Billy, it seems, had long looked with hungering eyes on a large mansion that stood in a lonely suburb. It was entirely surrounded by a high wall, and Billy felt that if he and his mates ever got inside that mansion they could work in uninterrupted security.

Enquiry showed Billy that it was the residence of Mr. Slider, the well known banker, a man intimately connected with numerous and intimately connected with numerous and intimately connected with numerous and the restance of the worth your while to run the risk," said Slider.

"I can make it worth your while to run the risk," said Slider.

"Give me a start of twenty-four hours and that is all I ask. Now, how much?"

Billy hesitated and pondered for a moment. "What do you say," he said at last, it to five thousand for me and three thousand in alpice for each of the men?"

"That would be a diangerous business," said Billy quite honestly.

"I can make it worth your while to run the risk," said Slider.

"That would be a diangerous business," will to stop all worrying?"

"Yes," he replied, "I was. No matter the outlook is in my line of the business, I never let it trouble me out of the office. Why, the other night I slept twelve hours."

I stood in astonishment before this wise to strong man in admiration for such determination. Not every man, possibly, has this power of will; not every man at fifty can give up worrying. But I believe that most men, by the supreme power of will, sould cause themselves to worry much less than they do.

"That would be a diangerous business," and the outlook is in my lie of the business, I never let it trouble me out of the outlook is in my lie of the business, I stood in astonishment before this little greater than this from the western shores of the Iberian Peninsula.-Nautical Billy's plans, when matured, were very simple. He obtained the costume of a pelice inspecter for himself and the clothes of an ordinary policeman for each of his four pals. He got likewise, a very good imitation of a warrant of arrest, made out in the name of Mr. Slider. Billy was the man of brains in the gang, and the other four realizing this did exactly as he told him. They were in a perfects tate of discipline and had the utmost confidence in Billy's ingenuity. "Very well," said Billy, "it is a bargin of sold at 30 cents each. They have been in use in China and Japan for thousands of years.

Billy called his pals, and together they accompanied the banker to another room that contained a large safe, which Slider opened. He took out several bags, and, was this. It seems the season of the best one from each province was offered by Mr. Haslam, special agent of the C. P. Rail-way, by the school children for the mark in the c portunity of displaying heroism which would render his example of more value to his comrades and to future commanders than his life could confer. He stood upon the bridge after he had ordered every man to save himself. A subordinate came to him with a life-preserver, but he refused it and ordered him to use it. Folding his arms, he coolly braved the terrors of his surroundings without finching and went down with his ship. Such individual acts of sublime courage in the face of death have helped to make the British Navy the pride of the English race and England for centuries the undisputed mistress of the sea.

Every brave heart is thrilled by the conduct of the brave admiral. History will perpetuate his memory, and song and story will keep it fresh and green.

A Delightful Vacation Trip.

(From the Boston Daily Traveller.)

Of course the silver question and the cholera question are very important and pressing matters; but it is safe to say that the absorbing question at the present time with the majority of people is, where shall we spend vacation? We Americans work so hard and take so little vacation, that when we do take one we ought to extract the most moncy.

There is a very interesting and attractive little book published on this subject, called "Nova Scotia, the Land of Evangeline, and the Tourists' Paradise." It is generously illustrated, and, what is more, on receipt of ten cents to defray postage, it will be sent to any address by J. F. Spinney, agent Yarmouth Steamship Company, Pier 1, Lewis Wharf, Boston, Mass.

Mr. M. S. Read, student at Cornell University, is spending a vacation with his brother, W. F. Read.

Mrs. Eben Hodgisher, arrived on Wedners, and will spend some which and the summer at heady of the seriod and relatives.

Memory a Test of Age

WHY SCENES AND INCIDENTS OF CHILDHOO Memory is often a good test of age. When a person begins to find the recollection of current and recent work failing, and when he finds the recollection of events of the early part of his life acutely perceptible, and by a kind of spontaneity recurrent, the evidence is certain that the mind of that person is aging. The fact is still further emphasized if, with the remembrance of past days, there is a sympathetic response calling forth a sentimental feeling either of pleasure or of pain. There probably is a physiological reason for these phenomena. In early ife certain centers of the brain are filled with impressions and images which have become fixed, and for a time quiescent. They sleep. While they sleep other parts of the brain are charged with new impressions, which remain in activity, provoking the physical body into new and continued actions, and constituting the life of the individual as it is seen at work, nay, as it really is. But time goes on, and under the active life the brain centers receiving the later impressions tire, wear out, and for working purposes suspend function and die. Their suspension is not, however, the suspension of the whole of the cerebral organism. The parts first impressed and imprinted-the parts that carry the latent impressions-remain intact, and no longer oppressed and obscured by that which has accumulated upon them, begin once more to live and display their activities. So aged people who forget the names of those who are staring them in the face, who forget the details of the last ride, or walk, or work, and who forember with the freshness of youth the friends of their youth; the places, habits, reserved for private discussion, with mutual conversations, events that have long since passed, and have been so long in oblivion.
