Canada and the United States. Senator Jones said to talk of the United States wanting to take Canada was nonsense. They had more territory than they wanted, as much as they could man they wanted, as much as they could manage. They would like to see Canada come in a number of sister states, but if Canada would not do this, there was no danger of her being troubled by them. But Canada could never do things they could do, because five millions could not work as effectively as fifty, because the variety of resources was less, and because, so long as Canada was a colony she would not attract immigrants coming from federal countries, anxious not to continue but to break away from their political past. Mr. Jones said there was no danger of Blaine pursuing a jingo policy.

The Auglo-Phobiats in the Presidential

A few months before the late republican convention was held in Chicago, the Current, a high-class weekly published in that city, had an article from the prominent democratic publicist and free-trader, Henry Watterson, in which he outlined the coming presidential issue from his point of view. To this a reply appeared one of the grounds on which he predicted democratic defeat. After dwelling on the want of public confidence in the purity and good sense of the democrats and justifying it by the history of that party he

Moreover it is to be remembered that the real spinal column of the democratic party in the north is the practically solid Irish vote. Without that vote, it would hardly be possible for the democratic party at any time to earry a northern state. The conservative masses of the country have grave apprehen-ions that in the eyent of the success of the democratic party in 1884, this influence would be so controlling and so potent with it that we would be involved in the most serious complications, if not war, with England.

Since that time the republicans have nominated as their candidate for the pres idency the man who of all possible aspir ants to the position, has done most to innoculate the American public with jingoism, and who took advantage of his brief tenure of the secretaryship of state in Garfield's administration to flout England in the matter of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. Since that time the democrats have nominated as their candidate a man who is notoriously free from all hankering after a spirited foreign policy, and who received the nomination in open defiance by the democratic party of the anglo-phobists with whom they were, not unjustly, credited by Mr. Storrs. This simple statement shows that the situation has changed within the past few months, but it does not show all. Ever since his nomination Blaine has been angling for the Irish vote, and for the vote, both of which are hostile to England. His efforts in this direction have confirmed the bolt of the independent republicans, many of whom would no doubt have fallen back into line had the democrats nominated a man to please Tammany and frankly avowed the error of the fussy jingoism which alarmed his own countrymen more than it irritated England. It looks at present as though Blaine will get those Irish votes, or a large share of them, which do not go to Butler; and if this comes to be the conviction of the American people and of the Germans the result may be disastrous to the republican party. What the democrats needed to give them a better hold on public confidence in the north was the exchange of a few men of the "Richelieu" Robinson stamp for a few men like George W. Curtis and Carl Schurz, and this exchange bids fair to be accomplished. How permanent the new alliances may be will depend largely on the result of the election. Cleveland wins and throws his influence in favor of a cautious home, and a pacific foreign policy, the whole face of political parties may be changed for good.

The Duke's Fishing Basket.

We call the attention of the noble editor of the Mail to the fact that a member of the privileged classes, to which he belongs, has invented a fishing basket. That the duke of Edinburgh should have accomp lished such a feat is a crushing reply those radical persons who are prone to assert that lordlings and princelings never accomplish anything to add to the sum of human happiness. The duke's basket is described as a wicker-covered quart bottle, with plated top cork; two German silver plated cups; wide-mouth bottle, with silver screw caps to fit inside cups ; plated seasoning roller, ivory-handled knife, plated fork, two German silver plated plates, padlock, two bronze check winches, forty yards prepared plaited silk line, forty yards prepared plaited silk and hair line, japanned tin case, eight spinning flights, water witch, six artificial baits, two furnished lines, hooks, shots, disgorgers and plummet, legers and leads, pater nosters, triangle hooks, two traces, fly case, eight dozen flies, half dozen casting lines, folding ring and silk net, double telescope handle. The only thing that the structure seems to lack is a mansard roof and an elevator. But of course it can be enlarged and improved.

About Cotton Prints.

Our correspondent Consumer puts the free trade points of the cotton question pretty foreibly in his letter elsewhere printed in this issue. But he rather exaggerates what we have said on the subject. has not increased the price to the congerates what we have said on the subject.

Nobody here imagines that Manchester will "quake" because of expected Canadian competition in cotton goods; still it might be quite reasonable to believe that a ship be quite reasonable to be quite reas be quite reasonable to believe that a ship ment or two of Canadian cotton to England might cause people there to realize, more vividly than they ever did before, the fact that Canada is building up manufactures

Let us suggest that it will be time enough for the Canadian consumer aforesaid to begin grumbling when the fact that he is paying extra high prices stares him in the face. Until then he may be content to believe that somehow or other the rise of manufactures in Canada does not work exactly in the way that free traders represent.

Why, certainly. There's no need for devising, just such a word has been in use from time immemorial, in the land of oatmeal, bare kness, and heather. We refer to the well-known Highland pronoun—"Hernainsell." It has a very pronounced personality, but it is totally void of gender, in so far as we have ever seen it applied. Showers of Cats.

To the Editor of the World. SIR: I must complain of a phenomen in the animal world, the like of which it has never before been my lot to witness. The other day standing in my back yard, I was startled and astonished at seeing a black and white cat descend just before my feet as if it had fallen from the sky. I have repeatedly since seen cats flying with frightful speed through the air and landing sometimes in my yard, sometimes in yards two or three doors from me, some times even flying over houses or falling with a dull thud on the middle of roofs with a dull thud on the middle of roofs near by. The lines of flight seem to radiate from the back yard of one of my neighbors. But why that neighbor persists in the cruelty of jerking these cats up into the sky and letting them fall all over the neighborhood to the terror and possible danger of injury of people around I cannot imagine. I don't want to complain on him as a nuisance and so write you in hope that he will take the hint. hope that he will take the hint. CITIZEN.

Toronto, Aug. 11, 1884.

A Palpable Humbug. To the Editor of The World. SIR: Are pine trees planted by princess exempt from the workings of the ordinary laws of nature, and if so to what extent? Further, are such trees under these cirumstances deprived of their inalienable heritage of growth? I ask these questions in all humility, as I thirst for knowledge with an unspeakable yearning, for in pass-ing through Horticultural gardens I noticed a pine tree in a little enclosure labelled: a pine tree in a little enclosure labelled:
"This tree was planted by her royal highness Princess Louise, September, 1879."
Now, to my knowledge, at least two pine trees have died in the little enclosure since trees have died in the little enclosure since that memorable September day, and more over, the pine tree planted then was as big as is the present occupant of the spot. A stree that has died nearly every year since it was planted and is now as bright and healthy as ever, and which is, perhaps, rather smaller than when it was planted five years ago, is surely a vegetable wonder. The Horticultural society appear to be determined to have a pine tree planted be determined to have a pine tree planted by H. R. H. as long as there is a young pine to be procured at a reasonable figure.

This is surely a laudable form of loyalty and quite innocent too, at least it harms nobody but the perpetrators. G. NUFF.

Toronto, Aug. 11, 1884.

To the Editor of The World.

Sire: In your leading article of to-day you state that prints are cheaper to-day than ever, and that the extra 7½ per cent. has not increased the price to the con-since January 1, being in competition with goods entered 7½ per cent. less, were sold below the usual rate of profit. Trying to prove that cotton goods are cheaper in consequence of the high tariff is an absurdity. You might argue that goods made here are cheaper than before the N. P., and there's no denying that fact, but that is due to the prices of textile fabrics the world over being cheaper than in 1878; but to say that prints, not made in this country, can be cheaper or no dearer because an extra 7½ per cent is added to the duty is preposterous.

try, that is an idea which rather yound them. Possibly Sidney Smith's suggestion for getting a joke into the head of a Scotchman—by a surgical operation—might occur in this connection, but before trying such heroic treatment it might be a good plan to waken them up with a small shipment or two of cottons from the backwoods of Canada.

It may be that goods from the Magog print works are not yet for sale over retail counters. But everybody in the trade knows that they are coming, and the starting of the works makes prints cheaper in Canada ere yet a yard has been clipped off for customers in the stores.

Our correspondent's main argument is that nothing that we can do in the way of starting one print factory, or more than one, will affect Manchester prices in the slightest. We are not so sure about that. It Even so large a market as Manchester might stretch a point or two to keep command of even so small a market as Canada if possible. The probability is that the extra 7½ per cent, will be paid wholly by at the proposal to sell goods at a non paying price in order that the people Canada should have cheap prints. Mar chanada should have cheap prints. Man-chester very largely supplies the world with print cottons, and the prices there are governed by the cost of production, and no thought whatever given to Canada, its government, its people, or its act of folly called the N P called the N. P.

No doubt the arrival in England of fifteen cases of white cottons will make Manchester quake. The board of trade will meet, the exchange will be greatly excited, and a general feeling of uneasiness prevail until they calculate that the contents of the fifteen cases in question would not be one yard for every 3000 of her people, and not a yard for every 30,000 of the people for whom she makes cottons. The United States tried exporting cottons to England at prices much below home rates, but Manchester beat them and the writer

BT S. B. M. the embodiment of beauty. None could have thought otherwise, seeing her as she sat there alone on the piazza, her lovely form slightly inclined, her hands clasped on her lap, and one small and shapely foot lightly tapping the floor; the long, sweeping lashes drooping languidly ever her dreamy, lustrous eyes, and a sweet smile playing about her scarlet mouth, which was open just enough to exhibit the even tips of her pearly teeth. The restless, crimson tide, coursing beneath the pure, transparent skip, would occasionally suffuse her cheeks and then pass gradually away, only to surge back again and mantle face, neck and bosom with a burning blush. Yes, Minerva Lambert was beautiful, and never did she look more so than now, as, flushed with apparent excitement, and totally unconscious of the charming picture she formed, she sat there where the long, trailing vines swayed to and fro on one side, casting fantastic shadows on the foor, and on the other motley flowers nodding lazily in the gentle breeze that lifted sweet fragrance from their coroniform erests, while the slanting beams of the evening sun rested like a halo on her Minerva had two lovers-that is, two, enly one of whom she could think of acepting as her companion through life.

Literally, she had at least a dozen, but only two dared to hope for her hand.
These were Leroy Beaumont and Mark

Spencer.

Leroy was the son of wealthy parents; Mark was comparatively poor. Leroy was very handsome, with dark, flashing eyes, black, glossy hair and fierce-looking mustache; Mark was not, though his bright and ever-smiling countenance was anything but a disagreeable aspect.

They were not friends, but it was not because of their rivalry. They had never been personally acquainted. Leroy, thinking that features anch as his were essential to any one who would win the hand of tial to any one who would win the hand of that to any one who would win the hand of that beauty, was, consequently, confident of his ability to gain the victory, and, per-haps, was unprejudiced.

Mark appinion was different. Although not nearly so confident of success as his competitor, his was too noble a nature to competitor, his was too notice a land allow hatred or jealousy to be excited within him, and he believed that Minerva Lambert would not judge by personal ap-pearance which was most deserving of the pearance which was most deserving of the much-coveted hand.

But Minerva, it must be said, had a few romantic notions in her head.

Her father, knowing the reputation of Mark Spencer, advised her to accept him in preference, a to the other. in preference to the other, but she hesi Mr. Beaumont was so handsome, tall and graceful, and he had such bright and flashing eyes, and then that captivating moustache was an adornment that Mr. Spencer could not boast of.

She wrote two notes exactly alike, and sent one of them to each of her lovers.

They ran thus:

It was just the night for a meeting of lovers. The moon looked down with modified splender from her starry throne. Her image was reflected in the limpid stream. Her tempered light flooded the little gable, and stealing through the rustling branches, fell upon the face of Max Spencer.

there was something attractive about that face. It was so open and candid, and there such a good natured smile on the manly brow. The verdict of one capable of reading the heart in the face, would undoubtedly be good, and even a casual of the corns."

This, he thought, was the reason why he had been requested to meet her there, preferring that romantic spot in which to tell him of her love.

He heard a footstep behind him. Turning hastily, he beheld the handsome Apollo, Leroy Beaumont, walking briskly along toward him.

He was much surprised to see him approaching and so was Leroy to find Mark proaching, and so was Leroy to find Mark there, for he stopped short and held up both hands, exclaiming: "Mark Spencer!"

"Mr. Beaumont," returned the other, with a slight nod.
"Why are you here?" cried Beaumont.

"What right have you to ask?" calmly retorts: the young man.

His rival colored.
"Mr, you are impudent," said he,

More than the charge, Mr. Beaumont, and you have no cause to speak thus."

"Again I ask you why you are here?"

"Again I sell you that it does not conmerly in delicate health, whose vigor and

"Minerva should have been here ere this," he muttered, as if to himself, but with a furtive glance at Mark Spencer to see what effect his words produced on him.

Mark was surprised; but pretending that he did not hear the words, he said:

"No, sir, I will not leave this place, for I, too, am waiting for a friend."

"You mean Miss Lambert?"

"I do"
"Then sir, you are a light?" oried Loroy

"Then, sir, you are a liar!" cried Leroy, ercely. "She did not ask you to meet her here."

"I beg your pardon, but—"
"Cease! hold your lying tongue!" thundered the handsome man, and the words were accompanied by a horrible oath.
"Audacious scoundrel! you know not that Minerva Lambert is soon to become my

"I knew not that such a meeting was in contemplation. But, sir, I have no desire to bandy words with you; therefore, I wish you good exeming." you good evening."

He bowed and was about to withdraw from the spot, when Leroy, with another fierce and bitter oath, produced a pistol and pointed it at him.

Mark was no coward. He folded his arms and looked calmly into the dark muzarms and looked calmly into the dark muszle of the weapon.

"Shoot," said he; "shoot, Leroy Beaumont. I am unarmed."

"Peace, men!" cried a silvery voice.

They looked simultaneously, and beheld Minerva Lambert, standing there in the moonlight, her tall, queenly form clad in spotless white.

Mark lifted his hat politely, while his rival stood stock still, staring at her.

Minerva stepped proudly forward.

"Mr Beaumont," said she, confronting that gentleman, "I have witnessed your proceedings since you came here, and have overheard the conversation carried on beproceedings since you came here, and have overheard the conversation carried on between you and Mr. Spencer. Sir, you have proved yourself a villain and a coward. You cursed Mr. Spencer without cause. You were going to shoot him even after he told you that he was unarmed. And besides, you told him that I was your promised wife, which you know is false. "You asked me this day for my heart and hand, as also did Mr. Spencer. I gave neither of you an answer, because I wished to carry out a little plan. I knew nothing of your past life, sir, nor whether you at present had the reputation of being good or bad. I could not think of joining my life to one who, comparatively speak-

"I planned this meeting with the hope that it might give me an insight into your true character, and I hoped not in vain. I desired to see your actions on confronting your rival here. I have seen. I am satisfied. Go, sir! never speak to me again, nor allow your footsteps to wander toward my home, which you have so often visited as a wolf in sheep's clothing." Pale and trembling Leroy Beaumont lis tened to this speech, cowering before the accusing gaze of those flashing eyes like a criminal receiving his sentence.

When she had finished she stood erect, and for a moment a bitter retort seemed to tremble on his lips. It remained un-heart.

Now, they had both proposed. This very day they had been both at her feet, pouring fourth the story of their love, and begging for hers in return.

Of course, they did not do this at the same time, but at different hours of the day, and neither knew of the other's proposal.

Tremble on his lips. It remains tremble on his lips. He remains turned abruptly on his heel with a contemptuous toss of his head, and walked proudly away.

When he was lost to view in the darkness, Minerva turned to Mark who had been a silent spectator of the little drama that had just been performed, and said in a trembling voice:

She did not give them her answer, but dismissed them both with the information that they must wait till to-morrow, and thus give her time to decide. Then she set her wits to work.

Which the wild the accent? She was in a set of that man." "As to that, Miss Lambert," he replied, would have made min to mobile and manly.

She hit upon a plan which pleased her, and she immediately began the execution hear it now?"

"Not now. To morrow, is you wish, "Not now. To morrow, is you wish,"

you may see me at home."

And on the following day Mark Spenser, with throbbing heart, sat beside his love.
When she felt his strong arm stealing around her trembling form—when she felt father's house."

It was all she wrote. She knew they would both be at the appointed spot at the appointed time, each thinking himself the favored suitor.

She was thinking of this as she sat alone as the piezza, where the long evening shadows were creeping across the floor and the rays of the setting sun were struggling through the ne work of vines to kiss her blushing cheek.

She could think of no better way of finding out whether Leroy Beaumont was a true gentleman or not.

It was to see how he would act on finding his rival at the place of meeting, that she had concluded to make this appointment with both.

If her plan failed, she would contrive another, for she had resolved that no man should become her husband unless he was in every respect worthy of her.

Mark Spencer stood beneath the widespreading branches of the old elm tree, leaning against its huge trunk with his arms folded on his breast.

TUESDAY MORNING, AUG. 18, 1884. FRESH FROM PORT ARTHUR.

Tremendous Traffic in Whisky—Algoma Election Case—Big Fishing. A gentleman who has just returned from a trip up the lakes contributes the follow-

Port Arthur is, at present, a railroad and mining camp. There is always a number of hard-looking cases on the streets, on their way, apparently, for the most part, to the railway works. The whisky traffic is in the ascendant. Every third or fourth house or store is a whisky saloon, and the sale of liquor is something unparalleled. Port Arthur, however, despite bad hotels shows signs of material progress. The streets are being graded, good sidewalks and crossings are being put down, and there is a good deal being done in the way stories, but I saw a glorious catch of fifty two speckled trout last Tuesday evening, weighing over one hundred pounds. The fishermen (three or four) under charge of two speckled trout last Tuesday evening, weighing over one hundred pounds. The fishern on (three or four) under charge of the veteran Sinclair, averred that no such catch had been made for years, and Sin clair himself was loud in his expressions of wonderment as to what his Toronto friend, Dr. Richardson, would think of it. The fish were caught in a creek called the Blend, running into the bay from the north shore, the water very deep and black, with a scarcely perceptible current, and of about the width of an ordinary sitting-room.

There is a good deal of speculation at Port Arthur about the fate of its harbor. A runnor obtained when I left that the C. P. R. authorities had finally decided or adopted a point on the Kaministiguia as their terminus, and it was said to be a fact that the dominion authorities had given orders for the stoppage of all dredging in the vicinity of Port Arthur.

The first sitting of the court in re the Algoma election case took place at Port Arthur Tuesday last (the 5th inst.), Hon. Justices Burton and Rose presiding. Jas. Bethune, Q.C., represented Mr. Lyon, the resigned member, and Messrs. Meek and Falconbridge the appellant, understood to be the defeated candidate Mr. Plummer. Alex. It was suggested to me by the habit very young en have of wearing the heads of their sticks in their mouths. It is of bambooand lined with a thin covering of porcelain. The head may be of whatever shape the purchaser desires. A crab's claw, a dog's head, or simply a straight ivory handle, but running through it is a fine tube guarded at its outer end by a spring valve. You see at once the immense advantage of such a cane."

"It would be very light," observed his "It would be very light," observed his customer.

"My dear sir," returned the haber-dasher, "it can be filled with any liquid. If the young man who carries it is very young he can carry a supply of milk with him, and as he strolls along Fifth avenue he can refresh himself with cooling draughts of that harmless fluid. Think," he continued, enthusiastically, "of being able to carry with you to the theatre a dozen whisky cocktails or a few brandy smashes. As you sit gazing abstractedly into the eyes of your fair companion you can imbibe inspiration from her and rum from the cane at the same time. Besides, my patent does away with those intensely embarrassing excuses about 'going out to see a man,' or such statements as 'the gas makes me faint, I must take a breath of fresh air."

"It's a wonderful idea," observed the customer, as he grasped the possibilities of the invention. "Make me one big enough to hold a quart of ice-cream. I'm awfully fond of a girl and she's awfully fond of cream, but she prefers it melted. When I next walk out with her I won't have to dodge around the corner from 'Freezem, the confectioner,' but I can hand her my stick and tell her to help hersolf."

"That's a use for it that had not suggested itself to me," concluded the patentee, "but I assure you that I have already received sufficient orders from local option towns to insure my fortune."

A fine Discrimination. New York Tribune Note-Book. Mr. Payn tells a much stranger story to this effect: "A great jewel robbery was ommitted at the west end under very ingenious circumstances. A gentleman and lady staying at a fashionable hotel had ordered a large quantity of valuable goods -chiefly diamonds-to be brought to them for their inspection. They drugged or chloroformed (I forgot which) the ieweler's assistant who brought them, and got clear away with all the swag. It so happened that the whole adventure had happened that the whole adventure had been, as it were, prefigured in Chamber's Journal twelve months before; a contributor had imagined and written the incident just as it afterward occurred, and the same story had so recomthe same story had so recom-mended itself to some member of the criminal class that he had put it into practical execution. 'Under the pretence of educating the masses,' he indignantly observed, 'you suggest to them ingenious methods of rob-bing innocent tradesmen.' My answer to this gentleman was I flatter myself comthis gentleman was, I flatter myself, com-plete. I pointed out to him that if honest tradesmen would only read the respectable periodical I had the honor to edit—a moral duty not neglected, it seemed, even by the lowest classes—they would put themselves on their guard against such catastrephes."

DELAIDE STREET, TORONTO HORSES OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS AND CLASSES. BY AUCTION TO-DAY (Tuesday)

Sale at 10.30 Sharp MANUFACTURED BY

RAINER & CO.,

Guelph, Ontario. The undersigned respectfully announce the on the 9th 'ay of April, 1834, Joseph F. Raim dissolved partnership with Frank Sweetma and John Hazelton, as piano manufactures and that said Joseph F. Rainer, in connectic with his son, will continue to manufacture the original cross-scale Pianos, of which the said Joseph F. Rainer is the sole inventor.

These Pianos have now been before the pulliofor 23 years, and have a lwsys ranked amon the very best, and are celebrated for quality of tone, great power and durability of action prompt elastic touch, fine finish and elegan style of case, combined with every known in provement. The most complete and unbroke list on record, embracing a period of 30 years and made up of 28 first prizes, medals and diplomes received at the principal exhibition in Canada—Montreal, Kingston, Toronto Hamilton and London. At the Centennial Exhibition in Philadelphia, in 1876, we secured a needal and diploma for our piano. The great favor with which the cross-scale pianos have been received for so long a period, and the reputation they bear, he's induced others to imitate them. We therefore caution intending nurchasers and dealers.

Old National Series of Readers.

Having printed a large edition of the above we are now prepared to supply them as usua. As we are the only House in the Trade carrying any stocks of these books, it will be i your interest to order direct and save delay.
