LONDON, SATURDAY, AUG. 13.

THE SANATORIUM AT BYRON.

The agitation which for several years has been in progress in this community for the adequate local care and treatment of consumptives, has at last resulted in the well-appointed sanatorium at Byron. It is now in working order and there is every reason to believe the administration is in good hands. Already several patients have been received, and there are nearly a score of applications for admission.

The location of the sanatorium is very favorable, and the various buildings are after the most approved models. Persons who profess to know say that the Alexandra Sanatorium is one of the most up-to-date and complete institutions of the kind on the continent. Thus a reproach to London of long standing has been removed.

The refusal of the County of Middlesex, as represented by its municipal council, to join with London, Elgin and St. Thomas in the support and maintenance of the institution, is the one disappointing feature. Possibly it is the Middlesex councillors' method of showing resentment because of the way their previous offer was treated. When an attempt was made to legalize their former grant of $4,000 without entailing the expense of a vote of the ratepayers, it was thwarted by a committee of the Legislature. The councillors may be still smarting under that rebuff, but when they see con-sumptives within the county borders refused admission to a haven so close at hand, they may feel that they have made a mistake, and assumed a grave responsibility.

Meantime, London, Elgin and St.
Thomas are to be congratulated on having discharged a duty to humanity, and fulfilled an obligation which should weigh on the conscience of every community.

BALLINGER STEPS DOWN.

The resignation of Mr. Ballinger, United States secretary of the interior,
is the climax of a furious controversy.
Ballinger has been accused of too friendly relations with the Guggen-heims and other interests, which have been persistently attacked ever since his appointment, on the ground that he was not a fit man to direct the great policy of conservation, conceived by Roosevelt, to which the Taft administration is pledged.

Public attention was focussed on the matter by Gifford Pinchot, the head of the forestry department, who publicly affirmed that this policy was being betrayed by Ballinger, to the advantage of the "interests." Pinchot was dismissed for his act of insubordination, and has since headed a revolt. Taft has hitherto defended Ballinger, but has evidently decided it politic to yield to the great body of opinion which has sided with Pinchot.
The Pinchot affair is only one phase of the insurgent movement which threatens to overthrow or revolutionize the Republican party. Within the past fortnight insurgency has triumphed in Iowa and Kansas, in the Republican primaries. Primarily it is aimed at the vices of the tariff system, but it is an uprising against the general tyranny of greed and corruption in the party. The insurgents profess to be loyal Republicans, but in states where they cannot secure control of the party machinery, they will not fall in readily behind the reactionists. The Democratic party has its best opportunity in twenty years, but the Democrats have few reputable leaders, and have no clear-cut and courageous programme.

CANADIAN-WEST INDIAN TRADE.

In an article in the National Review, discussing the work of the royal commission on trade between Canada and the West Indies, the belief is expressed that a probable outcome of the commission's labors will be the "bringing within the pale of practical politics a comprehensive measure of commercial reciprocity between the Dominion and the separate islands in the Caribbean, with their diversified interests, which are gradually being drawn into the orbit of the United States."

According to the writer, Canada alone is in a position to arrest this tendency toward a non-imperial centre, and the fact that every nation in the temperate zone must try to obtain a foothold in the tropics leads him to the belief that Canada will make an effort to this end.

time a part of the Canadian confederacy, and it is pointed out that Jamalica, with its important fruit trade with the United States and the income it derives from its position as the American Riviera, is not likely to be persuaded to enter into a treaty of reciprocity with Canada such as Barbadoes and British Guiana, where sugar is the chief asset, would be willing to accept.

The writer refers to what he calls a feeling of bitterness between the Canadian refiner and the West Indian planter, each accusing the other of securing for himself all the benefits of the preference. The Canadian regulations now permit refiners to import not more than 20 per cent of their raw sugar from non-British sources at preferential rates, so that at the present rate of consumption the refiners can import from other than British sources 50,000,000 pounds of sugar a year. Last year, as a matter of fact, 34,000,000 pounds, or about 14 per cent, of the total imported, were from such sources. What the West Indian planters evidently desire is the cancellation or a modification of the 20 per cent privilege, and it is by no means unlikely that the Canadian Government may be willing to allow a reduction of perhaps one-half, limiting the amount to be imported from outside sources to 10 instead of 20 per cent, of the imports. The correspondent of the London Times with the Canada-West Indian trade commission, expresses the opinion that such a concession would probably remove the last obstacle in the way of a fairly comprehensive tariff agreement to which Barbadoes, British Guiana, and probably Trinidad, would become parties, with several of the other islands.

CANADA'S COAL DEPOSITS.

The coal tests begun by the Dominion department of mines at McGill University in 1907 have been completed and a report thereon is in process of preparation. It has been found that no coal fields of importance occur in Canada between eastern New Brunswick in the east and Saskatchewan and Western Manitoba in the west—a distance of 2,000 miles—but throughout this great coalless territory there are numerous and very extensive fields of peat, which are wholly undeveloped.

The department has divided the coal fields of the country into four sections and estimates the extent of deposits as follows: Section 1 (the Maritime Provinces), bituminous coal only, 10,- 000,000,000 tons; section 2 (Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia), anthracite, 40,000,000 tons, bituminous 80,000,000,000, lignite 80,- 000,000,000; section 3 (the Pacific coast and western mountains), anthracite 10,000,000 tons, bituminous 2,000,000,000 tons, lignite 1,000,000,000; section 4
(the Mackenzie basin), lignite only,
1,000,000,000 tons. In addition, there are certain small fields, notably one in Ontario, of no present interest, containing some millions of tons of lignite peat, and others of doubtful extent and value in the far north.

The coals of section 1 are similar to the ordinary grades of English and Scottish coals, make fair coke, and on the whole are fair to good steam coals.
They are largely exploited and at present provide the largest part of Canada's supply. The coals of section 2 are enormous in quantity, but are less uniform in quality. They are largely exploited by the western railway companies. The bituminous coals range from very high grade steam down to some of the most inferior grades of coke, while those which do not are useful for steam and domestic purposes. The western coast coals are best developed in Vancouver Island, where they have been mined for many years. They are more or less normal bituminous, and some of them coke well. In general, they are excellent for domestic use and for steam raising. These coals are found along what will likely be the western extension of the Crown's Nest branch of the C. P. R., near the line of the G. T. P. and the upper navigable waters of the Yukon. Of the lignite of the Arctic-Mackenzie basin the department has as yet little to say.

Insurgency is the most hopeful movement in United States politics since Grover Cleveland fought his last campaign.
As Dr. Crippen is to be tried in England, the brain-storm theory is not likely to be invoked.
Don Jaime, the Carlist pretender, is the Micawber among royalties. He has been waiting all his life for something to turn up.
The western wheat crop is poor only in spots. Canadian prosperity has gathered too much momentum to be checked by a little thing like that.
Eleven million out of the twenty million people of Spain cannot read or write. This is worse than in Manitoba, where the Government refuses to compel parents to send their children to school.
Earl Spencer, who died today, was Gladstone's choice for the premiership and leadership of the Liberal party, when the Grand Old Man retired. But the Queen preferred Lord Rosebery, a more brilliant but more erratic man.
Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux will represent Canada at the opening of the first South African Legislature. Excepting Laurier himself, no Canadian is better adapted for such a mission than the genial, eloquent and diplomatic young French-Canadian. He will be evidence to the Boers of the reconciliation of races, which should be the great aim of South African statesmanship.

Mr. R. B. Bennett, Opposition leader in Alberta, was one of the men to welcome Sir Wilfrid Laurier at Calgary yesterday. Mr. Bennett was a dashing figure in the by-election in this city in 1905. He then predicted there would be bloodshed in the west as a consequence of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's school policy. Since then he has led a party of two in the Alberta Legislature.

DISADVANTAGE OF VERACITY.
[New York Sun.]
Washington boasted that he couldn't tell a lie.
"Then you will have to own up that you didn't enjoy your vacation," his father replied.
Herewith the youthful George shivered at the prospect.

OVERHEARD IN THE SUBWAY.
[Lippincott's.]
"Oh, say, Mame," said the very thin girl with the overwiping pompadour.
"You know that swell fellow we got talking to when we were in bathing down
the beach?"
Mame stopped her gum-chewing long enough to signify that she did.
"Well, after you left, he said some awful nice things to me. He said my arms reminded him of the Venus de Milo's."

SURE TEST.
[Washington Star.]
"What makes you so sure you know exactly how much money that man makes per annum?"
"I got him to express his honest opinion as to the figure at which there should be exemption from all income tax."

A YOUNG THEOLOGIAN.
[London Sketch.] Minister—And how did Noah spend his time in the ark?
Small Boy—Fishing.
Minister—A very reasonable suggestion,
my lad.
Small Boy (guardedly)—But he wouldn't catch muckie.
Minister (surprised)—What makes you think that?
Small Boy (knowingly)—Because, ye see,
he had only two wiv-r-m-s.

PROTECTING THE MEN.
[An Act of Parliament in the Reign of Charles II.]
"All women of whatever age, rank, profession of degree, whether virgins, maid-ens, or widows, that shall from after the passing of this act impose upon and betray into matrimony any of His Majesty's male subjects by feigning paleness, cosmetics, washes, artificial teeth, false hair, Spanish wool, iron stays, hoops, high-heeled shoes or bolstered hips, shall incur the penalty of the laws now in force against witchcraft, sorcery and such like misdeemeanors, and that the marriage upon conviction shall stand null and void."

AROMATIC EFFECTS.
[Washington Star.]
"What you ought to do," said the physician, "is to take the air in an automobile at a moderate pace."
"Can't I stay at home and open a can of gasoline?"

KING GEORGE GETS A POINTER.
[New York Times.]
King George V. of England was telling a group of friends of some of his experiences since the British crown and seaside came into his keeping.
"I was at an informal tea the other afternoon," said the king, "and bidding my distinguished hostess good-bye, when my little daughter, who is about 7 or 8 years come forward timidly, looking as if she had something to say. She was a beautiful child, and when her mother formally presented her she looked pretty and said in a loud, clear voice:
"I think your Majesty is a very wonderful man."
"Why do you say that, my dear?" I asked.
"Because," said the little girl,
"mamma told me to."

THE MOST MELANCHOLY DAYS.
[Baltimore Sun.]
The end of a summer vacation is the most melancholy period in the life of man.
LOVELY WOMAN.
[Harper's Bazar.]
Smith—She makes her boy wear long curls.
Jones—But she makes her husband get up to cut the grass before the catches the flies.

PARALLEL CASES.
[Philadelphia Ledger.]
"Don't you think it foolish for a country as rich as Brazil to buy a $14,500-99 battleship?"
"I'm not in a position to be critical.
Fact is, I just bought an automobile myself."

YELLOW.
[Puck.]
Friend—I suppose there is a great deal of money in contributing to the leading magazines.
Author—Yes; but there's a great deal more in contributing to the misleading ones.

THE FATAL CAKE.
[Chicago News.]
Mrs. Newed-Oh, John, I baked a cake this morning and set it out on the window sill, and a tramp came along and stole
it. I feel like crying.
Newed-Oh, don't cry. One tramp less in the world doesn't matter.

CHOICE IN CHILDREN.
[New York Times.]
Representative Olcott, of New York, has a neighbor who has two children,
a boy and a girl. This same neighbor recently adopted a little girl.
The sister and brother looked the adopted sister over carefully and made some disparaging remarks about their superiority.
"Well," sniffed the little adopted girl,
"your papa and mamma had to take you,
but they chose me."

THE KILLING PACE.
[S. E. Kiser, in Chicago Record-Herald.]
Through all the year he toils away,
And saves a little day by day,
Through self-denial,
His fingers are debauched with ink,
And often he has cause to think
That life's a trial.
He sadly turns from pleasures which
Are only for the idle rich
And for the lucky;
He might sometimes bewail his lot
To her who shares it, were his lot Almighty pluck!
His hours are long, he finds it hard
To win his fellow-man's regard,
Without some splurging;
He's idle only when he sleeps;
Necessity tenaciously keeps Forever urging.
His trousers sag around the knees,
His whiskers futter in the breeze,
He always wears a last year's hat,
His general make-up is that Shown by the needy.
He might sometimes have peace of mind
And sweet contentment gladly find,
Freely from his labors,
If he could get his wife to try
To quit endeavoring to vie
With their rich neighbors.

DEW MAY EMBARK AT RIMOUSKI, QUE.

Not Known by What Steamer
Crippen Will Be Taken Back.

Quebec, Que., Aug. 12.—Whether Crippen and Miss Leneve will return to England by the steamer Royal Edward or Lake Manitoba is not yet decided upon, and probably will not be known until the arrival of Sergeant Detective Mitchell, who is expected here Sunday morning on board the Lake Manitoba. Both steamers are scheduled to leave Quebec on Thursday next, but a report is in circulation that Inspector Dew and Detective Mitchell may convey their prisoners to Rimouski and take passage at that place. No photograph of the prisoners has been taken, although one enterprising photographer succeeded in photographing a man named Guilloit behind the prison bars and insists it is Crippen's photograph.

The latter, upon Jailer Morin's advice, never stands or sits at the side, so as not to be photographed by the Kodak hand which always is to be seen promenade in front of the jail.
Neither of the prisoners has seen a clergyman, nor has either asked to see one, and their only apparent anxiety is to leave Quebec as soon as possible.
All kinds of offers have been made the prisoners to give out a story of their lives, but in each case the offers were turned down.

Inspector Dew had an interview with the deputy attorney-general yesterday, but what transpired is not known. It is generally believed that the object of the interview was to decide on the return date of the prisoners.

GREY STREET CHILD
REMOVED FROM HOSPITAL.

Little Anita Foster, Who Was Terribly Burned, Slowly Recovering.

Little Anita Foster, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Foster, of 325 Grey street, who was so terribly burned about six weeks ago, when she set fire to her clothes with a match, has recovered sufficiently to be removed to her home from Victoria Hospital. The child is, however, totally unable to move, or even to sit up, as a result of the terrible burns. She is recovering very slowly, and although the physicians believe that she will make a complete recovery, it will be some time. Mr.
and Mrs. Foster wish to express their gratitude to the nurses and staff at Victoria Hospital for the splendid care and attention they gave the child.

DOG LAW EXPIRES
ON SEPTEMBER 7

Just in Time to Prevent Interference With Big Show at Western Fair.

Secretary Hunt, of the Western Fair, who wrote Dr. Rutherford at Ottawa, recently asking how the managing order would affect the dog show here, received word yesterday that the order will expire on Sept. 7, but that it may be renewed. He stated, however, that dogs can come into the show for the show, but in case of any trouble there might be considerable difficulty in getting them away.
"We expect to have a bigger show than ever before," he told the managing committee of the Western Fair.
The dog show, which is one of the features of the fair, will be held on Tuesday evening.
We have the whole field as far as York to draw from, and are going to have a splendid show judging by the applications I am receiving. The committee of the dog show committee will be held on Tuesday evening."

NEW LINE OF TELEGRAPH

Will Soon Be Put in Commission Along
Line of G. T. P.
Fort William, Aug. 13.—That the telegraph wires of the Grand Trunk Pacific and Transcontinental Railways between Fort William and Winnipeg will be put in commission at five hours' notice, is the statement of
A. B. Smith, manager of Grand Trunk Pacific Telegraphs, who is here from Winnipeg. He is supervising the installation of a permanent telephone and telegraph extension from the company's offices at West Fort William to their lake terminals on the Mission.
He says that the company is building the line very just as rapidly as the railway is being completed, and that the telegraph system between Lake Superior Junction and Winnipeg has been completed for some weeks.
The line will be connected with the Fort William-Lake Superior line as soon as the contractors turn over the road to the company, which will probably be some time next month.

Supreme President.
Ottawa, Aug. 12.—The supreme grand lodge, Sons of England, elected the following officers this morning: Supreme president, T. Ferguson, Toronto; supreme vice-president, E. A.
Miller, Aylmer, Ont.; supreme secretary, J. W. Carter, Toronto; supreme treasurer, B. Hinchcliffe, Toronto;

itors, Messrs. Clay and Barbour, Toronto.

Dysentery is a dangerous disease,
but can be cured. Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy has been successfully used in nine epidemics of dysentery. It has never been known to fail. It is equally valuable for children and adults, and when reduced with water and sweetened, it is pleasant to take. Sold by all dealers.

C. M. B. A. DECIDES TO BAR LIQUOR SELLERS

Convention Unanimously Declares to Strong Temperance Policy.

Ottawa, Aug. 12.—Amid cheers and by a unanimous vote the C. M. B. A. convention, after a session lasting till after midnight, decided to amend the constitution so that no one in future be admitted to membership who gains his livelihood from the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquor. Rev. Father McNeil, of Nova Scotia, one of the best known advocates of temperance in the Catholic Church of Canada, swayed
the convention, with a masterly appeal for temperance, pleading that the association be made a pillar of the church.
Dr. Ryan, chief medical adviser, in reply to a question, stated that the expectancy of life among those engaged in the sale of liquor was not as good as those otherwise employed. It was explained that the resolution does not apply to laboring men in breweries etc., but to those directly engaged in the sale of liquor.
The committee on law reported favorably on the motion that the constitution be amended to allow of the use of signs and passwords, and the grand spiritual adviser be asked his sanction in the matter. The holy father in Rome, by request, sent the conference the apostolic blessing.

ON HORSESHOE CURVE

Several Persons Injured in an Accident Near Caledon, Ont.

Toronto, Aug. 12.—Leaving the rails and swinging over on its side, the rear car of a C. P. R. passenger train, loaded with 25 people bound for the west, was ditched on the famous Horseshoe curve, near Caledon, Ont., at 10:30 this morning.

Two people, an old woman and a young farmer, were seriously injured.
The last six coaches of the train were filled with harvesters bound for western wheat fields.
Just as the train rounded the Horseshoe curve, which has been the scene of several fatal accidents, the last car left the rails, and turned over, rolling into the ditch.
It dragged along in the gravel for a short distance, held by the coupling.
The injured woman is Mrs. Colbeck, of Grand Valley, 52, and several of her ribs and her right wrist are broken.
Clifford Day, aged 18, a young farmer from Teeswater, Ont., jumped from the front end of the coach as it left the track, but in falling over it caught him, and pinned him below. His leg was badly bruised and is thought to be broken.
Both the injured were hurried to the Western Hospital, Toronto, where tonight they are doing well.

A "TERRIFIC FATALITY."

Hulvey, Aug. 12.—A terrific fatality occurred at the home of Mr. Levi Willis on Wednesday afternoon, Aug. 10, whereby about forty stalwarts were precipitated relentlessly into the basement of a leaky barn well-nigh nine feet in depth, whereupon Mr. Lewis Smith, tenant on the estate of Mr.
Mark Wilkins, was exhumed subsequently in a state of unconsciousness, while Mr. Willis, proprietor, got one heel badly mangled, and Harry Cole, of Derwent, sustained a contusion of one leg as a sequence, while a considerable number received a severe shaking up from the impact. The structure was an annex 20x30 feet, lying upon a hollow brick wall. The knockdown, which served as a pedestal for the overhanging, collapsed when the bents were being borne to their moorings, with the above result. The edifice was erected under the diplomacy of Mr. Robert Hare, of Derwent, the veteran farmer and contractor. A dramatic scene ensued as a sequence.
Miss Beattie has secured the principals of the Derwent public school at a salary of $500 per annum.
Mr. E. C. Munro, of Lemberg, Sask., is holidaying at his parental home here.
Miss Harkness, of Belmont, has been awarded the principalship of the public school of Nileston at the consideration of $450 per annum.
Charles Cline, M.D., of London, was elected visitor at the home of Mr. Andrew Nichol because of the indisposition of Mrs. Nichol recently.
Mr. John Marr, being elevated meritously to the benedictine state by taking into himself a wife of the daughters of the St. Thomasites, notably, Mrs. Ward, when a detachment of Italians deemed it expedient to serenade the newly capped twin with instruments of music, dancing on the pavilion, whereupon the choir of the First Presbyterian Church took up the hymn as a supplementary contingent in the ovation. The diplomacy failed in the desideratum.
Mr. John J. Campbell shipped a carload of swine on Wednesday, consigned to William Davies & Co., Toronto. The price paid was $8.40 per cwt, live weight.
Mr. D. H. McGill is going to resume the principalship of the high school at Belmont for a few weeks, because of the sad news that Mr. Montague, the Belmont teacher, had died at Galt on Sunday.
Mr. Dyer and daughter, of Oxford West, are visiting at the home of Mrs. W. H. Soole.
Miss Veda Campbell, of Newmarket, is spending her holidays at the home of her parents here.
Misses Austin, of Essex, is spending a few weeks at the home of their brother, Mr. J. S. Austin.
Miss Dobson, of Toronto, is a guest of Mrs. T. W. Strachan.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Chapman have returned from Mount Brydges.
Mr. Henry Buchanan has returned town this week.

Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Cameron have returned from a two week's visit at Perth.
Mrs. W. H. McKay, and Miss Mc-Kay, of Brantford, are visiting Mrs.
W. R. Davis.
Mr. John Howat is attending the Ottodowns grand lodge in Toronto
this week.

HANDSOME SUIT FOR ELEGANT OCCASIONS

Black satin of the better quality is much used for long coats and for suits for afternoon wear. They are unlined, simply made, and have usually only stitching and black satin buttons for ornament.

Now let girls buy formaldehyde for toilet water, and carbolic acid soap instead of violet.

For your real gentleman is going to kiss instead of shaking the hands of the ladies he knows. Also he will kneel when proposing.

At least, that's what some do in London, and American society is sitting up and taking notice.

6 Even now it's done generally in Russia, and on the stage, and in moving pictures.

The revival of chivalric manners by several London men was spontaneous, and apparently unconcerted, and the ladies seemed to like it.

A charming little frock—8750—Little Girl's Empire Dress. This ever-popular style may be developed in gingham, chambray, or percale for "every day" or general wear, or may be of silk, mull, lawn, batiste, or nainsook for more dressy occasions. A charming development in lawn, with insertions of embroidery and lace edging on the sleeves is here shown. The pattern is cut in four sizes, 1, 2, 4, and 6 years. It requires 2 1/2 yards of 36-inch material for the 4-year size. A pattern of this illustration mailed to any address on receipt of 10 cents in silver or stamps.

EXPECTATION.

Roll on, O shining sun,

As through the summer night
She comes to me.

CYNTHIA GREY'S CORRESPONDENTS

Dear Miss Grey: 1. Will pumice stone take the hair off the face and neck if I use it frequently? 2. I have a lot of hair on my face. What will it cost to have it removed by the electric needle? 3. My hair is coarse and straight. What will make it fluffy and fine? 4. What is the stone for September? X. X. X.

A.—1. Yes, and the skin also. 2. Consult a specialist. 3. Nothing will make it fine and curly, but you can make it fluffy by shampooing thoroughly every other week, and giving it an occasional dry shampoo with talcum powder. 4. Sapphire. Poppy is the flower.

The newest thing in lace veils is a light ecru or white net veil run with a deep border or scroll design in silk of several pale colors.

A novelty in the silk glove line is the elbow-length variety, which has a band of openwork about the wrist in bracelet effect, the back of the hand and the arm portion being worked with tiny scattered flowers.

Crêtonne has made several efforts to gain a foothold in feminine apparel, but this season it may be said to have arrived, for beautiful coats are made of it and it also features largely in trimming.

Large satin bows are considered smart both for hats and gowns. Some of them are so large they fairly cover the hats.

HOBBLE SKIRT SHOWS NEW STOCKING STYLES

Hosiery is so much in evidence with the short hobble skirt now in vogue that women of fashion are paying much attention to it.

The fine plain stockings are mostly black ones, for black is gaining a new ascendancy. Ladder stripes, lozenges, the Vandyke pattern, and tiny spots with openwork between are patterns that look well in wear and that add distinction to a pair of neat shoes and a short skirt.

Girls who approve of starting contrasts are taking a pleasure in the new black stockings embroidered in checker shades of red. Some of the designs used are tiny cocks and hens, which upon the instep face one another, and at the sides of the feet are repeated in still smaller guise.

Floral designs are also seen, and sheaves of wheat are embroidered upon a black or colored background. Butterflies scattered at random, sprays of ferns intertwined with leaves, and the graduated dot design scattered thickly over the lower part of the stocking find votaries.

Most uncommon of all the designs is the brocade Anglaise stocking rendered in punched holes, worked over and over with fine silk.

ALL AROUND THE HOME

The grape-fruit for breakfast should be eaten in half the night before, the seeds all carefully removed, and sugar sprinkled over the fruit, which should then be placed in the refrigerator overnight. The result is a delicious fruit for breakfast, sans all bitterness.

To clean a straw hat, cut a lemon in half and rub the cut surface over the soiled straw, squeezing the juice out while rubbing. The straw will soon be as bright as when new; then rub dry cornmeal over the straw with a sponge or rag to remove any particles of lemon. Or strain lemon juice through a fine fabric and dip an old toothbrush into the juice and scour the straw. Or dissolve tartaric acid in water to make what is practically lemon juice.

To get rid of the red water which is frequently found at the bottom of the kitchen boiler, empty it entirely and wipe dry. Then cement it with just as you would whitewash any wall, and let it dry before you put water into it. By so doing you will have no more dirty red water.

DON'T LEAD OTHERS IN TEMPTATION

Last week, an outing, which held forth every prospect of a royal good time, was given by several charitable inclined ladies and gentlemen, to a number of small boys picked from the slums of a large city. The glorious anticipations were being happily realized, when a most distressing incident occurred. Every day we had a number of visitors at the camp, and on the third day one young lady left her coat, hat and purse (which contained quite a large sum of money and her gold watch), in the main tent, while she entered into some sports on the beach. To her sorrow (and ours), upon her return the purse and contents were missing. Roll was called and one boy failed to respond. I need not weary you readers with the details of the search after the runaway, which resulted in this arrangement and a term at a reform school, the young woman recovering a small portion of her money and a badly damaged watch; but what I want to emphasize is this: We should not deliberately place temptation in the way of others, when there is a possibility of their being weak. The young lady in question might have considered that among such a class of boys it was wise to be careful, to say the least, and not make it so possible for any one of them to appropriate what was not his own.

A Big Temptation. However, do we not see the same thing done in different ways every day? Quite frequently I meet a businessman hastening to the bank—bank book in one hand and a huge package of bills in the other. There is no covering on them whatever; they are fully exposed to every eye on the street. I feel sometimes like bumping against him and trying to get a handful myself just to make things interesting. Perhaps it might awaken him to the fact that he is putting strong temptation in the way of some.

Here's Another Kind. Again, one sees women on the streets wearing their watches exposed, hanging from a slender pin, carelessly and lightly fingering their purses. If they are "lifted" while in the midst of a crowd, great is the lament and tearing. I must confess I have little sympathy for such instances, as a little care is all that is required to eliminate them almost entirely.

Many of them say daily, "Lead us not into temptation," might also add, "Help us not to lead others into temptation."

WANT TO "MAKE UP" JUST LIKE A MAN

Want to disguise yourself as a man? If you do, you must do more than put on men's clothes to escape detection. The woman who would be a man must pad her waist so that it falls straight down to the hips, like a man's. Her shoulders must be padded square to hide the slope which distinguishes a woman's form. She should wear large men's shoes, and pad the toes with cotton. Because women usually wear high heels they are accustomed to walking on the toes and the ball of the foot only. She must learn to put down her whole foot and not step mincingly. Her hair should be cut off on the temples, and the man's wig fit closely. She must bronze her complexion. To look as if she had been recently shaved she must smear gray pigment on her upper lip and then rub it off. This leaves a suggestion of shadow.

Clark's Pork and Beans

Workmen who use Clark's Pork and Beans freely feel better and can endure more than those who confine themselves more to a meat diet, and the cost is very much less. Wm. Clark, Mfr., Montreal.

"Damn the documents!" Karl shouted, springing to his feet, almost in his eyes. Damn the things! They have brought me here."

"Assuredly damn them," I agreed; "but first damn your cursed prime minister and his knave Heinrich."

"Heinrich?" Karl whispered suddenly growing calm. "I'll kill that cur." "Come," I said, leaning back in my chair and smoking my pipe. "Let's not talk of killing any one or damning anything until we have her back again."

They were mad with grief, and I could see plainly neither was fit to make a party, nor was there any chance of any kind. My heart was as heavy as theirs, for I cared for her as they could not. Yet certainly they'll have left me without a word or by their leave I took the reins of authority into my own hands.

"The news of this must not be allowed out," I counselled. "We must start off on a quiet search, now that light is coming. Zergald has no intention of murder nor will he let any harm come to her. He'll do his best to keep her safe so that it will be impossible for us to bring her before the grand dukes. I'll certainly have my own clothes, and with fresh linen we'll go out as if for an early ride. Make to the place where they were held up and follow their tracks. There must have been a dozen of them from what Barnsmark has told me. Look for the tracks, and let me know what you find."

"Aye, you have the wisdom of it," Kurimurt said, stopping in his walk to and fro.

"Thank God!" he said, his voice choked. "I brought you, and that's enough to guide us right."

"Let's get going," I interposed, rising to my feet.

"True love," Karl went on, not moving from his place, his shining eyes fast on me. "True love leads where all our affections fall."

"True love?" Kurimurt questioned vaguely, looking from one to the other.

"What do you mean?" "He means," I said, turning to the grim old Kurimurt, "that he would burst into anger if I did not doubt, yet I did not justify my feelings, for God knows they needed none."

For a brief moment Kurimurt let his gaze rest on Karl's face, as if to read confirmation of his words, and then slowly his look travelled to mine, where certainly he could see the truth, and then he spoke in a low, steady voice.

"As to my right to feel as I did; no doubt expressed that I had said ought to me. I have loved her as one man loves another."

"What must be must," I answered, and I think he and Karl caught the words, recalled quickly how they had been spoken by me before in that same room, and how they had been repeated by two, she and I, had turned the matter over. They knew then that we had decided for the time being.

Quickly we prepared for further search. The horses were led into the stable, once Karl and Kurimurt, rode down the long avenue with Barnsmark at my side. Once out of sight of the castle, the ride shared, and when in the open road, put our horses to a gallop.

We turned in through the woods a half mile farther on, and by a narrow path came out into the road, well toward the spot where the hold-up occurred.

Two hundred yards from the place I called a halt and dismounted. The other two dismounted, and here since last night," I said, examining the ground. "We'll try and see what the horses tell us."

Kurimurt nodded and I walked on, the others following. Barnsmark leading my horse.

The sun was well up and a soft morning hush was in the woods about us. The left hand road led toward the dark and damp, on the right the woods closed in to the very edge of the road, and as one passed on, the ground was seen to fall away toward the left, and below us. Suddenly a thought struck me, not at all reassuring. If I was right, we could not, I feared, track the rascals.

"Does this road come near to the lake just about here?" I asked.

"A quarter of a mile or less beyond," Karl answered.

I asked nothing more, but pressed on. Then we came to many wheel tracks, and I paused again.

"Here where you found the carriage?" I questioned. Barnsmark nodded.

"And here," I went on, pausing again some ways on, "is where we stopped?"

Again Barnsmark nodded. All could see the marks of the rascals. The road had been cut up by many feet, and in the dust two dark blood spots showed where Frederick and the groom had fallen.

"I came to bring there," Barnsmark said, nodding the right.

"Shut." "A look about, and we discovered the carcass where it had been dragged into the bushes, the saddle and bridle gone. Some boughs had been cut and thrown over."

"That's been done since last night," Barnsmark declared. "It was in the road when I reined my horses."

in her heart would follow and fight until he could fight no longer.

At last the path ended in the rocky edge of the shore and turned at the base of a big boulder to the right. I waited here for Kurimurt and Karl, and then as the path was much wider, we three went on together, side by side, saying not a word.

I kept my eyes open for some spot where it might have been possible for a boat to land.

The rocks were piled up along the shore, and as far as I could see it was a drop of five or ten feet to the water. Besides, boulders, black and round, stuck their heads from the surface, and it seemed almost impossible for a boat to get in closer than a hundred feet or over.

Thinking that the landing had been made above us, I stopped and looked back for an opening in the shore.

"There's a narrow channel beyond," Karl said, reading my thoughts.

We went on, and in a deep break in the shore, where a mountain brook undoubtedly found its overflow in the spring, was a narrow sandy beach.

The mark of a boat keel was plainly to be seen and many feet had cut the hard sand.

"That's Karl, first," I said. "I nodded, and Kurimurt uttered a deep growl, for among the many footprints was one smaller than the others."

For a moment we stood there, the three of us, looking across the lake, as if trying to read in its trackless waters which way the boat had gone.

Then suddenly my eyes fell on the dark outline of Zergald's castle. Why hadn't the thing come to me sooner? I looked at Karl, then at Kurimurt, and saw their eyes were resting on the same dark towering walls.

CHAPTER XXVI. We went back more quickly than we came down, Kurimurt and Karl cast into deeper despondency than before.

To me there was no reason to feel still more depressed, for we had simply cornered our suspicious Zergald. I reasoned that no harm to befall her, so where but in his castle could she, under the circumstances, be so long?

I went on, and Zergald, I reasoned, would not have been so long if he had not been there. I had no time to lose now.

"You, Karl, ride back to the city and look about you, arouse no suspicion, but find if Heinrich is around. I counselled, as I saw the flash in his eye, "Keep a devil tongue in your head, if you see him or Zergald. We need every hand now, and Zergald would be glad to put you under arrest."

Karl nodded as he sat there on his horse, but as he rode off I again counselled the others.

"Don't spoil the whole thing by any hot-headedness. We'll have her back again in a day."

Then the three of us rode back slowly. "You think Zergald has her in his castle?" Kurimurt asked.

"It's very likely." "Then why not storm the place? I can raise a force at any time."

I said the idea had been brooding in my mind since we had left the water's edge, but I had not hastened to disagree with him.

"How many men can you count upon?" I asked.

"A thousand." "Any cannon?" "Yes."

"How long would it take to capture the castle?" "He'll have no more than a handful within."

"Undoubtedly." "We'd be inside by morning." "If you were unopposed."

He looked at me sharply. "Zergald," I added, "might feel your raising armed force and training cannon on his part."

"We could hold him off and still get in tomorrow."

"By the time you did we'd have a fifty-fall fight on our hands, don't you think?"

"Yes, but what of it? Who fears the fight?"

"Not I for one," I answered, smiling. "But I do fear civil war. We had one in America, and I speak not from prejudice, but from knowledge."

"Civil war," he repeated after me. "Yes."

ALAS! POOR TORONTO

Now It's C. N. R. Head Offices Going to Montreal.

Montreal, Aug. 13.—Sooner or later Montreal will become the headquarters of the Canadian Northern Railway and Steamships systems and Mr. William Mackenzie's continued trips to this city are for the purpose of bringing about the change.

This fact became known today when a question was asked at the local offices here as to why Mr. Mackenzie was such a frequent visitor to Montreal, now when a short time ago it was hard to get that gentleman to grace the city with his presence more than once or twice a year.

The change from Toronto will not be made for some time to come, but it will come eventually.

WINDSOR GIRL DROWNED

Esma Esma Scully Was in Party Run Down in Toronto Bay.

Detroit, Aug. 12.—A telegram received at the Scully home, 17 Ouellette avenue, Windsor, yesterday morning, said that Miss Esma Scully, 19 years old, second daughter of E. I. Scully, county court stenographer and real estate dealer, had been drowned in Toronto Bay.

The telegram gave no details of the drowning, but later news says that she was one of a party of twelve who were sailing on the bay late in the evening and were run down by the ferry boat Mayflower at Centre Island, 150 feet from the wharf. The occupants were all thrown into the water, two girls, including Miss Scully, and one man, being drowned.

Miss Scully stopped at Toronto to visit friends on her way home to Windsor from the Muskoka lakes district, where she, with her aunt and sister Antoinette and brother, O'Brien, had been spending a couple of weeks. Her father was in New York. She was reached by telegram yesterday, and at once left for Toronto, where she will probably arrive home tomorrow. The mother died about a year ago.

Back To Work

The good health you won at seaside or mountain, can be retained by using

"MONTERRAT" Lime Fruit Juice.

Now that people are coming back to town, it is highly important to guard against the dangers of Typhoid. The water is low at this season, and unless precautions are taken, Typhoid Fever will again become epidemic.

At the Molson Laboratory of McGill University, experts took a glass of water teeming with Typhoid germs, and added to it two table-spoonfuls of "MONTERRAT" Lime Fruit Juice. At the end of fifteen minutes, all the Typhoid germs were killed.

What affords an absolute protection against contracting typhoid through impure, disease-laden water?

Simply add "Monterrat" to the drinking water and the whole household will be protected against typhoid. It is also unnecessary to boil the water if "Monterrat" is added.

Inland Revenue Department Bulletin No. 197 shows that "Monterrat" is genuine Lime Fruit Juice, free from adulterants and preservatives—nothing but pure lime juice and the best juice in the world. Druggists and grocers have it.

Send for free book of dainty drinks and luscious desserts made with "Monterrat" Lime Fruit Juice. It will give you a lot of new ideas.

STANAGE'S ERROR COSTLY

Detroit Catcher Dropped a Foul and Heavy Swat Was Not Prevented.

Detroit, Aug. 12.—The Athletics have some and there is no one showing any great regret over their departure for the series just closed instead of being a stepping stone for the Tigers to capture their fourth pennant proved to be a benefit to Connie Mack's men, for they took yesterday's game by a 7 to 4 score through the aid of three home runs and a half dozen errors by the Tigers they also walked off with the series, 3 to 1.

Oscar Stanage, who started the game by catching three runners stealing in the first inning, was guilty of a misplay in the seventh to which the Tigers' downfall can be directly attributed. Although at the time of the misplay it looked less costly than any of the other five slips by the Tigers, it turned out to be the one that would undoubtedly have prevented defeat.

In the eighth inning with the score a tie, two on bases and one out, Ira Thomas lifted a little pop foul in back of the plate and Stanage, who was under the ball, let it slip through his hands. Then the Tiger cast-off, to show his appreciation, smashed the next ball pitched past Cobb for a home run, bringing in two runners ahead of him and winning the game. There was no more scoring by either side.

Jennings was ordered from Bennett Park here last Wednesday by Umpire Kerin for disputing a decision when Coombs, of Philadelphia struck out Ty Cobb.

REVOLTING CONDITIONS BROUGHT TO LIGHT
 Washington Authorities Will Hold a Rigid Inquiry Into White Slave Traffic—A Woman's Story.

Washington, Aug. 13.—Revolting conditions of "white slave" traffic within the shadow of the national capital are being investigated by the police here today, following a conversation made by Mrs. Katherine Berkeley, aged 23, last night. Walter J. Bursius, 26 years old, has already been arrested and the investigation is expected to reveal conditions worse than those of the Irish Guards, in the inquiry in Boston, Philadelphia, Buffalo, Chicago and New York. Both negroes and whites are involved in the traffic here. Bursius will be tried on charges that may result in a sentence of 40 years imprisonment and $15,000 fine.

 Walter H. Fills, father of the woman, is a local shoe dealer. He said his daughter was a wayward disposition, and that he warned her against evil associations, but later she fell under the influence of Bursius. Three years ago the woman was married to Guy Berkeley. Her husband left her a year ago, though no divorce was obtained. The woman says she married Bursius then, and he bears out the statement. Detective Evans, of the central office, was immediately dispatched to the case, and assisted by Officer Hood, of the sixth precinct, Bursius was arrested. He was taken to jail and held for trial before Judge Aukam this morning.

ARMY OF PILGRIMS GOING TO MONTREAL

Toronto, Aug. 13.—Thousands of Catholics from every town and city in Western Ontario are already arranging to attend the Eucharistic congress in Montreal next month. From Toronto alone there will in all probability be more than five thousand delegates, and there are estimates that the total number of pilgrims will be in the neighborhood of 10,000.

The parish priests throughout the Archdiocese of Toronto are actively engaged in planning out transportation methods that will enable the greatest possible number of the faithful to attend this, the greatest Catholic gathering in the history of the world, as Rev. Dr. Roche, the editor of the Catholic Register and Extension, expressed it. Various schemes have been proposed by which to convey the vast army of modern pilgrims to the metropolis. But only a few of these have as yet shaped up definitely.

SIMPLE TRICK TO HOLD RUNNERS

Some of the simplest tricks are most effective in baseball. For instance, while every effort has been bent for years to devise a way to keep runners close to the bases, nothing is more effective than a bluff throw to either first or second, followed by a quick delivery to the plate. The illustration shows how a runner is forced to return to second base by the pitcher's bluff to throw. While the runner is still going toward the bag, or is near it, the pitcher, hastily resuming his position facing the batter, delivers the ball before the runner has opportunity to get a long lead.

GOSSIP OF THE WORLD OF SPORT

Gov. Hughes seems to have hung the everlasting blunder upon the horse game in the Empire State. Saratoga without Canfield or the ponies promises to become a "deserted village."

Jack Johnson continues to pester Joe Woodman. Some day the champ will become peeved and accept Woodman's challenge on behalf of Langford. A large percentage of sport followers believe Sammy has John Arthur's nanny.

The Cubs have it on the Giants. During 1909 the latter team defeated Chicago's crowd, but three times on the Polo grounds. The record this year is worse.

Just as an example of the sort of stuff pulled off by Charley Murphy, the Cub owner, Chicago traded Substitute "Pin" Huggins, a lumbering pitcher for Foxen, a Phillie star. Who owns the Cubs and Phillies?

The way Mel Sheppard is clipping records on the cinder path ought to be inspiring as a model of young athletes into the game of spiked shoes and small clothes.

The pitcher who winds up with men on bases won't last long in any company. If the manager knows anything, he'll let it about time to start an agitation for an international challenge for the America's cup? Tommy Lipton please take notice.

England is to send another polo team after the Meadowbrook cup next year.

Bill Bradley, greatest of third basemen, released by Cleveland, will probably go to the National. Many a manager believes Brad will come back. Birdie Cree, the Highlanders' clean up hitter, is one of the little men of baseball. He is the reincarnation of Bill Lange, once he gets into action, however.

Fred Snodgrass, the made over player, is chasing Cobb, Lajoie and Speaker for that automobile that goes to the boss slugger in the two big shows.

Horse racing is on its last legs in New York, and what they get away from Saratoga is its goodbye to the pigskin and silks for these many years.

Because of the fact that his head now resembles a balloon, Ty Cobb is not the most popular person in baseball. The attitude of the Georgia peach about which so much has been written lately, is one that deserves a few of those $100 flatters, calculated to cool the most fiery temper when properly applied.

Among the "youngsters" said to be slated for fast company this fall are Swacina and Sid Smith. Seems we're seeing in them the big league type before. Wonder if they're expected to "come back."

One reason why Jack Johnson isn't going to live in Brooklyn is that gas wagons are popular in that city. The attitude of the Georgia peach about which so much has been written lately, is one that deserves a few of those $100 flatters, calculated to cool the most fiery temper when properly applied.

MISLEADING NAMES.

A vast number of incorrect notions are acquired by reason of misleading names, but after all it is of any particular importance, so long as we get what we are after? For instance, we go into a store and ask for a Dutch clock. We get a clock, the kind we are after, so it does not really matter that it is not a Dutch clock at all, but a German manufacture. Practically all the wooden clocks called Dutch are made at the village of Freyburg, in the Black Forest. It is all due to mispronunciation. "Deutsch" in German means "German."

Nothing is more natural than to assume that India ink comes from India, but it does not, and never did, any more than did India rubber. The first originated in and comes from China, and should be called Chinese ink, as it is in France, and the latter comes from Central and South America.

"Let's have an old style country dance!" someone exclaims, and immediately there jump into the mind visions of red-checked lassies and stout lads dancing gayly in the barn. The term, however, is simply a corruption of "contra dance," from the Latin contra, or opposite, and means a dance in which the partners are arranged in opposite lines, and has nothing to do with the country. "Cameo" hair brushes are not made from the hair of camels, but from hairs from the tails of Russian and Siberian squirrels. The hair of camels is, however, used for making fine fabrics, such as shawls, rugs and underclothing, and is sometimes mixed with silk.

"Genuine French briar root pipes" are not made from the roots of briars, but from the root of a white heath which reaches a considerable size and is cultivated in the South of France for pipe-making purposes. The name is derived from the French briquer, the dialect form of which is briere, means heath.

OLD BOX SEWERS TO BE REPLACED

Are Making So Much Trouble
That the Property Owners Must Put in Tile.

NO LOCAL IMPROVEMENTS

Another Batch of Petitions Laid Over by the Board of Works—West London Breakwater Is To Be Improved.

At the meeting of the board of works last night City Engineer Wright recommended that all box drains connecting with the main sewers down town be replaced, and that the property owners be instructed to put tile in instead. He pointed out that in his recent inspection of the sewers he had found many of these box drains, and they were dangerous. Some of them had already caused serious trouble and considerable expense.

On motion of Ald. Saunders, the report was accepted, and the recommendation ordered to be enforced.

Several petitions for local improvements were laid over. They had been favorably reported upon by the assessment department, but the aldermen did not wish to take any action in the matter, and they decided to lay the petitions over until they received instructions from the council.

On the recommendation of Engineer Wright it was decided to paint the York street bridge.

Improving Breakwater.
Consulting Engineer Graydon recommended that three jetties, costing $150 each, be erected on the West London breakwater. These would greatly protect the breakwater, and reduce the danger.

On motion of Ald. Saunders, it was decided to build them.

There was some debate over the awarding of the tenders for re-roofing the main building at the fair grounds. Ald. Pocock moved that the tender of the Preston people for re-roofing the roof for $1,200 be accepted. This motion was lost.

Ald. Saunders moved that the roof be shingled with wood shingles. That too, was lost.

Ald. Tancock wanted the Pedlar people to be given the contract, but the committee would not listen to that.

Finally Ald. Pocock hit upon an alternate plan, and he moved that the Preston Company be given the contract for $800, with $115 for eaves and $60 for closing in the skylights. Ald. Saunders, Ald. Pocock and Ald. Morgan voted for the motion, and it carried.

Emery Street Repairs.
A large deputation from Emery street appeared before the council and asked to have the street placed in proper repair. They pointed out that it was impossible to get their groceries at certain seasons of the year, and since the work was not sufficiently about a curb and gutter, they asked the board to roll and gravel the street. On motion of Ald. Saunders it was decided to do this work as soon as possible.

Another deputation appeared before the board, and complained about the sewer recently initiated on the Hamilton road. They claimed that there was no necessity for it, and asked the committee not to lay it.

Ald. Tancock pointed out that the work was initiated, and the belated had been prepared. The petitions against the work were not sufficiently signed and it must be proceeded with.

King Street Sewer.
On motion of Ald. Saunders it was decided to connect the King street sewer with the south Richmond street sewer. Engineer Wright and Consulting Engineer Graydon both thought it would be advantageous.

Those present were Ald. Tancock, chairman, Ald. Saunders, Ald. Pocock, Ald. Morgan, Engineer Wright, and Secretary S. Baker.

NEW FEATURES THIS YEAR

A Great Centre of Attraction Will Be
the Celebrated Western Fair.

Never before in the history of this great exhibition has there been so much interest taken and so many inquiries as this year, showing that the exhibition is becoming more and more popular each year. Every effort possible is being put forth by the management to make the exhibition what it should be in every particular. The buildings have all been renovated and repaired where necessary and the best interests of the exhibitors in all departments have been considered. As to the visitors, those who have attended the exhibition in the past will see many new and novel features this year, and those who have never attended will have a treat in store for them. There will be low railway rates from all points, lasting throughout the entire exhibition, and this year should see London filled with outside visitors as never before. All citizens of London should help boost the exhibition and thereby boost London as well. All inquiries answered at the general offices.

THE TAYLOR INJURED.

Port Huron, Mich., Aug. 12.—The steamer Moses Taylor, bound down river, was caught in the fog which hung over the upper end of the St. Clair River this morning and in rounding to she went aground just below the chain works in Sarnia. She finally released herself and was taken to the Red drydock, where a diver made an examination and found she had broken her shoe off close up to the stern post and also lost two buckets off her wheel.

The steamer Cayley, bound down river, will be here tomorrow and tow the Taylor to Cleveland, where she will be docked for repairs.

SERMON FROM SHAKESPEARE

I'll never Be such a goosling to obey instinct;
but stand
As if a man were author of himself.
And knew no local improvements.

No Local Improvements.
The highest civilization is to be found in nations where the ties of kinship are strongest. In the drama "Coriolanus," Shakespeare has created a work of art in which the interest centres round patriotism and the family.

The hero Coriolanus thought he could sacrifice both country and kin for his revenge. To do this he had to work a revolution in his nature. In the hour of his wild triumph the nobility of his character defeated his baser self and he perished miserably. His fate was not undeserved, but he was more admirable in his death than when he stood a conqueror before the walls of Rome.

There is no finer instinct than that of family love. The sacrifices it impels men to make, the suffering it enables men to endure uncomplainingly, glorifies existence. In the journey through life a man must often pause and question: Why am I here? Whither am I going? The mystery of life would weigh with unbearable heaviness on the heart were it not for the family. It is the family tie, kinship, that teaches men to be selfish.

The sacrifices that parents instinctively make for their children, children for their parents, brothers for sisters and sisters for brothers are the light of the world. The family is, as it were, a training school for society. Where family life is beautiful and noble the state is the same. Indeed, the nation is but a larger family.

Humanity is spoken of as the human family. This is as yet merely a way of speaking for selfish purposes. It is not customary for members of the same family to take up swords and guns against each other. Until the nations cease fighting at each other's throats, the word family as applied to humanity is a whole farcical Turk and Greeks are about as much of the same family as are tigers and wild boars.

Family love is an instinct. Coriolanus thought himself able to crush out heart when at the approach of his mother, wife and child as suppliants, he cried out, "I'll never be such a goosling to obey instinct." This instinctive tendency to show affection to creatures related by ties of blood is universal. In the lowest and highest creatures, in the reptile and man, it manifests itself. Nature's devotion of the instinct to cherish and protect its kindred is a monstrosity. Coriolanus thought himself able to crush out the instinctive feeling that prompted him to protect rather than destroy his kindred. In the supreme moment of his agonizing and selfishness, the instinct of a mother for the good name of her son was to arouse his nobler self. She recognized that if he did succeed in his attempt against Rome as he doubtless would if he persevered in his attack on the city from the nobility of Romans he would be remembered as the basest.

"If thou conquer Rome," she cried, "the benefit Which thou shalt thereby reap is such a name shall I be proud to call my own. Whose reputation will be dogged with curses. Whose chronicles thus write,—'The man was noble, But with his last attempt he wip'd it out.' Destroy'd his country; and his name remains To th' ensuing age abhor'd."

Anyone who turns against country and kin is held in universal detestation.

In every man there is, or has been, an inward voice prompting to right action. It is the Creator speaking to the creature. In this voice more emphatically manifest itself than in prompting human beings to heed the claims of kinship. To stand as though a man were author of himself, is the supreme of selfishness. A human devil like Richard III. was alone capable of sustaining such a role. Let a man attempt to live absolutely to himself and he is likely to become an oddity or worse. The hermit is usually more or less insane; prisoners who are condemned to solitary confinement and have not the soothing influence of companions frequently become gibbering idiots; lighthouse keepers on lonely bleak islands have been so oppressed with loneliness that they have become mad; and on the monotonous plains of the great west, where men and women are left much to themselves, insanity is vastly more prevalent than in the populous east, where kindred spirits meet daily.

To determine to live a self-centered, self-contained life is a dangerous thing for anyone. Parent, wife and child are needed in a man's life for his best development. A kinless man is to be pitied; a loveless man is to be feared. A man who is not a more unpleasing object. Such a man may find happiness, but it will never be by standing as though a man were author of himself. He can only find it by recognizing humanity at its best, and by giving a loving, dutiful love to the old and feeble, by having a brotherly helping hand for any fellow-creature's distress.

There should be no war between France and Germany they could prevent it by strikes, tying up trains and supplies.

There should be no war between Socialism and anarchy. The latter are extremes. You will find that Socialism is weak in a country where there is anarchy.

The Formula of "Fruit-a-tives"

Is On the Outside of Every Box
For All the World to See

Every user of "Fruit-a-tives" knows exactly what is being taken. The formula of this famous fruit medicine is printed plainly on the outside of every box. We have stated many times—and now state clearly—that "Fruit-a-tives" is made of the juices of apples, oranges, figs and prunes, with valuable heart and nerve tonics and antiseptics.

Everyone knows that fruit juice is healthful—but perhaps some do not understand why this is true.

Fruit juice consists of about 91 per cent water, 8 per cent of sweet principle, and 1 per cent of a bitter substance. It is the quantity of bitter principle in fruit that gives the fruit value as a medicine. An eminent physician of Ottawa, after years of experimenting, found a method of increasing the bitter principle in fruit juice, thus increasing the medicinal or curative qualities.

The juices are first extracted from fresh, ripe oranges, apples, figs and prunes. By a secret process, some of the sweet atoms are replaced by the bitter principle. Then tonics and antiseptics are added, and the whole made into tablets, now known far and wide as "Fruit-a-tives."

"Fruit-a-tives" is the only medicine in the world that is made of fruit juices, and is one of the few remedies that have let their composition be known from their introduction to the public.

"Fruit-a-tives" is nature's stimulant for the liver, bowels, kidneys and skin. In cases of obstinate Constipation, Liver Trouble, Indigestion, Backache, Rheumatism, Headaches and Impure Blood, this wonderful fruit medicine cures when everything else fails. "Fruit-a-tives" is sold everywhere at 50 cents a box, 6 for $2.50, or trial box, 25 cents, or will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of price for Fruit-a-tives, Limited, Ottawa.

SPANISH PREMIER DEFENDS STAND

Lays Blame for Much of Clerical Activity to Carlists.

SAYS ARMY IS LOYAL

Denies His Policy is Inspired by the French Government and Royal Family of England.

Paris, Aug. 12.—The Paris Temps today prints a long, sensational interview with Jose Canalejas y Mendez, the Spanish prime minister, covering the recent events which culminated in the severance of diplomatic relations between the Spanish Government and the Holy See as well as his future programme which, the paper says, the premier dictated.

Canalejas begins by declaring that the movement in the north of Spain is directed by the rich Carlists, "who are inveterate separatists and enemies of the remainder of the country," and integralists, "intransigent Catholics, whose only programme is the reign of Jesus Christ."

The prime minister affirms that he possesses knowledge that the committee behind the movement spent 400,000 pesetas ($80,000) in giving the manifestants of July 10 meal tickets besides their railroad fares. After the failure of the manifestation, Canalejas says, the agitators organized juntas of which—"and I announce this publicly for the first time—village priests are the leaders."

He says he officially protested to the bishop of Vittoria and to the Vatican, but both of them replied that it was none of their concern. He says he will welcome interpellations of the Carlists, which will give him an opportunity to "lay bare the detestable conspiracy against civilization, the king and the country."

"No Religious Question," the premier continues. "It is simply an effort to exploit religious sentiment on the ground, now disproved, that the Spanish majority is clerical. The majority, as was indisputably proved at the elections, is anti-clerical. Most of the municipalities sent addresses approving the Government's policy. I have received 150,000 telegrams urging me to continue this policy."

Canalejas declares that he does not propose to use the power conferred in him, but that he will use it firmly and resolutely to establish a preponderance of civil power. It is his intention to pass a law insuring neutral official education not hostile or favorable to any creed or philosophy, but free from any dogma.

He insists that the policy of the Government is not directed against the religious orders, but he would have them pay taxes to which they were exempted by the conservative governments, and the number of orders reduced.

"If I cannot reduce the number of orders by an agreement with the Vatican, I will by law," he declares.

Wants to Reach Agreement.

The premier expresses unqualified satisfaction at the reports that the Vatican now desires conciliation and says he will make every effort to reach an agreement with the Holy See, but he maintains the bill interdicting further orders cannot be withdrawn.

"I could not withdraw that bill if I would," he says. "The Liberal party and the majority in the cortes are united on that point. Different political groups have different ideas, but they are one against clericalism."

Canalejas frankly states that the time has arrived when the question must be solved. If the Liberals fail a popular explosion, he says, is sure to follow, and he understands perfectly that his adversaries wanted a rupture with the Vatican in the hope that it would mean his downfall, under the illusion that the return of the Conservatives to power would enable them to maintain the status quo.

"But," the premier says, "the status quo is finished forever in Spain."

The prime minister declares the reports that his policy is inspired by the counsels of the French Government and the royal family of England do great injustice to King Alfonso.

Praises King Alfonso. "One might as well say that the opinion of all foreign statesmen and the intellectuality of the world weighs on the king, for there is not a single publication in civilization which does not applaud the dawn of a liberal spirit and the laicization of Spain."

"The king in the present case obeys a profound conviction. He is a fervent Catholic, but his mind is open to grand ideas and he is a serious student of contemporaneous civilization. He is a Liberal, tolerant and truly constitutional, and without forgetting his royal prerogatives will follow popular impulse. He gives his confidence to a ministry sustained by the majority of the cortes."

"The enlightened and patriotic royal army," continues Canalejas, "permits us to face with serenity all threats of trouble." He explains that the Government's object in hastening a solution of the religious question was to clear the way for the introduction of vast economic and administrative reforms for which the people are clamoring.

The premier concludes by saying that he has been minister four times, retiring on each occasion because he could not put into practice his personal ideas.

"But now," he says, "I have the power, desire and purpose to succeed. Threats will not deter me. I am in command and so long as I have a majority in the cortes and the confidence of the king I shall remain."

UNCLE SAM'S CROPS

How the Farmers Have Fared Across the Border.

Washington, Aug. 13.—The month of July was unfavorable for crop growth, taking the United States as a whole, the deterioration being about 4.2 per cent, as compared with an average decline of 2.3 per cent during July. Aggregate crop conditions in the United States on Aug. 1 were 6.5 per cent lower than on Aug. 1 a year ago, and about 5.3 per cent lower than the average condition on Aug. 1 of the past ten years. However, the area under cultivation is about 3.2 per cent more than last year. Conditions average highest in New Hampshire, 25 per cent above the average, due largely to good hay prospects; and average lowest in North Dakota, 59 per cent below the average, due to severe drought affecting all crops.

By states, the aggregate of crop conditions on Aug. 1 (100 representing the average on Aug. 1 of the past ten years) was as follows:

Maine 122, New Hampshire 125, Vermont 119, Massachusetts 111, Rhode Island 101, Connecticut 108, New York 111, New Jersey 102, Pennsylvania 104,

The condition of various crops in the United States on Aug. 1, 100 representing for each crop, not its normal condition, but its condition on Aug. 1 of recent years (ten-year average for most crops), was as follows:

Peaches 128.6, winter wheat (yield per acre) 110.5, clover (production compared with average production) 105.5, rye (yield per acre) 101.8, hops 100.1.

When Baby's Life Is Most in Danger

Summer is the season when the mother finds it most difficult to keep her little ones well. The complaints that afflict the babies during the hot summer months come on so quickly and so unexpectedly that often it is too late before the mother realizes that her baby is anything but well.

In summer the mother should make a special effort to keep baby's bowels regular and his little stomach sweet and pure, for this is the secret of successfully warding off those dangerous summer complaints. The mother will find a great friend in Baby's Own Tablets during the hot weather.

These Tablets regulate the bowels, sweeten the stomach and thus ward off or cure cholera infantum, diarrhoea, colic, vomiting, etc. Mrs. Wm. Sinclair, Bonaventure River, Que., writes: "I can highly recommend Baby's Own Tablets, as they have done my baby much good." GAYNOR ASSASSIN ATTRACTED RATS

Rodents Would Flock About Him When He Gave Love Call.

New York, Aug. 12.—Rats were the sole companions of James J. Gallagher, the man who shot Mayor Gaynor. Rats alone cared for him, at least since the death of his wife. In fact, this man, it was learned today, had some strange power that brought rats to him just as they went to the piper.

The Hamelin man had to blow a horn to attract rats, but Gallagher made a noise from deep in his throat. Such was the charge filed in the sixth district appraiser's stores, in which he worked once.

In the big warehouse where thousands of boxes and bales of goods are handled every week, it is difficult to keep out rats. They swarm into the big storerooms, Gallagher, with other workmen, used to handle the bales and boxes with the rodents running about trying to escape.

Wouldn't Retreat From Rodents.

But all the rats understood Gallagher. Sometimes they were so numerous and fierce that other workmen ran away from them, but not Gallagher. His strange power over them was not understood until one day when a number of hungry rodents had been cornered and showed fight, the men retreated.

Gallagher stuck, and began to make a peculiar noise, one that his fellow-workmen could not imitate, and therefore could not describe. At once the rats went to him. As he continued they climbed up his legs and sat on his shoulders.

His fellow-workmen, looking upon him, saw the rats gather about him with squeals of affection similar to the noise that Gallagher made. They crouched upon him from all sides. He stroked the rodents as he gave the chuckle, and they climbed all over him.

Many of the rats fattened on the refuse that had been thrown from the storerooms and the aggressive Gallagher paid no heed to their size or appearance. He cuddled them, and let them nestle in his arms.

Called Them Every Noon.

He finally put the rats away from him, but to horrify the other men he called them back every noon hour with the cry. They came through cracks in the floor and from holes in the wall.

"They are lovely animals," he often

"SPIRIT" WILL IS BROKEN IN COURT

Man's Scribbling On Death Bed "Translated" by Medium.

Washington, Aug. 13.—A "spirit" will has no standing in law, according to a ruling made today by Justice Brandeis in the supreme court of the district of Columbia. Mrs. Eliza J. Crowell, widow of the late William H. Crowell, a clerk in the treasury department, applied to the court for the appointment of the deceased's brother as administrator of his estate, and offered in evidence what purported to be a translation of an illegible message which Crowell scribbled while on his death bed, favoring his brother's appointment.

The court was unable to decipher the scrawl, but Mrs. Crowell said a "translation" had been made for her by a "late-writing medium."

"Dear Eliza: This is what I tried to write on a slip of paper: I want my brother, W. H. Crowell, Washington, U. S. A., if I should pass away with my sickness, I have perfect trust in him. * * * I believe he will deal honestly with my children. I have set aside $5,000 for the exclusive use of my wife, * * *. Give little Elizabeth and brother both $100 to put in the savings bank. Ruby met me. I have seen many folks here. This is a beautiful world. Is better than the sixth auditor's office. They can't put me out here."

Dated June 7, 1910.

Judge Brandeis appointed Mrs. Crowell, and her stepson, William B. Crowell, joint administrators. The other children opposed the decision.

GIRL OF 18 SITS ON HIGHWAYMAN

Calmly Arranges Her Hair After Chase, and Waits for Policeman to Come.

New York, Aug. 12.—An 18-year-old school girl of Brooklyn ran down a highwayman in a chase of five blocks last night. She tackled high, threw him, put the hammerlock on him, and likely would have carried him to the police station under her arm if Policeman Minion had not relieved her of that privilege.

"We were taught how to do it by playing basketball in Brooklyn," said pretty Mazie O'Brien, when Minion complimented her. She wasn't even breathing hard, Percival Archer, the hare of the chase, was held in $2,000 by Magistrate Nash for further examination in the Myrtle avenue court this morning. He was still panting when he was arraigned.

Miss Mazie O'Brien, who has attained some proficiency as a basketball player and a sprinter in the inter-school contest in Brooklyn, was accompanied by her mother, Mrs. Margaret O'Brien, to Wednesday evening meeting. On their return to their home Percival Archer made a mistake. He thought she was unprotected, so he seized her handbag and fled.

Miss Mazie O'Brien tucked her skirts up to her knees and chased the robber. She ran him up Lafayette avenue, it is a long block between Lafayette and Degood, and Miss O'Brien overhauled him at every jump. Just at the intersection of DeKalb street she overtook him, tackled high, as she had been taught in basketball, and they came to the cobbles in a heap.

Before the bursting Mr. Archer could shriek, Miss O'Brien had seized his right arm, pulled it around him, thrust the fist up between his shoulder blades, and sat upon him.

She was calmly arranging her hair, one strand of which had come loose, when a fat man panted up. The fat man had served as a marker in the house half a block further down, and it took him some minutes to reach the spot. He offered to sit upon the prostrate thief in order to make sure he would not escape, but Miss O'Brien smiled sweetly at him, and declined.

"I really do not think he can get away," said she. "This hold never slips."

THE ADVANTAGES OF OUTDOOR SLEEPING.

A good many people are discovering that it pays to sleep out of doors, and the pity of it is that so many have waited until they have no lungs to speak of before making the discovery. But now in this year nineteen hundred and ten there is what I came near calling a wave of interest in outdoor sleeping, but perhaps it may be only a wavelet. In certain communities this wavelet has rolled up into a sort of tidal wave, and it is spreading into and rolling higher month by month, so that in the course of time it will doubtless become a strong, husky breaker that shall sweep away our indoor maladies. For where outdoor sleeping has once become a fad it soon becomes a fixed habit. No one who has thoroughly enjoyed his bed in the open, night after night, and summer and winter, ever willingly relinquishes it and is generally eager to get back to it. And here are some of the reasons:

The sweet feeling of naturalness and bodily well-being.

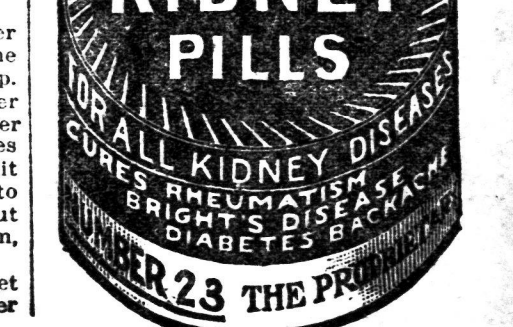

Freedom from insomnia, for which outdoor sleeping in an absolute specificity.

The wonderfully recuperative and vitalizing processes of which one quickly reaps the benefit, even though at first badly run down in physique.

The consciousness of escape from conditions that hamper if they do not actually threaten human life.

Immunity from colds and the diseases they engender.—Busy Man's Magazine.

LONDON BOY ARRESTED AT NIAGARA FALLS

Accused of Abducting a Knights Templar Charm From a Sleeping Tourist.

Niagara Falls, N. Y., Aug. 13.—John Smith, a 17-year-old boy, who claims London, Ont., as his home, was arrested yesterday by Detective George H. Sullivan and arraigned before Police Justice Piper on the charge of grand larceny. The case was adjourned until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Smith is accused of abducting a Knights Templar charm from the person of a tourist asleep in Prospect Park night before last. The charm is valued at $75.

Detective Callinan, upon investigation, found that the charm had been "hung up" in a pawnshop just before it closed last night by Irving Herrick, who is employed at Upper & Upper's livery stable on Second street, where Smith has been sleeping nights. Smith gave the charm to Herrick to sell and Detective Callinan says that they "split" the $75 received for the charm Thursday night. Smith had a get-away from a United States immigration officer on a train coming into this city from Niagara Falls, Ont., but his identity was not known at the time.

TRIES THREE WAYS TO END HIS LIFE

Jumps From Train, Shoots Himself, Eats Brimstone, Getting Better.

Fleming, Colo., Aug. 13.—In an effort to end his life, John Tague, 23 years of age, jumped from a train yesterday. As he was only slightly injured, he shot himself. This resulted in a scalp wound and Tague then ate brimstone. This merely produced unconsciousness, and now the young man is recovering.

NORMALITES HELD A FIRST REUNION

Pleasant Time Spent at Sprinkbank Park Yesterday.

The first annual reunion of the 1905-'09 Grade A. class of the London Normal School was held at Sprinkbank yesterday, and was largely attended by ex-students from all parts of the Western Peninsula.

The committee in charge spared no efforts to make the day a success. At first pedagogical discussions prevailed, but eventually even teachers indulged in less serious sports.

In the foot-race Miss Ella Baker won the prize; in the watermelon race Miss Dell Mitchell came first, while Miss Minnie Baker deserves the prize as essayist for the matrimonial bureau. Another amusing contest was the married teachers' race, in which Mrs. J. Schlehauf was champion, and for Miss Margaret Armstrong was left the prize for pedagogical catechism.

Refreshments were served.

At the close a committee was formed to arrange for a general Normal class reunion 1911, and the date was fixed for Saturday, Aug. 7, which will of course be subject to change.

The committee was composed of the following: E. Baker, D. Mitchell and M. Armstrong.

CHINESE STOWAWAYS HID BENEATH CARGO

Twenty-Five for Weeks Lived in Dark Hole Twenty Feet Square.

Seattle, Aug. 13.—Twenty-five Chinese stowaways who had eluded the inspectors at Vancouver, B.C., were captured aboard the British steamship Kumerik, recently arrived from Hong Kong, by immigration authorities yesterday. The Chinese had walled off a room twenty feet square under the cargo of the Kumerik. They had been confined to this den since the steamship left China early in July, and planned to slip ashore when the Kumerik reached Portland, where she is going to load lumber.

In their little den they cooked their food, ate and slept. A lantern, used in the search, was thrust into the room, but the poisonous air instantly extinguished the flame of the lamp. They were half clad, and some were ill from their long confinement and scant provender of tea, rice and water.

DREXEL A HERO

His Wonderful Flight and Descent the Talk of London.

London, Aug. 13.—J. Armstrong Drexel's flight Thursday night when he reached a height of 6,700 feet, and still more daring descent at a terrific pace have made him the hero of the hour.

This morning's newspapers print an extended interview with Drexel, and stories of his experiences.

Robert Lorraine, the actor, who has been weathered on at Angelsey on the Welsh coast, awaiting a favorable opportunity to attempt a flight to Ireland, had a narrow escape, being a trial flight yesterday. His machine fell to the ground and was smashed.

ATHLETICS GO AFTER THE TITLE TODAY

Martin Sheridan Will Not Be a Contender for All-Round Honors, However.

[Associated Press.]

Chicago, Aug. 13.—Twenty-one athletes, representing all sections of the country, will contest for the national all-round championship title in the competition at Marshall Field under the auspices of the American Athletic Union today. The present champion, Martin Sheridan, will not donate his title and record. He won the championship last year, scoring 7,835 points. Fred Thompson, wearing the colors of the Occidental College of Los Angeles, is expected to give J. R. Kilpatrick, the Yale man, a hard fight, with the title likely to go to either.

HUNGARY'S BEST FLOCKING TO AMERICA

Vienna, Aug. 13.—The wholesale emigration of Hungarians to America is having a detrimental effect upon the army. The recruiting movement hitherto confined to the poorer districts in the north, and the situation is becoming acute. The city has a small number of its able-bodied youths is exciting profound attention in government circles.

JUNEAU FUEL FAMINE.

Juneau, Alaska, Aug. 13.—With millions of tons of coal lying untouched in the Katalla coal fields, Juneau is in the grip of a fuel famine. The steamship companies have exhausted their retail supply, and the situation is becoming acute. The city has a small supply and is selling small lots to those in the greatest need.

GAYNOR O. K. AGAIN WITHIN TWO WEEKS

His Condition Today the Best Since the Shooting.

New York, Aug. 13.—The following bulletin as to Mayor Gaynor's condition was given out this morning:

Mayor Gaynor passed a good night. He is cheerful and his condition is very satisfactory. (Sgd.) Arlitz Stewart.

One of the hospital physicians added the following statement to the information contained in the bulletin:

"The mayor's condition is the best today that it has been since the shooting. He speaks well and is cheerful. There is nothing to cause alarm. Two weeks is not a long time, which he must remain in the hospital.

No whiskey or liquor has been admitted to the mayor since he was admitted to the hospital. He was offered a glass of champagne yesterday but declined it.

The bullet is lodged in the tissues and easily accessible. It could be extracted in five minutes with a minimum of pain. But the operation is regarded as unnecessary at present and would only add a new channel of possible infection.

The wound has been dressed only with chloroform of mercury. No antiseptics have been introduced into the wound."

PORT REAPED A HARVEST

A Huge Crowd.

At practically every point the same was true, and was an eloquent testimonial of the amount of business transacted by that company during the day.

At the Port every hotel stable was filled to suffocation. Horses were tethered wherever possible, and every bit of available space was given over to horses and rigs from the country. Many of them came from a distance. Some farmers drove 25 miles to attend the big picnic, and not a few thought twenty miles an ordinary drive.

Accurate figures as to the attendance of farmers at the picnic are difficult to obtain, but residents of the Port state that there must have been from 4,000 to 5,000 people from the country. These, with the 9,000 or more who went down to the harbor, made a grand crowd. That they had a good time goes without saying. Any person who did not enjoy the day had a peculiar disposition.

The picnic left a trail of lost articles. Scores of watches and purses are reported missing, and the tale of lost brooches and pins is a long one.

A large number of articles were lost, but there is every reason to suspect that some crooks were working the picnic.

Local police officers state that there have been many losses in the picnic, and they are confident that the work was done by "dips."

In the majority of cases, however, the loss was not great. William Mahon and F. G. Meyers lost the largest sums.

The crowd was orderly and there was a conspicuous lack of rowdiness.

The members of the L. B. S., who stood out to have the picnic held at Port Stanley, feel their cause justified by the success of the picnic.

It was thought, and rightly so, that those who benefitted directly by the affair should render some assistance, and in this the Port Stanley people did well.

The Amusement Company, the Pere Marquette, the Tracway, the Ontario and Ohio Navigation Company and others rendered assistance in the work, and as a result they received large sums of money from the picnic. The idea worked out to the advantage of all parties concerned, and good feeling prevails between the L. B. S. and the Port Stanley business men.

NO SERIOUS ACCIDENTS.

There were no serious accidents recorded to reports. In fact, it is a tribute to the efficiency of the Pere Marquette and the traction company that they could carry so many people without any loss whatever. Not even a minor injury is reported.

Tom Maxwell, of St. Thomas, an Irishman through and through, stuck to the finish. "The St. Thomas Irishmen should get together," he declared. "The two cities working together could make the picnic an even greater success."

SHAKE-UP IN CABINET

crative practice of law, which he left to take up the duties as head of the interior department.

May Sacrifice Cannon.

The retirement of Mr. Cannon is fixed for September 15. The congressional committee will have reported by that time, and the date is sufficiently early to take the campaign issue out of the campaign.

The third move in contemplation is said to be directed against Speaker Cannon. It is not admitted in Beverly that Mr. Cannon will give a mandate for the Speakership. Representative McKinley, of Illinois, a close friend of Cannon and chairman of the Republican congressional campaign committee, was asked here the other day if he thought Mr. Cannon could be elected to the chair again.

"I have not heard that he will be a candidate," was the significant reply. "The Cannon situation is a little difficult to handle. Once it is known that the President would like to see a change, however, it is believed that all doubt as to the result would be removed."

Crane Moving Spirit.

That Beverly is being made the headquarters of the movement to set the Republican house in order is now generally admitted. The various moves are being made quietly, but effectively.

Reports have reached Beverly that the recent results in Kansas and Iowa were due largely to the activity of Speaker Cannon in Kansas, to the charges against Senator Aldrich, and doubt in the west as to whether he actually intended to retire. The situation developed in these two states evidently has an impression upon the party leaders that has stirred them to action.

Senator W. Murray Crane, of Massachusetts has been one of the active forces in this new political movement. It was he who went west to see Secretary Ballinger, and it was also he who went to see Senator Aldrich at Warwick, R. I., last Sunday. Hereafter Senator Crane's movements will be watched with peculiar interest.

METEORIC SHOWERS LAST OF OLD COMET

A Brilliant Display May Take Place in Heavens Tonight.

Cambridge, Mass., Aug. 13.—Astronomers are greatly interested in the meteoric shower which is scheduled to take place in the heavens tonight, and arrangements have been made at the Harvard observatory and elsewhere to take several photographs of the brilliant display.

The meteor is supposed to be what is left of an aged comet that dissipated itself over the skies centuries ago. Some of these meteors occasionally stray off the orbit and contracted in five minutes with a minimum of pain. But the operation is regarded as unnecessary at present and would only add a new channel of possible infection.

The meteor is supposed to be what is left of an aged comet that dissipated itself over the skies centuries ago. Some of these meteors occasionally stray off the orbit and contracted in five minutes with a minimum of pain. But the operation is regarded as unnecessary at present and would only add a new channel of possible infection.

PUBLIC WORKS MINISTER VISITS PORT ELGIN

Hears of Wants of People for Harbor Improvements.

Port Elgin, Aug. 13.—Hon. Dr. Pugsley, minister of public works, Mr. Hunter, deputy minister; Mr. John Tolmie, M. P., and party arrived here yesterday at 2 o'clock on the Government yacht. The party was met by Reeve Dizzard and a number of business men and escorted to the town hall, where the wants of the people in connection with the harbor improvements were presented by H. H. Stevens, D. Geddes, A. F. George, J. C. Dalrymple and others.

Dr. Pugsley promised to consider with the minister of trade and commerce a scheme to subsidize a line of boats to make regular calls at ports along this side of the lake for a short time in order to give the various port towns a chance to work up trade. This announcement pleased the hearers.

If the scheme can be worked out to the towns along the lake will be satisfied. The party after the interview was driven around the town, and a visit paid to the Stevens-Hopner plant after the harbor improvements had been discussed in the harbor now being done. They left at 5 o'clock for Southampton.

IS LAROSE PRINCE?

Man Wanted in Europe May Be the Noted Crook.

London, Aug. 13.—Following the publication here this afternoon of the news of the arrest in New York of Wm. T. Whitehouse in connection with an alleged fraudulent mining scheme whereby the dowager Countess of Tankerville and her friend, Miss Blount, are said to have been swindled out of £2,000, Franklin C. Larose, who is believed to be the principal of the gang concerned, gave up his rooms at a Piccadilly hotel in the fashionable West End, where he had been staying since the end of May, and left hurriedly for Paris, declaring to the hotel officials: "It's getting too warm for me here. I am going to the country. While the hotel clerk took the money in your reference to the weather, those who know Larose say he is something of a humorist. Although Scotland Yard is informed of Larose's impending departure, and one of his close connections with the alleged swindle, the authorities were powerless to act, owing to the fact that they had heard nothing of him since he left the New York office, and had no complaint from Lady Tankerville. She is quite aged, and is said to be at present abroad."

"It was said at Scotland Yard last night that Larose bore a striking resemblance to Louis A. Prince, a notorious international crook, who on the occasion of his arrest on a similar charge two years ago in New York, jumped his bail of $20,000, and has not since been heard of. According to the description of Larose, furnished by the Piccadilly hotel clerk, he is an American who knew Prince well, their identity is the same."

ANOTHER ADDED TO THE INDIAN LIST

William Proctor Has His Name Subscribed to the Roll of Honor.

William Proctor, a citizen who has been appearing rather frequently of late for being drunk, was added to the Indian list by Magistrate Love at the police court this morning.

"You will simply kill yourself the way you are going," the court told him, "and I am going to put you on the list for your own benefit and as a warning to the family."

William Lockridge and Hazel Vanalstine were charged with being disorderly. Lockridge was fined $5 and the girl was let go.

Charles Bishop for being drunk was fined $5.

MARKS BAD SPOT.

Ankersburg, Aug. 13.—The tug Aldrich in command of Capt. Charles Hackett, left at midnight for Grubbe's Reef, Point Pelee, taking in tow a new red gas buoy which will be placed on the reef as a substitute for the one there which has become disabled. Grubbe's Reef is one of the most dangerous points on Lake Erie. The tug Aldrich was taken back to Ankersburg.

SOLDIER IMMIGRANTS.

Quebec, Que., Aug. 13.—Among the passengers who arrived here on board the Allan R. M. S. Victorian, which arrived in port last evening, was Major the Honorable Arthur Broderick. This is the major's second visit to Canada, he having been here last year.

On the present trip he brought with him a party of colonists, numbering 15 men, who are destined for Brandon, Manitoba. These men are the first party to be taken out under a scheme which the major has formulated for the emigration of the Godalming territorial, of which he is the commander.

If the movement, in which Lord Strathcona has become very much interested, proves successful, other parties will be brought out.

THOUSANDS HOMELESS BY JAPANESE FLOODS

Great Misery at Tokio Through Lack of Food and Shelter.

Tokio, Aug. 13.—Thousands of homeless persons are being sheltered in the temples and schoolhouses, at which relief stations the most deplorable sights are witnessed. The victims of the flood are wholly dependent on public relief. Thousands more have been unable to find shelter, owing to the insufficiency of boats to convey them to places of safety, and they are exposed to the elements and hunger. Every available boat is being employed in the work of rescue and to convey food where it is most needed.

The scarcity of boats is keenly felt. The question of feeding the stricken people is causing apprehension. The vegetable and fish supplies are falling and the stock of biscuits already is nearly exhausted. There is no fear, however, for the supply of rice. The water of the Sumida river is almost washing the bottoms of the bridges. The climax of the inundation is expected tonight.

The mountain flood in the neighborhood of Kanazawa has destroyed the Mikasa Hotel. Many foreigners were stopping there, but no fatality has been reported.

IMMIGRATION BUREAU SEPARATES A FAMILY

Mother and Two Children Refused Entrance After Visit to Hungary.

New York, Aug. 12.—One of the most pathetic scenes ever witnessed at the sailing of a steamship took place today when the French liner La Bretagne left this port for Havre. On board were Mrs. Victoria Schlederen and her two little children, aged 8 years and 2 years. On the pier were Gaston Schlederen and the two other small children of the family, aged 7 and 5 years. The deportation order, made by the immigration authorities, had sent the family apart.

Seven years ago Gaston Schlederen, a Hungarian iron worker, came to America with his wife and one child and settled in Claridge, Pa. Five years later two other children had been born, and the Hungarian had declared his intention of becoming a citizen of his adopted country.

A little less than two years ago his wife, with the three children, returned to Hungary to visit aged parents, and while there the youngest child was born. Her own illness and that of her mother kept her away until last May, when she returned to New York on the steamship Chicago. On her arrival she was sent to Ellis Island suffering with typhoid, and the children went with her. After doctors had examined her she was ordered deported and was told that the children would have to go as well.

TEMPLAR CONCLAVE ENDS.

Chicago, Aug. 13.—With the election of Sir William B. Mellish of Cincinnati to the highest pedestal of Templar knighthood, approximately a half million knights and their friends left Chicago yesterday for their homes in various parts of the United States and Canada, following the triumphant close of the 31st Knights Templar convocation of the United States. It is estimated 750,000 visitors were present during the convocation. Four hundred and eighty-seven commanderies were present in the city. The Association of Commerce issued a statement today estimating that about $9,000,000 was spent during the four days of the convocation.

FANCY BREAD.

Toronto, Aug. 12.—James Dempster, a baker, was summoned to the police court this morning for selling bread marked into four sections weighing 40 ounces. The city contends the loaf should weigh either 24 or 48 ounces. Dempster claims the bread he sold was fancy bread and so did not need to be the standard weight. The case was adjourned.

KING'S GIFT TO CHURCH.

London, Aug. 12.—A special copy of the Book of Common Prayer, which the King is presenting to the Church of England in Canada, is being taken out by the Bishop of London, who is a passenger on the Empress of Britain.

THE GENIUS OF BURNS

Lord Rosebery at the Auld Brig of Ayr—An Interesting Address.

Lord Rosebery on July 29 formally reopened the Auld Brig of Ayr, and was subsequently presented with the freedom of the town. The bridge is an ancient structure, whose origin dates back to the Middle Ages. It spans the River Ayr, in the heart of the town, and has been immortalized by Burns.

After declaring the bridge reopened, Lord Rosebery received the freedom of the burgh. In reply, he said he felt that he was receiving the freedom in a vicarious sense, because he felt that behind him was always the august shade whom they had come to honor, the poet Robert Burns. It must be a source of lasting and poignant regret to the freemen of Ayr that they did not take the opportunity of enrolling Burns among the names of their honorary freemen, Dumfries, which held his body, did so, but it was in Ayrshire that he spent the best years of his life, and it was Ayrshire that had the nobler part of him.

Had it not been for the intervention of the blind poet, Blacklock, Burns would have gone to Jamaica as overseer of a plantation, and would never have lived in any other part of Scotland. What would have happened had he gone to Jamaica? Certainly they would have found one immortal book of verse, but nothing more. He did not believe that they would have heard much more of Burns. He might have come back wealthy, and strutted the Broomfield as a rum lord, or a sugar lord, or a tobacco lord, but he would have been a totally different Burns. His genius could hardly have survived the luxury of wealth. Poverty produces masterpieces, but wealth smooths them. (Cheers.) They would be able to count on their fingers all the masterpieces produced by rich people. They would find that almost all had been written under the pressure of poverty.

Proceeding, his lordship said he had pointed out to Burns worshippers two new features which they might explore—gratitude to the blind poet Blacklock, and the possible career of Burns in Jamaica.

Lord Rosebery then went on to deal with the genius of Burns, with his piety, his love, and his independence. It was in Ayrshire, he said, that Burns wrote "The Jolly Beggar" and "The Cottar's Saturday Night." He (Lord Rosebery) looked on the former as his greatest masterpiece, and on the latter as showing the poet's innate piety. It was a striking feature as regarded Burns' genius that "The Jolly Beggar" was written and tossed aside as unworthy of being printed. To Burns it was merely an incident. As regarded his piety, which he thought commentators sometimes lost sight of, they had the supreme testimonial of "The Cottar's Saturday Night" to show what expression he could give to his soul.

As for his love, that, of course, was a delicate subject. (Laughter.) The fact was Burns fell in love with every girl he met at that period of his life. He saw them through the eyes of his imagination, and in consequence he became enamored of them all. Lord Rosebery was inclined to think that if they saw them without that glamor and without that imagination they would be disappointed with the appearance of those ladies. (Laughter.) Burns' independence was a striking part of his character. He faced the world with an undaunted front. Partly from his youth and partly from his inexperience, he was afraid of nothing and of nobody, and he hated hypocrisy and cant of every kind.

GREAT NAVAL GUN FIRING

King Witnesses Skill of Dreadnought's Gunners—A Test in a Rough Sea.

It is to the credit of British seamanship that no disaster occurred on July 29 to the fleet. Shrouded in thick fog outside Torbay the reality of the danger to which the ships were exposed can be understood from the fact that in some cases collision was feared. The King Edward VII. lost one anchor and part of her cable, which she succeeded in recovering. There were also several narrow escapes of vessels running into each other. The greater part of the fleet was obliged to spend the night at anchor outside the bay, and most of the cadets who had come from Dartmouth to assist at the manoeuvres were obliged to stay on the ships to which they had been assigned.

The next morning there was no trace of fog, and in radiant sunshine the Dreadnought, with the King on board, steamed out to sea at 10 o'clock accompanied by the Bellerophon and followed by the Victoria and Albert. The object which his majesty, who was accompanied by the Prince of Wales, had in view was to see the skill acquired by the gunners of the Dreadnought in firing. For this purpose a target had been towed out by the Iris, and two cruisers, the mark ship and the umpire ship, went out with her. The target, made of lattice work covered with canvas, rises thirty feet above the water. Its bullseye measures sixteen feet by eight.

Were they absolutely certain today that their characters were as free from cant as Burns wished them to be? There were a thousand forms of cant which were a dry rot to their country. It was not his task that day to point them out. He might introduce division where he only wished to leave a united Ayr behind him. (Laughter.)

In conclusion, Lord Rosebery said Burns never seemed dead to him. Of all dead men he was the most living to him—indeed, much more living than many men who were alive. He knew no man who had impressed his individuality and vitality so strongly on his fellow creatures as this man who was born 150 years ago, whose blood still coursed warm and strong through the veins of Scotland. His spirit was abroad in all their country, and through their country it had passed out to the world. He therefore trusted in the long days to come when almost with terror that there was a risk of the bridge being denied, and that they would also remember that their responsibility to and connection with Burns was indissoluble and eternal. (Cheers.)

This was the object, driven hither and thither by the waves, at which the Dreadnought, going at full speed, had to aim with her 12-inch guns. Over a space of nearly five miles, separating ship and target, hurtled the great projectiles, each weighing 850 pounds, rushing through the air at the rate of 2,700 feet a second. The perfection to which the gunners had been brought in the navy is such that 50 per cent of hits were registered. The sun shone, the summer wind blew lightly, and the King and the Queen were shown with what precision, rapidity, and in how great numbers modern science enabled men to slay their fellows.

The King expressed keen satisfaction at the marksmanship displayed. The target was hit 21 times out of 40. It must be remembered that the firing was directed under battle conditions, and not at a fixed target, when such records as nine hits out of ten can and have been made.

On the shore we could hear the dull roar of cannon, but the ships were visible far out at sea. Soon after one o'clock a long low dun cloud formed on the horizon. Slowly, almost imperceptibly, it swept nearer, and became larger and more definite until it assumed the shape of the hulls of ships. It was the fleet returning, veiled in the smoke of its funnels. Out of the cloud came eight lines of eight ships, each line two cables from the next, and each ship two cables from that preceding or following it. Looking down from the towering height of Daddy Hole it seemed at first as if some skillful stage picture were being unfolded in the distance below, but as the vessels moving in perfect order came near, the sight became awful and majestic. On came the eight columnals. Leading the line of Dreadnought cruisers was the Dreadnought herself, flying the Royal Standard. The King had brought the fleet, which was last night in peril, safely back.

ANOTHER LONG LIFE RECEIVED.

John H. Morris, the 90-year-old river farmer of Morrisville, Pa., tells how to live to a ripe old age. Mr. Morris, who is well known to hundreds of residents of the country, has been a constant user of tobacco since he was 10 years old. Now, however, he confines himself to his clay pipe, although he formerly was a tobacco chewer of no small proportion. In his young days Morris was regarded as a sickly child, and required the attention of a physician quite frequently, but he has reached the ripe old age of 90 years, and is sturdy and nimble. He has a long flowing white beard, and says he keeps his joints in good working order by bathing himself in olive oil, a thing he has done for years. The frequent bathing of his feet is also given as one of the reasons he has witnessed the advent and departure of so many years. A favorite method of Mr. Morris for cleansing his feet is to wade in the water. This he does in summer and winter, and not infrequently when the ice is so thick that it is necessary for him first to break it. He is a great lover of buttermilk, and in season eats generously of asparagus. Whiskey is something that Mr. Morris has never had any use for. —Chicago Inter-Ocean.

THE HABIT OF SAVING.

Whatever objections, real or fancied, there may be to the postal savings bank scheme, now enacted into law, whoever may reap the greatest benefit from the deposits—the Government, selfish private interests or the depositors themselves—the simple fact remains that the new institution will tend to promote thrift among men, women, boys and girls of limited means.

The habit of saving, once formed, becomes ineradicable. It is as hard to get rid of as the habit of smoking. It preserves self-respect. It is a great economic, intellectual and even moral anchor for the individual and for society. There is no reason why the habit of saving should degenerate into a miserly, niggardly, mean habit.

Iago is never cited as an authority on ethics, but he had a clear and level head. And when he implored Roderigo, the Venetian gentleman, to forget his futile and unrequited passion for Desdemona and to "put money in thy purse," to "fill thy purse with money," to "make all the money thou canst," he was giving him the best possible advice under the circumstances. If Iago had been a member of the present congress, he would surely have voted for President Taft's saving plan. —Boston Globe.

SIDELIGHTS ON NOTABLE PEOPLE BY THE MARQUISE DE FONTENOY

Sir Charles Hardinge, the new viceroy of India, has taken the name of Lord Penhurst, on his elevation to the peerage, from his country place at Penhurst, near Tonbridge, in Kent. Much has been written of Sir Charles' cleverness as a diplomat, of his absolute freedom from political partisanship, which is a matter of such importance in a permanent servant of the state, of his broad statesmanship, and of his exceptional knowledge of court etiquette and ceremonial. But nowhere have I seen any mention made of his qualities as a sportsman. Yet sportsmanship is important in India, where no one can hope to achieve success in any high office, who is not a sportsman. Charles Hardinge, or rather as I should call him now, Lord Penhurst, is a particularly adept and enthusiastic polo player, extremely fond of hunting, an excellent shot, and, of course, skilful in court tennis and in the royal game of golf. A statesman who can lead in all these sports acquires a far greater prestige and influence among the semi-independent princes and petty native rulers of India, than the administrator who is content to endeavor to rule from his desk. In fact, the most successful viceroys and governors of India have always been those who excelled in sport.

Lord Penhurst has appointed as his private secretary J. Houseman, an old master of Winchester College, and one of the many brilliant men who have graduated from Balliol, Oxford. He was private secretary to two successive governors of Bombay, partly Lord Northcote and Lord Lamington, spending seven years in that capacity, and greatly distinguished himself by his pluck and administrative ability as a special commissioner of the Government during the plague, revealing for his services as such the order of the Indian empire. Before becoming private secretary to Lord Northcote, he was for several years a magistrate in India, and his knowledge, therefore, of the Anglo-Indian administration of India, and of native life in that great dependency, is quite exceptional.

The private secretary of the viceroy is one of the most important factors in the administration of England's great Oriental empire. In fact, so great is his influence and power, that he had often been described as the deputy viceroy. A new feature has arisen in connection with the fight now raging between the House of Lords in England, and it may yet prove an important factor in bringing about peace. As many American visitors to the palace of Westminster are aware, the House of Commons rejoices in a particularly excellent restaurant, which costs them about $20,000 a year, voted for the purpose. The maintenance of the restaurant of the House of Lords is also dependent upon a vote of the House of Commons, and this has been reduced to the ridiculously low and totally inadequate figure of $1,750. In addition to this, the kitchen of the House of Lords' restaurant fails to fulfill any of the necessary requirements, while the dining-room of the House of Lords is abominable, being virtually in the cellars.

land's great Oriental empire. In fact, so great is his influence and power, that he had often been described as the deputy viceroy.

The House of Commons declines to listen to the protests of the Upper House, on the plea that the members of the latter seldom have night sittings, and usually adjourn before 8 o'clock. This is, however, not altogether correct. For, while it is true that the Lords generally adjourn before eight, there are many nights in the season when the debates extend throughout the entire evening, and when the restaurant finds itself entirely incapable of keeping up with the sudden demands for dinner by several hundred hungry Lords. Indeed, during the present Parliamentary year, the Lords have had more night sessions than ever before in their existence, owing to their desire to show to the public that they were not so indifferent to their legislative obligations as has been alleged by those in favor of their abolition.

There is no better way of bringing people to terms than by hunger, or of rendering them conciliatory, than by means of their stomach, and it is quite possible that if the House of Commons agrees to vote as much money for the satisfaction of the appetites of the Peers as that which they devote to their own kitchens, the gilded chamber may be induced to abandon its opposition, and to consent to a compromise, if not to an actual surrender to the demands of the Lower House.

Nearly every year the festivities of the regatta week at Cowes are marred by some tragedy, which this year has been furnished by Lord Wallace's daughter, the Hon. Mrs. William E. Farrington. Afflicted with sleeplessness, and reluctant to resort to chloral, or any other drug taken internally, she was in the habit of wooing Morpheus by means of inhaling a few whiffs of chloroform from a glass. This is an extremely dangerous practice. For with increasing drowsiness, one is apt to lose the will power to replace the glass or the bottle on the table beside the bed. That is just what happened to Mrs. Farrington. She was holding the glass to her nostrils and inhaling, when she lost consciousness, inhaled too much, and succumbed.

She was the widow of young Squire William Edmund Farrington, who died last year, after only a few weeks of marriage. Several months later his widow, just 24 years of age, gave posthumous birth to a girl instead of a boy, and thus for the first time in nearly 600 years, broke a line of direct male descent. For from John de Farrington, who was Lord of Leyland in 1313, until the death of young Squire William Edmund Farrington last year, the manors of Leyland and of Warden Hall, in Lancashire had descended from father to son throughout 20 generations. When Mrs. Farrington gave birth to a girl instead of a boy last fall, the estates went to a Col. Farrington of Wigan, the head of a younger branch of the family.

The Farringtons, although unrich, are extremely proud of their blood, as they have every right to be. Ranking high among the county families of Lancashire, they belong in every sense of the word to the aristocracy of England. One of them was killed at the battle of Crecy. Another, Sir Henry Farrington, was one of Henry VIII's commissioners for the appropriation of the monasteries and of the property of the religious orders. Still another fought for King Charles against Oliver Cromwell. In fact, their name figures extensively in the annals of English history, and always with two small "fs."

The way that the use of those double initial consonants arose is, that in olden times, that is to say, in the early days of printing, the capital F, and the capital L, were made by means of duplicating small fs and small ls. But of course the adoption of the present capital F, and of the present capital L, as printed, rendered superfluous the use of the double letter. Many families, such as the instance, the Frenches of Castle French, the folkes, and the flukes, retain, for old association sake, the former spelling of their name. Some, instead of using two double consonants, are satisfied with nothing else than two capitals, and in the English army list there will be found two or three English officers who write their name as Lloyd, which is, to say the least, an abbreviation.

Almost at the same hour that Mrs. Farrington (who was prior to her marriage the Hon. Margaret Blake), met with her death through chloroform at Cowes, her cousin, Miss Eleanor Blake, met with a still more tragic fate, in the flames which burned to the ground Melnough Castle, her ancestral home in Galway. She was an invalid, and was therefore unable to save herself in the same manner as several other of the inmates of the castle, who managed to climb down from their windows, by the ladders which the castle's grand old stronghold was thickly covered. Her parents, Sir Valentine and Lady Blake, septuagenarians both of them, were absent from home at the time, being engaged in visiting Dublin, and indeed Miss Blake was quite alone in the place, with a score of servants, two of whom were likewise burned to death.

The castle itself, flanked by towers at either end, and most picturesque, situated on the shores of Lough Corrib, a few miles from Galway, was completely gutted, all the treasures and heirlooms which it contained being lost. In fact, nothing but the outer walls remain. Melnough Castle had been the home of the Blakes ever since the reign of Queen Elizabeth, having come to them in the middle of the sixteenth century, through marriage.

Sir Valentine is the fourteenth baronet of his line, the baronetcy having been bestowed by King James I. upon Sir Valentine Blake, who was mayor of Galway in 1611, and again in 1630. Francis Blake, the son of Sir Valentine Blake, the third baronet, was patented, and one of the lords proprietors of Carolina, and his son Francis surrendered his parent rights in Carolina to the crown, in 1727. The Blakes of Galway have been identified for hundreds of years with the history of Ireland, and particularly with its sporting and social life; so much so, that the mere mention of the name of Blake is sufficient to suggest Galway. It is a most popular name among Irishmen, especially among those who love hunting and horse racing, and under the circumstances there will be many people on the other side of the Atlantic who will be grieved to learn of the disappearance of the ancestral home of the Blakes, Melnough Castle, and of the bereavement of old Sir Valentine Blake, the chief of the family, through the loss of his daughter in the flames.

WITH THE MOVING PICTURE MAN

[By Currie Love.]

Moving pictures have a fascination of their own, and when you start across the continent with a special train devoted wholly to the taking of pictures for the moving picture theatre, you may expect that interest to grow and be added unto at every stop.

Just a month ago a special train left the Canadian Pacific Railway at Montreal, with the object of taking moving pictures from Montreal to Vancouver, to exploit the Dominion from farming, industrial and scenic standpoint. These pictures will be shown in 4,000 theatres all over the United States and Europe, and one can scarcely estimate the benefits to accrue to Canada from this concrete representation of her numerous advantages to the millions of people who crowd this form of entertainment.

Dramatic stories have been written to add the element of human interest which mere scenery does not always possess, and a special company of well-known dramatic people was engaged to carry out these stories in a Canadian setting. One of these stories is called "Mary's and John's Honeymoon," and represents a bridal couple starting from Montreal on a wedding trip, which will extend to Shanghai, China. This picture gives an opportunity to show the magnificent scenery of the farming district of Bow River Valley, and shows the young man building his first rough shack on the prairie, doing his first plowing and seeding with the old-fashioned hand plow, and work on his irrigation ditch, feeding and watering his stock, reaping his first harvest; then his rapid development into larger operations, his huge steam plow, his larger stock, and finally his beautiful new house, to which he brings the sweetheart he had left in the States. It is a story you may see every day. Alberta and its representation is faithful to the truth in every detail.

At Brooks we had a most interesting day, a round-up of 3,000 cattle, with five cowboys in their shaggy and sombrero on their spirited little cow ponies. One of the leading women in the company, Miss Sawyer, an excellent horsewoman, mounted a horse and assisted in the round-up, to the delight and admiration of the cowboys, who elected her a member of their fraternity without any initial ceremony. It was good to see them watch the cattle on a thousand hills as they came straying towards us in groups of twos and threes and half-dozen, and finally, when they were all herded, round them up and drive them past the camera. It was a unique display of what Canada can do in the cattle industry. Almost as interesting as the round-up was the electrical storm to which we were treated on our way back to the train. We were fifteen miles out in open automobiles, without any protection from the elements, the lightning striking in long, jagged forks all around us, and the rain descending in sheet-like torrents. Needless to say, we were soaked to the skin, but the storm was so magnificent and the cloud effects so wonderful that we forgot all about our discomfort in watching the display Nature had arranged for our benefit.

We arrived at Calgary in time for the far-famed Provincial Fair, which the Californians claim outdoes even the great Western Fair held in London. Of course, a Londoner born and bred disputed that statement, but one thing must be conceded, we have no Indians in London who can compare with the specimens in Calgary. A drama was arranged to introduce the redman in native costume, and one of the actors had a wrestling match with a stalwart Sioux, which was altogether too realistic to suit him.

"Why," he said, "I really thought he would have scalped me once, and I guess he wanted to, but a mounted policeman kept him in order."

Speaking of mounted police, reminds me that we spent two delightful days in Regina, taking pictures of the body of men who form the most unique organization on this continent, the Royal Northwest Mounted Police. A special parade was arranged for our benefit, and we caught the men on the march, pitching camp, grub-staking and off duty. A pretty little story was written to introduce the mounted policeman who fell in love with the daughter of his superior officer, and is then called upon to arrest his sweetheart's brother for the perpetration of a crime. The struggle between conflicting feelings is almost too much for him, but he finally decides to let the man go, and resign his commission. This he does, but the brother commits suicide, leaving a confession which exonerates the officer and enables him to marry the girl of his choice.

At Banff we had our first sight of the wonderful mountain scenery, and there we spent several days taking views of the mountains, the waterfalls, the swimming baths, and the buffalo, mountain sheep, antelope and elk in the beautiful National Park. Views round the big Banff Springs Hotel occupied the balance of our time there, and we left Banff with genuine regret.

At Laggan we had our first mountain climbing experience, and some of the party claim it will also be their last of the kind. Five of us went, over rocks and crags and fields of snow, until our unaccustomed feet were bruised and sore from such unwonted exertion. "It would have been all right," said the leading lady, "if we had only had proper clothes, but to climb in high-heeled suede shoes, fit for the pavements of Broadway rather than the rocks of Mount Lefroy, is another story." A fall into a crevasse completed the leading lady's discomfort—nevertheless, she performed a sensational slide down a snowy precipice for the benefit of the moving picture operator, and was rescued by a beautiful Scotch collier from the hotel without a murmur of protest. Strenuous was the life of the moving picture actor.

The descent was comparatively easy, and we crossed the emerald waters of Lake Louise without further mishap, to feast our eyes on the view from the hotel verandah of the waters of the lake with the snow-crowned mountain behind. "It's a great view—from a distance," said one of the men, "but I'm satisfied to see it from a distance, and not to get up any closer than I am."

At Field we had the best view from a distance possible to imagine, for we went 24 miles through the most wonderful mountain scenery imaginable, and we travelled on a flat car pushed in front of the engine. The operator had his camera strapped to the floor of the car, and the panorama resultant must inevitably make everyone who sees it want to view the real thing rather than the pictorial representation, which cannot reproduce the wonderful gold and green coloring of the sun on the mountains, or the rippling waters of the mountain torrent thundering beneath us.

From Golden we took an 85-mile motor trip through the Columbia Valley, unique in its combination of river, mountain and pastoral scenery. On either side of the river thickly-wooded banks stretch to the undulating pasture land beyond, and towering at one side are the Rockies and at the other side the Selkicks, a view which cannot be matched elsewhere on this continent. The valley is as yet practically unknown, save to a few ranchers and prospectors, but within the next year or two the Canadian Pacific Railway will have completed the branch line which will bring within the reach of the ordinary traveler all the wonderful fishing, hunting, mining and farming possibilities of this rich stretch of country.

Our stay there was marked by two most interesting experiences—a day with a pack train, devoted to old-time placer mining, and a day in a lumber camp, where we met the lumberjack in his native element. Both were excellent days, and we enjoyed our new experiences to the full. Living on a houseboat on Lake Windermere, as we did, we spent our hours off duty in fishing and swimming, and every morning when the word came to take the boat back to Golden, even though the day's sail down the river carried with it its compensation of charming scenery and good company.

A day at Golden, taking scenes of a typical western logging town, and then we went on to Glacier, where we did some more climbing across the face of the cliff of slippery ice into the wonderfully-colored blue cave, which is the objective point of so many tourists. Back to the train we went, and embarked for Vancouver, where we expect to take some interesting views of the salmon run, the cannery and all the shipping industries of that busy port.

It is an advertising scheme without parallel in this country, and the Dominion can scarcely fail to reap a large supply of immigrants from this concrete picture verandah of her conditions here, a convincing means, no words, no matter how plausible, can possibly be.

The Race Problem in the United States

From the Nation, London, England.

No one who knows the growing intensity of feeling on the color problem in the United States is surprised to read the accounts of organized attacks upon negroes in scores of American cities, following the great prizefight of the world record, in which every great sporting event arouses in every class of American society excessive anything known here, and the pitting of a black against a white champion upon Independence Day for the world record, in a display of "resentment manhood," focussed in the most dramatic manner the gravest peril to American civilization. It is not easy for us to understand the intensity of color-feeling which most well-informed students of America assure us is occurring, not only in the Southern States, but all over the Union. The negro population does not, in any obvious political or economic peril. Their increase in numbers has been more than offset by the streams of white immigrants from Europe. Their freest exercise of the political franchise could only secure for them predominance in a small section of the south, and though the educated negroes often resent the unconstitutional denial of the franchise, this resentment does not evoke any really dangerous discontent. Though here and there, in a few skilled trades, friction has arisen between white and colored workers, and racialism has marked the policy of some trade unions, the main lines of economic activity for blacks and whites have lain apart, the negroes absorbing certain branches of agriculture and unskilled labor, or else settling in localities where there are no white workers. In cases where they are doing skilled mechanical or commercial work, it is under black employers, and does not bring them into direct racial competition. The only large industry where black labor has rapidly displaced white, is the coal and iron mining in the south. In most southern towns the colored industries simply duplicate, and do not cross the white. Two industrial and professional communities divide the town between them, and reduce business and personal intercourse to a minimum. Everyone admits that the southern negro has made considerable progress in farming and other pursuits, that he is acquiring steeper habits of industry, and that his presence and work have become an indispensable part of the industrial fabric of America. The animosity of the whites is mainly, not political or economic, but social. This is made evident by the fact that it is directed more towards the educated negroes of the towns than towards the raw toilers of the soil.

What the whites really complain of is not the political or economic aspirations of the negroes, but what they call "insolence." And that term includes any assertion of personal equality. The locus classicus of the interpretation of the outbreak of spiteful anger, manifested throughout the south, when Mr. Booker Washington was asked by President Roosevelt to sit down at his lunch-table—an act of liberality which we now understand Mr. Roosevelt to regret. The objection was not that Mr. Washington was not an able, serviceable, and well-mannered citizen, but that it is the duty of every white man to maintain the social color bar. If any black man is allowed to be as "good" as or "better" than some white man, down will go the social barriers which secure white dominance, and every negro will attempt to share a white alliance, with a subsequent degradation of the American race! Such is the mendacious rationale of a hateful policy of racial domination which, so long as it survives, will always be liable to drag down American civilization to the methods of barbarism which this week discloses. Mendacious we term it, for there is no reason to believe that complete equality of political and civil rights, of educational and social opportunities, would lead in America to any considerable demand for miscegenation, or that a belief that it would be the true source of the resentment against the education and vation of the negro. We consider this animosity, and the brutality which it is seen to evoke, as signs of the low moral level of civilization in large sections of the United States. It is, perhaps, natural that the long period of slavery should leave a legacy of ill-feeling, resentment, and animosity in the master-race disposed of its live property, and self-assertiveness, and vanity in the more energetic members of the liberated race. But such feelings should produce armed conflicts, scores of towns all over America are nothing less than a deplorable exhibition of failure in the elementary arts of government. It will be interesting to observe how many of the ring-leaders of these bands of white murderers and assassins will be brought to justice, and receive a punishment proportionate to their crime even in such states as New York and Illinois. Justice in many of the courts in such cases is admittedly unattainable.

A distinguished American politician has been giving us advice in the art of governing dependent races. Might we advise him, in return, to devote at least some portion of his boundless energy and equally boundless capacity for speech to securing among the sovereign states of his own country a decent degree of realization of those elementary rights declared in the constitution to be the basis of American democracy? The present internal imperialism of America, the misgovernment of a people half-free, half-slave, within her borders, is an even heavier drain upon her resources than the external imperialism which we employ, and upon the management of which Mr. Roosevelt has the amusing effrontery to offer his unsolicited advice.

TYRANNY OF AFFECTION.

Now, I do not mean when I speak of the tyranny of affection the selfishness that takes the mask of love. We have all known men and women who have got the most untiring and sacrificing devotion from those about them simply through the clothing of their selfishness.

Sinking Spells Every Few Days

"At the time I began taking Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy I was having sinking spells every few days. My hands and feet would get cold; I could scarcely breathe, and could feel myself gradually sinking away until I would be unconscious. Those about me could not tell there was life in me. After these spells I would be very weak and nervous, sleepless and without appetite; had neuralgia in my head and heart. After taking the remedy a short time all this disappeared and in a few weeks all the heart trouble was gone."

HECLA FURNACE

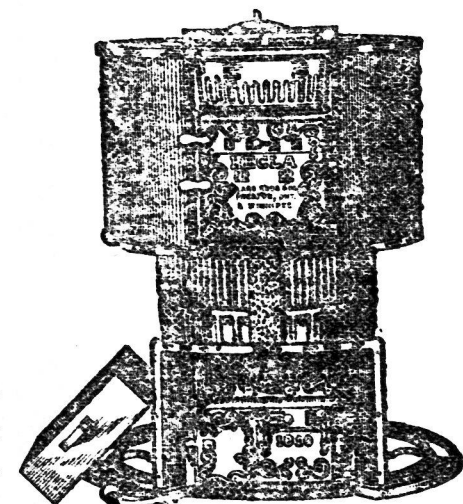

Shows A Saving in Fuel of 13 1/2 %

It is not what a furnace should do, nor what it is said to do—but what it has actually done for others and will do for you—that should hold your consideration.

"Hecla" Furnace is truly economical—in first cost and operation.

"Hecla" Furnace has a steel ribbed firepot. By adapting the principle of Fused Joints to the firepot, we fuse Steel Ribs on the outer surface of the "Hecla" firepot, thus getting three times the radiating surface of any other firepot of the same size. The radiating surface of the firepot is the most efficient part of the furnace because it is in closest contact with the fire. And the greater the radiating surface, the greater the amount of air that can be heated by a given amount of fuel.

By a careful, accurate three years test, these Steel Ribbed Firepots made an actual saving in fuel of 13 1/2 %. And remember, that the air from the "Hecla" is never hot.

The perfect radiation of heat brings warm air—fresh and invigorating—into the house, because "Hecla" firepot never becomes red hot. And a firepot that never becomes red hot won't burn out.

We make the firepot in two pieces which prevents cracking. This Steel Ribbed Firepot is only one of many improvements perfected by the old reliable firm who have 59 years heating experience to guide them.

Send us a rough diagram of your house—and we will plan the heating arrangements, giving you the cost of installing the right "Hecla" Furnace to heat your home right. We make no charge for this service.

PARIS' GREAT DETECTIVE

Mr. Hamard and His Methods—
A Triumph of System and Routine.

By Sterling Heilig.]

All Paris is talking about M. Hamard's recent successes. They consider him the greatest detective in the world.

Who is M. Hamard? Everyone has heard of him, but few know the vast secret forces at his command.

He is the chief of the Government detectives for Paris and surrounding cities. In an immense building, aided by a perfect anthropometric service and inquisitorial judges' direction, he directs 400 real sleuths—ranked as inspectors, brigadiers and principal inspectors—and a flying brigade of 210 plain clothes men.

These do not include the company of women sleuths, concerning whom no facts are divulged, nor the surety-general, or "ministère" detective forces watching over all France.

I introduce Hamard, great, grey, ruddy man, with immense head, kindly face and loud voice. But do not trust those friendly ways if you have anything to hide. He can turn suddenly violent, beating down the prisoner's nerve by roaring over him.

I also got the idea that M. Hamard was a vast affable army, lurking in cafes and public places. "Chantecler" embroglio, Guinchard, the Bohemian, had procured me the scenario and a hundred lines for simultaneous publication with certain European papers, at a moment when the theatre management was boasting that not a line could leak out. We kept it very secret. Yet one day, at the Grand Cafe, an elegant gentleman came up and whispered to me that "M. Hamard would be obliged for some information." An automobile waited at the door.

A suave sleuth. That elegant party turned out to be Brigadier Daurmont, a sleuth of mark. In the end, he led a light conversation on prominent Americans in Paris. By the time we arrived, I saw he was pumping me.

Twenty men could walk abreast up those barrack-like stairs, three flights with glimpses of blank corridors lined with closed doors. Into one popped a very stylish young lady, from another emerged a red-nosed tramp. "What are those rooms?" I asked. "Oh, just rooms," replied the brigadier pompously. Now I know that they are full of mysteries, tricks, disguises and sleeping-rooms for informers to lie hidden and sleuths to snatch repose.

Silence, and a prison smell of disinfectants. M. Hamard's office is an immense room, five windows on one side, without trophies or clerks. The great man had quit his lunch—at the call of a greater, "the minister." "I had two sardines and a bite of bread," he said with ominous good humor and began my civil status.

It is routine, but also a trick. The simple formula, with the confidential brigadier writing slowly—name, when born, where, parents, father's name, domicile, profession, mother's maiden name, married or single, income, rent, how long in Paris—rattles the victim, who is anxious to learn what they want him for.

"You are selling stolen property," began M. Hamard, harshly.

That relieved me. I knew he must be mistaken.

"You are dreaming, dear monsieur," I said.

"Do you deny that you have bought a stolen copy of Rostand's 'Chantecler' before presentation, to peddle to the papers of the world and an American publisher for an advance pirate edition?"

I laughed, and the end came quickly. He does see what is in one. Before I had another word he was smiling with relief at the report he would make to the minister and influential poet, and murmur that he had been right and "they" mistaken. Then I assured him that M. Rostand was perfectly protected by American copyright, and that I had simply procured 100 advance lines for my own papers.

"Are you sure that other American papers have no more?" he asked, and I saw no harm in telling him that they had none at all—as the event proved. Certainly, they only feared America.

"Better not send more than fifteen lines," he said kindly, indicating that I was free. "Thanks. Au revoir. If I can ever be agreeable to you, call on me personally."

Waiters as Detectives. "Really?" I said. "Will you permit me to photograph you some day? And give me some data about your detective's."

"He promised, and kept it. What I never learned was how two sets of secret service spies—"the ministers" and "Hamard's Own"—knew so much about my secret doings. I think, however, that M. Hamard has infiltrated spies in public places, like one waiter, say, in each important cafe, music hall, dance hall and promenoir. As to the incident itself, I make no comment, only that it shows the minute organization of a Richelieu still alive.

So M. Hamard gave me my interview. He has just become popular with the rich Americans of Paris, by breaking up the ultra-modern band, who disguised themselves to rob as model servants. In one of their flats was found a counter-detective service on newly-arriving Americans, with bundles of references stolen from honest servants, blue books, steamer sailings, and tabulated clippings from American papers.

"Your millionaire Americans are slow to complain when robbed," said M. Hamard, "yet they are in too much of a hurry to verify servants' references. The slick robbers counted on these Americans' characteristics, and had taken great riches in money, jewels, furs and art objects from the Blank and Blank and Blank families before a complaint reached me."

In authentic interviews one cannot always give names. These notable Americans do not want to be talked about, and M. Hamard sealed my lips. I asked him how he broke the band up.

He uses a vast force and powerful aids. He uses them systematically.

Last April a lawyer was assassinated in his Paris office by an unknown person who went off with some of the lawyer's clothes. The only clue was a vest of the assassin left by oversight.

Routine is Successful.

"At times I had forty men on that vest," said M. Hamard, "but for three months there were four who specialized it. So we found the factory that made the cloth, in North Italy; and the manufacturer who made the buttons in London. By these we found the tailor who cut the vest to order for a senator of the Argentine Republic. He gave it to his valet, a young Belgian. Him we traced from South America, to Paris, where he had lived over six years."

Directions What to Do When the Dog Bites You

A Description of the Pasteur Treatment—Hydrophobia Must Be Headed Off or It Will Be Fatal—Its Three Stages.

[By Leonard K. Hirschberg, A. B., M. D., Johns Hopkins.]

To many persons the expression, "Fighting with fire," sounds silly; to many more it sounds original. But if ever you have seen the theory put into practice in the country, you will know its worth. In fighting forest fires, as you may or may not know, a line is laid out in the edges of the conflagration, and from this is started a counter-fire, this burning inward to meet the blaze, and devouring all the substance upon which the original fire would depend for subsistence.

And so it is with hydrophobia; the disease may be prevented by inoculation with hydrophobia virus, thus fortifying the patient against the prospective outbreak of the disease in his own system. True, like the forest fire, the counter-attack must be started in time, or the disease will assuredly get the upper hand; but hydrophobia is as deliberate as it is deadly, and the patient has good chance for his life.

Here and there may still be found physicians who deny the existence of hydrophobia, and aver that its victims succumb to fright; but hydrophobia is as real as diphtheria or smallpox, and its resistance is as easily demonstrated. In brief, hydrophobia is caused by some small organism and progresses along well-defined lines, and once its symptoms are fully developed, it invariably proves fatal. So far, the nature of the organism has not been definitely ascertained, but no other poison is more deadly or more painful in its working.

Despite all the study of the subject, no cure for hydrophobia has yet been found, and the life of an infected person hangs on the ounce of prevention.

Once seized by the disease, however, no human aid can save him. Following the bite or the scratch, the patient enters a period of incubation, this extending from two weeks to three months, during which the wound heals and the victim feels no discomfort, and often is lulled into a false and fatal feeling of immunity. But through all this time the minute organisms are developing, and at last comes the fatal moment. And with this comes the painful beginning of the fearful disease.

Three Short Stages.

In its short work the disease progresses through three stages, yet the entire period of suffering is seldom more than five days. As the line of incubation of trouble, the patient becomes melancholy and depressed; he complains of headache and falling asleep, and his teeth chafe and his skin itches; he sees bright lights and hears loud noises. Difficulty in swallowing develops and his voice becomes husky.

The second is the stage of great excitement, with spasms of the throat and mouth, and difficulty in breathing, while efforts to drink water are accompanied or followed by painful contractions of the throat. And from dread thus developed of the sight of water comes the third stage, the "furious" stage, in which the patient becomes violent. He froths at the mouth and voices terrifying noises, described by medical observers as the barking of a dog.

Then comes the third and fatal period, when gradual paralysis overcomes the patient, his agonies cease and he sinks into unconsciousness. Death follows in from six to eighteen hours.

But, as has been said, while no cure can be found, effective prevention may be employed, and this should never be neglected. No matter how minute the bite or the scratch, the patient should proceed at once to a hospital and begin the course of treatment. In event of the animal having escaped without observation as to its condition, it is best to take the treatment rather than to run any chances.

On the age of the patient, the condition of the animal, and the extent and location of the wounds depends to a large extent the period of incubation. Lacerations of the head and face are especially dangerous, these in order next being wounds of the hands, thighs and legs. A large, ragged wound is more dangerous than a mere scratch, while when a bite is inflicted through clothing, this clothing seems to filter out a large proportion of the germs.

Right here, however, it should be remembered that hydrophobia is not caused by bites only. A scratch, inflicted by an animal suffering from rabies, may cause a fatal infection.

Like all great inventions the Pas-across the street from the scene of the crime. Being examined by M. Hamard, he confessed. What we call the third degree often rises in France, to an art of terrible confrontations.

Doublets and events are connected with others that precede and follow. The great detective writers, Poe, Gaboriau and Conan Doyle, make the most of it; but their analyzing heroes, working alone, would fail where M. Hamard's succeeds.

They found in a vacant lot a girl's head wrapped in a silk waist, and to prevent recognition the assassin had cut off the nose, lips, ears and cheeks. This was the Paris sensation of Elisa Vandamme, pieces of whose body were found scattered over the capital. The girl's friends recognized the waist. They had left Elisa at 2 a.m., at a corner in the tenth ward, and that was all anyone knew.

What could Sherlock Holmes have done here? He had not M. Hamard's means of inquiry.

I began by making a widening circle round the spot where Elisa was last seen," he questioned all the janitors in the ward without result.

"All the janitors?" I repeated in astonishment. Every Paris house has a janitor.

M. Hamard smiled.

"It took two months," he said. "We questioned 10,000 janitors in 10,000 different houses, in the tenth, eleventh, sixteenth and twentieth wards, asking each: 'Did you hear of a girl's cry for help on the night of Feb. 27?'"

One of the janitors, a Russian.

Finally the janitor opposite 4 Rue des Marais admitted he had heard such a cry and a man's voice answer: "No foolishness!" from a fifth floor window.

Now, the occupant of that room was a Cossack, hard-working, serious and peaceable.

As he delivered goods with a tricycle, a disguised sleuth coiled with him—pretext constantly used to examine men without exciting suspicion.

But Vincenzi was excited, or else M. Hamard has that in his gaze which makes masks fall. He knew nothing against Vincenzi and suspected nothing, working on a routine indication.

Yet the laborer for a week broke down. "I give up," he said. "It is no use trying to retrieve the past. You have recognized me. Yes, I am the escaped convict Ferdinand. Send me back to the Cayenne. I have worked steadily four years, but it will count nothing for me."

So his characteristic system and routine are found at bottom of M. Hamard's most brilliant work.

So mild, indeed, is this case, that the patient does not mind mingling with his fellows in business and pleasure, as though there were nothing the matter.

On the third day, an injection from a thirteen-day cord, when, like a vaccinated man developing an extremely mild case of cowpox, the hydrophobia patient develops an extremely mild and harmless variety of rabies. So mild, indeed, is this case, that the patient does not mind mingling with his fellows in business and pleasure, as though there were nothing the matter.

teur treatment is simplicity itself. In the course of long experiments Pasteur discovered that the infected spinal cord of an animal killed by hydrophobia had the power of producing the disease in healthy animals, but that this power gradually disappeared. If an emulsion be made of the spinal cord of a rabbit which has just died of rabies and that emulsion be injected into a healthy rabbit, the latter invariably will develop the disease and die.

Going further, however, the discovery was developed that with the injection of an emulsion of spinal cord of a rabbit which had been kept for a few weeks, the rabbit so treated had more chance for recovery. In other words, the virulent organisms may be so weakened and attenuated—even those of hydrophobia—as to become less and less harmful, and eventually harmless.

Of the various methods of accomplishing this attenuation, the best and most simple practice is to leave it to the operation of time. A cord injected at the end of 48 hours is a trifle less infective than when it first was taken from the carcass, while a cord removed at the end of fifteen days has lost its power of infection completely.

The spinal cords of rabbits dead of the disease are cut in small pieces and suspended in sterile glass jars over caustic potash, which absorbs moisture, and are kept at a uniform temperature of 22 degrees centigrade.

First of the steps of the immunization of the human patient is that of fortifying him, during the period of incubation, with inoculations of virus of rabies, in increasing activity. The inoculation on the first day is made with an emulsion of a fifteen-day cord, which, being practically inert, does not hurt the patient.

Follows, on the next day, an injection of a thirteen-day cord, when, like a vaccinated man developing an extremely mild case of cowpox, the hydrophobia patient develops an extremely mild and harmless variety of rabies. So mild, indeed, is this case, that the patient does not mind mingling with his fellows in business and pleasure, as though there were nothing the matter.
