the hon. member has had a very distinguished career. He has served as an alderman for the city of Brandon, as mayor, as a member of the legislative assembly, as a member of this House, and as a minister of the Crown. Also he has had a very distinguished career in the Royal Canadian Air Force during which time he was awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross. I now give him the floor.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Madam Speaker, I hope I have your permission to make a preliminary statement and then ask my questions. After 30 years I suppose a situation like this is best described in the words "I am a survivor". I think it was Premier Khrushchev who was once asked what he did during the Stalin years, and he said, "I survived."

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dinsdale: We in Canada do not need to have any fears with respect to that kind of survival. However, I would like to make one point. I suppose one should make a profound statement on an occasion like this, and I borrow that French phrase:

plus ça change, plus c'est la même chose.

[English]

The more things change, the more they are the same.

I came to Parliament as a member of the opposition. I am still a member of the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dinsdale: I came into Parliament when the late C. D. Howe was the minister of everything, as we used to say back in those days. I suppose, if I may put it into the contemporary context, he would combine in his person our present minister of resources, the Minister of Finance, and even the Prime Minister himself as constituting the whole part and parcel of government, with one exception, and I say this to the Minister of Finance. The catch word in those days was, "What's a million?" Today it is, "What's a billion?"

● (1420)

Money values have changed obviously. It is an honour to have served in this House for a period of 30 years. I have established warm friendships on all sides of the House. This is something that people outside Parliament cannot appreciate when they see the rough and tumble of debate. One of my friends recently came to the House during one of the heated moments of debate and said, "Now I understand the meaning of original sin". That is what it might look like to people looking from the sidelines.

I had a very good relationship with the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey), especially when we were both engaged in helping to resolve the postal strike pre-Christmas, back in 1975. I was in hospital at the time—

Mr. Mackasey: I almost was.

Mr. Dinsdale: —undergoing some heart surgery. There arrived at my hospital room a tape. The hon. gentleman knew I was fond of music. The title was quite significant under the circumstances. It was "The Sound of Music". He might send a copy of the same tape to other people of whom I can think, for "music hath charms to soothe the savage breast". We have had tragedies in our family. But one of the things I remember with great appreciation was the rallying of members of Parliament from all sides of the House. Incidentally, the first letter I received came from the late governor general, Georges Vanier, who had great sensitivity in these matters.

We were stricken with severe disability 15 years ago in the bosom of our family. Today in the Year of Disabled Persons, 1981, it has been my privilege to be involved in a vitally important exercise. I think it is fitting that we are again honouring Terry Fox who, more than anyone, has raised the level of awareness of the special needs and the special abilities of the disabled. It has been my privilege through the parliamentary process to help change what was tragedy into what we believe is going to be a triumph and a major breakthrough on behalf of disabled people in this country.

We have had a parliamentary prayer breakfast, believe it or not, all through the years. Sometimes the public believe that the only kind of praying that parliamentarians do is spelled "preying". The prayer group has been a source of warm fellowship to me over the 30 years.

Finally, I pay tribute to my constituents who, for 30 years, have seen fit to support me during 12 elections. I have had only one slogan: Has served, is serving, and will serve. They have accepted that slogan as a sincere indication of what I planned to do as their representative.

I should point out that my predecessor who sat in this House for a number of years, and also I believe became the Dean of the House, and was a Liberal during all those years, did not get into politics until he was 65. He died in office in 1950 at the age of 81 which precipitated the by-election to which you, Madam Speaker, have referred. He was a very distinguished gentleman. When my Liberal friends ask me if I am thinking of retiring I say, well in light of the experience and the service of my predecessor, I have at least 25 years to go yet!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dinsdale: I remember the hon. Bob McGregor who used to be known as "Silent Bob". Some members will remember him. He became the Dean of the House. It does not happen very often, but he had to make his maiden speech in response to what was said by the Speaker in the House. I can remember his maiden speech very, very vividly. It was brief. He said, "If some of you fellows in this House would speak less, you would be here a lot longer." And the next election he was defeated.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dinsdale: The verdict was that he had talked himself out of the House of Commons. I am not going to do that, but with your permission, Madam Speaker, I will now pose a question to the President of the Treasury Board, and I think perhaps he knows the subject matter involved.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

POST OFFICE

ACTION TO PREVENT STRIKE

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Notwithstanding the revolution in communications technology which is now upon us, postal service is still an essential service in Canada, particularly to pensioners, low-income groups, and small businesses which cannot afford the higher costs of electronic communications and courier service. Arising out of the critical stage of current contract negotiations with CUPW I would ask whether the President of the Treasury Board can assure the House that he has taken the necessary steps to ensure that there will be no interruption in postal services at this time.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, it is indeed an honour to have the first question from the Dean of the House, and I might say that I am sure all of us enjoyed his remarks. With respect to the question he has posed, clearly in the event of a strike there is bound to be disruption of postal services, but I can assure the hon. member that steps have been taken to ensure that pension cheques and other security type payments will be delivered and that the people of this country, dependent upon that aspect of the service, will be protected.

PLANS TO CONTINUE SERVICE

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Madam Speaker, Canada is on the eve of the establishment of a postal corporation. This policy has been in contemplation since as far back as 1962 when it was first recommended by the Glassco commission report. In light of this very significant development which is supposed to represent a major breakthrough in solving the on-going labour problems in the Post Office, and because the public is already in a state of panic over the threatened strike, will the President of the Privy Council indicate what plans he has to ensure to the people of Canada that the mails will go through, and also to ensure a happy transition toward a Crown corporation? I think it would be most unfortunate at this time it we had a breakdown in postal services.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I think the question was addressed to me as President of the Treasury Board. I remain very optimistic, and I would like to assure members of the House that every effort will be made to bring these negotiations to a satisfactory conclusion. The parties are at the table; they were at the table yesterday, they were at the table this morning, and they will be back at the table this afternoon. I maintain every hope that a negotiated settlement will be arrived at.

SERVICES OF NEW CROWN CORPORATION PRESIDENT

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Madam Speaker, does the government have at this stage of the implementation of the Crown corporation, the postal corporation, the services of the highly reputed new chairman of the postal corporation who is skilful in managerial and negotiating procedures? Are his services available to the government at this time?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, the responsibility for negotiations with CUPW, that particular postal union, will remain with the Treasury Board until such time as the Crown corporation is proclaimed and in existence. Accordingly, we are proceeding in the normal way.

I would like to point out to hon. members that there is the odd celebrated dispute, but I believe hon. members will agree that many, many settlements are arrived at without difficulty, and by and large our record in this regard is quite excellent. I have every confidence in the capacity of our negotiators and, as I indicated earlier to the hon. member, I believe this will be brought to a satisfactory conclusion.

● (1430)

RECOMMENDATIONS OF CONCILIATION BOARD CHAIRMAN

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, my question is also to the President of the Treasury Board. The issues involved in the contract bargaining process between the Treasury Board and the Canadian Union of Postal Workers include proposals for 12 statutory holidays, improvements in premium pay for evening and night shifts, stronger health and safety provisions, and four weeks' vacation pay after five years. In light of the fact that the conciliation board recommended adoption of these proposals, could the minister outline the position of the government on these issues and why there is reluctance on the part of the government to accept the recommendations?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, first I point out that the recommendations to which the hon. member makes reference are those of the chairman of the conciliation board. As hon. members know, it was not a unanimous report. As far as individual items are concerned, I think it is best that these be left to the negotiators at the negotiation table.

GOVERNMENT POSITION IN NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. If the government is not about to negotiate in a meaningful way with the Canadian Union of Postal Workers, a strike seems almost certain. A postal strike is perhaps the last thing this country needs right now. With the economy of the country in such disarray and the financial burden on almost every segment of the population increasing daily—I am sure the minsiter will agree with that—can the minister tell this House how the government can justify its reluctance to accept the recommendations of the conciliation board when a postal strike would impose severe hardship on the needy, old age pensioners, and small businessmen who cannot afford couriers at $6 a letter and up, and on the millions of other Canadians who rely on the postal service for personal and business transactions?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I am sure we all share the concerns expressed by the hon. member, but we do indeed have a responsibility to the people of Canada as taxpayers. Surely the hon. member is not suggesting, on behalf of the Progressive Conservative party, that settlements should be made with public service unions in general, at any cost, in order to avoid the inconvenience which strikes sometimes entail.

Mr. Darling: I didn't say that.

Mr. Johnston: I inferred that from the hon. gentleman's remarks.

However, I would say that these matters have all been taken into consideration. Negotiations are proceeding. I have indicated that mechanisms are in place to ensure the delivery of old age pension cheques and so forth and, as I said, I have every confidence that a negotiated settlement will be reached.

LABOUR RELATIONS

POSSIBLE DISRUPTION OF GREAT LAKES SHIPPING

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, before I direct my questions to the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Transport I want to say that I and my colleagues in this caucus join with Your Honour and the President of the Treasury Board in congratulating the hon. member for Brandon-Souris on his length of service in this chamber. We look forward to being with him in this chamber for many more years.

I should also say that this is the thirteenth anniversary for the class of 1968.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: Of the some 96 members elected then for the first time, there are 15 to 20 survivors. Some of the recidivists include the hon. member for Mission-Port Moody, the Solicitor General, and one or two others.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. We are into a summer of discontent and dispute between several unions and their employers on the Great Lakes and St. Lawrence Seaway, which could result in severe damage to the Canadian economy. Would the minister tell the House what measures he is taking to resolve these disputes and to prevent a shutdown of the shipping industry? A major part of the dispute is about safety conditions, all of which could be resolved by the government. Would the minister agree that workers should not have to bargain for safety standards and that the government should take these items off the bargaining table and put those standards in place?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, I congratulate the hon. member and the class of '68.

The hon. member's question was quite comprehensive. At the present time there are three collective bargaining renewals—which are at various stages of conciliation—which affect the movement of grain and other goods on the Great Lakes. In two instances conciliation commissioners have been appointed, and in relation to the third one, which involves the Canadian Lake Carriers Association and the Seafarers International Union, I am considering at the present time the possible appointment, as a next step in the conciliation process, of a conciliation commissioner.

The question of what may be bargained is not as simple as outlined by the hon. member, because it is quite obvious that one party to a collective agreement may feel that the safety standards question has been taken care of but another party may make some demands beyond that. There is no question but that the matter of safety conditions in the shipping industry is one which is subject to re-examination at the present time with reference not only to the exact articles but also in relation to where the jurisdiction will lie for the health and safety of workers. However, I believe the essence of the negotiations respecting these contracts involves matters other than those referred to by the hon. member.

EXTENSION OF CANADA LABOUR CODE TO COVER MARINE WORKERS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, the minister may feel that one side thinks safety is adequate, but the other side does not. I remind him that eleven seafarers have lost their lives since the last contract. At least three, and possibly eight, would be alive today had the union's safety proposals been in effect. As I have said before, the government could solve all eight safety problems. Would the Minister of Labour solve four of those under his jurisdiction by extending the safety protection of the Canada Labour Code to these workers? Would he tell us why marine workers should be left to sink or swim and be denied the same protection being given to other workers under federal jurisdiction?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, the hon. member will be aware that in the various federal departments there have been, for many years, some 16 different statutes which deal with health and safety in the workplace with reference to different types of undertakings in the country. That is quite aside from the question of employment which falls under provincial jurisdiction.

In relation to the shipping industry, because of the fact that at the time of its passage the federal labour code was made subject to the provisions of other existing federal statutes with respect to safety conditions, that means that the CTC and the Department of Transport still are major factors in relation to safety and health conditions on the ships themselves. This is a matter which is under review and a matter on which there would have to be a governmental, rather than a departmental, decision.

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, this is a running away from the issue if I ever heard it.

ENFORCEMENT OF CANADA SHIPPING ACT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, may I turn to the Minister of Transport and direct a supplementary question to him, because he could resolve the other four safety issues in dispute between the Seafarers Union and the ship owners. The seamen want water walls as a place of refuge from fire. That is not unreasonable. They want survival suits made mandatory. They want the companies to provide bilingual safety information.

Will the minister issue regulations, which he has the authority to do, to cover these items, and will he enforce the Canada Shipping Act? Will he also assure this House that his department will not put up any roadblocks to prevent the Minister of Labour from extending the safety protection of the Canada Labour Code to marine workers?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, it is obvious that my colleague was very careful in answering the questions, and I intend to do the same.

An hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Pepin: Why? Because negotiations are under way, and they have reached a very delicate point. However, one thing seems sure to me, and I would like to try to make it clear, that it might be unwise to conduct discussions on regulations for safety in general at the same time as negotiations on a labour agreement. That would be very unwise.

I just want to say that during these negotiations I made sure the marine administrator of my department was providing information to both sides as to the progress being made on the three or four points mentioned by the hon. member. For example, there has been progress on survival suits. Standards have been developed by the department. There is a manufacturer offering them now. Progress has been made, and that progress has been communicated to both sides.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

RCMP INVESTIGATION OF DEPARTMENT OF CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. Last Tuesday I questioned his colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, about a serious leak that occurred in his department in 1978, and a subsequent investigation by the RCMP which was instigated by the Attorney General's office. The minister first denied any knowledge of the affair at all. Having said that, he said the matter is before the courts. Then, with righteous indignation, he accused me of making false allegations before the House, for which he should apologize to both me and the House.

Yesterday, superintendent Bentham of the RCMP confirmed an investigation is taking place; the matter is not before the courts. My question to the Minister of Justice is: when did he or his officials initiate the investigation and did he inform his colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and if so, when?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Justice and Minister of State for Social Development): Madam Speaker, indeed, on January 14, 1981, there was an investigation in a case. It is a special case and the investigation is still going on.

QUERY RESPECTING LEVEL OF ALLEGED LEAK

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It has now been confirmed there is indeed an investigation going on by the RCMP into his department concerning an alleged leak. The answers he gave me in the House on Tuesday were hogwash. He knows now what the situation is, just as I suspected he did then. My question is: at what level did the leak occur, departmental or ministerial?

Mr. Lalonde: From you.

Mr. Corbett: The second part of my question is: since Mr. Bertrand was relieved of his position by this government after the business of the uranium cartel was brought before the House, after the business of the oil rip-off was brought before the House, and now this business of a leak from within his department, will he instigate a special parliamentary inquiry bringing Mr. Bertrand before it to answer the obviously unanswered questions?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): Madam Speaker, clearly the hon. member has obtained some information from a constituent and uses his privilege as a member to create doubt and uncertainty with a series of questions. The fact that there are ongoing investigations should not be emphasized in this House, since it might impede the orderly conduct of such investigations. If the hon. member is responsible, Madam Speaker, he will understand that we cannot answer, either to confirm or deny that investigations are going on, otherwise they would become pointless. However, I find the hon. member's questions unfortunate and unacceptable.

[English]

RAIDS ON THOMSON NEWSPAPER OFFICES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has now had his attention formally drawn to this question in the House. He has had an opportunity to look into the matter himself. Will he tell this House whether, to his knowledge, there is any evidence that any officials of the Thomson Group had advance knowledge of raids by combines investigation officers on any of the offices of the Thomson Group?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): Madam Speaker, this is currently under investigation, and I feel it is unadvisable and rather useless and irresponsible on the part of the Leader of the Official Opposition to try to elicit information, when it is clear that the police are investigating. The Leader of the Official Opposition should let the police conduct their investigation and he will get answers later. In my view, his attitude can hinder the RCMP in completing their investigation.

[English]

ACTION TO PREVENT FUTURE LEAKS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, we have a situation here where, by the minister's own admission in this House, a late admission, there has been the possibility of a leak by combines investigation officials to officials of the Thomson Group, giving advance warning of a raid. He says that matter is now under investigation by the RCMP.

Can he tell us, as the responsible minister, whether he has taken any action to ensure there is no continuation of leaks in his department in relation to this or any other investigation?

Has he satisfied himself as to the source of the leak, or is he trying to fob it all off on the RCMP?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): Madam Speaker, I would like to know if the Leader of the Opposition has satisfied himself that no one in his party is leaking information concerning himself and his precarious leadership.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Call a judge.

Mr. Lawrence: Boy, you are not leaking; you are bleeding.

EXERCISE OF MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): I am not sure, Madam Speaker, why this minister, who has presided over the uranium cartel inquiry which has not been made public, who has presided over the departure of the Director of the Combines Investigation Branch, refuses to tell this House whether he has done his duty as the minister responsible for combines investigation activities in this country to see if there is a continuing danger of companies which might be subject to investigation by his branch being advised in advance of those raids. That is very much a question of public policy and the responsibility of the minister. He cannot shed that responsibility simply by trading insults across the floor of this House or by passing off his responsibilities to the RCMP.

He has a responsibility as minister to this House. Has he exercised it, has he determined whether or not there was a leak, and is he taking any action to ensure there are no subsequent leaks which would frustrate the operations of the Combines Investigation Branch?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Give us another flippant answer.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): Madam Speaker, I will answer very briefly to the long and nebulous comments of the Leader of the Official Opposition. I am aware of my responsibilities and I discharge them.

INDUSTRY

TASK FORCE REPORT ON MAJOR CAPITAL PROJECTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Peter Lang (Kitchener): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The minister has acknowledged the importance to our long-term economic strategy of the report of the task force on major capital projects in Canada to the year 2000. Could the minister outline what steps he intends to take to facilitate government co-operation with leaders of Canadian business and labour, in terms of a written response to the recommendations of this important report?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, we are proceeding immediately to form an appropriate interdepartmental group, led by myself and the Minister of Employment and Immigration, and working with other ministers, to begin not only analysing the report but developing a response which we hope to work out very soon with the provinces and the private sector. The report shows a remarkable degree of consensus on the part of both business and labour as to the steps we should be taking to maximize for Canadians the benefits from major projects in this country. I think we have to take that report very seriously, and I can assure the House that will be the approach of this government.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

UREA FORMALDEHYDE HEALTH HAZARDS—HEARINGS CONDUCTED BY REVIEW BOARD

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, my question is also to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs regarding his responsibilities. On June 29 the board of review concerned with urea formaldehyde foam insulation will hear submissions from industry and other interested parties. I believe the deadline for those appearing is tomorrow. Since this hearing seems to be only in the interest of the industry which, like the government, is trying to downplay the health hazards of this foam, will the minister guarantee that the board will tour Canada and be available to local areas to hear from consumers on this very urgent matter?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): Madam Speaker, the hon. member has made an interesting suggestion which I will bring to the attention of the chairman of the review board. I understand that steps are being taken to hold hearings in other parts of Canada, not only in Ottawa. I am sure the chairman will receive the representations of the hon. member.

FUNDS FOR REMOVAL OF FOAM INSULATION

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same minister. The National Research Council has substantiated that the health hazards from urea formaldehyde gas increase as the foam disintegrates and as it is exposed to heat and moisture. Therefore it would seem that the results of tests which are done today will not be relevant a month from now. Why, then, is the government investing $5 million in irrelevant testing and surveys, when instead it could use this $5 million to assist home owners remove this foam which has proven to be a health hazard? This is the only real remedy to the situation.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Postmaster General): Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member is jumping to conclusions. In my opinion, it would be wiser to wait for the test results. I remind the hon. member that there are to be three types of tests, done on different dates in order to get a more accurate reading and a better idea of the problem. Also, the review board, which will hold hearings this summer, will no doubt come up with findings which we will have to take into consideration. I would therefore suggest that the hon. member wait for these results before drawing such conclusions.

HOUSING

HOME INSULATION TESTING PROGRAM

Mr. Gordon Gilchrist (Scarborough East): Madam Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. It has to do with the subject raised by the hon. member for Vancouver East.

Not only does the testing of urea formaldehyde foam vary from time to time but it varies from home to home. Inasmuch as many people are suffering financial and health hardships as a result of this situation, and since the Ontario government has now recognized its responsibility to test all homes in which this foam has been installed to ascertain if there are dangerous situations house to house, will the minister undertake to try to influence his colleagues to establish the same kind of testing right across the country, to be conducted by the government which is generally responsible for the problem in the first place due to faulty testing in advance and an endorsement under the CHIP program?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I believe my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, has answered the hon. member's question.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ATTEND SCARBOROUGH MEETING

Mr. Gordon Gilchrist (Scarborough East): Madam Speaker, is the minister aware that tonight in Scarborough town centre, the minister's own riding, there will be a meeting of the UFFI home owners from around the Toronto area and southern Ontario? Will the minister undertake to attend that meeting, which he has not done up to now, and hear the complaints and hardships being experienced by these people? Will he try to have a little compassion for the serious plight these people face, and will he face up to this serious problem so that he can influence his colleagues in cabinet to come up with a real solution and not a cheapie, mickey mouse solution which he has suggested?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I would like to correct the hon. member. In fact the meeting tonight is the second of such meetings. I did have a representative attend the first meeting. I was in my constituency office yesterday and received representations on this subject. I am aware of the problems and I am sympathetic toward them.

IMMIGRATION

PLEA TO ADMIT GREATER NUMBER OF POLISH REFUGEES

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration but in his absence I would put it to the Deputy Prime Minister. Austria has a proud record of handling refugees and people exiled from eastern Europe. There are 7,500 surplus people from Poland presently in Austria. I understand that both the Canadian and American quotas have almost been filled. Will the Deputy Prime Minister bring to the attention of the Minister of Employment and Immigration the fact that usually there is a contingency number which can be used to add on the numbers we are prepared to accept in the form of designated people, or refugees? Will the Deputy Prime Minister ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration to see if more people from Poland could be taken off the hands of Austria which has handled these refugees at great expense to its taxpayers?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member will be aware, under the current refugee program it is estimated that about 4,000 east Europeans will be admitted to Canada, and a substantial proportion of these, about 1,100, will be processed through the Canadian embassy in Vienna. I should also add that next month additional officers will be sent to Vienna to facilitate the processing of these potential refugees. The target is 4,000, but it may be possible to add additional refugees in the course of the year if circumstances justify that course.

NATIONAL REVENUE

ACTION TAKEN BY DEPARTMENT AGAINST TARSANDS MACHINE & WELDING CO. LTD., FORT McMURRAY, ALTA.

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Revenue my question is for the Minister of Finance. Two weeks ago officials from the Department of National Revenue filed a third party action against Tarsands Machine & Welding without any discussion whatsoever with the directors or the president of the company. This action forced the Royal Bank to place the company into receivership, and it has since gone into bankruptcy. This company is the third largest employer in Fort McMurray, employing 350 people.

At the time the company closed it had approximately $5 million in receivables, a payroll of $350,000, which has not been met, and payables of between $1.7 million and $2 million. Will the Minister of Finance appoint officials from his department to go to Tarsands Machine & Welding in order to give it the same consideration which has been given to Massey-Ferguson and Chrysler in the past, since this company is experiencing a cash flow problem at this time?

[Translation]

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, I will gladly convey the hon. member's representations to the Minister of National Revenue, who could not be here today.

[English]

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT CO-OPERATION

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, I again address my question to the Minister of Finance. I would like to draw to the attention of the minister that these representations have been made to the Minister of National Revenue. The Department of National Revenue seems hell bent for election that it is going to make this third party action stick though it appears that by taking court action in Alberta, which has forced this situation, this will prevent the department from receiving one cent in arrears since the bank has first claim. Will the minister direct officials from his department to sit down with Tarsands Machine & Welding and the receiver in bankruptcy in order to work out a solution which would allow this company to remain viable? The trustee receiver has stated to me very emphatically that this company could survive if it had the co-operation of the government. That is all it needs.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, I am sure that if the hon. member has already made representations to the Minister of National Revenue, the latter is working assiduously to resolve the problem which has been identified.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

COST OF MOVING "E" DIVISION FROM VICTORIA TO VANCOUVER

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. On May 18, 1981, at a meeting of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs I asked the Solicitor General what the total cost would be if the RCMP "E" Division moved from Victoria to Vancouver. The Solicitor General replied, "I do not have the figures here but I will produce them." More than one month has passed since the minister made that promise and I am still waiting for his answer. Will he tell the House when we can expect him to produce the figures?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I am expecting to review some figures on that subject with the RCMP at a regular weekly meeting which I will hold with them tomorrow. Perhaps after that meeting I will be able to make the information public.

• (1500)

CONFIDENTIALITY OF FIGURES

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): I am more interested in the figures on which the minister made his decision to move them, not on some figures which may crop up tomorrow or any time in the future. I find it very strange that when I asked for the production of papers covering that move, the Solicitor General was unable to supply us with the papers and the figures which I requested and now he seems quite willing to do so. Why was it that those figures were confidential last week, but it appears that they will not be confidential next week?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, my main interest was in providing a basis for excellent policing for the province of British Columbia. It was on the basis of good policing that the decision was made to move the headquarters in that province from Victoria to Vancouver. Of course there are costs associated with it. We are aware of the costs, but they had not been put together in the kind of report which I have asked the force to prepare, and which I hope to be able to make public shortly.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

COVERAGE OF ECONOMIC SUMMIT MEETINGS IN JULY

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. Yesterday we learned from Murray Chercover, the president of CTV, that CTV intends to replace CBC as host broadcaster for the economic summit.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rose: While the Conservatives applaud, I might remind them that this move clearly constitutes grounds for action under section 184(3)(c) of the Canada Labour Code regarding the right to refuse struck work. I think it would be the same situation as if, during a postal strike—if there should be one—the government contracted that work out to Loomis or Pink Lady.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rose: Nevertheless, I would like to ask the minister if he will assure the House that everything will be done in his power to have CBC remain responsible as host broadcaster, since a good deal of money has already been invested by CBC. Will he put pressure on CBC management to resolve this problem with NABET so that this job can be done by the CBC? If not, why not?

Hon. Francis Fox (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I had the opportunity of speaking with the president of CBC this morning. He informed me that negotiations with NABET were ongoing this afternoon in Toronto. As far as the question of asking the CBC to remain as host broadcaster is concerned, CBC approached NABET last week to ask them to give guarantees that, if the CBC remained as host broadcaster, NABET would co-operate and allow the CBC to act as host broadcaster. These guarantees were not forthcoming from NABET.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET WITH UNION

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): The minister has already had meetings with CBC management to hear CBC's side of the story. In fact reliable sources allege that the Prime Minister's office, the PMO, even discussed strike-breaking contingency plans with the CTV a week ago. Will the minister now assure us that he will immediately take up the CBC-NABET invitation, to meet with NABET immediately, so that the minister and the rest of us will finally understand what is going on for a change?

Hon. Francis Fox (Secretary of State and Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, on this side of the House we believe that we know, indeed, what is going on. I would like to—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fox: I would like to inform the hon. member that I have asked my office to be in touch with NABET, and that my expectations are that I will be meeting with them at 9 a.m. tomorrow.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

LEGAL AID TO PRESENT AND FORMER MEMBERS

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. It relates to the charges against certain members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police arising out of the proceedings of the Keable Commission. The minister is reported to have said in the Citizen of June 15, 1981, that:

> —his department is prepared to provide legal assistance to those charged, in line with a long-established practice in such cases.

That refers to legal assistance to members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police who may be charged.

I want to ask the minister how far does that extend. Does it extend to former members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police who are no longer members? Will it extend, as well, to former members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police who may have been discharged, but who, during the course of their employment with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, were involved in matters which have led to charges or may lead to charges against them?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, the question relates to an internal policy of the RCMP which provides, in general, that members may be granted legal counsel at public expense if they are charged with the commission of offences in the course of their duties. The very specific questions which have been asked are not necessarily covered by the detail of the policy as I have stated it. Obviously some of the situations which the hon. member may be contemplating will require a specific decision to be made within the force.

To trigger this mechanism, a member of the force makes a request to the commissioner. No requests, of which I am aware, have been made, as yet, in connection with the Keable matters. We want to be fair, and I will be expecting to review the decisions that the commissioner makes in this regard as requests come along to see whether the policy which is now in effect is, indeed, adequate.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It was a question of the adequacy that led to my question in the House. The minister, as a minister of the Crown, reports to the House for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and speaks for the government with respect to them and the policy which ought to relate to them.

Would the minister assure the House that he will advise those who are in charge of establishing the internal policy in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police that it is the wish of the government that all members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, including members who were discharged but were involved in matters which have arisen in the course of their duty and have resulted in charges as a result of the Keable Inquiry will, in fact, be covered by that policy, and that, indeed, that is the position that the Government of Canada is taking? I was asking the Solicitor General that question in his capacity as a minister of the Crown.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General): Madam Speaker, I am not prepared to say that yet. I feel that the decision should be made on a case by case basis, and not in the blanket way which the hon. member suggests. Each member or former member of the force is free to make an application to the commissioner. I have stated the policy. I am prepared to make public the policy statement in its present form. I think that as each case is reviewed by the commissioner, I will watch, and I know other hon. members will watch with interest to ensure that the government does do the right thing by members and former members of the force.

Oral Questions

AGRICULTURE

HERD MAINTENANCE PROGRAM—REVIEW OF FILES REPORTED TO BE SEALED IN REGINA

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my question through Your Honour to the Minister of Agriculture, regarding the compensation payments for herd maintenance which were supposedly to be out approximately two and one-half months ago.

It is my understanding that there are 1,100 files which were rejected for herd maintenance, sealed in Regina, to which the review board and the cabinet review will not have access. I would like to ask the minister why these 1,100 files will not be reviewed. I understand they were turned down because of the yield which was put on the numbers on those files. I would also like to warn the minister that the hon. member for Medicine Hat will have a question regarding the same thing.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): I should make it understood to the hon. member through Your Honour that the herd maintenance program does not come under the directorship of the Ministry of Agriculture or the Minister of Agriculture. It comes under the minister in charge of DREE. I am sure the hon. member realizes that. We do have some input. I have not heard the accusations, or I have no evidence, and I have not previously heard what he has said, about 1,100 appeals, I believe, or applications being locked up some place. I will certainly make some inquiries of my colleagues and see what we can find out. However, if I understand correctly, there are about 3,400 applications which have been sent to Ottawa. They are being looked at. We had a meeting a week or so ago about them. We hope to be able to finalize them in the next few days.

GRAIN

COMPENSATION TO FARMERS FOR EMBARGO ON SHIPMENTS TO RUSSIA—EXCLUSION OF OIL SEED PRODUCERS

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture and deals with the compensation payments arising out of the Soviet embargo, particularly as it relates to the payment, or non-payment, for compensation as a result of losses which occurred in the oil seed sector. Could the minister explain to the House and to the oil seed producers of Canada why oil seeds were not included as being eligible for compensation payments under the Soviet embargo compensation payment program?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, to give the hon. member a detailed answer may take longer than necessary. The working model which we use is one of the best in the world. We even had our people go down to the United States to study it. Their people came to Ottawa to show our officials how this model worked, using all price changes and everything that may effect the price of the commodity. Under some of the most capable people in the departments concerned, led by Dr. Stu Borland from my department, we did everything we could to try to make a payment available to them. Actually, the prices showed an increase at that time and a larger amount of sales to the U.S.S.R. than at normal market time.

● (1510)

FACTORS INVOLVED IN DECIDING AMOUNT OF COMPENSATION

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, the minister should know, first of all, that there is a direct relationship between feed grains and oil seeds because both are used for animal feeds. The minister should also know that, according to the government policy statement, payments were made not on the loss of sales but on the price of these commodities, and the price of rapeseed, canola-seed, had dropped very dramatically during that period. Given those factors, surely the minister cannot stand in his place and rely upon the Americans to make that value judgment. Surely that decision could be made right here in this country.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the Americans did not make any judgment whatsoever. We just used the working model. We used the system that they used which is considered to be the best in the world. It was developed in the state of Missouri. If the hon. member would like, we can make arrangements for members to have Dr. Borland's group present the facts the way they were presented to us, showing how they studied the markets at that time—all aspects of markets, everything that had an effect on it. There is nothing that the Minister of Agriculture would like to be able to do more than hand out some more money to farmers, but there is no way that I could do it from that fund.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

VALIDITY OF REGULATIONS APPLIED IN CONFORMITY WITH ONTARIO LEGISLATION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, my question is for the minister of Labour. Last July 17 the government passed regulations under Part IV of the Canada Labour Standards Code to implement the provisions of the Ontario Occupational Health and Safety Act, and regulations for employees working under federal jurisdiction, such as uranium miners. The validity of these regulations was questioned by the Burkett Commission on Mine Safety which suggested that the matter be referred to the Supreme Court. Can the minister tell the House whether the government plans to refer this matter to the Supreme Court?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, the Department of Justice has recently reaffirmed its earlier opinion that the referencing of the Ontario Occupational Health and Safety Act under Part IV of our code is valid and is in force. The government has no plans to refer the matter to the Supreme Court, as a consequence.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, we all know that tomorrow is designated as the last allotted day. I wonder if the government House leader could indicate to us his intention with respect to the business for today and into next week?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, today we will be studying third reading stage of Bill C-13 and then, I hope, the three stages of the two following bills, C-65 and C-68. Tomorrow, as my hon. colleague indicated, will be the last allotted day. We have had consultations and have agreed to the following. If I may, before I talk about the business for next week, I would settle that question by moving the following motion:

That, notwithstanding any Standing Order, if any division is required on any motion relating to the business of supply on June 26, 1981, the division or divisions shall be deferred until 3.00 p.m. on June 30, 1981 and, at that time, the Speaker shall put forthwith and successively, without debate or amendment, every question necessary to dispose of any item of business relating to Main Estimates and Supplementary Estimates, any opposed item in the Estimates and for the passage at all stages of any bill or bills based thereon.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, there have been discussions and we are agreeable.

Mr. Knowles: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Agreed and so ordered.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Concerning House business for next week, Madam Speaker, on Monday we will bring before the House the three following bills: First, Bill C-37, to designate the first day of July as Canada Day, then Bill C-67 concerning the Adult Occupational Training Act and, if we have time, Bill C-53, to amend the Criminal Code in relation to sexual offences.

Hon. members know that Wednesday is Canada Day and therefore the House will not sit. On Tuesday and for the rest of the week, the House will study the legislation required to implement the various programs described in the estimates and which were listed in your recent ruling, Madam Speaker. Essentially, that is the House business for next week.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Two questions arise, Madam Speaker. There is not very much legislation for today. Has the government House leader given any thought to what we might do if the business that he has outlined for today is completed? Does he have some back-up legislation for today?

Mr. Pinard: Yes, Madam Speaker. I am very happy to hear my colleague indicate that we will make serious progress today. I appreciate that very much.

We will resume debate on the bills on which we have already started debate, namely, the second reading of Bill C-58 followed by Bill S-6 and by Bill C-12. If we have time to deal with those three bills today I will be around and will be glad to designate other items of business for my colleague.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, in the statement of just a few moments ago the President of the Privy Council mentioned legislation to handle matters in the Estimates that Your Honour had ruled out of order. Has the government made any decision with respect to how it will handle this legislation? I am talking about the form that the legislation will take when it reaches the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, the House leaders had an interesting discussion this morning and that subject did come up. It is only later this afternoon that we will have an opportunity in cabinet to make a final decision about the type of legislation. There are two options: first, that it be an omnibus bill or, second, that the bill be split into several separate bills. Should we favour the second option, it has been agreed that the House would very quickly dispose of each of those bills.

I will not elaborate on the tentative agreement, but I think that as early as tomorrow, when the decision will be known, we will be able to draft an order of the House confirming that agreement so that next week we will be able to study the legislation concerned in a very orderly manner. I say "legislation" because at this very moment it has not yet been decided, of course, whether it will be introduced as a single omnibus bill or as six or seven separate bills. I want to point out, however, that the suggestions made to me by the Progressive Conservative House leader and the New Democratic Party House leader that the bill be split into several separate bills with the understanding that there would be a very short debate on each of them at all stages does appear to me as a very constructive approach. I will take it under very serious consideration this afternoon.

[English]

Mr. Knowles: Madam Speaker, first, may I confirm that if the cabinet decides this afternoon to deal with those estimates that were ruled out of order by means of several bills, we are prepared to join in an agreement that each bill be dealt with on the basis of one speaker per party, and perchance even to reduce the length of that speaker's remarks.

I may add, Madam Speaker, that between what the government House leader has told us now and the discussions we have had at House leaders' meetings, we have a fairly complete picture of what the government wants the House to deal with before we rise for a possible summer break, except that he has omitted one item. As the minister knows, both the opposition House leader and I have been able to give him a commitment that on the bill to correct the oversight in last summer's Bill C-40 regarding veterans' widows, we are prepared to deal with it expeditiously on the basis of one speaker per party.

I wonder if the minister can tell us when he plans to bring that legislation forward so that it can be passed for the benefit of 15,000 or 20,000 veterans' widows?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, the bill referred to by the hon. member is fundamental and very important, and there are several others which are or are not on the Order Paper and for which we would welcome the same kind of agreement. Still, with respect to the bill over which the hon. member shows concern, I want to assure him the cabinet is studying the question very seriously and at the end of next week at the latest, I hope to be in a position to give notice of our intention to introduce such a bill in the House before the summer recess.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. ANDRE—PROPRIETY OF SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A)—RULING BY MADAM SPEAKER

Madam Speaker: Would the House give me permission to make a ruling although the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) is not here? Is that agreeable to the opposition House leader?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Yes, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: I want to rule on the matter raised by the hon. member for Calgary Centre about Supplementary Estimates (A) 1981-1982, which were tabled on June 3 last. These estimates contain but one item, vote 20a, Energy, Mines and Resources.

What is interesting is that the hon. member in his intervention does not complain about that item, and probably with good reason because that item, vote 20a, fulfils to the letter the requirement of an estimate or vote; that is to say, it seeks approval to spend, and cites the legislative authority on which the request is based. Rather the hon. member's point of order relates to, and I believe for the first time, the description or information concerning a statutory item that accompanies Vote 20a in these Supplementary Estimates (A).

The hon. member objects that it is not in order for the estimates to contain information on government revenues because they should relate only to expenditures. As a second reason he says, in effect, that the statutory item is irrelevant to the item to be voted and therefore, while it is not only improper to show any offsetting revenue, it is aggravated because the revenue shown has no relation to the expenditure. Finally, he alleges that the statutory item anticipates legislation that will establish a fund at some time in the future and at this moment in time has no basis in law.

In reply, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) agrees that the fund in question is yet to be established but adds that this netting or offsetting of revenue shown will not occur until that fund is supported by legislation. For the moment its purpose is simply to convey information.

While the arguments here are very technical, the real issue is the question of the form in which the government prepares the Blue Book of Estimates for submission and tabling in the House of Commons. Members will appreciate that the form of the Estimates has been the subject of debate for many years and I expect that will continue. As I understand it, changes have been taking place over the years as a result of recommendations from many quarters, including the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. But this is an ongoing matter of public debate and not for the Chair to decide.

Therefore, while the hon. member has submitted very interesting arguments, and while the Chair will continue to rule on the propriety of votable items, I must rule that the matter raised by the hon. member does not constitute a valid point of order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TRIBUTE TO MR. DINSDALE, DEAN OF THE HOUSE, ON THIRTY YEARS OF SERVICE

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Madam Speaker, I have a correction to make to Hansard. It concerns the kind remarks that you made at the opening of today's session. You attributed to my record the career of alderman, mayor and MLA. I wish to inform Your Honour that that is the record of my father. Between the two of us we have 50 years of public service. Next year Brandon will be celebrating its centennial.

Madam Speaker: I can see there are many distinguished members in your family.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions be will be answered today: Nos. 853, 1,283, 2,352 and 2,441.

[Text]

AHOP—REPOSSESSIONS

Question No. 853—Mr. Stewart:

1. Since its inception, how many homes were purchased under the Assisted Home Ownership Plan (AHOP) in the constituency of Simcoe South and what was the total value?

2. For the same period (a) how many homes have been re-possessed by the government (b) how many owners have filed quit claims, signed units over to the mortgage holder or walked away from their investment and what was the total value?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of Public Works): I am advised by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows:

1. CMHC does not record data on a constituency basis. However, during the period 1973 to 1978 approximately 530 AHOP units were approved in the Simcoe South area, the vast majority being in the city of Barrie. The total value is approximately $15,900,000.

2. In the CMHC Barrie office area which includes the counties of Grey, Bruce, Simcoe and Muskoka district, 1,541 AHOP units were approved. Of these, 235 units had been repossessed by CMHC. Information on the number of quit claims received or the total value of the repossessions is not available.

ENTERPRISE DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

Question No. 1,283—Mr. Herbert:

In each of the past five years, what amount was contributed to the Enterprise Development Program (EDP) fund and, by how much per cent, did the annual contribution change in constant dollars?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned:

	Expenditure	1973/74 Dollars*	Per cent change from previous year
1975/76	28.2 million	22.0
1976/77	26.9 million	19.2	− 12.72
1977/78	34.0 million	22.7	+ 18.23
1978/79	20.6 million	12.9	− 43.17
1979/80	38.5 million	22.0	+ 70.54

* Using the implicit price index for the gross national expenditure published by Statistics Canada, the above values have been computed in terms of the F.Y. 1973/74 dollar.

IMPORT OF JAPANESE AUTOMOBILES

Question No. 2,352—Mr. Herbert:

1. To the knowledge of the government, does France restrict Japanese imports of automobiles to three per cent of its car market?

2. In the past three years, what percentage of the Canadian car market was held by Japanese automobile imports?

3. What is the estimated number of man-years of employment created by the manufacture of 1,000 automobiles in Canada?

Mr. D. M. Collenette (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Statistics Canada as follows:

1. There is no quota on the importation of Japanese cars into France but there is an informal arrangement which limits the market share of Japanese cars to 3 per cent.

2. In the past three years, the following percentage of the total Canadian passenger car market was held by Japanese passenger car imports:

1978—11.4 per cent

1979—8.0 per cent

1980—14.8 per cent

1981—(2 months)—20.2 per cent.

3. No cars are wholly manufactured in Canada. Extensive use is made of imported components.

The 1979 statistics for motor vehicle manufacturers, show that 39,008 person-years were used in the production (assembly) of 1,586,238 vehicles, of which 960,614 were automobiles, 615,326 were trucks and 10,298 were buses. The employment figures cannot be allocated by type of vehicle.

Based on these data, the average number of person-years used in the production (assembly) or 1,000 vehicles was 24.6, in 1979. Productivity in the automotive industry does vary considerably by volume of production run and is therefore significantly influenced by the size and type of automobile.

In addition to employment in the actual production (assembly) of vehicles, there is significant employment associated with the manufacture of automotive parts and components as well as with the manufacture of products such as steel, aluminum, glass, rubber, plastics, etc., which go into the components themselves.

The total impact on the suppliers industries including parts manufacturers, material suppliers, etc. brings the total person-years to about a maximum of 150.

DEPARTMENTAL QUALITY PROGRAM EVALUATIONS

Question No. 2,441—Mr. Herbert:

Which departments have the basic capacity to conduct quality program evaluations and which departments are expected to be added to the list during the next year?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (President of the Treasury Board): 1. At present the office of the Comptroller General, program evaluation branch is working with over 30 departments. In order for these departments to meet the OCG expectations, they must have a DM approved organization, a departmental program evaluation policy and an approved program evaluation plan. As of March 30, 1981, a total of 14 departments have all three requirements. These are: Agriculture, Customs and Excise, Fisheries and Oceans, Environment Canada, Veterans Affairs, Energy, Mines and Resources, External Affairs, Indian and Northern Development, Industry, Trade and Commerce, Labour Canada, Ministry of Transport, National Health and Welfare, Correctional Services Canada and Taxation.

2. It should be noted that as of March, 1981, 20 program evaluation plans had been approved by the deputy ministers while four more departments had draft program evaluation plans.

3. In terms of these departments with which the office of the Comptroller General maintains active liaison, it is estimated that at least 12 additional departments will have the basic capacity necessary to produce quality evaluations by March, 1982. These are: Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Canadian International Development Agency, Public Works Canada, Department of Regional Economic Expansion, Department of Supply and Services, both the Supply and Services Administrations, Employment and Immigration, Justice, National Museums, RCMP, Secretary of State, Statistics Canada.

4. Other departments and agencies may have the basic capacity for evaluation. To enhance its over-all effectiveness, the program evaluation branch at present maintains active liaison only with the larger departments, accordingly it may not be aware of the state of development in all agencies.

5. During the past two years, the office has emphasized the establishment of the evaluation function in departments. Now that the function is in place in most major departments, our emphasis is being redirected to ensuring that the quality of the evaluation studies is improved. This will require professional development of those officers already in the program evaluation units in departments and reallocating skilled staff from other functions.
