there has been no evidence produced of any sentiments having been entertained or expressed, but on the contrary whenever she has been interrogated on the subject, who has declared her belief in God and in the principles of Christian Religion, as recorded in the New Testament; in addition to which she has produced a great deal of testimony as to her good conduct and attendance on religious worship, and as to the discipline preserved in her School, the progress of the children under her charge, and their moral improvement; and as to her teaching the Creed, the Lord's Prayer and the ten Commandments, and the Catechism generally, and as to the use of the Testament in her School and books againt which no exception could be taken.
