"Changed! Am I changed?" exclaims Dulcie, straightening her back and smiling with an air of surprised and pleased satisfaction. "You notice it, do you?"

"Yes," says Edie. "You are quite different from what you were when you first came. You are more like the rest—Maud, and the rest of them. You said you hated fancy work."

"So I do! So I did, I mean," says Dulcie, correcting herself, quickly. "I did, but you see the example of my betters—"

"That's nonsense," cuts in Edie, shrewdly. "It isn't because of that. What is it?"

Dulcie smiles at her.

"Oh, but it isn't nonsense," she says, her eyes lighting up with a spark of the old mischief-loving spirit. "I am like the savage you read about in Maud's missionary tracts. I am being civilized."

"I wish you had remained as you were," grumbled Edie, ruefully.

"So do I!" assents Dulcie, with alacrity; then she bites her lip. "I mean that, of course, I don't."

"Do you mean to say that you like working impossible flowers in impossible colors on oatmeal cloth, and moping about mamma with her interminable county history, and trudging round with Maud and the basket of tracts?" asks Edie, open-eyed and incredulous.

Dulcie smiles, showing her white, even teeth.

"Those who don't want to hear—ahem!—perversions of the truth, shouldn't ask questions, Edie," with a laugh that belies her serious tone.

"Then, if you don't like all that kind of thing," says Edie, persistently, "and I know you don't, why do you do them? And," with an air of conviction, "you don't do them very well. Look what a mess you have made of that antimacassar; it's all wrong, and I've seen you hiding a yawn behind your hand, while you have been listening to mamma, big enough to swallow her; and Maud says you don't really take any interest in the poor."

Dulcie opens her eyes with dismay.

"Oh! Indeed," she exclaims. "And who told you that? Maud, did she? or did you make it up? You are a very clever little girl."

"I'm almost as old as you are," retorts Edie, with a laugh.

Dulcie pitches the antimacassar to the further end of the sofa, and leans back, with her arms behind her head.

"Look here, Edie," she says, staidly. "I'll tell you a secret—or you know it already. I don't care for crewel work; your mamma's long-winded stories of the local aristocracy bore me to death; and I consider 'the poor' a set of imposters, who whine a 'God bless you' over Maud's packets of tea and flannel petticoats, and light their pipes with her tracts."

"I knew it! I knew it!" exclaims Edie, with delight.

"But," continues Dulcie, solemnly, "a sit is impossible 'to be good' without taking round the basket, breaking one's back at crewel work, and listening to county histories, and as I have promised to be good, I mean to do and suffer the same to—the end."

"Promised!" says Edie. "Whom did you promise?"

Dulcie looks at her from under the sweeping lashes—which a certain person declares are the longest and blackest in the world—and says demurely.

"Edie, I promised an aged grandmother on her death-bed that I'd reform and be a good girl when I reached the age of twenty-one, and—"

Edie laughs with sheer enjoyment.

"That's more like your own true self, Dulcie, I don't believe a word of your old grandmother. You took that out of a tract. I believe you are making fun of us all, and—"

"Hush!" says Dulcie, warningly. "Here is Lady Falconer. Where is that wretched—I mean beautiful—antimacassar?" and she seizes that useless piece of fancy work and bends over it with simulated absorption.

It is five o'clock, the afternoon tea hour, and punctual to the minute, Lady Falconer enters for the cup of the beverage which certainly does not cheer her, though it does not inebriate.

She glances at Dulcie suspiciously. She is always watching her, as if she expected her to break out into the can-can, or some similar extravagance, and chides Edie.

"What are you doing, Edie, my child? Why are you not practicing? I am sure Miss Dorrimore does not want her attention distracted when she is at work."

Edie rises from her knees with a little, smothered sigh, and wanders obediently to the piano, and Lady Falconer stands over Dulcie and looks down disdainfully at the antimacassar.

"Isn't that a little wrong?" she says, critically.

Dulcie looks up and eyes the abhorred piece of monstrosity with affected interest.

"I am afraid it is," she says. "I must ask Maud."

"Any one can see that it is wrong," says Lady Falconer, coldly. "The sunflower is the wrong shade."

"Is it?" says Dulcie, despairingly. "I've picked it out three times. Perhaps there might have been one sunflower in the world like it, then it would be all right, wouldn't it? and after all, it doesn't matter, does it?"

"Doesn't matter?" echoes Lady Falconer, with a stony stare.

"I mean," says Dulcie, hastily, "that as it's for an antimacassar, people will sit with their backs to it, and won't notice; and, if it's very bad, why, it can be turned face downward."

Lady Falconer eyes her—if peering under thick eyelids with unconcealed irritation and contempt can be called "eying"—for a minute, then goes to the chair, and Dulcie bends over the sunflower disheartened and more disgusted than ever. Then in comes Maud, prim and self-constrained, and takes her place at the table with the air of one who was about to concoct a subtle poison rather than harmless tea, and the ceremony commences.

Dulcie hates five o'clock tea; she is strong, healthy, and possessed of an appetite which many a crutch and tooth-pick young man would give his crutch and tooth-pick for—and they seem to be the most valuable possessions of the modern young man—and a five o'clock tea utterly destroys the appetite; she regards it with suspicion and distrust, notwithstanding which, however, in her resolve to do good and do as "good" people do, she takes the cup which the sedate footman brings her, and sips it reluctantly. It is a relief when Aunt Fermo appears; she likes the five o'clock tea, but would infinitely prefer it in her own room, to which she flies whenever she can get a chance. In her secret soul the poor lady is overwhelmed by the state and grandeur and stiffness of Holme Castle, and is sighing for the modest little room in Caroline Street, Bloomsbury. Lady Falconer, with her thick eyelids and haughty stare, her black satin dress, and aristocratic manners, awes and terrifies her, and but for Dulcie, she would fly to Caroline Street and be happy in her own way, as of yore. She comes in now, with her deprecating little smile, and sits on the edge of her chair, bolt upright, as she had been taught to do years and years gone by, and murmurs little "Yesses" and "Noes" to Lady Falconer's uninteresting remarks, while Dulcie watches her pityingly. Hugh seldom puts in an appearance at five o'clock; he knows the ordeal of the tea-pot too well to face it without due cause, and the ladies sit up and sip their gentle stimulant in stately quietude for some minutes, then Lady Falconer says:

"At what time do you expect them, Maud?"

Dulcie pricks up her ears.

"About dinner-time, mamma, a little before, I hope; I have put dinner off an hour." Maud is the nominal housekeeper at the Castle. "I hope Lucy will not catch cold, the evening air is very chilly."

Dulcie looks up with a suppressed interest.

"Is Miss Fairfax coming?" she asks.

Lady Falconer nibbles her piece of bread and butter before replying.

"We hope so," she says, stiffly, and with a sardonic smile. "We hope to see her and Sir Archibald Hope this evening."

"Oh," says Dulcie, and a faint, a very faint color tinges her cheek, "so Sir Archie is coming, is he?"

"Sir Archibald Hope," says Maud, drawing out the full title as a rebuke to Dulcie for shortening it. "wrote to say that he would be here this evening. He is an old friend of ours."

"Yes," says Dulcie, with an inward smile as she remembers how earnestly the said Sir Archie begged her to procure him an invitation. "I have met him, you know," she says.

"So you said," responds Maud, coldly. "I will remember him, no doubt!"

"Remember him!" exclaims Dulcie, with a stare, then she smiles dryly. "I think I shall if I make an effort—I mean—hastily—that of course I shall."

"Have you got your list for tomorrow, Maud?" asks Lady Falconer, after a solemn pause.

"Yes, mamma, nearly everybody has accepted."

Dulcie looks up again, and Maud, meeting the questioning glance, feels constrained to explain.

"We have asked a few to dine with us," she says; "to meet Sir Archie and Miss Fairfax," she adds, as if anxious to make Dulcie understand that they are not asked on her account.

"That will be very nice," says Dulcie. "Sir Archie likes plenty of amusement." There is a hackneyed stare and a dry cough from Maud at the presumption of this assertion, but Dulcie does not notice it. "If there is anything I can do," she says, cheerfully, "anything in the way of arranging flowers—I'm considered rather good at that—or anything of that sort."

"Thanks, never mind," says Maud, icily. "The servants generally do that sort of thing."

"Oh, do they?" says Dulcie, not at all overawed. "I should scarcely think they had taste enough. Sir Archie says it is a gift. I used to slip down at the hotel in Rome a few minutes before the table d'hôte, and arrange the flowers in the epergnes; the servants simply threw them in—'chucked!' Sir Archie used to say, and it was a very good word."

WAR SUMMARY. British Front in France and Belgium, Oct. 5. (By Associated Press.) The sun this morning was shining through the crisp October air on an unwavering line of victorious British troops along the new defence, which they reached in yesterday's great drive. The night had brought virtually no change in the situation and the British were rapidly consolidating the positions that were the fruits of one of the most important conquests of the war. The night was comparatively calm so far as the infantry was concerned. The enemy, however, concentrated an intense artillery fire on the entire battlefield and during yesterday afternoon and evening massed their shattered troops at various places for counter attacks. These were attempts born of desperation and in almost every case the on-rushing waves of German infantry were caught in heavy artillery and machine gun fire and crushed before they reached their objectives. The German artillery fire was particularly heavy up to midnight along the sector north of the Menin Road in vicinity of Polderhook. In the afternoon and evening the enemy launched no less than five counter attacks in this sector of the front, but each time was driven back with heavy losses. A little further in the neighborhood of Reulath the Germans met with no more success. Twice they essayed to press back the British troops, twice they were hurled back. With the Britishers secure in all positions they won Thursday along more than an eight mile front of the Ypres section of Flanders, Field Marshal Haig's men were busy at work on Friday, consolidating their newly won positions and preparing their newly won positions and preparing for another hack into the German lines when the time becomes propitious. Nothing but dropping of shells from German guns served to interrupt the breathing spell the Britishers were taking except here and there and small counter attacks which lacked the usual strength, the Germans employ in endeavouring to regain the lost ground. In addition to the enormous casualties inflicted on the Germans, the Britishers captured 4,446 prisoners in Thursday's attack among them 114 officers.

Comparative quiet prevails on all other battle fronts. Artillery duels between the French and Germans on the Verdun sector, and in Champagne continues, and at several points in the latter sector, General Petain's forces again have repulsed surprise attacks delivered by troops of the German Crown Prince.

Apparently the Teutonic Allies in Roumania, after some weeks of virtual inactivity again are preparing to attempt to forge back the Russo-Roumanian line. The Russians have been forced to sustain an offensive near Radautz while near the Buzar River region attacks by Bulgarian troops have been defeated.

The admission is made in the latest Vienna official that the Italians were successful in winning trenches from the Austrians on the western slope of Monte San Gabriele in Gorizia sector, but it is asserted that heavy losses were sustained by them.

In Russia a coalition government has been formed with Kerensky as Premier, notwithstanding the demand of the democrat press that no government should be constituted without the sanction of Congress. Meanwhile further trouble has broken out in Turkestan where a revolutionary movement was started early in the week but later was suppressed. The Russian government has now declared that a state of war exists in this region.

The troops taking part in yesterday's attack included battalions from twenty-eight English counties, two battalions from Scotland, Ireland, Wales, and Australian and New Zealand divisions. The enemy's losses throughout the whole fighting have been exceedingly heavy, being greatly increased by the unusual number of German troops on the battlefield of our attack. Our casualties have been light. In addition to the prisoners taken we captured a few guns and other material. Severe fighting occurred, but the enemy was unable to drive our troops from the positions they had gained. Our new positions east of Ypres were heavily shelled by the enemy during the night, but no further counter attacks were made. A hostile raiding party endeavored to enter our trenches last night north of Couraumont, but was driven off with losses.

THE KING'S CONGRATULATIONS.

LONDON, Oct. 5. The King has telegraphed congratulations to Field Marshal Sir Douglas Haig, Commander-in-Chief of the British forces in France and Belgium, upon his efficient leadership and the courage of his troops.

AIR RAIDS ON GERMANY.

AMSTERDAM, Oct. 5. A semi-official issued in Berlin refers to the attacks of the Entente airmen on German towns and says, they prove it is necessary for Germany to press back enemy aerial bases as far as possible. If to-day enemy airmen had bases on the Meuse line or in Belgium we should discover not only that western Germany but the heart of Germany would be exposed to enemy bombs. The statement concludes by saying that Belgium must no longer be dependent in a political or military sense on the Entente Powers.

A despatch from Berlin received here describes the aerial raids on the German towns on Tuesday night. The despatch shows that one airman penetrated as far as Dortmund and dropped six bombs, damaging the tracks between Dortmund south and Dortmund stations. One person was killed. Another airman dropped six bombs near Furtach, near Stuttgart. Small damage was done, but there were no casualties. Airmen coming from a southern and westerly direction attacked Frankfurt-on-the-Main. Most of the bombs fell harmlessly outside, but others fell at thirteen places within the city boundary. The damage done was very small. Five persons were injured, none were killed. In Lorraine, says the despatch, the industrial region was subjected to numerous attacks, but owing to effective measures of defense only slight success was attained. One of the Allied airmen returning from Frankfurt-on-the-Main was forced to descend by German anti-aircraft guns. Other attacks the same night were directed against Bastaph and Baden-Baden, causing material damage.

WAITING ASSURANCES.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 5. The final decision of the United States regarding the adoption of a permanent embargo on shipments to Sweden, Norway and Denmark, it was said today, depends entirely upon awaited assurances from the Scandinavian Governments that no leakage of American exports to Germany will be permitted. That the present embargo is not permanent was emphasized in a statement of the Export Administrative Board that the matter was still under consideration. No final policy had yet been decided on, said the statement, because the Board had not been able to get information from the Government of northern neutrals repeatedly requested as to their resources and requirements and other information necessary for intelligent action.

ECONOMIC PRESSURE.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 5. The final move to prevent supplies from reaching Germany from the outside world was taken today by the American Government deciding to refuse coal to neutral ships carrying supplies from South America to Northern European neutral countries, unless their cargoes are inspected in American ports. In making known the decision the Export Administrative Board announced it would apply the provisions of the Export Control Act, which gives the Government the same supervision over bunkers that it has over the exportation of goods with the approval of the Allied nations who will co-operate by enforcing similar regulations.

FRENCH OFFICIAL.

PARIS, Oct. 5. French troops last night repulsed a German surprise attack in the Champagne. The war office statement to-day says there was artillery activity along the right bank of the Meuse in the Verdun region.

RUSSIA'S NEW PARLIAMENT.

PETROGRAD, Oct. 5. The evening papers say that the preliminary parliament which the Democratic Congress has decided to set up will be a provisional body of a consultative, not legislative, character. It will be empowered, however, to consider questions of foreign policy. It will consist of 251 members, of which 110 will represent Zetatives and towns. The government is to supply it periodically with all information concerning the situation in the country.

FLOODS IN CHINA.

PEKIN, Oct. 5. The dykes on the Hoang Ho, or Yellow River, have been broken by floods at two places near Puchow, in the eastern part of Shantung province. According to Government reports the water is flowing in a northeasterly direction and will probably enter the Grand Canal. This, it is feared, will aggravate the situation at Tien Tsin, where there has been no abatement in the rise of the floods.

CHANGE OF RESIDENCE.

PETROGRAD, Oct. 5. The Provisional Government has decided that General Soukhomlinoff, convicted of treason, will serve his term in St. Peter and St. Paul prison instead of Siberia.

CLASH PREDICTED.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 5. Russian officials here predict a clash between the Government and Democratic Congress now assembled at Petrograd, if the Congress refuses its support to Premier Kerensky. At the Russian Embassy, it was said today, the Government would make no concessions and would proceed with the formation of a Cabinet without considering the acts of the Congress.

REPUDIATED CHARGES.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 5. Investigation of the charges by Representative Heflin that certain members of Congress acted suspiciously in connection with the war and an investigation of the interview in which he is alleged to have declared he heard that members got German money by being lucky at cards, was begun today by the House Committee. The Committee first heard two newspaper men in executive session about the interview which he fatly repudiated. Both newspaper men swore that Heflin told them in the House lobby that he heard pro-German and peace at any price members of Congress got money easily at a Washington gambling house, conducted by a German by being lucky at cards. When assailed in the House about the interview, Heflin first denied he said it on the floor, but later repudiated it fatly.

MARTIAL LAW IN TURKESTAN.

PETROGRAD, Oct. 5. The Government has declared a state of war in Turkestan, where revolutionary movements broke out early this week. The situation appeared to be dying out, when it suddenly flared up again.

WITHOUT COMMENT.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 5. An official despatch declares the Pope has forwarded the German reply to the Allies absolutely without comment or endorsement of any kind.

ALSACE-LORRAINE.

PARIS, Oct. 5. Louis Barthou, member of the Inner War Council of the present War Council of France, at a luncheon at the American Club yesterday, declared that the French Government and the French people were absolutely unshakable in their resolve to re-unite Alsace-Lorraine in France. We wish to regain that which belongs to us, he said. The restitution to its legitimate proprietor of property taken by force and retained by force is what we ask. The protest, which has continued for four years, is more eloquent and more decisive than any pledges; it must be restitution pure and simple. Not a heart in France hesitates upon that, no voice is discordant.

RUSSIAN OFFICIAL.

PETROGRAD, Oct. 5. To-day's official announcement follows: On the northern, western and southwestern fronts there were fusillades and scouting operations. On the Roumanian front in Soletin region, south of Radauts, the enemy attacked in dense waves, but was stopped for four days. In more eloquent and more decisive than any pledges; it must be restitution pure and simple. Not a heart in France hesitates upon that, no voice is discordant.

THE Sunlight enterprise and organization for production, manufacture, and distribution were made complete long before the war. But during the war the difficulties and costs of transport have been multiplied. Therefore, Lever Brothers have purchased a fleet of steamships to convey raw materials direct from their plantations to Port Sunlight.

The Housewife is given the full benefit of this enterprise, and thus, in spite of the difficulties caused in England by the war, Sunlight Soap remains the best soap throughout the world, and gives the fullest value for the housewife's money.

REPUDIATION BY BELGIUM.

LONDON, Oct. 5. The Belgian Government has issued a grey book refuting the allegations against Belgian civilians contained in the German white book of May, 1915, in which it was said Belgian civilians savagely attacked German troops in the early days of the war, and that the measures adopted by the Germans were necessary in the interests and preservation of the German army.

According to the grey book, good houses were destroyed by the Germans, approximately by provinces as follows: Antwerp, 563; Brabant, 5,833; West Flanders, 10,000; East Flanders, 2,500; Binout, 3,500; Liege, 3,444; Arbourg, 1,504; Luxembourg, 3,000; Namur, 5,245. In the city of Ypres, 3,700 houses were destroyed, and in Louvain, 1,120.

N. I. W. A. Nomination of Officers.

The nomination of officers of the above Association took place last night and will stand for election which will be held on Friday, the 19th inst. The Secretary's and Treasurer's reports showed a total membership of 930 members and a balance of $732 to the credit of the Association. The following members were nominated: President - E. Bennett. First V.P. - John Giles, G. Tucker. Second V.P. - W. Nautts, S. Merrills, C. Way, E. Whitty. Rec. Sec'y - M. J. James, W. Nautts, F. Thompson, F. Snow. Fin. Sec'y - A. Earle, A. Penney, J. Noel, F. Thompson. Treasurer - W. J. Mahoney, W. Thompson, A. Earle. Marshal - R. Kennedy, J. Ryan. Board of Trustees (3) - J. Giles, K. Bussey, H. Taylor, C. Way, A. Pittman. Auditors (2) - T. White, M. J. James, T. C. Noel. Executive Com. (7) - W. Smith, T. White, S. Merrills, J. Giles, W. Nautts, F. Goff, C. Way, J. J. Cahill, E. Whit-ty, R. Kennedy, H. Taylor, T. D. Carey, G. Tucker, S. Simmonds, Jos. Healey.

The announcement by the chairman that the President, Mr. E. Bennett, had been taken seriously ill the day previous was received with deep regret by all present.

Following the nomination a discussion took place relative to the method of holding meetings and the manner in which they should be conducted. It was the general opinion that members should show more respect to the presiding officers and when leaving the room during the meeting should ask permission from the chair by giving the usual sign, as by showing respect to the officers they were respecting the Association.

Cardinal Mercier.

Through the kindness of His Grace the Archbishop we are enabled to print to-day the text of most of the celebrated pastoral letter written by Cardinal Mercier at the beginning of the present year. Some few of our readers may be familiar with the whole of it; all will be so with the opening paragraph, which has justly become famous. When the rest of the letter is forgotten save by a few students, who appreciate its historical importance and the cogent force of its reasoning, the popular memory will long retain this ringing and scornful denunciation of the German Catholics, whose instigation, as the Cardinal knew, was one of the large motives behind the Kaiser's peace note just then issued.

It is unnecessary to say that the occasion and authorship of this letter have put it in a high place, to which it was never designed, among the great documents of the war. It is perhaps, not often enough mentioned and quoted for its own sake, though the reason is not far to seek. The Mercier that speaks here is not the popular Mercier, the indomitable spirit that tyranny could not crush, the heroic figure defying, almost alone, the brutal oppressors who dared not oppress him also as they would have liked. He is simply a Christian and a Catholic writing to his own priests, analysing, as it were, the state of mind in which they should regard their enemies, and applying to the analysis not the loose ethical code of political states or of laymen, which would justify a thousand times over the most violent feelings of hatred and revenge, but the high and pure standard of the Christian Church. Did this justify such feelings or any of them? Did the written Word, did the teachings of the Church anywhere condemn the anger and hatred, the desire for vengeance, which nature and instinct caused to surge up in their breasts at sight of the horrors and cruelties which they witnessed around them? Did they not preach charity towards our enemies and forgiveness of them?

There is no need for us to offer any comment upon the manner in which the Cardinal examines and answers these questions which he puts to himself, except to say that the unappealable justice of the answer is less remarkable than the thoroughness of the examination. He makes himself Germany's advocate. He discovers for her every conceivable excuse, every condonation of her crimes, every mitigation of the punishment that awaits her, which scripture and Christianity afford. His argument seems almost sophisticated in its patient exactness. It is only when we read it closely and recall how often Germany has been helped by pacifists and visionaries, using the same pleas that he demolishes, that we perceive the real value of them to the moral cause of the Allies. Other men, as for instance President Wilson, have since uttered sentences that have become famous which are but paraphrases of what this prelate here says. "The world must be made safe for democracy," says Mr. Wilson. "People who would amnesty injustice would not be worthy of liberty," Cardinal Mercier had already said.

Finally, it is not an inappropriate moment to recall this lofty vindication of avenging justice when Britain, exhausted of patience and forbearance, prepares to exact a terrible vengeance for the slaughter of her defenceless citizens from the air under the cowardly cover of darkness.

Charity Towards Our Enemies.

From a Pastoral Letter By Cardinal Mercier.

Under the date of January, 1917, Cardinal Mercier, Archbishop of Mechlin, wrote to his priests a letter dealing with the Pastoral Virtues proper to the Present Hour, from which the following is taken:

Catholics beyond our frontiers—who did not find it in their hearts to utter a word of reprobation when the German armies were slaughtering the innocent inhabitants of Dinant, Virton, Ardennes, Taminies, Aerschot and Louvain, shooting our priests, burning our open towns and defenceless villages; who propagated, or allowed to be propagated, the calumnies which sought to exculpate the criminals by transforming the victims into aggressors; who for the last three years have been looking on with folded arms, unspitting eyes, and closed lips at the torture of a nation, their former friends, who had felt nothing but goodwill for Germany—these very Catholics are now, in pathetic accents, chanting hymns to Christian fraternity, forgetfulness of the past, and peace.

Very confused notions seem to be prevalent on the subject of our relations of charity and justice towards the enemy of our Belgian Fatherland. The present occasion seems a favourable one for recalling certain points of doctrine of the master par excellence of Christian theology, Saint Thomas Aquinas.

There are in the heart of man two deeply rooted propensities, the one towards enjoyment, the other towards anger. The object of the first is the possession of some good; enjoyment is the outcome of this possession. The object of the second is to avert some evil, or to rebel against that evil when it overtakes us.

These two propensities are common to animals and ourselves; in animals, they take the forms of desire and passion; in ourselves, they exist not only as desire and passion, but also as reasonable inclination.

An inclination to pleasure, sensitive or super-sensitive, lies outside the question with which we are concerned; what we are now examining is the propensity to anger and vengeance, animal passion or inclination of the reasonable will.

Saint Thomas defines anger as an appetite for vengeance, ira est appetitus vindictae. This appetite may be rooted in the sensitive part of our nature, or in our super-sensitive will. How are we to judge it from the moral point of view?

It may be good or evil, replies St. Thomas, it may engender an act of virtue or a sin, according as to whether the object of the avenging will is just and equitable or not. "To have the will to avenge evil, while respecting the order of justice, is to perform a virtuous act. To desire thus the redress of a moral wrong, within the limits of law, is to be angry with evil—to perform a work of zeal, to act rightly."

But to desire vengeance immoderately, whether by overstepping lawful limits, or by making the destruction of the offender the first consideration, and the repression of evil a secondary object, is to act wrongly; in this latter case, indeed, the suffering of our fellow-creature becomes the object of our vengeance.

And how are we to judge of the participation of passion in this avenging wrath? Does morality demand that the will to take vengeance on evil should be impossible?

No, replies Saint Thomas on the contrary. Passion is, no doubt, dangerous at the moment when a man has to decide as to the morality of an act to be accomplished; it may then, indeed, perturb the serenity of judgment. But directly the justice of an act of repression is evident, and the morality of such repression has been agreed upon, the passion of anger becomes the auxiliary of the will. It reinforces the vigour and promptitude with which justice is accomplished; the passions, thus kept within proper bounds, are, says Saint Thomas, useful to virtue, utilia virtuti.

The application of these principles to the present situation is obvious; the injustice of the violation of our territory is flagrant, and is, indeed, admitted by those responsible for it. The disregard of our rights, from the fatal days of the invasion to the present, is patent. The repression of these iniquities is therefore a manifest right, and for those in a position to perform it, a duty. To desire that this right should be exercised, that order should be re-established, that the offenders against order should be chastised and rendered incapable of doing further injury; to desire that inoffensive people should be able to live in peace; that the last word should be said by the side of right and to the honour of the God of Justice; to desire this with all the energy of our will and all the passionate ardour of which our human nature is capable, is to answer to the requirements of justice, it is to perform an act of virtue.

But this, it is objected, implies hate, and charity excludes hate. Undoubtedly, charity excludes hate; hate is as mutually exclusive as fire and water; they cannot co-exist in one person.

What is it to hate? It is to wish evil to another for evil's sake, to desire that our fellow-creature should suffer merely that he may suffer, that is, to make his suffering a consummation on which we dwell complacently. Such a spiritual state would be highly culpable.

On the other hand, to desire that physical evil should overtake him who has committed an injustice and who persists in it, not as an end in itself, but as a means to an ulterior moral end; to desire that an offender should suffer in order that, under the stress of suffering, that conversion which he refuses to accomplish voluntarily may take place in his soul, is not to hate him; on the contrary, it is to love him rationally.

"I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked, but that the wicked turn from his way and live."

Following the example of our God, we do not wish that our enemies should be excluded from Paradise, but that they should become worthy of entering therein.

He who loves well chastises well, says the proverb. The love of avenging justice may be carried to excess, and degenerate into cruelty; but it may also err by omission, and refrain from inflicting just punishment on the guilty.

It is the injury done to the nation which has aroused general indignation and requires reparation. Outrages on public order must not remain unpunished. The prince who should systematically show mercy to criminals would endanger social security. Peoples who would amnesty injustice would not be worthy of liberty.

True, the Gospel inclines to pardon. But the Church knows on what conditions this can be granted. Let us follow her example. She demands that the offender should confess his fault; that he should repent; that he should promise not to repeat his offence; and, if his fault be an injustice, that he should make restitution, in accordance with Saint Augustine's well-known declaration: Non remittitur peccatum, nisi restitatur ablatum; and the acceptance of a penance commensurate with the penalties incurred by the sin committed.

As soon as our enemies have fulfilled these conditions, the hour of mercy will have struck for them.

Certain sentimental souls are occasionally disturbed by recollection of the words in the Gospel: "Whoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also."

But if you desire to understand this evangelical precept aright, says Saint Augustine, study the example of our Lord Himself. When our Divine Master was examined before Caiaphas, an officer dared to strike Him in the face. Our gentle Saviour did not say: "Here is the other cheek." He presented this dilemma to the aggressor: "If I have spoken evil, bear witness of the evil; but if well, why smitest thou Me?"

The Apostle St. Paul also, remarks Saint Augustine, was on one occasion publicly smitten on the mouth by order of the High Priest, Ananias. Did the accused suffer this in silence? "God shall smite thee, thou whited wall," he rejoined, "for sittest thou to judge me after the law, and commandest me to be smitten contrary to the law?" To this retort Saint Paul further added a sentence of subtle and scathing irony.

The Gospel precept must not be taken literally. Its meaning is that, under all circumstances, the Christian must be master of himself, and able to preserve his internal patience. As to his external conduct, it must depend upon the conditions. A truly wise benevolence will often demand that one should exercise a certain harshness to one's neighbour; one must be able to correct him in spite of himself, and to consider his true interests rather than his preferences.

But did not God say in the Book of Deuteronomy: "To Me belongeth vengeance and recompense?"

And does not Saint Paul, in his Epistle to the Romans, repeat this precept: "If it be possible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men. Dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves, but rather give place unto wrath; for it is written: Vengeance is mine, I will repay, saith the Lord?"

Obviously these inspired texts do not mean that God reserves to His own immediate action all exercise of repressive justice, for in this very Letter to the Romans from which these texts are taken, the Apostle Saint Paul expressly says that the representatives of public power "bear the sword . . . to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil."

This, says Saint Thomas, is the meaning of these words of Scripture: "External offences are to be dealt with by the public powers, but I reserve to Myself the power of judging and punishing hidden faults. And you, Christians, refrain from hasty judgments. Nolite ante tempus iudicare."

Or again, says the holy Doctor, the texts may have another meaning: "The crimes of men offend God. Therefore justice and reparation belong to God. It is to usurp a divine prerogative to ascribe the intention of justice to oneself."

Finally, a last question: Is it right for the clergy to take part in the conflicts brought about by the war and the occupation? Are not the functions of the Bishop and his priests exclusively confined to the spiritual needs of souls?

The Church is not an invisible society of pure spirits. The faithful are exposed to perils of the body and of the soul, of time and of eternity. The solicitude of their pastors must embrace all these interests. Hear, further, Saint Thomas Aquinas on this point: "The pastors of the Church must not be content only to resist the wolves which inflict spiritual death on their flocks; they must also make a stand against the ravishers and tyrants who cause them to suffer physically. Not that the representatives of ecclesiastical authority should themselves handle material weapons; but they should make use of their spiritual weapons, that is to say, they should address salutary warnings to the guilty, they should pray fervently, they should punish obstinate rebels with excommunication."

The ambiguities we have endeavoured to clear up in this view of charity towards the enemy arise from an inadequate conception of charity.

In the eyes of many persons ill informed of the doctrines of Christianity, the virtues are like so many parallel threads. These threads are of unequal value, perhaps; charity is, no doubt, of a superior quality, but none the less it appears to be juxtaposed to the other threads of the weaver's warp.

Thus, we can understand, the mind accepts the idea of charity without justice, and then casts about for a means of reconciling the two.

But in reality things are not so; charity is a wool which forms a single tissue with all the threads of our Christian virtues.

Broadly speaking, there is but one precept: We must love God, and love our fellow-men out of our love for God.

The Christian should be temperate, strong, just, prudent, but by charity; he should believe in God, and hope in Him, but by charity; he should practise charity, by charity. Charity is the sole inspirer and director of the whole moral and religious life.

There is no Christian justice without charity, and no charity without justice. And as avenging justice is a part of the virtue of justice, there is no charity without avenging justice. To desire to close our eyes to injustice, under the pretext of heroism in charity, and to allow the enemy to commit crimes with impunity because he is the enemy, is to fail to recognise the sovereign and necessary sway of charity in the compensation of the moral, individual, and social life of Christianised humanity.

Your Boys and Girls. A Little More and A Little Less.

All babies are lovely—at least mothers think so. Their features may not be perfect, but their complexion when healthy are always beautiful, bright eyes and dimpled with an expression of innocence and purity.

How to preserve that lovely complexion is a question often asked after it has been destroyed. Children are often confined in ill-ventilated homes, this should not be so, for oxygen is an agent that nourishes the blood which forms the complexion. A home of this kind not only destroys the complexion, but it brings about numerous other bodily ills.

You Can't Find Any Dandruff, and Hair Stops Coming Out

Save your hair! Make it thick, wavy, glossy and beautiful at once.

Try as you will, after an application of Danderine you can not find a single trace of dandruff or falling hair and your scalp will not itch, but what will please you most, will be after a few weeks' use, when you see new hair, fine and downy at first—yes—but really new hair—growing all over the scalp.

A little Danderine immediately doubles the beauty of your hair. No difference how dull, faded, brittle and scraggy, just moisten a cloth with Danderine and carefully draw it through your hair, taking only one small strand at a time. The effect is immediate and amazing—your hair will be light, fluffy and wavy, and have an appearance of abundance; an incomparable lustre, softness and luxuriance, the beauty and shimmer of true hair health.

Get a 25-cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store or toilet counter, and prove that your hair is as pretty and soft as any—that it has been neglected or injured by careless treatment. A 25-cent bottle will double the beauty of your hair.

Household Notes.

Late peas are best used for puree. Rice with cheese sauce is very nutritious. Do not be wasteful in preparing vegetables. Coffee should be kept in a glass sealed jar. Cold milk should be used for white sauce. Omelet with rice in it is an agreeable change. Aspic jelly may be made from chicken broth. Cooked squash is used to make squash biscuit. Rice and olives are good with creamed salt fish. Spoon bread is delicious made of rice and corn meal. Squash can be canned just as other vegetables are. Small potatoes should be selected for baking under meat. Dried celery may serve as a basis for cream-of-celery soup. Corn, tomatoes and rice make good filling for stuffed peppers. White loaf cake is delicious dusted with sugar and cinnamon. Cakes without icing may have nuts or raisins set in their tops. Sour milk and buttermilk can be used with soda in making hot breads. There should always be a main dish for a sort of keystone of the meal. Slices of stale cake can be toasted and served with sliced bananas.

Soldiers' Graves

DEATH, THE LEVELLER, EVEN WIT HUNS.

Death levels all, we are told, and that this is indeed the truth has been proved in hundred of instances in this war of the world's. Private and officer, friend and erstwhile foe—all lie side by side in the sleep that knows no awakening. Major Willie Redmond, king of good fellows, lies miles away from the land he loved so well, but his grave will never be forgotten; and never will his glory fade: Captain Selous, that Grand Old Man of the African wilds, he, too, rests with the ocean swelling between his body and the friends who even now think of him with a dimming of the eyes.

But when the Hun has been beaten to his knees, when will be the opportunity of the father or the mother to visit the grave of the one they loved so well in this life. They will find it without difficulty, for in France a very careful record is kept day by day of the last resting places of those who have made the supreme sacrifice. The graves may be in the corner of an orchard or a field, just a little plot of ground fenced off from the pasture on the plough. But a record is kept in the office near by, and a duplicate is in every case sent home to London. It is so with the French graves, and, to the everlasting honour of all concerned, it is so when a German, wounded into death, dies in hospital and is buried close by. He is not flung into an unmarked pit, he is buried just as reverently as though he were a friend, his grave is well looked after, and his name appears on the cross at the head of the little grassy mound.

There is little need to give more than one or two instances in which this has been done. Let me just mention one or two. They are being carefully looked after and, if they had wives and children these will one day learn where they are resting.

On a slope near Aveley Wood there is just a little square piece of ground, cut out of the field. An Artillery Major, a company Sergeant Major, and fifteen men of other ranks are here. And it is so on through and through the Fronts of all the Allies. Sometimes there has been a handsome cross made in the regimental workshops, sometimes it is a roughly fashioned one. But the sentiment is all the same. The dead can be located after the war, and who knows? It may be some relief to those who have been left behind to see where the husband, the brother, or the son, was reverently committed to Mother Earth by his comrades and his Padre.

Graves, too, have been discovered almost by chance by those who have learnt a chum or a relative has "stopped it" near where they have been fighting or working themselves. Take as an instance the discovery of his son's grave by an officer friend of mine. A little rough cross and affixed to it the tab of a London tailor were all that the father had to guide him. It was enough. I knew him well I once played a game of "straight poker" with him for a pump that belonged to no one, but which we both wanted, I beat him, and I took the pump. He was a sport—and a man. Tracing where a chum has been buried though, is not always an easy task during an advance. The burial may have been a hurried one, made under shell fire, and the place can only be located by a reference to a map. There was one particular instance of this that may be worth telling.

An officer learnt that a friend of his had been killed and buried, and he wished to send the location of the exact spot home to the parents of the dead man. The death of the officer was recorded but not the exact place of the grave. A careful search, made when other duties would allow, led to nothing. A letter home to a mutual friend, however, secured the information that the dead man had been buried by two brother officers in the corner of an orchard near

Happily, that was sufficient. The spot was located by means of the map, a cross was made behind the lines, a small coil of wire and four short posts carried up, and after three attempts (the first two failed owing to the shelling being too heavy), the corner of the orchard was made secure from intrusion by any wandering cattle, the fence erected, and the new cross fixed in place of the old.

There was also something in connection with this too, that I might mention. The officer who was making the attempt to get to the grave had told his batman (servant) that he was starting at a certain hour in the very early morning, and that he would like a mug of hot tea before he got away. The tea was ready—and so was the batman. "Hallo," said the officer, "where do you think you're going?" "Well," was the bat-man's reply, "you're not going up by yourself, sir. Who's going to look after you if you get hit?"

And the pair went up and did the job together.

Salves Can't Cure Eczema.

In regard to skin diseases, medical authorities are now agreed on this. Don't imprison the disease germs in your skin by the use of greasy salves, and thus encourage them to multiply. A true cure of all eczematous diseases can be brought about only by using the healing agents in the form of a liquid.

WEEK END NOTES.

(I. C. M.)

With this issue we come to the end of our notes for a while but later on we hope to resume our jottings and tell a few more stories.

There are many questions that are worthy the columns of our press, and many happenings that give food for comment, and it is gratifying to know that our papers are so liberally assisted by independent correspondents who treat upon current topics.

The press is an important factor in creating public opinion, and the press, like a good many other agencies, is just what we the people make it. Every reader of the daily papers has some interest in the tone of the press, and if what is contributed be worthy the people then they should rally round and encourage the editors in their good work.

Always Had Headaches.

Liver Was Torpid and Bilious Spells Brought Sick Headaches - Lost Much Time, But is Now Completely Cured.

Newtown, N. B., October 6th. Here is convincing evidence that however much you may suffer from liver trouble and consequent biliousness there is cure in the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

Over-eating is the most common cause of sluggish liver action. You lose your appetite, have distressing bilious spells, usually accompanied by headache and vomiting, the bowels become irregular, constipation and looseness alternating, digestion is upset and you get irritable and down-hearted.

No treatment so quickly awakens the action of the liver and bowels as Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. For this reason this medicine is wonderfully popular and has enormous sales.

Mr. A. S. Mace, J.P., endorses the above statement and says: "This is to certify that I am personally acquainted with Charles R. Tait, and believe his statement in every way to be true and correct."

great work of the press that I have written so much and with the hope that some good has been accomplished for the common good, and our beloved country. Like other countries we now stand confronted with the serious conditions of war; and to make the best of the situation is the duty of every man who calls himself a Briton, and of every woman who enjoys the same heritage.

The writers of the future will have a wide field for research and they will find data for many a thrilling tale, and of many self-sacrificing efforts, and their work will reflect, however, upon the devotion of those who now endure the burdens of the war, and who bear its sorrow in their hearts.

Until this time comes let us be patient, and as our people have done so well and have displayed their loyalty to such a marked degree we can justly lay claim to our part in the rejoicing and jubilation of the future.

The Governorship of New South Wales

We trust that the appointment, announced yesterday, of Sir Walter Davidson, hitherto Governor of Newfoundland, to be Governor of the State of New South Wales will mark the end of the friction that arose between the late Governor, Sir Gerald Strickland, and the New South Wales Government. Few positions in the Imperial Service are more delicate than those held by the representatives of the Crown in the self-governing Dominions. Unfailing tact, a keen sense of proportion, savoir faire, and power of adapting means to ends are among the qualities indispensable to the public servants appointed to them. It cannot be said that during Sir Gerald Strickland's tenure of the Governorship of New South Wales he exhibited these qualities in the necessary degree. The record of Sir Walter Davidson in Newfoundland justifies, however, the belief that he will succeed in discharging his functions to the satisfaction of the New South Wales Government and of the Imperial authorities alike. The Governorship of Newfoundland is no sinecure; and it speaks well for the late Governor that the Prime Minister, Sir E. P. Morris, should strongly have deprecated his departure. In a sense, the anxiety of the Newfoundland Government to retain Sir Walter Davidson gives the measure of his fitness for his new post and of the services which it may enable him to render to the State of New South Wales and to the Imperial Government.—London Times Sept. 13.

Denial by Boot and Shoe Workers Union,

Editor Evening Telegram. Dear Sir,—Re the item appearing in last evening's Herald in connection with the Boot and Shoe Workers strike. The statement at the end of the article is misleading. In May last we applied for a small percentage to give men a living wage; that request was completely ignored. We may say that there was absolutely no exception taken to non-union men up to the present date. BOOT & SHOE WORKERS Mecham's Hall, UNION. Oct. 6th, 1917.
