TO THE THIRTEENTH DAY OF APRIL, 1951, INCLUSIVE

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, March 8, 1951

The house met at three o'clock.

ATHLETICS

REFERENCE TO AWARD TO THE MEMBER FOR TRINITY

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege and admiration, may I say that never in the last fifty years has there been a House of Commons which had among its membership so many outstanding athletes as has this one. We have a champion wrestler, a rugby champion, a soccer champion, champion curler and champion tennis player. My question of privilege is that we in this house have a champion boxer, champion rugby and champion hockey and lacrosse player in the person of the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Conacher). He is hailed across Canada as the greatest athlete of our time.

Mr. Lionel Conacher (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, it was very kind of the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McIvor) to bring to the attention of the house the fact that I was awarded this mythical title covering the last fifty years in sport. I should like also at this time to thank the hon. member for Athabaska (Mr. Dechene) for his kind remarks on my behalf the other day.

I realize that this house has before it too many important problems to be concerned with such matters as this. However, I should like to say that I believe that sport has its proper place in our way of life, and that, while overdone in many instances, it has served a useful purpose, particularly among the younger generation, as it helps them to develop their bodies; and a healthy body, I am sure we all agree, develops a healthy mind.

I should like to say that in the last fifty years I have played with and against many great teams; and on more occasions than one I was in the position of either starting or helping to stop the attack. In my present position in this house I have been relegated to the bench, in a sense; but I feel quite satisfied with this position on such a fine team as we have here, which is quite capable of carrying the heavy burden placed on its shoulders in these trying days.

I should like to thank the house for bearing with me in the time I have taken in acknowledging the kind remarks of the hon. member for Fort William.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

AMENDMENTS TO THE CONSTITUTION—CORRESPONDENCE WITH PROVINCES

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to lay on the table the French translation of correspondence between the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) and provincial premiers, of which the English version was placed on the table on March 6.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

CHANGE IN PERSONNEL OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. W. G. Weir (Portage-Neepawa) moved:

That the name of Mr. Campney be substituted for that of Mr. Winkler on the select standing committee on public accounts.

Motion agreed to.

EXPORT AND IMPORT PERMITS

AMENDMENT TO EXTEND LIFE OF ACT UNTIL JULY 31, 1954

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved the first reading of Bill No. 130 (from the Senate) to amend the Export and Import Permits Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

INCOME TAX—FARMERS—PROPERTY SOLD FOR NON-PAYMENT

Mr. Argue:

1. On how many farmers, by provinces, have exchequer court writs been served following non-payment of income tax in each year from 1940-1950 inclusive, and what was the total amount involved, by provinces, and by years, in the exchequer court writs referred to in this question?

2. What was the value of farm property sold for non-payment of income tax at sheriff's sale or by any other means, by provinces, in each year from 1940 to 1950 inclusive?

Questions

Mr. McCann:

1. Information is not available of the number of farmers, by provinces, upon whom exchequer court writs have been served following non-payment of income tax, or the total amount involved by provinces.

2. Information is not available on the value of property sold for non-payment of income tax.

CANADIAN FORCES—DEDUCTIONS FROM SUBSISTENCE ALLOWANCES

Mr. Nowlan:

1. Are moneys withheld or deductions made from the subsistence allowances of members of the armed forces of Canada occupying homes situated on army camps, naval establishments, or air force stations?

2. If so, has there been any increase in the amounts so withheld or deducted?

3. If there has been an increase in the amounts so withheld or deducted, when did they become effective, and what was the amount of such increases for each of the respective ranks of (a) the navy; (b) the army; (c) the air force?

Mr. Blanchette:

1. No. Members of the armed forces occupying permanent and temporary married quarters situated in army camps, naval establishments or air force stations and provided with rations, are not entitled to subsistence allowance and therefore no moneys are withheld nor are deductions made in these cases. The subsistence allowance is not intended to represent the actual cost of quarters and rations outside of service establishments but is considered in the nature of an allowance in lieu. Subsistence allowance is paid only to those members of the armed forces for whom rations and quarters are not provided.

2 and 3. Answered by No. 1.

HOSPITAL CONSTRUCTION GRANTS—PAYMENTS FOR OLD AGE PENSIONS AND PENSIONS TO THE BLIND

Mr. Catherwood:

1. What was the total amount of money paid to provinces for hospital construction in the years 1949-50?

2. What was the total amount of money paid in old age pensions in the years 1949-50?

3. What was the total amount of money paid in pensions for the blind in the years 1949-50?

Mr. McCusker:

1. Fiscal year 1949-50, $6,803,858.75.

Amounts expended under the national health grants program represent only payment by the Department of National Health and Welfare to the provinces of claims submitted by them covering accounts (properly audited) which have been paid by the provinces and for which they are entitled to be reimbursed. Expenditures by the Department of National Health and Welfare do not in any way represent the amounts actually spent by the provinces on projects for which approval has been given by the department. In the case of the hospital construction grant, claims by the provinces in respect of approved projects are submitted in four instalments, namely, upon completion 25 per cent, 50 per cent, 75 per cent and 100 per cent of construction. The period of construction of nearly all projects extends over one or more fiscal years.

2. Fiscal year 1949-50, $119,535,530.31.

3. Fiscal year 1949-50, $4,715,466.17.

Note re 2 and 3 above: Amounts shown cover pensions paid (both the federal share of 75 per cent and the provincial share of 25 per cent) under the provisions of the Old Age Pensions Act but do not include provincial supplemental allowances.

2. On what dates were they investigated?

Mr. McIlraith:

COMMONWEALTH DEFENCE CONFERENCE

Mr. Higgins:

Is there to be a commonwealth defence conference in London in May to discuss (a) Middle East defence; (b) increase in armament production; (c) the guarding of supply lines; (d) Pacific pact?

Mr. Lesage: The government has received no invitation to such a conference.

VISIT OF MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE TO UNITED KINGDOM

Mr. Argue:

1. Did the Minister of Agriculture make a visit to the United Kingdom in February, 1951?

2. If so, what was the purpose or purposes of this visit and what was the result of same?

3. Did the Minister of Agriculture take with him on this visit any official government documents or proposals relating to the purposes of his visit?

4. If so, what was the nature of such documents or proposals?

5. Has the government at any time since June 5, 1950, made any statement contrary to the position taken on that date by the Minister of Trade and Commerce in reference to the final settlement of the "have regard to" clause?

6. If so, in what manner, when, and by whom was any such statement made?

Mr. St. Laurent:

1. Yes.

2. The purpose and the result have already been announced.

3. No.

4. Answered by No. 3.

5. The government has taken the position that while there was no further obligation on the United Kingdom in a legal sense, the United Kingdom authorities should realize that the wheat growers of Canada and most of the community of the prairie provinces believed there was a continuing obligation under the "have regard to" clause which had not been discharged.

6. Such representations were made by the Prime Minister in January and by the Minister of Agriculture in February, 1951.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

SARNIA, ONT., PUBLIC BUILDING

Mr. Murphy:

1. Did any department of the government obtain a building on Christiana street, Sarnia, Ontario, within the last year?

2. If so, was it by rental or purchase?

3. If by rental, for what period, and on what rental basis?

4. Did the government deal with or through a realtor either as agent for the government or as agent for the owner?

5. If so, what is the name of the realtor or agent?

CIVIL SERVICE

PROTECTION OF SUPERANNUATION AND SENIORITY OF ENLISTED PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on February 27 the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) asked me whether assurances have been given to the men in the public service that if they enlist they will be protected so far as superannuation and seniority are concerned upon their return from war service. I replied that I would take the question as a notice and get the precise information with proper references to the measures effective.

So far as superannuation is concerned, order in council P.C. 5412, of November 8, 1950, passed under the provisions of the Canadian Forces Act, 1950, states in section 6 that:

> Subsections 4 and 7 of section 7A of the Civil Service Superannuation Act apply to and in respect of every person who is enrolled for the purpose of serving in the special force, and every officer and man of the reserve forces serving on the strength of the special force, as though his service on the strength of the special force were service in the forces during world war II within the meaning of that act.

The subsections of the Civil Service Superannuation Act referred to provided that when a contributor was absent on leave from the civil service during the second world war, that period would be counted as service for the purpose of computing allowances or gratuities under the Civil Service Superannuation Act, and if a contributor underwent treatment in a hospital operated under the authority of the Minister of Veterans Affairs, the period involved should be deemed as one on which he was on full-time active service with the forces. So that this, for the duration of the order in council, takes care of the superannuation matter.

As far as seniority is concerned, by virtue of P.C. 28/4244 of 31st August 1950, passed under the provisions of the Civil Service Act, permanent members of the public service, and temporary employees who have qualified by examination for the position which they occupied at the date of enlistment, or who have not qualified by examination for the position which they held at enlistment but who as veterans have been continuously employed since January 1, 1948, or who have not qualified by examination but have been continuously employed since January 1, 1945, are treated as being on leave of absence without pay from a civil position for the period during which they are enlisted or enrolled for service with the Canadian Army special force, but the civil service commission is arranging the proper recommendations to have the same provision apply to members of the Royal Canadian Navy and the Royal Canadian Air Force.

As hon. members are aware, these orders in council would be effective only up to the end of this session; but there is on the order paper a resolution to provide statutory enactments to replace the orders in council, and to have the proper provision made by parliament to take care of the matters to which the hon. member's question refers.

WOOL

COMMITTEE TO PURCHASE ARMED FORCES REQUIREMENTS—PROCESSING IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. Earl Catherwood (Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is the wool purchasing agency which has been set up under the Canadian Commercial Corporation in operation as yet? Is it the intention of this agency to purchase raw wool only from sources outside this country so that it can be processed in Canada?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The answer to the first question is yes. A committee has been appointed to buy raw wool to meet the requirements of the Canadian armed services.

The answer to the second question is that all processing will be done in Canada, with the exception of combed wool tops, which will be partly finished in this country. Our capacity for combed wool tops is not sufficient to meet the expected demand, but wool tops will be processed here to the extent that Canadian production will permit.

[Mr. St. Laurent.]

POSTAL SERVICE

APPLICATION TO POSTMASTERS OF PUBLIC SERVICE PAY INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. Langlois (Parliamentary Assistant to the Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, on March 5, as reported in Hansard at page 895, the hon. member for Huron North (Mr. Cardiff) asked whether the postmasters who are not civil servants will receive the same proposed increase in salary benefits as those who are civil servants, and if so, when they may expect to receive it.

I replied at that time by stating that I would take the hon. member's question as a notice. My reply today is that postmasters of this category are civil servants in the general meaning of the term. They too will get the benefit of the salary increase as of December 1, at the same rate as others. The date of the receipt of the increase will depend upon the action taken by parliament.

Mr. Graydon: Will that apply to the rural mail carriers too?

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe): No.

Mr. Graydon: Why are they always left out?

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe): They are not employees of the Postmaster General's department.

Mr. Graydon: They do not get enough money, either.

LETTER CARRIERS—REFERENCE TO PRESS REPORT AS TO STATEMENT OF DEPUTY POSTMASTER GENERAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. W. Noseworthy (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Postmaster General whether a report in yesterday's press stating that the deputy postmaster general had said that the trouble in Toronto in connection with letter carriers was communist-inspired has come to his attention, and if so, whether he cares to make a statement.

Hon. Edouard Rinfret (Postmaster General): I saw that report in the press and I discussed it with the deputy postmaster general. He has denied having made any such statement.

PASSAMAQUODDY TIDAL PROJECT

QUESTION AS TO REPORT OF INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. W. Stuart (Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the international joint commission made a report in connection with the proposed Passamaquoddy project?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): In reply to the hon. member for Charlotte I would say that the international joint commission made its report to the two governments on October 23, 1950, recommending that a further investigation would be necessary to enable it to make recommendations concerning the feasibility of the Passamaquoddy project, and has estimated that such an investigation would cost $3,900,000. The report suggests that the cost might be apportioned between the two countries in proportion to the benefits that each country would derive from the completed project. This report is still under study by the interested federal authorities, and has been referred to the government of New Brunswick.

KOREA

CANADIAN CASUALTIES—PRESS REPORT AS TO LETTERS WRITTEN TO RELATIVES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice if his attention has been directed to reports in the press that the families of soldiers who have appeared on the casualty lists from Korea are receiving letters which, it is stated, must have been communistically inspired. If so, will he let us know what has been done to investigate the situation?

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): My attention has not been directed to the report in question, but on receipt of the information from my hon. friend I shall be glad to look into it at once.

SEPARATION ALLOWANCES TO DEPENDENTS OF CANADIAN SERVICE PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Ferguson (Simcoe North): I should like to ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Lapointe) if there is any difference between the separation allowance paid to dependents of Canadian service personnel in the Korean campaign and what was paid to dependents in world war II.

Mr. Abbott: Order paper.

Mr. Speaker: I do not think that this is the time to ask a question of that kind.

DECENNIAL CENSUS

APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONERS IN MANITOBA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, may I ask for a supplementary answer to a question answered yesterday and appearing at page 996 and 997 of Hansard. I direct my request to the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, in whose name the answer is given. Without going into detail I would direct his attention to the fact that question 2 was in two parts. The first part was answered in the affirmative. The second part of the question was in these words:

If so, from what persons were such recommendations received—

That has not been answered.

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, on looking at the question I notice that it asks whether the Minister of Trade and Commerce had received recommendations from members of parliament, and, if so, from what persons were such recommendations received, and so on. I think it has been usual not to give information about correspondence between members of parliament and a minister. I think that is a well-accepted principle.

Mr. Knowles: On what is that rule based?

An hon. Member: Common sense.

Mr. McIlraith: If I had had some notice of this question I could have looked up the exact reference in Beauchesne's parliamentary procedure.

RENT CONTROL

QUESTION AS TO CONTINUANCE OF FEDERAL CONTROL AFTER APRIL 30

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. S. White (Hastings-Peterborough): May I ask the Prime Minister if he will be able to inform the house before the Easter adjournment what will be the policy of the government as to the continuance of rent control?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): There has been no change in the policy of the government, announced several months ago, affecting nation-wide rent control, which will expire at the end of April. The information I have, obtained from the press rather than from official sources, is to the effect that most of the provincial governments are arranging to enter this field at that time.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION ACT

CREATION OF NEW DEPARTMENT—MOBILIZATION OF ECONOMIC AND INDUSTRIAL FACILITIES

The house resumed, from Tuesday, March 6, consideration in committee of Bill No. 77, respecting the department of defence production—Mr. St. Laurent—Mr. Dion in the chair.

On section 29—Inquiry and appointment of investigator.

Mr. Fulton: The last time we were discussing this section we were asking the Minister of Trade and Commerce about his radio broadcast and the effect of this bill and the defence program generally on the Combines Investigation Act. It was stated by both the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Justice that in certain cases connected with the defence production program it might be necessary to call in an industry and ask them to make certain arrangements which prima facie would be an offence under the Combines Investigation Act. It was said that if that should become necessary an order would be made under the Emergency Powers Act which would have the effect of placing such an industry in the clear so far as the combines act was concerned.

Just before eleven o'clock a question was asked whether that power to set aside the Combines Investigation Act did not exist under section 28 of this bill; whether that section did not give the Minister of Trade and Commerce the right to suspend the Combines Investigation Act for the purpose which he had in mind. The matter was not dealt with fully before the house adjourned, and I wonder if the Minister of Trade and Commerce or the Minister of Justice could state whether in his opinion section 28 does in fact give that power.

Mr. Garson: I am not too sure that I heard the whole of my hon. friend's question, as a conversation was going on just beside me. I hope my hon. friend will correct me if I am wrong, but my understanding of what he said is that he is urging that section 28 of the bill empower the minister to direct that in connection with a defence order a person shall not be bound by any obligation imposed by or under any statute such as the Combines Investigation Act.

Mr. Fulton: I did not urge that that be done; I asked whether section 28 gave that power.

Mr. Garson: I will treat it on the basis of whether it could be done. I think my hon. friend on reflection will agree that it would be difficult to imagine a set of circumstances under which such an order could be made. Section 28, as its language clearly indicates, is directed toward removing legal obstacles to the entering into or the performance of defence contracts. A typical defence contract is a contract for the purchase of certain defence supplies—for example, motor transport, radar, guns and the like—between the government as a buyer and a single manufacturer as a seller. I suggest that in relation to such a defence contract it is almost inconceivable that it would involve, even collaterally, any agreement between the manufacturer named in that defence contract and other manufacturers with regard to the fixing of prices for any commodity.

On the other hand, a typical price fixing agreement under the Combines Investigation Act is an agreement entered into between two or more corporations, usually in the same industry, to fix prices of certain lines of goods which they all produce or sell. Such an agreement could not, I think, possibly be considered as a defence contract within the meaning of section 28 of the department of defence production bill. Therefore if any effective method is required of exempting from the operation of the Combines Investigation Act an agreement fixing prices, a clause of much more specific application than clause 28 must be provided. In our view it might most aptly take the form of a clause in an order in council passed under the Emergency Powers Act. In the view of the Department of Justice we have never thought of relying upon section 28 in any way to achieve the purpose to which my hon. friend was referring in his question.

Mr. Fulton: It is true, however, is it not, that the operation of the defence production act may make it necessary to enact these orders in council which the minister says will be enacted under the Emergency Powers Act? I refer particularly to the words of the Minister of Trade and Commerce as reported at page 987 of Hansard, where he said, with respect to his remarks on the radio broadcast:

> I had in mind a situation where it might be necessary in the public interest, and by reason of the defence program, to invite a number of industries to take part in arrangements which would ordinarily make them suspect under the Combines Investigation Act.

I take it, then, it is contemplated that situation may arise by reason of the bill that we are now considering.

Mr. Howe: It may very well.

Mr. Fulton: Then the intention is, and in fact the statement of the Minister of Justice is, that the only way in which the Combines Investigation Act can be, shall I say, suspended with respect to that arrangement is under the Emergency Powers Act?

Mr. Garson: That is right.

Mr. Fulton: For the purpose of getting it on Hansard, I take it that the minister says yes?

Mr. Garson: Yes, I said it was right. I guess my hon. friend did not hear me.

Mr. Fulton: Referring to the wording of section 28, it reads:

> The minister may, by order, direct that a person shall not be bound by any obligation, restriction or limitation imposed on that person by or under any statute, order, rule, regulation, bylaw, or contract with respect to such matters as may be specified in the order affecting the entry into or performance of a defence contract by that person or the carrying out of an order made by the minister under this act.

Is it not very probable that in arranging for the supplying of defence materials by industries—and purely for the sake of illustration let us take the motor vehicle industry —parts will be interchanged between the three main manufacturers when they are making standard vehicles? In that case would it not be necessary to bring them into conference, and, for the purpose of setting the over-all price of the end product, provide that such parts as are manufactured by one or two shall be made available to the others at standard prices, and vice versa, so that an order might well be issued under this act which would invoke section 28?

Mr. Howe: No, Mr. Chairman. If you will excuse me, it is not done that way at all. If we were ordering parts from Ford of Canada to go into a common vehicle we would make a contract with Ford of Canada in which the prices would be set out, and we would make a contract with General Motors in which the prices would be set out. The prices might be the same in each case but there would be no possible violation of the Combines Investigation Act in that event.

Mr. Knowles: I believe this matter was made clear the night before last when it was before the house.

Mr. Fulton: Far from it, if you will read Hansard.

Mr. Knowles: The hon. member for Kamloops may be right in saying that it was not made completely clear. That is all the more justification for my asking that it be made clear now. There is one point that I should like to have made clear, and I think the Minister of Justice will agree with me that it should be made clear at this point in our discussion. It relates to the question as to the tabling of any orders or regulations that would have the effect of suspending either in whole or in part any of the provisions of the Combines Investigation Act. The Minister of Justice has said today—and I thought quite clearly—that it is the view of the Department of Justice that if any suspension of the Combines Investigation Act is effected it would have to be done not under this act but under the provisions of the Emergency Powers Act. Is it fair to say that because the Emergency Powers Act requires that any order or regulation made thereunder, as defined in the Regulations Act, must be tabled in this house, it follows that in the view of the Minister of Justice any order suspending either in whole or in part the provisions of the Combines Investigation Act would have to be tabled in the house?

Mr. Garson: This whole point was considered at some length on Tuesday last, and the report is on page 988 of Hansard for March 6. Perhaps I should read the exact language of the question asked me by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar. He said:

> Would this come under that provision, in your opinion?

I pointed out then, and I am afraid I am forced to point out now, that when we invoke the provisions of the Emergency Powers Act in this connection we do so in order to enact by order of the governor in council a series of regulations stating under what circumstances the Minister of Trade and Commerce, we will say, in his new capacity as minister of defence production, could make executive orders, if you like, saying that in relation to a certain transaction the provisions of some statute such as the Combines Investigation Act should not apply. As I indicated then, the reason why it is so difficult to express an opinion whether that executive order should be tabled under the Emergency Powers Act is that it is almost impossible to forecast at this time the form that it would take. With great deference, I think that not a very great deal turns upon this point so far as parliament is concerned, because is this not what would happen? We have powers under the act now. If the necessity arose, the governor in council would proceed to pass a general legislative order in council which certainly would have to be tabled under the provisions of the Emergency Powers Act and the Regulations Act. The proceedings taken under and by virtue of that order in council, such as the passing of an executive order in council, we will say, probably also would have to be tabled. But whether or not they would have to be tabled, by the very simple process of putting a question on the order paper as to what executive orders had been made under the legislative order in council which was tabled; members of parliament could secure the disclosure of all such executive orders and move that they be tabled, by means of a motion for the production of papers.

So while I am entirely sympathetic to my hon. friend's views as to the wisdom of having these executive orders or regulations tabled, I cannot imagine any set of circumstances in which it would not be an easy matter for members of parliament to compel them to be tabled, whether or not they fell within the category of regulations under the Regulations Act or the Emergency Powers Act that had to be tabled automatically. I am inclined to think the great majority would fall in that category, but I do not like to express a sweeping opinion in relation to things that have not come into existence, under an order in council which also has not yet come into existence. These scruples about expressing such an opinion are the scruples of a lawyer who does not like to answer extremely hypothetical questions of that kind.

Mr. Coldwell: The reason for pressing this matter, of course, is that we think parliament should know if in any particular the Combines Investigation Act or any part of it has been set aside by order in council. The minister says the legislative order would be tabled.

Mr. Garson: Certainly.

Mr. Coldwell: That of course would give members of parliament an indication that something had been done and, as the minister says, a member could then ask what had been done. But would it not be wiser, even from the government's point of view, to have it made clear that action taken under such a legislative order in council should be tabled as well? The moment a member on the opposition side of the house, let us say, asks for information of this description, it seems that one is dragging from the government something that ought to be placed before the house and made clear without even a question being asked about it. That was the point I had in mind; in other words I was thinking of protecting the minister.

Mr. Garson: The protection my hon. friend was offering was to ask the minister to give an opinion on this extremely hypothetical question. It seems to me I gave the only honest opinion any lawyer could give; that is, until one sees what the regulation is, one cannot say whether or not it falls within the act. It probably would, but I would want to see it before saying definitely. I do not think you could get any lawyer to tell you whether or not a regulation not in existence, passed pursuant to an order in council also not in existence, fell within a certain statute.

Mr. Coldwell: But the act is in existence.

Mr. Garson: Oh, yes, but with wide general powers. In what direction those powers will be exercised, or what they will provide, or what will be the procedure, is not in anybody's mind as yet. I do not think you could extract from any prudent lawyer in Canada an opinion of that sort, and I am sure my hon. friend is not going to extract it from me.

Mr. Fulton: Then may I ask the minister to give another opinion, which I do not think will involve him in any liability or subsequent embarrassment. When this subject was being discussed Tuesday evening the Minister of Trade and Commerce said at page 987 of Hansard:

> If and when such a situation arises it should be defined and placed on record under the provisions of the Emergency Powers Act.

That was in relation to a group of industries being called in. Then the minister went on to say:

> Any industry before entering into such an arrangement would do well to see to it that its position has been so defined...

In giving his statement the same evening the Minister of Justice said at page 988:

> Therefore, in the interests of the proper administration of the Emergency Powers Act on the one hand and the Combines Investigation Act on the other, it is very desirable that any of these arrangements of this kind that are entered into under direction should be covered by a regulation or an order which will be recorded with the combines investigation commission—

And he went on to say:

> —and will, I presume, very likely take the form of an order that would be tabled in parliament.

What type of order is it contemplated will be made? Is it merely a record of the fact that a conference has been held, or a specific order providing that the industries named with respect to a certain meeting and the consequences which flow from that meeting are exempt from the provisions of the Combines Investigation Act?

Mr. Garson: I want to be as helpful as I possibly can in replying to questions such as the one just asked, but I would like hon. members to realize that we are discussing the terms of this bill and in that connection really the terms of the Emergency Powers Act. Those are really the only subjects to which the minds of members of the government have been directed. So far as I know—and I am the minister who would be instructed to see to the drafting of these things by the law officers of the department—we have not reached the stage of giving consideration to the provisions of such an order in council, to say nothing of any executive order which might be passed under it. Therefore when we discuss these hypothetical orders in council and regulations we are discussing them in a complete vacuum, and I am being asked to prophesy what will happen, and whether or not things not yet in existence will fall within the Emergency Powers Act. I do not see how any person could possibly express any judgment on that score. What we are concerned with now is, first, whether section 28 of the present bill has any application to the tabling of orders in council we are discussing. In my view it has not. Second, whether the provisions of the Emergency Powers Act, which we have just passed, have any application; and I have said in my opinion they have. Beyond that I am afraid I cannot accommodate my hon. friend, because we have not as yet directed our minds at all to that further procedure under these statutes.

Mr. Howe: If I may say just a word, this discussion is so unrealistic that it is rather disgusting to a man who has to be on the firing line. Let me give my hon. friends an illustration of the problem. Some time ago we had to suspend a subsidy on wheat. The action could not be announced before the effective date; otherwise there would have been stockpiling and trouble. When we decontrolled wheat there had to be a compensating increase in the price of flour, and as soon as the decontrol order was announced it was necessary to telephone every baker that the increase in the price of flour should not be more than so much. That was done over the telephone in a great hurry. Prices were increased to that level and the matter was forgotten until Mr. McGregor brought down his report, in which the increased price was made one of the principal charges against the milling industry—that they had combined to fix that price.

That is the situation. What could we do? Could we let everything run wild for a few days until we got an order in council and tabled it in the house? If my hon. friends are serious about wanting price control—and the people trying to tie us up are those who want price control—we cannot be hobbled by any such regulation, written in advance, as my hon. friend is suggesting. Price control is a very high-powered affair; it must be operated with great speed and without too many rules and regulations to follow if it is to be effective. Therefore if my hon. friends seriously want us to undertake price control, do not tie us up as to how we should operate vis-à-vis the combines act.

Mr. Fulton: I think what the minister has said and what was said by the Minister of Justice indicate that the government must have—and if it has not it should have—given some consideration to how it is going to do this thing. The Minister of Trade and Commerce has just now said that great difficulties arose under similar circumstances when this thing had to be done in the past. I should imagine that at the least the government would be—in fact, I am quite certain they are—most anxious to avoid similar difficulties in the future.

Mr. Howe: Quite so.

Mr. Fulton: Therefore it surely follows that if they wish to avoid those difficulties, and wish to be in a position to act quickly, as the minister has said it is necessary to act on occasions such as these, it is necessary to know in advance under what powers they are going to act, and along what lines they are going to act when they do decide to go ahead.

The Minister of Justice has said that the government has not yet directed its mind to the question of how it is going to be done. I do not want to tie the ministers down to every statement made on this subject on every occasion, but I would point out that when the matter was brought up on Tuesday the Minister of Justice was able to hand to the Minister of Trade and Commerce a statement concerning it, which the Minister of Trade and Commerce read to the house. It is hardly consonant with the facts, and with the importance of this subject, to ask us to accept without further explanation the statement that the government has not directed its mind to the question of how these things are to be done when the time arises.

Mr. Howe: The government can direct its mind all it likes, but if the time comes when we get seriously into price control, and it has to take a chance on violating the combines act or take a worse chance on letting some prices run wild, I assure you that if I am responsible or asked for advice as to what should be done I will do what will mean the most to the Canadian people, and take my chance on being ridiculed in this house, as I was on one other occasion. If you want me to commit myself, that is the stand I take today.

Mr. Fulton: I do not think the minister appreciates what we want to do.

Mr. Howe: You want rules and regulations laid down under which we will act if we undertake price controls.

Mr. Fulton: I do not suppose the Minister of Trade and Commerce likes to be put in a position where he has transgressed or broken some law. He has told the people that it may be necessary to suspend the operation of the Combines Investigation Act, and I think that—

Mr. Howe: If we do suspend the act, the regulation is brought down and tabled saying that we are going to do it. How we operate it after that, we cannot tell you. It will have to depend on circumstances.

Mr. Fulton: The questions that are being asked are directed to the point of how we are going to find out that has been done. If it is an order or regulation of one type which is tabled automatically, then we know.

If it is an order or regulation of another type, then it is not tabled and we do not know. It is for that reason we are asking how it is to be done. We want to know whether we will be informed of these things as they come along, or whether we shall have to dig out the information.

Mr. Garson: It seems to me that my friend is labouring prematurely a point that is not relevant to this discussion at all. What we are discussing under this bill, and what we were discussing under the Emergency Powers Act, are the powers which this parliament is to vest, if it sees fit, in the governor in council. What my hon. friend is talking about is, what is the governor in council going to pass in the way of orders in council under these powers? Then, when the order in council is passed, what kind of executive orders are going to be made under those orders in council? If my hon. friend will reflect for a moment, I think he will realize that no two ministers can sit in this parliament and prophesy what sort of order in council the governor in council is going to pass under statutes of the sort now under consideration.

All this discussion which has taken place is the proper sort of discussion to take place when such an order in council is tabled. With all our talents we are not prophets, and we cannot prophesy what the order in council may be in order that my hon. friend may criticize it or that we may defend it. With all deference, I think we should address ourselves to the subject matter of this bill. When this order in council is passed, and it comes before parliament, we shall be glad to discuss it. I find myself under immense difficulty when it comes to talking about a thing that is not in esse; it is a difficult intellectual exercise for anyone to undertake.

Mr. Knowles: I believe some issues have been raised in this discussion which should be cleared up before we leave this section. I do not blame the Minister of Trade and Commerce for making the remark that some people want price controls, and then seem to do everything they can to prevent the legislation which would make price controls possible being passed. I do not know to whom—

Mr. Howe: I did not say that. I said, tie us up with regulations that would make it impossible to administer price controls.

Mr. Knowles: I will accept that. I want the minister to recognize that so far as this group is concerned we have given the government an affirmative vote on every point in connection with this legislation.

Mr. Howe: Just keep up the good work.

[Mr. Fulton.]

Mr. Knowles: That makes me think we could have been wrong. We have even voted against the amendments that have been moved by our hon. friends of the Progressive Conservative group.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Even those which the government accepted?

Mr. Knowles: No, for we supported the amendment taking the minister off the same plane as His Majesty, but we certainly voted against any amendments that seemed to us to have the effect of limiting the flexibility which the government needs in order to administer a program of price and production controls. I do think, however, we have to pause a moment when the minister complains that what we are doing might tie the government too much because of the loss of time involved in passing orders in council and tabling those orders in council in parliament. I am just as reluctant as other members in the house to give wide powers to the government, but I stated earlier that I believe those powers have to be given. Since that is the case, the only thing for us to do is to retain as much of a check as we can on the government by at least insisting on knowing what they have done—not necessarily what they are going to do, but what they have done. The way to do that is to insist that the statutes make it clear that notice of what they have done will be placed on the table of parliament.

There is no loss of time. The cabinet can meet any time to pass an order in council, and it becomes law when it has been passed. The statute indicates within what period of time these orders or regulations have to be laid on the table, but they are in force between the time they have been passed by the governor in council and are laid on the table. All we are asking is that this parliament, to which the government is responsible, be kept fully informed at all times.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce refers to the clamouring for a price control program.

Mr. Carroll: I should like to know how members can discuss all these questions under section 29?

Mr. Knowles: We are on section 28, are we not?

The Chairman: Section 28 has been carried.

Mr. Abbott: Section 28 was carried at the last sitting.

Mr. Knowles: When was section 28 carried?

The Chairman: I was not here, but on looking at Hansard, I see that section 28 has been carried.

Mr. Garson: On page 987 of Hansard, at the top of the left-hand column we see: "Section as amended agreed to."

Mr. Knowles: How is it that we have had all this discussion for the last forty minutes if section 28 was carried?

Mr. Ferrie: That is what we want to know.

Mr. Knowles: Furthermore, it is a discussion in which the ministers have participated.

The Chairman: As soon as a point of order is raised I have to make a decision.

Mr. Knowles: Did you not call section 28, sir?

The Chairman: I called section 29.

Mr. Fulton: May I point out that this discussion started on section 29 on Tuesday evening, and we are now continuing the discussion which was started then, and which has been carried on without interruption. It has to do with power to appoint an investigator, and deals with the procedures under which things are done.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, but for the interruption I would have been through with my comment on this point. In the light of the situation that has developed, we feel that we simply have to know what the government is doing. In the light of the experience which the Minister of Justice had with this particular piece of legislation that we are talking about, namely, the Combines Investigation Act, starting back in November, 1949, this is the kind of thing about which the government should lean over backwards, and instead of there being any protest at the requests that are being made from this side, we should be given the Minister of Justice's assurance, not as a lawyer but as a member of the government, that we shall be kept fully informed as to any steps taken to interfere in any way with the Combines Investigation Act.

Mr. Howe: Question.

The Chairman: Shall clause 29 carry?

Mr. Carroll: There is another matter that I wish to bring to the attention of the Minister of Justice. I have no doubt that the persons who will be appointed as investigators will be capable, and will have some knowledge of investigations of this kind. Is it only a report that these investigators make, or do they find a person guilty or not guilty?

Mr. Howe: No; they simply make a report, and then the case is brought into court in the usual way.

Mr. Carroll: There is one other matter. I do not know whether the Inquiries Act makes provision for warrants of search. I do not think it does. If I had taken a moment before I came into the house I could have found out. But I would suggest to the minister—it does, does it?

Mr. Garson: No—I was just nodding assent to your suggestion.

Mr. Carroll: I would suggest to the minister that the reference that is made in the section to ex parte applications, judges and so forth, may take away a part of that dispatch which will be necessary when investigators make inquiries under this legislation. There may be times when the investigator finds out in a hurry that certain goods, papers, merchandise, or anything of that kind, may be moving about the country here and there, and it may be difficult for him at that time to approach a judge of the supreme court or the county court and so on. I am just bringing this to the attention of the minister because it may not be good for that dispatch which I think is necessary in investigations of this kind.

Mr. Garson: In reply to my hon. friend's remarks I might say that this wording is taken almost completely from the Department of Reconstruction and Supply Act, where it appears on page 18 of the office consolidation of that act; and that it has been found in practice to be adequate there. Of course we are not desirous of taking any greater powers under any of these laws than are necessary to accomplish the things in view, and where it has been found that they are adequate for that purpose, we have stuck to existing procedure.

Mr. Higgins: Subsection 3 of section 29 reads:

> An investigator may allow any person whose conduct is being investigated . . . to be represented by counsel.

Why should a person not have the right in any case to be represented by counsel? Why must he have the consent of the investigator to be represented?

Mr. Carroll: To make assurance doubly sure.

Mr. Garson: We are exposed to criticism of every kind. Even when we put in here, within the abundance of caution, language confirming that he has the right to be represented by counsel, my hon. friend objects that he would have that right anyway. Well, he will have it without any question as a result of this subsection.

Mr. Higgins: It will not be written into the act. It says "may" at present.

Mr. Garson: It is there now.

Mr. Higgins: It says: "The investigator "may", not "shall". The word "shall" is used after the report has been made.

Mr. Lesage: Read the section.

Mr. Higgins: Read it yourself; it is divided into two.

Mr. Garson: The subsection reads:

An investigator may allow any person whose conduct is being investigated under this act, and shall allow any person against whom a charge is made in the course of such inquiry, to be represented by counsel.

Mr. Low: He has discretion.

Mr. Higgins: There are two separate sections. That particular clause can be divided into two, really.

Mr. Garson: That is quite true. He has a discretionary power, which I would not imagine he would exercise in any other direction but allowing counsel; but in any event if there is any charge to be laid he "shall" allow counsel.

Mr. Higgins: Why cannot he have that right in the first instance?

Mr. Howe: This act was good enough to get us through the last war, and I find it very difficult to believe that the opposition find anything abnormal in a war situation—I really do. The bill before the house has been prepared as the result of experience and in an effort to get an act under which the government could move expeditiously in matters having to do with carrying on its war duties. Why would we come back and change an act that worked well in the last war? For instance, if we suspect that stolen war materials are in a certain place, if we have to wait until a man sends out for his counsel before we can search—

Mr. Higgins: This section does not cover that. But two wrongs do not make a right. This particular section merely speaks of a man who is accused—

Mr. Fournier (Hull): No.

Mr. Higgins: Hold on; it certainly does. Let me read it to you again. It says:

An investigator may allow any person whose conduct is being investigated under this act—

Then we shall forget the next words until we come to these:

—to be represented by counsel.

That is the way you must read it.

Mr. Garson: Yes. My hon. friend as a lawyer knows perfectly well that a man is not accused if he is merely under investigation. Under the act, there is no—

Mr. Higgins: Why do you have it in the act at all?

Mr. Garson:—no question of his even being accused.

Mr. Higgins: Why do you have it in the act?

Mr. Garson: Just a minute. But as soon as he is accused then it says the investigator shall allow any person against whom any charge is made in the course of such inquiry to be represented by counsel. I might tell my hon. friend that this is the identical wording of section 22, subsection 3, subparagraph (b), page 18 of the office consolidation of the Department of Reconstruction and Supply Act. It is taken from that act. This is the section under which all necessary proceedings of this sort were taken during the whole of world war II. But if my hon. friend is not satisfied with the fact that it proved to be quite fair and reasonable for this purpose, let him refer to the Inquiries Act, which is of general application, and he will see in section 12 the language is identical. It says:

The commissioners may allow any person whose conduct is being investigated under this act, and shall allow any person against whom any charge is made in the course of such investigation, to be represented by counsel.

Mr. Higgins: I am not satisfied yet, I do not mind telling you.

Mr. Garson: If this provision, which has stood the test of time over all these years, is open to any sort of the abuses which my hon. friend seems to imagine, I should think the likelihood is that we would have heard about them before now.

Mr. Higgins: Has it been tested?

Mr. Garson: Yes; I am sure it has been used. It must have been, because there must have been investigations under it.

Mr. Higgins: Do you know it has been used?

Mr. Garson: I cannot offhand give any specific case, no.

Mr. Howe: It is in the Inquiries Act. That is not wartime legislation. It is civilian, peacetime legislation, and it has been in force for years. Why it should be objectionable when given a wartime application, when it is good enough for peacetime, I cannot imagine.

Mr. Garson: For the hon. member's information, this provision was passed in 1912. I should think, referring to the hon. member's question, that there is a distinct likelihood that during the intervening period it has been used at one time or another.

Mr. Higgins: A few moments ago the Minister of Justice used the expression, "with all our talents." Now, with all the minister's talents, can he tell me the necessity for putting it in the act?

Mr. Garson: I did not put it there.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I do not wish to delay the passage of the bill, but I must say there has been no reason given for including this provision, except that it has been there a long time. After all, neither the Minister of Justice nor I was here when it was put in, and it might be quite wrong. But, speaking seriously, it may be asked: Can anyone suggest there is any objection to it? Well, if I was being investigated by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, let us say, even before being charged I would certainly feel it was a serious matter; and I am not at all sure that I would not feel it very desirable to have counsel in. The damage might be done by the time the investigation was over; then it would be much too late for one to go back and try to clear himself.

Mr. Howe: Does my hon. friend think this is a good time to revise a section in the Inquiries Act that has been there since 1912?

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I suggest that we are giving the most extraordinary power—power which was never dreamed of when the Inquiries Act was passed.

Mr. Howe: It is the ordinary provision.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): There is no suggestion that it could do any harm. If either of the ministers can point out any harm that would come from what has been suggested, I would be slowed up. However, that has not been done. Apparently it is just because they think that, like the laws of the Medes and Persians, nothing can be altered.

An hon. Member: Carried.

Mr. Higgins: No, just a moment. I do not mind being overridden altogether, but I am not satisfied, and I just wish that to be known.

Mr. Howe: It is a good law of this parliament that we do not have to satisfy everybody.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Very unreasonable.

Mr. Higgins: The section says:

> No report shall be made against any person until reasonable notice has been given to him.

What does the minister understand by the expression "reasonable notice"? What is notice, and what is reasonable, and how is it to be given?

And then, in subsection 5 it states:

> An investigator may in writing, with the approval of a judge—

And so on. How is that approval to be obtained? Is it to be a written approval, or what?

Mr. Garson: My hon. friend, who is a lawyer himself, will know that where the word "reasonable" is used in this sort of context in a statute its meaning is to be interpreted by the judicial body before whom the question arises. All those who are responsible for the carrying on of proceedings of this sort are under the necessity of seeing to it that the notices they do give are reasonable notices; because if they do not give reasonable notices a challenge can be made on a question of fact—if the matter becomes one at issue.

Mr. Higgins: But this report does not go before a judge; it goes to a minister.

Mr. Garson: But if the point is ever raised, and there is any question where it must be defined, then those who take the proceedings have to assume responsibility for giving a notice which in fact is reasonable.

This language also appears in the Department of Reconstruction and Supply Act, section 22(3)(c); and I should imagine that the reason for the use of the word "reasonable" is that the circumstances under which these inquiries will be made will vary greatly one from another. In those circumstances it would be better to use the word "reasonable" as applied to the circumstances of any particular investigation than to have some fixed period which might be all right for one investigation but all wrong for another.

My hon. friend, with his familiarity with the statutes, would agree I am sure that this term appears frequently in statutes.

Mr. Higgins: Except that in this instance the length of the notice is to be determined by the minister. Who determines the time before it reaches the point where it goes to court?

Mr. Garson: Those who are in charge of the proceedings, in the circumstances of each individual case, are under the statutory obligation to see that what they do is reasonable. What could be more reasonable than to direct people to be reasonable?

Mr. Higgins: That is not very reasonable.

Mr. McLure: I note the expression "the minister may", an expression used in the bill about one hundred and fifty times. In connection with the investigation of contracts, what information must the minister have sent to him before these contracts can be investigated? It has been suggested by the minister that this was good enough for the last war—but there are a lot of things which occurred at that time we do not want to dig up. I have in mind however a contract that was sublet; then it was sub-sublet, and I think it was later sub-sub-sublet. In the event of an investigation, where would they start; would it be with the sub-contractor, the contractor himself, or the sub-sub-sub-contractor?

Mr. Howe: Those questions are too deep to be answered today.

Mr. McLure: Well, it was under your jurisdiction at that time—your administration, or maladministration, whichever it was. I should like to know who would make the appeal to the minister in connection with, we will say, a clothing contract. The minister, even with all his power and virility, cannot see to all these contracts. If I want to have an investigation made about a contract for clothing or uniforms, to whom would I appeal? What information would I have to give?

Mr. Howe: The minister would decide whether in his opinion an investigation was warranted, and might do it on his own initiative or on the report of my hon. friend, confirmed by the proper officers; or he might do it for any reason. He can do it for any reason and at any time he likes, and he does it where he believes something has gone wrong.

Mr. McLure: Would he start with the sub-contractor or the contractor?

Mr. Howe: Anywhere he thought wise.

Section agreed to.

On section 30—Essential materials and services; designation of materials and services as essential.

Mr. Green: This is taken from the old Essential Materials (Defence) Act passed last September. What materials have been designated as essential to date?

Mr. Howe: I do not know whether I can give the full list, without referring to records. However, they include steel, copper, zinc, lead, nickel, aluminum, tungsten and a few more.

Mr. Knowles: Cobalt?

Mr. Howe: Yes; it is under export control—and also antimony. It is that type of material.

Mr. Green: They are all in that class?

Mr. Howe: Yes.

[Mr. McLure.]

Mr. Green: Then, under paragraph (b) power is given to the governor in council to designate essential services, as distinguished from the essential materials to which reference is made in paragraph (a). Paragraph (b) defines an essential service as—

> The carrying on of any commercial activity, including the generation and distribution of electrical energy.

And so on. Have any services been designated as essential under that provision?

Mr. Howe: No.

Mr. Green: Is it the intention that an individual business could be designated as essential, or might it be used, for example, to designate all hydroelectric plants across Canada as an essential service?

Mr. Howe: It could be.

Mr. Green: In what manner would such designation be made? Is it intended to apply only to one firm or one plant, or would it apply to the whole industry?

Mr. Howe: For example, if it was considered essential to use electric power for making aluminum instead of fertilizer, that electric power could be declared an essential service and an order would issue accordingly. If there was not enough water to go around and water was required for a war plant instead of a paper mill, water would be declared an essential service. It is that type of service that this section is intended to cover.

Mr. Green: Was that done in the last war, and, if so, could the minister give us some examples?

Mr. Howe: We had no essential materials act in the last war but I am told that it was done under the War Measures Act in connection with electric power.

Mr. Green: Was it used for any other service?

Mr. Howe: As far as I recall electric power was the only thing.

Mr. Green: Under this provision practically any type of service, such as supplying oil or water, could be designated as being essential.

Mr. Howe: That is right.

Mr. Green: If the governor in council so decided, they could include a complete industry right across Canada.

Mr. Howe: If it was thought necessary, yes.

Mrs. Fairclough: I am a little concerned about essential materials which may be required by municipalities for the construction of major works. I shall be specific. There is at present under way in Hamilton the construction of a large sewer to service an area which is rapidly being built up. As a matter of fact, there would not be much use in trying to build up the area unless this service could be given. The work has already been started and it will take about three years to finish. Can the minister state that contracts that have been entered into for supplies will not be interfered with when the projects are required for health and expansion purposes?

Mr. Howe: That is a rather large guarantee to give. It might be interfered with by the Russians.

Mrs. Fairclough: I would not be worried about the Russians if the minister can give a guarantee.

Mr. Howe: I am afraid I cannot give that guarantee.

Mrs. Fairclough: Do I understand that the minister cannot even give a reasonable assurance that these contracts will be honoured?

Mr. Howe: Those who are responsible for the administration of the act governing the use of materials try to use the best judgment as to essentiality. It has been our effort and it will continue to be our effort not to interfere with important civilian projects.

Mrs. Fairclough: Just last year we had difficulty procuring supplies under contracts which had been signed previously. I am concerned, and I am sure the present administration of the city of Hamilton is concerned, about this large project now under way.

Mr. Howe: If my hon. friend had said that they had not been concerned about supplies I would have said they were in a unique position. Anyone carrying on any project is concerned about supplies.

Mr. Low: I am not just sure whether this is the section under which to ask the question I have in mind, but I am going to take a chance. Is the minister prepared to say to what extent he and the government have developed a national fuel policy to ensure the adequate supply of fuel, especially coal and oil, or to provide for its stockpiling to meet any future emergency? I am thinking of an emergency that might cut off the 26 million tons of coal now being brought in from the United States. Under section 30 the minister could designate coal and other fuels as essential materials.

Mr. Howe: That is correct.

Mr. Low: Would it not be important to have a well-developed fuel policy when such designations are made so that we would be assured of adequate supplies to meet any emergency that might arise? Can the minister inform us just how far the government has gone in the development of a national fuel policy?

Mr. Howe: It seems to me that this is a peacetime rather than a wartime question. I remember hearing talk about a national fuel policy in 1908 when I first came to this country, and I have heard it every year since. I think we have been generally developing a national fuel policy which has become more definite each year. I hope we shall continue to do that, but I hardly think we can put it high on the list of war problems.

Mr. Low: Does it not assume more gravity at a time like this than it does in peacetime? There seems to be considerable discussion in other countries about the necessity of stockpiling sufficient fuel, both liquid and solid, in strategic areas in order to meet whatever emergency may arise. I was wondering if the government had proceeded with any such plans for Canada, and I assume that these would naturally be related to sections 30 and 31 of this bill.

Mr. Howe: The people using coal are stockpiling at the present time, and I think the stockpiles are fairly full. I remember the winter before last we had stockpiles of coal but that did not save us from getting into a good deal of trouble, and that was in peacetime. I doubt if the risk of running out of coal is any greater in wartime than in peacetime. Perhaps it would not be as great because those who produce the coal would not be as liable to interrupt production as in peacetime.

Mr. Fraser: Have any essential materials been shipped to countries in the Soviet bloc during the last six months, and I include China? The export permit regulations of February 2 state as follows:

> Your attention is also drawn to the attached revised list of commodities which may be exported under general permit SPL-1597, without the necessity of obtaining an individual permit, to all destinations except North Korea, China, Hong Kong, Macau, Manchuria and Mongolia, as of February 1, 1951.

There would also be Soviet Russia, Poland, Czechoslovakia and other countries. I notice that among other things that may be shipped are agricultural implements, tools and business machines.

Mr. Howe: The area control against shipments to countries behind the iron curtain has been in effect for some time. We are not at war with any of the countries in the east referred to by the hon. member. We have a control covering that area, but it is not as strict as that in connection with countries behind the iron curtain. I can assure the hon. member that nothing of any strategic importance has been shipped to Russia or any of the satellite countries for a long time.

Mr. Fraser: Outside of some scrap metal that was sent.

Mr. Howe: No.

Mr. Higgins: I understand that under this section the minister would have the power to set up hydroelectric plants.

Mr. Howe: We have the power, but we never do it.

Mr. Higgins: I am sure the minister is fully aware that the Hamilton river in Labrador has a potential capacity equal to 60 per cent of the electricity now used in Canada. There is a tremendous possible development in northern Quebec as well. With respect to this iron ore deposit I was wondering whether there was any possibility of the electricity being used. Does the minister have anything of that kind in mind?

Mr. Howe: Not the slightest. I might say that water powers are the property of the provinces. All development of water powers, other than private development, is carried out by the provinces. Theoretically we may have the power to build hydro projects but practically we do not.

Mr. Higgins: There is nothing in mind?

Mr. Howe: No.

Mr. Fulton: I think the minister said that magnesium is one of the essential materials. There was an item in a Canadian Press report yesterday, I think it was, that a $2,500,000 capital assistance grant has been approved by order in council to expand the production of magnesium castings for North America's most powerful jet engine, the Orenda. I understand that is regarded as an essential material. Would the minister tell me under what powers that order in council was passed?

Mr. Howe: Capital assistance provided from the military vote.

Mr. Fulton: I am sorry, I did not hear the minister.

Mr. Howe: It is capital assistance provided out of the vote for the armed services.

Mr. Fulton: From the national defence vote?

Mr. Howe: That is right.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): The minister takes these powers, which to most of us seem so astounding, in his stride. I listened to his explanation of the necessity of controlling, let us say, a certain power project which was manufacturing one thing and which was desired to manufacture another. Once you can perform the astonishing feat of accepting these powers I can understand the need for that, but as I understand it, it means that the minister can take over the Ontario hydro electric power commission, and under section 31 he could then require persons to obtain permits and so on to receive power under the act. Does the minister think it is necessary to have that terrific power? Does he not think that power to take over local plants would be sufficient and that the section could be limited in that way?

Mr. Howe: My hon. friend will be surprised to learn that we operated the Ontario hydro electric power system for about three years during the last war. We did so at the urgent request of the commission itself. The chairman of the commission was the deputy power controller for that area. The reason we operated the system was that the commission was badly in need of emergency powers that the federal government had under the War Measures Act, and that the province did not have at that time, although they have them now in large measure.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I appreciate that the minister has scored a debating point with me but nevertheless I suggest that is the complete reverse, and that it does not really apply to what we are considering here. I still leave that question with him.

Mr. Fulton: Would the minister permit me to follow up the question of assistance for the production of those things based on essential materials? Is it the intention when the bill is passed that instead of these advances being made directly from the Department of National Defence appropriation it will be done under an estimate in this department, or still under the Department of National Defence Act?

Mr. Howe: It is proposed that it be done under estimate of this department when we have the estimate. It will not be until the coming fiscal year.

Mr. Fulton: In the meantime you will have to carry on under the Department of National Defence?

Mr. Howe: That is right.

Section agreed to.

On section 31—Control over essential supplies and projects.

Mr. Green: Section 31 lists the details of the things that may be done by the minister under the authority of the governor in council. Are these powers wide enough to ration any materials that are designated essential materials?

Mr. Howe: Yes.

Mr. Green: And as I understand it, the power is also included to fix prices on all these materials?

Mr. Howe: Correct.

Mr. Green: Are both those suppositions correct?

Mr. Howe: They are both correct.

Mr. Green: There is complete power to ration?

Mr. Howe: That is right. We are doing it today.

Section agreed to.

Sections 32 and 33 agreed to.

On section 34—Non-disclosure of information.

Mr. White (Hastings-Peterborough): Section 34 says that no information can be given without consent except to a government department, and so on, for the purpose of the discharge of the functions of that department. Would such information be available to the Minister of National Revenue for the purpose of the discharge of the functions of that department?

Mr. Howe: It could be, yes. That is permitted under the act. Whether or not it would be would depend on whether we were asked for it.

Section agreed to.

Section 35 agreed to.

On section 36—No action lies against controller or investigator.

Mr. Fulton: Section 36 is one of those to which we have been taking objection, particularly that these powers should be given at a time when we are not actually engaged in what has been described as a shooting war. This is one of the sections concerning which I would ask the minister whether he does not think it could be left at least so that it might be brought into effect only on proclamation, it being envisaged that such proclamation would be issued when and if we might be engaged in a general war? I do not think it is right than any person should be exempt from the consequences of his acts when he has the tremendous powers over other persons' property and affairs that these controllers have under this bill.

Mr. Green: May I suggest that the powers given to a controller or investigator under other provisions of the bill are extremely wide. If by any chance he should exceed those powers surely the government should then stand behind him and be prepared to compensate the person who has suffered as a result of the excess use of these powers. The section reads:

> No controller or investigator is responsible at law for any act or thing done by him in good faith in the performance of his duties or the exercise of his powers under this act and no action may be taken against a controller or investigator in respect thereof.

The other evening we suggested that the powers of a controller should be limited to arranging for the completion of the defence contract, and that when that had been done he should get out. The minister said that in practice that would not work out, and would not agree to such an amendment. Section 36 goes much further in that it provides that no claim whatever can be made in respect of the actions of the controller even beyond what he was authorized to do.

Mr. Howe: Oh no.

Mr. Green: I would urge that the section be dropped because if a controller should do something he has absolutely no right to do under the act then the government should stand behind him and make good any damage that has been caused.

Mr. Howe: The section does not exempt the government for the act of its agent, the controller. It simply exempts the controller personally. I do not think you could get anyone to assume the office of controller if he could be personally sued for his actions.

Mr. Green: In a case of that kind the ordinary practice would be for the department concerned to step in. For example, where a member of the forces is in an automobile accident in the course of his duties and an action is taken the crown has been assuming responsibility. Surely the same practice should be followed by the Department of Defence Production. The individual soldier does not have to pay damages if he was driving in the course of his duty. Here you have a similar case. The controller is carrying on in the course of his duty. The department should stand behind him automatically.

Mr. Howe: So we do. The purpose of this provision is to enable us to get good men and to permit them to act with courage. A controller taking over another man's business has a pretty onerous responsibility. We expect that man to exercise his best business judgment. If he makes a mistake the recourse is not against him; it is against the crown who put him there. I have often wondered if someone would not turn on the crown some day and say, "Look here; see what you have done to my business." I think all that has saved us is the fact we have always left the business in better shape than we found it; but if we should leave a business in worse shape than we found it I think we would have an action against the crown, and nothing in this clause would interfere with it.

Mr. Fulton: Under ordinary law the crown is responsible for the wrongful acts of its servants or employees within the scope of their employment. Does not this legislation which in effect exempts or absolves a controller from the consequences of his acts at least lead to the danger that the person wronged will have no recourse against the crown? If it is provided here that the employer is not responsible at law I should think it would be at least open to argument that the intention and the effect of the section would be to extend the same exemption to the employer, which in this case would be the crown. The minister has said that is not the intention, but I wonder if this section should not at least stand until that point could be looked into, because it seems to me to open the door to the possibility of complete exemption for any wrongful act or any injury which may be done the person whose plant may be controlled.

Mr. Howe: This clause has been used to protect many officers of the government. It was a standard clause in the wartime prices and trade board act, and we used it in the Department of Munitions and Supply Act. For myself, I certainly would not come to Ottawa and exercise wartime powers unless I had a clause of this kind to protect me personally; and no one else would.

Mr. Fulton: According to my reading of it the munitions and supply act did not have a similar provision. The last one passed during the war, chapter 8 of the statutes of 1943, extended only to investigators, not to controllers, though the minister appointed a number of controllers during the war. As to the wartime prices and trade board, they had no power to take over a business. They had power to set prices, and so on, but not to take over a plant and operate it. So this is an extension of wartime powers now being made applicable to controllers.

Mr. Howe: My hon. friend has asked me a good many questions; now let me ask him one. Does he think we could get many good men to come to Ottawa if all their acts on behalf of the government made them personally liable? What does he think?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, I should think so—

Mr. Howe: I would not want to be one of them.

[Mr. Howe.]

Mr. Fulton: —if you gave them a written undertaking that if they were acting in good faith the government would stand behind them. I should like the point cleared up that in the munitions and supply act this exemption was not given to controllers. As I say, from my reading of section 11 of the act of 1943, the last one passed, it extended this exemption to investigators, but subject to correction I cannot find that it was ever given to controllers by statute.

Mr. Howe: Exemption was given to them in the orders in council appointing them, under the War Measures Act and the munitions and supply act. I can assure my hon. friend that it is a necessary clause. If it were removed we would not be stripped of this power, because we would take it under the Emergency Powers Act; but if that protection were removed I am sure about half my staff would go home tomorrow.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): It seems to me that we are in agreement as to what should be done. The only question is whether the wording makes it clear. I agree with the minister that these men who come here have to be protected, and I was glad to hear the minister say there was no intention whatever of depriving the owner of the property of whatever may be his right at law. But the legal position seems rather obscured by the fact that in section 27 (2) the controller is declared to be agent of the owner. I am not going to offer any legal opinion, but I would certainly like to know whether the Minister of Justice will say the position is perfectly clear, in view of that declaration of agency of the controller, coupled with section 36. I should think the point we are making could be covered very easily by adding something to section 36 which would provide that while the controller was not responsible, nevertheless his principal, namely the government, was responsible. As it is now it seems to me that a clever lawyer could argue there is no foundation left for action.

Mr. Green: If the intention is as the Minister of Trade and Commerce has expressed it, that while the controller would not be liable the individual would still have a claim against the crown, what objection would there be to making that clear by adding a clause at the end of the section to this effect: "provided that rights against the crown shall not be affected hereby." That would make it clear that this section does not deprive the aggrieved person of his claim against the crown.

Mr. Howe: It has been made abundantly clear that every clause in this bill affords the private person access to the courts. It is written into every chapter. I do not like to be silly about it and put in clauses provision for which is amply covered elsewhere. Would any lawyer opposite assert that, if we put a controller into a plant and as a result of his actions the plant went bankrupt, the crown would not be liable? In principle when we put in a controller we practically expropriate the plant.

Mr. Fulton: From the present wording of the section, coupled with the wording of section 27, I think it is arguable. The controller is relieved from liability at law because of any action done in good faith, and section 27 makes him the agent of the owner.

Mr. Howe: This clause has been used a long time. It was drafted and checked by the Department of Justice and I am not prepared to change it.

Mr. Fulton: The minister just asked whether we would be prepared to suggest there was any likelihood that the crown might be exempted from liability. We have suggested there is a likelihood, we have suggested the reason, and so far we have heard no answer to that objection and no reason why the words suggested by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra should not be incorporated. That would still preserve the right of action against the crown.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): The Minister of Justice has not answered my question, either. I am not suggesting that would conclude the matter, but it might help.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Green: No; we would like an answer from the Minister of Justice. It is going pretty far when we bring forward reasonable suggestions and cannot even get an answer. There is something wrong if we have reached that state of affairs.

Mr. Garson: Well, I certainly do not want to disappoint my hon. friends. The wording of this section is substantially the same as that of the section in the Department of Reconstruction and Supply Act which was in effect during the whole course of world war II.

Mr. Green: That act did not come into effect until 1947, did it?

Mr. Garson: This last mentioned act and its antecedent legislation. The only difference is that in the one case it applies to investigators and in the present case to a new official being appointed under this act, a controller; but the principle is exactly the same in each case.

Mr. Fulton: But the investigator did not take over a plant.

Mr. Garson: No; there is a difference in that regard. It might be argued that the authority of the controller was somewhat greater than that of the investigator. I was not here myself at the time, but my information is that no cases of injustice or difficulty arose under the previous legislation. If my hon. friends allege that is not the case I would be glad to have them cite examples to the contrary. However, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce has indicated, I do not think there is any disposition on the part of the government in exempting a controller or investigator, very properly, from any personal liability to leave the owner of the plant without any recourse against the government itself.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): We do not think so either, but why not say so?

Mr. Garson: That is the point I was coming to. I make the suggestion, Mr. Chairman, that I discuss this matter with the draftsman to see whether or not in his judgment that result does not obtain at the present time, and if it does not obtain then what apt language would be required to make it obtain. He is tied up in court this afternoon, but I could see him later and discuss the matter with him. If any amendment is necessary, I could bring it to the house. It is quite probable that none is required, because this other legislation has been in existence and has met all the needs of quite a number of cases. That would seem to indicate that the law as it stands is all right.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Will the minister draw to his attention the declaration that the man is an agent?

Mr. Garson: He is probably aware of that because he drafted the bill.

Mr. Green: May I point out to the Minister of Justice that the Department of Reconstruction and Supply Act was never used for the purpose of taking over a man's business.

Mr. Garson: The Department of Reconstruction and Supply Act is the name under which that piece of legislation now goes, but the antecedent of the legislation is the act setting up the department of munitions and supply. As hon. members are aware, most of these sections were carried forward from one statute to the other, so I do not think anything turns on the title.

Mr. Green: But the legislation only applied to an investigator, and not a controller.

Mr. Garson: That is true, but I think my hon. friend will agree that under the War

Measures Act there would be legislation, perhaps by order in council, that would have substantially the same effect. In other words, during world war II, under the War Measures Act, wartime prices and trade board regulations were enacted by order in council, and such orders in council would have provisions analogous to the ones we are discussing; and that proved to be quite satisfactory. I believe the proper course for us to follow, therefore, is to consult with the draftsman to see whether the points my hon. friends have raised are not already covered as the section stands, and if not, what would be the appropriate action to take to provide the protection my hon. friends request.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the section pass?

Mr. Howe: Carried.

Mr. Green: The section stands. The section cannot be carried if we are to have further time to consider it.

The Deputy Chairman: Will hon. members speak a little louder. It is difficult to hear what is being said. I would also ask that members who are making interjections make them loudly enough to enable the Hansard reporter to hear them.

Shall section 36 stand?

Mr. Garson: I think we might pass section 36, and then if an amendment is brought in it will relate to the matter of crown liability in any event.

Mr. Green: There are two other sections standing now, and I do not think it would hurt to allow this one to stand.

Mr. Howe: We are going to take those sections and pass them. This is the third or fourth day we have been on this bill. We have spent enough time. We have been very patient.

Mr. Green: May I point out to the Minister of Trade and Commerce that he is not yet in a position to say we have spent enough time on any measure. He is not a dictator who decides how much time this house spends on a measure. I do not want to get into a quarrel with him, but I am sure he will agree with me when I say that is a very improper suggestion to make. We are doing our best to get this legislation into the form which we think is fairest to the Canadian people. No one is trying to hold up the bill. We are trying to get it in the best shape possible. If we are to be met with the statement from the senior minister of the crown that there has been enough time spent on this, what is parliamentary government coming to in this country?

Mr. Howe: What does majority rule mean if that is the case, if one member can hold up the house?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Question.

Mr. Fulton: The minister has asked for power to control our economy for five years. We have not yet spent five days on the bill giving it to him, and he thinks we have spent too much time. Surely, section 36, which the Minister of Justice has said could be referred to the draftsman to see if the points under discussion had been covered, could be allowed to stand until the minister has had time to consult with the draftsman. We have certain very strong views on the provisions of that section. We have amendments which we contemplated moving, but in deference to the minister's indication of his intention we would prefer not to move those amendments but leave it to be decided in the way he has suggested. We do ask for the accommodation of allowing the section to stand.

Mr. Garson: I do not want to labour this point too much, but I think my hon. friends will agree that they are of the opinion that clause 36 which we have been discussing is properly in the bill; that is, that it is desirable that an investigator or controller be protected against personal liability. The only question that they raise is whether or not the effect of protecting the controller and investigator is to protect the crown. They do not want to see that result obtained. If we pass this section it will not prevent our bringing back an amendment to some appropriate section of the bill to accomplish what they have in mind.

Mr. Green: Any amendment will affect this section. Surely we are not asked to pass a section, and then if the minister later brings in an amendment to some other section covering the matter we will be precluded from discussing this particular section. The proper way to do this is to allow the section to stand, as the other two sections were allowed to stand. I believe the Minister of Justice knows that just as well as I do.

Mr. White (Hastings-Peterborough): May I ask the minister a question? Does the minister make the decision as to whether or not a controller or investigator acted in good faith? If the answer is that the minister makes the decision, does that mean there is no possible way that decision can be brought before any court?

Mr. Howe: My hon. friend is a lawyer and I am not. What does he think the answer is?

Mr. White (Hastings-Peterborough): I asked the minister two questions. First, whether he decides the investigator acted in good faith, and if so then I presume there is no way that decision can be brought before a court for review?

Mr. Howe: I would not like to hire my hon. friend, because there is nothing in the clause that says the minister has to decide. It is a matter for the courts to decide.

Mr. White (Hastings-Peterborough): I asked the minister who makes the decision as to whether or not a controller or investigator acted in good faith. If the minister makes the decision would it follow that there is no way in which that decision can be brought before any court.

Mr. Howe: Well, of course, the court makes the decision.

Mr. White (Hastings-Peterborough): No. I would ask the minister to consult his colleague, the Minister of Justice, and explain how the matter gets before the court, because he can only get before the court when he acts in bad faith.

Mr. Garson: Well, my hon. friend, being himself a lawyer, will, I think, be in a better position to appreciate what would happen in a case of this kind. Would he not agree with me that this is what would happen? Some gentleman, we will say Mr. John Doe, whose plant has been taken over by a controller and not properly administered—in general it is known then that he has a good claim against the controller because of his actions—consults his solicitor. His solicitor takes down the statutes and looks up this particular act. He comes on section 36. He thereupon concludes, after listening to the set of facts which his client has told him, that in this particular case the controller has not acted in good faith, and he launches an action against the controller, and the question as to whether the controller has acted in good faith would be decided by the judge. In order to get the case before the judge and under the provisions of this section of the bill, Mr. John Doe, who is the plaintiff, would have to show that the controller in this particular case did not in fact act in good faith. If he were able to prove that fact then clause 36 would no longer apply; and in that process the Minister of Trade and Commerce would be sitting by as a perfectly disinterested—

Mr. Howe: Spectator.

Mr. Garson: Yes.

Mr. Fulton: Is the minister going to let the clause stand?

Mr. Garson: I do not think it will interfere in the slightest degree with the undertaking that has been given.

Mr. Green: We think it would.

Mr. Garson: We said we would bring down any necessary amendment there might be, and it will be added to the proper section of the bill. I think nothing turns upon whether it stands or is passed, and we might as well dispose of it while we are at it, and we will consider this other matter and I will report back to the house.

Mr. Fulton: It is a peculiar thing, Mr. Chairman, that when we had two other sections about which there was some doubt they were allowed to stand. Surely that is the proper procedure, because, as I understand the rules of the house, the only time at which an amendment to a clause can be moved is at this stage in committee. I am not aware of any rule under which at a later stage, during third reading, this bill can be amended in detail by having one of the clauses amended unless the whole bill were to be opened up again or a new bill submitted. I do not think therefore that any other interpretation can be placed on the minister's proposal—that this should carry and that perhaps if they thought it necessary they would amend it in particular at some later time—than that they do not intend to improve this clause, but that they want to get it through so that it cannot be reopened; because there is no way in which it can be opened again.

The minister has still not dealt with the points that have been made. Let us assume that no one wants to see controllers personally embarrassed for actions they do in good faith, or made personally responsible. Let us assume for the purpose of argument that the section does not go too far even in that respect in relieving them of liability; in order to try to work out an acceptable amendment, let us say that there is agreement on that point. It is desired to exempt the controller from any attempt to make him personally liable for acts done in good faith, even though they injure the person who is the victim of the act. What is also desired is to provide that the crown shall be liable for the wrongful acts of its servants. The position is simply this. Provisions similar to clause 36 have not been in any previous statute. There has been in a previous statute a provision that an investigator is not responsible for any act or thing done by him in good faith. But, Mr. Chairman, under these statutes no investigator has ever been clothed with the powers which are now given under this bill to a controller, powers to take over a person's business and run it, not only in compliance with the directions of the minister but to run it as agent of the owner; no investigator ever had that power. No investigator could ever injure the property and rights of a citizen in the way in which a controller can do. Therefore the fact that an investigator was exempt from responsibility for his acts done in good faith has no bearing on the question of the exemption of the controller from that responsibility.

The fact that the munitions and supply act itself is conspicuous in that it did not contain the word "controller" in a clause similar to this, but only "investigator", is a strong argument in support of the proposition that if it was not necessary to give controllers that same protection under the munitions and supply act, there is no case made out as to why they must be given this protection under this legislation.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Why not move an amendment if you are not satisfied?

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): We have one.

Mr. Fulton: Let the Minister of Public Works be patient.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I generally am.

Mr. Howe: This is getting very repetitious.

Mr. Fulton: The Minister of Trade and Commerce says that it is getting very repetitious. There is a simple way in which the repetition, if it be that, can be avoided, and that is by answering the arguments which are advanced. We have had no answer to those arguments. The opposition's only recourse is to state the position clearly and then to move an amendment which would incorporate in the bill these things which we state in our arguments should be there.

Section 27 appoints the controller and makes the controller the agent of the owner. Section 36 exempts the controller from the responsibility of anything done by him in the performance of his power. It is therefore arguable, and very easily arguable, that if a case were to come before the courts as a result of some injury done to the person whose plant had been taken over, and the injured person sought to apply the ordinary law that the master, in this case the crown, is responsible for the wrongful acts of his servants, the courts, looking at these two sections together, would say: Well, the intention of parliament in this case was to provide that there was no wrong, and that you must accept whatever the controller does in the course of exercising his powers, provided that he does it in good faith; and that therefore the effect of that section is to provide that, by virtue of the emergency, parliament has declared that the former owner of the plant cannot be wronged by any act which the controller does. That is an argument which could not be dismissed lightly, because there is no limitation or qualification on the power of the controller, and there is no limitation or qualification on his exemption from the consequence of his act. I do not think it is proper for this parliament, if it can preserve the workability of the act, to place the owner in that position. Therefore, what is desired surely is an amendment which would make it clear that the controller does not himself have to pay for any damage he may do, provided that he acts in good faith, but at the same time the right of action against the crown is preserved. I think that that could be done simply by making provision that—

Nothing in this section or in this act shall limit or remove the right of any person to recover against the crown for any wrongful act done by such controller or investigator.

That, substantially, would be the subject of an amendment. It hardly seems possible—

Mr. Howe: Move it.

Mr. Fulton: It hardly seems possible to see how that would limit the effect of the act. What is the opinion of the Minister of Justice in this connection?

Mr. Garson: My opinion is this: Let my hon. friend move the amendment.

Mr. Green: I shall move it. I move:

That section 36 be amended by adding thereto the following words:

"Nothing herein contained shall limit the right of any person to recover against the crown for any wrongful act of such controller or investigator."

The Minister of Justice has already told us that he proposes to have this section considered by his officials after the six o'clock recess. He says he cannot reach them in the meantime, and that is understandable. But then he has gone on to make a suggestion with regard to procedure which is entirely unfair to us, and to the House of Commons. His suggestion is that, although this is to be considered at six o'clock, and although there is a possibility of an amendment being made by the government, still he wants to have the section passed at this time. The result is that if the government does not decide to bring down the amendment, there can be no further discussion and the subject is closed.

The practice followed ever since I have been here, in circumstances like these, has been to let the section stand. Already two other sections are standing, and no one is going to be hurt if this one is permitted to stand with those two. But for the government to take the attitude that the section must be carried now, whether or not at a later time it decides to make a change in it, is most unfair.

I would urge that the Minister of Justice permit the section to stand, and the matter could be dealt with briefly when it comes up this evening with the other two sections

Mr. Garson: I received word about two minutes ago that the draftsman will be here almost momentarily. With that in mind we could let it stand, then go on to clean up the other two which were stood over, in the hope that we may dispose of the bill before six o'clock.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it the wish of the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra that the amendment stand, as well?

Mr. Green: It may stand too, yes.

The Deputy Chairman: Then, I shall not put it.

Amendment stands.

Section stands.

On section 37—Paramount powers under this act.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): May we have a word of explanation as to the significance of this section, and the terms of other acts which will be overridden by it?

Mr. Howe: Section 37 refers to competitive tenders. The Public Works Act and the Public Printing and Stationery Act contain certain regulations covering public tenders that are not carried into this measure. The bill states that, in matters covered by the Defence Production Act, that act shall override the provisions of the Public Works Act and the Public Printing and Stationery Act.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): What is the minister's attitude toward tenders, in the light of these powers?

Mr. Howe: There are some differences to be considered. For instance, I think in the Public Works Act the limit for tenders requiring orders in council is $5,000, whereas in this measure it is $50,000. There are differences of that kind. All this measure states is that where the procedure is set out in this act and, as so set out, is in conflict with either the Public Works Act or the Public Printing and Stationery Act, this act shall govern.

Mr. Knowles: Although the minister has said that the intention of the section is that it shall apply only to the provisions of those other statutes relating to tenders, nevertheless the wording indicates that the powers conferred by this measure may be exercised notwithstanding anything contained in these other acts.

Mr. Howe: That is right. It covers everything, but it is aimed particularly at the matter of tenders.

Mr. Knowles: Despite the fact that I am prepared to give necessary powers to the government, and that I am calling upon them to use those powers for certain purposes, it seems to me this wording might have been a little more precise. For instance, the Public Printing and Stationery Act contains a section which relates to the wages paid to employees working for the printing bureau. I am wondering if it is possible, under the powers conferred by this section, for the minister to have printing done somewhere else at wages less than would be paid by the printing bureau. If not, why should not the wording of the section be such as to confine it to what the minister has in mind?

Mr. Howe: I might say that this has been narrowed down from the provisions of the Department of Reconstruction and Supply Act. The provision there was:

> The powers conferred upon the minister by this act or by the governor in council may be exercised by him notwithstanding and without restriction or limitation by the provisions of any other act or orders in council enacted before this subsection came into force.

Which does the hon. member prefer?

Mr. Knowles: I certainly prefer this one but with one exception; the other one did suggest that the overriding of other statutes was to be done by the governor in council.

Mr. Howe: No.

Mr. Knowles: The one the minister just read, yes. If I am wrong, read it again and show me where I am wrong.

Mr. Howe: It says:

> The powers conferred upon the minister by this act or by the governor in council—

Either of them:

—may be exercised by him.

And so on.

Mr. Knowles: Well, we may both be right and both be wrong. But it does seem to me that, bearing in mind what the minister said the other night about the reluctance of ministers to interfere with matters coming under the supervision of other ministers, it might be a good idea if this sort of thing did require consideration by cabinet. Here we are asked to give the minister power to do things which normally come under the supervision of the Minister of Public Works, but without having to fulfil the requirements of the Public Works Act. Similarly we are giving him power to do something in connection with printing, and that comes under the Secretary of State. And he may do it without referring the matter to the Secretary of State, and without obeying the conditions laid down in the Public Printing and Stationery Act. I think the provisions are a little on the wide side, and I object.

Mr. Fraser: The minister said that under this bill the amount of tenders is $50,000; is that right?

Mr. Howe: Yes—or perhaps I am wrong; I think it is $25,000.

Mr. Fraser: Well, what is it?

Mr. Howe: I do not know, but if my hon. friend will read the bill he will find it. It is as much his duty as it is mine to read legislation we are discussing.

Mr. Fraser: The minister is trying to give me a lecture about something he does not know himself. He said at first it was $50,000, and now he says he thinks it is $25,000. During the last war I believe the contracts were $5,000—at least they were at the first of the war. Was the limit raised at a later time?

Mr. Howe: The provision is that where tenders have been called and the lowest tender accepted the minister has the authority to sign a contract, without an order in council, up to the amount of $50,000.

Mr. Fraser: Up to $50,000?

Mr. Howe: Yes.

Mr. Fraser: Are these contracts going to be made on tender or will they be allotted?

Mr. Howe: That will be decided from time to time.

Mr. Fraser: If they are allotted will you guarantee the contractor that there will be a limit on the price he must pay for raw materials?

Mr. Howe: No.

Mr. Knowles: What is envisaged by the word "printing"? Will this cover stationery and printing for the Department of National Defence?

Mr. Howe: I hate to get annoyed, but a section of this kind has been in almost every act that my hon. friend has seen passed in this house.

Mr. Knowles: That still does not answer my question. I submit that if one of the purposes of this department is to provide supplies that the Department of National Defence may require, and if one type of supplies is printing, I do not see why we should circumvent rules and practices governing government printing already in effect.

Section agreed to.

On section 38—Orders and regulations.

Mr. Fulton: It will be noted that there is no provision in this bill, such as is usual now in bills giving emergency powers, providing for the tabling of orders and regulations made under the statute. The minister has made certain concessions, I think in one and perhaps two instances, where the power to be granted was placed in the governor in council rather than in the hands of the minister, but there is as yet no provision in this bill governing the laying of orders in council and regulations before parliament. Therefore I intend to move an amendment to this section in exactly the same form as the amendment to Bill No. 24, the Emergency Powers Act, which was accepted by the Prime Minister. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra:

That Bill 77 be amended by numbering present clause 38 as 38(1) and adding thereto the following:

"(2) In respect of an order or regulation made under this act, the period for laying the same before parliament under section 7 of the Regulations Act is

(a) five days after the making thereof if it is made by the governor in council, and

(b) fifteen days after the making thereof in any other case, or if parliament is not then in session, a like period after the commencement of the next ensuing session thereof.

(3) If the Senate and House of Commons within a period of forty days, beginning with the day on which any order or regulation is laid before parliament in accordance with subsection (2) and excluding any time during which parliament is dissolved or prorogued or during which both the Senate and House of Commons are adjourned for more than four days, resolve that it be annulled, it shall cease to have effect."

I point out that that amendment would incorporate as subsections 2 and 3 of section 38 the present subsections 4 and 5 of section 2 of Bill No. 24. It will be remembered that there was originally a limited provision for tabling orders in council in Bill No. 24, but subsequently an amendment was moved making it exactly the same as this one.

Mr. Howe: This bill is quite different from the Emergency Powers Act. The Emergency Powers Act was for one year, while this bill is for five years. This bill deals with materials and things. For example, if an order is passed about copper the industry would be entitled to believe that there would be some stability to the order. If it is to be subject to reversal by parliament on short notice, say of forty days, it might cause a good deal of loss to the industry. The Regulations Act provides that orders in council shall be placed before parliament and orders in council passed under this bill would be tabled as required by the Regulations Act. I think that is as far as we should be asked to go with this kind of legislation.

Mr. Fulton: The Emergency Powers Act provides for the passing of orders in council bringing into effect price control if and when considered necessary. Surely if the price of goods is set at a certain point that particular industry or business would want to know that there was a reasonable certainty that the price would have some degree of permanency, just as the minister has said that a particular industry would want to know that an order with respect to materials would have a degree of permanency. In the case of the Emergency Powers Act the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice consented—in fact it was said that it was a good suggestion—that an amendment should be made in that respect.

Under section 28 of this bill the minister has the power to set aside provincial statutes and municipal bylaws. Under section 30 the governor in council is given the power to declare materials essential and to control them, and the same with services. To adopt the words of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, although it might be agreed that the circumstances are such that the government should have this power, we are entitled to ask that parliament be informed as rapidly and as fully as possible as to what is being done under the power we have delegated.

As the minister has said on a number of occasions—for the sake of argument we will agree with him on this occasion even though we have not before—what will be done under these powers will be reasonable and essential for the proper defence of Canada. If an order or regulation is passed for that purpose and in that spirit, what concern need the government or the minister have simply because that regulation or order is to be tabled in parliament in the shortest possible time? If it is reasonable, then it can be supported and explained. Surely under those circumstances there would not be much likelihood of its being repealed. The only purpose of this amendment is to get the matter drawn to the attention of parliament, have it brought before parliament as early as possible.

I hope the minister has not altered the opinion he expressed a couple of nights ago when he said that he would have no real objection to the incorporation of any such provision in this bill. If he has not changed his mind then I can see no reason why he should object to this amendment. May I ask the minister if he is now adopting the practice of saying one thing to the people of Canada and another thing to this House of Commons?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fulton: My hon. friends say, "oh, oh," but let me point out to them what was said in the broadcast radio interview of two nights ago. The minister was asked these questions by one of the correspondents:

> Q. In respect to letting parliament scrutinize some of these orders, the Prime Minister was good enough to consent in the emergency powers bill to give parliament the power to annul every such order and regulation that came to it. Would you have any objection to having such a provision incorporated in the defence production act?
> A. No, none particularly, no.
> Q. But there is no such provision in the act?
> A. No.

I point out that the provision now sought to be included in this act is exactly the same as the provision in the Emergency Powers Act.

Mr. McIlraith: A different set of circumstances.

Mr. Fulton: I suggest that the minister in consistency cannot say one thing on the radio to the people of Canada and then not comply with the request to incorporate it in the act when it is made in the House of Commons.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I am just as anxious as anybody else to keep the government in check. Sometimes the minister gets annoyed at things I say to him, and that will happen again, indeed many times. But just now I should like to point out the difference between the Emergency Powers Act and this act. The Emergency Powers Act is almost a blank cheque. It gives the government powers to do things not defined in the act. I do not think there is any argument but that it was imperative that there be written into that act the provision enabling parliament to annul orders passed under it. It is there, and we are glad that it is. But the bill before us is a bill setting up a department of government. Does it not have to be looked at in the same way as other departments of government, the Department of National Health and Welfare, the Department of Public Works, the Department of Justice and so on? All of them have under their statutes authority to pass orders in council to carry out the provisions of those acts but none of them have in those statutes a provision making it possible for parliament to annul orders in council passed by those departments in pursuit of their regular duties and functions. If we are going to introduce that principle into this department do we not have to ask for the same thing with respect to these other departments? That would be rather drastic.

I submit that not only is there that difference but it must be pointed out that, whereas the Emergency Powers Act was a short one not defining the powers that the government can take, this is a fairly lengthy bill of some forty-one sections in which there is some considerable definition of the powers that this department is to have. I think there is a considerable difference between the conditions that required that the power of parliament to annul be written into the Emergency Powers Act and the circumstances pertaining to the bill before us.

One other point I wish to make is that the hon. member for Kamloops quoted me in support of his argument, with particular reference to my claim that we should know what the government is doing under this act. I still insist that is the case but I point out that the Regulations Act already requires that that information shall be made known to us. Earlier today I was demanding that that act be obeyed; that was my point. The Regulations Act really goes a considerable distance. The definition of a regulation under that act is as follows:

"Regulation" means a rule, order, regulation, bylaw or proclamation made, in the exercise of a legislative power conferred by or under an act of parliament, by the governor in council, the treasury board, a minister of the crown, or a board, commission, corporation or other body or person that is an agent or servant of His Majesty in right of Canada . . .

I point out that any regulations having legislative effect, even regulations passed by the minister, are required by section 7 of the Regulations Act to be laid before parliament. There is no question about that. It applies not only to orders in council. Regulations, orders and directives made by the minister having legislative effect will have to come before us. The operative effect of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Kamloops is not to require that these things be brought before us, for we already have that, but to give parliament the right to annul these orders as they come one by one. I submit if we are going to do that to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, much as we might like to clip his wings now and then, we would have to do it to every other minister as well, and that would hardly be consistent with established parliamentary practice.

Mr. Green: I would point out to the minister that under the Essential Materials (Defence) Act there was provision for tabling orders and regulations, not, it is true, in the terms of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Kamloops but there is this provision found in section 9:

Every order or regulation made by the governor in council under sections 3, 4 or 10 shall be published forthwith in the Canada Gazette and shall be laid before parliament within ten days after publication thereof, if parliament is then in session, or, if parliament is not then in session, within ten days after the commencement of the next ensuing session thereof.

Mr. Howe: What does the Regulations Act say?

[Mr. Knowles.]

Mr. Knowles: And it became law since the Essential Materials (Defence) Act was passed.

Mr. Green: If the Regulations Act covers a provision of this kind then of course that is a different matter.

Mr. Howe: That is the fact, yes.

Mr. Green: If all the information that would be given under section 9 of the Essential Materials (Defence) Act will now have to be tabled under the provisions of the Orders and Regulations Act—

Mr. Garson: The Regulations Act.

Mr. Green: —then of course that meets my argument.

Mr. Howe: That is the reason it was left out. It was found it duplicated the language of the Regulations Act passed subsequently.

Mr. Fulton: The Regulations Act was not passed subsequently to the Essential Materials (Defence) Act.

Mr. Howe: It came into force afterwards. The Regulations Act came into force after the Essential Materials (Defence) Act was passed, on the first day of January of this year.

Mr. Fulton: But the Regulations Act does not give parliament any right to express an opinion, to annul or do anything else with respect to the orders and regulations which are laid before it.

Mr. Howe: That is correct. We do not intend to give that right.

Mr. Fulton: My understanding is the minister said that he would have no objection to including such a power in this bill.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Oh no.

Mr. Fulton: That was the answer given to the question asked in the course of the radio broadcast. I notice that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, in spite of the fact that he always says that he wants to get full information and so on, yet when anything is done that would really have the effect of getting it that appears to be not acceptable to the government, he is not very slow in coming to their rescue.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, on a point of privilege, there is no dispute between myself and the hon. member for Kamloops or between the two of us and the government as to the requirement that all orders and regulations be tabled. We are agreed on that.

Mr. Fulton: Is this a point of privilege? I hardly see that there is any privilege.

Mr. Knowles: Just do not misinterpret my words.

Mr. Fulton: Actions speak louder than words, and what I am doing is interpreting the hon. member's actions. Contrary to what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has said, the powers given are in many respects quite as wide as the powers given under the Emergency Powers Act. The hon. member says that was a blank cheque. If there was ever a blank cheque this is a blank cheque to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Before we come to any decision on this matter I want to ask the minister whether it is a fact that he did say on the occasion of that broadcast that he would have no objection to giving parliament the power to annul orders and regulations that come to it.

Mr. Howe: I do not know what I said. I did not realize I was talking to parliament when I was answering questions in a press conference. I do not know whether or not I said what the hon. member says I did. There was no record of it so far as I was concerned, but in any event the point is that I do not think I need to make a statement. I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre stated the question. We have a Regulations Act which says what shall be tabled in parliament. This is legislation to set up a department of government, which will be like any other department, and I cannot accept the suggestion that any executive act of this department shall be subject to review and repeal by parliament.

Mr. Fulton: The minister said he did not realize he was speaking to parliament when he spoke at his press conference. No; the minister was speaking to the public.

Mr. Howe: I thought I was speaking to some reporters.

Mr. Fulton: The minister surely knew his conference was going to be broadcast over a national network. He must have known that was the purpose of the conference.

Mr. Howe: You mean that was legislation by radio? I understand my hon. friend made quite an impassioned oration about legislation by radio.

Mr. Fulton: What I am objecting to is the minister's saying and doing one thing over the radio to the people of Canada and then expressing a different opinion or desire in parliament. That is what I am calling attention to here.

Mr. Howe: Well, you have called attention to it, so why not have a vote?

Mr. Fulton: If the minister has changed his mind, let us say, I suppose that is his privilege; but I do not think it is a very desirable course to follow in the case of a responsible minister who is asking this house to entrust him with very wide powers, which parliament is entitled to assume will be exercised with a degree of consistency that has not been displayed by the minister in the variation between his announcement of two days ago and his attitude in the house this afternoon.

Since this bill came before parliament we have been attempting to bring forward amendments which would make it in the better interests of the Canadian people. If the minister finds the provision that all the administrative orders in his department should be tabled is too wide, would he consent to an amendment which would require the tabling of legislative orders to be done within certain time limit, with the right of parliament to review those orders in council having legislative effect, because many such will be passed under the provisions of this act?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Fulton: I wonder if the minister is ready for the question I asked him. I am ready for the answer.

Mr. Howe: I do not think I should encourage this one-man filibuster, but the position is that the Regulations Act sets out the rules under which orders and regulations are tabled. The department now being formed will be subject to that legislation, and I can assure my hon. friend that the Regulations Act will be followed with all dispatch and in the spirit of the legislation.

An hon. Member: You have had your answer; let us get on.

Mr. Fulton: I do not think the Minister of Trade and Commerce needs much help from the hon. gentleman who made that interjection. At this late stage I do not suppose there is much point in demonstrating it further, but I want to emphasize that here the minister is asking power to control our economy for five years, and he objects that we are wasting time though we have not had this bill before us for five days.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Irrelevant to this item.

Mr. Fulton: The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Fournier) apparently does not appreciate the position, so I will try—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I think the hon. member should keep his remarks as relevant as possible to the section under discussion, which is section 38. He asked a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and he has had a reply. He may not like it, but he has had that reply and I do not think he should pursue that point further.

Mr. Fulton: I submit that any remarks having to do with the power to legislate by order in council are in order under section 38, which reads:

The governor in council may make orders and regulations to carry out the purposes and provisions of this act.

While I am seeking to carry on a discussion with the minister which would be to the point, I would point out that my attention is occasionally somewhat distracted by interruptions coming from various quarters of the house, and if I am led to try to deal with those interruptions I think the responsibility lies at least equally in other quarters. I was merely trying to put the point in a way in which the Minister of Public Works and I would be able to agree.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We generally agree, but you talk too long.

Mr. Fulton: That is because you interrupt so much. The Minister of Trade and Commerce has said that the Regulations Act provides for the tabling of orders in council passed under this bill. That is also true of orders in council which might be passed under the Emergency Powers Act, and I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Justice if they consider that the same arguments apply with respect to legislative orders in council which may be passed under this act as applied to such orders in council passed under the Emergency Powers Act.

Mr. Howe: The answer is no.

Mr. Fulton: That is the question I am trying to get at in this amendment. If it is too wide and can be narrowed to cover only orders in council of that kind, and to confer upon parliament the right to deal with those, I would be happy to narrow it down; but I would like to hear from the minister whether he does not think the same arguments apply.

Mr. Howe: No, I think not. These orders applied to concrete situations and approval of regulations made necessary by circumstances. For instance, the steel order prohibited the use of steel for certain purposes. Suppose parliament overrode the order. That action would require a whole series of orders for other types of steel. You could not carry on under that arrangement. As I say, the people affected have a right to expect some stability, and I would not care to be responsible for administration while parliament was debating whether that order should or should not stand. That could happen; my hon. friend could carry on for weeks debating each order as it came out, and he would be likely to do so.

[The Deputy Chairman.]

Mr. Fulton: And you could go on administering them; you would not be interfered with.

Mr. Howe: I do not think I would care to give my hon. friend that opportunity.

Amendment negatived: Yeas, 17; nays, 72.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the section carry?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Section agreed to on division.

On section 39—Repeal.

Mr. Green: There is no provision in this bill for tabling of an annual report by the department.

Mr. Howe: No. Mr. Chairman, I should be glad to move an amendment now to provide for the tabling of a report if my hon. friend wishes. This is the amendment which I shall ask my colleague to move:

That Bill 77 be amended by renumbering sections 34 to 41 as sections 35 to 42 and inserting immediately after section 33 the following heading and section:

Annual Report

34. The minister shall, before the thirty-first day of March in each year, prepare a report showing the operations of the department during the year last preceding and shall after completion of the report forthwith lay it before parliament, or if parliament is not then sitting, shall lay it before parliament within fifteen days after the commencement of the next ensuing session.

Mr. Garson: I move accordingly.

Mr. Green: I take it that there will be a report filed next year, even though there will not have been a full year intervening?

Mr. Howe: Yes, that is the intention.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Section 40 agreed to.

On section 41—Expiration.

Mr. Green: We have an amendment to move to section 41. It reads as follows:

That Bill 77 be amended by substituting for "fifty-six" in section 41 thereof, the word "fifty-four."

The effect of that would be to cut the life of the act from five to three years. In other words, it would continue in effect only until 1954. This is an extremely important bill giving wide powers, in fact giving wider powers than were given to the munitions and supply department during the last war. These powers are to be given, although the government itself has taken the position in other legislation that we are in what we might call a twilight era and not in an all-out war period. Because of the nature of the powers given, and because this department is a temporary one, we believe that parliament should have an opportunity in three years rather than in five to consider these powers again. We are asking, therefore, that the time limit be cut from five years to three.

I would point out to the members that in the Essential Materials (Defence) Act which was passed last September there was a time limit of a little less than two years; that act was to expire on July 31, 1952. The present bill absorbs all the provisions of the Essential Materials (Defence) Act, and even with my amendment those provisions would be in effect until 1954, which is two years longer than the time provided by the bill last year.

The Emergency Powers Act, which received third reading a day or two ago, contains a time limit which continues it in effect only until May 31, 1952. Then another act called the Export and Import Permits Act, which was introduced in the Senate the other day, contained a five-year life provision, as does this bill, but that time was cut by the other house from five years to three. I believe the other house was sound in making that reduction, primarily for the purpose of enabling parliament to have something to say about these powers at an earlier date.

I hope the government will not object to cutting this time from five years to three. Incidentally, the same time limit was contained in the munitions and supply act. When it was introduced at the outbreak of the last war it contained a time limit which, even though we were at war, was approximately three years. Subsequently, the time limit was lifted. I do submit that under present conditions it is reasonable that the time limit on this act should be three years. It could be extended at the end of that time if thought necessary. We all hope that by that time the crisis will be over and the need for a bill of this type will have passed. Certainly, parliament should have the opportunity, not later than 1954, to review a bill of this kind, and for that reason we propose this amendment.

Mr. Howe: Mr. Chairman, I just want to point out that we are undertaking a three-year program. This is a bill to set up a department of government.

Mr. Green: So was the munitions and supply act.

Mr. Howe: Perhaps it was, but we are learning from experience. We thought then that the war might be over in less than three years, we thought it might be over in one year. We have a definite three-year program before us. Experience tell me that at least another two years would be required to liquidate that program should it end after the three-year period. The five years is needed. I know my hon. friend likes the forum and likes to debate, but I do not. I find I have other things to do.

Mr. Green: I hope the minister was not referring to me, because there is nothing I like less than debating.

Mr. Howe: I do not see why my hon. friend is not prepared to withdraw his amendment, because he and I are on common ground. A great deal of thought was given to the period that should be provided for this department, and it was felt that five years was the shortest passage of time to allow the department to carry out the program that is now envisaged by the government.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): No, Mr. Chairman, will you call it six o'clock. I want to say a word about this matter.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): At six o'clock the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra was suggesting to the committee that the term of this Bill No. 77 be reduced from five years to three years. In effect the minister's reply was that the program of the Department of National Defence, which the Department of Defence Production is to work out, was for three years, and that they reckoned it would take us another two years to liquidate it, as he described it. I think that was his word. Therefore he suggested a five-year term for the act.

If in fact we were able to count confidently now that it would be a three-year program for the defence department, and that that would be the end of it, and that it would take them two years to liquidate it, I am inclined to think I would look on the matter very differently indeed; but of course we know that is not the situation at all; that it would really be beyond our hopes that in three years our national defence program would be terminated and then we could proceed to the liquidation. My feeling therefore is that this reason for the suggestion of five years falls to the ground, and that we should look at the thing not from that point of view, because that to me is very unconvincing, but on its merits. I have this suggestion to make to the minister.

There is no magic in five years, and there is no magic in three years. I do not pretend there is, but I do suggest that three years would be a not unnatural time, because the national defence program runs to that time. I would also put this to the minister. It is astonishing how quickly the abnormal becomes the normal; and as we go on debating the clauses of a bill of this kind, almost in spite of ourselves we slip into the feeling that after all it is not so very unusual. But after all, it is an extraordinary thing that we should give this amazing arbitrary power to one man. I shall relieve the minister's feelings by saying I shall not repent my views. He is not interested in my views on this subject, and has heard them often enough before, and I do not intend to dwell on them. But I do suggest this, that we might remind ourselves that from the point of view of many of us, and perhaps far more than will ever speak on this bill, these arbitrary powers are something that we view with the greatest possible regret.

Therefore I suggest to the minister that it might be a reasonable concession to those who take a view so different from his own, if this concession of two years were made.

The minister expressed some impatience, not in a very impatient way, this afternoon, that we had spent five days—I think they were very short days—discussing this bill. I can assure the minister that if some of us had discussed this bill according to the repugnance we feel as regards matters of this kind, it would not take five days, it would take five weeks. Therefore I appeal to the minister for this concession. After all, if three years from now the situation warrants it we can extend it. If the situation is as it is now we no doubt will extend it. Therefore it seems no harm would be suffered, and in the opinion of some of us it would be just that much less unpalatable.

Mr. Howe: I am sorry that my hon. friend feels so great a repugnance toward this bill. I would remind him that a bill in similar terms allowed Canada to do a very creditable war effort not so many years ago. I see nothing that need concern my hon. friend so deeply. I thought he was going to suggest a compromise. Had he done so, I would have said it was the first reasonable suggestion I had heard from that side since we started to discuss the bill, and I might have taken it. But since he insists on three years, I must say, Mr. Chairman, I insist on five years.

[Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood).]

Mr. Knowles: Do you mean you would accept four?

Mr. Green: If the minister would accept four it would be all right.

Mr. Howe: It is too late now.

Amendment negatived.

Section agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: We shall now revert to the clauses that were stood over, namely, clauses 9, 16 and 36.

On section 9—Administration of department under the minister.

Mr. Howe: I have an amendment to suggest to section 9 which I shall ask one of my colleagues to move. It is as follows:

That subsection (2) of section 9 of Bill No. 77 be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"(2) The minister shall have exclusive authority to buy or otherwise acquire defence supplies and construct defence projects required by the Department of National Defence, except

(a) defence projects to be constructed by persons in the employ of His Majesty; and

(b) such defence supplies or defence projects as the Minister of National Defence or any other minister designated by the governor in council may procure or construct at the request of the minister."

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I so move.

Mr. Green: I do not quite understand the last paragraph of subsection 2 where it says:

. . . as the Minister of National Defence or any other minister designated by the governor in council may procure or construct at the request of the minister.

Mr. Howe: The reason that the Minister of National Defence is named is that it is often convenient to have certain limited appropriations at the disposal of a local armed services unit, such as for Suffield. The unit may want the privilege of having say $500 a month to buy fresh vegetables, or for small supplies. The reason another minister is named is that another branch of the government might conveniently carry out some part of the defence program and the minister might wish to ask them to accept that responsibility. For example, housing might well go to the Minister of Resources and Development.

Mr. Green: That is, the request would come from the Minister of Defence Production to the Minister of National Defence?

Mr. Howe: Yes; and this provides that any other minister would have to be designated for the purpose by the governor in council.

On section 16—Defence production revolving fund.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): There is a suggestion I have to make here. I quite realize—indeed I always did realize—there must be a revolving fund. My only aim was to see that as much information should come as quickly as possible to parliament, and I wonder whether the minister would agree to this suggestion, that there might be made available and laid on the table monthly statements of the operations under section 16, that is to say the incomings and outgoings under subsection 2 (a) and subsection 3 of the same section.

Mr. Howe: The figures would necessarily be very vague. They would show that the fund had paid out, we will say, X million dollars and had received, in the month in question, Y million dollars. Obviously, we could not say what the money had been spent for, nor could we say from where the receipts had been received. They would be perfectly meaningless figures.

It seems to me the same purpose would be accomplished by an hon. member asking for figures any time he wished to do so. I do not like to ask for the passage of a law or statute in parliament which states that I am to table figures which would be meaningless. If they meant anything I would not object to tabling them, always, of course, giving consideration to security matters. However if someone wants figures and asks for them, I shall be glad to table them the next day. I think the hon. member will appreciate the difficulty.

Mr. Fulton: Does the minister mean that he could not give the details for security reasons?

Mr. Howe: That is it, exactly.

On section 36—No action lies against controller or investigator.

Mr. Howe: I believe the difficulty in this section can be settled by the amendment I shall ask my colleague to move.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I move:

That clause 36 be amended by adding thereto the following:

"but nothing in this section limits or restricts the rights of any person against the crown."

The Deputy Chairman: It will be noted that section 36 has been renumbered as section 37.

Mr. Green: That, in effect, is the amendment we suggested, is it not?

Mr. Howe: As a matter of fact, it is quite different from the amendment the hon. member suggested.

Mr. Green: It is the same, but in other words.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

PROVISION FOR EARLY DISTRIBUTION OF PAYMENTS AT END OF POOL PERIOD, ETC.

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved the second reading of Bill No. 5, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1935.

He said: Mr. Speaker, Bill No. 5 proposes three amendments to the Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1935. The first amendment corrects an error in section 20. In this section reference is made to the "thirty-first day of August". The amendment corrects this date to the "first day of August", as was intended.

The other two amendments are proposed as a result of experience in the operation of the Canadian wheat board over the years.

Under the act as it now stands, any increase in the initial payment for wheat, oats, and barley made during a pool period or crop year must be equal for all grades. A situation could arise in which it might be possible to increase the initial payment for certain grades of wheat, oats or barley to a greater extent than for other grades of the same grain. This amendment is designed to give the governor in council some latitude in adjusting initial payments within the crop year as between grades. I do not anticipate that the powers asked for in this amendment would be used in a year of normal production. On the other hand, I believe that the amendment, if enacted, will be useful in the event of a crop in which there are not only wide variations among the grades, but wide variations in the demand for particular grades as well. The proposed amendment is intended to meet such a contingency, rather than to alter procedures followed in a normal crop year.

The third amendment is the most important of the three. It proposes a means by which annual pools may be wound up promptly. Occasions have arisen in the past when the board has been operating two or more pool accounts at the same time. The procedure in these cases has been to divide sales between the pools. This means that the winding up of a particular pool takes an unreasonable length of time. The amendment gives the governor in council power to authorize the transfer of unsold grain from one pool account to the next pool account for the purpose of winding up the earlier account and permitting a final payment as soon as possible after the end of each crop year.

The amendment contemplates a careful valuation of the inventory to be transferred, with the principle in mind that the later pool should neither gain nor lose because of the unsold grain transferred to it. In actual practice it may not be possible to eliminate all risk to the pools concerned. I believe that the house will agree, however, that the proposed method is preferable to holding up the final settlement with producers under each pool until such time as the last of the grain in that pool has been sold.

I have now covered all the matters concerning Bill No. 5, but I am sure the hon. members would wish me to take this occasion to review the current developments in the board's operations.

I shall not discuss the 1945-49 pool account at this time, as it will be the subject of special legislation to be brought down shortly. I might say just this, however, for the information of hon. members, that the annual report of the board has now been completed in Winnipeg and has been laid on the table of the house at an earlier sitting. The report contains the accounts covering the 1945-49 pool wheat, the last of which wheat was disposed of in December, 1950.

We are going through a most unusual experience in the marketing of wheat this year. The unusual circumstances arise largely from the lateness of the 1950 harvest and from the extensive damage to quality sustained by nearly one-half the crop due to the frosts last August.

The lateness of the 1950 harvest reduced the volume of shipments from country elevators to the lakehead before the close of navigation and made the transportation of grain an acute and continuing problem for the remainder of the crop year 1950-51. Because of the late harvest, some 37,000 fewer cars of grain were loaded in the prairie provinces from August 1 to December 1, 1950, than were loaded the corresponding period a year ago, despite the fact that the railways loaded cars in the country at about the same rate as last year once the 1950 crop started to move. In recent weeks the loadings have been exceeding last year's levels.

In marketing the 1950 wheat crop, the Canadian wheat board is carrying on two distinct operations, the one having to do with milling wheat, the other with the lower grades. As a result of the frost damage and unfavourable harvesting weather, less than one-third of the 1950 crop will fall into the grades Nos. 1, 2 and 3 northern, which are the standard milling grades normally constituting the bulk of the prairie wheat crop. Fortunately we had a carry-over of about 99 million bushels of wheat on July 31 last, principally of the grade No. 2 northern. In addition, No. 4 northern wheat this year has been a useful milling grade both in the domestic market and for export. Even allowing for these factors, our supplies of milling grades of wheat are not adequate to meet the demand this year. In selling the milling grades, the board's problem is one of securing adequate transportation both by rail and by inland water routes to meet domestic and export commitments.

I might add that Alberta marketings of wheat show a high percentage of milling grades, and as a result the board is working on a maximum export program through Pacific coast ports, which will continue for the balance of the crop year.

With respect to low-grade wheat, the situation is very different. Because of the damage sustained in 1950, the board is faced with the task of shipping and selling over 150 million bushels of grades not normally used for milling purposes. Fortunately, the largest individual grade among the lower grades is No. 5 wheat, for which there has been an overseas demand. No. 6 wheat and feed wheat are being sold in some volume to the United States where such wheat can enter on the basis of a five per cent ad valorem duty, provided that the sample is considered unfit for human consumption. The disposal of such a large quantity of low-grade wheat will take considerably more time than that required for the selling of the limited supplies of milling grades, but progress is being made.

I should also note a third circumstance. As a result of the wet harvesting weather a considerable quantity of grain had an unusually high moisture content on delivery to country elevators and is grading tough and damp. The existence of so much grain with a high moisture content has had the effect of reducing the effective capacity of country elevators and lakehead terminals. I hope it will be possible to find storage for stocks of tough and damp grain remaining on farms, as well as terminal accommodation for the tough and damp stocks still in country elevators, before warm weather sets in. The wheat board and the board of grain commissioners are co-operating to that end. I might add that damp grain has been given first preference in transportation throughout the crop year, and the shipment of tough grain of the lower grades has only been limited by the essential requirements of the board for milling grades which include the toughs of these grades.

From October 1 to date about 36,000 cars of tough and damp grain have been inspected. These inspections represent about 33 per cent of total cars inspected during the period. Thus, the shipment of tough and damp grain has received a substantial percentage of cars available for country loadings. Late in January, because of congestion at the lakehead, the board issued instructions limiting shipments of grain to the lakehead to damp grain. Recently it has been possible to amend this restriction to allow high-moisture tough grades to be moved as well.

Terminal elevators at the lakehead have had a free hand in drying damp grain and are keeping abreast with arrivals. Tough grain is being dried as required by the board. Although some 65 million bushels of tough and damp grain have been inspected, it is difficult to estimate the amount still to be shipped. While the problem is undoubtedly a diminishing one, it will continue for some time yet.

Under all these circumstances the Canadian wheat board has endeavoured to follow a balanced shipping policy. It has endeavoured to move forward sufficient high-grade wheat, including toughs and damps of these grades, to take care of moderate export commitments. This has left considerable latitude for the shipment of low-grade grain including the toughs and damps of these grades. The board felt, and I think for good reason, that in spite of the special problems arising from the large volume of low-grade wheat produced in the west this year, and from the volume of tough and damp grain, that a reasonable effort should be made to get on with the marketing of that half of the crop consisting of milling grades.

The board has made good progress in disposing of milling grades of wheat arising from the carry-over from the 1949 crop and from the 1950 crop. Commitments have been made not only for stocks which have arrived in selling positions, but for stocks which will be shipped from country elevators during the balance of the crop year.

For transportation reasons, sales of wheat of lower grades are not so far advanced, but sufficient sales had been made to give the board confidence in its selling prices for No. 5, No. 6 and feed wheat. By the end of last December it was apparent that wheat of milling grades would be sold at the international wheat agreement maximum price.

With this situation in mind, the board and the government considered it practicable to increase the initial payment on all grades of wheat by 20 cents per bushel. As hon. members are aware, this increase became effective on February 1. Between August 1, 1950, and January 31, 1951, producers had marketed about 256 million bushels of wheat, upon which an adjustment payment of 20 cents per bushel is about to be made. If the 1950-51 wheat account shows a surplus when all wheat is sold, there will be a final payment to producers. Because of existing good export demand there is reason to believe that there will be a final payment on all grades.

Earlier in the crop year the board felt that it would take perhaps twenty-four months to transport and sell the large volume of low-grade wheat harvested this year. Without minimizing the difficulties ahead in transporting and selling such a large volume of low-grade wheat, the board is now more optimistic.

The movement of oats and barley, for the reasons I have outlined, has been somewhat slower than in the previous crop year but, as in the case of wheat, the board had made good progress in selling both grains by the end of December. In January 1951, the board recommended, and the government approved, an increase in the initial payment on oats of 10 cents per bushel and an increase in the initial payment on barley of 20 cents per bushel, both increases becoming effective on February 1, 1951. Up to the end of January producers had marketed about 59 million bushels of oats and 58 million bushels of barley, against which adjustment payments of 10 cents per bushel and 20 cents per bushel respectively are about to be made. Any surplus in the 1950-51 oats and barley pools at the close of operations will, of course, be paid to producers in final payments.

Mr. J. A. Ross (Souris): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in a discussion on the second reading of this bill I must say that I have listened attentively to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) and in some respects I am bound to agree with the reasons he has set forth for an amendment to the act to cover the crop year and to include wheat, oats and barley.

Legislation of this kind has been requested by several speakers in this house on previous occasions. The minister has pointed out the difficulties that were encountered this year as a result of frost, as a result of bad weather for harvesting and as a result of the trouble encountered in moving the grain that was harvested. In fact, some of the crop is still lying in the fields unharvested at this time. The minister pointed out that all this had created great hardship and it was essential that provision be made to wind up the pool at the end of the year which, as he stated, would be the end of next July or following August 1, 1951.

This legislation will not be of any benefit whatever to anybody until after that date, but it will be most essential following that date. For those reasons, so very well set forth by the minister, it will certainly be essential in another five months or so to have an amendment such as he has proposed to take care of that matter. There are some other matters with respect to the wheat board act that I should like to discuss at this time. First of all I should like to make some reference to the United Kingdom-Canada wheat agreement. As will be realized by those who have been here for some years and who have followed the activities of the wheat board, this agreement was brought into being by an order in council under the War Measures Act in July, 1946. Parliament never at any time had an opportunity to vote on the agreement as such.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is it the understanding of the house that discussion of that agreement is to take place at this time? I do not want to stop the hon. member from discussing it if other hon. members are to do so. If it is agreed that discussion of that agreement can take place now I will allow the hon. member to continue.

Mr. Howe: I think it is difficult in a discussion about wheat to avoid discussing the five-year pool. I have no objections.

Mr. Speaker: The reason I interrupted the hon. member was that I thought the matter should be decided now.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I intend to confine my remarks pretty much to the act itself, and I am led to believe that one of the other ministers might like to make a very broad statement during this discussion.

Mr. Gardiner: I do not know how broad it will be.

Mr. Ross (Souris): An amendment to the Canadian Wheat Board Act of 1935 was passed during 1947 providing for the five-year wheat pool, 1945 to 1950. It was retroactive legislation. Members of this party proposed an amendment to the legislation creating the five-year pool, and we were voted down at that time by the supporters of the government. The U.K.-Canada contract went into effect on August 1, 1946. Farmers were compelled to sell 160 million bushels of wheat to the United Kingdom in each of the crop years 1946-47 and 1947-48 at $1.55 a bushel. The price for 140 million bushels in each of the two following years was to be fixed by negotiation under clause 2(b). The price for 1948-49 and 1949-50 crops was fixed at $2 which recovered none of the loss on the first two years of the contract. In fact the price was much over $2 when that price was negotiated and agreed upon.

On the most conservative estimate the farmers of western Canada lost $330 million in the first two years of the contract. In fact I can break that down into separate years. If anybody cares to check the report made by the then minister of trade and commerce, to be found at page 6020 of Hansard for July 17, 1947, the loss estimated by him was 77 cents per bushel or a total of $123,200,000 on the first year. On the same basis there was a loss of $207 million for the second year making in round figures a total for those two years of just over $330 million. I think these figures should be compared with a portion of the statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) in this house on March 2, to be found at page 833 of Hansard. He was announcing the final settlement of the five-year pool, and at that time he said:

> The contribution . . . is the equivalent of about 23 cents per bushel on the deliveries made during the last two years of the agreement to which article 2(b) had reference, that is, the $65 million contribution.

You will see that his statement completely ignored the first two years of the contract. At the time he made the statement it was very confusing to me. It has certainly been confusing to certain provincial ministers of agriculture judging from reports I have read of what they have had to say in their legislatures. Why the Prime Minister worded his statement that way I do not know. It is very interesting to study clause 2 (b) carefully, what actually happened in the first two years, and the Prime Minister's statement.

On the entire contract the loss is estimated at close to $500 million. Because of this wheat agreement the domestic price of wheat in Canada was held down to the level of the agreement. After September, 1946, when other producers and wage earners were freed of controls and able to charge all that the market would bear, the wheat farmers were lashed to an improvident agreement which compelled them to subsidize every bread consumer in Canada. In my opinion there was no shadow of justice in this policy. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) discussed the United Kingdom-Canada wheat agreement on August 14, 1946. I do not think I need to remind the house that he was the minister who a month previously had negotiated the agreement on behalf of the government generally and on behalf of the then minister of trade and commerce. As appears at page 4810 of Hansard of August 14, 1946, he said:

When we are at the end of the four-year period, if in the last six or twelve months we find ourselves in the position that world markets, so-called, are not offering as much for wheat as we are getting for it, I hope people will stand behind us to the extent they are standing behind us now. Even if wheat stays above $1.55 during the whole period, I hope people will still feel that it was worth while trying. If we are successful in this experiment, then we can talk to the grain trade people with some assurance. If they are able to show us at the end of the five-year period that we were all wrong, that over that length of time the farmer got less than he ever got before under similar circumstances and that the other system would have brought him more, then we shall be in a position to discuss the matter with them on an even footing. I am sure anyone who has taken this position and finds himself wrong will be quite prepared to discuss it from that point of view. In the meantime we are convinced that this is the best thing for the farmer. As long as we are convinced of that, and having another four years in which to try it out, we can put the policy into effect in a way that will at least help us to determine how this long argument between farmer and grain trade in western Canada ought to be settled in the interests of the great masses of the people.

On August 15, 1946, at page 4848 of Hansard, the minister put on record in detail the terms of the contract. I should like to refer to one of the paragraphs, and I would ask hon. members to follow this very carefully because it has reference to the previous statement I made about negotiations in the third year of the contract. The paragraph reads in parts as follows:

In determining the prices for these two crop years, 1948-49 and 1949-50, the United Kingdom government will have regard to any difference between the prices paid under this agreement in 1946-47 and 1947-48 crop years and the world prices for wheat in the 1946-47 and 1947-48 crop years.

I have already pointed out that in the first two years it is estimated there was a loss of at least $330 million. During November, 1947, Canadian class II wheat was quoted at $3.45 per bushel. I have already mentioned the loss under the "have regard to" clause in the first two years, and I think any legal person would say that is what it had reference to. During the discussions at that time Mr. John Bracken was with us in the house, and there was quite a discussion for a few days. I think it is only right that the words of Mr. Bracken, who warned of this very thing, should be remembered now. In August, 1946, he spoke in this house about wheat marketing policies, and said that selling our wheat at below market prices to one country was either a gift or an improvident trade arrangement. If it was a gift, then it was not fair that western farmers should make the whole contributions. I have already pointed out that this loss is estimated at $500 million. At that time Mr. Bracken said it was a bad bargain because it would create friction between Great Britain and Canada. I wonder what the people in this country think of that now, after the last two or three days. He went on to say that if in two or three years the world price of wheat was low and Britain did not come through with a higher price, we would feel that she was reneging on the agreement. Now I think he has been proved correct. In gambling on the British market under that contract we have lost the market to other nations.

I think every westerner should know that at the time Mr. Bracken made his speech in the house he was heckled by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) and Mr. Tucker, then a member from Saskatchewan. Mr. Bracken asked Mr. Tucker if he thought Britain would pay any more for the wheat at the end of the contract. Mr. Tucker replied: "If I got wheat part of the time at below the world price, I would expect to pay more when the world price went below what the agreement called for". The leader of the C.C.F. party accused Mr. Bracken of using the word "renege" and Mr. Bracken replied that in this agreement there was no assurance Britain would pay any more than the world price later on. So we had the picture of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar and Mr. Tucker speaking for their parties and selling the Canadian wheat producer down the river. At that time, as I say, Mr. Tucker was a federal member, and at present is engaged in another field of public service.

We had quite a discussion of another amendment to the act on June 5, 1950. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) was reporting on a trip he had made to Great Britain. There were quite a few exchanges and I am quoted as having said, at page 3222 of Hansard:

The Minister of Agriculture and the then prime minister repeatedly stated that the farmers who were making those sacrifices would have that taken into account for many years following the war. However, I take it there is to be no further settlement expected from Britain under that contract?

Mr. Howe: That is correct—

It is rather significant also, in view of the fact that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) visited Britain very recently, that within the last few days a question should be asked in the British house as to whether there might be any further settlement under this contract by Britain. The answer given by Mr. Gaitskell was, "No. This matter was thoroughly discussed last summer, and a settlement arrived at." So that policy has not been changed. Then during January the Minister of Agriculture was in the west, and at the meeting of the federation of agriculture in Calgary was reported in the press as having said that wheat payment negotiations were being reopened. He is reported as having said that before he left Ottawa he and the Prime Minister had agreed that he should make the statement at that time. Under clause 2 (b) of the four-year wheat contract now terminated, he said, Britain had agreed that there should be an adjustment; but during the parliamentary session last summer the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) said that Britain considered the matter closed. That was from the Winnipeg Free Press of January 24, of this year. I think that is very significant. And it is strange that just one year ago today in this house the right hon. Minister of Agriculture should have said, as reported on page 569 of Hansard:

> What I wish to say to this house, and through this house to the country, is that the Prime Minister stated to the farmers that it was decided during the first discussion that every dollar the wheat pool was entitled to as a result of the British agreement would be paid into the pool by the end of this crop year, on the basis on which the British agreement called for the deliveries, and that therefore there would be no possibility whatsoever of any loss being taken by the farmers of western Canada as a result of that exchange. The money will be paid into the pool by the government of Canada and any loss which is taken—if any loss is taken; and we do not expect that there will be any—would naturally be taken by the treasury or by a settlement that we get from the British under the "have regard" clause rather than by the farmers themselves. I thought it was necessary that that matter be cleared away at this time in order that we may avoid discussion of the idea in the future.

Remember that the end of the crop year to which he referred was July 31, 1950. As I have pointed out already, during November of 1947 Canadian class II wheat was quoted at $3.45 per bushel. That was during the early part of the second year of the United Kingdom-Canada wheat agreement. According to the speech of the Minister of Agriculture which I have just quoted and the announcement of the Prime Minister regarding the final settlement of the five-year wheat pool, as reported on page 833 of Hansard for March 2, 1951, there seems to be no intention on the part of the Prime Minister, the Minister of Agriculture or this government to carry into effect the promises I have already quoted. This is very disappointing to a great many people in the country.

It now becomes apparent that the government and the Liberal party will attempt to place the entire blame on the British government. Certainly Mr. Wesson of Saskatchewan, upon whom the Minister of Agriculture relied so much, is already doing this, and I think it is rather unfortunate.

Some hon. Members: Unfair.

[Mr. Ross (Souris).]

Mr. Ross (Souris): Yes, very unfair and very unfortunate. And I am surprised that after the many times I have heard the minister tell us that our best market for wheat and many other agricultural products was Great Britain, he or the pools or anyone else should attempt to create a rift between Great Britain and the people of this country. In that regard there is quite an article in the Winnipeg Free Press of January 22, 1951, headed "Hard Facts" and reading:

> In the British House of Commons on December 11, 1946, Mr. Strachey, then minister of food for the U.K., said this:
> "We buy agricultural products at the lowest price we can get them in the world and if we deviated from that policy I am sure the house would censure us very severely indeed."
> Again, on February 3, 1947, Mr. Strachey, still minister of food, replied to a questioner as follows:
> "In fact we pay the best price, being the lowest, that we can pay in the circumstances."
> His reference, of course, was to the purchase of foods.

And further on:

> And now, more recently, on September 19, 1950, the present minister of food, Right Hon. Maurice Webb was asked in the British House of Commons if he would "offer preferential prices to producers in the British commonwealth and empire." He replied in the negative.
> "The question," he said, "of giving any form of preference under these contracts to commonwealth producers does not arise because I am still bound to obtain as much as I can of these commodities at reasonable prices from all sources and in any case bulk purchase contracts must be based primarily on commercial considerations."
> There is, of course, not the slightest ground for criticism of the United Kingdom in these quotations. It is not only right and proper but inevitable that the U.K. should buy as cheaply as possible. That is the job of British traders, and they are very good at it. If they failed, they would undoubtedly deserve and receive very severe censure.

I think that has quite a comparative meaning to this agreement and the situation in which we, unfortunately, find ourselves. During this period the cost of production in Canada has increased a great deal. Certain farm implements have increased over sixty per cent; discriminatory freight rates have increased twenty-two per cent; and the cost of living rose twelve points during the last year, 1950. Last month it made the greatest increase of any month in the history of Canada, being at an all-time high of 175·2, and still increasing rapidly. At the same time the price of wheat has been substantially reduced by order of this government.

When I refer to that, may I remind the members that this year's price is $1.60 basis Fort William. The purchasing value of a bushel of wheat today on the basis of the 1939 dollar and the dollar of today is approximately 75 cents. That is all the purchasing value there is in a bushel of wheat at the price which the government has set for this year.

Mr. Gardiner: There is no price set for this year.

Mr. Ross (Souris): For the 1950-51 crop?

Mr. Gardiner: No. There is an initial price of $1.60, but that is quite a different thing.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Then the initial price has that purchasing value, Mr. Speaker. During 1950 the income of the Canadian farmer was reduced by over 12 per cent; that is the type of stability the farmers have been guaranteed. I have heard some of my hon. friends close to me cite this agreement in the past, and even during this session, as evidence of the type of stability guaranteed to the farmers. How much longer the farmers of Canada can carry on under this type of stability I would not have any idea. The Canadian farmer has a just grievance, and that includes the dairy producer, cheese producer, hog producer, poultry, potato, fruit and other agricultural producers. The coarse grains which many of these producers would use, Mr. Speaker, came under this act, and they have a just grievance.

I should like to refer some of the members to an article appearing in the Winnipeg Tribune of Tuesday, March 6. I am not going to quote that article because some of it might not be in order at this time. I would ask hon. members to look it up on the editorial page, and it is entitled "These American Prices". Just to quote a few of the items mentioned we find sugar, 10 pounds, Minneapolis, $1.01 and Winnipeg $1.40; T-bone steak, per pound, 79 cents in Minneapolis and 89 cents in Winnipeg; pork tenderloin, $.70 per pound in Minneapolis and $1.05 in Winnipeg; milk, 2 quarts, 33 cents in Minneapolis and 34 cents in Winnipeg. Mention is made of canned applesauce to which there was a reference in the house the other day. Eggs, grade A large, 52 cents a dozen in Minneapolis and 55 in Winnipeg. Many people imagine that the cost of living is considerably higher in the United States than it is in Canada. Minneapolis and Winnipeg are comparative cities. It is quite evident that the housewife, either on the farm or in an urban centre, can procure her supplies in the United States for less money than she can in Canada. I believe that fact is pertinent to the statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce the other day in connection with another measure to the effect that the business people were set for price controls. I do not know how the people, even on the farms and in the urban centres, are able to properly provide for a growing family. It is extremely difficult.

In view of the fact that, as I have already pointed out, this measure will not be of any effect in Canada, that is this Bill No. 5 which we are now considering, until August next, and we are only now starting this session, I should like to move, seconded by the member for Brant-Wentworth (Mr. Charlton):

That this bill be not now read a second time but that further consideration thereof be deferred until this house has had an opportunity to record its opinion on the government's announced decision with respect to the final settlement of the five-year wheat pool and on the government's mishandling of the sale of wheat and other grains covered by the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

I have just about completed my remarks, Mr. Speaker. We have had a great many discussions about the grain trade in this country, and we have heard many comments and arguments about gambling with our grain. I want to say that nothing I have been able to read in the histories of the various countries throughout the world would indicate a greater gamble taken by any government than was taken by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) on behalf of this government, and on behalf of the then minister of trade and commerce, when he undertook to gamble on 600 million bushels of wheat for future delivery over four years. The greater part of it had not even been seeded. I believe that was a terrific gamble for the producers of wheat, and if you are to believe the contract, it was at the expense of the Canadian taxpayers as well as the producer. I believe the government has a great responsibility with respect to this matter. I believe we should keep that in mind when we are considering future markets. On another occasion I pointed out, and it has a bearing here, that I thought there should be a thorough investigation—I say so in the face of the speech made by the hon. gentleman in discussing this matter in 1946—by a royal inquiry into the marketing, transportation, grading and storage of grain in this country and abroad.

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, at the beginning I should like to thank the member for Souris (Mr. Ross) for having selected the quotation from my speech in 1946 which he did select. We were then at the beginning of a four-year contract, and we are now dealing with the last act associated with that four-year contract. I would wish for no better starting point from which to discuss what has happened in the period in between than the statement which was quoted from my speech in 1946.

Mr. Ross (Souris): I try to be helpful.

Mr. Gardiner: I do not need much help, but I accept it thankfully. The statement which was then made was to the effect that we were starting on an experiment, and no one had any right to consider it anything other than an experiment. We were hopeful that that experiment would give us some guidance in dealing with a question which had been discussed over a long period of years in western Canada, and in this house as well. I recall that the constituency which I now represent in this house was represented in 1896 by a gentleman, Dr. Douglas, who introduced the first Manitoba Grain Act into this house. He was here as a patron of industry, the name under which the farm movement of his day operated; and he brought into this house a bill, a private member's bill, which he thought should be passed by the house, to deal with the marketing of wheat on the Winnipeg grain exchange. He had the same experience as private members have here at the present time, Mr. Speaker. He had his bill talked out the first time he brought it in. Then he brought it in the next year, and it received second reading, but it did not get any further than that. Then he had the experience which not many of the private members have who introduce bills in this house. The next year his bill was taken by the government of Canada and presented to this house by the government as the first Manitoba Grain Act, and placed upon the statutes of Canada. From that time till now the marketing and transportation of wheat in Canada has been largely regulated by the operations of that act as it has been amended from time to time.

We finally gave it a new name and called it the Canada Grain Act, but in all of its essential features it is the same act. So tonight I rather appreciate the opportunity of standing here at the end of fifty years' experience under that legislation to speak in favour of what the representative of the constituency I now represent thought would be a good thing for the farmers of western Canada over fifty years ago.

I represent the constituency which was represented by another great farm leader of western Canada, the Hon. W. R. Motherwell. He, in 1900, organized the old territorial grain growers association. He and Dr. Douglas, who was the member that I spoke of a few moments ago, had campaigned up and down the section of western Canada which grows wheat, against the operations of the Winnipeg grain exchange, and against the operations of the railway which at that time controlled the shipment of grain to the detriment of the farm population in so far as its handling was concerned, although to their benefit in the fact that it got it away from the wheat fields to some place where it could be consumed.

But Mr. Motherwell in his day became the advocate of the formation of great co-operative organizations of farmers, which would replace the companies, if necessary, which had been handling grain in previous years, but not so much to replace them as to regulate them. And so we had set up as early as 1910 in western Canada the Co-operative Elevator Company, which was established—the first one in the province of Saskatchewan—under the leadership of the Hon. W. R. Motherwell.

Following that experience we had elevator organizations of a kind set up in the provinces on either side of us. At that time there was a Conservative government in Manitoba, and that Conservative government thought that the kind of system of elevators that they ought to have there in which to handle the grain of their province was a government-owned system, and the Roblin government established the government-owned system of elevators. They took over all the elevators in Manitoba and operated them as a government system. We in the province of Saskatchewan refused to establish a government system of elevators, but we did establish a co-operative system. May I repeat, our objective in establishing the co-operative system away back at that time was to avoid the establishment of the government system, in other words, to avoid setting up, even at that early date, of what is now known as state socialism.

The Liberal party of that day, taking that position, established in western Canada the co-operative elevator system which eventually became the pools of the present day. I wanted to give that little bit of history of the development of the systems.

Mr. Wright: I always understood that it was the farmers of the west who built the co-operative elevator system in western Canada.

Mr. Gardiner: My hon. friend said it was the farmers. Yes, the farmers always do good things under the leadership of the Liberal party; and, incidentally, Mr. Speaker, they like to be led by the Liberal party. As a matter of fact, now that my hon. friend has raised the question, he knows that the government of the day advanced 85 per cent of the total cost of the building of the elevators. They trusted the farmers of Saskatchewan to pay the money back, and the farmers of Saskatchewan did pay the money back, and in the end owned their elevator system, and do own it today.

That system has resulted in half the grain that is grown in Saskatchewan being handled by the pool elevator companies, and the other half is handled by the line elevator companies. I recite that fact in order to say,

Mr. Speaker, that it never was intended the system set up by the farmers in the province of Saskatchewan, and later on in the other provinces, was going to drive out of business the private dealers in grain in western Canada. It was intended that they, by handling a certain percentage of grain, preferably about half of it, would so regulate the handling of it that all others who entered the trade would be required to handle the grain in pretty much the same manner. And that has gone on from that day down to this.

We make all kinds of claims, which I am not going to take the trouble to make here tonight, as to what the result of the inauguration of the policy has been; but I recite this in order to repeat that the farmers of western Canada have absolute confidence in the co-operative organizations that they set up to handle their grain, and there is no kind of argument that is going to be put up by anyone in this house to the effect that somebody has lost a lot of money that is going to change the attitude of the farmers of western Canada toward the system that they themselves have set up. They are going to operate under that system, and anyone making speeches from this house with the idea that he is going to encourage some change by saying that the farmers have lost $300 million or $600 million, as the notion takes him when he is speaking, is wasting his time. I just want to say to them that they had better talk with some of the farmers in western Canada before making such speeches because there is nobody in western Canada that believes them.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Quite a lot of them. That is pretty wild.

Mr. Rowe: You have got them pretty well trained.

Mr. Gardiner: My hon. friend says: "That is pretty wild." I think I talk to as many farmers in western Canada as anyone.

Mr. Rowe: You must have.

Mr. Gardiner: I think I know what they are thinking. As a matter of fact, the Conservatives on the other side of the house ought to know what they are thinking, and particularly in the province of Saskatchewan. We think we know pretty well, and I believe we do. It was suggested a few minutes ago that I would probably be making a broad statement on the five year contract—the four year contract.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Or the five year pool.

Mr. Gardiner: Yes, or the five year pool. Well, I am going to make a statement on it. I do not know whether my hon. friend will consider it broad, after I have finished. Nevertheless it will have the facts in it, and it will be broad enough to cover most of them.

But before proceeding to deal with it I would like to say that the handling of wheat over the last five years has resulted in the setting up of a lot of ten-digit figures. I hope the house will permit me to use only the round figures in what I am going to say tonight and, at the same time, will agree that since I am going to hand all the figures I use to Hansard, that the long, ten-digit figures can be put into Hansard, without my repeating all the digits in those figures.

It should be noted that two different policies announced by the government are involved in the announcement that $65 million is to be paid from the treasury of Canada to the wheat board, and that this is to be distributed to the wheat-growing farmers as part of a payment of 8·3 cents a bushel on all the wheat which entered into the five year pool.

I am only going to say in passing that the hon. member for Souris said he was rather surprised that the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) the other day referred to a distribution of this amount of money at the rate of 23 cents a bushel over the deliveries of the last two years. I would think that one who has discussed, and talked about, and tried to instruct others with regard to the contents of the United Kingdom-Canadian agreement would have read it sufficiently carefully to have realized that that is the method which is provided for in the agreement for the distribution of the amount of money which is going to be paid as a result of any losses.

In other words it says that any losses which were experienced in the first two years are to be paid them as an addition to the amount of money which otherwise would have been paid in the last two years. And so the Prime Minister quite properly the other day, when he was giving to the house the fact that $65 million was being added to the amount of money which had gone into the pool, said that the $65 million should be figured on a bushelage basis on the last two years of the four year contract.

Now, on September 19, 1945, the Hon. J. A. MacKinnon, then minister of trade and commerce, announced to the House of Commons a plan to set up a five year pool with a ceiling of $1.55 a bushel and a floor of $1 a bushel.

The hon. member for Souris a few moments ago referred to some resolution that was passed the next year, 1946, and made reference to some statement that this government took the 1945 crop into the five year pool. This government did nothing of the kind.

Mr. Speaker, this government in 1945 on the 19th of September had the minister of trade and commerce of that time get up in the house and announce a five year pool, and the grain of western Canada has been handled under that five year pool. It did not make any difference whether we had ever had a wheat contract with Great Britain or not, the grain would still have been handled under the five year pool. And all the grain sold, no matter whether sold to Great Britain or to whom it was sold, was handled under the five year pool, right from September 19, 1945—and as a matter of fact we dated the operation back to August 1, 1945.

Mr. Ross (Souris): That is just what I said you did.

Mr. Gardiner: Well, that is not just what my hon. friend said, and if he will read Hansard tomorrow he will find it is not what he said.

Mr. Ross (Souris): It is certainly what I tried to say, anyway.

Mr. Gardiner: This was action taken on the recommendation of the prices board—and now that I have all the time I wish to take tonight, because my hon. friend has moved an amendment, which places me in the position of being the first member of the government to speak afterwards, and therefore in the position of being able to speak as long as I like—I can put many things into my speech I had not intended to put in.

Mr. Ross (Souris): You usually do.

Mr. Gardiner: This was action taken on the recommendation of the prices board. And my hon. friend will recall that wheat was the one product which, from 1941 to 1945, had no ceiling upon it. And if he recalls the action of members in the house in 1941, he will recall the reasons why there was no ceiling on wheat from 1941 to 1945.

And just to recall the matter to his memory I will remind him of the fact that it was under the leadership of Liberals from western Canada that that position was established in the house at the time, and was supported by the government and Liberal members of the House of Commons.

We had no ceiling on wheat until 1945. The ceiling was established on September 19, 1945, at the time the five year pool was established, and as part of the set-up of the five year pool. The idea was based upon the fact that the international wheat committee was at that time discussing a five year agreement with a floor of one dollar and a ceiling of $1.50 a bushel, No. 1 northern, Fort William. When it was announced that the committee, which was meeting in London, could not agree, the Canadian government proposed a five year pool on practically the same terms. The amount of wheat handled under this pool has been 1,435,955,510 bushels.

On July 26, 1946, the Hon. J. A. MacKinnon, then minister of trade and commerce, announced to the House of Commons the signing of the four year United Kingdom-Canadian wheat agreement. The United Kingdom-Canadian wheat agreement resulted in the sale to Britain of 631,552,419 bushels of wheat out of the total sale of 1,435,955,510. The receipts from this sale were paid into the five year pool—that is, this sale to Great Britain—and amounted to $1,089,889,013.

The operations of the pool are very simple. The farmers delivered 1,435,955,510 bushels of wheat of all grades to the wheat board. This wheat was sold in three different markets, first the home market, second the British market, and third all other markets in the world.

The amount of money received from each source was paid into the pool conducted by the wheat board. An initial payment of $1.25 a bushel, basis No. 1 northern, Fort William, was paid in 1945. Interim payments spread over the entire five years were made from time to time amounting in all to 50 cents per bushel. This makes the total payment, basis No. 1 northern, Fort William, $1.75 per bushel. The total amount paid out to date is $2,489,000,000 on 1,435,955,510 bushels.

The total amount of $2,552,333,047 was obtained from three sources: $448,649,824 was obtained from the home consumers for wheat delivered by the wheat board; $1,089,889,013 was obtained from the United Kingdom for wheat; and $1,013,810,849 was obtained from all other sources for wheat delivered by the wheat board. The Canadian government announced the other day the payment of $65 million on account of the United Kingdom into the pool. This results in there being $2,617,333,047 in the pool for distribution after costs have been deducted to producers of 1,435,955,510 bushels of wheat. The payment per bushel will amount to $1.833. When this payment is made the five year pool will be completed. I think it will be well for hon. members to keep that figure in mind because it will be used on one or two other occasions.

Mr. Wright: The minister has said that that $65 million was paid in on account of the United Kingdom. What authority was there from the United Kingdom to pay in $65 million on their account?

Mr. Gardiner: We will get along to that in a minute. When the five year pool was announced on September 19, 1945, the war had just ended—as a matter of fact I think only three days earlier—and we were facing the uncertainties of the future. It was thought by most persons that prices would go down. The international wheat agreement was being advocated to stabilize prices.

Three things happened to change the situation between September 19, 1945, and June 30, 1946. Changes in the value of steel caused breaks in price controls on necessary equipment; wage increases were provided for; the Canadian loan was proposed and discussions of financial assistance to the allied countries from the United States arose. These developments made it evident that there was not likely to be any difficulty about maintaining a floor of $1 under wheat, but that the real possibility of the future was a break through the ceiling of $1.55 a bushel.

It was decided to offer the United Kingdom a four year contract—probably I should say that we started out in the beginning by offering a five year contract, but it very soon became evident that could not be considered and we offered a four year contract—with wheat delivered at $1.55 a bushel for two years, a floor under the last two years in case the unexpected happened and a price for which there was no ceiling to be arranged at least six months before the opening of the 1948 and the 1949 crop years. This contract was signed by the minister of trade and commerce, the Hon. J. A. MacKinnon, and announced by him in the House of Commons on July 26, 1946, and Mr. Strachey in the House of Commons at Westminster on July 25, 1946.

Mr. Coldwell: The minister has said that we offered the United Kingdom a contract. Does that mean that we initiated the agreement?

Mr. Gardiner: We initiated the discussions. It was agreed that it would be helpful to Britain to have her main food requirements supplied at a price of $1.55 a bushel which was then low and was likely to remain low throughout the first two years. The British were confident that the price would fall below $1.55 in the last two years, and we were just as confident that with United States aid and a Canadian loan the price would go and remain above $1.55. We, therefore, decided to leave the arrangement of price, as is the case in many British food long-time contracts, to be negotiated.

There is nothing new about that. By far the greater number of British contracts for food has an arrangement in them whereby prices are negotiated for all the years after the first year, and certainly for all the years after the second year. Most of these long-time contracts have a floor and ceiling and are for a price which may be varied a certain percentage upward or a certain percentage downward. That is done by negotiation. There was nothing new about that. The only thing new about this contract as compared with some of the others was the fact that there was no ceiling placed upon the price to which the wheat could go in the last two years. The reason for that will be evident.

Mr. Blackmore: The minister has referred to a Canadian loan. Has he in mind the $1 billion loan to Britain?

Mr. Gardiner: I have in mind the $1,250 million loan to Britain, on which this $65 million is the last payment.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gardiner: Of which this $65 million is the last part; it was not used as part of the loan.

Mr. Casselman: It is not coming out of that fund.

Mr. Gardiner: The result of the 2 (b) clause in the contract was that the $1.55 was a floor for the first two years, with the question as to what was to be the actual price determined after each crop had been marketed and all the facts were known. The method by which additional payments were to be distributed to farmers was set out in clause 2 (b) of the agreement. I refer again to the fact that it was quite proper for the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) the other day to so relate the amount when he was dealing with the $65 million which was being paid in.

There was a discussion in both London and Ottawa as to the meaning of the agreement. I explained it for the government, as I have already done today. I want again to thank the hon. member for Souris for having read some explanations to the house because it is helpful in connection with this discussion. Critics here took the position that the Canadian farmers never would get any more than $1.55 a bushel because there was no way of enforcing the contract. My hon. friends know best what members of the opposition were saying and what critics were saying. The critics all over this country were saying that Britain never would pay more than $1.55 a bushel. They said, "Do you think they are going to pay any more than $1.55?" It was in answer to things like this that the leader of the C.C.F. party and others interrupted and raised some question as to what was being argued and as to what was being said.

In London it was maintained that the British people would be compelled to pay too much for their wheat and in this House of Commons it was maintained that the Canadian farmer would get too little. The position taken and the opinions held by the British government are best expressed by a question asked by Mr. W. Fletcher in the commons on July 25, 1946, when the agreement was being explained and the answer was given to his question by the Right Hon. John Strachey. As it appears in Hansard the question is as follows:

Mr. W. Fletcher: Is it not possible, even now, to see that some form of maximum price in the last two years of the running of the contract is achieved? Otherwise there is an unlimited liability on the government of this country, and the food subsidy will increase with leaps and bounds if the maximum price is too high.

It is all very well for periodicals, newspaper commentators and others to be saying now that nobody thought of that at the time. That, Mr. Speaker, was of the essence of the contract which was drawn up. It was of the essence of the position taken by the government of Canada that, in dealing with this question, if there was going to be a four year contract and if we were going to be delivering at $1.55 a bushel through the first two years, there must be no ceiling on the price for the last two years, and there must be consideration given to all the facts. Among those facts is the difference between the $1.55 price at which wheat was delivered in the first two years and the price that might have been obtained for it at the world price somewhere else.

I say that matter was discussed. It was discussed not only here but it was discussed in the House of Commons of Great Britain, and that question is of the very essence of the matter that was under discussion. What is the answer? It is as follows:

Mr. Strachey: No, I do not think that we could possibly alter the terms of the contract now,—

In other words, he says: I do not think that we could put a maximum price on the contract now.

—and in any case, I think the fears expressed by the hon. member are quite groundless. I should be most surprised if the world price of wheat was of any such character in those second two years.

Well now, Mr. Speaker, I am not going to say that Mr. Strachey was mistaken, but the facts are there to be seen. It will be noted that every claim that there was lack of consideration for possibilities on our part is denied by Mr. Strachey's answer. The fact that the United Kingdom did not estimate correctly should not justify their refusal to pay.

I was questioned in the house on a number of occasions regarding payments under the "have regard to" clause, and replied as follows in the speech which was quoted a few moments ago by the hon. member for Souris, and which was made on August 15, 1946, when this matter was being submitted to the house after the agreement was first made:

We on behalf of the government . . . suggested (during discussions with United Kingdom representatives in June, 1946) that in view of the fact that Great Britain was going to get wheat at some margin below the world price in 1946-47 they should be prepared, no matter whether wheat is below or above $1.25 or even above $1.55 to take into consideration any advantage that they get by obtaining wheat at a low level during these first two years. Without any reservations whatsoever those with whom we were discussing it came right back and said: "That is absolutely fair."

I am not saying that tonight, Mr. Speaker. I said it on August 15, 1946, before the British had a bushel of wheat delivered under this contract, and anyone who did not agree with the statement could have said so at that time.

Mr. Rowe: Which we did.

Mr. Gardiner: That might have had something to do with what would have happened from there on. When this discussion was at its height Mr. Strachey was invited to Winnipeg and Regina to outline their views as to the meaning of the agreement. He spoke at Winnipeg on February 25, 1947, in part as follows:

In London I often have to meet strong criticism of the Canadian wheat agreement. Our British Conservatives tell me that I have made a very poor bargain. They tell me that the result of the agreement will be that the British people will in the end have to pay millions of pounds more for their wheat than if no agreement had been made.

So I rather wish that I could have had them with me in Ottawa last Friday to listen to the Canadian opposition speakers alleging that I had made far too good a bargain, that under the agreement the Canadian farmers would sell their wheat to us for much less than if there had been no agreement . . . It is monstrous to suggest that any British government would ever break the terms of a solemn agreement such as this. And in this I am quite sure that I speak for the Conservative opposition in the British House of Commons as well as for my own government. The British Conservatives might not have made the wheat agreement, but once made, they, and all other parties in Britain, are bound by it. In fact the Conservative critics of the agreement whom I face in the House of Commons have complained precisely that we of the labour government have irrevocably bound Britain to this agreement, which in their view will mean paying a far higher price to the Canadian farmers.

Mr. Rowe: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Gardiner: Yes.

Mr. Rowe: You said a few moments ago that Mr. Strachey said that the opposition in the British house had said that if no agreement had been made we would have sold wheat for less. I think you must have meant more.

Mr. Gardiner: I read exactly what is here, and it will be in Hansard tomorrow exactly as it is here.

Mr. Rowe: If there is any doubt about it I should like you to read it over again.

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Strachey wrote this. You will find it is all right.

Mr. Rowe: I should like the minister—

Mr. Gardiner: What part do you want read?

Mr. Rowe: I should like the minister to read what Mr. Strachey said about selling wheat for less because of the agreement.

Mr. Gardiner: "So I rather wish that I could have had them with me in Ottawa"—is that what you mean?

Mr. Rowe: Yes.

Mr. Gardiner: It reads:

> So I rather wish that I could have had them with me in Ottawa last Friday to listen to the Canadian opposition speakers alleging that I had made far too good a bargain, that under the agreement the Canadian farmers would sell their wheat to us for much less than if there had been no agreement.

Mr. Coldwell: You left the "than" out.

Mr. Rowe: Then Mr. Strachey did not understand the opposition.

Mr. Gardiner: Oh yes, he did.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Did you hear them say that?

Mr. Gardiner: At that time the opposition speakers were saying exactly what Mr. Strachey says they were saying.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Who said it?

Mr. Gardiner: The hon. member for Souris, among others. He has been saying it ever since. He said it no later than tonight.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Mr. Speaker, I should like the minister to quote the page of Hansard where I made such a statement.

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Speaker, every time the hon. member has been on his feet since this contract was first signed he has argued that the farmers of western Canada were going to lose money by it. If that does not mean they are going to take less for their wheat what does it mean?

Mr. Ross (Souris): That is not what the minister read. That is quite true. I have been arguing that ever since.

Mr. Gardiner: That is what Mr. Strachey said you were arguing when he was here. Coming down to where I was reading when I was interrupted—

Mr. Rowe: I should like to ask the minister—

Mr. Gardiner: Let me make my speech.

Mr. Rowe: I am not going to interrupt again. I do not want to interrupt him because I do not do that.

An hon. Member: Not much.

Mr. Rowe: No, I do not, but I do wish to say this. Even if Mr. Strachey heard that in the gallery of this chamber, would the minister say he heard the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross) or myself or any of the critics in opposition say we would have sold that wheat for less if we had not made that agreement?

Mr. Gardiner: You still do not have it right. Read it in Hansard tomorrow.

> How then will the actual prices be fixed in the third and fourth years of the agreement? They will be determined by negotiations between the two parties and the agreement laid it down in these precise words that I quote.

And he goes on to quote:

> "In determining the prices for the two crop years 1948-49, 1949-50, the United Kingdom government will have regard to any difference between the prices paid under this agreement in the 1946-47 and 1947-48 crop years, and the world prices for wheat in the 1946-47, 1947-48 crop years."

Those are the statements preceding the "have regard" clause. Then Mr. Strachey's statement went on:

> Now these words mean neither more nor less than they say. They mean that the fact that we have bought our wheat from you this year below world prices—and that we may do so again next year—will be one of the factors in negotiating the actual prices to be paid in the third and fourth years. I and my government, and I am quite sure that this applies also to the Canadian government, would resist any attempt to add to or to subtract from this clear and definite statement as written into paragraph two subsection (b) of the wheat agreement . . . And, therefore, I personally hope that an international wheat agreement modelled on our Anglo-Canadian wheat agreement does come out of the forthcoming conference in London. But be that as it may, we in Britain and in Canada have already done our part to put our economic relations on a stable basis.

These quotations will indicate that there was no misunderstanding between the Canadian government and the United Kingdom government as to the meaning of this agreement.

Clause 2 (b) in the agreement, better known as the "have regard to" clause, provided for two discussions of price, one before December 31, 1947, and another before December 31, 1948. I was in London in September of 1947 on my way back from Geneva, and had the first of those discussions with Mr. Strachey, minister of food. The meeting was held at that time partly because of discussions I had with the international wheat committee while in Geneva. They were anxious to know at once what the terms of the contract were going to be for that year, because they were discussing what was to be the price under the international contract. The critics who had maintained that when the time came the British would not agree to advance the price above $1.55 a bushel proved to be wrong. No one in London questioned our right to discuss a payment far above $1.55. The price was then around $3.00 a bushel, as the hon. member for Souris has said. We suggested that with the Marshall plan in existence and the Canadian 1946 loan operating to give purchasing power there was little chance of wheat dropping below $2 a bushel over the next two years, which would carry us to July 31, 1949. We stated that instead of asking Britain to pay on the basis of what the price of wheat had been, we were prepared to accept a temporary payment of $2 a bushel, with the final calculation of what we were entitled to left over to the end of the 1948-49 crop year.

This was a definite change in the agreement consented to by both parties, so that when today persons quote the original terms of the agreement and say the $2 was a final settlement of the price for the third year of the contract, they entirely lose sight of the fact that we had an agreement at the time which changed the terms of the original agreement with regard to that matter.

Mr. Coldwell: If the minister will permit me, on July 27, 1949, a meeting was held between the representatives of Canada, the wheat board, and the import cereals organization of Britain. I understand the price was then fixed and settled for 1949; at least the Minister of Trade and Commerce so announced at the time.

Mr. Gardiner: I will come to all that; it is two years ahead of where I am now, but the facts are not just as they are being stated. The press release setting forth that arrangement was issued by the late Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King on October 1, 1947, and reads:

> The Prime Minister, Mr. Mackenzie King, made the following announcement: "A wheat price of $2.00 per bushel for the third year of the Canada-United Kingdom wheat contract has been agreed upon by the governments of Canada and the United Kingdom.
> The price, basis in store Fort William, Port Arthur, Vancouver or Churchill for number one northern wheat, applies to 140 million bushels of wheat to be sold to the United Kingdom in the 1948-49 crop year under the terms of the contract which require that the price for the third year be negotiated and settled not later than December 31, 1947.
> In the negotiations which took place during the past month both parties recognized the obligation contained in clause 2 (b) of the agreement, which requires that in settling the price to be paid in the last two years of the agreement period regard should be had to the difference in the first two years between the world price and the agreement price. Having in mind the magnitude of the agreement and the long term security which it provides, a precise arithmetical calculation of the difference in price was not suggested. The government is satisfied that the considerations which have prompted the United Kingdom government to offer and the Canadian government to accept a price of $2.00 a bushel for 1948-49, will apply, fully and in the same spirit, in the negotiations for the settlement of the prices to be paid in 1949. The negotiations for this purpose are to take place before the end of 1948."

It will be noted that wheat did not drop below $2 a bushel in any market during that year, hence no adjustment under the "have regard to" clause materialized and the terms of the changed agreement postponed the whole settlement over to December, 1948.

The discussions on the payment to be made on the 1949 crop were carried on in December, 1948, by myself with Right Hon. John Strachey and Sir Stafford Cripps. For the first time the meaning of the "have regard to" clause was questioned by a minister of the government of Great Britain; it was questioned on that occasion by Sir Stafford Cripps. The final news release, however, did not question it. The questioning was done in the discussions we had. We threshed out the matter, and after it was threshed out a press statement was issued. That release, issued on January 20, 1949, read as follows:

> "Representatives of the United Kingdom and Canadian governments have had discussions on the price to be paid by the United Kingdom for Canadian wheat in 1949-50, the fourth and final year under the United Kingdom-Canadian wheat agreement of 1946. After taking into account all relevant considerations, including but without attempting to reach a final settlement of the United Kingdom obligations under clause 2(b) of the agreement, the two governments have agreed upon a price of $2.00 per bushel.
> The two governments have also agreed that their representatives shall meet not later than 31st July, 1950, to settle any obligations of the United Kingdom which may then still be outstanding under clause 2 (b) of the agreement.
> The extent to which any such obligations will remain will depend largely upon the actual prices ruling for wheat during 1949-50.

It will be noted that it was agreed that a settlement had not yet been reached under the "have regard to" clause. This was verified in Sir Stafford's press release of February 23, 1949. We did not ask him to make this press release, Mr. Speaker. It was made because of criticisms which were prevalent in his own country, and criticisms which may have gone across from this country. But no one here suggested to him that he should make a press release. He did make one on February 23, 1949, and he made it to the Canadian Press to make sure that the press release would come over here. It did come over here, and it was quoted in every daily paper from one end of this country to the other. Here is what he said with regard to wheat:

As regards wheat, we shall continue to depend on Canada for the greater part of our supplies. The four year contract negotiated in 1946 will expire in 1950, and we have recently agreed upon a price of $2 a bushel for the 1949-50 season. We think there is every possibility of the world price falling below the $2 level before the end of the contract, either because of the general improvement in the supply position or as a condition of any international wheat agreement which may be concluded in the near future. If this should be the case, the Canadian farmer will enjoy a favoured position by virtue of the fixed price on which we have now agreed. This might prove to be fair compensation for the earlier years when he was selling us wheat at below the world price. It depends of course upon how far prices actually fall. But in any case we have agreed to discuss this matter further with the Canadian government some time towards the middle of 1950.

Now, I do point out that is the first time that anyone to my knowledge who had been dealing with this question used the word "compensation". It is not our term. It is a term used by the chancellor of the exchequer in Great Britain. He said we were entitled to compensation, and the extent to which we would obtain compensation would depend upon the extent to which wheat in 1949-50 dropped below $2 a bushel. We all know now that in so far as most markets were concerned it did not drop below, but I will go into that in a few moments and make allowance for what was said.

My colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe), went to London in May, 1950, and took with him the members of the wheat board to discuss deliveries of wheat to the United Kingdom under the international wheat agreement. Before he left it was suggested that he arrange to have the date for final discussion of the "have regard to" clause postponed until all the facts were known. Some of us thought it might be a good thing to have all the facts before us when we discussed this matter finally. It was then acknowledged by everyone that there had been no drop in prices, which was going to create a situation, and we tried to have it arranged that the discussion would take place after July 31, 1950. He reported on return that Sir Stafford insisted on discussing and declaring closed the four year wheat agreement. The Minister of Trade and Commerce indicated he was not prepared to discuss the matter at that time, but agreed to report their attitude back to Ottawa but refused to agree with their view.

In other words, he said the matter had to be discussed back in Ottawa, and no matter what position they took he was not there to agree on that question. He did so report, and the government here unanimously agreed that if the British refused to acknowledge any obligation under the agreement, any further obligation under the agreement, it was not drawn in such terms as permitted of our enforcing the agreement. I think I am right in saying that even if it had been in legal terms we would not have considered taking the matter to the international court. We have not been in the habit of dealing with matters of this kind, as between ourselves and Great Britain, in any such manner. Even had the terms of the agreement been drawn in different terms from what they were drawn—and I am not admitting that there were any weaknesses in the terms of the agreement—it was fully understood and everyone agreed as to what the meaning was down to a certain time; then there was some disagreement.

Mr. Coldwell: Will the minister permit a question? Will he tell us on what date the Minister of Trade and Commerce reported?

Mr. Gardiner: I am coming right to it. He reported to this house on the same day as he reported to the cabinet.

Mr. Coldwell: June 5?

Mr. Gardiner: No, not June 5. He did not report on June 5. What you are talking about on June 5 is a discussion—

Mr. Coldwell: During which he made a statement?

Mr. Gardiner: He did not make a statement, he answered some questions which were shot back and forth across the house. If my hon. friend will check the Hansard report of what was said, and if he does not agree that it is not a proper report of what anybody said, then I will discuss it further. It happens to all of us sometimes in these exchanges back and forth that someone says something and someone puts a period in the wrong place.

Mr. Argue: It does not change the meaning at all.

Mr. Gardiner: It changes the meaning, and we will have that a little later.

We just could not reach agreement that there would be a final discussion of the matter at a later date. That was the question under discussion, could we reach an agreement that there would be a discussion at a later date. We just could not reach an agreement that there would be a discussion at a later date. The Minister of Trade and Commerce reported to this house on May 30, 1950, as follows, and this same statement was reported in Great Britain just as the other two statements that had been made after the discussion. I am reading it again, but it is on Hansard now. What I cannot understand is why opposition members who are trying to be fair do not read the official report that was made in this house, instead of grabbing at sentences here and there that were used when there was an exchange back and forth across the floor of the house just as we had a few minutes ago. When one is trying to be fair, one takes the reports as they are officially made, and here is the official report.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce reported to this house on May 30, 1950, as follows:

In connection with my recent trip to the United Kingdom, I should like to read into the record an agreed statement by the United Kingdom and Canadian governments recording the result of our wheat discussions.

"The Canadian Minister of Trade and Commerce held discussions in London with United Kingdom ministers on the subject of the United Kingdom's wheat requirements in the crop year 1950-51 within the framework of the international wheat agreement.

Both governments have now reviewed the results of those talks. They are agreed that the international wheat agreement removes the need for a contract to replace the existing Anglo-Canadian wheat agreement which expires at the end of July.

The United Kingdom government has made it clear that out of its total import requirements in 1950-51, it expects to buy a large proportion in Canada which, quite apart from the special contractual arrangements for the past four years, is, and it is hoped will remain, the traditional source of supply for the United Kingdom. The Canadian government, for its part, is satisfied that Canadian wheat growers will continue to find in the United Kingdom a market for a very substantial part of their exportable wheat."

That is the report. That is the report which was made on both sides of the ocean with regard to these discussions.

It will be noted that it is not stated that any agreement had been reached on the "have regard to" clause.

Mr. Argue: You read the statement of June 5.

Mr. Gardiner: You read the statements which were made, the official statements. I was asked the other day to put the official statements on the record. I am putting them on the record.

Mr. Argue: I read the official statement.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Gardiner: My hon. friend never reads anything right, and if he does he never interprets it properly.

Mr. Argue: I have a good example in the minister.

Mr. Ferrie: The hon. member never put anything right in his life.

Mr. Gardiner: The government of Canada continued to make representations to the United Kingdom to the effect that further consideration be given to the opinion widely held in Canada that the terms of the agreement had not been met.

When it was suggested that there was a shortage of dollars, it was pointed out that there was $65 million left in the loan which might be utilized and save dollars for the present. It was suggested both in this house and outside that the government had announced agreement with the British in their contention that they had met their obligations. That was not the case, and in the hope that a removal of that opinion might change the decision the re-opening of the discussions was pressed.

I would like to call attention to the fact that at no time in my speech at Calgary did I say that negotiations had been opened. My speech does not say any such thing. That statement was made again this evening, in spite of the fact that I denied it the last time it was made.

My speech at Calgary was read, and in reading it I read the statement as it is in the speech, and as it had been agreed upon before I left here, namely, that discussions were opening with regard to the whole matter; and those discussions of course were on the question as to whether negotiations could be re-opened after the statement which the British had made in May.

The Prime Minister re-opened the discussions while in Britain in January. After his return we were notified that the United Kingdom government preferred to consider the matter closed.

It was thought wise that because I had carried on the negotiations five years ago and when the payment for the last two years was arranged I should make an effort to have the question re-opened.

While I was in Britain I was informed—I see the press is trying to make a lot out of the fact that the matter was dealt with before I got to Britain, but it was not.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Tell us about that.

Mr. Gardiner: I got to Britain on Sunday. I was in touch with the government immediately. I was in touch with them again on Monday, and I was in touch with them again on Tuesday, and the announcement was not made until Tuesday afternoon.

While I was in Britain I was informed that notwithstanding the views of the Canadian government the United Kingdom government had determined that they would not make further payment, they would not make use of the $65 million remaining in the 1946 loan for the purpose and that it was their intention to declare that they did not intend to utilize the remaining part of the loan for any purpose. They so declared on Tuesday, February 20, while I was in London and after the matter had been discussed.

I might say in passing that those people who have such great concern for Britain and for Britain's way of doing things should accept that statement, rather than try to leave the impression that somebody tried to steal a march on somebody as this was being discussed. That did not happen. The British did discuss the question with the government here, as a matter of fact, before I left to go to Britain. I knew all about the discussion here when I left. They discussed it with me when I got over there, and they did indicate to me what they intended to do before they went into the house to do it and secured a seat for me to hear it and they discussed the matter with the whole delegation that was over from here before they went into the house to make the announcement.

This amount of money which would have been provided out of the Canadian treasury, whether loaned to the British or paid without their consent, is being utilized to make the payment amounting to 23 cents a bushel on the last two years of the agreement into the pool.

This makes a total payment under the "have regard to" clause of something between $80 million and $100 million. I think it will be agreed that the world price for 1949-50 in terms of the agreement would be not more than the ceiling price under the international wheat agreement. That was $1.80 a bushel. And the fact that there would be a ceiling price announced was dealt with in the statement of Sir Stafford Cripps in February of 1949. He on that occasion said that the world price might be lower than $2 as a result of either of two things or both, namely, that the price had gone down on the world market, or that the price was set lower under the international agreement. Well, the price set under the international agreement was $1.80 a bushel. The price actually paid by Britain for 140 million bushels of wheat was approximately $2.05 a bushel at Fort William. Had it not been for devaluation, this would have provided an adjustment of $35 million. The least it did provide was $16 million. I am prepared to agree that the settlement of 1949-50 could be held to be one of, at the outside, $35 million.

There is no doubt that was the intention of the chancellor of the exchequer in Great Britain. It was the intention of the British government; it was the intention understood by myself. I explained to the government here when I came back that the international wheat agreement price, whatever it would be—it was then discussed as a possibility at $1.75; it developed to be a price of $1.80—would be interpreted as a world price under the "have regard to" clause in the wheat agreement which we had made in 1946, and since it would be considered as that, and had we not interfered in any way whatsoever with the valuation of the pound as compared with the dollar in the period in between, we would have received a settlement under that "have regard to" clause amounting to $35 million. Therefore I repeat it is not correct to say that the British have not paid anything. It is not correct to say that the British have not acknowledged the terms of the agreement, and they have done nothing at all under it. The only contention that can be put forward is the one which has been put forward by farmers and others, namely, that it is thought that they have not gone far enough. These two amounts, the amount of $65 million, which the Canadian government paid, because they did not think that the settlement was as high as it should be, and the $35 million which is accounted for by the world price in 1949, as compared with the $2.05 which we received, results in the fact that a total amount of $100 million has been paid in order to adjust the position.

I say what I am going to say now, only because it has been published in the press right across the country as having been said by Mr. Wesson himself while he was in Britain that the representation made there was that the British could settle what the farmers considered to be their obligation by paying, or arranging for the payment of, $100 million. I am sure if everyone were satisfied that $100 million has been provided under the terms of the agreement there would be general satisfaction among the farmers of western Canada. All that was necessary to put us all behind such a settlement was the consent of the British government. There never was any question in our mind that this amount of money ought to be paid, and all this talk about disagreement and discussions that have taken place in the government is just so much eyewash. The discussions lasted about half an hour, and took place just a few days ago.

Mr. Harkness: Do you mean you only talked half an hour?

Mr. Gardiner: Well, when I have to convince my hon. friend I have to talk much longer.

Mr. Harkness: You will have to keep on for hours more, at this rate.

Mr. Gardiner: You will not be around here for me to have to convince after the next election.

Mr. Harkness: Oh, you said that before the last one.

Mr. Gardiner: All that was necessary to put us all behind such a settlement was the consent of the British government. I am sorry I was unable to obtain that consent.

Now, let me review the position. The United Kingdom paid $1,089,889,013 into the pool and received 631,552,419 bushels in wheat and flour. Canada has now announced the payment of $65 million into the pool in lieu of payments we feel the farmer had a right to expect under the terms of the agreement. All others—that is, all other people who bought wheat from the wheat board—paid $1,462,460,673 into the pool and received 803,549,229 bushels in wheat and flour. This means that the wheat delivered to the United Kingdom earned for the producer an average of $1·828 a bushel at Fort William. The wheat delivered to all others earned for the producers an average of $1.82 a bushel at Fort William.

The payments made to the farmers when completed will amount to an average of $1.82 a bushel, from the five year pool. Now, I would ask members of this house this question: How much more equitable can a price be made? The British contract, as it has been settled with the payment of $65 million, brings $1.82 into the pool. The sale of wheat to Canadians, and all other people outside the British contract, brought $1.82 a bushel into the pool; and when we are paying it out we are paying on the basis of $1·833 for No. 1 northern. But that does not mean that every farmer will get $1·833.

Mr. Wright: Does that $1.82 include the 160 million bushels sold on the domestic market?

Mr. Gardiner: Oh yes, it does. Do not get to arguing that too far, or I am afraid you will run into trouble.

Mr. Wright: I am just asking the question.

Mr. Charlton: Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Gardiner: The payments made to farmers when completed will amount to $1.82 a bushel. This is two cents above the figure which has been written into the international wheat agreement as satisfactory to farmers. And who settled that figure? That figure was settled by the farm representatives from all the exporting countries in the world, meeting with the importers from all the importing countries in the world. And every leader of the farm movement in the Dominion of Canada was present at the time, and they declared that a reasonable ceiling price for wheat in Canada, not in the past five years, but in the years ahead, was $1.80 a bushel.

This contract, this pool, brought the farmers for the last five years two cents a bushel more than that. What criticism could there be made of it? As a matter of fact there is nothing in connection with that to criticize.

Some parties continue to contend that if wheat had been sold on the open market the farmer would have obtained $330 million more for the wheat sold under the four year United Kingdom-Canadian wheat agreement.

In the first place there has been no open market for Canadian wheat anywhere in the world, outside Great Britain, since 1941. The reason for that is obvious. We were at war during the greater part of that time. I hope the Winnipeg Free Press will not say that I am saying there has been no world market. I have made the statement that I am making now on a number of other occasions, and everyone who has quoted it has said that I have said there was no world market. I have said there was no open market. And there has been no open market.

There has been an embargo against our wheat going into the United States for human consumption since 1941. We are not permitted to ship it there. Before that there was a prohibitive duty of 42 cents a bushel. Since the Marshall plan was set up, if we had been pouring our wheat into European countries and thus using up American dollars, wheat could at any time have been declared surplus. Even though wheat was not declared surplus one country after another which usually obtained its wheat from Canada, but was receiving Marshall aid, considered it wise to take their wheat from the United States. The result of that was that Canada dropped from a position where she supplied 40 per cent of the wheat which entered into international trade to a position where she supplied only 22 per cent of the wheat which entered into international trade. This position would have been much worse, had there been no United Kingdom-Canadian agreement.

In the second place, the class II wheat price which is used as the basis for figuring the loss up to $330 million is the price which the United States government paid American dealers for wheat—much of which they were trading to get their dollars back, and much of which they were giving away—plus the increased value of Canadian wheat because of greater protein content.

There was less than 72 million bushels of this class II wheat sold in 1946-47 and less than 17 million bushels in 1947-48, or less than 89 million bushels peddled over the world, while 340 million bushels, or four times as much, was being sold to Great Britain alone. If we had left the British market to Marshall aid and attempted to peddle 430 million bushels of wheat over the world under after-the-war conditions, we would have had to give much of it away or lend the dollars to countries which could never pay it back to get rid of our wheat. The argument is a ridiculous attempt to mislead farmers, and it is used only for that purpose, Mr. Speaker. No such loss would have been experienced if Britain had paid nothing under the "have regard to" clause, or if the Canadian government had not paid the $65 million. It is just possible that the Canadian farmer received more because of the four year contract than he could have received under any other system.

The fact is that the western farmers accepted the wheat board as the agency to sell their wheat. They accepted it as a result of those agitations which I stated at the beginning began back around 1900. They sold 636 million bushels to be delivered over four years to the United Kingdom government. The government of Canada is behind the financing of the wheat board and considers that the farmers were entitled under that agreement to $65 million more than they were paid.

The whole experience is conclusive proof that the farmers were well advised when they asked to have their wheat marketed under the terms of the wheat board act, now before parliament for amendment.

The act may require further amendment from time to time; but in my opinion the farmers of the west have not been convinced that they have lost money under the system of wheat board marketing as compared with any other system. Any hon. member of this house who thinks that he is going to be able to break the impression which western farmers have of the system under which they have been marketing their grains over a period of years by suggesting that there is any other system that ever brought home returns similar to those ought to recall that in no other five year period, either in wartime or in peacetime, did the farmer ever get so much for his wheat as he got for his wheat over the last five years.

One of the brightest young farmers in western Canada said to me the other day, "If the government will guarantee that I will get as much for my wheat on the average over the next five years as I got under this system for the last years, I will sell all my wheat now."

Mr. Ross (Souris): Mr. Speaker —

Mr. Howe: The hon. member who is now on his feet has spoken on this amendment. I call that to your attention, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Ross (Souris): I did not want to interrupt the Minister of Agriculture during the last few minutes until he had finished, but he made a statement that those who were talking about these great losses were doing so to mislead the farmers of this country and for political purposes. I happen to be a member who has been making those statements, and I am a farmer. I am supported by the three pools which met in Regina yesterday and the Alberta legislature who passed resolutions about the losses. The minister should withdraw that remark. It is not becoming to this house. I did not want to interrupt him while he was speaking, but I think in fairness he should withdraw that remark at this time.

Mr. Gardiner: There have been so many people, including my hon. friend, who have been making these statements, that I am quite prepared to say that possibly he did not have that objective in mind. But I am quite sure that the people from whom he got his figures did have that objective in mind.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have accumulated and worked out my own figures and I think the minister should be fair.

Mr. Gardiner: I want to congratulate the hon. member upon getting them so close to those that the Free Press and the grain exchange worked out.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Mr. Speaker, do I have any privilege in this chamber or not?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The remarks of the minister were not directed to the hon. member.

Mr. Wright: Mr. Speaker —

Mr. Ross (Souris): I think this is going pretty far in a chamber such as this and in a democracy such as this.

Mr. P. E. Wright (Melfort): Mr. Speaker, in discussing this Bill No. 5 I had intended to deal with the amendments themselves, but in view of the direction which the discussion has taken I intend to use what time I have tonight in discussing the five year pool and the British wheat agreement. I quite agree with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) when he said toward the close of his remarks that it is the desire of the wheat producers of western Canada to continue the pool method of marketing grain. I think the minister is quite right when he states that a large percentage of the farmers in western Canada do wish to continue that method of marketing. They want to see their grain pooled over a period of years rather than marketed under the one-year method that is being used at the present time. As a matter of fact, the farmers of western Canada would have liked to have seen another three to five year pool based on the world wheat agreement and to have had their grain marketed in that manner.

There are one or two things I want to deal with particularly, first with regard to the British contract and, second, as to why the western farmers believe that they have something more coming out of the five year pool than the 8·3 cents which the government has announced will be paid. First I should like to deal with what the Minister of Agriculture has said with regard to the settlement of the "have regard to" clause between this government and the British government. The minister was quite right when he stated that as far as the 1948 crop was concerned there was a final agreement reached between the Canadian government and the British government. The Canadian government agreed that the $2 payment on that year's crop would meet the requirements of the "have regard to" clause.

Mr. Gardiner: I did not say that at all.

Mr. Wright: That is—

Mr. Gardiner: The public statement does not say that.

Mr. Coldwell: That is the official statement.

Mr. Wright: That is the official statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce in a report published by the external affairs department.

Mr. Gardiner: I read the only official statement that was ever put out and it does not say that at all.

Mr. Wright: The Minister of Trade and Commerce said:

> That is the "have regard to" clause in the agreement. I suggest that regard was paid in fixing these prices . . . After negotiation the price for the third year was fixed at $2, and after negotiation the price for the fourth year was fixed at $2.

Mr. Gardiner: I was giving evidence tonight to prove conclusively that that was not the case, no matter who said it or where it was said.

Mr. Wright: I am speaking about the third year of the contract.

Mr. Gardiner: I am speaking about the third year of the contract too.

Mr. Wright: Here is a statement by the Minister of Trade and Commerce published by the information division, Department of External Affairs, on August 12, 1949. The right hon. gentleman is quoted as having stated in regard to the third year:

> The terms of the Canada-United Kingdom wheat agreement for 1948-49 have been fully carried out . . . Final transactions to complete the third year of the agreement were concluded on July 27 between the Canadian wheat board and the imported cereals division of the United Kingdom ministry of food.

Mr. Gardiner: That is an entirely different matter; that is a matter of distributing the funds that were with the wheat board at that time.

Mr. Wright: I will ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if that is not the fact.

Mr. Gardiner: No, it is not the fact. I put the facts on the record tonight.

Mr. Wright: I am not asking the minister. The minister is not in charge of this department although he seems to have a lot to say about it.

Mr. Gardiner: On that question—

Mr. Wright: I am asking—

Mr. Gardiner: I was the man who negotiated the arrangement.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Melfort has the floor.

Mr. Wright: I am asking the Minister of Trade and Commerce if that statement published under his name in this government publication was not correct?

Mr. Howe: Mr. Speaker, I doubt if it was under my name because I do not think I was Minister of Trade and Commerce at the time the statement was issued. If my hon. friend will send it across to me so I can see what it is all about I will be able to answer it a little later.

Mr. Wright: We will get the exact copy and have it sent to the minister. I have just a quotation from it. The Minister of Agriculture stated that the official statement with regard to the 1949 crop was made in this house by the Minister of Trade and Commerce on May 30, and he proceeded to read that statement. The statement that he read had no reference at all to the 1949 crop. The minister was speaking with respect to sales of wheat from this country to the United Kingdom in the 1950-51 crop year.

Mr. Gardiner: Exactly what I said.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Wright: Just a minute.

Mr. Gardiner: Read my speech tomorrow and you will understand it.

Mr. Wright: On June 5, 1950, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe), having made no statement with regard to the five year pool, was questioned in the house about it to see if we could not get some information as to whether a settlement had been reached concerning the "have regard to" clause when he was in Great Britain in the latter part of May. On questioning he made it quite definite. There is no doubt about the minister's words. At page 3221 of Hansard for June 5, 1950, he stated:

> The "have regard to" clause reads as follows:
> "The actual price to be paid for wheat to be bought and sold within the crop year 1948-49 shall be negotiated and settled between the United Kingdom and the government of Canada not later than the 31st December, 1947, and prices for wheat to be bought and sold within the crop year 1949-50 shall be negotiated and settled not later than the 31st December, 1948. In determining the prices of these two crop years, 1948-49 and 1949-50, the United Kingdom government will have regard to any difference between the prices paid under this agreement in the 1946-47 and 1947-48 crop years and the world prices for wheat in 1946-47 and 1947-48 crop years."

The minister goes on to say:

> That is the "have regard to" clause in the agreement. I suggest that regard was paid in fixing these prices.

That is the Minister of Trade and Commerce speaking in the house. He continues:

> The price for the first two years of the agreement was $1.55. After negotiation the price for the third year was fixed at $2, and after negotiation the price for the fourth year was fixed at $2. What does my hon. friend read out of the agreement beyond the fact that the price for the last two years would be settled having regard to world prices in the first two years?

Later on he continues as follows:

> The matter of the "have regard to" clause was discussed in great detail during our sessions with Sir Stafford Cripps and other ministers of the United Kingdom government. The whole situation was reviewed. The United Kingdom is just as positive as I have been in my statements in the house as to what the world price of wheat really was in those periods. My hon. friend said the world price was the price in a local market to which Canadian grain is not permitted access. I wonder what the world price would have been if we had been able to ship our Canadian grain to the Chicago market, which he says is the great criterion for world prices. We went over the agreement while in London. We asked the United Kingdom government what further settlement it is to make on account of the "have regard to" clause. The United Kingdom government took a very strong position that they had fulfilled all obligations under that clause, and so far as the United Kingdom was concerned. We agreed on behalf of Canada that considering all the circumstances that was the case.

That is pretty positive. I am sending to the Minister of Trade and Commerce the statement that appeared in the government publication. It is quite clear from what I have read that the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who handles the department and who was doing the negotiating, was satisfied that a final settlement had been reached.

Mr. Howe: On a question of privilege, I wish to make it perfectly clear that I went to London to settle the marketing conditions of the 1950 crop. I made it very clear to the people in London that I was not authorized and was not there for the purpose of discussing the five year pool. I made it clear that all I could do was to state our views, listen to their representations and take a message back to my colleagues. That is exactly what I did.

Mr. Wright: Then I would ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce why he made this statement in the house. I ask him why he made the statement that the government was satisfied that the British government had met their commitments under this agreement. I do not think it was a good settlement. I think that the British government did owe us something so far as the "have regard to" clause is concerned. I have just taken the Minister of Trade and Commerce's own words that, so far as he was concerned, the British government had fulfilled their obligations under the "have regard to" clause. If the Minister of Trade and Commerce now denies that—

Mr. Howe: I deny nothing. Make your own speech. I stated my position, that any decision was made in Ottawa and not in London. I was simply the messenger. I brought back Sir Stafford Cripps' positive statement that the British government would not pay more in settlement of the contract, and any decision was made in Ottawa.

Mr. Wright: All I can do is read the minister's statement. He said:

> We went over the agreement while in London. We asked the United Kingdom government what further settlement it is to make on account of the "have regard to" clause. The United Kingdom government took a very strong position that they had fulfilled all obligations under that clause, and so far as the United Kingdom was concerned. We agreed on behalf of Canada that considering all the circumstances that was the case.

One of the circumstances was the fact—and the minister stated it after he came back—that Great Britain was prepared to purchase a greater amount of wheat during 1950 than she would otherwise have done. That was one of the ways in which the British government was having regard to the fact that they had not made full payment under this clause, that in purchasing a larger amount of wheat than they had normally purchased from the Canadian market in the ten years before the war they were in part fulfilling their obligation.

Mr. Gardiner: May I ask my hon. friend a question?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Mr. Gardiner: Are you sure you are reading the sentence as it is in the Hansard that you have, or is there a period in the middle of the sentence? Are you reading the sentence correctly?

Mr. Wright: It does not make a particle of difference to the meaning.

Mr. Gardiner: It makes all the difference in the world.

Mr. Wright: Not a particle.

Mr. Gardiner: You are not reading what is in the book.

Mr. Wright: I am reading exactly what is in the book.

An hon. Member: Read it again.

Mr. Wright: I am not going to bother reading it again. You can put a period or a comma anywhere you like and it will not make any difference.

Mr. Howe: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I am entitled to keep the record straight so far as I am concerned. I may say that the discussions about the disposal of the 1950 crop took place before there was any mention of the five year pool. That matter was discussed and settled and then discussions were opened on the five year pool, against our wishes really. I made it clear at the outset I had no authority to discuss or settle. I told those present that we looked to the minister who negotiated the agreement in the first place to negotiate the settlement, and that all I could do was carry back a report of the discussions. Nevertheless when the discussions continued I got a very positive statement from the chancellor of the exchequer, and there were other ministers present. I had to take their views back to my colleagues as the position of the United Kingdom government. I reported that position to them. The decision, if there was any decision, was made after I returned.

Mr. Coldwell: May I ask the minister a question, or both ministers a question? Are there any initialled memoranda or letters which have a bearing upon these circumstances? If so, I think they should be produced in order that we may know exactly what the situation is.

Mr. Gardiner: In answer to what my hon. friend has said, this is one of the matters which took me over to Great Britain. I have in my hand a copy of the daily edition of Hansard for June 5, 1950. I repeat that what was read a few moments ago is not what was in the daily edition of Hansard for that date. What is contained therein reads as follows:

> The United Kingdom government took a very strong position that they have fulfilled all obligations under that clause, and so far as the United Kingdom was concerned.

The sentence ends there. Then there is another sentence which goes on.

Mr. Coldwell: Read the next sentence.

Mr. Gardiner: My hon. friends have no right to be quoting any statement different from the way it was put down at the time.

Mr. Coldwell: Well, on a matter of privilege, I think an hon. member is entitled to quote from revised Hansard, believing that it is the final revision and therefore correct. It is not the fault of the hon. member if the minister again corrects revised Hansard. We have always understood that revised Hansard was the last word.

Mr. Gardiner: I sat in the house and listened to the statement being made, and I was quite satisfied that the minister stated the position just as it had been reported. When I went over to Britain this was quoted to me. I handed the copy of unrevised Hansard I have in my hand to the minister, and he read it.

Mr. Rowe: Is that revised Hansard?

Mr. Gardiner: It is unrevised. I handed it to the minister just as it was put down here the night the statement was made. He read it; one of the other ministers present asked to see it, and he turned to me and asked, "What were they doing in the house when that statement was made?" I replied that obviously they were in committee of the whole. Then I asked them if they made statements of policy over there while they were being questioned back and forth across the floor of the house, and they said of course not.

Mr. Wright: Now, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Gardiner: My hon. friend asked for a statement, and he is getting it. Never again, during all the time I was there, did they quote this to me as being the opinion of the Canadian government.

Mr. Coldwell: Revised Hansard is the last revision. Who revises unrevised Hansard except the minister or his office? No one.

Mr. Gardiner: That is all very well for my hon. friend to say.

Mr. Wright: Those were the statements made in this house by the Minister of Trade and Commerce who is in charge of this department, according to revised Hansard; and I think we as members are entitled to quote them. I believe members of the house and the people of Canada are entitled to believe what they read in revised Hansard, and not have ministers come back six months later and begin to revise it again under circumstances which make it pretty obvious that they are not satisfied with what they said before.

The other point I want to deal with in respect to this agreement is whether the farmers in western Canada are entitled to more than 8·3 cents per bushel. We hear a great deal of comment around this building that the western farmers are asking for a subsidy; that this $65 million is just a handout to the west. We see articles in the press saying that the west has again gouged the government of Canada out of a further $65 million. I want to point out some of the reasons why we in western Canada believe we are entitled to this money.

What were the conditions at the time the British agreement was entered into? You will remember that was back in 1945 and the early part of 1946, just at the time price controls were being removed in Canada. There was a discussion in this house as to whether or not the British agreement was satisfactory; certain questions were asked and certain statements were made in this house in reply. The Minister of Agriculture himself made certain statements, and the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar asked certain questions with respect to what would happen if the cost of the things the farmer had to use in the production of his crop were to increase. Let me quote from page 4825 of Hansard for August 15, 1946. At that time the house was discussing the floor price legislation and this agreement.

> If what the minister says is correct and parity over the period of the agreement should be in the neighbourhood of $1.40 or $1.35, or whatever it may be, of course that would be a different story, but the point I think I made quite clearly was that if costs of production and costs of living continue to rise, a compensatory adjustment should be made out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

That was the statement of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, and later on the Minister of Agriculture had this to say:

> We shall not insist on the matter of time, and anyway we are in committee. What I want to point out is that under the floor price measure—and that is not the proper name, but it will do—we stated to the house that $200 million was being provided for the purpose of taking care of any adjustments in connection with what might be known as parity on other farm products. At the same time we stated to the house that similar arrangements would be made if necessary, through the wheat board, in connection with grain. I just want to point out that provision is made in another way.

In other words the minister gave this house the assurance that should the cost of production of wheat continue to rise, some compensatory adjustment would be made by this government—not by the British government but this government—to take care of that increased cost. What has taken place in the meantime? According to Professor McDougall of Queen's university, taking the purchasing value of the wheat dollar from 1935 to 1939 as $1, from 1904 to 1914 the value of that dollar in terms of wheat was $1.28. In 1947-48 it was 97 cents; in 1949-50 it was 80 cents. Today it is only 71 cents. In other words the cost of the things the farmer has to buy to produce his crop has increased by over 30 per cent. Therefore the farmer is entitled to some compensation for that increased cost of production which this government allowed to take place. Not only that, but look at the cost of living index. It has jumped from approximately 121 in 1946 to 175·2 today, which means that the value of the 8·3 cents payment we are getting is about 5 cents as compared to the purchasing power in 1946.

These are facts you cannot get away from. It is not a case of the western farmer trying to get something to which he is not entitled. Through all their organizations the western producers have stated that they believe they are entitled to from 15 to 25 cents by way of final payment, and we in this group believe that also. We believe that because of the policies this government followed in reducing the value of the Canadian dollar by allowing inflation in this country, in view of the policies which it followed, and which have caused increases in the cost of production, the government owes the western farmer a reasonable payment on this five year pool. They have failed to get a further settlement from the British government, but that does not remove their responsibility to the farmers in western Canada. I am therefore going to move, seconded by the member for Selkirk (Mr. Bryce), a subamendment to the amendment moved by the member for Souris (Mr. Ross), as follows:

> That the amendment be amended by deleting therefrom all the words after the words "final settlement of the five-year wheat pool," and substituting therefor the following words: It being the opinion of this house that consideration should be given to a final payment of twenty-five cents per bushel.

Mr. Howe: Mr. Speaker, if I may clear up a point, all this states is that the Canadian wheat board had met with the import cereal division of the United Kingdom ministry of food, that is the two sets of officials had met and completed arrangements which provided for the final deliveries on the crop of the preceding year. All this says is that owing to a bountiful harvest they have been able to carry out their agreement in full and on time.

Mr. Coldwell: Does it not say that the agreement has been completed for that year?

Mr. Howe: It says that so far as the officials are concerned it has. It is only a meeting of officials. It had nothing to do with any policy matter. We had delivered the wheat as we agreed to do.

Mr. Coldwell: That is the final settlement for that year, as the Minister of Agriculture stated?

Mr. Howe: On the agreed basis; we delivered the wheat we had agreed to deliver and they paid the money they agreed to pay.

Mr. Wright: May I call it eleven o'clock and adjourn the debate?

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

RAILWAYS, CANALS AND TELEGRAPH LINES

PRIVILEGE

MR. WRIGHT—REFERENCE TO REMARKS IN DEBATE ON MARCH 8

Mr. P. E. Wright (Melfort): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege, in reference to a statement made last night by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner). When I was speaking I read from bound Hansard a certain sentence. The debate on the point last night was as follows:

Mr. Gardiner: May I ask my hon. friend a question?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Mr. Gardiner: Are you sure you are reading the sentence as it is in the Hansard that you have, or is there a period in the middle of the sentence? Are you reading the sentence correctly?

Mr. Wright: It does not make a particle of difference to the meaning.

Mr. Gardiner: It makes all the difference in the world.

Mr. Wright: Not a particle.

Mr. Gardiner: You are not reading what is in the book.

I wish again to read what is in the book, first in bound Hansard and then in daily Hansard, because the Minister of Agriculture implied that there was a difference between the bound and the daily Hansard. Here is the sentence as it is in the bound edition:

The United Kingdom government took a very strong position that they had fulfilled all obligations under that clause,—

Comma.

—and so far as the United Kingdom was concerned.

Period.

We agreed on behalf of Canada that considering all the circumstances that was the case.

Period. That is as it is in the bound Hansard.

In the daily Hansard that was circulated to the members, this is the sentence as it was read:

The United Kingdom government took a very strong position that they had fulfilled all obligations under that clause,—

Comma.

—and so far as the United Kingdom was concerned.

Period.

We agreed on behalf of Canada that considering all the circumstances that was the case.

Period. They are exactly the same in the two Hansards.

Mr. Gardiner: They are not. There is an "and" in one and a "comma" in the other. They are not the same in the two publications.

Mr. Wright: Exactly the same—comma and period; they are exactly the same in both.

Mr. Gardiner: No, they are not.

Mr. Wright: I would ask the minister to withdraw the inference that I was reading something that was not in the book.

Mr. Gardiner: I made no inference whatsoever. I had not seen the bound Hansard, and I asked the hon. member to give me information as to whether they were the same in both. Now that he reads them I find they are not the same in both.

Mr. Wright: Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to accept that. They are exactly the same in both of these, as I have read. And I want to say this, that in the twenty years I have been in public life I have never heard anyone who could talk so much about a subject and avoid telling the truth about it, as the minister does.

Mr. Gardiner: There are a lot of people who do not agree with you.

Mr. Wright: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I cannot allow this debate between hon. members to continue. The Minister of Agriculture has stated that he made no improper inference, and the matter should be allowed to drop.

GOLD

ADJUSTMENTS IN PAYMENTS UNDER EMERGENCY GOLD MINING ASSISTANCE ACT

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, with the concurrence of my colleague, the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Prudham), I wish to make a statement regarding gold.

Hon. members may recall that on December 27 last, a delegation representing the gold mining industry in all parts of Canada came to Ottawa and made representations to the Prime Minister and a group of his colleagues. These representations related to the prevailing difficult conditions in the industry resulting from the increasing cost of production in the face of a fixed price for the industry's product and included recommendations for various changes in legislation or policy designed to assist the industry in meeting the prevailing conditions and to avoid the closing down of mines with the hardship this would cause to a number of small northern communities largely or wholly dependent upon such mines.

As a result of the consideration given to these representations, the government had decided to consult with the international monetary fund in regard to arrangements which would make it possible for the industry to have access to premium markets for gold similar to the arrangements which the fund had agreed upon in the case of South Africa. To this end discussions were initiated with officers of the fund preparatory to the submission of a formal proposal to the executive board of the fund. We were then informed that the fund's staff was currently studying the situation arising out of the recent sharp increase in sales of gold in hoarding markets and had already decided to request the board to give urgent consideration to the whole question. Accordingly, the Canadian government was requested to defer the submission of a formal proposal pending this general review by the board. As a result of this review, the executive board of the fund passed the resolution which was made public on March 7.

For the convenience of hon. members, I think it would be desirable to place this resolution on Hansard. It reads as follows:

> Since the amount of sales and purchases in the world markets of gold for jewelry, artistic and industrial purposes has recently been increasing at a rate indicating that at least a part of it finds its way to private hoards, contrary to the gold policy of the fund established in June, 1947, the board considers the existing arrangements and practices of several countries, including South Africa, are no longer a satisfactory basis to implement the fund's gold policy and directs the staff of that fund urgently to elaborate, after consultation with the countries concerned, more effective methods than the existing ones.

It appears from the resolution that the board considers the existing arrangements and practices of several countries, including South Africa, as no longer a satisfactory basis to implement the fund's gold policy. The Canadian government has endeavoured in this, as in other matters, to observe its international responsibilities, and in the case of its gold policy has had in mind the interests of establishing orderly international monetary arrangements and the maintenance of a sound position for gold in the future. Because of the desirability of close co-operation in many fields with our partners in this international emergency, and in the light of the new resolution passed by the fund, the government has decided not to alter the Canadian gold sales policy for the time being at least.

In view of this decision, the government has given further consideration to possible adjustments in the payments to be made under the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act with a view to making some modifications which should more effectively assist the industry in overcoming the special difficulties with which it is confronted in the present circumstances.

It is now proposed to broaden the formula for the calculation of assistance payments during the calendar year 1951, which was announced on October 25 last by my colleague, the then minister of mines and technical surveys. This announcement stated that the government would introduce legislation at this session of parliament under which the rate of assistance in 1951 would be one-half of the amount by which the average cost of production per ounce of gold produced from any mine exceeds $22, provided that in no case should the rate of assistance exceed $11.50 per ounce. This rate of assistance was to be applied to the number of ounces of gold produced by a mine in excess of two-thirds of the number of ounces produced during the base year 1949, or one-third the number of ounces produced during 1951, whichever was the larger.

Under our present proposals no change will be made in the rate of assistance I have just described. However, it is now proposed that this rate of assistance will apply to the number of ounces of gold by which the number of ounces produced from the mine in the year 1951 and sold exceeds one-half of the number of ounces produced in the base year 1949 and sold. In no case, moreover, will the assistance payable be based on less than one-half the number of ounces produced from the mine during the present year and sold.

I do not, of course, wish to anticipate at this time the detailed explanation and discussion which my colleague the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys will wish to give the house when he introduces the proposed legislation. All I need add at this moment is that this modification in our gold assistance formula has been discussed with the fund, which has raised no objection.

In conclusion, may I express the belief that the new program which extends the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act on a modified basis to the year 1951 will be of further assistance to the industry generally in meeting rising costs of production and will enable the continued operation of many mines in northern communities wholly or largely dependent upon them.

PRIVATE BILL

UNITED NATIONS

QUESTION AS TO WITHDRAWAL OF U.S.S.R.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. F. Higgins (St. John's East): I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he can inform the house whether Russia is leaving the United Nations and setting up a rival organization?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I have no information on the matter. I have read in the press certain reports and predictions to that effect, but there is no evidence that I know of to confirm them.

KOREA

CANADIAN ARMY SPECIAL FORCE—QUESTION AS TO OFFICERS JOINING ACTIVE ARMY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. Pearkes (Nanaimo): I should like to direct a question to the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of National Defence, notice of which I sent to the minister last Wednesday. Are officers of the special force being encouraged to join the active army before proceeding to Korea, and if so, what conditions of service have they been offered?

Mr. J. A. Blanchette (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of National Defence): I regret that I have not received notice of the question, so may I take this as notice?

DEFENCE PRODUCTION ACT

CREATION OF NEW DEPARTMENT—MOBILIZATION OF ECONOMIC AND INDUSTRIAL FACILITIES

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister) moved the third reading of Bill No. 77, respecting the department of defence production.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

PROVISION FOR EARLY DISTRIBUTION OF PAYMENTS AT END OF POOL PERIOD, ETC.

The house resumed, from Thursday, March 8, consideration of the motion of Mr. Howe for the second reading of Bill No. 5, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1935, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Ross (Souris), and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Wright.

Mr. P. E. Wright (Melfort): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Before the hon. member proceeds, may I say to the house that I have had some difficulty deciding whether the amendment to the amendment is in order. I have not yet come to a definite conclusion on this matter. From time to time the question arises in the house as to whether a motion involves an obligation on the part of the government to make an expenditure of money. Of course, if it does involve such an obligation on the part of the government, it is obviously out of order.

The amendment to the amendment proposes to amend the amendment by adding the following words:

It being the opinion of this house that consideration should be given to a final payment of twenty-five cents per bushel.

There has been a practice established in this house that private members may, by giving notice of motion framed in abstract and general terms, obtain the opinion of the house on matters involving the expenditure of money, or requesting that the government take into consideration the advisability of making such expenditure. It occurs to me that the situation might be different on the second reading of a bill. Although the words "that consideration should be given" are in the actual amendment, does that mean in practice that the government would be required to make the expenditure?

As I say, I think there is a difference between a private member's motion and a motion on second reading of a bill. If any hon. members would like to express their opinions on this subject, I should be glad to hear them.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I regret to say I have not looked up all the precedents that one might find—

Mr. Abbott: Shame.

Mr. Knowles: —to answer the point you have raised, for after all, there has not been time to do so, but by consulting the notes on procedure that I keep in my desk I find there are a few references—

Mr. Sinclair: Beauchesne, fourth edition.

Mr. Knowles: —which I should like to call to your attention. First of all, citation 444 of Beauchesne's third edition consists of two paragraphs that I should like to read. I point out before doing so that the first paragraph deals with private members' motions that would seem to involve the expenditure of money indirectly. The second paragraph deals with an amendment to a government piece of legislation. Your Honour has suggested that in your view there may be some difference on that score. I do not see how that distinction can be drawn as long as the wording of the amendment to a piece of government legislation makes it clear that it is expressing only an abstract opinion. Let me read citation 444. It is as follows:

Private members may introduce resolutions that do not directly involve the expenditure of public money and have no operative effect but simply express an abstract opinion on a matter which may necessitate a future grant.

Note the second paragraph, which reads:

An amendment—

In other words, an amendment to government legislation.

—merely asserting as an abstract principle the expediency of a larger expenditure than that recommended by the crown in resolutions can be proposed, such amendment being moved mainly to prevent concurrence in the resolutions and having no practical effect with regard to public moneys unless the said increased expenditure is recommended by a new message from the crown.

It seems significant to me that those two paragraphs are right together in one citation, one of them dealing with private members' notices of motions and the other dealing with a motion amending a government measure.

I would also ask, Mr. Speaker, that you note three Speakers' decisions. They are lengthy, and I will not read them in full. One of them is reported on page 537 of Beauchesne's third edition, a decision given by Mr. Speaker Rhodes on March 16, 1921, which reads:

Private members may introduce resolutions when they do not directly involve the expenditure of public money and have no operative effect but simply express an abstract opinion on a matter which may necessitate a future grant.

The two or three pages that follow that introduction indicate that the ruling was with reference to a private member's notice of motion. The same is true in the case of a ruling made by Mr. Speaker Sproule on February 1, 1912. You will find that one beginning on page 529, but if you will turn to page 519 of Beauchesne's third edition you will find a ruling by Mr. Speaker Cockburn, the introduction to which reads:

An amendment merely asserting as an abstract principle the expediency of a larger expenditure than that recommended by the crown in resolutions, can be proposed, such amendment being moved mainly to prevent concurrence in the resolution and having no practical effect with regard to public moneys unless the said increased expenditure is recommended by a new message from the crown.

If you will turn to pages 520 and 521 you will find that this amendment was moved by a Mr. Wood back in 1869. He wanted certain words left out and other words put in which expressed the opinion that such and such should not be done without at the same time making provision for increasing in due proportion, and on principles alike just to the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, the amount of debt allowed by the British North America Act to the late province of Canada, and so on. Further down on that page the Speaker, in giving his decision, said:

The motion of the hon. member for Brant is a mere assertion of an abstract principle. Beyond that, it proposes nothing; it does not propose to take any step in the direction of legislation, but, on the contrary, . . . the effect would be, if passed, to prevent concurrence in the resolutions, and to stop the whole proceedings—so that the question on this proposed appropriation could not be approached again, this session, unless a message came down from the crown recommending such additional expenditure. Therefore, I think the argument unsound that this amendment involves a question of additional public expenditure, and, in my opinion, the motion is in order.

The point I ask Your Honour to consider is that that ruling bears directly on the point Your Honour has raised. For my part, I cannot see the difference between a private member's notice of motion and a private member's amendment to government legislation so far as the question of involving an expenditure of money is concerned. Here is a clear-cut case where the amendment by a private member was to a government piece of legislation, and the Speaker ruled that, since the wording made it clear that it was abstract and did not have operative or legislative effect, it was in order.

I point out that the wording of the amendment to the amendment moved by my deskmate, the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Wright), is clearly in abstract form. It is governed in the first place by the wording in the earlier part of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross), which merely says that further consideration of this bill should be deferred until consideration has been given to such-and-such. Then my colleague's amendment proposes the addition of the words:

It being the opinion of this house that consideration should be given to a final payment of twenty-five cents per bushel.

If I were to take more time, which I will not, I could point out to Your Honour several cases in which motions were allowed which did not even include the word "consideration," because it was clear that they simply expressed the opinion of the house. My colleague's amendment not only uses the words, "it being the opinion of this house," but goes on to say merely that consideration should be given to the proposal indicated in the subamendment.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, because of the proper wording of my colleague's amendment, and because of the citations I have called to Your Honour's attention, particularly the words of Mr. Speaker Cockburn as recorded on page 521 of Beauchesne's third edition, I submit that the amendment to the amendment is in order.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) for bringing these citations to my attention. The one bearing on the point I raised is a ruling given by Mr. Speaker Cockburn in 1869. It is possible that there have been no rulings since that time bearing upon the subject.

I am aware of the fact that a few amendments similar to the subamendment now before the house have been permitted to stand. However, I am not convinced that such subamendments are in the same class as a motion framed in abstract terms by a private member asking for the opinion of this house. The amendment to the amendment does use the word "consideration", but I am inclined to think that if it were carried it would require the government to make the expenditure before the house would give second reading to the bill.

However, since there seems to be some uncertainty about it, and since apparently similar motions have been permitted in the past, I do not intend to rule the amendment to the amendment out of order at this time. I would like the house to note that I am not convinced that the amendment to the amendment is in order, and would ask the house not to consider me bound on any future occasion by what I am now doing in permitting the amendment to the amendment to stand.

Mr. Wright: I thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for your decision to permit the subamendment to stand.

Last evening when I was discussing this matter I was about to point out that the farmers of western Canada were not basing their claim for a greater payment than the 8·3 cents the government has announced upon whether there was a period or a comma in a particular sentence the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) might have spoken in this house. Their claim for some further consideration under the "have regard to" clause has a much broader basis than that.

We also had some argument yesterday as to whether any final agreement was reached on the "have regard to" clause, and the Minister of Trade and Commerce stated that when he was in England in May he did not reach any final agreement with the British government but that he brought back a report to the cabinet. He stated yesterday, at page 1072 of Hansard, "I reported that position to them"—that is, the position taken by the British government. "The decision, if there was any decision, was made after I returned." Until we have the minutes of proceedings and the communications between the British government and the Canadian government on this matter we are not in a position to say definitely whether the cabinet reached a decision and accepted the position the British government had taken with regard to the "have regard to" clause. That is why we are anxious to have these papers tabled at the earliest possible moment. As a matter of fact we should have had them before this discussion took place. Then we would be able to reach an intelligent decision based upon the actual documents that passed between the two governments.

Another reason we believe we are entitled to a further and larger payment than 8·3 cents is the fact that for two years, from 1945 to 1947, Canadian consumers were supplied with 160 million bushels of wheat at $1.25 a bushel, when the price received under the British contract was $1.55. Yesterday the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) made quite a point of the fact that the average price at which wheat was sold outside of the British contract over the five year period was $1.82 a bushel. That low average only resulted from the fact that through the wheat board the Canadian government sold 160 million bushels to the domestic trade in Canada at $1.25 a bushel, which was below the price under the British contract and which represented a loss to the wheat producers of western Canada of some $48 million.

Many people will say that many other producers in Canada were in the same position during those years; and I want to point out that those were years after the war was over, 1945 to 1947, when we were selling this wheat to the Canadian consumer at $1.25 a bushel. There were restrictions on the people selling lumber, steel, pulp and other materials. But I point out that so far as I know there was no other material in Canada over which the government had taken complete control. In no other case did the government take all the product and then go out and sell it in the name of the producers. The people who produced pulp, steel, lumber or other products were given a free hand under the ceiling prices that may have existed. They were able to sell their products within Canada at whatever they could get for them under those ceilings. Most of the ceiling prices were removed in 1946 and 1947, and they were allowed to sell their products in the Canadian market at the highest prices they could obtain. They were also permitted to sell the share of their products they were exporting at the highest prices they could obtain in the export market, not under a contract such as we had with Great Britain, which to all intents and purposes placed a ceiling on the price.

These are some of the reasons why people in western Canada believe they are entitled to a payment of more than 8·3 cents. The government failed to maintain a price ceiling in this country. In this house the Minister of Agriculture stated that the producer was protected under the wheat board act, just as other producers were protected under the Agricultural Prices Support Act. Let me indicate just what that meant. The minister stated that in determining the prices for agricultural products under that act consideration would be given to the fact that during the first two or three years of the war agricultural prices in some cases were below the cost of production. When the ceilings were placed on agricultural prices in the fall of 1941 in many cases those prices were below the cost of production, and the minister said that in determining prices under the Agricultural Prices Support Act that matter would be taken into consideration. At page 5624 of Hansard for July 29, 1944, the minister is reported as having said:

> I was careful to see that there was nothing in the bill which said that we were going to base any decision on the cost of production. The cost of production may be only part of the consideration. I think it is possible the board might determine that the farmer should have considerably more than his cost of production because of some other experience he has had in order to get through the transitional period in a proper position.

I ask the farmers of Canada to consider that statement. In setting the prices under the prices support act, in setting the final payment under the wheat board act, has the minister given consideration to the fact that in 1940, 1941 and 1942 the wheat producers of Canada were selling wheat for approximately 50 to 60 cents a bushel on the farm? That was approximately the average price for the average grade of wheat for the first three years of the war. I do not think 8·3 cents a bushel represents any consideration of that fact.

Mr. Gardiner: My hon. friend has asked me a question. Does he want an answer?

Mr. Wright: I do not want these interruptions. If the minister has a question to ask, or if he has a matter of privilege to raise—

Mr. Gardiner: My hon. friend has asked me a question. Does he want an answer?

Mr. Wright:—until he asks to have that privilege, I am not going to be interrupted by him as I was last night.

[Mr. Wright.]

Mr. Gardiner: I am not going to ask my hon. friend a question.

Some hon. Members: Then sit down.

Mr. Gardiner: Just a minute. The hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Wright) has asked me a question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Melfort has the floor.

Mr. Gardiner: But the hon. member for Melfort asked—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Melfort has the floor.

Mr. Gardiner: But Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Yes, on a question of privilege?

Mr. Gardiner: The hon. member for Melfort has just asked me a question, and it will appear in Hansard as a question asked of the Minister of Agriculture. Unless I answer that question at this point, if it is intended to be a question, the hon. gentleman will go through the country saying he asked the minister so-and-so and the minister did not answer at all. I am prepared to answer the question.

Mr. Wright: The minister spent an hour making his statement on this matter, and he covered it fully from his point of view. I want to have the opportunity of covering it as fully from the point of view of the western wheat producers.

Mr. Gardiner: You do not want an answer.

Mr. Wright: During those three years the western wheat producer received an amount for wheat which was below the cost of production, for which the 8·3 cents being received at this time is not compensation. I would point out that in setting other floor prices for agricultural products under the Agricultural Prices Support Act the minister has had no regard for the statement which he made in this house when he said that in setting those floor prices the government would have some regard to the prices which the farmer had received during those three years. I ask him if 33 cents a dozen for eggs or 75 cents a bag for potatoes is a price which represents some compensation to the producers for the prices which they received for those products during the first three years of the war. I do not think it does.

Mr. Gardiner: Do you want an answer?

Mr. Wright: I am quite sure that the farmers of this country do not consider those prices to be a fair return for the sacrifices which they made during the war. It is for that reason that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and other farm organizations throughout this country are asking for a formula to be written into the Agricultural Prices Support Act. They want the farmer to have some protection. They have become fed up with waiting for the Minister of Agriculture and his department to give them a fair deal in this matter. That is why the farmers of western Canada are asking for a larger payment than the 8·3 cents at this time. If the farmers had any assurance that over the next three, four, or five years, as the minister stated yesterday, they would get $1.83 per bushel for wheat, they might have some confidence and be willing to accept the 8·3 cent payment. But they have no assurance from this government to that effect. They know that if this government is setting floor prices on farm products the first principle is to set them low enough so that they will stop production of that particular product.

What has been the result of the setting of a floor price on eggs at 36 cents a dozen?

Mr. Gardiner: There is no set price.

Mr. Wright: The result of that has been, Mr. Speaker, that the producers of eggs have discontinued production. Last fall consumers had to pay 80 and 90 cents a dozen for eggs. What has been the result of setting the price of butter so low? The result has been that the farmers of this country have gone out of the production of butter. In certain sections of the country today consumers are forced to pay as high as 80 cents a pound, and the speculators are making a killing if they happen to have any butter in storage. That is the result of the policy of this government. It is time we had forward pricing on agricultural products in this country, and an assurance of decent prices. If that had been done we would not have the fluctuations in our markets which we have today.

Mr. Robert Fair (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I have been amused by the discussions that have taken place on Bill No. 5 concerning the amendments to the Canadian Wheat Board Act. So far as this party is concerned, we intend, at the proper time, to support the amendments proposed by the bill, which are three in number. The first one is apparently intended to correct an error, and changes the date of the commencement of the pool year from August 31 to August 1. Apparently the error was made when the bill was printed. The second concerns the adjustment of interim payments on different grades of grain. This is necessary because it is impossible to set initial payments at their proper level until some experience has been had by the board in selling those different grades. The third concerns the transfer of wheat from one year's pool to another. I believe that is one that will be appreciated by the farmers all over the prairie provinces, because it will enable the wheat board to wind up its business year much faster and give the farmers a chance to use their own money rather than pay interest for a year or two on money that rightfully belongs to them but still remains in the wheat board's funds.

I have no intention whatever of chasing through the volumes of Hansard in order to follow up the quotations that the Minister of Agriculture made last night from his own speech. There are one or two items in his speech of last night which I should like to comment upon. The first is to be found at page 1059 of Hansard, in the first column, where he said:

> We make all kinds of claims, which I am not going to take the trouble to make here tonight, as to what the result of the inauguration of the policy has been; but I recite this in order to repeat that the farmers of western Canada have absolute confidence in the co-operative organizations that they set up to handle their grain, and there is no kind of argument that is going to be put up by anyone in this house to the effect that somebody has lost a lot of money that is going to change the attitude of the farmers of western Canada toward the system that they themselves have set up. They are going to operate under that system, and anyone making speeches from this house with the idea that he is going to encourage some change by saying that the farmers have lost $300 million or $600 million, as the notion takes him when he is speaking, is wasting his time. I just want to say to them that they had better talk with some of the farmers in western Canada before making such speeches because there is nobody in western Canada that believes them.

In connection with that, lest there be any mistake about where I stand, I should like to say that I joined the Alberta wheat pool in early September of 1923. I was one of the first to sign a contract in my territory. I helped to organize the pool, and I am still a member of that organization. I still have thousands of bushels in the five-year pool, and up to today I believe I have delivered ninety-eight per cent of the grain I grew to the wheat pool elevator. I was a supporter of the wheat board at the time it was set up, and until it was finished after the first war. Had we been allowed to keep that wheat board, there would not have been any need for setting up wheat pools. Because we were denied that right we went ahead and organized our own wheat pools. I want to say that I am a firm believer in the wheat board, and in the wheat pools. While I am a member here it is my intention to support the wheat board. I believe we have an organization that has done a good job for the farmers. So far as I know there are no farmers dissatisfied with the work of the wheat board. The figures I hope to give a little later will prove that beyond any question.

Then on page 1069 we find this—I am quoting the Minister of Agriculture:

> The act may require further amendment from time to time; but in my opinion the farmers of the west have not been convinced that they have lost money under the system of wheat board marketing as compared with any other system.

I agree with that statement; but I am sure that most of the complaint has come about because of a deal that the Canadian government made with the British government, and because of the Canadian government's policy in supplying wheat at below regular price to Canadian millers so that Canadian consumers could eat cheap bread.

As to dissatisfaction among the people in the west—and reference was made to that matter by the minister last night—I am going to read something that was said by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture when they appeared here on the fifteenth of last month:

> 1. We wish to express our appreciation of the efforts of the government to obtain from Great Britain adequate recognition of the "have regard" clause in the Canadian-United Kingdom wheat agreement.
> 2. We wish to point out that the government of Canada has a vital responsibility to see that wheat producers are treated fairly in the final settlement of the five-year pool, because the returns to wheat producers for those years were prescribed by government policy of sale of wheat in the domestic market and by the terms of the contract which the government made with the government of the United Kingdom in 1946.
> Our wheat producers feel that balance of the actual proceeds of the sales of wheat during the five-year pool is not sufficient to provide a satisfactory settlement. Our convention was unanimous in asking that a very substantial contribution per bushel should be made by the government of Canada to the final settlement of the five-year pool.

Then again we had statements by the representatives of the three wheat pools at Regina early this week. We know what their opinion has been. Only yesterday the Alberta legislature passed a resolution favouring some worth-while final settlement of this five-year pool. In addition to that, I believe that many hon. members in all parts of the house have received letters and telegrams ever since the session started, pressing for a worth-while settlement of the five-year pool.

When the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) made a statement the other day—it was on Friday last—in connection with the final payment, people all over the country were greatly disappointed; but I believe no citizen was more disappointed than was the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner). While the Prime Minister was making that statement I watched the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe), who sat at his right, and the Minister of Agriculture, who sat at his left; and they were not a happy pair. It might seem fitting that the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who is in charge of that department, should make the announcement; or again, if he did not want to do it, it might seem proper that the Minister of Agriculture should do it, as he had quite a bit to do with the negotiations from start to finish. But perhaps neither of them wanted to make it; it was such a crumb from the rich man's table that neither of them wanted to hand it out, and the job fell to the lot of the Prime Minister.

For many years our Canadian wheat has been sold at prices that have been far below its actual value. Going back to February 25, 1947, we find this stated here in the house by the then minister of trade and commerce in connection with the sale of some of our wheat; and at that time—and in fact even prior to that time, in 1945—we had a ceiling of $1.55 a bushel placed upon our wheat, even though that figure was far below the value of that commodity. We find that the then minister of trade and commerce—at that time Hon. J. A. MacKinnon—as reported at page 787 of Hansard, set out in part a directive to the wheat board, as embodied in an order in council:

> Whereas the Minister of Trade and Commerce reports that because of the effects of a crop failure in Australia and French North Africa, of transportation difficulties in various supplying countries, and of other adverse developments upon the volume of exportable wheat and because of the urgent requirements of recently liberated areas of Europe and Asia, world demand for wheat is presently exceeding available supplies;
> That under these conditions Canada, as the principal wheat exporting country, is in a position to demand very much higher prices for wheat from importing countries which must obtain food from abroad regardless of price in order to avoid want and starvation and to many of which Canada has been or will be extending loans for rehabilitation and reconstruction purposes.

Shortly after that, we find that an agreement was made with Britain, that negotiations were going on for some time, as also were negotiations dealing with an international wheat agreement. But on July 25, 1946, the then minister of trade and commerce—again Mr. MacKinnon—announced an agreement with the British government. It must be pointed out that this agreement was one between the Canadian government and the British government and was not one made by the Canadian wheat board. Under the terms of the agreement Canada agreed to supply Britain with 160 million bushels out of the 1946-47 crop at a price of $1.55 a bushel. Ultimately we find that deliveries turned out to be 169 million bushels at $1.55; and during that crop year the average price of class II wheat was $2.43 a bushel. Therefore the Canadian farmers who delivered that wheat had a loss of 88 cents per bushel, or a total of $148,720,000 on that wheat delivered. In the 1947-48 crop year we had agreed to deliver 160 million bushels at $1.55. Actual deliveries turned out to be 170·6 million. The average price of class II wheat during that year was $2.88 a bushel, so that the farmers lost an average of $1.33 a bushel, or a total loss of $226,898,000. In the third year of the agreement, the 1948-49 crop year, when we were supposed to deliver 140 million bushels, we actually delivered 146,342,802 bushels at a negotiated price of $2 per bushel. During that crop year the average price of class II wheat was $2.23 a bushel. Canadian farmers, therefore, suffered a loss of 23 cents a bushel, or a total of $33,658,844. In the last year of the contract, 1949-50, we delivered 140 million bushels; the negotiated price was $2 a bushel. The average price of class II wheat during that year was $2.16. There was therefore a loss per bushel to the Canadian farmer of 16 cents, or a total of $22,400,000. Those four figures total $431,676,844.

On August 14, 1946, when discussing this matter, as spokesman for this party I had this to say as reported at page 4800 of Hansard of that date:

> On behalf of this group I wish to say that we are glad to know that we are to have stabilized prices for the next four crop years and also that an agreement has been made with Britain. I am not going to say whether we are well satisfied with the prices received. We feel that the British government are satisfied that they got a very good deal at the expense of Canada. One of my reasons for saying that is contained in a Canadian press dispatch of July 26, which states:
> "The News-Chronicle's streamer headline said: Strachey explains wheat deal and M.P.'s cheer Canada."
> In my opinion they had every right to cheer Canada. The dispatch goes on to say:
> "The Mirror headlined the story: 'Pact makes Britain's loaf safe for four years.'
> The Daily Graphic said editorially: 'Our debt to the empire increases every day . . . thanks, Canada, and thanks again!' "
> I am glad the people of Britain appreciate that they are getting a good deal from Canada. I might say we have no objection whatever to Canada's supplying the best food in the world to Britain and to other countries, but we object to the farmers bearing the brunt of the expense. On many occasions we have made it clear that the farmers of Canada have not received the price for their products to which they are justly entitled. I still estimate that the same condition continues under the present agreement. Of course we are very well satisfied to have a stabilized price for some time to come, because we all remember what happened after the first great war and we do not want conditions of that kind to arise again; but in view of the losses the farmers accepted from 1930 up to 1942, I feel we are entitled to a much better deal as far as our wheat is concerned. I am not going to deal in particular with the sale to the British government. The cost of that will, of course, be taken care of by the government here, and we in turn will have to bear our share of the loss through taxation.

Then at a later time the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch), speaking with respect to a further amendment to the Canadian Wheat Board Act, said on February 24, 1947, as reported at 746 of revised Hansard:

> I believe that the wheat agreement with Britain was fully justified but it does entail in its early stages a considerable sacrifice on the part of our farmers. We feel that the sacrifice should be borne by the people of Canada as a whole, and that is why we are so concerned about the guarantee that the government makes regarding the acceptance of fourteen bushels to the acre, which is supposed to remove the sacrifice from the farmers and place the burden squarely on the backs of the Canadian people.

In addition to that we find that at that time the price of wheat was climbing. There were discussions throughout the country, and some discussion in the house as to losses that might be suffered by the farmers. But we were continually given to understand that the "have regard to" clause of the agreement would take care of that. The "have regard to" clause was referred to frequently yesterday, and once today. When it came to fixing the price for the third year of the contract it was fixed at $2 per bushel, and did not take into consideration any of the losses that had been suffered by Canadian farmers during the first two years of that contract. It amounted to a loss of 88 cents a bushel in the first year and $1.33 a bushel in the second year, while in the third year of the contract we suffered a loss of 23 cents a bushel. When it came to negotiating the price in the fourth year, the price was again set at $2, through negotiation between the two governments, and we lost on that 16 cents a bushel, as compared with the price of class II wheat. So that I feel there was no regard whatsoever to the "have regard" clause in the agreement.

When people were getting anxious about their final payment we were told that final settlement would be made in the middle of the summer. Before that time arrived we continued to supply to Canadian millers, for consumption by Canadian consumers throughout the country, certain quantities of wheat. In the early part of 1946-47 we supplied 29,041,927 bushels at a price of $1.25. The average price of class II wheat was $2.43, and therefore the loss per bushel was $1.18, which was absorbed by the farmers. Then, late in 1946-47 the price had risen to $1.55. We supplied a further 24,573,939 bushels. During that time the average price of class II wheat was $2.43, and therefore the loss was 88 cents a bushel.

In the first part of the year 1946-47 there was a net loss of $34,269,474, and for the second quantity in that year a loss of $21,625,066. In the 1947-48 crop year we supplied the millers 49,342,532 bushels at a price of $1.55. The average price then was $2.88, and in that year there is a loss of $1.33 per bushel to the farmer. This amounted to a net loss of $65,625,567. In the 1948-49 crop year we supplied 39,281,098 bushels at a price of $2 per bushel. The class II price in that year was $2.23, and therefore there was a loss of 23 cents a bushel, making a total net loss in that year of $9,034,652. In the last year of the contract, 1949-50, we supplied 39,788,512 bushels, at a price of $2. As the average price of class II wheat was $2.16 we suffered a loss of 16 cents a bushel, or in that year a total net loss of $6,366,162.

These figures indicate a total bushelage of 182,028,008, with a loss in dollars of $136,920,921. To this must be added the loss on the British contract for the four-year period, making a total net loss of $568,597,765. Out of this the government announcement says that the farmers will be paid $120 million, so that there will remain a net loss to be accounted for of $448,597,765. And instead of the 8·3 cents per bushel there should be a payment of approximately 40 cents to make up that loss.

If one were to average this loss among the average number of farmers who have taken out delivery permits that loss would amount on an average to $1,930 per wheat farmer. So that I feel there is something here to complain about, so far as the farmers of western Canada are concerned.

I have these figures before me in tabulated form. I might point out that they are taken chiefly from information brought down in sessional papers. The average prices for the first three crop years of the agreement were obtained from the 1948-49 Canadian wheat board report. The calculations I have made myself, and I feel they are quite correct. With the permission of hon. members I should like to place the table on Hansard.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fair: It is as follows:

It would appear the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) feels that we should not bear all the loss, as far as cheap wheat to millers is concerned. In Hansard of August 14, 1946, as reported at page 4806, the minister said:

> Having said that, may I say that farm organizations generally, the farmers in particular, and most of us who represent wheat-growing constituencies in this house have always questioned the advisability of charging the farmer up with the difference between whatever the price was and the price at which wheat was being supplied to the millers. In other words, it should be emphasized over and over again that every banker, every operator, every railroad, every clerk in a bank or store, every labourer, every farmer has been buying flour, or his bread to put it in other terms, on the basis of 78-cent wheat ever since control came into effect in this country. In other words, we have been supplying that important food product to the people of this country, to the labouring people and consumers generally, at a lower rate than it is supplied anywhere else in the world. I agree with those who say that that whole cost should not be charged up to the farmer, and in discussions in the past I have maintained that too much of that cost has been charged up to the farmer. I still maintain that we should get away from that just as soon as we possibly can.

I believe the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) still has the interests of agriculture at heart. While we have to have inflicted upon us a Liberal government I would much rather see the minister here as Minister of Agriculture that have him relegated to the other end of the building.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fair: There is some applause from what used to be called the rump, but I am not quite finished with the Minister of Agriculture. In order to settle the argument that has been carried on between the Country Guide and the Winnipeg Free Press, perhaps I should read again from the October, 1950, issue. The Minister of Agriculture is not the only one who has been reading Hansard because I believe it has been thumbed through quite a bit during the past few weeks. I am going to read from the revised edition, which must be correct. Speaking on February 28, 1947, as reported on page 898 of Hansard, the minister said:

> Now I come down to the last week before the British agreement was signed, when we knew all the facts with regard to it. The Minister of Trade and Commerce and I met—I have stated this in the pool board meetings in western Canada and I have their consent to state it anywhere—we met the representatives of all the farmers' grain handling organizations in western Canada—the Saskatchewan wheat pool, the Manitoba wheat pool, the Alberta wheat pool, the United Grain Growers. These organizations were all present, together with the president and secretary of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, and a representative of the wheat growers of Ontario. The meeting was held for the purpose of discussing what the initial payment ought to be following this agreement. We were in a position at that time to inform them what that British agreement was, because it had all been agreed to. The agreement was signed I think two days later.

That should set at rest any doubt with regard to the discussions that took place on that occasion. It has been said that all these organizations had given consent to the British wheat agreement, but that is not the case. They were called in for an entirely different purpose. While we were giving the consumers of Canada cheap wheat so that they could eat cheap bread and thus have a better standard of living than the farmers who were growing the wheat—I might mention that most people in towns and cities have bathrooms, electric light and all that kind of thing, when only a small percentage of the farmers who grew the wheat have these conveniences—we were forced to pay higher prices for everything we bought. I do not blame labour for getting a reasonable wage, but I feel that we should not be asked to stand this loss.

I feel the Minister of Agriculture has been trying to do a good job. The Western Producer of November 13, 1950, contains the following report with regard to the convention of the Saskatchewan wheat pool:

> Expressing the view that there was still a large body of public opinion in Great Britain that felt that Canada was entitled to further payments under the adjustment clause of the United Kingdom-Canada wheat agreement, Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner, federal minister of agriculture, told wheat pool delegates that the matter was still under discussion.
> Mr. Gardiner was speaking at the twenty-sixth annual meeting of delegates, policy forming body of the Saskatchewan wheat pool. Earlier in the week delegates also heard an address by the Right Hon. C. D. Howe, who also indicated that the matter was still under advisement, and that officials of the three western pools would meet with the government later in November to discuss the matter of a final settlement of the five year pool with members of the cabinet.
> Mr. Gardiner, in reviewing some of the marketing history relating to wheat, pointed out that prior to the date of the contract between the United Kingdom and Canadian governments,—

I might point out for the benefit of the Winnipeg Free Press that the Minister of Agriculture is admitting that the two governments mentioned made the agreement.

> —wheat prices in the United States were somewhere in the vicinity of 23 cents per bushel higher than they were in Canada.
> Concerning the operation of the agreement, the minister said he believed that after taking all factors into account, there was still "a margin between what Great Britain paid under the agreement, and what Canadian farmers might have received otherwise." Then he added: "All I am going to say is that I don't think the gap has been completely closed and we will go on with the discussions and see if there cannot be some conclusion arrived at which will be satisfactory not only to the farmers of the west, and the government of Canada, but the government of Great Britain as well."
> Mr. Gardiner said he did not believe the farmers of the west were being unreasonable, but rather, he believed that they all had a common hope that when the discussions with the British government were completed, a settlement would be reached that would enable Canadian farmers and all Canadians to feel that a reasonable settlement had been reached.
> The minister also doubted that the last word had been said by the British government on the question of an adjustment under the agreement. He pointed out that discussions were still continuing as had been indicated earlier in the week by Mr. Howe. He was confident that out of these discussions would come results that would be satisfactory.

That statement may seem strange to some people, particularly those of us who sat here in committee on June 5 last. I should like to read a question and an answer which deals with the matter so much in dispute on this occasion, and I intend to quote from page 3221 of the daily edition of Hansard of June 5, 1950. I might say that, as on many other occasions, I was in my seat and heard this discussion. I shall read both the question and the answer so that I cannot be accused of putting anything on the record that is not really here. I quote:

> Mr. Ross (Souris): The Minister of Agriculture said they had agreed with officials in Great Britain to extend the final settlement until July, 1950. That is next month. He distinctly made the statement in this house that would be the date for the final settlement if there is to be any further settlement with Great Britain for the difference between the world price and this price. That was the final arrangement as nearly as the house knows it.

Mr. Howe: The matter of the "have regard to" clause was discussed in great detail during our sessions with Sir Stafford Cripps and other ministers of the United Kingdom government. The whole situation was reviewed. The United Kingdom is just as positive as I have been in my statements in the house as to what the world price of wheat really was in those periods. My hon. friend said the world price was the price in a local market to which Canadian grain is not permitted access. I wonder what the world price would have been if we had been able to ship our Canadian grain to the Chicago market, which he says is the great criterion for world prices. We went over our agreement while in London. We asked the United Kingdom government what further settlement it is to make on account of the "have regard to" clause. The United Kingdom government took a very strong position that they had fulfilled all obligations under that clause, and so far as the United Kingdom was concerned. We agreed on behalf of Canada that considering all the circumstances that was the case.

Mr. Noseworthy: Where is the period?

Mr. Fair: The period is after the word "clause". I am not a school teacher, like the hon. member for York South (Mr. Noseworthy) or the Minister of Agriculture has been.

Mr. Gardiner: No comma there either.

Mr. Fair: Did you say no politician? I agree with that.

Mr. Gardiner: A lot of comedy.

Mr. Fair: Instead of the Minister of Trade and Commerce going to Britain last year many people felt that it would have been appropriate had the Minister of Agriculture gone. Some feel that the Minister of Trade and Commerce was not the right one to go. If he does not have more success in his deals in the future than he had in extracting a few more pennies from the British government then I think he had better send the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner). These little fellows do not seem to care how big the other fellow is. They think that the bigger he is the harder he falls. I feel that the Minister of Agriculture is interested in his department. He knows his department. He believes in the wheat board, as I do, and I believe that he should have the sale of wheat in his department. I am not going to discuss that point further because my time is running out. Perhaps I should have cut my remarks down quite a bit.

I say that the wheat growers of the prairie provinces are not asking for a handout. They are simply demanding the same price as was obtained by the wheat board for class II wheat. That does not mean wheat sold through the Chicago market or any other market. We are asking for the same price as was obtained for class II wheat sold by the Canadian wheat board. The prices obtained by the wheat board for such wheat should be sufficient evidence that the board has done an excellent job, and that they have an excellent chairman, deputy chairman and commissioners. So far as I am concerned, I do not want to leave any doubt whatever as to where I stand in connection with this matter.

The advocates of the grain exchange are using the results under the British wheat agreement as an argument for throwing the wheat board out of business. In my opinion that is poor business on their part. Perhaps they are doing that because for a number of years I have advocated that they be thrown out of the grain exchange and made to earn an honest living. I still feel that they are carrying on in a dishonest way, and are trying to further their interests by attempting to pin on the wheat board the bad parts of the British wheat agreement. I feel quite safe in saying that if legislation to continue the wheat board in operation is not passed you will have one of the biggest farmers' strikes in western Canada that the country has ever experienced.

Since the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) made his statement about the settlement of the wheat agreement many supporters of the government have been blaming the socialists in Great Britain. They say that if the darn socialists had paid their debts the government would be able to make a much better payment. I think that is entirely a matter between the Canadian and British governments. So far as this group is concerned, we feel the whole responsibility of making these losses good rests fairly and squarely on the doorstep of the Canadian government. In the interests of Canada as a whole, I believe that the demands for payment should be honoured. Labour cannot get along without agriculture. In the Rural Co-Operator of January 24, 1950, there is a report of an address by Mr. C. H. Millard, director of the United Steelworkers of America, to the annual meeting of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture held in Toronto recently. The report reads in part:

"Falling farm prices", said Mr. Millard, "are giving all of us grave concern. We know that when farm prices fall below an economic level unemployment is going to follow, and we fear the future under such conditions. Frankly, I am a little concerned over the loose thinking of the past few years about the markets for our so-called exportable surpluses . . . The standard of life everywhere must be raised, here in Canada as well as abroad, so that labour is able to buy the goods the farmer produces, and the farmer can buy ours."

It is a two-way business. We must not do anything to destroy the purchasing power of the farmer, and we must also see to it that labour has work to do. We feel that the farmers must be treated like human beings. References have been made with pride to the great strides the industrial life of Canada has made. I feel, as I have said on many other occasions, that we cannot have a prosperous and united Canada with part of our people well off and enjoying a high standard of living while others are in poverty.

When I spoke on the 6th of February I stated that facts that are not frankly faced have a habit of stabbing us in the back. I state that again today because when the international wheat agreement was introduced in the house we did not favour it with any great enthusiasm. Prices were cut down from what we had been receiving prior to that time so far as class II wheat was concerned. In order to try to get some safeguard, the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch), who is always sound in his thinking and in the speeches he makes, wanted to have the price of wheat tied to the prices of goods in other countries so that if there was a fluctuation in the prices of goods the price of wheat would fluctuate with them.

That suggestion was not even answered, or apparently considered, by the government. We now see the price of wheat going down while the prices of the products the farmer has to buy in order to produce are continually climbing. That is one of the results. First of all the wheat farmers want a reasonable and decent settlement of the British wheat agreement, and with respect to the wheat supplied to millers for Canadian consumption. Then farmers will be ready to go to work again. It has been pointed out that we are in a state of grave peril at the present time. Do not forget that regardless of the efficiency and prosperity of our industries we cannot get along without the farmer. If the farmer is not properly treated, do not forget that he can refuse to co-operate just as the industrialists did in 1939 when they would not work until the five per cent profit limitation was removed.

Do not forget that farmers are not as dumb as a lot of people think they are. In order to make things much better for all Canadians, I again suggest that a policy guaranteeing parity prices to agriculture should be put into effect without further delay. At the present time farmers comprise about 25 per cent of the population of Canada, and according to the best information that we can get from the financial branch of the bureau of statistics farmers are receiving somewhere between 10 and 15 per cent of the national income, one-half of what we are properly entitled to.

Hon. W. Earl Rowe (Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest to the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Fair). I hope I shall be excused if I do not agree with all his political philosophy. However, I can agree with his last sentence or two when he said that the industrial and agricultural life of Canada are closely associated. I realize that when the one is prosperous it has an interlocking effect on the other. I am sure that every hon. member realizes that there is no time when the interests of industry and agriculture are more interlocking and of more vital concern than during a time such as we are passing through at present. I am satisfied that at no time in the history of Canada have a strong agricultural population and industry been of more vital concern than now when we are facing a possible world conflict. It was our strong agricultural position that assisted so much in the first great war, and indeed it was our strong agricultural industry that assisted so greatly in the second great war. I know we await with considerable concern, if not alarm, what may happen in the next few years as to the part agriculture may be called upon to play.

I am not going to depart from the issue now before the house. I followed the remarks of the hon. member for Battle River and I can agree with him to a large extent when he says that production in many branches of Canadian agriculture has been seriously affected and vitally weakened as we face a possible world conffict. That has come about, I believe, to no small extent through unsound policies practised by this government which since confederation has boasted of being the champion of laissez-faire, free enterprise, business as usual, individual recompense for individual effort, free trade, and all the other things that go with a free man who does not care what happens as long as it does not happen to him.

The minister has been a sturdy champion of a new form of bulk trading; but I cannot understand why he should be such a champion of free enterprise for almost every industry in Canada except the great industry of agriculture, which he represents in this house. At one time I think he was a free trader. Like many others of his party he has changed a great deal since that time. I believe in many respects he has always been more or less a champion of free enterprise; and I have heard him speak loudly and long of the economic freedom that resulted in Canada from these policies of his party. I recall that back in 1941 he brought in a policy under which the farmers of western Canada were paid not to grow wheat at all on certain acres. That policy was accepted by this government, though I think he had some trouble in selling it to some of his colleagues and more than a little trouble selling it to the house. And I remember that famous summer fallow policy that came into operation in the first few years of the last war. We criticized that policy at that time, though wheat prices were low; and it was not long before many parts of the world were starving for wheat.

I could never conceive how the minister was able to sell his bulk trading policy in 1946 to his colleagues in the cabinet, especially the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe). I can only assume that that right hon. gentleman was so busy straightening out war assets, destroying old military equipment and trying to get this country back to normal civil production that he was not paying very much attention to these bulk trading policies in which his department would later find itself so involved in its administration.

I well recall that many on this side of the house proclaimed as vigorously as they could that this bulk trading policy was unsound in practice and would be a colossal blunder in the marketing of our wheat. I remember that at that time the Minister of Agriculture pleaded with us in this house to stand behind him in this venture, saying that we would try this experiment and see what happened. Some of us prophesied that it would lose millions of dollars to our farmers. Some of us suggested that it was unsound business practice to sell a man something today for less than its value and expect him five years later to pay you more for your product than he would have to pay in another market. I am a farmer, like the minister. I have done a little business around the farm occasionally. I have traded a few horses now and then. If in 1924 I sold a man something for much less than it was worth he would probably invite me to dinner when I met him at the local hotel, and would tell anyone around to vote for me because I was a good fellow; but he would not come back in 1930 and pay me more than a similar product was worth. Business is not done in that way. The British are smart business people. I always had my doubts as to what would happen. I feel almost like saying "I told you so," because I felt this would be the result.

What is the position after four or five years of this bulk trading? I am not going into the details, because I did not take much time to prepare my remarks. I was so astounded by some of the statements made yesterday by the right hon. Minister of Agriculture, however, that I felt impelled to say a few words today on this very important issue. We have confused our relationship with the British purchasers of wheat, and we have antagonized other countries who wanted our wheat at the time and had to pay more for it. We have dislocated the whole market for our principal agricultural product by selling part of it for less than it was worth and the rest at world market prices. I sometimes wonder how anyone with sound business judgment could have expected anything else. I am sure no one within the sound of my voice who has had experience in the industrial life of this nation would expect to be able to carry on business in that way and maintain good relationships with his customers. That is not done by selling Jones the product at one price and Smith the same product at half as much again. Business is just not done in that way.

I think the Britishers saw the Minister of Agriculture coming. They probably said to themselves that while he belonged to a free enterprise party in Canada, so-called, nevertheless he had caught the fever from some of his western friends who believe that someone else can run your business better than you can run it yourself. Whatever changed him so he would think bulk trading was the only way we could sell our wheat is still one of the question marks in this whole transaction.

Today the responsibility is with the government, with their large majority in this house. The unfairness of this situation is obvious to everyone. We have the western wheat grower humbly begging the government of Canada to make up to him the loss that must have seemed inevitable to anyone who carefully studied the proposition. On the other side of the picture we have the government suggesting that the taxpayers, the widows, the workingmen and all the rest who contribute to the consolidated revenue fund, must pay through taxation for this colossal error in the marketing of this great Canadian product. I would say that I am trying to tell you what your party has done and what it has not done. When these agreements were negotiated, Mr. Speaker, we were told we were going to receive a lower price than the world price, but that that would be taken care of by the "have regard to" clause and in the end the farmer would receive more money. I am not going to go into that in any detail. I have not got a lot of detail here. I have only a few notes that I scribbled a few minutes before I entered the chamber. I only wish that I had a staff like some of the government members that would furnish me with more material, because I think I could make it a lot more interesting. I do know that the Winnipeg Free Press, which has not told many untruths about the historic Liberal party for some years, and which is considered to be one of the finest newspapers in this dominion, says there has been a loss of at least $330 million. I know it is a fine newspaper, and one which I would rather have with me than against me. I have been trying for years to get it with me. That newspaper sets the figure at $330 million.

Mr. Harkness: For the first two years.

Mr. Rowe: The member for Calgary East (Mr. Harkness) says that is for the first two years. I notice that other members have set this figure much higher. I studied it quite carefully during the election campaign, and I made it much higher myself. I know that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) knows I have been long enough in public life that I will not lie to my constituents. I am not going to say whether the loss today is half a billion dollars or $750 million. I do believe that the muddling and meddling in Canadian agricultural products by this government has cost the farmers, before income taxes, at least a billion dollars.

The Minister of Agriculture said some time ago that we were trying an experiment. I must say that, doubtful even as I have been of this type of policy, one could not observe the adroit, smooth political ability of the Minister of Agriculture without at least giving him some credit for having possibilities as a good businessman. At that time we said, "Well, he is smart, perhaps not only in parliament but at least in the country, he has fooled more electors than any other minister of agriculture we ever had." I have often thought that my friends down to the left are pretty good, but I think that when it comes to convincing the farmers, especially a small group of them who believe in it, the Minister of Agriculture can convince an honest farmer against his will with more success than any other politician I have known in the last quarter of a century. The mere fact there is a young farmer in my riding or in the Minister of Agriculture's riding who says he is satisfied to take X dollars for his wheat in the next five years does not guarantee that this is a sound economic policy. I say with all due respect to the Minister of Agriculture, and to you, Mr. Speaker, that this policy has been a colossal failure.

If I had not thought it was a colossal failure before, I would have known it was when, from behind the curtain last evening, I heard the Minister of Agriculture's voice, because I have heard him for so many years, and I know him so well, that whenever I see that little champion of Liberalism in Canada getting out in the aisle and speaking more loudly and longer than he usually does, I know he has a difficult case to put over. That has been proven down through the years. For his debating skill I should like to compliment him, and his party. I know he loves parliamentary debate much better than does the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe). I do not mean to say that the Minister of Trade and Commerce is not forceful in the house, although I think he is more forceful outside the house. I do not think he likes debating quite as well as the Minister of Agriculture. I can understand why the rest of the Liberal party, whenever there is a difficult job to do, will sit quietly and leave it to their little champion, because he is the best in this parliament when the going is tough, and the going was never tougher than it was last night.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say that the figures representing the loss are a legend in Canada now. The Winnipeg Free Press has used much ink and newsprint in publishing them in the last few years and has tried vigorously to explain the true picture. In doing so I believe they did a grand service, because the figures will get into the hands of young farmers who will look them over. It is all very fine to say, Mr. Speaker—and it is a trick as old as this parliament itself—that the prices for farm products today are higher. They say "Look, the farmer received $500 million more this year than last year; he received more for wheat than the year before. What were agricultural prices in 1932?" I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that I have farmed quite steadily; in fact my family have been farmers for the past three or four generations. I can well recall when we sold wheat for $1.25 a bushel and barley for 96 cents. But then we bought a binder to cut the grain for $110. It is true we now sell wheat for $1.55 or more as may be fixed by this government with the socialistic turn of mind, but we are now paying as high as $800 for a binder. Threshing machines that could have been bought three or four years ago for $1,100 now cost $2,300. I shall not go down the line because there is not a farmer within the sound of my voice who does not know that the cost of almost every farm implement has practically doubled.

Turning now to farm labour costs, Mr. Speaker, at the time wheat was a dollar a bushel just before the first great war, labour costs were much lower. Compare them with today's labour costs. I am not familiar with what the farmers of western Canada are paying, because I have not discussed it with them. I have a fair idea of what they would have to pay in view of the industries that are competing with them. I know that in our district the average farmer is paying, and I presume this is general throughout Ontario because there is a fair amount of industry around Waterloo and St. Catharines, $5 per day; that is the going rate. Someone says you cannot get men for that. In some of the more industrialized ridings, that may be true. I have heard men say they did not think they were getting enough when they were receiving board and lodging and a hundred dollars a month while working from seven o'clock in the morning until six at night. Let us be realistic about this. I know there is not another industry in Canada, and I know something about industry, that has been told by the government it must sell its products at less than the world price. When we sit down to negotiate an agreement with labour unions, the leaders point out to us that they are entitled to a reasonable profit and standard of living. I believe the hired men on the farms are entitled to give their children a good education, a good home, and have a decent standard of living. I do not believe that those of us who come from rural ridings—or those who do not for that matter —will serve their proper function in this House of Commons if they subscribe to bureaucratic control of the marketing of this product of agriculture to the extent that they make agriculture and the farmers the poor relatives of this super-duper form of new economy.

Last night the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) said that there has been no open market for Canadian wheat since 1941.

Mr. Gardiner: Except the British.

Mr. Rowe: I do not know just what is meant. There seems to be some confusion as to just what is an open market, because of so many catching on to the minister's bulk trading ideas, and all trying to experiment with somebody else's money; the open market question is rather confused with the world market. But the wheat board states that there was an open market, and reports an open-market price in 1947-48 and in 1948-49. It states the open-market price was $3.45 in 1947-48 and $3.15 in 1948-49.

That sounds like a high price. It sounded to me like a high price when last year I gave a man a cheque for $800 for a combine. In fact, it had rubber tires on it, which I did not think it needed, and I had to give him $830, I think it was. That sounded like a high price.

Mr. McCusker: The hon. member is just getting swanky, having a combine with rubber tires.

Mr. Rowe: I would look as swanky on it probably as would the hon. member. But I am not accustomed to putting on style out in the wheat field, if I can help it; and I am not out there any more than I can help these days. I only mention that these things are relative. I am not saying for a moment that the farmers of western Canada or the farmers any place should get $3.40 for their wheat. I am not saying that at all. When we get into a war and when our boys have to do as they had to do in recent years—and as I pray to God they may not have to do again—go overseas and meet the threat, I am satisfied that something will have to be done. Many of them are now going overseas even though we hear that there is not going to be any war. I read some reports from Korea and I think as do some others in this country who think that there are signs of war. I do not believe that any class of Canadian society should take an undue advantage. Probably if there was a world shortage the minister or the Minister of Trade and Commerce would be quite justified—and he would have the support of this house—in trying to keep the price stabilized at some point that was reasonable. On the other hand, we cannot afford to let things get out of relationship by these fantastic ideologies, as a result of which production may be affected.

The Minister of Agriculture said that there is no open market. But, Mr. Speaker, there has always been a free market. There was a free market in Chicago in the United States all during those years; and so far as that is concerned, there was a world price for wheat. During the time that this government was selling wheat at $1.55 a bushel and $2 a bushel in Britain, Britain herself was paying as high as $5 a bushel for wheat from Turkey; she was paying almost that for wheat from Argentina and she got so short of wheat, after our summer fallow policy in Canada, that she bought rye at $4.08 a bushel to take the place of wheat. Who is there to say that there is no open market left in the world, except those who want to control it under bulk trading systems in this country and in other countries as well? That is why I think the time has come, when this experiment has been tried, has been found wanting and to have failed, for the Minister of Agriculture to get back to his first idea of soundness, independent of what the political consequences are. Now in the twilight of his political career I would suggest to him that there is no other man in Canada who can go out to western Canada and tell the truth to the people there as well as he can, or with such vigour as he still has. In fact, I think he has too much to go to the other place, as the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Fair) suggested; we want to keep him here for a while. In fact he has more vigour than any of the rest on the other side of the house. But I would suggest that he go out and use some of that vigour to tell the people of Canada the truth. I would suggest that he say to them: "I tried to help you. I saw you selling wheat at low prices when there was no war and when we were in a world depression. I made up my mind that I would see to it that I would try to stabilize the price. I made statements out here in political campaigns that I would do everything in my power to see that you never sold wheat for less than $1 a bushel again." With those high motives he had I would agree. But I suggest that he go out now and say: "Boys, you stood by me in the past when I was wrong. I ask you to go along with me now when I have repented and am going to be right; because I have made a mistake; I have made a failure. I have lost you half a billion dollars. There is no teacher like experience. You have paid for your experience with interest, cash on the barrelhead. You have had good crops. God gave you good ground. You paid high prices for big combines to harvest your crops fast, so you could go south in the winter if you had enough acres; and if you did not have enough acres, I paid you for summer fallowing, even." That is the position the minister could take and not get off a sound economic basis the great agricultural industry that should be the last to get off the basis of sound economy in this country. Why put it off first?

The Minister of Agriculture has twitted my friends down here to my left; but I have not heard from them anything wilder in proposals than those that have already cost this country a half a billion dollars. I will say it may have been worth it; because if the right hon. gentleman will do that, and if my hon. friends down to my left—who I know can learn fast—will have observed what has happened by this socialistic experiment, then we shall never have a socialistic government in Canada.

Yesterday the Minister of Agriculture gave some figures. I wish I had his department to help me get these figures together. I am not going to misquote my hon. friend; because while he often surprises me by what he says, it would be a surprise to him if I misquoted him. But he said that he got $2 a bushel and that had he not got $2 a bushel he would have had to take $1.80 a bushel; because we have gone, as you will notice, into the world sphere now. We have an international wheat agreement now for $1.80 for the year 1949-50. The minister said that the price was $2 per bushel,—to be exact I think he said it was $2.06, because you have 6 cents for carrying charges.

Mr. Gardiner: I said $2.05.

Mr. Rowe: The minister is only one cent out, then. That is not so bad. The Minister of Agriculture did say that had he not taken the $2.05, he would have had to take $1.80. I know the Minister of Agriculture is smart and I know he is honest. I know that it is going to bother him, as it is going to bother me, to know why he failed to point out the fact that, so far as Canada was concerned, instead of there being 25 cents difference there was only 7 cents difference. In this particular case I would rather say he was honest than that he was smart in his trading, because it is clear that in his trading with Great Britain he has made a colossal blunder. It might be said, in the language of the street, that in this deal we have had it put over us very badly. I am inclined to think that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) went over to Great Britain and listened to the government over there tell him that they were paying $2. Then, while he was over there trying to harvest his losses, he mentioned that they gave him $28 million more than he would have got out of the international wheat agreement, when as a matter of fact the international wheat agreement, a copy of which I have here, says:

> The basic minimum and maximum prices for the duration of the agreement shall be—

And then for the year 1949-50 it gives a maximum of $1.80. And then it says that these shall be in:

> —Canadian currency per bushel at the parity for the Canadian dollar, determined for the purposes of the international monetary fund as at March 1, 1949 for No. 1 Manitoba northern wheat in bulk in store Fort William/Port Arthur.

On July 6, 1946, when this agreement was drawn up, the exchange situation was such that our dollar stood at one hundred cents. On September 20, 1949, it was down by 10 per cent; and it was not until September 30, 1950, that this 10 per cent was withdrawn.

Therefore the Minister of Agriculture, despite the fact that we had understood before from the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) that the agreements had been settled, and while it was understood that they should have been settled on July 31 for each year preceding, made this reckless pilgrimage back to Great Britain to settle those agreements. He went back and evidently made a $20 million blunder in the consideration. He tells us now that we get $28 million more. However, if my mathematics is correct, 10 per cent of $1.80 brings the figure up to $1.98, or almost $2 in Canadian funds.

The United Kingdom-Canadian agreement is in Canadian funds at a rate of $2, while the international wheat agreement is in United States funds. Therefore when the exchange rate was at 10 per cent it makes a difference, not of 28 cents on the $2 price, or 20 cents, but a difference of only 2 cents.

Mr. Gardiner: I did not use the figure 28 cents.

Mr. Rowe: I am using it, from the figures you used. I do not want to read again what the minister said, because I know he will not want to hear it again; it is bad enough to have to listen to it once. However, what he said was not the fact—and perhaps I should not say that, because it might not be parliamentary. His statement may have been half true, and I am not saying that the minister knew the other half. But in view of the weakness of the whole deal I think one may deduce what has happened. I know that that was the general understanding.

On the other hand the Minister of Agriculture has told us about the way the agreement worked in the past. It is a big agreement, Mr. Speaker, one which deals with millions of dollars. I know that in the House of Commons it has become customary to throw a million here and a million there, and we lose some of our sense of respect for money. But, after all, I am amazed to see that one of my farmer friends would ever become as careless as the Minister of Agriculture has shown he has become.

There was involved an agreement for five years to sell our major agricultural product, an agreement involving millions upon millions of dollars. True, only 600 million of a total of 2 billion bushels was involved in the agreement; but the other wheat was sold everywhere. There was no open market, no world market. It was sold domestically sometimes below the agreement price, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Fair). Other places it was sold for perhaps a dollar above that price. It was sold wherever the need was found. There was no organized salesmanship as there had been in earlier years. It was just a case of the minister saying, "I have wheat; come on, boys, you can have it for what you like. I am getting so much today, and I want more; but if you are good fellows you can have it for less. We will pay a bonus on flour and tell the housewife that we have lowered the cost of living by taking it off the farmer." I do not believe the farmers of this country should be asked to bear the loss involved in this colossal error—and I say it is a colossal error. I say again that it has upset the trade, and that the agreement has not been lived up to. And those who can be charged for its not being lived up to are not the British people.

An hon. Member: Sure they are.

Mr. Rowe: An hon. member says, "Sure they are." Well, he who runs may read, and I suggest that the hon. member read the agreement. It says:

> The actual prices to be paid for wheat to be bought and sold within the crop year 1948-49 shall be negotiated and settled between the United Kingdom government and the Canadian government not later than the 31st December, 1947, and prices for wheat to be bought and sold within the crop year 1949-50 shall be negotiated and settled not later than the 31st December, 1948. In determining the prices for these two crop years, 1948-49 and 1949-50, the United Kingdom government will have regard to any difference between the prices paid under this agreement in the 1946-47 and 1947-48 crop year and the world prices for wheat in the 1946-47 and 1947-48 crop years.

That is why I presume that at one time the Minister of Trade and Commerce made the statement which is recorded in Hansard. Although it was revised then, it seemed to be unrevised again last night. The result is that this was supposed to have been settled. If it was not settled by agreement, then it should have been settled, and there was no authority for its not being settled—except for the fact that, as the Minister of Agriculture says, at some place in London he had a conversation. He did not say whether he was out for dinner, and I know he is too seriously-minded to be in a cocktail lounge, or any place like that. He said that he varied the agreement verbally, and arranged for its renewal.

Mr. Speaker, that is a strange, a most unusual type of international negotiation. Here we have an agreement dealing with billions of dollars with respect to our chief product. A settlement is supposed to have been made by agreement, and concluded the year before. But Mr. Strachey and Mr. Gardiner sit down in consultation in a hotel room, or in the lobby of a hotel, or on an aeroplane, or somewhere else—even in an office—and renegotiate. "We can do this verbally"—but the agreement says it should have been settled long ago. What hope is there when we see that loose type of business being carried on? What right have we, or what right has anyone, to insinuate that the British did not keep their bargain, especially when the Minister of Agriculture was at least $28 million out in his calculations anyway?

I know there was a good deal more wheat than was sold under this agreement. I shall not labour the issue, more than to say that

I do not believe the Minister of Agriculture had any right verbally to change a contract that was of such vital concern to the economy of this nation. Whether he and the Minister of Trade and Commerce have or have not always been in unison in their thinking is a matter for conjecture. Perhaps in one sense it is none of parliament's business, so long as they stand behind the same type of policy and make the same sort of statements to the House of Commons.

It does not surprise me that the Minister of Trade and Commerce said:

> We asked the United Kingdom government what further settlement it is to make on account of the have regard to clause.
> The United Kingdom government took a very strong position that they had fulfilled all obligations under that clause, and so far as the United Kingdom was concerned. We agreed on behalf of Canada that considering all the circumstances that was the case.

I am not going to burden the house further than to say that the Minister of Agriculture sold this bill of goods to parliament in 1946. He tried it out and it has cost the Canadian economy through the wheat producers and farmers generally well up to three-quarters of a billion dollars. He said at the time that he was not even sure of himself. We know that in his earlier years he did not believe in it. Whether he was trying to outbid the socialist trend in his native province of Saskatchewan or not, I urge him in conclusion, after having tried the experiment, to realize the one thing that is known to every financial man, businessman and farmer, that it is unsound in practice and not in keeping with business or international leadership. It has gone a long way toward creating a slight irritation between us and the motherland and has caused considerable suspicion of other countries.

I say to the minister to study carefully ways and means that will give the farmers a fair deal. After all, the farmers co-operative organizations I think have done a good job in this country. We have seen the wheat pool in action and we have seen the co-operative movements in action. They have done a pretty good job. I have never seen any co-operative organization making such an economic blunder as the co-operative organization of government which has to keep one eye on politics and which has shown such little capacity for sound business management.

Mr. W. Ross Thatcher (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on this bill, but before I do so I should like to take exception to some of the words of the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe). When he made his latter remarks, he made it evident that he has not been out west recently, nor talked with western farmers. I can assure him that despite this controversy, and that is what it is, almost without exception the farmers of the west are behind the wheat board.

I intend to restrict my remarks this afternoon primarily to the $65 million payment which the government has decided to make to the five year pool. The first thing that I want to say about this payment is that no one is satisfied with it. Most eastern members seem to think, I believe unjustly, that it is a sort of raid on the federal treasury—a payment made for purely political purposes. On the other hand, most westerners are dissatisfied with it because they think it is completely inadequate.

An hon. Member: Speak for yourself.

Mr. Thatcher: It is far less than the amount of money that was promised in the last election. Whatever the faults or merits of that decision may be, I deprecate one impression which has been created throughout Canada in recent weeks. Certain members of this house have charged that the British government is responsible for this "wheat mess" through their failure to fulfil an obligation under the British-Canadian wheat agreement. That charge is so patently dishonest and untrue that I should like to speak for a few minutes about it.

First I should like to refer briefly to the history of the British-Canadian wheat agreement. Hon. members will recall that from 1946 to 1950 western farmers suffered a loss on pretty well every bushel of wheat they sold to the wheat board. This naturally caused a certain amount of discontent. However our farmers were assured by government speakers, including the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), particularly during the last election, that at the end of the five year pool certain compensatory payments would be made to make up for some of these losses.

There has always been a good deal of vagueness as to just where that payment was going to come from. Up until the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) made his now famous speech last June, most Liberal members intimated that this final payment was going to come from the rather ambiguous "have regard to" clause in the British-Canadian wheat agreement. As has been pointed out, this clause provided that any losses sustained by the farmers in the first two years of the agreement would be taken into consideration by the two governments when they were fixing the price for the third and fourth years. I think clause 2(b) of the agreement is significant. That clause reads in part:

> The actual price to be paid for wheat to be bought and sold within the crop year 1948-49 shall be negotiated and settled between the United Kingdom and the government of Canada not later than the 31st December, 1947, and prices for wheat to be bought and sold within the crop year 1949-50 shall be negotiated and settled not later than the 31st December 1948.

What actually happened? The price of wheat for the first two years was set at $1.55. After negotiation, as called for in the agreement, the price for the third year was set at $2. After negotiation, as the contract called for, the price in the fourth year was also set at $2. According to the British, the prices for the third and fourth years were agreed upon after having regard to Canadian losses in the first two years. The Minister of Trade and Commerce must have agreed because he said on June 5, 1950, after quoting that clause, and I refer hon. members to page 3221 of Hansard:

> That is the "have regard to" clause in the agreement. I suggest that regard was paid in fixing these prices.

This statement was made nine months ago. Meanwhile the price of wheat on the world market remained considerably higher than the farmer was receiving under the agreement. Whether it was justified or not, there was increasing discontent throughout the west over this fact. Partly as a result of this discontent the Minister of Trade and Commerce made a trip last May to Great Britain. He took advantage of his presence there to ask the British once again for concessions under the "have regard to" clause. However the British took the position that they had fulfilled all the obligations. But, at the minister's request, they did agree to give Canada preference on wheat purchases in 1951 and 1952. It was clearly understood that this would be the final concession they would make.

When the Minister of Trade and Commerce came back he reported to the house in a lucid statement. I am going to place extracts from that speech on Hansard once again because I think the farmers of the west should have every opportunity of reading them. I quote from page 3221 of Hansard of June 5, 1950, where the minister is reported as follows:

> The matter of the "have regard to" clause was discussed in great detail during our sessions with Sir Stafford Cripps and other ministers of the United Kingdom government. The whole situation was reviewed. The United Kingdom is just as positive as I have been in my statements in the house as to what the world price of wheat really was in those periods. My hon. friend said the world price was the price in a local market to which Canadian grain is not permitted access. I wonder what the world price would have been if we had been able to ship our Canadian grain to the Chicago market, which he says is the great criterion for world prices. We went over the agreement while in London. We asked the United Kingdom government what further settlement it is to make on account of the "have regard to" clause. The United Kingdom government took a very strong position that they had fulfilled all obligations under the clause, and so far as the United Kingdom was concerned. We agreed on behalf of Canada that considering all the circumstances that was the case.

That is very definite. Last night the Minister of Agriculture suggested to this house that this statement was not the official report. Even if he is correct, what difference does it make? If we can believe the Minister of Trade and Commerce on May 29, and I think we can, then surely we can believe him on June 5. On June 5 he made the categorical statement that the British had fulfilled the "have regard to" clause. Last evening the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) engaged in some of the most amazing double-talk I have seen since coming to parliament. He suggested to the house that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) did not really say what Hansard proves he did say. He said that the "period" was in the wrong place. He stated that if it had been punctuated differently then the meaning would have been different. I wonder if since confederation a minister has ever used such a weak excuse to get out of a firm commitment? I watched the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent). I think he was a little embarrassed. Certainly the face of the Minister of Trade and Commerce turned red. I wonder whom the Minister of Agriculture was trying to fool.

Mr. Howe: I have no red blood left.

Mr. Thatcher: Another point interests me. I would like to know how long the Minister of Trade and Commerce has needed the Minister of Agriculture to correct his speeches. So far as the matter of unrevised Hansard or revised Hansard is concerned, the minister did make a specific statement. The fact is that the government of Great Britain and the government of Canada agreed at top level last May that the British government had complied with the have regard to clause. Moreover, I understand that agreement has been verified in writing. When the papers are produced, for which the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) has placed a request on the order paper, I think this fact will be borne out.

I wish to say that I do not think the Minister of Trade and Commerce made a very good bargain when he went to England. It is pretty obvious today that the British got ridiculously cheap wheat. I think they should have given us additional consideration under the agreement. Be that as it may, the fact remains that last May the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the top minister in trade matters so far as Canada is concerned, did make a final agreement with the British, and is on record in Hansard as having so done.

Mr. Howe: That remark is not true. I stated to the house last evening, and I will state again, that the Minister of Trade and Commerce did not go to London to discuss the have regard to clause. He had no authority to make a settlement and he made that very clear. After the other discussions were over, at the request of the British the matter was discussed. I stated clearly that I would take their position back to Ottawa, which I did. Any settlement or decision that was made was made in Ottawa.

Mr. Coldwell: Was a decision made in Ottawa regarding it?

Mr. Howe: Well, I—let the documents speak for that.

Mr. Thatcher: I thank the minister for his words but they are not the words he used in the house on June 5 last, as found at page 3221 of Hansard, and that is not the impression which he has created throughout the country. For example, here is what the Toronto Saturday Night had to say in its latest issue of March 13—and I ask the minister to listen to this:

> The British obligation has been fulfilled. The Prime Minister knows it; and—which may be more important in this moral twilight—Mr. Howe, the minister responsible for marketing wheat, said so last summer both to the British government and to the Canadian House of Commons.

That is the impression which Toronto Saturday Night gained. Here is another quotation from the Winnipeg Free Press of Monday, March 5, which reads:

> In the controversy which will now develop the first and obvious recourse of those who are responsible for what has happened will be to blame the British government. Such argument should be heavily discounted . . . There was no binding commitment and there is no bad faith.

When the Minister of Trade and Commerce made his speech last June one can well imagine the consternation among certain prairie Liberals because in the last election, even though perhaps vaguely, they had made some pretty broad commitments with respect to the final payment on the five year pool.

Mr. Ferrie: Tell us one who made a promise.

Mr. Thatcher: You made promises all over the province.

Mr. Ferrie: Nobody made one promise, not one; nobody did.

Mr. Thatcher: Every Liberal member.

Mr. Boucher: That is not true.

Mr. Thatcher: Liberal members from the prairies hoped that perhaps the agitation would die down among western farmers—that they would forget those election promises. Unfortunately for them it did not die down; it increased. Farm organizations almost unanimously have maintained that the government should assume responsibility for a payment of from 15 to 25 cents a bushel. Here, for instance, is a typical resolution passed by the Saskatchewan federation of agriculture as contained in the Western Producer of December 14, 1950. It reads:

> "That if the government of Canada has decided not to press the United Kingdom government for a cash settlement of clause 2 (b) of the Canada-U.K. wheat agreement, this meeting is of the opinion that the government of Canada must accept full responsibility for the obligation implied in this clause . . ."

They went on to point out that they would like a substantial payment made. According to all press reports, if we can believe them, about a month ago the Minister of Agriculture—and I give him credit for it—tried to sell the rest of the cabinet on the justice of a payment rumoured to be somewhere around 12 or 15 cents. Apparently he did not succeed, and the only thing that the cabinet would agree to was what western farmers think is a face-saving solution, the payment of 8·3 cents. As a result of this failure, the prairie Liberal members were left on the proverbial political hook because of their election promises. With nervous rapidity they looked around for a goat.

Mr. Ferrie: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Thatcher) is making the statement that Liberals of western Canada made certain commitments. Let him say right out who the members were and what they said.

Mr. Wylie: You must be one of them or the shoe would not fit.

Mr. Thatcher: I say that every Saskatchewan Liberal member intimated or directly suggested that there would be a substantial final payment on the pool.

Mr. Ferrie: Mr. Speaker, I am one who did not.

Mr. Helme: If my hon. friend wants to be fair—

Mr. Ferrie: He could not be fair.

Mr. Thatcher: I suggest that my hon. friend should not become excited.

Mr. Ferrie: I am no more excited than you are.

Mr. Thatcher: Here is a brief from the Saskatchewan and Alberta farmers unions. I am going to quote from it. It reads in part as follows:

> May we stress that the western wheat producers are not, in this case, asking for subsidies, nor do we consider further payments under the agreement in that light.

I am answering my hon. friends.

> We ask—and feel we have a right to expect—a just settlement in line with the terms of our contract, the recognition of a moral and binding obligation on the part of government to honour promises made publicly to the agricultural industry.

If my hon. friends want to read this they are welcome to do so.

Mr. Ferrie: That is not the Liberals.

Mr. Thatcher: I believe that in the last election every prairie Liberal made the promise that there would be a substantial final payment.

Mr. Helme: I should like to make it clear here and now that I never made such a commitment at any time during the election campaign or afterwards.

Mr. Wright: Is the hon. member for Prince Albert opposed to a decent payment?

Mr. Thatcher: I accept the correction but I suggest that the hon. member for Prince Albert was the exception rather than the rule.

An hon. Member: None of them made any promises.

Mr. Thatcher: I suggest they did. Early this year someone got a bright idea. Perhaps it was the Minister of Agriculture; perhaps it was one of his colleagues.

Mr. Ferrie: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Beaudoin): Order. The hon. member for Moose Jaw has the floor, and I would remind all other hon. members that the hon. member who has the floor must not be interrupted except with his consent.

Mr. Thatcher: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I said a moment ago that my Liberal friends from the prairies had to find a scapegoat; so they looked around, and somebody got the idea of blaming Britain. They thought, "Why not in some way accuse the British socialist government of failing to live up to its obligations?" Well, the idea looked like manna from heaven. So notwithstanding the fact that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe), on June 5 last, told us that Britain had fulfilled its contract, and notwithstanding the fact that the matter had been officially closed for almost nine months, certain members of this house started what I would suggest was an unwarranted and insidious campaign against the British government. The hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Larson) started it in a very mild way. I think perhaps he had qualms of conscience before he commenced, but he did throw out some insinuations. This is what he had to say at page 150 of Hansard:

> I am going to say how pleased I am that the British government has considered fulfilling the "have regard to" clause in the five year wheat pool contract . . . I am not going to mention any alternatives because I am confident the British government is sound and fair enough to see that justice is done.

I ask the hon. member for Kindersley how he can reconcile those words with the statement last June 5 of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Who told the hon. member for Kindersley the British government was ready to renegotiate this contract? It must have been the hon. member for Maple Creek (Mr. Studer).

Then on February 8 that bluff party stalwart, the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Sinnott), took up the cudgels and had this to say:

> I repeat that the government of Canada must impress on the government of Britain that the "have regard to" clause must be carried out.

I wonder where the hon. member for Springfield was last June 5. He could not have been in the house June 5, and yet been so far off the beam the other evening. Perhaps he was home in Manitoba.

The next speaker was the genial hon. member for Moose Mountain (Mr. Smith). I think he was a little ashamed of himself when he made this statement, but he got it out:

> I urge the government to crack the whip and get going on this negotiation or discussion with the United Kingdom and let us have a decision on what is going to happen in respect to the five year pool payments.

Did not the hon. member know that a decision had been reached by his own Minister of Trade and Commerce nine months previously, or did he not want to know?

Finally the hon. member for Maple Creek took his turn. In my opinion he is a fine gentleman, but on that occasion he made what I think was one of the most shameful speeches, and what I believe was the most anti-British speech I have ever heard in the House of Commons. Realizing full well that the Minister of Trade and Commerce had publicly acknowledged that Britain had fulfilled her obligations, nevertheless he went on to charge the British with violating a contract. Here are his words:

> I believe more emphasis should be placed on the honouring of a contract between two countries.

Who has not honoured this contract? The British have. It is the Liberal members who are crying for revision of obligations long since completed. The hon. member went on:

I think the contract should be fulfilled by the people who signed it.

Does the hon. member suggest that the Minister of Trade and Commerce had no authority or power to make an agreement?

Finally the hon. member for Maple Creek addressed C.C.F. members and had this to say:

They should ask them what they are going to do about meeting the obligation they are in honour bound to meet. If they do not pay it, then I would say that there is a conspiracy between the socialists of Canada and the socialists of Great Britain to refrain from paying the farmers of western Canada what is their just due.

There is a conspiracy, all right, but it is not a conspiracy between the socialist government of Britain and the socialists of Canada. There is a conspiracy among prairie Liberal members to avoid carrying out election promises, and to foist the blame on a friendly commonwealth country. So one by one they joined the chorus.

Then at the height of the campaign one week end the Minister of Agriculture sneaked out of Ottawa and made a dramatic trip to Great Britain to try to argue with the stubborn British. According to rumour, most of his cabinet colleagues were not very keen about the trip. After all, most of them took the position that "a deal is a deal"—particularly when it is in writing.

Mr. Boucher: Who told you that?

Mr. Thatcher: I got it on very good authority. The minister flew the ocean to try to strike a bargain which would get prairie Liberals off the political hook in western Canada. Obviously he offered the British just about anything if they would only make a further payment on the old agreement. Of course the British declined to reopen the contract. How, in their financial plight, could they sell such a proposition to their parliament? How could they suggest that nine months after it was closed, a contract should be reopened which would cost them millions of dollars—particularly after the Canadian Minister of Trade and Commerce had declared the matter settled?

Thus, the Minister of Agriculture failed in his mission, as he knew he must fail. I say this very respectfully because I have great respect for the minister, but I think his trip was more or less eyewash, to provide him with an excuse, when he got back to Saskatchewan, for not paying more than 8·3 cents. The minister then was unsuccessful, but he did succeed in beclouding this whole wheat issue, and in making some Canadian people, particularly in the west, think that perhaps the paucity of the payment was due to the failure of the British to meet their obligations; and many backbench Liberal members once again joined the chorus. Here is what the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Decore) had to say to the Southam newspapers after the minister came back:

John Decore (Liberal-Vegreville) charged that the British government "has failed to carry out its moral obligations" to western Canada under the "have regard to" clause of the contract . . .

Had the British government assumed its obligation the farmer would have received substantially more and to which he is entitled.

We in Canada spared no efforts to help the British people when our help was urgently needed. The U.K. socialist government let us down. We Canadians never expected this kind of treatment.

Mr. Decore: Are you defending the socialists now?

Mr. Thatcher: I hardly think that question requires an answer. Reports like that have been circulated throughout the length and breadth of this dominion. Even the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) when he announced the $65 million payment, rather cleverly implied that there had been some default on the part of the British. If some hon. members want to challenge that statement I can show them the quotation from Toronto Saturday Night, which intimated that they received such an impression. I say the time has come to try to put this record straight. An attempt has been made, deliberately I think, to smear—and I use the word advisedly—a sister nation of the commonwealth, by charging her with failure to honour an obligation. That charge, which is false and unwarranted, is causing a great deal of misunderstanding and hard feeling.

Every member of this house knows perfectly well why the government is in this predicament. The Minister of Agriculture and other hon. members made promises before and during the last election regarding the final payment, which the cabinet is not prepared to carry out. Let the minister and his colleagues have the courage to admit that fact, and let them not in such a cowardly way try to place the blame upon a friendly nation of the commonwealth.

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Beaudoin): I have been a bit concerned about the decorum of the debate in this house for the last few minutes. I think the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Thatcher) has used some expressions which, if not unparliamentary, might be considered very strong.

Mr. Thatcher: I withdraw them.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Beaudoin): I think the last word used, "cowardly", should be revised by the hon. member.

Mr. Thatcher: Mr. Speaker, I remind parliament that Britain has always been our best market for farm products, and she is likely to continue to be our best market in the future. Why jeopardize this market now by accusations of this kind? I think the people of Great Britain are going to resent them. Moreover I feel that the people of western Canada or eastern Canada will dislike such political tactics.

Last Friday, Mr. Speaker, the minister announced a payment of 8·3 cents a bushel. I believe most western members, and my Liberal friends may speak for themselves, do not consider 8·3 cents to be enough. There are a number of reasons why this payment should be substantially greater. The farmers in Canada are well aware of their political power, and any government which deliberately antagonizes all the wheat constituencies of this country is going to find itself in difficulty. I suggest that this is precisely what this government may do, unless, honouring its promises, it increases the size of that 8·3 cent payment.

Mr. Cruickshank: We do not buy votes.

Mr. Wright: What about the twenty-cent interim payment?

Mr. Thatcher: I have only one other suggestion to make. We have laws against fraudulent misrepresentation; we have laws against breach of trust and false pretences. All these laws operate against individuals. I say this parliament should bring in a law to prosecute politicians who make promises realizing full well that they can never be carried out.

Mr. Cruickshank: You would be in a bad way then.

Mr. D. S. Harkness (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, the bill which we are theoretically discussing at the moment provides for three amendments to the wheat board act. I am in favour of those amendments, and from what I have been able to hear I believe they meet with the general approval of the house. When we reach the committee stage, however, there are a few questions I should like to ask in connection with the price which is going to be established for the settlement of any particular pool.

This debate has not been on these three amendments, but has been confined almost entirely to the five year wheat pool or the four year wheat agreement, as it has been called. I should first like to make a few comments on the speech made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) last night. I was really rather surprised at that speech. To begin with, I would compliment him by saying that he gave us an extremely agile display of mental gymnastics and verbal legerdemain. He started with a little history of the wheat board act, but it was of course his own brand of history and given strictly from his own point of view. In the end it turned out to be what I would call his own brand of political pseudo-history designed to confuse the subject rather than illuminate it.

The minister's speech, Mr. Speaker, can be divided into two main parts. Everything he said falls into one part or the other, although he did at times become a little confused between the two contentions he was trying to put forward. I was amazed at the manner in which he moved from one part of the speech to the other without giving any indication that either of these two parts contradicted the other. Apparently from the loudness of his voice when he was putting forth these contentions, he was convinced that we would not think they were either. Listening to the minister talk in this way, a couplet came into my mind. I believe it is from Scott's "Lay of the Last Minstrel". It seems to me to be quite apt, and the couplet runs as follows:

> That through a bog, from hag to hag,
> Could bound like any Billhope stag.

I may say that the word "hag" as used by Scott in this couplet means a firm piece of ground situated in a swamp. The minister was certainly floundering in a swamp of his own making. He certainly gave a great exhibition of jumping from one position to another in that swamp. However, Mr. Speaker, I do not think he was on very firm ground in either position in which he landed.

I should like to analyse this speech to some extent. In the first part of his speech the minister tried to prove that Britain had not lived up to the four year contract, and that any losses that the farmers had suffered were entirely Britain's fault. That was the whole thesis, and the attempt was to place the blame in Britain. The roar from the Liberal benches which greeted a contention of that kind by the member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Thatcher) evidently indicates that most of the Liberal members who were in the house take that position, and are going to do their best to push it. When we come to the second part of the minister's speech, we find it was an argument that Britain had lived up to the have regard to clause, which is exactly the opposite of the argument that he was making in the first part of his speech. He said she had lived up to the have regard to clause to the extent of $35 million and that the $65 million, which as the minister said was now being paid into the wheat pool on Britain's account and which was a doubtful statement with which I shall deal later, would make up $100 million. He said that gave the wheat producers a satisfactory price for their wheat, and one which they were not entitled to complain about. Here is what he had to say about the satisfactory price as recorded at page 1068 of Hansard:

> The payments made to the farmers when completed will amount to an average of $1.82 a bushel from the five year pool. Now I would ask members of this house this question: How much more equitable can a price be made?

How much better could it be? In other words, he is doing his best to prove that the farmer got all he was entitled to receive, which was just the opposite of what he sought to prove in the first part of his speech. A little farther down on the same page he said:

> The payments made to farmers when completed will amount to $1.82 a bushel. This is two cents above the figure which has been written into the international wheat agreement as satisfactory to farmers.

Referring to the same thing a little later he said:

> This contract, this pool, brought the farmers for the last five years two cents a bushel more than that. What criticism could there be made of it? As a matter of fact there is nothing in connection with that to criticize.

Well, Mr. Speaker, if the second part of the minister's speech is accurate, and the facts which I have just quoted are accurate, then necessarily the first part of his speech must be wrong. The only purpose then of the first part of his speech is to stir up, I would say quite incorrectly and unnecessarily, bad feeling toward Britain on the part of our western wheat farmers. That is the only purpose it could serve. So far as I can see, that must be the only reason he made it, unless he admits that the second part of his speech is incorrect and the first part is the one he wants to stand by.

This business of stirring up bad feeling towards Britain is exactly what has been done by the speech the minister made last night and by similar statements made by the minister and others of his party. They have stirred up that bad feeling. I think there is no doubt about it, Mr. Speaker, that they are mischievous statements which were made for purely political reasons and in an attempt to turn the anger of the wheat growers from the minister and the government to the British people and to the British government. On the other hand, if there is any force in the minister's contention and in the contention of his followers to the effect that Britain was entirely responsible for the losses the farmers suffered, then of course, conversely, the second part of the speech must be wrong and the wheat growers have not had a fair deal. I think there is no doubt about it, Mr. Speaker—the minister cannot have it both ways—if one part is right, the other is wrong. It seems to me that he should make it clear to the country which one he wants to stand. Is he going to blame this on Britain and say that the farmers did not get enough, or is he going to continue with the contention that the farmers got enough and that therefore there is no blame on Britain? But surely he cannot have it both ways.

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): What position do you take?

Mr. Harkness: I will make my position clear as I go along. You will be quite certain, by the time I finish, what my position is. I may say that my position on this question has not varied since the time I first came into this house in 1945; and if you care to take the trouble to go through Hansard, where wheat was under discussion, from the present time right back to 1945, you will find that the position I have taken throughout is the same as I am taking right now and will take throughout the rest of this speech.

Last night there was considerable discussion about the statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) on June 5, 1950, in this house. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) rose in his place and said that it was not a statement, that it was just made in the house when there were some proceedings of questions and answers going on in the committee stage, and so on. However, Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out that this statement was made in the house under exactly the same circumstances as are a great many other statements made by ministers announcing government policy: in answer to questions and so forth. Of course the contention of the Minister of Agriculture that this was not a statement of policy and so forth or a statement—he even denied it was a statement—naturally gives rise to the question in one's mind: When is a statement not a statement? I think we should have some answer to that question, Mr. Speaker. Surely we are entitled to accept as statements of ministerial policy the statements made by ministers of the crown here. If we are not entitled to accept them as such, then there is not much use in their making them except possibly for political reasons from time to time.

At the same time the Minister of Agriculture disputed the appearance of a period in the statement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce as read by the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Wright).

Mr. Gardiner: No. I said the period was there.

Mr. Harkness: It has already been pointed out that this was perhaps one of the most pitiful defences ever put up. But I took the trouble to go back and look up my copy of the daily edition of Hansard, as I happened to have it in my office. I also looked up the bound volume of Hansard. As was pointed out by the hon. member for Melfort, I find that there is not one iota of difference between them. In spite of the fact that the hon. member for Melfort read from both and pointed out that fact this afternoon, the Minister of Agriculture is so unreasonable that he still maintains that they are different, in spite of the evidence of the sense of sight, as it would certainly appear to the eyes of every other member who has taken the trouble to read it, if not of the minister. I mention that, Mr. Speaker, only to show how extremely unreasonable the minister is and how he will say that black is white and stick to it, no matter what. Here is a case in which there is absolutely no doubt whatever, and the minister still stands up and says, "That is not so; they are different." That was his last word on it. The thing is ridiculous; and it leads us into the situation in this house that it is extremely difficult for us to accept any statement the minister makes.

Mr. Gardiner: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I should just like to say that what my hon. friend is stating is not what I said. I said that I had not seen the bound edition of Hansard and I asked the hon. member to read it. He read it the second time without the "and" in it and the "and" is in it in the daily edition. I was told a comma was there instead of "and". I do not know whether it is there. But if it is, it is different.

An hon. Member: Get a copy of Hansard.

Mr. Harkness: The fact still remains that the last word he said on it, when this dispute was going on this afternoon, was that they were different.

Mr. Gardiner: If you say they are the same, they are both wrong.

Mr. Harkness: If he is now admitting that they are both correct, that is the first time I have ever heard him admit anything in this house; the very first time.

Mr. Gardiner: On a matter of privilege, I have just got through saying that they are both wrong. I do not want my hon. friend to make me say they are both correct.

Mr. Harkness: I think it is rather bootless and fruitless for us to be arguing in the house as to whether there is a period or whether there is not, or whether there is a comma or whether there is not; and no matter which one is there, whether it should be there or whether it should not. As a matter of fact, as far as the sense of the statement made is concerned, the minister is at perfect liberty to take out the period and put in a comma, or to take out the comma and put in a period; or to take out "and" or to leave it in; the sense is still the same.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Harkness: It is quite definite. I have it here. The important part of the statement actually is an admission on the part of the Minister of Trade and Commerce that this wheat deal was closed and finished with so far as he and the government were concerned.

Mr. Gardiner: On the decision of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Harkness: Here is the statement right here. I will read it again:

> The United Kingdom government took a very strong position that they had fulfilled all obligations under that clause, and so far as the United Kingdom was concerned.

There is a period there, as it appears here. The statement continues:

> We agreed on behalf of Canada that considering all the circumstances that was the case.

What more do you want?

Mr. Ross (Souris): What date was that?

Mr. Harkness: June 5, 1950, of the daily edition of Hansard. The bound volume is exactly the same.

Mr. Knowles: Six o'clock.

Mr. Harkness: Any talk about periods, commas and so on and so forth is such nonsense, Mr. Speaker, that I am really confounded that the minister would get to his feet and make use of an argument of that kind and try to confuse the issue with it. It cannot do anything else but confuse the issue. It does not prove anything. The statement is there, and no matter how you punctuate it, it is an admission on the part of the Minister of Trade and Commerce that the deal was closed so far as they were concerned and nothing more was expected.

Mr. Knowles: Six o'clock.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO PROCEED WITH BILL TO INCORPORATE TRANS MOUNTAIN OIL PIPE LINE COMPANY

Mr. Arthur Laing (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I am going to make an extraordinary request this evening. When we last adjourned the debate on Bill 115 there seemed to be no singular objection to that bill, and tonight I am going to ask for the unanimous consent of the house that we proceed further with the discussion of it. To any accusation that we are in a hurry, it would seem to me that the best defence we could make is that we are in a hurry.

I think there is involved in the incorporation of this company the probability that we shall be creating something equally as important to the provinces of British Columbia and Alberta as is the great Labrador ore—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think the hon. member can proceed to debate the bill. If he wishes to make a motion, he may do so, and make a brief statement in connection therewith.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, with all deference, I am trying to explain the urgency of the matter.

Mr. Cruickshank: Is it a point of order?

Mr. Laing: With all deference to every hon. member in the house, I would be prepared to stand aside if any hon. member were to object. I felt however that in the last debate there was unanimity.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps the hon. member would like to make a motion. If so, I would ask that he now make it; but I cannot allow a debate at this point. Has the hon. member a motion to make?

Mr. Laing: I am asking that we obtain—

Mr. Cruickshank: Move it.

Mr. Laing: I move that we proceed with the discussion of Bill 115.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Laing) moves, seconded by the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Rooney), that, notwithstanding the standing orders respecting procedure, the house should at this time consider Bill No. 115. It will be understood that for this motion to carry there would have to be unanimous consent. Is it the unanimous opinion of the house that we proceed with the bill?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Cruickshank: No, no.

Mr. Speaker: If it is not the unanimous wish of the house that we should proceed with Bill 115, we cannot do so. I understand there is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Cruickshank: Am I allowed to speak on it as well?

Mr. Speaker: Not unless there is unanimous consent.

Mr. Laing: You can speak.

Mr. Speaker: I understand there is not unanimous consent, and we shall have to proceed with the business in the regular way.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Private bills.

Mr. Speaker: There are a number of bills on the order paper to be considered by the house in committee of the whole. These bills are Nos. 22, 8, 81 to 102—

Mr. Knowles: We cannot hear what is going on.

Mr. Speaker: From 81 to 102 inclusive, all of which are divorce bills. Then in addition there is Bill No. 75.

Is it the pleasure of the house that a motion should be accepted at this time to include all these bills, and that the motion be that I do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into the committee of the whole to consider all these bills?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

TRANS-CANADA PIPE LINES LIMITED

The house in committee on Bill No. 75, to incorporate Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited—Mr. Decore—Mr. Dion in the chair.

Sections 1 to 5 inclusive agreed to.

On section 6—Special powers.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, there was an amendment made to section 6 when the bill was in committee. Is that included in the section as you are now placing it before the committee?

The Chairman: Yes, it is section 6 as amended. Shall section 6 as amended carry?

Mr. Green: Would you read the amendment, please?

The Chairman: It reads:

Provided that the main pipe line or lines either for the transmission and transportation of gas or oil shall be located entirely within Canada.

Mr. Cruickshank: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a word in that connection which, I believe, is of vital importance, owing to what would appear to be some rather sudden expressions of attitude that have been made. I should like to commend the committee, through you, on this excellent amendment. I am sure it will be found entirely in accordance with the request and desire of those of us who spoke last year in favour of an all-Canadian route. We commend the committee and the company for the action that has been taken in agreeing to this amendment without any equivocation. I was not a member of the committee, but I certainly commend them for the attitude they have taken.

This is what we recommended last year. We asked that the interests of Canada should have priority over the interests of any other country. Some of us from British Columbia were accused, we think unfairly, of having carried on a filibuster against other bills last year. We are rather proud of that because I know how pleased the people in the Fraser valley are about this and I have good reason to know how pleased the people of British Columbia are. This result is mainly due to the efforts put forth last year by a few members from that province. We asked that at least the main oil or gas line should be within Canada.

This particular bill deals with a gas line. It is expected that other pipe line bills will be coming before the committee. Those of us who have been successful in promoting the development of our province are not going to be stampeded by anyone into not giving mature consideration to the best interests of our province. Incidentally, any gas or oil line that enters British Columbia must pass through my riding, so I do not care two hoots which company it is that is building the line.

We want these bills to go before the committee in the regular manner when the sponsor of the bill can give whatever information is asked for. The members for British Columbia already have an amendment prepared providing that the main line must go through Canada. If that is known it will take less time for the sponsor to explain his bill and how the building of the line is going to be financed. The sponsor of a bill should be prepared to come before a committee and state that the company is ready to build up Canada first. Any surplus can then be exported to help build up the great country to the south.

There should always be foremost in our minds the realization that it is our duty to protect the interests of our province. Again I want to commend the sponsor of this particular bill and his backers. That may not be the correct word to use, but I mean the people who are promoting this company. I commend them for their good judgment in deciding that first consideration is to be given to the development of Canada.

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): Mr. Chairman, the source of most of the gas which will be carried through this line is in the Peace river country. Since this house last met more than a dozen new gas wells have been brought into production, one at Tangent having a capacity of fifty million cubic feet per day. We have been told by engineers that the natural gas reserve in the Peace river country alone amounts to over three trillion cubic feet. The development there will aid in the development of all Canada.

Incidentally I do not think this line will run through the Fraser valley. If it is to go east it will not run through the Rocky mountains, but over the prairies and then through the lovely countryside of Ontario.

Mr. McIvor: Mr. Chairman, as far as I can see there is little that can be said against the building of this pipe line, especially in view of the arguments raised last year against a pipe line going through the United States. I am all in favour of this bill which provides for an all-Canadian line to pass through Fort William and Port Arthur, and then come on to Ottawa, Toronto and Montreal. The sooner we pass this bill and give these people a chance to get going, the better it will be for Canada. I am prejudiced because this line is coming through the lakehead. This bill deserves complete support and I hope that there will be lots of gas in Alberta to satisfy the people of the east.

Mr. Cruickshank: The hon. member for Cariboo has said that this line will not go through the Fraser valley, but any line going west will go through the Fraser valley. The Fraser valley wants to develop the whole of Canada as well as the Fraser valley. As was pointed out in the committee, the gas that will go over this route will come from the Pincher Creek area, while the gas from Cariboo and northern Alberta will go to its natural market in British Columbia and Vancouver.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, as a member of this committee I want to say a few words. Members of this group would prefer to have these pipe lines built as public carriers and operated as public utilities, but we have not a majority in the house at the present time so we must accept things as they are. I intend to develop that argument at length on another bill. I think other hon. members of the committee will agree with me when I say we were very pleased with the frank and straightforward way in which the witnesses answered the questions that were asked, and they were many. I think we were particularly pleased with the willingness of the representatives of the company concerned to have written into the bill a clause indicating that the main pipe line would be on Canadian territory. This is the first pipe line bill that has come before this parliament where such a clause has been included and we recognize that in passing this bill we will be establishing a precedent to have the routes of pipe lines written into the bills. I hope that, when future bills come before this house and the railways, canals and telegraph lines committee, other companies will be just as willing to have the routes written into the bill.

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): A statement which I just mentioned has been questioned by the hon. member over there. The company presented a map to the committee showing the sources from which they were to obtain natural gas, and those were indicated as being partly in northern British Columbia and northern Alberta. All members of the committee can testify to that.

Mr. Wylie: I was not a member of the committee, and there are a few points I should like to have straightened out. As you know, I spoke two years ago on some of the pipe line bills. At that time I was not opposed to them but I was opposed to the exportation of gas from Alberta. I am not sure whether this bill specifies that the pipe line will follow an all-Canadian route or a United States route. I believe it is all-Canadian. I have every confidence in the gas conservation board of Alberta. From reading press reports it seemed rather odd to me that the hon. member for Vegreville, who is a Liberal, should be sponsoring the bill and at the same time in the Alberta house the Alberta Liberal leader and another Liberal member—I believe there are only two Liberals in that legislature—are very much opposed to the exportation of gas from Alberta.

Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited

I am going to read what I read in the paper the other day. I think it is about time they got together and discussed things. This is what the Liberal leader in Alberta had to say in the legislature as reported in the Medicine Hat News, which is a very good paper, by the way.

Mr. Stick: What circulation?

Mr. Wylie: We have a good circulation. Don't worry about that.

Mr. Stick: Funny papers.

Mr. Wylie: Just keep quiet. The article reads in part:

> Export of natural gas would adversely affect Alberta's coal industry, Liberal leader J. Harper Prowse charged, with coal miners alone losing from $8 million to $10 million in wages annually and as many as 2,500 miners being laid off work permanently. He urged the Social Credit government to engage an expert to study the financial effect of exporting natural gas, and said there was a danger of Albertans becoming the "hirelings of corporations developed elsewhere." The government should take steps in conjunction with Ottawa to safeguard Alberta's interests in case a war forced export of natural gas. Four companies were seeking gas pipe line permits.

We have a Liberal member of this house sponsoring the bill. We have the Liberal leader in Alberta opposing it. Just what it all means I do not know.

Mr. Stick: A free country.

Mr. Wylie: I know it is a free country, and we have more gas in the Medicine Hat area—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

An hon. Member: That is quite evident.

Mr. Wylie: Medicine Hat was the first area in the west to have natural gas. While I am not opposed to a company getting a bill through this house, it seems rather strange to me that a Liberal member of the house should sponsor a bill of this kind when his Liberal leader in Alberta is opposed to the exportation of any natural gas.

Mr. Decore: Did you want to sponsor it?

Section as amended agreed to.

Sections 7 to 11 inclusive agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Decore moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. Clarence Gillis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, before the bill is read the third time I should like to say a few words. I want to make it quite clear that I am not objecting to the bill on technological grounds. However, there are two things that I have against it. The first is that the capital to sponsor the project is 100 per cent American. Second, in order to line up the project there appeared before the standing committee United States engineers who have done the surveying from one end of the country to the other. We had United States technicians and banking experts give evidence before that committee. It struck me during the discussion that there is some lack of interest or confidence on the part of Canadian capital. Practically ever since I came into the house we have been selling our resources for development by United States capital. In my opinion that is not a good thing. I think it shows a lack of initiative on the part of Canadian capital and a lack of interest on the part of the government. I feel, and always have felt, that if we are going to build Canada for Canadians and create a status of nationhood our basic resources should be developed and controlled within this country.

The second thing I am concerned about—and I expressed this fear in the committee—is that the pipe line will pipe natural gas from Alberta as far as Quebec city. I am not unmindful of the fact, and I reminded the committee, that the basic industry in Nova Scotia is coal. Natural gas is a competitor of coal. If the pipe line is going to tap Quebec city and Montreal, if it is going to be successful in entering that area, it is going to replace the market for maritime coal. That may not happen within the next year or two but in the foreseeable future if that pipe line is going to justify its existence in that area then so far as I am concerned it will have to replace the fuel being used there at the present time.

Natural gas is definitely adapted to domestic use. I am safe in saying there are a million and a half tons of maritime coal being used in the Quebec and greater Montreal areas at the present time for domestic purposes. Natural gas can be used in any industry with the exception of the steel industry, and in the areas I have just mentioned there is a large percentage of maritime coal being used for metallurgical and industrial purposes. The standing committee heard the chairman of the dominion coal board, Mr. Uren. He said that no representations had been made to him on the part of the Nova Scotia or New Brunswick coal industries. I can understand that. These bills come in through the back door from the other place. We get them and there is not much time to consider them. They are never publicized prior to coming before the house.

This bill went through the house rather quickly, and I am afraid of what may be the repercussions in the displacement of basic industry as far as Nova Scotia is concerned.

I think the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) should be concerned also, because the federal government has a very heavy investment in the mining industry of my province. During the last few years this government has loaned Dominion Steel and Coal seven and a half million dollars with which to carry on a program of mechanization in the mining industry of Nova Scotia. Well, if these mines are to be modernized I rather question the advisability of passing a bill of this kind, despite the fact that it is going to bring cheaper fuel to Ontario for both domestic and industrial use. That will not be an advance if it destroys the very base of the economy of another province. So I suggest that before this matter is finally decided the government consider what may happen if this fuel is permitted to go into Montreal and down as far as Quebec, taking over an area which is very important to an industry in which the government has a considerable investment.

I have no desire to hold up the bill. As far as I can see it is one of the best pipe line bills to come before the house. I was a member of the committee, and the financial experts, engineers and other witnesses appearing before that committee were extremely competent. They had all the facts at their fingertips and there was no doubt as to their ability and experience in projects of this kind. And of course they did write in the proviso that the main trunk line was to be all-Canadian; and they satisfied every desire of the committee as to their honesty and integrity in that respect. At the same time I did raise this question, because it seemed to me I would be lax in my duty if I did not, seeing the development of competition to the fuels produced in the province from which I come. If this competing fuel is brought into the areas which are important to my province it can undersell United States anthracite by at least $1 a ton, and I think it will do the same at least to bituminous coal. So I want the Minister of Trade and Commerce to think this over. If the investment the government has made in the mining industry of Nova Scotia is to be threatened by developments of this kind, at least something should be planned for that part of the country which will suffer as a result of this technological advance.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time.

BRITISH COLUMBIA TELEPHONE COMPANY

Mr. E. T. Applewhaite (Skeena) moved the second reading of Bill No. 116, respecting British Columbia Telephone Company.

British Columbia Telephone Company

He said: In moving second reading of the bill it should not be necessary to take up too much of the time of the house, particularly since we find the principles relating to the second reading of private bills set out in Beauchesne's third edition, citation 740, at page 280:

> The house, in reading a private bill for the second time, decides that the matter involved is one which may be looked into by the committee. It is only in case that an exceptional principle is enunciated that the second reading is refused.

Then citation 771 reads:

> Mr. J. W. Lowther, chairman of committees of ways and means, of the British house, speaking on the subject on February 25, 1926, said: "The rule which the house had generally followed, and, he thought, very wisely, had been to allow the second reading of private bills to go through unless any strikingly new principle happened to be enunciated therein, and in such cases the house must pause before it accepts the principle."

Citation 769 reads in part:

> The second reading of a private bill corresponds with the same stage in other bills, and in agreeing to it the house affirms the general principle, or expediency, of the measure. There is, however, a distinction between the second reading of a public and of a private bill, which should not be overlooked. A public bill being founded on reasons of state policy, the house, in agreeing to its second reading, accepts and affirms those reasons; but the expediency of a private bill, being mainly founded upon allegations of fact, which have not yet been proved, the house, in agreeing to its second reading, affirms the principle of the bill, conditionally, and subject to the proof of such allegations before the committee. Where, irrespective of such facts, the principle is objectionable, the house will not consent to the second reading; but otherwise, the expediency of the measure is usually left for the consideration of the committee.

I might also read citation 770:

> The house does not profess to decide upon the second reading as to the truth or otherwise of the allegations of fact upon which a proposed bill is based, and in conceding a second reading to a private bill, the house is regarded as merely giving its sanction to its general principle on the hypothesis that the committee to which it is afterward referred finds those allegations proved. It is usual, therefore, to allow a second reading except where the bill enunciates some principle which the house is not prepared to affirm.

Certainly it will appear that there is nothing either objectionable or new in the principle of this bill. Its main provision is to increase the authorized capital stock of the British Columbia Telephone Company from $25 million to $75 million. There has been such a tremendous increase in the population of the area served by this company, and in fact of the whole province, that a major program of expansion involving heavy capital expenditures is essential if the area is to be served adequately. That program is estimated to require capital expenditures in the neighbourhood of $10 million per annum during the next ten years.

British Columbia Telephone Company

This company inaugurated its post-war expansion program in 1946. To date it has issued $20 million of capital stock, and there remains authorized only $5 million. I am informed by the company that most likely this will all be issued within the next few weeks. The British Columbia Telephone Company operates 90 per cent of the telephones and most of the long distance lines in the province of British Columbia. According to the dominion bureau of statistics the population of British Columbia at June 1, 1950, was 1,138,000. Seventy-nine per cent of that population lived in the area served by this company. From 1940 to 1950 the population of British Columbia increased from 805,000 to 1,138,000 an increase of 41·4 per cent in ten years. Yet in Canada as a whole during the same period the increase was only 21·7 per cent. It can be easily seen, therefore, what a quickly expanding economy we in British Columbia have to deal with.

From the end of 1945 to the end of 1950, five years, the number of telephones operated by the B. C. Telephone Company went up from 163,135 to 246,486, a gain of over 50 per cent. Yet on December 31, 1950, the company had on its files unfilled applications for telephones amounting to 22,967. Surveys indicate that a heavy increased demand for new services will maintain and continue for some time to come. It is regrettable that these applications for service could not have been filled. The reason is partly due to the difficulty in obtaining equipment, and partly due to the extraordinary increase in population.

In 1940 this company completed 1,688,197 originating long distance telephone calls. Ten years later, in 1950, it completed 5,469,408 such calls, a gain in that period of 224 per cent. It is estimated that in 1951 it will complete well over 6 million such calls. The company serves the city of Victoria, which is the capital of the province, and nearly all of Vancouver island. It serves the city of Vancouver, the third largest city in the dominion, and it serves greater Vancouver, New Westminster, and the adjacent municipalities; the Fraser valley; the Kamloops area and the Kootenays as far east as the Crowsnest.

The bill also makes other provisions. It provides that the company may have the power to change its preferred or preference stock now issued from a par value of $100 to a par value of $25, provided that 75 per cent of the holders thereof agree. It asks that the company be given authority to issue its new preferred or preference stock at either $25 or $100, and it provides that all new and existing ordinary stock shall be changed from a par value of $100 to a par value of $25.

The reason for this request, which is in line with action taken by practically all public utilities on the continent these days, is to make the capital stock of the public utility company of as small a denomination as possible in order to enable as large a number of people as possible to be shareholders and part owners in the enterprise.

One other provision is made in the bill. It asks for the right to pay a commission on the sale of the company's shares, a right which does not exist in its present charter. In passing I should mention that that right would be, and it is so stated in the bill, subject as to conditions and as to amount to the decision of the board of transport commissioners. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the whole house realizes that in the past few years, not more than fifteen or twenty, the attitude of the general public towards a telephone has changed. I am not so very old but I can remember when a telephone was regarded more or less as a luxury in one's home, and as a sign of success in one's business. Today a telephone is regarded by all sections of the community as an essential in both home and business.

With reference to the proposed increase in stock, I would point out that the bill would provide that such sales of stock will all be subject to the board of transport commissioners as to amount, as to terms, as to time and as to the other conditions of sale. I mention that for fear some might think that this was an effort to set up a company structure under which profits or dividends could be gained from what is commonly known as watered stock. I believe it is well known that the board of transport commissioners will only permit the issuance of further capital stock provided the company can show it is needed for the operations of the company. Not only that, but the board of transport commissioners controls the rates which the company can charge its customers, and by doing so it controls the earnings of the company and the profits which the company can pay. It operates, in practically all branches of the business, subject to the decisions of the board of transport commissioners.

In that connection may I mention one item of what I would call muddled thinking that we have heard on the streets and in other places in connection with a company such as this. On several occasions I have heard it said that the B.C. Telephone Company, for instance, must be doing rather well because it can pay an eight per cent dividend. It does not. It is paying $8 per $100 share, but its shares do not bring the company $100. They bring in $139. That was the figure at which the last issue was sold net to the company.

This means that the dividend which the company is paying to its common stockholders is approximately 5½ per cent. Another objection which perhaps might be raised to a company of this kind, with its head office in a large city and with a large proportion of its customers in a large city, is that it might be tempted to spend most of its efforts and its capital in developing its business within the city to the detriment of the smaller surrounding communities. I have had a breakdown of the 22,967 unfilled applications which this company is desirous of filling in zones, and they are as follows. In greater Victoria and the Saanich peninsula, 2,522; on the rest of Vancouver island and gulf islands, 1,423; greater Vancouver and New Westminster, 15,029; in the lower Fraser valley, 2,329; in the Kamloops and Okanagan valley, 468; in the Kootenay area, 643; and for proposed new offices, 553; making a grand total of 22,967.

Mr. Speaker, this company is a large and successful company. It is a company of which the people of British Columbia may well be proud. It is a company which has made strenuous efforts to keep pace with the tremendous expansion that has taken place in British Columbia, but it would be the first to admit that it is today behind in keeping up with that expansion. It is because it is behind that expansion that it is coming now and asking for these amendments to its charter. If the service is to be improved, as we admit it must be, and if the service is to be expanded, as we claim it must be, then capital to make these improvements and expansions must be made available. Surely that is self-evident. There are plenty of precedents in this house for the principle of this bill. Similar powers have been granted to many companies, both in so far as increased capital is concerned and the other things requested. The principle of the bill is not subject to question. Whether it is advisable to give these powers at this time, in other words whether it is as claimed in the preamble expedient, is a matter based purely on the existence of the facts. The facts will be proved by competent witnesses before the committee, and that body will decide whether or not the statements I have made are borne out.

Mr. Jean Francois Pouliot (Temiscouata): Mr. Speaker, this is another time when this company comes before the house for permission to increase its capital. The first time was in 1941, when it was increased to $11 million; the second time was in 1947 when it was increased to $25 million. Now it is to be increased to $75 million, three times that amount. This is a company with a big appetite but with good manners. It eats smaller morsels. The intention of the company is to reduce the amount of the shares. I want to draw to the attention of the members of the house, and particularly to the attention of the members of the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, who will have to study the bill, the illuminating speech of the great Tommy Church on May 2, 1947.

Mr. Fulton: The great and late Tommy Church.

Mr. Pouliot: The illuminating and enlightening speech. The bill passed the committee stage and third reading on that night. It was such a good bill that on that very same night one gentleman from British Columbia left, with a bodyguard or two, in a special car to go to Toronto.

Mr. G. A. Cruickshank (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a word on this telephone bill. First of all, I should like to congratulate the hon. member who sponsors it on the capable way in which he has introduced his bill. I was particularly interested in the authority he cited; I did not quite catch the name but I understand it was the Beauchesne of England.

An hon. Member: Bourinot.

Mr. Cruickshank: I have considerable difficulty in following the Beauchesne of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Louder.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Cruickshank: It is extremely difficult for me to follow the Beauchesne of England as well as the Beauchesne of Canada. I am from a farming district and I am sorry to say that we are not up in Philadelphia law, Ottawa law or even the northern law.

Mr. Pouliot: Or Connecticut law.

Mr. Cruickshank: Or Connecticut law. I will include that too. I will even go so far as to bring in Temiscouata. In Fraser Valley we go quite a bit on the law of common sense, and we get by rather well on it. It is a fine riding. For that reason I should like to say a few words in connection with this bill. With a couple of other British Columbia members, I had quite a bit to do with the matter in 1941. First of all, Mr. Speaker, through you I should like to say that I believe this is one of the finest and best-managed companies in the province of British Columbia. So far as I know, the actual management in British Columbia is carried on by British Columbians; and naturally it is good management.

An hon. Member: But the service is not very good.

British Columbia Telephone Company

Mr. Cruickshank: It has been pointed out to me, in case I should overlook that point, that the service is not very good. I want to point out to you, sir, that the service could be worse. The main town in my riding is Chilliwack. One of my good friends out there had an experience which I should like to recount. As a matter of fact, until he saw the light after the 1940 election, he was not a supporter of mine, but now he is a strong one. I am glad to say that he is one of those gentlemen who saw the light; and directly he did so, he became a supporter of mine. He puts all his cars out to see that I get an excellent majority at election time. This man is a large businessman in the fair city of Chilliwack. He put in a call to a company doing business within one block of the head office of the British Columbia telephone company in the city of Vancouver. He waited twenty minutes to get that call through, and it was an important call. In the province of British Columbia, we have important business aside from pipe lines. After waiting for twenty minutes, he decided to drive in. He drives an excellent car; it is of the same make as the one I drive, a Pontiac. He drove to Vancouver. You may think that I am stretching my imagination, as do some of the other members from British Columbia, but I am not. I could give you his name and I could even give you the name of the firm he called. He drove from Chilliwack to Vancouver and got there three minutes before the long distance call got through; and it is seventy-two miles from Chilliwack to Vancouver. That is the reason why through you, Mr. Speaker, I am impressing upon this house, or am going to endeavour to do so, the necessity that the capital be increased. That possibly surprises my good colleague who is sponsoring this bill. I am entirely in favour of having the capital of this company increased, even if it did, like some others, come in by the back door. But the people of Fraser valley are not in accord with the amount of the increase.

An hon. Member: Carried.

Mr. Cruickshank: There will be another advantage, if we get a better telephone service.

Mr. Wylie: Nine o'clock.

Mr. Cruickshank: Up to date the only advantage we have had from the province of Alberta in the line of gas has been domestic gas. Now we are to get it from the good mother earth. Previously it has been delivered to us verbally, and that is the only way we have got it.

Mr. Wylie: You have enough gas.

[Mr. Cruickshank.]

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Wylie: Nine o'clock.

Mr. Cruickshank: It being nine o'clock, may I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

Mr. Speaker: The hour for private and public bills having expired, the house will resume consideration of the matter under discussion at six o'clock.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

PROVISION FOR EARLY DISTRIBUTION OF PAYMENTS AT END OF POOL PERIOD, ETC.

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Howe for the second reading of Bill No. 5, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1935, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Ross (Souris), and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Wright.

Mr. D. S. Harkness (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, when the house rose at six o'clock I had just been making a short analysis of the speech delivered last night by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), pointing out particularly that the first half of his speech was flatly contradicted by the last half of it. Just when the house rose I had been saying something about the row, so to speak, which developed here over the statement made in the house on June 5, 1950, by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) and which had to do with the placing of commas, periods and things of that sort, and whether bound Hansard and the daily edition were the same or not. All of these things amount to nothing. They are trifling and piffling. However, there is one thing which appears evident from all of the discussion on that point, and that is that the statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce on June 5, 1950—and which I shall not quote again—made it abundantly clear to the members of this house and to the people of Canada that, as far as he was concerned, the four year agreement with Great Britain was closed and the thing was over. The point which is so clear is that, of course, it is at direct variance with the contention of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) in the first part of his speech last night, which was more or less to the effect that Canada never had agreed that the deal was closed, that his trip to England a short time ago was quite in order, and so on.

I would make one final comment in that connection, and it is this: If all that the Minister of Agriculture said last night is correct, then why did the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) make the statement he did make on June 5 last? The two things do not jibe; they are definitely and directly opposed to one another.

There was another matter brought into the discussion last night by the Minister of Agriculture, and that was the international wheat agreement price, and a comparison of the price received in the last two years of the British wheat agreement with the price set under the international wheat agreement.

The minister contended that the have regard to clause in the British wheat agreement had been met by the fact that the Canadian farmers had received $35 million more under the British agreement than they would have under the international agreement. Of course he was careful to qualify that immediately, by saying that the change in the exchange rates had brought that down to a net amount to the farmer of $16 million. The farmers are not particularly interested in the exchange rate; the thing that does appeal to them, and that they know something about, and that will add force, is that they have not got that $35 million in their pockets, and they are not going to get it.

In other words, any talk about $35 million secured in that way does not mean anything, from a practical point of view. The farmers have not got it. And further to that point, the price received by the farmers under the British wheat agreement should be related to what might be called the general world price rather than to the international wheat agreement price. Under the world market price the farmers not only do not gain anything, but they lost further on that deal.

There is one other thing I should like to mention briefly. As reported at page 1069 of Hansard, the minister was speaking in connection with a statement made by numerous people in regard to the losses the farmers had suffered from the sale of their wheat. This is what he said:

> The argument is a ridiculous attempt to mislead farmers, and it is used only for that purpose.

That is a statement the minister should not have made. It was brought into question by the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross). However, the minister did make that statement, and I should like to take this opportunity of throwing it right back in his face. That statement of the minister applies to a much greater extent to the statements he made last night in connection with wheat, and the wheat deal, generally, than it does to the statements made by farmers throughout the country as to the losses they have suffered under the deal.

The more one listens to the Minister of Agriculture discussing wheat, the more confused one becomes, unless he sets against the minister's statement a little commonsense knowledge of what the situation has actually been. As a matter of fact, once one leaves what might be described as the narrow, tortuous and dark alleys of the minister's reasoning, and emerges out on the broad highway of plain common-sense thinking, the facts of the wheat agreement become quite simple, and there is no need for any confusion about them.

At the risk of some repetition, I shall recapitulate briefly. First, the wheat deal was made with Great Britain for the first two years at a price of $1.55 a bushel. No one disputes that; and the have regard to clause was written in, so far as the price to be paid for the last two years was concerned.

The minister himself put on record what was said by the then prime minister, Mr. Mackenzie King, in connection with the subsequent agreement which was made for the second two years. The agreement was that the wheat would be paid for at the rate of $2 a bushel. Since that time the British have claimed that this new contract price of $2 a bushel settled the have regard to clause along with, as a matter of fact, their agreement to take more than they were really required to take under the new international wheat agreement.

I have already spoken about the statement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce in the house, that to all intents and purposes the four year wheat contract was closed. The British were not going to pay any more on it, and the Canadian government—while he did not say they were satisfied—had accepted it. Those are the basic facts, to begin with. Subsequent to that the Minister of Agriculture has done everything he possibly could to build up in western Canada the idea that the low price received by farmers was due entirely to what has been represented as the niggardly, if not dishonest, attitude of the British government.

The project to build up this idea, the attempt to sell it to the western farmers, has been done for very obvious political reasons. It is done entirely in an attempt to draw away from the Minister of Agriculture and the government the responsibility for entering into an extremely poor deal, and to direct the anger of the farmers to the British government and the British people instead of to themselves. In other words, they are trying to get out from under, by means of that argument.

The actual fact of the situation is this: the dominion government—the government we have before us—made this wheat deal, and is thus responsible for the loss the farmers have suffered under it. Nobody else is responsible for it. What happened was that they made a colossal error in judgment. They thought the price was going to go up; instead of that it went down. As a result of that every farmer who grows wheat in the west is dissatisfied with the price he has received.

An hon. Member: You have things in reverse.

Mr. Harkness: I should have said—

Mr. Howe: Let it go.

Mr. Harkness: Instead of going down the price went up, and as a result we have the present situation.

The farmers in the west have complained for many years about the way the operators on the Winnipeg grain exchange have gambled with their wheat. That has been one of their favourite complaints. I shall not go into the justice or otherwise of those complaints. However one thing is certain: the Minister of Agriculture gambled with their wheat to a degree that no operator in the grain trade ever even dreamed of. It was the biggest gamble ever made in history, so far as wheat is concerned. The Minister of Agriculture made a very bad bet, and the losses about which the farmers are now complaining have resulted.

These losses have ranged, according to the estimates of various people, up to $700 million.

An hon. Member: What is your estimate?

Mr. Harkness: I am not going to go into the process of estimating what the losses are, because I do not feel competent to do so. But I think everybody in western Canada agrees they are very extensive. One estimate, which has already been mentioned, was made by the Winnipeg Free Press, which I believe most hon. members supporting the Liberal Party will look upon with kindly eyes—and with good reason.

The Winnipeg Free Press stated flatly and definitely that the losses for the first two years of the agreement only were $330 million. That does not take into consideration what losses there may have been in the last two years. As I said, I do not want to go into the estimating business, but there is no question that extensive losses have been incurred. I do not think anybody has disputed that. I have yet to hear anybody dispute that considerable losses have been incurred, although the Minister of Agriculture tried last night to get around that point by saying an extremely good price had been received.

For some years the government defended its wheat agreement in this house and throughout the country on the basis that it gave an assured long-term market, not only for wheat but also for other farm products, in Great Britain. Even as late as 1947 the Minister of Agriculture stood up in the house and talked about the long-term market there would be in Great Britain for Canadian beef, a statement which was completely contrary to the facts and completely ridiculous. As I say, as late as 1947 he stood up here and talked about a long-term market in Great Britain for beef as a result of making this favourable wheat contract, and the same for hogs, cheese and all sorts of other products.

What is the situation? Have we that long-term contract or that long-term market for our farm products? Everybody knows that we have not. It disappeared long ago and people no longer even talk about it. If the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Ferrie) is going to keep interrupting I would remind him that my stock of quotations from Shakespeare which might apply to him has not been exhausted by any means.

Mr. Ferrie: They should be. If you do not, you can take it the other way. The hon. member had better withdraw that. Mr. Speaker, I want the hon. member to withdraw it. If the hon. member is looking for trouble he will surely get it if he does not withdraw that statement.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, who has the floor?

Mr. Ferrie: You withdraw that statement or you will have to eat those words.

Mr. Harkness: After this little fuss I think I had better get back to what I was saying.

Mr. Ferrie: Shakespeare's uncle.

Mr. Harkness: One of the things Shakespeare said was "Hold thy peace", and I think that is very applicable.

Mr. Ferrie: You had better hold yours.

Mr. Harkness: The point I am making is that no long-term markets were secured as a result of this long-term contract. In other words, the argument that was used so long by the Minister of Agriculture and his supporters has disappeared completely. We did not get any advantage from that point of view.

Another argument that was used with considerable effect was that this was to help Great Britain in her post-war difficulties. I think everybody in this country agreed that we should give some aid to Great Britain during the post-war period. But the question came up almost immediately as to why the wheat growers should be asked to bear the entire cost of this aid to Great Britain in her difficulties. That question has been in the minds of the western wheat growers ever since and apparently it is not going to be answered satisfactorily.

There is no question that the Canadian wheat grower did have to bear the entire cost of this cheap food which was supplied to Great Britain, because the $65 million which the government is now throwing into the pot, as it were, to bring up the final payment to some extent, is not nearly enough to cover the subsidy which the western wheat grower made to the domestic Canadian consumer of wheat products. The loss on that was $120 million odd.

Mr. Howe: Where did my hon. friend get that figure? That figure is easily calculated, so many bushels at so much. Where does my hon. friend get his 120 million bushels?

Mr. Harkness: I did not say 120 million bushels.

Mr. Howe: What did you say?

Mr. Harkness: I said about $120 million.

Mr. Howe: That is exaggerated just about six times.

Mr. Harkness: I think lots of figures can be produced to show that the figure is correct. I do not think the minister will dispute the statement that the $65 million will not cover the losses which the Canadian wheat grower has had to take because of selling his product on the local Canadian market for less than the world market price.

Mr. Howe: A ridiculous statement. The largest claim the pool ever made was for $48 million, which shows the extent to which my hon. friend's statement is out of kilter.

Mr. Harkness: That is not supported by the mass of figures on this which have been put out.

Mr. Ross (Souris): That is only for two years.

Mr. Harkness: That was for two years only.

Mr. Howe: That is all that they maintained. The price differential ended in February, 1947. My hon. friend does not understand anything about this, but I suppose that is no reason why he should not keep on talking.

Mr. Fulton: How long has the minister been farming?

Mr. Howe: I have been in the wheat business longer than the hon. member has been alive.

Mr. Fulton: Building grain elevators and getting paid for them.

Mr. Speaker: I think we should permit the hon. member for Calgary East to continue.

Mr. Harkness: I know enough about it to know that the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Agriculture are in a position right now where the grain growers of western Canada are extremely dissatisfied with them and with the way in which they have been handling wheat.

Mr. Gardiner: You would like to keep it like that.

Mr. Harkness: There is no doubt that the wheat producers have subsidized the British consumers and the Canadian consumers to the tune of several million dollars. I do not think that that is disputed by anyone. That being the fact I maintain that the government should admit that it is a fact and say that it has been their policy to force the Canadian wheat grower to give this subsidy to the consumers in this country and in Great Britain, and then take the responsibility for having followed that policy. If they are not willing to admit that that was their responsibility then the only other reasonable alternative is to pay the wheat growers a reasonable amount on the losses which they have sustained as a result of the policy followed by the government.

It is a remarkable fact that the Liberal party, which at the moment is at the apex of its power, as far as the number of representatives in this house is concerned, seems to be afraid to adopt a direct line that anyone can understand as far as a wheat policy is concerned, and then announce it to the people. They keep fiddling around trying to evade the issue, trying to say two things at once as the minister did last night. Even with this terrific preponderance of representatives in the House of Commons they have not the intestinal fortitude to take a straight line course in regard to this wheat policy.

The wheat producers of western Canada have expected a final payment of at least twenty-five cents per bushel and they have been quite vocal in stating that. Just the other day the legislature of the province of Alberta was unanimous, including the Liberal members—

Mr. Ross (Souris): And the Liberal leader.

Mr. Harkness: And the Liberal leader in the province of Alberta. The resolution passed forty-six to nothing. It urged that the government should—it did not mention a specific figure but there is no doubt what figure they had in mind—make up these losses which have been suffered. I shall not take time to read the dispatch. I am quite sure you will find that the same thing will happen in the other two prairie provinces. The wheat pools have already gone on record in connection with the matter. A payment of 25 cents a bushel would not make up the loss that the farmers have suffered but it would settle the whole sorry mess on some basis of equity and satisfaction to the people principally concerned. It is certainly an action which this government should take.

This payment of $65 million which has now been announced is a mere sop. It is not going to satisfy anybody. That figure was of course picked on for a particular purpose, in a palpable effort to try to get the farmers' anger and dissatisfaction directed against Great Britain instead of where it rightly belongs, on the shoulders of the government. As a matter of fact a number of people in this country have the impression right now that the $65 million is coming from Great Britain. Everyone in this house knows, and I hope everybody in the country will know eventually, that it comes right out of the pockets of the Canadian taxpayers, and before it can be paid it has got to be voted by the members of this house. Great Britain has absolutely nothing to do with it, and any attempt to confuse the $65 million with the British or anything that they have paid or have not paid is just an effort to dodge responsibility on the part of the government.

Mr. Rowe: Hear, hear, by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott).

Mr. Abbott: Here he is right here.

Mr. Harkness: I was asked what my general position was on this matter, and I think I have made it fairly clear. I should like to make one other thing clear: what my position has been from the time I came into this house in 1945 in connection with the marketing of wheat.

Mr. Speaker: I must inform the hon. member that his time has expired.

Mr. Abbott: Too bad.

Mr. Howe: Next.

Mr. Abbott: Continued in our next.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I should like another minute or two.

Mr. Speaker: Only with unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Victor Quelch (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, on Friday, March 2, the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) announced that the final payment on the British wheat agreement would be 8·3 cents a bushel. Since that time a great deal of bitterness has been generated in western Canada, and I think only naturally, because the farmers of western Canada feel that there has been a very definite breach of contract in so far as the have regard to clause is concerned, either a breach of contract or a breach of faith, whichever you like to call it. Various farm organizations and wheat pools have asked that a payment of 25 cents a bushel should be made. I think that request is a very moderate one and fully justified in the face of all the circumstances because the total loss to the farmers was, as a matter of fact, considerably in excess of 25 cents a bushel over the last five years.

Many persons today are endeavouring to discredit the wheat board as the 100 per cent marketing agent for wheat on the ground that the board is responsible for these losses. I would say that the vast majority of the farmers are solidly behind the wheat board as the marketing agency because they realize that it is not responsible for these losses but that the responsibility rests fairly and squarely upon the shoulders of the Canadian government.

I say that for two main reasons. First, it was the Canadian government that signed the British wheat agreement. Moreover—and this is an important point—it was the Canadian government that agreed to ignore the contract under the have regard to clause. Second, the government compelled the wheat board to sell wheat to the Canadian millers at considerably less than the price of class II wheat. In that way they of course have subsidized Canadian consumers. I would say it was largely as a result of these policies that the western agricultural conference at Saskatoon, January 20 to 22, 1949, passed the following resolution which I will quote in part:

> . . . that the Canadian wheat board should be an agency operating in the interests of grain producers, with a duty at all times to sell grain for the best available price whether in export or domestic markets, and should not be used as an instrument of government policy to limit domestic prices.

In other words, they feel the wheat board should be allowed to sell wheat for the highest price they can get, and if it becomes the policy of the government to subsidize the Canadian consumer then the government should pay that cost and not pass it on to the Canadian farmer.

Mr. Howe: Has the resolution my hon. friend read anything to do with wheat?

Mr. Quelch: At the time they were discussing coarse grains.

Mr. Howe: Why not say so?

Mr. Quelch: But they had in mind the losses suffered as a result of having to subsidize the price of wheat to the Canadian consumer, and they did not want that type of policy followed in so far as coarse grains were concerned.

Mr. Howe: Will my hon. friend explain how he knew what they had on their minds?

Mr. Quelch: Because we have discussed it time and again. I have been to various conventions just the same as the minister, and I know very well what they had in mind. A committee came down here to meet us on the very question, and that was the point they made. They did not want a repetition of what had happened under the wheat policy whereby the government forced the farmers to accept the cost of subsidizing the Canadian consumers. They did not want similar action in the handling of coarse grains. They made it very clear when they met us.

First of all I want to take the question of the losses under the British wheat agreement. On the basis of class II wheat the loss, as shown by the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Fair), totalled $431 million in round figures. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) has argued that we supported the agreement because we thought that prices would fall in the later years. Of course the present Minister of Trade and Commerce was not in charge of the department at the time the agreement was signed. His predecessor took a very different stand. He took the stand that we should not ask our former allies to pay the maximum price for wheat. He took the stand that there was a moral obligation on our part to allow our allies to have wheat at less than the world price. At that time we stated that if there was a moral obligation on Canada to allow our former allies to have wheat at less than the world market price then that was the responsibility of the Canadian people, and the Canadian people should pay the cost and not try to pass it on to the Canadian farmers as the government is apparently trying to do today. A year later when the British wheat agreement was introduced we discussed it in this house on the 27th of February, 1947. That was the first time we had an opportunity to discuss it, and at that time I had this to say.

> In the early part of this agreement the farmer is making a considerable sacrifice. He is losing anywhere from 50 cents to 75 cents a bushel.

I was very conservative at that time. I went on:

> If in the next two or three years there is a wheat shortage, if crops are poor, the price of wheat will be maintained at probably a high level and will remain there. Then the guarantee becomes absolutely useless. If that should be the situation over the next two or three years the farmers of this country, as a result of this agreement, are going to lose several hundred million dollars. I believe that the wheat agreement with Britain was fully justified, but it does entail in its early stages a considerable sacrifice on the part of our farmers. We feel that the sacrifice should be borne by the people of Canada as a whole.

Exactly what I pointed out at that time has come about; and as we felt then, we still feel that any loss suffered as a result of allowing our allies in Great Britain to have cheap wheat should be borne by the Canadian people as a whole, not only by the Canadian farmer. However, the real safeguard in the British wheat agreement was the have regard clause; or we thought it was, and it should have been and I believe could have been. We have heard statements to that effect made by members of the British house when on this side, and evidently the full portent of the agreement was fully understood. I want to quote statements made by John Strachey and Sir Stafford Cripps in regard to this clause. In a speech to the Canadian club at Winnipeg on February 26, 1947, Right Hon. John Strachey, the British food minister, after quoting the latter part of clause 2(b), which is the have regard clause, stated:

> Now these words mean neither more nor less than they say. They mean that the fact that we have bought our wheat from you this year below world prices—and that we may do so again next year—will be one of the factors in negotiating the actual prices to be paid in the third and fourth years. I and my government, and I am quite sure that this applies also to the Canadian government, would resist any attempt to add to or to subtract from this clear and definite statement as written into paragraph two subsection (b) of the wheat agreement.

Then in 1949, in an interview given the Canadian Press in London on February 23, Sir Stafford Cripps said:

> As regards wheat we shall continue to depend on Canada for the greater part of our supplies. The four year contract negotiated in 1946 will expire in 1950 and we have recently agreed upon a price of $2 a bushel for the 1949-50 season. We think there is every possibility of the world price falling below the $2 level before the end of the contract either because of the general improvement in the supply position or as a condition of any international wheat agreement which may be concluded in the near future. If this should be the case, the Canadian farmer will enjoy a favoured position by virtue of the fixed price on which we have agreed. This might prove to be a fair compensation for the earlier years when he was selling us wheat at below the world price; it depends, of course, upon how far prices actually fall. But in any case we have agreed to discuss this matter further with the Canadian government some time toward the middle of 1950.

What happened when the representatives of the two countries met to deal with this question referred to by Sir Stafford Cripps? I apologize to the house for repeating what has been read so many times, but in view of the fact that I want to tie another statement to it I feel obliged to quote once more what was said in this house by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) on June 5, 1950, in regard to the agreement reached last year. I want to be very careful about my punctuation and I am quoting from page 3221 of Hansard for last year:

> We went over the agreement while in London. We asked the United Kingdom government what further settlement it is to make on account of the have regard to clause. The United Kingdom took a very strong position that they had fulfilled all obligations under that clause, and so far as the United Kingdom was concerned. We agreed on behalf of Canada that considering all the circumstances that was the case.

The strange point is that the Minister of Trade and Commerce and especially the Minister of Agriculture do not appear to think that was a fair statement. I have always regarded the Minister of Trade and Commerce as a very responsible individual and I do not think that he would get up in this house and make irresponsible statements. Certainly if he made a mistake in unrevised Hansard he could have changed it in revised Hansard; and if he still found that he had made a mistake he could have done as the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Mayhew) did and made a very long correction a few days later. But he did not attempt to do so. Therefore I think we are justified in saying that statement represents what the minister really meant at the time.

I say that for another reason. I think that is actually what happened. I have a press report I am going to read, but before doing so I want to mention the fact that the Minister of Agriculture said he had discussed that statement with some of the British officials and pointed out that it was made during the committee stage, and that they had never referred to it after that. Let me remind him that they are referring to it now. They are making a statement very similar to that made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I am quoting now from the Edmonton Journal of Wednesday, February 28. The clipping refers to a question asked the chancellor of the exchequer, Mr. Gaitskell, by Colonel Crosthwaite-Eyre, regarding the amount of the payment to be made to Canada in the final settlement of the wheat agreement. The reply by Mr. Gaitskell was as follows:

> The matter was fully discussed in May, 1950, with Mr. Howe, and the result is that no further payment is to be made.

So apparently as far as they are concerned an agreement was definitely reached in May, 1950, and as a result of that meeting no further payment was to be made. Of course that is directly in line with the statement made in this house by the Minister of Trade and Commerce in June.

Many people are asking how such an understanding could have been reached in view of all the circumstances. What was Britain's argument as to why no further payments should be made? This was the situation. In the third year of the agreement the price of class 2 wheat was $2.23, as recorded in the report of the wheat board. The price paid by Britain was $2, so in the third year we actually lost 23 cents a bushel. In the fourth year, as a result of the international wheat agreement, we may say, the price was $1.80 in U.S.A. funds. Britain paid us $2, so actually we gained 20 cents per bushel in the fourth year. But we had lost 23 cents per bushel in the third year, so we may say that in the third and fourth years the losses and gains balanced, though actually the losses were greater. That is all right as far as the third and fourth years are concerned; but what about the have regard clause under which in settling the final price consideration would be given to the losses suffered in the first two years? In those two years the losses amounted to $375,618,000 according to figures in the wheat board report; a full statement has been put on Hansard by the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Fair). That is based upon class 2 wheat. What was Britain's argument at that time in refusing to make any payment in regard to that $375 million? That is a question I think should be explained in this house at some time.

Mr. Gardiner: If I may ask a question, does my hon. friend say that in the wheat board report the figure of $375 million appears, or does he mean that the hon. member has figured it out from the figures that are there?

Mr. Quelch: Yes; in the annual report of the wheat board they give the amount of class 2 wheat and the price at which it was sold, and based upon those figures this is the loss. I quite agree that the wheat board report does not call this the amount of the loss. It just shows the price of class 2 wheat and the amount of wheat sold at that price. In addition there are the losses incurred in subsidizing the Canadian consumer. That information was obtained from sessional papers tabled in return to questions that were asked.

Many of us feel that there must be more to this than appears on the surface. What we would like to know is, did the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe)—I am not saying this in a critical way necessarily—have some other important deals to be put over at that time? Did he say to the British, "Now, if you will put these deals through I will be willing to accept the final settlement of the British wheat agreement as it is"? That is in the minds of lots of people today. I am not saying it is correct, but that is what a lot of people believe must have been the situation, otherwise they cannot understand how Britain would refuse to make any further payments under this contract.

I believe it probably would have been better to send the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) over there last year, because after all the Minister of Agriculture was present when this agreement was signed originally, and has been present during all the discussions. He is thoroughly familiar with the whole situation, and further he is thoroughly familiar with the whole operation of agriculture. He realizes the trials that agriculture has suffered in the past. I am not for one minute questioning the ability of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. We all know that he has a great deal of ability, but I do not think he was the right man for this job. There is another reason why I think it was a mistake to send the Minister of Trade and Commerce over there, and that is because he has a very peculiar idea of what is the world price. He does not agree that class II wheat was the world price. I should like to know what he would call a world price. The other day he stated that in view of the fact most of the wheat was sold under the British wheat agreement, that should be considered as the world price. But that would make the have regard to clause meaningless.

Then, the Minister of Trade and Commerce has made it quite clear that he does not agree with long-term agreements. He is sceptical about any agreement under which you contract in advance to deliver wheat.

Mr. Howe: I am sure my hon. friend does not want to misrepresent my position.

Mr. Quelch: Not at all.

Mr. Howe: I went to England to work out an arrangement for the sale of the 1950 wheat crop. Those arrangements were made, and made without any discussion of any other subject.

Mr. Quelch: Will the minister—

Mr. Howe: Now, just keep quiet. You asked for this, so let me give it to you. After the arrangements were made for the sale of the 1950 wheat crop, I was asked to discuss the settlement of the four year wheat agreement. I said I had no authority to discuss it, and certainly no authority to settle it. If they wanted to tell me their views I would report them to my government. They told me their views, and I gave the views of the Canadian government as I understood them. I brought back a message to the Canadian government. That is my position, and I wish my hon. friend would not distort it. I have stated it three times already.

Mr. Quelch: It is very peculiar that the Minister of Trade and Commerce and Mr. Gaitskell should be suffering from hallucinations. Here we have a statement by Mr. Gaitskell which says that an agreement was reached. Then the Minister of Trade and Commerce says no agreement was reached. Then there is the statement I read a moment ago which is based on the statement made by the chancellor of the exchequer.

Mr. Howe: The chancellor of the exchequer says that the agreement was discussed with Mr. Howe. He does not say "settled".

Mr. Quelch: It says "the matter was thoroughly discussed with Mr. Howe, and the result is that no further payment is to be made". The result of that discussion with Mr. Howe, not with the Canadian cabinet, but the result of that discussion with Mr. Howe is that no further payment will be made. You could not have anything much more definite than that. If the minister wants to say that Mr. Gaitskell is having hallucinations—

Mr. Howe: Is my hon. friend willing to take my statement or not, that I did not discuss the settlement? I am saying that I listened to a discussion, that discussion was reduced to a memorandum and I brought it back to my government. Does my hon. friend want to go behind that statement?

Mr. Quelch: The minister has asked me a question, so I will ask him one. Are you saying that Mr. Strachey is a liar?

Mr. Howe: Yes, what did Mr. Strachey say?

Mr. Quelch: It is Mr. Gaitskell, I am sorry.

Mr. Howe: Mr. Gaitskell has stated the situation correctly. He stated the matter was discussed with me.

Mr. Quelch: He did not say that. He said that as a result of the discussions with Mr. Howe no further payment will be made. Do you want me to read it again?

The matter was fully discussed in May, 1950, with Mr. Howe and the result is that no further payment is to be made.

I shall drop the matter at that point. I believe the record pretty well speaks for itself. If people cannot find that statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce in June, 1950, they will not be looking through Hansard very thoroughly because I am afraid it has been referred to a number of times.

Mr. Howe: The Minister of Trade and Commerce has never at any time intimated that he wished to change the statement he made in June, 1950.

Mr. Quelch: You do not want to change the statement you made in June, 1950? Then it stands?

Mr. Howe: Of course it stands.

Mr. Quelch: Then I have nothing to take back at all. If you accept that statement, you accept the statement by Mr. Gaitskell; then fine, an agreement was reached in May, 1950, that no other payment should be made. Well, that is fine; now we all agree.

Mr. Gardiner: Perhaps I had better explain this matter.

Mr. Knowles: Don't spoil the unanimity.

Mr. Gardiner: If I may be permitted to explain it, but if it is preferred I could speak after my friend has finished.

Mr. Quelch: I am afraid my time is going to be cut very short.

Mr. Warren: It cannot be too short.

Mr. Quelch: As I say, the sixty-four dollar question today is why did Britain refuse to make further payments in regard to the losses of the first two years? The British have a good name for standing by their agreements. There must be some reason for their refusal to make any payment on the losses in the first two years, losses which amounted to $375 million on the basis of past deliveries.

Mr. Warren: That is your guess.

Mr. Quelch: It is not a guess at all, it is based upon figures.

Mr. Warren: Oh, no, it is only a guess.

Mr. Quelch: It is absolutely based on figures. If the hon. member will read Hansard tomorrow he will see the table. Mr. Speaker, I am afraid the member for Renfrew North (Mr. Warren) is not so bright tonight; he must have blown a fuse.

There is also the question of losses suffered as a result of the wheat board being compelled to sell the miller in the first instance at less than prices under the British wheat agreement, and then later on at less than the price of class II wheat. Those losses amount to around $130 million, if you ignore the fourth year of the British wheat agreement. I know the minister interrupted the member for Calgary East (Mr. Harkness) to say that according to the wheat pool those losses are only $48 million. This loss of $48 million only refers to the loss suffered as a result of selling wheat to the millers at less than the price in the British wheat agreement, but if you take the price for class II wheat and the losses suffered on wheat delivered at that price, it amounts to $130 million for the first three years.

Mr. Warren: Another guess.

Mr. Quelch: Now, what possible decision can there be for asking that the farmers stand the full amount of these losses, unless it is to be part of a general stabilization plan? I am satisfied that the farmers would be quite willing to forget about any further payment, in so far as subsidizing the Canadian consumer is concerned, if in return prices are to be stabilized at a fair level in the future. After all, the farmers were asked to take a price below the world price during the war as part of the government's general stabilization program in return for which they were guaranteed that there would be stabilization in the future. We do not have that guarantee in any legislation, because it is not so stated in the Agricultural Prices Support Act. I am very glad that we have that act, and I think it is a good act. I still think, and I believe the Minister of Agriculture will agree that there needs to be further clarification of that point as to just what the basis of the support prices will be. He knows that the federation of agriculture has asked that it should be based upon parity. The federation of agriculture has agreed to meet with the minister or with the government and help to formulate a basis for a parity year, but to date that has not been done; and until it is done, agricultural price support is an uncertain quantity.

Mr. Warren: What is parity?

Mr. Quelch: As I say, not only have we not had a stabilization program put into operation, but we found that when the price of wheat was set in 1950—that is, when the initial payment was made in 1950—at $1.40, the minister refused to set it any higher because he said that it represented the floor price and he did not want to take the chance of having a loss. Surely if this was to be part of a stabilization program, then in view of the tremendous losses that had been suffered by the farmers in the past, they would have been justified in expecting a higher initial payment than $1.40.

But the minister stated that he was not prepared at that time to put it higher because it might mean a loss if the price of wheat fell; and he was not prepared to adopt any policy that might result in a loss to the government. I know that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) thinks that the farmers during the last five years have had a better price for wheat than they have ever had before. But that is only half the story. It is no good talking about the farmers having had a better price during this past five years than they ever had before unless at the same time you also stress the fact that their costs of production were also higher than they had even been before. The two are definitely tied together, and you cannot separate them. If you go back twenty years, you can readily see why many farmers felt that they should nave been allowed the highest price they could get during the war; because during the depression years, during those ten years when prices went so low—for instance, in 1932 the price of wheat fell to 19½ cents a bushel—the farmers were told time and again that they could not expect to get a higher price than the world price. But what happened when the war came along? Prices rose slightly during the first three years of the war; then in 1942 the government heavily increased taxation. Then the farmers found themselves in the peculiar position of having to pay an income tax on the repayment of losses incurred as a result of having to sell their produce at prices far below the cost of production. Then a few years later prices rose higher. At just about the time that prices got really good—when the farmers thought, now, here is the real chance to recover the losses we suffered during the depression years—the government put a ceiling on farm prices. I think the farmers are justified in saying: All right, you cannot have it both ways. If we have got to accept the world price in the depression years, we are entitled to the world price when prices are high. The government decided not to allow the farmers to have world prices during the war. But in return they guaranteed them that in the future they would have stabilized prices. The farmers expected the government to live up to that promise. But so far there is not much assurance that the government intends to do so. First of all, they tried to get rid of the agricultural price support. They had a resolution on the order paper to end it this parliament. But I am glad to say they reinstated it; but it is still of a nebulous character.

I want to say a few words with regard to the international wheat agreement. Personally I am much in favour of a long-term international wheat agreement and I believe that the farm organizations support it; but they expect that when an international agreement is signed, the payment should be on a sound basis. I am sure the Minister of Trade and Commerce would be the first to admit that the method of payment under the international wheat agreement is not on a sound basis. I heard him speak in Calgary. He said he did not like selling wheat a year ahead of delivery.

What is the payment under the international wheat agreement? It provides for a ceiling of $1.80 a bushel for four years. Then it provides that the floor will be dropped ten cents in each year; $1.40 the first year, $1.30 the second year, $1.20 the third year and $1.10 the fourth year. Why should the floor under wheat drop if everything else is going up? Why should the ceiling be held down at any given level if everything else is going up? Why should the price of wheat be frozen in a case of that kind?

We are not just being wise at the present moment on this point. Back in 1948, when the international agreement was then being discussed in this house, we argued that the price under the international wheat agreement should be tied to the price level; that is, in the first year you agree upon the payment or price that is to be paid; then in subsequent years, those payments should be tied to your price level so that if the price level goes up 10 per cent, the price of wheat goes up 10 per cent; or if the price level goes down 10 per cent, then the price of wheat goes down 10 per cent. In that way you would have the price of wheat tied to the general price level. In other words, you could very well have a parity price. I should like to quote what I said in this house on February 27, 1948, when we were discussing wheat policy. As reported as page 1694 of Hansard I said:

> The grain trade have used the British wheat agreement as the basis upon which to attack the principle of long term international agreements. They forget that the British wheat agreement was not a straight business deal, but was in part to help our allies, as was indicated at the time the minister brought down his early wheat legislation; therefore all the Canadian people should have stood the cost of the sacrifice and the farmers should not be expected to bear the burden. The grain trade criticized the long term agreements between countries on the grounds that whilst a certain price might be fair today it might be out of line tomorrow due to a rise or fall in the price level. That is true, and that is why we have argued that when prices are agreed upon they should be tied to the price level of the country with which the agreement is made. Then, if the price level rises the price of wheat will rise and vice versa if the price level falls. The result of that would be of course that our wheat would always bring back the same amount of imports. It would help to insulate the Canadian economy against fluctuation in world prices.

We still feel the same way. We feel that any long-term agreements that are signed should be signed on that basis. First of all agree to a price which both parties are satisfied with and then tie that price to the general price level so that it will fluctuate with the price level. Otherwise you are bound to have happen what happened under the British wheat agreement where the government guessed wrong or to have a situation similar to that we are having under the present international wheat agreement where everything else is going up and yet the price of wheat is tied down.

Mr. Howe: There are forty-six countries in the wheat agreement. Where would my hon. friend find the index that would govern?

Mr. Quelch: I think if you consult the international monetary fund, you will find that they could give you the price index of any member of that fund. They have that information at all times. There would be no difficulty in obtaining that information.

Mr. Howe: Do they have a composite price that would govern each of the forty-six countries?

An hon. Member: Explain it to him with a period.

Mr. Quelch: If you are on a bilateral basis, there would be no difficulty. You would have the price level of the country you are dealing with and you would be trading goods for goods. If their price level went up, then of course they would be paying you more and you would be paying a higher price for their goods in turn but your imports and exports would balance in that regard. If the minister would prefer not to relate it to the price level of the importing nation, it could be tied up to the general price level. But I think it should be tied to the price level of the importing country so that you can balance your trade on a bilateral basis. I know that the minister has a different view from mine on the question of multilateral trade. I believe there is a responsibility on the part of the exporting nation to see to it that the credit it establishes in any country is cleared either by importing goods from that country or by trading that credit to some other country in return for goods.

There has been a good deal of comparison between the agricultural policies of this country and the agricultural policies in the United States. I was quite interested in a statement that appeared in the Alberta Wheat Pool Budget of February 23, 1951, which reads as follows:

> The United States government policy provides for farm price supports not only for wheat but for a whole range of key farm products. The investment in farm price support was over $4 billion last summer in that country and the limit has been raised to $6½ billion. If Canada wants to make a comparative investment in farm price supports on a population basis, the total would be nearly $600 million. The actual Canadian government investment for such a purpose has been less than $10 million.

Now, in conclusion I should like to make one brief reference to a statement made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) when he spoke in the house yesterday. I agree with much that the minister said. In fact, the first part of his speech built up a very strong argument for the carrying out of the have regard to clause. Then, strangely enough, toward the end he reversed his stand completely and took the stand that there should not be any further payments from Great Britain, because he tried to show that the price of wheat in the world pool was $1.82 and that the price under the British wheat agreement was $1.82, and that they balanced, after the $65 million had been added to the British wheat agreement. So according to the argument of the Minister of Agriculture that $65 million balances the price of wheat in the world pool and in the British wheat agreement pool.

The minister's statement as it is reported at page 1068 of Hansard is:

> The British contract, as it has been settled with the payment of $65 million, brings $1.82 into the pool. The sale of wheat to Canadians, and all other people outside the British contract, brought $1.82 a bushel into the pool.

Then the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Wright) asked this question:

> Does that $1.82 include the 160 million bushels sold on the domestic market?

To that the minister replied:

> Oh yes, it does.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me perfectly fantastic that you would include wheat sold for domestic consumption in the world price of wheat. The stand taken by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) is very different; he took the opposite stand. I should like to quote what he said on June 5, 1950, as it is reported at page 3184 of unrevised Hansard. He was discussing the world price for wheat, and said:

> It seems to me the price at which the bulk of the wheat is bought and paid for might well be regarded as the world price, and I therefore suggest that it would be much more reasonable to call the price under the United Kingdom-Canada agreement the world price than the price quoted on the Chicago exchange. The latter was merely a domestic price—

He said it would not be fair to call the Chicago market price the world price, because it is just a domestic price. Yet here the Minister of Agriculture includes the price of wheat sold for domestic consumption in Canada, and calls it the world price. Those two ministers had better get together.

Mr. Howe: May I ask a question?

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Quelch: I realize that the Minister of Agriculture had a real tough proposition when he tried to make that speech last night. He was very unhappy about the whole situation. Nobody believes more than the Minister of Agriculture that further payments should be made under the British wheat agreement. His whole argument was built up to show that further payments should be made under the have regard to clause.

Then at the end he tried to save the government.

Mr. Warren: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Quelch: Sit down, sit down.

Mr. Warren: I would like to ask a question.

Mr. Quelch: Sit down; I am not interested. I cannot hear you, anyway. I think the Minister of Agriculture was in the same position as a minister of the church. The story goes that he had notes, and that in the margin there was the notation "when the argument is weak, yell like hell." Well, the minister spoke like hell—and, not only that, his whole argument sounded like hell.

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to make another speech; but I wish in the first place, after having read Hansard of last night—

An hon. Member: Unrevised or revised?

Mr. Gardiner: —and after having tried to review my own Hansard of today, I wish to apologize to the house for having attempted to discuss any part of the question while there was so much noise going on that I am sure that those who were trying to take down what was being said were not able to take it down. We should know better, particularly one who has been in the house as long as I have, than to try to discuss a matter as important as the one being discussed, under those conditions. I wish to apologize both to the house and to the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Wright) for having carried on a discussion of that kind at that time, and to clarify what I was attempting to say at the time, and which I find I did not say very well—and I am sure left an entirely wrong impression upon Hansard.

The question that was under discussion and which had been—

Mr. Coldwell: Is this a speech or privilege?

Mr. Gardiner: It could be a speech, because an amendment has been moved. But it is not going to be.

Mr. Coldwell: Is it privilege?

Mr. Gardiner: It will be the only speech I will make on this amendment.

Mr. Coldwell: All right.

Mr. Gardiner: But it will not be long. As a matter of fact I wished to take advantage of my opportunity to speak on the amendment—I had not spoken on it before—in order to place on Hansard what I was attempting to say to the house last night, and again today on two different occasions, while the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Wright) was speaking, and later while the hon. member for Calgary East (Mr. Harkness) was speaking.

I attempted last night to indicate to the house in reply to a question asked me by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) what discussion had taken place between myself and members of the British government with regard to what the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) was presumed to have said in the house on June 5.

I stated at that time that I had unrevised Hansard with me, and that I had called attention of the British ministers to the nature of the Hansard, and that it was obvious that there was an uncompleted sentence in the report of Hansard.

Now, we who speak in the house from time to time, and who correct our Hansard, know that does occur quite often. Last night when we were in the middle of a discussion I was under the impression—and I find now, when I read Hansard, wrongly under the impression—that the hon. member for Melfort had said that the sentence as it appears in the revised Hansard is different from the one which appears in the unrevised Hansard. I find there is no difference between them whatsoever. And one of the remarks which caused me to think that all the more was the remark made by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar to the effect that either the minister or his secretary corrects Hansard, and revised Hansard is the one you should quote from. That gave me the further impression that there was a difference in the two. There is no difference.

Mr. Coldwell: I had not either before me.

Mr. Gardiner: I had this one, but not the other one. I find the sentence reads like this—the first sentence—and perhaps I should begin where most others have begun:

> We asked the United Kingdom government what further settlement it is to make on account of the "have regard to" clause. The United Kingdom government took a very strong position that they had fulfilled all obligations under that clause, and so far as the United Kingdom was concerned.

The sentence stops there. It is obvious that is not the end of it.

Mr. Coldwell: Read the next sentence to it.

Mr. Gardiner: Wait until I say what I said to the British government. I said to the British government that the sentence in my opinion was stated this way—and I said I listened carefully at the time, and I was satisfied that this was what the minister said: The United Kingdom government took a very strong position that they had fulfilled all obligations under that clause, and so far as the United Kingdom was concerned they did not intend to pay more.

That was my impression of what was said—that the United Kingdom government had said they did not intend to pay more. The next sentence is one which is also read, and which was read last night as though it were all one sentence:

We agreed on behalf of Canada—

Mr. Wright: I did not read that.

Mr. Gardiner: Let us not get them confused again:

We agreed on behalf of Canada that considering all the circumstances that was the case.

The impression I gathered from that when it was said here and the impression I explained to the British government that I thought was intended, was that under all the circumstances the Canadian government had come to the conclusion—I said so last night—unanimously that since the British government had taken the position that they were not going to pay, there was nothing we could do about it. That was the impression I gave to them and I stated that last night. I am sorry the hon. member for Acadia has got a wrong impression of what I was attempting to say.

I did not say that no one had taken a different position later, but I did say that the British government during the discussions that were carried on for the next three or four days never did attempt again to indicate that they thought that the Canadian government had agreed with them in their decision. The impression that I was attempting to give to them was that we understood the British government had decided they were not going to pay more.

Mr. Quelch: Why did Mr. Gaitskell make the statement I am quoting?

Mr. Gardiner: The statement which Mr. Gaitskell made was made on the following Monday after our discussions were completed. Mr. Gaitskell said just exactly what the Minister of Trade and Commerce read to the house a moment ago. If Mr. Gaitskell had intended to say what my hon. friends are trying to put into his mouth after we had discussed the question during the preceding three or four days, if he had intended to say what is being said in this house now that he intended to say, he would have said it. He did not say any such thing.

Mr. Wright: He said what he said.

Mr. Gardiner: This is the newspaper report:

Gaitskell was asked in Commons what additional sum was payable to Canada in view of the contracted price and the world price of wheat during the last two years of the contract.

"None," Gaitskell replied. "The matter was fully discussed in 1950 with Mr. Howe and the result was that no further payment will be made."

That does not say that Mr. Howe agreed with it.

Mr. Coldwell: The words are, "was to be made". I have the British Hansard here.

Mr. Gardiner: I have not a copy of the British Hansard, but it is "will be made" in this report which has appeared all across Canada.

Mr. Coldwell: I have the British Hansard.

Mr. Gardiner: Read it.

Mr. Coldwell: This reads:

The matter was discussed in May, 1950, with Mr. Howe and the result was that no further payment was to be made.

Mr. Gardiner: He does not say that Mr. Howe agreed to that. That is what is being said in this house, that the Minister of Trade and Commerce agreed to it. Mr. Gaitskell does not say that at all.

Mr. Knowles: You should have left it alone.

Mr. Gardiner: He simply said that a decision was reached, and nothing more than that.

Mr. Coldwell: The Minister of Trade and Commerce said today that he brought back a memorandum in May 1950 which related to this matter. Did the government approve of that memorandum?

Mr. Gardiner: The government approved of just exactly what I am saying and of what I said last night. They approved of it unanimously. The memorandum did not say what my hon. friends are saying.

Mr. Coldwell: Did the memorandum consist of a minute of the meeting between the minister and the British government?

Mr. Gardiner: Yes, but the minute did not say what my hon. friends are trying to read into it.

Mr. Coldwell: Will the government produce the relevant part of the minute?

Mr. Gardiner: That is another thing. You would need to have the consent of two governments for that and I am not prepared to say whether they will give it. I am saying to my hon. friend that there is no ground in it for the interpretations that are being put on anything that took place, either in the discussions over there or in the government here. The fact is that the British government accepted the position that this government did not agree. That has been placed before them very clearly on two or three occasions since.

Mr. Coldwell: Why did not the Minister of Agriculture say that when the Minister of Trade and Commerce made his statement in the house? We heard no denial of the statement for weeks, indeed for months.

Mr. Gardiner: It is not denying the statement. I am simply pointing out now that Hansard could not possibly be correct. One hon. member came across the floor tonight to show me a report that was made this afternoon and which was not in accordance with what was said in the house. That happens continuously. We are sometimes responsible when we make as much noise as we made last night, although I was not making all the noise on that occasion. I simply state there—

Mr. Coldwell: Will the minister permit one more question? I think the minister's quotation of what the minister said on June 5 indicates either an extraordinary memory or the minister must have a note of it. Did the minister make a note of what the Minister of Trade and Commerce said?

Mr. Gardiner: I certainly made a note in my mind because there was not anyone in this house who was more concerned with what was being said than I was. I had carried on the discussions in connection with it and I listened very carefully to what was being said. I was satisfied when the Minister of Trade and Commerce made his statement that he did say just what I have said to this house. The report in Hansard is obviously not a correct report. All I am saying is that hon. members should not insist on quoting as a statement of policy or as a decision of the government a report which is obviously incorrectly stated.

Mr. Coldwell: May I say this to the minister—

Mr. Gardiner: I am not speaking of the British Hansard, I am speaking of the Canadian Hansard.

Mr. Coldwell: I think it is of the greatest importance to our relations with the British government and people that the memorandum to which the minister has referred, that is the Minister of Trade and Commerce, which I believe is a minute, should be produced here so that the people of Canada may know what the truth of this is when there is such a difference in the statements between that of the Minister of Agriculture and the British government.

Mr. Gardiner: That is another matter. I do not agree that there is any difference between the minister and the British government; the difference is between members opposite and the members on this side of the house as to what was said. It is simply because there is an incorrect report of what was said in Hansard.

Mr. Knowles: Are you casting doubt on the Hansard reporters?

Mr. Gardiner: The report is incorrect and obviously incorrect. The hon. member's interpretation of it is not the correct interpretation.

Mr. Coldwell: I have had letters already from western Canada saying that some people will boycott British goods on account of the manner in which the British have treated the western farmers. This matter should be cleared up at once.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Some members have said that they do not blame them.

Mr. Coldwell: Some members of the house say they do not blame them. That being the situation, this government should produce the memorandum of May 1950 and show exactly what the situation is.

Mr. Gardiner: The only other point I am going to deal with at all is the one that was raised by the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch) and which was referred to by the hon. member for Calgary East (Mr. Harkness). I think it was stated by both of them, but the statement by the hon. member for Acadia is more easily referred to as it was more recently made. He has stated that I built up a good case in the early part of my speech last night for the contention that the British government owed us something or owed the farmers of western Canada something. That is exactly what I was attempting to do. I was attempting to build up a good case for the position that the four year contract did make it necessary for the British government to pay some attention to the difference which did exist as between the price paid and what might be called the world price, although not on the basis of just any interpretation that you like to put on the world price. Well, having built up that case to show that the western farmers had some reason for believing that they were entitled to some payment, I had stated on different occasions—as a matter of fact I stated it in Great Britain—that one of the reasons why they had the right to believe that was because I myself had so stated it, a member of the British government had so stated it, and it had been stated by a great many people that they were entitled to something. If they were not then we had misrepresented the case and I did not wish to be considered as one who had misrepresented the case in connection with the matter.

Having said that, and having proven to my own satisfaction, if not to the satisfaction of this house, that the farmers were entitled to some further payment, I then went on to try to show that, so far as I am concerned personally—and I could be wrong but after all I was the minister responsible for making the contract and for making representations to the government of Canada and the British government with regard to it—I had taken the position, all through negotiations in 1947 and 1948 for further payments as a result of any losses that might have been taken in the first two years, that we did not agree with the contention that there had been a loss of $330 million on any basis that you like to take it. I had said that on other occasions out in the country in western Canada, in the discussions in Great Britain and everywhere.

We started off all our negotiations by saying: We are not going to ask the British government to consider paying $330 million because there is no sound basis upon which you can ask for a payment of that kind. Having said that—and I think probably I should give the house the exact figures that were used because this is a matter that is going to be discussed a great deal—I said to them that so far as we were concerned on the most favourable terms to Great Britain we figured the actual difference to be $166 million.

An hon. Member: How did you get that figure?

Mr. Gardiner: I got that by taking the actual figures that the United States farmers got for their wheat during the period and comparing them with the actual figures that the farmers of this country got for their wheat.

An hon. Member: Well—

Mr. Gardiner: Let me complete it. Do not get me confused on this or you will be confused. Then I said that the average difference between the price that Canadian farmers had received and the price that United States farmers had received for fifteen years prior to the agreement—and the greater part of that time we had the open market, if you like to call it that, or any other name that you like to apply to the exchange marketing system—had been 15 cents higher to United States farmers than to Canadian farmers. Therefore I said it was quite a reasonable thing to say that under any other system it would have been 15 cents lower in Canada during the four years of the contract.

If you take that figure then you find there is $48 million that should be deducted from losses in the first two years. That brings us down to $118 million. I went on to say: We are not going to attempt to prove that any figure short of a round figure is a reasonable figure to be asking under the terms of an agreement such as this, and therefore we are of opinion that $100 million would settle the bill. The British government was not inclined to accept that figure. The only figure that was ever used by them in discussing the matter which would indicate what they thought was a figure which could be proposed when we were discussing the 1949 settlement amounted to $70 million.

That figure resulted from a proposal that we accept $2 a bushel for our wheat for the year, but if the average price of wheat dropped down to $1.50 a bushel then the difference between the $2 and the $1.50 was to be considered a final settlement of the have regard to clause. That is $70 million. Fifty cents a bushel on 140 million bushels of wheat for 1949 was suggested as a possible full settlement. That sum was discussed and talked about. Finally we were in the position in connection with the matter where we had said: $100 million will settle it. Another proposal had been made that we might consider $70 million a settlement, and what I said at the end of my speech last night was that under the arrangement which was made for the final year there might have been a settlement of $35 million.

On the figures that were presented this afternoon by my friend across the way, the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe), that amount would work down to $16 million, and I so used the figure last night. If you take into consideration the fact that we did get $1.98 a bushel for our wheat owing to the fact that there was devaluation of the pound, then the sum that we did obtain under that arrangement was $16 million and not $35 million. What I said last night was that we had indicated a willingness to accept the position that there had been an adjustment to the extent of $35 million resulting from the fact that the price under the international agreement was $1.80 and we got $2.05.

When you take all these facts into consideration, that we had asked $100 million, that they could claim, by having all the arguments on their side allowed, to have settled $35 million, there was still $65 million owing, and that $65 million has been paid. So far as the farmer is concerned it can be argued that the matter has been settled in the same manner as it would have been settled if Great Britain had made all the settlement that we asked them to make when we were in the midst of these discussions. I think that should be made clear to the house. I made it as clear as I thought I was going to be able to make it in forty minutes last night, and I left it in the position in which it was when I prepared the speech.

I think these facts should be placed before the house. I am not sure that these terms would have been accepted by the government because they did not get to the position where the British had accepted them. But it leaves me in the position where I must say to this house, to the country at large and to the farmers out west that the settlement we asked was $100 million, and there is an argument to the effect that $35 million of it was put up. That leaves $65 million to be paid by someone, and the government of Canada paid it. That is the exact position as it stands, and I do not think anyone needs to make any apologies for it. There can be an argument that it is not enough but there are arguments to the effect that it is enough. However, those can be put up at some other time.

Mr. J. A. Ross (Souris): Mr. Speaker, apparently there still exists a bit of misunderstanding between the two responsible ministers. When I spoke last night, and on other occasions, I quoted from Hansard where the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) distinctly stated on the 5th of June that no further settlement was expected from the United Kingdom. Apparently we did not get that cleared up, and will not do so until we receive the documents that have been requested by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell). Until they are produced there will be this great difference.

Then in regard to the discourse by the right hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) as to the losses in the first two years of the agreement, I used the figure of $330 million, and I broke that down as between the two years. Those figures were based upon a statement to be found at page 5899 of Hansard for July 17, 1947, by the then minister of trade and commerce. Apparently now there is a difference between the Minister of Agriculture and that minister. When I was speaking last evening I said something about an amendment to the wheat board act which was passed in 1947, providing for the five year wheat pool, 1945 to 1950. It was retroactive legislation. Members of this party proposed an amendment to the legislation creating the five year pool, but we were voted down by supporters of this government. When the right hon. Minister of Agriculture was speaking last night he had this to say, at page 1059 of Hansard:

> The hon. member for Souris a few moments ago referred to some resolution that was passed the next year, 1946—

The minister said 1946, but I think that was what he referred to.

> —and made reference to some statement that this government took the 1945 crop into the five year pool. This government did nothing of the kind.
> Mr. Speaker, this government in 1945 on the 19th of September had the Minister of Trade and Commerce of that time get up in the house and announce a five year pool . . .

Then he went on to develop that to a considerable extent. I realize that they were operating then by order in council, but to prove that I was not as ridiculously wrong as the minister would have the house believe, and that I did have some idea of what I was talking about, I looked up Hansard for 1947. On February 18 of that year, at page 575, the minister was introducing the amendment to the wheat board act, and in his remarks he said:

> The general purposes of the proposed amendment to the Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1935, are as follows:
> 1. To authorize the regulation by the Canadian wheat board of the interprovincial and export trade in wheat for the purpose of meeting the requirements of the wheat contract with the United Kingdom;
> 2. To make a corresponding adjustment in the pool period in relation to the wheat contract with the United Kingdom;
> 3. To make necessary changes in the provisions fixing the price to be paid to producers of wheat by the Canadian wheat board;
> 4. To permit the board with the special approval of the governor in council to deal in grains other than wheat.
> With respect to wheat, the proposed amendments authorize the regulation of the interprovincial and export trade in wheat by the board and the conduct of all such trading through the board until July 31, 1950. In regard to other grains, the amendment enables the board, with the approval of the governor in council, to buy, sell, and deal in other grains.
> In addition to making provision for implementing the wheat contract with the United Kingdom, the proposed amendments provide for a five year pool period from August 1, 1945, until July 31, 1950, during which time producers of wheat are guaranteed a fixed initial price of $1.35 a bushel.

So I think it is clear enough that what I said was correct. Why the minister should ridicule that statement and say what he did, I do not know, but there is the proof.

Then there was the matter of these figures and how they were arrived at. When the minister was speaking he said that anyone making speeches in this house with the idea of encouraging some change by saying the farmers have lost $300 million or $600 million, as the notion takes him, is wasting his time. He went on to say that if we spoke with some of the farmers of western Canada before making such speeches we would know better because no one in the west believes it. Well, apparently a great many farmers and some farm organizations do believe it. Then at the end of his argument the minister said that any such arguments were a ridiculous attempt to mislead the farmers. I resented that statement, and said that I usually gathered my own information and figured these amounts myself. Then he went on to say on page 1069:

I want to congratulate the hon. member upon getting them so close to those that the Free Press and the grain exchange worked out.

I think that statement was rather uncalled for. I presume these ministers realize that on March 6, not many days ago, the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Trade and Commerce tabled the report of the Canadian wheat board for the crop year 1949-50. In spite of the differences we find in this wheat discussion as between the two principal ministers concerned, I hope they will both believe figures taken from that report. It has not been released for distribution yet, but at page 19 there is a set of figures giving the high price, the low price and the average selling price for several crop years, as follows:

Crop Year	High	Low	Average Selling Price
1945-46	$1 55	$1 55	$1 55
1946-47	3 10	2 05	2 43
1947-48	3 45	2 37	2 88
1948-49	2 48	1 91	2 23

If you add the average selling prices for those five years and divide them by five you get an average price for the five year pool of $2.17. I want to admit right away that prior to this we did not have any authentic information, and in previous arguments I had estimated that the average loss might be 50 cents a bushel. In all fairness I must say that this report, giving the average selling price for that period of $2.17, as compared with the figure given by the minister of $1.82 as the average paid the producers, shows a difference of 35 cents per bushel. On a total of 1,435 million bushels, in round figures, that gives a loss of over $502 million. That compares with the estimate of $500 million we have made as to the losses suffered. Those figures will be found in the wheat board report which will be printed and distributed to all members in this house in due course. I presume the minister will accept those figures. That gives you some idea of the difference in the loss between what the Minister of Agriculture states the farmer will receive when this $65 million is distributed along with what they have left in the kitty.

Then, as to the statement that these western farmers are probably satisfied, this afternoon the member for Calgary East (Mr. Harkness) mentioned that the members of the Alberta legislature had voted unanimously 46 to nothing, Liberals and everyone else with no party line drawn, to urge the federal government to make a further substantial final payment to western farmers to pay for wheat delivered under the British agreement. The Saskatchewan federation of agriculture—and the Saskatchewan people will know more about their importance and membership than I do—decided yesterday that a delegation would come to Ottawa to claim a more equitable settlement of the five year wheat pool. Some mention has been made about $48 million to cover the losses on the sale of domestic wheat. I believe this covers a two-year period from March 1, 1945, to February 17, 1947. The three prairie wheat pools—I do not think the Minister of Agriculture will say they are not important—met in Regina one day this week, and after some discussion decided to ask for an additional $48 million to cover the loss.

Mr. Gardiner: Not on this deal.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Not on this deal, but on the payment to the farmers for domestic losses.

Mr. Gardiner: This is what we are talking about, not the other thing at all.

Mr. Ross (Souris): I admit that up until now I have been discussing the other deal, but I think this is all part of the loss to these people because based on the pool about which we have been talking was created the policy for the price of domestic wheat sold to the people of this country. I think that is correct. The farmers were tied to it when other controls were taken off. If there is any doubt about it, I shall just read the report which appears in one of the daily newspapers. It reads as follows:

The three prairie wheat pools said the federal government should assume full responsibility for the obligation contained in the adjustment clause of the Anglo-Canadian wheat agreement.

In addition, the pools called for payment of $48 million to cover losses which it said wheat growers suffered because of the government's wartime domestic wheat subsidy policy.

Boards of the wheat pools of Saskatchewan, Alberta, and Manitoba met to consider the federal government's announcement last week that a final payment of 8·3 cents a bushel will be made under the five-year wheat pool. A statement said:

"The Canadian wheat pools are of the opinion that the final payment announced of 8·3 cents per bushel on 1,428,000 bushels of wheat, delivered by farmers to the 1945-49 pool, cannot be considered a satisfactory one.

"The proposed payment only partially meets what we believe to be the United Kingdom commitment under the 'have regard to' clause of the contract, and it should not be forgotten that during the period March 1, 1945, to February 17, 1947, approximately 160,000,000 bushels of wheat were used for domestic consumption and western farmers subsidized the consumer to the extent of 30 cents on every bushel of wheat used during the period.

"Producers subsidized the price from $1.55 down to $1.25 and the federal government subsidized it further from $1.25 to 77⅞ cents. This policy provided a direct subsidy of $48 million to the Canadian consumer by the western farmer.

"In other words, the federal government adopted a subsidy policy for wheat and assessed $48 million of the cost to the wheat producers of western Canada.

"It is fully appreciated that the Canadian government has exercised strong pressure to obtain further funds from the British government in accordance with the terms of the wheat agreement between the two nations.

"It is regrettable that these efforts were unsuccessful, particularly in view of the high prices Great Britain was willing to pay to other countries and that Canada received from other countries during the same period.

"The wheat farmers of western Canada should not be made to suffer through the failure of the British government to fulfil the terms of the Canada-United Kingdom wheat agreement as it was interpreted to them by cabinet ministers of both the United Kingdom and Canada.

Mr. Howe: May I ask from what my hon. friend is reading?

Mr. Ross (Souris): There was a little discussion about whether or not the farmers wanted this, so I said I would read this report from the meeting of the three pools in Regina. The report appears in the Ottawa Journal of Thursday, March 8.

Mr. Studer: What are you reading it for?

Mr. Ross (Souris): What am I reading it for? I am trying to impress upon your Minister of Agriculture that there is some dissatisfaction amongst the farmers of western Canada. Last night he said he knew more about this than we who were speaking about it. I am trying to prove that the three western pools in the prairie provinces are important organizations.

Mr. Studer: We have all read it.

Mr. Ross (Souris): That is all right, but there are other people here besides you. After reading it, I would hope that the member for Maple Creek (Mr. Studer), and these other hon. members from Saskatchewan, and from Manitoba, would get up here and represent the feelings of their constituents on this very important issue. I would not be surprised if some of those members, Mr. Speaker, have received a number of wires—

An hon. Member: How many have you received?

Mr. Ross (Souris): I said I would not be surprised if they have received some or some letters. It is their own business what they should do, but I would think probably they should get up here and express themselves as to whether they are entirely satisfied with this announcement of the final settlement, and advocate what they think it should be on behalf of those people who sent them here.

Mr. Rowe: They may have been ordered not to speak.

Mr. Ross (Souris): They may have been ordered not to speak; I cannot say anything about that.

Mr. Gardiner: The hon. member knows western people better than that.

Mr. Ross (Souris): If it had not been for the statement made by the Minister of Agriculture, I would not have read this press dispatch. I do think it should convince him that there is that dissatisfaction on the prairies. I do not think he will get up and say that these pool organizations are not important or that they do not represent a large group of wheat farmers.

Mr. Gardiner: They did not ask for $330 million, and that is what I was talking about. They asked for $48 million.

Mr. Ross (Souris): I should like to finish quoting this article.

While we appreciate the action of the government of Canada in undertaking to provide the sum of $65 million as part payment of the obligation to the growers under the contract, in justice to the western wheat growers the Canadian government should accept the full responsibility denied by the United Kingdom and in addition should repay the growers the $48 million subsidy to the Canadian consumer imposed by government policy.

I wonder if any hon. member from Saskatchewan will get up and deny that claim by the officials of the three prairie pools that they expect this added payment of 48 million over and above the 65 million.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): I think my hon. friend will not object to my asking a question?

Mr. Ross (Souris): No, the hon. member is an old pal of mine.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): I will ask my hon. friend, since he is the spokesman for the Conservative party, whether he is advocating that the government of Canada—this is a direct question—should pay more than it is paying in connection with this proposition? Is the hon. member, on behalf of the Conservative party, or any other group in this house, suggesting that the government of Canada, taking the whole matter of the taxpayers of this country into consideration and also the war issue, should pay more than it is paying? I think my hon. friend, who was one of the reinforcements for my battalion, will be frank enough to say whether he advocates that?

Mr. Ross (Souris): The hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. Stewart) will not have any doubt about what I have been advocating or where I stand before we are through with this motion and resolution. I think my stand since I have been in this House of Commons has been very clear—

Mr. Winters: What is it?

Mr. Ross (Souris): —with respect to my views in support not only of the prairie farmers but of the farmers and agriculturalists of Canada from coast to coast.

Mr. Winters: What is it?

Mr. Ross (Souris): If you read Hansard as carefully as one hon. member has suggested, I do not think you will have any difficulty at all in deciding what my views have been and what they are, and how I shall record my vote when the vote is taken here. I have expressed my views on almost every occasion in various sessions of parliament here and I shall be extremely disappointed if those members from Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, who are supporters of the government, do not take advantage of the opportunity to get up and either approve or disapprove of the measure now before us.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): Is that an answer to my question?

Mr. Ross (Souris): Mr. Speaker, there are some other organizations in the three prairie provinces, and I am not as well acquainted with them and their membership as I am with the organizations and officials of the three prairie pools. But we have the united farmers of Alberta, of Saskatchewan, and now a considerable membership well organized in the province of Manitoba. I was rather amazed to read the press article here from the president—

An hon. Member: Read it.

Mr. Ross (Souris): I do not have to read it. You have read it. I will not read it into the record. These hon. members are great readers. One of them can be extremely vocal. We have a real orator here in the hon. member for Maple Creek (Mr. Studer). How they can keep him quiet in his seat is beyond me.

An hon. Member: He is an orator.

Mr. Ross (Souris): He surely is. I am sure that the people back home, knowing what an orator he is at community gatherings and dinner gatherings, will be extremely disappointed in reading Hansard not to find his name here, either advocating something on their behalf or ridiculing the proposals that are now before parliament. I am sure they will be greatly disappointed. However, to come back to this article they have all read, as they say in the press, the president of the three prairie unions—Mr. Phelps of Saskatchewan, I think —has advised their members at least not to cash the cheques on the basis of the final announcement so far by this government. I do not know whether they are satisfied or not. I do not know how serious those people are; because quite frankly, if there are any of them who really do not want to cash their cheques, if they will endorse them and mail them to the hon. member for Souris, I can assure them that they will be put to splendid use.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): Will you cash them?

Mr. Ross (Souris): I think I will have to. My banker will see that I do. I will not have much choice about it.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): Will you take the usual Winnipeg grain exchange deduction?

Mr. Ross (Souris): I have not dealt with the Winnipeg grain exchange for quite a while. I do not know how well the hon. member for Yorkton knows those of the Winnipeg grain exchange. But if he feels at all sorry for those fellows, I can assure him that there is no danger of their starving while this government is in power; not a bit of it.

Mr. Gardiner: They would have got most of the $330 million that you are talking about.

Mr. Ross (Souris): At least as long as this government is in power; from any information that we who were members of the standing committee on agriculture and colonization have been able to obtain, they will be fairly well taken care of by this government as long as they are in power. So my hon. friend need not worry about hardship on the part of these poor chaps, the brokers of the grain exchange, or what they will be asked to give up about this business. True enough, you read statements here in Ottawa leading you to believe that they are having a pretty hungry time of it, and that as far as this government is concerned there is no dealing with the grain exchange or anything of that kind.

An hon. Member: Is there not?

Mr. Ross (Souris): I am not saying that. I am saying that you would be led to believe that. However, that does not happen to be the situation. Since the hon. member has raised that issue, may I say that at another time when we had the officials of the Canadian wheat board appear before the standing committee on agriculture and colonization, we were endeavouring to run this thing down and to find out if they were really having a difficult time as these ministers would have the country believe, and this is what we discovered. I am not sure now of the exact number, but there were ninety or a hundred brokers who were actually being paid fees, out of the farmers' money, through the Canadian wheat board, where no service whatever was rendered according to the chairman of the Canadian wheat board.

Mr. Howe: Mr. Speaker, what year was that meeting?

Mr. Ross (Souris): If my memory serves me correctly, it would be in the year 1942.

Mr. Howe: Oh, that is a long time ago.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Is that satisfactory?

Mr. Gardiner: You know what they were doing. It was produced here in a committee.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Certainly I know; at least I know. But when we asked—my colleague here for Dufferin-Simcoe—and an hon. member from Saskatchewan moved a motion asking for a return giving the names of these brokers and the amounts of moneys paid to them, and the terms of the reference provided for all of this information and very much more—believe it or not, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), the hon. member who is his parliamentary assistant at the present time, and every supporter of this government voted against giving us that information at that time. Is that not rather odd?

Mr. Gardiner: You got it eventually.

Mr. Ross (Souris): We never got it through that committee.

Mr. Gardiner: Certainly you got it.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Where and when? Can the minister tell me where there is any record of our getting it? Will he tell me that?

Mr. Gardiner: My memory of it is that it was fully discussed before the committee. I took part in the discussion myself.

Mr. Ross (Souris): You say that there was a list of the names and the sums paid them placed before that committee?

Mr. Gardiner: Maybe not a list of the names, but the whole situation was discussed.

Mr. Ross (Souris): In generalities, it was discussed. But we were refused a list of the names of the brokers and the amounts paid to them by the Canadian wheat board, out of the funds of the farmers themselves. You were having your government supporters say: No, no grain exchange, nothing of that sort. So the hon. member for Yorkton need not worry much about the members of the Winnipeg grain exchange.

An hon. Member: Eleven o'clock.

Mr. Ross (Souris): And when he wants to talk about the Winnipeg grain exchange, and some people are extremely vocal about it, I would remind him that I think of all the living members of this House of Commons, I am perhaps the only one who moved a resolution to close up the Winnipeg grain exchange. I was out of order. I was young and green in this house, and I was out of order. But nevertheless, I am recorded in Hansard with the late then hon. member for Qu'Appelle, as having moved such a resolution. You have lots of members talking throughout the country saying they are in favour of doing away with the Winnipeg grain exchange. But the hon. member for Souris actually went that far at that time.

Mr. Dewar: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Ross (Souris): Eleven o'clock, Mr. Speaker. May I adjourn the debate?

On motion of Mr. Ross (Souris) the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Howe: Mr. Speaker, on Monday the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) expects to table the estimates and refer them to the committee of supply.

After considering the resolution of the Minister of Finance concerning the Foreign Exchange Control Act, we will make the formal motion to go into committee of supply to call four departments, and have them ready for consideration on Thursdays and Fridays. After that we will continue with Bill No. 5, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1935. Following that, we shall take Bill No. 130, to amend the Export and Import Permits Act; and after that, Bill No. 79, respecting Indians. After that we will adjourn.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, March 12, 1951

The house met at three o'clock.

CURLING

WINNING OF CANADIAN CHAMPIONSHIP BY NOVA SCOTIA RINK

Mr. G. C. Nowlan (Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all hon. members from Nova Scotia will tender their sympathy to my deskmate, the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Thatcher), to the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross) and to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), as well as to all other ardent curlers in the house, on the fact that teams representing those various places in the Canadian championship bowed to the Nova Scotia team in Halifax on Saturday last.

I am sure, sir, that all of them will join with us from Nova Scotia in tendering our congratulations to the Kentville rink consisting of Wallace Knock, Fred Dyke, George Hansen and Donald Oyler, a very youthful and, from the national standpoint, inexperienced team. They not only won the dominion championship, but won it in such a way that their record can never be broken, and probably will never be equalled.

Mr. J. H. Dickey (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, may I say how pleased and happy the city of Halifax and the province of Nova Scotia were to entertain those who participated in the Dominion curling championship. The bonspiel was a model of good feeling and good sportsmanship; and while it was not the role of the perfect host to win the championship we could not help taking a great deal of pleasure from that fact as well.

Mr. Cruickshank: British Columbia was second.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—PENSIONS

1. What is the total number of persons employed by the Canadian National Railways?

2. Of these, how many are eligible to contribute toward a supplemental pension in addition to the basic pension of $25 per month to which they will be entitled on retirement at age sixty-five?

6. Is the basic pension of $25 per month available to all employees, and if so, on what conditions?

Mr. Benidickson:

1. On Canadian lines at December 31, 1950, 104,096.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—CONTRACTS BY PROVINCES

Mr. Thatcher:

What was the dollar value of defence contracts placed in (a) British Columbia; (b) Alberta; (c) Saskatchewan; (d) Manitoba; (e) Ontario; (f) Quebec; (g) New Brunswick; (h) Nova Scotia; (i) Prince Edward Island; (j) Newfoundland, during the tenth and eleventh months of the current fiscal year?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, a question very similar in form to this one was asked earlier this session, and the answer is to be found at page 452 of Hansard. It is not possible to get an accurate answer, by reason of the fact that in many cases orders for defence contracts are placed in one province and the address used by the firm contracting is in another. There are many examples of that sort of thing; I can give examples if the house wants them.

Another reason why it is not possible to get the information in accurate form is that it does not take any account of subcontracts. However full information is available about every contract over $5,000, and each two weeks a press release is issued giving a full list of such contracts. I suggest that that information is more useful and more accurate; it is readily available. Any answer that would be made to the question in its present form would be comparatively meaningless. I have arranged with the hon. member asking the question to have the copies of the public press releases sent to him. For that reason I ask that the question be dropped.

Mr. Speaker: Dropped.

Mr. Pouliot:

Who were, in chronological order (a) the joint (b) the associate (c) the acting ministers of finance for each separate period of office since January 1, 1930, and what was the length of time of each such period of office?

Mr. Pouliot:

Who were, in chronological order (a) the joint (b) the associate (c) the acting ministers of finance for each separate period of office since October 23, 1935, and what was the length of time of each such period of office?

Mr. Pouliot:

What was the difference between the functions of (a) the joint (b) the acting (c) the associate ministers of national defence, during world war II?

Mr. St. Laurent: Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal with these four questions orally and then file more complete details.

There have never been any joint ministers in the departments in the periods referred to in the questions. The only department which had an associate minister was the Department of National Defence, and his functions are a matter of public record, as they appear in the Department of National Defence Act of 1940.

Acting ministers are appointed from time to time to act in the absence of the ministers. The names and duration of periods of office of the acting ministers of justice and finance for the dates referred to are as follows:

Department of Justice—April 3, 1936, Hon. P. J. A. Cardin; November 11, 1941, Hon. A. L. Macdonald; November 26, 1941, Hon. J. E. Michaud.

Department of Finance—September 23, 1930, Hon. E. B. Ryckman; November 12, 1931, Hon. E. N. Rhodes; June 6, 1933, Right Hon. Sir George H. Perley; June 30, 1936, Hon. T. A. Crerar; April 19, 1937, Hon. J. L. Ilsley; August 8, 1940, Hon. J. L. Ralston; April 1, 1942, Hon. Colin Gibson in the absence of Hon. J. L. Ralston; September 10, 1942, Hon. Colin Gibson in the absence of Hon. J. L. Ralston; August 4, 1943, Hon. Colin Gibson in the absence of Hon. J. L. Ralston; December 27, 1944, Hon. L. S. St. Laurent; May 10, 1945, Hon. D. C. Abbott in the absence of Hon. L. S. St. Laurent; July 12, 1946, Hon D. C. Abbott; September 4, 1946, Hon. Colin Gibson in the absence of Hon. D. C. Abbott; December 13, 1946, Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent; July 6, 1949, Right Hon. C. D. Howe; August 31, 1949, Hon. Stuart S. Garson; July 19, 1950, Hon. J. J. McCann in the absence of Hon. Stuart S. Garson.

Generally speaking, an acting minister holds that appointment until it is terminated by the government, usually through the naming of another minister to so act, or by his leaving the government.

However, the acting minister's term may be temporarily interrupted from time to time where, during his absences from Ottawa, the government deem it advisable to appoint another minister to so act in his place on a pro tem basis.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

WHEAT—AGREEMENT WITH UNITED KINGDOM

Mr. Coldwell:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, memoranda, or other documents between any minister, department, official, or the government of Canada and any minister, department, official or His Majesty's government of the United Kingdom, relating to the final settlement of the four-year agreement, 1946, for the sale and purchase of Canadian wheat, including correspondence, and other documents relating to the price agreed to be paid during the last two years of the agreement.

Mr. St. Laurent: The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) knows that the government of the United Kingdom has been approached to see whether they have any objection to the publication of documents related to the discussions referred to in this motion. Of course hon. members realize that it is not usual to publish documents connected with negotiations between governments, but only to publish the agreed conclusions. Nevertheless we have asked the views of the United Kingdom government about this motion.

As a controversy has arisen in debate respecting the position taken by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) at London in May of 1950, and by the government since that time, I feel I should make the position clear at once.

The United Kingdom authorities took the position in May of 1950 "that all obligations under the 'have regard to' clause might be considered to have been taken care of." The Minister of Trade and Commerce said that this was a matter which could only be settled by the Canadian cabinet on his return to Ottawa. After discussion with his colleagues, the Minister of Trade and Commerce advised the chancellor of the exchequer of the United Kingdom that the Canadian government was in accord with the conclusions in the agreed record of the meeting held with the United Kingdom authorities while he was in London. That is one of the documents for which their consent to table has been requested. In other words, the Canadian government accepted as the position of the United Kingdom that they had discharged their obligations under the agreement.

Subsequent representations to the United Kingdom government were as I stated in the House of Commons on March 8 in reply to a question by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue), and that reply is at page 1023 of Hansard of 8th of March.

Mr. Speaker: Is the motion dropped?

Mr. St. Laurent: No; it stands. We have not yet received the reply from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Coldwell: The reply has not been received, so the motion stands?

Mr. St. Laurent: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: Motion stands.

FEDERAL AID TO EDUCATION

Mr. Knight:

For a copy of all correspondence exchanged between the government of Manitoba or any minister or department thereof and the federal government or any minister or department thereof, in reference to the question of federal aid to education, dated at any time since January 1, 1947.

Mr. St. Laurent: This is subject to the usual reservation in connection with getting the consent of the government of Manitoba.

Mr. Speaker: Carried, subject to the usual reservation regarding provincial consent.

POSTAL SERVICE—POSTAL RATES—PROFIT OR LOSS ON SECOND-CLASS MAIL

Mrs. Fairclough:

For a copy of all schedules of postal rates issued from year to year from 1914, to date, also for a statement showing profit or loss yearly on the handling of second-class mail since and including the year 1939.

AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS

QUESTION OF SUBSIDIES OR OTHER ASSISTANCE TO PRODUCERS

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): May I give an answer to a question submitted on March 6 by the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Jones)? The question was:

Did the government of British Columbia make representations in regard to the fruit growers, and if so, did they receive that answer?

That was in reference to the answer that had been given just before the hon. member had put his question. I told him I would have to look at the correspondence; that I knew members of the British Columbia legislature were concerned but I did not want to make a positive statement about the government of British Columbia without looking at the correspondence. I am now given the following answer.

The government of British Columbia did make representations in regard to the fruit growers who suffered losses in the winter of 1949-50. We considered the matter and came to the conclusion that as the loss was not beyond the capacity of the provincial government to handle, and as there was no precedent for the provision of federal assistance in similar cases, assistance could not be provided by the federal government for the rehabilitation of damaged orchards; and the government of British Columbia was so informed.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR ELECTED REPRESENTATION IN TERRITORIAL GOVERNMENT AND APPOINTMENT OF JUDICIAL OFFICERS

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Resources and Development) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to provide elected representation in the territorial government for the population of the northwest territories, and to give the governor in council power to appoint judicial officers for the said territories.

He said: Mr. Speaker, His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

CHINA

DETENTION OF CANADIAN CITIZENS—INQUIRY AS TO TREATMENT AND FREEDOM OF MOVEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gordon Graydon (Peel): May I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, based upon press reports appearing today with respect to the arrest of Canadian citizens and other repressive treatment which seems to have been accorded citizens of this country in Red China? Can the minister tell us whether he has any late reports dealing with the subject of Canadian citizens still in Red China, and whether it is possible for Canadian citizens to leave that country freely for Canada if they so desire?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): We have had information in my department through the United Kingdom authorities in Peking, which information has been transmitted to us through London, and also information from other sources, that certain Canadians have been detained by the government in Peking. We have asked the United Kingdom authorities in China to look into the cases that have been brought to our attention and to do everything they can to afford those Canadians protection. Since we ourselves have no diplomatic representation in China, on this occasion we are dependent upon the good offices of the United Kingdom diplomatic service; and, as always, they are only too anxious to help, as I hope we would help if the circumstances were reversed.

On the general question of the position of Canadians in China, I would not like to say anything at this moment without more consideration; but I can tell the hon. member for Peel that Canadians are leaving China at the present time. Delays have been put in their way but of those who wish to return to Canada some are getting out of China. I may be able to give him more particulars on that aspect of the matter shortly.

BUTTER

QUESTION AS TO RECENT IMPORTATIONS AND BASIS OF DISTRIBUTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. Ross (Souris): Since butter has increased in price by 17 cents a pound in the last two weeks and is now selling for 80 cents a pound in western Canada, will the Minister of Agriculture say how much butter has been imported into Canada recently, and by whom; what is the basis of the distribution of government stocks of butter, and what is the present situation with respect to butter?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think this question is one that should be placed on the order paper. The latter part of the question might be permitted now, but the portion having to do with statistical information should be on the order paper.

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): I would prefer to have the whole question stand as notice, and the question can be answered tomorrow.

Mr. Ross (Souris): I have given the minister notice, and his suggestion is quite satisfactory.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

STRAIT OF CANSO BRIDGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Clarence Gillis (Cape Breton South): May I ask the Minister of Transport if he can do anything to expedite the production of the papers covered by a motion adopted on February 26, which appears at page 667 of Hansard? Can he do anything to hurry these papers along before the recess?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): I shall be glad to look into the resolution to which my hon. friend refers. What was the motion about? I do not have it in mind at the moment.

Mr. Gillis: I asked for the production of any correspondence there might be between the federal government and the government of Nova Scotia in the matter of the Canso bridge.

Mr. Chevrier: I remember it now. I do not think the correspondence can be tabled until the permission of the provincial government has been obtained. That permission has been requested, and as soon as it is forthcoming the papers will be tabled.

FISHERIES

NEWFOUNDLAND—INQUIRY AS TO ORGANIZATION OF CO-OPERATIVES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. J. Browne (St. John's West): In view of the urgent necessity of co-operative organization among the fishermen of Newfoundland, I should like to ask the Minister of Fisheries whether any steps have been taken recently to bring about this result.

Hon. R. W. Mayhew (Minister of Fisheries): At the moment I cannot recall any instance in which we have given different treatment to the co-operatives from that accorded to other agencies, but I shall make a further examination and see what has been done.

THE BUDGET

INQUIRY AS TO PROBABLE DATE OF PRESENTATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. S. Harkness (Calgary East): Is the Minister of Finance yet in a position to tell us whether he will be able to bring down the budget before the Easter recess?

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance): Yes, I am. I shall not be able to bring it down before Easter.

POSTAL SERVICE

REDUCTION IN URBAN MAIL DELIVERIES—ADJUSTMENTS IN TORONTO—OVERTIME PAY FOR EXTRA WORK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. W. Noseworthy (York South): I should like to direct two questions to the Postmaster General. Can the minister tell us what adjustments, if any, are being made in the mail delivery service in Toronto as a result of the work of his investigators there last week? Second, is the department considering paying the postmen overtime rates for the extra hours of work rendered necessary by the change from two deliveries to one delivery a day?

Hon. Edouard Rinfret (Postmaster General): I wish to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of these two questions. As to the first, a check is being made of all these walks, but it has not been completed. We expect the first week's check to be back tomorrow or the day after, and any necessary adjustments will be made. As to the second question, no consideration is being given at the present time to the matter the hon. gentleman has mentioned.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE CONTROL ACT

CONTINUANCE IN FORCE UNTIL SIXTY DAYS AFTER OPENING OF FIRST SESSION OF PARLIAMENT IN 1953

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to present a measure to provide for the continuance in force of the Foreign Exchange Control Act until sixty days after the commencement of the first session of parliament commencing in the year 1953.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this resolution seeks leave to introduce a bill providing for the extension of the Foreign Exchange Control Act for a further two-year period. The original measure, enacted by parliament in 1947, provided that the act should lapse sixty days after the commencement of the first session of parliament in 1949. On March 17, 1949, I introduced a resolution, which was subsequently embodied in legislation approved by parliament, providing for the continuance in force of the act until sixty days after the commencement of the first session of parliament in 1951. The effect of the present bill, when it is enacted, will be to postpone the termination date for a period expiring sixty days after the commencement of the first session of parliament in 1953.

When I introduced a similar resolution two years ago, I described the Foreign Exchange Control Act as a measure of national defence. The developments of the past two years, and particularly of the past six months, have, I think, illustrated the correctness of this description, as well, of course, as the continued need for the measure itself. It is because the government believes that this measure of national defence continues to be necessary that we are asking the house to agree to retain it for another two years. We all wish that the state of the world were such that there were no longer any need to retain the powers provided in this act. It is no affection for controls as such which moves us to seek a prolongation. On the contrary, as I shall show the house in some detail, we have progressively reduced the extent of the control which is in fact exercised under the act, and we hope to continue in this direction as long as we are able. When, however, we are confronted with the question, as we are at this time, whether we are prepared to abandon the machinery itself by allowing the act to expire, then we feel that only one answer is possible.

There is no need for me, after the discussion which has already taken place in the house since the commencement of this session, to elaborate on the unsettled state of the world. Nor is there, I believe, any need to introduce any elaborate arguments to establish that one aspect, and a very important one, of our economic preparedness must be the control over our foreign exchange resources. I am not able to relate in detail to the house, because I do not know, what foreign exchange pressures we may be under as we and our allies step up the pace of our military preparedness. But I feel that members on all sides of the house will agree that we shall be better able to cope with the pressures that do arise if we retain this instrument of control than if we abandon it.

Even without the pressures of war and near war, the foreign exchange situation of Canada tends to be an extremely variable one. This is illustrated in the wide swings to which our foreign exchange reserves have been subjected since the end of the war. In this connection may I express my personal regret that the 1950 report of the foreign exchange control board, which will include the detailed relevant statistics for the last calendar year, is not yet available. I had hoped that it would be ready in time for this debate, but I am now advised that it will be another three or four weeks before some of the figures can be finalized and the report printed and tabled. Some of the figures which I shall use in this statement therefore will necessarily be very preliminary and tentative. However, hon. members are already aware from published reports that our official reserves in gold and U.S. dollars, which amounted to approximately $1,500 million at the end of 1945, fell during 1946 by approximately $250 million and in 1947 by nearly $750 million. In 1948, on the other hand, they rose by nearly $500 million, in 1949 by $120 million and in 1950 by $625 million. These are very formidable changes from year to year and they illustrate better than words the size of the external pressures to which our economy is subject. These pressures arise partly as a result of the importance of external transactions in our economy—

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Abbott: Yes.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Could the minister indicate, up to whatever date it is possible, what change has taken place since the tenth of September last?

Mr. Abbott: Yes. I believe the last quarterly figures have been published. Our reserves at the end of September—I am speaking from memory now—were approximately $1,800 million U.S. dollars, and they were about the same at the end of the year. Those figures were available early in January.

As I was saying, these pressures arise partly as a result of the importance of external transactions in our economy, partly as a result of the nature of our trading relationships with the two economic areas of major importance to us, the United States and the sterling area; partly as a result of our proximity to the United States and the large volume of U.S. capital investment in Canada. Whatever the causes may be, it is the case that throughout the post-war period our foreign exchange situation has shown itself to be capable of very rapid change from year to year. The existence of exchange control has been helpful in coping with these changes and in moderating their effects, though it cannot, of course, be claimed that this control by itself provides any guarantee of stability. It is essentially a defensive instrument.

It may be of value to the house if I review now the highlights of our foreign exchange experience during the past two years,—that is, since the act was last extended.

I must begin by recalling the foreign exchange difficulties which arose in 1947 and which resulted in the loss, by the end of that year, of nearly two-thirds of the reserves with which we emerged from the war. In tackling these difficulties we were obliged temporarily to do a number of unpleasant and unpopular things, such as restrict imports and ration pleasure travel involving U.S. dollar outlays. We substantially reduced the rate of our own foreign lending and we borrowed some capital in the United States. However, we placed the greatest emphasis on a positive approach. We sought to achieve a closer approach to equilibrium in our bilateral balance of payments with the United States and the sterling area by developing our exports to the United States and by encouraging imports into Canada from the United Kingdom and other parts of the sterling area.

This program, which was supported by the general fiscal and economic policies of the government, was successful in improving our balance of payments and stemming the loss of reserves. In the course of 1948, as I have noted, we added nearly $500 million to our official holdings, of which $150 million was borrowed. Our over-all balance of payments in that year showed a current account surplus of over $450 million; our current account deficit with the United States alone was reduced from over $1,100 million to less than $400 million.

In 1949 we continued to add to our reserves, though at the more moderate rate of $120 million. Our over-all current account surplus was reduced to $180 million, the change as compared with the previous year occurring mainly in our transactions with the United States, and reflecting mainly increased imports into Canada and increased travel expenditures and dividend payments involving U.S. dollar outlays.

The most significant development in the foreign exchange field in 1949 was of course the change in the international exchange rate structure which was inaugurated by the thirty per cent devaluation of sterling in September of that year. This action by the United Kingdom was followed by similar action by all other sterling area countries with the exception of Pakistan; and most western European countries immediately depreciated their exchange rate to the same or a lesser degree. As a result of these changes a new and very drastic exchange rate structure emerged and a completely new situation was created for the Canadian dollar. In appraising the new situation the government came to the conclusion that the Canadian interest would best be served by reducing the value of the Canadian dollar in terms of U.S. dollars by approximately nine per cent. We felt, in the face of the very large depreciation in the value of sterling and most other currencies, that some change must be made in the value of the Canadian dollar. Our competitive position at home and abroad was strong, but we did not feel that Canadian producers should be subjected to the full strain of a thirty per cent reduction in the exchange value of the currencies of some of our principal competitors in the home and foreign markets. On the other hand, the devaluation of sterling and other currencies represented, in part, an effort on the part of the countries concerned to use the price system to redress the great unbalance that still persisted in their trade with the dollar countries. This effort would have been nullified, so far as Canada was concerned, had we not allowed some appreciation of the Canadian dollar in relation to these currencies. Out of these conflicting considerations we reached the decision of September 1949 to reduce the exchange value of the Canadian dollar by about nine per cent, which involved an appreciation of our currency in relation to sterling of approximately twenty-five per cent.

In the latter part of 1949, and in the course of 1950, important new factors emerged affecting in an important way our foreign exchange position. One of these was a very sharp drop in our exports to the United Kingdom and other sterling area countries. Members of the house will recall that at the commonwealth ministers of finance meeting which took place in London in July, 1949, to consider the problem raised by the very sharp decline in the sterling area's gold and dollar reserves, the sterling area countries agreed to reduce their dollar drawings on the sterling area dollar pool in respect of dollar imports by an amount equivalent to twenty-five per cent of 1948 imports. It is, of course, impossible to say to what extent the decline in sterling area purchases in Canada which occurred in 1950 was due to the tightening of import restrictions consequent upon this decision, to what extent it was due to normal economic forces set in train by the exchange devaluations of September 1949, and to what extent it was due to the continued recovery of production in the non-dollar world and consequent availability of supplies on economic terms for payment other than in dollars. Whatever may have been the factors operating, our exports to the United Kingdom fell from $710 million in 1949 to $470 million in 1950, and our exports to the rest of the sterling area from $300 million in 1949 to $200 million in 1950—an aggregate decline of over $300 million, or thirty per cent, in our exports to the sterling area in one year. Before the war, nearly half our exports went to the sterling area; by 1949 this had been reduced to a third; and in 1950 the proportion going there was substantially less than one quarter.

On the other hand, in recent years, the total value of our imports from these countries has increased very considerably, percentage-wise, though even now the sterling area supplies us with only slightly more than twenty per cent of our total imports compared with nearly thirty per cent before the war. The United Kingdom, which had already succeeded in increasing its exports to Canada from less than $150 million in 1946 to $300 million in 1949, increased them still further to just over $400 million in 1950. Other sterling area countries increased their exports to us from $190 million in 1949 to $240 million in 1950. This increase in imports from the sterling area, helping as it has done to redress the balance of payments between this part of the world and Canada, has been a most welcome development, and I should like to express the satisfaction of the government at the success which has attended British efforts in this direction. The development of exports to Canada is the course of action which I strongly urged on my colleagues, the ministers of finance of the sterling area countries, at the commonwealth gathering of ministers of finance in July 1949, to which I referred a moment ago. We in Canada believe—and I am sure that all members of the house will agree—that it is in the interests of all concerned that any necessary correction of the unbalance in accounts between Canada and the sterling area should be achieved through an expansion in our imports rather than through a contraction in our exports.

Primarily as a result of the developments I have mentioned affecting our import and export trade with the sterling area, our current account surplus with this part of the world, which was $578 million in 1949, virtually disappeared in 1950 according to the preliminary estimates. After taking all capital items—including our extensions of credit—into consideration, the sterling area made net payments, mainly in U.S. dollars, of nearly $500 million to Canada in 1949. In 1950, on the other hand, the balance has so far been redressed that there was in the year apparently only a very small net transfer of gold and U.S. dollars between Canada and the countries of the sterling area.

The improvement in the sterling area's balance of payments with Canada is, of course, only one aspect of the very remarkable and welcomed improvement which has occurred in the over-all dollar position of that area since the devaluation of sterling. This improvement is reflected in the gold and dollar reserves of the United Kingdom which have risen from $1,425 million at the end of September 1949—and an even lower figure immediately before devaluation—to $3,300 million at the end of 1950. Some part of this increase is of course attributable to ECA and other external assistance, but during the past year the sterling area as a whole has been earning a substantial surplus in its dollar transactions.

In the light of this improved position, it is the earnest hope of the Canadian government that the governments of the United Kingdom and other sterling area countries will give earnest consideration to the possibility of relaxing the present severe import restrictions, particularly those of a discriminatory character, on imports from Canada. We recognize of course that there are a number of uncertainties and unfavourable elements in the British situation which justify a certain degree of caution. The dollar surplus, particularly that which has occurred since Korea, has been achieved in part by a very sharp increase in the prices of the primary products exported from sterling area countries other than the United Kingdom. The United Kingdom has had to give up a much larger volume of exports to obtain the same volume of imports from other sterling area countries, and this has absorbed a large part of the increase in output of the United Kingdom during the past year. Even so, the balances held in London by other sterling area countries—the counterpart, in some measure, of their surplus dollar earnings transferred to the United Kingdom—have risen very substantially, and they constitute a claim on British productive capacity. Moreover, the rearmament effort of the United Kingdom will absorb an increasing share of British resources, and particularly perhaps in those fields in which the dollar export drive has been most successful.

For these reasons we can appreciate why the British chancellor of the exchequer has pointed to the necessity of some degree of caution in appraising the outlook for the dollar position of the United Kingdom. At the same time we feel justified, for our part, in expressing the strong hope that the caution will not be excessive. Some of the sterling area countries have already taken steps to reduce their restrictions on dollar imports, and it is to be hoped that others, including the United Kingdom, will take advantage of their present opportunities to do likewise. In the present circumstances we urge this course not so much because of any desire to widen the markets for Canadian products—which, with very few exceptions, are finding a ready enough sale at the present time—but rather on account of our desire to see competitive conditions re-established over as wide an area of trade as possible and concrete evidence given of the determination of all our trading partners to move as rapidly as they can towards the achievement of those principles of non-discrimination and liberalism which are the declared policy of the government in international trade.

I revert now to the main developments in our foreign exchange position during the past two years. The first, as I have pointed out, has been the virtual elimination of the surplus in our balance of payments with the sterling area. Our exports to western European countries have also been substantially reduced—by about one-third—while our imports have increased somewhat, though they remain disappointingly small. In consequence our current account surplus with that part of the world is substantially less than it was a few years ago.

In some ways the most striking development in our exchange position during the past few years has been the great expansion in our exports to the United States. Those rose from $1,000 million in 1947 to $1,500 million in 1949 and to over $2,000 million in 1950. The high level of economic activity prevailing in the United States, combined with the enterprise of Canadians in producing the right goods at the right prices and taking advantage of their opportunities and seeking out new markets, plus the more favourable conditions of entry for certain important products arranged in tariff negotiations with the United States—these were among the factors responsible for this remarkable increase in our exports to the United States. It had been our hope, when we got into exchange difficulties in 1947, that once the emergency, which required us to impose restrictive measures on imports and travel, had been overcome, we would be able to achieve the necessary correction in our position through an expansion of exports. These hopes have, as the house is aware, been realized, and, in line with the policy announced at the time the restrictions were first imposed, they have been progressively reduced as our exchange position has improved. At the beginning of this year the last of the import restrictions imposed under the Emergency Exchange Conservation Act was eliminated, and that act itself has in consequence lapsed. So far as travel is concerned, we are again in the happy position where Canadians can obtain U.S. funds to cover all travel requirements without being subject to any ration.

The current account deficit in our transactions with the United States was reduced from the very large figure of $1,100 million in 1947 to an amount of the order of $400 million in 1950. It will be apparent from what I have said that this improvement is mainly due to the increase in our exports; the value of our imports was not substantially different, though rising rather rapidly in the latter months of 1950. Increased gold production also played its part in reducing our current deficit with the United States. On the other hand, interest and dividend payments have risen very markedly in recent years.

The reduction in the current account deficit with the United States in recent years, though very substantial, has fallen short of the reduction in our surplus with the sterling area and other countries. In consequence, our over-all current account surplus, which reached the very high figure of $450 million in 1948, was reduced to $180 million in 1949 and gave way to a deficit of the order of $300 million in 1950.

The developments in our current account position in 1950, though important, were overshadowed by those relating to capital transactions. In each year since the end of the war, quite substantial sums of capital have come to this country from abroad, particularly from the United States, for direct investment in Canadian industry and to participate in the development of our natural resources. The consequence and the counterpart of this capital inflow has, of course, been a deepening of our economic structure and a growth in our output and our economic capacity which enables us to assume the additional foreign exchange charges resulting from the capital inflow. In the course of 1950, and particularly after the outbreak of hostilities in Korea, a massive inflow of capital of quite a different type developed. This consisted in the purchase by United States investors of marketable Canadian securities, particularly government of Canada obligations. The scale of the capital inflow is reflected in the increase of nearly $600 million in our reserves of gold and U.S. dollars which occurred between June 30 and September 30.

The ardent desire on the part of United States investors to increase their holdings of Canadian securities, and particularly government of Canada securities, was of course flattering to Canada. However, like most flattery, it had its serious drawbacks. In the first place, the bulk of the capital inflow was not for the purpose of helping directly in the development of our economic resources. It was based rather on a favourable general attitude towards our economic future, and in particular on an anticipation that the Canadian exchange rate would be resorted to parity with the United States dollar. In consequence this capital had elements of volatility and speculativeness which is not associated with the direct investment of capital. Moreover, it was an expensive proceeding involving the incurring of additional foreign indebtedness which was not balanced by a corresponding increase in our economic capacity but merely by an increase in our liquid balances of gold and U.S. dollars. Furthermore the very large inflows of exchange inevitably increased the liquid resources available for investment in Canada, and the direct and indirect demand for securities resulting from the capital inflow tended to create very easy money conditions at a time when the growing pressures on our material resources made it desirable that our monetary and credit, as well as our fiscal policies, should be of an anti-inflationary character.

In the statement which I made on September 30, I outlined in some detail the reasons why the government found it impossible to go on buying all the funds being offered by United States investors at a premium of ten per cent, and the reasons why we felt it unwise, in the circumstances prevailing, to fix a new exchange rate for the Canadian dollar at parity with the United States dollar or any other definite level. I do not think it necessary to go over that ground again. After consulting with the international monetary fund, the government announced its decision to suspend official quotations for the Canadian dollar and allow the exchange rate to be determined by the forces of supply and demand in the market.

The general structure of exchange control has, of course, been retained under the new conditions, although the process of relaxation which has been in progress during the past couple of years has been accelerated since last October. In the public announcement I made on September 30 last I explained the main changes we were making consequential on the decision to free the exchange rate—the abolition of the so-called unofficial market for Canadian dollars, the withdrawal of restrictions on the types of forward exchange contracts residents may enter into with Canadian banks, and the replacement of the previous requirement that residents coming into possession of foreign exchange must sell it forthwith by one authorizing them to merely declare it forthwith and choose their own time for selling it within a three months' period.

Another change recently made makes it possible for Canadians selling services in the U.S. dollar area to accept Canadian as well as U.S. funds in payment. A further change eases the conditions under which currently earned profits may be remitted to the United States without awaiting the completion of a fiscal year. Canadians going to take up residence in the U.S. dollar area have had their annual allotment of transferable funds increased from a maximum of $12,500 to one of $25,000, and after a three-year period are now permitted to deal with any remainder of their Canadian assets in the same way as other non-residents.

I have already referred to the withdrawal in October of the previous restrictions on pleasure travel in the United States dollar area. The exemption from any form H permit requirement, previously $25 of which $10 could be in United States funds, was increased in October to $100 of which $50 could be in United States funds. We have this month further amended this provision so that the entire $100 can be in United States dollars. At the same time the amount of United States currency which residents are authorized to hold has been progressively raised to the present level of $100, and the general exemption from the use of permit has also been increased to $100. As a consequence of these changes a great many Canadians having occasion to make relatively small remittances in United States funds or to take relatively short trips to the United States are able to do so without any formalities resulting from the existence of foreign exchange control.

Last week the regulations governing securities transactions were broadened and simplified by removing the distinction between Canadian government domestic securities and corporation securities in connection with exchanges of securities in Canada by non-residents and in the United States by residents.

In fact, when one considers the very substantial relaxations in foreign exchange policies and procedures regarding United States dollar transactions effected during the past couple of years, and when one bears in mind the fact that virtually no restrictions have at any time been placed on exchange transactions with the sterling area, one feels entitled to regard the exchange control as substantially a stand-by instrument. At the present time we have no restrictions on current account transactions, and the board approves the great majority of the applications it receives involving capital payment. It is the hope and expectation of the government that it will be possible to continue these liberal arrangements; and our purpose is to continue along this path of relaxation and simplification. But, as I have already intimated to the house, we believe that there are too many uncertainties in the present world situation to warrant the abandonment of this defensive instrument. We have had too much experience of the rapidity with which our situation, and, what may be equally important, attitudes towards our situation can change to warrant us in projecting the present favourable position into the difficult years that lie immediately ahead.

We cannot take the risk of leaving ourselves without an instrument of control which we can again bring into use if external factors threaten to add seriously to the difficulties which we shall have in any case to face.

It is for these reasons that the government asks the house to approve this measure extending the Foreign Exchange Control Act for a further two-year period. At the end of that time parliament will again have an opportunity of deciding whether in the circumstances then prevailing, the public interest still requires the continuance of exchange control.

Mr. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few observations on the interesting statement we have heard; it contained a great many figures of trade and other matters, but these of course I will not attempt to go into in detail at this time.

I was struck by one or two remarks the minister made, particularly toward the end of his statement. He spoke of the board in the future as being substantially something in the nature of a stand-by organization. On the other hand, as I understand it, he asks that it be continued with all the powers, far-reaching as they are, which at present exist.

I was sorry the minister had not made clearer—although one might hardly have expected him to do so—the reason for the great change of heart that took place last year. That is very important, when one considers the conclusion to which the minister finally came, one which had been pressed upon him for many months previously. I shall read from his statement of last September, when he said:

> It has been decided not to establish any new fixed parity for the Canadian dollar at this time, nor to prescribe any new official fixed rates on exchange.

Then he added this, which I greatly welcomed, and which I think everyone welcomed:

> Instead rates of exchange will be determined by conditions of supply and demand for foreign currencies in Canada.

Some of us had been trying to persuade the minister for many months that the time had come to take that action, and of course we were glad when it finally came. I should like just to encourage the minister—and I am sure even ministers like to have encouragement—by quoting to him words which I am sure will be familiar to him:

> Joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, more than over ninety and nine just persons, which need no repentance.

I hope the minister will take that quotation in the spirit in which it is given.

An hon. Member: But he is not a sinner.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I wish to review briefly the course of the measure we are now asked to renew, as I understand it, without change. We remember this, that in 1946—the minister said 1947, but I think it was a slip on his part—we in this party, while we agreed that some measure of control was then necessary, asked for less rigidity. We asked that there should be some measure of flexibility introduced into the act. However, that was not considered possible.

I wish to say a word or two about the results which have ensued. As we look back —and this has never been admitted by the government; the minister was far from admitting it today—I think it is perfectly clear that, for a very long time past—I am not saying as far back as the end of the war, because there were peculiar circumstances at that time—there just has not been enough wisdom in the wisest and best experts in finance in the world to determine what is a proper rate of exchange. I do not blame them for not being able to determine what is a proper rate. What I do blame them for is trying to determine a rate at all.

Let me recall to the minds of hon. members what happened in 1947, when it was perfectly clear that the 1946 restoration of the dollar to parity had been an overvaluation. At that time we will all remember—and the minister told us—that we lost altogether about a billion in American exchange, so that in 1947 we had to have these measures. I have referred to them as legislation by radio, but the minister has always disagreed with that, so we will just leave it as a disagreement. That was the time when he became associated with the word "austerity," because a great many measures had to be introduced then, by way of control, which perhaps at that time did not make the minister's name popular at every fireside.

Then we come on to 1949—and I go quickly —when, under the influence of the British devaluation, we ourselves had to devalue. I wish to emphasize what happened from that time on, because I think it is both important and interesting. I should like to quote briefly what I said in the house in 1950. These were my words:

> We have not advocated any sudden or violent step. We have not advocated a disregard of the fact that we have obligations under the Bretton Woods agreement. But what we have advocated is an approach to realism. Incidentally we believe—as I am sure the minister does also—that the course of events has put us in a strong position; our dollar is in a strong position.

The steps which preceded the action taken by the minister were rather interesting; because we find that in June the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe), who is always very helpful, said, as reported at page 3185 of Hansard for June 5, 1950:

> It is true at the moment Canadian funds are at a ten per cent discount from United States funds, but that may well be a temporary situation. The historic position of the Canadian dollar is at par with the United States dollar. How long the discount situation will continue, I do not know.

[Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood).]

Later in the debate the Minister of Finance was asked if the Minister of Trade and Commerce was speaking for him, and his reply was that he was speaking for himself.

Then we come to September 2, 1950, when the hon. member for York West (Mr. Adamson) asked the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) this question:

> In view of the statements in the press of Canada today, and questions being raised in both London and New York, and in order to clarify the exchange position and prevent the utmost confusion, can the Prime Minister indicate whether or not the government has any intention of altering the official exchange rate of the Canadian dollar in terms of United States dollars?

To that question the Prime Minister answered:

> No consideration has been given to the matter referred to in the hon. member's question.

Then we remember the situation the Minister of Finance has already described—how there was an influx of American investment in September last. It is customary to refer to that as hot money, as if in some way that explained what happened. Actually it was an influx caused partly, of course, by speculation, in the belief that our dollar was too low, and partly by ordinary investment. At any rate the pressure became too great, and we know that on September 30 the minister changed the view which had been expressed so long by the government, and told us the dollar would be allowed to find its own level. It was difficult for the minister to do that, because it had been only a little more than a year before that the Prime Minister was reported to have said at Timmins, on May 26—and this appears in the Ottawa Citizen of May 27:

> Mr. Drew's argument—

That is, his argument with regard to our position on the dollar.

> —is a typical Tory proposal to benefit the few at the expense of the many.

Of course that was during an election campaign, and in such times we must not hold people too closely to everything they say. But just how it could be argued that the suggestion we made for realism in exchange—that is the word we used—was to benefit the few at the expense of the many, I do not know, and I doubt whether anyone else knows.

As I said, and as the minister has indicated, events became too strong, and the dollar was allowed to find its own level—which should have been done a long time before. What happened immediately was that it appreciated by nearly five cents, which of course meant that those people who had been buying goods in the United States, such as coal, oil and the like, for a considerable time were injured by the fact that they had been using a dollar which, by the edict of the Department of Finance, was stated to be worth only ninety cents when actually the market showed on September 30, that it was worth about ninety-five cents.

Of course there was another very unfortunate incident. When you persist in wrong actions you sometimes have unexpected conclusions and evils resulting therefrom that you have not looked forward to. Of course the finance department did not expect that as a result of their action long before there would be some $200 million of new money, which the minister has referred to, injected into the Canadian currency, which still further debased our currency, diluted it, and of course just added more fuel to the fire and provided that much more money to send prices up just that much higher. If the dollar had been freed long before, as it should have been, that difficulty would not have arisen.

As I have said already, the minister has finally come to the point where he agrees with us, and he said in September last that the dollar would be allowed to find its own level. Now where do we stand? The minister has said very frankly that he regards the organization as a stand-by organization, but when we get into committee we shall have some questions to ask about the number of people still working for the foreign exchange control board, and about the amount of money which it costs. I think we may find questions in our minds as to whether this is not a fairly expensive stand-by organization.

What is it that remains for this organization to do now that the dollar, as the minister has said, has been set free on what we call current account, that is to say, in ordinary transactions of buying and selling? There is still a measure of control exercised over the movement of capital from Canada to the United States and vice versa. I would agree with the minister to this extent, that in this strange and troubled world it would be taking a good deal of responsibility to say that there must be no organization available in the event of some disaster or unexpected cataclysm which might disturb things.

As a matter of fact, since the dollar was allowed to find its own level the violent oscillations, the jumpings up and down of our holdings of United States exchange, which the minister referred to, have stopped. That is unless in the last month or two there has been a substantial change because, as the minister indicated, from the 30th of September when the change was made until the end of December the amount of United States exchange remained level. That indicates that the dollar had found its proper level, that there was no unnatural movement of money. As a matter of fact, some have even suggested that there might again be a danger not of our having too little United States money but, with all the inducement there is to invest in our country now, of our even having too much United States money. It has even been suggested that we might need some kind of control available to stop an experience similar to what we had last September.

Of course there is one very obvious answer. Now that the dollar is free to find its own level, just as soon as you have United States money coming in here in any unusual amount it will raise the price of our dollar and it will tend to check itself in the natural, time-honoured and sensible way. Of course the same will be true about Canadian money going into the United States. Nevertheless, if the minister is coming and asking for some skeleton organization, some really stand-by organization, then it seems to me that we ought to be ready at any rate to take a good look at what he asks, but we are still hopeful that before the bill becomes law we shall be able to persuade the minister that no elaborate machinery is necessary.

I would carry the minister's mind back to the autumn of 1939. I think the minister would agree that, so far as permits covering ordinary travelling expenses for people going to the United States are concerned, there is no more need for the machinery we now have. I quite realize that the minister is relaxing it but there is no more need for that machinery than there is for machinery when you travel from Toronto to Montreal. As a matter of fact it almost looks as if, perhaps almost without intending it, the authorities were trying to keep people in the employ of the foreign exchange control board so as to have a full-fledged instrument if the need should arise again.

What I should like to point out to the minister, however, is that if capital controls are needed—and I think he will agree that is the only thing that is needed—those were made effective in September, 1939, with virtually no machinery except that of the Bank of Canada and the chartered banks. It will take a lot of persuasion even on the part of that persuasive man, the minister, to convince me that anything like what I imagine to be the number of staff in the foreign exchange control board is necessary. We will know more about that after we reach the committee stage.

Therefore what I would say is that, subject to what may come out in this debate and to further investigation of the facts, I think it would be reasonable to have some stand-by organization to deal with unforeseen and perhaps even unimaginable difficulties that might arise. However, it would be very hard for me to believe that we need anything approaching the organization that we have had, and which is being kept busy now to some extent doing things which I think are utterly unnecessary.

There is one further point I should like to make. The question may be raised about our relationship to the international monetary fund. Many in this house will recall that when the Foreign Exchange Control Act became law five years ago in 1946 one of the arguments made by the minister—and I think quite properly—was that it flowed from our membership in the international monetary fund. Attention has been drawn in this house by myself and others to the fact that as the years have gone by the authorities of the international monetary fund have been very emphatic in pointing out that they felt a growing measure of freedom—the very thing we advocated—should be brought into play. Of course it is clear that when that was done last September the international monetary fund accepted it, so far as I know, with good grace. That is another question which may arise but, Mr. Speaker, I say again that I still hope that we may have something much more simple without all the punitive powers that the foreign exchange control board has, because it seems to me there is nothing on the horizon to suggest that the ordinary mechanism which the minister in effect put into operation last September cannot serve for current account. There is also nothing to suggest why the Bank of Canada organization coupled with the mechanism of the chartered banks cannot be sufficient to deal with whatever measure of control of capital movement may be necessary.

Mr. A. W. Stuart (Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words before the motion carries. I have listened with great interest today to the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell). I realize he is a former banker and is very familiar with foreign exchange and all the details connected therewith. I wish to take a few minutes to make a few remarks based on personal experiences I have had myself, and to say that I am strongly in support of the resolution. Since the Canadian dollar was allowed to seek its own level a few months ago it has been very noticeable that the margin between the rate of premium paid in the banks and the price charged Canadians requiring United States dollars has been very small. Previously, under arrangements not of the same character, I have seen very wide margins between the buying and selling prices of United States dollars. As I have stated in this house on many occasions, I remember two periods—and incidentally they were both when we had Conservative governments here in Ottawa—when the difference between the buying and selling prices would be as high as six, eight and ten per cent. I may be wrong, but I have an idea the foreign exchange control board may be responsible for keeping these buying and selling prices very close, and I fear that if we discarded this board and had no way of controlling foreign exchange we might have the same condition we had during the first great war and in the early thirties.

I believe every Canadian should have the privilege of buying United States exchange at any time at a fair rate. In smaller towns we may have difficulties that are not found in larger cities. In a small town you may have only one bank; there is no competition, and conditions may be vastly different to those in larger cities. However, I do want to go on record as being very much in favour of this resolution. I believe the foreign exchange control board should be ready to function at any time circumstances demand it, and I believe many of the people in the section of the country from which I come are of the same opinion.

Mr. Hatfield: Will this do away with all the forms, the export and import forms, the H forms; and can you accept Canadian money in payment of goods exported to the United States?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think this question should be reserved until the house is in committee on the resolution.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

Mr. Hatfield: Does this do away with all the B forms, C forms, H forms, export forms and import forms; and can an exporter to United States now accept Canadian money in payment for his goods?

Mr. Abbott: This extension of the Foreign Exchange Control Act if enacted, as I anticipate it will be, does not do away with all forms. As I indicated in my statement, as a result of recent relaxations a person making a short trip to the United States can take up to $100 without an H form, as often as he wishes. With respect to selling merchandise in the United States the same practice will be followed that has prevailed in the past; the exporter must receive payment in United States dollars. I am not personally familiar with the details of the forms used. I know my hon. friend is, because he has quite a large export business. As far as I am aware there is no change in the general practice with respect to merchandise exports. They must be invoiced and paid for in United States dollars.

Mr. Hatfield: Then we still have to make out B forms for exports to bring back United States dollars in payment for those goods?

Mr. Abbott: I believe that is correct.

Mr. Quelch: What is the maximum amount a person can get if he wishes to go to the United States for a holiday, without making special application?

Mr. Abbott: $100.

Mr. Quelch: For the whole year?

Mr. Abbott: No; he can get it—

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Every day?

Mr. Abbott: If it were clear that it was being abused I presume some action would be taken. Of course a person has to sign a simple form saying he has received the money. If that privilege were abused, if it were found on checking through that one person was getting a great many of these allowances in rapid succession, I daresay appropriate action would be taken to check on it. But the general rule is as I indicated in my statement, that as a result of successive relaxations one may now take up to $100.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Would the minister be able to say the amount involved in these travel moneys, if I may call them that? Is it substantial?

Mr. Abbott: The amount is very substantial. I have not the figures here, but I am informed that since we have relaxed travel restrictions the amounts released for this purpose have increased enormously. That is understandable. We all know that many of us and our friends have been going to the United States more frequently than we used to and I think some of our wives are able to do a little more shopping in New York than they used to do. That has resulted in a very substantial additional demand for United States exchange. We expected that it would. We realized that the relaxation would be relatively expensive from the point of view of the loss of United States dollars, but we felt that our reserve position had reached a point where it was fully justified.

Mr. Hatfield: I understood that from now on this was going to be just a stand-by board. If an exporter has to make out all the forms he made out in the past in order to bring back United States funds for all his exports it may require one or two or half a dozen men in an office just to do that work, and all those forms have to come to Ottawa. So it will be more than a stand-by board.

Mr. Abbott: I realize that the completion of these forms does involve work for the exporter, but it is not possible to maintain an effective control of capital exports unless you are in a position to survey current account transactions. There are no restrictions on those, but it is considered in the national interest that exporters who are now selling to those areas should make their sales in United States dollars because, with the deficit of some $400 million last year in our trading account with the United States, which I indicated in my statement, we still need to get all the United States dollars that are properly available through our trading transactions.

Mr. Fair: What is the value of the goods a person visiting the United States may bring back and how often may that be done?

Mr. Abbott: That relates to customs, of course; but my recollection is that an individual in Canada can bring in $100 worth of merchandise duty free once every six months. Of course there is no limit on the amount he may bring in if he is prepared to pay the duty.

Mr. Knowles: I think it is once every four months.

Mr. Abbott: That is not my department, so the time is subject to correction; but I know the limit is $100. That only relates to the amount one may bring in without paying duty. Since we have eliminated the Emergency Exchange Conservation Act anyone with the money can bring in anything he sees fit, providing he is prepared to pay the duty. I should add that I do not suppose the foreign exchange control board would give a man or woman unlimited funds to go to New York on a shopping spree. They would give any reasonable amount required for tourist travel in the United States which involved the making of reasonable purchases there.

Mr. Low: By the time the budget comes down we will not have any money left for tourist travel.

Mr. Abbott: That is a real limiting factor. I do not know how popular the relaxation of the travel restriction was with the husbands, but it was popular with the ladies.

Mr. Hatfield: Do I understand that you can carry $100 in United States funds back and forth across the border, without having it taken from you?

Mr. Abbott: That is what I understand.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): With the United States dollar on a free market, if it were brought to the attention of the foreign exchange board that the margin between the buying and selling prices of United States funds was wide or unreasonable, would the board have authority to rectify that situation?

Mr. Abbott: Under the act the foreign exchange control board, which is the instrument of the Minister of Finance, has power to maintain orderly exchange conditions. If it saw that exchange quotations were gyrating pretty violently I daresay the minister would feel it might be appropriate to take some action to provide for orderly changes in exchange rates. It has not been necessary to intervene up to the present time.

Mr. Hatfield: Will the minister say whether the United States investor can take his capital gains out of the country? I understand he can take his dividends, but can he take capital gains?

Mr. Abbott: I do not think he can take out his capital gains, no. He can, of course, take current earnings out of the country. In the case of the removal of capital, whether it is capital which has been put in here or is an appreciation of capital assets, permission of the foreign exchange control board is required in order to take that capital out. I am not able to state offhand just what the attitude would be with respect to an individual transaction. The general rule is that in the case of capital which was in Canada prior to the inauguration of exchange control in 1939, that can only be taken out by special permission, and that permission would only be given in the light of general policy. On the other hand, permission is usually given for the withdrawal of capital which has come in since the beginning of exchange control.

Mr. Hatfield: The minister led the house to believe that the influx of United States capital into Canada was caused by economic conditions in Canada. I do not believe that at all. My understanding is that the United States investor was trying to get his money out of the country because he feared high taxation.

Mr. Abbott: That is a matter of opinion.

Mr. Hatfield: If there is higher taxation in Canada, he will soon take it back.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Will the minister give us some description of the way in which track is kept of ordinary Canadian transactions in which goods are sold in the United States? The point of my question is this. Exporter A sells to the United States and he wishes to acquire United States dollars. If he is not able to get them, is he prevented from carrying out the transaction?

Mr. Abbott: Any export of goods to the United States must be invoiced and paid for in U.S. dollars; that is still the rule. As I indicated in my statement, by a recent relaxation services may be paid for in Canadian dollars. Now, as to the technical means by which that is traced, I shall get the information and give it to the hon. member, perhaps in committee on second reading. I understand that the exporter has to complete the proper form which is supplied by the customs officials. I daresay the member for Victoria-Carleton could explain this much better than I can, but I believe the exporter has to fill out a form in triplicate, whatever the form is, and one of those forms is available to the foreign exchange control board for checking to see that the exporter of that particular shipment has in fact invoiced it in U.S. dollars and, providing the purchaser is solvent, payment will be received in U.S. dollars. I believe that is substantially correct. I see the member for Victoria-Carleton is nodding his head, so I probably summarized it correctly.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): The minister has said that the payment for goods is in U.S. funds. Is that a ruling of the board, or is it on the statute books?

Mr. Abbott: It is by regulation.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I can well recall that in one of the periods, I believe it was in the thirties, when I sold goods in the United States I was paid for it in Canadian dollars; that happened month after month. Perhaps the member for Victoria-Carleton received the same treatment. I recall that the member for Northumberland county in New Brunswick informed me he had been paid for pulpwood in the same way. If the foreign exchange control board has any such regulation, it would meet with the support of the whole house.

Mr. Abbott: In these answers I am giving as to the detailed administration, I am not personally familiar with all the details, and if I have misstated them I will see that corrections are made on the second reading of the bill. I believe what I have said is substantially correct.

Mr. Stick: Would the minister care to make a statement concerning the convertibility of sterling into Canadian dollars?

Mr. Abbott: That is rather a large question. We require that our exports to certain areas be paid for in U. S. dollars. As I indicated in my statement, we are getting fairly close to a balance with the United Kingdom. We require that our exports to the United Kingdom be paid for in sterling or Canadian dollars. Now, when the United Kingdom sells in Canada they have the option of deciding whether they will take payment in Canadian dollars or in sterling. What I presume they do is to quote the price in sterling, and take Canadian dollars in payment to be used to pay for their own purchases from us.

Mr. Hatfield: The minister said that a person could take $100 of United States currency out of the country without signing any forms. Now, where does he get that?

Mr. Abbott: I thought I said without an H form.

Mr. Hatfield: A person needs no forms?

Mr. Abbott: I think when you go to the bank to buy U.S. dollars you have to sign a receipt form?

Mr. Hatfield: That is what I was coming to. Can a person buy those U.S. dollars from another person, or does he have to go to the bank to buy them?

Mr. Abbott: I shall have to check on that, but I think you have to purchase your dollars from an authorized source. I shall have to verify that. The essence of it is that you are entitled to take $100 without an H form.

Mr. Hatfield: Suppose the bank is closed and a person gets a hurried call, can he pick up the $100 from a storekeeper or would that be against the law?

Mr. Abbott: I am not sure about that. I shall have to check on that.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Would the minister indicate the extent to which the regulations are administered by officials of the chartered banks, acting as agents for the foreign exchange control board and what staff there is on the board itself? What is the scope of the full-time employees of the board?

Mr. Abbott: Under the Foreign Exchange Control Act, as the house will recall, the Bank of Canada is required to provide the staff and pay for the administration of the foreign exchange control regulations. The staff of the Bank of Canada allocated to the foreign exchange control board at December 31 was male, 98; female, 305; totalling 403.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): How did that compare with what it was on September 30?

Mr. Abbott: I have not September 30, but I have the figure for the preceding December 31, when it was 466 or 63 more.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Has the minister the figures for the cost?

Mr. Abbott: Yes, the expenditure by the Bank of Canada on staff, premises, office supplies and equipment, travelling expenses —these figures are subject to verification because the statement is not out yet—were $1,183,986; that is for the year ending December 31, 1950.

Mr. Hatfield: I should like to ask the minister why he feels a man taking $100 in U.S. currency needs to go to the bank and sign a form in order to obtain that $100? If you are going to let him take it out every week or every month, and if there is no restriction—

Mr. Abbott: We have to keep a record of how many times a person gets $50 or $100 in order to see he is not evading the regulations and effecting the export of capital.

Mr. Hatfield: Since the bank is your agent, could the banker not exercise that judgment?

Mr. Abbott: I shall bring my hon. friend's remark to the attention of those administering the regulation.

Mr. Blackmore: The minister recognizes, of course, that with all these restrictions and the necessity of employing officials, as the hon. member has pointed out, the government has a policy which is directly forcing the price of goods up and causing inflation. It is not inflation caused by too much money but because of direct government manipulations. Now, that is the plain fact of the matter. I am not objecting, and I am not saying it is not necessary to do that. But it is of the utmost importance that the people of Canada know just exactly what is happening to them, so they are not deluded by a lot of foolish, ill-informed and malicious propaganda leading them to think that the cause of our inflation is too much money in circulation, so as to justify the government in levying such taxation as would be injurious to us. That is the reason I raised the question.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. Abbott thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 147, to amend the Foreign Exchange Control Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Abbott: Before we proceed with the next order of business, I wonder if I might ask the permission of the house to have proceedings suspended somewhere between half past five and a quarter to six in order that I may lay on the table the estimates and make the usual motion. I had hoped that the estimates would be ready a bit earlier. At that time also I should like to move to go into supply solely for the purpose of opening four departments.

Mr. Graydon: If we go by Hansard of Friday night, I think it will be found that the order of business set out there was for the debate on the resolution of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott), which has just been concluded, and that the next order of business was to move to go into supply. I fancy that was the understanding of members generally, and I was wondering whether there was any special reason why a change should be made now.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Mr. Speaker, the estimates are not available for tabling right at this moment, but they will be at five-thirty. We cannot move to go into supply before we table the estimates. At the time of the tabling of the estimates, we will move to go into supply.

Mr. Graydon: Do I understand the minister to indicate that we shall have the estimates by five-thirty?

Mr. Abbott: What I hope the house might be willing to do would be at about five-thirty to adjourn debate on whatever matter is taken up now in order that I might table the estimates, make the usual motion that they be referred to the committee of supply, and then move that we go into supply for the purpose of opening four departments. I thought we could perhaps do that. I am informed that the estimates will be available within another half hour.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

PROVISION FOR EARLY DISTRIBUTION OF PAYMENTS AT END OF POOL PERIOD, ETC.

The house resumed, from Friday, March 9, consideration of the motion of Mr. Howe for the second reading of Bill No. 5, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1935, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Ross (Souris), and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Wright.

Mr. J. A. Ross (Souris): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), as reported at page 1069 of Hansard of March 8, said among other things:

> The fact is that the western farmers accepted the wheat board as the agency to sell their wheat.

May I say that I have repeatedly stated that I am myself a supporter of the wheat board and that the officials of the board are in no way responsible for this colossal blunder of our federal government.

During 1947, when debating amendments to the wheat board act which provided legislation for the five-year wheat pool and for its being retroactive to include the 1945 and 1946 crops, I then stated that under this scheme and under the United Kingdom-Canada wheat agreement I was going to quit growing wheat. I hope that hon. members will excuse this personal reference, but there have been some comments in some newspapers, and I should like to make my position clear. I said that I was going to quit growing wheat and I have ceased to grow commercial wheat. The minister said that I would be sorry when the final settlement was made. Practically all of the wheat participation certificates of mine are for wheat grown in the crop years of 1945 and 1946. I along with others voted against that amendment for the five-year pool and against making it retroactive to cover those two years. I am not sorry for that, but I am sorry for many of the wheat farmers whom I have the honour to represent in this parliament. I am exceedingly sorry for many of them.

With respect to the lengthy speech of confusion made by the Minister of Agriculture and certain remarks reported at page 1069 of Hansard with respect to certain estimates of losses for the purpose of misleading the farmer, may I suggest to anyone who is interested that he might study page 9 of the 1948-49 Canadian wheat board report and page 19 of the 1949-50 report which has been tabled just recently, and then figure out for himself by how many hundreds of millions of dollars the prairie farmers have been forced by this government to subsidize the consumers of Great Britain and Canada. While doing that, he might also figure out who has been attempting to lead the wheat farmers down the garden path, and for what reason. In my opinion, a royal commission on grain should be appointed by this government immediately to report upon marketing, grading, transportation, and storage of grain within Canada and abroad. I know there are many who will disapprove of a royal commission of any kind. I myself am not too fond of them. They will think that it is a costly business as well. May I say here to this house, and through this house to the country, that such a commission can be conducted and the cost will be considerably less than one bushel of wheat per farmer in the prairie provinces. Surely that is little as compared with the great trimming the farmers in those prairie provinces have taken under this five-year wheat pool. Speaking for myself, I am sincere in my belief that such a commission should be appointed for this purpose.

Those are all the remarks I wish to make at this stage on this particular measure.

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate in order to impress upon the government the need for reconsidering its decision that farmers will be paid only 8·3 cents as a final settlement in respect to the five-year pool. On March 2, following the announcement by the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) that the payment would be only 8·3 cents per bushel, I made the statement that such a payment was completely unsatisfactory. I am even more convinced at this time than I was then that a payment of 8·3 cents per bushel is nothing more or less than a double-cross of the western wheat producer. A payment so niggardly in no way takes into account the great sacrifices that the farmers made during that five-year period and it in no way compensates them for the have regard clause or for the fact that the Canadian consumer, during the whole five-year period, obtained cheap wheat at the expense of the wheat producer. I was glad to hear the statement of the Prime Minister this afternoon. I think it goes a long way towards clearing up the position in relation to the have regard clause which prevailed in May and early June of last year. After reading the statements of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) and of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe), it seems clear that the statement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce on May 30 still stands as a statement of fact, and that his statement of June 5 is also a statement of fact as of that date.

We have learned since then that while the Minister of Trade and Commerce did not agree as to the final statement on the have regard to clause, in his discussions with the British in May of last year, he did bring back a memorandum outlining the United Kingdom's position in relation to the have regard to clause, and the cabinet accepted that memorandum and thus made it possible for the Minister of Trade and Commerce to make his statement of June 5 which has already been read into the record a number of times, and which I shall read into the record again:

> We went over the agreement while in London. We asked the United Kingdom government what further settlement it is to make on account of the "have regard to" clause. The United Kingdom government took a very strong position that they had fulfilled all obligations under that clause, and so far as the United Kingdom was concerned. We agreed on behalf of Canada that considering all the circumstances that was the case.

Then we have the further statement of the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) this afternoon which substantiates the statement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce on June 5. We have also the statement in Hansard of the Prime Minister on January 31, as recorded at page 7, and which reads as follows:

> I will not say that negotiations have been opened with the government of the United Kingdom in that regard, but representations were made as to what I thought was the view prevailing throughout the wheat-producing provinces of Canada in regard to the fulfilment of all obligations under the five-year contract.

The result of everything that has been said, and of all the statements that have been made by ministers of the crown down to the present time, demonstrates that on June 5 of last year, or sometime previously to that, this government did not carry out the wishes of the western wheat producer in respect to the have regard to clause; that this government took from the British at that time a settlement in respect to the have regard to clause that was completely inadequate.

Mr. Gibson: Could we go to war?

Mr. Argue: Don't interrupt me with such a nonsensical interjection. The government, since June 5 of last year, has done nothing, and there was nothing it could do to re-open a contract that had already been settled and finalized by both parties to that contract.

We have the Minister of Agriculture just a few weeks ago making a trip by air to the United Kingdom, supposedly to discuss a further settlement on the have regard to clause. In view of all the statements that have been made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and by the Prime Minister, and what I am sure will be borne out by the documents exchanged between the governments of Canada and the United Kingdom when they are made public, it is completely obvious that the trip by the Minister of Agriculture to Britain was nothing more or less than a grand publicity stunt. The Minister of Agriculture did not have a hope in the world of really getting anything further from the British on account of the have regard to clause.

The other day I placed a question on the order paper and received a very interesting answer. Part 3 of the question read as follows:

> Did the Minister of Agriculture take with him on this visit any official government documents or proposals relating to the purposes of his visit?

And the answer was: "No."

The Minister of Agriculture had no proposals from the federal government to offer to the British government as far as the have regard to clause was concerned, because the Canadian government realizes only too well, as also does the British government, that that contract was finalized on June 5, 1950, or a few days before.

But I come to this again, Mr. Speaker. The Canadian government has been acting as the agents of the wheat producers of western Canada, and the wheat producers felt that they had a substantial and additional claim in the way of a final return on the basis of the have regard to clause; and they expected our government, before a final settlement was made, to attempt to have that have regard to clause fulfilled both in spirit and in letter.

It is perfectly clear now that the Canadian government back in June of last year did not in any way obtain a fulfilment of the have regard to clause. Therefore I think the stand of the wheat producers of western Canada is fair and just when they now demand from this government a further substantial payment because of the have regard to clause; and of course also because the Canadian wheat producer has had to subsidize the Canadian consumer throughout the five-year pool period.

In his speech last Thursday the Minister of Agriculture said, and I shall quote from page 1068 of Hansard:

> In the second place, the class II wheat price which is used as the basis for figuring the loss up to $330 million (on the United Kingdom wheat agreement) is the price which the United States government paid American dealers for wheat—much of which they were trading to get their dollars back, and much of which they were giving away—plus the increased value of Canadian wheat because of greater protein content.

In other words, the price of our class 2 wheat was, according to the Minister of Agriculture, the United States price plus a substantial premium because of its greater protein content. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, the evidence of the committee on agriculture last year shows that the price of class 2 wheat for the bulk of our wheat sold within that four-year period was at a figure much less than the United States price. In answering a question of mine, as reported at page 149 of the minutes of proceedings and evidence of the committee on agriculture and colonization, the chairman of the wheat board last year pointed out that at one time the Canadian wheat board offered three cargoes of Canadian class 2 wheat to a prominent buyer at 46 cents a bushel under the United States price, and the offer was turned down. Page 149 of the evidence in reply to a question of mine shows that from August 1948 to July 1949 our class 2 wheat sold for as much as 33 cents a bushel under the United States price; and that in the next year, 1949, our wheat was sold for a discount as much as 51 cents a bushel under the United States price for a wheat that is of inferior quality, and not comparable as to grade.

Mr. Howe: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Argue: Yes.

Mr. Howe: Is that 51 cents under the price at which the Americans sold wheat, or under the price at which they gave away wheat?

Mr. Argue: I am not dealing with that particular point.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Argue: All I am saying is this, that the price of our class 2 wheat throughout the four-year period was not the American price plus a 20-cent premium, but in the last two years of the four-year period fell to as low as 51 cents a bushel under the American price, for an inferior type of wheat. This means that our class 2 wheat at one point was selling for as much as 71 cents a bushel less than comparable American wheat.

Mr. Gardiner: May I ask the hon. member a question? Would he tell us what the position was in the first two years which we have been all talking about?

An hon. Member: You should know.

Mr. Gardiner: Put it on the record.

Mr. Argue: I will deal with that—and I take this information from the report of the wheat board. In the first two years we sold 94·7 million bushels at a 20-cent premium over the United States price. In the second two years we sold 102·5 million bushels at a substantial discount from the American price.

Mr. Gardiner: And it was the first two years I was talking about.

Mr. Argue: The statement I made earlier was that the greater portion of our class 2 wheat sold in the four-year period was under the American price. Our wheat producers are not asking the government to pay the full $2.36, the price for class 2 wheat which prevailed throughout the four-year period, they are not asking for the highest possible price. Even on class 2, the price, taking the four years together, was at a price lower than the American price. Our wheat producers have been asking for a final settlement of only $2 a bushel for the five-year period. Those wheat producers are not unreasonable; they are asking the government for a price which is 36 cents a bushel less than the price of class 2 wheat.

At page 17 of the report of the wheat board there are statistics for the quantities of Canadian wheat sold at various prices. I have done some calculations on the basis of those statistics. It is clear that during the four-year period we subsidized the Canadian consumer to the extent of $127·6 million.

One also could add to that the $48 million we subsidized the Canadian consumer prior to February 17, 1947. Then, by comparing the prices in the U.K. wheat agreement with the class 2 price for wheat, we subsidized the United Kingdom consumer in that four-year period to the extent of $380·2 million. This makes a total subsidy of both the Canadian and United Kingdom consumers of well over $500 million.

The wheat producers of western Canada are not asking the government to pay $500 million into the five-year pool; but they are determined that they will get more than the token payment of $65 million, which represents only 13 cents on the dollar. They feel they have good reason to ask a further substantial payment.

They have the statement of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) on August 15, 1946, in reply to the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) to the effect that while the government had provided $200 million for price support of agricultural products other than wheat, similar arrangements could be made for wheat, should the farmers' costs of production continue to increase.

The farmer has always asked and continues to ask for stability. But it is not good enough to stabilize wheat prices and then let the cost of production shoot higher and higher. On the basis of the statement of the Minister of Agriculture and other members of the government that not only would stabilization be applied to the price of wheat, but that through an orderly decontrol program we would not have inflation, I say the western wheat producers now have a claim for an additional payment over and above the 8·3 cents.

The western wheat producers have never agreed, and do not agree today, that they should be called upon to subsidize the Canadian consumer. They are opposed to subsidizing the Canadian consumer. They take the stand that if the Canadian consumer should get cheaper flour and cheaper bread, that subsidy should be paid out of the national treasury of the country, and that it should not be saddled on the backs of one particular group, namely the western wheat producer.

The Minister of Agriculture himself seems to have taken that position before, because, as reported at page 4806 of Hansard for August 14, 1946, he said:

> Having said that, may I say that farm organizations generally, the farmers in particular, and most of us who represent wheat-growing constituencies in this house have always questioned the advisability of charging the farmer up with the difference between whatever the price was and the price at which wheat was being supplied to the millers . . . I agree with those who say that that whole cost should not be charged up to the farmer, and in discussions in the past I have maintained that too much of the cost has been charged up to the farmer. I still maintain that we should get away from that just as soon as we possibly can.

In agreeing to that five-year pool, the western wheat producer believed the statement of the Minister of Agriculture that the government was going to cease forcing the wheat producers to subsidize the Canadian consumer. Even today the wheat producer is forced to sell his wheat to the Canadian consumer for 25 cents a bushel less than the price of class 2 wheat.

On the same page the minister makes this further statement:

> Having said that may I revert to what I said a few moments ago. The argument is not all on one side. The treasury has paid the losses on our wheat before; it may have to pay losses again and those losses if paid will be paid to the same farmers against whom this cost was charged up. That is the position at the moment.

I say on the basis of that statement alone the western wheat producers have an iron-clad argument for the government making a further payment over and above the 8·3 cents a bushel.

Hon. members on all sides of the house realize that this is the hottest issue we have had to debate this session. The government must well know that the federation of agriculture in Saskatchewan, together with the executive of the western agricultural conference, have just had a meeting at Regina, and that they are sending a delegation to Ottawa to present to the government a unanimous submission on their behalf.

This is a hot political issue on the prairies. I say that if any prairie provincial government, Alberta, Saskatchewan or Manitoba, went to the country in 1951 the Liberal party would go down to overwhelming and disastrous defeat, on the basis of this wheat payment.

However, I do not wish to conclude on a political note, but I do want to ask the government to reconsider the decision with respect to 8·3 cents, and I make the plea that western prairie members who represent wheat constituencies, particularly my fellow M.P.'s in the Liberal party who come from Saskatchewan, should stand up and vote in favour of the C.C.F. subamendment calling for a final payment of 25 cents a bushel.

Mr. C. E. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take very long, so my hon. friend across the way will have a chance to finish what he has to say before six o'clock. I should not like this opportunity to pass without saying a word on this subject. As the last speaker has said, it is a very important question. When speaking in the house the other day the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) agreed that it was a most serious problem. I think it is a question concerning which we should try to get the facts before the people. At least we should try to get the facts before the house without endeavouring to confuse them.

Let me say at the start that in my view the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) the other day attempted to introduce another issue. He tried to create a disagreement in the house and throughout the country on the question of whether or not the wheat board was a marketing agency acceptable to the farmers. I do not think that could ever be an issue here. It certainly could never be an issue with the farmers of western Canada because I think they are unanimous in preferring the wheat board as the marketing agency. The thing they do object to most strenuously, however, is political interference in the operations of the wheat board. As long as we are going to have a Liberal government inflicted on us I think there is no person I would rather see at the head of the Department of Agriculture than the present minister.

I think the minister has endeavoured to put up an argument for western agriculture but this time it has been a lamentable one. He has found himself in an impossible position, and one who reads his speech of the other day, both the revised and the unrevised, will find that that is true. I want to refer to a statement to which reference has already been made on many occasions. I do not do so for the sake of argument. I want to put it on Hansard so that I can make reference to it as I go along. These remarks were made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce on June 5, 1950, and are found at page 3221 of Hansard for that year. They read as follows:

> We went over the agreement while in London. We asked the United Kingdom government what further settlement it is to make on account of the "have regard to" clause. The United Kingdom government took a very strong position that they had fulfilled all obligations under that clause, and so far as the United Kingdom was concerned. We agreed on behalf of Canada that considering all the circumstances that was the case.

When these remarks were referred to the other day the Minister of Agriculture took very strong objection to them. As recorded at page 1121 of Hansard for March 9, 1951, he said, when replying to the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell):

> The report in Hansard is obviously not a correct report. All I am saying is that hon. members should not insist on quoting as a statement of policy or as a decision of the government a report which is obviously incorrectly stated.

In making that statement it seems to me that the Minister of Agriculture was taking unto himself the position of trying to define something that somebody else had said in this house. When we refer to what the person who made the statement claims we see that he holds an entirely different view. When the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) interrupted the speech of the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch) on one occasion, on Friday last, he had this to say, as recorded at page 1115 of Hansard:

> Mr. Howe: The Minister of Trade and Commerce has never at any time intimated that he wished to change the statement he made in June, 1950.

The Hansard report continues as follows:

> Mr. Quelch: You do not want to change the statement you made in June, 1950? Then it stands?
> Mr. Howe: Of course it stands.
> Mr. Quelch: Then I have nothing to take back at all. If you accept that statement, you accept the statement by Mr. Gaitskell; then fine, an agreement was reached in May, 1950, that no other payment should be made. Well, that is fine. Now we all agree.
> Mr. Gardiner: Perhaps I had better explain this matter.

Once again the Minister of Agriculture is trying to straighten out the mess that the government has found itself in. The Minister of Agriculture jumped up and said: Now, what this fellow Howe has said is not right; I will have to explain it again. But the Minister of Trade and Commerce does not pay much attention to him because he says that the statement that he made stands.

An hon. Member: Why would he?

Mr. Johnston: Further evidence that the Minister of Trade and Commerce was right is found when the Minister of Agriculture was speaking with respect to Mr. Gaitskell's statement in the British House of Commons. At page 1120 of Hansard for March 9 the minister said:

> This is the newspaper report:
> "Gaitskell was asked in Commons what additional sum was payable to Canada in view of the contracted price and the world price of wheat during the last two years of the contract. 'None,' Gaitskell replied. 'The matter was fully discussed in 1950 with Mr. Howe and the result was that no further payment will be made'."

I have read that exactly as the Minister of Agriculture put it on Hansard because once again he made a mistake. Then the minister continues:

> That does not say that Mr. Howe agreed with it.
> Mr. Coldwell: The words are, "was to be made." I have the British Hansard here.
> Mr. Gardiner: I have not a copy of the British Hansard, but it is "will be made" in this report which has appeared all across Canada.

Mr. Coldwell: I have the British Hansard.
Mr. Gardiner: Read it.
Mr. Coldwell: This reads:

"The matter was discussed in May, 1950, with Mr. Howe and the result was that no further payment was to be made."

There again we have confirmation that the statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce in this house was correct. On top of that, no matter what the Minister of Agriculture may say, we have the statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) today in reply to a motion for production of papers by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) involving the minute brought back from London. The Prime Minister made the statement that the Canadian government agreed to accept as the position of the British government that the agreement had been fulfilled. That cannot mean anything else but that the federal government agreed that the wheat agreement was fully and finally settled on the basis of the last payment of $65 million. I wanted to get the record straight in that one respect. Regardless of what the Minister of Agriculture has had to say on the matter, I think there is no doubt that the agreement was definitely and finally settled on the basis of the $65 million payment.

Now I want to review for just a moment the amount of money coming to the farmers. I do so because later on I want to refer to the statement of the Minister of Agriculture as to the amount he and the government think was still owing. These figures can be verified by the statement placed on Hansard the other day by the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Fair). The loss to the farmers under the British wheat agreement during the four years 1946 to 1950 was $431,676,844. The loss to the farmers as a consequence of selling wheat to Canadian millers during those four years was $136,920,921, or a total loss of $568,597,765. The amount available to be paid out was $120 million, leaving a net loss of $448,597,765.

Having placed these figures on record I want to refer to the first figure I gave a moment ago as the loss under the British wheat agreement, which was $431,676,844. When we deduct from that the $120 million which is to be paid to the farmers the amount outstanding is $311,676,844. According to our figures that is the amount still owing the farmers. The Minister of Agriculture does not agree with that. The other day at page 1122 of Hansard he said he did not consider that anything like $330 million was still payable to the farmers; that was out of all reason. Then he said:

—I said to them that so far as we were concerned on the most favourable terms to Great Britain we figured the actual loss to be $166 million.

I have been to quite a few sideshows in my life, where I have seen magicians pull rabbits out of hats, but I never saw anything to compare with the way the minister dealt with this $166 million. I have read over his statement carefully many times to see exactly what he meant, and I think I have it clearly in mind now. He starts assuming, incorrectly I think, that the amount owing the farmers is $166 million. If you will note the figure I mentioned just before that, some $310 million, that shows the farmers losing $144 million right off the bat. Oh, of course, we will not consider that; that was the farmers' money, and it is just thrown out the window. Then the minister went on to discuss this $166 million and said: If we consider the fifteen years prior to the beginning of the wheat agreement, which would be back in 1931, we will find that the difference between the Canadian and United States prices was fifteen cents. Why he should take the depression years I do not know.

Mr. Gardiner: If my hon. friend will permit me, I took all the fifteen years from 1931 on, not just one year.

Mr. Johnston: That is right; I said the fifteen years prior to the beginning of the wheat agreement.

Mr. Gardiner: It is an average over all years, whether depression or not.

Mr. Johnston: No, it makes a big difference, because during those depression years the price there was always much higher than it was in Canada. In any event that was the period he took; then he said right off the bat that would amount to $48 million, so the $166 million is now reduced to $118 million. If that is not pulling rabbits right out of the hat I should like to know what it is. The Canadian farmers lost $48 million just like that. That is quite a method of paying off the farmers. This may be a hot question, but it is going to be a hot proposition for the minister to prove that is a fair and equitable settlement to the farmers in western Canada.

Well, now we have it down to $118 million. Then listen to what the minister had to say:

If you take that figure then you find there is $48 million that should be deducted from losses in the first two years. That brings us down to $118 million. I went on to say: We are not going to attempt to prove that any figure short of a round figure is a reasonable figure to be asking under the terms of an agreement such as this, and therefore we are of opinion that $100 million would settle the bill.

So another $18 million goes out the window just like that. Surely no reasonable person, not even a Liberal sitting on the other side of the house, could agree to that. The $166 million has been reduced to $100 million just like pulling a rabbit out of a hat. Then the minister had this to say:

> Another proposal had been made that we might consider $70 million a settlement, and what I said at the end of my speech last night was that under the arrangement which was made for the final year there might have been a settlement of $35 million.

Let us see how the minister handles that $35 million. Of course this is the money of the farmers, and it is not very difficult to whittle it down. A little further on he said:

> If you take into consideration the fact that we did get $1.98 a bushel for our wheat owing to the fact that there was devaluation of the pound, then the sum that we did obtain under that arrangement was $16 million and not $35 million.

So, owing to devaluation, all the farmers actually got was $16 million. The $35 million was settled for $16 million, and another $19 million went out the window. Well, if you take the $35 million and the $65 million the government has agreed to take out of the national treasury and put into the fund that makes the $100 million. So all that is left out of the $166 million will be the $16 million which came through devaluation and which was in the wheat board treasury, and the $65 million which is to be paid out of the national treasury. That is all they will get of the $166 million the minister figured was the actual loss. Then he had this to say in conclusion:

> When you take all these facts into consideration, that we had asked $100 million, that they could claim, by having all the arguments on their side allowed, to have settled $35 million, there was still $65 million owing, and that $65 million has been paid.

Well, it was never paid by the British government. It was paid by the Canadian taxpayers, including the farmers. In other words the farmers are being taxed to pay themselves back. Then the minister went on, and this is the finest gem I have read for some time:

> So far as the farmer is concerned it can be argued that the matter has been settled in the same manner as it would have been settled if Great Britain had made all the settlement that we asked them to make when we were in the midst of these discussions. I think that should be made clear to the house.

In other words, he says that we have just disregarded the $48 million to start with; we have whittled off another $16 million and then a further $19 million, and we have it down now to $65 million. He says that now everything is going to be fine. I do not think it is going to be fine. I do not blame the farmers of western Canada for being greatly perturbed over the loss of this huge sum of money which they rightly had coming to them. When you recall that the actual loss to the farmers by reason of the United Kingdom agreement was $311,676,844, and then when you add to that, as the last speaker indicated, another $136,920,921 which was the loss on wheat sold to the millers in Canada, you find that the total loss amounts to $448,597,765. How can you expect agriculture to be satisfied with such an agreement?

You know, Mr. Speaker, it was rather amusing to read a statement attributed to the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) in a newspaper dated March 8. I should like to put this statement on the record because I think it comes in at this point, particularly after this government has just finished chiselling the farmers to the extent I have indicated. This report appears in the Citizen of Thursday, March 8, and it reads:

> Industry Farm Balances Urged by St. Laurent
> London, Ontario.—Keeping what he termed "proper balance" between Canada's agricultural progress and her industrial development was urged by Prime Minister St. Laurent in a surprise visit to the Middlesex seed fair and food show at Queen's park yesterday.
> Canada, he noted, has been going ahead industrially "at a very rapid rate." Agriculture must keep pace because "a country is in a bad way if it cannot produce all the food it needs."
> Proper distribution of food is also important "if agriculture is to continue as the cornerstone of the economy of this great nation," declared the Prime Minister.

How could he reasonably expect agriculture to continue to be the cornerstone of this great industrial nation when the government itself, through its policy, is the direct cause of the farmers losing $448 million? I believe we should be logical about the matter. Certainly, one cannot expect such a condition to continue.

Just before I left home to attend this session, I attended a meeting of the agricultural producers in Carbon, Alberta. It is not a large town, it is partly a mining town and partly agriculture. At any rate approximately 300 farmers attended the meeting and passed a resolution unanimously that the payment should be at least another 25 cents. I have just received a letter from the farmers' union of Alberta at Carbon, local No. 1005, dated March 10 and reading as follows:

Dear Sir:

> I am instructed by the above local to urge you to do all in your power to obtain the sum of 25 cents per bushel for the final payment of the five-year wheat pool. We feel that we farmers are actually entitled to more than this amount, yet will be satisfied if the dominion government agrees to pay out this sum, making up the balance of what is held at the moment by the Canadian wheat board with further moneys from the Canadian treasury.
> Yours very truly,
> Secretary-Treasurer.

When 300 farmers come out to a meeting in one of those small towns, the matter must be of some importance. You can well imagine that when we return home we are going to have larger attendances at these meetings. This government is going to find that the farmers will not sit down and take it. Surely no respectable government would expect the agricultural industry to bear such a tremendous loss when it is remembered that during the last war other industries did not carry such losses. In fact, they did not carry any losses but were, in most cases, subsidized. When that is recalled and compared with what is happening to agriculture, there is just no reason in the attitude of this government.

When the war started there was legislation passed in this house to the effect that manufacturers' profits were limited to five per cent. I was a member of the war expenditures committee at that time. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) reported that he was not able to place one contract under that limitation, so the five per cent was raised. The very opposite action was taken with regard to agriculture. With world prices high, agricultural prices were forced down. It was through government action, and not the wheat board, that this wheat was sold at such a reduced price. It was a deliberate policy of this government. I was speaking at a meeting once when there were some Liberals present. They were objecting to these arrangements of the government for handling their wheat. I said to them, "I am sorry for those who did not vote Liberal, but you fellows who voted Liberal are getting just what you asked for". I think they are beginning to realize that. I believe that when the next election rolls around the other provinces will follow Alberta's example and clean house with the Liberals.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt this motion?

Mr. Jutras: I would move the adjournment of the debate until later this day.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the understanding of the house that the debate on the wheat bill may be resumed later this day?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

MAIN ESTIMATES, 1951-52

EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting estimates for the financial year ending March 31, 1952, was presented by Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance) and read by Mr. Speaker to the house.

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I move:

That the message from His Excellency together with the estimates presented this day be referred to the committee of supply.

In doing so, I do not propose to make any lengthy statement, either in regard to the form of the estimates, in which there have been many changes in detail as a result of recommendations of the public accounts committee last year, or in regard to the figures. Instead I am following the practice that my predecessors and I have followed in past years of issuing a detailed statement to the press at the time the estimates are presented to the house. Copies of the statement will be available at my office for any member wishing to have one. Perhaps I might merely say, first, in regard to the form, that most of the suggestions of the public accounts committee have been adopted, and much more detail included. As a result, the volume is much larger—540 pages this year compared with 322 last year. Members will also find a pocket inside the back cover of this book, into which will fit a large table which is being printed separately and which will be available in two or three days, showing a cross classification of expenditures of various types in each department, as the committee recommended. As regards the figures themselves, the grand total of the estimates is, of course, much larger than this past year, because expenditures on defence and defence production have increased from about $770 million in this current year to $1,664 million in the new year—an increase of $894 million. The estimates for all other departments amount in total to approximately $1,923 million, compared with $1,958 million for the current year, including those supplementaries already appropriated. Thus we show a reduction for departments other than defence of $35 million, notwithstanding substantially higher levels of costs.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY

Hon. Alphonse Fournier (Minister of Public Works) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

COST OF LIVING

Mrs. Ellen L. Fairclough (Hamilton West): Before Your Honour leaves the chair, I wish to say a few words. Events of the past few months have seriously aggravated a situation which is itself rooted in both the domestic and international problems of the times. The grave unrest in the country today, coupled with the anxiety and uncertainty of all levels of production and trade, is reflected in this latest report from the bureau of statistics which came out the other day and which shows a sudden sharp increase in the cost of living over the previous month of 2·7 points, of almost 3 points.

It might be well to review the figures which have been published and which have become more or less familiar to all of us. Since 1945 the index has risen from 119·5 to 175·2, according to the latest calculation; and, judging by the prices of consumer goods in the stores today, it is likely that they are considerably higher than that at the moment. It is significant that, where the monthly index fluctuated somewhat for the year 1949, showing a net increase of some 6·5 points, the year 1950 shows a record of steady increase, to close with a net increase of 9·6 points. Then we have the spectacle of the January report of this year showing an increase of 1·4 and the February report showing a further increase of 2·7.

It is my belief that one of the reasons for the sudden and sharp increase which was noted in this last report is the government's bland disregard of this situation and the feeling throughout the country that no one knows exactly where we are going. The February 1951 figures as released by the bureau of statistics show an increase of 13·6 over the same period for 1950. May I draw to the attention of the house the fact that the heaviest single monthly increases in 1950 were in the months of March and July. We are already well into March; and while I am aware that the figures which are reported are for the preceding month, I predict that the March report will follow the 1950 pattern, and probably the April one also.

As other costs rise, the cost of municipal administration rises with them; and the reports of local tax rates on real estate which have filled the newspapers this last month bear adequate testimony to the impact at the municipal level. All requirements of municipal services have been hit. All sorts of supplies, uniforms, cost of buildings, sewers, sidewalks and roads, as well as the necessary adjustments in wages, inadequate though they may be, have been added to the load. This in turn has provided an additional burden for the home owner and a further aggravation of the rental housing situation. Rather than help, this government, in the housing field alone, has aggravated the situation still further by the double-barrelled onslaught of the abolition of rent control and the curtailment of housing loans.

I hold no particular brief for the type of rent control which was in effect; for, like much government legislation, it was sadly in need of revision. Likewise, with the housing loans, the problem of supplies should have been met from an angle which would not have deprived the small income groups of the opportunity to purchase those houses which were available. In each case I suggest that the load might have been lightened by intelligent legislation rather than jettisoned. I predict further that the curtailment of mortgage loans will shortly result in increased demand for subsidized rental housing and that it will be found that the responsibility has not been lost but merely been shifted.

The average housewife today, whether or not she understands the economic pressures which contribute to the situation which we have, knows full well that her dollar will not buy her requirements. The pay envelope no longer keeps the family. She must deprive herself and her children of all of the luxuries and of many of the necessities of life or she must take the only alternative and go into debt.

Whether she is the wife of a farmer, a labourer or an industrial worker or whether the breadwinner in her family is in the great army of unorganized white-collar workers, is a small businessman, or is engaged in the practice of one of the professions, she knows the strain of trying to feed and clothe her family with an inadequate income. Some of these people have a moderate chance of increasing their income. Others have none at all. At the very top of the list of those who are helpless in the face of advancing costs are the pensioners and those who are trying to live on fixed incomes of one kind or another. To these people, many of them approaching the end of their lives, the picture is extremely dark indeed. It would seem to them, I am sure, that the only thing left for them to do is to depart this life altogether. But they are even afraid to die because the price of burials has also risen. I am not making a morbid jest, Mr. Speaker; I am extremely serious when I say that to those families, burdened with heavy medical and hospital costs and subsequent burial costs, the debt-ridden future looks black indeed. There is literally nothing that has not risen in price. This is the government's problem. This is the government's responsibility. This is no time for the pursuit of a policy of laissez-faire and it is no time for guessing. Theory does not feed hungry stomachs; it does not clothe bodies and it does not shelter families. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I urge on this government to withdraw its head from the sands of theoretical supposition and look upon this grim reality of current conditions and to take practical cognizance of the plight of our families; and to this end, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Graydon):

That all the words after "that" to the end of the question be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"This house regrets that the government, in face of the continuing increase in the cost of living and particularly in the face of the recent sharp rise thereof, refuses to take effective measures to protect the Canadian family budget."

Amendment negatived on division.

POSTAL SERVICE—REDUCTION IN URBAN MAIL DELIVERIES

Mr. J. W. Noseworthy (York South): Before the main motion is adopted there is another matter that I want to discuss in the house, namely, the matter pertaining to the new system that is being inaugurated by the Post Office Department. As we all know, the Post Office Department has recently inaugurated a one-a-day delivery in cities and urban areas that heretofore have been receiving a two-a-day delivery service.

Generally speaking, I think the Canadian people will approve of any move made by the government to economize in the government's service, particularly in this critical period. The question does arise, though: why should the Post Office Department be the first department in which the government chooses to exercise that policy? The Post Office Department is the first department in which we have the application of that policy.

Mr. Abbott: It is only a little more noticeable there.

Mr. Noseworthy: And it is the one department of government that differs from others, in that it is paid for directly by the public. It is a public service for which those who use the mails pay. It is not a department that like other departments is a drain upon the public treasury; and we question whether the government, which in past years has shown a profit in the post office of I think something over $12 million, which was reduced last year to something more than $2 million, is really justified in operating the Post Office Department at a profit. The question arises as to just what justification there is for a government taking out of the users of the mail service a profit to that extent.

I presume it is because there was a drop in profits last year that the government is now attempting to reduce the service. It seems to me to be poor business to be paying the Trans-Canada Air Lines, and other air lines, what I think amounts to about three times the rate charged by the rail services to fly mail into our large cities, and to leave that mail lying for twenty-four hours or more in the post office without being delivered, as will be the case under the present system.

There are in my riding a great many of those walks which, while they do not contain more than twenty-five per cent business calls, do contain a great many business calls, and businessmen who have their offices on the residential streets, organizations which maintain their offices on those residential streets, are already complaining, and I think quite fairly, of the service.

I have a letter here from one organization which carries on business across this province, and which receives a great deal of mail during the day. During the past week it has been getting its mail after 6.30 every evening. That is not good service, and no private company would put up with that kind of service for a moment.

Apart altogether from the service to the public there is the effect of this service upon the postmen employed. This is a rather important topic into which I want to go at some length, Mr. Speaker, and I should like you to call it six o'clock.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Noseworthy: Mr. Speaker, before six o'clock I had raised the question as to why the government had chosen to inaugurate its economy policy in the one department of government that was being paid for by the users of that service, rather than being paid for out of general taxation. I now have before me the minister's report for the year ended March 31, 1949, and I find that since 1932 there has been one year only in which that department did not show a net surplus. That net surplus amounted in 1944 to $12,500,000. It dropped to $9,800,000 in 1948 and to $2,900,000 in 1949. I find that the drop from 1948 to 1949 was due in the first instance to the fact that about $5,600,000 had been spent on increased salaries. However I find also that there was an increase of $1,800,000 paid to Trans-Canada Air Lines for the inauguration of the so-called all-up service.

Mr. Rinfret: In 1948.

Mr. Noseworthy: In 1948-49. I understand that Trans-Canada Air Lines charged $1.81 per ton mile for the carrying of mail, which is just about three times as much as they charge for the carrying of express and cargo traffic. I suggest that if the department wanted to economize in post office expenditures, pressure should have been brought to bear on Trans-Canada Air Lines to reduce their charges for the carrying of mail to something approximating their express and cargo traffic charges.

Then, I notice in a report given by the deputy postmaster general, Mr. Turnbull, before the transport and communications committee last March that the post office last year had a deficit of $8 million due to the fact that the postage rate on periodicals is less than the cost of making delivery. It may well be that it would be in the national interest for the Canadian government to subsidize magazine publishers—possibly Canadian magazine publishers. I can well understand the difficulty the publishers of Canadian magazines may have, particularly when they are in competition with American magazines. But I doubt the wisdom of making the users of the mail service pay those subsidies—and certainly anything which would subsidize foreign magazines. If it is necessary to subsidize Canadian magazines, then I suggest that it should be paid as a direct subsidy, and not charged up against those who use the mails.

I suggest that before the government undertook to curtail this service to the public, for which the public is making direct payment, it should have investigated other ways and means of economizing within the department. I believe there is good ground for criticism in the way this new policy regarding mail delivery was introduced. As I understand it a blanket order was issued, applicable across the country, whereby a postman is required to take his own route, and either a half or a third of an adjoining route.

I suggest that any well-managed industry, before undertaking a change in policy as drastic as that, one which would affect the public and employees to the extent this change does, would have carried out some experiments. It would have found out, through experiments, just how the new policy would work, and what difficulties would be encountered. I believe that if the government had taken any one postal district in any one of our larger cities, and spent a month or two in attempting to work out the new delivery system, it would not have found it feasible to add one-half or one-third of one route to another route, and making delivery once a day, without overburdening the postman or requiring him to work more than a forty-four-hour week. I believe the department would have discovered that such a blanket order could not have been put into effect without to a very great extent disrupting a service universally recognized across the country as one of our most efficient government services.

[Mr. Noseworthy.]

For a few moments I should like to speak about the effect of this change upon mail carriers. Hon. members have read in the press about mass meetings of postmen in a number of our larger cities. Some of us in the house had the opportunity of attending one of those mass meetings in Toronto. There we were told that postmen in all the Toronto postal districts had kept an accurate check of the hours they had had to work the previous week in order to complete their deliveries. Many of them, instead of having to work forty-four hours as they were supposed to do, worked up to as much as sixty hours. I hold in my hand a report from one postal district in Toronto. Even before the change I find that every man in that postal district was working from one to two hours over and above the forty-four-hour week. The shortest week worked in that district before the change was made was forty-eight hours. The average for the entire district having 23 routes was not 44 hours a week before the change but 49 hours and 53 minutes, nearly 50 hours a week before any change was introduced when they were still supposed to be working 44 hours.

Last week, with the new system in operation, the 27 postmen in that district worked an average of 52½ hours instead of 44. There are just two points I want to raise in that connection. In addition to the longer hours there is the extra amount of mail that has to be delivered during the day. Every report that I have been able to secure indicates that the postmen are required to carry considerably more than the regulation weight of mail. They are working longer hours, and the majority of these postmen are great war veterans. Many of them are veterans of the first world war who have been in the service of the Post Office Department for 20 years or more. They are finding the extra load and the extra hours extremely difficult.

There is the further fact that they are required to work four or five hours a day over their eight-hour day through no fault of their own. These extra hours are thrown upon them because of the department's policy in inaugurating this new system of delivery. They were raising no objection to having to go to the post office an hour before starting time in order to get their mail ready for their routes. None of them raised any objection to working 48 or 50 hours instead of 44 under the old system. Now they are required to work 53 to 60 hours. In all fairness, if the government is to deal with these employees as fairly as it expects industry and employers generally to deal with their employees, then the government owes it to these men to pay them for that extra time.

I raised that question in the house this afternoon on the orders of the day and was told that as yet the government has given no consideration to paying for these extra hours. For two weeks the Toronto stations have been on the new system. It will probably take many more weeks before the routes are adjusted to a point where delivery can be made in an eight-hour day. Until such time as that takes place I submit that these extra hours should be paid for by the government. I think it is entirely unfair to throw upon thousands of employees delivering mail for the Post Office Department anywhere from five to ten extra hours a week through no fault of their own, simply because the department inaugurated the system without having properly worked out the details or knowing what the effect of the application of the system would be. I suggest that the government should take into consideration payment for the extra time worked.

Mr. Clarence Gillis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words on this subject. I find it hard to understand why the letter carriers of the Post Office Department were picked on in the way that they have been in this drive for economy. It may be because the Postmaster General is a new minister. Others may be taking advantage of the fact that he is a junior member of the cabinet, is perhaps a little reluctant to argue with the older members, and so forth. That is the only reason I can see because in dealing with price controls the government says there is no emergency, and if and when there is an emergency they will implement the emergency powers. Second, in the matter of defence production the same thing is true. The government is taking stand-by legislation in case they may have to use it.

In speaking about the possibilities of war in the foreseeable future the Prime Minister has said, outside this house of course, that he believes there is no immediate danger of over-all war, that he expects to live a long time and does not expect to see an over-all war in his lifetime. That is all very reassuring but the government then decide that they must cut drastically civilian spending, the ordinary expenditures of government. They say that we have to offset in some way the huge defence expenditures that we are now making because we may have to face a conflict some time in the future.

So far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, I am in agreement with the government on its drive to institute measures that will reduce as far as possible, without impairing the services of the country, any department of the government that is considered non-essential. I cannot understand, however, and I cannot go along with the government in picking on the letter carriers, who represent about the lowest status in the postal department.

Who are these letter carriers? The great majority of them across this country are veterans of the first war. Many of them are disability pensioners. They are reaching an age when in a few years they will be retiring on the maximum pension paid under the civil service. Many of these men have made commitments. They have bought homes. They have planned their lives so that they may be able to eke out an existence on their pensions if and when they are retired. This economy measure of the government is resulting in the dismissal from the service of many of these older men. They will have to take their pensions prematurely which will mean a lot less than they anticipated on the basis of being able to work out their terms of service.

That is one angle. Second, the minister and others have created the impression at least that they are reducing the work, that they are cutting down the number of deliveries. Cutting down the number of deliveries is not reducing the work. You are going to carry exactly the same amount of mail but you are going to have twelve hundred fewer letter carriers across the country to make deliveries. The figures I have seen in the press indicate that approximately twelve hundred mail carriers are to be laid off. I think I would be safe in saying that the great majority of these fellows will be the older personnel, from the first war; and even if they are young men it does not alter the picture. The result is exactly the same; the same amount of mail will be carried by just that many fewer letter carriers across the country, which means that the load will have to be increased.

I am not arguing at all for the continuation of two or three mail deliveries a day. One delivery a day is good enough for me, as I think it is good enough for almost everyone in this country. I am arguing against picking on those with the very lowest status in the department, men who are absolutely essential, men who have been accepted into the civil service and have planned their lives accordingly. At a moment's notice, because of a hypothetical emergency which is not recognized in any other government department, these men are to have their lives interrupted and all their plans for the future disrupted.

I do not think that can be justified. If the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) came in and said he was going to cut his office staff across the country by fifty per cent, I would say perhaps he was justified. That would not hurt anyone very much. If the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Prudham) came in and said he was going to wipe out a certain branch for the duration of the war I would say perhaps that could be justified, that no one would suffer very much and perhaps it would not even be noticed, though of course he would have to keep on the geologists because they are very busy people. I would not argue with economy measures of that kind for the purpose of increasing defence production and providing the necessary office staff for the new department. But I am strongly arguing against picking on men in the mail carrier category, because I think they are essential. They have rendered good service for many years, and I do not think the government can justify the adoption of a policy, without consultation with the civil service organizations, which uproots so many of these employees.

I suggest to the Postmaster General (Mr. Rinfret) that he take another look at it. He is not going to save very much money by penalizing the letter carriers, but in my opinion he is going to create a great deal of resentment across the country. Then when he comes to resume this service he may have a great deal of difficulty getting the necessary employees, because I should think anyone treated this way would hesitate before accepting service with a branch of the government which pulled that kind of thing on their predecessors. Personally I think this is about the meanest cut that could be made. Others can defend themselves. Men with ability in certain directions can be shifted from one department to another, or they can be let out. They can always rehabilitate themselves. But when you take a mail carrier and throw him in the street you are putting him in the ranks of the unemployed, and it is very doubtful if you will ever get him back into government service. In view of the small amount of money that will be saved and the hardship and injustice that will be created, I suggest that the Postmaster General take another look and leave the letter carrier service as it was.

Mr. R. R. Knight (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped to bring up this matter on the estimates, but since the hon. member for York South (Mr. Noseworthy) has raised it this evening I should like to say a word or two. The two previous speakers have dealt with the general situation, and I should like to bring to the attention of the Postmaster General (Mr. Rinfret) the situation in my own city.

While I appreciate the need for economy in this direction, I think perhaps economy can be overdone if it interferes with the efficiency and comfort of the employees. My information is that in Saskatoon some 580 hours of overtime were worked in 24 days in February. The weather in Saskatoon in February is rather difficult, and I am informed that these men carried out that overtime work under a great deal of strain. The overtime was done on 24 routes; I am not clear on the matter, but I understand the men are not going to be compensated for the extra overtime work they performed under the strain I have indicated. In spite of the fact that this overtime had to be put in, six carriers have been released; and under those conditions I think they are quite justified in protesting those dismissals.

Like the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) I had the case of an elderly man who had only fourteen months to go until he reached the normal retirement age of 65. In February of 1950 he suffered from a heart ailment as a result of which he had to be temporarily laid off. Now he has recovered sufficiently, or thinks he has, to take an inside job; but because of the economy move and because, as the Postmaster General has pointed out to me since, strong and fit men are available, he simply has to be retired because there is no place for him in the postal service. I am quite prepared to admit that a man with only nine years of service should not have as much consideration as a man who has worked two or three times as long, but like the hon. member for Cape Breton South I am concerned about these individual cases of hardship. A man on pension, with a pittance of $21.96 a month and no other source of income, is not in very good shape to carry on any kind of fight.

I think that is all I need to say on the matter. These are the conditions as I see them in my own city of Saskatoon.

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on this question. I do not suppose any of us can legitimately object to the change from two deliveries a day to one delivery in the residential portions of our cities; and to the extent that such a change will make a saving I do not believe there can be a great deal of complaint. But the way this new plan has been worked out certainly seems most unfair to the men actually delivering the mail. They are the public relations officers of the postal department, coming in contact with the people all the time. Certainly in my experience they have been doing a very good job in Vancouver for as long as I can remember. They are a fine, friendly group of men; the majority have served in the forces, and they deliver the mail in all kinds of weather because even in Vancouver we do not have sunshine 365 days in the year.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): How about Fraser valley?

Mr. Green: I would not dare speak for Fraser valley. Under this present plan these men certainly are not getting a fair deal. I have here a letter sent to the press in Vancouver by a postman's wife which I think sets out the situation very clearly. It says:

> The post office officials at Ottawa are making our mailmen into downright slaves with this new rule of having one delivery. They arrive at their substations at 6.15 a.m., and there they have to sort mail until 9 and 10 o'clock. They are given two long routes, one in the morning and another one in the afternoon. On these routes they carry terrific loads which they cannot put down if the weather is bad and have to take them up and down the stairs of each house they visit. On Monday many of them in the Dunbar district did not finish till 6 o'clock at night. Utterly worn out, too tired to eat, they go to bed, after 425 calls. They receive no overtime, and many of the men who have been recently employed stand the chance of being let out. Any other worker will strike, but the government officials dare not.
> Is this not slavery and liable to foster bitterness in the hearts of these men and their wives. I would like to know of any other worker who gets such a dirty deal.
> These are the men who are asked to be loyal to their government.
> Let us have a little justice and fair play.
> A Mailman's Wife.

That letter was in the press some weeks ago. All the newspapers which have come in from the west coast within the last two or three days have contained further reports. After investigation by the officials of the association concerned, it is reported that every postman in the city is forced to work overtime now, and gets no pay for it; further that the men have to deliver all the mail in their districts, no matter how long it takes. Most of them are lucky to get half an hour for lunch. This report also says as follows:

> One man in "D" division had one hundred pounds of mail on his back when he left for his first delivery, Mr. Barber said. Another told the meeting he started work at 6.20 a.m. that morning and wasn't finished until 5 p.m. Supervisors making a spot check of postal stations since the new order went into effect stated that of 56 postmen checked, every one was working overtime, all without pay.

Now, I realize that there will have to be adjustments, and probably there will be some hardship. But I am afraid that the officers here in Ottawa have not realized just what an unfair burden is being placed on these men in the cities across Canada. I have checked this up as carefully as I can in so far as my own city is concerned, and I do not believe these men are getting a fair deal. Probably there have been too many men let out. I understand that the recommendation made to the department here by the leading officers in some of the cities was that instead of letting out one-third, the cut should not have been more than one-quarter. That is only hearsay but it is obvious from the way this new plan is working out in Vancouver that something is wrong, and that the men are not getting a fair deal. I do hope the Postmaster General will take immediate steps to remedy this unfortunate situation.

Mr. Angus MacInnis (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, in common with all the hon. members representing urban constituencies, I too have been receiving complaints about the economy program instituted by the Post Office Department. Perhaps I have received more complaints about the way in which economies were being made than about the economies themselves. May I say immediately that I am not opposed to the government starting on an economy campaign. I believe that, over the service as a whole, there is a great deal that could be done, and that perhaps there is a great need of an economy campaign. I do object, however, to the campaign starting with the little fellow. I think the campaign should not start right at the bottom, but it should start at the top and work down.

For the moment, let me deal with the way this thing has been put before me. I am told that the organizations of letter carriers were not consulted before the changes were made. They were simply told. In every industrial establishment today the working conditions are arrived at by agreement between the employees, who have an organization, and the employer. If there is to be a change in those working conditions then the employees, as people of importance because they do the work, are consulted. The change is made by mutual consent. I am told that is not the way this change has been made. The post office officials carried out a reorganization and said that instead of working for forty-eight hours tomorrow you shall work fifty-four hours from tomorrow forward. If a private employer treated his employees in that fashion in this country there would be an uproar because an ordinary self-respecting workman would not stand for that sort of treatment. I suggest that, although it is too late to do it in the proper way this time, at any other time when there is a reorganization of this kind contemplated the representatives of those who are doing the work should be consulted. Remember, the important people in every organization or in every line of work are those who do the work, because the work cannot be done without them. The services of the community cannot be carried on without them and they should have some say in how their work is arranged.

There is no need for me to repeat what has been said by the hon. members for York South (Mr. Noseworthy), Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis), Saskatoon (Mr. Knight) and Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green). The problems in all the cities are pretty much the same, and I do deplore the way the Post Office Department has set about this reorganization.

Mr. Gordon Graydon (Peel): I listened with considerable interest to the discussion and to the criticisms which have been voiced by the members who have spoken about this matter tonight. I should like to point out to those who come from the urban parts of Canada that this problem with which they are being faced now, that is the treatment of letter carriers in urban centres, is not new for those of us who come from the rural parts of Canada. We have been experiencing this, I sometimes think, with less than the sympathy we deserve from many parts of the dominion who ought to be just as interested in rural mail deliveries as we are in the urban deliveries.

While it is perhaps repeating arguments that have been used many times in the past, nevertheless so long as the condition exists I take it that there will have to be on all sides of the house champions to bring the Post Office Department to its senses. This is just another example of the way the department of the Postmaster General (Mr. Rinfret) has been running wild with regard to its organization and its treatment of those who do its work. On many occasions I pointed out to the minister and to his predecessors in office that I felt there was no justifiable excuse for not giving this parliament a special committee set up to deal with the Postmaster General's department. I then had in mind, of course, more particularly the question of the scandalous returns which are given to the rural mail couriers across the country. It is all very well to say that they are under contract; but that does not excuse the governmental sin of underpayment, even though they are under contract. Today there are many hundreds and perhaps thousands of rural mail couriers who are carrying the mails to rural mail boxes at less than the cost of operating, calculated on any kind of a business basis. When, in addition to that, I now hear complaints as to the way the department is operating in the urban areas, and when you add to that the fact that we badly need some kind of policy with respect to the suburban areas, I am confirmed in my opinion. In between the urban and the rural sections there has now grown up in many parts of Canada, almost like a mushroom, a great suburban section of our population. Mail delivery is a matter of great inconvenience to some of them, because they have come out of the cities where they have been accustomed to urban delivery. They are now in the position where they are obliged to go long distances in order to get to their mail boxes or to their post office in the new place to which they have gone. As the minister must know, there is no end to the complaints with respect to the lack of proper servicing of those people in the new areas.

I want to say this to the minister, and I say it with every constructive motive. I think he ought to pause and consider just where the Postmaster General's department is heading with respect to rural, suburban and urban areas. If there ever was a department that at any time needed to have a first-class review of what it is doing, I think it is the Postmaster General's department now. It is all very well for the minister to suggest that after all they are part of the great economy wave. The waves do not seem to be so high in other departments. I know of no reason why an economy drive should not be tempered with common sense; because, after all, economy without common sense results in a policy of penny wise and pound foolish. The fact that, as the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) has so well put it tonight, they have picked upon the little man in the government service seems to me to be a good indication that there is a lack of common sense and good judgment in dealing with these matters. I suggest to the minister that, not only in debates on rural mail couriers but also with regard to complaints with respect to our suburban sections and now this acute criticism which has come to the government—and justifiable, if I may say so—with respect to the letter carriers in urban sections, enough evidence has been adduced here to warrant us in demanding, before we go any further, that a special committee of this house be set up to review the way in which the Postmaster General's department is being operated. I should think the minister would welcome that suggestion. I warn him that the public relations of the Postmaster General's department are rapidly deteriorating as a result of the manner in which it is being operated throughout the country. It is surely a department that is not so difficult to operate; because in many cases the public works department has in the past been providing the facilities in which it works. It has been receiving a revenue which enables it to operate and show a net profit generally on its year's operations. It seems to me that it should not be such a difficult department to administer that it should find itself in difficulties with respect to urban, suburban and rural areas of the dominion. I am going to suggest to the minister that, before he goes any further, he ought to recommend to this house that we have a special committee to deal with the Postmaster General's department and to see just where we are headed. Before that committee we could call to give evidence those who ought to know perhaps better than most of us in the House of Commons do, namely the people who are affected: both those who are the customers of the department and those who are employed by it. Those are things that I think ought to form the basis for the setting up of a committee now. If the minister in previous sessions did not think that our arguments, when they dealt with rural mail couriers alone, carried sufficient weight to justify the setting up of a committee, surely, with the suburban and urban difficulties heaped upon the rural mail difficulties, there is now no justification for not giving parliament a special committee to deal with these matters. When a committee is set up I fancy that the minister will find that he will have a new and better perspective of just what is required in connection with the work of the department. In many respects the department has been a good one, but it is now getting into the position where, it seems to me, it is running wild; and I think it is about time that parliament took some steps to tame it before it gets completely out of bounds.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I want to join with the hon. members who have preceded me in protesting against this practising of so-called economy with respect to the hardest working and lowest paid people in the postal department.

Mr. Howe: Let us quit practising economy all over.

An hon. Member: You have.

Mr. Herridge: We are in favour of economy but I think it is a poor thing to practise economy on the postmen. I think it would be a good idea to practise economy in some other places.

Mr. Abbott: Two deliveries a day are a frill.

Mr. Herridge: Before proceeding to say a few words in that respect, I want to support the presentation made by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Graydon) with respect to the necessity for a committee of this house to discuss the question of the administration of the Post Office Department. If I heard him correctly, the hon. member for Peel said that the public relations of the postal department had deteriorated to quite an extent in recent years. I think there is some validity in that statement. I think the postal officials make decisions without any consultation with local organizations or local bodies; they make decisions with regard to the delivery of mail, mail service and post offices, and the first intimation that the people have about those things is that they simply have them. In my constituency there was in operation for fifty years a post office which cost this government $131 a month to operate; and after fifty years of service it was simply cancelled by a telegram being sent to the postmaster telling him to return his goods and chattels to the Vancouver office. I refer to the mail delivery service that operated on the Arrow lakes for fifty years, with steamers on those lakes; it was cancelled without any person in that district from Revelstoke to Trail being consulted as to the best possible way of saving this country some money, changing the arrangements and so on. I strongly support the suggestion made by the hon. member for Peel that it is about time we had a committee of this house to go fully into the administration of the Post Office Department. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) said, I think: Let's do away with all economy.

Mr. Fulton: He has.

Mr. Herridge: We realize the necessity for economy under certain conditions, but in this case I think we are fully justified in protesting at the form of economy that is taking place in the postal department where the first people you pinpoint are some of the hardest working and lowest paid people in the department. That is not only my opinion, and it is not only the opinion of the postmen in the district I represent, the men who are delivering the letters. It is the opinion of a good number of the citizens of the cities of Trail and Nelson, which happen to be in my riding, who realize what a hardship these new arrangements have placed upon many of these postmen.

Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, many of these postmen are veterans of the first world war. Some of them served in the same battalion as the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green) and myself. Most of them are now getting on in years, and because of these rearrangements some of them do not know whether they can carry on.

To substantiate my argument in that connection I want to read from the Nelson Daily News two or three brief paragraphs which refer to comments made not by the member for Kootenay West, not by the postmen, but by a post office official in that district with respect to the arrangements so far as my riding is concerned. The heading is:

Nelson mail carriers find one-a-day delivery tougher.

I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, that it is tough on those high hills. The article reads:

On the surface it looks as if the carriers are doing less work. They are now doing an extra half walk apiece or one-and-a-half once a day where they were doing one walk twice a day.

The catch is that they carry much more mail per trip now than previously and have many more stops to make. On a normal day with one walk a carrier will make calls at about half of the addresses on his route. Now he carries more mail in three-fourths of a walk than he used to on a full walk and still has to go out both morning and afternoon.

The same official said:

The carriers are now having to work Saturday afternoons in order to provide one-a-day delivery all around. This amounts to four hours extra per week and is offset by the granting of one week's holidays to each carrier every twelve weeks.

The post office did experiment with high school students for the Saturday afternoon deliveries. However, lack of sorting experience had meant that the regular carriers were still needed Saturday afternoon so the plan was abandoned.

That is the comment of a post office official in my own district. As I said previously, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to appear inconsistent. I realize we have to make economies in certain directions. In association with other hon. members who have spoken previously I would ask the Postmaster General to give further consideration to this question of the delivery of mail by the postmen, because with the new arrangements that have been made at the present an undue and unnecessary burden has been placed on many older men who are unable to carry it, and a burden which I am sure the people of this country do not wish them to assume as the basis of an economy measure.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is the Postmaster General not going to make a reply?

Mr. Abbott: No; he will do it on his estimates.

Mr. Graydon: Does that mean that you are going to give us the committee?

Mr. Rinfret: No, on our estimates.

Mr. Knowles: It seems to me that the Postmaster General should say something in response to the protests that have been made.

Mr. Abbott: Why?

Mr. Knowles: He should at least give the assurance that the reasonable requests hon. members have been making will be given further consideration. If he is not—

Mr. Rinfret: I made a statement about it three or four times in the house already.

Mr. Knowles: The Postmaster General has made several statements already, but he has not yet met the complaints that hon. members are giving to him tonight. I wish to take only a few minutes but it seems to me there are three things definitely wrong about the way in which the government has been handling this matter.

In the first place, as the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) has pointed out, the government goes ahead with measures of this kind without prior consultation with the men actually affected.

Mr. Rinfret: That is not right.

Mr. Knowles: There was no prior consultation with the men themselves, and I am sure there would have been a lot less trouble over changes of this kind if an attempt had been made to practise—

Mr. Rinfret: It was made.

Mr. Knowles:—the principles of collective bargaining which are on the statute books of this country so far as private corporations are concerned.

The second thing that is wrong with this change, Mr. Speaker, is that it is imposing heavier burdens upon the men who are still in the service. The plain fact of the matter is that every carrier on an urban route now during the course of his day has to carry in weight the same amount of mail that he carried before, plus half that much again. The result is the men are finding the load burdensome in terms of actual weight, and they are finding, according to the communications that I am getting from the men in Winnipeg, that instead of being called upon to work forty-eight hours a week as indicated by the Postmaster General, they are having to work up to as high as fifty-five hours a week. It seems to me that this arbitrary decision to reduce by one-third the number of walks, or to increase by fifty per cent the amount of territory to be covered by each man, will have to be reconsidered.

I hope the Minister of Finance will notice that none of us is making any particular point out of the loss of what he calls the frill of a second delivery a day. That might be done, but what we are mainly concerned about is the effect of this change on the men themselves.

The third thing that is wrong with this policy is the effect of it upon individual men. My colleagues, the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) and the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) and others have referred to what it has done to older veterans, veterans of world war I, who have been in the postal service. May I, in addition to supporting what they have said, put in a plea for the position of the younger men, veterans of world war II. I have before me, as a matter of fact, the particulars of two cases, two out of twenty-seven letter carriers in the city of Winnipeg who are being let out as a result of this policy. I should say that they are being kept on the list for temporary work.

Mr. Rinfret: Thirteen of them.

Mr. Knowles: But it will be on a catch-as-catch-can basis, and it will also involve, so they understand, the loss of seniority. Here are two cases that are very much alike, two men who point out that during the depression years the going was tough, and they were unable to get the amount of education that they would like to have had. Came the war. Both of these men, the depression years behind them, served in world war II. I pick one of them in particular, a man who lives in the Westholme apartments in Winnipeg. He served five years and ten months in world war II, five years and eight months of which time he spent overseas. He has a good record in the service, and likewise a good record in the civil service for five years since the war, three years in another department, two years with the post office. He thought that he was on permanently. He thought that at last there was some security, some opportunity for him to make up for what he suffered during the 1930's, and for the contribution that he made during the war years. Now he gets this blow, and his language about it is not exactly parliamentary.

I feel, Mr. Speaker, that on all three of these counts this policy is wrong and calls for reconsideration by the government without delay.

Mr. C. W. Hodgson (Victoria, Ont.): Mr. Speaker, I shall take a few minutes of the time of the house to make a few remarks on this question. I have had a considerable number of complaints from my home town about the mail service, particularly from people who are shut in. The mail comes in there at eleven o'clock on Saturday. There is no mail delivery until Monday afternoon. When they go to the post office, the postmaster refuses to give a general delivery service.

All the mail carriers in my town are veterans, most of them veterans of the first world war. Probably the curtailment or the layoff was a little bit drastic. I received a letter today from a dear old lady saying that her regular mail carrier had been able to bring the mail on a two delivery per day basis, but the mail is so heavy now on one delivery per day he could not do the job. I should like to ask the minister whether in cases of this kind, where a man could handle the mail on two deliveries a day and because of the one delivery a day he cannot carry it, cannot do the job, anything will be done. He becomes incapacitated, so far as that job is concerned. Will the department give that man a pension, or what are they going to do for him? Will they ask him to take some other job? Jobs for veterans of the first world war are not easily found. If they could not carry mail, then they could not do most other jobs. I think the minister is starting at the wrong end of the cat; he should have started at the head instead of the tail.

For instance, I see here a clipping from a paper—from the Auditor General, Mr. Watson Sellar—who says:

Travelling expenses—

I notice that in this particular year the portfolio has changed; but it shows that the other minister, the other Postmaster General, served a little less than five months, and spent over $5,000, or at least a thousand dollars a month, in travelling expenses.

Mr. Rinfret: In the Post Office Department?

Mr. Hodgson: Yes.

Mr. Rinfret: What year was that?

Mr. Hodgson: The present Postmaster General came into power, and for the first seven months of his term he spent $7,000 in travelling expenses. You all know that we as members of parliament get allowances for our expenses. On top of that $2,000 you had another $7,000 for travelling expenses. That is equal to $40 a day for three hundred days a year.

Mr. Rinfret: What is the hon. member citing from?

Mr. Hodgson: Watson Sellar.

Mr. Abbott: Oh, rubbish!

Mr. Rinfret: What paper?

Mr. Hodgson: The Ottawa Journal.

Mr. Abbott: No minister of the government spent a thousand dollars a month for travelling expenses.

Mr. Hodgson: It was in the Ottawa Journal.

An hon. Member: The Globe.

Mr. Hodgson: It is not the Globe.

Mr. Abbott: You had better take the Auditor General's report, not the Globe and Mail or the Ottawa Journal.

An hon. Member: It must be true, or they could not publish it.

Mr. Rinfret: What is the hon. member quoting from? I would like to know how I have spent a thousand dollars in a month for travelling. I did not spend that much in a year.

Mr. Hodgson: It gives all of them. This, for instance, is the Postmaster General's—seven month period and $7,000 is the amount of travelling expenses as quoted.

Mr. Rinfret: What is the date and name of the paper?

Mr. Hodgson: James McCook of the Journal staff.

Mr. Rinfret: What is the date of it?

Mr. Hodgson: The date of the report is 1949-50.

Mr. Rinfret: No, what is the date of the paper the hon. member is quoting from?

Mr. Hodgson: I am not sure, but you saw it. You do not need to ask for it.

An hon. Member: It must be between 1930 and 1935.

Mr. Hodgson: No, it is the end of the fiscal year 1949-50.

An hon. Member: Get the public accounts.

Mr. Hodgson: It goes on to say, showing the amounts spent for travelling by all of the ministers:

> Postmaster General Bertrand, $4,658 for the period April 1-August 23, 1949, and Postmaster General Rinfret $7,341 for the period August 24, 1949 to March 31, 1950.

Mr. Rinfret: It must be for the whole department—not for me.

Mr. Hodgson: It is attributed to you; and it has the expenses of the other ministers here. You are starting at the wrong end of the cat. You should start with the minister to curtail expenses.

Mr. Rinfret: The statement is all wrong because I never had any amount like that.

Mr. Hodgson: Well, I still have the clipping here and I would be glad to show you.

Mr. Abbott: Suppose you take the public accounts, instead of the clipping.

Mr. Hodgson: This is a report from Watson Sellar. We will probably take it up in the public accounts committee, when the time comes, too. However, I do not want to hold up the minister's supplementary estimates. But there is no doubt about it that every cabinet minister saw this clipping. They don't need to pretend they are so dumb.

Mr. Abbott: I must take exception; I never saw it. If I had seen it I would have issued a statement saying that it was absolutely inaccurate; because the public accounts do not show that any single minister of the government to my recollection spent $7,000 a year for travelling.

[Mr. Rinfret.]

Mr. Hodgson: It is attributed to the Postmaster General, for seven months in office in that year.

Mr. Rinfret: What is that again?

Mr. Hodgson: It is attributed to the present Postmaster General for the seven months in which he finished out the year, following Postmaster General Bertrand. His expenses were along about the same line, the same amount. And if the minister denies it—

Mr. Rinfret: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Fulton: Now he will answer it.

Mr. Rinfret: I am only going to answer one point. It is absolutely untrue that during the seven months referred to by the hon. member my personal expenses have been $7,000. There has not been, as a matter of fact, one single account that has been sent by me for a personal account. The amount that is referred to by the hon. member must therefore be for the whole of the department.

Mr. Graydon: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Hodgson: It does not say for the whole of the department. I will read the whole paragraph.

Mr. Rinfret: Yes.

Mr. Hodgson: It is by James McCook of the Journal staff.

Mr. Riley: What date?

Mr. Abbott: What is the date?

An hon. Member: Put up or sit down.

Mr. Hodgson: I will give the date, with the money spent. It is not too long ago; it only ended on March 31, 1950. It gives all the ministers' travelling expenses, and starts off with the travelling expenses of the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Howe: Is this in order?

Mr. Hodgson: Yes.

Mr. Howe: For a man to stand up and read a newspaper? He does not give the date of the newspaper or any authenticity for it. He does not explain what it is, at all.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Yes; a well known correspondent of the Ottawa Journal, a reliable man, and just as authentic as you are.

Mr. Howe: The Postmaster General has denied it, and the house is bound to accept his word.

An hon. Member: Summon him before the bar of the house.

Mr. Hodgson: It says up to March 31, 1950.

Mr. Riley: Give the date.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): The date of the expenditure is here; that is what you need.

Mr. Hodgson: Yes, the date of the expenditure is here, and I will give it if you will keep quiet for a moment or two.

Mr. Riley: What is the date?

Mr. Hodgson: When they are finished squeaking—it must be getting near spring, Mr. Speaker. It sounds like crows.

Mr. Riley: Give the date.

Mr. Hodgson: Mr. Abbott took us to task, so—his travelling expenses were:

Finance Minister Abbott, $2,067.

Mr. Abbott: For twelve months.

Mr. Hodgson: Yes.

Fisheries Minister Mayhew, $3,612; Justice Minister Garson, $2,453—for the same year.

This is the year ended March 31, 1950.

Mr. Riley: What is the date of the clipping?

Mr. Hodgson: Don't open your mouth so wide, your teeth will fall out.

An hon. Member: Brilliant!

An hon. Member: Isn't he high class!

Mr. Hodgson:

Labour Minister Mitchell, $4,155; Defence Minister Claxton, $2,156; Health Minister Martin, $2,505; Revenue Minister McCann—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It seems to me the hon. member should give the date and identify it.

Mr. Hodgson: Mr. Speaker, this paper is one of the issues of February of this year. The article I am drawing attention to is by Watson Sellar. It is attributed to Watson Sellar, Auditor General.

Mr. Sinnott: April 1.

Mr. Riley: Give us the date.

Mr. Hodgson:

Postmaster General Bertrand, $4,658 for the period April 1 to August 23—approximately five months—

An hon. Member: April 1 is right!

Mr. Hodgson:

April 1 to August 23, 1949, and Postmaster General Rinfret, $7,341 for the period August 24, 1949, to March 31, 1950.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): That will hold them.

Mr. Hodgson: That is the date they have been yelling so loudly for—if the hon. member from Saint John-Albert (Mr. Riley)—or down there in the maritimes—heard it. I hope he heard it and I hope he digests it. And I think when they are talking about cutting down on the veterans on the beats, the mail carriers, they are starting at the wrong end. They should start with the minister and his officials, and work down.

Mr. Sinnott: A hustings speech.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

Mr. Abbott: While we are on this question of travelling expenses—

An hon. Member: Who is on the question?

Mr. Abbott: Just a minute. On a question of privilege, I have got the public accounts here. I have the public accounts for the year ended March 31, 1950.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Abbott: Does the house want the truth in this matter or does it not?

An hon. Member: Sure.

Mr. Abbott: The public accounts for the year ended the 31st of March, 1950, on page Q-6 indicate that the salary of the Postmaster General is $10,000 and the motor car allowance is $2,000. That is the total of $12,000, the salary and the motor car allowance.

An hon. Member: Is that revised or unrevised?

Mr. Abbott: This is by the Auditor General, so I suppose it is revised. The note reads:

The above amounts were paid to:
Hon. E. Bertrand, for the period April 1 to August 23, $4,658.69; the Hon. G. E. Rinfret, for the period August 24, to March 31, $7,341.31.

The $7,341.31 is for salary and motor car allowance. I do not know where Mr. James McCook got the figure of $7,000 odd for travelling expenses. That remains a mystery to that reputable writer of the Ottawa Journal.

Mr. Casselman: Don't get excited.

Progress reported.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

PROVISION FOR EARLY DISTRIBUTION OF PAYMENTS AT END OF POOL PERIOD, ETC.

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Howe for the second reading of Bill No. 5, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1935, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Ross (Souris), and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Wright.

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, now everyone can relax because we are going to get back to the very soothing subject of wheat.

An hon. Member: Let the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) relax too. Call him.

Mr. Howe: When I opened the debate on second reading of Bill No. 5 I said I did not intend to enter into a discussion of the five year pool which, of course, has nothing to do with the proposed amendments to the Canadian Wheat Board Act. In view of the debate that has taken place, however, I think I should make some further remarks at this point.

Attempts have been made by opposition speakers to prove: (1) that returns to western farmers from the five year pool were unsatisfactory; (2) that the British wheat agreement should not have been entered into.

An attempt has also been made to distort the facts about the attitudes taken by the Canadian and the United Kingdom governments with respect to the fulfilment of the agreement.

Mr. Fulton: Who made that attempt?

Mr. Howe: I intend to show that the arrangements in effect during the five years under discussion were in the interests of the western wheat farmer, and that without these arrangements the situation today would be very much less satisfactory than it is. I intend to show that the Canadian and British governments entered into an agreement that was beneficial to both the Canadian producer and the British consumer, and that the terms of that agreement were fully observed on both sides.

However, I am not going to argue that if we could have foreseen in 1945 what was going to happen in the following five years we should have done exactly what we did. I am sure we should have done some things quite differently. That is the advantage of hindsight, upon which members of the opposition lean so heavily. Nevertheless I firmly believe that in 1945 and 1946 the government took decisions which were fundamentally sound, and that have contributed to the stability and prosperity of the wheat growers. It is possible to calculate by some elaborate guesswork that a higher average price might have been obtained over the four year period had there been no British agreement, but these are hypothetical calculations. They are based on conjecture and not on fact.

The only solid fact in this present situation is that over a five year period the wheat grower realized an average return of about $1.83 per bushel for No. 1 northern wheat in store Fort William. When in the history of Canada has the wheat grower ever enjoyed such consistently high returns over such an extended period? Certainly not in the period between 1930 and 1935 when this country was governed by the Conservative party.

An hon. Member: Who is making a political speech now?

Mr. Howe: Certainly I am making a political speech. When the hon. members of the Progressive Conservative party are making calculations about supposed losses under the British agreement they might try to calculate the losses suffered by western wheat growers during the early thirties when their party was responsible for wheat marketing. That would be much more interesting and a much more relevant calculation.

Mr. Cardiff: What was the price of wheat in the United States in those days? That is a fair question.

Mr. Howe: In 1932 No. 1 northern wheat at Fort William sold for less than 40 cents a bushel, and I will show later that the reason that price was low was that we did not have our share of the British market.

Mr. Cardiff: You have not answered my question yet.

Mr. Howe: My hon. friend does not market western wheat very much. He does not know very much about it. The five year pool and the British agreement were an experiment in long-term stability. They were entered into at a time of uncertainty at the end of world war II. No one knew what would happen. As I listen to the parties opposite criticizing the results of the five year pool I recall their attitude in this house. Could anyone at the end of the war have been more fearful of the future than the two main opposition groups in this house? As I remember it, they were predicting blue ruin.

But now, with the advantage of hindsight, they shift their position. Now they say that the government was wrong to strive for stability in markets. Now they say or imply that we should have refused to enter into an agreement with the British government assuring reasonable prices and an assured market over a four year period.

Mr. Coldwell: If I may interrupt, we did not say that; we supported the agreement when it was made.

Mr. Howe: What about the losses under the agreement?

Mr. Coldwell: I have said nothing about the losses.

Mr. Howe: You have not but some of your followers have had a good deal to say about it. I think I said before, and I say again, that the time when you must decide whether an agreement is good or bad is when you sign on the dotted line, and we signed on that dotted line in 1946. That is when the decision had to be made and that is when it was made.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): It is nice to know your fellows all like it.

Mr. Howe: The government did not share the unreasonable fears of the opposition parties about the future. But when an opportunity arose to sell 600,000,000 bushels of wheat at assured prices to our best customer —more than had ever before been sold by Canada to that customer in any comparable period—we accepted. That decision was supported by the great majority of the western wheat growers and I am confident that they still support it. Everyone recognized that there were risks in such an agreement. There were risks on both sides. But it must never be forgotten that there were even greater risks in not entering into the agreement. The advantage of the agreement was that it minimized the risk. The wheat agreement was similar to an insurance policy. Because a man who buys an accident policy never claims under it that does not mean the policy should not have been taken out, or that the premiums should not have been paid. It is well to keep that in mind. If wheat prices in the last two years had fallen very substantially the shoe would have been on the other foot, and I do not think it would have been proper for the United Kingdom to ask us to accept less than the floor prices provided in the agreement in order to reduce average returns to the open market level.

As I shall point out later, the have regard to clause is important but it did not mean, and we have never argued that it meant, that the United Kingdom should make up in the final two years any mathematical calculation of losses in the first two years. Five years ago the western wheat grower supported a policy of stability at reasonable prices. Today, unless I am seriously mistaken, he still supports that policy. There are some, however, who do not believe in the policy of stability at reasonable prices. Some of those people are today criticizing the five year pool and the British agreement. I suggest to those who now think they see an opportunity of gaining some political advantage by attacking the government on the results of the five year pool and the British agreement that they should consider carefully whether they are not playing into the hands of those who prefer to return to the old boom and bust type of wheat marketing.

The test of any policy is its results; and I believe the results of a policy which returned an average of $1.83 a bushel on the basis of No. 1 northern in store Fort William for nearly 1·5 billion bushels of wheat sold over a five year period require no apology; and I am making none. The wheat economy prospered during that period as it deserves to prosper and as I hope and believe it will continue to prosper. If a policy can produce that kind of result it meets the only test that matters. The essential fact is that producers are being paid on the basis of $1·833 on their deliveries for five successive crops.

Let us look at the relevant facts about wheat marketing in each of the five years. In September, 1945, my predecessor, Hon. James MacKinnon, announced an export price of $1.55 a bushel until further notice, together with the government's undertaking that returns to producers would not be permitted to fall below $1 per bushel for the next five years. This policy was the genesis of the five year pool which was announced the following July when the contract with the United Kingdom was signed. As a result of the five year pool producers are receiving $1.83 per bushel, basis No. 1 northern, on all deliveries of about 235 million bushels during the 1945-46 crop year. The final payment is 28·3 cents over the export price of $1.55 which remained in effect during that year, and is well above the open market price in other countries. The average prices received on the farm in the United States during the 1945-46 crop year was $1.49 a bushel. The man who grew wheat and marketed it in this pool in 1945-46 did not lose very much. Obviously he gained 28 cents per bushel over any other method of marketing.

Coming now to the first two years of the contract, the crop years 1946-47 and 1947-48, again the essential fact is that the producers are receiving $1.83 on 335 million bushels delivered in the 1946-47 crop year and on 244 million bushels delivered in the 1947-48 crop year. These turned out to be years of acute shortage of wheat in the world, and admittedly exorbitant prices could be obtained for marginal quantities in marginal markets. It should be recalled, however, that in order to finance the necessary imports of the United Kingdom, including wheat, the United States loaned the United Kingdom $3,750 million and Canada also loaned the United Kingdom $1,250 million. The bulk of these loans were utilized more rapidly than anyone anticipated. Any higher prices charged for wheat would have ground down those loans more rapidly. As it was, the situation could only be met adequately by the Marshall aid program the United States placed in operation in 1947.

I think it is a fair question to ask those who are claiming that the producers lost money in those first two years of the contract: from what source additional payments, in the absence of a contract, might have come? Even in those years, when the United States government supported their domestic wheat prices, and exported wheat without payment, the prices American producers received at the farm were $1.90 and $2.29 in the two crop years respectively. Our own efforts to extend credits and accommodate our overseas buyers during this period, as hon. members are well aware, resulted in such a loss in exchange that we had to adopt rigid exchange conservation measures.

From 1947 to 1949 the United States permitted Marshall aid funds to be used for the purchase of Canadian wheat, and though large stocks of wheat were accumulating in the United States that government respected the United Kingdom-Canada agreement and did not demand that the Marshall aid funds be used to purchase United States wheat instead of Canadian wheat. However, before the 1949 crop came on the market United States wheat was declared in surplus supply, which automatically stopped the use of Marshall aid funds to buy Canadian wheat. Just think of the importance of that agreement during those years. Because of the agreement, the United States paid money to Canada for supplying wheat to Britain, instead of giving away her own surplus wheat to England, at a time when the surplus in the United States was becoming burdensome. Those who are making up the equation to show losses might very well put in that intangible for a very considerable price indeed.

Passing on now to the 1948-49 crop year, which was the third year of the contract, producers will receive $1.83 for deliveries of 293 million bushels. Throughout this crop year the payment difficulties of the United Kingdom continued acute. To put it bluntly what we faced here in Canada was the very real possibility that the United States would drive Canadian wheat out of our traditional markets. This actually occurred in the European markets with the exception of the United Kingdom, and the fact is that the Canada-United Kingdom wheat agreement was of the greatest value at this time in retaining our position in the United Kingdom market. As a matter of fact we have a very serious problem ahead of us in regaining markets in continental Europe which are now being supplied by the United States under Marshall aid. It was for that reason the government sent a mission to Europe last year for the express purpose of finding out how to regain a foothold in some of those markets. What the Canada-United Kingdom wheat agreement actually accomplished was to enable us to hold our position in the United Kingdom market. The United States government respected the agreement, and in fact went so far as to provide a very substantial amount of United States dollars, $175 million to be exact, which enabled the United Kingdom to finance her wheat purchases from the 1949 wheat crop under the agreement. This amount was provided as the result of negotiations which took place in Washington early in September, 1949. In evidence of those negotiations let me quote from a letter of September 13, 1949, from Mr. Paul G. Hoffman, economic co-operation administrator, to Hon. Charles F. Brannan, United States secretary of agriculture:

Dear Mr. Secretary:

As you know, one of the measures proposed by the United Kingdom during the three-power financial conferences was the financing with ECA grant funds of the British requirements for wheat from Canada.

The facts, with which you are familiar, are these:

The United Kingdom is the traditional and normal outlet for the major portion of wheat exported by Canada. Three years ago these countries entered into an agreement under which the United Kingdom was to purchase 140 to 160 million bushels of wheat annually from Canada. The quantity of wheat involved for 1949-50, the final year covered by the agreement, is 140 million bushels at an agreed price of $2 a bushel in store Fort William. The total dollar f.a.s. cost of the wheat involved for 1949-50 amounts to $309 million.

You have on several occasions advised us that wheat is a surplus agricultural commodity under the provisions of section 112 (d) of the Foreign Assistance Act, 1948, and it is my understanding that this condition still prevails. Effective with delivery after the first calendar quarter of 1949, the ECA discontinued authorizing the use of its funds for the purchase of Canadian wheat, and as a consequence, the United Kingdom has been using its free dollar reserves to meet the deficit in its Canadian accounts, a substantial element of which consists of Canadian wheat.

Recently, there has been a very severe drain on United Kingdom gold and dollar reserves. This drain, if not halted, would quite certainly vitiate the progress towards economic rehabilitation and recovery which the United Kingdom has made and remove all prospects of achieving the objectives of the Foreign Assistance Act, not only in the United Kingdom but in all probability in the other countries participating in the European recovery program. It is, therefore, a vital necessity to take all steps possible to end the drain on British gold and dollar reserves.

In an effort to avoid this grave contingency and to extend such help as is within our power, we propose, under the provisions of the Foreign Assistance Act, to agree in part to the British proposal and authorize the use of $175 million of ECA grant funds to finance a portion of this year's purchases of Canadian wheat by the United Kingdom. Aside from the vital importance of such action to European recovery, we believe that the proposed action is also in the interests of agricultural producers in this country, in that it will not result in any over-all decrease in U.S. wheat exports and will facilitate additional exports of other agricultural commodities, both to Canada and the United Kingdom.

In weighing the losses under the agreement, let them weigh in the $175 million supplied by the government in the United States to pay Canada for wheat shipped to Britain, which it is very probable Britain could not have bought without that assistance. Incidentally that assistance was barred under the strict terms of the Marshall aid plan.

Mr. Speaker, I can well imagine how the members of the opposition would have denounced the government if Canada had been pushed out of the United Kingdom market in 1948-49 and 1949-50 by Marshall aid wheat. I can testify personally, for I took part in the negotiations, that such a result most certainly would have occurred without the British wheat agreement.

In completing this survey of our marketing situation throughout the five year pool, I should mention the developments during the 1949-50 crop year in which producers will have received $1.83 per bushel on deliveries of 320 million bushels. As I have already mentioned, our sales in that crop year to the United Kingdom were partly financed by ECA funds. We had a firm sale to the United Kingdom of 145 million bushels at a price of $2 per bushel, which was 20 cents per bushel more than the international wheat agreement price for that year. This assured market was very important to us in a year in which we found some difficulty in finding other markets for the balance of our exportable supplies. In fact, we carried into the present crop year some wheat supplies that would have moved earlier, had we been able to find markets for them. Again, I say the British wheat agreement needs no apology. It was the right thing to do at the right time. It was by no means a one-sided contract. It was beneficial to the Canadian wheat grower as well as to the British consumer.

Now I come to the third point, whether or not the British government lived up to the terms of the agreement. At the risk of some repetition, let me review the terms of the agreement and the course of negotiations between the Canadian and United Kingdom governments. As hon. members know, the agreement called for the delivery of 160 million bushels of wheat and flour during each of the crop years 1946-47 and 1947-48 at a base price of $1.55 per bushel for No. 1 northern, in store Fort William-Port Arthur. During each of the two final years a quantity of 140 million bushels was involved at prices to be negotiated. In 1948-49 the price was to be not less than $1.25 per bushel and in 1949-50 not less than $1 per bushel.

I now quote from the agreement itself. I should like to fix this have regard to clause in everyone's mind so it will not be misquoted as it has been on almost every occasion on which it has been mentioned:

The actual prices to be paid for wheat to be bought and sold within the crop year 1948-49 shall be negotiated and settled between the United Kingdom government and the Canadian government not later than the 31st December, 1947, and prices for wheat to be bought and sold within the crop year 1949-50 shall be negotiated and settled not later than the 31st December, 1948. In determining the prices for these two crop years, 1948-49 and 1949-50, the United Kingdom government will have regard to any difference between the prices paid under this agreement in the 1946-47 and 1947-48 crop years and the world prices for wheat in the 1946-47 and 1947-48 crop years.

It will be noted that the price for the 1948 crop was to be determined before December 31, 1947, and the price for the 1949 crop before December 31, 1948. In other words, the prices were to be determined seven months ahead of the beginning of the relevant crop year. Our two governments met in the autumn of 1947 and determined upon a price of $2 per bushel for the 1948-49 crop year. Again in December, 1948, we met and determined upon a price of $2 per bushel for the 1949-50 crop year. If we knew then what we know now about world wheat supply and demand in the months that lay ahead, we might have been able to negotiate a higher price. In the circumstances then prevailing, $2 plus five to six cents carrying charges looked like a good price for 140 million bushels of wheat, and I think it was a good price at which to sell such substantial quantities of wheat, particularly as the United Kingdom at that time anticipated that the international wheat agreement price would be $1.70 per bushel and that wheat could be purchased from countries other than Canada for the international wheat agreement price.

In January, 1949, it was agreed that final settlement under the have regard to clause would not be made at that time, but would be made before July 31, 1950. I went to London in May, 1950, for discussions having to do with marketing the 1950 crop. While there I discussed the wheat agreement, at the request of the United Kingdom. I reported thereon to the cabinet and to this house following my return. I had no authority, or indeed no reason to conclude any agreement with the British government. All I could do, and all I did do, was to report the position taken by the British government.

In brief, the British government stated positively that they had discharged their obligations under the agreement. They pointed out what I have pointed out in this statement, namely that there were risks on both sides in entering into an agreement for four years ahead covering such large quantities of grain.

That was an understandable attitude and, while I might have wished that the British government could have seen the advantage to them of making some further payments to Canadian wheat growers, I could not conscientiously say that they were in default under the agreement. I so reported to the cabinet, to this house and to the western wheat producers.

My own words in Hansard on June 5 of last year, though uttered on the spur of the moment and in the heat of debate, put the position as I have just stated it and I have no desire to alter them in any way.

On November 13, 1950, I gave a speech in Regina to the Saskatchewan wheat pool during which I dealt with the same point and perhaps with greater decision. I quote from my remarks at that time:

> Now I personally went to London in May of this year for these final discussions. I found the attitude of the British government to be an understandable one. British authorities felt that they had taken sufficient forward risks during the life of the contract in guaranteeing us a market and they considered they had discharged their obligations under the "have regard" clause.
> Quite apart from this issue, however, but out of respect for the way in which Canada and the United Kingdom had worked together in each other's interest in these post-war years, the United Kingdom undertook to purchase from Canada in the 1950-51 crop year—

That is the current year.

> —its full requirement for North American wheat, provided price and quality to be not less favourable than that obtainable from other North American sources. Probable United Kingdom requirement was estimated to be from 100 to 120 million bushels of wheat and flour on international wheat agreement terms. This undertaking was given with the knowledge that there would be little if any E.C.A. aid on purchases in Canada, and I have no doubt that the eminently fair way with which Canada has dealt with the United Kingdom under the contract these past four years had much to do with their giving us a forward assurance of a market for the present crop year, even though E.C.A. finance is available for any wheat or flour purchased in the United States.

[Mr. Howe.]

As I have said, the British government has discharged its legal obligations under the agreement and is not in default. Subsequently, however, the Canadian government considered it advisable to inform the United Kingdom government of the views of certain producers' groups to the effect that sufficient account had not been taken in the final settlement of the so-called have regard to clause.

Accordingly, the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) mentioned the matter to Mr. Attlee when he was on a visit to Canada at the end of last year and again the Prime Minister had discussions in London in January. It was never suggested to the British government at any time that they were in legal default under the agreement. It was pointed out, however, that the existence of dissatisfaction among wheat producers in Canada about the results of the agreement could have unfortunate consequence for future trade relationships between our two countries and that the British government might wish to reconsider their earlier decision. My colleague, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), made similar representations a few weeks ago. As the house knows, however, the British government did not see fit to make any further payments.

That was a perfectly legal and proper decision for them to make under the agreement. The Canadian government, while recognizing that the legal obligations of the British government under the agreement had been fulfilled, took a different view of the over-all results and decided to pay into the five year pool the $65 million that remained under the United Kingdom loan act.

Personally, I think it was a mistake that there should have been included in the agreement such a loosely-worded have regard to clause. It has been a source of much misunderstanding in both the United Kingdom and Canada. I think the British government itself is partly to blame for the misunderstanding, for the speech by Mr. Strachey in Winnipeg undoubtedly led many producers to believe that the United Kingdom would act on a more generous interpretation.

Nevertheless, the agreement without that clause was by no means one-sided. It produced substantial benefits for Canadian producers as well as British consumers. It resulted in the highest average price for wheat ever realized by western wheat growers over a five-year period. But the have regard to clause was included, at the suggestion, as I recall it, of the United Kingdom government. Such a clause is not capable of precise meaning. The United Kingdom government took one view of it, which from their point of view was understandable. Our producers took another attitude which was equally understandable. Nevertheless, a clause in an agreement that is not subject to legal interpretation must inevitably be interpreted by the party that must do the paying. The other party may not agree, but he has no option but to accept.

That, hon. members of the House of Commons, is my view of the United Kingdom-Canada wheat agreement. I believe it was a good agreement. I believe it has been greatly to the advantage of the Canadian producers that that agreement was made. I cannot believe that we would have been able to deal with all the hazards involved in the marketing of those five crops without the British wheat agreement. I presume that we shall continue to have arguments as to the losses under the agreement. I do not know just from what point of view losses can be reckoned. People talk about the domestic price in the United States and they talk about the class 2 price of Canadian wheat. The domestic price of wheat in the United States at this moment is, I believe, about $2.42 a bushel. The price of class 2 Canadian wheat is probably about $2.18 a bushel. The international price of wheat today is probably about $1.87 a bushel. One can say that we can start right away to figure losses based on the fact that we are selling on the international wheat price. I do not know of any foreign markets to which the United States is sending its wheat and getting payment of the domestic price in cash. I think they are still operating largely under Marshall plan financing. Canada has posted a price of $2.18. They might as well make it $2.75 for all the effect it would have, because we have not sufficient milling wheat this year to fill our international wheat agreement, and therefore we are not in the market with any sizeable quantity of class 2 wheat. That is the position today. The position was similar in past years when there was a domestic price in the United States and a class 2 price in Canada. They were prices at which marginal quantities of wheat could be sold by both countries. It was not the price at which the bulk of the export wheat of the United States was marketed. It was marketed under ECA funds and as a gift. It was not the price at which any very substantial quantities of Canadian wheat were marketed. But nevertheless it is very misleading and very fictitious to accept either the domestic price in the United States, the Chicago price or class 2 wheat price as representing the world price. They were not the same, and none of them represented anything more than the price which its name implies.

I might point out that in the years 1934 to 1938 which are more or less typical of marketing in pre-war years, our percentage of the British market was 52·5 per cent. In the year 1947 our part of the British market was 82·5 per cent. Of the crop grown in 1948 our wheat took 72·9 per cent of the British market, and for the year 1949 our wheat held 82·3 per cent of the British market. This year we would have had practically the entire British market had we been able to fill it. Unfortunately the frost damage in western Canada has made it impossible for us to fill even our quota under the international wheat agreement, as far as Britain is concerned; but they are taking anything we can offer them in the way of milling wheat.

It is well to keep in mind that our second market in the pre-war days was the Netherlands; and I may tell hon. gentlemen that we have hardly sold a bushel of wheat to the Netherlands since the war ended. Our next biggest market was Belgium. Belgium has supported our wheat, has bought sizeable quantities in the post-war years, for the reason that their supply of United States dollars was somewhat better than other countries. Italy was a great market. We are just now getting back into the Italian market in something like a substantial way, but there are other markets, which we have lost entirely for the reason that they were quite happy to buy wheat from the United States with ECA funds.

If anyone can view the position of Canada as a result of the four year agreement and say that it was a bad agreement, and quibble about whether we lost money under it or made money under it, that is their privilege; but I say that I am very happy the agreement was made. I am happy the way it has worked out, and I deplore the suggestion that the British government has not played fair with the Canadian people.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Who made that suggestion?

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): I think that every hon. member in this house will welcome the statement that has been made tonight by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe). My regret is that this statement was not made when this debate was first initiated. Had it been, a very great deal of the ill feeling that has been engendered, as I have very good reason to know, in western Canada, would not have been engendered. Local newspapers are coming in to Ottawa at the present time —I see my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle over there, one from his constituency, for example—with articles written by government supporters in this house denouncing the British government for breaking the agreement, for doing just exactly what the Minister of Trade and Commerce says was not done. And I am happy indeed tonight to think that the Minister of Trade and Commerce has been able to come before the house and make the statements that he has made.

I want to say to him that when this agreement was initiated, when it was before the house, we supported it. We believed, as the minister has said tonight, that it would give the western farmer some stability in his price. We believed that it was an excellent idea to try to get as large a share as we could for a period of years of the British market. We did say that if—as on August 15, 1946, it was quite evident it was going to do—inflation developed in this country and the cost of production rose, then at the end of the agreement a compensatory adjustment should be made, and that compensatory adjustment should come out of the federal treasury of Canada; that we could not go back to the British government at the end of the time and say: The costs of production in Canada have risen; the agreement was not as advantageous as we expected it to be, and therefore we expect you to pay something more than you have paid.

I remember very distinctly making that statement, and reiterating it; for I looked it up the day before yesterday in the debates on that occasion. I reiterated that opinion and that suggestion three or four times during the course of my speech on behalf of the members with whom I am associated, and suggested that if that occurred a compensatory adjustment should be made. That is what our amendment seeks now.

I did so on these grounds, that if the cost of production rose this government, having the control of the economy, would be responsible for making that compensatory adjustment. My hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) will recollect that he rose in his place that evening and pointed out to me and to the house that just as $200 million had been appropriated a few months before for the support of agricultural prices other than wheat, a similar appropriation could be made if necessary for the wheat producers.

Since that date the costs of production of the eight principal products entering into the production of a bushel of wheat have risen from 128 points on August 1, 1946, to 194·2 points on August 1, 1950. That is the reason why in western Canada there was an agitation last fall, when the crop was frozen in the summer, when other conditions intervened, for a further payment than that which might have come from the agreement. I wanted to make that clear because that was our position then. It is our position today.

We have never argued on the basis of what the price of wheat was to Great Britain, what the price of class 2 wheat was elsewhere, and made a comparison with the United States markets. We have pointed out that the cheap loaf enjoyed by the Canadian people during the war years was subsidized, not by the government of Canada, not by all the Canadian people, but by the prairie farmers who grew No. 1 wheat.

I listened to the Minister of Agriculture the other evening when he suggested that the amount was not as high as some people were saying, but that it probably was in the neighbourhood of $48 million; and it is on these two counts that we have suggested, and I still suggest to the government of Canada, that it was its obligation to make any further compensatory adjustments that the producers of western Canada were entitled to. And over the past few days, over the past week, I have asked a number of questions of the Minister of Agriculture. I must say that in all my experience in the house, extending over fifteen years, I have never seen a more reprehensible exhibition than the answers to those questions. I want to say this, as I said to some of my colleagues this morning, that the Minister of Trade and Commerce has come out of this well, and that nowhere in those questions and answers could I find anything other than he has admitted tonight. But when the Minister of Agriculture was dealing with some of those matters I felt the house was being misled and was in danger of being deceived—and I say that is true of the country and true of the western producers.

When the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) came in this afternoon he made a statement to the house. I have not a copy of it, but some of my colleagues took notes of it, and I took a few notes. The result is that, putting these notes together, I understood him to say exactly what the Minister of Trade and Commerce said tonight, that when he was in London he discussed this matter with the United Kingdom authorities, and that the United Kingdom took the position that all the obligations had been fulfilled on their part under this contract.

I recollect that when I asked the minister, earlier in the course of the debate, if he had agreed in London, the answer was no; if he had brought back a memorandum—and I might say to the house that when I was asking about bringing back a memorandum I was guessing: I had no knowledge of such a thing existing. I was just probing to find out. The minister said Yes, that he did, and that what was done with that memorandum was done in Ottawa. And from the Prime Minister's statement this afternoon that is made abundantly clear.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce said tonight, as he said before, as I understood the Prime Minister to say, that he said to the government in Great Britain that he had no authority to make an agreement, but that he would have to report the matter here and that whatever settlement was made would have to be made by the government in Ottawa.

And I have noticed, too, from the questions and answers in this debate, that when the proposal—for such it was—made by the authorities in Great Britain to the government of Canada, through the Minister of Trade and Commerce, was approved by the cabinet, according to the Minister of Agriculture—and I believe the Minister of Trade and Commerce—it was approved unanimously. The Prime Minister this afternoon, if I am not mistaken, said that after the discussion the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who was the proper minister to do so, advised the Chancellor of the Exchequer—and I wrote down these words—that the Canadian government "was in accord with the conclusions"—and the Prime Minister nods his head—contained in what I understood to be the official document or official minute of the meeting held by the Minister of Trade and Commerce and representatives of the United Kingdom in May of 1950.

If my understanding of what the Prime Minister said is correct—and I think it is, because the Minister of Trade and Commerce has confirmed it—the matter was settled very definitely and unanimously in Ottawa and the government of the United Kingdom was so informed.

Now, I wish we had known that at the outset. I wish the impression that has gone across this country, the feeling that has been worked up among some hon. members in the house—one the other night, when I was speaking about letters received stating that a boycott of British goods was under way in western Canada, said, "That is right; it serves them right"—or words to that effect—the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Decore)—

Mr. Decore: On a question of privilege.

Mr. Coldwell: And down in Saint John, New Brunswick—

Mr. Decore: I never made that statement.

Mr. Coldwell: You did not?

Mr. Decore: No.

Mr. Coldwell: I am glad to know it.

Mr. Ross (Souris): I think it was the hon. member for Athabaska (Mr. Dechene).

Mr. Coldwell: I am sorry. I hope the names I have used will be left out of the record. But that was my understanding and what I was told.

Mr. Blackmore: Someone did, anyway.

Mr. Coldwell: Someone did; however, that is by the way. But when British cars were being unloaded at Saint John the other day, some hon. members said, "Why do they not take them back again until they have made a proper deal for our wheat?"

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Coldwell: As the Minister of Trade and Commerce said tonight, the British market is the market we have got to have if we are going to maintain the economy of western Canada. We have got to have it; we have got to have it. And one of the reasons some members supported that agreement so wholeheartedly and, incidentally, defended it across the country—I know I went through my great wheat producing constituency after it was made, defending it from the critics—one of the reasons we defended the agreement was, apart from the stability it was giving, that it was guaranteeing to us re-entry, or rather a maintenance of that market which is vital to western Canada and, indeed, vital to the whole economy of Canada.

I find it very difficult to understand why we were led to believe that the British government had not come through.

Mr. Blackmore: Who caused it?

Mr. Coldwell: It is perfectly true that when the Minister of Agriculture went to Great Britain there was a $65 million credit left out of $1,250 million. The proposal, I am told, was that the British would allow this to be used for the five year pool, that they would never be asked to repay it. And if that is the case, from the point of view of the Canadian people that would have been a dishonourable subterfuge. Because the Canadian people would have been paying that $65 million in any event as they are going to pay it now.

I intended to make a speech in the debate. It had been my intention to take Hansard of last Thursday and Friday and to place on record this evening some of the questions and answers given in that debate. I am not going to do that now, because after the speech of the Minister of Trade and Commerce this evening there is no necessity to do it. The record will speak for itself. I am happy to be able to stand in the house tonight and say that, while I think the western grower is entitled to a compensatory adjustment from somewhere, because of the greatly increased cost of production that arose as a result of the removal of controls, and the tremendous increase in the cost of living, yet I believe with the Minister of Trade and Commerce that the wheat agreement was on the whole a good agreement. I hope that we may continue to have as large a portion of that great market as we have enjoyed in the last five years. I hope that the wheat agreement we have had with the British will be rounded out into an international agreement. I hope that this great product can be stabilized. I remember well the years before the war. I remember when the best of wheat was marketed in my constituency at 20 cents a bushel.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Coldwell: I do not mind.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): Did you as leader of the C.C.F. party at any time protest to your fellow socialist government in Great Britain that a better price should be paid under the wheat agreement? That is question number one.

Mr. Coldwell: Just a moment. I do not believe that it is the privilege of any hon. member of the Canadian parliament to approach the government of any country on a question of this kind except through the government of his own country.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): Then you did not do it.

Mr. Coldwell: Did I have the right to do it?

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): Did you?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Coldwell: If I had done such a thing—

An hon. Member: You would have got it in the neck.

Mr. Coldwell: —I would have been criticized severely for it.

Mr. Hansell: By the same man, too.

[Mr. Coldwell.]

Mr. Coldwell: I did not support any government either provincially or federally between 1930 and 1935 under whose policies wheat was marketed at 20 cents a bushel at our local elevators. When my hon. friend was a member of a government in Saskatchewan—

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): Would you mind another question?

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Coldwell: May I continue?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Beaudoin): The hon. member does not have the consent of the hon. member who has the floor.

Mr. Coldwell: It is not the function of any hon. member of this house to interfere in negotiations between governments. I can say quite honestly that I have not done that sort of thing and I do not intend to do it. However, I can say that in 1941 when the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Fournier), the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore), His Honour the Speaker, Mr. Arthur Slaght, Mr. Harry Jackman and I were in Great Britain, at that time we did have an opportunity to take up the low price of wheat that was being paid to the producers with Lord Woolton, who was then the food controller. I criticized very sharply at that time the prices that were paid, but that was under entirely different circumstances.

Mr. Blackmore: In 1941.

Mr. Coldwell: In 1941. The hon. member remembers it. I am not going to recount any sharp exchange that occurred at that time, but it was a very sharp one. Those were different circumstances. Therefore I say, Mr. Speaker, that I am glad that this matter is being cleared up. One thing only remains, and that is to have the document, from which I believe the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) quoted this afternoon, laid on the table of the house. I know that another government has to be approached but I should not think there would be any difficulty in securing permission to place that document on the table of the house. Of course, if there were not another government involved, the document having been quoted by a minister should be laid on the table of the house. In the last couple of years I have even found that a letter quoted by a private member of the house has to be laid on the table, although I do not think that is a good ruling.

Mr. Howe: Is my hon. friend suggesting that I quoted from the document?

Mr. Ross (Souris): No, the Prime Minister.

Mr. Coldwell: The Prime Minister. The Prime Minister promised to approach the British government. As I say, I have finished all I want to say tonight. I am glad indeed that this matter has been cleared up. I hope that those who have been spreading information, which the minister himself says is without foundation, will do their best to remedy the false impression which they have created.

Mr. Laing: Would the hon. member permit a question? I assure him it is a fair one.

Mr. Coldwell: Certainly.

Mr. Laing: Has he any figures to adduce which would support his contention of an enormously increased cost of production of wheat?

Mr. Coldwell: Yes.

Mr. Laing: I know of some in the university of Saskatchewan who do not quite support that view.

Mr. Coldwell: Yes. The very figure I gave that the cost of oil, machines, the eight basic supplies that are needed in the production of wheat, increased from—

Mr. Sinnott: Twenty-five per cent.

Mr. Coldwell: —an index figure of 128 to 194·2 between the 1st of August, 1946, and the 1st of August, 1950, four years. I think that is a good answer to my hon. friend's question. Of course one could put the actual figures on the record but I have not them before me at the moment. I think anyone could look them up and I am sure he will find that the cost of farm implements has more than doubled. The cost of distillate, oil, and gasoline has gone up tremendously. The cost of binder twine has gone up in a spectacular manner.

An hon. Member: Fertilizer.

Mr. Coldwell: Fertilizer, all sorts of things.

Mr. G. F. Higgins (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Cote (Matapedia-Matane): Wheat from Newfoundland.

Mr. Higgins: I think I am probably sticking my neck out in getting into this argument.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Higgins: But I am prepared to do so. I am doing so particularly because after all I am entering the ring between two very tough fighters, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) and the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe). Frankly I am not long enough in this house to be too frightened by either one of them. I never did expect to see one first-line minister slapping down another as happened here tonight. I have put it in very vulgar language, if you will, the language that I know best, but it appeared as though the Minister of Trade and Commerce deliberately slapped down the Minister of Agriculture tonight. I do not know of any other way we can put it. That to me, Mr. Speaker, is a most extraordinary thing.

Frankly I do not know what to make of this debate. I have been trying to follow it. I know very little about wheat, and I certainly know less now than I ever knew before. It reminds me of a portion of "Through the Looking-Glass" which I hope you will allow me to read to you. After all, it will lighten this very serious matter. It is as follows:

"Can you do addition?" the White Queen asked. "What's one and one and one and one and one and one and one and one and one?"

"I don't know," said Alice. "I lost count."

"She can't do addition," the Red Queen interrupted. "Can you do subtraction? Take nine from eight."

"Nine from eight I can't, you know," Alice replied very readily; but . . ."

"She can't do subtraction," said the White Queen. "Can you do division? Divide a loaf by a knife—what's the answer to that?"

"I suppose—" Alice was beginning, but the Red Queen answered for her. "Bread-and-butter, of course. Try another subtraction sum. Take a bone from a dog; what remains?"

Alice considered. "The bone wouldn't remain, of course, if I took it—and the dog wouldn't remain; it would come to bite me—and I'm sure I shouldn't remain!"

There are some dogs' bones that have been bitten tonight.

"Then you think nothing would remain?" said the Red Queen.

"I think that's the answer."

"Wrong, as usual," said the Red Queen; "the dog's temper would remain."

"But I don't see how—"

"Why, look here!" the Red Queen cried. "The dog would lose its temper, wouldn't it?"

"Perhaps it would," Alice replied cautiously.

"Then if the dog went away, its temper would remain!" the Queen exclaimed triumphantly.

Alice said, as gravely as she could, "They might go different ways." But she couldn't help thinking to herself "What dreadful nonsense we are talking!"

"She can't do sums a bit!" the Queens said together, with great emphasis.

"Can you do sums?" Alice said, turning suddenly on the White Queen, for she didn't like being found fault with so much.

The Queen gasped and shut her eyes. "I can do addition," she said, "if you give me time—but I can't do subtraction under any circumstances!"

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Higgins: I shall not read very much more.

Some hon. Members: Go on.

Mr. Higgins:

"Of course you know your A B C?" said the Red Queen.

"To be sure I do," said Alice.

"So do I," the White Queen whispered: "we'll often say it over together, dear. And I'll tell you a secret—I can read words of one letter! Isn't that grand? However, don't be discouraged. You'll come to it in time."

Here the Red Queen began again. "Can you answer useful questions?" she said. "How is bread made?"

"I know that!" Alice cried eagerly. "You take some flour . . ."

"Where do you pick the flower?" the White Queen asked. "In a garden or in the hedges?"

"Well, it isn't picked at all," Alice explained—

I shall get to the end; I see hon. members are becoming impatient.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Beaudoin): Order.

Mr. Higgins: I shall finish very quickly.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Beaudoin): Order. I would not want the house to gather the impression that I am going to stop the hon. gentleman from reading a piece of literature. I had occasion once to call an hon. member to order while he was quoting Shakespeare and some got a wrong impression. This time I am calling the hon. member to order not because he is quoting from literature but because I think he is quoting too much of it into the record. If he has only a little more he may finish; if he has a page or so, I must ask him to cease.

Mr. Higgins: I have just another sentence.

"It's too late to correct it," said the Red Queen: "when you've once said a thing, that fixes it, and you must take the consequences."

As I understand it, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) has made a statement, and he must take the consequences for it. I am only going by what I am told, but his statement was made, according to my information, immediately prior to the election of 1949. At that time he is reported to have told the farmers of the west that they would be taken care of as far as their wheat was concerned. By that I presume it was intended that the Liberal government would pay the necessary money about which the minister was speaking. That was the statement; I do not know if it is true.

An hon. Member: Which one was that?

Mr. Higgins: Well, the minister knows. I have a very high regard for the minister; I think he is one of the doughtiest fighters in the house, and I greatly admire the way he carries on a debate. But we must remember that he is a cabinet minister, responsible for his actions; and if he made that statement to the farmers then he must deliver the goods. Where is he going to get the goods to deliver? Is he going to take the money out of my pocket?

An hon. Member: You have none.

[Mr. Higgins.]

Mr. Higgins: You are so right. I have none, but I do not want to lose my jacket also. That is the position. Tonight from what I could understand—and I took down what I thought he said—the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) told us the western farmers got a good deal for their wheat in the past five years, the best possible deal they could have had; that they got as good a price in those five years as they ever got in their lifetime. That is what I understood him to say. If that is correct, why then must $65 million more be paid to them? That is the question I do not understand. If the farmers got as much as they possibly could, why rob the Canadian taxpayer of $65 million more? I think that is a fair question.

Mr. Argue: Does the hon. member suggest that the government was justified in forcing the Canadian farmer to sell wheat to the Canadian consumer at a price which for a long time was even less than the British price?

Mr. Higgins: I am not able to answer that question except to say that if the western farmers were foolish enough to make a deal like that without protecting themselves they will have to put up with it. That is a strong statement; I come from a place where we do not grow wheat, and I am probably all wet because of that. But to be fair about it let me qualify the statement. What I tried to say was that I am in favour of the western farmers getting this money if—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Higgins: Well, if hon. members will only wait I will finish—if in emergencies the maritime and Newfoundland fishermen and maritime apple growers and Ontario farmers are helped out by the federal government. Then I will be satisfied to see this $65 million paid. I will vote for it, and vote for more. But until we get equal treatment all across the country I am not satisfied.

We have a very delicate situation ourselves, and when I say ourselves I mean the people of Newfoundland, by reason of the cod fisheries and the negotiations going on with the United Kingdom. Prior to our entering confederation with Canada the British government arranged the convertibility of sterling. The bulk of our trade in salt fish was done in European markets, and as you know Great Britain is banker for the European countries. If Portugal bought fish, Britain would arrange that we in Newfoundland got dollars in return. That arrangement was continued until the first year after confederation. Now we owe Great Britain some $63 million, and that debt was assumed by Canada on confederation. The present situation is that the dominion owes the British government, on Newfoundland's account, some $63 million, but Britain contends that money is repayable not in sterling but in dollars. Now I am told that this year Britain is not prepared to undertake the conversion of this sterling. Britain says, "If you are going to pay back this money you cannot pay it back in sterling; you must pay it back in dollars." What I am afraid of, and I hope I am not blaming the minister unduly, is that all this ill will that has been stirred up in Britain over this wheat deal will gum up the works in relation to our sale of codfish. That is a very serious matter. You talk about having trouble in connection with wheat. If you get the Newfoundland fisherman in trouble with his codfish you will really be in for it.

I have made my point as well as I can. We had a clear statement this evening; and like the leader of the C.C.F. party (Mr. Coldwell) I think it is nice to learn that Britain is not being blamed for what happened under this wheat contract. The people of Britain have enough to put up with without being blamed in a matter of this nature. After five years of so-called peace Britons generally are putting up with an austerity program which we in Canada could never even contemplate. To blame these people, and to stir up ill will as has been done over this British wheat contract, is the most ungracious thing that the eldest daughter of the British commonwealth could possibly do. I am happy to hear that statement made tonight by the Minister of Trade and Commerce even though it was at the expense of the Minister of Agriculture. I believe the Minister of Agriculture will recognize and admit that it was no fault of the British people, and whatever idea he may have had of convincing the Attlee government to pay this money, there was no particular reason why the British people should have been blamed in the manner in which they have in this country within the past few weeks. I believe most members in this house will agree with that.

To sum up, Mr. Speaker, because I believe there are other people who want to say something in this debate, I am in favour of paying this money, and more besides, provided always that the maritimes get the same deal when they need it, and that Newfoundland gets the same deal when she needs it, and the Ontario farmers as well. I do not believe that money should be taken from the Canadian taxpayers to pay this $65 million unless we get that deal right across the board generally. Those are my sentiments. Where the money will come from, to pay it, is another matter.

Mr. J. H. Ferguson (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, this debate on the wheat situation and the marketing of Canadian wheat has been one of the most interesting debates to which I have ever listened in this House of Commons. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe), western Liberal farmers, Canadian farmers in general, all parties made some interesting comments and produced interesting figures. The upshot of the whole affair has been that the people across this country have had firmly implanted in their minds the fact that the British government did not play the game by Canada. We have had ample evidence to show that feeling was brought about in Canada, and it is most unfortunate. Great Britain has been our greatest customer and will be our greatest customer. It is a market we badly need.

There is one group of people in Canada, and that is the great mass of taxpayers, who must be wondering how much longer this government, when it enters a deal, will use every means in its power to try to get more money for the people it represents, although the government is firmly convinced it is not entitled to it according to the statement by the Minister of Trade and Commerce tonight. Several ministers, even the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) of this country, insinuated that there might be some more dole for the western farmers by getting it from a group of people who have gone through hell on earth during the war and since. Finally when they are told that they have been amply paid for the commodities received, they put their tails between their legs, come back to Canada and tell us tonight from the bottom of their hearts that they believe it is a fair deal.

In spite of the fact it is a fair deal some of the generous members of the cabinet wish to dig down into the taxpayers for a present to the western farmer of $65 million. If there is anything left in the pockets of the Canadian people, may I suggest that the government do likewise for the farmers in my part of the country. As a matter of fact, they should do it for all the people in Canada. That kind of money, found in the bottom of the pocket or half way down, and distributed to some people, is getting beyond a joke to the taxpayers. It is almost time this government made up its mind to whom it owed money, and paid it. It should stop fooling the public or digging down for large amounts that are shocking the taxpayers of this country. If they believe they owe anybody else, or want to make a gift or a justifiable payment, please let us know without wasting the time of parliament trying to explain why they do these things. Let us make it general and cause general inflation. Let the Canadian dollar go down to such a level that nobody wants it.

Mr. A. J. Bater (The Battlefords): Mr. Speaker, in rising at this time after listening to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) tonight, I believe I shall cut my remarks rather short. However, I am going to say a word or two in connection with the bill that started this debate. I am referring to Bill No. 5, which is an act to amend the wheat board act. I am in accord with every clause in this bill. I think it will assist the farmers in getting quicker returns for their grain which is marketed through the wheat board.

Our western wheat is paid for on the basis of deliveries at Fort William, Vancouver and Churchill. With respect to the last port I have just mentioned I wish to compliment the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) for the increased use that has been made of that port during the last crop season. I would urge upon them to continue to increase the use of that port in the coming season. I may have more to say in that connection at a later date.

I should like to make one or two comments on observations that were made during this debate. The hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross) rather surprised me. When we farmers are talking about comparisons of prices with those in the great country to the south of us, the articles we generally mention are machinery, motor cars, refrigerators and radios. Lo and behold, when the hon. member made comparisons the other night he read from an editorial in a Winnipeg paper which compared prices in Minneapolis and Winnipeg for five articles. Those articles were sugar, T-bone steak, pork tenderloin, milk and eggs. Of those five articles, four of them are produced on Canadian farms. While I was home, I may tell him, I was milking cows almost every day, and feeding chickens. I want to tell him that I think it is only now that the dairy farmer and the chicken raiser are coming into their own. I was amazed that he should pick out those particular items and complain to us that they were higher in Canada than they were in the United States.

Mr. Ross (Souris): The processed article; the raw material is higher in the United States.

Mr. Bater: I never interrupted my hon. friend.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Be fair about it.

Mr. Bater: There was another statement made by the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe). I believe that by his own admission he stated that he was a horse trader. Now, Mr. Speaker, he may know how to trade horses but I do not believe he knows much about the wheat acreage reduction to which he referred in his remarks. The hon. member referred to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), with whom I am sure the western farmer will still tag along. This is what he said at page 1091 of Hansard:

> "Boys, you stood by me in the past when I was wrong. I ask you to go along with me now when I have repented and am going to be right; because I have made a mistake; I have made a failure. I have lost you half a billion dollars. There is no teacher like experience. You have paid for your experience with interest, cash on the barrelhead. You have had good crops. God gave you good ground. You paid high prices for big combines to harvest your crops fast, so you could go south in the winter if you had enough acres; and if you did not have enough acres, I paid you for summer fallowing, even."

In connection with that summer fallow bonus may I say, and I believe most western farmers will agree with me, that was an arrangement or agreement made between the British government and Canada. I believe the British government stated at that time that the submarine menace made it difficult for them to get boatloads of grain across. They requested the Canadian government to send over bacon and said that the British people would plough up more ground to grow wheat. I believe I am correct in that statement. It was for that reason we were paid this $2 per acre for one or two years to change over our system of farming in western Canada, and to reduce the wheat acreage so that we could grow more grains and produce the bacon for which Great Britain was in dire need.

There was no trouble with that agreement. It is true that that agreement was made possibly with a different government. I do not know whether or not that made any difference, but we never heard of any trouble about it.

I see that the hour is getting along, and I believe that Mr. Speaker is waiting for a vote. As to the subamendment that is now before us, it is quite easy for those who have not the responsibility of government to move such an amendment. I sincerely hope that when this vote is taken we can show the people of western Canada and of all Canada that we consider we had a fair agreement with Great Britain.

Mr. J. H. Blackmore (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, I had intended to speak tonight in such a way as I thought would establish the truth which the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) so well expressed before this house. I have viewed with the deepest regret the development of a campaign to smear Great Britain. That campaign has involved several of the responsible members of this house, as can easily be shown by quotations from their remarks in one place or another, and in their ridings. I was intending to answer the kind of thing which they were endeavouring to establish. As the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) has indicated, matters have in some places got to fever heat in this country. People have almost reached the point where they will hardly discuss Britain at all; and all that has occurred with no justification at all, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce has so well put it. But since the Minister of Trade and Commerce has relieved me of that burden, I shall devote myself to certain other matters which I believe it would be well to probe into.

To my way of thinking, as a result of the discussions we have had thus far, four obvious conclusions have been established. The first is that the Canadian wheat growers ought to receive a final payment of 25 cents a bushel; not less and probably a good deal more, as the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Fair) well developed the other day in his speech. The second conclusion is that for paying any part of this 25 cents a bushel Britain appears to have no kind or degree of obligation, either legal or moral. I can now say that without any question at all, since the Minister of Trade and Commerce has spoken. The third conclusion is that the Canadian government ought to pay that 25 cents a bushel. The fourth conclusion I am afraid has to be this—and I hope I shall not use words that are too harsh or too strong in their implication in saying what I feel I must say: Some persons connected with the Liberal Canadian government, it appears, have deliberately contrived to cast upon Britain blame and odium which justly should rest upon a certain group of members deep in the Liberal party itself.

This general scheme was well set forth and well developed by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Thatcher) the other day in his speech which is recorded at pages 1093 to 1098 of 1951 Hansard. I do not propose to go into all the details that the hon. member went into, but I am going to assemble some of the quotations which he placed on record, and I am going to give the men who are involved a chance to clear their names before this house and before the Canadian people. The hon. member for Moose Jaw referred first of all to the hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Larson). This whole thing has been worked up in a gradual way. Somebody drops a match, then somebody makes another move somewhere else; and the first thing we know, the whole prairie is afire. Here is the first match that was dropped. Here is what the hon. member for Kindersley said, according to the hon. member for Moose Jaw. I have not checked the source, but I assume that what he said is correct. He is usually accurate. The hon. member for Moose Jaw, as reported at page 1096 of Hansard, had this to say of the hon. member for Kindersley:

> "I am going to say how pleased I am that the British government has considered fulfilling the 'have regard to' clause in the five-year wheat pool contract . . . I am not going to mention any alternatives because I am confident the British government is sound and fair enough to see that justice is done.

That is a mild statement, but an indication that the British government had not just been quite ready to do what is right. Then later he said:

> . . . the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Sinnott) took up the cudgels and had this to say:
> "I repeat that the government of Canada must impress on the government of Britain that the 'have regard to' clause must be carried out."

In the light of what the Minister of Trade and Commerce has just said, that is a remarkable statement. Then the hon. member for Moose Mountain (Mr. Smith) had this to say, as quoted by the member for Moose Jaw at page 1096 of Hansard:

> I urge the government to crack the whip and get going on this negotiation or discussion with the United Kingdom and let us have a decision on what is going to happen in respect to the five-year pool payments.

That is another remarkable statement, in the light of what the Minister of Trade and Commerce has said tonight.

Then the hon. member for Maple Creek (Mr. Studer), as quoted by the member for Moose Jaw at page 1096 of Hansard, had this to say:

> I believe more emphasis should be placed on the honouring of a contract between two countries.

Then the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Decore) caps the climax with this remarkable outburst, as quoted at page 1097 of Hansard:

> John Decore (Liberal—Vegreville) charged that the British government "has failed to carry out its moral obligations" to western Canada under the "have regard to" clause of the contract . . .
>
> Had the British government assumed its obligation the farmer would have received substantially more and to which he is entitled.
> We in Canada spared no efforts to help the British people—
>
> Imagine that, Mr. Speaker.
> —when our help was urgently needed. The U.K. socialist government let us down. We Canadians never expected this kind of treatment.

If anybody can explain that series of expressions on the part of these new members who are venturing to rush in where angels fear to tread, I hope he will do so.

An hon. Member: Who put them up to it?

Mr. Blackmore: It looks as though someone had put these men up to this thing and that each had said his little piece, made his little bow and gone out. I believe that every hon. member of this house and every person in this country will be positively astounded that a thing like this could have occurred. It is a matter which is utterly reprehensible. Whoever organized that thing has done something that no man with responsibility should ever contemplate for a minute. In times like these, when the enemy is right at our door, and when every person is straining to the limit, it is astounding that anyone should start an outrageous thing like this for the purpose of sowing discord and unhappiness in the Dominion of Canada and cause those feelings to be reflected by the British over on the other side of the water; it is something that just passes human comprehension that a thing of that sort could have been done.

The Liberal strategy to blame Britain—and it must have been the Liberal strategy of somebody—was, to put the matter bluntly, nothing but a dastardly political device for dishonouring Canadian commitments both to Canada's wheat growers and to the British. Hon. members who participated in this pernicious program of propaganda calculated to delude the Canadian people into doubting Britain's good faith as to her honouring the Canadian wheat agreement of 1946 to 1950—those men have done Britain and Canada a serious disservice. I think that mere justice demands that words as harsh as these should be used.

May I take a moment to sum up each of the four conclusions that I have come to. The first one was that Canadian farmers ought to receive a final payment of 25 cents a bushel at least on their wheat. I know that the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Ferguson) was expressing very honourably and straightforwardly the point of view of a large number of people in the Dominion of Canada. To him it looks as though it is proposed to take from the Canadian people's pockets a vast sum of money and give that money outright to one section of the Canadian people. To him that looks to be completely unsound in every way.

I shall not have time to deal with this matter adequately tonight. I shall speak as long as I have an opportunity to and then I shall go on the next time this debate comes up; because, after all, it is a problem with which the Canadian people will have to come to grips.

[Mr. Blackmore.]

Here was a great body of producers, Canadian producers, the farmers of western Canada. They were producing a commodity absolutely essential in the conduct of the war. We have manufacturers in Canada who were asked at the beginning of world war II whether they would produce guns, tanks, aeroplanes, bullets and other munitions of war. They said: We will not produce one single unit until you guarantee us costs of production plus a certain percentage. Now, I think no one in the House of Commons, unless it may be some of my C.C.F. friends, will question the soundness of their position. I surely do not.

If their position was sound as producers of the munitions of war, will anyone tell me that the position of the western farmer is not equally sound if he says: I want to be guaranteed the cost of production plus a just profit.

The question at issue is this. Have the western farmers in the production of their wheat been guaranteed the cost of production plus a just profit?

Mr. Ferguson: I am in favour of giving them whatever they are entitled to, but let us be honest and stop the continuous passing out of the taxpayer's money without any warrant for it.

Mr. Blackmore: That is a most admirable comment made by one of the most honest members in this house, the hon. member for Simcoe North. He just boils right up over a lot of things, and always tells us what he thinks. I honour a man who does that.

The point is that since the farmers in that area have begun to produce wheat this government right here in Ottawa has allowed the freight rates to rise on those farmers, increasing their costs tremendously, the cost of everything that they use to produce their grain, the costs of sending the grain to market. Can anybody tell me to where that will lead? The hon. member for Simcoe North shakes his head. Very well, there is the trouble.

The cost of production of the western farmer includes the food, clothing and shelter which constitute the standard of living. The hon. member knows what has been happening to that. It has gone right up until it has just become unbearable to the western farmer.

In addition to that the western farmer, in order to get the cost of production for 1949 to 1951, has to take in his stride the colossal loss which has resulted from the great frost which in 1950 prevailed all across that country. Can anyone compute what that is? And maybe next year they will have not a frost but a drought over the wide area or a plague of grasshoppers. When you count all this kind of thing you see it is extremely difficult to tell what the costs of the western farmer really are.

Mr. Knight: Tell what the price of machinery is.

Mr. Blackmore: I have been mentioning the cost of production. Some hon. members wish me to mention the cost of machinery. I did not come with the figures all in mind, but I must say that the cost of machinery rises so rapidly and so consistently that a man has to look up the newspaper every day to find out what the price is.

The cost of a tractor, which farmers all over the west now use, has risen from $2,800 five years ago to $4,800 today. Where has the difference gone to? Who has got that difference? Who has got that $2,000? It has come to Ontario to the Massey-Harris people. There is no question about that. You ask, how would Massey-Harris be able to get it? Well, they were able to get it largely because the government of Canada had put up a substantial tariff barrier which protected them and took away from the farmers that sum of money and put it right in the hands of the Massey-Harris Company, and the farmers could not do a thing about it.

On motion of Mr. Blackmore the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Tomorrow we will continue consideration of this bill, Bill No. 5, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1935. Then we will take up Bill No. 130, to amend the Export and Import Permits Act, and later on Bill No. 79, respecting Indians.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, March 13, 1951

The house met at three o'clock.

RAILWAYS, CANALS AND TELEGRAPH LINES

Third report of standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.—Mr. McCulloch.

KOREA

RECROSSING OF 38th PARALLEL BY UNITED NATIONS TROOPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Angus MacInnis (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is based on a news item appearing in yesterday's Ottawa Journal. If you will allow me, I should like to summarize it very briefly. Its purport is that General Matthew B. Ridgway said yesterday that it would be a tremendous victory for the United Nations if the Korean war should end at the 38th parallel, but he knows of no plan for hostilities to end there. I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if the Canadian government has discussed this matter of the United Nations forces again crossing the 38th parallel, and if it has, will he make a statement to the house?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, questions were asked of the government on the second and thirteenth of February, by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell), on the subject of crossing the 38th parallel. There is nothing that I can usefully add at this time to what I said then.

Mr. Graydon: May I suggest to the minister that the question that might well be asked is this: Why are the Chinese Reds south of the 38th parallel?

BUTTER

STATEMENT AS TO RECENT IMPORTATIONS AND BASIS OF DISTRIBUTION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): Before the orders of the day are proceeded with I should like to answer a question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross), as to how much butter has been imported into Canada recently, and by whom; the basis of the distribution of government stocks of butter, and what is the present situation with respect to butter.

Approximately 4,800,000 pounds of butter have been imported into Canada, and the Department of Agriculture has made arrangements with the importers or the first buyer for its distribution. The importations were made by Olive and Dorion, Montreal; Lovell and Christmas, Montreal; A. A. Ayre Company, Montreal; Canada Packers Limited, Toronto, and Eastern Townships Produce Company, Sherbrooke. The government has now allocated the remaining stocks held by the dairy products board for distribution over the next two weeks.

Government stocks were released to the trade across Canada in original carlots, basis 57 cents per pound, Montreal, for first grade creamery butter, upon application from dealers setting forth their stock position in relation to their requirements. Sales have been confined throughout the period to those dealers who had less than two weeks' supply of butter in sight.

Stocks of butter in storage as at March 1, 1951, were 14,900,000 pounds. The production of butter during March, 1950, was 12,500,000 pounds, and it is expected that the amount will be similar this year.

Mr. Fulton: If I may ask a question in relation to the statement just made, having particular reference to the stocks of board butter which the minister says are now being released, may these stocks be sold in any province, or are they confined to certain provinces?

Mr. Gardiner: They may be sold in any province, but there are some provinces to which stocks are not being moved at the present time, particularly the prairie provinces.

TRANSPORTATION

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. E. Wright (Melfort): Can the Minister of Transport say whether we shall have the printed report of the royal commission on transportation in our hands before Easter?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): The last information I had with respect to the Turgeon report on transportation was that it is likely to be ready for tabling some time this week.

PARLIAMENT HILL

REFERENCE TO CONDITION OF ADJOINING STREETS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Ferguson (Simcoe North): Can the Minister of Public Works say whether his department or the city of Ottawa is responsible for the filthy, sandy condition of the streets in front of these buildings, which has existed for two or three weeks?

Hon. Alphonse Fournier (Minister of Public Works): Is the hon. member speaking of the centre block?

Mr. Ferguson: No, the streets for several blocks in front of these buildings. Is your department or the city responsible for the condition of Wellington street, for example?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I will take the question as a notice and give an answer as soon as I get the information.

YUKON TERRITORY

INQUIRY AS TO DECISION TO MOVE SEAT OF GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Angus MacInnis (Vancouver East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Resources and Development, based upon a telegram I received this morning from Dawson city, Yukon. Has the government decided to move the seat of government for the new territorial council from Dawson to Whitehorse, and if so, is that being done in consultation with the Yukon territorial council?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest that the hon. member put his question on the order paper.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

COLOMBO PLAN—QUESTION AS TO METHOD OF DEALING WITH PROPOSED LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gordon Graydon (Peel): I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs how the government intends to deal with the legislation envisaged in the speech from the throne in these words:

> Your approval will be sought for an appropriate Canadian participation in the Colombo plan . . .

Will that come down in the supplementary estimates, or by special legislation? How will it be dealt with by the house?

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I think it will be dealt with by an item in the supplementary estimates, on which the discussion may take place.

Mr. Graydon: That is the supplementary estimates—?

Mr. Pearson: That will be coming in May.

Mr. Abbott: The main supplementary estimates.

KOREA

CANADIAN ARMY SPECIAL FORCE—QUESTION AS TO OFFICERS JOINING ACTIVE ARMY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. Pearkes (Nanaimo): I wonder if I could have an answer from the Minister of National Defence to the question I sent him last Wednesday, which I repeated to the parliamentary assistant on Friday, namely: Are officers of the special force being encouraged to join the active army before proceeding to Korea, and if so, what conditions of service are they being offered?

Hon. Brooke Claxton (Minister of National Defence): The answer to the first question is yes; and to the second, they would have the same conditions of service as officers who were offered short-service or regular commissions, with the same opportunity of a continuing career. I should point out that the special force is part of the active force of the Canadian army.

Mr. Brooks: If I may ask a supplementary question, what would be their rights under the veterans charter?

Mr. Claxton: That is receiving consideration.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO RECRUITMENT OF WOMEN IN R.C.A.F. RESERVE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arthur Laing (Vancouver South): I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Defence. I regret not having given him notice, but I think he will be able to answer it. It is in connection with a report which appeared in the Toronto Star of yesterday indicating the initial recruiting of women in the R.C.A.F. reserve, with the ultimate target of two hundred. My question is whether this recruitment will be invited in all parts of Canada.

Hon. Brooke Claxton (Minister of National Defence): There is nothing whatever in the report. The question of when and the conditions under which women may serve in the active and reserve forces is still receiving consideration.

HOUSING

INQUIRY AS TO SUPPLY AND DISTRIBUTION OF NAILS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. K. Fraser (Peterborough West): I should like to ask a question on a subject which is causing grave concern throughout Ontario. This is a matter I have brought up many times previously, but the situation is extremely serious at the present time. Is there any possible chance of the Minister of Trade and Commerce putting into effect some kind of priority so that the retail hardware dealer can get—

Some hon. Members: Nails.

Mr. Fraser: Yes, nails; and so that the man trying to build his own home may be able to obtain one or two pounds of nails?

Mr. Cruickshank: What is he building, a dog house?

Mr. Fraser: I should like to confine it to four-inch, three-and-a-half inch, three-inch and two-inch nails.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member has asked his question.

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I thought I knew the answer before the hon. member began to confine it; I am not sure now. There is a shortage of nails. I believe it is temporary. The production of nails now is very much higher than it was during the last war, and it is hard to believe that the supply, if properly distributed, is not sufficient. There are spotty shortages. I think perhaps that is due to the fact that those with large contracts are buying their full requirements at this time instead of buying as the nails are needed. I am having the matter investigated, and I hope a better distribution can be arranged.

P.E.I. CAR FERRY SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO OPERATION OF SHUTTLE SERVICE BETWEEN BORDEN AND TORMENTINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. Watson MacNaught (Prince): Can the Minister of Transport say whether any decision has been reached concerning the operation of the shuttle service by the Borden-Tormentine ferries this tourist season?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): The hon. member for Kings (Mr. Kickham) and the hon. member for Prince spoke to me about this matter some days ago. While no decision has been reached as to the operation of the shuttle service during the summer months, because of the satisfactory manner in which it operated during the last tourist season I think favourable consideration can be given this year to the operation of a service similar to that which was in effect last year.

HOUSING

VETERANS—BELLWOOD PARK HOMES, LONDON, ONT.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. O. White (Middlesex East): Will the Minister of Resources and Development say whether any change in policy has been put into effect with respect to the occupancy by veterans of the Bellwood Park homes at London, Ontario, operated by Central Mortgage and Housing; and if there has been any change will the minister elaborate upon it?

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Resources and Development): I would have to know what change the hon. member has in mind. There has been no recent change in policy, but there have been changes from time to time. I will need to know more about the hon. member's question before I can answer it.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

PROVISION FOR EARLY DISTRIBUTION OF PAYMENTS AT END OF POOL PERIOD, ETC.

The house resumed, from Monday, March 12, consideration of the motion of Mr. Howe for the second reading of Bill No. 5, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1935, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Ross (Souris), and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Wright.

Mr. J. H. Blackmore (Lethbridge): Last evening before the house adjourned I spoke for approximately fifteen minutes on this matter. I set forth, among other things, what I considered to be certain unavoidable conclusions that must be drawn from the discussions we have had on this topic. From those four conclusions, I would mention again three. First, the farmers raising wheat should have a twenty-five cents per bushel payment on the pool wheat from 1946 to 1950. Second, Britain is in no way obligated to pay any part of that twenty-five cents. Third, the Canadian government, therefore, should pay the twenty-five cents. I shall not review any of the things which I said concerning those matters last night, but I wish to deal briefly with the first conclusion, that Canadian farmers should receive a final payment of twenty-five cents per bushel.

Some evidence on this question is to be gathered from a statement which is attributed to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner). It is to be found in the Western Producer of November 13, 1950. The minister is alleged to have said that he did not believe the farmers in the west were being unreasonable. I do not believe the farmers of the west are being unreasonable, either. In the first place, the farmers went through a disastrous depression between 1929 and 1939. It is said that we all did, and that is quite true. For the farmers, however, the depression was more severe, I would imagine, than it was for most people. In a time of depression a farm tends to accumulate debt. If the farmer is going to recover, he must, in times of semi-prosperity, be free to gain sufficient to discharge that debt and rehabilitate himself.

All during the depression years the farmers were producing and selling wheat below the cost of production. They were looking naturally to the recovery of what might be called good times to re-establish themselves. Consequently, when the war came on and prices bid fair to rise, the farmers had a right to look to the improved prices as a means of rehabilitating their farms. From the farmers' standpoint one of the main difficulties lies at this point. Just as soon as prices bid fair to rise above a certain level, the government intervened and prevented the farmers from profiting from the high prices.

The same thing was done in world war I. There was no disposition before world war II and during the depression for the government to intervene on behalf of the farmer to relieve the impact of those terrible depression years. The farmers were simply sold up. They were expelled from their land, those of them who were not able, somehow or other, to get by. As soon as it appeared that prosperity was about to return and that the farmer would be getting good prices, the government immediately intervened to prevent the farmer from doing so. Now, that is the first important consideration. When I say the farmers have gone through a disastrous depression, that is the general idea which I have in mind.

Last night the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) made a considerable point of the fact that prices were largely stabilized, and markets were stabilized, as a result of the United Kingdom-Canadian wheat agreement. That is true, and it redounds to the credit of the government. Apparently the government had in mind stabilizing both prices and markets, and that is highly commendable. The difficulty which entered at this point was that whereas the farmers had good markets and reasonably good prices, the cost of production and the cost of living were permitted to rise, and that practically eliminated the advantage which the farmers had gained. In a general way the farmers feel that if the government has intervened to prevent them from profiting by the relatively high prices which might have prevailed during the war, and if at the same time the government has permitted freight rates to rise, the cost of machinery to rise and the cost of living to rise, and has seen fit to impose income taxes when the farmer does make a profit, then unquestionably the government has an inescapable responsibility to intervene to see that the farmers are not unduly penalized by the rising costs of production and living.

This principle was simply and clearly enunciated by me and agreed to by the member for Simcoe North (Mr. Ferguson) last night. If the munitions manufacturers were allowed during the war to have contracts under which they obtained the cost of production plus a just profit, then surely the farmers, who are producers of goods just as important as munitions, are not unreasonable when they also ask for a set-up which would give them the cost of production plus a fair profit.

There is a great deal of discussion throughout the country. We read bitter editorials here and there, and we hear radio commentators who, with respect to the problem, generate much more heat than light, confusing the issue and completely overlooking the fundamental basis of the whole contention of the western farmers.

I think it would be well to give just a sketchy indication of the increased costs under which the farmers are labouring and which they are unable to pass on. Before doing so may I point out that if a machine manufacturing company has its costs increased, it adds those costs into the ultimate cost of its product and makes the consumers pay. In the position in which the farmers find themselves, they are unable to do that; and this is an exceedingly important matter to keep in mind. Practically every other producer today in Canada, especially the manufacturer, is in a position to pass on his increased cost to the ultimate consumer. These producers are therefore in a better position than that occupied by the farmer.

Now I come to the farmers' cost: farm machinery, building materials, gasoline, oil and grease, feed, fertilizers, binder twine, seed, hardware. These nine sets of commodities have increased in price between April, 1946 and August 1, 1950, as follows: In April, 1946, the index stood at 127·9; on August 1, 1950, the index stood at 194·3, an increase of 51·9 per cent. These figures I have taken from Labour Research of December, 1950, to January, 1951, page 4, a document which I believe is unchallengeable as to accuracy.

As to farm living costs, the farm living cost index stood at 126·1 in April, 1946. In August, 1950, it stood at 180·7, registering an increase of 54·6 in the index. This increase amounts to 43·3 per cent. These figures again are taken from the Labour Research bulletin or document, December, 1950, to January, 1951.

I now come to freight increases. One could deliver hours of discourse on the increases which have been permitted by this government to be brought into being by the railroads, all militating against the welfare of the western farmer particularly. I shall give only one item to show how seriously these freight rate increases have affected the farmers. During the past two and a half years livestock have had freight rate increases amounting to sixty-four per cent. This figure I draw from the Canadian Federation of Agriculture's submission of February 15, 1951, to the cabinet of Canada.

How do the farmers compare with the rest of the country with respect to their total over-all income? Are the farmers receiving their fair share of the national income? The answer is to be found in these figures. Twenty-five per cent of Canadians are living on the farm, but the income of those living on the farm amounts to only between twelve and fifteen per cent of the income of Canada. These figures quite clearly indicate that farmers as a whole across Canada are receiving just about one-half of what they ought to receive, when they are compared with the rest of the people of Canada as a whole.

Hon. members may say: What has the government to do with that? I would reply: What did the government have to do with it during the war, when they held the prices the farmers could receive down to a certain figure while they allowed the cost of production and distribution to increase? What did the government do about that? Just about everything. What could the farmers do about it? Just about nothing. If the government of a country that means to be well governed does not take care of a group as important as the farmers are, then the country is obviously not going to be on the way to that measure of prosperity which the resources of the country would justify one in expecting the country to enjoy.

Mr. Pouliot: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Blackmore: Gladly.

Mr. Pouliot: Will he be kind enough to tell me whether he finds this bill to be a good one or a bad one; and if so, why?

Mr. Blackmore: Of course I realize that the hon. member is graciously and tactfully directing my attention to the fact that we are discussing another kind of bill entirely. But I must point out to him that all I am doing is following the lead of certain members of the government and members of the party to which he belongs. They have chosen to inject into the whole discussion reference to this 25-cent payment on wheat and I merely follow in line.

Mr. Pouliot: If you follow their lead, you should support them.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Blackmore: I am not so sure about that.

An hon. Member: Which one?

Mr. Fair: To follow you I'm not content until I know which way you went.

Mr. Blackmore: Will the hon. member consider himself answered until I have the opportunity to answer him better?

Mr. Pouliot: Thank you.

Mr. Blackmore: The next question is this. In the increase of prices which we are now suffering from, obviously the costs of food enter as an important determining item. To what extent are increased prices obtained by farmers for such things as milk, butter, potatoes, apples, and the like, and to what extent are those increases they are receiving entering into the over-all increase of costs? The farmers are not getting a higher share in proportion to the increase in the price of such things as milk. In order to go into that question and establish that fact scientifically one would have to indulge in considerable discussion which I think probably it is better that we do not go into at the present time. I think my statement can be supported completely.

There is one other matter which I wish to mention for the benefit of all hon. members who find themselves in the position of the hon. member for Simcoe North. They are saying to themselves, particularly the Ontario and Quebec people: Well, we are the ones who are paying the taxes. This $65 million or $100 million or $200 million, or whatever it is, is all coming out of us, and we cannot see why we should be for ever penalized in order to help out these western farmers.

Let me draw this very important matter to their attention. The best market that Ontario and Quebec have is western Canada. When western Canada prospers, there is full employment in Ontario and Quebec, and good times in Ontario and Quebec. If Ontario and Quebec desire to have prosperity, then they must be in a position, or they must take a position, in which they can ensure prosperity to the farmers of the west. I do not think there is a responsible member from Ontario or Quebec who would not confess the truth of that general statement.

Ontario and Quebec rule Canada. Ontario and Quebec members can outvote the members from all the other eight provinces by a margin of fifty. The result is that if anything goes wrong in this country, the responsibility for that error lies squarely on the shoulders of Ontario and Quebec. All the rest of us put together are unable to influence materially the decisions of the members of those two provinces. Men may try to laugh that off, but the grim reality of the truthfulness of it stands out to everyone who has given any serious thought to the conditions obtaining in this nation.

Therefore, if you are finding that the western farmers are in difficulties because of freight rates, the Ontario and Quebec members are to blame; for they can change the matter. If the western farmers are suffering from inflation, Ontario and Quebec members are the people who are guiding the government whose policies determine whether or not there shall be anything done about inflation. And so on, all through the whole list of the factors which affect the prosperity of Canada.

I say to the Ontario and Quebec members: If you choose to put the western farmers in a position in which they are not prospering, or are in danger of failing, then you must be prepared to pay out of your pockets the money which will tend to keep them from going over the cliff. There is not very much of a successful answer to that that the hon. member for Simcoe North can see. And so I do not hesitate to suggest that the money which is necessary to put the western farmers in a condition in which they can be a good market for Ontario and Quebec should be drawn from the revenues of Canada as a whole.

Let Ontario and Quebec people not imagine for a minute that they are paying all the costs. Income taxes weigh quite as heavily on the other eight provinces as they do on the people of Ontario and Quebec, and perhaps more heavily. The incidence of the tariff on these provinces is far more onerous than it is on the people of Ontario and Quebec, and the incidence of freight rates is far more onerous on the eight other provinces than it is on Ontario and Quebec; this has been brought out time and again. And all the profits which are made by the largest companies, in the main, pour into Ontario and Quebec. Go round the streets of Toronto and look at the great buildings you find there. Go into Montreal and look at the great buildings you find there. You cannot find buildings like them, or comparable with them, anywhere in the other eight provinces. Who has built those great buildings? The farmers of the west and the farmers of the east, of the other eight provinces, have built them. There is just no way of answering that argument. So let the Ontario and Quebec members not suppose for a minute that we are not paying our full share.

In passing may I refer to the amount of wealth which has poured into the Dominion of Canada as a whole as a result of the activities of the western farmers during the past years through wheat alone. Just read the speeches of certain hon. members. Read the speech of the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Fair) who has set forth the amount of wheat that in world war II has been sold, and the amount that was received for it. All that money came into Canada to help to increase the prosperity of Ontario and Quebec as well as the other eight provinces. There is much wealth to be obtained from the eight other provinces of Canada if Ontario and Quebec will so manage that they can produce to their optimum.

I think I will say no more at the present time, Mr. Speaker, in respect of the justification for the request of the western farmers that there should be money appropriated to make up to them for the money which was taken out of their pockets as a result of the price fixing which prevailed during the war.

Having discussed that matter, I desire to proceed to the important question of the responsibility, or the possible responsibility, of Britain for any share of that 25 cents. I see that my time is exhausted. I shall go on with that subject at the next available opportunity.

Mr. J. J. Smith (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat said last evening as recorded at page 1181 of Hansard:

> I am going to give the men who are involved a chance to clear their names before this house and before the Canadian people.

In his remarks last night he referred to me. I want to assure the hon. gentleman, the house and the people of Canada, that so far as I am concerned my name is quite clear. Since he quoted a part from Hansard—I have no objection to that—I would ask him and others, including the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Thatcher), at least to use the whole sentence and not just part of it.

Mr. Rene N. Jutras (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I did not speak on this very important question in the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, because I felt at the time that since the question was under discussion between the two governments some of the things I might have said might have hindered in some way rather than helped the negotiations going on between the two governments. Therefore at that time, although I was very anxious to speak on the matter, I chose not to do so. I did, however, outside the house and in whatever way I knew, advocate in every possible way a final payment of twelve cents. Since that time the decision of the government has been announced, and the discussion has been going on for a few days in this house.

In view of the confusing criticisms that have come from the opposition benches since the debate has started, and particularly in view of the "I told you so" attitude of many hon. members of the opposition, I thought I owed it to my constituents, the people I represent in this house, to state my view and indirectly the majority of the views of the people in my constituency.

Before I go on I should like to first establish the position taken by the various parties in this house at the time this agreement was signed. I think it is important, particularly in view of the argument that has been put forward since then.

Those who were here at the time the agreement was presented to the house will recall that members of all parties and from all provinces raised no objection to the agreement being signed by the Canadian government. I know that since then members of the official opposition have said that they did not support the agreement, and for that reason I should like to place on the record the exact words of the then leader of the opposition, Mr. John Bracken, when he spoke on that occasion.* I quote from page 4811 of Hansard of August 14, 1946, as follows:

> I rise at this time to criticize the government's wheat policy. But before doing so, let me say this, with respect to the United Kingdom wheat agreement. Any agreement such as this which tends to level out the inequalities, and the wide fluctuations of prices in the past, is a step in the right direction. Even this agreement is better than no agreement at all; because, as the Minister of Agriculture pointed out, those of us who went through the price depression following the last war know the danger of proceeding without some kind of plan to try to avoid wide fluctuations in prices.

Those are the words of the then leader of the official opposition, uttered at the time the agreement was under discussion. Surely those words would not lead one to the conclusion that that party did not support the agreement. Naturally there was some criticism of the agreement during the debate, but I submit, and I think the record bears me out, that the criticism was as to the details while the principle of the agreement as such was supported by that party.

I think it is a good thing to remind hon. members of the opposition, and particularly the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross), who told us how Mr. Bracken had foreseen what was going to happen in the years to come, just what happened at that time. I remember quite well the discussion that took place. It hinged on the possibility of prices going down. Nowhere on the record will there be found any discussion as to the price going up. So far as I can see, no one in the house, except the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), foresaw the possibility of any advance in price.

The main argument at that time against the agreement was that it would hinder our trade, that we would have less trade. The record shows that the United Kingdom wheat agreement did not bring about that effect in any way. I would point out that as a result of this agreement our average sales of wheat to the United Kingdom increased from 90 million bushels per year in the fifteen years preceding the agreement to 150 million bushels per year during the five years of the agreement. So far as trading and the sale of wheat was concerned, the agreement definitely helped the situation. Last night the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) put on the record reasons to support that contention. It is rather late for any member of the official opposition to advance the contention that his party did not support the agreement at the time.

Now we come to another party in the house, the C.C.F. When the agreement was presented to the house they supported it with both hands. But, strange as it may seem, since the agreement has been concluded they have been endeavouring to put up a big show in the house, with all the noise possible, in an effort to excuse their socialist friends in England. They have virtually refused to accept the statements of the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and even of the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent). In their enthusiasm they have completely ignored the case of the western farmer. Not one single C.C.F. member has referred to that phase of the case.

This is not unusual, because we know from experience that our C.C.F. friends have the habit of giving lip service to larger and larger payments to western agriculture, and then every time the government makes a payment to the farmers you never see at any other time such a lot of disappointed people in the house. It is always apparent on their faces every time the government announces a payment. Invariably they deprecate the payment to the farmers. I do not think any of them will deny that statement, because it is so obvious to all who have been in this house.

An hon. Member: Because it is too small.

Mr. Jutras: If my hon. friend wants proof, I can easily give it to him, and I would not need to go back many years to show how they appeared to be disappointed that too large a payment was paid to the farmers.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Jutras: Just listen for a minute. I do not need to go back very far. I need only to go back earlier in this debate and turn to Hansard of last Friday.

An hon. Member: What page?

Mr. Jutras: You will get it soon enough. Strange as it may seem, this did not come from a C.C.F. member who was not wise to what was going on. As a matter of fact it came from the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Wright). I take it that the hon. member is the official critic of the C.C.F. when it comes to agriculture. The fact that he was the first one to take up the discussion of this subject indicates that he has a senior status in the C.C.F. party.

When the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Thatcher) was speaking the other night—he should remember it—he referred to the payment of 8·3 cents, and said that more should be paid. Then the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank) interjected and said that we do not buy votes. Then the hon. member for Melfort said: What about the twenty cents interim payment?

The hon. member should have been the last to infer that the twenty cents payment was made for the buying of votes. He should know as well as anyone in this house that that twenty-cent payment did not come from the taxpayers of this country. That twenty-cent payment came from money of the farmers themselves. The only thing that the government was doing was to take twenty cents that the farmers had accumulated in the pool and distribute it to them. The hon. member for Melfort was ready to insinuate that that was buying votes, when it was not even public money.

Mr. Wright: You led the farmers to believe that there would be a further payment.

Mr. Jutras: I know you are on record and I can turn to previous debates where you have made the same contention. You were quiet for a while. We never heard about it for quite a while. Then apparently in the heat of your enthusiasm for your friends across the seas you forgot yourself and interjected the remark: What about the twenty-cent interim payment? As I said, that is what happened, and if that is not deprecating a payment made to farmers, I do not know what is. It illustrates exactly the attitude of our C.C.F. friends in Saskatchewan.

Last night, after the Minister of Trade and Commerce made his speech, the leader of the C.C.F. party, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell), rose to his feet and shifted the grounds of the argument once more. Frankly I must say that I enjoyed very much the exhibition of the sleight of reasoning that the leader of the C.C.F. gave us last night. As a matter of fact he came out with a completely new interpretation of the "have regard to" clause. What he tried to say, what he tried to insinuate was that the "have regard to" clause was related to the cost of living. He even went so far as to say that he had argued that point at the time the debate on the agreement as such took place. Of course no member of the C.C.F. party, including their leader, ever argued that point. What they did was to criticize the agreement because it was not related to the cost of living.

There may be some point in that argument but that is exactly what they did at the time. They criticized it very severely. How can they possibly come into the house now and say that it did take the cost of living into consideration? If it did at that time, why did they criticize the agreement so vehemently? The two just do not add up. The leader of the C.C.F. was trying to shift the basis of the argument, and I notice that some of his followers have tried to do the same thing. Having very neatly tied the agreement to the cost of living, he proceeded to say there was a real obligation, but the obligation attached only to the Canadian government.

I submit that there is or is not an obligation. If there is an obligation, there are two signatories to it. That being so, it applies to both of them, or else there is no obligation on the part of either of them so far as the agreement is concerned. I submit that the leader of the C.C.F. party cannot have it both ways.

That leads us to the contract itself. It is an admitted fact that all parties in this house —as a matter of fact, all members of the house from all provinces across Canada— gave approval, either directly or otherwise, to the agreement being signed by the Canadian government on behalf of the farmers. Last night the Minister of Trade and Commerce made an excellent speech indeed. I am very happy that he made the statement he did last night. It was a good statement. It did two things. It brought together all the statements he had made previously in the house. Let me interject once again that for those listening to the Minister of Trade and Commerce last night there was nothing new. There was nothing that he had not said and repeated at least four times in the course of the debate. He merely gathered it all together into one statement.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce did go further; he brought out exactly what the United Kingdom wheat agreement had meant to the agricultural economy of western Canada over the last five years; and I must say he made an excellent job of showing the value of the agreement. Of course we from western Canada are most grateful to the Minister of Trade and Commerce for having made that statement. The Minister of Trade and Commerce is well known throughout Canada. He is well known out west. His ability as a businessman, as an administrator, and in public affairs, is also common knowledge in the three prairie provinces. Anybody who would sit back and ignore the advice of such a man would indeed be very foolish, and the farmers of western Canada are not that foolish.

Mr. Fraser: Did he give any advice to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner)?

Mr. Jutras: The farmers appreciate very much what has been said. Now we come to the contract itself. I must admit that I could not agree with the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Thatcher), for instance, who contended that the "have regard to" clause was a mysterious clause. To me the contract appeared to be very simple, and I believe that is the general impression that existed among the great majority of the farmers of the west. To me it is merely an ordinary open contract. A great many people are scandalized at our having signed an open contract. Nowadays—and this applied particularly to the period right after the last war—who can get a closed contract for anything? Only on a very few things would anybody offer a closed contract. I know from personal experience that when I built a house I could not get a closed contract. The contractor agreed to a set price to build the house, but there was a "have regard to" clause in the contract which said that if the price of lumber or other materials went up I would have to pay the difference. Naturally prices did go up and I had to pay the difference. That was just an ordinary "have regard to" clause.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the very same thing was done with respect to the wheat agreement, except for one important point, that we did not name what percentage of the increase we would absorb or what percentage of the increase we would require the United Kingdom government to pay. The determination of the amount was left to the good will of the two countries, and you know that is something which is very hard to enforce. We recognized that, and I agree with the Minister of Trade and Commerce that, so far as the whole contract is concerned, legally the United Kingdom is quite right in trying to maintain the position that it has no further payment to make. I am not suggesting at this time that they broke the contract or that they are legally at fault.

However, if hon. members review the five years of the agreement I think they will be impressed by the fact that the farmers of western Canada have a real contention. What happened? When the agreement was signed it was for a period of five years, and the price in the first three years was $1.55. Then comes the "have regard to" clause, which said that if prices went up or down the price to be set in 1948 would be adjusted accordingly. They did not say the price would be $2. That is what a lot of people forget. If the agreement had said that for the first three years the price would be $1.55 and for the next two years $2, then there would not have been any discussion about it, and the farmers would not have asked for more money. It would have been a closed contract, and on that basis that would have been that; but there was the "have regard to" clause. So in 1948, when the price of wheat was to be arrived at, there was a discussion between the two governments. At that time, when they came to the decision that they would pay $2 for 1948, a statement was issued. That was not just by the Canadian government or the British government; it was a joint statement by the two governments which said they were paying $2, and that regard would be had in fixing later prices. That statement was quite clear; it has been put on the record two or three times.

When the next year rolled around there was another discussion between the two governments; again a joint statement was issued to the effect that the settlement would come in the middle of 1950, which would be at the end of the crop year. So, Mr. Speaker, is it any wonder the farmers of western Canada were led to believe that this clause meant something, after repeated statements, not only by responsible ministers of this government but by responsible ministers of the Labour government in Great Britain? Those statements always referred to the fact that a settlement would be made at the end of the five year period. Consequently the farmers of western Canada, and all their organizations, were led to believe that a settlement would be made and something would be forthcoming.

Mr. Carroll: What interpretation was placed upon the have regard clause which makes it necessary now for the dominion government to pay another $65 million?

Mr. Jutras: I am coming to that. I have just established that the joint statements by the responsible ministers concerned led the farmers to believe they would have a settlement. Now I submit that if on technical or legal grounds, at the end of the five year period, after all the wheat had been disposed of, both governments had suddenly decided that while there might be something in our claim still they were not tied down legally, it would have been a most unfortunate thing for a responsible government to do. Certainly I think it would have been breaking faith with a large section of our people who rightly or wrongly believed that a settlement would be forthcoming. To my mind there is no legal indebtedness, but there is a very real obligation, call it a moral obligation if you will or a matter of keeping faith, because of the publicity and the whole process that took place during those five years.

I am proud indeed that in spite of what has transpired the Canadian government has seen fit to recognize that moral obligation to a very large section of western Canada. It would have been a sorry thing if the government had completely ignored their plight. Just on this point I should like to refer to a paragraph in the Ottawa Journal of Saturday, March 10, which disturbed me considerably. It refers to this contract and offers more or less the same arguments I have presented, though in a slightly different way. Then it comes to this conclusion:

> Therefore, to sum up, it is an evil thing for the Canadian government to be taking $65 million out of the Canadian treasury—which in fact it is doing—to hand over to Canadian farmers—and especially evil when, doing this, they compound the wrong by saying they are doing it because Britain will not honour an obligation.

After reviewing the events as they took place, after reviewing all the statements that were made, I think it would have been a very evil thing if a responsible government had completely ignored those statements or even stood on perfectly sound legal and technical grounds in order to break faith with the people. After all, certain things are written and certain things are not, but they are all equally binding. In my opinion it was a question of keeping faith, and I am proud indeed that even at the cost of $65 million to the taxpayers of the country, this government recognized that obligation. The farmers of Canada have always trusted a Liberal government, and that fact had a great deal to do with this agreement being signed. The farmers might not have supported such an agreement but for that trust. They knew this administration would never break faith with them. The proof of the pudding is in the eating, and they had that trust as a result of what has taken place over the last twenty years.

Well, now, what does it mean to the taxpayers? In spite of the fact that $65 million is to be taken out of the treasury I submit that this is still the best bargain the taxpayers have had in our whole history as a nation. I do not want to go into great detail, but let us look at the subsidy angle in the matter of wheat. It has been pointed out already, and we all know, that from March 1945 to February 1947, though we were selling wheat to Great Britain at the reduced price of $1.55 and selling it at much higher prices outside the agreement, we were still bound to sell our wheat for Canadian consumption at $1.25. Well, simple arithmetic shows that this price meant a loss of 30 cents a bushel, and I believe some 160 million bushels of wheat were sold at that loss. If you take $48 million lost to the farmers at that time, the remainder amounts to only a cent or a cent and a quarter, which is all we have to pay in order to keep faith with our people. So this contribution does not mean such a loss to the taxpayer. It has been made up to him many times by the fact that he obtained wheat at this price.

Now I come to the amendment proposed by the official opposition moved by the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross), and the subamendment moved by the C.C.F. party. I very much regret the amendment of the opposition because it is quite clear, not only from the amendment but from at least the great majority of the speeches coming from the Conservative side, that the whole idea behind the amendment is to rid the country of any bulk trading, any state trading, any long-range agreements. That is quite clear; it is so stated in the amendment, the last sentence of which reads:

—and on the government's mishandling of the sale of wheat and other grains covered by the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

Now, this is a double condemnation, where I note that it includes the handling of coarse grains, because those were the only grains that were not handled by the Canadian wheat board. Mr. Speaker, this is definitely not the view of organized agriculture in the western provinces, because there is a great demand that coarse grains be handled by the Canadian wheat board. The day before yesterday I received a resolution from an organization in my constituency asking that this be not changed in any way, shape or form.

After this amendment was moved by the member for Souris (Mr. Ross) that the government be censured for its mishandling of the sale of wheat and other grain, the member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) made a lengthy but interesting speech with his usual race track showmanship. What point did he drive home? All the way through his speech the point he sought to make was to get rid of this board and go back to the open market. I could turn to the remarks of the member for Calgary East (Mr. Harkness) who propounded this view quite strongly. Then, I could as a matter of fact—

Mr. Ross (Souris): Would the hon. member quote the page in Hansard where the member for Dufferin-Simcoe advocated going back to the open market?

Mr. Jutras: I said that the member for Dufferin-Simcoe had made it clear that he was going to take advantage of this difference of opinion to get rid of such bulk or long-term agreements handled by the government. There is only one alternative.

Mr. Ross (Souris): The hon. member mentioned the open market; will he quote the page in Hansard where the member used those words?

Mr. Jutras: I could very easily but the member can read Hansard as well as I can.

Mr. Ross (Souris): I believe if any member makes such a statement he should quote the page in Hansard.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member can refer to a speech without being obliged to quote the page number.

Mr. Ross (Souris): A member is not supposed to make false statements.

Mr. Jutras: I said he was anxious to get rid of long-term agreements.

Mr. Ross (Souris): You said open trading.

Mr. Jutras: I am saying that the only alternative is the open market. I believe that has been the contention of most members of the official opposition, and to all intents and purposes the C.C.F. party seems to have fallen in line with it. Strange as it may seem, they are now very good bedfellows on the question of this agreement. I submit that both amendments could be dangerous in turning the clock backwards. I believe that is something organized agriculture does not want to see happen at this time. I should like to quote briefly from an editorial which appeared in the Manitoba Co-Operator, which is published weekly by the Manitoba pool elevators. After the announcement was made concerning the $65 million and the $48 million, this newspaper dealt with the criticism being offered in its issue of March 8. The editorial reads in part as follows:

The wheat board, with whatever faults it may have, as well as the Canada-U.K. agreement, and the international wheat agreement, with their so-called drawbacks, have at least provided the producer with a guaranteed price, with all receiving the maximum price under the wheat board pooling operation.

Farther down it reads:

Farmers should realize, particularly the younger men, that in thirty-two crop years, on the Winnipeg grain exchange, only on two occasions did the high price for the year exceed the $1.83 which is the final payment under the five-year pool. And only in four years did the average price exceed $1.50.

These statements appeared in the Manitoba Co-Operator, as I said, of March 8. I should like to stress that point, and put on the record the annual message of the president of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, Mr. Hannam, in January of this year. Looking over the trend, he had this to say:

The general trend of our Canadian farm program has been to try to eliminate as much as possible of the risk and gamble with which agriculture has been plagued in the past, and replace them with some reasonable measure of stability and security on a long-term basis. The risks, gamble, and resulting insecurity in agriculture have been due to frost, hail and drought; to weeds, pests, blight and disease; and to the uncertainties of widely fluctuating prices both domestically and in world markets.

Extraordinary progress has been made in moving towards this goal even though it is difficult for some to appraise the security achieved. They should compare it with the insecurity of former years, rather than with occasional temporary gains of some who are outside the program. Our enemies, of course, play up such temporary gains when they have a chance to do so, in the hope that they can undermine the long-term stable features of this program and have agriculture revert to a so-called open competitive market with its more lucrative benefits for themselves.

That our producers have not fallen for such bait is a tribute to their foresight and strength of purpose.

I only quote these paragraphs, Mr. Speaker, to indicate it is still the wish of farmers to carry on along the lines they adopted years ago. Anyone in this house who moves an amendment such as the amendment moved by the member for Souris is not doing a service to organized agriculture in the west, because it may undermine some of the work done so far. This is particularly true if the amendment is related to a bill dealing with the wheat board, because although it does not come into operation for some time, if we allow any group in this house to sap the strength of the Canadian wheat board, which is so popular with western farmers, it may well be the end of the Canadian wheat board. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I cannot possibly associate myself with either of these amendments. If anyone is going to lynch the wheat board, I am not going to be a member of the posse.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Good old schoolteacher. Is the hon. member a member of the pool?

Mr. H. O. White (Middlesex East): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with considerable interest to the opinions expressed by the various members on this wheat question. Down through the years that I have been here I suppose more time has been spent discussing the marketing of wheat than any other subject which comes before the house. Before I discuss some of the phases of the problem that are uppermost in the minds of the people I have the honour to represent, I should like to mention to the house—I regret that the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) is not in his seat at the moment—that last Wednesday the Prime Minister visited London, Ontario. While there he was given an honorary degree by the university of Western Ontario, which is situated in my riding. He also took time to visit the seed fair which was in progress in that city, put on by the Middlesex crop and seed improvement association, and which is the outstanding seed fair in the Dominion of Canada. I am sure that he enjoyed his visit both to the university and to the seed fair.

Down through the years we have more or less had it laid down that, for the sake of good government, it would be necessary to have cabinet solidarity. But now we find the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) replying to a question of the hon. member for Brant-Wentworth (Mr. Charlton) asking if the same treatment as is proposed for the western wheat grower was going to be extended to the eastern farmer; and the answer was no. Then yesterday we heard the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) saying that the wheat deal was a closed book, that both Britain and Canada have fulfilled their agreements under it and there was nothing more to it. Then we heard that this "have regard to" clause was not being honoured. So we find that the cabinet is more or less split over this question. What are the people back home going to believe? What do they think about it?

If the Minister of Trade and Commerce were in his seat I think he would recall that last fall, at the time of the harvesting of the winter wheat in Ontario, a meeting was held in the city of Chatham, and at that time the government refused to implement the Agricultural Prices Support Act and support the price of winter wheat at that time. I said then, and I will say it again, that so far as the Agricultural Prices Support Act has been operative in this country, it was put on the statute books for one purpose and for one purpose only, namely to win two elections. As far as we are concerned, to date it has not amounted to a hill of beans. Personally I am interested in the production of honey. The attempt to support the price of honey was an ill-advised scheme and it has depressed the price of honey for the next two years instead of helping it. Whoever was the "brains" back of it should certainly revise his thinking a little bit, because it was the worst scheme I have ever seen in operation.

During this session the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) and I entered into a little argument over a statement regarding the production of sugar. A statement was made in Chatham and then another statement was made in the house. It seems to me that they use one argument in the country, as it suits the country, and then come into the house and correct that. Those things have been going on. We find parliamentary assistants to the ministers flying kites and then having the statements repudiated. Where are we heading with all this?

Last summer a meeting was held in Stratford, Ontario, with regard to the marketing of cheese.

An hon. Member: Where is cheese today?

Mr. White (Middlesex East): After the government got out, the price went up. The requisitioning of cheese cost the cheese producers of the province of Ontario many thousands of dollars. One factory—and I will mention the name of it, Dorchester Union—from May to December 31, 1950, lost $4,100 because of government monkeying in cheese; but the government are not going to come across with $65 million to help the Ontario wheat producer, the cheese producer, the bacon producer or any other producers. Yet they are expecting not only the farmers but the consumers in the cities, who are already harassed by high taxes, to put their hands down in their pockets and help support this gamble—I will say that word again, gamble —on the part of the government with regard to Canadian wheat. The only trouble is that they gambled and lost. Now they want the taxpayers to become a part of it. If I gamble and lose, nobody comes to my rescue.

Mr. Blackmore: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. White (Middlesex East): Certainly.

Mr. Blackmore: Would he not think it would be advisable for his province to come seeking reimbursement such as he indicates they ought to have in respect to cheese and other commodities? If they are entitled to it, why do they not come and seek it?

Mr. White (Middlesex East): Since when has the province of Alberta come to the rescue of any of the eastern provinces? Not in my recollection.

Mr. Blackmore: Mr. Speaker, I am not asking the hon. gentleman about the western farmers. I am asking why he does not come seeking assistance for the eastern farmers?

Mr. White (Middlesex East): I answered that question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Dewar: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. White (Middlesex East): No.

Mr Fraser: He has the floor. Let him finish.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Dewar: I was wondering if the hon. member wants us to do away with the subsidy we paid last year?

Mr. White (Middlesex East): You fellows got into this trouble, and you are going to get out of it.

Mr. Dewar: You want the government to do away with the subsidy, do you?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Middlesex East has the floor.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): The government arrived at a figure of $65 million. What relation that has to the amount that may be owing or otherwise to the western wheat producer is more than I can understand.

An hon. Member: Do not spank them too hard.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): It has been suggested that it is the unused balance of the loan to Britain of $1,250 million, that it was the $65 million that was remaining. What bearing that has on the question I fail to understand. You might just as well say that it is 65 million miles from here to one of the planets and arrive at the same figure. It has not any bearing whatever on the question before us; but apparently it was the best figure that they were able to dig out of the bag. As was said by the eastern farmer to whom I was talking last week end when I was home, the truth of the matter is this. They have gambled and lost. The people of the west voted for this; this is what they voted for. Now that they are reaping the results of it, they do not like it, and they want somebody else to participate in it.

Mr. Johnston: Are you against paying the $65 million.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): I am coming to that. I will look after my riding; you look after yours.

Mr. Johnston: Oh, you are just looking after your riding? We were looking after all of Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): It is found that trading in farm commodities is purely and simply a gamble, and one that has been lost. It is about time that we arrived at some policy so that we know where we are going to go. The farmers in eastern Canada last year had their cheese requisitioned at a price many cents below the price they could have obtained, but they are not going to be compensated now. The Prime Minister has said so. None of the other producers of farm commodities are likely to be compensated.

Mr. Thatcher: How about your hog producers?

Mr. White (Middlesex East): If the railway workers make a deal, they honour it. Then when the contract has expired, they draw up another one based on the conditions existing at that time. But you do not go digging down into the taxpayer's pocket and say: We will give them some more now. I think we shall have to arrive at some different policy altogether.

Mr. J. I. Hetland (Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, in rising today I want to take part in this debate because I am a farmer and I represent a farming constituency. But I also became slightly hot under the collar here on Friday on reading the speech made by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Thatcher). It surprised me a great deal, because I thought he was a fine fellow; but his attacks—

An hon. Member: What a mistake.

Mr. Hetland: I did not think he would stoop that low, and make statements when he did not know whether they were true or not. Attacks of this kind to me in this house are disgusting, to say the least. He attacked all the western Liberals. He said that we made broad commitments or broad statements in our 1949 election campaign, where we said that all the farmers expected a good payment on the five-year pool. That is a falsehood so far as I am concerned. I never made any statements of that kind. I want the hon. member to know that. I think I shall quit this subject now. I was pretty mad yesterday, and if I had got the floor yesterday I would have said more.

Mr. Thatcher: Keep going.

Mr. Hetland: Before I go on with my main speech I should like to say this. The hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Wright) always seems to take a delight in bringing up the last 20-cent payment on wheat in the 1949 crop year. This was brought up in the agriculture committee, and I think the hon. member knows what the wheat board said. I should like to bring this out, because a lot of people out west have not had the actual facts. It has to do with the $5 million deficit. The wheat board did not have quite enough money, and it was explained in this way. They had lent money to the flax account. This is what the hon. member for Melfort said:

Mr. Wright: I had not finished yet. I am more muddled than when we started, Mr. Minister.

Mr. Argue: Give me the page.

Mr. Hetland: Page 104. I will attend to you afterwards. I continue:

Right Hon. Mr. Howe: The board reported that they could safely pay 20 cents a bushel. They paid it out and the comptroller has told you that they did not have to borrow any money to make the payment.

Mr. Wright: I do not think that is right.

Right Hon. Mr. Howe: Is that a fact?

The minister turned to Mr. Earl of the wheat board and he said:

Right Hon. Mr. Howe: Is that a fact?

Mr. Earl: That is correct.

Mr. Wright: Did you not have to borrow any money at all to make the payment on wheat? Because you just took the money out of the flax and coarse grain accounts. It was not due you as a payment on wheat at all?

Mr. Earl: It was a repayment of wheat money that had been loaned to government account for financing purposes.

It went on for a while. I wanted a little more explanation of this $5 million so I asked the wheat board these questions:

Q. I am not quite satisfied with this deficit of $5 million. Where is that going to be charged? Is it going to be charged to the wheat account or to the coarse grain account?

A. There is no deficit.

[Mr. Hetland.]

The hon. member for Melfort knows of this, but I am bringing it out so that I will get it on the record. I continue:

Q. But there is a deficit here on the pool account.

A. It has nothing to do with the coarse grain account.

Q. You took some money to buy flax, for example?

A. We bought flax on the government's account. Now, ordinarily, the government would send us a cheque. They eventually did so; but they did not send us a cheque at the time; and we had a considerable amount of money on hand.

Q. The farmers' money?

A. The farmers' money.

Q. Wheat money?

A. So we loaned this money in our own organization to the government and we charged them bank interest. That, to my mind, in the words of a layman, is all that there was to the transaction.

Q. That was good business?

A. I think it was.

I think that should settle that 20-cent problem.

Coming back to this wheat payment, or what is added on to the five-year pool, I will admit to you, Mr. Speaker, that I was rather disappointed with the 8·3 cents per bushel, because I had expected around 12 cents. I felt that $100 million spent by this country would be very well spent on the western wheat growers, because they think they had something coming on this "have regard to" clause.

I have never asked at any time for 25 cents. The C.C.F. party has always tried to tell us that they work for the common man. In asking for the 25-cent payment on 1,400 million bushels it will amount to $350 million. Where would the government get that money? They could not wave a magic wand and pull it out of the air. They would have to tax every man, woman and child in this country, and they talk about the standard of living.

If the government were to put it on taxes what about the old age pensioners and the people who are living on fixed incomes? Would not that lower their standard of living? I am just asking a fair question. If the government should decide to pay this 25 cents I certainly am not going to refuse it, because it would be very nice to me as a farmer, and I know that my constituents would be very well pleased to get it.

Mr. Brooks: Where are they getting the $65 million, if not from all the people of Canada?

Mr. Hetland: Would it not be worse if we were getting $350 million?

Mr. Brooks: That is not the point.

Mr. Hetland: I am not arguing that. I am very well pleased, and tickled to death that we are getting $65 million.

Mr. Fraser: The hon. member asked, would it not be worse? Does he consider the $65 million bad?

Mr. Hetland: I do not get your point. Some members of the opposition would say that they would not have to tax the common man because the old age pensioners pay no income tax; but they certainly would have to tax businesses and corporations, they would say. Well, in setting the prices for their commodities business people take in all the expenses. I say to the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Thatcher) I am sure that whenever he sets the price on an article in his chain stores he certainly adds all the taxes.

Mr. Laing: Does he pay any?

Mr. Boucher: Production for use, not profit.

Mr. Hetland: I presume he does because the hardware is a pretty fair business at the present time.

Mr. Pouliot: Does he reduce prices on Saturday nights?

Mr. Hetland: I do not think we should criticize the wheat agreement too much. I am a farmer, and when this wheat agreement was made I certainly agreed with it. I am concerned about selling wheat. We can never expect any government that makes an agreement with another government to be able to see ahead four or five years. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) made a good deal.

Mr. Brooks: Why pay more now?

Mr. Hetland: As the Minister of Trade and Commerce said yesterday, I do not believe that he would make the same deal today as he made then, but at the same time I am satisfied that he did his best. Anybody who enters into an agreement of any kind knows that it takes two to make an agreement and one person is bound to get the better end of the deal. If we farmers get a little less I think we should take it and realize that we should look more to the future than to the past, because we certainly want stability and we want good relationships with England.

If we attack the British government—our socialist friends have been trying to whitewash the socialist government in England. That is all right; but I still believe they have a little responsibility in this "have regard to" clause. I believe that can be easily proven by re-opening the discussion. That does not mean that the English people are to blame and we should remember that.

Mr. Brooks: You had better read again the speech yesterday of the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Hetland: I have read it. I was farming in 1929 when wheat was around $1.60 and I can remember that England stopped buying wheat from us because they claimed the pools and the grain trade were holding up the price. I was told, and I believe it is true, that the bread wagons over there carried notices stating that they were buying no Canadian wheat. There was considerable ill-feeling and we do not want to have that again.

Yesterday the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) tried to leave the impression that the government was not getting as good a price as the United States price. He knows very well why we were not getting the United States price, and this was brought out last year in the agriculture committee. I should like to repeat one of the reasons that were given why we were not getting that price. The hon. member for Assiniboia was questioning Mr. McIvor of the wheat board, and I quote from page 121 of the proceedings:

Q. Then, a question following that one—why the change? Why two or three years ago was our class II wheat being sold at a premium and why today is it being sold at a price lower than American prices?

A. Well, we have wheat to sell and we are selling it under a very considerable handicap. The Americans are providing wheat—I use the word "providing" because I think that is the correct word—for Germany and Japan and Korea, which are areas of their responsibility, and for other areas of responsibility. That wheat, in many instances, is bought by the American army from the commodity credit corporation. Of the internal arrangements existing in Germany, Japan and Korea, I do not know.

We have wheat to sell and we are selling it at the best price we can get, but, unfortunately, it is not as high as the American price. However, we are trying to get into these markets with this wheat and hold our position in the world export trade.

Q. I do not want to leave the impression that I am criticizing the board for having done that.

A. Well, that is the reason.

Q. The reason is that the Americans have become more competitive for the reasons you have given.

A. Now, I will give you an example of the type of competition that we have been up against in regard to the sale of wheat. We offered three cargoes of wheat to a prominent buyer, and American wheat was sold to that buyer at 46 cents a bushel higher than Canadian wheat, and it was class II wheat.

The hon. member for Assiniboia quit then. Why? For political purposes and for no other reason.

Mr. Argue: Quit what?

Mr. Hetland: You quit your statement there.

Mr. Argue: I was not quoting from a statement at all.

Mr. Hetland: It does not make any difference, you left that impression. I will finish:

> Now, nobody is going to pay 46 cents a bushel higher if they have to put cash on the line. That is reasonable to assume.

It puts a little different light on the subject. I am going to stop picking out hon. members for criticism because when I do that I hate myself at night. I should like to deal now with our food problems. I am concerned about the problems that face our producers and I am not referring just to those in the west but rather to those all over Canada.

Last fall I met an aged couple who were farming in southern Ontario and who told me that they got up at three-thirty in the morning to milk sixteen cows by hand in order to have the milk out at the road by six-thirty. They had raised two sons and a daughter. The sons had left the farm to get good positions in the city and the daughter had left to get married.

Before I go any further let me say that not long ago I met an official of a company here and he told me that they were glad every time they could get a farmer's son to come to work. He said that they always found that they gave a good honest day's work and were certainly not agitators. The tendency is for farm boys to leave the farm. There is no unemployment insurance, no two or three weeks' vacation with pay, no overtime, no sick leave and no pensions for farm workers.

This aged couple told me that they had tried several times to obtain help but they could not. I asked them why they did not retire. They told me that the farm had been in the man's possession all his life and had belonged to his father and there was a certain sentimental value attached to it. They were planning on retiring next year and he was fattening up his cows with the idea of selling them as beef. This is happening all over. I should like to quote an article from a Saskatoon paper under date of March 12 as follows:

> Milk will become extremely scarce and so will butter unless current milk production declines are reversed, John S. Turnbull said today. The president of the national dairy council said the high price of beef is drawing milk-producing cows from farms and the number of dairy cows on Canadian farms now is the lowest in twenty years.

I do not think it is only the high price being paid for beef that is drawing away the dairy cows, I think the main reason is the labour situation. I am not an alarmist. I have always been told that I am an optimist. I believe that the union leaders of this country and the United States should not go too far in their demands for shorter hours and higher wages when production is needed so badly. Canadians in all parts of Canada must work together as a team in order to get a high standard of living and get the most out of life.

Mr. J. L. Gibson (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I am going to depart from my general practice in speaking in the house and take part in a debate dealing with a subject about which I do not know a great deal, namely, wheat. However, I think I know something of what $65 million means to the Canadian taxpayers and as a result I feel justified in making an exception in this particular case.

To start with, I do not think that anyone who has given much consideration to the amendments before us will give them more than a passing thought as far as support is concerned. I am rather surprised that either the Progressive Conservatives or the C.C.F. would put such amendments before the house. One word in the amendment of the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross) that strikes me particularly is the word "mishandling". I believe that the Canadian people generally will think that is hardly a fair way to value the work that has been done on this wheat agreement by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner).

Mr. Ross (Souris): I could have made it a little worse.

Mr. Gibson: After listening to the speech of the Minister of Trade and Commerce last night. I think the prairie farmers have been fortunate in having some of the best brains in Canada looking after the business for them. I would also point out to them that their counsel has been employed at the expense of the Canadian taxpayers. The C.C.F. amendment of course is what one would expect. It is ridiculous. When a member of the House of Commons will have such an utter disregard of his responsibilities to all the taxpayers of Canada as to suggest that we should dip into our treasury and make a payment of $335 million under the wheat agreement, it indicates to me the small amount of confidence that the Canadian people could place in members of that party.

Mr. Cruickshank: Especially the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Thatcher).

Mr. Gibson: I am sure that every member of the House of Commons is particularly pleased to have seen a rise in the living standards of the prairie people over past years and a reduction in the number of farm mortgages. I am glad that we were able to assist them during the disastrous thirties when they had a very tough time.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Selling them cheap lumber.

Mr. Gibson: Yes, they got their lumber very cheaply at that time. My friend sometimes forgets that we had a hard time in British Columbia too in the thirties. We did not put on such a poor mouth about it. As a matter of fact I think we toughed it out a little better on our own. I think my friend will probably concede that. As I say, we were glad to assist them when times were tough in the thirties. We are still glad to assist them now through the medium of the dominion-provincial tax agreements. I think they are getting a pretty good deal. However, I have not heard a member of the House of Commons say yet that he did not feel we should make a contribution to help the poor devils out there who may need a little help in times of adversity.

The farmers have always wanted stability. Now that they have got stability it seems to me that they find it profitable to repudiate their negotiators. The farmers also forget that the taxpayers of Canada made a loan to Great Britain of $1,250 million which in effect was used to buy this wheat. The Minister of Trade and Commerce said last night that ECA funds are involved, and it is all mixed up but the fact remains that we lent them $1,250 million. More than that was spent on wheat, and the Canadian taxpayers were very glad to make the loan for that purpose.

There has been a lot of fuss about a subsidy to the Canadian domestic market during the war. Is it forgotten that during the war every other primary producer in Canada also subsidized the Canadian consumer? Up until 1947 we never obtained for lumber or fish anything like the world price. I know of one member of the cabinet, for instance, who until 1947 was not able to obtain any more for his product than he received in 1939. That is true of a great many manufacturers in Canada, and I think sometimes the wheat producers forget that fact.

As the Minister of Trade and Commerce said last night, the farmers elected to take out insurance. They wanted the government to put a floor price under their product. Now they are balking at paying the premium for it. Not only are they balking at paying the premium, but they want the Canadian taxpayers generally to pay the premium. Personally I do not go for that.

We hear so much about wheat in this house. There is talk about 40-cent wheat and 30-cent wheat. The farmers sometimes forget that we had very low prices in British Columbia about the time when they were getting 30 cents or 40 cents for their wheat. I can remember well fishing herring as a boy and delivering at the plant for one-ninth of a cent a pound. I fished salmon and delivered it to the plant for one-third of a cent a pound. As a matter of fact wheat never got below half a cent a pound. If the farmers want to come and see how hard it is to wrestle a bushel of salmon or herring let them come out there and they will be able to judge the relative value. I tell you that your prices did not go as low as ours did at that time.

The lumbermen and fishermen elected to sell their own products. They did not want floor prices under them. Now they are asked to pay the premium for the farmers who wanted floor prices. I wonder whether the farmers appreciate the value of holding on to a market? I wonder whether they realize that at the present time the pulp and paper companies of Canada are actually losing tens of millions of dollars every year in order to fulfil their contracts and obligations to their very good customers in the United States. If they wanted to enter the free market for pulp and paper at the present time I am sure they could sell a great deal of their product at probably $300 a ton. Of course that would net them a lot of money. But from the long-term point of view they probably feel it would not be to their advantage.

What an awful heartbreak it must be to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott), and indeed to all his colleagues who have been working so hard in the last six months trying to slash the estimates in order to bring about economies, something to which everybody pays such great lip service, to find that $35 million has been saved and then suddenly this joker is thrown on his desk. He finds all his savings have been wiped out by a gratuitous payment to the prairie farmers.

Mr. Fulton: Who threw it there?

Mr. Gibson: I do not know where it came from. I would presume from the speakers I have heard in the house that they had their share in it. I am surprised how much the government listens to the opposition. If I were in their place I do not think I would pay as much attention as they do.

Mr. Pearkes: Who are you? Whom do you represent?

An hon. Member: That is because you are an independent.

Mr. Gibson: That is the great privilege I have.

Mr. Ross (Souris): A good old Liberal.

Mr. Fraser: Just the top of the fence.

Mr. Gibson: Cabinet solidarity must be a kind of tough proposition at times.

Mr. Ross (Souris): It must be.

Mr. Gibson: I would not insult the intelligence of some of my ministerial friends over there by suggesting that they all were in agreement with this $65 million payment. If they did not have cabinet solidarity I think there would be a lot of empty cabinet seats in the house today. However, I presume they decided that in the general interest of Canada they could not afford to have another government at this time and for that reason accepted this payment. The situation rather annoys me. In my riding there are some very necessary public works.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gibson: I do not see them in the estimates this year.

Mr. Cruickshank: You have got too much.

Mr. Gibson: My good friend, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Fournier), has always been pretty good to the member for Comox-Alberni. He realizes the great riding I have and the necessity to provide more facilities for the people there in order to further the development of the riding. He has had to turn such propositions down this time because from the point of view of the general welfare of the country he realizes that we cannot afford unlimited government expenditures. He has saved a few dollars but then the cabinet turns around and gives away all the savings made not only on public works in my riding but in every riding throughout Canada.

Mr. Fraser: Do you blame him?

Mr. Gibson: I think it is about time that we called a halt to government aid for everything. In the last five years it is unbelievable the number of people who have come here asking that the government support some special scheme. No matter whether we have a flood, frost, fire or whatever it is, somebody always has a private project they want to hook on the government. I hope to see the day when the cabinet will say no to some of these requests.

An hon. Member: Let them say it to the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Gibson).

Mr. Gibson: Personally I was never very fond of taking a free ride; but it seems to me that the government should withdraw this $65 million offer at this time.

An hon. Member: Speaking as a Liberal?

Mr. Gibson: I am speaking as the member for Comox-Alberni. As a taxpayer in this country, and representing a good many taxpayers, the abuse we have had to take for handing out this money is unbelievable. When I was a young fellow that was a lot of money, but with our $4 billion budgets and all the rest of it everyone thinks $65 million is just so much hay. I think it is about time we in this house had some appreciation of what $65 million represents. It is about 10 per cent of the amount we raise in personal income tax. Just looking around this house, every member here will pay a share of this amount; each of our constituents will pay from $100 to perhaps $5,000, in the case of some of the weathy members over there, in their personal income tax in order to pay this bill to the prairie farmers. I think the Liberal farm members have done pretty well in this house on this issue; and I am speaking of the Prairie Liberals. I know the farmers were disappointed; they thought there was a Santa Claus somewhere who was going to give them ten or twelve cents as a final payment on this wheat, and they have had to accept 8·3 cents. That must be a disappointment, but I believe they have reacted in a much more responsible manner than many members of this house. Several members of the Progressive Conservative party have tried to suggest in a small way that perhaps this $65 million was plenty. The hon. member for Middlesex East (Mr. White) made an excellent speech, and that is what I rather inferred from his remarks.

It is pretty tough for the government to be on a spot like this and not have any support at all from the opposition. I never saw so much unanimity over any deal as has developed over this $65 million payment. I believe members of the opposition have a certain responsibility to their constituents, who are also taxpayers. Forget all about your party whips for a change, and just get up and express your opinion. I see the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell) in his place. He has not been the kind of man who would just write off $65 million as small change. He never asked, "What is a million" or anything like that. He certainly realizes that $65 million is important to him and to his constituents. I would ask him to express his views on this matter, because I have a great regard for any opinion expressed by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Ross (Souris): How often have you voted with him?

Mr. Gibson: Any time anything of substance or good sense came from the hon. member's party I have always been very glad to support it. I have one suggestion which I think the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) should at least consider. When these cheques are made out I believe he should see to it that they are not negotiable in either Florida or California. Thanksgiving day will come to the prairies again, I suppose. When those farmers sit down to their laden tables and offer thanks for their bountiful crops and high prices, I certainly hope they will not forget to mention Right Hon. James G. Gardiner.

Mr. Jean François Pouliot (Temiscouata): I will ask the house to be kind enough to correct me, Mr. Speaker, if I make any errors in dealing with this complicated matter. I try to understand something about the wheat business; I have heard so much about it. The constable at the door told me many people had said they expected wheat to grow from the floor of the House of Commons, after the seed from so many able speeches had germinated in this hothouse.

Every matter can be simplified to a certain extent. What is actually owed the western farmers for their wheat? It is not $1.83 a bushel. It is a good sum, $1.78 and a fraction, perhaps $1.788 if we add the amount held in reserve. What is asked of the government is a supplementary amount of approximately 4½ cents. The intention of the government is to pay the western farmer an average price of $1.83 for 1,428 million bushels of wheat. Then the total returns to the western farmers for the five year period will be $2,613,240,000. If that is divided as between the five years it will mean an average of $522,648,000 per annum. There is a figure I have not at hand; I did not get it from the year book. I would like any hon. member from the west to tell me what is the farming population of the west.

Mr. Sinnott: 400,000.

An hon. Member: Make sure of your authority.

Mr. Pouliot: Well, I take it under caution. I did not have time to check the figure, but if my hon. friend is right the amount of $522,648,000 should be divided by 400,000 to learn the average income per year of the western farmer.

An hon. Member: From wheat.

Mr. Pouliot: Yes, from wheat alone, not counting other sources of revenue such as orchards in California, fruit groves in Florida and so on.

Mr. Quelch: Oil wells in Alberta.

Mr. Pouliot: That is substantial; that is a half a billion dollars to be divided amongst 400,000 people. It is much more than the average farmer in the east would ever get.

Mr. Quelch: That would be the gross payment, not net.

Mr. Pouliot: Would the member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch) tell me the exact number of farmers in the west?

Mr. Quelch: No, I say the income would be gross income, not net income.

Mr. Pouliot: Oh yes, indeed, including expenses. The gross income of the eastern farmer is far from being as much as that, although the eastern farmer does not practise mechanized farming to such an extent. I will ask any hon. gentleman if the figure given a minute ago of 400,000 farmers in the west is correct.

Mr. Fraser: Ask the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Pouliot: I do not want to impose a question on anyone, but I ask that as a service to facilitate me in continuing with the discussion.

Mr. Gardiner: There are about 250,000 wheat farmers in the west.

Mr. Pouliot: Then the average of half a billion dollars should be divided by 260,000 people in order to calculate the average income of each gentleman farmer of the west. I say that quite seriously because I have a high regard for the western farmer. He grows a type of food that is essential to our country as well as to many other countries in the world. Therefore, sir, this is it. Everyone may make the calculation and know exactly what the problem is in black and white, meaning ink and paper.

If the government withdraws the bill and pays nothing in addition to the dividend that is going to be paid by the pool, then the farmers will not have an average of $522 million, and the total return will not be $2,613 million, but it will be $2,413,264,000 to be divided amongst 260,000 farmers in the west. This is gross income, and these gentlemen have to pay for the oil, machinery, twine, et cetera, but they must get a living out of it. I am not criticizing anyone, but I am giving to everyone, members of the cabinet and private members, the benefit of the doubt. This makes my position still more embarrassing.

When I was young I recall that the children who were playing outside or who had just returned from school usually came in hungry at mealtime. When I asked my grandmother for something other than what was on the table she used to tell me, "My boy, you do not seem to be hungry. Put on your pajamas and go to bed." Why? Because I was asking for too much, so I had to go to bed without a meal. We were brought up like that. I am not telling anything new. If the hon. gentlemen of the opposition are not satisfied with the generous offer of the government, the only thing for the government to do is to say, "You do not like it, so you will go without it; we will withdraw our bill." No one will be worse off, and everyone will be happy. There will be a feeling of relief throughout the country. You do not want it. You do not find it good enough, so you will not have it. You still have the money coming from the pool, so be satisfied with it. I hope the government will accept that suggestion, and the discussion will end there. We will save money, and we have to save money for something. We have to save money for a subsidy on the transportation of coarse grain from the west to the east. It is much more important to the farmers of the east than an additional subsidy of four and a half cents may be to the farmers of the west. We have to fight for it. We are told it will only last until July 31, but we want it the year round. It is vital. The other day the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Black) asked a timely question about it.

I come now to the amendment, as I am speaking on it. It is unfair and unjust to the government. It mentions the mishandling of the sale of wheat and other grains covered by the Canadian Wheat Board Act. I have mentioned only the benefits derived by the western farmers for wheat, which represents a substantial sum. In addition, there are their other sources of income, yet they are not satisfied. When will they be satisfied? If I were the member for a western constituency I would tell my constituents, "Be reasonable; you have got enough at the expense of the other provinces of Canada." The provinces of Quebec and Ontario are paying eighty per cent of the taxes paid in Canada. We will have to pay for it, yet the farmers of Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan are crying for an additional payment the same as babies cry for Castoria. They are never satisfied, never contented. When I asked for seed grain for the settlers in my county, I was told they could not get any. No seed grain for the settlers of Temiscouata, but bonuses for the farmers in the west. We have had enough of that.

Mr. Johnston: Is the hon. member speaking for the Liberal party?

Mr. Pouliot: I am speaking for the western members, who are quite genial personally but who are too exacting when it comes to amounts of that kind.

Mr. Johnston: They will look after themselves. Is the hon. member speaking for the Liberal party?

Mr. Pouliot: I am not speaking on behalf of the Liberal party any more than my hon. friend speaks for the Social Credit party. I am a private member and a Liberal, and what I say to the house I say for the benefit of the government as well as to see that my hon. friend's constituents do not get too much. They should get only what they are entitled to have.

I am not going to speak any longer about it. I have said what I thought sincerely, and I have tried to explain the situation so that those who read Hansard will understand something about it. But to say that the government has mishandled the situation through the wheat board or through any other agency or to say that it has been mishandled by my friend Jimmie MacKinnon or the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) or the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe), under whose jurisdiction the wheat board comes, is a sovereign injustice. If I were speaking on behalf of the Liberal party, I know what I would do; but I have no power of attorney. You, Mr. Speaker, know what I would say; and I mean it.

Mr. J. H. Harrison (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I should allow this bill to pass without adding my observations with regard to it. It is something that profoundly touches the constituency from which I come. I cannot exactly subscribe to the views of my colleague the hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot), possibly on account of my geographical position. There are also other grounds on which I do not agree with him.

In scanning my Hansard—I was out of the house for a day or so—I note here and there pronouncements by some hon. members opposite. One that seemed to me to have some humour attached to it was made by the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Knight) who, as the house knows, was for a short time a tutor of mine; and I can say to you, Mr. Speaker, that he was a good one. He made an observation which I believe is profound. It was to the effect that the Liberals of Saskatchewan—this was some little while ago—had been maintaining an intelligent silence. That immediately suggests an alternative. To my way of thinking the alternative would be an unintelligent speech. After noting the remarks of my good friend the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Thatcher) who observed, I think on Thursday last, that the members of the Liberal party of Saskatchewan had promised, in the election campaign, that they would bring back a large final payment on the five-year pool, it would seem to me that the remark made by the hon. member for Saskatoon would apply to his colleague. Possibly he has some material that he can work on over there in starting up a class in this intelligent silence. As far as I am concerned, the people in my riding know what I said during the election campaign, and I will let it go at that.

Following up the remark made by the hon. member for Saskatoon, to the effect that the Liberal members had been maintaining an intelligent silence, I cannot say that the infrequency of my speeches in the house has anything to do with the training I received at his hands, inasmuch as he taught me for only a short while. But previously, when I was at possibly a more impressionable age, I had a teacher who in class used to make the remark that the weakest lion makes the loudest roar. After observing this house through some three sessions, this remark started to gather weight with me. There are many speeches made here that possibly would have been better left unmade; and even the man who made one of them would later be the most likely to want his speech withdrawn, if that were possible. I hope that does not occur with regard to this speech of mine.

Having made those general observations I want to say with regard to this bill before us now that I am pleased with the provisions that are in it, and I wish to thank the government for bringing it down. The broad coverage that it gives and especially the third part of it which provides that the final payment can be made to the farmers immediately after the end of the crop year will, I have no doubt, be appreciated in my riding.

As to the final payment on the five-year pool, I was pleased with the pronouncement in the house last night by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe). Although the opposition tried to show that it was something different than the opinion held by the Minister of Agriculture and by the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) also, I cannot see that they are so very far apart. If you take the pronouncement of the Prime Minister himself, some three or four days earlier, in reply to a question put on the order paper by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue), you will find that he stated the government's position fairly concisely with regard to Britain's obligations under this contract. As reported at page 1023 of Hansard he said:

> The government has taken the position that while there was no further obligation on the United Kingdom in a legal sense, the United Kingdom authorities should realize that the wheat growers of Canada and most of the community of the prairie provinces believed there was a continuing obligation under the "have regard to" clause which had not been discharged.

I think the Prime Minister is perfectly right there, because the people of western Canada, or the wheat growers there, believe there is a continuing obligation by the British government. Possibly it is not a legal obligation under the wording of the contract, but it is one that has been recognized by various ministers of that government, including Mr. Strachey and also Mr. Cripps. But those gentlemen have apparently changed their minds; and under the legal terms of the agreement, that is perfectly all right. There is no reason why they should not. As to blaming Great Britain, I would say this. The government there are in a position where they must save dollars if they can do so. I am a Britisher myself, and I can agree that they have always been tough traders. But had the Right Hon. Winston Churchill been in power over there, while he might have driven a tough bargain, I still believe that he would have had some regard to this "have regard to" clause and would not have left it unhonoured entirely.

Mr. Wright: Why did they, in the election campaign, criticize the government for paying too much for wheat, if that is the case?

Mr. Harrison: The position taken by the hon. member for Assiniboia in that regard is this, as reported at page 1149 of Hansard:

> The government, since June 5 of last year, has done nothing, and there was nothing it could do to re-open a contract that had already been settled and finalized by both parties to that contract.

He made that statement four days after he had the actual answer given by the Prime Minister as reported at page 1023 of Hansard. Four days earlier the Prime Minister said, as I put on Hansard a few minutes ago:

> The government has taken the position that while there was no further obligation on the United Kingdom in a legal sense, the United Kingdom authorities should realize that the wheat growers of Canada and most of the community of the prairie provinces believed there was a continuing obligation under the "have regard to" clause which had not been discharged.
> 6. Such representations were made by the Prime Minister in January and by the Minister of Agriculture in February, 1951.

That was an answer to his own question, so he knew when he made it that the statement he made four days later was not correct.

But there were other negotiations on this same "have regard to" clause between the Prime Minister and Prime Minister Attlee here in Ottawa. Even before that, I think the Minister of Agriculture had some talks in October or November with another minister of the British crown with regard to this matter.

At one time even Sir Stafford Cripps did admit owing something in the neighbourhood of $70 million under this "have regard to" clause. Had they implemented the clause to that effect it would have meant 5 cents, and we would have had a payment in the pool of something in the neighbourhood of 13 cents. For all that it would have cost Great Britain the farmers of western Canada would have appreciated it greatly, because the farmers out there take this position. They have done their share toward providing Britain during times gone by with loans and free gifts of money to a very large extent. Although the farmers did not begrudge giving it at the time and certainly as a Briton myself, had I been in the house at that time I would definitely have voted for those loans and those gifts; at the same time, you cannot get away from the fact that the farmers of the west have in the back of their heads that Britain owes some moral obligation.

Mr. Brooks: Who put it there?

Mr. Harrison: It is too bad that that situation exists, because trade is a two-way street. We are going to want to sell to Britain in future years, and we want to keep on good terms with the British people. The British want to sell products in western Canada. I just hope that this feeling in the backs of the minds of the peoples of the west—I do not care what party you are from, that situation does exist in the minds of the people out there—will not be a detriment so far as the sale of British goods is concerned.

The subamendment moved by the C.C.F. is one of the reasons why I rose in my place to speak. This subamendment does not meet with my approval for some very good reasons. Firstly, they take two positions here. One is that the British government owes us nothing, not even a moral obligation. The second position they take directly in the subamendment is that the people of Canada owe, on behalf of Great Britain, or of the food given to Great Britain, $350 million. Well, on the face of it we are 53 members from the prairie provinces, including all parties. For somebody to introduce a subamendment suggesting that this house of some 262 members should pay out of the public treasury $350 million—well, you know before you start that we just do not have a leg to stand on. The other 209 members have to go back to their constituencies and justify the payment of $350 million. They know and we know that they just cannot do it. Put yourself in their shoes. The first man you would meet when you return would say to you: You voted for $350 million, and at the same time the payment of $65 million that has been made—

Mr. Wright: Will the hon. member permit me to ask a question?

Mr. Harrison: Yes.

[Mr. Harrison.]

Mr. Wright: There are $115 million that the government is already paying, the $65 million and what is already in the pool. But the hon. member keeps saying that we are asking for $350 million. All we are asking for is $235 million in addition to what is already in the pool.

Mr. Harrison: You are taking into consideration the fact that they have already put in $65 million.

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Mr. Harrison: But you are asking altogether for a payment of $350 million.

Mr. Wright: No, not over and above what is already in the pool.

Mr. Harrison: What is in the pool?

Mr. Wright: There is already some $60 million.

Mr. Harrison: In your $235 million you are taking into consideration that the government has already advanced $65 million.

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Mr. Harrison: That is a different thing. But over all you are suggesting the payment of $350 million with what is in the pool.

Mr. Wright: Not over and above what is in the pool, with what is in the pool.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Harrison: The treasury is still going to have to bring down, even on your figures, something under $300 million, and that is quite a figure for hon. members to justify. I am speaking of the 209 members who are not from the prairie provinces. That is a rather tough thing for them to justify when they go home. Naturally, coming from the prairie provinces, we would gladly receive a payment of that kind; but when you move a subamendment that suggests that this house pay $350 million to the farmers in the west for grain sent to Britain, you know that you have not a chance to put it through. And I class that immediately as just a political move. Since it is a political move I am going to vote against the subamendment on those grounds.

Reviewing the contract itself, I am fairly well satisfied with the payment of $65 million. I can tell you that I told that to my farmers before Christmas. I had very few advocate to me that they should get anything over 10 cents. I know that 10 cents would have satisfied all of them. With respect to the 8·3 cents, some people may be a little dissatisfied, but the average of these people is sensible, and they are going to realize that 8·3 cents is a fair payment, and is a far better proposition than suggesting to this house that we pay them 25 cents when you know you cannot get that at all, because all you would do in that case would be to go home with nothing. I am sure they would rather have 8·3 cents than nothing.

The payment and the contract as a whole are fairly satisfactory to me, and the payment of $1.83 per bushel over a five-year period is the best five-year price that we have ever had in western Canada. I will go this much further and say that I have no doubt the farmers in my riding would be tickled to death right now to sign another five-year contract if they could sign one for $1.83 a bushel for the next five years, with the prospect that possibly they might get something a little better than that under our present marketing system. But at the same time I think most of them would be satisfied to have a guaranteed price of $1.83 a bushel for the next five years.

There have been some attempts by various opposition members to tell us what the farmers have lost. These figures run all the way from $70 million to $1 billion. The very discrepancy in those figures, all the way from $70 million to $1 billion, would show that there is something wrong with the argument some place or the figures would be much closer together.

Anybody who quotes those excessive figures is, in my opinion, trying to discredit our present system of marketing. I think that all members from the west will agree that we do not want anything to happen to the present stable system of marketing.

In other words, anybody who uses large figures of that kind is talking about a market that is not an orderly system of marketing. He is talking of the most extreme profits that you can make under a system of grain exchange marketing, and he is giving comfort to those people who believe in that kind of a system. If the wheat that we have sold under this contract had been sold under that system it would have been sold for much more money than the farmers have got for it. If the wheat had been sold for $2.83 per bushel the farmer still would not have got $1.83. All the extra profit would have gone where it always went under that system, down the drain of the grain exchange. We do not want a recurrence of that.

I am pleased with the way this five year contract has worked out and I think the farmers of my riding generally will appreciate the payment of 8·3 cents that is being made. However, they have not been able to get out of their heads the idea that there is some moral obligation on Great Britain to make a small further payment, even though it is only a token payment. That would have been some indication or admission that there was some obligation. The fact that there was some admission by Great Britain in this regard is borne out by the fact that when the Prime Minister of England was here last fall and talking with our Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) he agreed that the situation should be reopened. If he had thought there was no obligation he would not have agreed that the proposition should be reopened. I think Britain was a little ill-advised not to make some slight recompense.

We are fairly well satisfied with the $65 million, although we would have liked to have had a payment of 10 or 12 cents per bushel. I think the payment of $65 million will fill the bill fairly well. It is something that members from other sections of the country can justify. There must be a little give and take in this house if we are going to make this country tick. We cannot always consider just our own sections and hope to get all that we require. In order to make Canada a real Canada there has to be some give and take. When other parts of Canada need support, as they have in the past when there have been fires and floods, they will find the western members right behind them and ready to help.

Mr. Wright: The hon. member states that when Prime Minister Attlee was here last year he agreed to the reopening of negotiations. That is the first I have heard of that and I wonder on what authority the hon. member makes that statement.

Mr. Harrison: I think at that time Mr. Attlee agreed that there should be a reopening of the negotiations. If you go back to Hansard of March 8 you will see that such representations were made by the Prime Minister in January, and by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) in February. That was definitely stated in the press of that date because I can remember reading it. It was said that Mr. Attlee had discussed the wheat situation with the Prime Minister and they were going to discuss it further when the Prime Minister was in Great Britain.

Mr. Wright: The Minister of Trade and Commerce did not make that statement last night.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

CANADIAN-MONTANA PIPE LINE COMPANY

Mr. C. E. Bennett (Grey North) moved the second reading of Bill No. 117, to incorporate Canadian-Montana Pipe Line Company.

Mr. Green: Will the hon. member explain, please?

Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, Bill No. 117 is an act to incorporate Canadian-Montana Pipe Line Company under the general pipe line legislation passed by this parliament. The object of the company is the construction of a pipe line from the southeastern portion of the province of Alberta to the Montana border to meet an existing pipe line there. The pipe line will carry natural gas and will be approximately thirty-six miles in length. The incorporators named in the bill are the principal executive officers of the McColl-Frontenac Oil Company Limited and of the Montana Power Company of Butte, Montana. McColl-Frontenac Oil Company Limited of course is well known in Canada. The Montana Power Company is a public utility company which since 1931 has been distributing natural gas to domestic, commercial and industrial users in that state.

One of the chief, in fact the chief, industrial customer of this company is the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, which, as hon. members know, is a very important contributor of base metals so essential at this time.

From 1941 until last year approximately fifty wells were drilled in the area to which I have referred, and as a result four relatively small natural gas fields were proven in what is known as the Pakowki lake district. The most northerly, called the Manyberries field, lies within thirty miles of the United States-Canadian border, and the most southerly called Black Butte within a mile and a half of the Alberta-Montana border.

The opinion is held that the taking of gas from the Pakowki district will not particularly affect Alberta's supply inasmuch as these fields represent a small fraction indeed of the total Alberta reserves, and inasmuch also as they constitute a fixed limited quantity. We are not dealing here with a speculative venture. These fields are under the control of the incorporators. This application therefore will differ from those of other companies that hope to export to expanding markets, and therefore the quantities necessary for those companies will be much larger.

In any event the purpose of this bill is merely to incorporate a company. If the bill is passed and the company is incorporated it will be subject to the decisions of, and the usual safeguards provided by, the several regulatory bodies. Hon. members are familiar with these safeguards. I shall only enumerate them. First, under the general Pipe Lines Act the board of transport commissioners was authorized to regulate interprovincial or international pipe lines. Second, before gas can be exported a permit must be obtained from the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) under the Electricity and Fluid Exportation Act. Third, before gas can be exported from Alberta a permit must be obtained from the Alberta petroleum and natural gas conservation board. Several applications have been made to that board and are still pending.

Therefore if this company is incorporated parliament will only be giving the company the same chance it has given other companies, —the chance to prove its case, to fight it out with these other companies and to show that the building of the proposed pipe line is for the benefit of Canada. I submit that only if there are a number of companies in competition presenting a variety of routes and schemes will Canadians be assured that what is finally decided upon will be in the best interests of our country.

The bill contains the same clauses and provisions, and is in the same form, as other pipe line bills which have been considered by this house from time to time. Detailed information and expert evidence will be available to the committee to which the bill is referred.

Mr. D. S. Harkness (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to delay the passage of the bill for very long, and I think I should say at the beginning that I do not intend to oppose passage of it at the second reading stage at any rate. Coming from southern Alberta, and having read the proceedings before the Alberta petroleum and natural gas conservation board involving this particular company, with deference I think I am probably as familiar with the project, what it is intended to do and the other factors involved, as anyone in the house.

There are a few facts which I think should be put before the house with respect to the company. The first is that the field from which it is intended to take the gas is in the very southern part of Alberta. It is a comparatively small field sometimes known as Pendant d'Oreille but more generally as Pakowki lake field. I believe the total amount of gas estimated to be there is in the neighbourhood of four hundred billion cubic feet.

Representations made before the Alberta petroleum and natural gas conservation board on behalf of this company were to the effect that probably the only place this gas could ever be marketed would be to this Montana Company which would like to pipe the gas a comparatively short distance to connect with the Montana grid system. There may be a considerable amount of truth in that argument.

There are, however, three other places where the gas may be used and may be required. The Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Company whose bill was before the house the other day, and who presented their case before the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, gave a certain amount of evidence with respect to the use of this field. The effect of it was that they felt they needed this field if their project to build a pipe line from Alberta to Toronto and Montreal went through. I asked several questions in connection with the use of this field because I knew this bill was coming up, and the officials of the Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Company gave evidence that they hoped and intended to take about forty million cubic feet a day out of this field if their project was approved and went through. They did say under questioning, also, that no field in Alberta was absolutely essential to their project with the exception of Pincher Creek field; but they felt they would probably need the gas in this field as a reserve, at least at present.

In addition another company which obtained a charter some time ago, the Western Pipe Lines Company, whose project is to pipe gas from Alberta to Winnipeg through Moose Jaw, Regina and the other cities along that route, look upon this field as more or less essential to that project. Whether or not it is essential I do not know, but at any rate they feel this field would be essential to their development which, of course, is primarily to serve western Canadian cities.

There is a third possibility for the use of this gas; that is, by the city of Calgary and the southern part of Alberta served by the Calgary Gas Company. My understanding is that the Calgary Gas Company does not require this gas at the present time, but unless other reserves are developed it may be that some time in the future it will require it.

I do not suggest that these people who have developed the Pakowki lake field, who have drilled wells and spent a considerable amount of money in developing these gas reserves, should be held up indefinitely because at some time in the future that gas may be required by someone else. However, when this bill is considered by the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, I do believe the factors I have mentioned very briefly this evening should be gone into carefully. They may have an extremely important bearing upon whether or not this charter should be granted. I have no doubt, of course, that these matters will be considered carefully if the charter is granted and the company makes application to the Alberta conservation board. My position last year was and still is that in considering these pipe line charters the members of this house have a duty and responsibility to the people of Canada as a whole to carefully look into the proposition put forward, to consider its feasibility and whether or not it is going to be in the best interests of the country as a whole. So I believe the three possible uses to which this gas might be put other than sending it across to Montana essentially, as I think the sponsor said, for the use of the Anaconda Copper Company, should be gone into by the committee and given a good deal of attention.

As I said in the beginning, I do not intend to hold up the bill or to oppose the motion for second reading. However, I would like more information on these points from the officials of this company.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

BORDER PIPELINE CORPORATION

Mr. W. A. Robinson (Simcoe East) moved the second reading of Bill No. 118, to incorporate Border Pipeline Corporation.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, the continuing discoveries of oil in the province of Alberta have brought to the fore various proposals for the construction of an oil pipe line from the province of Alberta to the Pacific coast. The discussion of this project has been accelerated by certain considerations of national security in the United States and Canada. At the present time oil for Vancouver and the province of British Columbia, as well as that used in Portland, Seattle and the northwestern part of the United States, is furnished largely by tanker from the state of California. In the event of a war the supply of oil from California might not be sufficient to continue to service these markets, thus making it desirable to call upon the large resources of Alberta in this connection. Furthermore, the hazards of transportation of oil by tanker during a war also indicate the desirability of a pipe line as a means of providing oil to these markets.

In the light of these considerations this application is being made to parliament for the incorporation of a company under the provisions of the Pipe Lines Act with authority to construct and operate an oil pipe line. It is proposed that this line will commence in the vicinity of Edmonton in central Alberta and run south in that province, then parallel to the Canadian Pacific Railway through the Crowsnest pass to Cranbrook and Kingsgate in British Columbia where it will cross the border and proceed southwest to Spokane along the route of the Spokane International Railway. The route of the pipe line then runs west across the flat plains of the state of Washington, through Steven's pass and the Cascade mountains to Monroe and Seattle, from which point the line divides in two directions. One section of the line runs north 115 miles to Vancouver, and another section 190 miles south to Portland.

The applicants have entered into negotiations with United States and Canadian oil companies which have interests in the province of Alberta to supply the necessary oil to maintain the pipe line. It is also expected that they will obtain commitments to build sufficient refining capacity in Vancouver and in Seattle and Portland to market the "throughput" of the pipe line. The pipe line will have an initial "throughput" of 100,000 barrels per day and would have a capacity in excess of 150,000 barrels per day. The line will be a common carrier available to any producer who wishes to transport oil.

The applicants have entered into arrangements with prominent Canadian and United States investment firms which have indicated their willingness to undertake the financing of the pipe line through the sale to the public of the securities involved both in Canada and the United States.

It is believed that the proposed pipe line, because of the lower cost of construction on the route proposed as opposed to any other suggested route and because of the wider market afforded by the sale in United States cities along the suggested route, will provide oil in the cities of Vancouver and New Westminster at a lower price per barrel than could be provided under the terms of any competing project. It is on this basis that the applicants seek the right to have their plan for the construction of the pipe line placed before the board of transport commissioners and as a first step to have the company incorporated under the provisions of the Pipe Lines Act.

May I point out, Mr. Speaker, that by reason of the Pipe Lines Act which was enacted in 1949 parliament has said to any person who wishes authority to construct or operate pipe lines that he must come to parliament and make application for a special act. I believe our function under the overall act is quite clear; it is to grant or refuse incorporation. Once incorporation has been granted, questions of route and other matters must be decided by the board of transport commissioners. The company cannot begin construction of the line until the board has granted leave. Similarly, no line can be opened for the transportation of oil or gas until leave has been obtained from the board. Therefore these present applicants are only doing what parliament has indicated they must do. They are coming to parliament to seek incorporation.

In 1949 five pipe line companies were incorporated, and in the 1950 session there were two others. At this session I believe there are seven applications under the Pipe Lines Act. At the present time companies to which this parliament has already granted incorporation have two applications for the construction of oil lines and four applications for the construction of gas lines pending before the board of transport commissioners. If incorporation is granted in this case, and I hope it will be granted if we are to avoid discrimination, this company will then proceed to make its application to the board of transport commissioners. It will then be in a position to compete with other companies already incorporated or to be incorporated, for the right to construct and operate a pipe line. The applicants fully realize that they will only be successful in that competition if they are able to convince the board that their project is the most advantageous from a Canadian point of view.

Mr. Speaker, I have made my explanation as brief as possible. I would be very happy to answer any questions of a general nature when closing the debate. Expert witnesses will be available before the committee to answer questions of a technical nature.

Mr. Graydon: May I ask the hon. member one question for the sake of clarification? Is it proposed that this pipe line will run through any part of the Fraser valley? If it does not, I think you are in trouble.

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, this bill seeking incorporation of the Border Pipeline Corporation represents the second occasion on which there has been before the house a bill to incorporate a company which proposes to transport oil from the fields of Alberta to the Pacific coast. The first one came before us last week when a bill was introduced by the member for Vancouver South (Mr. Laing). Last session, and the session before, we did have a number of bills from companies seeking incorporation who desired to build gas pipe lines from the prairies to the coast. This is the first session at which we have had bills to incorporate companies building oil pipe lines. But, Mr. Speaker, the principle which should be followed with regard to the use to be made of these Canadian resources, which is that, when works of major national importance are to be built to transport Canadian natural resources to the market, they should be so constructed as to be of a maximum benefit to Canada, is I think the same in the case of both oil and gas pipe lines. The controversy which was before this house during the past two years in connection with gas pipe lines, therefore, is exactly the same as the controversy which will undoubtedly surround the application to incorporate this company.

The hon. member who introduced the bill said something to the effect that his company maintains that the route they have chosen to the Pacific coast via the United States will be the cheapest route to construct. I do not agree that we have had any figures which would warrant one in coming to that conclusion. Against the hon. member who introduced this bill I would set the member for Vancouver South and the great construction company—so he described it and I have no reason to doubt his description—which he states is to build the pipe line for his company. This company has had a great deal of engineering experience, not only in Canada and the United States but all over the world. It has investigated the routes from the prairies to the markets to be served on the Pacific, and has decided that the route through the Yellowhead pass, down through the centre of British Columbia to the Pacific coast, is a feasible and economic route for this pipe line to follow. Mr. Speaker, if one investigates the history of pipe line construction, and if one were to remember the things that were said in this house during the main session of 1950 concerning the impossibility of building a pipe line through the Yellowhead pass, through the centre of British Columbia to Vancouver and then into the United States, one could not help but be struck by the lack of information upon which those statements were based.

In his speech during the introduction of his bill the member for Vancouver South alluded to the history of the company which proposes to build that line, and its construction of pipe lines in Iran and the Middle East. If you look at those pipe lines and the altitudes that they reach during their course from the oil fields to the seaport, you will find that they go over mountain passes considerably higher than anything on the route of the Yellowhead pass and along the Hope-Princeton route to Vancouver. I understand that the pipe lines in the Middle East, in Iran particularly, reach altitudes of between 6,000 and 7,000 feet. There would be nothing like those altitudes on the route through the Yellowhead, so there is no reason, either because of the physical geography or economic conditions due to the difficulty of construction, which would mean that the pipe line seeking to bring Alberta oil to the Pacific coast need be built, or should be built, for the major part of its length through the United States.

We who took the position in the past, and who also take the position today, that in using these Canadian resources the maximum benefit must be preserved to Canada, were encouraged when the first pipe-line company to come before this house for incorporation this year adopted a Canadian route. We were also encouraged by the support which appears to be building up for the principle of Canada first, not only in this house but throughout the country. We recall of course that when we first asserted that principle—and I am looking of course at my good friend the member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank) who took such a part in the fight for Canada first; the member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green); and the members for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) and Yale (Mr. Jones)—the use of the term "filibuster" was applied to the efforts we made to impress upon this house and the country the importance of the principle which we were asserting. It is a fact which the reading of Hansard will verify that our efforts were greeted with—well, at first derision. I do not think that is too strong a word to use. Certainly every pressure was put upon us to end that filibuster. Every effort was made to have us withdraw our opposition to those companies seeking to export Canada's gas first to the United States and to build the route through the United States. We are therefore happy indeed, Mr. Speaker, that we have made such a large number of converts, if I may put it that way.

We recall that when the matter was held up last in the House of Commons and full discussion was insisted upon, as more and more members entered the controversy—not only members from British Columbia but members from other parts of Canada not immediately affected by the pipe line itself—it became apparent that a great national principle was at stake. That national principle had its recognition, I think, in the resolution that was moved the other day in the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines and was adopted unanimously by that committee, to amend the provisions of a proposed bill to incorporate one of these pipe line companies to provide that "the main pipe line or lines either for the transmission or transportation of gas and oil shall be located entirely within Canada." That was an amendment moved on March 8 by my colleague the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green) and unanimously adopted in the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. That, Mr. Speaker, represents almost a revolution in thought as compared with what we saw in this house and in that same committee just last year. I should like to take this opportunity of paying my tribute to those of my colleagues who took such a prominent part in carrying on that fight in the interests of the Canadian people.

I have dealt with that matter in these few sentences because I think it is important to remember that exactly the same issue is now before the house: that is, whether we shall grant our approval to bills which seek to incorporate companies which have as their avowed aim and object in the construction of a line to transport this resource to the market, that it shall go immediately and directly into the United States, and then through the United States for the greater portion of its length on its way to that market, with merely a branch or spur line back up to Canada to serve the market on the Canadian portion of the Pacific coast.

I will not say much at this stage in connection with the potential benefits which would flow to the cities in the interior of British Columbia, if the pipe line were built by a route through the central portion of the province, but which will be denied to us if it goes through the United States, because perhaps the situation with respect to oil is slightly different from the situation with respect to gas. No one can say definitely that it would be possible to tap the oil from the main pipe line and serve the communities through which that line passes. But neither can anyone say that it would be impossible. No one knows what the economic development of our province may be in the near future. No one knows the tremendous bounds forward which we may make. Those communities have been growing—many of them have doubled their population since just before the last war. They have been growing at an amazing rate. It may well be that before many more years go by there will be in the interior portion of our province a market sufficient to justify some plants, at any rate, to deal with this crude oil which will be flowing through the pipe lines. The importance of having that line through Canada becomes obvious, so that Canadian cities and communities will be in a position to derive the maximum benefit not only from the construction of the line but from the very presence of the line and the proximity of the resource which it carries.

I think we would be betraying our trust and be derelict in the duty that we owe to the Canadian people if we did not put forth every effort to make certain that these advantages are not forever lost to Canada and forever secured to another country. On that basis I do not see that there is any course open to us—particularly to those who took the same stand in connection with the gas pipe lines—but to oppose the incorporation of a company such as this which proposes to follow the route which has just been set forth by the hon. member who introduced the bill in this house.

Not only does the fact that the line should be located within our country become a matter of great importance to the future development of that section of the country, but also the benefit which would follow from the construction of the line itself is a matter which this house should not allow itself to lose sight of. After all, it stands to reason that, if a company which is controlled by American capital obtains a charter to build this line for the major portion of its length through the United States, it will employ Americans to build it, it will use American steel, and all the benefits of construction and maintenance, including roads which must be built in order for them to lay the line, will go to the United States; whereas if we have the foresight and the determination to insist that these benefits shall be preserved for Canada, then we would have those benefits to contribute to the economic development of this country.

There is at least a possibility if not a probability that, under the policy I am advocating, Canadian steel would be used in the construction of the line. Certainly it must be a fact that Canadian men would be employed in the construction of the line through Canada whereas Americans would be employed in the construction of the line through the United States. The same thing applies with respect to the pumping plants and the maintenance plant. These pipe lines require pumping stations at frequent points along their length. Each pumping station requires men to maintain it, to run it and to supervise it. Then there are the line men working on the maintenance and the regular inspection of the line itself. Are these men to be Americans or are they to be Canadians having the advantage of the employment which follows from the development of a Canadian resource? Surely hon. members of this Canadian House of Commons, this Canadian parliament, can come to no other conclusion than that these benefits and these advantages should flow to the country which they serve and whose people elected them as their representatives here to look after their interests. Hon. members can be quite certain that if they do not insist that this line and any other line be built through Canada first, so that the resource shall serve Canada first, then those benefits will flow to the United States and will be forever denied to this country, with the consequent result of even further magnifying the disproportion which now exists between the economic development of the United States and that of Canada.

On that basis, Mr. Speaker, I am content to rest my case; and I appeal to this House of Commons, which showed that it is sensitive to public opinion and which, as a matter of fact, I think showed a good deal of patience when, last year, we were advocating principles to which at that time the majority of the members were not sympathetic. I do appeal now to hon. members of this house, since I am encouraged to believe they appreciate more fully the importance of the principle of the national interest to be served, to assert themselves on this occasion in the interests of Canada in connection with this line, and refuse to give their consent to the incorporation of any company which does not give its undertaking to build its line in such a way that it will serve Canada first.

Mr. G. A. Cruickshank (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I do not know which clock is right, but in case the two clocks are not right and my watch is—

Mr. Sinclair: Look at the calendar.

Mr. Cruickshank: As happened last year, Mr. Speaker, I am to get a certain amount of moral support in my effort not only for the people of my riding on the Pacific coast but for my colleagues who adjoin it.

We are reasonably fortunate in this house that we have some people who not only understand oil, gas lines and wells, but have oil wells. I never owned an oil well. Possibly if I had an oil well there would be a gas well beside it. I understand that some individuals own wells in Alberta. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that I think we should broaden the laws of Canada in order that they could compete on an equal basis with those equally fortunate in other lands who have oil wells. I hold in my hand a clipping. I understand it was published in Toronto. But unlike some other clippings that were produced, this one has the date on it. It is a clipping from the Globe and Mail and is dated March 12, 1951. The reason I am bringing this up, Mr. Speaker, is that I want those who own oil wells in Canada to be just as fortunate as others who own oil wells. The heading of this clipping is:

> Sheik of Araby collects $40,000 daily from oil-rich desert

If the sheik of Araby can have that, there is no reason why any hon. member or anybody else could not have one in Alberta or Saskatchewan, and even in Ontario. But I want to make clear what goes with an oil well. I quote:

> An Arab sheik who reigns over a 50-by-70-mile sandy waste called Kuwait on the hot and humid Persian gulf rakes in tax free every day some $40,000 in oil royalties.
> The money—in rupees—rolls into the private bank accounts of 55-year old Sheik Abdulla Al-Salim Al-Sabah.
> Sheik Abdulla is a genuine sheik. He lives in a palace—

This is the point, Mr. Speaker. I want my colleagues who may be fortunate enough to own oil wells in other parts of the world to have the same privilege. I want them to have not only $40,000 a day—but wait until I read the rest of what he has:

> Sheik Abdulla is a genuine sheik. He lives in a palace, has a harem and wears the flowing white, gold-embroidered kaffiyeh of the desert Arab.

I do not see any reason why anyone owning an oil well in Alberta should not have all of the privileges of the sheik of Araby.

Mr. McIlraith: All of them?

Mr. Cruickshank: I will admit that we westerners would be in a more fortunate position than some from the central provinces in caring for a harem in more ways than one.

Last year, Mr. Speaker, as the previous speaker said, we were accused of staging what they called a filibuster in connection with pipe lines. Those of us who took part in the debate felt that we were unfairly accused of carrying on a filibuster, but we are extremely proud of the fact that we took part in those debates, and I shall tell you why. We are proud of the fact, if for no other reason than that certain of my colleagues both from the glorious province that I come from and even from the lesser provinces now realize the fact so eloquently portrayed by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Laing) the other night when he introduced a bill, backed I presume by very responsible people, if I understood him correctly, and I think I did. I congratulated him when he introduced his bill the other night and I do so again tonight for the same reason, namely, that he implied, and I have every reason to believe he will back it up when it comes before the committee, that the amendment referred to by the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) would be accepted. It is of such vital importance that I shall put it on the record again. This is the amendment moved last year by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green):

> Provided that the main pipe line or lines, either for the transmission or transportation of oil or gas, shall be located entirely within Canada.

That, Mr. Speaker, is all that we are interested in. I had better take a moment to congratulate the sponsor of the bill tonight on the excellent attempt he made in putting a very poor case before the members of this house. If he will say tonight that he will adopt the amendment, go further than that and have it inserted into his bill, as one company has done already owing to the magnificent effort of a few of us last year, providing for an all-Canadian route, there would be no difficulty about it.

Some of my colleagues may not as yet appreciate what Canada means now or what it could mean in the future. I am going to read all of this, Mr. Speaker, before I am through this session. I do not know of any better authority that I can quote when speaking, particularly in this house, but in so far as I am concerned, when speaking before the people anywhere in Canada, than our present Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent). I will be glad to quote him in full but I do not want to take up too much time tonight, Mr. Speaker. I shall quote a part of his remarks as follows:

> It is not only the people of Quebec and New Brunswick who have deplored the fact that the Canadian Pacific had to run through Maine to get to New Brunswick; that was something which concerned the people of the whole dominion. It was because of their feelings in that respect that the Canadian National took the long course through the valley of the Matapedia adding a great many miles to the distance. Nevertheless they provided an all-Canadian route. It was for that reason that the route traced for the transcontinental railway when it was built some forty years ago goes through the county of Temiscouata and into New Brunswick without departing at any time from Canadian soil. That is a thing which I think is of satisfaction to us all.

That is exactly what we endeavoured to do last year in connection with pipe lines, and what a few of us at least intend to do this session. I might quote something about the sheik of Araby, but I do not think you would want me to. Those who are fighting for an all-Canadian route are doing so to benefit their own province and Canada as a whole. No threats or inferences or anything else will deviate us one inch from the path we are following in an endeavour to build up our own province first, along with the entire economy of Canada.

We would like our friends, not only from our own province but from the other provinces, to support this amendment. I should like to hear any member of any party from any province get up on a platform in British Columbia and repudiate this amendment. From the political point of view there is no candidate representing any party who could appear in British Columbia and say that he opposed this amendment. We are not doing this for that reason; we are doing this because we know it is going to build up British Columbia.

Last year it was suggested by the president of a company which wanted to build a United States route—his name was either Nixon or Dickson, a promoter from the United States—that industry does not follow a pipe line. Yet ten days later the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) stated that the United States munitions board or those entrusted with trying to speed up the production of munitions in that great country had asked him to expedite the export of gas into Idaho and Washington. Does that not prove that industry does go with a pipe line? Does not that prove that we should use this gas to promote industry within our own country in these trying times, to build up stockpiles of munitions and other things needed for defence?

I do not think there should be a dissenting voice in this house, irrespective of where the member comes from, when this amendment is put before it. There is one thing to the credit of this company and that is that they have admitted openly that they are going through Kingsgate, down to Spokane, thence to Seattle and then to Vancouver. No doubt I shall have an opportunity to speak again on pipe lines before this session is over. I do not want to take one minute after nine o'clock to press this matter unduly.

I want to salute the premier of Alberta as a Canadian for having stated that no gas or oil will be permitted to be exported until the needs of Canada are met. He deserves every credit for making that statement. I would like to have some of the money coming from the oil wells. I do not understand the money they suggest in Alberta, but I certainly would like to know something about the money that comes from these oil wells.

There is not a solitary soul in British Columbia who wants this United States route. Everyone realizes that hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars are at stake. Every time four or five men can get $80 or $100 together to buy a few pieces of stationery they apply for a charter. The Rockefeller fortune was not made from oil that came from the ground; it was made from the transportation, distribution and sale of oil.

It is inconceivable to me that anyone would want to build up the great country to the south before our own needs are met. It was said last year that some of us do not want gas or oil exported to the United States. That is an argument you would expect to be advanced from the corner from which it was advanced. In a gathering of 262 there is bound to be at least one who cannot understand anything at all. We want to export our surplus to the great country to the south, but we do not want to send our gas to the United States and then back into the great port of Vancouver.

This matter could be easily solved by this company doing what the Trans-Canada company did. I do not see how they could do otherwise. I am sure that the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Laing) will speak after me on this particular bill and with his usual eloquence. When he spoke so eloquently the other night in connection with another pipe line bill he said he was interested in the welfare of his own province. I am proud that he comes from the great city of Vancouver. He has told us that the company whose bill he is sponsoring is going to bring its gas and oil into that great city. This will be greatly appreciated at a time when it is needed for national defence purposes.

I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

Mr. Speaker: The hour for private and public bills having expired, the house resumes the business under consideration at six o'clock.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

PROVISION FOR EARLY DISTRIBUTION OF PAYMENTS AT END OF POOL PERIOD, ETC.

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Howe for the second reading of Bill No. 5, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1935, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Ross (Souris), and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Wright.

Mr. A. C. Stewart (Yorkton): Mr. Speaker, after the eloquent speech we have just listened to I am afraid that my dissertation on wheat will not be particularly interesting to this house. It was stated on a previous occasion, and I think it should be repeated, that of the 262 members there are only 42 who indicated themselves as farmers on their ballot papers. There are roughly only 52 members who are either wheat farmers or who represent wheat farmers. Despite that fact hon. members in every corner have been listening to what has been said on behalf of the western farmers and I trust they will forgive me for taking a little more time in this debate.

I happened to be on the train that came down to Ottawa in February of 1942. I think I was the only member of this house who was on that train which carried a delegation down here to ask the government under the late Right Hon. Mackenzie King to give us $1 per bushel for our wheat. In fact, there were two trainloads of delegates. The hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Whiteside) is now a sitting member but at that time there was no other member of any house, provincial or otherwise, who was on those trains. We received splendid treatment in Ottawa. We put forward a case at that time asking for one dollar wheat, and we finally got 90-cent wheat. I think it is just as well that we refresh our memories about what happened on that occasion. There was not a C.C.F. member of parliament on either of those trains, not one of them, and they had C.C.F. members of parliament at the time.

I want to say further, and I am going to bring you up to date now, that after listening to the different speakers in this debate I shall quote my friend—and he is a friend of mine with a splendid war record—the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross). I shall bring you right up to date, right up to March 13, 1951, when he said that the fact is that the western farmers accepted the wheat board as the agency to sell their wheat. That is correct. At page 1168 of Hansard for March 12, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) stated:

> I intend to show that the arrangements in effect during the five years under discussion were in the interests of the western wheat farmer, and that without these arrangements the situation today would be very much less satisfactory than it is. I intend to show that the Canadian and British governments entered into an agreement that was beneficial to both the Canadian producer and the British consumer, and that the terms of that agreement were fully observed on both sides.

In addition I quite agree with the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) when he says that the advantage of hindsight upon which members of the opposition rely so heavily in this debate is far better than any foresight. After all the government did carry Canada through one war, and even though we may disagree with certain ministers of the government at times, they have handled matters since the war in a very capable manner.

Mr. Ferguson: Purely a matter of opinion.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): You have a right to express your opinion in the same way that I have the right to express mine, and we always have that right in this House of Commons. In addition the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent), who I think has the respect of every member of this house regardless of party, said in answer to a question at page 1023 of Hansard for March 8:

> The government has taken the position that while there was no further obligation on the United Kingdom in a legal sense, the United Kingdom authorities should realize that the wheat growers of Canada and most of the community of the prairie provinces believed that there was a continuing obligation under the "have regard to" clause which had not been discharged.

I am not one who flatters anybody but I happen to have a considerable law practice and I think I know something about the law. As I said, I think the Prime Minister has the respect of this house. He has the respect of the lawyers, and he is serving in a capacity where he is earning only one-third of what he could earn outside of this house. I am also satisfied as a westerner born in Saskatchewan of Ontario stock on both sides for five generations that if the wheat crop had been sold under the auspices of the Winnipeg grain exchange—and I am looking at the hon. member for Souris now—it would have been sold over the five-year period at lower prices.

That is my conviction because of trips I made to the city of Winnipeg when I was a boy in knee pants. I visited some of the fine streets, Wellington crescent, and so on—and members from the city of Winnipeg know that city as well as I do and better—and every other place on some of those streets was a hundred thousand dollar home that had been built by some member of the Winnipeg grain exchange. Who paid for it? The farmers of western Canada.

Westerners who have travelled east for many years feel that the cities of Winnipeg, Fort William, Port Arthur, and clean through to Montreal have benefited from the production of western wheat. Sometimes I think that this legislature should conduct a travel trip of easterners from all parts of eastern Canada through the three prairie provinces. I think they would be inclined to agree with me. The Minister of Trade and Commerce would not be in this house and his worthy confrere from the adjoining city would not be here because there would be no Fort William and Port Arthur if it had not been for western Canada. It would not have been possible to elect members from either of those cities.

In so far as the United Kingdom is concerned, if I may be pardoned for saying so, I served with the first division overseas, went through Ypres, the first gas attack, and so on. I am not saying this personally but to show that I certainly cannot be attacked in this house by anyone as being an enemy of Great Britain. The records are all available. I was the first Canadian soldier in the castle of Edinburgh. In the Guildhall they sat me in the Lord Mayor's chair because I was the first Canadian soldier there. You can find that on record. My only brother was killed overseas. I do not think anybody can say that my remarks from now on will be against Great Britain or anti-British. However, as a westerner I am not satisfied that Great Britain under its socialistic government has played ball, nor am I satisfied with the attitude of the leader of the C.C.F. (Mr. Coldwell) who, if I may be pardoned for saying so, never visited Great Britain during any war and in addition never answered certain questions I was desirous of asking him with respect to the agreement under discussion in this house.

When the final analysis is made the public of Canada will have intense respect for the Prime Minister of this country. They will also have respect for the Minister of Trade and Commerce who demonstrated in one war what can be done in the organization of Canadian industry. In so far as the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) is concerned, he and I were political opponents at times, and we even got down to a lot of personal terms when we debated. Most of the personal terms came from the Minister of Agriculture, not myself. I think even the hon. member for Souris will agree, however, that if you remove the Minister of Agriculture from public life out west and try to elect somebody else to represent western agriculture you are going to have one fine job replacing him. While I have not at times agreed with him politically, I think everybody in the house knows that he knows his department and that he is quite capable of answering questions connected therewith.

I would label him a professional politician, and we are simply amateurs at the game. I think I speak for western opinion in my constituency. I have carried my constituency both as an independent on several occasions and as a Liberal on the final occasion when I removed the C.C.F. fellow who was there before. I was also interested in the remarks made this afternoon by the hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot). I do not think the hon. member has ever been out west, so I am giving him an invitation now to come out and let me show him around.

Mr. Pouliot: Thank you. This is the first time I have been invited.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): We will give you a good time. I tried to make a note of what the hon. member said; he will correct me if I am wrong, but I understood his remarks to be to this effect: "Be reasonable. You have had enough at the expense of the people of Canada,"—referring to the western provinces. "When will the western farmer be satisfied? If I were the member for a western constituency I would say we were satisfied." The hon. member also mentioned that Ontario and Quebec pay 80 per cent of the taxes paid in Canada. In connection with the returns on western grain he went on to say that the farmers of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta were crying for additional money just as babies cry for castor oil.

Mr. Pouliot: No, I said Castoria.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): Well, I asked the hon. member to correct me if I was wrong; they have the same result, anyway. He went on to say that the farmers of the west are never satisfied and never contented. Well, I do not know; I am merely expressing my view as a former independent and now a Liberal in this house. Perhaps our western farmers are not completely satisfied, but we are rather aggressive people out there. When I went through the maritimes with the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Black) I saw more ox teams than I ever saw out west, and my father was with General McNaughton's father as a settler in 1882. When I drove around the Gaspe peninsula twenty years ago—

Mr. Black (Cumberland): You must have been a Conservative in those days.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): No, I was an independent. I have never been a Conservative, though I see the press labelled me as one the other day. But there are worse things than Conservatives. You have them sitting away to your left and I do not know why you handle them so gently. As a matter of fact I would like to see a much stronger opposition in this house; then you would give us something to fight about. Now I should like to file a table showing farm prices for wheat in the United States and Canada, as obtained from the dominion bureau of statistics, together with a table showing prices of wheat from 1907 to 1950, which gives a long-term average of $1.27 a bushel. These figures will demonstrate to anyone in the house that the prices paid for wheat in the last five years were the highest during any five-year period in the history of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member consent to have the tables appear in Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): Who objects?

Mr. Speaker: Unless there is unanimous consent the tables may not appear.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fraser: What is the table?

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): I explained it a moment ago. If you still object I can read the whole thing, but it will only take that much more time. It is correct; it is from the bureau of statistics.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house agree that the table may appear in Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): The first table is as follows:

Of course it is very easy for any westerner to make himself popular at home and in this house by advocating western rights, but in my opinion we have to consider Canadian unity; and in western Canada we must make our decision on the matter of remaining within confederation. If hon. members are inclined to disagree with the statements that have been made by three responsible ministers of the crown, they had better bear in mind the alternative, which is the possible disruption of Canadian unity.

Mr. Ross (Souris): They were not very united.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): The tables I have filed will disclose that the prices south of the line during the five year period were not so high compared with the Canadian prices in other years, as the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) has made plain already. It is interesting to note that during the course of this debate the leader of the C.C.F. party (Mr. Coldwell) had this to say, at page 1174 of Hansard for March 12:

> I want to say to him that when this agreement was initiated, when it was before the house, we supported it. We believed, as the minister has said tonight. that it would give the western farmer some stability in his price.

Well, I always say hindsight is better than foresight.

Mr. Ferguson: Stop reading your speech.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): If you want to make a speech get up and make it.

Mr. Ferguson: I would not have to read it.

Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): How else would you give a quotation? At page 1176 I questioned the leader of the C.C.F. as follows:

> Will the hon. member permit a question?
> Mr. Coldwell: I do not mind.
> Mr. Stewart (Yorkton): Did you as leader of the C.C.F. party at any time protest to your fellow socialist government in Great Britain that a better price should be paid under the wheat agreement? That is question number one.

[Mr. Stewart (Yorkton).]

> Mr. Coldwell: Just a moment. I do not believe it is the privilege of any hon. member of the Canadian parliament to approach the government of any country on a question of this kind except through the government of his own country.

That statement is ridiculous and incorrect. The hon. member has a perfect right to write to the government of any country, as I have written to the government of Australia, where I was, and as I have written to the government of New Zealand, where I was. Of course it is up to that government whether or not it wants to give you the information. I would also say to the hon. member that it is always the privilege of the hon. member to privately ask the government of another country questions in connection with their administration. I agree that the question of courtesy as between governments comes in, so that there is no misuse of this privilege. However, I am satisfied from the answer of the hon. member that he never made any attempt to persuade his fellow socialists in the government of Great Britain to pay the western producers of wheat one cent more a bushel. If he wants to deny this statement he may rise in his place and do so.

In conclusion may I say that many of our western farmers, particularly those who went through the hungry thirties, may not be completely satisfied with the final payment. However, having regard not only to the "have regard" clause accepted by the British Labour government and later disregarded by that same government, apparently with the implied approval of their counterpart in this country, the C.C.F., labourites will still contend that wheat prices should be kept up and the price of flour kept down. In this case I think the government have exercised good judgment, and I therefore marvel at our Conservative friends, who do not even support the Conservative opposition of Great Britain as against the socialist government over there. If they are really sincere—as I am sure the hon. member for Souris and the hon. member for Cumberland are—instead of riding the government on this wheat agreement they had better get busy and get behind the next British government, and then possibly we will arrive at a proper understanding with Great Britain. We will never get it under a socialist government in that country, which will repudiate as socialists always believe in the repudiation of agreements.

Mr. J. S. Sinnott (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, my first words tonight will be words of appreciation to the member for Provencher (Mr. Jutras) for the way he presented the case of the western farmers this afternoon. He handled it so well that I shall not attempt to repeat anything he said. I did not intend to take any part in this debate but owing to the reference made to me by one of our socialist friends across the way—I believe he referred to me as the bluff member for Springfield—I feel I must say a few words. I believe I shall refer to that member as the boisterous, bellicose curator and pretender of the socialist party, better known as the hardware merchant from Moose Jaw. This member referred to me in connection with a statement made in the House of Commons on June 5 last by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe). The member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Thatcher) knows as well as I that backbenchers on this side of the house have no say in drawing up government policy, except in government caucus. I think the remarks he made at that time were not in order at all.

In my opinion and in the opinion of many members in this house, the announcement by the Minister of Trade and Commerce on June 5 was very vague.

Some hon. Members: Hurrah! Proceed.

Mr. Sinnott: In my opinion, and in the opinion of many members in this house, it was not completed. The farmers of western Canada believed that after they had given the British people wheat at prices much lower than the world price they were entitled to at least another nickel a bushel from the government of Great Britain. In the west we were always hopeful that this payment would come through. Following the visit of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) to Great Britain the other day, we were told that the government of Great Britain would not make a payment under the "have regard to" clause. I believe that we in this house, and the people of western Canada, can be very thankful that this government, with only three western members in a cabinet of sixteen, has elected to make a payment of $65 million to the western farmer. It is something to be thankful for.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to the amendment moved by the member for Souris (Mr. Ross) at page 1057 of Hansard. The amendment reads:

> That this bill be not now read a second time but that further consideration thereof be deferred until this house has had an opportunity to record its opinion on the government's announced decision with respect to the final settlement of the five-year wheat pool and on the government's mishandling of the sale of wheat and other grains covered by the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

I should like to refer also to the member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe), and if my socialist friends will keep quiet for a moment I shall possibly be able to help them. At page 1088 of Hansard, the hon. member said:

> I well recall that many on this side of the house proclaimed as vigorously as they could that this bulk trading policy was unsound in practice and would be a colossal blunder in the marketing of our wheat.

This afternoon the member for Souris asked a question of the member for Provencher. Here you have the two Conservative stalwarts saying in this house that the bulk trading policy should be discarded. In other words, we should go back to the open market and the grain exchange.

Mr. Ross (Souris): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, neither I nor the member for Dufferin-Simcoe mentioned the open market or the grain exchange.

Mr. Sinnott: Possibly I should read again what the member for Souris said. Perhaps he can understand his own words. His amendment reads:

> That this bill be not now read a second time but that further consideration thereof be deferred until this house has had an opportunity to record its opinion on the government's announced decision with respect to the final settlement of the five-year wheat pool and on the government's mishandling of the sale of wheat and other grains covered by the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

When I couple those words with the words used by the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe, it is just about as plain as it possibly could be.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Read it; do not put words in his mouth, you read it.

Mr. Sinnott: I read this twice, and if the hon. member for Souris still does not understand it he can spend the rest of the evening reading it. The hon. member for Souris has gone to great pains to show that the farmers of western Canada lost $330 million. I believe his colleague, the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe, stressed an imaginary sum of $700 million. These two hon. members should get together on these things so they would be able to agree.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Would you read the portion in which the hon. member said anything about $700 million?

Mr. Sinnott: I want to refer to the results obtained under the open marketing system for ten years, and then refer to the 600 million bushels of wheat sold to Britain under these agreements. Then we can readily understand how much we would have lost had we carried on under the open market system. Like the hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. Stewart), I have the figures here from 1935-36 up to 1944-45. If it is the wish of the hon. members I could put them on Hansard; otherwise I shall read them.

Some hon. Members: Read them.

Mr. Sinnott: During 1935-36 the western farmers sold 214 million bushels of wheat.

The high price at that time was $1.02 and the low was 77 cents, making a difference of 25 cents.

Mr. Argue: Under a Liberal government.

Mr. Sinnott: Under an open market. In 1936-37 we find the farmers sold 165 million bushels of wheat at a high of $1.46 and a low of $1.04, making a difference of 42 cents. In 1937-38, 126 million bushels were sold at a high of $1.49 and a low of 77 cents, a difference of 72 cents. In 1938-39, 291 million bushels of wheat were sold at a high of 65 cents and a low of 55 cents, making a difference of 10 cents. In 1939-40, 427 million bushels of wheat were sold at a high of 89 cents and a low of 70 cents, a difference of 19 cents; in 1940-41, 458 million bushels of wheat were sold at a high of 77 cents and a low of 70 cents, making a difference of 7 cents; in 1941-42, 228 million bushels of wheat were sold at a high of 89 cents and a low of 72 cents, making a difference of 17 cents; in 1942-43, 268 million bushels of wheat were sold at a high of $1.12 and a low of 89 cents, making a difference of 23 cents. In 1943-44, 327 million bushels of wheat were sold at a high of $1.37 and a low of $1.25, making a difference of 12 cents. In 1944-45 there were 353 million bushels of wheat sold at a high of $1.43 and a low of $1.25, making a difference of 18 cents.

When the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross) spoke, he said that the farmers had lost $330 million. I wonder how they could have lost $330 million when they never had it? They never had it to lose.

Mr. Rowe: You never let them get it.

Mr. Sinnott: If this wheat had been sold under the system of the grain exchange which the Free Press has advocated for years and the hon. member for Souris has never put on the record until he moved this resolution where he stood, it goes to prove that this $330 million which we may have got would have gone into the pockets of the speculators and not into the pockets of the farmers in western Canada.

Mr. Ross (Souris): It might have gone back to the Liberal kitty.

An hon. Member: What is that?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Sinnott: One has only to look at the market for flax in this last six months. In the month of October, flax was selling at about $3.15 a bushel and today it is around $5.32. I will venture to say that sixty days after the flax is harvested most of it is in the hands of the speculators and the rising price goes to the speculator every time. That is why I believe that the wheat board should handle not only wheat and barley but also oats, rye and flax.

[Mr. Sinnott.]

An hon. Member: And rye.

Mr. Sinnott: I am glad the hon. member said "rye"; and I do not refer to rye in the bottle. Rye fluctuated last year from around $1.92 a bushel to $2.42 a bushel.

An hon. Member: That is caused by the excise tax.

Mr. Sinnott: If any hon. gentleman purchased a bottle of rye he would know that it was $4.25 a bottle then and that it is still $4.25 now. It does not make any difference.

An hon. Member: Cheap rye.

Mr. Ross (Souris): That was pretty well watered down.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Sinnott: Mr. Speaker, some people wonder why the Liberal party have so many friends.

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. Sinnott: They wonder why there are 182 Liberals here.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Sinnott: I will tell you why. At any time that any part of Canada has had any difficulty, the Liberal party has always come to their rescue. I want to tell the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) that I will be here a long time longer than he will.

Mr. Argue: That depends on how you vote.

Mr. Sinnott: We should not be alarmed at paying $65 million to the western wheat growers. We have had a few hot speeches here by some of the members from the east. We appreciate that. Our friends back in the west will say: Well, those fellows down east opposed us all the way. We are appreciative of getting what we got. I want to point out that it is not only the western farmers who have had a handout. As I said before, when other parts of the country were in trouble, the Liberal party always came to their rescue.

An hon. Member: Apples in Nova Scotia.

Mr. Sinnott: Yes; they gave half a million dollars I think to the apple growers of Nova Scotia; and they gave $2 million to the apple growers of British Columbia.

Mr. Higgins: What for?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Sinnott: And as to those people who are feeding stock down in eastern Canada, they also gave freight subsidies to the eastern farmers of $154 million.

Mr. Cardiff: What did the western farmer get?

Mr. Sinnott: The Liberal party has been generous wherever there has been a disaster. I never heard any man in this house object to the help that the Liberal party gave to the Fraser valley at the time of the flood.

Mr. Fraser: It was not the Liberal party. It was all the people of Canada.

Mr. Sinnott: I never heard anyone oppose the contribution made to the Red river valley. I never heard anybody in this house complain about the amount this house contributed for the help of those affected by the Cabano and Rimouski fires. All those are contributions which were necessary. If the Liberal party saw that this $65 million was necessary to the western farmer, all well and and good.

Mr. Rowe: It looks like another fire sale.

An hon. Member: It all comes out of the Liberal party.

Mr. Sinnott: I have heard the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) plead the case of every Tom, Dick and Harry.

Mr. Ross (Souris): And Johnny.

Mr. Sinnott: At the same time I have never heard him say one solitary word for the farmers of western Canada since I have been here. I want to ask the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre if he ever went out and milked a cow or if he ever went out and did a day's work on the farm. If he never has, and he does not know what it takes to produce a pound of butter or a pound of pork, I will tell you what I will do. I will take him out to my farm and let him put in a day's work with me. Then he will know what a day's work is.

Mr. Argue: That would be your first day.

Mr. Sinnott: When the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre pleads for eight hours, shorter work and more pay, I want to tell him that in half of this country today the labour force is working eight hours, shorter work, more pay, and more holidays. On the other hand, they are now complaining because the butter price is rising. The people who produced butter many years ago have the very same things to go through today. If the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre can tell me how he can tell those farmers to work eight hours or shorter hours and get more pay, and produce more butter, I should like him to do so.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Sinnott: I think I should throw out a challenge to the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Thatcher) as well.

He has been punching the empty packing cases of the farmers, because I do not believe he ever put up a stook in his life.

Our genial friend the hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot)—I refer to him in a kindly way, because he has always given this house some very anxious moments.

Mr. Pouliot: Hear, hear.

Mr. Rowe: Did he ever milk a cow?

Mr. Sinnott: The reason I refer to him in a kindly way is that he did not say he was going to vote against the $65 million for the western wheat growers.

Mr. Pouliot: Wait and see.

Mr. Sinnott: I did not catch the remark. I should like to remind him that the human mind sometimes forgets too soon. I want to remind him that this house voted not too long ago to take over the defunct and decrepit railway which is in his riding, and we are still operating it I believe at a considerable loss.

Mr. Pouliot: No, no.

Mr. Sinnott: Therefore I close with these remarks. When we come to vote these poor western farmers what is coming to them because our socialist friends over in England did not see fit to help us out, it would be a kindly gesture on the part of both the Conservatives and the C.C.F. to withdraw their amendments so that we could make it unanimous.

Mr. E. G. Hansell (Macleod): I do not expect to entertain the house so hilariously as the previous speaker, but I do feel that I should just say a word before this vote is taken on account of the fact that I represent the wheat growing farmers in a large part of my constituency, and by virtue of the fact that I, as well as many others, have received numerous letters and telegrams from individuals and farm organizations asking that we press for a final payment of at least 25 cents a bushel.

I listened with a good deal of interest to the previous speaker, as we all did. He is quite entertaining at times, but sometimes I do feel that his arguments are a little weak. I could not help thinking that when he was asking some of those who represent city constituencies whether they had ever been on a farm or whether they had ever milked a cow. I wondered whether a requisite for debating this subject should be that you had to have the qualifications of pulling—what do you call it? Well, yip yanks, whatever you want to say.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I looked at the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) who was partially responsible for all this, and I had to ask myself a question. I wonder how many yip yanks he has pulled in his lifetime, because he is not registered as a farmer either. And even the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), while probably he has had some little experience farming, I do not know, is described in the Parliamentary Guide as a teacher and for the most part of his life has been either in the legislature or in the House of Commons. And as I look over the entire cabinet—I have not scrutinized them one by one—I doubt whether there are any farmers in the cabinet at all. But that does not disqualify them for the positions which they hold, even though some of them have to deal with matters of trade and commerce, agriculture and so forth.

I do have a little sympathy with the government. I am not so hard-hearted that I cannot begin to look at two sides of the question. It is not easy in these very complicated times to negotiate trade agreements that are going to be one hundred per cent satisfactory all round. We are living in difficult days. We are living in days when we do not know what the value of the dollar and the value of the pound are to be next year or even a few months from now. We notice in today's paper that there is quite a run on the New York stock exchange. It may be just a temporary affair, but who knows what might happen in the next little while? We are living in complicated times.

When the government goes out to negotiate a trade agreement, especially if they desire to look into the future four or five years ahead, and negotiate an agreement on the basis of what might happen in four or five years, they have a difficult task. I do believe that the government might have relied a little bit more on the wheat board to do this trading for them. What has actually happened of course is that the government tied up five years of wheat marketing by a trade agreement signed by them; consequently leaving the wheat board as simply a machine, a rubber stamp, for five years.

The next thing I should like to say is that if the government's case in respect of what might happen two, three, four or five years from the time they signed on the dotted line did not turn out as they expected it would, then they cannot escape the responsibility. That is all there is to it. And if the western farmer was given to understand that he would get a better deal than he got, then the baby is immediately placed upon the doorstep of this government where it belongs.

I should like to quote one or two views that have been expressed by some prominent men in Canada. The premiers of some of the provinces cannot be wiped aside when it comes to the expression of their opinions with respect to this final wheat payment. The premiers of the provinces are nobody's fools. They are men who have to deal with big business and some of the provinces are dealing with business almost as large as some of the things with which the Ottawa government has to deal with. Let me quote what Premier Manning said respecting the announcement of the final wheat payment of 8·3 cents, as follows:

> The figure announced for final settlement (8·3 cents a bushel additional for the five year period) was a surprise and keen disappointment, and by no stretch of the imagination can be regarded as a fair and equitable settlement.
> No matter what the extenuating circumstances, the fact remains that the farmers of western Canada suffered a loss of hundreds of millions of dollars to supply wheat to Britain under the Anglo-Canadian wheat agreement at a figure below prevailing world prices.
> The farmers were led to believe that what is known as the "have regard to" clause in the agreement would protect their interests and assure an equitable adjustment to offset any loss sustained.
> If the government of the United Kingdom disclaims any obligation to offset this loss, there is an inescapable moral obligation on the government of Canada that negotiated the agreement, to see that our primary producers are not now left to absorb the loss involved.
> The meagre adjustment payment now proposed goes but a very short distance toward correcting the wrong.

Next I should like to quote the statement of the premier of Saskatchewan, Mr. Douglas. Although Mr. Douglas is not a farmer, as the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Sinnott) may have desired him to be, I will say that I sat in this house at the same time Mr. Douglas was a member and I could not help but notice that he paid particular attention and gave a great deal of study to the matter of the Canadian wheat board, its operations and the subject of wheat generally. I believe he became more or less an expert for we heard him debate the subject many times when he was here. Mr. Douglas said this:

> The farmers will be bitterly disappointed at the amount of the settlement. Two things seem to have been overlooked by the federal government. First, the farmers had $49 million coming to them on the basis of wheat used for domestic consumption which was given the millers at a low price to maintain the price ceiling. This would work out to about 3½ cents a bushel. Second, Mr. Gardiner and the federal government agreed in 1946 that if, as a result of the removal of price controls, the cost of production made the price guaranteed under the agreement inadequate, then some compensatory adjustment would be made in the same manner as was provided under the Agricultural Prices Support Act.

Had these two principles been kept in mind the farmers, in my opinion, would be entitled to anywhere from 15 to 25 cents a bushel on the five-year pool.

That is Mr. Douglas' comment. I should like to read another comment by another man whom some in this house may regard as worthy of speaking on this subject. I refer to Mr. Tucker, the leader of the opposition in the Saskatchewan legislature, who sat in this house as a member. When people make statements in legislatures or in parliament there is sometimes a slight political tinge to them. Human nature being what it is, we have to grant that. Regardless of the fact that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) last night absolved the British government from any responsibility in the matter, a news report quotes Mr. Tucker as follows:

Opposition Leader Walter Tucker said he was glad to hear Ottawa had decided to pay $65 million to the wheat board to bring the final payment to 8·3 cents, but he was disappointed the payment was not going to be considerably higher.

"Unfortunately," said Mr. Tucker, "the British government has finally refused to recognize any further obligation under the 'have regard to' clause. Had the British government paid the same price for wheat supplied under the British contract as other countries paid for Canadian wheat it would have had to pay over $400 million more than it did."

Considering the sacrifices of the British people in the war, Mr. Tucker said he hesitated to speak as strongly about the situation as perhaps he should. But he was satisfied that if the British people knew the exact facts of the case they would repudiate the action of their government in refusing to live up to the spirit of the contract under which they had benefited so greatly.

Mr. Tucker and the Minister of Trade and Commerce had better get together to iron out their differences. There is another thing I want to say in order to keep the record straight. I have not a great deal of use for socialism or for the policies of the British government. But I do not think we can blame the British government for everything. There is one thing that many people do not recognize, that the socialist government of Great Britain inherited a very bad situation. I am not saying whether they made that situation any better or not, but I do say that no matter who had taken over the reins of government in Great Britain at the time Mr. Attlee did they would have had a mighty tough job.

There were forces in the world that were out to wreck Great Britain no matter how they did it. They have done a fair job of wrecking Great Britain economically. That was the situation inherited by the socialist government. Therefore I do not blame them for everything. Financial circumstances have compelled them to do many things, whether they wanted to or not. I say further that the British people and the British government historically have been known throughout the ages to meet their obligations. I say that their word is still as good as their bond, and when Mr. Tucker talks this way he is doing a grave injustice to a great race of people. My hon. friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), reminds me that Mr. Tucker is doing an injustice to Canada. No doubt he thought he was doing it to protect the Liberal government here. He did not protect it which is evidenced by one of the best things that could have happened and that was the frank statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) last night which absolved the British government from blame.

With reference to the 8·3 cents a bushel we know that the government is digging up $65 million. I might ask the question: How did they arrive at $65 million? I know their answer. However, I would ask further: Why did they not make it $105 million? Why did they not make it $205 million? The answer might be: Well, you know when we do that we have got to tax the people. Let us not fool ourselves with respect to this matter. Eventually of course if our great national debt has to be paid then of course it has got to be paid out of taxation under the present financial policy of the government. Of course if they want to utilize the Bank of Canada and change their policies that is a different matter.

As a matter of fact they could have made the figure $205 million or $265 million. They could have given the farmers a better price than 8·3 cents per bushel. With respect to all the hollering about the east having to pay the western farmer, the east is not paying the western farmer anything. It is a misconception. When the government begins to make payments for these things it just goes into the debt structure of the country. The whole country may be called upon eventually to sacrifice in order to remove that debt.

An hon. Member: Of course.

Mr. Hansell: Do not say "of course". Of course they will if this government stays here. But do not make any mistake about it. There is no guarantee that this government is going to run the country for the next two or three centuries. As a matter of fact sometimes changes can come very fast. All you want in Canada is something to capture the imagination of the people, and believe me this government will go out just as quickly as a good many governments have gone out in the past.

An hon. Member: You will not be here.

Mr. Hansell: If the financial policy were changed it might alter the entire picture.

and that is what is needed in Canada today. However, even under the policy of the present Liberal government, if they had paid $265 million it would have simply gone into the debt structure, and no one would have known the difference. Let me ask my hon. friends from eastern Canada not to think for a moment that if the government paid $265 million they would have to rush around everywhere with a hat and say: Come on, you eastern people, fork out; build up the pile. That is not the way it is done.

It simply goes into the debt structure of the nation, which some time or other might have to be paid off. When it will ever be paid the Lord only knows.

An hon. Member: And he ain't talking.

Mr. Hansell: He has already spoken. I am afraid if he did do a little talking out loud something would surely happen. I do say, Mr. Speaker, that if the government had desired to do so, if they had desired to play fair with the western farmers, even though they did not pay the 25 cents that farm organizations all over the country were demanding they could have paid 12 cents, 15 cents or a little more. It would have been a much more satisfactory situation than offering them a pittance of 8·3 cents per bushel when they expected double that or more. I say that is what they should have done.

Of course they missed their guess when they signed the agreement. They expected that the price of wheat would go down because that is what usually happens after a war. Instead there was an accelerating of prices throughout the world, an inflationary period throughout the world. Let not the government say that they are not partially responsible, because there has been inflation in Canada as well as in other nations. They have been part and parcel of the inflationary rise in prices throughout the world because they adhere to the same financial policies that some other nations follow.

Because the price of everything began to boom they of course missed their guess. Instead of prices going down they went up, and of course that meant that the diagnosis of the future, or shall I say the prognosis, was wrong. Therefore I say if it was wrong then it is their responsibility to make it right with the farmers. I am going to vote for these amendments. When the government have made a statement that they will pay 8·3 cents I suppose they consider it would be a catastrophe for them to change their minds, but if they would I can tell them that it would be very pleasing to the agricultural industry of Canada.

[Mr. Hansell.]

Mr. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, after listening to the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Sinnott) this evening I must confess that I have more reasons than I previously knew of for regretting that I have been unable to attend the sessions for the past few days, because one could only ask: How long has this been going on? It was difficult enough to understand some of the explanations that were given on reading them in the press and hearing condensations over the radio, but they were certainly easy to understand compared with the explanation we received from the hon. member for Springfield as to the reasons which should guide members in dealing with this problem tonight.

The discussion which I have been reading in Hansard, because of my inability to be in the house for the past few days, has related to other matters than those directly in issue on the second reading of the bill before the house which amends the wheat board act. There might be some difference of opinion as to whether a great deal of that discussion has actually been within the ambit of the motion before the house. Nevertheless once the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) took advantage of this debate to make his explanation of the reason for the payment that had been decided upon, and the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) later decided it was appropriate that he should give another explanation, then obviously this debate took a form which is now established; and we cannot disregard the fact that the main subject under discussion, no matter what may be the contents of the bill now before us, is the contract between the government of Canada and the government of the United Kingdom and the statements that have been made in regard to that contract, its fulfilment or otherwise by the government of the United Kingdom and the arrangements that have been made by this government to meet whatever losses have resulted to the farmers of western Canada.

If there is one thing that has emerged very clearly from the discussions in the house today—and they are the first discussions I have actually heard in this debate—it is that there is the utmost confusion as to what is really in issue. The discussion has related to the contract, whether it has been carried out by the government of Great Britain, and whether the arrangements being made are adequate having regard to the terms of the contract. It seems to me essential that we keep clearly in mind that the payment announced in this house last week by the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) is not a payment under the contract at all. The announcement made it perfectly clear that the payment of $65 million is to wind up the five year wheat pool. How that figure was arrived at he did not explain. Reference was made to the fact that a balance of $65 million remained of the loan to Great Britain, which the government of Great Britain had not taken up. However, there was no attempt to explain the process by which that figure was arrived at. Surely before the members of this house should be asked to express an opinion as to whether that or any other sum is an appropriate figure the government should place before this house the basis upon which they made their computations and the calculations which resulted in the figure they have adopted. It is meaningless to suggest that it is adequate or inadequate so far as the government is concerned unless we know how they worked it out, unless we know how they arrived at this arithmetical calculation.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Agriculture are as far apart as two ministers of the same government ever could have been in explaining the same transaction. The Minister of Agriculture has given one explanation regarding what has happened; the Minister of Trade and Commerce has given another. In the explanation of the Minister of Agriculture the implication was clear that the government of Great Britain had failed to live up to its agreement. In fact the implication went further than that and even suggested that consideration had been given to carrying this question to the international court of justice. There would have been no reason for a reference to the possibility of taking this before the international court of justice unless that had been considered by this government. That is an extremely serious imputation. It is an extremely serious charge. It leaves an impression in the minds of the members of this house and in the minds of the people of Canada that our oldest partner, the nation upon which we have looked as the model of integrity under our form of parliamentary government, cannot in fact be relied upon to carry out its word. For that reason I think the members of this house and the people of Canada generally will welcome the statement last night by the Minister of Trade and Commerce that in his opinion the British government had in no way defaulted under the terms of this contract. But the members of this house and the people of Canada are left in the unsatisfactory position that they do not know which minister is making the statement on behalf of the government that we are supposed to accept.

I hope it will not be suggested that any uncertainty has been removed, because in this house this evening we have heard the suggestion repeated that there has been default. The hon. member who repeated that did so with appropriate safeguards to his own reputation for belief in the integrity of the government of the United Kingdom; but he made it perfectly clear that in his opinion there had been some substantial measure of default. Reference was made by the last speaker to a statement made only a few days ago in Saskatchewan by the leader of one of the parties in that province, which indicated quite clearly that he had gained the same impression and that in his opinion there was default under the terms of this contract.

If there was no default, if there was no obligation, moral or otherwise, on the part of the government of Great Britain to make any further payment than has been made, then naturally it is necessary for hon. members to know the principle under which that payment is being made, and also the principle under which substantially larger amounts are being claimed. At this point let me say I am convinced that every hon. member of this house is anxious to do what can be done to see that the farmers of western Canada and in fact all agricultural producers in Canada are dealt with fairly whenever the government assumes a direct measure of responsibility for the amount of money they shall receive. The obligation of this government would not end even if no further payment were due under this contract. Unquestionably there is a moral obligation on the part of the government. It must be remembered that the wheat taken over for the purpose of fulfilling this contract was taken over under compulsion. I find it difficult to believe that, at a time when this government is assuming such sweeping powers to take over any material that may be required under the present emergency, in fact to demand any services which may be regarded as necessary to meet the requirements of this emergency, members would not wish to be sure that those services and those materials are going to be paid for fairly and justly by this government. For that reason we should recognize the moral obligation that must always exist where the government compels the delivery of any commodity or any service to pay what properly should be paid for that commodity, that material or that service.

Therefore, no matter what the terms of the contract with Britain may have been, a contract between the government of Canada and the government of Great Britain and not a contract between this government and the farmers of Canada, it is the duty of the government of Canada to recognize its moral obligation to compensate the farmers fairly for what has been delivered to the government. The farmers did not negotiate this contract. That fact seems to be overlooked in a great deal of the discussion. The farmers had nothing whatever to do with the terms of this contract. Whether or not they approved or otherwise at a later date, individually or through any of their organizations, is apart from the point. The contract was negotiated between the government of Canada and the government of Great Britain. The Canadian government took the responsibility of compelling delivery of the wheat which would be necessary to carry out the terms of that contract.

What is the figure that would properly compensate the farmers of western Canada? What is the moral obligation? Mr. Speaker, I submit that nothing has been placed before the hon. members of this house to show what that figure is. Is it fifty cents a bushel? Is it twenty-five cents a bushel? Is it ten cents a bushel? Is it five cents a bushel? Certainly there has been nothing put before this house to show how the figure of 8·3 cents per bushel was arrived at. This is not something to be dealt with in a casual manner. At a time when the people of this country are being asked to pay large sums in taxes, the government, which has already taken such sweeping powers over personal services—as well as materials and products of this country, should give us a great deal more information about this than we have today.

Last night the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe), in a speech which was carefully prepared to place before this house and the people of Canada his position in regard to that contract for which he has quite willingly assumed at all times the major responsibility so far as can be discerned in this house, presented argument after argument to show why in his opinion this was a good contract. At no point in the speech he made, which I have read quite carefully today, did he even suggest any reason for a payment beyond the payment provided for by the contract itself. Does the Minister of Trade and Commerce believe that the western farmers have received all that they should receive? So far as his speech last night is concerned, we have no evidence that he believes that anything further should be paid. But his speech went a great deal further than that. Over and over again last night he not only explained why he thought this contract, under all the circumstances, was a contract that was eminently fair to the farmers of western Canada, but he also emphasized the fact that the British government had fully lived up to the terms of that contract; that they were in default in no way.

If that is so, then there seems to be only one member of the government from whom we can receive the information which we should have, and that is the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent). We have the extraordinary situation of the two senior members of this government, other than the Prime Minister, giving to this house and the people of Canada an entirely different interpretation of the reason for the course that is being followed by the government at this time. In fact I believe the Minister of Trade and Commerce in his closing words left an impression which could well have been left in the first place on behalf of the government, if in fact that is the position that the government takes. These were his words, and I quote from page 1173 of Hansard for March 12:

> . . . I am very happy the agreement was made. I am happy the way it has worked out, and I deplore the suggestion that the British government has not played fair with the Canadian people.

If that is his position, and he has made it clear on a number of occasions that it is the position he wishes this house to accept, then surely the Minister of Trade and Commerce would not be the one to explain to us just how this figure was arrived at, and just what the governing factors were which led to the arithmetical calculation. The Minister of Agriculture, of course, did refer to the figure of $65 million, as did the Prime Minister. The Minister of Agriculture recently went over to Britain, and certain discussions were reopened. The Minister of Trade and Commerce has pointed out that, while there was no obligation under the contract involved, the Canadian government considered it advisable to inform the United Kingdom government of the views of certain producer groups who felt that sufficient account had not been taken in the final settlement of the so-called "have regard to" clause. He went on to explain that the Prime Minister in London and here had discussed this subject within the past few months with the representatives of the British government and that then the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) had recently gone to London to extend those discussions. It has been stated in this house and it has been stated outside the house that the Minister of Agriculture went over with a definite proposal. It has been stated that he presented to the government of Great Britain a proposition that they should take up the remaining $65 million of the loan made by the government of Canada on behalf of the people of Canada and made available to the government of Great Britain, and that this $65 million should then be paid by the government of Great Britain as their apparent computation of the final payment under this contract. Either that is correct or it is not. The statement has been made and it has not been challenged. I believe that this house should be informed by the Prime Minister whether that is correct. I think that the members of this house have a right to know—

Mr. St. Laurent: Mr. Speaker, if the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) wishes the information, he might perhaps look at the official answer which was given to a question put by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue). It may be found in Hansard at page 1023. There is a statement there that was filed in answer to a question put by the hon. member for Assiniboia; and that statement is entirely correct.

Mr. Drew: No, Mr. Speaker; that does not answer the question at all.

Mr. Rowe: It does not prove it is correct, either.

Mr. Drew: No, that does not answer the question.

Mr. St. Laurent: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. member to withdraw the insinuation that a statement made by the Prime Minister, in answer to a question in the house, does not prove its own correctness. That is an improper imputation.

Mr. Fulton: The leader of the opposition said it does not answer the question.

Mr. St. Laurent: I am not asking for the withdrawal of the assertion that it does not answer the question; but I ask the hon. member to withdraw the imputation that I have made an incorrect answer to the question.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, have we reached the point where the Prime Minister makes a statement and no one can make any contrary statement? There is no imputation here of good faith or otherwise. I said, and I repeat, that the answer to which the Prime Minister has referred me does not answer this question at all. I will read the whole question into the record, since it has been brought in at this point. The question that was asked, as reported at page 1023 of Hansard, is as follows:

Mr. Argue:

1. Did the Minister of Agriculture make a visit to the United Kingdom in February, 1951?

2. If so, what was the purpose or purposes of this visit and what was the result of same?

3. Did the Minister of Agriculture take with him on this visit any official government documents or proposals relating to the purposes of his visit?

4. If so, what was the nature of such documents or proposals?

5. Has the government at any time since June 5, 1950, made any statement contrary to the position taken on that date by the Minister of Trade and Commerce in reference to the final settlement of the "have regard to" clause?

6. If so, in what manner, when, and by whom was any such statement made?

Mr. St. Laurent:

1. Yes.

2. The purpose and the result have already been announced.

3. No.

Mr. St. Laurent: That answer "no" was to the question: Did he take any official proposal from the government? And the negative answer is correct.

Mr. Drew: No, Mr. Speaker. The question was this:

Did the Minister of Agriculture take with him on this visit any official government documents or proposals relating to the purposes of his visit?

Mr. St. Laurent: And the answer was no.

Mr. Drew: I am not talking about what he took with him in the form of official documents or official proposals in written form or otherwise. What I am asking is whether the Prime Minister will say that the statement made in this house yesterday that the Minister of Agriculture had gone there with a proposal that the British government take up the balance of this loan amounting to $65 million for the purpose of making a final payment under the "have regard to" clause to that amount is or is not correct. That is the whole point. If the Prime Minister wishes to answer that, I shall be happy to hear him do so.

Mr. Ferguson: That is a different question.

Mr. Rowe: Nobody is charging bad faith there.

Mr. St. Laurent: The Minister of Agriculture has already denied that. As reported at page 1066 of Hansard, he said:

When it was suggested that there was a shortage of dollars, it was pointed out that there was $65 million left in the loan which might be utilized and save dollars for the present. It was suggested both in this house and outside that the government had announced agreement with the British in their contention that they had met their obligations. That was not the case, and in the hope that a removal of that opinion might change the decision the re-opening of the discussions was pressed.

There was no proposal by the government that they draw this amount and pay it over. There was the statement that they could do so if they saw fit to do it. But there was no request at all made by the government to the British government to make any further payment. It was always recognized that there was no further legal obligation upon them. But I felt that it was only fair that I should point out to the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom when he was here that there was a prevailing feeling that they had not carried out the "have regard to" clause in the manner in which it had been expected they would carry it out; and those expectations were a result of statements that had been made in this country by one of his colleagues after listening in this house to discussions taking place here and having gone out to Winnipeg to make the position clear. I felt that they should know that those expectations existed; that they should know how they had come about, and should know that there would be serious disappointment if they did nothing further about the "have regard to" clause. I told the prime minister of the United Kingdom that we had accepted as their position in May or June their statement that they had done all they intended to do under the "have regard to" clause, and I said: "I am not asking you to do more, but I am asking you if you do not think, in view of what I am saying to you now, that I should bring those facts to the attention of the chancellor." He agreed that I might bring them to the attention of the chancellor. When I went over in January, I did so.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has now stated that it was pointed out to the British government that there was remaining $65 million which they could—

Mr. St. Laurent: I understand that was pointed out to them. I do not think I pointed it out; but I understand that it was pointed out to them; it was something that was well known and it had been discussed here; and although many felt that it would be an insufficient amount to meet these expectations it was an amount that was available and that they could draw upon at any time up till the end of 1951 and use in any way they pleased.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, it is not much wonder the statement was made that was made here in the house last night; because, as the Prime Minister has pointed out, it was perfectly well known that there was a balance of $65 million, and for that reason more must have been intended when the British government was reminded that $65 million was there, other than just the reminder that they should not overlook the fact that they still had $65 million that they could claim.

This, after all, is something that seems to follow a reasonably well defined pattern of diplomacy. It was pointed out that there was a balance of $65 million, and they did not choose to use that for this purpose, and to engage in a subterfuge of that kind. That is the situation with which we are confronted, and the Minister of Agriculture has certainly succeeded in leaving in the minds of many hon. members, as evidenced by speeches made here tonight, as well as this afternoon, to say nothing of the impression that has been left throughout the country, that the British government did not live up to its obligations in this case.

Mr. Ferrie: They did not.

Mr. Drew: Well, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Ross (Souris): The hon. member for Mackenzie has just said that they did not.

Mr. Drew: The Prime Minister who was not here will now understand part of our difficulty when he hears one of his supporters say, "They did not", because that is the position that has been emphasized by some of the hon. members, in keeping with the position that was put before the house by the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Knowles: Which was contrary to the position taken by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe).

Mr. Drew: That being so, we in this house certainly are entitled to a great deal more information than we now have in regard to a subject that has come up in this way.

As I said before the Prime Minister came in, there might have been some question as to how appropriate it is that this subject be discussed as fully as it is being discussed on the second reading of this particular bill. But any question about that was ended when the Minister of Agriculture himself chose the second reading of this bill as the time to make his statement in regard to this subject. From that point on the discussion of the contract and the payment that was to be made became a proper discussion in relation to the statement on behalf of the government by the Minister of Agriculture, and it is for that reason I am directing my remarks to this subject tonight. We have a right to know what it is that the government is really placing before us, if the contract has been fully lived up to in every way, as stated by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. But if, in fact, this is a contract so satisfactory as he seeks to impress upon us, then obviously the payment that is to be made is a payment based upon some other basis than any claim arising out of the contract itself.

That being so then it seems that, with the divergence of opinion between his two senior ministers, the Prime Minister should tell us exactly what the principle is under which the payment is being made, and we all should know whether the basis of their computation is one that may be understood by parliament, and whether it would appear to be adequate or not, depending upon the principle that is actually put forward.

The Prime Minister is inclined to take some exception to expressions of opinion that are raised on this issue, but the situation before us is something that goes far beyond the question of the amount to be paid to the farmers of western Canada, so far as the members of this house are concerned. Just as much in issue before this house is the honour of this government. If there is one principle which is the very foundation of our parliamentary system—well, Mr. Speaker, we heard the suggestion earlier by one hon. member that he could not understand why hon. members had to listen to some of these remarks. It is interesting to me to hear from the government side that they will not stand for statements of that kind. Mr. Speaker, this parliament is a parliament which follows certain clearly defined rules, and the greater the majority which supports the government in this house the more scrupulously these rules should be observed if we are to retain the reality as well as the form of responsible government in this country.

Mr. Viau: Why don't you name the hon. member on this side of the house who has made such foolish statements as you do?

Mr. Drew: The hon. member who has just spoken will probably make a speech afterwards, which will display his intelligence, as I feel sure he would wish it to be displayed.

Mr. Viau: I have been waiting all evening.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, one of the basic and fundamental principles upon which our parliamentary system depends is that the members of the house can rely upon statements on behalf of the government in dealing with questions before this house. That is so deeply embedded in the traditions of our system that a member of the government speaks on behalf of the government collectively, or he must be disavowed by the government itself.

The Minister of Agriculture has made one statement in this house, and through this house to the people of Canada, and the Minister of Trade and Commerce has made another, and those two statements are entirely different in their basic proposition. Those two statements are statements which can only be reconciled by the Prime Minister himself explaining to us exactly what the situation is, and exactly how the government has arrived at the figures which it has put before this house.

Mr. Howe: Perhaps my hon. friend will tell us in what way they differ.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, the best way to answer that is to compare the statements in Hansard of the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and in no single point are these statements more at variance than in the closing words of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, which I have already read:

> I deplore the suggestion that the British government has not played fair with the Canadian people.

—because the impression that was left by the Minister of Agriculture was the very contrary to that.

Mr. Howe: Perhaps the leader of the opposition will read that statement as well. He is making assertions that are not based on fact.

Mr. Fulton: They certainly are.

Mr. Howe: And he is simply making them as assertions. He declines to give chapter and verse. Suppose he do that.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture in speaking in this house on March 8, 1951, at page 1065 of Hansard made it perfectly clear that the impression—

Some hon. Members: Read it.

Some hon. Members: What did he say?

Mr. Drew: —made it perfectly clear that he wished the impression left that the government of Great Britain had not carried out its undertaking.

Mr. Ferrie: The farmers said that they did not.

An hon. Member: The farmers said they did not.

Mr. Drew: I have difficulty, not only in answering those who question my statements but with Liberal members who insist that I am right in the interpretation I am placing upon what has been said. I think that at the appropriate moment it would be well for the members of the Liberal party who have such divergent views to engage in an active debate on this subject. Perhaps we might leave it at the point where the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Sinnott) left it and carry it only to the door of the caucus.

Mr. Maybank: Why not name that point you were going to name?

Mr. Drew: That has been made perfectly clear and what has been carried right across the press of this country—

Mr. Maybank: Get it out.

Mr. Rowe: Make your own speech.

Mr. Drew: There was no question about what was intended when reference was made to the international court of justice. The fact that they would not carry the reference that far—

An hon. Member: Read it.

Mr. Drew: The hon. members of this house are not in any doubt as to the views that were expressed, and they are not in any doubt whatever as to the impression that was left both in this house and across the whole of this country by the press and the radio reporting the speeches that were made here.

An hon. Member: Read it.

Mr. Drew: The Prime Minister might well explain to this house tonight the basis upon which the computation has already been made. Then the members of this house will better know whether, with the facts put before them by the government, the figure should have been a higher or lower one. Certainly there has been nothing yet placed before this house to show by what strange coincidence the government happened to decide upon exactly the same figure as was the remaining balance of the loan not yet taken up by the British government.

Surely there was some more exact, some more precise and some sounder basis of computation than merely the fact that there was a figure of $65 million then left? The Prime Minister in fact has given a key to the way that this was arrived at when he tells us that it was pointed out to the British government that there was $65 million remaining, a fact which, as he has already said, they well knew. Obviously that was pointed out to them for a particular purpose, and they did not see fit to carry forward the suggestion implied in that remark.

The hon. members of this house are anxious to make sure that whatever the moral obligation may be to the wheat producers of western Canada, that moral obligation shall be fulfilled. I am sure that that applies to hon. members in every part of the house. However, they must know the basis upon which the computation is to be made and the principle that is to apply in arriving at that figure.

If the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who has made the last formal statement on behalf of the government, is to be taken as interpreting the views of the government at this stage in regard to the contract, then there is nothing owing under the contract.

Mr. Howe: Mr. Speaker, I stated definitely that the government felt there was. I discussed the "have regard to" clause. I said that the United Kingdom took the view that no more was owing. The government did not share that view and they have paid an amount that they thought appropriate.

Mr. Drew: When was that statement made?

Mr. Howe: You said that you read my statement carefully. If you read it carefully you would have come across it.

Mr. Drew: May I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if that is contained in the speech he made last night?

Mr. Howe: Yes.

Mr. Drew: Because that is not—

Mr. Howe: Just read the speech.

Mr. Drew: —contained in the Hansard I have in front of me. The Hansard which I have refers to this as follows, and I am reading from page 1172. I am quoting the Minister of Trade and Commerce:

> As I have said, the British government has discharged its legal obligations under the agreement and is not in default. Subsequently, however, the Canadian government considered it advisable to inform the United Kingdom government of the views of certain producers' groups to the effect that sufficient account had not been taken in the final settlement of the so-called have regard to clause.

An hon. Member: Go on.

Mr. Drew: Those are the words.

Mr. Howe: Read on.

Mr. Drew: I have referred already to the fact that the Minister of Trade and Commerce then went on to say that accordingly the Prime Minister discussed this matter with the Prime Minister of Great Britain when he was here and also when our Prime Minister was in London. I shall go on to quote the words of the Minister of Trade and Commerce immediately after that. They are:

> It was never suggested to the British government at any time that they were in legal default under the agreement.

That is clear and explicit. That being so—

Mr. McIlraith: Read the next sentence.

Mr. Drew: Certainly; I shall read what follows. It is:

It was pointed out, however, that the existence of dissatisfaction among wheat producers in Canada about the results of the agreement could have unfortunate consequence for future trade relationships between our two countries and that the British government might wish to reconsider their earlier decision. My colleague, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), made similar representations a few weeks ago. As the house knows, however, the British government did not see fit to make any further payments.

That was a perfectly legal and proper decision for them to make under the agreement.

Mr. Howe: Carry on.

Mr. Drew: I am quite happy to read the whole speech:

The Canadian government, while recognizing that the legal obligation of the British government under the agreement had been fulfilled, took a different view of the over-all results and decided to pay into the five-year pool the $65 million that remained under the United Kingdom loan act.

That is exactly what I said at the outset of my remarks, that the payment was a payment winding up the pool and was not a payment under this contract. I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Tomorrow is private members' day.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

The house met at three o'clock.

INDIANS

EDUCATION—REFERENCE TO REPORT IN "THE ENSIGN" OF MARCH 17, 1951

Mr. R. R. Knight (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. On February 27, 1951, I made the statement in this house that certain Indians wished education divorced from the churches. This statement has been misrepresented in one publication, and in consequence may be widely misunderstood.

What I stated was merely fact. I refer to, first, the brief of the protective association for Indians and their treaties, addressed to the minister in September, 1945, at pages 26, 33, and 34; second, to the memorial on Indian affairs presented by the Indian association of Alberta in September, 1945, at pages 5 and 7. In my speech on February 27 I paid tribute to the work of the churches and their missionaries in the field of education. That will be found in Hansard of this session at page 725. In my speech on federal aid to education on February 22—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Knight: I said at page 601—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member should be allowed to state his question of privilege.

Mr. Knight: I said at page 601:

> We believe of course that a child should be grounded in the faith of his father.

My point of privilege is that The Ensign, dated March 17, 1951, and circulated just yesterday, whose representative I understand sits in our press gallery, used the following words in reference to my remarks:

> His remarks were termed astonishing by the Progressive Conservative member for St. John's West, W. J. Browne, who challenged Mr. Knight's statement that religious education should be done away with.

Neither did I say those words nor do I believe any such thing. The impression created by those words in regard to my own attitude is completely false. I hope and indeed feel confident from the nature of this newspaper that it will be fair, that it will correct its statement and give to such correction as wide a circulation as it gave to the original statement.

PARLIAMENT HILL

RESPONSIBILITY FOR MAINTENANCE OF ADJOINING STREETS

Hon. Alphonse Fournier (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Ferguson) asked who was responsible for the maintenance of Wellington street facing the government buildings. The answer is that the federal district commission has the responsibility for the repair and maintenance of sidewalks on the north side of Wellington street from the plaza to Bank street. This includes the boulevard on the north side, and on the south side in front of government-owned property only. It also has responsibility for the removal of snow from the sidewalks on the north side of Wellington street and on the south side in front of government property only. The maintenance, repair and removal of snow from the street proper is the responsibility of the city.

Some hon. Members: What about the sand?

PAINTING BY HOBBEMA

PRESENTATION TO CANADA BY THE NETHERLANDS —ADDRESSES AT UNVEILING CEREMONY TO BE PRINTED IN HOUSE OF COMMONS DEBATES

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think you and other hon. members will feel as the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) and I do, that it is desirable that there should be a permanent record of the appreciation felt by the government and people of Canada of the generous gift presented to our country by Her Majesty Queen Juliana, on behalf of the people of The Netherlands, of the beautiful painting, "The Two Water-mills", by Hobbema, which was unveiled today in the Hall of Fame of our parliament buildings by General H. D. G. Crerar in the presence of His Excellency the Governor General, His Excellency the Ambassador of The Netherlands, and the members of both houses of parliament, and which will hang there as a tribute to the valour of our Canadian forces who participated in the second great war, and particularly of the Canadian troops who, under the command of General Crerar, took such a brilliant part in the liberation of Holland.

I accordingly move, seconded by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew):

That the addresses delivered at the unveiling ceremony by His Excellency the Governor General, by General Crerar, and by His Excellency the Ambassador of The Netherlands, be appended to the official report of today's debates.

Motion agreed to.

(For text of addresses see appendix, pages 1262-3.)

CONSUMER CREDIT

TABLING OF ORDER IN COUNCIL SETTING FORTH FURTHER RESTRICTIONS

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table a copy of order in council P.C. 1249 dated March 13, 1951, and made under the authority of the Consumer Credit (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1950. The initial regulations made under this act were published late in October and became effective on November 1 last. The terms and conditions laid down by these regulations respecting minimum down payments and maximum periods of credit were generally more restrictive than prevailing business practice, but were not as severe as those which we had during the war, nor have they been as restrictive as the revised American regulations which became effective a few months ago.

As hon. members are aware, there have been discussions recently between the Bank of Canada and the chartered banks regarding the most effective means of restraining the inflationary expansion of bank credit. As a result of these discussions one of the steps the chartered banks have taken is to call a halt to further expansion of loans on the security of instalment finance paper.

In conjunction with this move, and with the same purpose of restraining inflationary credit expansion, the consumer credit regulations have been amended by the order in council which I have just tabled. The new regulations will come into effect next Monday, March 19.

The principal changes being introduced are:

First, in the case of motor cars the minimum down payment is increased from one-third of the cash price to one-half of the cash price.

Second, in the case of all other commodities affected by the regulations the minimum down payment is increased from one-fifth to one-third of the cash price.

Third, in all cases the minimum down payment will be not less than $10 instead of $5 under the former regulations.

Fourth, the maximum period of credit has been reduced from eighteen months to twelve months, and the minimum size of instalment payments has been increased to $10 a month or $2.50 a week, as compared with $5 a month or $1.25 a week under the previous regulations.

Fifth, under what is known in the trade as a revolving credit plan, the minimum initial down payment is increased to $10, and wherever new purchases are made under existing credits the minimum monthly instalment is increased to $10.

Finally, as a result of varied representations and a further review of the effects of the present regulations we have decided that the consumer credit restrictions should not apply to the sale of books.

In their net effect the new regulations will be much stiffer than those now in effect, but except in the case of motor cars they will be no stiffer, and in some cases not quite so stiff as those in effect during the war. During the war we required a one-third down payment for cars, and if the amount remaining to be financed exceeded $500 the purchaser had fifteen months in which to complete his payments. Now we are requiring fifty per cent down and the balance spread over twelve months. Hon. members will realize, of course, that where an old car is being turned in, its trade-in value will normally constitute the greater part if not the whole of the required down payment.

In the case of other commodities our new regulations require one-third down and the balance over twelve months. During the war the same down payment was required, but the balance had to be paid in ten months, unless the amount to be financed exceeded $500.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I wonder if the minister could say whether it has been possible to trace the effect to date of the restrictions on consumer credit made following the legislation of last September?

Mr. Abbott: No, it is not possible to do that, Mr. Speaker. I think one could say, speaking in general terms, that the restrictions so far have only been moderately effective. They have not made any serious change in the volume of instalment sales.

YUKON TERRITORY

INQUIRY AS TO DECISION TO MOVE SEAT OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Speaker: Yesterday, before the orders of the day were called, the member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) asked a question which I thought was one that should have been placed on the order paper. Upon reading the question in Hansard, it seems to me there is some urgency in connection with the matter which he has raised. In view of the fact that today we are not likely to reach orders of the day, may I suggest that the hon. member for Vancouver East ask his question at this time.

Mr. Angus MacInnis (Vancouver East): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had an idea that when you saw my question in print you would approve my judgment. My question was to the Minister of Resources and Development, and was based on a telegram I received yesterday morning from Dawson city. The question is, has the government decided to move the seat of government for the new territorial council from Dawson to Whitehorse, and if so, is that being done in consultation with the Yukon territorial council?

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Resources and Development): Mr. Speaker, the population of Whitehorse has been increasing steadily for some years. It is now a much larger centre than Dawson city. The development of Whitehorse, together with its geographic location, have made it the centre of economic activity and communications for the territory. Although the population of Dawson city is now not large, historic interest and tradition still make it an important tourist attraction. Moreover, it is the centre of an active gold mining industry. However, the greater development in the southern part of the territory made it inevitable that consideration should be given to establishing the seat of government in Whitehorse.

This matter has been under consideration and discussion with the commissioner of the Yukon territory for some time, and it has now been decided that the change should be made in order to enable the territorial government to give more efficient and expeditious administration of the affairs of the territory.

Mr. Pearkes: Will the minister permit a supplementary question? Is there any danger of the seat of government of British Columbia being moved from Victoria to Vancouver for the same reason?

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

HOUSING UNITS, BARRACKS, ETC., FOR SERVICE PERSONNEL, 1939-45

Mr. Noseworthy:

1. How many housing units and how many barracks and other buildings used to accommodate service personnel during the war (1939-45) have been (a) sold; (b) demolished, since 1945?

2. What is the estimated number of service personnel that could be accommodated at one time in all the housing units, barracks, etc., sold or demolished, since 1945?

3. What is the estimated cost of construction during the war of housing units, barracks, etc., sold, and demolished, since 1945?

4. What amount has been realized on the sale of such units or barracks sold since 1945?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, to obtain such information as is available to answer this question would involve a detailed examination of some 2,500 files. In addition to that, the answer to part 4 of the question cannot be obtained because many of the materials sold from particular buildings had lost their identity.

There is some information, however, that can be obtained on this subject. I have spoken to the hon. member who asked the question, and I have agreed to make available such information as can be obtained and to help him frame another question that could be answered. I would therefore ask that this question be dropped.

Mr. Speaker: Question dropped.

WHEAT—SELLING PRICES AND PAYMENTS TO GROWERS

Mr. MacLean (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. What was the average selling price per bushel for No. 1 wheat, during each of the years 1936, 1937, 1938, 1939 and 1940?

2. What was the average price per bushel paid through the wheat pool to the wheat growers in the prairie provinces for their No. 1 wheat, during each of the years 1946, 1947, 1948, 1949 and 1950?

Mr. McIlraith:

1. According to the annual "Reports on the Grain Trade of Canada", published by the dominion bureau of statistics, the following are the average Winnipeg open market closing prices for No. 1 northern wheat in store Fort William/Port Arthur for each of the crop years ended in 1936, 1937, 1938, 1939 and 1940:

1936	$ ·84⅝
1937	1·22⅝
1938	1·31½
1939	·62
1940	·76½

2. The total price paid to date in the form of initial and adjustment payments, to wheat growers in the prairie provinces who delivered No. 1 northern wheat to the Canadian wheat board during each of the crop years ended in 1946, 1947, 1948, 1949 and 1950 was $1.75 per bushel in store Fort William/Port Arthur or Vancouver.

WHEAT—SHIPMENTS THROUGH CHURCHILL

Mr. Wright:

1. What amount of wheat shipped through the port of Churchill during the 1950 season was sold (a) under the world wheat agreement; (b) as class II wheat?

Questions

2. What premium, if any, over the Port Arthur, Fort William price, was received for wheat shipped through the port of Churchill during the 1950 season under (a) the world wheat agreement; (b) class II wheat?

Mr. McIlraith:

1. Shipments through Churchill under I.W.A., 6,767,743 bushels; shipments through Churchill under class II, nil.

2. Outside of the wheat supplied to the United Kingdom under the terms of the Canada-United Kingdom agreement, the premium over the Fort William/Port Arthur price received for wheat shipped through the port of Churchill during the 1950 season ranged from 2 cents per bushel to 4 cents per bushel.

Mr. Herridge:

1. Have representations been made to the government, or any department thereof, by the German Krupp company or any of its members, employees, associates or agents with a view to carrying on business in Canada, either directly or through some other firm or individual?

2. If so, has the government made any decision in the matter, and of what nature?

Mr. McIlraith:

1. A representative of the firm Friedrich Krupp called on officials of the Department of Trade and Commerce in the early part of March, 1951, with a view to exploring the possibility of finding markets in Canada for the products of his company.

2. No decision required.

NAVAL SERVICE—BARRACKS AT DARTMOUTH, N.S.

Mr. Balcom:

1. Were plans and specifications prepared and tenders invited for (a) standard unit supply building, type A, Greenwood, Nova Scotia; (b) construction of fireproof barracks, H.M.C.S. Shearwater, Dartmouth, Nova Scotia?

2. What are the names and addresses of firms invited to submit tenders for these projects?

3. Have contracts been awarded?

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES—INCOME TAX—DEDUCTIONS FROM PAY AND ALLOWANCES

Mr. Nowlan:

1. Since December 1, 1950, has there been any change in the rate on which is based the income tax deductions from pay and allowances of members of the armed services of Canada?

2. If so (a) when did such change become effective; (b) to what branches of the armed services does it apply; (c) what is the change in such rate; (d) what was or is the authority for making such change?

Mr. Blanchette:

1. The rate of income tax deductions was not changed. However, due to the increased rate of pay and allowances effective December 1, 1950, the amount of income tax deducted at source was increased effective January 1, 1951, and the increased pay and allowances for December was reported as taxable income for the year 1950.

2. (a) The amount of taxable income and therefore the amount of tax payable increased effective the date of the increase in pay and allowances, i.e., December 1, 1950.

(b) To all branches.

(c) The change in income tax would depend entirely on the taxable income of the individual which is governed by total income less exemptions.

(d) The Income Tax Act and the income tax tables of deductions provided by the Department of National Revenue, taxation division.

He said: May I ask the Prime Minister when permission for this tabling was asked, and if any reply has been received?

Mr. St. Laurent: I would not like to say from memory on what day the permission was asked; but I inquired this morning about an answer and I was told that the high commissioner had been communicated with again last night, that he had not yet received instructions but that I would be informed just as soon as he receives instructions.

Mr. Coldwell: Which commissioner was that? Was that our high commissioner in London?

Mr. St. Laurent: No, the high commissioner at Earnscliffe. It was through him that the application was made.

Mr. Speaker: Stand.

MIGRATORY BIRDS CONVENTION ACT

PROPOSED AMENDMENT WITH RESPECT TO CAPTURING OR TAKING OF TURRS

Mr. G. F. Higgins (St. John's East) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, appropriate steps should be taken to seek an amendment on behalf of Canada to the migratory birds convention, and to amend the Migratory Birds Convention Act, so as to eliminate the prohibition, in so far as it prohibits the people of the province of Newfoundland killing, capturing or taking turrs, which are a species of murres, hown, sea-duck, ticklace, stearn, which are a species of tern, shellbirds and divers, which are a species of duck, and thus place the province of Newfoundland in the same position as before the passing of the act to confirm and give effect to terms of union between Canada and Newfoundland, 1949.

He said: Mr. Speaker, there is an old saying that every dog has his day. I suppose one therefore can say that every bird has its day. I trust that today will be recognized as turr day in this house. To mark that day I have taken the liberty of having distributed to hon. members copies of a recent book on Newfoundland issued by the tourist development office. I believe all hon. members have received a copy of this little booklet. I might say that the booklet was compiled by Mr. Ewart Young, publisher of the Atlantic Guardian, of Montreal, in collaboration with Miss Margaret F. Godden, of the Newfoundland tourist development office. I believe those hon. members who have read it—or rather, who have looked at it, because it is chiefly made up of pictures—will recognize real merit when they see it.

In submitting this resolution I wish hon. members to know that this is a serious matter indeed and one of the greatest importance to the province of Newfoundland. Some hon. members have been joking with me about it. To hon. members who have been doing so, and whose only interest in birds apparently is in those that fly on one wing, I may say that I have no interest in such birds, at least at the present time. But to hon. members who are interested in and inclined to discuss the propensities of these peculiar one-winged birds, I may say that I am prepared, after the Easter recess, in my office or in any other suitable place they may choose, to discuss the matter in full measure with them. But until that time I have declared a closed season on discussing such peculiar birds.

This resolution, I say, deals with a serious matter. In order that hon. members may understand the problem, I will attempt to explain it to them. The legislation dealing with the subject is the Migratory Birds Convention Act of 1917, which appears as chapter 130 of the revised statutes of 1927. The original act was passed to ratify a convention made between Canada and the United States on August 16, 1916. The United States ratified the convention in 1918. By article IX of the convention it is provided that the convention shall take effect when ratified by both countries. Upon ratification the convention was to remain in effect for fifteen years from the date of ratification; and if neither party to the convention gave notice within twelve months of its intention to terminate the operation of the convention, it was to continue to remain in force for one year, and so on from year to year.

The original period of fifteen years expired in 1933 without notice of termination having been given by either party. Consequently the present position is that the convention remains in force from year to year until, I presume, twelve-months' notice is given by either party of the desire to terminate it. By the convention certain birds described therein are enumerated under three categories: migratory game birds, migratory insectivorous birds, and other migratory non-game birds. The seasons in which such birds can be hunted are detailed. These details are set forth at pages 2768 and 2769 of volume III of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927.

In order that hon. members may be able to understand the description of these birds, as stated in the convention, as compared with the birds named in the resolution, may I say that the description in the resolution is the form in which we know them in Newfoundland. Hown is known by the wildlife division of the Department of Resources and Development as old-squaw duck. Sea-duck is known as eider duck; divers as scoter duck and shellbirds as merganser duck.

These four forms of duck are described in subparagraph (a) of paragraph 1 of article 1 of the convention under the generic term name of wild duck, and are stated to be in the category of migratory game birds. The remaining three varieties of sea birds named in this resolution, namely, turrs, ticklaces and stearns, are described in the case of turrs as murres, stearns as terns and ticklaces as kittiwake gulls. These names are the same as the names in the convention, with the exception of ticklace, which is described as a gull, and which is known to the wildlife division as the kittiwake gull. These are classed as migratory non-game birds, and there is no open season for them at any time in the territories of the United States or of Canada.

Of these three varieties, by far the most important to the people of Newfoundland is the turr, and it is chiefly in connection with the permission to take and kill for food this bird that I am asking the consideration of the house today. It is not the purpose of the resolution to give the right to sell with respect to the other birds which I have mentioned, and which are included in the resolution namely, hown, sea-duck, diver and shellbird. Certain seasons are proclaimed yearly in which they may be taken. This year the seasons have been set forth, and, Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the house I should like to put the table on Hansard rather than read it, as it is fairly extensive.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member the consent of the house that the table appear in Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed.

Mr. Higgins: The table follows:

Migratory Birds Convention Act

Local Newfoundland name	Ordinary name elsewhere	Open season at present: Avalon and Burin peninsulas	Remainder of Newfoundland	Labrador
Hown	Old-squaw duck	Dec. 5-Feb. 28	Dec. 5-Feb. 28	Oct. 2-Dec. 26
Sea-duck	Eider duck	Dec. 5-Feb. 28	Dec. 5-Feb. 28	Oct. 2-Dec. 26
Divers	Scoter duck	Dec. 5-Feb. 28	Dec. 5-Feb. 28	Oct. 2-Dec. 26
Shellbirds	Merganser duck	Oct. 2-Nov 1	Sept 15-Nov. 8	Sept. 7-Oct. 31
Turrs	Murres	These birds are classified as migratory non-game birds and there is no open season for them at any time in territories of the United States and Canada.
Ticklace	Kittiwake gull
Stearn	Terns

All these birds feed on fish, which means that as soon as ice comes to the northern coast of Newfoundland the birds move away from that coast in great numbers; consequently the seasons in which they may be hunted are not of great value to the residents of the northern shores of the province. Moreover, there are not anything like the numbers of these birds as there are turrs; and I am told by those who know that they are not regarded in the same class as food.

Prior to the union of Newfoundland with Canada, Newfoundland had no such restriction against shooting and taking these birds as that which exists at the present time by reason of the convention and the act, as Newfoundland was not a party to the convention, being a separate country at the time of the enactment.

So far as I know the matter was never discussed by either of the two delegations that came to Canada from Newfoundland in 1947 and 1948, prior to the settlement of the terms of union. However, I have been told quite recently by Dr. Harrison F. Lewis, the chief of the wildlife division of the Department of Resources and Development, with whom I have been able to discuss this matter through the kindness of the Minister of Resources and Development (Mr. Winters)—and I may say, I found Dr. Lewis very helpful and very courteous indeed—that a Newfoundland representative, Captain Harry Walters, chief game warden of Newfoundland, had been in attendance at the conference between representatives of the United States and Canada in June of 1948, but that the matter had not been discussed at that time because it was of no interest to Newfoundland, that country not being a part of Canada at the time.

The first time the matter appears to have been discussed by this joint conference of the United States and Canada was in June, 1949; union became effective in April of that year. And here I quote from Dr. Lewis' conversation with me, as I had it recorded with his consent:

At the June, 1949, meeting the problem was raised and the general application of the act to Newfoundland was discussed at considerable length. A resolution was adopted by the conference, urging the federal authorities to exercise patience and leniency in introducing this new legislation to Newfoundland. Everyone was in great sympathy with the peculiar situation in Newfoundland.

That resolution reads as follows, Mr. Speaker. I am not going to read it all, but I would ask that it be placed on Hansard, if there is no objection.

Mr. Speaker: Is it acceptable to the house?

Some hon. Members: Read it.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member would like it to appear in Hansard he will be required to read it, because there is not unanimous consent to his placing it on Hansard without reading it.

Mr. Higgins: It reads as follows:

Whereas a considerable portion of the population of Newfoundland has for generations been compelled by economic necessity to rely largely upon certain species of sea birds, described as migratory non-game birds in the migratory birds treaty, for their subsistence during certain seasons of the year;

And whereas immediate strict application of the migratory birds regulations, as they apply to other provinces, within Newfoundland would cause serious hardship to the above residents of that province;

Therefore be it resolved that this conference recommends that in extending the provisions of the Migratory Birds Convention Act and regulations to Newfoundland, sympathetic consideration be given to the situation of the Newfoundland residents above mentioned; and that, within the obligations imposed by the migratory birds treaty, the greatest possible patience and leniency should be exercised in enforcing the regulations in that province during the period considered necessary for adjustment.

There is a note that it was carried unanimously. I do not want to put anything on Hansard that is objectionable. I was merely trying to save some time here.

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest to the hon. member I do not think the objection was to what the hon. member was proposing to put on Hansard. I understand a number of members in the house wanted to know the contents of the resolution at this time.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): That is right.

Mr. Higgins: Dr. Lewis then continued his conversation with me by saying:

In August, 1949, I went to St. John's and set up our district office, and interviewed the premier, the Hon. J. R. Smallwood, and the minister of natural resources, the Hon. Mr. Russell, and discussed this problem with them. All with whom I spoke recognized the problem which existed.

Dr. Lewis then informed me that as a result of his visit to St. John's in August, 1949, Mr. Leslie M. Tuck was appointed by the civil service commission as dominion wildlife officer for Newfoundland. He started work on October 1, 1949. Dr. Lewis continued his conversation with me by saying:

We had Mr. Tuck issue an authorized statement on behalf of the department on November 8, 1949.

And here, Mr. Speaker, if hon. members would consent to my reading the most important parts of the statement and putting the remainder of it on Hansard, I would appreciate it.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed.

Mr. Higgins: This statement is dated November 8, 1949, signed by Leslie M. Tuck, dominion wildlife officer, Newfoundland, and reads as follows:

Following the union of Newfoundland and Canada, the migratory birds treaty, which was adopted by Canada and the United States more than thirty years ago, came into effect in this province. This outstanding conservation treaty was approved by the governments of the individual provinces, as well as by the dominion government, and the application of its provisions is a matter of close dominion-provincial understanding. The original concept was to provide similar and adequate conservation of valuable migratory birds throughout North America, as the best means of protecting birds that annually migrate across international boundaries. It is widely accepted as the greatest single act of wildlife conservation ever inaugurated, and is implemented throughout Canada by the Migratory Birds Convention Act.

This legislation recognizes that the protection of migratory birds is an international question, as well as a local one. It is only by international agreement under federal auspices that we can be assured that protection equivalent to that extended in one country will be given migrant birds by other countries that they annually visit. Under this agreement, certain sea birds, and all the shorebirds except two species, are absolutely protected throughout the year in all parts of Canada and the United States. The shooting season for migratory game birds is definitely limited in each locality, and all spring shooting is prohibited. A secondary effect, but one of the greatest importance to the species concerned, has been the stopping of the sale of migrant game birds throughout the United States and the provinces of Canada.

The open seasons for ducks, geese and Wilson's snipe are set each year by agreement between the dominion and provincial authorities after full discussion of the conditions relating to the subject. In Newfoundland this year the open seasons for these birds began on various dates, but all terminated on October 31, except that the open season for the various kinds of eider ducks and scoter ducks will continue, throughout the coastal waters of the province, until November 30.

It is recognized that many people around the coasts of Newfoundland are accustomed to depend on the meat of the murre, or turr, as it is locally called, for food, and have made no substitute provision for the winter. Hardship might be experienced by these families if those birds could not be obtained. While the migratory birds treaty does not provide an open season for the turr, since it is not one of the game birds, the authorities do not for the present propose to interfere with residents of Newfoundland who, because of need, take and possess turrs for their own use and that of their families. This does not, however, apply to bull-birds, ticklaces, noddies or bawks, which the treaty protects throughout the year.

The sale of wild birds, because of the unnecessary and excessive destruction to which it leads, has become widely outlawed. Consequently, the sale of migratory birds is generally prohibited in the island of Newfoundland and its adjacent islands, as in other provinces and in the United States. However, as a special concession scoter and eider ducks may be sold in Newfoundland during the open season for these birds, which is from October 1 to November 30 in the Avalon peninsula and September 15 to November 30 in the remainder of the island.

There are two species of eider ducks in Newfoundland during the above mentioned season. The male of the common eider duck is a distinctive bird with a black belly, a white back and a black crown. The female is brown, as are the females of both eiders and scoters. The other species of eider is the king eider, or king bird, as it is called in some localities. The male of this species has its foreparts white and its hind parts black. On the water it looks something like a saddle-back gull. A further means of identification of the king eider is the large orange shield on its forehead. Its female is a brown duck similar to the female of the common eider.

There are three scoter ducks found in these waters. The scoters are the large, chunky, blackish ducks, commonly seen flying low over the waves. The white-winged scoter, sometimes called the white-winged diver, is the largest of the three, and is easily identified by its white wing patch. The surf scoter (bottle-nosed diver or skunk head) is all black except for one or two white patches on its head. The American scoter (black-winged diver) is the only duck with entirely black plumage. This and the bright orange base of the bill are good identification marks.

Mr. Maybank: Would the hon. member permit an interruption? Would he allow me to have Dr. Lewis' letter, to which he has just referred, and if he has finished with it?

Mr. Higgins: It is a conversation I had with Dr. Lewis, at which time the doctor told me I could quote him in this connection. I had it taken down at the time.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Maybank: I am not objecting at all. I only wished to know if the hon. member would permit me to read it now, if he has finished using it. I am not raising any objection.

Mr. Higgins: Yes, certainly.

An hon. Member: You will soon have a chance to speak.

Mr. Higgins: I hope, Mr. Speaker, that you will not take time off from the time allotted to me while the parliamentary assistant is reading it.

Mr. Winters: There is lots of time; go on.

Mr. Higgins: Then Dr. Lewis continued:

Early discussions indicated that murres were the principal birds concerned. We took the responsibility in connection with allowing the lenience referred to in the news release.

Then quoting further from the conversation with Dr. Lewis:

At the time this resolution was spoken of, in June, 1949, there were senior United States officers of the particular department concerned under the treaty present at the meeting, so they were aware of what we proposed to do and of the need for it. I presume that, if United States consuls and other departmental officials do their duty, the authorities in Washington are informed of any such action. They have not said anything, so they apparently recognize the need of patience and lenience and have not felt like protesting against the steps taken so far although they could have done so.

And he continued further:

The present arrangement was only on a temporary basis. It was obviously necessary to advance somewhat the following year. The first year this applied to all parts of Newfoundland.

At this point Dr. Lewis was referring to the fact that for the first year of confederation there was no restriction against the shooting and taking of turrs at all. Dr. Lewis then said:

Last fall—

He was referring to the fall of 1950—

—the matter was discussed again with the provincial authorities of Newfoundland. Our officer, Mr. Tuck, discussed it in St. John's with officials of the department. They considered what should be the next step in tightening up the terms of the treaty, recognizing that it would involve discomfort.

At this conference last fall, after some discussions and correspondence, it was finally decided to remove that special statement of lenience.

That is the statement referred to in the news release of November 8, 1949. He continues:

It was felt that the best place to remove the privileges which had been allowed was in the southern part of the province for several reasons: it contains all the larger communities, St. John's, Corner Brook and some others which might be classed that way; also it has, in general, open harbours; is not blocked by ice; other food was available, migratory birds could be obtained; there was year-round steamship service, and the fishing crews cruise in open waters. It was decided, therefore, that this was the best place to start putting the terms of the treaty in force. Accordingly in the region from Grate's Point around by the south to Cape St. Gregory, absolute prohibition against the shooting and taking of turrs was put into effect.

This area includes a great part of the riding of the hon. member for Trinity-Conception (Mr. Stick).

Mr. Stick: No, it does not—not the greater part.

Mr. Higgins: I said "a great part"; all of my own riding, all of the riding of the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Browne), all of the riding of the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Carter), and part of the riding of the hon. member for Humber-St. George's (Mr. Kent). The only areas left out, and concerning which there is no prohibition at the present time, are the ridings of the Secretary of State (Mr. Bradley) and the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay (Mr. Ashbourne).

Recently the residents of Port aux Basques and Channel, two small towns in the constituency of Burin-Burgeo, sent in a petition to the premier of Newfoundland which contained 578 signatures, and stating that, except for inclement weather, another 700 names would have been obtained. I might add that since this resolution has appeared on the order paper I have received about 6,000 names by letter and telegrams from various parts of the island. The hon. member for Burin-Burgeo informs me he has the equivalent of another 7,500 names. It will be realized therefore that there is great interest in this matter. The districts from which I have had letters include all the ridings represented in the House of Commons, and from all parts of those ridings, including Labrador itself.

An hon. Member: Are they in support?

Mr. Higgins: Oh yes, they are in support. I would hope to have time to read brief extracts from some of those letters which show that they very definitely require that the restrictions be lifted.

An hon. Member: Read them.

Mr. Higgins: I shall not read them now, because I wish to see if I have the time. This petition was sent to the premier of Newfoundland who said, replying in a letter to the petitioners:

I must explain that in this matter of shooting seabirds the government of Newfoundland has no more power or authority than the government of Korea.

He said that the matter comes entirely under the control of the dominion government at Ottawa. It was the premier's understanding, that Canada, the United States and Mexico had made a treaty in connection with the shooting of these birds, and that no provincial government or state government in the United States has any authority whatsoever in the matter. I do not know how the premier got Mexico into the treaty business, because Mexico is not concerned, so far as the treaty is concerned. Then the premier added in his letter:

It is news to me that anything has been done in this matter in White bay, or in fact, in any part of Newfoundland.

He means, in other words, that it was news to him that the people of White bay were allowed to shoot birds in this present year. That is an extraordinary statement, to my mind, because if Dr. Harrison Lewis is correct—and I have every reason to believe he is—then the premier was fully aware of what had been done, and was fully aware of the fact that in one-half the island prohibition is strictly enforced while in the other half it does not apply at the present time. He should have been aware of it, anyway—whether he was or not. Whatever knowledge he had or did not have, his departmental officials certainly had it.

I would add in that connection that whatever knowledge the departmental officials of the Newfoundland government had prior to confederation of the fact that Newfoundlanders would not be allowed to shoot these sea birds, as they had had a right to do for four hundred years, it was not known to the people of Newfoundland prior to the referendum which dealt with confederation with Canada. I venture to say that if that fact had been known, not only is it my opinion but it is the considered opinion of many people including—and I do not think I am taking chances when I say this—the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo who is now in his seat, that confederation would not have had the majority it did have. In fact, we would not be here today if the people were not allowed to shoot turrs—and hon. members from Newfoundland know it. As I say, I have received letters from all over Newfoundland in this connection, but to further buttress my argument on this point I should like to quote from a resolution which I am told was adopted unanimously at the national convention of the Young Liberal Federation of Canada meeting in Montreal on October 12, 13 and 14, 1949. This reads:

Whereas there are many people in Newfoundland particularly in the north and south areas depending entirely for their supply of fresh meat on the numerous sea birds which frequent our shores, and whereas at present the federal laws have forbidden the shooting of these birds, be it resolved that the federal authorities take immediate steps to amend the present act to allow the people to take these birds for local consumption.

That should have some effect upon the minister. I may say that I have been informed in conversation with the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Carter) that following the special session last year he made a tour of his riding last fall, during which he received numerous written representations asking that the restrictions be removed. He received many petitions asking for the removal of the present restrictions. I understand from the hon. member that it is his contention that the turrs or murres which are hunted in his riding are the species known as the Brunnich's murres, as distinct from the Atlantic murres. The murres breed in Greenland during the summer months and migrate to the waters off the south and north coasts of Newfoundland during the winter months from November to March inclusive. It is the hon. member's belief that there is no proof whatever that this species ever migrates as far south as the coastal waters of the United States. The species which migrates south, the hon. member tells me, is the Atlantic species. It is said that less than one per cent of that species approach the international boundary between Canada and the United States and very few, if any, cross it.

From my discussion with the hon. member I understand that it is his belief that Newfoundlanders have been shooting these birds ever since the days of the first settlers. They have come to rely upon them as a source of food supply, particularly in the winter months when other foods are impossible to obtain, because of the lack of roads and other means of communication. As a result of lack of communication in winter these people cannot visit the larger supply firms and they must obtain their food from every possible source at hand.

The hon. member tells me that in most of his riding it is impossible to purchase fresh fruit or garden produce at any time, and this is especially so in the winter months. The little that is grown locally in his riding in the gardens is consumed long before December. Therefore the food available during the winter is deficient in vitamins and for this reason it is submitted that these birds should be allowed to be taken for food, not only to offset deficiency in vitamins but to provide a welcome variation in the staple diet of salt meat and salt fish.

The hon. member tells me that besides providing food these birds provide bait for codfish. During the winter it is too risky for the fishermen to leave their herring nets out overnight, the herring being used as bait, and the entrails of these birds provide a very efficient substitute. Many of the fishermen in the hon. member's riding are able to keep their boats in operation all winter as they can launch them quite easily and as a result many quintals of fish are caught with this kind of bait. Consequently the prohibition against the killing of these birds works a double hardship on a great many residents in his riding, first, by depriving them of essential food supplies and, second, by depriving them of the opportunity of obtaining bait and thereby reducing their production and their income.

As hon. members are aware, we are faced with a great problem in Newfoundland because of the incidence of tuberculosis. I have been the president of the Newfoundland Tuberculosis Association since its inception in 1945 and I am fairly familiar with the fact. My belief is that proper diet is of the greatest importance in the prevention of tuberculosis. That is not only my opinion; it has the endorsation of that well known authority, Dr. G. J. Wherrett, secretary of the Canadian Tuberculosis Association. He has given me his permission to quote him as saying that "fresh foods and vitamins are necessary for a proper diet, and proper diet has a definite relationship to the incidence of tuberculosis."

As proof of the gravity of the tuberculosis problem in Newfoundland I might point out that the death rate is 82 per 100,000 of population as compared with 30 per 100,000 in the rest of Canada, with a slightly lower figure in the United States. While this figure appears to be high, it is much lower than it was before our economic conditions improved during the last war as a result of the tremendous expenditures made by the United States in connection with the construction of bases as well as expenditures by Canada and Great Britain.

I also must give credit to our department of public health under the very able direction of Dr. L. A. Miller, assisted by Dr. J. M. McGrath, for this reduction. I feel justified in saying, moreover, that very valuable work has been done by the Newfoundland Tuberculosis Association as well, under the enthusiastic and capable leadership of our executive secretary, Mr. Walter Davis.

In line with the general contention that a proper diet is essential in waging the battle against the white plague, it is necessary that the people of Newfoundland be permitted to take these birds for food and not for sale. It is my understanding that the majority of turrs killed along the southern coast of Newfoundland are killed outside the three mile territorial limit. I am told also that the birds closer in are in poor condition because they are partly covered with oil discharged from diesel operated vessels. Therefore they are not considered fit for eating when in that condition.

Under the present law it is permissible to kill these birds outside the three mile limit, but it is not permissible to bring them ashore. That means that if a man living on the south coast of Newfoundland wants to give his family a meal of these birds he must put the family in his boat, take them out past the three mile limit, kill the birds out there, cook the birds out there, and then wait for the food to digest. Technically speaking if they are brought in in the stomachs of his family he would be strictly guilty of a breach of the law.

Section 3 of article II of the convention permits Eskimos and Indians to take sea birds, which would include turrs. They are also permitted to take their eggs but they are not permitted to sell them. We have the ridiculous position of the Indian and Eskimo of Labrador being allowed to take these birds whereas the local Newfoundlander is not allowed to do so.

Mr. Cruickshank: They are a little different.

Mr. Higgins: That is right. The wildlife convention never interfered with the rights of these people who were here before the white man.

In Newfoundland, as distinct from Labrador, we have no native Indians and no Eskimos. The few Indians we have on the island are comparative newcomers from Nova Scotia. I might add that we have taken these birds for hundreds of years, in fact from the time John Cabot discovered the island, which was some twenty years before Jacques Cartier sailed up the St. Lawrence. St. John's was a settled city when the Indians were still occupying New York. Have we no rights at all? Are these rights that existed from 1497 to April 1, 1949, to be completely disregarded? And for what purpose; so these birds may continue to multiply while people go hungry? The birds are not regarded as a source of food in any other part of Canada. I ask any member from the maritimes or any other part of Canada if he has ever eaten one of these birds, if any member of his family has eaten one, or if he ever had a friend who ate one.

An hon. Member: I have. We called them murres.

Mr. Higgins: You have? You have eaten them?

An hon. Member: Yes, sir.

Mr. Higgins: When did you eat them?

Mr. Knowles: He is one of those Indians from Nova Scotia.

Mr. Higgins: I shall take up this controversy with my hon. friend later. These birds have no value for plumage; their only value is for food, yet Dr. Lewis tells me the main purpose of the treaty is the preservation of the species. He informed me: "The terms of the treaty will apply no matter how numerous the birds may become." Further Dr. Lewis informed me that during the past thirty years hunting has not decreased the number of birds in Newfoundland and he had no knowledge of the position previous to that. His contention is that the reason the birds have not decreased in number is that the people of United States and Canada have not been shooting them. To me that is just shooting a lot of bull, but there it is. I ask how many members from the maritimes have shot and eaten any of these birds in their lifetime. Some hon. members outside the chamber have asked me why I am making such a fuss about this, why we do not just go ahead and shoot them anyhow. The answer, so that hon. members may understand, is that outside St. John's the policing of the island is done by that splendid force, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police; and under the provisions of this act they are ex officio game officers. Even if they disregarded their oath, which is unlikely, under section 8 of this act they would be liable to a fine of up to $500 or to six months' imprisonment "for conniving at breaking the law" if they did close their eyes to it. Anyone breaking the law by shooting such birds is liable to a penalty of up to $300 or six months' imprisonment or both fine and imprisonment, while subsection 2 of section 12 provides that a prosecutor who is not a game officer shall be entitled to one-half the penalty imposed. There are always informers, so there is no possibility that you could get away with shooting these birds without having someone tell on you. Certainly the mounted police are not going to take chances like that.

Another argument advanced by Dr. Lewis was that while it was difficult for people to change their habits, Newfoundland was in the position where it was necessary. My answer to that is in the words of Samuel Johnson, who said, "The chains of habit are too weak to be felt until they are too strong to be broken". The chains of Newfoundland's habits in this respect have been forged over a period of four and a half centuries.

The minister's idea is to have the dominion wildlife officer for Newfoundland co-operate with the agricultural authorities to develop the production of meat for local consumption in and near the more remote localities of the province. To this my answer is that the theory is excellent, but I challenge him to carry it out. Cows or any other edible beasts cannot feed on rocks, and along many parts of the coastline of Newfoundland that is all there is. Moreover I understand the minister's attitude is that while he would like the convention amended for the purpose of permitting Newfoundlanders to take these birds for their own consumption, he is unable to do so because of the necessity of securing United States consent. My reply is that when the United States wished to establish bases in Newfoundland we did not ask any payment; and it is well to remember that the bases in Newfoundland were no part of the destroyers-for-bases deal. We gave up sovereignty over those portions of our country at that time freely, without any consideration whatsoever, and I think it would be a very small quid pro quo now to ask the United States government to give Newfoundlanders the right to shoot these turrs in seasons, which will be limited under the game regulations. When the bases were set up in Newfoundland we had to go through a great deal of disturbance. Our people were moved out of localities where they and their parents before them had made their homes. Their family lives were disrupted, their homes were torn down, and all the sentimental attachments that go with a home were destroyed forever in many cases. So we feel we are asking very little and that this would be very small compensation indeed for what we have had to put up with. There is no suggestion on my part of any ill will toward the Americans. We are very happy to have them there. They have brought a lot of good money and a lot of good will with them, and the relationships are pleasant indeed. But certainly there is no reason why we should not ask this small concession on their part.

I believe I have a few minutes left, and I should like to back up my contentions by reading one or two short extracts from letters which are really very much in point, in order to show that I am not just talking for love of hearing my own voice. The first is a letter from Mr. K. M. Brown of King's Cove, in the riding of the Secretary of State (Mr. Bradley), and indeed a great friend of the minister. Mr. Brown was a member of the old parliament of Newfoundland; he was a member of the national convention, and but for an unfortunate cerebral hemorrhage he probably would be in this house today representing one of the federal ridings. This is what he says:

To those of us who are so well acquainted with the living conditions of Newfoundlanders it is evident that fishermen, particularly in the northern area of the province, where many of the smaller settlements are isolated during winter months, depend almost entirely on sea birds as a source of meat.

It will be remembered that for decades our forefathers hunted and killed these birds by the thousands, but indications are that the flock has not depleted, and year after year millions return to their favourite haunts along our entire coastline.

Having represented various electoral districts of the province in former years, I speak with some authority on this issue, and am familiar with the hazardous conditions with which the average Newfoundlander has to cope. I therefore predict that to deprive many of our fishermen of this source of food would not only upset the family budget, but also invite unrest among our people.

The next letter comes from another part of Newfoundland:

My home for the last seventy-five years has been at St. Lunaire, White bay district, except six winters spent at Cupid's and Clark's Beach. And I am speaking from experience when I say that the most of the people of the east coast and Belle isle area have mostly to depend on sea birds for fresh meat during the winter months to keep them in a healthy condition. And we the undersigned wish you success in your undertaking.

Mr. Speaker, I have a letter from a very good sportsman in Grand Falls, who has given me permission to quote him. It is from George Hicks, an official of the Anglo-Newfoundland Development Company. He says:

I have watched the migrations of these birds for more than forty years and their numbers are certainly increasing. I have seen many places where they breed, especially the Funk islands. I am told by the people who visited the Funks only last summer that the sky is literally darkened with them as they fly over the island bringing food to their young.

In the years from 1900 to 1906, when I fished with my father in his schooner, we often visited the Funks and its surrounding grounds fishing cod. In those years these birds were there in their tens of thousands. There is, therefore, no lessening of their numbers as far as I can observe, and I have had ample opportunity. Nearly every year I go to Twillingate to have a shoot when they are migrating, usually between October 20 and November 10, and from what I have seen during the past twenty years at least I can conscientiously say they are on the increase.

The following is a vivid picture which my friend, Ken Goodyear, can substantiate:

In 1940 about November 1 we were just northwest of Twillingate Long Point at dawn; he was in one boat and I in another. There were, of course, scores of boats in the vicinity. The wind was northeast and squally, with occasional snow flurries. From dawn till dusk the sky was filled with flocks, all hastening south.

It would be fantastic to suggest any sort of an accurate figure, but undoubtedly millions flew around the point that day, for as far as the eye could reach there was nothing but flock after flock. One had the time of one's life shooting, but if all the birds secured on that day were counted they would not represent 1/1000 of one per cent of the millions that flew down Notre Dame bay.

I shall not read too much of the letter, but there are two or three paragraphs I should like to quote.

I have killed these birds every year. I plan my holidays so that I can secure a few of them not only for my family but for my friends. While I admit I, myself, can readily get along without them, yet thousands of our people along the coast look forward to them as the only source of fresh food for the winter. Many families pickle them and when they are watered they are almost as tasty as when fresh.

When this treaty was signed between the States and Canada, it is very doubtful if its signatories or the people they represented had the slightest idea that the turr was such a delectable dish, and it is also doubtful if it is such in the waters around the New England coast or the coasts of Nova Scotia.

As a sportsman I love turr shooting, for to wing a single bird coming down wind is no fool's game. It is most exhilarating, and, as a delicacy, there is no other bird I know (when properly cooked) can take its place.

Now, this letter is from another section, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Blackmore: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Higgins: Yes.

Mr. Blackmore: The hon. member has mentioned that these birds were migrating. Could he give us any idea as to where they would be migrating if they were not going to the United States?

Mr. Higgins: As I understand it the migration to which reference is made is from Greenland to Newfoundland. I believe the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Carter) will speak in this debate, and he will probably be able to explain it more fully than I can. The migration is only from Greenland to Newfoundland and I understand the birds do not go away from Newfoundland except to go back to Greenland.

I understand that my time is up, Mr. Speaker, but if I could have three or four minutes I would be able to finish.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the desire of the house to permit the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Higgins: I could speak for hours on this matter, but I believe my remarks can best be summed up by a Newfoundland ballad entitled "The Shooting of the Bawks", which was written by Mr. A. R. Scammell, who is now engaged in the teaching profession in Montreal. At the time he wrote this ballad he lived at Pinchard's island in the riding of the Secretary of State (Mr. Bradley). He informed me that it was around 1938 when he wrote it, and at that time a restriction had been imposed against the shooting of sea birds. I understand he bases his ballad on the talk he heard amongst the fishermen in the various settlements in that area. I have a record here and a recording machine, Mr. Speaker; am I permitted to use it at this point?

Mr. Speaker: I would suggest to the hon. member that he may use the machine and the record in his office. I am sure hon. members would attend.

Mr. Higgins: Very well, I shall do that. Any member who wants to hear it is welcome to come, and I shall play it for him. I shall quote a few verses.

Some hon. Members: Sing it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, does the hon. member propose to read a few verses?

Mr. Higgins: Yes, Mr. Speaker, even though it is approaching St. Patrick's day I do not think my voice is in good enough condition to warrant imposing it on the members of the house. I shall read a couple of verses, and if hon. members will remember that the tune is the "Wearing of the Green", they may sing it for themselves at a later date. It reads as follows:

O Mary dear and did you hear the news I heard today?
We're only 'lowed to kill a bird up to the middle o' May.
Now isn't it a cruel shame, this thing that they have done!
And so says Tom, and so says Bill, and so says everyone.
I met with Skipper Neddy, and he took me by the hand,
And he said: "Now what's the news, my boy, and how's poor Newfoundland?
Says I, "Next summer, Neddy, we'll have to live on hawks,
For theres' a bloody law agin the killin' of the bawks."

But as I'm a law-abiding man, as you may understand,
I'll have to fire beach-rocks at the king-birds from the land.
They're tryin' to starve an honest man who has the nerve and pluck—
For there's a bloody law agin the killin' of the duck.

The ones who made this law can sit, eat chicken, drink port wine,
But what about the poor old ghost who hauls a fishing line?
He has to watch the bawks flock 'round, upon a foggy day
And watch them rob his trawls of bait, and watch them fly away.
He's not allowed to shoot them or someone sure will squawk;
For there's a bloody law agin' the killin' of a bawk.

The last verse is the one I shall read now, Mr. Speaker.

But if they keep this law that's passed, they will not get a taste
Of hawk or noddy, tinker, turr, and not a ticklace.
So you who made this law prepare and send us all a meal
From time to time of good fresh beef, or mutton, pork and veal.
And don't forget, my bully boys, a chicken now an' then.
As yet there's neither law agin the killin' of a hen.

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): Mr. Speaker, as this is my first address from the floor of this historic chamber, I should like my first words to be words of thanks to the people who sent me here. With your permission, sir, before proceeding to discuss the resolution before the house, I should like to express my heartfelt gratitude to my constituents for the confidence they have placed in me, and for the honour they have bestowed upon me in selecting me to represent them in this national parliament.

The subject matter of the resolution introduced by the member for St. John's East (Mr. Higgins) is one of great concern to all my constituents. I would be failing in my duty to them if I did not present their wishes here today. The numerous petitions and telegrams which I have received from all parts of my riding make it quite plain that my constituents want me to support this resolution. Although several species of sea birds are mentioned in this resolution, the importance of one species known scientifically as the murre, and locally as the turr, overshadows the importance of all the others. All the telegrams and petitions which I have received refer only to this one species, the turr. The economic value of this bird has already been pointed out by my friend the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. Higgins), as well as its importance as a factor in the health and nutrition of our people. To understand this it is necessary to know the isolated conditions under which so many of our people live.

In my own riding of Burin-Burgeo there are 260 settlements, of which only 33 have a population of over 300. Of those 260 settlements only about 45 are connected by roads, and 73 are connected by the Canadian National Railway coastal service. This leaves about 150 settlements without any organized system of communications whatever, either with each other or with the outside world. The only way to get from one place to another is by means of small fishing boats. In stormy weather, especially in the winter months, these settlements are completely isolated for weeks at a time.

Few communities have sufficient land for gardens or for the raising of livestock. Consequently only a tiny fraction of the food supply can be produced in the community. The nearest store is usually located in one of the larger settlements several miles away.

Because of this isolated condition which I have just described, the people are forced to supplement their food supply from natural sources. In this respect they are in much the same position as the woodsmen and the trappers. The only difference is that for our people nature provides a food supply in the form of sea birds instead of in the form of land birds and small animals. Our fishermen have been dependent upon this source of food from the time of the earliest settlers, and it came as rather a shock to them when they learned that confederation had deprived them of this right which they had exercised for so many years.

Their first reaction was that something had been put over on them; because it is logical to assume that the application of federal game laws would be taken up by the departments concerned when the terms of union were under discussion. Yet no mention was made of this restriction when the issue of confederation was placed before the people. Their second reaction was one of vexation and resentment at losing a right which they had enjoyed for so many years, and particularly one which affected their lives in so many ways. Resentment is always a bad thing in any form. It is a sort of cancer of the spirit which grows by feeding on itself. One of its effects is to prevent us from thinking about the question objectively.

As I understand it, my duty in this house is not only to make known the views of my people but to search for the truth and to present that truth as I see it both to my constituents and to this parliament; not only that, but also to point out the direction in which I believe the truth impels us to move. In this connection there are a few points to which I should like to direct attention. The first point is that there is available altogether too little authentic information for us to be able to make a definite decision as to what is the right thing to do in this case.

The restriction that brought about this resolution arises out of an international treaty which affects other nations and other provinces. We do not know to what extent the numbers of these sea birds have increased during the time that the treaty has been in force. We do not know whether the rate of increase is sufficient to withstand the slaughter which might result if all the Atlantic provinces insisted on exercising their right to kill these birds, as legally they would be able to do should the treaty be amended.

In the second place, there is some doubt in my mind at least as to whether these birds known as turrs or murres should properly be included in the terms of this international treaty at all. In my opinion, turrs are not migratory birds. To my mind, a migratory bird is one whose natural habits, food supply and body temperature compel it to move from one country to another to seek climatic conditions essential to its natural existence and the propagation of its species. This definition certainly does not apply to the turr. Only a small percentage of these birds actually cross the international boundary, and I believe that those either drift southwards with the ocean currents or are blown southwards by the prevailing winds. These birds are not built for flying. They have relatively small wings and they can fly only a short distance at a time before coming down on the water. They are therefore different in this respect from other migratory birds. The fact that a few of them may drift or be blown across the international boundary does not, in my opinion, make them migratory birds.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to see this question settled on a basis of what is right; that sentiment applies not only to this question but to every question that comes before this house. In no other way can we effectively serve the interests of our people or of our nation. We can determine what is right only if we are guided by the moral principles involved. The first principle that comes to my mind is that democracy must concern itself with the needs of the people, or else it ceases to be democracy. The second principle is that we are our brother's keeper and we should care for each other enough to put the needs of others before our own. In this respect we must bear in mind the fact that our Indian and Eskimo brothers need these birds even worse than do our Newfoundland fishermen, because they have a total meat diet and they live on what they can catch and kill from day to day. For their sakes, therefore, these birds must not be permitted to become extinct. If that should happen, our Indians and Eskimos would suffer far greater hardship than anyone else; and for this very reason the birds must be protected. Whether total protection is necessary, however, is quite another matter. The number of birds killed by the Newfoundland fishermen is relatively small, as they do not appear in any numbers until from December to March; and at that time of the year the weather is so stormy that the fishermen can get out in their boats only about once or twice a week to kill them. Far more destruction is caused by foxes, which devour their eggs and kill the young, and also by crude oil pumped out by ships at sea, which destroys thousands of adult birds at a time. However, if some protective measures are necessary, our people will be the first to agree to a limitation of the shooting season, and on the number of birds to be taken. But the overriding factor, as I see it, is that of human need. This principle is already recognized by the treaty, which grants exemption to the Indians and the Eskimos. I believe that this principle should be extended to our Newfoundland fishermen in those areas where a definite need exists, and to other provinces as well where the need can be established. I believe that if proposals are put forward to the countries and to the provinces concerned on this basis they will agree to an amendment.

It is because I view the resolution in this light that I give it my wholehearted support.

Mr. W. J. Browne (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to congratulate my colleague, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. Higgins), on the comprehensive presentation of the case which he put forward here this afternoon; so much so, that he has left little for anyone who follows him to say. I should like to congratulate him also on the strong and impassioned plea that he has put forward to the government and to the house to alter the law in relation to the birds to which we are referring. I believe that he has, by the extracts that he has given from representative people in Newfoundland, faithfully portrayed the feelings of a great majority of the residents around the coast of Newfoundland.

It is obvious to everyone that my colleague has gone to great pains to prepare this presentation, and I feel sure that the people concerned will be most grateful to him for the forceful manner in which he has put their case forward.

I should also like to take this opportunity to congratulate the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Carter) on his maiden speech. If he approaches all the questions before this house in the same broadminded manner in which he has tackled this question, then he will deserve to receive the praise of all hon. members.

As a member, sir, of a riding which, outside the city of St. John's, has 300 miles of coastline where there are 20,000 people living in a hundred settlements, and living in houses the front doors of which face upon the ocean to show that the sea is their highway, I feel I must support my colleague from St. John's East in recommending to this house the adoption of this resolution. But I think a case should be put forward so that the proposal could be accepted on its merits, and not from any show of sympathetic consideration to the people in Newfoundland.

We are not looking for any special favours in this. I believe we have a case. While this subject is very important to thousands of people in Newfoundland, we must also recognize that there is a class of persons who have another regard for the birds, and who regard the question of preservation and conservation of birdlife as very important, too. I refer to the almost unknown group of men, naturalists and ornithologists, and here I should like to pay a tribute to that class of men who have taken such a deep interest in the life of birds over the years, and to whom we all owe a great deal for their preservation. If we could only imagine what life on this planet would be without having birds we would realize what a debt we all owe to these men through the past centuries. Imagine spring without the robin or blackbird or thrush! Imagine summer without the swallow or the skylark, or early morning in the forests without the whistling of the birds! Imagine a ship at sea without the friendly following gulls! How much poorer the world would be without the beauty of the humming bird, the soaring eagle, or the song of the nightingale. The birds of the air play an important part in the Divine plan of creation.

To those lovers of birds, like the late Jack Miner, not only the people of Canada, but the people of the whole world, owe a great debt of gratitude, and it is surprising and even shocking to realize that just south of Jack Miner's sanctuary in southwestern Ontario at the time the birds take their flight to go south hundreds of people line up with shotguns, sportsmen, and shoot into the mass of birds darkening the sky. The naturalists and the ornithologists therefore, by their patience, by their perseverance, by their studies and their experiments, have accumulated a mass of valuable information of great benefit to mankind. They have succeeded in identifying the birds, noting their habits and portraying them even so that outside the places of their habitat we can see what they look like and learn all about them. There may be little doubt that those men have great influence on the government, and the government will act upon their advice. There is little doubt that it was largely due to their work that the birds to which we are referring today have not only not decreased in number, but have actually tended to increase in recent years. But, of course, it must be understood that even without the protection afforded these birds under the terms of the migratory birds convention it would not be possible to extinguish this class of birds. There is no danger of extinction of the turr as there was of the great auk because they have greater mobility and there are far greater numbers of them.

In the case of the great auk, Mr. Speaker, which became extinct nearly a hundred years ago in Newfoundland, its wings by constant use in the water had become a sort of flipper. The bird had become entirely aquatic, so that when it was being hunted it could not fly away, and therefore was shot in great numbers. In fact at times the fishermen used to put down planks from the land to the ship and drive the auks, which were very much like penguins, on board ship and take them away in that manner.

Nor is there serious danger of any great depletion in the flocks of those birds; and those who heard that letter which my colleague read this afternoon will agree that from testimony of a high character there seem to be millions upon millions of these birds. I know that on one island off Witless bay, which is a part of my riding, about 21 miles south of St. John's, there are many thousands of those birds. You can look at that island and you can see those birds lined up in ranks like troops, hundred of thousands of them. Every little ledge is covered with birds. Anyone who has seen them there would hardly think that they could be easily extinguished.

What I believe is a more serious cause of destruction of birds of that kind is the pollution of water by the oil-burning steamers.

It is the practice of many engineers on the steamers, after the tanks have been exhausted of oil, to fill them up with water; and when they are approaching port they discharge this water, so that they can refuel when they go into port. When they discharge the water large quantities of oil waste and sludge go into the sea; and since the oil is lighter than water it floats on top of the water and spreads out over great distances so that all the birds within the neighbourhood get coated with this oil. It permeates their plumage so that they cannot rise from the water, and they cannot dive for food. Therefore they become thin and die.

I believe that attempts have been made to control the deposit of oil on the surface of the water in this manner. And although many people have co-operated, there are still some who do not, and the oil from these steamers and the oil from wrecks along the coast escaping into the water kills thousands of birds every year.

The question comes to my mind as I suppose it comes to many hon. members; and my colleague dealt with it this afternoon: Why do naturalists work so hard to preserve and propagate these species? It is hardly for the purpose of giving us pleasure. The answer which Dr. Harrison Lewis is supposed to have given my hon. friend and colleague is that it is done just to see them increase and multiply. It seems to me that is not a justification. It is not a sound reason.

These birds are like other game birds, such as partridge, plover, snipe or the brown duck, which have been created by God for the benefit of man. People who live in places where these birds congregate have the right to shoot them, in the appropriate season, just the same as sportsmen have the right to go out to shoot partridge, caribou or moose.

A wise exception was made in the convention referred to by the hon. member in respect of Eskimos and Indians, who have been accustomed to taking these birds and using the eggs as well, from time immemorial. It is appropriate to point out that at the conference which took place shortly after April 1, 1949, between the representatives of the provincial department of natural resources and the federal government officials, it was recognized as set out at page 29 of the report of the Department of Resources and Development for 1950 that "in the economy of Newfoundland migratory birds were of great importance".

As a result of that decision, for the first year the closed season was not extended to Newfoundland. This winter, however, for the first time, half of the island, beginning somewhere north of St. John's—about forty miles I believe—and extending down south along the south coast, and then north again as far as Cape St. Gregory on the west coast of Newfoundland, the southern half of the island was brought within the closed season, and fishermen along that stretch of coast are not allowed to shoot birds this year. Next year the remainder of the island will be covered by the closed season. After that the birds can multiply in their millions and laugh heartily at the fishermen.

It is this sudden change of policy which has caused surprise and consternation, and even bitterness among large numbers of people in Newfoundland. So general and so intense are the feelings of the people on this subject that it has been said by many supporters of the federal government, and supporters of confederation, that if the people had known they were not going to have the right to shoot these birds, confederation would have been defeated by a substantial majority.

Hon. members from other parts of the country, especially from inland parts, may find it hard to understand why there is so much commotion over this subject, and why people are so concerned about wild game. I shall try to explain why. We have a coastline six thousand miles in length on which there are about twelve hundred settlements. During the winter months there is no communication at all with many of those settlements. People cannot get to the stores; no butcher comes around, and it is easy to see that in small villages, where there is very little arable land, it is impossible to raise sheep or cattle. Some people raise pigs and have what they call a barrel of pork put down for the winter. But often they are not able to get young pigs in the spring, and the result is that they have not the pork to eat when the winter comes along. To a large extent they rely upon the supply of meat they can get from shooting birds.

People in those outports spend a great deal of time gathering firewood. Throughout the country, except in the larger centres, wood is burned. The people go into the forest and collect the firewood—a year's supply. On suitable days they will go out to shoot turrs or duck. People in those isolated settlements are bound to take advantage of everything nature offers to keep the wolf from the door, and to live until their normal trade relations open in the spring.

It is easy to remind hon. members that the price of meat today is prohibitive, almost, to any ordinary workingman in a city such as Ottawa. I have heard working people in the United States as well as in Canada complain about the high prices they have to pay for fresh meat. In those isolated settlements which are so far away from the great centres of production, accordingly, the people in Newfoundland rely to a very large extent —much greater than the people in other parts of Canada—upon wild game such as rabbits, caribou, moose and wild birds.

Some may ask: Why do they not raise poultry? I have asked myself that question. I have said, "Why do not the people have eggs and poultry?" It was pointed out to me that it is not practicable to have a poultry farm if there is no market nearby. One has to make an outlay for equipment to run the farm. He must pay for feed, which would have to be imported over long distances. Then, if there is no ready market nearby in which to sell poultry and eggs, one cannot dispose of any surplus. What are the people to do?

You will say to me, "Eat them." But there is no need for such a large quantity, with the result that they have become discouraged. They have seen large poultry farms in the vicinity of St. John's become failures, and there is very little encouragement for individuals in the isolated outports to follow that practice. I believe that through the co-operative methods to which I have referred several times in the house, but which have not yet been practised sufficiently in Newfoundland, in time that difficulty will be overcome. In a large part of Newfoundland however individualism still rules and retards progress and development. The agitation therefore to procure the repeal of this regulation draws attention to a great problem still to be solved, namely that of enabling the people of Newfoundland to possess a sound year-round economy, outside the great industrial centres.

I can well recall my first introduction to the wild migratory non-game birds. Back in the spring of 1923 I was engaged in an election, and when we went into the village of Branch we were met with open arms—and I might add that the people who opposed us were met with open arms later. We were taken to a boarding house, and I remember well how clean and comfortable the place was. The pièce de résistance was wild sea duck—and anyone who has not tasted wild sea duck or turr has a treat in store. Unless the government has this regulation rescinded, he may never have that privilege. I ask hon. members to consider the fair and reasonable proposition put forward by my hon. friend, namely that of granting to the industrious and hardy people who have worked so hard the same rights granted to Eskimos and Indians in connection with taking these birds for food.

The reason that privilege is given the Indians and Eskimos is not only that they have had it from time immemorial, but that it is a means of obtaining food. It is the natural method for them to do so. As my hon. friend from Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Carter) pointed out, the people who live along the seacoast where the birds congregate in great numbers should be granted the same rights. Such rights could be restricted to a certain period of the year—I do not think there would be any objection to that. I suggest that this would not seriously deplete the great stock of birds, and would assure to the people of Newfoundland the food necessary to help carry them over the long winter months.

Mr. J. W. Noseworthy (York South): Mr. Speaker, before the question is put I want to say that I support this resolution. I want to congratulate the mover, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. Higgins), upon the able manner in which he has presented this resolution. As one who was born in an outport of Newfoundland and who as a youth had to depend to a large extent upon wild sea birds for fresh food, I can corroborate everything that has been said by the three hon. members from Newfoundland with regard to the importance of these birds to the people of that province.

It is unfortunate that Newfoundlanders should have to rely to such a large extent upon these birds as a source of food. It is also unfortunate that the incidence of tuberculosis should be so high. If this debate has done one thing, I am sure that it has impressed upon every hon. member and the government the nature of the task which is before us in raising the standard of living in Newfoundland and providing its people with the opportunity to earn a livelihood and to reach a status where they will no longer be dependent upon such an uncertain source of food supply.

There are one or two things we should keep in mind in connection with the convention which is the subject of this debate. Until Newfoundland came into confederation the convention was not observed in that province as they were not a party to the convention. Newfoundlanders were free to take these birds as occasion arose. From all the evidence available this practice has had no effect upon depleting the birds.

The second fact to be kept in mind is that Newfoundland is probably the only part of any country which is a party to the convention where this matter is of such grave importance. The matter is not of significance to other parts of Canada or to the United States because these birds frequent the coast line and bays of Newfoundland.

Since there is no evidence that these birds are likely to become extinct even when taken for food, as they have been for centuries, there is no common-sense reason why this resolution should not be adopted and the Canadian government seek to make some arrangement with the other parties to the convention whereby Newfoundlanders may continue to exercise a privilege they have enjoyed for centuries.

I can see no sound reason why this particular species, which is of significance only to Newfoundland, should be protected to the point where there is no open season. Other wildlife of interest to people in all parts of Canada is protected, but the protection is limited in that there are open seasons. This particular species can serve no other purpose than to provide food, and therefore I strongly support the previous members in urging that this resolution pass.

Mr. J. H. Blackmore (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. Higgins) upon the admirable presentation of this resolution he has made to the house. The people of Newfoundland have reason to be proud of him and other hon. members who have participated in the debate. They have indicated that they have learned rather fast since reaching the house because their debating seems to be quite up to the standard which ordinarily prevails in the house.

The first thing we need to do in respect to this problem is what we should do in respect to all other problems which confront Canada. We live in a great country where varying conditions prevail. Problems which are of vital concern to one area may hardly have been heard of in other parts of the country. The result is a slight inclination on the part of many members to treat lightly the problems of areas remote from their own. We must teach each other with the utmost speed to refrain from any tendency to discount the seriousness of a problem facing another part of Canada with which we do not happen to be familiar. That is the only way in which we shall be able to make this country as mighty and as great as the Creator evidently intended it should be.

I listened with much interest to the discussion of this problem in respect of turrs. I must confess that three weeks ago I did not know that there were such things as turrs and at first I wondered whether they were really worth considering. The hon. member for St. John's East suggested that I give the matter more than passing thought, which I did, and I find that after all it is a serious problem and one worthy of consideration.

Therefore I do not hesitate to rise this afternoon for a few moments to express my ardent sympathy with the people of Newfoundland and to indicate my support in the attempt to solve this problem. In saying that, I think I can speak for the whole of the Social Credit group and the province of Alberta. We have plenty of problems of our own and therefore we can give the most sympathetic attention to this problem faced by our sister province. We shall be prepared to give equally sympathetic consideration to every problem that affects this dominion from one coast to the other.

In respect of this problem of turrs, I am deeply interested in what we are going to do to find a solution. After what I have heard today and the study I have given the subject I am convinced that it is a problem which simply must be solved in the way Newfoundland wants it solved. They have a perfect right to have this concession obtained for them and granted to them, because from what has been said here the matter of turrs is evidently of vital importance to their health and economy. What we are going to do about it is the great question. It occurs to me, Mr. Speaker, that probably three lines of attack on this problem are open. From the experience I have had with him I am sure the minister does not need any suggestion from me that it will be necessary to attack this problem with the utmost energy and resourcefulness. I am sure that he is going to do that, and his department with him. Nevertheless I am assuring him that he has my support in so doing.

It seems to me we could probably establish that the turr is not properly classified as a migratory bird. We have a migratory birds convention. The evidence I have obtained thus far and the information adduced in this discussion indicate quite strongly that without too much in the way of mental gymnastics one could establish the fact that the turr is not a migratory bird in the sense in which that expression is used in the convention. I fancy that we would find considerable sympathy for this approach to the problem in the minds of enlightened and well informed people in the United States. If they did object to classifying this bird as non-migratory, then possibly we could prevail upon the United States to look at this matter from the angle that when Newfoundland entered confederation she was not aware that in doing so she would be depriving her people of the privilege of shooting turrs, and because of that fact special consideration ought to be given that province. When we bear in mind that for generations Newfoundland was a self-governing sister dominion in the British commonwealth, I think consideration ought to be given that approach and a special allowance made in the case of that province. This line of attack might be successful.

If the United States authorities were not prepared to grant the validity of those two arguments, however, it seems to me they should be prepared to grant concessions on the following ground. Here is a bird which enters vitally not only into the sporting life of Newfoundland as a migratory bird under the convention, but which enters into the very economy of the province. In the first place it constitutes an important food during considerable periods of the year over a wide area of Newfoundland; in the second place it is useful and necessary as bait for codfish.

If none of these three arguments taken separately should be sufficient, I would certainly think the three arguments taken together ought to constitute arguments that would carry sufficient weight with the United States authorities to cause them to grant us the privilege of making the exception in the case of Newfoundland, which obviously the situation requires.

[Mr. Blackmore.]

With these three suggestions as to possible methods of approaching the matter I shall conclude, merely observing once more that Newfoundlanders can count on the Social Crediters of Alberta, anyway, being right behind them in all their efforts to obtain the rights they believe they should enjoy.

Mr. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in supporting what has been placed before this house so clearly and in such forceful terms by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. Higgins) I wish to refer to some aspects of this discussion relating more to the legal phases of the problem than to the questions involved in consideration of the birdlife itself. While I cannot claim that direct association which has been put forward by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Noseworthy), at least I can claim with some pride to be one of those in this house with very direct family associations with Newfoundland.

The subject has been well placed before hon. members, and the importance of the birds mentioned in this resolution has been sufficiently emphasized so there is no necessity of repeating to hon. members the arguments in favour of consideration being given this resolution and an appropriate amendment of the act itself, which of course would involve discussion with the government of the United States. One point that has emerged from some of the correspondence that has been exchanged in regard to this subject is the suggestion that there are difficulties in the way of making exceptions in a particular case. I submit there is no practical difficulty in the way of appropriate amendments to the act following discussion with the proper authorities representing the United States government. The Migratory Birds Convention Act, which is chapter 130 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, makes it clear that there can be exceptions. It makes it clear that those exceptions need not be general, relating to the whole of Canada, but that they may be specific exceptions made in relation to a single province. That is shown by the various exceptions in the act itself, as well as in the appendices to the act. I would point out that in addition to the exceptions already mentioned by those who have spoken there is a group of exceptions starting with section 20 of the regulations which relate not to birdlife itself but which indicate that the provisions of this act be made to apply to different provinces of Canada in different ways. Section 20 reads:

> In the province of Newfoundland, no person shall hunt, kill, or attempt to kill a migratory game bird by the use of an automatic firearm, including a firearm loaded by recoil or "auto-loading."

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the very fact that there is a separate exception in regard to the firearms to be used in connection with the birds covered by this convention and the statute itself indicates that any provision of the act which is regarded as desirable and appropriate could be used, after steps have been taken which should be taken to produce that result. The sections immediately following this deal with exceptions in other provinces in Canada in connection with the use of firearms.

Then section 30 is an exception in relation to the birds themselves, and that is under the heading "Permits for Scientific Purposes." Section 30 provides that special permits may be given to kill, hunt, capture injure, take, molest, buy, sell, ship, transport or possess migratory birds or their eggs or nests for any scientific purpose. The section then goes on to explain how those permits shall be issued and to whom. I mentioned section 30 because the very fact that there can be an exception for scientific purposes demonstrates beyond all argument that there could equally be an exception for the purpose envisaged by this motion, namely the provision of necessary food to those parts of Newfoundland which have been accustomed to this particular food.

As I pointed out, the very fact that a number of exceptions are made to apply to particular provinces indicates that such a provision could relate to Newfoundland alone, or to any part of Newfoundland, without violating the general intent or purpose of this act. Following the act itself there are a series of schedules, and those schedules differ for each of the different provinces of Canada. Those schedules cover the open seasons for different kinds of birds, including some of the birds covered by this resolution. There again we see clearly demonstrated that there is an established practice for dealing with this subject in relation to the particular problem which each province presents.

There is also evidence contained in those schedules that the government has indicated its willingness to deal with the various aspects of this problem in relation to limited areas in separate provinces. The act itself makes it clear, therefore, that if the government is convinced that there should be an exception in the interests of the people of Newfoundland, there is nothing to prevent that exception being made.

In examining this subject, and considering what the United States would be likely to do if proper and sufficiently vigorous representations were made by the Canadian government concerning the subject, it is important to look at the convention under which both the Canadian and United States legislation was passed. The convention recited the reasons for the agreement reached by the governments of the United States and Canada to limit the shooting, trapping and other activities in connection with a number of migratory birds. The convention starts with the recital:

> Whereas many species of birds in the course of their annual migrations traverse certain parts of the Dominion of Canada and the United States; and
> Whereas many of those species are of great value as a source of food or in destroying insects which are injurious to forests and forage plants on the public domain, as well as agricultural crops, in both Canada and the United States, but are nevertheless in danger of extermination through lack of adequate protection during the nesting season, or while on their way to and from the breeding grounds; . . .

I have read the exact words of the convention to that point. The convention then goes on to recite that the governments of Canada and the United States have reached certain agreements, and it is under those agreements that Canada then proceeded to adopt the legislation at that time, which legislation has been amended from time to time since then.

In the paragraphs following the reference to the agreement between the governments, it states that these governments are, and I quote, "desirous of saving from indiscriminate slaughter and of ensuring the preservation of such migratory birds as are either useful to man or are harmless." I am informed, Mr. Speaker, that there is no danger of the extermination of these particular birds now under discussion, particularly of the turrs, which it has been explained are the most important of the birds. After all, these birds have been shot or captured for a great many years, in fact for centuries, without any evidence of any danger of extermination. Certainly, if there were danger of extermination, then it would be necessary to modify one's views, and to advocate such measures of conservation as would preserve the species. It might then be necessary to limit the shooting or capture of these birds in an appropriate way, as is done in other cases.

I would point out that in the case of many birds, which are not migratory and which come under ordinary provincial legislation, the species survives under protective laws. Those laws do permit a certain amount of shooting or capturing, but do not permit a bag of a size that would lead to the extermination of the species. I have mentioned these points, Mr. Speaker, because it seems to me that the case that has been made in this connection suggests that there is no strong reason why this motion should not be supported. If the motion were adopted there is no reason why the government should not proceed to discuss with the government of the United States the terms of the agreement under which our own act could be amended to permit the people of Newfoundland to continue to use these birds for food, as they have over so many years in the past.

Might I point out that, while it is desirable that we should carry forward the conservation of bird life, we must also recognize long established practices which have to do with the dietary resources of any particular part of Canada. We should remember that there has not yet been an opportunity to extend those transportation facilities which may, over the years, make it unnecessary to continue any exception which might now be made. I should imagine that, as transportation facilities by road, by air, and by other means, are extended to the outports and to the most remote settlements of the province of Newfoundland, the need for this food would diminish. That, however, is to be dealt with at some future time. We are dealing now with what has been shown to be an urgent need of people who have become partners with us in the business of making this a united nation not only in name but in spirit as well. For that very reason I urge the government to avail themselves of the established practice of making exceptions, which has been demonstrated already by the act itself, and that they support this legislation and then proceed to discuss this subject with the government of the United States.

Mr. Ralph Maybank (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Resources and Development): Mr. Speaker, I made a few notes for the purpose of speaking on this subject; but before I even glance at them and discuss the subject from the point of view they indicate to me, I should like to deal with the argument the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) has just made to the house. I believe that, on consideration, he will find that some of the statements he has made were not quite accurate. If he meant us to understand that it is not impossible to change this situation—if that was the intent—then of course there could be no disagreement because there is a way of getting away from this treaty. But if, on the other hand, he meant that under the treaty we could make the change in the law which is desired then I submit that he is not right; and I believe that on consideration he will agree that he is not right.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to interrupt—

Mr. Maybank: I have no objection.

Mr. Drew: —but perhaps it would avoid unnecessary discussion if I were to do so. I thought I had made it clear and I hope the record will show that I did. I sought to emphasize the fact that the amendments that we should make would be amendments which could only follow discussion with the United States and consent to appropriate changes in the convention itself and their agreement with the amendments that we would make.

Mr. Maybank: The point really was this. The leader of the opposition indicated that the law shows that exceptions can be made. It is not the law that shows that exceptions can be made. That is a matter of treaty. The treaty makes it quite clear that exceptions, such as those the hon. gentleman mentioned, can be made. The treaty makes that clear. The treaty likewise makes it clear that with regard to these birds, which are called murres in the treaty and which are apparently called turrs locally, the prohibition of shooting or otherwise killing is absolute. So that actually to draw an inference from the Canadian law that a change can be effected is to draw a wrong inference. But of course no person will dispute the fact that it is always possible to open up discussions with a foreign country.

With respect to the whole question of the problem of the Newfoundlanders, there is no one but who must approach and view it with the greatest of sympathy. Here are people, we learn now, who have been using these birds for food for an exceedingly long time. It has been said even that this has been going on for four hundred years. By reason of confederation with Canada they find that there is first of all a danger that this food will be taken away from them. Later on one part of the island finds that indeed the opportunity of continuing to shoot these birds has been taken away from them. The other part of the island is facing the commencement of enforcement of the law there also. No person can help being sympathetic to the problem of the islanders, when he looks at a matter like that fairly in the face.

I have been aware of the difficulties for some little time. Before I became parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Resources and Development, various members from Newfoundland had come and talked the matter over with me, and had written to me at great length about it. They thought that I might have some knowledge of it dating from the time when I was in the department of mines and resources. I speak of them usually by name, not remembering their constituencies; but the hon. member for Trinity-Conception (Mr. Stick), the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay (Mr.

Ashbourne), the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Carter) and the hon. member for Humber-St. George's (Mr. Kent) all have written to me at great length, and have argued with me in the corridors and in my room. Whenever I met any of my colleagues from Newfoundland I thought it was almost certain that the subject of discussion would be turrs. I have had turrs, vicariously as it were, for breakfast, lunch and dinner nearly every day.

Then of course more recently the department has had representation from a number of places in Newfoundland. I have marked some of them down here. As my notes show it, petitions have come in from Grand Bank, Port de Grave, Hermitage, Sagona Island, Fortune Bay, Red Island, Placentia Bay, Little Paradise and a number of other places. There is no doubt about it that every person who has given any consideration at all to the matter has approached it in a most sympathetic way and that every person is desirous of finding some way of restoring to the Newfoundlanders the privilege they had had for so long or of working out something that will be a little bit less unpleasantly drastic than what we have had presented to us here today.

There is something about the treaty itself that might be kept in mind. I understand that we were engaged for a long time in the negotiations that led up to the signing of this treaty. A great many people in the United States and a great many people in Canada for many years were striving to get some treaty of this sort to protect birds that live sometimes on one side of the line and sometimes on the other. Eventually they succeeded. It was in 1916 that the treaty was signed. Sir Robert Borden was prime minister at that time, and I understand that he himself took a great interest in this treaty. That is what I have been told by some of the old-timers around here. There have not been any changes in the treaty since that time. There have not been any changes in the law except perhaps some few regulation changes in order better to carry out the obligations that we had under the treaty. I may say that at the time that Sir Robert Borden's government was able to effect this treaty it was received with acclaim in all parts of the house. Sir Wilfrid Laurier spoke at some length in favour of it at the time, and complimented the government of the day on its achievement. Bird lovers, sportsmen and many other types of people were greatly pleased at the time. There is, however, something that I think has been mentioned here this afternoon—and it will do no harm to repeat it—that should be kept in mind with reference to this treaty. It appeals to me, at any rate. When this treaty was negotiated in 1916 it was for Canada as it then existed, and for the United States as it then existed. Neither of the contracting parties had in contemplation at all the island of Newfoundland, or any of the birds which swim or float around there. When one says that, the inclination develops in his mind that the United States might view with favour the proposal that Newfoundland should not be deprived of turrs, or the treaty should not apply, to some extent at any rate, to Newfoundland, since in the bargain they did not have Newfoundland in mind. There is the possibility of that.

An hon. Member: Louder.

Mr. Maybank: I am sorry; I thought my voice was carrying. However, I fancy you are not losing very much anyway. I do not rate it very highly, but we will go through with it anyway. I was saying that I had noted I thought it was of some interest and even importance that when the treaty was negotiated neither the United States nor Canada expected to be getting any benefit with respect to the birds that fly or float around Newfoundland, and that any benefit the two contracting parties get by reason of Newfoundland and its bird life and the conservation of them is purely fortuitous. If I may use the language of another debate, the contracting parties at that time were not having regard to the birds of Newfoundland; and consequently one is inclined to think that if an attempt to open up the treaty were made there would be a strong argument in favour of getting some relief for Newfoundland by reason of the situation that I have been describing. There is of course the other argument that has been presented here today, the argument that man needs the food; and of course the treaty did take into account certain types of people who use these birds for their food, namely, the Eskimo and the Indian and, at any rate, brings home to us the fact that these treaties are not made for the benefit of birds, but for the benefit of man.

From the time that representations have been made to me, and for a considerable time before that, the idea of endeavouring to bring amelioration to the people of Newfoundland has been under consideration. As a matter of fact, I think if the drafter of this resolution had couched it in somewhat different words it might not have been objected to, or at any rate it might, quite frankly, have been accepted. This is just a personal view of my own. I do not know whether I am right. The resolution in effect says, get busy and amend that treaty; take proper steps to get the treaty amended. If it had indicated that consideration should be given to this whole subject then I think the drafter of the resolution would have found that he was knocking on an open door.

Mr. Higgins: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? What exactly does he try to suggest by saying if the resolution had not been worded in the way it is worded, but had been worded in the way he says it should be?

Mr. Maybank: My own taste in draftsmanship and my own inclination would have impelled me to say that consideration should be given to this subject rather than it should be a definite direction to the government by a member of the opposition to go and do a certain thing. It is a definite direction—

Mr. Higgins: May I ask another question?

Mr. Maybank: Just a minute until I finish the sentence. I did not intend to be very emphatic about that. I certainly do not wish to try to teach some person how to draft something, because frankly I might be accused, like the boy, of trying to teach a grandmother to suck eggs. Probably the hon. gentleman knows a great deal more about drafting than I ever will, and he drafted it to suit his own taste; but it is a definite direction at any rate, and my own view is that when it is in these words it can hardly be accepted. But if it were in words simply saying that this matter should be taken under review and consideration given to it the rather short response to that would have been, I fancy: well, that is what is being done.

Mr. Higgins: May I ask the hon. member another question? Is not the wording he suggests only required when expenditures of money are necessary?

Mr. Maybank: I am not talking about whether or not it is legally satisfactory. It is quite satisfactory, legally.

Mr. Higgins: What is the objection?

Mr. Maybank: Otherwise a point of order would have been raised. It is quite satisfactory in that way.

Mr. Higgins: What is the objection?

Mr. Maybank: I know the hon. gentleman does not want me to repeat what I have said and thus occupy time thereby. I would probably only say over again what I have already said, and I believe that if he does not fully understand what I have been saying upon reading it in Hansard he will—

Mr. Higgins: I hope.

Mr. Maybank: I hope. We at least join with each other there when the hon. member says "I hope".

[Mr. Maybank.]

Having spoken of the possibility of amending the treaty, I do think a person ought to give us some warning with respect to it. Every person is familiar with attempts that have been made to change a law. At times some little almost inconsequential change is desired in some statute. And what do we find? Well, we find that when that is pressed a great many other changes are suggested, and after they all pile up those who have had the idea of changing the statute change their minds and say, I think we had better not open up the statute at all. Every person in the house must, I feel sure, have experienced that sort of thing.

The same sort of thing is a danger with regard to a treaty. I have not made any treaties, nor revised any treaties; but common sense teaches any person that when you go to a contracting party to an agreement of this sort you may be met with quite a number of proposals by the other contracting party which in effect he would be offering as a quid pro quo to his agreement to do that which you are asking him to do. All the people of the New England states, and in fact all of the people of all of the states, would have the right to come forward and make proposals in case we attempt to open this treaty. Likewise, numbers of the other provinces are interested, and we might expect the same sort of thing there; consequently, it does seem to me that in any attempt to open up the treaty we should proceed most cautiously and before we actually ask for something find out, if we can, what the answer would be. Whether there would be any counter-proposals, whether if there were any counter-proposals we would like them or dislike them, because we wish to make sure in any discussion about the revision of this treaty that our second condition would not be worse than the first. I think that concludes what I wish to say on the resolution, with the exception of some comments I would make concerning some pencilled notes I have before me. I shall deal with what they bring to mind.

The leader of the opposition spoke about these birds becoming extinct. My information from ornithologists is that they are a slow-producing bird. Apparently the pair, male and female, produce only one chick a year, and this means perhaps only five or six in a lifetime.

Birds of this kind are confronted with many hazards, in addition to that offered by the gun. One hon. member suggested that Scotch engineers on liners kill a great many of them with oil. It would seem therefore that they are certainly not a type of bird which increases quickly. I do not say this to the house with any authority, because I am not an ornithologist. However, since the matter has been discussed it has come to my mind that ornithologists have told me what I am now stating.

There has also been some question as to whether these birds are migratory or not. I think it was the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore) who suggested that they are not, that therefore the law should not apply to them, and that the treaty did not apply.

The difficulty is that in the treaty they are mentioned by name. Whether they are migratory or not, in fact, does not matter, because the name is mentioned. However, if indeed it can be shown that these are not true migratory birds, then of course there would be a good opportunity for having them removed from the treaty in any negotiation which might be started.

I return to what I said at the outset. I believe every person who considers this matter at all, quite aside from what was expressed so eloquently by various members who supported the resolution, must view this problem with a great deal of sympathy for the people involved. Let me assure Canadians from Newfoundland that every other kind of Canadian with whom I have spoken has that attitude in mind toward the problem.

The only question is one of practicality. If it turns out to be practical to bring relief, then I feel sure the people of Newfoundland may expect it. If it is not practical, then I feel sure they are the kind of people who will accept the fact of impracticability.

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Resources and Development): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should say a few words on the resolution because of the fact that the administration of the Migratory Birds Convention Act comes within the Department of Resources and Development.

As was said previously, this question has been considered for some time. A few months ago the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Carter) spoke to me and wrote me a letter in which he told me of the dire distress of some of the people of Newfoundland because they were now unable to shoot turrs, since entering confederation. The hon. member for Trinity-Conception (Mr. Stick) also spoke to me, as have others. Then the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. Higgins) placed his resolution on the order paper, following which we had a number of discussions which were helpful to me, and I hope they were helpful to him.

His position was that he wanted to know the attitude of the department with respect to the administration of the act and the convention. We arranged for Dr. Lewis, who is most directly concerned with the administration, to spend some time with the hon. member. The results of the conversation they had have been made known in the chamber today. We have enjoyed the dissertation of the hon. member for St. John's East just as we have that of the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Browne). I think all hon. members who have spoken, from both sides of the house, have added to our knowledge of the problem facing the people of Newfoundland and especially the hardships they undergo in the wintertime when their normal sources of food are not available to them. I believe certain light has been shed on the subject which will be helpful to the people of Newfoundland in understanding the position of the federal government in the matter.

When the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) spoke it seemed to me that he grouped all these birds together as migratory game birds, and implied that there was an open season on all of them. The fact of the matter is that in article I of the migratory birds treaty there are three general classifications, the first of which is migratory game birds; the second, migratory insectivorous birds; and the third, other migratory non-game birds.

The murre or turr is one of those birds classified as a migratory non-game bird, and therefore not eligible for shooting at any season of the year. There are however a number of other birds under the act and on which there is an open season. These birds can be shot by the people of Newfoundland and elsewhere in the seasons prescribed.

Perhaps it might be helpful if I were to mention again the names of the birds set out in the resolution standing in the name of the hon. member for St. John's East, and place on record the names by which they are commonly known in Newfoundland, and by which they are known ordinarily elsewhere. For example, there is the hown which, in Newfoundland, is known as the hown, but which is known elsewhere as the old squaw duck. In Burin and the Burin peninsula the open season is December 5 to February 28, and for the remainder of Newfoundland from December 5 to December 28; in Labrador it is from October 2 to December 26.

Mr. Higgins: If I might interrupt; I placed a table on Hansard giving that information.

Mr. Winters: I thought it would be valuable to the people of Newfoundland to indicate the position with respect to their permission to shoot these birds.

Mr. Stick: No mention has been made of bullbirds, or what are commonly known in Newfoundland as bullbirds. Neither Dr. Lewis nor any hon. member who has spoken has mentioned that bird, one which is shot more than any other type of bird in Newfoundland. With all the knowledge and wisdom shown in the chamber this afternoon on this subject there has been no mention of the bullbird.

Mr. Winters: I am sure hon. members will be happy indeed to have that information.

Mr. Stick: I will give it to you after.

Mr. Winters: Prior to the time this act and treaty became effective each province and each state of the union had its own laws and regulations with respect to the shooting of migratory birds. It was an almost chaotic situation, brought about because there was no pattern or uniformity across either of our countries. It was only after the greatest amount of work and effort that there was a sufficient degree of reconciliation in ideas and attitudes and the Migratory Birds Convention Act was passed.

I believe it is the general consensus that this act has served a very useful purpose indeed, and that any attempt to open it up in a way such as to destroy its effectiveness would not be in the public interest, but that on the contrary it would be quite harmful both from the point of view of humans and the birds. The question has been raised as to whether or not the murre or turr is in fact a migratory bird. Hon. members who have spoken this afternoon have said that it is not, and that it does not go south of the border between Canada and the United States. Expert opinion however is to the contrary—that it is a migratory bird, in fact, as well as being named as such in the convention. It is also known to get as far south as Long Island in considerable numbers. It has been suggested that there has been no depletion. Those who are closely associated with the problem say that the reason there has been no depletion in Newfoundland is that the murres have been protected elsewhere under the terms of the Migratory Birds Convention Act.

Be that as it may, there still would be some hardship in Newfoundland under complete prohibition. That was recognized when Newfoundland came into confederation. Once confederation became a fact the officials of the then department of mines and resources discussed every phase of the matter with the appropriate officials of the government of Newfoundland. The first year after confederation the terms of the Migratory Birds Convention Act were not applied to Newfoundland in so far as the shooting of turrs was concerned. During the second year one area was declared to be exempt and the terms of the act were put into effect in another area. The area that was exempted was one in which there was the greatest number of isolated outports where the people would have had the most difficulty obtaining a living if they did not have the opportunity to shoot turrs. There was a common understanding, with the full knowledge of the officials in Newfoundland, that appropriate steps would have to be taken to apply gradually the terms of the convention.

The leader of the opposition said that exceptions could be made and that exceptions had been made. An exception was made to avoid hardship and the too great dislocation that would have occurred had the terms been applied suddenly. I am sure that hon. members will agree that it would be a mistake to try to set up separate regulations for each province because that would only return us to the chaotic conditions that prevailed before 1916.

There are two extremes in contemplating the problem. On the one hand, if there is complete prohibition and no shooting of turrs is permitted, they will not be destroyed but neither will they be available for human consumption. On the other hand, if there is no restriction the danger is that they will be wiped out altogether, in which case they would not be available for human needs. I would think that the practical way is to see to it that we conform to the spirit of the Migratory Birds Convention Act; that we seek no amendment that would open it up to the possibility of destroying its effectiveness altogether, but on the other hand see to it that no citizen of Newfoundland suffer undue hardship or perhaps starvation because he is denied the opportunity to shoot turrs when there is no other source of food available to him.

The act has been administered with that thought in mind. The United States authorities have been sympathetic to the position of the Newfoundland people, and I am sure they will continue to be. We will be happy indeed to discuss with them and see how far they are prepared to accept suggestions which will make it possible for the people of Newfoundland to continue to take turrs when there are conditions of extreme hardship.

On the other hand, I think it is only fair to the people of Newfoundland to tell them that although the administration will be most sympathetic, once the administration has been determined they will be required to abide by it. I know that they are law-abiding people from my own experience and long association with them. I know they will obey the law once it has been proved to them that it is in their own interests to do so.

Mr. Higgins: Hungry people have a hard job being law-abiding.

Mr. Winters: They may be hungry people to some extent, but I know also that they are fine law-abiding people. I have had a discussion with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson) in connection with this problem and perhaps in the minute or two remaining he will agree to tell the house the extent to which his department can go in approaching the officials of the United States on this problem.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if I intervene in this discussion it is not because I know much about turrs or even about bullbirds. The act would have to be changed if the purposes of this resolution are to be achieved and, as has been pointed out, that act is based on an international convention. An amendment to that convention would require approaching the government of the United States.

I think it has been demonstrated by the discussion this afternoon that the feeling of this house is that some appropriate discussion should take place between the representatives of this government and the appropriate representatives of the United States government with a view to ascertaining whether these rights, which it has been pointed out go back to 1497, can be preserved, having regard to the desirability of maintaining the objectives and purposes of the convention in question. It has been shown to be an advantageous convention to both Canada and the United States.

I do not think that the motion is exactly the appropriate kind of motion to achieve that result. As I understand it, it would require an amendment to this convention in order to eliminate this prohibition we are talking about in so far as Newfoundland is concerned. That may not be possible. But it might be possible to achieve that objective in another way. All I wish to say this afternoon on behalf of the government is that without any delay we will enter into discussions with representatives of the United States to see if the objectives of this motion which have received such general support in the house can be achieved.

Mr. Higgins: I should like to correct an impression left by the hon. member for Trinity-Conception (Mr. Stick) that bullbirds were not included in this resolution. For the hon. member's benefit may I say that the bullbird is known as the dovekie and the dovekie is a member of the diver family, and divers are included in the resolution.

On motion of Mr. Pearson the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Tomorrow we will take up Bill No. 147, to amend the Foreign Exchange Control Act, Bill No. 5, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, and Bill No. 79, respecting Indians.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

APPENDIX

UNVEILING OF PAINTING BY HOBBEMA

"The Two Water-mills"

PRESENTED TO CANADA BY THE PEOPLE OF THE NETHERLANDS

Ceremony in the Hall of Fame, Parliament Buildings, Ottawa,

Wednesday, March 14, 1951

His Excellency The Governor General Of Canada: Mr. Speaker of the Senate, Mr. Speaker of the House of Commons, Prime Minister, Mr. Ambassador, General Crerar, Ladies and Gentlemen:

I have been asked by my ministers to preside at this ceremony at which one of the greatest of Dutch paintings—the gift of the people of The Netherlands to the people of Canada—is to be unveiled and added to the national treasures of our country.

The people of The Netherlands have demonstrated in many ways their appreciation of the share which Canadians had in liberating their nation during the last war. At the annual memorial services held in the beautifully maintained Canadian military cemeteries, there are always large throngs of Dutch people whose presence manifests the depth of public feeling. In a more intimate manner—which touches very directly the hearts of the mothers and fathers, the widows and children of those who lie buried there—Dutch men and women, boys and girls, have year after year placed flowers on individual graves and written to the next of kin in Canada of the loving care so spontaneously offered.

These tributes to Canada's sons who made the supreme sacrifice have been greatly appreciated here in Canada. So have the many evidences of friendship, individual and national, given by the Dutch people to Canadians and to Canada. We recognize, however, the desire of the people of The Netherlands to give symbolic and tangible expression to the bond between our two peoples. We know how deep is the attachment of the Dutch people to the paintings of their old masters. Consequently we realize that only tremendous generosity and deep friendship prompted the gift to Canada of this national treasure of The Netherlands, "The Two Water-mills", this masterpiece of the great Meindert Hobbema. This knowledge enhances our appreciation of the outstanding beauty of the landscape and gives greater significance to the unanimity of The Netherlands parliament in sanctioning this priceless gift.

I know that the Canadian people were pleased that Her Majesty the Queen of The Netherlands should have made the presentation personally to the Canadian Ambassador. As Princess Juliana, the queen endeared herself to Canadians, during her residence amongst us in the war years, because of her nobility of character, charm of manner and democratic attitude. Her personal association with the gift adds to its value.

As Canada and The Netherlands share the tradition of parliamentary democracy, it is particularly appropriate that this painting should, in accordance with the wishes of The Netherlands government, hang in the houses of parliament of Canada. In this Hall of Fame "The Two Water-mills" will be seen by countless visitors every year. I believe the painting will convey a double message. It will speak from the depth of its loveliness to all who appreciate beauty and, at the same time, it will constantly recall the very special ties which connect Canada and The Netherlands. To you, Mr. Speaker of the Senate, and to you, Mr. Speaker of the House of Commons, who preside over the two houses of parliament, I entrust this painting, which will remain in your custody in trust for the people of Canada.

Would you, Mr. Ambassador, kindly convey to Her Majesty and to your government and to the people of The Netherlands how profoundly touched are all Canadians by this gift, and even more by the spirit which inspired it? And would you add that in the minds of the Canadian people there has not been merely the transfer of a painting from one friendly country to another, but rather that what was once the national treasure of one nation has become the national treasure of two nations. To Canadians, Hobbema's "The Two Water-mills" will be known as "The Dutch painting".

I believe the people of Canada will consider it most fitting that I should call now upon General Crerar, who was commander in chief of the Canadian army of liberation, to unveil this painting.

General H. D. G. Crerar: Your Excellencies, Mr. Speaker of the Senate, Mr. Speaker of the House of Commons, Prime Minister, Mr. Ambassador, Members of the Senate and of the House of Commons, Ladies and Gentlemen:

To unveil, at the behest of Your Excellency, this priceless painting by Hobbema, given by The Netherlands to Canada in commemoration of the part played by Canada's armed forces in the liberation of The Netherlands people in 1944 and 1945, is a signal honour. It is an honour which I am proud to acknowledge, not in any personal sense, but as a representative of the many thousand Canadian servicemen and women who gave their utmost, and, in many cases, their all, in order to assure the restoration of freedom to a people who for centuries have cherished it.

It was in September, 1944, that the Canadian army first reached Dutch territory and commenced the bitter fighting which terminated some weeks later in the freeing of the Scheldt estuary thus opening to allied use the great port of Antwerp. From that time, on through the heavy battles in February, March and April of 1945, and until the return to Canada of its remaining troops in the spring of 1946, those in the Canadian army had full opportunity to learn to know the Dutch people. We found them stalwart and uncomplaining in distress, loyal and courageous in their beliefs, constant and warmhearted in their friendships. This gift would indicate that the warm memories we Canadians bear for them are reciprocated by those they retain of us.

There is deep symbolism in the fact that the Canadian and Dutch flags, which flew side by side on the battlefields of a few years ago, are seen together again, today, flanking this peaceful landscape of The Netherlands, so magnificently reproduced on canvas by that master painter, Meindert Hobbema.

This unique gift, from one country to another, I now unveil.

His Excellency The Netherlands Ambassador: Your Excellency, Mr. Speaker of the Senate, Mr. Speaker of the House of Commons, Prime Minister, Members of the Senate and of the House of Commons, Ladies and Gentlemen:

After the very kind words which Your Excellency has just spoken on the occasion of this ceremony I feel that there is not much that I can add. But there is one thought I want to express, namely, that I am interpreting the feelings of my country's government and its people when I say that we are proud of and grateful for the place which the Canadian government have selected to hang this Hobbema painting. For the Hall of Fame is the very heart of hearts of the seat of the Canadian government. No more honourable place could be thought of than here on parliament hill—in the very centre of the houses of parliament, representing the people of Canada.

Hobbema's painting "The Two Water-mills" is a good example of the achievements of Dutch artists in the seventeenth century. It was an age when my country was reaping rich cultural benefits of its recent fight for freedom of conscience and religion in an age when these concepts were still far from commonplace.

I think that it is quite fitting, therefore, that this painting should henceforth hang in this place overlooking the Ottawa river because it was the blood of Canadians that helped to restore to us our lost freedom during the second world war, when a latter day tyranny had taken from us what we prized most.

It will be a most agreeable duty to report to Her Majesty Queen Juliana, who found with her children such a hospitable sanctuary in Canada during the second world war, and to our people at home, as requested by Your Excellency, on the impressive and solemn ceremony enacted here this afternoon and on the great appreciation shown today for this symbol of Dutch gratitude.

I hope that Hobbema's masterpiece will continue to hang in this place for centuries to come as a tangible symbol of the lasting friendship between our two countries.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRIVILEGE

REFERENCE TO REPORT IN "NO MORE WAR", MARCH 1951—DR. J. G. ENDICOTT

Mr. G. A. Cruickshank (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I am mentioned in a newspaper—I believe it is published in Ontario—entitled "No More War". The portion I should like to quote reads as follows:

In response to presentation of a petition endorsed by half a million electors, George Cruickshank, M.P., rivalling Mr. Ferguson in degrading the reputation of parliament, wrote: "Further to your brief of February 20, Dr. J. G. Endicott has my full permission to take a jump into lake Ontario."

My question of privilege is, Mr. Speaker, I am sorry he did not take the jump.

RAILWAYS, CANALS AND TELEGRAPH LINES

CHANGE IN PERSONNEL OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. W. G. Weir (Portage-Neepawa) moved:

That the name of Mr. Byrne be substituted for that of Mr. Lafontaine on the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

Motion agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

AUDIBILITY OF DEBATE—REPORT OF MR. SPEAKER ON AMPLIFICATION SYSTEMS

Mr. Speaker: For some time hon. members of this house, together with members of the press gallery, have complained about the difficulty in hearing speeches by hon. members who are seated some distance from them. When I was in Europe last fall I visited the seats of government in Italy, Switzerland, France and the United Kingdom, to ascertain what system of amplification was being used in the assemblies of these countries, and its effectiveness. I found in Italy, Switzerland and France that members speak from a rostrum; that is to say, the member who is speaking goes either to a central microphone or to one of several microphones in the chamber.

The installation of an amplification system under such circumstances is a relatively simple matter, but it could not be adapted to our parliament. Our system is based on the British system, of government and opposition facing each other, where hon. members speak from their seats as and when permitted by Mr. Speaker. I was therefore particularly interested in the voice reproduction system which has been installed in the chamber of the British House of Commons. I was informed that the fundamental principle behind the system in the British house is to diffuse sound from miniature loud-speakers at a sound level not greater than that at which a listener will hear if he is within a few feet of the member who is speaking. This is accomplished by microphones suspended over the benches in the chamber and by loud-speakers placed in the backs of the benches.

There are, in all, fourteen microphones. Six of these microphones, at approximately equal intervals, are suspended from the ceiling of the chamber. These are placed just above the front benches of the government and the opposition at a height of approximately eight and a half feet above floor level. The remaining seats in the house are served by eight microphones, four on each side of the chamber, suspended into the chamber on rods which are attached to the lower part of the galleries. In addition to these microphones there is a microphone overhead in the canopy of the Speaker's chair, and also a microphone on the table. The loud-speakers are placed at the top of the backs of the members' benches, and also at the top of the backs of the benches in the galleries at intervals of about four feet. These loud-speakers are circular in shape, and are quite small, having a diameter of about three inches.

The system is controlled by an operator who is outside the chamber but has a complete view of the chamber. When a member rises to speak, he switches the microphone located nearest to the member. The loud-speakers—or, as they may more appropriately be called, the voice reproduction units—close to the member who is speaking, are muted, as here, naturally, he can be heard quite well without the need of the reproduction units. In the adjacent zone the units are partly muted, whereas all the rest reproduce at the level required.

While I was at Westminster the officials of the house very generously gave me of their time in explaining the system to me and I am especially grateful to Dr. Oscar Faber, O.B.E., the consulting engineer, and to Mr. N. Sizer,

M.B.E., the assistant chief engineer of the ministry of works, for their kindness and for their patience.

Upon my return to Canada, with the consent of the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) and the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Fournier), I invited Mr. Sizer to come to Canada in order that I could get his opinion as to whether a similar system could be adapted to our chamber. Mr. Sizer, with the wholehearted approval of the British Minister of Works, came to Canada at the end of January and was here for about a week, during which time he consulted with the chief architect and the assistant chief architect and other officials of our Department of Public Works, and also with Dr. Field, of the defence research department. He also made a careful inspection of the chamber, both generally and in detail, and on a number of days was present in our chamber when the house was in session.

Before leaving Canada he was good enough to leave with me a report on his observations, in which he says, in part, that he could see no reason why a system similar to the system now in operation at Westminster would not prove as satisfactory in Canada, and that such a system could be designed on similar lines for our chamber. I also have a report from Dr. Faber, the consulting engineer, and an additional report from Mr. Sizer, which they gave me when I was in England. Mr. Sizer left with me and our departmental officials a number of photographs, together with one of the microphones and one of the loud-speakers.

May I also say that the chief architect's branch of our Department of Public Works, in conjunction with Dr. Field, of the defence research department, has considered the installation in our chamber of a low-level system similar to the one which I have described. The officials of these two departments, I am pleased to say, are very well informed on this system of amplification, and believe that it can be installed so as not to cause any objectionable features from a decorative point of view.

I am satisfied from the investigations that have been made that the only amplification system which would be generally acceptable to the members of our house is one similar to the system now in operation at Westminster. I would not want to ask members to accept my recommendation, nor would I want to assume the sole responsibility for any system that is installed. It has occurred to me that it might be advisable for the house to appoint a committee to examine in more detail the system in the British house. I would be pleased to put at the disposal of the committee the reports, photographs and equipment which I have mentioned, together with any other information which may be available.

I trust that the information which I have obtained will be of assistance in determining the system of amplification which may be approved, and I can assure hon. members that I shall be pleased to give whatever assistance I can in this regard.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): On a question of privilege, I wish to thank Mr. Speaker for showing us that he has more than sympathy for those who sit in the far corners of this house, in the public galleries, and in the press gallery. He has shown that he is a man of action. We appreciate that fact and hope that he will be long spared to carry on.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PRECEDENCE OF GOVERNMENT BUSINESS ON WEDNESDAYS

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister) moved:

That on Wednesday, March 21, 1951, and every Wednesday thereafter to the end of the session, government notices of motions and government orders shall have precedence over all other business except introduction of bills, questions by members and notices of motions for the production of papers.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Knowles: On division.

Motion agreed to on division.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

COLOMBO PLAN—REFERENCE TO REPORTED STATEMENT OF UNITED STATES SECRETARY OF STATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): May I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs? Has the minister's attention been drawn to, or has the government any knowledge of, a reported statement by the Secretary of State of the United States, Mr. Acheson, that his government would not contribute to the financing of the Colombo plan?

In view of what the Secretary of State for External Affairs said last month, could he make a statement regarding the present attitude of the government of Canada in relation to this plan?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my attention was drawn to a statement made by the Secretary of State of the United States on this matter on February 21, in Washington, and to certain press interpretations of that statement. We have been assured that these interpretations were not accurate, and that the attitude of the United States Government toward the Colombo plan is still one of desire to co-operate in the implementation of that plan.

The most recent statement from Washington on this subject—it is an official statement—was on March 5 last, and one paragraph of that reads:

It confirmed that the United States should continue full participation in the consultative committee—

That is a consultative committee set up by the Colombo plan countries.

—and co-ordinate its assistance activities with those of the countries concerned.

Therefore we have no reason to believe that the United States is still not anxious to co-operate in carrying out this plan.

As to the second part of the hon. gentleman's question, I do not think that there is anything that I can add to what I have already said on this subject. I understand that an item covering this matter will be placed in the estimates, and that will be an indication of the government's intention to proceed.

HEALTH INSURANCE

REFERENCE TO RESOLUTION OF MONTREAL HOSPITAL COUNCIL—EFFECT UPON PUBLIC SERVICE PLAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. P. Whitman (Notre Dame de Grace): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Is it true that the Montreal hospital council has passed a resolution advising its members not to accept identity cards or any other form of identification issued by commercial insurance companies as evidence of guarantee of payment by these companies, and that only Blue Cross be accorded the privilege of having such identification recognized by member hospitals? If so, what recourse have our federal civil servants who are subscribers to the group hospital medical insurance plan sponsored by the national joint council of the public service of Canada?

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance): I thank my hon. friend for giving me notice of this question. The resolution of the Montreal hospital council, referred to by my hon. friend, has been brought to my attention. The board of trustees of the group hospital medical insurance plan for the public service of Canada has brought the matter to the attention of the insuring companies, and I am informed that they in turn are taking the matter up with the Montreal hospital council.

POSTAL SERVICE

REDUCTION IN URBAN MAIL DELIVERIES—REQUEST FOR SUSPENSION OF LAY-OFFS PENDING RESULTS OF SURVEY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I direct a question to the Postmaster General? In view of continuing concern by those affected, will the Postmaster General consider suspending the proposed lay-offs of letter carriers until the results of the survey undertaken by his department are in hand?

Hon. Edouard Rinfret (Postmaster General): I wish to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question. Even if I do consider it, and if I did consider it favourably, the estimates for the year do not cover the salaries for these 1,200 people.

An hon. Member: There are supplementaries.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE CONTROL ACT

CONTINUANCE IN FORCE UNTIL SIXTY DAYS AFTER OPENING OF FIRST SESSION OF PARLIAMENT IN 1953

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 147, to amend the Foreign Exchange Control Act.

Mr. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few observations on the second reading of this bill. In his speech on the resolution stage the other day the minister stated that the board was to be in the nature of a stand-by instrument for the future. I said the other day, and I repeat now, that we think it is proper to have a stand-by organization, and therefore we are not against the principle of this bill.

I should like to say at this point that we hope, and I hope, the minister will see to it, so far as he can, that this is as much as possible in the nature of a stand-by organization. Indeed, the minister has already indicated that certain relaxations are now being put in force, and we hope, and everyone must hope, that they will be proceeded with as far as possible.

The reason we are not opposed to the principle of this bill is that while at the present time, with the dollar finding its own level, there does not seem to be danger either of any undue outflow or any undue inflow of money—we seem to be in a certain equilibrium—nevertheless we live in a strange and unpredictable world, and therefore we think that a stand-by organization is justified.

I should like to make two or three observations with regard to the minister's speech; because while we approve the principle of the bill, we do not approve the principle of everything that has been done, and I should like to raise certain questions for the consideration of the house in respect to the operations of the board and of the government in the last few years.

[Mr. Knowles.]

The minister's speech the other day, which he made at considerable length, was a speech with interesting figures on trade, and interesting figures as to the inflow and outflow of United States exchange. The minister was in a very pacific mood. There was no occasion for him to be anything else, but in reading that speech I suggest nobody would believe, nobody would realize, that there had been any point of criticism really of the board at all. I wish to remind the house that there have been certain points of criticism, and I wish to say a word or two about it.

In particular the minister glossed over the change which was made last September when the dollar was allowed to find its level on the exchange markets. Nothing that the minister said would indicate that that really was a position basically different from the previous attitude of the finance authorities, and that it meant really a complete break with the attitude which they had followed up to that point.

I feel it is too much to expect the minister to take us into his confidence in this matter. The minister is a very candid man; nevertheless I think it would be too much to expect him to say what he might feel free to say if it were not for the exigencies of politics. I have taken the liberty therefore, Mr. Speaker, of composing a little speech which I think the minister might have made if he had been perfectly free, what I might call a candid speech. It is very short, sir, much shorter than the speech the minister actually made the other day; and unless he objects to the liberty I have taken in suggesting certain things he might have said, I will now deal with his speech that I have composed. I would say to the minister I hope he will accept this in good faith. I would say it is very kindly meant, as the man said when he murdered his mother-in-law.

Here are the words I have attributed to the minister. Perhaps the house will allow me to stick closely to my notes while I read:

"I propose on this occasion to set politics aside and give you a candid chronicle of the operation of the foreign exchange control board.

"In July, 1946, my predecessor, Mr. Ilsley, announced that the value of the Canadian dollar had been fixed at parity with the United States dollar, instead of at a discount of approximately ten per cent which prevailed during the war. The basis on which this decision was made proved quickly to be mistaken. It was made in the expectation that American prices after a brief rise would drop. This expectation proved to be quite wrong. Meantime, the increased value of our dollar, of course, promoted purchases by Canada in the United States, and on the other hand drastically lessened American investment in Canada. As a result, we began to lose American exchange and in the year 1947 the rate of loss increased alarmingly. The opposition pointed this out to us but, of course, we could not pay any attention to what they said and we did nothing about it until late in the autumn of 1947. By November, however, we had lost over $1,100 million of the American exchange amounting to $1,624 million which was on hand in June, 1946, just before the change was made. This reduced our reserve so low that we were forced to take action. We could not take the sensible action of lowering the value of the dollar because that advice was given to us by the opposition and, accordingly, we resorted to a variety of legislative devices to lessen trade with the United States. We imposed special excise taxes, and a whole assortment of import restraints to keep out American goods and conserve American dollars. We also felt it necessary to borrow $300 million in the United States to protect the situation."

Mr. Abbott: It is $150 million.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): "By these means, and with the help of increased Canadian exports to the United States, we managed to keep our heads above water and carry on through 1947, 1948 and part of 1949.

"The devaluation of the British pound in September, 1949, faced us with a new situation. We should, of course, have seized this new chance to free the dollar on current account, but it was still very difficult for us to do this. Apart from other reasons, the Prime Minister during the election had vehemently criticized this course, and moreover, it would have been accepting the advice of the opposition. Consequently we again fixed an arbitrary new price of the dollar at approximately 90 cents. It soon became clear that we had gone from one extreme to the other. In 1946 the dollar had been fixed too high, and in 1949 we fixed it at too low a rate. Happily, events moved quickly and prevented us from persisting in this mistake for years as we had done in the mistake of 1946. Before many months it became evident that the Canadian dollar was worth more than the amount we fixed. We persisted, however, in refusing to let it find its own level, until the summer of 1950 reality became too strong for us. I have to admit that the opposition had been for a long time urging us toward realism and in September, 1950, we finally had to take that course.

"By this time, two things had happened. First of all, the investment attractions of Canada, stimulated by Alberta oil and Labrador iron and many other things, were becoming more and more obvious in the United States, and along with this there was a substantial amount of speculative money which the artificial depreciation of the dollar attracted.

"Our situation in retaining the 90 cents had been made much more difficult by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who in June 1950 gave a broad hint that the dollar might soon be raised. This, of course, stimulated speculation in the dollar and made it much more difficult to retain that rate.

"Accordingly, at the end of September when parliament had risen and we could not be criticized on the floor of the house we announced that the rates of exchange would be determined by conditions of supply and demand. We used the phrase 'hot money' which we thought would obscure the situation, put the blame on American speculators and prevent people from understanding the very plain and simple cause for the change, which was that we had made a mistake in undervaluing the dollar.

"It is unfortunate that our delay in taking this action made necessary the creation of an additional $200 million of inflated currency, and this of course, coming into competition with the existing dollars, helped to raise prices. It is also unfortunate that Canadians making purchases in the United States during this period were penalized by having to use the 90-cent dollar, when later events showed the dollar worth several cents more.

"During the three months after the dollar was allowed to find its own level, our holdings of American exchange ceased to jump up and down and remained practically level, showing the wisdom of the course we had so long resisted."

Mr. Abbott: I must congratulate my hon. friend upon the form, if not the content, of the speech he has attributed to me. It has been pointed out to me, however, by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that it should not appear in Hansard in six-point type; otherwise the words would be mine.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I would defer wholly to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Knowles: My interest was that of a printer.

Mr. Abbott: I would also congratulate the hon. member for Greenwood upon his ingenuity in getting around the ruling with respect to the reading of speeches.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I do not make a practice of reading my own speeches.

Mr. Abbott: That was said in a kindly way, too. I know my hon. friend does not make a practice of reading his speeches.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): It has been pointed out to me that I was following a common practice, but one which I very infrequently use.

I have just a word or two more to add, because I would wish that that very excellent speech I have attributed to the minister might have a chance to do its own work. I do feel that the experience we have had will teach us a lesson. I hope it will teach us that there are certain things where there is not just enough wisdom in any human being or any group of human beings to set up their judgment against the judgment of the whole business world. And that is what we have been doing. I congratulate the minister, even though I am late in doing it, upon the wisdom which came to him last September. I hope he never loses it, because I have just a slight feeling that at the present time the dollar, if one may use a phrase which was once so familiar, is half slave and half free—and not as free as I should like.

I hope when the minister talks about a stand-by organization it is not with the idea that he is going to tamper with the operation of the market—unless in the case of an unbelievable emergency which, at the present time, happily does not exist.

I wish further to say that while we approve the principle of the bill, we sincerely hope that it may be possible to simplify the procedure. It is difficult of course, with a bill of only one section, to deal with it in the ordinary way. However upon looking through the sections of the Foreign Exchange Control Act I feel that there are some of them which, in view of the relaxations which have been made, are inapplicable.

For that and other reasons I move, seconded by the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross):

That this bill be not now read a second time, but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce, with instructions that they have power to review the operations of the foreign exchange control board and to consider and report to this house upon the scope of legislation sufficient to provide for necessary foreign exchange control.

I hope the minister will take sympathetically my suggestion that that is the only means we have of trying to have this whole situation reviewed. It is with that in mind that I have offered the amendment for the consideration of the house.

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, under other circumstances I do not know that I would have any objection to the operations of the foreign exchange control board being examined by the banking and commerce committee, but in this case I shall have to oppose the amendment. As the house recalls, the Foreign Exchange Control Act will expire sixty days after the commencement of the present session. It is intended that we shall adjourn on the 21st, and in the intervening period I do not believe that it would be either desirable or appropriate to embark upon this particular inquiry.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Not even with that efficient committee?

Mr. Abbott: Certainly I would have no adequate opportunity to follow the proceedings of the committee at this time. The act which is now before us has been in force, as we all know, since January 1, 1947. Its terms are familiar to a good many members of this house. The way in which it is operated and the regulations which have been passed under it are fairly familiar, I think, to the business community. Under the circumstances the government feels that the appropriate thing at this time is to ask for a two-year extension of the act as it now stands.

For these and other reasons which I shall not take time to elaborate, I feel I shall have to oppose the amendment moved by my hon. friend.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the amendment?

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Yes.

Mr. Speaker: Those in favour of the amendment will please say aye.

Some hon. Members: Aye.

Mr. Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it and I declare the amendment lost.

An hon. Member: On division.

Amendment (Mr. Macdonnell, Greenwood) negatived on division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Dion in the chair.

On section 1—Continuance.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Chairman, the other evening one or two members asked me some questions about the operations of the Foreign Exchange Control Act; in particular the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton asked certain questions as to the present regulations governing travel to the United States. I stated at that time that I was not familiar with the operations in detail. I gave the hon. member some preliminary answers and indicated that I would like to elaborate on them when we were in committee.

As I indicated at that time in reply to the questions asked by the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton, the regulations have recently been changed to provide that no permit is required for a resident traveller to take to the United States up to a combined total of $100 in United States and Canadian funds, that is $100 United States and nil Canadian; $75 United States and $25 Canadian, et cetera. Formerly the limit was $100, of which not more than $50 could be in United States funds.

A resident who is making trips to the United States on which he will not be taking out of Canada more than a combined total of $100 in both United States and Canadian funds may, on application to his bank, obtain for that purpose up to $100 United States during any calendar month. For trips involving larger expenditures, a traveller may obtain from his bank the necessary form H permit and up to $500 United States per trip for business travel and up to $500 United States during the calendar year for travel for other purposes.

Applications for amounts over these limits have to be referred to the foreign exchange control board by the applicant's bank, but are approved for bona fide travel expenditures in any reasonable amounts, having regard to the duration of the proposed journeys.

Under the recent change in the regulation a resident may retain in his possession United States currency which he may receive in the ordinary course or which he has bought from his bank up to a total of $100. These funds may be used on any trip to the United States where the amount taken out by the traveller is such that no form H permit is required. If a traveller needs to buy United States dollars for a trip to the United States, however, he must do so from his bank. Merchants who receive United States currency in the course of their business are not permitted to sell it to other residents but must turn it in to their banks.

The hon. member for Greenwood asked for some further details as to the procedure by which track is kept by the foreign exchange control board of exports to the United States. I shall outline the procedure.

Except in those cases where a customs export entry is not ordinarily required, for example, gifts up to $25 in value, other shipments up to $5 in value, et cetera, form B.13-B is delivered by an exporter to the collector of customs at the port of exit of the goods. This form is a combined customs export entry and foreign exchange control board form. Five copies are required, two of which are used for exchange control purposes. Where the terms of payment for an export are in accordance with the Foreign Exchange Control Act and regulations, the collector of customs approves the form B.13-B and sends one copy to the exporter's bank and one copy to the board.

A resident who receives United States dollars arising out of exports is required to offer them for sale to his bank, and, if the amount is more than $100, complete F.E.C.B. form C. This form is then matched by the bank with its copy of the form B.13-B covering the export in question and the bank forwards the matched forms to the board. These forms are in turn matched by the board with the copy of the form B.13-B which it received direct from customs.

The purpose of this procedure is, of course, to ensure that Canadian exports to the United States produce their value in United States dollars which are sold to a bank in Canada and thus made available to meet our requirements for United States dollars. A similar procedure applies to exports to other countries.

Mr. Fraser: A motorist going, say from Ottawa, to the west coast at the present time must go through the United States. If he is allowed only $25 in Canadian funds—

Mr. Abbott: He is not limited to $25 Canadian funds.

Mr. Fraser: The minister said $100.

Mr. Abbott: He can have the $100 in Canadian funds.

Mr. Fraser: He would have to have money for travelling in the United States.

Mr. Abbott: If he needs more he could get it by using a form H.

Mr. Fraser: Would it not be wise to raise that $25 so that he could carry more at any time?

Mr. Abbott: I can bring my friend's remarks to the attention of the board. The present regulations permit him to have $100, either in United States funds or Canadian funds or both. If he wants more than that, he can get it through a form H at his bank, which is given almost as a matter of course. The form H is made out in triplicate, and one copy must be surrendered at the border.

Mr. Fraser: Cases have come to my attention in which a person has had to leave on Saturday when it was impossible to get money through the bank. Such a person would be simply out of luck. He might have Canadian funds and be able to borrow a few United States dollars, but when he reached Canadian soil after passing through the United States he would be broke.

Mr. Abbott: I think most of us can go a long way in a motor car on $100. I have never gone to the west coast by motor car myself, so I do not know just how much it costs to get from, say, Detroit, to the port of entry in Manitoba.

Mr. Fraser: That was before inflation.

Mr. Low: I should like to ask the minister one question which is prompted by something the Minister of Trade and Commerce said the other night when he was dealing with the amendments to the wheat board act. The Minister of Trade and Commerce said something about purchases of Canadian products being made with ECA funds. I should like to ask the minister if he would give the committee a clear statement of just what the foreign exchange control board did get out of ECA purchases in Canada.

Mr. Abbott: It will not take me very long to do that. The foreign exchange control board of course had nothing to do with ECA funds. The machinery by which countries who were in receipt of assistance under the ECA program were helped was this. They were authorized to purchase wheat or other commodities in Canada. It then became a problem for the country receiving the commodities to pay for them. We required payment in convertible currency, United States dollars and gold. Whether they used the actual ECA funds received from the United States ECA administration, whether they used United States dollars derived as a result of sales in the United States dollar area, or whether they used gold received from South Africa, let us say, it made not the slightest difference to us, and we would have no means of knowing where the particular funds used to buy a particular commodity came from. The foreign exchange control board would see that the commodities exported were paid for in United States dollars or their equivalent. That would be the responsibility of the board. Does that answer the hon. member's question?

Mr. Low: I was that much interested that I obtained a copy of a statement of paid shipments from Canada under ECA. These figures arrested my attention, Mr. Chairman, and I particularly want to have the minister's interpretation of them with respect to any payments into the foreign exchange control board of dollars, gold, or whatever it may be, representing these purchases. This is what I have in mind. In statement No. 21, issued by the economic co-operation administration, showing the cumulative totals from April 3, 1948, to March 31, 1950, there is a grand total of purchases on account of the United Kingdom of $829,100,000—that is purchases from Canada. Of that total food and agricultural commodities made up $496,200,000, and industrial commodities $322,892,000.

I noticed particularly—and to me this was a very interesting figure, in the light of the discussion that has taken place with respect to the bill to amend the wheat board act—that Great Britain was able to purchase in Canada with ECA dollars during those two years bread grains to the value of $413,162,000. That is a pretty substantial purchase. It is a pretty substantial market for Canadian bread grain products, and we should not lose sight of that.

In addition there were beef, veal, pork, lamb and mutton products to the value of $66,305,000; dairy products to the extent of $9,996,000, and fish and fish products to the value of $6,637,000. In addition there were certain raw materials and semi-finished products to the value of $327,674,000. As to the $829,100,000 of purchases on account of the United Kingdom through ECA, I wondered if one could accept the statement that approximately that same amount of money, gold or United States funds was paid into the foreign exchange control board. If so, it seems to me that the foreign exchange control board certainly profited to a fair extent out of ECA funds.

I am also wondering what would have been the situation in the years 1948 to 1950 if those ECA purchases had not been made in Canada. That is a question that sometimes enters my mind. In his statement the other day I believe the minister said that there were rather extreme fluctuations in the dollar reserves, and he gave certain figures to substantiate that. At the present time I understand our reserves are approximately $300 million higher than they were in 1945. Are we going to be able to count on those reserves remaining at a level in the years to come which we think is pretty safe? If so, then of course relaxation of the regulations is going to be justified. If not, I wonder where we are going to get off in the years to come. Am I correct in assuming that pretty well the whole of the $829,100,000 of ECA funds did go to increase the dollar reserves of the foreign exchange control board?

Mr. Abbott: I do not know that I would put it in that way. Unquestionably we had to be paid for the commodities we delivered to the extent that they were not paid for out of the Canadian loan. We extended a loan to the extent of nearly a billion and a quarter. To that extent it was just a credit on the books of the Bank of Canada, and we got no immediate payment therefor, but to the extent that commodities were shipped in excess of the provision made by the loan, then they had to be paid for. I suppose it is fair to say that if ECA funds had not been made available to the extent of the $800 million odd referred to by my hon. friend, the reserves of convertible exchange of the Bank of England would have been $800 million odd lower, or they would have had to refrain from purchasing the goods.

The whole purpose of ECA was to enable those countries which for the time being were short of convertible exchange, not having got their productive systems in a condition where they could produce goods in payment for their imports, to make payment. Certainly, however, it would not have been technically correct to say that the reserves of the foreign exchange board, which is only an instrument of the government, were increased by the $823 million. We were paid for all goods we shipped, and paid in convertible exchange with the exception of credits which we ourselves provided.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I should like to take a minute to try to explain from personal experience that these permits which are being criticized are sometimes most helpful. In the fall of 1948, with several others, I was sent overseas to the meeting of the commonwealth parliamentary association. In the bank in the small town in which I live I was advised by the manager that I should have a permit valid for the return trip. On that trip I took several hundred dollars with me. When I embarked at Halifax the customs officer asked me to surrender the permit. I informed him that I had a permit that I did not have to surrender. Very few of the hon. members accompanying me had the same type of permit. When the permit was looked over by the customs department I was informed that I could carry it with me.

I well remember that we were all lined up in the Savoy hotel in London when we were leaving to go to the continent, and were told to leave all our funds, with the exception of five pounds sterling, in the safe of the Savoy hotel. When it came my turn I informed them that I was carrying what money I had with me. It consisted of United States and Canadian travellers cheques. There was quite a discussion. When I got to Harwich and started to go through the customs, I produced the permit given to me in my own country, informed them that I got the money in Canada, that I had a permit to carry it, and that I was going to take it with me.

I took it with me to the continent, and while on the continent I lent quite a bit of money to some of my friends who did not have the type of permit which would enable them to take their money with them. I was away about ten weeks, and from the time I left until I returned I showed that permit on a good many occasions. I had full authority to carry the amount of money I had in any part of the world to which I wanted to go. I did not find one official, including those in Great Britain who are pretty hard-boiled with respect to foreign exchange, who could make me surrender the travellers cheques I had in my pocket. I carried them for ten weeks. Without that permit from the foreign exchange control board I would have been on the continent with five pounds sterling in my pocket. I might have had something extra in my shoes, or might have borrowed from some of my friends. For that reason I believe it is a very fine regulation for people who are travelling outside of Canada to have a permit to show that the funds they are carrying are being carried legally with a permit issued in their own country.

Mr. Hatfield: I should like to ask the minister why all these forms are necessary when a Canadian exporter ships goods to the United States. Such a person would see to it that as long as United States funds are at a premium he gets his payment in United States funds. What is the position of the United States investor? If he brings his money into Canada on a C form, I think it is, can he take it out of Canada when he wishes?

Mr. Abbott: I do not know that I can elaborate too much on the use of the forms. I understand that the member for Victoria-Carleton has had a good deal of experience in filling them out. One of the purposes is to enable the foreign exchange control board to examine all external transactions and dealings in exchange to see that they conform with the current policies with respect to foreign exchange. It is for that reason that the forms are required in connection with exports, to see that that method is not used to effect an export of capital which is now prohibited.

As the house knows, capital which was in Canada prior to the beginning of the war cannot be taken out. Capital which has been brought in since then—on the forms, I imagine, referred to by the hon. member—can of course be dealt with in the ordinary way. Other than that I can only say that I am sure the board endeavours to make the paper-work as easy as it possibly can.

Mr. Hatfield: No person is going to invest money in a country when he cannot get it out. United States investments in this country would have been ten times as great if we had not had these regulations.

Mr. Abbott: We are getting all we want.

Mr. Hatfield: I know people who would have invested a lot of money in Canada if they could have been sure of getting it out of Canada. They did not want their money tied up here. I presume that if the United States dollar was at a discount we would not need the forms to export to the United States. Would you have to have forms then?

Mr. Abbott: We would have to have forms as long as we maintained exchange control.

Mr. Hatfield: That is why I am protesting against exchange control. When he introduced this bill the minister said he was going to have a stand-by board.

Mr. Abbott: No; I said this was in essence stand-by legislation.

Mr. Hatfield: This is the same board. You have to have the same staff to examine all these forms. Every exporter in Canada has to have a staff for the sole purpose of making out these forms.

Mr. Fraser: A short time ago the hon. member for Greenwood moved an amendment to send this matter to a committee. The Canada Gazette, page 2186, says that the foreign exchange control regulations established by order in council P. C. 5604 of November 3, 1949, are revoked, "and the annexed regulations, entitled foreign exchange control regulations, are hereby made and established in substitution for the regulations revoked." There are thirty pages of new regulations.

Mr. Abbott: It is a consolidation of the old regulations.

Mr. Fraser: Yes, but that is all the more reason why the banking and commerce committee should have an opportunity of going through these regulations and understanding just what is in them.

Mr. Abbott: We voted upon that and disposed of it.

Mr. Fraser: I know we did, but that does not prevent one from speaking about it.

[Mr. Abbott.]

Mr. Abbott: I do not want to raise a point of order, but the hon. member is out of order in referring to it.

Mr. Fraser: I think it is common sense to have this matter discussed in the banking and commerce committee.

Mr. Hatfield: What is the position now of the United States investor? Can he bring money into the country, invest it and take it back?

Mr. Abbott: That is right.

Mr. Hatfield: Can he take back his capital gains?

Mr. Abbott: That is right.

Mr. Hatfield: Can he take back his dividends?

Mr. Abbott: If he is, for want of a better term, a post-war investor.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Did the minister intend to say "post-war" in the literal sense of the term?

Mr. Abbott: Capital which was here before September, 1939, in essence is frozen. The holder of that capital can sell it, but he must reinvest. That restriction does not apply to capital which has been brought in since.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): One of the things I wanted to discuss if we had been able to have a committee was the question of the punitive clauses. Could the minister say what has been the history of those? Has there been less or more recourse to prosecution?

Mr. Abbott: I have some statistics here on that. I have a table showing the convictions for offences under the Foreign Exchange Control Act from 1947 to 1950. It shows the number of cases, the fines, the character of the offences, and so on. Hon. members might wish to have it placed on Hansard. I do not think I shall attempt to read it. For instance, in 1950, there were 125 prosecutions, and fines totalling $196,114. The bulk of those were as a result of illegal dealing in foreign exchange. If it is the desire of hon. members, I shall put this on Hansard.

The Deputy Chairman: Has the minister leave to put the table on Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Abbott: The table is as follows:

Bill reported.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read a third time?

Mr. Abbott: Now.

Mr. Knowles: By leave.

Mr. Abbott moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

PROVISION FOR EARLY DISTRIBUTION OF PAYMENTS AT END OF POOL PERIOD, ETC.

The house resumed, from Tuesday, March 13, consideration of the motion of Mr. Howe for the second reading of Bill No. 5, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1935, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Ross (Souris), and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Wright.

Mr. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I had been discussing the amendment and the subamendment to the wheat board act when the house adjourned at eleven o'clock last Tuesday. I now propose to complete those remarks.

Just before the adjournment on that day I had said that much more is at issue in what is now before the house than the subject matter of this motion or the amount of money that is involved in the payment that has been announced. The statement that was made in this house, and which first brought this subject before us, was by the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent). On Friday, March 2, 1951, he informed the house that a decision had been reached as to the amount that was to be paid to terminate the five-year wheat pool; and after referring to the agreement with the government of the United Kingdom, and the fact that the government of the United Kingdom had made it clear that no further payment would be made by them under the agreement under consideration, he then said this, as recorded at page 833 of Hansard:

> Hon. members may also have seen an announcement by the Chancellor of the Exchequer on February 20 that the United Kingdom will not draw further on the remainder of the credit of $1,250 million which was made available in May, 1946, and which expires on December 31, 1951.
> The government has decided to recommend to parliament that an amount equal to the balance of the United Kingdom credit, namely, $65 million, be added to the sums now awaiting distribution in settlement of the five-year pool.

I pointed out that from the time that announcement was made nothing has been placed before the members of this house which would make it possible to determine by what process of arithmetic the figure of $65 million was arrived at. In the speech of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) as recorded in Hansard for Thursday, March 8, 1951, a number of figures were put on record which explained what the resulting payments to the farmers would be after this $65 million had been paid into the wheat pool and the ultimate distribution had been made. No explanation was given as to how the government decided that $65 million was the right figure. No explanation has yet been placed before this house to make it clear to us how we have this extraordinary coincidence or how it comes about that the figure to be paid to terminate the five-year wheat pool should happen to be precisely the figure that remained unclaimed by the government of the United Kingdom of that loan which had been made available to them. Since we have not yet received that explanation, I submit to the house that there is no possible explanation except that the government had set its mind on persuading the British government to take up the $65 million, and pay that as the amount remaining as an obligation by them under the contract, and that this government would then be in a position to say to the farmers affected: This is all we were able to get from the government of the United Kingdom; we regret we could not get you any more, but this is the balance; and then would make the distribution accordingly. If there is some other explanation, let us have it. If there is some other place from which this $65 million figure was obtained, let us have it. If there is some other way in which the computation was made, then let us know so that the members of this house may have reason to decide whether the figure should have been a great deal more or whether it should have been this much.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) gave an argument which made it clear that, in his opinion, not one additional cent was owing under the contract. He challenged that statement when I made it the other night; but I read the Hansard record of what he had said, and it was quite clear that he was not suggesting that there was a balance owing by the government of the United Kingdom. It was something quite different. Let me refer to what the Minister of Trade and Commerce said, as recorded in Hansard of March 12, 1951, at page 1172:

> It was never suggested to the British government at any time—

These are the words of the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

> —that they were in legal default under the agreement. It was pointed out, however, that the existence of dissatisfaction among wheat producers in Canada about the results of the agreement could have unfortunate consequence for future trade relationships between our two countries and that the British government might wish to reconsider their earlier decisions. My colleague, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), made similar representations a few weeks ago. As the house knows, however, the British government did not see fit to make any further payments.
> That was a perfectly legal and proper decision for them to make under the agreement. The Canadian government, while recognizing that the legal obligations of the British government under the agreement had been fulfilled, took a different view of the over-all results and decided to pay into the five-year pool the $65 million that remained under the United Kingdom loan act.

That is all that we are told by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, namely that they decided to pay into the five-year pool the $65 million that remained under the United Kingdom loan act. That statement of course is not literally correct. They are not paying in the amount under the loan. They are paying in from the treasury to the pool an amount which happens to be the same figure as would have been available to the British government if they had decided to take that up for the purpose of making an additional payment of that amount on the contract which has been referred to. That is a much different thing indeed. Therefore the Minister of Trade and Commerce has neither by suggestion nor otherwise given us any indication of how that $65 million was arrived at. On the contrary, I submit that there is no other explanation than the fact that in his case as in the other case the only relationship the $65 million has to the measure of dissatisfaction expressed by the wheat producers affected by this contract is that this was the figure in their mind which they were trying to get the British government to pay under this device they were seeking to employ.

Do not let anyone suggest that this is an interpretation not borne out by the facts. There is nothing else that the facts support at present. If there is some other explanation, then the members of this house are entitled to it; and they certainly will be entitled to it long before this $65 million figure comes up. But we are now discussing the broad question of this contract, its effect upon the western farmers and the manner in which the government has been handling their affairs.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce has pointed out that this was a highly satisfactory agreement. The Minister of Agriculture has also pointed out that it was a highly satisfactory agreement if only the British government had lived up to their obligation. That is the position he has taken. A suggestion was made the other night, which I did not have the opportunity to deal with before eleven o'clock, that the Minister of Agriculture had not, in fact, left any such impression. It would have been extraordinary if the newspapers of this country, from one side to the other, had been so uniformly wrong in this particular case as they have been; because the newspapers right across this country have interpreted the words of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) as meaning that the British government had failed to live up to their contract. And the newspapers right across this country uniformly, without any regard to their political persuasion, without exception so far as I am aware, have pointed out the rather striking difference between the position taken by the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Agriculture in this case.

The Minister of Agriculture had no intention of leaving any other thought in the minds of the members of this house but the thought that the British government had failed to live up to their obligations. These are his words at page 1062 of Hansard, after referring to the statements of Mr. Strachey when he was in Winnipeg in 1946. He points out that Mr. Strachey had dealt not only with the possibility of higher prices, but also lower prices; and he seeks to emphasize his own point of view that Mr. Strachey's remarks were devoted to the idea of high prices and the possibility of paying more under the "have regard to" clause. I am not going to debate what Mr. Strachey's words mean. I think that they are open to interpretations different perhaps from those that have been put upon them. However, he is quite capable of dealing with that in such manner as he sees fit. I am pointing out only that the Minister of Agriculture took great pains to show that the representative of the British government, who was in this country in 1946, did leave the impression that they were prepared to do certain things which the Minister of Agriculture now says they were not prepared to carry out. And then he uses these simple words, which cannot be misinterpreted, and I quote his words as recorded on page 1062 of Hansard of March 8, 1951:

> The fact that the United Kingdom did not estimate correctly should not justify their refusal to pay.

These words are not in conformity with the words of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. The Minister of Agriculture leaves no doubt that there was a refusal to pay something that he claims was owing. The Minister of Trade and Commerce says that there was nothing owing. He points out that there was dissatisfaction, and most certainly it is only natural that there should be dissatisfaction when the Minister of Agriculture has been placing the interpretation on this clause which he has placed upon it for the farmers affected by this contract; but that is something quite apart from what is owing on this contract, and therefore we have diametrically opposed statements by the two ministers.

I do wish to deal with the effect of that position taken by the Minister of Agriculture. I regret very much to hear the statements that were made in this house on Tuesday night in regard to the government of Great Britain. I am not frequently accused of being a socialist. I do not believe in the doctrine of socialism as I understand it.

Mr. Ferrie: Why back them up?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Drew: I have expressed my own opinions in regard to that doctrine in understandable terms, which I suggest is not always the case in some other statements that are made about socialism in this house. Nevertheless I think it is most improper for us in this house to debate a subject of this kind upon the basis that there is a government of one political point of view or another in power in the United Kingdom at this time.

I do not believe in socialist doctrines, as I understand them. I accord to those who do the good faith which they are entitled to be accorded in regard to their political opinions. But I am satisfied that the present British government, no matter what its political point of view, will display that same integrity that British governments always have displayed in dealing with their contractual obligations. I think it would be a most unfortunate precedent if at this time, no matter what the political point of view of the present government of the United Kingdom may be, we should start to debate issues between this government and their government, this house and their house, upon the basis of the political point of view of the two governments. I must say in fairness that I cannot recall the Liberal members in this house having sought to justify any misunderstanding between them and an earlier government in the United Kingdom on the ground that this was a Liberal government and that there was a Conservative government there. Nor in earlier days, when the opposite was the case, have I seen that happen. I think it is most unfortunate that a minister of the crown, and one of the senior ministers, should have left the impression that he left in this house.

An hon. Member: And deliberately.

Mr. Drew: Yes, and deliberately left, that the government of the United Kingdom had failed to live up to its obligations. Never mind haggling over whether they were legal obligations or not. Moral obligations of governments within this commonwealth are equally important, and in this case I think hon. members will be only too pleased to echo the words of the Minister of Trade and Commerce when he said at page 1173 of Hansard:

> I deplore the suggestion that the British government has not played fair with the Canadian people.

Which minister of this government are we to support? Which minister of this government is telling us the position that we are called upon to accept? It must be remembered that no matter whether we agree with what the government puts forward or not, we are called upon to accept their statements of fact. That is the way that our system operates.

The whole principle of responsible government depends upon the belief that the members of the House of Commons can rely upon statements of fact put forward in this house by members of the crown. Our system is not the same as the system in the United States. The United States have a different form of government, and for that very reason they do not call upon the house to accept statements of ministers in the same way. They have a system of committees dealing with everything, even including the appointment of senior officials, where ministers themselves may be called forward and cross-examined as to the reason they are doing certain things.

One of the arguments against the extension of committees to cover the very wide field that they do in the United States is that we are called upon to accept the statements of the ministers as correct; and it is for that reason that over long years the principle has been established that the ministers must be answerable for their statements, and that if they have misled the house without some excellent explanation then those ministers are not entitled to continue in office.

That does not depend upon a majority of the members of the house. On the contrary, the time when that principle applies with the utmost force is when the government commands the greatest majority. The time when the principle assumes the greatest importance is when it is clear that only a recognition of that principle by the government itself can make it effective. The present government of the United Kingdom, which has been under some criticism here, recognized a similar principle during its present tenure of office. And when there was a breach of this principle, a principle not on all fours with this, it is true, but one of those principles which apply to the responsibility of cabinet ministers, they did not wait for the opposition to ask for a vote. The minister concerned was called upon to resign. They indicated clearly that they would take that and no other course. This is not because anyone is seeking the removal from office of any minister; it is because our system depends upon that measure of reliability on the statements that are made to the House of Commons by the ministry.

We talk about the responsibility of ministers; we talk about responsible statements by ministers. Which statement is responsible? Which of the two ministers is responsible, and which is irresponsible? That is something we have the right to know; and I submit the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) has a very clear obligation to members of the house to inform them as to which is the responsible statement, and which the irresponsible statement. It would help to clear the minds of hon. members; it would help to clear the minds of the people of Canada. But what is more, it would help very greatly to remove any suggestion that we are going to leave in the minds of the Canadian people an impression about the integrity of the government of the United Kingdom which would not only be grossly unfair, but which would also leave a very unfavourable relationship between these two governments in the years ahead.

The contract before us for discussion and consideration, which has been brought before us by a minister of the crown for consideration, is not a contract that was criticized for the first time in the present debate. When the contract was before the house in 1946 the leader of the Progressive Conservative party at that time, Mr. Bracken, had this to say, as reported at page 4822 of Hansard for August 15, 1946:

> It is a bad agreement because it proposes to sell 160 million bushels of wheat to Britain at 50 cents a bushel below the world price. It is either a gift or it is an improvident trade arrangement. If it is a gift, let us say so. But if it is supposed to be an insurance against low prices in the future—if because we take less for our wheat today than it is worth Britain is expected to pay more for our wheat two years from now than the world price when it may be lower, I say that as an insurance that this will be done, it is valueless.
> It is a bad bargain also because it will create friction between Britain and Canada.

At that time the statement made by Mr. Bracken was criticized very greatly. The suggestion that it might lead to friction was ridiculed, as Hansard will show in the subsequent pages of that debate. But also it was quite clear that it was the insurance aspect of the contract which was being emphasized at that time.

I think it would be well to keep the record straight and to quote what was said on that occasion by the leader of the C.C.F. party, because he was not emphasizing then the increase in price that might result from this. In this connection I quote from Hansard of the same day, page 4827, where the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) said:

> I think the wheat agreement is a very important step in the attempt to achieve stability in the price of wheat to the western grower. I have just come back from western Canada. As the minister indicated, he also came back a day or two ago. We had a national convention, at which I met a good many representative farmers other than the delegates who were there. Being interested in this wheat agreement, and having given some approval to it before today, naturally I was interested in finding out what was the reaction on the part of the people whom I have known for a good many years. I found, as the minister found, that while the western farmer thinks, as I indicated earlier, that the price to him now should be higher, none the less he feels that this agreement makes for some stability in the production and marketing of wheat, and that he is now relieved from the dangers from which he suffered during the period immediately following the last war, when he saw the price of wheat drop from nearly $3 a bushel down to slightly over $1 a bushel in approximately twelve months. And he realizes that if he can get a stable market at a stable price which is adequate to maintain a reasonable and decent standard of living, in the long run he will be better off than if he took a high price now and a low price two years from now. And I say that so far as it is designed to achieve stability, it should meet with this parliament's approval. Regardless of what Great Britain may pay in the last two years, it guarantees an initial price of $1.35 a bushel for the period of the agreement. And at the end of that period I believe we shall be able to look back and say that, in all certainty, this agreement did give a measure of stability, and perhaps protected the farmers—as I shall show later on—from some of the dangers inherent in the present world situation. This of course is vitally important to the Canadian farmer, and may be even more important in the later years of the agreement.

It is quite clear that what the leader of the C.C.F. party was emphasizing at that time was the insurance aspect of the agreement. For that reason it is well to recall that it was not the leader of the C.C.F. party, it was not some of those who now explain the terms of the contract from the government benches, but rather it was the leader of the Progressive Conservative party in the House of Commons who warned that this was a bad contract, who warned that this was a contract that to the individuals concerned would be valueless if they thought they were going to claim higher than the amount provided, and also that it would be bad because it could create friction between Great Britain and Canada.

Therefore we are upon a very sound basis when we introduce an amendment at this time condemning the mishandling by this government of the wheat resources of our country —because they were condemned at the time they were before the house previously by the leader of this party.

What is the explanation of this divergence of opinion? If anyone is going to suggest that there is no divergence of opinion, then may I ask once again that he go back through Hansard and see the suggestions that have come from Liberal members, other than the Minister of Agriculture, which make it quite clear that he is not the only one who is trying to suggest that the British government has not paid what it should pay.

What is rather significant however is that this suggestion has come from other hon. members from the province of Saskatchewan. It would be not only a most unfortunate thing from the point of view of parliamentary procedure and traditions of responsible government if this difference between two of the senior members of the government were left unexplained, but it would be deplorable if what is about to take place is that this criticism of Great Britain is going to be put forward in one particular part of Canada for political purposes.

No one in the house is unaware of the fact that a provincial election in Saskatchewan is anticipated in the not distant future. It has been indicated by the premier of that province that the subject matters under discussion in that election may not be confined strictly to provincial issues.

Mr. Croll: He said Korea.

Mr. Drew: It covered a wider field on an earlier occasion.

Mr. Ferrie: Are you going out to help him?

Mr. Knowles: The hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Ferrie) will be a great help.

Mr. Ferrie: They will need lots of it.

Mr. Drew: They certainly will. It is very noticeable that this is a subject being raised by those who come from that province, where this might easily become the subject of discussion. In addition to the other reasons I have suggested for the clarification of this issue I put forward this further reason why the issue should be clarified beyond all possible doubt.

It will be unfortunate if this becomes the central feature of a provincial election in Saskatchewan or in any other province because this is a matter which after all is the responsibility of the government of Canada. It would be one of the most unfortunate things that could happen in this country at this time when mutual good will and the utmost spirit of co-operation is of so much importance as between the nations of the commonwealth. It would be most unfortunate if an issue of this kind were carried onto the hustings in any province or in any election, whether it be provincial or federal. For that reason it is to be most earnestly hoped that the uncertainties which now exist as to which minister speaks for the government should be clarified without further delay.

There is another thing that should be clarified. The Minister of Trade and Commerce has made it abundantly clear that he does not think there is anything owing by the British under the contract. If there is nothing owing by the British under the contract, there is nothing owing by anyone else because the contract was between the British government and the Canadian government. If there is money owing, it is money owing for an entirely different reason. It is money owing because the government has mishandled this matter and there is justification for the feeling to which the Minister of Trade and Commerce has referred, and the government therefore is trying to make good its default. That would be a sound justification. There could be no other justification.

If that is so, let us be quite clear. Is this an attempt to reduce in some way to arithmetical terms the words of the Minister of Trade and Commerce when he said, and I quote from page 1172 of Hansard:

> It was pointed out, however, that the existence of dissatisfaction among wheat producers in Canada about the results of the agreement could have unfortunate consequence—

Then he went on at a later point to say that the government had decided to pay the $65 million that remained under the United Kingdom loan to terminate the five-year wheat pool. No suggestion then was made that this was paid as the balance owing under the contract. On the statement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce it could not be because the contract was fulfilled.

So far as anything that has been placed before this house is concerned— I qualify my remarks in that way because the government knows that it has a great deal more information than we have received—on the basis of what has already been put forward the only possible explanation that we have is that the government believes that the farmers who were compelled to deliver their wheat did not receive a fair deal and that they should make a payment to compensate them for the dissatisfaction to which they have referred.

I have made it clear that there is a moral obligation in every case where the government takes over grain, agricultural production, services or anything else under compulsion. At a time when this house has just passed emergency legislation with powers so sweeping that it brings practically our whole economy under the government by order in council it is of the utmost importance that the people of this country shall have confidence that where the government takes over anything under compulsion, whether it be wheat, agricultural production, industrial production or services, there should be fair compensation for what is taken over.

Therefore, on the basis of demonstrated moral obligation—I emphasize those words "demonstrated moral obligation"—I am confident that the members of this house would support whatever payment seemed appropriate upon the basis of the evidence submitted which showed that money should be paid. How much that is the members of this house still wait to be informed.

An hon. Member: What do you think?

Mr. Drew: The members of this house are not called upon to do crystal-gazing when they are asked to decide upon the payment of millions of dollars. The government did not just look into a crystal when it decided to make the payment of $65 million. Surely the government had some other yardstick by which to gauge the thing that was to be done than simply the fact that there was $65 million which the government of the United Kingdom could still collect on a loan. We have not yet received that information.

These facts should be before us. The proposal has been made already by the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross) that there should be a royal commission to inquire into what amount is thought properly owing under these transactions. I submit that that is the one satisfactory way that clear and understandable evidence can be obtained as to what should be paid to meet this moral obligation, if that is the basis upon which the government is making the payment. Therefore I urge the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) to agree to the appointment of a royal commission to inquire into the terms under which this payment should be made and the measure of compensation which should be paid to the wheat producers because of the loss they have sustained through the operations of the government in dealing with the wheat which was taken from them by compulsion.

Having said that, I would point out that it is important that the members know the basis upon which this is to be done. If the government is putting forward a proposition that the government should compensate agricultural and other producers for losses which they have sustained through the action of the government where their products have been taken over, then that principle should apply with equal force to all agricultural production as to other production in Canada. I repeat the statement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce that this is not a payment under the contract. If the payment is the result of the adoption of the principle of compensating those whose products have been taken by compulsion for the losses resulting from the action of the government, then let us know that that is the principle and let us establish that as the principle in relation to everything that is taken over under compulsion, no matter what it may be.

Of course, that would apply to other agricultural producers as well, to hog producers, to cheese producers, to fruit growers and to all others who would be affected.

Mr. McLure: Do not forget potatoes.

Mr. Drew: And to potato growers and to others who would be affected by any action of this kind that might become necessary under the very sweeping powers which have been assumed by the government within these past few weeks. I am placing this proposal before the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) because he is the only one who can now solve this problem. I am urging that he state on the one hand what the principle is, and, having stated that, that he inform the house that a royal commission will be appointed to inquire into the amount that should be paid under the principle put forward.

For the reason that I have now explained I do not propose to vote for the subamendment. As I said in my earlier remarks, we have nothing before us to show first of all what the principle is and, second, how the amount would be arrived at. I said earlier that the amount might be 50 cents a bushel; it might be 25 cents a bushel; it might be 10 cents a bushel. We want to know what it is, and I believe members of the house should have information as to how the figure is arrived at before they vote substantial sums to those who deserve it under any principle that may be established in this house at the instance of the government.

I would point out that this is not a figure that can be established with certainty in view of the fact that the premier of Saskatchewan, who has displayed some interest in this matter, himself has made it clear that he is not definite because he has said it might be a figure between 15 and 25 cents. By that statement he has supported my contention that this figure is not a determined figure. Therefore for that reason I do not think we would be advancing the interests of the western farmers by seeking to leave the impression that a fixed figure has been established. Therefore I propose not to support the subamendment.

Having said that, I wish to repeat once again what I said earlier. We support the principle that, where the government takes over wheat, agricultural production or anything else by compulsion, there is a moral obligation to make fair and just compensation. We want to know what that fair and just compensation is, and we have proposed the manner in which it can be done. Before leaving these remarks, Mr. Speaker, I wish to come back to the even greater issue that is before the house. This is not something to be lightly brushed off as some hon. members would brush it off. As was said in an editorial in one of the western papers a few days ago, there sometimes seems to be little use in talking about principle to this government because it does not understand principle. When ancient traditions are recalled, when principles which have been established as the basis of our parliamentary system are referred to, they are treated as though these were simply uninteresting points put forward in a debate for no other purpose than to criticize the government.

This parliament did not always look at principles of this kind in that way. I should like to refer hon. members to an excellent book entitled "The Government of Canada" by Professor Dawson. At pages 206 and 207 there is a very clear, simple and forceful discussion of the principle of cabinet solidarity, the obligation of ministers to speak not as individuals but as members of a government, and to be answerable as members of a government for what they say. I quote these words from Dawson at page 206:

> It follows that all members of a cabinet must consider the views of one another in making any important announcement or in taking a decision which might be considered as involving government policy; and this leads in practice to prior consultation and discussion in cabinet, or at least, with the prime minister. This done, if the minister secures agreement on his proposal, the cabinet will support it to a man; failing such agreement, the dissenting member must acquiesce in the rejection of his ideas or tender his resignation.

That is a long established practice. A minister may often be called upon to state his views as a member of the government when he has not an opportunity to consult either the Prime Minister or other members of the government. The obligation then is to consult them, and then either to be able to acquiesce in the result of that discussion or in the alternative to resign. That is no suggestion being brought forward today in this house for the first time in relation to this particular subject. That is a basic practice in regard to the collective responsibility of government to the house and to the people of Canada.

In addition to the other responsibilities raised by the discussion which has taken place, with the utmost seriousness and earnestness I place before the Prime Minister the proposition stated in Dawson's book on "The Government of Canada", a statement which simply reflects the tradition and the practices of many years. I ask that the conflicting position of these two ministers be reconciled, or, in the interests of the stature of the government in the minds of the people of Canada and its relationship with Great Britain, that a reconciliation be effected or the ordinary course be followed.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not rising at this time to agree to the suggestion that a royal commission should be appointed nor to discuss any prospective provincial election in Saskatchewan or elsewhere. Nor am I speaking for effect in any other kind of election to those who have been called the hog growers, potato growers, cheese producers or any other kind of producer. Nor am I rising to quarrel with the citation from Professor Dawson that the leader of the opposition

(Mr. Drew) has made. However, the leader of the opposition stated on Tuesday evening, as recorded on pages 1228 and 1229 of Hansard:

> . . . with the divergence of opinion between his two senior ministers, the Prime Minister should tell us exactly what the principle is under which the payment is being made . . .

I intend to reply very briefly, first about this alleged divergence of opinion which is now referred to as a conflicting position in the government, and then about the principle under which the payment is being recommended. Obviously in any government under a parliamentary system all ministers—and I am not speaking of this government in particular—do not necessarily always have the same thoughts, nor do they necessarily always use the same expressions in communicating their thoughts. There are many matters of interest to human beings about which they do not always have the same views. If it were otherwise it would be very much simpler to have a one-man government. Our system is cabinet government, and cabinet government involves cabinet responsibility and cabinet solidarity. As I understand it cabinet solidarity requires agreement on policies and on conclusions. With respect to this "have regard to" clause, all the members of the government are agreed on the four essential points, and they are the only points which affect policy and conclusions.

The first point is that the United Kingdom had discharged all its legal obligations under the wheat agreement. Everyone recognized that was a binding contract for two years at $1.55 per bushel, and it was a contract which bound the United Kingdom government to take the number of bushels stipulated in the third and following year at a price to be agreed upon, which would not be less than $1.25 for the third year and $1 for the fourth year. That was all there was in the agreement as a binding agreement on the parties. There was a statement that in fixing the prices, which would not be less than $1.25 in the third year, the United Kingdom government would have regard to the price that was paid as the agreed price for the two first years; and that in fixing the price for the fourth year they would have regard to the price that was paid during the first year; the price for the fourth year being not less than $1. There was no obligation on them other than the undertaking to take the stipulated quantity in the third year at a price which they did not have to agree would be more than $1.25, and to take the agreed quantity in the fourth year at a price which they did not have to agree would be more than $1. No one contended there was any other legal obligation.

The second point on which there was agreement was that, at the end of May, 1950, the Canadian government accepted as the decision of the United Kingdom government that they had discharged all their legal obligations under that contract. The third point was that the Canadian wheat growers believed there was a continuing obligation under the "have regard to" clause which had not been discharged in full and that, in the words of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) in the speech referred to by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew), "the British government itself was partly to blame" for this expectation of the wheat producers because of the speech that had been made in Winnipeg by the Right Hon. Mr. Strachey, after he had listened from the galleries of this House of Commons to a speech delivered by the then leader of the opposition, Mr. Bracken.

Now, we all felt the Canadian wheat growers had understandable grounds for this expectation that there would be more done under the "have regard to" clause than had been done, and our government hoped—again I use the words of the Minister of Trade and Commerce in the speech referred to by the leader of the opposition—"that the British government could have seen the advantage to them of making some further payments to the Canadian wheat growers." On that third point we were all agreed.

The fourth point upon which we were agreed was that the Canadian government should make a contribution to the five-year pool because producers had been led, both by United Kingdom ministers and by Canadian ministers, to expect that something more substantial would be done under the "have regard to" clause than had been done, and because the government of the United Kingdom had not seen fit to do anything more under that clause. I repeat that all the members of the government are agreed on these four points, and these are the only points about which there is any matter of policy or any matter of conclusion.

As to the principle on which this amount of $65 million—

Mr. Coldwell: Before the Prime Minister leaves that point, I notice he has said that it had been agreed that all legal obligations under the contract—

Mr. St. Laurent: Yes.

Mr. Coldwell: On Monday, at page 1133 of Hansard, the Prime Minister said:

> The United Kingdom authorities took the position in May of 1950 "that all obligations under the 'have regard to' clause might be considered to have been taken care of."

It was not qualified by the word "legal," and I think that is important.

Mr. St. Laurent: There are no obligations, in the strict sense of obligations, that are not legal obligations. As the hon. member knows that was precisely what was being discussed in this house when the right hon. minister from the United Kingdom was sitting in the gallery. The hon. member knows that was what he was dealing with when he spoke, I think it was to the Canadian Club, in Winnipeg. I think the hon. member will agree with me that the wheat growers of the western provinces expected from that statement, and from similar statements made by our Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) and by our minister of trade and commerce at that time, Mr. MacKinnon, that there would be substantial consideration resulting from the obligation of the "have regard to" clause. It was on their assumption that there was going to be something substantial coming to them as a consequence of the "have regard to" clause that they went happily along during those years, seeing to it that the wheat contract was carried out.

There is no doubt that when the government of the United Kingdom took the position that all obligations, in the sense of obligations, had been fulfilled, and that nothing more was to be done by them as a consequence of the "have regard to" clause, those expectations were not met. I think that is indisputable. We were all agreed we were not alone responsible for those expectations in the minds of the wheat producers of the western provinces. Because of the principle of solidarity invoked by the leader of the opposition, and because of the declarations that had been made by the Minister of Agriculture, by the then minister of trade and commerce and by the right hon. gentlemen from the United Kingdom, we all felt that those having such expectations should not remain in the disappointed state in which they were left by the position taken by the government of the United Kingdom that it would make no further payment as a consequence of the "have regard to" clause.

Hon. members recall that when the price for the third year was being discussed it was expressly agreed that a price of $2 would be paid for that crop, and that the matter of giving consideration to the "have regard to" clause would be postponed. When the price for the fourth year crop was again fixed at $2 it was agreed that consideration of what should be done under the "have regard to" clause would be still further postponed. It was not until the matter was raised by the representatives of the British government when the present Minister of Trade and Commerce was in London in May of 1950 that the matter came to a head. The position they then took was that they had fulfilled all obligations under the contract. We felt that they had fulfilled all legal obligations, but that they had not met the expectations that had been raised by the declarations made in 1946 in respect of the effect this "have regard to" clause would have on the amounts put into the pool. We came to the conclusion that the government of the United Kingdom having decided that it would do no more, we would recommend to parliament that the sum of $65 million would be put into the pool to be added to what was left there for distribution as a final payment.

Mr. Rowe: Why $65 million?

Mr. St. Laurent: Now, why $65 million? From the start it had been clearly understood there could not be any mathematical calculation of the consequence of this "have regard to" clause. I remind hon. members of the statement made by the then prime minister when the price was set for the third year of the contract; I refer to the public statement that was made at that time. He said:

> Having in mind the magnitude of the agreement and the long-term security which it provides, a precise arithmetical calculation of the difference in price was not suggested.

That has been the position from the start, that there could not be any mathematical calculation of something expressed in the terms used in this agreement.

When this decision was made and accepted by the government of Canada as being the position taken, and the position they were entitled to take, in the United Kingdom, there was still $65 million that had not been drawn from the credit provided by the agreed loan of $1,250 million. Had the government of the United Kingdom seen fit to draw that amount of $65 million and use it as a settlement of anything legitimately or properly expected under the "have regard to" clause, the government of Canada would not have felt required to do anything more, and would have been quite content to say that everything that could reasonably be expected as a consequence of the "have regard to" clause had been discharged by that payment.

I am not going to repeat the argument made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) that the price which in fact was paid for the fourth year crop would have provided a sum of $35 million had there not been, in the course of that crop year, devaluation of the Canadian dollar in terms of the American dollar. The government of the United Kingdom declared that it was not going to use any more of the undrawn portion of the $1,250 million loan which they were entitled to draw at any time up to December 31, 1951, and which, had they seen fit to draw it and use it for other purposes, would have required the delivery of $65 million worth of Canadian production in this year 1951. They decided that they were not going to draw anything more or put any burden on Canadian production as a result of any drawings under that credit.

Without attempting to make any mathematical calculation, but taking a rough approximation of what could be regarded as just and fair, the Canadian government decided to recommend to parliament that a sum equal to the $65 million be put into the pool because that placed no heavier burden on the production of this year than would have been placed upon it by the drawing and use for other purposes of the available $65 million of the credit. There was no other calculation made or attempted.

On all these points there was agreement. It seems to me that it is not going to make much difference to the producer in western Canada what I, or the Minister of Agriculture or the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) may think it would have been desirable for the United Kingdom to have done because of the expectations that had been raised in 1946 and that had continued as a result of the postponing of consideration of what should be done about the "have regard to" clause right up to the time the contract had been completely fulfilled. It is not going to matter much to them whether I think we should have done it or whether I think that the government of the United Kingdom should have done it. It is not going to matter much to them whether, it being done by us, it is limited to that amount or whether, in their opinion, it should be more, or whether in the opinion of someone who does not derive any benefit it should be less. On the facts we in the government are agreed. On the policy we are agreed. On the recommendation we make to parliament we are agreed. On the question of one's personal opinion of how each party has behaved, not under a contractual, enforceable obligation but under a set of expectations raised by declarations made by cabinet ministers, we are not going to have much effect upon the thinking of those who are interested as producers or those who are interested as taxpayers.

I do not think there is going to be much cheering anywhere over this decision. But I think it is the kind of decision that no one can say is an unfair and unreasonable one to make under all the circumstances which have now been quite fully discussed.

[Mr. St. Laurent.]

Mr. Coldwell: Will the right hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. St. Laurent: Yes.

Mr. Coldwell: I am asking this question because I think this is a point that should be cleared up. Between the time of the return of the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the adoption by the cabinet of the memorandum that he mentioned, was any attempt made to re-open negotiations on this point?

Mr. St. Laurent: Yes, Mr. Speaker, there was. When I realized, as I did shortly after the special session that we had in the autumn—

Mr. Coldwell: I think the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) misunderstood me, Mr. Speaker. I mean between the time when the minister came back and June 5 when he made the statement in the house. That is the point I had in mind.

Mr. St. Laurent: No. There was one communication which I think we will lay on the table. I am told that an answer has been received from London, and I think I shall be able tomorrow to file a minute of the discussions in London and the communication that was sent from Canada on that minute before June 5, 1950.

But following June 5, 1950, as hon. members will recall, last summer there were many things which I at least had to regard as matters of urgency and priority. The first that occurred was the unexpected death of the former prime minister; the next was the unexpected death of the former minister of labour. There were other special circumstances arising in connection with the Korean crisis and the decisions we had to make in respect thereof. That was followed almost immediately by, first of all, the threat and then the realization of a general tie-up in transportation which necessitated the calling of a special session of parliament somewhat earlier than we had intended to call it for the purpose of dealing with the Korean situation. Just as soon as those matters which, I must confess, occupied my mind to the exclusion of domestic problems other than the railway strike at that period, had been dealt with, I came to realize to what extent there was this persisting feeling of disappointment at the attitude taken by the United Kingdom government in respect to the "have regard to" clause. I knew that we had accepted that as the decision of the United Kingdom government, and it was understandable that they would consider that it should not be mentioned to them again. I felt that it would be unfair to the government of the United Kingdom not to bring to their notice what I knew about the feeling as it existed in Canada, and about the way in which that feeling and this expectation had developed, and why it had developed.

When Mr. Attlee was here I ventured to mention it to him, telling him that I was not making any request on behalf of our government that the United Kingdom do anything more, but that I felt it would not be fair for them not to know what the situation was. I suggested that if he had no objection I would raise it again with the chancellor of the exchequer when I went over for the prime ministers' conference in January; and I did so. But at no time did I suggest that there was any legal obligation, and at no time did I suggest that we had not accepted as their position the one they took in May of 1950. But I did suggest to them that they should consider whether or not in their own interest it would be wise to do something more about the "have regard to" clause, and I put the facts, as they had been placed before the members of this house, before them. Shortly after my return I was informed that they had considered my representations and had come to the conclusion that they were not going to re-open the matter.

Thereupon there was a suggestion that the right hon. Minister of Agriculture himself go over and see if he would not be able to persuade them that it would be in their interest to do something more. While it was suggested to my colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and to me, that that might be some reflection on us because we had both discussed the matter, we both said that we were not sensitive on that point, and that if the Minister of Agriculture could bring about any other decision we would rejoice with him in that other decision.

Now, when he returned and told us that it was useless we said, there is nothing more we can do that will have any possibility whatsoever of getting anything further done by the government of the United Kingdom, and we have to decide whether or not in these circumstances there is responsibility upon us to do anything; and we decided—and we come before parliament agreed upon that policy and conclusion—to recommend to parliament this contribution of $65 million to be added to the price of the 1,400 million odd bushels of wheat put into the pool in the five years to which it applied.

Mr. Wright: There is just one question I should like to ask the Prime Minister. Was there any consultation with the representatives of the western wheat pools or the advisory committee of the wheat board between the time the Minister of Trade and Commerce returned from England, in the latter part of May, and the time the government accepted the proposals that he brought back from the British government with regard to the final settlement?

Mr. St. Laurent: There was no consultation with the advisory board or the wheat pool between the return of the minister and the acceptance of the proposals. The proposals were proposals for the purchase of a certain portion of the 1950 crop. We did not treat as a proposal their declaration that they had fulfilled all their obligations under the contract. We treated that as their decision, and we accepted it as their decision.

Mr. Wright: You accepted it, though, as a final settlement without consultation with the producers or their representatives.

Mr. St. Laurent: There was no consultation at that time. We accepted that as being the decision arrived at, and being the decision which implied that they had fulfilled all the legal obligations that the contract provided.

Mr. Coldwell: As a government you did not dispute that point.

Mr. St. Laurent: We did not dispute that decision.

Mr. Knowles: You were in accord with it.

Mr. Rowe: Will the Prime Minister permit another question? Did the government submit to the wheat board the issue as to the adequacy of $65 million?

Mr. St. Laurent: No, the government did not.

Mr. McIvor: On a point of order, we are not in committee of the whole house now.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I do not wish to make another speech, but I have one comment to make. I am sure the Prime Minister will realize that it is very disappointing, in answer to the very earnest request of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) that we should have some basis on which we could assess this grant of $65 million, to be given the merely accidental, if it was merely accidental, fact that there was $65 million to be drawn down under the British loan. That seems, as I say, to put it mildly, a very unconvincing reason for having arrived at this amount.

Mr. St. Laurent: That is an opinion which, if the hon. member were a minister of my cabinet, would not be an opinion that I would share with him; but the fact of not sharing it, as an opinion, would not require me to request him to resign.

Canadian Wheat Board Act

Mr. William Bryce (Selkirk): In rising to take part in this debate which has already been very well covered from every angle, I would like to deal with three things: first, the wheat agreement; does the United Kingdom owe the Canadian farmer anything, and does the Canadian government owe the farmer?

When the wheat agreement was before the house in August 1946 I supported that agreement; so did the whole of this group, and I can remember there was a great deal of criticism owing to the fact that the floor prices for wheat the last two years in the agreement were to be $1.25 for the third year, and $1.00 for the fourth year, and at that time it was brought to the attention of the house that we expected the government would maintain prices at their then levels. But even then there were signs of inflation, as far as the farmer was concerned, when he went to purchase anything.

It can be noted too that while most people expected wheat to go down on the world market, it steadily increased. When the member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell), the leader of this group, was talking about allowing prices to rise for the things the farmer had to buy, the Minister of Agriculture rose and stated that if, at the end of the agreement, it proved to be necessary, the government of Canada could appropriate funds to compensate the wheat farmers, just as the government had already appropriated $200 million for the protection of the prices of other farm products.

Now to me that was an assurance from the minister that, should the cost of production of wheat continue to rise, some compensatory adjustment would be made by this government, but not necessarily by the British government.

We in this group have always supported the wheat board, not that we think it is perfect, but we are satisfied at this time that they are in no way to blame for this situation. The majority of the farmers today believe in the wheat board in the marketing of our wheat.

We now arrive at the question: Does the United Kingdom owe us anything on the agreement that was made? This group has never argued, as the grain trade and the Conservative party have argued, that the British government under the "have regard to" clause owed a sum equal to the difference between the price of class II wheat and the price paid under the four-year contract. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe), in his statement made in the house in this debate, agrees with this position. I am convinced I have the support of this group in the contention that had there not been a British contract class II wheat would probably not have reached the price it did. We should also remember that had all this wheat been thrown on a speculative market the farmers would not have received the price they did.

I think the statement the Minister of Trade and Commerce made in the house was a good, sound argument that the British government had met their obligations. He said the British took the position that they had fulfilled their obligations, and I gathered from the minister's statement that in his opinion this was true.

I understand the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) when in England discussed the matter. He has stated so recently. Last month the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) flew to London also, and the Prime Minister has since made a statement in which he said:

> The United Kingdom authorities took the position in May of 1950 "that all obligations under the 'have regard to' clause might be considered to have been taken care of." The Minister of Trade and Commerce said that this was a matter which could only be settled by the Canadian cabinet on his return to Ottawa. After discussion with his colleagues, the Minister of Trade and Commerce advised the chancellor of the exchequer of the United Kingdom that the Canadian government was in accord with the conclusions in the agreed record of the meeting held with the United Kingdom authorities while he was in London. That is one of the documents for which their consent to table has been requested. In other words, the Canadian government accepted as the position of the United Kingdom that they had discharged their obligations under the agreement.

I feel sure that this statement clears up the United Kingdom position. The United Kingdom does not owe a further payment because, as the Prime Minister has said, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, on his return from the United Kingdom, after discussion with his colleagues, agreed that the United Kingdom had discharged their obligations under the agreement.

Now let us look at whether the Canadian government owes the farmer anything. As long as I have been connected with the farm movement in Manitoba, the greatest desire of any farmer has been to have stability; but it was not good enough to stabilize wheat prices and then allow the cost of production to shoot higher and higher. This is one of the main grievances of the western farmer today.

The government broke faith with the western farmer. It set the price of wheat for five years, and it allowed farmers' costs to keep rising. Other agricultural producers had their prices set also; but their prices were reviewed every year and they had an opportunity of making representations to the government that their cost of production should be considered or changed.

Another very serious point with the western farmer is that from March 1, 1945, to February 17, 1947, he was compelled to subsidize the Canadian consumer by providing wheat at $1.25 to enable the consumer to get cheaper flour, hence cheaper bread. Canadian consumers, during that period of 1945 to 1947, were supplied with 160 million bushels of wheat at $1.25 when the price received under the British contract was $1.55. This, according to the figures which have been brought out in the house, would amount to approximately $48 million.

I should like to quote at this point from the Manitoba Co-Operator of March 8, 1951, at which point I find they have set out clearly what I have been attempting to say. It is as follows:

> As far as the taxpayers are concerned they owed the wheat producers a very minimum of $48 million because of the fact the government mistakenly and arbitrarily imposed on the wheat producers a subsidy of this kind by requiring wheat to be sold to the mills during the period March 1, 1945, to February 17, 1947, at $1.25 a bushel, when all other buyers were paying $1.55, and sometimes more. This amounted to approximately $48 million and very definitely constituted a subsidy from the wheat grower to the Canadian consumer, reflected in the price of his bread. The difference between $48 million and the $65 million now made available is $17 million which amounts to about 1¼ cents a bushel on the total amount of wheat involved.

These are some of the reasons why farmers in western Canada are entitled to a payment of more than 8.3 cents.

The government failed to maintain prices. They allowed prices to go away up while we had the assurance of the Minister of Agriculture that the producer was protected under the wheat board act, just as other producers were protected under the Agricultural Prices Support Act.

In summing up I would say that the wheat agreement served a good purpose. The farmer has always asked and continues to ask for stability. The United Kingdom does not owe us anything. They have carried out their part of the bargain. And last of all 8·3 cents will not compensate the farmer for the contribution he has made to the consumer by supplying wheat at $1.25 when the world price was closer to $2.

Mr. Ross (Souris): It is only four point something.

Mr. Bryce: The payment of 8·3 cents is very disappointing to the wheat farmers, who had been expecting more, and it is now creating a great number of dissatisfied farmers in the west. Even now, if the farmer got what he is asking for, he would not be getting his fair share of the national income.

Mr. John Decore (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few observations in connection with the amendment and subamendment now before the house. May I point out first of all that the people in my constituency are engaged chiefly in agriculture, and their main source of revenue is from the sale of wheat.

Most farmers in the three prairie provinces have been concerned with the final payment made in the five-year pool. In northern Alberta we had drought conditions this year. Throughout the prairie provinces there was early frost and bad harvesting weather, with the result that much of the crop has not been threshed. Owing to these conditions the position occupied by the farmers has been aggravated. For that reason the farmer was concerned about what amount he would receive by way of final payment. Following the announcement by the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) that in addition to the $55 million in the hands of the wheat board a further contribution of $65 million would be made, totalling 8·3 cents per bushel, I have received a considerable number of wires from my constituency, especially from locals of the farmers' union of Alberta and from individual farmers, indicating a feeling that more should be paid by way of final payment.

My concern at the moment is that there has been an opinion voiced in this house by a number of hon. members who do not come from the three prairie provinces that this $65 million should not be given to the farmers in addition to the 3·8 cents per bushel now in the treasury of the wheat board. May I point out to those hon. members that the farmer's position in western Canada has been made more difficult because of the rising cost of machinery and the rising cost of production. May I point out also that the farmers of western Canada have subsidized the Canadian consumer of wheat in the form of cheap bread to the extent of some 160,000,000 bushels, amounting to $48 million. That should be borne in mind by those hon. members who are now opposed to this contribution of $65 million given by the Canadian government.

I have listened with considerable interest to the debate on this wheat situation and I admit that probably I am more acquainted with the Anglo-Canadian wheat contract and the five year pool than I was before. One thing that struck me is that hon. members of the opposition, especially Social Credit and C.C.F. members, have endeavoured to indicate that the agreement which was entered into originally with Great Britain was a mistake, that it should not have been entered into originally. In fact, one hon. member, the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe), referred to it as a colossal blunder.

An hon. Member: He is not C.C.F.

An hon. Member: He is not Social Credit.

Mr. Decore: I said hon. members of the opposition. Of course, there was a lot of applause at that time from the Social Credit and C.C.F. ranks.

An hon. Member: No, there was not.

Mr. Hansell: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Decore: I was not here in the house in 1946—

Mr. Hansell: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows very well that his remarks with regard to applause go into Hansard, and that would indicate that we were supporting certain contentions made by the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe. We did not support those contentions and we did not applaud them. We did not say that the wheat agreement was a bad agreement. We did not say anything of the kind whatsoever. As a matter of fact, we supported the agreement and I object—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Hansell:—to the hon. member trying to get that impression into Hansard.

Mr. Decore: The hon. member for Macleod objects to my statement that they are against the agreement now, but let me quote what was said the other night by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell). I quote from page 1222 of Hansard as follows:

> The next thing I should like to say is that if the government's case in respect of what might happen two, three, four or five years from the time they signed on the dotted line did not turn out as they expected it would, then they cannot escape the responsibility. That is all there is to it.

Going back to 1946, I notice that the hon. member for Macleod did not raise any objection with regard to the Anglo-Canadian wheat agreement, but he now comes forward and by implication suggests that this agreement was bad. In other words, he is blowing hot and cold at the same time. As I say, I was not here in 1946 but I was interested in what took place and I checked Hansard. For instance, I notice that the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue)—I wonder if he recognizes his words—is reported as having referred to the Anglo-Canadian wheat agreement as follows:

> This agreement I think is just one step along the path mankind must follow toward the goal of living, and letting live, agreeing together and trying to help one another, and for that reason I support it.

He supported the agreement in 1946, but his remarks of a few days ago would indicate that this was a bad agreement. This agreement was supported by all opposition groups including, as was pointed out by the Winnipeg Free Press, the official opposition then under the leadership of Mr. Bracken.

Mr. Ross (Souris): The Free Press may be correctly reported, but that is not the true story that is carried in the Free Press.

Mr. Decore: As I say, I was not here, but there was a member representing Vegreville at that time. This is what was said in this editorial:

> But it should not be forgotten that it—

That is the government.

> —did so on the urgent demand of the Saskatchewan wheat pool. The other two pools and the Canadian Federation of Agriculture joined later on in welcoming and enthusiastically supporting this wheat agreement. So did all the political parties in parliament. The Conservatives, under Mr. Bracken—

The hon. member has just stated that that is not so; maybe it is not.

> —voted for the agreement and the C.C.F. under Mr. Coldwell welcomed it as a straight C.C.F. policy—which, of course, it was.

Mr. Ross (Souris): There was no vote on the agreement, and that is recorded in Hansard.

Mr. Decore: Here is the important part:

> Wherever the greatest responsibility may lie, the one certainty is that no government for one moment would have considered requiring wheat farmers to sell their wheat under such an agreement without the firm and unqualified approval of the recognized farm organizations—the pools and the federation. The federal government, as every wheat producer knows, had their firm and unqualified approval.

I listened to the debate in connection with the matter and I was struck with the statement made by the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe. I respect his views and I respect the hon. member, but I do say to him that when he criticizes the wheat board, when he does not agree with the wheat board method of marketing our Canadian wheat, he is not aware of the feeling of the farmers in western Canada. The farmers of western Canada have had enough of the so-called free enterprise method of marketing their wheat in the Winnipeg grain exchange. The farmers still want the Canadian wheat board to sell their wheat.

I should like to refer to a Canadian Press article which appeared in the Ottawa Journal of March 3, 1951:

> Stanley Jones, president of Winnipeg grain exchange, said recently that Canadian wheat would have been worth $680 million more in five years if it had been sold at the free world price—

Mr. Sinnott: He would have it all.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Apart from what the Liberal party might have got.

Mr. Decore: These figures are very interesting when you compare them with the figures submitted by the hon. member for Souris and other hon. members. The rest of the quotation is as follows:

—instead of at controlled prices under the Anglo-Canadian and international wheat agreements.

In this vital debate that is going on at the present time every effort is being made in my opinion to discredit the Canadian wheat board. I think the Winnipeg grain exchange has received a lot of free assistance right in this house. I think the farmers have had enough of the free marketing system. The farmer is not asking for any unreasonable price. He wants a fair price, and he also wants stability with respect to his wheat.

The subamendment before the house asks for consideration of the farmer receiving 25 cents a bushel for his wheat. As a westerner, I am in favour of the farmer receiving 25 cents a bushel or more if possible. The prosperity of western Canada means that other parts of Canada will also prosper. The only thing I am concerned with at this moment is where we are going to raise the money. I have not heard the C.C.F. group say how they propose that this additional money be paid. Is it going to be raised by way of extra taxes? We are expecting heavier taxation this year in order to meet our defence requirements. Is the C.C.F. group asking that more taxes be imposed on Canadians? I have heard that members of the C.C.F. party are opposed to further taxation.

I should also like to say that I was particularly disappointed with the Social Credit group. I was especially disappointed when I listened to the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore). Every so often the hon. member for Lethbridge gets up on the floor of the house and expounds on the theories and principles of Social Credit. He often refers to a book dealing with the principles of Social Credit. I think he is now about half way through it but there is still half of it left that we will have to listen to. I was hoping that possibly in the other half of the book he would have found something to indicate to us just how we can raise the money through Social Credit principles in order to be able to make a further substantial payment.

What are hon. members trying to do in the utterances they have made in the house with respect to this matter? What are they trying to achieve? There has been a suggestion that some people are trying to make political capital. However, I think there is at least one honest member who has made his stand clear, who came out in the open and pointed out just what he had in mind. Incidentally he comes from Alberta. I refer to the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Johnston). As I say, I admire him for coming out in the open and saying what he had in mind. I think others should have done the same thing. At page 1155 of Hansard he said:

I believe that when the next election rolls around the other provinces will follow Alberta's example and clean house with the Liberals.

I do not know whether he wants to change the words "with the Liberals". This is unrevised Hansard. I suppose what he had in mind was that he wanted to point out that the Social Credit party came into power with a bang in the province of Alberta in 1935.

Mr. Wylie: They are still in with a bang.

Mr. Decore: I think he could have gone a step further and pointed out the reason why they came in with a bang in the province of Alberta in 1935. There was one very important reason. In 1935, during the time of the depression—

Mr. Wylie: What has this got to do with wheat?

Mr. Decore: I will point out to you what it has to do with wheat. The founder of the Social Credit party, Mr. Aberhart, promised $25 a month to every citizen of Alberta. They were not expected to pay the money back or to work for it. That was the promise he made and that is one of the reasons why the hon. member who has been making interruptions is in this house today, because of the promises that were made in 1935.

Mr. Wylie: You are absolutely silly and you know it.

ROYAL COMMISSION ON TRANSPORTATION

TABLING OF REPORT—TRIBUTE TO COMMISSIONERS AND STAFF

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Decore) to allow me to interrupt him. He may continue at eight o'clock. I would ask the house to revert to motions to enable me to lay on the table the report of the royal commission on transportation. This report has been printed in English and is available for distribution. The translation is well advanced and the printing of the French copy will be proceeded with as rapidly as possible.

This document completes the work of the royal commission which for over two years has conducted an extensive investigation into Canada's transportation problems and policy. It is a most comprehensive survey of the subject and should be of considerable interest to all members and to all Canadians who are directly or indirectly affected by the availability and the cost of transportation.

I wish to take this opportunity to express the thanks of the government to the members of the royal commission on transportation, Hon. W. F. A. Turgeon, Dr. H. F. Angus and Dr. H. A. Innis, and to its secretarial and technical personnel. We are particularly indebted to the Hon. Mr. Turgeon who was given leave from his post as Canadian high commissioner in Ireland, now ambassador, to head the royal commission, and who brought to this difficult and laborious task the capacity, wisdom, and judgment acquired during his long judicial and diplomatic career. The government will no doubt have some legislation to recommend based on the recommendations of the report.

Mr. Green: This session?

Mr. St. Laurent: At this present session. Hon. members will therefore be provided with an opportunity at that time for discussion of the report in addition of course to the usual opportunity provided when the estimates of the Department of Transport are before the house for consideration.

REPORTS AND PAPERS

WHEAT—AGREEMENT WITH UNITED KINGDOM—PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, since we have reverted to motions, I wonder if the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) could table the documents concerning which he has now received permission to table from the British government. If that could be done now or at eight o'clock it would be most helpful in view of their importance to the debate on the wheat board bill.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was told that an answer had been received. I have not seen it. I will try to see it during the recess, and I will try to comply with the suggestion of the hon. member. The government is just as anxious as the hon. member to have all pertinent facts before the public for the public's appraisal.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

WHEAT

TABLING OF DOCUMENTS—AGREEMENT WITH UNITED KINGDOM

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the leave of the house to revert to motions for a moment, in order to table certain documents concerning the wheat agreement.

Mr. Speaker: Has the Prime Minister leave of the house to revert to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. St. Laurent: The United Kingdom government has taken the position that it has no objection to the publication of the minute of the meeting with the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) on May 22, 1950, and a message from the Minister of Trade and Commerce to the Chancellor of the Exchequer dated May 30, 1950, but that it would strongly deprecate any departure from the general practice of not publishing documents connected with negotiations between governments, and only publishing agreed conclusions. I shall, therefore, table the minute of the meeting of May 22, 1950, and a copy of the communication dated May 30, 1950, sent through the High Commissioner for the United Kingdom here in Ottawa to the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Since that is all we have obtained the consent of the United Kingdom government to lay on the table, on Monday when the motion for the production of papers standing in the name of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) is called, I shall ask him if he will consent to dropping it.

Mr. Coldwell: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I believe they are the two documents that are really essential.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

PROVISION FOR EARLY DISTRIBUTION OF PAYMENTS AT END OF POOL PERIOD, ETC.

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Howe for the second reading of Bill No. 5, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1935, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Ross (Souris), and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Wright.

Mr. John Decore (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, just before six o'clock I endeavoured to point out that when the Anglo-Canadian wheat agreement was being negotiated and discussed on the floor of this house in 1946, it would definitely appear that there were at least two political groups in this house who were in favour of the agreement, namely the Social Credit group and the C.C.F. From the debate that has taken place so far in this house, the implication has been made that the agreement was a bad agreement and probably should not have been entered into. If this house is to accept the contention that the agreement was bad to start with, then I feel that the members of His Majesty's—

Mr. Coldwell: I did not quite hear the hon. member. Who says the agreement is a bad agreement?

Mr. Decore: By implication, I was referring to the two political groups—

Mr. Coldwell: I deny that absolutely, and the record will confirm my stand.

Mr. Fair: On behalf of the Social Credit party I made a statement, and before this debate ends it will be clear to everybody that that is not the case.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Decore: I would suggest that the hon. member read his own speech, and read the speeches delivered by some of the other members, and then he will agree that by implication the agreement was referred to as bad to start with. I do say that if we are to accept their version of the agreement, they must also accept the responsibility. You cannot blow hot and cold at the same time.

Mr. Blackmore: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is misrepresenting the position of this group entirely.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I believe some member from the hon. gentleman's group will no doubt have an opportunity of presenting their case.

Mr. Decore: If I am to understand that hon. members now say the agreement was a good arrangement, then I do not think there is any room for argument. I also express the view that I should like to see the farmers in western Canada get 25 cents a bushel or more. In fact, I am going to state right now that I am going to vote in favour of the subamendment in the hope that members of the Social Credit group will get into consultation with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) and work out some financial arrangement whereby this would be possible. It would certainly be appreciated by the farmers in western Canada, and by the whole of Canada so far as that is concerned if we can get more money without raising taxes.

Mr. Blackmore: We can surely do that.

Mr. Decore: I also pointed out that in listening to this debate I found that at least one hon. member was honest, and that was the member for Bow River (Mr. Johnston), when he pointed out that there will be a house-cleaning of Liberals in the province of Alberta—

Mr. Johnston: I can clear that up for the hon. member. There will not be any Liberals.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Decore: I should like to point out further, Mr. Speaker, that shortly after six o'clock I was told that I was looking for trouble. I was warned by one of the members of the Social Credit group. I had a similar warning before. I take that as notice to expect a barrage of personal abuse to be heaped upon me on the floor of this house. I believe that by this time some hon. member has been delegated to do this job, and I would not be surprised if it were the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Shaw). After all, one must not criticize the Social Credit party in this house or in the province of Alberta.

I should like to make a reference to the criticism that has been levelled against some members of the government especially by the member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Thatcher) and the member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore) blaming this whole set-up on the socialist government in Great Britain. In fact, the leader of the C.C.F. party, the member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell), endeavoured the other night to attribute to me a statement which I never made. I, of course, accept his explanation that he was not properly informed. The statement I made was to the effect that, taking into account what we did for Great Britain in supplying her with cheap wheat, the socialist government in Great Britain failed to carry out its moral obligations. Perhaps the term "moral obligation" is not a very happy term. May I point out to you, Mr. Speaker, that taking into consideration what the Minister of Trade and Commerce said on the floor of this house a few nights ago, there is nothing inconsistent with what the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) told us this afternoon and what he told this house on March 8, 1951, as reported in Hansard at page 1023:

> The government has taken the position that while there was no further obligation on the United Kingdom in a legal sense, the United Kingdom authorities should realize that the wheat growers of Canada and most of the community of the prairie provinces believed there was a continuing obligation under the "have regard to" clause which had not been discharged.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to point out that Canada is a member of the British commonwealth of nations, the finest and greatest organization the world has ever seen. Everything should be done to see that the relationship between the members of the commonwealth, and especially between Canada and the United Kingdom, is always a happy one. I also agree with what has been stated by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell) the other night, when he said that those people who know something about the history of the British people know that they have a reputation for discharging their obligations and that their word is their bond. But I say in all sincerity that I am sure that if the British people as a whole were aware of all the facts of the situation in connection with this contract, and if they knew that the prairie farmers feel that there is a continuing obligation under the "have regard to" clause, probably we would not have in connection with this matter the difficulty that we have today.

Mr. F. D. Shaw (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, obviously there exists on the part of a good many hon. members of this house a desire to conclude this debate. As far as I am personally concerned, the house could have taken the vote at a quarter to six tonight. However, I cannot permit the record to remain cluttered up as it is. Therefore I must deal with several things that have been said by the previous speaker. Let me assure him that he was entirely wrong when he suggested that I or someone had been delegated to attack, I think he said, him personally. Let me assure my hon. friend that he had no more than opened his mouth before I decided I would answer him without consultation with any hon. member of this group at all. Actually, I do not mind direct accusations, even though false, as much as I dislike insinuations and inferences. As I said a moment ago, the hon. member stated that someone, he was told, would attack him personally. That has never been done yet by anyone in this group. He flatters himself when he says so. We deal with those things which men say as indicating the things for which they stand.

Just before proceeding, I should like to leave one question with him. He asked how the Canadian people were going to bear the burden of the additional costs which might be involved if the Canadian farmers were to be paid those sums to which they were justly entitled. I would ask him to ponder upon this question. If 14 million Canadian people cannot bear the burden, how does he expect 230,000 western Canadian farmers to bear the burden?

Mr. Decore: Why not apply the principles of social credit?

Mr. Fair: Why not apply the principles of communism while you are at it?

Mr. Shaw: I am particularly pleased, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member has now obviously come to the conclusion that the orthodox methods of finance probably cannot meet the problem and is wanting to know how social credit would do it effectively and successfully. We have indicated that to him on many occasions. It is not our fault if he cannot understand it.

Before six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, it was insinuated that the Social Credit members of this house had considered the Canada-United Kingdom wheat agreement to be a bad agreement. I should like to know where there exists any evidence whatsoever to substantiate such a fantastic declaration as that. It was also insinuated before six o'clock that we had, if not by direct statement at least by implication, opposed the marketing of wheat through the Canadian wheat board. There does not exist any evidence anywhere to substantiate such an assertion as that. Of course I realize that if persons are determined to do it, they can probably take statements and misconstrue such statements in order to arrive at a predetermined conclusion which would satisfy the individual but certainly could not in any way reflect the facts of the situation.

One can examine the evidence as far back as 1946, if he likes, to find the truth of our position. I sometimes regret that some hon. members of parliament are so extremely busy that they have not time to scan the records and secure the evidence. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, it makes no difference how deep one may go into any political garbage pail; one could not find evidence to back up those two assertions, that we opposed either the Canada-United Kingdom wheat agreement or the marketing of wheat through the Canadian wheat board.

As I say, everyone who will examine the records back in 1946 and 1947 will find declarations such as the one to which I am going to refer. This has been placed upon the record before, but obviously it must be placed upon the record again. In 1946 the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Fair), referring to the Canada-United Kingdom wheat agreement, stated in part as follows, as reported at page 4800 of Hansard of that year:

> On behalf of this group I wish to say that we are glad to know that we are to have stabilized prices for the next four crop years and also that an agreement has been made with Britain. I am not going to say whether we are well satisfied with the prices received. We feel that the British government are satisfied that they got a very good deal at the expense of Canada.

Then he refers to some press clippings from Britain to bear out that fact, and goes on to say:

> I am glad the people of Britain appreciate that they are getting a good deal from Canada. I might say we have no objection whatever to Canada's supplying the best food in the world to Britain and to other countries, but we object to the farmers bearing the brunt of the expense. On many occasions we have made it clear that the farmers of Canada have not received the price for their products to which they are justly entitled. I still estimate that the same condition continues under the present agreement. Of course we are very well satisfied to have a stabilized price for some time to come, because we all remember what happened after the first great war and we do not want conditions of that kind to arise again; but in view of the losses the farmers accepted from 1939 up to 1942 I feel we are entitled to a much better deal as far as our wheat is concerned. I am not going to deal in particular with the sale to the British government. The cost of that will, of course, be taken care of by the government here, and we in turn will have to bear our share of the loss through taxation.

You will notice that on that occasion the hon. member for Battle River said what we have said repeatedly, namely that if any losses should accrue to the Canadian wheat farmers under the British agreement, then those wheat farmers should not be called upon to meet the burden of those losses by themselves. During those years we took the position that we fully recognized Britain's contribution to the democratic effort. We were anxious that Britain should have cheap wheat. We were anxious that Canadian wheat should be made available to the British people at even less than prevailing world prices. But on that occasion we emphasized that the people of every part of Canada, who all through those years kept talking about our gift to Britain, should unite in compensating the wheat farmers for any loss that might be sustained. During those years the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch) spoke on a number of occasions when these matters were up for discussion. On February 27, 1947, he said:

In the early part of this agreement the farmer is making a considerable sacrifice. He is losing anywhere from 50 cents to 75 cents a bushel. If in the next two or three years there is a wheat shortage, if crops are poor, the price of wheat will be maintained at probably a high level and will remain there. Then the guarantee becomes absolutely useless. If that should be the situation over the next two or three years the farmers of this country, as a result of this agreement, are going to lose several hundred million dollars. I believe that the wheat agreement with Britain was fully justified, but it does entail in its early stages a considerable sacrifice on the part of our farmers. We feel that the sacrifice should be borne by the people of Canada as a whole.

We repeated that position time and again; and I hope that when it is referred to in this house, either during this debate or later on, hon. members will at least make an effort to stay close to the facts as they relate to our position. On March 2, when the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) made his announcement with respect to the $65 million and the final payment of 8·3 cents per bushel, the people of this country, particularly the farmers and farm organizations, were stunned. As a matter of fact a good many members of this house scattered through all four parties here were also stunned. I have no doubt about that whatever. I will recall the applause when the statement was commenced, but I did not hear very much enthusiastic applause at the conclusion of the statement. As a matter of fact I thought the Prime Minister was extremely wise in offering a word of caution when the applause commenced very shortly after he started his statement.

There is a great deal of consternation among people across western Canada. We have had that feeling reflected through individual members of this house, some speaking in this chamber and others in the corridors. I would vouchsafe that if we were not assembled here; if it were not a matter of party; if it were not a matter of a government and an opposition and we were asked to express our views individually, they might be considerably different than if expressed under circumstances as they exist.

An hon. Member: Speak for yourself.

Mr. Shaw: I would say to my hon. friend that as I walk the corridors I hear things, and I am basing what I say at least in part upon the comments I hear in the corridors of this institution.

Mr. Cote (Matapedia-Matane): Do you also read your horoscope in the Ottawa Journal?

Mr. Shaw: I do not; but I am going to read the hon. member's, to see if I can learn something about my hon. friend, who has caused me a great deal of wonder on more than one occasion. We have had public statements from responsible leaders of farm organizations, men who know the facts. We have had statements from the premiers of the three prairie provinces. Certainly they are not all of the same political persuasion; in fact no two of them belong to the same party, and to me that means something. Those men know the facts as they exist now and as they have existed down through the years. We have had editorials in the western newspapers, not all favourable to a further payment, I grant you, but reflecting a weighty body of editorial opinion that the western farmers are entitled to a far better deal than they have been offered up to the present time. I daresay every member of this house who comes from western Canada has received letters, telegrams and even petitions. You know what they say as well as I do. In addition we have had the action of at least one provincial legislative assembly, that of Alberta. Perhaps others have taken action by this time; I do not know. For a moment I should like to refer to what was done in Alberta. Let us not forget that there are 56 members of the Alberta house, with one vacancy, making a total of 57. This matter came up in the provincial assembly, and the following motion was moved by one of the members:

Whereas the Canadian government sold wheat for domestic market at a very low price during a portion of the five-year pool, and

Whereas the British wheat agreement of 1945-49 between the government of Canada and Great Britain supplied wheat to the British people at prices below those prevailing on the general world market, and

Whereas the cost of supplying Canadian wheat to the British people and the domestic market has thus far been borne entirely by the western wheat producing farmer rather than by the people of Canada as a whole,

Therefore be it resolved that this legislative assembly request the government of Canada to issue a further substantial payment to western wheat producers on all wheat delivered in the crop years 1945 to 1949 inclusive in order to bring the total price to be received by the farmers more in line with the existing world wheat prices during the 1945-1949 period.

There are two Liberals in the Alberta house, due to the rather peculiar or different system of voting in Edmonton and Calgary, each of which returned one Liberal member. There are two C.C.F. members, and a couple of independents. During the debate on this resolution the Liberal leader in Alberta and Mr. MacDonald, the other Liberal member, tried to do a most peculiar thing. They tried to support the present position of the federal government and satisfy the farmers of Alberta at one and the same time. The press men report, at least, that they were convinced the two Liberal members were opposed to the resolution. As a matter of fact I saw an interesting report in the Calgary Albertan, a morning paper published in Calgary, referring to what took place the day of the vote. After making reference to oil, the report goes on to say:

Oil or no oil, Alberta legislators still spend a lot of time worrying about what the farmer is worrying about, and a good opportunity to worry out loud was provided in the resolution moved by Peter Chaba of Redwater, which asked for a federal payment on 1945-49 wheat deliveries in addition to the recent one of eight and one-third cents a bushel.

The only effective way to worry about the farmer, politically speaking, is out loud, because there is no point in it unless the farmer knows you are doing it. He can't tell by watching the legislator's facial expression from the gallery, because his worried look may be due only to the fact that his wife is threatening to leave him.

Anyway, the subject of wheat was shovelled back and forth for practically all of the afternoon and in some cases ground into very fine flour.

When all the chaff and dust had blown away, however, they were all in their seats, and what brought them back was a demand from the Social Credit benches for a recorded vote.

The result was surprising. Every M.L.A. was on his feet for the ayes, and every one in his seat for the nays.

The surprise came to the press gallery because they could have sworn they had heard some nay voices in the earlier voice vote, and they could have sworn that the tenor of both Liberal speeches was against the resolution.

Mr. Decore: Which paper is the hon. member quoting from?

Mr. Wylie: Why don't you listen?

Mr. Shaw: I quoted from the Calgary Albertan. The article is under the dateline of March 8, and is "special to the Albertan".

When anyone talks about playing politics with an issue, I would refer them to that report. All members who were present voted for a resolution which asked for a payment substantially larger than 8·3 cents announced by the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) on March 2. I suggest that Alberta Liberals in the House of Commons upon this occasion should take their direction or lead from Mr. Prowse. I am the first to congratulate him when he is right—and of course I do not have to do it often. However I say he was right in the way he voted; and it would certainly be the better part of wisdom for the Liberals from Alberta in this house to follow Mr. Prowse's lead.

Figures placed on record by the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Fair) indicate that between 1946 and 1950 under the Canadian-United Kingdom wheat agreement there were losses to the tune of $431,676,844. Then, in subsidizing the Canadian consumer there was another loss of $136,920,921. In the past we have taken, and we take again today, the firm position that the Canadian people as a whole are morally obligated to make good the losses of more than $400 million sustained by the wheat farmers of western Canada, even after this 8·3 cents has been paid.

There has been divided opinion; I appreciate that. There are some who say that Great Britain should have done more under the "have regard to" clause. There are those who say that she has met all the conditions under the contract and is under no legal or other obligation to make any further payment. Some say the Canadian government should make the additional payment, and some say it should not.

The wheat farmers, who were anxious to see Great Britain get cheap bread, who were actually prepared to share the loss with the Canadian people—those farmers who were definitely led to believe that they were to be compensated for losses feel that unless those losses have been met there has been a double cross. Whether those farmers were led to believe, rightly or wrongly, that they should expect a further payment is beside the point. They were definitely given to understand that was the situation that would prevail. There is no question in the minds of the farmers in my section of Canada as to whether the government should or should not make a further substantial payment. The twenty-five cents called for in the subamendment, even when added to the eight point three cents, is definitely lower than the total loss sustained. So in supporting the amendment which asks for twenty-five cents I feel I am asking for less than that to which the farmers are entitled. However, I am prepared to support the twenty-five cent provision, because I believe it would go a long way toward providing compensation for the loss they suffered.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Before putting the question may I again remind the house that when the amendment to the amendment was proposed I questioned its regularity. At the same time I probably should have brought to the attention of the house the fact that in my opinion the amendment itself is also irregular on several grounds, two of which I will mention. The first is that the main amendment purports to attach conditions to the second reading of the bill. This is irregular. The main amendment also is irrelevant to the principle of the amending bill.

However, when the discussion started on the second reading of the bill I called the attention of the house to the fact that I doubted whether discussion of the United Kingdom agreement specifically was in order, but it was the unanimous opinion of the house that I should allow the debate to proceed. For that reason I have allowed both the amendment and the subamendment to stand.

The house divided on the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Wright) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Ross (Souris): Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the right hon. member for Melville (Mr. Gardiner). Had I voted I certainly would have voted for the amendment to the amendment.

An hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Ross (Souris): Because the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) refused to appoint a royal commission to report on the proper amount of loss to the farmers.

Mr. J. H. Blackmore (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, before going on with what I propose to discuss tonight, may I assert once more, so that the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Decore) will have one more chance to find out what Social Crediters have stood for, that I and all Social Crediters supported the agreement in 1946, and we have done so ever since. We also have supported the wheat board. We believe that the agreement was a good one. We have always believed that it was a good one. We now believe that the agreement was a good one, and that the principle underlying it was also good.

What I intend to say from here on consists of my own views in large measure and not necessarily the views of every member, or even the majority of members, of the Social Credit party.

In order to start us out on the line of thought to which I wish to direct attention, may I read once more the reckless statement of the hon. member for Vegreville as it was recorded by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Thatcher) at page 1097 of Hansard. It is as follows:

> John Decore (Liberal-Vegreville) charged that the British government "has failed to carry out its moral obligations" to western Canada under the "have regard to" clause of the contract . . .
> Had the British government assumed its obligation the farmer would have received substantially more and to which he is entitled.

May I give some attention for a few minutes to the question of the obligation of Great Britain under the contract. According to the letter of the agreement Great Britain could not be held responsible for any additional payment under the "have regard to" clause. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe), as well as a good many other members, dealt with that, so I think there is no need for further discussion on it.

Now we come to the question of moral responsibility. Great Britain, according to the spirit and intent of the agreement, could not fairly and justly be held morally obligated to make any additional payment beyond the $1.55 per bushel for the first two years and $2 for the second two years of the agreement.

The Canadian government positively declared itself in favour of selling wheat to former allies at less than prevailing world prices. This is an important thing for all members to get fixed in their minds. Canada announced it as a settled policy that she was ready to sell wheat at a lower rate, not more than $1.55 per bushel, to Britain and her allies and overseas countries.

Let us see what evidence we have in connection with it. On September 19, 1945, the Hon. J. A. MacKinnon, then minister of trade and commerce, said at page 290 of Hansard:

> There is a moral obligation not to take advantage of our recent allies in their time of compelling need.

On the same page the same minister said:

> Higher wheat prices would encourage the importing countries in a hurried return to wheat production and pre-war wheat policies very directly to the detriment of the wheat exporting countries, particularly Canada.

Mr. Speaker, may I speak to all the members of the Liberal party who are so ready to say that Britain has not discharged her moral responsibilities? There are two definite principles laid down in 1945, apparently before there was ever any thought of a United Kingdom-Canada wheat agreement. Surely no one will hold Britain accountable for those two principles!

As further evidence that the Canadian government had resolved in this direction, let me point out that the Canadian government had officially enunciated the principles laid down by the minister of trade and commerce in those two quotations I have given, by order in council P. C. 6122 passed on September 19, 1945, dealing with the proposed wheat policy for the future. I shall read the order in council. It is as follows:

> Order in council directing the Canadian wheat board not to sell wheat for export to overseas destinations at a price in excess of $1.55 per bushel.
> P.C. 6122
> At the Government House at Ottawa
> Wednesday, the 19th day of September, 1945
> Present:
>
> His Excellency
> The Governor General in Council:
> Whereas the Minister of Trade and Commerce reports that because of the effects of a crop failure in Australia and French North Africa, of transportation difficulties in various supplying countries, and of other adverse developments upon the volume of exportable wheat and because of the urgent requirements of recently liberated areas of Europe and Asia, world demand for wheat is presently exceeding available supplies;
> That under these conditions Canada, as the principal wheat exporting country, is in a position to demand very much higher prices for wheat from importing countries which must obtain food from abroad regardless of price in order to avoid want and starvation and to many of which Canada has been or will be extending loans for rehabilitation and reconstruction purposes;

That it would be contrary to the interests of Canada and of Canadian wheat growers to take advantage of the necessity of former allies by charging higher prices for wheat, thereby encouraging an uneconomic expansion of wheat acreage in both importing and exporting countries, including Canada;

That it is in the interests of Canada and Canadian wheat growers to continue to offer wheat for sale at prices not in excess of those prevailing at the end of hostilities towards the end of maintaining a balanced agricultural program at home, securing and holding markets for Canadian wheat throughout the world and assisting in the early stabilization of economic and political life in war-torn countries;

That since May 15, 1945, the Canadian wheat board has been selling wheat to countries not in receipt of mutual aid on the basis of $1.55 per bushel for No. 1 Manitoba Northern, in store Fort William/Port Arthur or Vancouver;

That as a further means of stabilizing wheat prices during the post-war period it is the intention that steps shall be taken to ensure that producers will not at any time up to July 31, 1950, receive less than $1 per bushel for No. 1 Manitoba Northern wheat, basis in store Fort William/Port Arthur or Vancouver, on the authorized deliveries for each crop year;

And whereas by reason of the state of war now existing, it is deemed necessary for the security, defence, peace, order and welfare of Canada that the following regulation be made:

Therefore, His Excellency the Governor General in Council, on the recommendation of the Minister of Trade and Commerce and under and by virtue of the War Measures Act, is pleased to make and doth hereby make the following regulation,—

Regulation

The Canadian wheat board shall not sell wheat for export to overseas destinations at a price in excess of $1.55 per bushel for No. 1 Manitoba Northern, basis in store, Fort William/Port Arthur or Vancouver, and in the case of each other grade of wheat at prices in excess of such prices as in the opinion of the said board brings each of such grades into proper price relationship with No. 1 Manitoba Northern.

A. D. P. Heeney,
Clerk of the Privy Council

I suppose, Mr. Speaker, everyone who is following this controversy at all must realize that the British were in no conceivable way responsible for that decision of the Canadian government to sell wheat at a price not in excess of $1.55 per bushel. When w begin to consider the moral obligation of Great Britain, this is an extremely important consideration.

We must have sold wheat to several non-British countries at $1.55 per bushel. Evidence of this is to be found in the 1947 Hansard at page 787. The then minister of trade and commerce had this to say:

Another question asked by the hon. member for Maple Creek (Mr. McCuaig) was, did the government sell Canadian wheat to forty-two countries outside the United Kingdom at $1.55 a bushel, or around 45 cents a bushel under world prices? The answer is that on September 19, 1945, the government instructed the Canadian wheat board to sell wheat for export at prices not exceeding $1.55 a bushel basis in store Fort William/Port Arthur or Vancouver. This instruction was of a temporary nature and was lifted on July 31, 1946. It covered a critical overseas position in the period following liberation.

Further down he has this to say:

This temporary policy was accompanied by a commitment on the part of the government "to ensure that producers will not, at any time up to July 31, 1950, receive less than $1 per bushel" for No. 1 Northern wheat, basis in store Fort William/Port Arthur or Vancouver. As the house now well knows, we have been able to do very much better than the basis outlined on September 19, 1945.

The idea seems to be held by a good many people that Britain somehow or other must have come on bended knees and pleaded with Canada to give her special consideration under which she would be able to obtain wheat for $1.55 per bushel. These quotations which I have given clearly prove that any such assumption concerning Britain is fallacious. That matter too has an important bearing on the question of the moral responsibility of Britain. Certainly, Britain had nothing to do with forming the wheat policy which was laid down, and which was being implemented by Canada. This order in council continues in force, as the quotation indicates, until July 31, 1946.

The wheat agreement now under discussion was signed on July 24, 1946, while that order in council was yet in force. Consequently, it can be said that the wheat agreement now under discussion was entered into by virtue of the order in council of September 19, 1945. The agreement was signed by James A. MacKinnon for Canada and P. A. Clutterbuck for Britain; and the treaty was in force immediately.

Before we go on with the next aspect of this question may I say this: Can anyone up to this stage find the slightest hint of any moral responsibility on Britain? Emphatically no!

Of this treaty the now much-disputed "have regard to" clause was article 2 (b) which, for the sake of the record, I propose to read once more. Article 2 (b) of the agreement between Canada and the United Kingdom for the purchase of Canadian wheat reads as follows:

(b) The actual prices to be paid for wheat to be bought and sold within the crop year 1948-49 shall be negotiated and settled between the United Kingdom government and the Canadian government not later than the 31st December, 1947, and prices for wheat to be bought and sold within the crop year 1949-50 shall be negotiated and settled not later than the 31st December, 1948. In determining the prices for these two crop years, 1948-49 and 1949-50, the United Kingdom government will have regard to any difference between the prices paid under this agreement in the 1946-47 and 1947-48 crop years and the world prices for wheat in the 1946-47 and 1947-48 crop years.

Those who argue that Britain has some moral responsibility usually point to this clause to begin their discussion. Any blame on Britain, if there be any blame, must have grown out of the last sentence of article 2 (b). Let us look at it again. I read the last sentence once more:

In determining the prices for these two crop years, 1948-49 and 1949-50, the United Kingdom government will have regard to any difference between the prices paid under this agreement in the 1946-47 and 1947-48 crop years and the world prices for wheat in the 1946-47 and 1947-48 crop years.

"These two years" were 1948-49 and 1949-50. So it states. When written into the agreement, what was the significance of this so-called "have regard to" clause? I can remember quite well, Mr. Speaker, going throughout my constituency during the time when farmers were selling their wheat at $1.55 and having farmers quite anxiously ask me if I thought there was any chance that the price of wheat would go up during the next two years or if I did not fear that possibly the price of wheat would go down. I pointed to the "have regard to" clause and I said that the British people had always kept their word; that I believed that the "have regard to" clause was written into the agreement with the express purpose of providing protection against a fall in price of their product; that I believed that if there was any justification whatsoever, the British would negotiate the price upward from $1.55 so that we might expect such a price, we will say, as $1.75 or $1.80 next year. To me at the time this clause was a sort of guarantee that the price for wheat in 1948-49 and in 1949-50 would be more than $1.55 per bushel if the prices paid for Canadian wheat by nations other than Britain were found to be sufficiently higher than $1.55 per bushel to justify an increase over $1.55 per bushel for Canadian wheat. So it worked out. The price of Canadian wheat to countries other than Britain in 1946-47 and 1947-48—in other words, the price of what was then called class II wheat—proved to be considerably higher than the $1.55 per bushel that Britain had agreed to pay and did pay.

Very well then. Recognizing this fact, Britain at the appropriate time "had regard to" that fact and agreed to pay $2 a bushel for her wheat in 1948-49. True to her agreement she did pay $2 per bushel in 1948-49. If that was not having respect for the "have regard to" clause, then I will challenge anybody in the house or in the country to prove that it was not.

Again at the appropriate time for making agreement to pay for 1949-50 wheat, once more Britain "had regard to" prices of class II wheat in 1946-49. She also had regard to the probable price of class II wheat in the 1949-50 year. Having such regard, she agreed to pay $2 a bushel for the year 1949-50. Then, true to her agreement once more, she paid that price and took the full amount of wheat she had agreed to pay for and receive, notwithstanding the fact that the international wheat agreement arrived at meanwhile had fixed the price of class II wheat at $1.80. Once more you have an example of the application of the "have regard to" clause.

I have not heard anyone refer to that clause to give Britain any credit at all—a most astonishing thing. How can anyone show that Britain's behaviour in respect of her obligations up to that time had been less than fully moral? She did what she said she would do. She said in the agreement that she would have regard to the prices which had prevailed during the 1946-47 period, during the first two years, when she came to negotiate the prices for the next two years. She negotiated the prices for the next two years forty-five cents above what they were the first two years, thereby showing that she had regard. I believe that the people who are so anxious to attach moral turpitude—I do not know whether you would call it that; I suppose that is a little bit too strong an expression—or moral culpability to Britain by reason of the "have regard to" clause had better reconsider the whole matter in the light of what I have just said.

We now come to consider two pronouncements of responsible British statesmen. As I go around in the corridors and among the members I hear much reference to these two statements. The first of these was a statement by Right Hon. John Strachey. This gentleman, the British food minister, speaking before the Canadian Club at Winnipeg on February 26, 1947, quoted the latter part of clause 2 (b), the so-called "have regard to" clause, and then said:

Now these words mean neither more nor less than they say. They mean that the fact that we have bought our wheat from you this year below world prices—and that we may do so again next year—will be one of the factors in negotiating the actual prices to be paid in the third and fourth years. I and my government, and I am quite sure that this applies also to the Canadian government, would resist any attempt to add to or to subtract from this clear and definite statement as written into paragraph two subsection (b) of the wheat agreement.

Let us examine these words to see whether we can get from them the moral turpitude which some people feel inclined to impute to Britain. The words that have given rise to contention are those in the first two sentences; and it is not easy to see how words could be simpler or clearer in their meaning. They set forth exactly what the British had agreed to do in clause 2 (b) of the agreement. They set forth precisely the course of procedure the British representatives adopted, together with the Canadian representatives, in determining that the price of $2 per bushel should be paid in each of the last two years, an increase of 45 cents a bushel over the first two years. How can anyone attach any blame to Britain on account of that speech or that remark? And I ask, how could any other interpretation have been justifiably placed upon those words than the interpretation I have given?

The second statement is that of Sir Stafford Cripps, chancellor of the British exchequer. On February 23, 1947, in an interview given to the Canadian Press in London, that statesman said:

As regards wheat we shall continue to depend on Canada for the greater part of our supplies. The four-year contract negotiated in 1946 will expire in 1950 and we have recently agreed upon a price of $2 a bushel for the 1949-50 season. We think there is every possibility of the world price falling below the $2 level before the end of the contract either because of the general improvement in the supply position or as a condition of any international wheat agreement which may be concluded in the near future. If this should be the case, the Canadian farmer will enjoy a favoured position by virtue of the fixed price on which we have agreed. This might prove to be a fair compensation for the earlier years when he was selling us wheat at below the world price; it depends, of course, upon how far prices actually fall. But in any case we have agreed to discuss this matter further with the Canadian government some time toward the end of 1950.

What do we gather from this pronouncement? This remark also has given rise to much contention. Let us consider the three most contentious sentences in the statement. The first, I submit, is this:

If this should be the case, the Canadian farmer will enjoy a favoured position by virtue of the fixed price on which we have agreed.

The British indicate no desire, because of the fixed world price, to ask any reduction from the $2 they agreed to pay for the third and fourth years of the contract. The British agreed to pay $2, and they paid it. There was no breach of honour there. I defy anyone, I do not care who he is, to show any breach of moral obligation in respect of that sentence.

Now let us take the second sentence which has given rise to discussion:

This might prove to be a fair compensation for the earlier years when he was selling us wheat at below the world price; it depends, of course, upon how far prices actually fall.

"Fair compensation" is the expression upon which one must concentrate attention. When Canada laid down her policy under P.C. 6122 in September, 1945, she had no thought of "compensation" from Britain. This is an exceedingly important matter. When Canada negotiated the trade agreement she had no thought whatever of any compensation from Britain. Neither did the hon. members of this house; neither did the people throughout the country at that time. So when Sir Stafford Cripps spoke of a fair compensation I say he was exceedingly generous. The importance which has been attached to that expression by critics obviously is altogether unwarranted.

Look again at the order in council I have already read. What is more, look once again at the words of Mr. MacKinnon, which I have quoted, as evidence of the truth of my statement when I declared that Canada had no thought whatsoever of any compensation. Canada sold grain to probably forty or forty-five different nations other than Britain at $1.55 a bushel. We have not heard anyone suggest that any one of those be asked to make some compensation for the cheap grain they enjoyed. Why should we fix on Britain?

The farmer was entitled to substantial compensation—at least 25 cents per bushel. But the British had no responsibility in the matter, legally or morally.

Then the third sentence in the statement which has caused discussion is:

But in any case we have agreed to discuss this matter further with the Canadian government some time toward the middle of 1950.

The British did discuss this matter further, which was all they promised to do. In fact the British evidently asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) to discuss the matter. As evidence of that I quote an interjection by the minister during the remarks of the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch) at page 1115 of Hansard for March 9:

After the arrangements were made for the sale of the 1950 wheat crop, I was asked to discuss the settlement of the four-year wheat agreement. I said I had no authority to discuss it, and certainly no authority to settle it. If they wanted to tell me their views I would report them to my government. They told me their views, and I gave the views of the Canadian government as I understood them. I brought back a message to the Canadian government.

Not only did the British discuss the matter; they sought an opportunity to discuss it, and thereby certainly discharged every vestige of responsibility, legally, morally or otherwise, which might have been suggested by the statement of Sir Stafford Cripps. So in what conceivable respect can it be shown that Britain in any degree failed to carry out her moral obligation arising from the words of Sir Stafford Cripps?

There will be an opportunity for those hon. members who have been inclined to talk adversely about Britain's moral obligation, to defend their position when we get into committee. I hereby challenge any hon. member of this house to disprove anything I have said here tonight. The field is wide open to these bright, smart, new young members who have been so reckless in rushing into print concerning the moral obligation of Britain. They will be free to establish their case; and if they do not do so they will stand condemned before the house and the people. When a man is a member of this House of Commons and has the initials M.P. attached to his name, the people of the country have a right to expect him to know something of what he is talking about. A good many of these men have spoken a great deal with very little knowledge and understanding.

As I have previously argued, the wheat producers ought to receive compensation to the extent of at least 25 cents per bushel. The people of Canada through the dominion government are in duty bound to pay that 25 cents. Britain, let me repeat, has not the least scintilla of a moral obligation in any shape or form in connection with reimbursing Canadian farmers for the losses they have sustained by reason of the British-Canadian wheat agreement.

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, the matter under discussion at the present time embraces certain considerations which go far beyond the question of wheat policy alone, and even far beyond the more complicated question of what if anything should be paid the farmers of the prairies in return for any losses they may have suffered in the marketing of their wheat during the past five years. It is on that basis that I take part in this debate. Some of the issues were discussed this afternoon. The one to which I wish to refer first is the matter of the difference in the statements that have been made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) and the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe). Those differences were referred to in the statement this afternoon by the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent). But the Prime Minister did not, and probably very wisely did not, try to explain the unexplainable or to reconcile the irreconcilable. He was invited by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) to try to reconcile the two conflicting positions of his senior cabinet ministers or, if that were impossible, to state what was in fact the correct interpretation of their statements. But the Prime Minister did not reconcile the conflicting statements.

The fact remains that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) has stated that payments to the prairie farmers are due because the British have failed to live up to their obligations under the contract, while the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) has stated that the British government has fully discharged its obligations under that contract. The Prime Minister was not able and did not try to deal with those two irreconcilable statements. What the Prime Minister did say was that the government decided to give $65 million to the farmers of the prairies because of the expectations of certain producer groups.

Here again the Prime Minister is very different in his approach to the matter from the approach of the Minister of Agriculture. The statements of the Minister of Agriculture are different from the statements of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. So we now have three different statements of position, one by the Prime Minister, who bases his justification of the contribution upon expectations, one by the Minister of Agriculture, who bases his justification upon the alleged failure of the British to discharge their obligations, and the third from the Minister of Trade and Commerce who says simply that the government decided to pay $65 million, and makes no attempt to explain it.

Mr. Gibson: Let us bury the dead horse.

Mr. Fulton: The horse is very much alive, and has been revived by the statement of the Prime Minister and by the papers which have been tabled in the house tonight.

Hon. members must not lose sight of the fact that an effort has been made here to represent to the house, and through it to the Canadian people—and efforts are now being made outside the house to repeat such representations—that the reason why this payment is being made is that the British defaulted under their agreement.

When the government was confronted during the course of the debate with the statement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce on June 5, 1950, efforts were first made to convince the house that the statement so recorded in Hansard was incomplete, in that a period or comma had been left out. That effort having failed, an effort was then made to convince the house that the statement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce meant in fact nothing more than that the Canadian government accepted as the position of the British government the fact that it had fully discharged its obligation.

Of course the statement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce on June 5, which I am glad to see the minister has said he wishes to alter in no way, and which he confirms, says no such thing. That statement goes far beyond the mere assertion that the Canadian government accept as the position of the British government that it has discharged its obligation. That statement says clearly and simply that the Canadian government agreed that under all the circumstances the British government had discharged its obligation; and all the efforts of the Minister of Agriculture subsequently to show that the statement did not mean that have served merely further to confuse the issue but, more important, have served further to emphasize the difference between the statement of the Minister of Agriculture and that of the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

In the papers tabled tonight, however, we have the facts, which finally settle what the position is. Those papers clearly show that on May 30 the Canadian government officially agreed with the British government that all obligations under the "have regard to" clause might be considered to have been taken care of. That position was set forth by the British government at the meeting held in London in May, which was attended by the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

The papers tabled in the house tonight make it clear that the record of that meeting was embodied in a memorandum brought back by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. That memorandum was presented to the cabinet. On May 30, the Minister of Trade and Commerce wired the British government to the effect that his colleagues agreed with the conclusions. There has not yet been time to obtain a full copy of these papers; but I have been able to look at them and to make extracts from them. I have taken down the actual words of the relevant parts of the papers.

The first paper is a message from the Minister of Trade and Commerce dated May 30, 1950, and reading in part as follows:

I have reported these discussions—

That is, the discussions recorded in the memorandum the minister had brought back.

I have reported these discussions to my colleagues—

This is a quotation from the message of the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

—and wish to let you know that they are in accord with the conclusions recorded in paragraph 2 (a) (b) and (c) of the agreed record of the discussions.

Paragraph 2(a) and (b) refer to the discussions and embody conclusions reached in the discussions respecting the 1950-51 contract. They have no reference to any amount which might be owing under the four-year contract —no reference to that contract at all.

Paragraph 2(c) reads as follows—and these are the actual words of the memorandum brought back from the United Kingdom by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the memorandum which records the conclusions of the meeting held there:

The United Kingdom government was anxious not to be represented as having given assurances regarding wheat purchases in 1950-51 in return for the waiver of a claim by Canada under the "have regard to" clause. The United Kingdom expected to make large purchases of wheat from Canada in any event. Nevertheless in the context of these discussions United Kingdom representatives felt that it would be reasonable that all obligations under the "have regard to" clause might be considered to have been taken care of. Mr. Howe said that this was a matter which could only be settled by the Canadian cabinet on his return.

It is in the light of that statement—paragraph 2(c) of the memorandum—that the United Kingdom felt it would be reasonable that all obligations under the "have regard to" clause might be considered to have been taken care of, that one should read the message from the Minister of Trade and Commerce sent to the United Kingdom following his discussion with his colleagues, in which he stated that he had reported these discussions to his colleagues and wished "to let you know that they"—his colleagues—"are in accord with the conclusions recorded in paragraphs 2(a) (b) and (c)". The papers show conclusively that the matter was discussed in cabinet here prior to May 30 and following the minister's return from London, and that in those discussions in cabinet, the Canadian government agreed that all the obligations under the "have regard to" clause should be considered as having been discharged.

In the light of that fact it is strange indeed that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) should still persist in his efforts to represent that the British government has not discharged its obligation under the contract. It is stranger still that the Minister of Agriculture should persist in his efforts to represent that the government did not agree on May 30 last year that the British government had discharged its obligation under the contract.

After he had been confronted with the statement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce of June 5 and in a further effort to explain this statement—and the Minister of Agriculture must be presumed to have had knowledge of the message sent by the Minister of Trade and Commerce—the Minister of Agriculture tried to tell this house that the message sent by the Minister of Trade and Commerce did not mean that the Canadian government agreed with the United Kingdom government that the obligations had been discharged. We find this matter being discussed in this debate at page 1120 of Hansard of March 9, 1951, at which time the Minister of Agriculture was referring to a statement by Mr. Gaitskell in the United Kingdom to the same effect, namely, that the British and Canadian governments had agreed that the obligations had been discharged. At that time the Minister of Agriculture said that Mr. Gaitskell had not said that at all and I go on to quote the minister's remarks from page 1120 of Hansard:

He simply said that a decision was reached, and nothing more than that.

The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) then interjected:

Mr. Coldwell: The Minister of Trade and Commerce said today that he brought back a memorandum in May 1950 which related to this matter. Did the government approve of that memorandum?

Mr. Gardiner: The government approved of just exactly what I am saying and what I said last night. They approved of it unanimously. The memorandum did not say what my hon. friends are saying.

I pause here to observe that the memorandum did say exactly what we are saying:

Mr. Coldwell: Did the memorandum consist of a minute of the meeting between the minister and the British government?

Mr. Gardiner: Yes, but the minute did not say what my hon. friends are trying to read into it.

Mr. Coldwell: Will the government produce the relevant part of the minute?

Mr. Gardiner: That is another thing. You would have to have the consent of two governments for that and I am not prepared to say whether they will give it. I am saying to my hon. friend that there is no ground in it for the interpretations that are being put on anything that took place, either in the discussions over there or in the government here. The fact is that the British government accepted the position that this government did not agree. That has been placed before them very clearly on two or three occasions since.

How could the British government accept the position that the Canadian government did not agree when the Minister of Trade and Commerce wired them on May 30 that the Canadian government did agree? He wired them immediately after consultations in the cabinet. The Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) said this afternoon that cabinet solidarity does prevail, contrary to all indications here in the house. We accept the Prime Minister's statement and it therefore follows that the Minister of Agriculture knew that the Minister of Trade and Commerce had sent that message.

That message advised the British government that after consultation in cabinet the Canadian government agreed that the obligations under the contract had been discharged. Yet after this matter had been threshed over fully in this debate the Minister of Agriculture had the effrontery to say on March 9 that the fact was that the British government "accepted the position that this government did not agree". Is it any wonder that the Prime Minister finds it impossible to reconcile the statements of the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Trade and Commerce, when the Minister of Agriculture makes a statement so deliberately contrary to the facts?

While the Prime Minister does not say that it was a case of the British defaulting—he cannot say that—he contented himself with saying that we are making this payment because of expectations that certain producer groups may have. However, the Prime Minister did not say how those expectations were calculated. He only made it clear that the $65 million is being paid because it happens to be a credit not drawn on by the British government.

The Prime Minister has also made it clear in this house that the Canadian government had hinted to the British government that our government would like the British to resort to the subterfuge of drawing on that credit and then return it to us as a payment under a contract which the Canadian government had agreed had been fully discharged. Naturally the British government did not accept the invitation to take part in that subterfuge. The fact which emerges clearly from all this discussion, and from the Prime Minister's statement, is that the $65 million is being paid simply because that happened to be the balance of the loan. That $65 million has no relation to the needs of the prairie farmers, to the balance which is owing under the five year pool or any other subject which has been under discussion here.

So we have as the only basis for the payment the "expectations" referred to by the Prime Minister. What a basis to lay before the House of Commons and ask us to accept as justification for voting that particular sum for payment into the five year pool!

But it is not surprising that the Prime Minister can think of no other explanation. For the Minister of Trade and Commerce in the course of approximately a half-hour speech on March 12 stated no fewer than seven times that this United Kingdom-Canadian wheat agreement had been to the advantage of Canada, to the advantage of the Canadian wheat producer. I have read his speech carefully. I will not refer to all the occasions on which the Minister of Trade and Commerce said that, but if you go through his speech you will find that no fewer than seven times he made remarks like the following which is to be found on page 1171 of Hansard of March 12:

Again, I say the British wheat agreement needs no apology. It was the right thing to do at the right time. It was by no means a one-sided contract. It was beneficial to the Canadian wheat grower as well as to the British consumer.

Or the following, as reported on page 1169:

The wheat economy prospered during that period as it deserves to prosper —

And at page 1173:

I believe it has been greatly to the advantage of the Canadian producers that that agreement was made.

Seven times the Minister of Trade and Commerce told this house and the country that the agreement was the best thing that could have happened. During the course of that speech no fewer than six times he used words to the effect that the British have fully discharged their obligations. The Minister of Trade and Commerce did not confine his statement to saying that the British had fully discharged their legal obligations; he made it quite clear that he meant they had fully paid their legal and their moral obligations, when he used words such as these to be found on page 1173:

I am happy the way it has worked out—

That is, the British agreement.

—and I deplore the suggestion that the British government has not played fair with the Canadian people.

Seven times he said that the contract was a good contract and worked to the advantage of the Canadian producers, and six times he said that the British have paid fully and fairly under the contract, not only to the Canadian government but fairly to the Canadian people. It is not very surprising, then, that the Prime Minister could find no better basis on which to justify this payment of $65 million than the basis of "expectation". If what the Minister of Trade and Commerce says is right, that the contract worked to the benefit of the Canadian producer, benefited him more than anything else that could have happened, and if what the minister says is right—which in this case it is—that the British have fully discharged all their legal and moral obligations under the contract, why then is this question of a further payment of $65 million before the house?

Why are they asking that it be paid? Is it to save the reputation of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) in Saskatchewan? Is it to retrieve the reputation of a minister whose handling of wheat has been discredited, who has made a gamble and lost, and who has been repudiated by his own colleagues?

Mr. Howe: Mr. Speaker, I suggest to my hon. friend that it would be more manly to wait until the Minister of Agriculture is in his seat before the hon. member makes charges of that kind.

Mr. Fulton: If the Minister of Agriculture were in town and intending to come into the house I should to glad to wait. While I know ministers sometimes have to go away on government business—I know there are unavoidable absences, yet on this occasion the minister is absent on his own business. My hon. friends opposite, the minister's colleagues, are calling "question, question". I rather think that if I and the rest of us were to discontinue taking part in the debate now the government would insist upon an immediate vote. I accept no responsibility for the absence of the Minister of Agriculture, who started this discussion and then left. If he were here I would be saying exactly the same things and asking the same questions as I am asking now.

Mr. Howe: Asking them much more boldly in his absence though.

Mr. Fulton: The Minister of Trade and Commerce really should not judge others by himself in this regard.

The Minister of Agriculture—

Mr. Ross (Souris): He is out talking wheat in Saskatchewan. He should be here.

Mr. Fulton: The Minister of Agriculture knew this debate was going to take place. The Minister of Agriculture did not ask the house to adjourn the debate while he went out to Saskatchewan to talk to the people of Saskatchewan about wheat. I suggest the Minister of Agriculture should be here listening—

Mr. Abbott: I do not think he would be worried about what you say.

Mr. Fulton: —and taking part in the debate. As was pointed out this afternoon, the Minister of Agriculture and everyone in the House of Commons knows pretty well that an election is expected in Saskatchewan at any moment now. The only conclusion I can come to in my own mind—and I will not put this in the form of a question; I will state it as a conclusion that I come to—is that the sum which is to be paid has a very close relation to the expectation of an election in Saskatchewan.

So we come back to the matter of expectations as the basis for payment. Expectations of what? Expectation of an election. Expectation is what the Prime Minister said we were basing the payment on. I point out to you, Mr. Speaker, that there was a very simple way to avoid having to pay anything. That was to do what we have suggested should be done every year since 1946, to provide the grain producers of western Canada with an alternative market, and allow them to market their produce through their own marketing organization if they wish, instead of taking it from them compulsorily through the wheat board.

Mr. Ferrie: Why don't you talk about something you know something about?

Mr. Fulton: In view of some of the remarks that were made this afternoon by members of the Liberal party I wish to re-emphasize, although it has been made quite clear already, that we in this party did criticize the wheat agreement at the time that it was first before the house. Reference has been made to the statements of the then leader of this party, Mr. John Bracken. Mr. Speaker, I do not often direct your attention to the fact that there are interruptions. I might point out that I do not mind dealing with interruptions or questions that are directed to me but I am unable to deal with conversations and side debates going on between members which are not directed to me in such a manner that I can actually understand what is being said.

Mr. Abbott: Louder and funnier.

Mr. Fulton: I was referring to the statements of Mr. Bracken which can be found at page 4822 of Hansard for August 15, 1946, where he criticized the wheat agreement in these terms:

> It is a bad agreement because it proposes to sell 160 million bushels of wheat to Britain at 50 cents a bushel below the world price. It is either a gift or it is an improvident trade arrangement.

As a second reason he gave the following:

> It is a bad bargain also because it will create friction between Britain and Canada.

These two criticisms of the wheat agreement made in 1946 by the then leader of this party have been proven true in every particular. Therefore we are entitled to ask, on what basis are you resting your appeal for $65 million? The government's present answer is: On expectations. What a basis! I ask you, Mr. Speaker, how do you value expectations? I ask the Prime Minister and the Minister of Trade and Commerce, how do you value expectations? It is perfectly obvious that the government values them according to whether or not there is to be an election.

I ask the Minister of Finance: What happens to the economy drive about which he has said so much, when payments are now to be based on expectations? The Minister of Finance will never be able to make the suggestion again that any increase in expenditure, or any failure to reduce expenditure, is the responsibility of the members of the opposition, when he is going to table estimates on Monday asking for the expenditure of $65 million on the basis of "expectations".

Why are the expectations of one group worth $65 million when there is an election anticipated out there, while the expectations of another group are apparently worth nothing? The apple producers for instance were certainly entitled to expect something in view of the disasters which they have suffered, first, the loss of their markets, second, the whittling away of the British preference, third, the inability of the British to spend dollars for apples, and then the disastrous winter of 1949-50 in British Columbia when orchards were wiped out as much as 100 per cent. Payments had been made to other areas which had experienced disasters not exactly the same but similar—Rimouski and Cabano for example, when they were devastated by fire. I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that when the apple growers came down here to ask for assistance they were entitled to have expectations but apparently their expectations are worth nothing in the eyes of this government. The Prime Minister told us that in the house just the other day. He said they could be taken care of by the provincial government. Yet the payment of this money to the prairies is now being justified on the basis of expectations. I suggest that the remarks made by my leader this afternoon that the government must lay before the house some basis upon which we are asked to arrive at this payment, whether it be 50 cents, 25 cents, 12 cents, ten cents or be what it may, are most pertinent. Further, before we are asked to vote on any payment, the conflicting statements made in this house were to be reconciled. Mr. Speaker, do not let the Prime Minister try to tell us that those were merely statements of opinion having nothing to do with the conclusions in the cabinet. The Prime Minister must tell this house how it is that two ministers make completely conflicting statements as to the position of the British with respect to this contract, one saying that the payment under the contract is a result of the default of the British, the other saying that the British have paid in full. I say, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister owes it to this house, and to the country, either to reconcile those statements or to take the other course which was suggested this afternoon by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew), and that is not continue to keep in his cabinet two ministers who make such conflicting statements on matters of policy. He should adopt that course in this house before he asks us to vote on the $65 million to be contained in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. A. J. Bater (The Battlefords): I should like to say a few words, Mr. Speaker, in connection with this amendment. I am going to read it first. It is:

That this bill be not now read a second time, but that further consideration thereof be deferred until this house has had an opportunity to record its opinion on the government's announced decision with respect to the final settlement of the five-year wheat pool, and on the government's mishandling of the sale of wheat and other grains covered by the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

The word "mishandling", Mr. Speaker, is the chief reason why I rise to say a few words this evening. I should first like to advise the previous speaker that all producer organizations in western Canada requested the present wheat board set-up for the marketing of our grain.

There have been a lot of words spoken and written about a so-called loss on the five-year pool and the four-year contract with Britain. These writers and orators close their mind to the past, forget world conditions and only quote the present swing of world inflation. Have we not memories or do we close our minds to the past in order to forget what happened in the open market? Britain, the largest buyer of our wheat, now buys in bulk. Are we in a position to sell her in small lots or are we to allow a combination of traders to get together to pool their purchases to make this bulk delivery? The producers can remember when the wheat board was thrown over in 1920 following world war I, and these few speculative traders had a chance to show their stuff. Wheat hit a high of $2.85 a bushel early in September, 1920, when the wheat began to pour on the market, and by December, 1923, it was carried to the low average of 93½ cents. We all know the picture of conditions that followed.

Compare that situation with what occurred during the five years after world war II. Stabilization was secured. Could this speculative market operate today? Following the outbreak of war, and before it ended, the wheat board had to carry as high as 600 million bushels. Could speculators operate when importing countries could only purchase by loans or gifts? The government had to make these loans and gifts. Under the board the price was stabilized, and for the first time in our history the farmer knew the minimum price when he seeded. Being a free man in a free democracy, he could manage his business with a degree of confidence.

Before the frost hit the wheat board was faced with a most difficult marketing problem. It would have had to find consumers for a 500 million bushel wheat crop. Those consumers would have to have sufficient dollars with which to buy the wheat, and be prepared to pay enough for it to justify the original $1.40 initial payment. The frost eased that selling problem but handed the board a far more difficult one, that of finding buyers for over 100 million bushels of wheat good only for feeding to livestock. The same rains that produced the bumper wheat crop gave the west an abundance of pasture and feeds. That fact alone has made feed wheat of less value than would otherwise have been the case. In order to find any kind of market for it, it must be priced at a point where it can be utilized as stock feed. This, then, is a real distress crop; an embarrassment to the producers, the wheat board, and the economy of the country.

To take the position that the wheat board should have set an artificially high price for feed wheat to compensate farmers for the terrible loss they suffered from frost is utterly illogical. The wheat board has but one function, to market the farmers' grain for the best possible price and to return to the farmers the net proceeds of the crop. The wheat board exists because the farmers of the west have become convinced that over the long term it provides price stability unknown under the boom and bust futures market system. All the farmers of the west have ever wanted, and ever hoped to get, was a fair average price for their wheat, not $3 one year and 35 cents the next. Before the wheat board, wheat might have been priced at $1.50 before the farmer planted it; $1.75 in July before harvest, and $1 when they hauled their crop to the elevator. When the price was high they had nothing to sell. When they had wheat to sell the price was often ruinous.

If the farmers of the west can get the average of what our overseas customers are prepared to pay for our wheat, that is all most producers have ever wanted. They have only wanted a system without the wild speculative fluctuations that were part and parcel of the futures market system. If the wheat board is to be the target for unreasoned abuse every time an initial price is set, and every time any other problem of marketing arises, the days of the board are surely numbered. It cannot stand much more of the kind of friendship it has been getting this past year.

Before sitting down, Mr. Speaker, I think I am going to put my finger on the crux of the whole system of marketing wheat in the world. I am taking in a lot of territory, but I believe I am going to give some information now that I have never heard in this house before. Regardless of what has been said by many of the grain trade representatives or any hon. member in this house, I contend that not one of them has mentioned the one thing which I consider has completely changed the picture in so far as wheat marketing is concerned for all exporting countries in the world. I contend, Mr. Speaker, that was the closing of the Liverpool corn or grain exchange. I contend, sir, that there is no similar market in any country in the world today. The action of the British government in 1940 revolutionized the selling of wheat. In the face of that fact, I want to commend this government and the wheat board for their policy in disposing of our exportable wheat, which means so much to the grain producers and to the Canadian economy.

Now, Mr. Speaker, prior to the closing of the Liverpool grain exchange, when we looked at the marketing page of any newspaper in any country in the world to ascertain the price of wheat, what did we see? The first market that was mentioned in any column in any newspaper was Liverpool. What do we see today? We do not see Liverpool mentioned any longer. I contend that Chicago and Winnipeg have not taken the place of the Liverpool corn or grain exchange. These markets are in exporting countries and not in an importing country such as England is. Great Britain probably was, and is today, the greatest importer of wheat of any country in the world.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): I am not going to be very long tonight, Mr. Speaker, but this document for which we pressed, and about which a motion stands in my name on the order paper, has been placed before the house tonight. I believe it should be put on the record, and I propose to do that. First of all, I should like to take, as it were, a text. My text is the statement made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) on March 8 at page 1120 of Hansard, and quoted by the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton). I do not propose to quote all that he quoted, although I intended to do so before he spoke. I wish to quote almost the concluding words of the statement made by the minister.

> The fact is that the British government accepted the position that this government did not agree.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) on Monday evening dealt with that very explicitly and stood by his statement of June 5 last year. The document, a copy of which I hold in my hand, fully substantiates, first, that an agreement had been reached with respect to the "have regard to" clause by the cabinet after the minister's return from London; and, second—and I am sorry that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) is not in his place—that the Minister of Agriculture for two days last week misled this house in regard to that matter—not only misled the house but, what is worse, misled the country. I think that a minister who misleads parliament and the country no longer can have the confidence of his fellow members of the cabinet, of the house or of the country; and I believe that in any other parliament under our constitutional system that situation would have been made clear before now.

Mr. Boucher: The Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) replied to that fully this afternoon.

Mr. Coldwell: The document I hold in my hand reads as follows:

United Kingdom-Canadian Wheat Talks
May 1950

Agreed Record of a Meeting in the Foreign Secretary's Room in the House of Commons at 2.30 p.m. on Monday 22nd May 1950

Present:

United Kingdom: Chancellor of the Exchequer (in the Chair); Secretary of State for Commonwealth Relations; Minister of State for Economic Affairs; Minister of Food; Sir Percivale Liesching; Sir Henry Wilson Smith; Sir Frank Lee; Mr. A. E. Feaveryear.

Canada: Mr. C. D. Howe; Mr. L. B. Pearson; Mr. L. D. Wilgress; Mr. Norman A. Robertson; Mr. M. W. Mackenzie; Mr. G. A. McIvor.

Secretary: Mr. F. Hollins.

1. The meeting considered the following three questions in the light of the discussions that had taken place since Friday, 19th May:

(a) The quantity of wheat to be bought by the United Kingdom from Canada in the crop year 1950/51.

(b) The proportion of the quantity at (a) which the United Kingdom would take in the form of flour.

(c) The final settlement of any question still outstanding under clause 2 (b) (the "have regard to" clause) of the United Kingdom/Canada contract of 1946.

2. The conclusions reached on these three subjects were as follows:

(a) The United Kingdom and Canadian governments would both make agreed announcements on the results of the conversations in the terms of the statement at Annex A. The United Kingdom government would have no objection to Mr. Howe stating publicly on his return to Canada, if he considered it desirable, that he thought it reasonable to assume that in 1950/51 Canada would be able to sell to the United Kingdom at competitive international wheat agreement prices somewhere between 100-120 million bushels of wheat. This quantity would include the carry-over of 12·5 million bushels bought under the terms of the four-year contract. The Chancellor of the Exchequer would also be prepared to make a public statement to the effect that the United Kingdom government hoped that they would be able to meet their requirements for dollar wheat from their traditional market in Canada within the international wheat agreement, and that this would be possible provided that such wheat could be purchased on terms as to price, quality and position not less favourable than those obtained by any other buyer in the dollar market whether in the United States of America or in Canada.

(b) As part of its purchases of Canadian wheat in the crop year 1950/51 the United Kingdom would agree to take 300,000 tons of flour, provided that it could be purchased on terms not less favourable as to price and quality than those obtained by any other buyer of flour in the dollar market, whether in the United States of America or Canada. The United Kingdom representatives made it clear that the purchase of 300,000 tons in 1950/51 would be without prejudice to a possible lower scale of purchase in 1951/52.

Now comes clause (c) to which I wish to direct particular attention:

(c) The United Kingdom was anxious not to be represented as having given assurances regarding wheat purchases in 1950/51 in return for the waiver of a claim by Canada under the "have regard to" clause. The United Kingdom expected to make large purchases of wheat from Canada in any event. Nevertheless, in the context of these discussions, the United Kingdom representatives felt that it would be reasonable that all obligations under the "have regard to" clause might be considered to have been taken care of. Mr. Howe said that this was a matter which could only be settled by the Canadian cabinet on his return.

Instead of reading the next paragraph, I think perhaps I should read the message that was sent from Canada after the Canadian cabinet had considered this minute. The Minister of Agriculture told us that the action under the minute was taken unanimously. May I just point out that there had been a lapse of eight days from the time the conference was held in London until the message was sent to Britain on May 30. During those eight days there was no protest from the Canadian government with respect to the "have regard to" clause and no suggestion that further negotiations should be held to modify the conclusion that had been reached and which is to be found in this return. On May 30, 1950, this message was sent to the Chancellor of the Exchequer. I had better read the letter which accompanies it. It is as follows:

Ottawa, May 30, 1950

Dear Sir Alexander:

Regarding the recent wheat talks in London, I am sending you, herewith, a message for the Chancellor of the Exchequer from the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

I would be grateful if this could be sent off to London at once.

Yours sincerely,
A. D. P. Heeney

Sir Alexander Clutterbuck,
High Commissioner for the United Kingdom,
Earnscliffe,
Ottawa.

The message is as follows:

Ottawa, May 30, 1950

Following for the Chancellor of the Exchequer from the Minister of Trade and Commerce, begins:

I have reported to my colleagues in the Cabinet on our recent wheat talks in London, and wish to let you know that they are in accord with the conclusions recorded in paragraph 2 (a), (b) and (c) of the agreed record of the meeting which we held in the Foreign Secretary's room in the House of Commons on Monday, May 22nd.

In the circumstances, I should very much like to make public the agreed statement today, May 30th, if possible at 3.00 p.m. Ottawa time.

The agreed statement—and I do not think I need to put it on the record again—was annex A of this agreement. If we look at the statement that was agreed upon, identified as annex A, we find that after it was read to this house on May 30 last the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross) asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) this question:

May I ask the minister if at this conference a basis of settlement under the "have regard to" clause was discussed?

He went on to speak of the losses he believed had been sustained; and the answer of the minister was:

I understand the wheat board act will be discussed later in the session, and I do not care to amplify this statement at the moment.

That was the very day the message was sent to Britain stating that the government of Canada was in accord with the view in clause (c) of paragraph 2 of this agreement. The matter was settled by that exchange. It was settled first of all tentatively, as it were, in London. It could not be settled definitely because the Minister of Trade and Commerce and his colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson) had not the authority. But when they got back the cabinet agreed, and authorized the minister to so notify the chancellor of the exchequer. So there is no possibility whatever of saying anything other than that an agreement and settlement of this matter was made. The other evening someone saw fit to criticize me because I had not been in touch with the British government. Well, of course it is not my place or my prerogative to get in touch with the British government on a matter under negotiation between our two governments. On the other hand, how could any member of this house have got in touch with the British government when, that agreement having been made on May 30, the Minister of Trade and Commerce answered the hon. member for Souris as he did? In other words none of us knew that this matter had been settled. I say there has been a deplorable lack of frankness in this connection; and the later attempts to re-open discussions could not possibly have succeeded because of the firm agreement that had been made in the exchange of the minute and the message of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to the chancellor on May 30, 1950.

I do not know what this reference is to a waiver, but evidently there was considerable discussion about this "have regard to" clause. The United Kingdom government was anxious not to be represented as having given assurances regarding wheat purchases in 1950-51 in return for the waiver of a claim by Canada under the "have regard to" clause. Evidently there was a very thorough discussion. I do not know who suggested a waiver; whether the Canadian government representative said to the British government, "If you will buy a large quantity of wheat in 1950-51 the 'have regard to' clause will be waived completely". I do not know whether or not that was done.

Mr. Howe: Does my hon. friend think it was done? Does he think the British government would send out an agreed minute if they did not wish to be represented as accepting a waiver? Does he think they really did accept a waiver and then did not want to be represented as having done so?

Mr. Coldwell: No. What I was just going to say was: or on the other hand, did the British government make the suggestion of a waiver? Somebody did. That is the point I am making.

Mr. Howe: Nobody did.

Mr. Coldwell: The British government then obviously wanted to make clear in this that a waiver formed no part of the understanding. They went on to say that the United Kingdom expected to make large purchases of wheat from Canada in any event, whether or not the "have regard to" clause was settled. Now we have this document in the whole. We also have some members of the government in the hole, because there is no question but that anyone who reads the exchanges of last week will now realize how far from the true facts were some of the statements that were placed upon the records of this house, principally by the Minister of Agriculture. That is so even in regard to Mr. Strachey's statement at Winnipeg. What did he say at the end of his speech there? This is what the press carried, and I presume that it was in his prepared script:

> I repeat that the essence of the agreement is that in return for selling wheat at $1.55 during the first two years of the agreement, Canadian farmers get the protection of minimum floor prices of $1.25 and $1 in the third and fourth years. And I reiterate that it is an inescapable obligation of the British government to pay at least these prices however low the world price of wheat may go.

In other words if there was a difference of opinion regarding this "have regard to" clause as between the Canadian and British governments, apparently the understanding of Mr. Strachey at that time was something which incidentally I did not understand at the time—

Mr. Sinnott: Will the hon. member permit me a question?

Mr. Coldwell: No.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Sinnott: What is the date of that?

Mr. Coldwell: I want to finish what I am saying. Mr. Strachey's idea of this agreement, to some extent, was a sort of insurance policy that he was offering. I did not agree with that point of view, and it is not precisely what we have believed of it. But to return to this document, there is no question but that the Minister of Trade and Commerce and his colleague brought back a minute which in effect was a proposal for the settlement of the whole matter, and the "have regard to" clause was discussed and the conclusion recorded in this minute. When they arrived back they placed that minute containing the settlement proposed by the British government before the cabinet, and we are told that the cabinet unanimously gave the Minister of Trade and Commerce the right to send a message saying:

> I have reported to my colleagues in the cabinet on our recent wheat talks in London, and wish to let you know that they are in accord with the conclusions recorded in paragraph 2 (a), (b) and (c) of the agreed record of the meeting which we held in the foreign secretary's room in the House of Commons on Monday, May 22nd.

Mr. Sinnott: I rise on a point of privilege. I have as much right in this house as the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) or anybody else, and I would like to know the date of the document he is reading from.

Mr. Coldwell: I have given it. This is an agreed minute tabled by the Prime Minister tonight, the minute of the meeting held in London on May 22, 1950; and the message I have just read was sent by the secretary of the Privy Council of Canada, Mr. A. D. P. Heeney, after the cabinet meeting. It is dated May 30, 1950, in other words months before the "have regard to" clause was raised again in any way, either by the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) or by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner). During that week—during the week between the London meeting and the Ottawa meeting—there was no attempt on the part of the cabinet or, so far as we know, any member of the cabinet, to say to the government of Great Britain, "We are not satisfied with this deal; we would like to negotiate further."

On the contrary, they said, "We accept this agreement and we authorize the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) to send a message" in the words I have just read. During that week there was no attempt to reopen the matter for Canadian farmers. No attempt was made to call in representatives of the producers of this country, no attempt to call in the advisory committee of the wheat board—nothing of that kind. The matter was firmly and finally signed, sealed and delivered.

An hon. Member: A sell-out.

Mr. Coldwell: Anyone who goes across this country today and says that after this there was either a legal or moral obligation left over is wilfully and deliberately deceiving the people of Canada—and no peradventure about it. It is clear as crystal.

An hon. Member: Making a lot of noise.

Mr. Coldwell: The hon. member says I am making a lot of noise tonight.

An hon. Member: Not you, the crew behind you.

Mr. Coldwell: What I am saying, even if I did say it in a loud voice, is that there is no misunderstanding as to what this document means. And I say to hon. members on all sides of the house that they should cease—cease—misrepresenting this matter, anywhere.

The British government under this agreement says, "We are going to take large quantities of wheat from Canada"—100 million to 120 million bushels. Well, before the war, you know, the very best we could do in our sales of wheat to Britain was an average of about, I think, 90 million bushels a year. We have a market now in the United Kingdom for more.

Do you think that any people or any government will receive kindly some of the unjustifiable and unjustified criticism that has been thrown across the floor of this house during the last week or so? I say this trade is vital—and I do not care what government is in power in Great Britain, or what its political complexion may be, that government will fulfil an agreement which has been entered into.

Apparently the Canadian government agreed, in the message which was sent by the Minister of Trade and Commerce to London on May 30—

Mr. Ferrie: May I ask a question?

Mr. Coldwell: Just a moment; I will let you in a moment—on May 30, that the agreement had been fulfilled. I will take the hon. member's question now.

Mr. Ferrie: Why is the waiver sentence in there? Why did they want the waiver in it?

Mr. Coldwell: They did not. There is no suggestion of that—in fact, quite the contrary. It is quite the contrary. What did they say regarding waiver? They say:

> The United Kingdom government was anxious not to be represented as having given assurances regarding wheat purchases in 1950-51 in return for the waiver of a claim by Canada under the "have regard to" clause. The United Kingdom expected to make large purchases of wheat from Canada in any event.

What they said was: We do not care whether you hold us to something that you think you can read into the wheat agreement, or not. We are not going to do other than purchase a large quantity of wheat from Canada in 1950-51. That is what it means and what it says.

Mr. Ferrie: That is reading it wrong.

Mr. Coldwell: Just a moment; I am reading every word as written here. I am reading it correctly. I am not following the example of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) last week who tried to read something that was not there at all, and got it into the record as though it was read from some document. I am not doing that. I am reading a document—in fact, a document the Prime Minister tabled in the house tonight. And I say that if I were reading it wrong the Prime Minister would rise in his place and correct me. I am reading it correctly.

That is all I have to say.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Beaudoin): Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Drew: Is not the Prime Minister going to deal with the disclosures in the communications?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): The Prime Minister has dealt with everything that is in these communications, today, and has stated the substance of them very fully, up to such time as he had the permission of the government of the United Kingdom to place the text on the table of the house.

Now, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar has rightly said that, if he had not been reading what he was reading correctly, I would have risen to my feet to interrupt him. But I did not choose to rise to my feet to contradict the interpretation he was putting upon the document he was reading. He was required to read the document as it was, and he did that. But I am not required to share his interpretation of what he was reading, or his paraphrasing of what he was reading.

The hon. member correctly read paragraph (c) and he interpreted it as meaning that the United Kingdom repulsed, pushed aside, some suggestion that was being made that there was being a waiver given to them for their undertaking to purchase wheat. They wanted it quite clear that their purchase of wheat in 1950-51 was something separate and independent, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) said in his speech, from any discussion of the "have regard to" clause in the other agreement. And the Minister of Trade and Commerce has stated in the house that the matter of the purchase of wheat had been arranged and completed before the other point was raised. That is his report that was made to us at the time, and it is a report that is confirmed by this document which I tabled today.

The document adds that there was also discussed, after the matter of the purchase of wheat for the crop year 1950-51, the settlement of the agreement which had existed for the purchase of the four previous crops, and that on that no settlement was reached, but the minister said that he would have to report on this matter to his colleagues in Ottawa. And there was an agreed statement to be made public, which was not to be made public until after he had reported to his colleagues in Canada, and had communicated an answer to them.

The answer that was communicated to them was that the conclusions in paragraphs (a), (b) and (c) were agreed to. There is in my way of reading this no agreement about the statement that the "have regard to" clause might be considered to have been taken care of. The conclusion of paragraph (c) is that this could only be settled by the Canadian cabinet, upon his return. And we regarded that as something that could not be settled in any other way than the manner in which the United Kingdom wanted it settled—that is, that they were not going to make further payment.

Mr. Coldwell: But they did not say that definitely. They say that "It would be reasonable that all obligations under the 'have regard to' clause"—and so on. Do they not leave the way open for further negotiations, if the government thought of applying for further negotiations?

Mr. St. Laurent: The government thought at that time that the only binding obligations in that contract were those that the hon. member has referred to in the concluding words that Mr. Strachey used in the Winnipeg meeting, that it was a guarantee that they would take a stated quantity at a price not below the floor price that was indicated in the agreement. We accepted that as something about which nothing further could be done. Nothing further would have been done had my colleagues and I not realized that there was grievous disappointment in the expectations that had been created by the statements made in 1946 by the Minister of Agriculture, by the then minister of trade and commerce and by the Right Hon. Mr. Strachey after listening to the debate in this house. We found that to be a serious situation which existed throughout those provinces.

I felt, rightly or wrongly—I make mistakes like everybody else; I am not always willing to recognize that the thing I have done is a mistake, but I never feel at all hurt when others suggest that it was a mistake and discuss the propriety or otherwise of what I have done on its merits—and I would not have raised the question with Mr. Attlee if I had not felt it was my duty to the prime minister of another country of the commonwealth to apprize him of the state of opinion in that regard here in Canada. I admitted to him that perhaps he might say to me that I had no right to talk about the "have regard to" clause at that time in view of the minute of May and the answer that had been made. But I said I was telling him what the situation was and how it had come about and I asked him, as I have said on two occasions already in the house, if under these circumstances he did not think it would be proper for me to raise the question with the chancellor of the exchequer. He agreed that it would be proper for me to do so, and I did so.

I cannot agree in any sense with the opinion expressed by the hon. member that there has been misrepresentation. The facts have been stated in the order in which they occurred. The opinion that there was something more that had to be done by somebody because of expectations that had been raised by declarations and the interpretations put upon this contract in 1946, and maintained periodically during the whole life of the contract, was something that was a fact; and whatever the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) may feel about it, whatever he may have said about it, is not going to change the opinion about that fact of those who are affected.

Mr. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the record which has now been placed before us of the minutes of the meeting in London on May 22 last gives this whole discussion an entirely new turn. There is one point that has been raised by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) which seems to me to be of considerable importance in its effect on the way that we examine the measure of frankness or lack of frankness there has been in the whole of these proceedings.

This was not some casual meeting. This was a meeting of the utmost importance not only to the government of Canada and the wheat growers of western Canada but to all Canadians. Obviously the meeting was regarded as being of sufficient importance to call for the attendance in London of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe), the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson), the Canadian High Commissioner in London, the secretary of the cabinet council and two other senior officials.

In addition it called to the meeting Sir Stafford Cripps, Lord Addison, the Right Hon. Mr. Gaitskell, the Right Hon. Mr. Strachey and men of the standing of Sir Percivale Liesching.

Mr. Howe: I object to a misrepresentation being made by the leader of the opposition as to who attended that meeting.

Mr. Drew: In what way? Who did not attend the meeting that I have mentioned?

Mr. Howe: Lord Addison did not attend it and certainly Mr. Strachey did not attend it.

Mr. Drew: Was he not minister of food at that time?

Mr. Howe: No, sir. If my hon. friend will read the text instead of trying to give his own interpretation of it he would not fall into that pit.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, this is a perfect example of the conduct of this minister who will tell the house nothing that he can avoid, this man who holds the house in complete and utter contempt.

Mr. Howe: Holds the hon. member in complete and utter contempt.

Mr. Drew: This minister who never informs the house probably has not been bothered to notice that the names of these ministers are not there, and that I was assuming that Mr. Strachey, whose name has been mentioned, was minister of food at that time. If he was not, then let the Minister of Trade and Commerce tell us who were there. Give us the names so that we will know. The Chancellor of the Exchequer was Sir Stafford Cripps; was he not there?

Mr. Howe: Yes.

Mr. Drew: The secretary of state for commonwealth relations?

Mr. Howe: Mr. Gordon-Walker.

Mr. Drew: Who was minister of state for economic affairs?

Mr. Howe: Has my hon. friend not read the papers lately?

Mr. Drew: That is one of these usual smart aleck remarks.

Mr. Howe: My hon. friend is not so smart this evening.

Mr. Drew: I have read the papers recently.

Mr. Speaker: I do not think there should be questions back and forth between ministers and hon. members when the Speaker is in the chair.

Mr. Drew: The Minister of Trade and Commerce in his interjection suggested that I had not been reading the papers recently. I am referring to a meeting which took place on May 22, 1950, and I am pointing out that that was a meeting attended by men of the highest importance in the cabinet. I have not been given a list of the names. The statement was placed in our hands only in the last few minutes. Then with the usual contempt for the house that this minister displays he tries to convey the impression that the names are there. They are not, except when it comes to the officials.

Mr. Howe: I accept your apology.

Mr. Drew: I am not apologizing to the minister, but I would hope that we still might see some recognition of parliamentary responsibility which would carry this minister to the point of apologizing to this house for the way he has misrepresented matters to this house. I will give the names that are at the top of the paper. They are:

Chancellor of the exchequer in the chair
Secretary of state for commonwealth relations
Minister of state for economic affairs
Minister of food
Sir Percivale Liesching
Sir Henry Wilson Smith
Sir Frank Lee
Mr. A. E. Feavearyear.

Those were the men who were regarded as being the most appropriate to attend a meeting of this importance. It was no casual meeting, it was a meeting of the utmost importance. The result of that meeting is set out in these minutes. These minutes which have been placed on the record were dealing with subjects which were then of very much concern to the people of this country. It states that the subjects considered were:—

(a) The quantity of wheat to be bought by the United Kingdom from Canada in the crop year 1950-51.

(b) The proportion of the quantity at (a) which the United Kingdom would take in the form of flour.

(c) The final settlement of any questions still outstanding under clause 2(b) (the "have regard to" clause) of the United Kingdom-Canada contract of 1946.

These were the three subjects that this meeting, with those very important representatives of both governments in attendance, was called to discuss. The minutes which were agreed upon by those attending as correctly representing what had taken place there referred to the final settlement of any questions regarding the "have regard" clause under paragraph (c) of these settled minutes. I do not see how any hon. member of the house can possibly be in any doubt as to what the combined result of that record, with the subsequent message of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe), amounted to. As to (c) the conclusion reached was as follows:

The United Kingdom government was anxious not to be represented as having given assurances regarding wheat purchases in 1950-51 in return for the waiver of a claim by Canada under the "have regard to" clause. The United Kingdom expected to make large purchases of wheat from Canada in any event. Nevertheless, in the context of these discussions, the United Kingdom representatives felt that it would be reasonable that all obligations under the "have regard to" clause might be considered to have been taken care of.

They were asking that this be a definite understanding, and it was in relation to the definite understanding sought by the government of the United Kingdom that the obligations under the "have regard to" clause would be considered to have been fully taken care of, that Mr. Howe—and I am using the name because it appears in the minutes—was recorded as having said that this was a matter which could only be settled by the Canadian cabinet on his return. It was with reference to that specific subject and that specific consideration that the message was sent by the Minister of Trade and Commerce through the High Commissioner of the United Kingdom in Ottawa, Sir Alexander Clutterbuck, on May 30, 1950. That message seems to be open to no misinterpretation. It is as follows:

I have reported to my colleagues in the cabinet on our recent wheat talks in London, and wish to let you know that they are in accord with the conclusions recorded in paragraph 2(a), (b) and (c) of the agreed record of the meeting which we held in the foreign secretary's room in the House of Commons on Monday, May 22.

That does not mean that the Canadian government declared that this was a correct record. Those who were there were able to declare it was a correct record and did so. What is declared is that the Canadian government was in agreement with the conclusions, and one of the conclusions put forward by the government of the United Kingdom for consideration was that the obligations under the "have regard to" clause should be declared to have been taken care of.

Certainly that was a definite finding. It was a definite finding communicated to the British government. It is in the light of that decision that we must examine the effect of the question and answer which have already been referred to because the Minister of Trade and Commerce, in accordance with that message, at the opening of the house at three o'clock read into the record, and it now appears in Hansard, the statement which had been agreed upon in London on May 22. It was after that that the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross) asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce if the "have regard to" clause had been discussed in London, and the Minister of Trade and Commerce, knowing perfectly well that a message had just been sent to the British government, a message which he obviously had in mind when he spoke on June 5, said that he understood the wheat board act would be discussed later in the session, and he did not care to amplify this statement at the moment.

The Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) has said that it was because of the fact that the government learned later of the dissatisfaction that existed amongst the farmers of western Canada that this subject was taken up again at the time that the prime minister of Great Britain visited Ottawa. He said that nothing further would have been done if the government had not become aware of this discontent.

Mr. Rowe: Expectations.

Mr. Drew: There would not have been any reason for this discontent if the government at the very time that this statement had been made had informed the house, the people of Canada and particularly the western farmers, as they should have been informed, that on May 22 the British government had put forward what was to be regarded as a final settlement, that this had been considered by the government of Canada, and that the government of Canada had approved of their declaration that there was a final settlement under the "have regard to" clause.

If there was any misunderstanding, if there was any discontent, it was because of the improper withholding of information which should have been placed before all the people of Canada on May 30 last year. The information now before this house not only makes it clear that every statement made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) was in clear defiance of the facts, and with knowledge that what he was saying was wrong, but also that the government has permitted the Minister of Agriculture to create a most unfair impression throughout this country in spite of their own declared approval of the position put forward by the government of the United Kingdom on May 22 last year.

I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will give priority to wheat. The second item will be Bill No. 79, an act respecting Indians, and then Bill No. 130 an act to amend the Export and Import Permits Act. If we have time we will then take up a small bill or resolution.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, March 16, 1951

The house met at three o'clock.

ST. PATRICK'S DAY

CELEBRATION ON SATURDAY NEXT—REFERENCE TO MEMBER FOR FORT WILLIAM

Mr. Robert Fair (Battle River): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that for many years past the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McIvor) and I have made representations annually to the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) and the late prime minister, Mr. W. L. Mackenzie King, for the adjournment of the house so that Irishmen and their friends might properly celebrate St. Patrick's day. This year the seventeenth of March falls on a Saturday, so that it will not be necessary to make that request; it is coming automatically. We, with the hon. member for Saskatoon city (Mr. Knight), invite all Irishmen and their friends to celebrate as they should because Saturday is followed by Sunday, and Sunday will be the day for recuperation.

I have one other request to make on behalf of, perhaps, the Irish. We have had with us for the past fifteen or sixteen years the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McIvor). Recently he celebrated his seventy-eighth birthday. He was applauded, I believe, by members on all sides of the house. He is not only my friend but is a friend of all of us. Having given the very best of services during the week to humanity in this house, he has also gone out on Sunday and looked after the spiritual welfare of many sections of this country. The other day on looking over a list of the members of the other place and their occupations, I found that there was not one clergyman among them. I am now suggesting that, inasmuch as we have several clergymen around this corner of the house who can also minister to the needs of the other sections of it, it would be a splendid gesture on the part of the Prime Minister to allow the hon. member for Fort William to go to the other place so that he may look after the members there.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fair: I am glad that there is applause on all sides of the house, and I hope that the Prime Minister will give this suggestion careful and favourable consideration.

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I enjoy the House of Commons too much to leave it, and I am not yet old enough for the Senate.

TRANSFER OF DUTIES

NATIONAL FILM BOARD—MICROFILMING UNIT

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): I beg leave to table copies of order in council 1178 of 15th of March, 1951, passed under the provisions of the Public Service Rearrangement and Transfer of Duties Act, transferring the control and supervision of the functions and duties of the microfilming unit of the national film board from Hon. Robert H. Winters to the Secretary of State, and transferring the said unit and all microfilming equipment and incidentals used by the said unit, except one Recordak enlarger and one Pako print washer to be retained by the national film board, from the national film board to the Department of Public Printing and Stationery.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

FEDERAL AID TO EDUCATION—CORRESPONDENCE WITH PREMIER OF MANITOBA

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): I should like to table, as return No. 37, the documents called for by the motion of the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Knight), which was passed on March 12 last:

> For a copy of all correspondence exchanged between the government of Manitoba or any minister or department thereof and the federal government or any minister or department thereof, in reference to the question of federal aid to education, dated at any time since January 1, 1947.

In response to the notice of motion with respect to the correspondence exchanged between the government of Manitoba and the federal government, there was a letter from the premier of Manitoba dated November 18, 1950, in which the subject of federal aid to education was referred to. This letter was tabled in the house on January 29, and is part of the correspondence that was published as an appendix to Hansard.

I am now tabling the exchange of letters between the premier of Manitoba and myself dated January 31 and February 6, 1951, in which the subject is also mentioned in the memorandum attached to Premier Campbell's letter. But this would form part of the correspondence dealing with the dominion-provincial conferences, and perhaps hon. members would wish you, Mr. Speaker, to direct that this correspondence be printed as an appendix to today's Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

(For text of correspondence referred to, see appendix A, pages 1361-3.)

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

CHARLOTTETOWN, P.E.I.—INQUIRY AS TO PROPERTIES PURCHASED, ETC.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. Chester S. McLure (Queens): I desire to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works, to be taken by him as notice, and I hope to get a complete statement on Monday next. Will the minister please make a full statement regarding the dominion building at Charlottetown, properties purchased and paid for, and such other information as when construction will begin? My people are asking for this information.

Hon. Alphonse Fournier (Minister of Public Works): I suggest to the hon. member that he put the question on the order paper, and we will give him a full answer. We will bring him right up to date as to the purchase of the sites, plans, and the amount that is now actually in the estimates.

KOREA

CANADIAN CASUALTIES—PRESS REPORT AS TO LETTERS WRITTEN TO RELATIVES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): I should like to ask the Minister of Justice if he has yet received an answer to the inquiry I made on Thursday, March 8, regarding letters to next of kin of casualties in Korea.

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Yes, I have. The answer is that we had had no knowledge of this at headquarters of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and we have instructed the detachment concerned to make inquiries. Having regard to the fact that these letters were anonymous, we have not yet been able to trace them down, but our inquiries are still continuing.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

PROVISION FOR EARLY DISTRIBUTION OF PAYMENTS AT END OF POOL PERIOD, ETC.

The house resumed, from Thursday, March 15, consideration of the motion of Mr. Howe for the second reading of Bill No. 5, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1935, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Ross (Souris).

Mr. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in continuing the remarks that I was making last night on the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross), I wish to come back to what is now under consideration by hon. members. The amendment that has been moved is as follows:

That this bill be not now read a second time but that further consideration thereof be deferred until this house has had an opportunity to record its opinion on the government's announced decision with respect to the final settlement of the five-year wheat pool and on the government's mishandling of the sale of wheat and other grains covered by the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

Different members on the opposite side have taken exception to the word "mishandling." Several members on the other side of the house have emphasized that it is the use of the word "mishandling" which makes it impossible for them to consider this amendment. May I suggest to them, and to others who have not expressed themselves but who may have been directing their attention to this particular word, that they consider the grounds upon which the government has announced that it proposes to make a payment of $65 million.

We have the unqualified statement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe), supported by the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent), that nothing is owing by the British government under the wheat contract. I would remind hon. members that this statement by the Minister of Trade and Commerce is borne out in full and very emphatically by the papers tabled in this house last night.

These records of the minutes of a meeting held in London last May and the subsequent confirmation of the position taken by the government of Great Britain make it abundantly clear that the statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce on June 5 of last year in this house, in very brief form, indicating that this government concurred in the position taken by the government of Great Britain, was not only accurate but was an understatement of the extent to which complete and unmistakable agreement had been reached on that point by the two governments.

That being so, no matter on what other ground the money may be owing, it is certainly not owing under the wheat contract. In that respect we must take the position of this government, supported by the records, especially between the two governments, as evidence of that fact. Therefore any money that is being paid is being paid upon some other ground. If it is not on the ground that this government mishandled, and grossly mishandled, the wheat, then on what ground is it? It can only be on the ground that there was such a mishandling of wheat by this government that there is a substantial debt to the farmers of western Canada.

No other proposition has been put forward. It has been mishandled to the extent that some very substantial obligation, in the opinion of this government, was created independently of the contract between the governments of Great Britain and Canada. Therefore the payment that is announced by the government is something that the government now is saying they will do because of the way they let down the farmers of western Canada in their handling of wheat. That is precisely the position, and therefore "mishandling" is a very moderate statement in these circumstances which have led to the announcement that the government now makes.

But, Mr. Speaker, we have sought from the government some evidence of the way in which they arrived at a figure of this kind. It is true that at this stage the house is not called upon to vote for or against this payment. It is appropriate at the present stage, however, that the house should know the way in which the government arrived at this figure, in view of the fact that the government itself has chosen this debate as the time to make their statement in regard to the subject.

The Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) has added nothing yet to the information already before the house as to the way in which the figure of $65 million emerged. Let us reduce it to a simple form. The Prime Minister said: "No; it is perfectly true there was no obligation on the part of the government of the United Kingdom. Nevertheless, after the succession of events which had occupied our thoughts for some time last summer, we did become aware of the fact that there was discontent among the farmers of western Canada. We thought it advisable therefore, when we learned that the Prime Minister of Great Britain was going to be here in December that we should indicate to him that there was this discontent; and that although all obligations under the contract had been disposed of, nevertheless they might take into consideration the wisdom or otherwise of recognizing that discontent, and presumably giving that discontent some measurable terms in money."

The Prime Minister has explained that the Prime Minister of Great Britain obviously was not impressed with the obligation on the British government to deal with the problem of discontent in Canada. Nevertheless he sought the consent of the Prime Minister of Great Britain to speak to the Chancellor of the Exchequer on this subject. Having received the assurance that there would be no discourtesy implied in that procedure, he carried forward his intention and evidently received the same reply there.

The information which he communicated to the government upon his return evidently did not close this subject completely, because the Minister of Agriculture then decided to carry the matter further, and go to Great Britain to discuss the subject. The Minister of Agriculture, however, did not base this upon discontent; he based his claim upon an obligation which he alleged existed, and he left the impression in the house that that obligation had been unfulfilled.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Drew: And I hear one Liberal member to my right rear say that that was right.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Drew: And I now hear him say, "hear, hear".

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Drew: And I hear another Liberal member say "Hear, hear".

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Drew: And I hear another. That is exactly the point I sought to make in my remarks earlier. No matter what explanation may now be given by the Prime Minister of Canada, the fact is that in the minds of a number of his supporters in the House of Commons the statement of the Minister of Agriculture did convey the impression that the British government had failed to carry out its obligation.

Mr. Ferrie: May I ask the hon. member a question? Why did representatives of the farmers go over to the old country, if that is not true?

Mr. Drew: The question asked by the hon. member supports what I say. He shows that in his opinion it is clear that the government of Great Britain did fail to carry out its obligation. I am going to say that is the only natural result of the statement made in the house by the Minister of Agriculture.

Nor was the hon. member who has just interrupted the only one who gathered an impression of that kind. The hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. Stewart), speaking in the house in the same debate, said, as reported at page 1216 of Hansard of March 13, 1951:

> However, as a westerner, I am not satisfied that Great Britain under its socialistic government has played ball.

An hon. Member: That is right.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Drew: Now we hear another "hear, hear", and a Liberal member to my right rear says, "that is right," confirming what I have said, that the impression conveyed by the Minister of Agriculture is that the British government has not played ball.

Then at another point on page 1218 the hon. member for Yorkton is reported in this way:

> However, having regard not only to the "have regard" clause accepted by the British Labour government and later disregarded by that same government, apparently with the implied approval of their counterpart in this country, the C.C.F. labourites will still contend that wheat prices should be kept up and the price of flour kept down.

And at a later point the same member said this:

> We will never get it under a socialist government in that country, which will repudiate things as socialists always believe in the repudiation of agreements.

Mr. Rowe: Who said that?

Mr. Drew: The hon. member for Yorkton. As has been said earlier in the debate, it is not for this House of Commons to tell the people of Great Britain what kind of government they should have—no matter what kind we have in Canada. And it is not for them to tell us what kind of government we should have, because if they did they would express a very dim view of the government we now have in this country, based upon their own political views over there.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The people of Canada do not say that.

Mr. Drew: But the fact is that the government of Canada has, with the greatest p ssible formality and in a very carefully considered communication, transmitted to the government of the United Kingdom, through the High Commissioner for the United Kingdom stationed here in Ottawa, the formal statement that it agrees with the government of the United Kingdom that all obligations had been disposed of as of May 22 last year.

That being so, it is not only incorrect but it is grossly improper—in fact, it is something that can be described only in terms not covered by the rules of the house—to suggest that the government of Great Britain, no matter what political persuasion its members may follow, has been guilty of default, or, to use the term that has been used in this debate, is not playing ball with the government of Canada and the people of Canada.

An hon. Member: What about oil in Iran and wheat in Canada? They are both the same, are they not?

Mr. Drew: Well, this debate has covered a wide field, but I hope it will not range so far as oil in Iran at this stage.

Mr. Knowles: Pipe lines at eight o'clock tonight.

Mr. Drew: Then there is one further fact. The minutes of the meeting in London on May 22 of last year do, I submit, call for a clear and unmistakable interpretation by the government, in view of other things that have happened and which have been referred to in the debate. We know that an attempt was made, no matter how skilfully the proposal was cloaked in diplomatic terms, to have the government of the United Kingdom take up the balance of the loan of $65 million so that it would appear to be paying the government of Canada the remainder of the obligations under the wheat contract. But the government of the United Kingdom refused to have any part in an improper subterfuge of that kind which would have misled the people of Canada as to what was actually taking place. It is in the light of the attempt that was made—and that attempt incidentally is the only basis for the figure we now have before us with regard to the payment of an obligation which this government believes it owes the farmers of western Canada—that we must examine the minutes of the meeting of May 22 last. Paragraph (c) is the paragraph dealing with the final settlement of any questions still outstanding under the "have regard to" clause of the wheat contract, and in the minutes we find the following:

> The United Kingdom was anxious not to be represented as having given assurances regarding wheat purchases in 1950-51 in return for the waiver of a claim by Canada under the "have regard to" clause.

That requires some explanation which has not yet been given. In the absence of any other explanation the only assumption is that it was being suggested to the government of the United Kingdom that a statement should be issued to the effect that because of the large purchases of grain and flour for the year 1950-51, not called for by the original contract, the Canadian government proposed to waive any obligations still outstanding under the "have regard to" clause.

Mr. Howe: That suggestion is absolutely false, and the communiqué says it is false.

Mr. Drew: I request the withdrawal of that statement by the minister.

Mr. Howe: On what ground?

Mr. Drew: The statement may be inaccurate; it is not absolutely false. I ask for a withdrawal.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Beaudoin): I would imagine that the document from which the leader of the opposition is quoting would speak for itself. If the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) considers that the paraphrasing or quoting of it is not accurate, I do not think he meant anything offensive or had the intention of imputing motives to the leader of the opposition.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I shall know how to interpret the rules in making reference to certain statements of the Minister of Trade and Commerce in the future. In so far as the statement just made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce is concerned, may I point out that no explanation which will hold water has been given to the house as to what those words mean. In the light of what has already taken place there is still owing to this house some explanation. I would suggest that it is just about time that a minister in whose word there is still some confidence established in this house in regard to statements made here, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson), should say what did take place according to his recollection, because he was present at that meeting and he knows exactly what those words do mean. I should be very glad if he would say what they mean.

Mr. Garson: This is a speech, not a cross-examination.

Mr. Howe: He thinks he is in committee.

Mr. Drew: I was under the impression that the Secretary of State for External Affairs was going to rise, but I find that he is not.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I might just say that my recollection in regard to these matters, in regard to all matters that have been brought up, coincides exactly with what has been said by the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Drew: Then, Mr. Speaker, we see how clearly established is the difference between the Minister of Agriculture and the other members of the government who can speak in regard to what took place, because we now have the Secretary of State for External Affairs confirming the statement made already that this is the correct interpretation of what did take place, and that there is nothing owing. In so far as this particular statement is concerned we can only wait until one of the ministers does see fit to give his explanation as to what that referred to.

Mr. Pearson: On a question of privilege, the hon. gentleman was referring to the first sentence of paragraph (c) in this communiqué. It was to that paragraph and to that sentence that I was referring when I said that my recollection coincided with that of the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the interpretation he is giving to it is quite false.

Mr. Howe: What about a point of order on that?

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Howe: Let us have a point of order on that one.

Mr. Drew: Oh, no. Mr. Speaker, the Hansard record will show exactly what the minister of external affairs said, and he said that he confirms what has been said by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. The Minister of Trade and Commerce has said nothing to explain that particular sentence. So the statement by the minister of external affairs means nothing if it is confined simply to this particular sentence.

The exhibition we have seen this afternoon is simply—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, the exhibition—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Beaudoin): I would ask all hon. members to refrain from interrupting the leader of the opposition.

Mr. Drew: The exhibition we have seen this afternoon of evasion of a reasonable explanation by ministers of the crown is simply another demonstration of the contempt in which parliament is held by members of the government which is about to ask this house to support a payment to the farmers of western Canada for the government's mishandling of the wheat purchases from those farmers during the past four years.

When members of this house find these evasions and these devices for avoiding responsibility so humorous it is about time that they came face to face with their own responsibilities as members, because they are responsible along with the government if they fail to express any desire for that information which would make it possible for the members of this house to pass judgment upon facts with some knowledge of what those facts really are.

Hon. members may find it very easy to impress themselves by their laughter and desk thumping, but that is confined to this chamber. Honour, public decency, respect for the hard-won traditions of a free parliament will never be determined by a vote in this or any other legislative chamber. Those are matters that are determined on other grounds. Unless the government repudiates the minister who has been guilty of this shameful and shameless conduct, then it must itself accept responsibility for recklessly endangering mutual confidence between the governments of Canada and Great Britain, which is so vitally important to us and to the whole free world at this time. Do not let anyone say that this is not being endangered. I have read from Hansard statements already made in this house reflecting on the government of a sister nation within the commonwealth. You have heard remarks of hon. members in the house this afternoon indicating that they share the same opinion. A minister of the crown, knowing what was done last May to confirm the final settlement of the wheat contract, has sought to convey the impression that the British government fell down on its obligations, that it did not play ball with this country, to use the expression of one hon. member. The last thing that should be countenanced in these critical days is an attempt by any member of this or any other government in Canada to try to save his political hide at the expense of the good will between two of the most important nations in the commonwealth.

Hon. W. Earl Rowe (Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Howe: The well-known wheat farmer.

Mr. Rowe: —I have listened, as I know you have, with keen interest to the excellent address delivered by the leader of the party to which I am proud to belong. Hon. members across the way may laugh, but you laugh with the weight of numbers behind you, because history will record that we have just listened to one of the ablest parliamentarians in the house at the present time. The laughter of some hon. members does not add any particular weight to that compliment.

As the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) has said, we enjoy certain rights in this house, and parliamentary debate still stands for something. It stands for something whether or not a party can, by sheer weight of numbers, pound the desks, cry "hear, hear", and make a roughhouse out of the proceedings, although I do not say that with any reflection on you, sir. I have been in this house a long time, and never in twenty-five years' experience have I observed a party so top-heavy that it can laugh off arguments about matters that are of the most vital concern to this country.

I know that my hon. friends may laugh because I am following my leader at this moment. The reason I am following my leader is that the trained men of the enormous Liberal party are silenced and are not saying much on this issue. Why do we not hear from some of the gentlemen who have championed the farmers' interests throughout this country for so many years?

An hon. Member: Balderdash.

Mr. Rowe: We hear the odd ripple from the back. Sometimes it is intelligible, and sometimes it is nonsense. Sometimes it is humorous and sometimes it is ridiculous, but we hear no speeches from those men who know the wheat problem so well, those men who have been here for years. I have listened to many speeches about wheat and the wheat problem in western Canada, but what silence now! What a change there has been since 1946 and before! The one grand champion, who finds difficulty in achieving unanimity with his own colleagues, is not here this afternoon. I refer to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner). I will say for him that whether he is right or wrong he is bold enough and loud enough to be the best defence the Liberal party has on this issue.

We have seen this debate remove some of the cloak that surrounds the issue. I sometimes wonder why it has taken so much effort to do it. Why has my leader had to struggle so hard in order to reveal some of the truths? The Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) laughs, but he has not made much of a contribution to the debate yet. His smile is a happy one, and his personality is congenial, but his debating ability so far as this issue is concerned is well smothered for fear that he may create further disunity among members of the cabinet.

I am glad that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson) agrees with the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe). There is some hope of developing unanimity in the government, because we see at least one member who agrees with the Minister of Trade and Commerce. The Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) said last night that there were only four points pertaining to this issue on which unanimity was needed, and which they have been considering. The first point was that the legal obligations of the United Kingdom had been settled. They were in full unanimity on that score. Second, they were fully unanimous that Canada had accepted such obligations as discharged as far back as last May. Those were two things they were in agreement on.

Mr. Howe: Did you say last April?

Mr. Rowe: Last May. If I had said last April you would have said I was wrong and you would have been right. You are often more than thirty days out, but in this case you would have been right if I had said April. I think it is too bad that the house is not large enough to enable all supporters of the government to sit on the one side. Then you would have more unanimity than you have now, because those to my right have been saying repeatedly that Great Britain did not fulfil her obligations, and they interrupted my leader in order to emphasize that point.

The third point concerning which there is unanimity in the government is that there was a widespread belief in western Canada that they could expect a further payment, and it was caused to no small degree by the speech of Mr. Strachey in Winnipeg. I could not help but wonder how they could emphasize to the Canadian people that Mr. Strachey had led them to expect something more. Anyone who listened to the Minister of Agriculture during the last election campaign, and in 1946, surely would not try to blame it on a visiting minister from the United Kingdom, because I find that as long ago as 1947 the Minister of Agriculture said, as reported in the Edmonton Journal for January 17, 1947:

> For the first time in Canada's history, the farmer can be assured of a fairly lengthy period of stabilized prices for his products, and a certain market for wheat and many other products, such as cattle, hogs and dairy produce.

He further said that the government had been criticized for drawing up an agreement that might not be successful, and that people were saying we had to take less for our wheat. He tried to emphasize that at that period we were receiving more for our wheat than they were in the Argentine, and more than they were in Australia. He was further reported as saying:

> As a result of the agreement with Britain on wheat, farmers were guaranteed a good price until at least 1950, and it was not taking one cent out of the federal treasury.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether it is parliamentary to say it, but I have often heard such instances referred to in these terms: The chickens are coming home to roost! Look at the spectacle of what it has taken to reveal the real picture. I am not going to enlarge on what has been so well said by my leader, but the $65 million, being the unused portion of the British loan, has no more relationship to what the farmers claim for loss, or to any principle of compensation, than this argument has to the Einstein theory. If there ever was an evident attempt to mislead the Canadian people, and especially the farmers, it was the attempt to try to give the impression, sometimes even headlined in the press, that the United Kingdom was going to pay the $65 million, instead of the situation we have today of its having to be voted in hard, cold Canadian dollars.

I do not think we have had a sufficient answer yet as to the reason for this $65 million. I am not going to say for a moment that through this government we as a country do not have a moral obligation to the wheat producers of western Canada. Assuming that we have; who in this house among those who have spoken so far, or who among those great, silent men who refuse to speak, will say that $65 million is any more than a token payment of ten cents on the dollar on our moral obligation? The farmers of western Canada, and the farmers all over this country, know we have lost colossal sums of money through this bulk-trading blunder, through the government taking over the wheat from the pools and co-operatives of western Canada. Whose responsibility is it?

Mr. Ferrie: The guys who ate it.

Mr. Rowe: You should have a great deal of the responsibility, then. I do not want to hurt my hon. friend's feelings; he looks much better than most of the streamlined fellows I see around here. Again I ask, whose responsibility is it?

Mr. Ferrie: I told you; the guys who ate it.

Mr. Rowe: Last evening, in answer to a question, the Prime Minister said the wheat pools of western Canada were not consulted. In reply to a question I asked a short time later he said the wheat board was ignored, and that even the advisory committee was not consulted. So what is the principle on which this amount of $65 million was determined? If it had been $59 million we might not have been able to tie it so closely to the British loan. If it had been $73 million it would not have looked right. Had it been the $650 million the farmers say they lost it would have been more than the country could stand. Whose is the responsibility for the greatest blunder ever made in the history of this country in connection with marketing? The responsibility is that of the government which refused to take advice from the wheat pools, the wheat board or those who knew something about this trading, and from whom they had lifted the responsibility. They commandeered this grain; and as I say, surely ten cents on the dollar cannot be considered a satisfactory compensation for that moral obligation.

Mr. Howe: Page John I. McFarland.

Mr. Rowe: Well, I notice you are not paging very many of your members right now. You ask me to page those from outside; evidently you have put the quietus on those inside, and I would rather hear from them. I know they can talk; I have heard them over the radio during election campaigns.

I know Mr. Strachey was not the only one who told the farmers of the west that never again would they be asked to accept these low prices for wheat; that from now on they would be getting as much as anyone else, and what they did not get then they would get later. I was through Saskatchewan myself, and if my campaign speeches were put together I think they would make just as sound and consistent reading to the farmers of the west as the different ideas that have been put forward by the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Howe: And you did not elect a single member.

Mr. Rowe: That is quite true; but when you do not have so many members in the house and power does not mean everything to you it is perhaps something of a recompense to feel that you did not get here by telling the farmers of the west something you are now paying off at the rate of ten cents on the dollar. After all, there are other things than getting elected.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Rowe: My hon. friends laugh, but that is true. I think this evident effort to convey the idea that it would not cost the treasury of Canada anything had more to do with this gunshot prescription of $65 million than any other single factor. What is the principle behind it? Is it just an easy way out because we are hoping for a surplus of four or five hundred million dollars? Is it a handout? Is it a political principle that is a boomerang? What is it? It has very little relation to the problem itself, very little relation to what has been lost. I think that question should be answered by the Prime Minister, or the Minister of Trade and Commerce, or someone who has the unanimous consent of the cabinet, if anyone can speak for them. If not, I would like to hear them all speak. I like to hear the voice of the Secretary of State for External Affairs; I know he often speaks on things he knows quite a bit about. I like to hear the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson), who comes from a district where his voice would be listened to. At least that was so at one time, but if he does not speak on this matter I am not sure when the farmers of that district will listen to him again in connection with wheat.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Many of the farmers would like to hear from him right now.

Mr. Rowe: I am sure in Manitoba they would like to hear what he has to say on this question. I believe they would like to hear from him in Saskatchewan as well, because he has broadened out now so that he represents them all. Apparently he has decided that discretion is the better part of valour, that the loss is so great that ten cents on the dollar is too small a matter for him to deal with.

There have been other failures, and I think we should know whether a precedent is being established. If no one is going to tell us what is the principle behind this payment, surely someone will tell us if this is to be a precedent; because this is not the only failure of this government. Why, their whole record for the last six years has been marked by colossal failures in every branch of agricultural production. What about the other products? These bulk traders imposed state control over bacon, eggs, cheese, and so on. According to "Foreign Trade of Canada, 1949", Canada supplied Britain with wheat, wheat flour, bacon, cheese, eggs, apples, tomatoes, salmon and other foodstuffs; and in every instance these commodities were sold to Britain for substantially less than Britain received them from any other source of supply. Under state control and the compulsory sale of cheese to Britain, our farmers received ten cents a pound less than on cheese sold anywhere else in the world, and the same thing applies to wheat flour, bacon, eggs, and all these other commodities.

In the absence of the Prime Minister this afternoon, will the Minister of Trade and Commerce tell us that this government is going to be fair; that this is not a political trick, and that this principle will apply to everything we sold? The Prime Minister said yesterday that if he finds even an expectancy in the country for support, we are going to give that support. He said there was a widespread belief in western Canada that more was due under the wheat agreement than had been paid; that such belief was due in part to a speech made by Mr. Strachey, and for that reason the Canadian government must now make a contribution, because the producers expected it. What about the other producers? We have a $65 million gunshot prescription for one kind of producer.

An hon. Member: Shotgun.

Mr. Rowe: Maybe it was. It looks as though they need a shotgun marriage over there at any time. We have that prescription for one line of producers. What about the others? Do you think those are the only expectant people in Canada? They expect a provincial election before long. This does not satisfy their expectancy. This will not even restore the Liberal party of Saskatchewan, let alone satisfy the expectancy of the western producers.

Mr. Sinnott: Time will tell.

Mr. Rowe: Yes, because you are so silent in here; heaven only knows what you will say on this issue when you get out there.

Mr. Sinnott: I spoke in the house.

Mr. Rowe: That is right. The hon. member made a speech. I must say that I was interested and amused.

Mr. Knowles: He was not here to vote, though.

Mr. Rowe: I think the government owe a duty to Canada. After all, $65 million may not seem to be a great deal of money, but it means a great deal of money. It means about $25 for every income tax payer in Canada. If the western farmers were paid what they lost owing to the state's mishandling of their products, it would cost the average income tax payer of Canada $250. When these items come before us like this, I must say that I find myself in one hundred per cent agreement with what the leader of the opposition stated this afternoon, namely, that you cannot laugh these things off. When we have people in every walk of life today struggling with the high cost of living, struggling to keep their sons and daughters at university, struggling to meet their budgets, men and women in all walks of life, then losses that mean $250 apiece to every income tax payer are matters that should not be laughed off, no matter how big the support you have in this parliament.

I am not trying to make insinuations. I know that there are those who think there must be a polecat under the table with regard to this agreement. Before this question is put, to the members who were so gallant and gleeful in pounding on their desks no matter what the argument was, and who tried to laugh off the leaders of the opposition groups on this side of the house, who in their speeches tried to minimize this issue, who tried to say that the loss is not three-quarters of a million dollars, who tried to say that $65 million is fair, I say this: How do we know we are not going to have the same reckless lavishness with all other lines of production in this country? Because some group expected it, and because we all expect a provincial election, should we make a settlement so arbitrarily made as this one?

I claim, Mr. Speaker, that the minister owes to this house an explanation as to what the general policy is going to be. All those agreements I have mentioned, all the agreements we had with Britain for foodstuffs, have gone by the board. We have one for five years with the world, in the international wheat agreement. If this government refuse to take the advice or council of the wheat pools and the western farmers in Canada, and ignore the wheat board, they may make as big a failure of this as they have of the other agreements. But if they are going to pay ten cents on the dollar or less—if that is going to be the principle to be followed—then as trustees of the taxpayers of this dominion we should know whether we are going to be asked to pay, as a token, ten per cent of the expectancy of the cheese producers, of the bacon producers and the egg producers.

Somebody says there is a moral obligation on Britain. If there is a moral obligation on Britain—and I do not agree that there is —then there is just as much and more here—imagine the spectacle we have, Mr. Speaker: the Minister of Trade and Commerce saying that there is no legal obligation; the Prime Minister saying that where there is no legal obligation. The Minister of Trade and Commerce went over there last May—he said it was not April—and came back home and accepted that; and the Prime Minister last night said they accepted it. Then the Minister of Agriculture, despite that, went back in the hope of getting a settlement.

Mr. Ross (Souris): That was just a publicity stunt.

Mr. Rowe: It was not even a good publicity stunt. He may have taken a friend with him, and he has even changed his mind since he came back. But if there was anything more ridiculous than for him to go over and to hope to change that settlement, it was the Prime Minister himself asking the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom if he, as the Prime Minister of Canada—after all the efforts of these other champions of trade had failed—if he could go to the Chancellor of the Exchequer. Oh, what a struggle they put up to make the wheat producers and the taxpayers of Canada think it was not coming out of the Canadian treasury!

Now that it is bare of the disguising cloak and we see it almost as it is, the truth of the matter is that the $65 million has no relationship whatsoever to the balance of the loan that was not taken up by Britain. It has no relationship any more than about one-tenth to the loss itself. It has no relationship to the moral obligation to make that compensation because it is only ten cents on the dollar. That is all it is, to my mind, Mr. Speaker, unless it is explained further by these gentlemen who seem to be wiser in their silence than in their speeches. Unless they explain it further, it looks to me like a political principle, an easy way out, with the treasury flowing with money; it is trying to say to the western farmers: You may have lost some, but we gave you $65 million and we will deal with the other when we come to it; then the organization across the country can start to develop expectancies, and then we will pay them maybe a nickel on their expectancies.

I do not know whether the Minister of Agriculture will be as great a champion for the egg producer, for the hog producer or for the cheese producer in Ontario as he has been in western Canada. If he runs another campaign and talks as loud and as long about long-term stability on a fair basis, they will not be satisfied, Mr. Speaker, with ten cents on the dollar, because they will say: If there is a moral obligation, then pay your obligation. If there is no moral obligation, do not insult us with ten cents on the dollar.

Mr. J. L. Gibson (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have been listening carefully for the past twenty minutes to the hon. and genial member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe). What I was trying hard to hear was whether or not he was opposed to this $65 million payment.

An hon. Member: Are you?

Mr. Gibson: Yes, I am.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Are you going to vote against it?

Mr. Gibson: To tell you the truth, all I am particularly concerned about at this moment is this. I had made an arrangement with the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Gagnon), who is listed as an Independent, that he would second a motion of mine asking that no funds be taken out of the consolidated revenue fund to be paid to the wheat producers. He is not in the house so I am now quite frank to say that I am looking for someone to second this motion. So far, I have not had any takers.

Mr. Ross (Souris): This is hardly the right place for it.

Mr. Gibson: I should like to have the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe honour my motion by seconding it.

Mr. Rowe: I would be much out of order if I did it right now.

Mr. Gibson: I submit that the motion is in order.

Mr. Ferguson: The hon. member is posing as an Independent; he is a Conservative.

Mr. Gibson: I am not trying to put the hon. member on the spot. I know quite a few members around this house who are opposed to this payment but I have not found one who would second my motion. If no hon. member in the house does care to second my motion, I am afraid I am in the rather unfortunate position of being a lone independent.

Mr. Rowe: The rest of the house recognizes the rules. You cannot move the motion now.

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): In taking part in this debate hon. members should bear in mind that some of the things that have been said with reference to Britain not having lived up to her agreement may lead to greater difficulty in marketing Canadian wheat in Britain in the future. We need the British market year in and year out, and I deplore suggestions by hon. members opposite to the effect that Britain has not fulfilled this agreement in every way, especially after the documents which were tabled last night have been made public and after the statement that has been made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe). I want to make it perfectly clear too, as has already been said by the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Wright), that we in this party support the wheat board as the sole marketing agent for wheat. We go even further than that and we say that all grains should be placed under the wheat board.

In the time that I have been in parliament, Mr. Speaker, I have never seen an exhibition before similar to the one that we have had since Thursday of last week. We saw the the spectacle of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) rising in his place, and in spite of his full knowledge that the Canadian government had agreed back on May 30 of last year that Britain had fulfilled the wheat agreement in every way, attempt to mislead this house by making statements which have since been proven absolutely false.

The Minister of Agriculture made statements a number of times such as this one on page 1120 of Hansard:

> The fact is that the British government accepted the position that this government did not agree.

He was there referring to the fulfilment of the "have regard to" clause. Then we had this statement on page 1066 of Hansard:

> It was suggested both in this house and outside that the government had announced agreement with the British in their contention that they had met their obligations. That was not the case, and in the hope that a removal of that opinion might change the decision the re-opening of the discussions was pressed.

Then of course we have the document tabled in the house last night which absolutely and completely contradicts that statement by the Minister of Agriculture that the Canadian government had not agreed that Britain had fulfilled the "have regard to" clause.

I do not wish at this time to quote from that document; it has already been placed in the record in its entirety by the leader of this group. As if to further clinch the same point, the Minister of Trade and Commerce said this at page 1168 of Hansard:

> I intend to show that the Canadian and British governments entered into an agreement that was beneficial to both the Canadian producer and the British consumer, and that the terms of that agreement were fully observed on both sides.

And to emphasize that statement even further, the Minister of Trade and Commerce said this in the last sentence concluding his speech on Monday night:

> I am happy the way it has worked out, and I deplore the suggestion that the British government has not played fair with the Canadian people.

All I can say, Mr. Speaker, in view of the statements of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, in view of the document that was brought down last night, is that any further reference to Britain not having fulfilled the contract should not be made by any hon. member in this house, because surely it has already been proven that such an accusation is completely and wholly false.

This government agreed on May 30 of last year, eight days after the consultations had been completed in Britain, that the British government had fulfilled the "have regard to" clause in every way. The document produced last night proves my point. But eight days elapsed between the time that document was drawn up in Britain and the decision made by the Canadian cabinet.

Yesterday, in reply to a question from the hon. member for Melfort, the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) told us that within that eight-day period the farm organizations had not been consulted. I want to read the question and answer:

> Mr. Wright: Was there any consultation with the representatives of the western wheat pools or the advisory committee of the wheat board between the time the Minister of Trade and Commerce returned from England, in the latter part of May, and the time the government accepted the proposals that he brought back from the British government with regard to the final settlement?
> Mr. St. Laurent: There was no consultation with the advisory board or the wheat pool between the return of the minister and the acceptance of the proposals. The proposals were proposals for the purchase of a certain portion of the 1950 crop. We did not treat as a proposal their declaration that they had fulfilled all their obligations under the contract. We treated that as their decision, and we accepted it as their decision.
>
> Mr. Wright: You accepted it, though, as a final settlement without consultation with the producers or their representatives.
> Mr. St. Laurent: There was no consultation at that time.

There is the breach of faith in relation to this whole wheat situation. That breach of faith occurred when this government agreed that Britain had fulfilled the "have regard to" clause, without prior consultation with the farmers or with the representatives of farm organizations. This was literally nothing more than a sell-out of the western wheat producers and the western farm organizations.

Then last month we had the spectacle of the Minister of Agriculture making a flight to Britain and taking with him a representative of the Saskatchewan wheat pool, the president, Mr. J. H. Wesson. I say that Mr. Wesson would not have made that trip had he known that this government had agreed on May 30, and had he seen the document that was produced in relation to that agreement. But I have no doubt in my mind that the Minister of Agriculture said exactly the same thing to the president of the Saskatchewan wheat pool as he said to parliament and to the people of Canada last Thursday night, namely, that Britain had not fulfilled the "have regard to" clause, and that the Canadian government had never agreed that Britain had fulfilled that clause.

Mr. McCusker: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Argue: Yes.

Mr. McCusker: Is he aware that one of the ministers of the C.C.F. government in Saskatchewan has twice made the statement in the Saskatchewan legislature that Britain overpaid us?

Mr. Argue: Of course I can answer the hon. member. The statement made in the Saskatchewan legislature a few days ago has nothing at all to do with what this government did on May 30, last year, namely—

Mr. McCusker: Why doesn't the hon. member answer my question?

Mr. Argue: I am answering. Namely, not consult the farmer organizations before the government said the "have regard" clause had been fulfilled. Nothing the hon. member for Regina City (Mr. McCusker) can say will get around that fact. Again I say—

Mr. McCusker: My question has not been answered.

Mr. Argue: You can make your speech. Follow me, and take your forty minutes. Nothing the hon. member for Regina City can say removes the clear fact that the Canadian government agreed that Great Britain had fulfilled the "have regard" clause, without having first consulted the representatives of the wheat producers.

I can say that, step by step, throughout the years of the agreement, and since that time, the government has not hesitated to play politics of the worst kind with the Canadian wheat board. I am just wondering if one of the reasons the settlement of the "have regard" clause was postponed from January 20, 1949 to July 31, 1950 was that within that period of time a federal election was to be held in Canada.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Sure it was.

Mr. Argue: And another thing: For ten months the government concealed the fact that by making the 20-cent payment in 1949 they were placing the wheat board in a deficit position.

The Liberal party does not have to go around at election time and make little, petty promises, or pass out a few dollars, in the hope that it will get votes, because by manipulation of the wheat board they have hundreds of millions of dollars of the farmers' own money; and by paying it out just before an election, and not revealing the facts of the situation to the farmers, they were successful of course in misleading them to the extent that many farmers voted for the government.

Although a document was agreed to on May 30 of last year, it has taken the government ten months to reveal a transaction in which western farmers had an interest running to as much as or more than $100 million.

I support the wheat-board method of marketing grain, but I deplore the government's using the wheat board as a tool for its own political purposes and advancement. We have had one vote in the debate in which Liberal members from the west voted against a 25 cents a bushel final payment. Notwithstanding the very clearly stated facts, they have risen in the house and said that the British government should have paid more; but I have gone through their speeches carefully and I find that not one of them has said to the government, which in the final analysis is responsible to the Canadian wheat producers, "We want more than $65 million." Not one of them has said that—although when I make that statement I must add that I was pleased last night to see the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Helme) and the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Decore) stand in their places and vote for the payment of 25 cents a bushel. I am going west at Eastertime, and a number of meetings have already been arranged for me. I shall be speaking in the constituency of Prince Albert, and when there I am going to say at each of the meetings that I was pleased to see that the hon. member for Prince Albert supported the C.C.F. motion calling upon the government to consider a payment of 25 cents a bushel, even though his colleagues from Saskatchewan voted against it.

Do you know, Mr. Speaker, the Liberal party is a funny animal.

An hon. Member: The C.C.F. is, too.

Mr. Argue: They say one thing in Ottawa and something else in Saskatchewan. The other day one Liberal member said he was tickled to death that the government was paying $65 million. I think if he went back to Saskatchewan the farmers would probably tickle him to death. In any event, the $65 million, which is plenty for western farmers, so far as the Saskatchewan Liberal members of parliament as a whole are concerned, the $65 million which is plenty so far as Liberal members from other parts of Canada are concerned, is not enough for the leader of the Liberal party in Saskatchewan. For, according to the Leader-Post of March 12:

> Walter Tucker, Saskatchewan Liberal leader, and other party officials were empowered Saturday by the Saskatchewan Liberal executive to co-operate fully with the Saskatchewan wheat pool and other organizations in an attempt to obtain at least another $48 million from the federal government to compensate western wheat producers for wheat used for domestic consumption at $1.25 a bushel, between March 1, 1945 and February 17, 1947.

Liberals in Saskatchewan are going to co-operate to bring pressure upon the government to get another $48 million. They should begin by bringing pressure upon Saskatchewan Liberal members of parliament to stand in their places in the House of Commons and ask now for a further payment of $48 million.

To sum up, I deplore the statements which have been made that Great Britain has not fulfilled the contract. I am afraid that statements like that, which are not in any way based upon the facts of the situation, may well lead to difficulty in maintaining an adequate market in Great Britain for our wheat in years to come. I deplore the fact that Liberal members of parliament from western Canada have not come out and demanded a further substantial payment.

I say this to them in conclusion: They could not see fit to vote for the C.C.F. subamendment calling upon the government to pay another 25 cents a bushel, but certainly there should be nothing to stop them standing in the house and going at least as far as the Liberal leader of Saskatchewan by asking now for a further payment, over and above the $65 million, of not less than another $48 million.

Mr. Bruneau: I rise to a question of privilege. The hon. member who has just taken his seat claims that the Liberal is a strange animal, because certain members say one thing out west and another thing here. If we were to follow up that argument, then I should think that if the Liberal party is a funny animal then, much as I hate to say it, the C.C.F. party is a monster. Because not so long ago in a speech in the house—

An hon. Member: What is the privilege?

Mr. Bruneau: The question of privilege is this: I draw the attention of the house to the fact that the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Knight) said out west that he was opposed to price control—

Mr. MacInnis: He denied it.

Mr. Bruneau: —and then he supported a subamendment in the house to the effect that he was for price controls. Now, that is surely saying one thing out west and another thing here.

Mr. Coldwell: On a point of order, the hon. member for Saskatoon rose on a question of privilege and put the record straight. The newspaper in question, the Saskatoon Star-Phœnix, corrected its error.

Mr. MacInnis: He would not know that.

Mr. Bruneau: Those are the remarks of the hon. member for Saskatoon. He claims the newspaper was wrong. That is all we were given.

Mr. Coldwell: The newspaper accepted his correction and admitted that its reporter was wrong.

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested—

Mr. Knight: On a question of privilege: my name has been brought into the debate. I say this, and I think I am safe in saying it, that the hon. member for Prescott (Mr. Bruneau)—I think that is the constituency he represents—accepted my word that the original report in the Star-Phœnix was wrong. I have in my files at the present time—unfortunately I do not have it in my desk here in the house—a further report from the same paper of a few days later recording the incident in the house and admitting the original report was wrong. I reported all this to the hon. member for Prescott and at that time he accepted my explanation in words to the effect that the press does make mistakes or that sort of thing. The matter has been abundantly proved both by the acknowledgment of the paper in question and by a letter, a copy of which I have, which was received—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member cannot start a new debate.

Mr. Coldwell: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has a right to put the record straight and to ask the hon. member for Prescott, who was elected under one guise and who sits under another, to withdraw.

Mr. Bruneau: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member has placed on the record everything that is sufficient and I think the matter should be closed.

Mr. Knight: I have to say that—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Knowles: The hon. member has the right to speak.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think the hon. member has proved his point.

Mr. Knowles: The hon. member has a right to speak for forty minutes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In the debate, not on the point of order.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, you have just said that I have put everything on the record that was sufficient, but I just wanted to finish my last sentence and state that I have in my possession a letter from men who attended that particular meeting and who informed me they had written to the Star-Phoenix protesting against the inaccuracy of the report and corroborating that I had always been in favour of price controls at any time they had heard me speak.

I have now finished with my question of privilege, but since I have been dragged into this debate, since my name has been mentioned, I should like to say a word or two about the subject under discussion. I had not intended to speak upon the matter but when my Liberal friends bait me I have to rise to the occasion. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) has made certain charges and has pointed out that the attitude of the Liberal supporters in this house who are from Saskatchewan is different from the attitude of the Liberal leader in Saskatchewan. He had before him the report of the Leader-Post from which he quoted, and I have also my own paper, the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix, to which the hon. member for Prescott referred. I do not see why a Regina paper which is an inferior paper should be quoted in this house without my putting my own paper on the record.

Mr. McCusker: May I ask the hon. member a question?

An hon. Member: Make a speech.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must remind hon. members that a member cannot be interrupted without his consent.

Mr. McCusker: I was asking the hon. member if I could ask a question?

Mr. Knight: No.

Mr. Ferrie: He is scared of you.

Mr. Knight: I would suggest to my hon. friends who see a C.C.F.'er under every bush that they make their own speeches. They have been challenged by the hon. member for Assiniboia to get up and talk for forty minutes and let us know what they think about this particular wheat settlement. The hon. member for Regina City (Mr. McCusker) will have an opportunity to speak for forty minutes after I sit down and if he does I shall listen to him with great attention.

I was saying when I was interrupted that misrepresentation is not confined to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner). The Liberal leader in Saskatchewan has been keeping true to form. I should like to put on the record a certain statement of his which the hon. member for Assiniboia could have used if he had desired. The following report appeared in the Star-Phoenix:

> Regina, March 12 (CP)—Walter Tucker, Saskatchewan Liberal leader, said Friday night in a radio broadcast that moral support from C.C.F. speakers might have had "a definite influence" on Britain's decision to refuse Canada a further payment on the Anglo-Canadian wheat agreement.

According to the date of the report, Mr. Tucker must have made that statement in full consciousness of the statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) to the effect that they knew, that the Canadian government knew, last May, that the obligations of the British government had been completely fulfilled. Yet he proceeded at this late date, March 12, to say what I have just quoted. The article continues:

> The Liberal leader said the British government had at one time recognized its obligation to make an additional payment at the conclusion of the wheat contract.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce has dealt with that statement much more adequately than I can. Another paragraph in the article is in quotation marks as indicating the actual words of Mr. Tucker. This reads:

> "Unfortunately the view of a definite obligation of the British government to make a substantial payment in settlement of her obligations under the agreement was not supported by all Canadian political parties."

It was certainly not supported by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. It is not supported by the majority of Liberals in this house. You have definite proof of the truth of what the hon. member for Assiniboia has said that what the Liberals in this house are saying is different from what is being said by their counterparts in Saskatchewan.

Those who have listened to this debate know of the gross misrepresentation that has been made here. The crux of the whole debate, the high point in the discussion, I think everyone will agree, was the production of the memorandum of the meeting between representatives of the British and Canadian governments which the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) read into the house record last night. That was a memorandum of a conference held in London on May 22. On May 30—I draw this to the attention of my Liberal friends and of Mr. Tucker—the Canadian government acknowledged to Britain that she had fulfilled her obligations. They apparently did not tell anyone about it. Apparently Mr. Tucker did not know. Apparently the grain producers in Canada did not know. Apparently Mr. Wesson of the wheat pools did not know. The Minister of Agriculture knew, but he did not tell. He laid his plan for what I might term the great deception.

While I am on my feet I might say that I am in accord with the amendment which we moved to increase the payment to at least 25 cents per bushel. I am in favour also of the amendment moved by the leader of the Conservative party.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Not the leader yet.

Mr. Knight: I mean the Conservative amendment moved by the hon. member for Souris.

Mr. J. H. Ferguson (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I want to say just a few words about the false hopes which were held out to the western farmers of an ultimate further payment for their products by certain members of parliament and of the government. In my opinion that was shameful. I only hope that the same practice is not being carried on, and that false hope is not being raised, so far as the producers of all other commodities produced by all farmers are concerned. At the same time I should like to introduce into the House of Commons today something that was pleaded for by a senator in Washington with tears in his eyes just a few days ago, a little more of the word of the Lord. The fact that the government have offered in their generosity to cover up their sins with a payment of $65 million to the western farmers, and their lack of reasons for their action, remind me of certain passages in the Bible. I refer to St. Matthew, chapter 19, verses 23 and 24, which read as follows:

> Then said Jesus unto His disciples, Verily I say unto you, That a rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven.
> And again I say unto you, It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God.

That is not simply a text; it is a parable given to all mankind to read, digest, remember and abide by. Let me say to members of the Liberal government that $65 million, or any amount of money, will not make it any easier for them to put it over on the public of Canada at the next election than for a camel to go through the eye of a needle and the rich man to enter into the kingdom of God. Falsification and riches will not get them any further with any more success than is contained in the warning of the Lord.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I wish to place one matter clearly before the house. I must confess I was somewhat surprised at the statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson) when he challenged my interpretation of what he said earlier this afternoon. I now have Hansard typescript, and I find that the remarks I referred to of the Secretary of State for External Affairs are reported as follows:

> Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I might just say that my recollection in regard to these matters, in regard to all matters that have been brought up, coincides exactly with what has been said by the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

It was to that statement that I referred namely, when he said that his recollection coincided exactly with that of the Minister of Trade and Commerce in regard to all matters that had been brought up. He then challenged my statement and said that he was referring only to the first sentence of paragraph (c) in this communiqué. Hansard does not bear out what he said.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, on a matter of privilege, in reply to what the hon. gentleman has just said about my remarks as quoted from Hansard by him, I would say that the matters to which I was referring at that time, and to which the hon. gentleman was referring, were those arising out of paragraph (c) of the document in question.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Ross, Souris), which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Ross (Souris): I was paired with the right hon. member for Melville (Mr. Gardiner). Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. Cardiff: I was paired. Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I was paired with the hon. member for Yukon-Mackenzie River (Mr. Simmons). Had I voted I would have voted in favour of the amendment.

Mr. Catherwood: I was paired with the hon. member for Kent, Ont. (Mr. Huffman). Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on the main motion.

Mr. William Bryce (Selkirk): Before I start, Mr. Speaker, I want to assure you that in what I am going to say I am not going to talk about the British agreement. I want to talk about and to support the amendments to the wheat board act.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Could the house decide now that no further discussions, on second reading, be allowed on the United Kingdom agreement?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Bryce: In rising to support the amendments to this act, I want first to say how pleased I was when this act was put on the statute books away back in 1935. It was something for which the western farmer had fought a long time. While we can sit back now and criticize the things that the government has done with the board, there is no doubt that the wheat board has given to the grain farmer stability which he never had before. At one time we had in operation two systems which were available to the producer; that is, he could sell his wheat on the open market or he could sell it to the wheat board. But it was found that when wheat was scarce and commanded a good price, the farmers had a tendency to take the big price as long as it lasted and then, when the price fell, they immediately sold their wheat to the board.

It has been a great step forward in western Canada to have the wheat board handle not only wheat but also oats and barley. As to oats and barley, I believe further improvement can be made. But we still have speculation in rye and flax. You cannot go to a farmers' meeting in western Canada without being confronted with the questions: When is the wheat board going to take over rye and flax? When are they also going to be taken off the speculative market? Why should the farmer have to sell his flax and rye on a speculative market when we have the facilities for handling those grains in a pooling system?

I should like to quote from the Toronto Daily Star of January 29, 1951. This statement relates to some remarks the editor made with reference to a statement made by Professor McDougall of Queen's university, and is as follows:

> The strong feelings expressed by the farm representatives are rooted in the history of Canadian grain marketing. During the many years when grain was traded on the Winnipeg grain exchange, many farmers believed, correctly or incorrectly, that speculators were depriving them of profits. The great majority appear content to have the government market their grain through the Canadian wheat board, with the year's price assured when planting begins. Practical experience, not merely theories or suspicions about private grain companies, underlies prevailing prairie opinion about the wheat pools. These giant co-operatives now handle virtually half the grain produced in the three prairie provinces. Through them the member farmer can assure himself of fair grades on his grain and minimum handling charges. The pools pay the farmers dividends based on the volume of grain they market, and during the quarter-century in which the pools have operated these patronage dividends have totalled more than $27 million. To stay in business, some private grain companies have been forced to do likewise. Where else in Canada do private firms pay dividends to their customers?
> In view of such results, it is futile to tell grain growers that their pools have no real value.

This shows what the farmer thinks. We have come a long way since the days of Roderick McKenzie, Colin Burnell, Dan Chapman and other men like that who fought for the right to be allowed to load their own grain in a car without putting it through the elevator. Along with these can be added names of men from Saskatchewan and Alberta who have been pioneers in the farm movement in those provinces. The dreams of these men are gradually becoming true, but as long as we leave rye and flax in a speculative market we still have something to fight for.

Last fall it was estimated that western Canada would have a crop of flax of about three million bushels; that is, for the 1950-51 crop year. Statistics show that about two and a half million bushels were delivered up to about December 1, so the tremendous increase that took place in flax prices never gave any benefit to the man who produced the flax; because I would say 75 per cent of the farmers market their crops when they have to make their payments—and that is in the fall—and do not wait until the spring to sell their crops. Of course some farmers do; some who are financially well fixed can play the market, and delight in doing so. But the bona fide farmer who is out for stability and steady prices over a period of years does not try to play the market.

I should like to draw to the attention of hon. members the fluctuation that took place in flax in six months. On August 1, 1950, the price of No. 1 C. W. flax was $3.63; on September 1, 1950, it was $3.82; on October 2, 1950, it was $3.68; on November 1, 1950, it was $3.58¼; on December 1, 1950, it was $3.81; on January 2, 1951, it was $4.21; and on February 1, 1951, it was $5.71. You have a spread there of $2.08. The farmer did not get that. That went into other channels. I leave you to guess who got it.

Under the pooling system all producers agree to accept the same price, which would in most cases be an average price. I would at this time urge the government to place flax and rye under the wheat board because I honestly believe it is beneficial to the producers of grain, no matter what grain he is producing. I am not going to deal with the speculation which has taken place on rye over a number of years, as I have put that story on record here before. But what has happened to flax and rye on a speculative market could happen to any grain, and we know that the wheat board could and can protect the farmer.

The wheat board is still using the speculative market to sell oats and barley against the wishes of a large majority of the western producers. This is borne out by some of the recent pool conventions where resolutions were passed asking that the wheat board discontinue the use of the speculative market in the selling of oats and barley. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture in their most recent brief asked that the use of the speculative market be reduced or eliminated altogether.

I would have liked to bring in an amendment at this time to include these things, but I have read very carefully the remarks you made two days ago, Mr. Speaker, and I had an idea you would rule me out of order. I want to play safe, but to my way of thinking as a layman, rye and flax are tied in with barley, oats and wheat. The amendment that I would have liked to bring in at this time would have been quite all right so far as I am concerned, but I have never been able to look at a thing in a legal way as you can, sir, and sometimes when I hear some of the legal opinions expressed in this house I am glad that my mind does not act in that way.

I think I have made my point quite clear. I do hope the day is not far distant when the western farmer will market all his grain through the pooling system, and through the wheat board. While I shake my head and frown sometimes when I see and hear the things that the wheat board is blamed for in connection with political manoeuvring, I hope that not only this government but any other government that is in power in Canada will get rid of that sort of thing and not make the wheat board a political tool.

Mr. P. E. Wright (Melfort): I should like to say a few words in support of what the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bryce) has just said. We are supporting the amendments which are in this Bill No. 5, which is now before the house, but I wonder whether they will be implemented or not, because last year we passed an amendment in this house to the wheat board act, which gave the government authority to add two additional members to the wheat board. So far as I know that has not been implemented up to date.

In my opinion the present members of the wheat board are overworked. As a matter of fact, we are simply killing these men. They are valuable men; they are men who have done a very good job for the western farmer in the marketing of his grain. Probably they are three of the best informed men in grain marketing in the world today. It is a shame that we should overwork them. It is a shame that they should not have some more assistance on the board, because the marketing of coarse grain has become quite a problem.

Some of the things that we are suggesting, and I am going to suggest as we go along in this debate, are not offered as a criticism of the wheat board itself but as a criticism of the authority the government is giving them in the matter of the marketing of our grain. I am sure that when the western farmers asked that their grain be marketed through the board they had three major objectives in mind. First, they preferred an average price for the grain that they had to sell over the years. They have tried for the last thirty or forty years to guess the market as to when they could get the best price for their grain, and they have come to the conclusion that as far as they were concerned they would rather see their grain sold by some organization or some board and obtain an average price for that grain over the years so that they would not have to guess the market. The second reason why they preferred to have their grain marketed under a board system was to get away from the speculative market and to prevent speculation in their products.

The third reason—and I want the eastern people to remember this—was that we in western Canada wanted to get our grain to the ultimate consumer in the most direct method that was possible and with the least margin between what the consumers in eastern Canada had to pay and what we as western producers received.

Under the present wheat board system I think we have gone only part of the way in accomplishing those objectives. The first objective we have accomplished fully. That is, we do get the average price that is obtained for our grain over the years, and we do not have to guess the market.

The second matter, that of preventing speculation, has only been partially accomplished because the board are continuing to use the Winnipeg grain exchange in the marketing of our coarse grains. It has been very definitely indicated to the government by various farm organizations that they would prefer to have the board stop using the Winnipeg grain exchange as the method of marketing of coarse grains.

I hold in my hand the twenty-sixth annual report of the Saskatchewan Co-operative Producers, Limited, and under the heading "coarse grains marketing" the following appears:

> A resolution passed at the last annual meeting of delegates urged that the speculative element in marketing grain should be eliminated and a marketing system established which would ensure stability in prices, both for producer and consumer. The resolution also asked that the wheat board's coarse grains marketing policy be changed to give effect to the wishes of organized farmers in this connection. This matter was also taken up with the government in the submission above referred to and it was urged that the marketing of coarse grains should be the responsibility solely of the Canadian wheat board and that the speculative market should be closed.

The Canadian Federation of Agriculture in their last submission to the cabinet, which they presented just recently, had this to say:

> Our convention favoured the continuation of the wheat board as the sole marketing agency for coarse grains but they expressed the view that the board should make only the minimum use of the future market in order that experience may point a way to a sounder and more acceptable marketing policy.

In other words, they want the board to discontinue the Winnipeg grain exchange except in a moderate way.

I had a return tabled in the house recently in answer to a question of mine. In the question I asked the government as to the amount of sales of each coarse grain in the Winnipeg grain exchange. The return was tabled on February 9. I am just going to give the round figures. It says that the wheat board bought 80 million bushels of oats from the western producer and 53 million bushels of barley. It shows that of that 80 million bushels of oats which they had bought from the western producer, 65,785,000 bushels were sold through the Winnipeg grain exchange. Of the 53 million bushels of barley bought from the western farmer, 37,808,000 bushels were disposed of on the speculative market, through the Winnipeg grain exchange. I know that with the board controlling all this grain there is not the same speculative element on the market that there was before we had the board, but nevertheless there is a speculative market, and I want to give the reason why. The reason is this: climatic conditions in this country are such that when we thresh our crop in western Canada in August, September and October there are large deliveries of coarse grains. Those coarse grains must be moved or can be moved more cheaply to eastern Canada before navigation closes.

As it now operates, the wheat board does not ship grain, except to Port Arthur and Fort William. Therefore they have to sell large quantities of that grain, as is indicated in the return made to me, on the speculative market in Winnipeg. They have to sell it on the Winnipeg grain exchange, so that the commission firms may get possession of the grain and move it to eastern Canada before navigation closes.

The return tabled in my name shows that sales of oats by the Canadian wheat board in the months of August, September, October and November in the 1949-50 crop year were, in August, 6,843,319 bushels; September, 8,816,078; October, 11,158,399 and November, 11,653,206. The other months dropped to 5 million or less. During these same months there were sold on the Winnipeg grain exchange the following amounts of oats: August, 6,596,000 bushels; September, 7,365,000; October, 8,880,000 and November, 10,128,000.

This grain was sold to the commission firms through the Winnipeg grain exchange. During those months the price of oats in particular was much lower than it was in the early months of the following year. By March the price had jumped from approximately 90 cents, as it had been in the fall, to well over $1.25.

My contention is that we will never have a satisfactory wheat board until it is prepared to move this grain from western Canada to the terminal elevators in eastern Canada, to keep control of the grain, to establish selling agencies in eastern Canada and to sell the grain direct to the consumers in this part of the country. To do that they will have to have more personnel on the board. But as it stands at the present time, the small consumer or small co-operative in eastern Canada, the small chap in this part of the country who has a feed plant and grinds that feed to sell in his neighbourhood, finds that he cannot deal directly with the board.

I know the provisions state that the board can sell directly to him. Nevertheless the procedure is such that he is not able to buy directly from the board. I have before me a copy of a letter sent to one of the eastern mill owners who is grinding feed to serve his own locality. This man wrote to the board to see if he could buy directly from it, and this was the advice they gave him:

> It is the general practice for eastern feeders to procure their supplies of feeding grains through the commercial channels in the Winnipeg grain exchange. Most of these organizations maintain stocks in positions applicable to the requirements of the eastern trade. Daily quotations may be procured from such firms. All the forwarding details and collections are the responsibility of such forwarding firms.

Then, proceeding to tell him how he can buy directly from the board, they say:

> The Canadian wheat board does not forward coarse grains beyond the in store Fort William/Port Arthur position. If you so desire, however, this board will sell such grains as they have on hand to eastern customers upon application. The prices will be those established at the close of each day's market. Such prices are in effect from the close of one day until 9.30 the following morning. These prices are available at all large trading centres across Canada, and are published daily by the Canadian wheat board.
> When such purchases are made, it is the responsibility of the buyer to appoint an agent such as a bank or an accredited legal firm to take delivery of documents covering the grain required. It is also the responsibility of the purchaser to arrange with terminal elevators at the head of the lakes for the loading of such grain. You will also be required to file orders with the railroads giving proper destination. The Canadian wheat board will deliver to your agent the warehouse receipt covering the grade of grain required in some designated elevator in Fort William/Port Arthur. Such terminal elevator would require that these documents be turned over to them before the grain is loaded out and billed for your account.

And then they go on to say:

> The procedure is rather involved and I doubt that any saving would be made by you in following such a course.

The average small co-operative in eastern Canada, in other words, just does not have an agent in Winnipeg. He does not have an agent at the head of the lakes. The result is that he must depend upon a commission firm in Winnipeg to bring that grain forward to eastern Canada and thus make it available. The result was that this year our harvest was late and very little of our grain was moved into forward positions in eastern Canada to serve the eastern feeder during the winter months. I believe if the board had been handling the matter and had not been depending upon commission firms it could have moved greater quantities of that grain into forward positions in eastern Canada.

After all, those of us in western Canada are interested in making our feed grains available to our customers in eastern Canada in the best possible way. We would like to see that grain placed down here in eastern elevators. We want the grades maintained right up to the time the ultimate consumer gets that grain. At the present time the grain loses its identity at the head of the lakes. The commission firm buying it up there brings it to eastern Canada and is permitted to mix it or do anything it likes. The result is that the feeder in eastern Canada is not getting as good a grade as he should be. I have seen many samples of feed grains being sold in eastern Canada, and they certainly have not been the grades of grain we sell in the west. It is mixed before it goes to the small mill owner, the small crushing plant or the co-operative in eastern Canada.

I do not think our wheat board will be the success it should be in the marketing of our coarse grains until it takes the responsibility of bringing the grain forward to eastern Canada and placing it in terminal elevators, so that the producers in eastern Canada may go to those agencies and make direct purchases of their requirements, in the knowledge that they are getting a fair sample of the grain they are supposed to be purchasing. I believe this could be done; to my mind there could be no objection to it.

That is what our farm organizations are seeking. A year ago, because of the quality of the feed being sold in eastern Canada, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, in their presentation to the cabinet said, as it is set out at page 12, that an investigation should be made into the marketing and distributing of feed grains going into protein feeds in Canada, because of the mixing which takes place. I believe much of that could be prevented if the wheat board were to move the grain to forward positions in eastern Canada.

Another matter I should like to bring to the attention of the government is that we should make greater use of the port of Churchill. At present there is in storage at that point approximately 450,000 bushels of grain. The capacity of the port is 2,500,000 bushels. It has a drying capacity of from 15,000 to 20,000 bushels of grain every twenty-four hours. We are not moving any grain to that port for drying. I suppose the reason is that the wheat board believes that that grain which needs drying will be difficult to sell to European buyers out of that port when ships are available next July.

I would point out that a lot of this damp and tough grain is feed grain which could be moved into that port, dried, and then moved to the maritime provinces, if the wheat board wanted to take the responsibility of chartering vessels, to the elevators at Saint John and Halifax and made available for feed in eastern Canada. I hope the government will endeavour to make the wheat board the useful agency that it can be in the marketing of our grains.

I agree with the amendments provided for by this bill. As a matter of fact when I spoke on the speech from the throne I indicated that there had not been some mention made of amendments to the wheat board act which would do exactly what is done by section 3 of this bill, that is, give the wheat board authority at the end of each crop year to close out the pool and make some arrangement to take over the grain that remained and carry it forward into the next pool year.

When the bill is in committee we will have some suggestions to make and amendments to offer. I think perhaps the bill is loosely worded because it does not indicate at what price the government shall take over the grain. It simply states that the government may take over the grain. I think there should be an obligation on the government to take it over within a stated period.

We would then be passing a bill which meant something, not just placing another piece of legislation on the statute books as we did with the amendment last year to the wheat board act to increase the membership to five. I hope the government will implement that amendment passed last year so that this board will be able to do an even more efficient job than they have been doing in the past.

[Mr. Wright.]

I believe they have been doing a most efficient job in the marketing of our grain as far as their end of it is concerned. I do not agree with all the policies that they have had to carry out on behalf of the government but, as I say, they have done an efficient job. I am one hundred per cent behind the board method of handling our grain in western Canada.

Mr. A. Earl Catherwood (Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Wright) has referred to the amendment passed last year to increase the board membership to five. I certainly endorse that wholeheartedly and I would like to see one of the new members come either from Ontario or eastern Canada. I know the feed men and dealers in Ontario would strongly support this idea as they feel it would give a more efficient handling of feed in eastern Canada. I strongly support the suggestion.

Motion (Mr. Howe) agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

On section 1—"Pool period" defined.

Mr. Ross (Souris): Mr. Chairman, I have had to keep quiet for some days because I have taken full advantage of every opportunity afforded me to speak. However, I am not going to go over all the details that have been dealt with. I was one of the members who had questioned the Minister of Trade and Commerce on March 5 and I was disappointed that I could not speak at that time. Some people may wonder why I have not spoken again, and I am taking advantage of this opportunity to say a few words about coarse grains.

I am sure that our party is in favour generally of these amendments, but I should like to say just a few words about oats. I have always been a supporter of the wheat board, and am still. I am in favour of these amendments in principle, but there has been considerable dissatisfaction in connection with feed grain. As an example, a neighbour of mine has been growing registered seed. His product was being properly inspected and as he lived only twenty miles from the United States boundary there were people from the United States coming over and offering 90 cents a bushel for his oats. He wrote to the wheat board for a permit to sell his oats to the United States buyers who were ready to truck it away, but was refused.

Mr. Howe: Of course he was.

Mr. Ross (Souris): I think some of the regulations are pretty stiff under the circumstances. Then there is the other matter that was dealt with by the two speakers just before we went into committee. I refer to the differential between the price paid to the farmer and what is paid for feed in places like Russell and Glengarry counties close to Ottawa. Last year our final settlement for oats in my neighbourhood was approximately 70 cents, but the hon. member for Russell has stated that on April 5 he paid $76 per ton for oats. You can figure that out into the price per bushel and readily see the difference between what the producer gets and what the consumer in eastern Canada had to pay for his feed grain.

I think something should be done to improve the method of handling. Subsidies are being paid by the taxpayers, of which the producers pay their share, and the feeders down here should have been able to buy oats on a pooling basis at a price much closer to what was received by the producer. I should like to see some improvement made in this connection which would benefit both the producer and the feeder.

I do not want to delay this bill because, as I said, I am quite sure that this party is in favour of the amendments. If there has been hardship in connection with this year's crop it is most essential that some provision be made to meet it. I hope that as we take up the bill section by section something can be done to improve it still further.

Mr. Wright: Will the minister indicate what is the position in connection with implementing the amendment passed last year to increase the membership of the wheat board?

Mr. Howe: My hon. friend said that the membership of the wheat board is made up of the ablest men to be found in Canada. I am not sure that he did not say in the world. If I could find a fourth ablest man I would be very glad to appoint him to the board. It is not easy to get men of that calibre. I am not willing to take anything less. I am not willing to take a man who is not up to the calibre of the three men I have on that board. If my hon. friend can name a man who knows as much about marketing wheat as those three I will be very glad to appoint him.

Mr. Wright: I am afraid I cannot, but I am afraid that one of these three men will be dead inside of another eighteen months unless some assistance is given. I think you have got to take that into consideration. These men cannot carry the load they are carrying indefinitely. In my opinion even a man who did not have all the qualifications of the three men presently on the board would be better than no man at all.

Mr. Howe: I would question that. I would want to have the board tell me that the man I proposed to appoint would actually be a help to them rather than otherwise. I know enough about boards to know that a man who is not competent actually slows down the work of competent men rather than speeding it up. Therefore I am very careful about making the fourth appointment, although I have no objection to doing so, and would do so if the board would indicate to me that the appointment of any certain man would speed up their work.

Mr. Applewhaite: When the minister introduced this bill he referred to the difficulties and delays caused by the situation the country finds itself in with respect to tough and damp grain. I shall read one sentence only. At page 1052 of Hansard for March 8 he said:

> I hope it will be possible to find storage for stocks of tough and damp grain remaining on farms, as well as terminal accommodation for the tough and damp stocks still in country elevators, before warm weather sets in.

I am in this position in this debate. There is no wheat in my constituency but we have in Skeena a very good elevator owned by the dominion government with a capacity of 1,250,000 bushels, constructed by one of the world's outstanding engineers, with a drying capacity of some 48,000 bushels per day, depending of course upon the moisture content of the grain. In view of the fact that this government-owned elevator has stood empty for some six years, and the country as I understand it finding itself with an embarrassingly large quantity of tough and damp grain on hand at the present time, my question to the minister is: Have they considered, and if not will they consider, making use of their own elevator for the purpose of taking care of some of this grain?

Mr. Howe: I shall be very glad to put that question to the board. I see the members sitting in the gallery so I will be able to do that quite soon. I know that with respect to other wheat crops it has not been found feasible for marketing reasons to use the Prince Rupert elevator as an outlet for west coast grain. I have not inquired from them just what the effect of the tough and damp grain situation is but I will do so. I can assure the hon. member that there is no lack of desire on my part to have the Prince Rupert elevator in operation once again.

Mr. Sinnott: I believe the suggestion made by the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Wright) to increase the number of members of the board is a good one. Sometimes these days heart attacks occur very suddenly, and we would then find it necessary to appoint someone. I know that the minister possibly has someone in mind, and I believe such a man might carry on the duties of a deputy until such time as he had acquired enough experience to carry on as a regular member.

Mr. Catherwood: The minister intimated that if he could find a good man he might possibly consider appointing him to the wheat board, and I should like to ask him to give consideration to my previous suggestion as to the appointment of a member from eastern Canada.

Mr. Howe: The duty of the board is to market wheat, oats, and barley from the designated area. Eastern Canada is not in the designated area. I think my hon. friend has in mind appointing a man whose objective would not be the same as the objective of the present three members of the wheat board, which is to sell wheat, oats and barley from the western provinces at the best price obtainable.

Mr. Argue: Last fall, as all members are aware, we had the greatest difficulty getting sufficient cars and elevator space to market even the eight bushel quota which was first established. My question has to do with the quota system. I am in favour of the quota system, and when it is applied equitably I think it is to the advantage of all producers. I should like to know why the eight bushel quota was lifted at a number of points, to my personal knowledge, long before the producers at those points had anywhere near the eight bushels delivered to the elevators. There is one elevator point within a few miles of my home, and I know that on October 5, the Thursday before Thanksgiving, the quota there was lifted entirely. At that time the farmers had marketed only a small portion of the eight bushel quota, and it left marketing at that point in a mess. I know that up until a month or two ago a good many producers in that area had not marketed a bushel of grain. I want to say I am in favour of the quota system but I wonder why consideration was not given to the marketing situation at some of these points before the quota was lifted entirely.

Mr. Howe: I am afraid I cannot answer that question. The quota system is operated by the wheat board, and I presume it is operated according to their best judgment of how to best take care of the crops in the area. I have heard other suggestions that quotas have been lifted too soon, and while quotas were in effect I have heard suggestions of great injustices that were caused owing to the fact that, while a man could not deliver within the quota of his own elevator, he could deliver into someone else's area. We get complaints both ways. However, I think the board has had a good deal of experience in operating the quota system, and I am sure they use the best judgment that they can bring to bear on the manner in which the quotas operate.

Mr. Argue: Could the minister give me a more complete answer on the estimates? On the other hand, if the wheat board report is to be referred to the standing committee on agriculture that will be fine. We will get the information there.

Mr. Howe: Since my hon. friend has asked about a particular point, a question on the order paper would be referred to the board and would probably elicit the answer he wants.

Mr. Argue: A month or so ago I referred to the situation that prevailed at Moose Jaw last year. I wonder whether the minister knows anything about that. If he does not, I will leave it to some later date.

Mr. Howe: I am sorry, I do not know anything about it.

Mr. Argue: I know that any member of the agricultural committee has the right to call for a meeting thereof, but is the minister prepared to have the wheat board report referred to that committee again? I should like to see that done. I think it is in the interest of the wheat board system to have the board officials appear before the committee. They have always given an excellent account of themselves in the past, and I believe they will do so again. I think the producers of western Canada feel better if the officials of the board appear before the agricultural committee at which time we can go over their annual report.

Mr. Howe: All I can say at the moment is that consideration will be given to that request. I might remind the hon. member that the overworked wheat board of three members is pretty busy, and it means a week or so away from their normal occupation. However, I will discuss it with the board and give my hon. friend an answer later.

Section agreed to.

Section 2 agreed to.

On section 3—Transfer of wheat from one pool period to subsequent pool period.

Mr. Argue: Section 3 reads as follows:

> The governor in council may authorize the board to adjust its accounts at any time by transferring to the then current pool period all wheat delivered during the preceding pool period and then remaining unsold, and the board shall credit to the accounts for that preceding pool period, and charge against the accounts for the current pool period, such amount as the governor in council deems to be a reasonable price for the wheat so transferred . . .

I think this section gives the governor in council a discretion which it might not be too happy to have. It would have to decide the time at which the transaction should take place. It would have to decide the price at which it would take place; and, whether or not there should be a transaction at all. It seems to me the producers themselves would be much happier if at the end of any one year pool it was mandatory that the transfer of the surplus remaining should be made. My suggestion would be within sixty days after July 31, at the end of any one year pool. I think that will have to be done in any case if the payments are to go out, as they should, shortly after the end of each one year pool period. I do not think our experience in relation to the "have regard to" clause has been too happy. I am not going back to it now, but it was loosely worded and left everyone a great deal of discretion. I do not think the experience of anyone with it was too happy. I am just wondering if the Minister of Trade and Commerce might accept an amendment such as I am going to move, seconded by the hon. member for Melfort:

That clause 3 be amended by deleting therefrom the words "the governor in council may authorize the board to adjust its accounts at any time" and by substituting therefor the following words: "The board shall, not later than the 30th day of September in each year, adjust its accounts."

I think that should cover it. After each one year pool period the inventory would be sold to the following one year pool, so the payments could be made say not later than January 1 of the year following the conclusion of the crop year.

Mr. Howe: I am sorry the government could not accept that amendment. Conditions might be such that the risk would be too great for the second pool to accept. My hon. friend realizes that the transfer of the accounts to the second pool means that the first pool is paid the value of that wheat by the second pool. If we had some accurate way of fixing the value of the wheat at that time, this amendment would be proper, and very often I think it will be possible to safely make the transfer by the date mentioned. This year, however, about half the crop or a little more was feed grades of wheat. Whether that amount of feed grain would be reduced to manageable proportions by the end of September no one could be sure. If there should be a great quantity of feed wheat to be sold I do not think anyone would care to take the responsibility of putting a price on it and closing out the first pool, leaving the second pool to take all the risks of selling that wheat in the period of the second pool.

The purpose of this amendment is to permit small lots of wheat to be cleaned up. I have in mind lots of wheat that really could not very much affect the payment of either pool. For instance, you might have a hundred bushels of No. 3 durum wheat left over, which is a difficult grain to sell. Nevertheless that grain must be sold under the present legislation before the pool can be closed out. In the five year pool substantially all the wheat had been sold by the end of September, but there were dribs and drabs left over that were not sold until well into December. Therefore the final payment on that five year pool was delayed several months for no particular financial reason.

Mr. Argue: This amendment would permit the governor in council to set the price of wheat for the carry-over and they could take into account any conditions that had prevailed during the preceding year in relation to feed wheat or anything else. The minister's explanation shows, I think, that this amendment really does not mean very much, if it is only to allow the board to clean up a few hundred bushels of durum wheat or other almost negligible quantities in order to make the final settlement. We shall continue in future to be in the position we sometimes have been in the past, with the farmer not knowing when or on what basis a final settlement will be made. I thought this amendment was intended to take care of this huge quantity of frozen wheat the board now has on hand. If it is not intended to handle a hundred million bushels of wheat, or any quantity of that nature, then the wheat board may have a carry-over of this frozen wheat for two years or even longer. Certainly the western producers will not be satisfied to have the final payment on this year's crop dangling before them for another year or another two years or another four years, with the governor in council having discretion to turn it into another pool period and play around with the wheat in that respect. If the minister cannot accept our amendment I am afraid that will be the end of it, but certainly the explanation by the minister will not meet the objections of the western producers against the final settlement of any one year pool being extended for a long period of time after that pool comes to an end.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Wright: Six o'clock.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

TRANS MOUNTAIN OIL PIPE LINE COMPANY

The house resumed, from Tuesday, March 6, consideration of the motion of Mr. Laing for the second reading of Bill No. 115, to incorporate Trans Mountain Oil Pipe Line Company.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to detain the house long in connection with this bill, but I wish to say a few words in support of it because of its great importance to the people and to the economy of British Columbia.

All members of this house and, I think, most people in the country realize that the party to which I belong favours public ownership of transportation, communications, and things of this type particularly. When the bill was under discussion on Tuesday, March 6, the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Wright) dealt at some length with our policy in that connection and moved the following amendment:

That this bill be not now read a second time but that further consideration thereof be deferred until this house has had an opportunity to record its opinion that consideration should be given to the construction and operation of pipe lines by a crown corporation, or by a public agency owned and controlled by the government of Canada.

[Mr. Wright.]

Mr. Fulton: Order.

Mr. Speaker: That motion was put to the house and, I believe, declared lost. I am not sure whether there was a vote.

Mr. Herridge: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: In any event, it was declared lost and it is not debatable.

Mr. Herridge: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, if I am out of order; but I just wanted to mention the fact in order to re-emphasize our position in this connection. The motion was lost by a vote of 172 to 12, so we in this party realize that at this time there is not among the members of this house support for the principle of public ownership with respect to oil or gas pipe lines. Realizing that fact, Mr. Speaker, we are supporting the principle of the bill because we believe that the building of this oil pipe line will be of great advantage to the people of British Columbia, to the economy of British Columbia and to Canada as a whole.

Before proceeding with my brief remarks, Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the sponsor of this bill, the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Laing), on the detailed information he gave the house on the motion for second reading of this bill. I have sat in this house and heard bills of this type introduced on second reading, when the sponsors gave an extremely sketchy account of the purpose and the intentions of the bill. I am of the opinion that the attitude of some members, such as the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank) and the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Gibson), in requiring fuller explanation, has caused members introducing pipe line bills to realize that hon. members are not going to be satisfied with just a sketchy introduction. I forgot to mention the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton), but I include him at this time and also the hon. member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Sinclair).

Mr. Fulton: He was a late convert.

Mr. Herridge: I must say that we appreciated the information given to the house on the motion for second reading. The hon. member for Vancouver South told us the exact location of the route—that has not happened on another occasion—namely, from Edmonton to Vancouver through the Yellowhead pass. He gave us information as to the capacity of the pipe. He gave us the history and record of the company. He gave us information as to the use of Canadian personnel in construction and in maintenance, and as to the use of Canadian materials. He gave us information as to the potential markets. He also gave us a great deal of other useful information which we have had the opportunity to reread before this bill came before us for debate again this evening. We appreciate this procedure, and we hope it is a practice which will be followed by other members introducing bills of this type.

I was pleased indeed, Mr. Speaker, to note that the hon. member stressed the fact that this was an all-Canadian route. After my recollections of the debate on pipe lines last year, I am pleased indeed to see the hon. member for Vancouver South standing shoulder to shoulder in this house with that delightful, irrepressible and indefatigable gentleman, the hon. member for Fraser Valley, to fight for an all-Canadian route for gas pipe lines and for oil pipe lines. I think the house and the country owe the hon. member for Fraser Valley particularly a debt of gratitude for focusing public attention, in his own unique and, shall I say, inimitable manner, on a matter of great importance. I trust that when this oil pipe line is constructed from Edmonton to Vancouver, a gas pump will be erected in Chilliwack to commemorate his efforts in this respect.

We are delighted to know that this is the second bill that has come before the house this session in which the sponsor says the main line of the gas or oil concern will follow an all-Canadian route; because that means a great deal to British Columbia in this case and to Canada in general. It means the use of Canadian resources by Canadians first. It means the use of Canadian materials in construction and in maintenance. It means employment for Canadians. It means permanent tax revenue for the provincial government and for the federal government. The construction of this oil pipe line will mean a great deal to the further development of British Columbia and that development will be to the general advantage of Canada. I hope that the bill passes this evening and goes to a committee so that we can hear the rest of what appears to us to be a most interesting story in connection with the further development of our great province, British Columbia.

Mr. T. H. Goode (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in the months that we have listened to these pipe line bills, I have more or less viewed the operations with a jaundiced eye because I thought that not only were politics involved but that a great deal of money was behind the people who were seeking incorporation. I did not view with much favour at the last session the efforts of some people to tell us that an all-Canadian route could be constructed. I want to tell the house tonight that I have now found that I am wrong. I am wrong for one reason. I am still not convinced that it will be financially successful for the pipe line to be built through the Yellowhead route; but after listening to the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Laing) the other night I came to the conclusion that he had a good story to tell, and I congratulate him on telling that story. Not only that, but there is some confirmation of the introduction that he gave to this bill.

Since he talked in the house the British American Oil Company have decided to build a $10 million oil refinery in my constituency of Burnaby. That means a tremendous amount to me and to the people of my riding. We are not an industrial riding; we are a dormitory municipality. W depend on the city of Vancouver for most of our pay cheques. Here is an opportunity that I have to get behind something that is really good for my people, and after listening to the hon. member for Vancouver South the other night I will tell you now, sir, that I intend to support this bill with all the endeavour that I can put at my command.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

BRITISH COLUMBIA TELEPHONE COMPANY

The house resumed, from Friday, March 9, consideration of the motion of Mr. Applewhaite for the second reading of Bill No. 116, respecting British Columbia Telephone Company.

Mr. G. A. Cruickshank (Fraser Valley): As usual, Mr. Speaker, I am to be assisted in a minor way by a lesser light from my own province.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): That will hold him.

Mr. Cruickshank: Because of what happened tonight, Mr. Speaker, in connection with another bill, I would suggest through you to hon. members that they come earlier on Tuesday night to get a good seat to hear the excellent reason why the preceding bill received the excellent reception it did. I have myself prepared one or two things to say on that occasion, and I assure you that there will be other hon. members from he province of British Columbia who will endeavour to gain converts, as we have done in the past year.

I said the other night, Mr. Speaker, in connection with this bill, that I am in favour of the increased capital asked for by the company but not to the extent called for in the bill. One reason why I am not in favour of the increase asked for is that some years ago when this company applied for an increase we asked for certain information. I well remember the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green) who was then the hon. member for Vancouver South asking for and receiving the clear guarantee from the telephone company that no increase in rates would be asked for because of the increase in capitalization. We have now found that that was not true. Two increases have been asked for within one year by the telephone company and have been granted by the board of transport commissioners. No doubt other speakers from the city of Vancouver will go into detail and give some of the reasons why that city does not think the capital should be increased to the extent asked for by the sponsor.

I am not from the city of Vancouver, but my district is particularly interested in the lack of service, poor service and lack of additional telephone connections that exist. We dispute definitely the statement made, I believe by the sponsor, although I am not sure of that, but certainly by the representatives of the company, that it has not been able to improve the service or extend it because of the lack of capital. In other words, the reason they are asking for this immense increase is to increase their services, give better connections and better service.

In order that that argument may be answered right now let me point out to you that at the time they put in their application they had the privilege of increasing their capital by $5 million under the last increase they asked for here. They still had $5 million left. The city of Vancouver has gone to a great deal of trouble in this connection. Naturally they should. They represent by far the largest portion of the population of the province of British Columbia.

If you remember, sir, I mentioned the other night that this is one of the finest companies we have. They have an excellent management. If that management were allowed to manage the affairs of the company I do not believe that we would have the poor service we now have nor would they require the immense increase in capital that is being asked for. If these Canadians in Vancouver were allowed to manage the company none of these things would be necessary, but the most amazing thing, Mr. Speaker, is that the management in Vancouver cannot run their company. I want to qualify that to this extent. I believe they are still allowed to hire a janitor or fire a gardener on some of the lawns in front of their offices without consulting their parent company in Montreal. If they want to hire somebody higher up than the janitor apparently they would have to consult the parent company in Montreal.

They have a licence contract, Mr. Speaker, which provides for an annual payment by the B.C. Telephone Company of 1 per cent of its gross operating revenues to the parent company, the Anglo-Canadian Telephone Company of Montreal. This Montreal company is a holding company and through its ownership of common stock controls the following companies operating in British Columbia: British Columbia Telephone Company; Canadian (B.C.) Telephone and Supplies Limited; Dominion Directory Company Limited; Chilliwack Telephones Limited; Kootenay Telephone Company, Limited; Mission Telephone Company Limited and North-West Telephone Company.

Probably one reason why I am particularly interested in these companies is that the Chilliwack Telephones Limited and the Mission Telephone Company Limited happened to go through the finest riding of Canada.

An hon. Member: Where is that?

Mr. Cruickshank: In the Fraser valley. I admit I very seldom mention the Fraser valley, but I intend to talk twenty or thirty minutes about it next Tuesday night, commencing at eight o'clock.

This annual payment to this company in Montreal is supposed to be for expert advice and assistance in any financing which the British Columbia Telephone Company requires for the extension, development or improvement of its telephone system and services. It used to be more, Mr. Speaker. It was formerly 1½ per cent of its gross operating revenues, and it was reduced to 1 per cent. But that reduction from 1½ per cent to 1 per cent took place just before they made their application for an increase in rates.

I want to point out some figures to show what this company, the British Columbia Telephone Company, has paid to what might be called an imaginary company in Montreal which has far too much power and authority over the people of British Columbia. For the year 1948 payment at the prior rate of 1½ per cent was $181,051; for the year 1949, payment at the current rate of 1 per cent was $129,711. That is a lot of money to be taken out of the people of British Columbia and paid to this company in Montreal. But the significant fact is that this holding company or parent company at Montreal has no staff available to render this extensive service that they are supposed to render for this tremendous amount of money that they get. I do not want to weary you too much with figures, Mr.

Speaker, but it is a peculiar thing. This company has a staff of only a handful, perhaps about six or seven. They, in turn, get their advice from another company, and, mark you this, it is a company from outside this parent company. We people who pay the telephone bills in British Columbia paid $181,000 for that advice. But the peculiar thing is that the advice for which we paid $181,000 they paid another subsidiary company $3,150.

Frankly, I am referring now to the brief prepared by the experts of the city of Vancouver. I would presume that it would be more appreciated if the members representing greater Vancouver would go into the matter in greater detail than I am able to do, or should be called upon to do. Because, after all, Vancouver is their native city; I just happen to represent a riding which keeps their city going.

To show you, Mr. Speaker, and through you the House of Commons, the particular significance of these figures, let me point out that this amount was disallowed by the income tax branch. They would not allow it.

Mr. Sinclair: Louder.

Mr. Cruickshank: My colleague who sits to my left, the junior member from Coast-Capilano, says "louder". I would presume that he would get up, in due course and, without the aid of the new microphones we are to have in the chamber, would succeed in making his voice heard in every corner of the chamber in defence of the rights of his province, and on behalf of the people in his riding who unfortunately have to pay exorbitant rates for their telephone service. If my voice does not carry to the far corners of the chamber, we will hear from that great exponent, no doubt, that the service is needed for the people of Vancouver. I have no doubt the hon. member for Coast-Capilano, assisted by his colleagues from greater Vancouver, will endeavour to prove, as I am attempting to do, that this capital should not be increased to the exorbitant amount of $75 million. Perhaps that is wishful thinking. However perhaps some of my junior colleagues will do as they did eventually last year in connection with another matter which affected British Columbia; perhaps they will get on the bandwagon.

I do not want to take up too much time of the house. I am making no attempt to stage a filibuster on this telephone bill; I hope it goes through tonight. However I would feel derelict in my duty to the people I represent if I failed to object to this request for what I consider to be an excessive increase in capitalization.

I said the other night, and I now repeat, that I believe they should have some increase in capital, but not to the extent of $50 million —and I am using their own figures. The sum I would hope might find favour—and I am not going to move an amendment at this time; I shall do so in committee—would be an extension by $20 million. This would be in addition to the $5 million they now have available. My reason for not moving at this time is exactly that indicated by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Gibson) who in connection with another matter this afternoon said he was not sure he had a seconder. I notice that my seconder, the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Croll), is not in his seat at the moment—and I am not sure that any of my colleagues from British Columbia would second it. They might want $50 million.

The figures given by the experts from the city of Vancouver would permit an expenditure of $10 million a year, and thus enable the company to carry on for from six to ten years, through an increase in their capitalization of $20 million. At the end of that time they could come back to the house and ask for more.

Unlike the Bell Telephone Company and other telephone companies in Canada, the B.C. Telephone Company must appear before the board of transport commissioners in the matter of rates. Our public utilities commissioner has no control in the matter. The only weapon the people of British Columbia have, in so far as rates are concerned, is through the jurisdiction of the board of transport commissioners. I believe, and I know the people of my riding believe—and I have every reason to think that the people of Vancouver hold the same view, if one may judge by the very excellent brief prepared by experts—that this company could come back in eight or ten years to the board of transport commissioners and ask for a further increase, if at that time it is justified, and I presume it would be.

The only thing that would bother them at all—and it should not bother them too much —would be this expenditure of a few thousand dollars. I can show that they have paid $181,000 to one company and $3,000 to another company to get the information. The fact that they have to pay another firm of Vancouver lawyers a few thousand dollars to prepare another brief would not bother them too much in eight or ten years time. As a matter of fact, I am very fond of the lawyer in Vancouver who now represents the company, and I would hope that in eight or ten years from now he may get another fee.

Mr. Sinclair: The people have to pay for it.

British Columbia Telephone Company

Mr. Cruickshank: As my hon. friend points out, the people have to pay for it. I defy challenge of the figures I have given, and I make the statement that if this were carried through by a subsidiary company the people of British Columbia would be faced with another increase in rates, because the B.C. Telephone Company could lease their present building from another company. The men and women out there employed by them are of a most excellent type and, despite limited facilities, give an excellent service in some cases.

Mr. Sinclair: Intelligent voters; I can see that.

Mr. Cruickshank: My hon. friend says he can see they are intelligent voters. I agree with him—and I express the opinion that they are so intelligent that my hon. friend may feel himself fortunate that he is in the riding he now represents, and not my riding.

Mr. Sinclair: Do you mean there are none there?

Mr. Cruickshank: I am not worried about that. And I can tell my hon. friend, too, that in the Fraser valley exchange we have the best looking girls in the telephone service to be found in any telephone exchange in Canada—and that includes Montreal, too.

Mr. Sinclair: The voice of experience.

Mr. Cardiff: Have you been all around?

Mr. Cruickshank: I have not been all around, but I have covered as much territory as I could. I know of course that my hon. friends are trying to get me into shape so that I may speak again on Tuesday night—and, by the way, be here early next Tuesday night if you want to get a seat.

And, on top of that, keep in mind that, as an amateur from a country district, I in company with the then hon. member for Vancouver South—now the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green)—and the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) fought this battle on two former occasions. I would ask hon. members to check through Hansard to find the support we got from the lower mainland or, in fact, from any other quarters, in trying to maintain and regulate telephone rates in British Columbia.

Of course hon. members from greater Vancouver have before them exactly the same brief that I have, prepared by experts. I am sure that with their immense ability, their superior knowledge, their super-desire to serve the people of their districts and of the province, when I take my seat they will be clamouring to speak. I can visualize, Mr. Speaker, the difficulty you will have in deciding which of them you will recognize as having the floor. Who, among the greater Vancouver members, will be on his feet to take over where I leave off in an endeavour—and I hope the Vancouver papers will carry this—in an endeavour to put before the house the reasons why we should not allow an increase to the extent asked in the present bill? Who among them will ask for this limitation, and the granting only of sufficient money—perhaps $20 million by way of increase—to allow them to carry on? They claim this is necessary in order to produce the service required under the officials they have in Vancouver. This will be used to sustain—I was going to use a word I probably should not use as it might be offensive to these gentlemen in Montreal—I was going to say this phony company, this fictitious company, but I will just say this unnecessary company, the parent they have in Montreal which receives $181,000 for $3,100 worth of experience and advice. That advice is so poorly thought of that the income tax people would not let them deduct it.

Mr. Applewhaite: I know the hon. member desires to be fair. I ask him if it is not a fact that the decision of the income tax department in connection with that contract was made before the contract was ruled upon by a judicial body and decided to be legitimate.

Mr. Cruickshank: If that is correct, I am glad to know it. I hope that this coming year the income tax people will reverse their decision and not permit the people of British Columbia to be milked for $181,000 for $3,100 worth of services. I am glad to have it on the record if that is a fact. That is just one more thing the board of transport commissioners should consider and render a decision upon.

I intended to move an amendment when the bill was in committee, but as I mentioned my seconder is not in the house. I have not had time to confer with the hon. member for Comox-Alberni or anyone else, but I move, seconded by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni:

That section 6, clause 1, of Bill E be amended by striking out all the words on the eleventh line after "exceed" and the following words added, "thirty-five million dollars."

Mr. Knowles: Out of order.

Mr. Cruickshank: I believe I am allowed to say one word after having moved the amendment. I would assume that any decision as to the amendment being in order or out of order will be made by Your Honour rather than by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Applewhaite: I would draw to your attention that we are dealing with the motion for the second reading of the bill and in my submission an amendment to one of the sections is out of order and should not be placed before the house when it is considering the principle of the bill.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, while you are considering that question I think it might have some bearing if the house were to know whether the seconder of the amendment had had an opportunity to see it before he seconded it. From the sudden change indicated by the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank) it would seem quite certain that the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Gibson) has not seen the amendment which he seconded. Perhaps he would change his mind if he had an opportunity to see it.

Mr. Gibson: I am delighted that the hon. member for Kamloops has seen fit to advise me in this matter, but I can assure you that I am quite pleased to second the amendment and I know all about it.

Mr. Speaker: I had hoped that a number of hon. members would have expressed opinions as to whether this amendment is in order. Does any other hon. member desire to speak on the point of order? Without doubt the view expressed by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Applewhaite) is correct. When we are considering the principle of a bill it is not in order to move an amendment to one of the sections. Accordingly I shall have to rule the amendment out of order.

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I believe the house is in debt to the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Applewhaite) for the able way in which he has presented the motion for second reading and for the information he has given us while speaking in support of his motion. There are a number of questions—in saying this I do not take away from the sincerity of my first words—which I think we are entitled to ask in order that we may have further details before the motion for second reading is decided upon. I should like to deal with some of these tonight and to place certain considerations before the hon. member which we would appreciate having him deal with when he replies.

Then the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank) raised a point in connection with the increase in capital which the company is asking for. As I see it, this bill divides itself conveniently into two objectives. The first is to obtain authority from this house to increase the share value by $50 million, from $25 million to $75 million. The second is to ask this house to amend the incorporating act to permit a reorganization of the capital structure, a subdivision of the common shares and also a subdivision of the preference shares, with certain other incidental consequences.

The hon. member for Fraser Valley has raised a point in connection with the first of these two objectives, that is, the increase in the capital which is requested. I think that point is one about which we should hear more from the hon. member for Skeena. As the hon. member for Fraser Valley has correctly pointed out, this increase of $50 million in the share capital would not only have the effect of allowing the company to increase its working capital by $50 million—I hope the hon. member for Skeena will correct me if I am wrong—but I understand the practice of the company is to finance its operation with approximately 50 per cent of share capital and 50 per cent of bonds.

If they obtain authority to issue and in fact do issue another $50 million of shares, as those shares were issued and in accordance with their normal practice they could float bond issues of approximately the same value. Possibly they might not issue all the $50 million of shares at once; they would perhaps issue $10 million and about the same time they would normally float a bond issue of the same value. According to their method of financing, if this $50 million increase is granted it would mean that this company could avail itself of $100 million additional working capital through the issue of shares and the floating of bonds.

The point has been raised by the hon. member for Fraser Valley that such a large increase in capital would enable the company to carry on for a great length of time without the necessity of coming back to this house. I think that point is well taken. It is of increasing seriousness in the light of the ordinary practice of this company with respect to financing. I am making no suggestion that that is an improper method of financing. I am merely drawing to the attention of the house that that is the normal practice followed by this company and I understand that they do not intend to depart from that practice. So I ask the house to have it in mind that this bill may have an over-all effect of giving this company another $100 million to go on with. I think the house should consider that in the light of the point raised by the hon. member for Fraser Valley with respect to the rate of increases, with respect to the fact that the only time when parliament at any rate has a chance to express its opinion concerning the operations of this company is when it comes before parliament for an increase in capital, and also in the light of the fact that the city of Vancouver has presented a very well reasoned and excellent brief questioning the propriety of granting this large amount of increase of $50 million.

I think there is no doubt that the company requires additional capital. The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Applewhaite) has told us of some of the plans of the company. He has told us of the great backlog of applications for additional telephones which the company has on its files. The majority of members from British Columbia have had the opportunity of interviewing the solicitor who is acting for the company in connection with this bill. I should like to associate myself with what the hon. member for Fraser Valley said about him as to his qualifications and integrity. I am not so certain that I necessarily wish to see him get another fee because he comes back to parliament. I think from what I know of his business that he does not require it to be able to conduct a very successful and prominent business.

Members have had an opportunity to see him, and he has made a very good case indeed for an increase in capital. I do not feel, however, without further consideration, that he has substantiated a case for an increase of $50 million at this time which would have the effect of giving them another $100 million working capital, and which would in turn have the effect that until that capital was exhausted they would not have to come back to parliament for a review of their operations. It might well be that in the eyes of the company that would not be a bad thing. I can imagine that they are not anxious to come before parliament. One hears the suggestion occasionally that these bills are held up. I am quite sure that this measure, whether amended or not, will be considered and dealt with at this session. I do not think it does the company any harm, and I think it is an opportunity which parliament should have to keep the bill before it for several days so that the matter may be thoroughly considered, because the interests of the province of British Columbia are certainly bound up in this question.

At the moment I do not propose to express myself definitely against the increase of $50 million. I wish to hear more from those members who have studied the brief of the city of Vancouver, and I wish to have the opportunity of hearing further from the hon. member for Skeena before finally deciding on that point. But there is another point, Mr. Speaker, which I think should be drawn to the attention of the house, and it has to do with the second object of the bill, to effect a re-organization of the capital structure of the company. What I wish to refer to particularly here is that portion of the bill which deals with preference shares. This company was incorporated as the Western Canada Telephone Company by an act of the federal house in 1916. I should pause here to interject that prior to that time it had been a company operating under a provincial charter from the province of British Columbia.

In 1916 it was decided by the directors that the scope of their operations was expanding and they desired to make connections with other telephone companies. As a matter of fact there were financial affiliations which took it outside the sphere of the province. It was decided to apply for incorporation by an act of this house and the works were declared to be for the general advantage of Canada. By section 5 of the statute, being chapter 66 of the statutes of 1916, it was provided:

> The company, if previously authorized by resolution passed by the ordinary shareholders at any annual meeting or at any special general meeting duly called for that purpose, at which meeting shareholders representing at least three-fourths in value of the subscribed ordinary stock of the company are present or represented by proxy, may issue any portion of its capital, whether part of the original stock or any increase thereof as preference stock, and preference stock so issued shall have such preference and priority as respects dividends, capital or otherwise over ordinary stock or such qualified rights as is declared by such resolution.

Under the authority then obtained, and subsequent authorities, there was in fact issued $5 million of preference stock divided as of $500,000 original preference shares and $4,500,000 preference shares. These shares bear a fixed cumulative dividend of six per cent which represents, as hon. members will appreciate, what might very properly be described as a gilt-edged security. I would draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, and the attention of the house particularly to the terms of subsection 2 of section 5 of the incorporating act to which I have already referred, which reads as follows:

> Holders of preference shares shall not have any right of voting at meetings of the company except the right to attend and vote at general meetings on any question directly affecting any of the rights or privileges attached to such shares, and then there shall be one vote per share, but no change in the rights or privileges shall be made unless the holders of seventy-five per cent of the preference shares agree to same, and such shares shall not qualify any person to be a director of the company.

These shares were issued with a value of $100, and each share entitles the holder to one vote per share. No change in the rights of the preference shareholders can be made without the consent of seventy-five per cent of such shareholders. Subsection 2 of section 5 of the act of 1916 was subsequently changed by chapter 36 of the statutes of 1940-41. I might say at this point that in 1940 a former hon. member from Vancouver, the late Senator McGeer, and also at one time mayor of Vancouver for a considerable period, introduced a bill which had the effect of increasing the capital of the company and altering the structure with regard to preference shares. The effect of the alteration with regard to preference shares would have been to interfere seriously with their preferred position, and to provide that their rights might be taken away, in a manner of speaking, without their full consent.

That point was raised and was debated at some length in this house at that time. The result was that the sponsor of the bill, after consultation with the critics, introduced an amendment to his own bill which had a much less drastic effect on the rights of the preference shareholders. That is now incorporated as section 1 of chapter 36 of the statutes of 1940-41. It has the effect of amending subsection 2 of section 5 of the original act so that it now reads as follows:

> Holders of preference shares shall not have any right of voting at meetings of the company except the right to attend and vote at general meetings on any question directly affecting any of the rights or privileges attached to such shares, and then there shall be one vote per share, but no change in the rights or privileges shall be made unless the holders of seventy-five per centum of the preference shares agree to same, and ownership of ordinary or preference or preferred shares shall qualify any person to be a director of the company.

I think it is important to note that the only effect of the change in that portion of the act dealing with preference shares was to provide that the ownership of such shares qualified the holder to be a director of the company. So the bill introduced in 1941 in effect was abandoned with respect to that part affecting the rights of the preference shareholders, and the only change made was that the holding of preference shares would qualify a person to be a director. In the bill now before the house it is stated that the only change proposed to this section of the existing act dealing with preference shares consists of the addition of the words "in par value" and "issued and outstanding" in one portion of the act. Then a new portion is added, and in the explanatory note it is explained as follows:

> Subsection four of section five is a new subsection and its purpose is to provide that future preference or preferred shares may be of a par value of either twenty-five dollars or one hundred dollars each.
> The reason for the amendment is that shares of the lower par value, namely, twenty-five dollars, may be more easily and conveniently marketed.

So far I have no objection or criticism to offer; I think it is perfectly proper to provide that in future shares may be issued, either common or preference, of the par value of $25, because they are easier to market. But at this point I make the reservation that if those shares are to be issued and if it is to be provided, as it is, that the holding of one share shall confer one vote, then I think we must insert a safeguard at this point for the rights of the present holders of preference shares of $100 each, which also carry one vote. Otherwise we will have this position, that preference shares of the value of $25 may be issued each carrying one vote, so the holder of $100 worth of new preference shares will have four votes as against the one vote of the holder of an old preference share of $100.

My objection to this portion of the bill is that there is no safeguard for the rights of the old preference shareholders. The bill provides that the directors can subdivide the outstanding preference shares into shares of $25 each, subject always to the consent of at least 75 per cent in par value of the holders of each class of such preference or preferred shares proposed to be subdivided. The important point there is that the directors may do that, subject to the consent of the present preference shareholders, but there is nothing to compel the directors to do it, and nothing saying that until it is done the holders of the old preference shares shall have four votes.

So this situation might well arise. Let us say there are presently $5 million of preference shares outstanding. If the company is authorized to issue $50 million of new capital it might decide that $5 million of that capital should be in the form of preference shares, and that those will not be $100 shares but $25 shares. The result will be that you will have four times as many preference shareholders and four times as many votes, because each $25 share is going to carry one vote. So with the new $5 million in preference shares you will have four times as many votes as with the old; and there is nothing to provide that the holders of the old preference shares shall be entitled to four votes per share as soon as new preference shares of $25 are issued. So under the provisions of this bill as it now stands and as I read it, it is quite possible to issue new preference shares of no greater par value than the present outstanding preference shares and yet completely swamp the voting powers of the present holders of preference shares by four to one; and I have already pointed out that the six per cent cumulative dividend rate attached to these preference shares makes them a gilt-edged security.

I am not attributing any improper motives to this company, but I do want to make the position clear. If this or any company, let us say, desired to make some change in the guaranteed rights of the preference shareholders while preserving the appearance of impartiality by issuing new preference shares with one vote per share and providing that the old preference shares might be subdivided to give them the same voting privileges, yet wished to use that in order to take away the rights of the old preference shares, this would afford a very convenient way of doing it. Preference shares could be issued before the old ones were subdivided, before they were given any greater voting power, so that while the par value would be the same the new preference share would have four times the voting power. I do not know who are the preference shareholders. I do not care who they are. The point I want to lay before this house before I conclude is that under our system of corporate and private law, established rights can only be taken away with the consent of the persons who have those rights. I may point out that shares of this type are particularly attractive to small investors, people with small estates, widows who desire a safe investment with a reasonable return; and I do not think this house should permit anything of this sort to happen without writing into the bill a provision which would safeguard the rights of the present preference shareholders.

Mr. Speaker: The hour for public and private bills having expired, the house will revert to the business under consideration at six o'clock.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

PROVISION FOR EARLY DISTRIBUTION OF PAYMENTS AT END OF POOL PERIOD, ETC.

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. 5, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1935—Mr. Howe—Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: When the committee adjourned at six o'clock we were considering section 3, and the amendment that had been moved by the hon. member for Assiniboia.

On section 3—Transfer of wheat from one pool period to subsequent pool period.

Mr. Wright: Mr. Chairman, the statement by the Minister of Trade and Commerce just before the dinner recess certainly came as a surprise to me. I thought under this amendment the government had intended at the end of this crop year, for instance, to take over what remained of the low grades, to be able to close out this year's pool and make the final payment some time this fall. According to his statement before recess, he indicated that it was simply to clean up tag ends of certain grades or certain types of grades that might be said to be dribs and drabs of separate grades or separate varieties of grades being handled, without making any general clean-up of the pool itself. I do not think that is what the farmer in western Canada expects out of this legislation. He would prefer to see the pool cleaned up each year. As the minister says, that involves a certain risk to the pool of the preceding year. But the government have the authority under the act to set the price at which they take it over.

Mr. Howe: The government would not take it over.

Mr. Wright: No, the wheat board would take it over; and the government, through the wheat board, have the say as to the price at which the board will take it over and wind up the pool.

Mr. Howe: They would take it over at a price, and the price would be paid by the succeeding pool.

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Mr. Howe: The government would not enter into it and would not guarantee the price or anything of that sort.

Mr. Wright: According to the act here, the government decides a reasonable price at which the board will take it over; so actually the government are responsible.

Mr. Howe: No.

Mr. Wright: Well, they are not responsible; they are responsible for the instructions they give to the board as to what the action of the board will be in taking over that particular grade of grain or whatever is left in the pool. I do not want to be political in this thing, but if it is left as it is the government could possibly, under certain circumstances—if an election were coming say, next fall—say that the board will take over this remaining quantity of wheat that there may be there at a pretty fair price and a pretty substantial payment.

Mr. Howe: My hon. friend is talking about just exactly what this bill will not do; and he knows it as well as I do.

Mr. Wright: It allows the government to do that. That is why we are moving this amendment, so that we will know definitely that there shall be a certain procedure for it. I think it is protection for the government itself that a definite procedure should be followed, that at the end of two months the board shall clean up the pool. They can protect the pool in the following year by the price at which they take this over. Let me put it this way. They have a very good idea on July 31 as to what the crop is. They know practically what the crop is for the present year. They know pretty well what the world situation is. The board is therefore not running any very great risk of saddling the pool for the following year with a loss, when they know the market conditions and know the crop prospects at July 31. It is not as though they had to make the decision three months before. They have two months after the end of the crop year before they need to make a decision under the amendment as we have offered it. I think it would be more satisfactory both to the government and to the producers if the amendment were accepted.

Mr. Howe: It is not the purpose of this amendment to involve the government in any liability whatever. There is a job to be done there that should not cost anyone anything. It is simply to stop the long-drawn-out process of selling the remnants of all grades of grain that must be sold under the present legislation. I mentioned a few hundred bushels; it might be a few million bushels. If everyone was agreed on a price that would represent equity to both parties, the government would not hesitate to enter into that sort of a transaction. But it would want to be sure that no responsible farm body considered the price out of line. If I were minister in charge of selling wheat at that time, I certainly would not recommend to the government any transaction if there was any opposition whatever to it; because the purpose of this amendment is not to involve the government in any dispute such as the one we have had in this house in the last few days. Life is too short. I know that my hon. friends may think that a contract is good when it is made, but that does not stop them from being bitter opponents of it if it does not work out in the way they think it is going to. They always judge by results, exemplifying the great power of hindsight. The government has no intention of becoming involved in any dispute of that kind as a result of this amendment. But we think it desirable to make it possible to expedite the settlement of each annual pool.

Mr. Ross (Souris): I am sorry that I was called out of the chamber just before this discussion began, but I should like to know from the minister if, in winding up this year's pool, the intention is to make an initial payment and then, as the balance of the crop is disposed of, to clear it up? Is that the idea that the minister has in mind?

Mr. Howe: No. The pattern that we are following today is an initial payment, one interim payment and a final payment. The purpose of this amendment is to allow remnants of the various grades that often take time to liquidate, and which do not mean a great deal in dollars and cents to either pool, to be transferred from the current pool into the succeeding pool. As I said, it is not intended that the transactions will be large enough to involve any great risk of loss to either pool. But by the middle of September the wheat board would have a fair idea of the market conditions that would prevail during the few months that would be required to sell the wheat remaining from the old pool. If the responsible farm groups, such as the pools and the United Grain Growers, would decide that an equitable price could be arrived at, and the board could advise the government that such and such a price would meet with general approval, the government would then transfer the remaining wheat from the pool that terminated the previous July into the pool that was then current and allow the old pool to be wound up.

Mr. Ross (Souris): There would not be any other price basis than there was for that year?

Mr. Howe: The price basis would be the basis on which the board believed that the remaining wheat could be reasonably liquidated.

Mr. Argue: From the minister's statement, I do not see that this amendment is going to accomplish what, according to the explanation given on the opposite page of the bill itself, is stated as the purpose. The explanatory note reads in part as follows:

> Its purpose is to allow an early distribution after the end of a pool period of moneys payable under certificates issued to persons who have sold and delivered wheat to the board in that pool period.

It does not guarantee that that will be done.

Mr. Howe: That is right.

Mr. Argue: It does not guarantee that at all. If all the minister is talking about is dribs and drabs, a few hundred bushels, a few thousand bushels, even a few million bushels—a few odds and ends—when the amendment is passed it will allow the government—even although the minister may make the statement that they would not do it without consultation with the farm organizations—to get into the same kind of situation on account of this amendment as the government got into with respect to the wheat agreement. Even though the farmers of Canada feel that $100 million or more was involved in that "have regard to" clause, the farm organizations were not consulted. The minister says tonight that the farm organizations will be consulted. We have his word for that, nothing more. But the bill, as it is drawn, will allow the cabinet to set the price as it sees fit for a carry-over and take it into another pool period any time it sees fit. If all that is meant by this amendment is that dribs and drabs can be sold at the end of the one-year pool period—a few hundred bushels, a few thousand bushels, or even a few million bushels—then the amendment should read to that effect. As the amendment is drawn, I can see no hope of the present pool period being wound up for many months after the end of the pool period on July 31 of this year. We have a lot of feed wheat. The minister has told us that it is going to be difficult to dispose of it. Does the minister intend that this amendment will be used, shall we say, sometime this year? Does the government intend to use this amendment to sell from the present pool period to next year's pool period the remaining stocks of feed wheat?

Mr. Howe: That will depend entirely on the view of the government as to the possibility of fixing a price on the remaining feed wheat that will represent neither a loss to the earlier pool nor a loss to the later pool. If there is a fairly stable market for feed wheat at the time, and a market that promises to absorb the balance of the wheat without any material change of price, then the transfer will probably be made, but the decision is entirely at the option of the government.

Mr. Argue: It is fairly clear that it is entirely at the option of the government whether it sells the wheat at a price that will help the Liberal party a few months before an election or not.

Mr. Howe: I do not think it will matter very much to the hon. member whether it helps the Liberal party or not.

Mr. Argue: That is exactly why we object to this loosely worded amendment. It allows the government to do anything under the sun with the wheat board act. Our farmers want each pool period wound up immediately, or as soon as possible, after the end of each pool period; and our amendment asks that the wheat be sold by the 30th of September. If that were put in legislative form the farmers would have a guarantee that within a certain period the government could use its discretion admittedly to sell the carry-over, but it would not have the authority to let the carry-over at the end of one pool period drag on until just a few months before the elections when I have no doubt at all in my mind that if this government felt that by selling it at a high price to a current pool and paying out a large final payment on some previous pool period it would help the election they would not hesitate doing it for one moment.

If this amendment means dribs and drabs then it should say so in the amendment. If it means that the feed wheat remaining at the end of this year's pool will be sold and the farmers paid out within a reasonable length of time, it should say so.

If the government wants parliament to change the legislation at any time there is no difficulty about getting that done; but in the meantime we should not be asked to pass on such a loosely worded amendment that might be used against the interests of the wheat producers.

Mr. Wright: The Minister of Trade and Commerce himself stated the other day that he objected to these loosely worded types of agreements, such as the "have regard to" clause. I am surprised at his bringing in a bill as loosely worded as this.

Mr. Howe: If you don't like the bill you can easily vote against it.

Mr. Wright: We will certainly vote for our own amendment. It is to clarify the thing and to protect the government as well as the producers of western Canada that we ask the government to accept this amendment.

Mr. Hansell: Just one word; I am in favour of this amendment by reason of the fact that experience in the west has long taught us that the farmer should have a little more definite knowledge of when he is to be paid for his wheat from time to time.

Before coming down this session and before Christmas, I was stopped many, many times on the streets of various villages and towns. I received numerous letters from people asking, when can we expect this payment? Nobody knew. Christmas was coming along. Several people came to see me complaining that they were afraid they would have to go to the banks or to the Alberta government treasury banks, or borrow money because they did not know when they were to be paid.

Various reports would come out from time to time to the effect that payment is expected now, payment is expected at a certain time. The ministers were asked. They attended conventions, and it was dribbling along, dribbling along, dribbling along. I am quite certain that the wheat board itself is not to blame. There is no reason why the wheat board, the same as any other concern, with a system of accountancy, cannot tell where the farmer stands periodically. I am in favour of this. The hon. member who preceded me said that there was a tendency certainly for the government to play around with the wheat board act. Not only do they play around with the act, but they play around with the farmers' money. That is not right. I support the wheat board and the present system of marketing. I do not want to be misunderstood in what I am saying, but there was a time when the farmer could get his wheat to the elevators, sell it and get his grain checks and know where he stood. All other industries have a way of paying. Labour gets paid every couple of weeks or once a month. Even members of parliament know when they are to be paid and where they stand during the session. The whole country is run on a system of paying things at a certain time. But here we have the greatest industry in Canada in the position of not knowing how they are going to make out from one season to another season in the year.

The amendment is a good one and I can see no reason why the government would not agree with it.

Mr. Helme: In regard to the matter under discussion, I do not think there is any doubt but that the farmer would like to get settled for his grain just as soon as it is sold. As I understand this amendment, it asks that it be cleaned up by the end of September. Let us take the 1950-51 crop as an example. We have quite a large quantity of very low grade wheat out there. It may take a considerable time to dispose of that wheat. In talking to farmers out there before the session opened I found that they were a little bit concerned about getting rid of that stuff. I think I speak for the majority to whom I talked about it when I say that they do not feel the government should be in any too big a hurry to dispose of this stuff at fire sale prices, and that is the danger in the amendment as I see it.

Mr. Argue: The amendment is drawn in such a way as to avoid the fire sale of a carry-over of wheat. This amendment does not mean that if we have 100 million bushels or 50 million bushels of low grade wheat still in the present pool on July 31 the wheat board is required to dump that on the market at a fire sale price and to take anything they can get for it, no. This amendment says that if there are 50 million bushels of feed wheat remaining in the present pool period on July 31 then within sixty days thereafter the wheat board shall sell that carry-over from this year's pool to next year's pool at a price established by the governor in council.

We are not trying to set the price for it. The government will have to take into consideration marketing conditions and all of the relative factors. But we are asking that that price be set within a sixty-day period, the transfer made and the farmer's money paid out to him.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I am not going to offer an opinion on the merits, but I should like to draw attention to one thing. I took down a few moments ago what the minister said in answer to an argument put forward in what seemed a most reasonable manner by the hon. member for Melfort. He said, "If you don't like it, you can vote against it". What does he mean by that? He means, "I am not going to discuss the merits at all with you. We have a majority here, and we will vote it down".

Mr. Fair: Mr. Chairman, without engaging in political discussions or considerations, as others seem to have done, in the interest of the farmers I should like to see the surplus of each pool carried over into the next pool, if it is possible to do that without getting into the mess we are in at the present time. It must be remembered that many farmers are still in debt and are paying interest on money which is being held over in wheat board funds, because the grain has not all been disposed of and settlement cannot be made until such is done.

If that can be worked out on a reasonable basis, and without endangering the financial position of the pool, or discriminating against the farmers of any particular pool, I should like very much to see it done. I believe such a system was carried out by the Alberta wheat pool in the early years of its operations.

Mr. Howe: It was to accomplish that that the bill was introduced. That is the purpose of it—to remove the difficulty of liquidating the pool quickly, under the present legislation.

Amendment negatived: Yeas, 27; nays, 55.

Bill reported.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Now.

Mr. Knowles: By leave.

Mr. Howe moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. Robert Fair (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, before the bill is read a third time I should like to read an editorial. There appears to be a good deal of misunderstanding between rural and city people across the country. I have before me the September issue of Country Life, which is published in Vernon, British Columbia, by Country Life Limited. In this issue there is some sound advice I should like to place on record, in the hope that all parties concerned will take cognizance of it. It states:

Tonic Needed Badly

When an important farm group meets in a Canadian city, the businessmen, if given the opportunity, do not hesitate to declare that they are fully aware of the interdependence of business and agriculture and of the common and closely related interests of town and country. But they and the ordinary city folk are so immersed in their own affairs that outside perhaps of a few minutes every year, they forget about the farm families except to complain, without thinking and without knowledge of the facts, about the cost of food. Actually the main and essential foods in Canada are the cheapest commodities that are bought by consumers.

It would be profitable all around if city residents took time out once in a while and studied their relations with the farming community. Having done this, their sense of justice could go to work and lay the foundations for a better understanding.

A few plain truths, while perhaps not always welcome nor palatable, still provide a tonic that is badly needed in these confused days. U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Charles F. Brannan told a conference of business leaders some of these truths, as applicable in the States and even more applicable in Canada.

For example, one-third of the products manufacturing industries in the United States would be crippled completely, if deprived of agriculture's raw materials.

One dollar in every four of the revenue of the nation's railways is derived from the transportation of agricultural products.

American farmers spend two billion dollars a year on automotive equipment, their operation and their upkeep to the advantage of the oil industry and the car, truck, tractor and farm automotive machinery manufacturers and distributors and their employees benefit accordingly.

Farm families of Canada are buyers of goods and services of every type and in normal life, their ability to buy, governs to a marked degree the presence or absence of prosperity in the cities and in the nation.

Farm folk, through their federation of agriculture, are striving to establish close and constructive relations with city folk but there have to be two parties to this understanding and the handicaps are tough and numerous. One such handicap is the long farm working season during which agriculturists have neither time nor energy to prosecute good-will movements. Another is the absence of common meeting grounds. A third is the ingrained lack of interest of urban Canadians.

One of the best sources of help would be the daily papers of the cities but there again, the pressure of local, provincial, national and international news and affairs crowds out agriculture.

It would be a healthy tonic for town and country if the editors could find time to pay a visit to the agricultural areas and get firsthand views and firsthand information. These editors are most knowledgeable observers and they could render a further service of incalculable value to their country.

In my constituency I believe we have co-operation between town and farm people, who have made an effort to understand each other's problems. I am sorry that some of the newspapers right here in Ottawa have not seen fit to state the true picture, and in this way are creating mistrust and developing bad relationships.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

INDIAN ACT

AMENDMENT AND CONSOLIDATION—PROVISIONS WITH RESPECT TO BAND FUNDS

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) moved the second reading of Bill No. 79, respecting Indians.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that in moving the second reading of this bill it will be necessary to refer from time to time to Bill No. 267, which was introduced last session and withdrawn in June. On the second reading of that bill I made a statement of government policy with respect to Indians. There is nothing that was said at that time that need be altered at the present time. In fact, I think I should begin by repeating what I said then was government policy, and I quote from page 3938 of Hansard of June 21, 1950:

The underlying principles of Indian legislation through the years have been protection and advancement of the Indian population. In the earlier period the main emphasis was on protection. But as the Indians become more self-reliant and capable of successfully adapting themselves to modern conditions, more emphasis is being laid on greater participation and responsibility by Indians in the conduct of their own affairs. Indeed, it may be said that ever since confederation the underlying purpose of Indian administration has been to prepare the Indians for full citizenship with the same rights and responsibilities as those enjoyed and accepted by other members of the community.

I went on to say that pursuant to that policy it was hoped that we could eventually provide for the integration of the Indian into our community life. Since then I have received many protests from Indians with respect to that statement because there were many who thought that integration was equivalent to assimilation. I want to make it quite clear that that is not the meaning of the word in any way; the word was used to indicate the status of having privileges, duties and responsibilities equal to those of other Canadians, and exercising them in the same manner that we do.

On the resolution stage of this bill I set out the procedure that we had followed after the bill was withdrawn last June. I said that we had written to every Indian and Indian organization and to every non-Indian and non-Indian organization who had communicated with us about the bill. We asked that they send their representations to us, and they did. Naturally those representations varied and it was quite evident that Indian did not agree with Indian as to certain sections in the bill now before the house, neither did non-Indian agree with non-Indian. In other words, there was a normal division of opinion among the Indians and non-Indians with respect to Indian affairs.

I also indicated that we had decided to invite to Ottawa representative Indians in order to discuss this bill with them. That discussion occurred on February 28, March 1 and 2, and on March 3 we had a general discussion about Indian affairs as we completed the discussion of the bill on the day before. At a later stage I should like to put on the record the names of those who attended the conference.

It will be seen when the list is before hon. members that we had Indians from every area in Canada covered by treaty, and also from every other area in Canada where Indians live. As hon. members will see, the majority was quite conclusive with respect to the bill. Nevertheless I am obliged to say that there was some opposition to certain parts of the bill. In order that that information might be available to hon. members and in order that it should have the approval of the Indians before it was brought to this house, I drew up and read to the conference on the afternoon of March 2 the agreed conclusions with respect to this bill.

It will be interesting for the house to understand what those conclusions were. There are 124 sections in Bill No. 79. Of those 124 sections, two sections were unanimously opposed by the conference, four other sections were opposed by a majority of those present; there was some objection to 15 sections but the majority of the conference were in support while the remaining 103 sections were unanimously supported by the conference. To repeat, the four sections on which there was opposition from a majority were sections dealing with liquor provisions, so that in effect it can be said that there were only three matters mentioned in the bill which received opposition by a majority of the Indians at the conference.

I promised to draw the attention of the house to the proceedings at that conference and with the permission of the house I should like to do so. We drew up a record. I stated that we would put more detail in it and that copies would be sent to everyone present, and that I would also put it on the record as an appendix to Hansard. If I have the consent of the house I should like to do that now.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister the consent of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

(For text of the proceedings of conference see appendix B, pages 1364-7.)

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I have indicated that there was general desire on the part of the government to get opinions from both Indians and non-Indians with respect to this legislation, and we have gone to considerable trouble to do that. Before I proceed to discuss in some detail the matter before the house I might state that the Indians were most grateful that this conference had been arranged. It was the first of its kind and in many instances was the first occasion in which representative Indians from the west met representative Indians from the east. The fact that they disagreed among themselves only made the meeting more important. They exchanged views and they discovered what I shall mention later, that the Indian Act is all inclusive and has to cover Indians in all parts of Canada. They realized that that had to be borne in mind, particularly by those who saw something in the bill that might not be applicable to their particular band or district.

Perhaps I might make one general remark before I proceed to a consideration of the bill. The most important matter to the Indian is his treaty and his treaty rights. I have pointed out already to the house that not all Indians are treaty Indians; in fact, just over half are under treaty as the phrase is used. There are something like 69,000 Indians under treaty, with a few thousand less than that not under treaty.

These treaties are agreements which were negotiated by commissioners appointed for the purpose, particularly to obtain the surrender of the Indian interest in lands. There are twelve such treaties and they affect the lives and the property of Indians from roughly lake Simcoe in Ontario to the Rocky mountains. In that area, as I said, we have some 69,000 treaty Indians. The treaties all follow the same pattern, surrender of the Indian interest in land, payment for that surrender, and certain conditions. These treaties are not referred to in the bill except in some instances where it was deemed advisable to provide specifically that they would not be affected by that particular section. The house will understand, however, that these treaties do not provide in many cases for what it is alleged they do. Any member who served on the Indian affairs committee of 1946 to 1948 knows that there was a good deal of confusion in the minds of many witnesses before the committee as to what the treaties did in fact contain. We do not accept responsibility for that, although we are doing what we can to overcome the confusion. These treaties are in printed form and are available in all our offices in the area covered by particular treaty.

I should like now to mention the bill generally without offending the rule as to discussing sections. Bill 267, the bill of last year, was intended to be a revision of the Indian Act. It was the intention to provide the machinery for carrying out government policy with respect to Indians. It was not the policy itself, and this has led to some confusion about the bill. Many people have written expressing disappointment that matters that they thought were essential to the welfare of the Indian had not been included in the bill. I think I should give two examples at least. I received many letters from people saying: There is nothing whatever in the bill about old age pensions for Indians. Similarly there were many letters saying: You have not provided in the bill that, wherever possible, an Indian child should obtain the same standard of education that a non-Indian receives. The house will readily understand why those matters are not contained in the bill. Those are matters which are provided for in this house by votes in the estimates and not by legislation.

Then there were representations which indicated a lack of understanding about what the bill did contain, and I think I should give one example of that. We have a section in the bill which provides that the governor in council may exempt from the restrictive provisions in the bill any Indian or any band if it seems desirable to do so. This section was designed to relieve the Indian from what might appear to be restrictive provisions. Nevertheless we received protests with respect to this section indicating that the writers thought that the government would try to avoid its responsibility to the Indian, and that the section might be used to destroy treaties, as the phrase was used.

Similarly we had objections from the other side of the story, that the section was going to be used to give to the Indian powers and authority which he did not want, which in some cases he could not use, and these representations were made by Indians as well as by non-Indians. I do not remember who it was now but I recall one person saying something which I think is significant. He said that the Indian wanted to retain his present privileges but to have complete political freedom from the government. That is a definition of the problem which has to be solved in Indian affairs. The problem is to maintain the balance of administration of the Indian Act in such a way as to give self-determination and self-government as the circumstances may warrant to all Indians in Canada, but that in the meantime we should have the legislative authority to afford any necessary protection and assistance.

Heretofore we have thought of enfranchisement as being the ultimate role of Indian policy, and let us say frankly that we rather expected that the Indian would want to become enfranchised in order to be like one of us. Nothing can be further from the truth, Mr. Speaker. The Indian has no desire to become as one of us, and all his representations have said: I hope you are not going to take away from me the right to be an Indian. Of course there is no such intention. Except in rare cases the Indian has every intention to retain his connection with his reserve and with his band, and while he wants some of the advantages of our society he wants them on such terms that he can retain his old connections.

I think, sir, that our policy should be to extend self-government to all the reserves as soon as possible. It might be argued that this would give to band councils on the reserves greater powers than are now held and exercised by municipal authorities in our form of government, but if that would be the result surely we can impose safeguards to see that a band council does not exercise authority greater than a municipal council unless it is in the interests of the band. I think perhaps we can discuss that better in the committee stage.

This brings up other misunderstandings about the bill. Many people have written saying that they do not understand the difference between enfranchisement and voting at dominion elections. In fact I think one hon. member in this house during the debate last year showed that there was some doubt in his mind as to the difference between the two. Enfranchisement is the act whereby an Indian is released from the band, obtains the funds that are due to him and a small gratuity from the government, and goes out into the world on his own in nearly all cases. It has nothing whatever to do with voting at dominion elections as provided for by an amendment to the Dominion Elections Act last year. He now has the facilities for making his wishes known in this house by influencing the choice of the member who comes here from his particular riding.

One of the drawbacks to enfranchisement in the past has been that he could not do that without cutting himself off from his own band and his associations with his relatives and friends. It seems to me then that by providing the vote as we did we have begun a policy which will retain in the Indian's hands all the benefits that he now enjoys by reason of being an Indian as well as giving to him, as I have said, the opportunity of influencing legislation in this house for his benefit.

I think I can see the time is not far distant when the administration of Indian affairs will be much better because in this house we will have a critical approach to the problem not just once every decade but every year, by persons representing the Indians. However, the word "enfranchisement", confusing though it may be, is difficult to replace. We could not find a substitute, so we have used the word again; and the procedure for enfranchisement is much the same in this bill as it was under the act. I want to repeat, however, that voting at dominion elections as provided a year ago has nothing whatever to do with enfranchisement; that voting at dominion elections under that amendment does not take from the Indian any of his treaty rights, though enfranchisement does.

This brings me to the question of councillors. In the bill we have provided that the election of councillors and chiefs on the reserves shall be by secret ballot. We think this should be the case. We think the Indian councils should take hold of the affairs of their bands and discharge their responsibilities, and that this can be done best by having them in the first instance chosen by the free and secret ballot of their people. Some representations were made that the Indians had not yet attained that standard of education in procedure and management which would make it possible for those duties to be performed; and it was suggested, you will see by the record of proceedings, that the term of office should be long so the chiefs and councillors might learn the procedure and methods of handling the money of their bands and dealing with property. For the same reasons it was also suggested that the term of office should be very short, and that we should pass as many people as possible through the offices, giving instructions as they went along. I do not think that is necessary. I think the term of office stated in the bill will be satisfactory.

One matter really counts to the Indian on the reserve; that is his property rights. There is no pattern of tenure of land for the Indian on his reserve. On some reserves they occupy lands by mutual consent. On other reserves there is an allotment by the band council, and in some cases there has been a succession of ownership passing through several generations. We feel this is not a satisfactory method for the holding of property, and that there should be some security to the individual Indians. We also feel that where an Indian has had land allotted to him and has put improvements upon it, he should not be penalized upon enfranchisement. In the act at the moment there is a provision that an enfranchised Indian may live on his land on a reserve, or he may have complete ownership which would extend to selling the land. This has raised some concern that Indians might become enfranchised for the purpose of selling their land, so that eventually the reserve might be held by non-Indians. That has not been our experience. Very few of the Indians seeking enfranchisement have asked for the privilege of holding their land; but at the same time it must be admitted that many Indians feel enfranchisement should be a bar to any future relationship on the reserve. Others feel that Indians should be entitled to the same security of land tenure that is assured to the rest of us. But most of them agree at least that enfranchisement should not work out to the disadvantage of the Indian who has put a great deal of work and spent money on his land.

In this bill we have provided that upon enfranchisement the Indian may hold his land for a period of ten years. He may live on the land, and at the end of the ten-year period may have absolute ownership of it. That is a restriction compared with the present act, the only restriction I am prepared to admit; but it is done in that way in order to assure the band that there will not be a sale of land immediately upon enfranchisement. Let me say at once that we do not propose to use this in every case, and assuredly we would not use it if it would lead to any form of breaking up of the reserves or, in fact, to anything detrimental to band life.

Now just a word about the criticism which was directed to Bill No. 267 with respect to ministerial discretion. This bill does continue ministerial discretion, but I assure the house that this discretion is very much limited as compared with the present act; and in committee I am sure we will be prepared to defend such discretion as has been retained. In particular the minister is obliged to retain authority over the expenditure of band funds, for the very simple reason that these moneys are in the consolidated revenue fund and there must be some authority for their payment. I would not want to mislead the house. The ministerial authority does extend to supervision of expenditure of band funds, but I want to assure the house that just as soon as a band demonstrates its ability to handle money it will be given an opportunity of doing so.

I have not attempted to discuss many of the objections that were raised to Bill No.

267, but I think I should mention one objection raised by the leader of the C.C.F. and the hon. member for Lethbridge. Both these hon. members mentioned a claims commission and expressed disappointment that it was not provided for in the bill. There is no need for a claims commission in the bill, as far as having one is concerned; we can provide for that also by a vote in the estimates. But I suggest to the house that there is no need for a claims commission in any event. Such a commission was established in the United States, but it was mainly concerned with a revision of the prices paid for land which had been surrendered by the Indians, in the mid-western states. In almost every case, if you will read the proceedings of the claims commission, it was alleged that the original surrender had been obtained by duress, or for lack of real value, or reasons of that kind. I think it is a matter of pride, sir, that no band of Indians in Canada has asserted that any original surrender was made under duress, or for lack of value, or under conditions similar to that. Under the circumstances we do not think that a claims commission is necessary for that particular purpose. Nevertheless a perusal of the Indian affairs committee proceedings of a few years ago will show that almost every Indian witness was of the opinion that his treaty rights had been abrogated or restricted in one form or another; and in particular, those who had treaty rights dealing with hunting and fishing.

In the province of Ontario it was alleged that, by the Robinson-Huron treaty, certain provisions were made for the Indians to hunt and fish in, roughly, the area north of lake Simcoe but that, by reason of the operation of the provincial game and fish laws, his treaty rights have been restricted. In the western provinces the suggestion is made that, by reason of the transfer of the natural resources to the provinces, the provinces have obtained the right—and are exercising it—of restricting game hunting and fishing in certain treaty areas. This argument—that is, the argument with respect to the western treaties—overlooks the fact that all those treaties provided for the regulation of these pursuits. On the other hand, it can be said that, by reason of conservation methods which are encouraged by this department, in co-operation with the provincial governments, the Indian has enjoyed distinct advantages with protection by having greater opportunities for trap lines, fishing rights and the like. Certainly the income of the Indians, particularly those in the western provinces, has been much greater as a result of these conservation methods. But the basic problem, whether confederation in the eastern provinces and the transfer of the natural resources in the western provinces has actually resulted in an impairment of the treaty rights, is uppermost in the minds of the Indian at all times. There have been court decisions, and those court decisions have upheld the right of the Indian to hunt and to fish, in some cases, in what appears to be contradiction of the provincial game laws. In view of this fact and because we know that the Indian is reasonable, and because the Indian has expressed a wish to carry on within the law, we think that we should continue the policy of co-operation with the provincial governments in an effort to obtain the maximum conservation of game and fish, together with the continuing exercise of these rights granted to the Indian.

There is one other treaty right that the Indian asks and that is in connection with the matter of taxation. All Indians under treaty allege that they are exempt from taxation by reason of their treaty. There has been no court decision which says so. On the contrary, there have been court decisions which say otherwise. The point I want to make is that provision for tax exemption is contained in the Indian Act. That exemption which now exists is being continued in the present bill.

That brings me to the question which was raised in the house last June, one of civil rights, if you wish to put it that way, the right of an Indian to engage in lawsuits. The Indian may sue another Indian or a non-Indian or the government in precisely the same manner as a non-Indian may. In the bill there is nothing that alters the right he now has to do this. From the Indian's standpoint the difficulty is that his money is held in a common fund and he himself has no money, or at least very little, wherewith to finance lawsuits to assert his rights. We recognize that as a difficulty, so we have provided in this bill for greater authority of the band councils to use money for the benefit of the band and this may extend to legal expenses which they might incur for the purpose of asserting their rights. But I want it clearly understood by the house—and I do not think it was clearly understood, judging from the debate which took place last summer—that there is no restriction on the Indian with regard to bringing an action against the government for any right he thinks he may have had, or against any other person.

I notice that the speech from the throne suggests that there will be legislation removing the necessity for a petition of right; and that will apply to the Indian as well as to the non-Indian. I want to assure the house, however, that I am not looking forward to a flood of lawsuits against the government, but I am saying this because among some Indians I met there seemed to be an opinion that they could not sue for their rights. I hope that if they think they have rights, they will take action in our courts to establish them, because our courts are set up for that purpose. I should think that the Indian would be better satisfied and that there would be equal justice if he took that course rather than that we should appoint a claims commission specifically to deal with his claims.

I want to mention briefly one part of the Indian Act which is not carried forward in this bill. In the present act there is a provision that the houses of parliament, by an elaborate procedure which is set out therein, might remove an Indian band from the reserve it is on to a newly established reserve, if the one on which they are living is adjacent to a city or municipality of over 8,000 population. The Indian has always felt that this was a reproach to him, that it indicated that he was a second-class citizen and that we did not like his standard of life.

I am sure there was no such thought at any time. But on looking at the section—and not only because of the opposition to it—we came to the conclusion that it was discriminatory and should have no place in the legislation of Canada. Consequently we have removed that provision and the Indian now is not subject to removal at the will of parliament from his present reserve for the purposes outlined in that section. We did that because the Indian is just as good a citizen as you and I. He may not live as we do; but I have heard many people say that he lives a happier life than you and I do. Certainly he has shown a remarkable adaptability. He is now overcoming some of the diseases which it is alleged we brought to him. But, at any rate, as a race, he is coming back. May I also add that he is getting wealthy too. We have in the consolidated revenue fund over $20 million of his money, including approximately $540,000 of personal savings. In discussing this bill it should be remembered that the Indian has pulled his weight in the two world wars. He is part of our community, in the more populated areas where he is part of a lively community he takes part in the community life, and he is indispensable to us.

I think we should frankly admit that in the past there have been shortcomings in the administration of Indian affairs; and in doing that we can only reassure the Indian by saying here that we are going to eliminate the shortcomings in the future.

There may be some legal problems to settle yet. There are one or two major issues outstanding in that connection. I might mention, for example, the Indians of British Columbia. They assert that by the terms of union whereby British Columbia came into confederation they were assured certain things which they interpret to mean no taxation on personal property. Whether that claim is justified or not is a matter of considerable moment to the thirty odd thousand Indians of British Columbia and because it is something in the nature of a constitutional issue, and certainly is based on a document which can be produced in court, we feel justified in assisting the Indian to come to a determination of this particular matter. We are making arrangements to see that that is done, and that the claim of the Indian is given every consideration by the competent court concerned.

I wish therefore, sir, to present the bill to the house and to ask the house to recognize that the Indian has arrived at that point, in many instances, where he not only can but should have control of his own affairs. We shall continue to give him that control as he demonstrates his ability to exercise it.

It may well be that the provincial governments can be most useful in aiding us in this respect, and it is a matter of interest that the legislature of the province of British Columbia has appointed a special committee to consider Indian affairs in that province. We are quite certain that the committee and its work will be beneficial to the Indian, and undoubtedly will be helpful to us in handling Indian affairs in that province.

The Indian is our brother, Mr. Speaker. He has been a faithful friend in time of need. Let us act as if he is.

Mr. J. A. Charlton (Brant-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, in moving second reading of Bill No. 79, respecting Indians, the minister has already gone over much of the history of the old bill, Bill No. 267, which was introduced last year by the government. At that time, as a matter of fact, on May 5 of last year, the statement was made by the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) himself that, if there was any great dissension among the Indians over it, it would not be passed last year but would be held over for some time. As we all remember, Mr. Speaker, that was not just what happened. It was given first reading on June 7, and came up for second reading on June 21, just two weeks after it was given first reading in this house. As you, Mr. Speaker, can readily understand, and as all hon. members can understand, Indians are found all across this country, and it would be utterly impossible for them to receive the bill, study it and get their recommendations or briefs in to this government in a matter of two weeks' time. Therefore the bill was withdrawn and is now brought back to us as Bill No. 79.

As I see it, Mr. Speaker, there is very little change in this bill from the old Bill No. 267. I will admit that there are some good changes. I only hope that the bill is as good as the minister would have us believe it is.

I realize that on second reading it is the principle of a bill that is discussed; therefore I shall not mention any particular clauses but I do want to go over some points that are of particular interest to me, and something that the minister has just said.

Treaty rights, as the minister said, are very important to the Indians. They feel that these treaty rights should mean something. They were treaties made with the crown, and they feel that this government should uphold their portion of the treaty.

As the minister said, the Indians have fought in two wars, and were our allies in affairs before that. The minister mentioned something about taxes. Contrary to the opinion of most people in the House of Commons, and many people outside the house, the Indians do pay practically all the taxes that the white man pays, with the exception of land taxes on their property on the reservation and on income earned on the reservation. He is not subject to those taxes, but he does pay all other taxes. He pays the gasoline tax; he pays excise taxes on any articles he buys, just the same as any other person does.

The minister also mentioned the fact that the Indian was now given the chance to vote. I will grant that, Mr. Speaker. But what does he have to give up for the opportunity to vote? It is not just as easy as it is imagined by many people. He has to sign a waiver of rights of exemption from income tax. That in itself makes the Indian suspicious. He does not understand just what he is signing in many instances, and he thinks he is signing something away that is a right of his, and he should not have to do it to get the vote. It seems by some strange quirk—and the minister mentioned it tonight also—that this government thinks the Indian should be made a citizen of this country. Probably the minister is doing some crystal gazing. He admitted tonight he was wrong, of course. Well, Mr. Speaker, the Indian was the first citizen of this country. He has a better right to citizenship than anybody else in this country. We stole their land from them, moved them on to reservations and told them that they were wards of the state. Now we come along with this bill and say to them: We took your freedom a few years ago; now we are going to take your home. That is the point that I am going to try to bring out. Under this bill that is the right of the governor in council. They get that right under the assisting legislation that is put forward in Bill No. 79.

I have always maintained that where there are Indians of equal ability they should be given the preference in any positions on reserves or in the administration of the department. It is only recently that consideration has been given to this matter, and I am happy to say that in the case of the Six Nations reservation at Brantford all of the teachers on that reserve are now Indian teachers. I am sure the minister can tell us how many Indians there are in the administration of the department, and we shall all be glad to hear that later on in the discussion.

As the minister quoted tonight, the policy of the government seems to be—well, I should like to quote again a part of what the minister quoted, which is taken from page 3938 of Hansard of June 21, 1950:

> Indeed, it may be said that ever since confederation the underlying purpose of Indian administration has been to prepare the Indians for full citizenship with the same rights and responsibilities as those enjoyed and accepted by other members of the community. This aim has not been lost sight of in the preparation of the bill.
> The ultimate goal of our Indian policy is the integration of the Indians into the general life and economy of the country.

The minister said tonight that there is a great difference between integration and assimilation. I took the trouble to look these words up in the dictionary, and I found that the word assimilate means to make like, to compare, to absorb into the system; while the word integrate means to complete by the addition of parts, or the binding into a whole. As has been said, obviously that is not the desire of the Indians in this country—most definitely not. So far as I can see, there is so little difference between the two words that I do not think the Indians are going to be any happier with the word integration than they would have been with the word assimilation.

I do not think I could do better than to read what appears in the brief presented last September by the Six Nations Indians, on that particular point. This brief was presented in connection with the bill before the house last year, but it would have the same bearing at this time. They said:

> As is common to every national group, our prime desire is to retain our racial identity. We have no desire to be assimilated into the country at large, and only by preserving our reserves can we attain this objective. We had earnestly hoped the new act would give us the protection guaranteed by our treaties, but we note with alarm the provisions made (section 42) whereby we could be removed from our reserves, when the only security that we know is tied up in our reservations lands. Our people feel that the proposed new Indian act is an element in the long-awaited for campaign to abolish our reservations and defraud our people of their lands. If the abolishing of our reservations is the present intention of the government, they are only confirming our people's long, deep-seated fears and suspicions. The government can only do this by breaking treaties, and that is by breaking faith with a people who have never broken a treaty with the government. Let the government keep faith with our people, and with themselves.

And then, further on:

The white man in this country tends to get very excited about any threat to individual freedom, but ignores too much any curtailment of the rights of a group to an existence in their own way of life. Section 113 makes provision for the compulsory exile of any Indian or band, who, in the opinion of the minister, shows any progress or ability. We are opposed to group or individual enfranchisement which would mean losing our identity as Indian groups, and our personal identification as an Indian. We must be guaranteed the right to retain the land which the white man calls reservations, and which our people call home.

That is the point I am trying to bring out. The minister has said that it is not intended to do some of the things set out in the bill. As I said before, in the debate on second reading one is supposed only to discuss the principle. However I do wish to call attention to section 4(2) of the bill because it is my contention that under it the governor in council has power to do almost anything it wishes to any reserve or to any Indian on a reservation. I should appreciate it greatly if the minister could point out that in this I am mistaken.

I am sure we have faith that the minister would not do anything detrimental to the Indians. Nevertheless as I read that subsection and note the power it contains I am led to the conclusion that it is an absolute contradiction of the democratic principles of British justice. Through it the minister could remove Indians from reservations and cause new bands to be set up, for which special provision is made in section 17. Bands can also be amalgamated.

I contend that section 4(2) does not give justice to the Indians. It would not be considered justice for white people; why should it be so considered for the Indians of Canada? So long as the government insists upon retaining that section in the bill I cannot give it my support. It is a complete negation of the other good sections in the measure. By this one section all that is good in it can be destroyed. I would strongly urge that it be deleted by the government, and also that the special committee of the Senate and the House of Commons be reconvened so that this measure might be placed before it for further consideration. I understand the minister has said that he would favour that procedure if it were desired.

I believe that when the minister realizes the power he has in section 4(2) he will consider favourably its withdrawal. Certainly I hope he will take that course.

Mr. William Bryce (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I should like first of all to congratulate the minister upon the frank statement he made. It is a pleasure to hear a minister explain a measure as thoroughly as did the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Harris) this evening. I should not like him to think for one moment that I agree with everything he said—because I do not. The fact remains, however, that it was a frank statement, anyway.

I shall not speak at length at this time because I think more can be done, and we can do a better job, in the special committee. What I shall say now for a few moments will be general. As everyone knows, most Indians are wards of the government and have no vote. They have no representatives in parliament and must depend entirely upon the sympathy of government and departmental officials. Under those circumstances the Indians at times suffer great disadvantages when they attempt to air their grievances or have injustices corrected.

I understand from different sources that the Indians in eastern Canada are beginning to take their place in industry and agriculture. While serving on the Indian affairs committee I had the privilege and pleasure of seeing for myself conditions among the Indians. Indians on the prairies, especially in the northern parts, and in parts of my old constituency, still stick largely to their original habits of living by hunting, trapping and fishing. According to information I received, when I visited reservations on the Pacific coast, it would seem that there are many instances where the Indians fit into the white man's life, where they work as loggers and fishermen. However, from everywhere one hears reports of the desperate conditions of poverty and the ill health resulting from the conditions under which they live.

With the Indian population on the increase this bill becomes necessary. It is not possible or desirable to treat Indians perpetually as alien enemies in our midst. They must eventually be brought to the stage where they can mingle with whites on terms of equality. We owe a great debt to the Indian. We got this great country of ours from them and in return we pay $5 per year each to all treaty Indians. That seems little to give in exchange for a country.

They are confined to their reserves and the treatment handed out to them is not always satisfactory. When the government made the agreements with the Indians they promised them education and medical care, and assured living room as long as the sun shone, the grass grew and the rivers flowed. None of those promises have been carried out to the satisfaction of most Indians. Changes take place rapidly these days and since the Indian lives largely in the past, and in the present, since he is largely untrained, he gives little thought to tomorrow. The adjustments in his mode of living made necessary by present-day conditions are beyond the thoughts of most of these men of the bush. Having been wards of the government for years they have grown accustomed to the care and help given by the Indian affairs branch.

I invite you to consider some of their problems. The education of the Indian is a difficult problem but one that is not incapable of being solved if approached with intelligence and sympathy. There are two systems in operation today, the day school and the residential or boarding school. Various religious bodies have co-operated with the Indian branch in establishing residential schools which are carried on at a charge of so much per pupil. The day school on the reserve, more especially in the north, is conducted after the manner of our one-roomed schools. This type of school is faced with the difficulty of the parents of the Indian children being on travel most of the time and not placing any value on education. In order to earn a living the Indians must travel most of the time and as a consequence regular attendance at school is difficult. This does not give the teacher much chance, no matter how good he or she may be.

No doubt the residential school was created to overcome the difficulties experienced with the day school. The pupils live at the residential school during the school year. They are away from their parents who are on the reserve. The boys and girls who are selected to attend the residential or boarding school, those whose parents are willing to let them go, are checked by the doctors and only the healthiest are taken, those who are free from t.b. and other ailments. Children who are suffering from t.b. and who need more care than other children are generally left at home.

At the age of sixteen years these boys and girls are returned to their homes on the reserves. The boy who returns from a residential school cannot hunt, trap or fish, and the girl cannot keep house in an Indian home. All they have to show for their years at school is a superiority complex and a grouch.

The children who attend the day school on the reserve receive the same education as the children attending the residential school, but they have the opportunity to learn how to live on the reserve under existing conditions. The boys learn how to hunt, trap and fish and do other things essential to their future life in the bush. The girls learn to make bannock under primitive conditions, and learn how to cook over a bush fire.

The boys and girls who attend the residential school learn agriculture and domestic science in addition to the subjects taught at the day school. They are well taken care of, have good food and clothing. But in the north country neither agriculture nor domestic science fits into the reserve picture of today. Children attending these schools have to learn to speak English while their parents may only speak the native tongue. The girls learn to wash and cook by electricity and they become accustomed to other modern living conditions of the white people. The boys see modern agricultural implements at work. In neither case do these children find an opportunity to use these things in the environment to which they go back.

No doubt the faults in this system could be corrected by taking the more promising pupils away for further education. The boys could be sent to vocational schools to learn trades and skills, while the girls could be trained as nurses. They would no doubt be able to return as men and women to act as leaders in the community they had left when young. Those who have studied the Indians assure me that there are some who show great promise and aptitude to learn leadership and who would make good leaders in their communities.

Previously I have pointed out to the house how clever Indians are when in the bush. I have seen them there and it is really remarkable what they can do. I am quite hopeful that, if they are given the opportunity, especially after what I have seen done in New Zealand with the Maoris, after twenty-five years we will see a tremendous difference in our Indians. The Indian will have to be fitted into our economy. While it may take years, the sooner we start, the better. It is to be hoped that the day is not far distant when every reserve will have its own day school. The best teachers should be encouraged to take up this work. They should be paid and treated so well that they will take on the teaching of Indians as a lifework of a missionary nature.

Outstanding Indian students should be permitted to work for a university degree and carry on studies that will train them for the complex task of assisting their own people who today stand bewildered between two totally different cultures.

Coming to the economic needs of the Indian, little can be done in any direction until a more satisfactory economic basis is laid down for them. In the past the Indian was wholly dependent for his means of subsistence on the bush and the lake. Then the coming of traders provided employment for them, and in some cases a better market for their products. The old sources of food have gradually been disappearing.

The airplane is supplanting the canoe for passenger and freight traffic. One can make a journey into the wilderness today in comfort in an hour or two which would require days by canoe, to say nothing of mosquitoes, black flies, portages and hard beds on the ground. There again the Indian has lost another source of revenue. There are still plenty of fish in the lakes but if commercial fishing should be encouraged the Indians will have again lost a source of food supply. Distance from the market has kept these lakes from being profitable commercial enterprises but with the development of the airplane fishing in them may become profitable.

A great deal could be accomplished by the existing teachers, missionaries and doctors if a community centre were established on each reserve. If a hall were secured that was suitable for handicraft studies, health classes, adult classes in English, reading and writing, indoor sports, boy and girl scout movements, it would be a step in the right direction. Never having had such a thing as a community centre, the Indians have no conception of what an important part it would play in their future life. If the government could start something like that on one or two reserves where there are good leaders I am quite sure that the Indians could be got to co-operate.

The problem of the livelihood of the Indian is more complex and difficult, and what must be done depends in detail on the part of the country under consideration. However, one principle unites all requirements, namely, that while the Indian was free to roam at large he gained his living by wandering freely wherever food could be found. Now he is confined to a small area and must get his living therefrom. I wish to congratulate the federal and provincial governments on the policy they have adopted to handle furs for the Indians. The minister talked about that a few minutes ago. Their money is divided into twelve payments. I think the dominion government does that in co-operation with the provincial governments. It is going to be a great lesson to the Indians to know that they will get their money by the month and will have something to spend every month in the year.

As I said before, it has been a failing of the Indian that he does not look forward to tomorrow. Under the policy adopted the families of the trappers for the first time have known the security of a regular monthly income which can still be supplemented as usual of course by casual labour or the sale of hay and wood. I see no reason why the plan should not work in other districts. It protects the Indians and enriches the country at the same time. It is to be hoped that the project will be manned and operated almost entirely by Indians who are showing a great liking for the work. Something can be done by way of gardens in the patches of soil among the rocks but the Indians are hunters and eaters of meat rather than vegetarians, and it is difficult to interest them in any form of agriculture.

In the same way I believe that forestry and lumbering operations can be developed and probably fisheries on the west coast. It will be a matter of guiding them in the principle of preserving the resources entrusted to them so that they may become independent and regain their place in Canadian life. The Indian is not lazy and he will work well and hard at the kind of work that is natural to him. Canada owes at least this much to these people, who are true Canadians.

I should like to see the minister set up an Indian affairs committee. I am sorry that members of the House of Commons were not able to be present at his interview with the eighteen Indians, I think the minister said, who came to see him to present their pleas. If they were the same kind of Indians that I have dealt with in the past, I wonder if they were just quite clear on what the minister had to say to them. But no doubt the minister will tell us more about that.

When the minister was speaking he talked about land being held by non-Indians. Perhaps he will explain that further to us the next time he speaks. If one Indian has the right to sell to another Indian he would not be allowed to sell to a non-Indian, or could he sell to a non-Indian and thereby in the course of time the Indian reserve would be whittled away so that it was no longer a reserve. I am glad that the clause to the effect that a reservation could be moved away from a town has been withdrawn from the bill. In the maritime provinces we had two or three instances where towns were quite anxious that these people be moved elsewhere.

The minister dealt with the matter of a claims commission. I have always advocated a claims commission and I still think that one is necessary. However, if the minister has the assurance of the Indians that they have no further claims then there will be no need for a claims commission, but from what I know of the Indians in my own constituency and Indians I meet from time to time they still have claims. I do not think that we should go on raising another generation of Indians for the next twenty-five years allowing them to believe that they have claims if they have none. It is only by a claims commission that I think we can overcome that situation.

I have not touched on the matter of health because the government has made wonderful improvements in health in the last seven or eight years. I have had the pleasure of travelling through the north country and visiting some of the hospitals. I have seen some of the work they are doing, and if the rest of the Indian department bestirs itself and does as good a job as those who are looking after health are doing—and I do not want them to relax in any way—it will be a good thing for everybody concerned.

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I listened with intense interest to the statement which the minister made in moving second reading of Bill No. 79. Like my hon. friend, the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bryce), I wish to congratulate him most sincerely on the straightforward and detailed statement that he made tonight. I think that the minister has shown a remarkable grasp of the whole Indian problem, and has presented in the house tonight a statement which it seems to me will go down in history as one of the very first and most important recognizing the principle that these are a noble people we are dealing with. Over the past few years it seems to me there has been a growing consciousness of that fact. I began to notice that it started about the time that the hon. member for Essex West (Mr. Brown) was the chairman of the Indian affairs committee investigating this whole problem and the details of the lives and affairs of the Indians. The hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore) had a good deal to do with it, as well as the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bryce) and others. I appreciate very much the growing sentiment we encounter on every side that we should look upon the Indians as brothers, as valuable human beings who have rights which must be protected.

It is perfectly obvious to me that the minister has gained the confidence of the Indians of this country. That speaks very well for him, because the Indians have a sixth sense when it comes to measuring people. They are convinced that our minister is honest, I am told, and once you can get the Indians to admit that the minister responsible for the administration of Indian affairs is an honest man, he will get co-operation from them. I have only one suggestion to make to the minister at this time; that is, that he give very careful consideration to the suggestion of the hon. member for Selkirk that the bill be submitted to an Indian affairs committee.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): May I assure the hon. member that just as soon as second reading is given we will move that it go to a special committee.

Mr. Low: That is excellent. Among other reasons for so doing, that will further enhance the prestige of the minister among the Indians and will cause their confidence in him to grow even more; and in my judgment that is a desirable thing.

I thought I would make these few introductory remarks and then move to adjourn the debate, because I should like to say something more when this bill comes up again.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Fournier (Hull) moved the adjournment of the house.

He said: On Monday the Minister of Finance will table further supplementary estimates. Then he will move to go into committee of supply and ask for interim supply. Then the further supplementary estimates will be considered. After that we will continue with Bill No. 79, respecting Indians. If it is given second reading the minister intends to ask unanimous consent to move to set up a special committee to which this bill would be referred. Then we can take up some small bills, No. 148, No. 80 and No. 130, though perhaps not in that order.

Some hon. Members: What is Bill No. 148?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): It is a bill to authorize or approve the construction of a bridge across the St. Lawrence near Valleyfield.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.55 p.m.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE—FURTHER CORRESPONDENCE WITH PREMIER OF MANITOBA

Office of The Prime Minister Canada

Ottawa, February 6, 1951

Hon. Douglas Campbell, M.L.A.,
Premier of Manitoba,
Winnipeg, Manitoba.

My dear Premier:

I duly received your letter of January 31, enclosing a memorandum setting out the conclusions that the government of Manitoba has reached with respect to the financial proposals presented at the federal-provincial conference in December.

I should like to assure you that your representations will receive careful consideration by my colleagues and myself.

Yours sincerely,

Louis S. St. Laurent

Office of the Premier Province of Manitoba

Winnipeg, January 31, 1951

Right Hon. Louis S. St. Laurent, P.C., K.C., Prime Minister,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Dear Mr. Prime Minister:

It has taken the government of Manitoba some time to thoroughly review in cabinet council the various proposals made at the federal-provincial conference in Ottawa December 4 to 7, 1950. We have given these proposals careful scrutiny both from the standpoint of their immediate effect upon Manitoba and their long-term effect upon Canada as a whole. Our views of the two constitutional amendments dealing with old age pensions and retail sales tax have been forwarded in a letter to Hon. Stuart S. Garson, Minister of Justice. The comments and suggestions which we submit in the statement which accompanies this letter set out the conclusions we have reached with respect to the financial proposals.

Let me take this opportunity to express, on behalf of the government of Manitoba, our appreciation that the conference was held and that proposals of the importance of those which your government made were presented for discussion at that conference. We are of the firm view that the people of Manitoba, in common with Canadians generally, have benefited substantially from the financial agreements which are now in effect. We believe that the continuation of the principles which underlie those agreements and the new federal proposals is basic to effective and harmonious federal-provincial financial relations and to a healthy federal system in Canada. The requests for the elimination of what we think are certain undesirable features in your government's proposals are made for the purpose of reaching an agreement which will be of the greatest possible benefit to the people of Canada and which will establish a more generally acceptable basis for future agreements.

We trust that the suggestions we make herewith will be given early and careful consideration by your government.

Yours very truly,

Douglas Campbell

STATEMENT OF THE MANITOBA GOVERNMENT ON THE FEDERAL FINANCIAL PROPOSALS TO THE FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE, DECEMBER 4-7, 1950

This statement is intended to outline the views of the Manitoba government on certain features of the financial proposals submitted by the federal government to the federal-provincial conference in Ottawa, December 4 to 7, 1950. The Manitoba government is pleased that an opportunity was afforded the various governments to discuss the nature of the new federal-provincial financial agreements to come into effect at the conclusion of the present agreements. We were heartened by the fact that the federal government proposed that the fundamentals of the present agreements should be continued and that its views were presented in such a spirit of good will and amity and that that same spirit prevailed throughout the conference. We welcome the assurance by the federal representatives that the proposals were intended only as a basis for discussion, that each province should feel free to accept or reject them as it saw fit, and that there would be no attempt to impose the views of the federal government upon the provinces.

At the same time, however, we cannot avoid feeling some disappointment that it was felt necessary to limit the scope of the conference, and that greater attention was not given to other important matters which are of joint concern to the provincial and federal governments. In his opening statement to the conference, the premier of Manitoba laid particular stress upon the need for joint measures looking to the development of our natural resources and looking to the maximum possible use of our resources, our capital equipment and our manpower. In the unfortunate international situation in which we now find ourselves, it seems to us that there is need for more emphasis upon this aspect of our joint federal-provincial arrangements, and that we should not let our concern with the tax rental agreements and with old age security obscure the fact that, in the most fundamental sense, our strength in international affairs, our ability to support social welfare programs, and the ability of our people to meet the heavy tax load placed upon them, will depend upon the total productive effort which is achieved.

However, it is not our purpose to elaborate upon this point in this statement, but rather to discuss some specific aspects of the federal proposals.

We are gratified that the sound fundamental character of the tax rental agreements is continued in your new proposals and that the payments offered to the provinces will be slightly larger under the new proposal than under the existing agreement. Your estimates submitted to the conference indicate that the payment to Manitoba in 1952-53, the first year to which the new agreements are to apply, will be roughly $670,000, or approximately 85 cents per capita higher than if the present agreements were continued into that year.

Appendix "A"

We fully appreciate that under the new proposal the guaranteed minimum payment is substantially larger than under the present agreement. The guaranteed minimum will, however, assist the provinces only if there is a substantial decline in the level of Canadian prices or if the general level of business activity in Canada declines, with the result that the provincial revenues decline while costs of providing provincial services remain fixed or decline much more slowly than revenues. In view of this fact it seems to us that under present circumstances the major consideration should be the level of the actual payments rather than the level of the guaranteed minimum.

In our view the small increase in the actual payments to Manitoba under the new proposal will make it very difficult, if not impossible, for the province to undertake any extensive increase in provincial expenditures in many programs which we consider to be worthy of added assistance, both from the point of view of increasing the wealth and productivity of the nation and from the point of view of providing a greater measure of security and service to our people.

In his statement at the opening of the conference the premier of this province dealt briefly with a number of fields in which we feel there should be greater recognition of the responsibility of the nation as a whole in supporting the cost of services to those citizens who happen to be located in particular provinces or municipalities. He pointed out the nation-wide character of our modern business activity and suggested that it was important to have in Canada a mechanism by which income and corporation taxes collected from these nation-wide enterprises can be made available to support the services provided by the provinces and the municipalities in the many regions where the activities of those enterprises are carried on. After discussing this point at some length, he offered the opinion that in line with this principle the federal treasury should assume a larger share of the cost of such items as old age pensions, unemployment assistance, education, assistance to unemployables and health services. In addition he expressed the view that federal financial assistance should be made available for projects looking towards the maximum utilization and conservation of all the natural resources of the country. With the exception of the old age pension proposal which, if accepted by Manitoba, may well cost the province more than the present arrangement, the only manner in which the federal proposals in any way deal with the cost of the items just mentioned is the additional 85 cents per head of population which the province will receive as a result of the change in the tax rental formula. In our view this is quite inadequate and leaves the provinces and the municipalities under the necessity of paying the heavy cost of services in these fields out of revenue sources which are not sufficient to support them.

One of the problems which arises out of this situation is the way in which the provinces deal with the responsibilities and the financial resources of the municipalities within their territory. We in Manitoba, in common with the rest of the provinces of Canada, have endeavoured to give as much financial assistance as possible to the municipalities within our province. To some extent this assistance is provided by direct payments to the municipality, but in Manitoba the largest single item is the grant paid by the province to school boards. By paying a substantial part of the cost of education, these grants to school boards reduce the burden upon municipalities by reducing the amount which the school boards would otherwise be forced to ask the municipality to levy as municipal taxes. The Manitoba government has been anxious to increase assistance to the municipalities, but if the only additional revenue available to us through the new tax rental agreements is to be the small amount which I have mentioned, it will be very difficult for us to add to the size of our grants to municipalities and, at the same time, continue to maintain a satisfactory standard of services in other fields of provincial responsibility without involving ourselves in serious financial difficulties leading ultimately to a level of provincial taxation which is, in our view, unsound. For this reason the government of Manitoba, the municipalities, the school boards and the people of the province in general, are all vitally concerned with the size of the payments under the tax rental agreements, and we are all disappointed that the federal government has not felt it possible to offer payments on a more adequate scale.

In addition to our disappointment that the size of the tax rental payments has not been increased to a larger extent, we would like to record some dissatisfaction with the new formula which has been introduced for calculating the relative sizes of the payments as between the different provinces. We refer to the tax potential formula which introduces a principle which if agreed to would be likely to be reflected in future agreements and which would inevitably lead towards a situation in which payments to the wealthier provinces would be larger per capita than to the less developed provinces. In the present proposals this tax potential formula is not of great significance, but if we recognize the fact that tax rental agreements of this general type will undoubtedly be a feature of federal-provincial relations for many years to come, and if we recognize the further fact that the principles accepted in one agreement will likely establish the starting point for the negotiation of future agreements, then it follows that the introduction of an unsound principle in the present proposals is of more significance than the relatively small effect which it has upon the immediate future.

In all systems based upon the federal principle, and, indeed, in all government systems in which a senior government operates within a territory in which there are a number of other governments responsible for smaller areas, some consideration must be given to the fact that in a great many cases government services are provided and government costs are incurred in jurisdictions different from those in which tax revenues are collected. In recent years and to an increasing extent this situation has been met by instituting arrangements under which taxes are collected by the central government from industries operating over the entire area, and are paid out to the local governments in accordance with some formula which takes into the account the fiscal needs of the local government. In other words the formula makes larger payments in those local government areas which are less able to support themselves out of locally collected taxes. This principle was reflected in the system of fiscal need grants which existed in Canada during the 1930's. It was explicitly stated and strongly supported by the Rowell-Sirois report. It formed the basic principle underlying the 1945 proposals of the federal government. It forms the basis of nearly all the systems of grants from the Canadian provinces to the municipalities within their borders. In every case the government operating over the larger area makes grants to the governments operating in the local areas in such a way that the grants are larger per capita to those local areas which are called upon to support heavy costs for education, welfare and the like, while containing within their borders none of the great centres in which incomes concentrate and from which tax revenues can be collected in large volume.

If we disregard the statutory subsidies which are paid because of arrangements entered into in the past which are now part of the established structure of Canadian government, the essential basis of the present agreements is that the federal government pays to each province as a guaranteed minimum, either $15 per capita or $12.75 per capita plus an amount equal to 50 per cent of the corporation and income tax collections in that province in 1941. That guaranteed minimum is then increased by the percentage increase in population in the province and by the percentage increase in gross national product per capita in Canada as a whole. In other words, except for the item of 50 per cent of the 1941 tax collections, the principle is that of uniform per capita grants. In the new proposal another factor is introduced, that of tax potential, under which grants would be larger per capita to those provinces with larger tax potential, that is, to those provinces which have the best opportunity to collect taxes on their own behalf and which, therefore, have less need for financial assistance.

The present agreements departed from the principle of fiscal need to the extent represented by 50 per cent of the 1941 tax collections. The new proposal departs to a much more important extent by explicitly recognizing tax potential and by recognizing it not as a fixed item based upon the past but as an item which will presumably be recalculated at the time any new agreement is under negotiation and which will increase in importance if certain parts of the country develop more rapidly than others. If it should happen that all parts of the country develop uniformly, then the tax potential formula will be of no significance and there is no point in introducing this additional complication. If, on the other hand, the industrialized provinces continue to develop more rapidly than the less industrialized provinces, then the tax potential formula will assume increasing importance and will be positively contradictory to the principle of fiscal need.

We do not argue that fiscal need should be the only criterion. We recognize that, in dealing with problems of the complexity of this one, a great variety of considerations must be dealt with. But we do say that the grants out of income and corporation taxes should be at least as high per capita to the less developed provinces as to the wealthier provinces, and that the principle of fiscal need should not be directly reversed by providing larger payments to those very provinces in which income tends to concentrate and which therefore have less need of assistance.

It may be that in order to secure the agreement of the more well-to-do provinces, the payments to them will have to reflect in some degree the tax revenue which they could themselves collect. If so, we have no objection to establishing a payment to them sufficient to cover the amount of taxes which they could collect from the tax potential which is available to them. But if that is done we think that the sound principle which underlies all these arrangements should continue to be followed, and that increases at least as large per capita should be made in the payments to the less wealthy provinces.

One other feature of the federal government proposals which is not satisfactory to us is the suggestion that, in the escalator clause for calculating the extent to which the payments to the provinces under the tax rental agreement will exceed the guaranteed minimum, the calculation for gross national product should exclude the item of indirect taxes.

Appendix "A"

The provision for an increase in the size of the payments in proportion to the increase in gross national product per capita serves two purposes in the present formula. In the first place it provides an adjustment for changes in price level resulting from the general inflation through which the world is passing. In the second place it reflects changes in the total productive output of the country. Our officials inform us that in their opinion the gross national product formula is probably the most satisfactory and convenient measure that exists for those purposes, but that it is not possible to be precisely accurate in such adjustments and that therefore the present formula must always be looked upon as giving only a rough approximation of the real changes. For this reason they think it somewhat inappropriate that a small refinement such as the elimination of indirect taxes should be proposed in a calculation which in itself is subject to relatively wide variation in estimate as illustrated by the fact that the official publication in which the gross national product figures appear carries an item entitled "Residual Error of Estimate" which has in several years amounted to more than $200 million. They therefore feel that the proposal to eliminate the indirect tax item is an over-refinement of little statistical validity in the light of the nature of the figures involved.

In addition we see no valid argument in principle for removing the indirect tax item. In proposing that it should be removed Mr. Abbott expressed the view that to fail to exclude it would have the serious defect that any change in government policy regarding the general character of taxes would affect the amount of the payments to the provinces. There are, of course, a large number of other ways in which a change in government policy would affect the size of gross national product and therefore change the amount of the payments to the provinces. Mr. Abbott illustrated the problem with the suggestion that there might be a decrease in indirect taxation; but the much more significant consideration is what the position would be should there be an increase in sales tax, either by the federal government or by the provinces. Our estimate is that if the proposed change is made, every one per cent increase in the total revenue collected in Canada from indirect taxes would reduce the payment to Manitoba something between $25,000 and $30,000 per year less than the amount which would be payable to Manitoba if the gross national product figure continued to be used as in the present formula.

If indirect taxes are increased in that way, the cost of government services, both in the provinces and in the municipalities, will inevitably reflect those increases, partly through higher prices for goods purchased and partly through the reaction upon living costs and upon the level of salaries which must be paid. Furthermore, an increase of indirect taxes by the federal government, or the introduction of indirect taxes by several of the provinces, would inevitably be reflected in the cost of government in other provinces which were receiving no additional revenue from that source. Under those circumstances it seems to us proper that such higher indirect taxes should be reflected in the formula by which the payments to the provinces are calculated. For these reasons we think that the proposal to eliminate indirect taxes should not be carried out.

A SUMMARY OF THE PROCEEDINGS OF A CONFERENCE WITH REPRESENTATIVE INDIANS HELD IN OTTAWA, FEBRUARY 28-MARCH 3, 1951

1. On February 28, March 1, 2 and 3 of this year, a conference was held with representative Indians and officers of Indian associations from all of those regions of Canada where there is an Indian population, except the Northwest Territories. The minister attended all of these meetings in the capacity of chairman. The deputy minister and officials of the Indian affairs branch of the department were also present.

2. The main purpose of this historic conference was to discuss the provisions of Bill 79 to revise the Indian Act and to give the representatives an opportunity to present their opinions. Every section of the bill was read in the conference and was explained. Opinions were expressed and recorded, and if, after discussion, suggestions for changes were made, these were noted.

3. Upon conclusion of this phase of the work of the conference there was a general discussion about all matters of Indian affairs and administration of the Indian Act which proved most useful and, where appropriate, will be used as a guide for future action by the department.

4. It was evident from the discussion that the problem of Indian affairs varied greatly from reserve to reserve. It was recognized that the Indians of the several provinces appeared to have differing rights and experiences, and that these differences accounted for the variety of viewpoints expressed towards particular sections of the bill. Nevertheless, the opinions of all present were stated not only for the purpose of presenting the local viewpoint, but also in an effort to find a common, advantageous ground so as to advance the welfare of the Indian people.

5. One of the representatives stated that as far as he and his people were concerned, they did not wish to have any changes made to the present Indian Act since they found it to be satisfactory for their purposes.

6. Subject to this statement, the conference noted that there was unanimous support for 103 sections of the bill. Opinion varied with respect to the remaining sections as will be explained in more detail later. However, the results of the discussions by those representatives favoring new legislation may be summarized as follows: of the 124 sections, 103 sections were unanimously supported; 118 sections were supported by the majority of those present; only 6 sections were opposed by a majority of the representatives and of these, 2 were unanimously opposed.

7. All of the representatives present at the conference agreed that the Government of Canada should continue to extend self government to the Indian band councils consistent with their demonstrated ability to exercise increasing responsibility.

8. The representatives at this conference were assured that all of their representations had been noted and would be drawn to the attention of the government and parliament during the later stages of the Indian bill. It was also indicated that full consideration would be given to the suggestions made for alterations to those sections of the bill which did not meet with the general approval of the representatives. To this end, the representations which were made at the conference will now be outlined to the house.

9. The first sections to be dealt with will be those which were opposed by all of the representatives present.

10. With respect to section 86, all of the representatives were of the opinion that this section did not go far enough in providing tax exemption for Indians, and they were opposed to sub-section 2 because it relates to a waiver of exemption under the Dominion Elections Act. They recommended that voting privileges should not be conditional upon signing a waiver. It was also asserted that under Article 13 of the Terms of Union between Canada and the province of British Columbia the Indians of British Columbia were not liable to be so taxed. It was suggested that some consideration should be given to amending the Dominion Elections Act in order to do away with the waiver.

11. All of the representatives were opposed to section 112 which is the section dealing with enfranchisement after enquiry and it was drawn to the attention of the conference that the opposition to this section had been recorded in a number of briefs submitted to the minister.

12. Of these six sections opposed by a majority, four (93-96) dealt with the sale to Indians, and possession by them, of intoxicants.

13. Regarding these sections, there were three views expressed,—(1) that the provisions dealing with intoxicants contained in the present act be continued; that is, complete prohibition; (2) that provincial liquor laws be made applicable to Indians; (3) a compromise measure, such as is contemplated by section 95, which would allow the Indians to consume intoxicants in public places in accordance with the laws of the provinces, but which would not permit them to be in possession of package goods nor to take liquor on a reserve.

14. There was a wide range of opinion with respect to these sections. Many of the representatives favored provincial liquor laws, while others were strongly opposed to any change in the act. It was said that the present liquor provisions could not and should not be changed with respect to those Indians under Treaty 6 in Alberta and in other parts of the province not covered by this treaty. Some of the representatives stated that if the provincial laws could not be made applicable to the Indians, they would be prepared to accept the provisions made in Bill 79. It is apparent, therefore, that with so many different views expressed, the conference did not reach any general agreement on this subject.

15. The following sections were opposed by one or more of the nineteen representatives but were approved by a majority of those representatives present. The number opposing any of these sections never exceeded six.

16. It was suggested, with respect to section 11, that the present band lists be accepted as final as to those on those lists, and not subject to revision as provided in the bill (section 9) and that the deletion and addition of names should apply only with respect to those who may hereinafter be added to the band lists.

17. It was also stated by one representative, with reference to sub-section (e) of this section, that it was unfortunate that an illegitimate child of an Indian woman should be entitled to band membership.

18. Section 12 (1) (a) (iv) dealing with those persons not entitled to be registered was objected to also on the grounds that it would be possible for persons of predominantly Indian blood to be deprived of band membership through the operation of this provision.

19. Section 19, dealing with surveys of sub-divisions of reserves, was considered to be very beneficial by some representatives because they felt that it was only through these surveys that an individual owner could definitely establish his claims to land on a reserve. Suggestions were made that in some areas these surveys should be expedited.

20. However, two other representatives were opposed to this section on the basis that it might lead to allotment. It was indicated that there was no objection to external surveys of reserves but there was objection to surveys for sub-divisions. For instance, it was pointed out that the Indians in southern Alberta were not opposed to surveys of reserves, but that the Indians of central and northern Alberta definitely were, and that because of this opposition no surveys should be made without the consent of a band council.

21. Similarly, opposition was expressed by two representatives to section 20 (2) dealing with the certificate of possession, the reasons being that the allotment system was not suitable in Alberta.

22. Sub-section 4 of this section, dealing with temporary possession, was objected to by one representative on the basis that temporary possession led to a feeling of insecurity and that once land had been allotted to an Indian by the band council it should be a permanent allotment not subject to conditions to be imposed by the minister.

23. Section 32 was approved by all except two of the representatives of the conference. There was opposition initially to the section by one representative who took the view that the Indians should stand on their own feet and gain a knowledge of business by experience. However, this representative withdrew his opposition when it was pointed out that this could be accomplished by the frequent use of sub-section 2, and he was given the assurance that this sub-section would be used when advisable. Another representative, on the other hand, stated very strongly that the Indians should be given the protection provided for in this section and was in opposition to the use of sub-section 2.

24. Section 61 (2), dealing with the interest payable on Indian moneys held in the consolidated revenue fund, was the subject of considerable discussion. It was the general feeling of all of the representatives present that interest upon Indian moneys should be not less than 5 per cent and it was suggested that the phrase "of not less than 5 per cent" might be written into the sub-section.

25. With respect to section 64 (a) dealing with the expenditure of capital moneys with consent of the band council, two representatives were opposed to this section if it were possible for successive per capita distributions to be made. They were of the opinion that only the per capita amount set out in a surrender should be paid to the members of a band and that the remaining amount should remain as capital funds forever. Other representatives, however, favored subsequent capital distribution.

26. Section 66 (2) providing for the expenditure of money without consent for the sick, disabled, etc., was generally approved but some representatives were of the opinion that the expenditure of band funds for this purpose was not proper but should be made from public moneys.

27. Similarly, with respect to section 66 (3) (b) regarding the expenditure of band funds for the prevention and control of diseases on reserves, one representative stated that band funds should not be used for this purpose on the grounds that the Department of National Health and Welfare were providing health services to Indians at the present time.

28. The operation of farms by the department on Indian reserves provided for in section 70 met with approval except for one representative who was opposed to this section because it did not provide for the consent of the band council.

29. The taxation of Indian dogs (section 72 (1) (d)) was objected to by one representative because he considered that dogs were a necessity to many Indians.

30. The composition of the band council as outlined in section 73 (2) was discussed at length, and several of the representatives objected to the minimum number of councillors (2) as being too small. The British Columbia representatives, for instance, pointed out that there were many bands in that area where the councillors may work away from the reserve, and therefore it would be difficult to obtain a quorum at a meeting under this section. It was suggested that the minimum of 2 might be raised to 4.

31. Section 77 (1) dealing with the tenure of office of chiefs and councillors was also discussed at length and by a considerable number of the representatives. Several of the representatives favoured the 2 year term of office, but other representatives were of the opinion that a term of 2 years was too short a period for chiefs and councillors to gain sufficient experience for the most effective management of band affairs. These representatives thought that a period of from 3 to 5 years would be more suitable. It was also suggested by one representative that the election of chiefs and councillors might be staggered in order to obtain continuity of experienced councillors on the band council.

32. The question of absentee councillors (section 77 (2) (b) (ii)) was discussed at some length and it was felt that the provision that the office of the chief or councillor becomes vacant when a chief or councillor has been absent from council meetings for three consecutive months was not practical with respect to those bands who do not hold monthly meetings. It was felt that it would be better if the section were to read "three consecutive meetings" rather than "months". Consideration will be given to those special areas where band councils do not meet monthly.

33. Section 91 (1), which prohibits departmental employees from trading with the Indians without a licence, was opposed on the basis that it might permit the minister to issue a licence to a departmental employee to trade for profit with an Indian. Although it was pointed out that there are certain civil service regulations which prohibit full-time civil servants in engaging in other business enterprises, it was suggested by the delegation that if it was intended that this section should apply only to part-time agents, then this should be written into the statute.

34. Section 110 (2) which provides for the grant of land to enfranchised Indians, was discussed by representatives who were of the opinion that this provision might lead to loss of reserve lands, but as the matter rested with the council to make the allotment and because of the ten-year waiting period, the section was agreed to.

35. Section 111 (2) which provides that a majority vote is required for an order of enfranchisement, was discussed and it was suggested by three representatives that the percentage of electors required to signify their approval should be raised from 50 per cent to 75 per cent. They considered that this was necessary in order to protect the minority.

Appendix "B"

36. The following sections were discussed at length but were accepted in principle by all of the representatives after clarification:

37. It was felt by some of the representatives that Indians should be represented in the administration as a means of recognition (section 3 (2)). The representatives were advised that the question of the appointment of an assistant commissioner of Indian status was one which would have to come under the civil service commission as to recruitment, and that the matter would be given further consideration.

38. There was considerable discussion on sections 5-9 dealing with the registration of Indians and the methods in which these provisions would operate were explained in detail to the representatives. There was general agreement with the provision for appeal of decisions of the registrar regarding the addition to or deletion from band lists to a judge of a county court for final determination.

39. Payments to persons ceasing to be band members as provided for in section 15 (1) (a) were explained at length, but one of the representatives was of the opinion that the crown had no legal right to pay one per capita share of capital and revenue moneys of a band to an Indian upon enfranchisement. It was suggested that a person born into the band had an inalienable interest in property held in common by the band and, therefore, should be entitled to take his share with him when enfranchised. It was also suggested, in connection with this section, that in some instances the Indian band councils had not been notified when Indians applied for enfranchisement. The representative was advised that in the future it would be the policy to advise the band council whenever an application for enfranchisement had been received.

40. Clarification was requested with respect to section 16 (3). It was thought by one representative that a woman, on transfer from one band to another on the occasion of her marriage, should forthwith receive the full amount of any surplus capital coming to her. It was contended that the minister should not have the discretionary power as to the manner and times at which such a sum should be paid to her. However, it was pointed out that the various cases would be reviewed on their merits, and where it was thought that the woman required the full amount of the difference to set up housekeeping, for instance, then it would be given to her. In other cases where it was thought that the woman concerned might use the money unwisely then it would be in the interest of the Indian woman herself, if the money was paid out over a period of time instead of in one lump sum.

41. Clarification was sought with respect to section 18 (2) and the representatives were assured that the general intention of this section was to provide authority for the acquisition of land for administrative purposes such as schools, hospitals, cemeteries, and other necessary facilities which would be in the interest of the Indians.

42. It was suggested with respect to section 28 (2) which provides for the issuing of permits to occupy or use a reserve, that reserve property should not be used privately without the consent of the band council. It was pointed out, however, that permits could not be issued under this section for long periods. Provision is made in this section for temporary use of reserve lands for short periods limited to one year.

43. Section 34, which is concerned with roads and bridges, was discussed at some length. The question as to the upkeep of roads within a reserve that were, to a large extent, used by the general public was raised. It was contended that, in as much as the Indians paid gasoline taxes, the Indian bands should get the same share of those taxes as are paid to the municipalities by some of the provinces. It was pointed out that the disposition of the gasoline tax was wholly within the competence of the provincial government.

44. Section 35 was the subject of a considerable amount of discussion. One representative expressed the fear that it would enable a corporation or a municipality to obtain a statutory authority to expropriate parts of an Indian reserve. Opposition, however, in this case was withdrawn by this representative when it was pointed out that the purpose of this provision was not the wholesale acquisition of land, but that it was intended to cover the use of lands for public utilities and other similar services. This section was accepted after an explanation had been given.

45. Re section 37 there was an enquiry as to the meaning of the phrase at the beginning of the clause which reads "except where this act otherwise provides" but it was pointed out for purposes of clarification that this phrase refers to action under sections 35 and 110 (2).

46. When section 39 was discussed it was pointed out by one representative that Indians in the past had surrendered parts of their reserve without knowing thoroughly what was contained in the surrender. It was stated that where an interpreter is used he should be put under oath to give a true account of the terms of surrender. The conference was informed that the departmental regulations or instructions would be examined and that provision would be made for placing such interpreters under oath as requested. It was agreed that there would be no objection to using a non-Indian interpreter, but that in all cases the best interpreter available should be obtained.

47. With respect to section 46 which deals with wills, it was suggested that it should not be left to the Indian agent to decide whether the Indian was capable of making a will under sub-section (1) (b). The conference was informed that the Indian agent did not make this decision under such circumstances, but that evidence would be obtained from expert sources.

48. It was agreed by many of the representatives that section 49, which is concerned with the distribution of property, and that those sections relating to wills and descent of property were very beneficial and were in accordance with the recommendations which have been made in this respect. There was some complaint about the length of time it sometimes took to dispose of estates. It was admitted that there were occasions on which there was some delay with respect to the disposition of estates but this was due to a shortage of qualified officers to handle these matters. The conference was informed that, if necessary, additional staff would be employed for this purpose.

49. It was claimed by one of the representatives that in the past Indian agents had acted in a bureaucratic way in the matter of leasing uncultivated or unused lands (section 58). However, it was pointed out to the conference that this section provided that this could be done only with the consent of the band council. The disposition of sand and gravel from reserves without consent was also discussed. It was pointed out to the conference that this would be done only where there was undue difficulty or delay in obtaining the consent of the band council. This arises where the council members are absent in summer months. The conference was assured that, in any event, leases given under such circumstances would only be renewed with the consent of the band council.

50. Section 65, dealing with the expenditure of capital, met with general approval. One of the representatives indicated that some difficulty had been experienced in obtaining land for an extension to a hospital. It was pointed out, however, that action could be taken under section 18 to obtain the land for band purposes and compensation paid from capital moneys for such lands taken under this provision.

51. The provision of loans to an Indian (section 69) was commended generally by those who commented on it. An enquiry was made as to why these loans could not be extended so that they might be used for building houses. It was pointed out to the conference that the main objective of this section was to provide for loans to Indians for revenue producing projects and that housing, unless it were for rental purposes, was not revenue producing.

52. There was some objection by some representatives to Indian agents attending council meetings (section 79). However, many representatives thought that the Indian superintendent should be required to attend all council meetings and that he should not deputize anyone to sit in for him.

53. Discussion of section 80 (powers of the band council) revealed that several of the representatives were concerned about the regulation of motor traffic through their reserve. These representatives were informed that the band council would be able to make by-laws regarding the regulation of traffic within the reserve under this section. On the general question of by-laws, it was explained to the conference that by-laws which did not conflict with regulations made by the minister or the governor in council would be effective. It was generally felt that the powers to be exercised by the band council had been considerably broadened by the bill. The question of licencing non-Indians to operate businesses on reserves was also raised when sub-section (n) of this section was discussed. It was suggested that by-laws regarding businesses could also be made to apply to Indians in a business on the reserve.

54. With respect to section 82 dealing with money by-laws, some of the representatives were apprehensive that the governor in council might have some power to force Indians to pass money by-laws to tax Indians. The conference was assured that once this section had been applied to a band action under it was by the band council.

55. The conference representatives asked for clarification of section 87, dealing with the application of provincial laws, and was informed that provincial laws would not apply if they contravened any treaty, and/or any act of parliament, for example the Indian Act.

56. Regarding the appointment of a Justice of the Peace, under section 105, the conference was advised that Indian superintendents would not act as magistrates, except for special reasons, and in areas where ordinary court facilities were not readily available.

57. The remainder of the sections were approved after explanation.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, March 19, 1951

The house met at three o'clock.

THE LATE KARL HOMUTH

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure I can feel I am speaking for all members of this house when I say how deeply shocked all of us were to learn today of the sudden death of one whom all of us had come to regard as a personal friend, Mr. Karl Homuth, the member for Waterloo South. I am sure Mr. Homuth was one of the most popular of our members, and would himself like to be remembered, first of all, as a good companion and a warm personal friend of each one of us on both sides of the house.

When I saw him take part in the division in the house only last Thursday I hoped, as I know most of us hoped, that he was recovering his health which had been so seriously impaired in these last years. I feel that all of us, regardless of party, were of the opinion that the house would be better for having him once more in a position to take an active part in its proceedings.

I will not attempt any long or detailed review of the late Karl Homuth's public service. As hon. members know, he was elected to the Ontario legislature over thirty years ago, in the general election of 1919, and he was re-elected at several subsequent elections. From the time he was elected to this house at a by-election in 1938, until his death, he was successful on every occasion in retaining the confidence and support of the majority of the electors of his constituency.

No doubt a large measure of the support he was given was the result of the political allegiance of the electors in his constituency. But I am told, and I am sure no one here will find it difficult to believe, that a large measure of support came as a personal tribute from his friends and neighbours in Waterloo South.

I should like to express our sympathy to the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) on the loss of one of his senior supporters, and to ask you, Mr. Speaker, to extend the sympathy of all hon. members to Mrs. Homuth and her children.

Mr. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it was indeed a very great shock to all of us to learn this morning of Mr. Karl Homuth's very sudden and wholly unexpected death. As the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) has so graciously said, he was a very warm friend of all the members of this house, regardless of their party affiliations. I think that few members here maintained their friendships on so broad a basis. For many long years he had been a figure well known here and well known throughout the country because of the vigorous views he had expressed, but views nevertheless expressed in such a way as to be accepted even by those against whom they were directed, in the generous and friendly spirit in which they were made.

Mr. Homuth was one of the many men who had served the public in a great many capacities; and over the broad field of public service that is open to every Canadian. As has been already pointed out, he was a member of this house continuously from 1938. Throughout those thirteen years he gave loyal and constant service to the people of the constituency which chose him. He also served for many years in the Ontario legislature. Prior to that he had served in the municipal council of Preston. His public service embraced the municipal, the provincial and the federal field. In each of those fields he was a good citizen in all that those words mean.

Many people are perhaps too often unaware of the extent of the service which is given by a good member to his constituency, and which is not in any way indicated by the contributions he may make to the debates in the House of Commons, or even to service on the committees. Karl Homuth played his full part in the debates of this house and in the work of the many committees. I think perhaps the members of the government know better than anybody else in this house that he was always an active representative of the people of his own constituency, no matter what their political affiliations were, in connection with every department of government where his services were required. That is a great and important part of the work of members of this house. I am sure that there were few members who were more successful in vigorously and correctly interpreting the needs of their own community than was the late Karl Homuth.

I join with the Prime Minister and, I am sure, with all the members of this house, in the expression of profound regret to his wife and his family who have suffered this great and tragic loss. Karl Homuth will be remembered by everyone here as a good friend, a good Canadian and one who served his own community faithfully and well.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, twice during the last few days I have been reminded of some lines I read some years ago, that:

> Death rides on every passing breeze,
> He lurks in every flower.

On Friday we learned of the death of a distinguished civil servant in the person of Mr. Riddell. This morning we were equally shocked at the loss of one who has been here a long time, one who, as both the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) have said, ably and well served his community and his country in this house and in representations before government departments.

Those of us who knew Karl Homuth in the old days, before his recent illnesses, remember him as a man full of vigour, whose witty interjections in this house often brought peals of laughter from all sides. He was never unkind; he was always friendly.

Those of us who have been associated with him for a long time, and even those who did not know him as well, today join the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition, indeed all members of this house in regretting his passing and in expressing deepest sympathy to his widow, his immediate family and his brothers, who, I believe, have worked closely with him throughout the years.

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, sudden deaths such as that of our late good friend Karl Homuth are always shocking. I am sure that a pall of gloom has settled over us all. Yet, sir, though he is considered to be dead, that is not my attitude at all. I do not look upon Karl as being dead. I look upon him as having gone away on a journey. But we shall miss him sorely, just the same, while he is away on that journey.

I have formed the habit of taking men as I have found them. I found that Karl was a good man. He was always good to me; he was always friendly and congenial. Often, as he passed down the corridor by the open door of my office, he would drop in with a word of greeting or to tell me the latest joke. On such occasions he was always pleasant and jovial. After he had left I invariably felt that the world was a better place because of men like him.

I know that Karl had been in indifferent if not poor health for the past several years or even more. We do not know just how long it was, because he never complained.

In all the time that I knew him I never once heard him complain. Only Friday last, when he returned to this house after a considerable absence, during which, I am told, he had a serious illness, he dropped in for a moment; and although he admitted that he was rather weak, he was still cheerful and uncomplaining.

I looked upon Karl as a warm friend, and I shall miss him in his long absence from us. My sympathies, Mr. Speaker, go out to his family in this hour of their sorrow, and to the Conservative party in the loss of a devoted and loyal supporter.

(Translation):

Mr. A. Phileas Cote (Matapedia-Matane): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words in French to associate myself with those who have already expressed their sympathy on the occasion of the death of our friend, Mr. Karl Homuth. If, in this Holy Week, anyone should feel guilty for having prevented him from displaying his talents to the full during the last parliament, it is we of the "Little Chicago" group whose heckling I admit and regret. Fortunately, Mr. Karl Homuth was too broadminded and too much of a gentleman to hold that against us. If I have enjoyed the friendship of a member of the opposition like Karl Homuth, it is because he was big enough to put himself above anything we, without thinking of his illness, may have done to annoy him in the house. In fact, I was perhaps one of the first to shake his hand on his return to the house last Thursday.

I cannot express the regrets of the whole "Little Chicago" group, not being authorized to speak for the rest of its members. However, in view of Mr. Karl Homuth's attitude, I must say that I personally regret having said anything that may have offended a man who did so much good.

(Text):

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted to do so, I should like to make a request. It is known that Karl Homuth not long ago composed a prayer, or poem, in which he described life as a game, the bible as the book of rules, and God as the great Captain. I think it would be fitting if the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) could secure this prayer or poem and have it sent to us as a memorial. I make this plea because I was the first Liberal to meet Karl Homuth when he came upstairs; and I will not forget saying to him: "On behalf of the honest Liberals in the house, we bid you welcome." He said: "Thank you for the information." From that time we were warm friends.

Mr. Jean François Pouliot (Temiscouata): Mr. Speaker, it is always a mournful sight to see the flag on the peace tower at half-mast. When one comes up the hill and sees the flag at half-mast the first question he asks is: For whom? Today I learned to my great surprise that Mr. Homuth had passed away. It was a great shock to me, although I knew that he had been ill. Last year he seemed to have recovered completely. I take this opportunity to add to the fine and well deserved tributes which have been paid to him.

We hear a lot about the fundamental freedoms, but there is no better example of the fundamental freedoms than this House of Commons. Members may hold diametrically opposite views, but when they depart this life their passing is lamented by the leaders and members of all groups in the house. We realize that in this house opinions are free, and the views of each member of parliament are respected by all.

I knew Mr. Homuth well enough to regret his passing, and I offer my deepest sympathy to the leader and other members of his party, his family, and his friends.

Mr. L. O. Breithaupt (Waterloo North): Mr. Speaker, as the member representing the riding of Waterloo North I wish at this time to pay a tribute to my dear departed friend, Mr. Karl Homuth. We did not think along the same political lines, but I think we were pretty much of one mind when it came to human values and friendships. Karl, as he was affectionately known to all of us in that part of the country, will be missed greatly. I wish at this time to add my tribute to those that have been paid to our late departed friend by the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent), the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew), and other hon. members.

Mr. L. E. Cardiff (Huron North): Mr. Speaker, I cannot allow this opportunity to pass without having a word to say. Karl Homuth was one of my closest friends. He was a member of this house much longer than I have been. In the 1940 elections, when the Liberals won, leaving us only forty seats, Karl was my next door neighbour. He and I were the only ones left in that end of the province. Again in 1949, when there was another Liberal victory across the country, Karl and I were the only two left. I think perhaps he has been nearer to me than most.

He was a kindhearted man. I never knew him to hold spite against anyone. He had his own views, and he could express them before his first illness; but I think he held the respect of practically everyone on the other side of the house. I know that we are all going to miss him very much.

KOREA—CANADIAN ARMY SPECIAL FORCE—DEPENDENTS ALLOWANCES

Mr. Ferguson:

1. Are dependents, other than the wife, of members of the special volunteer forces for services abroad, in receipt of dependents allowance from the government?

2. If not, for what reason?

Mr. Campney:

1. No, except for children. If the soldier has a wife and child or children, allowances to the wife are increased by a flat rate of $15 per month regardless of the number of children. If there is no wife but the soldier has a dependent child or children in legal custody, or under his control, allowances are paid at the same rate.

2. When the new uniform pay schedules were established in 1946, the basis of payment was changed so as to provide officers and men with rates of pay and allowances which, taken together with the value of supplies issued and services provided, put them on a basis equivalent to men doing similar work in the leading industries. Provision for families living together was made by a subsistence allowance and provision for families which were not living in the same place was made by a separated marriage allowance. All this takes the place of the wartime dependents' allowance. With subsequent increases, the arrangement has been continued with the additional payment of $15 above mentioned. The scale of pay and allowances will be found in answer given in House of Commons Debates, volume 92, number 15, February 19, 1951, page 454.

Questions

MANITOBA LABOUR FORCE

Mr. Knowles:

1. What is the number of persons comprising the labour force in the province of Manitoba?

2. What are the major classifications of occupations into which the labour force is divided in Manitoba?

3. How many are in each such classification?

Mr. Cote (Verdun-La Salle):

1. Based on data from the latest labour force survey of the dominion bureau of statistics, the estimated labour force of Manitoba at November 4, 1950, was 315,000.

2 and 3. The labour force survey of the dominion bureau of statistics is based on a one to two per cent representative sample of all households in Canada. While this sample provides reliable data on the occupational composition of the labour force for the whole of Canada, it is not designed to provide detailed data such as this for individual provinces.

Some information on the number of workers in various occupational groups in Manitoba can be obtained from the 1946 census of the prairie provinces. The following figures show the number of gainfully occupied persons in Manitoba by occupation according to the census:

Occupational Group	Number at June 1, 1946
Managerial	19,900
Professional	15,435
Clerical	26,946
Transportation	16,648
Communication	2,610
Commercial	14,527
Financial	1,524
Service	36,919
Agricultural	80,688
Fishing, logging and trapping	3,552
Mining	1,953
Manufacturing and mechanical	30,733
Light & power, stationary enginemen	2,127
Construction	12,457
Labourers (exc. agric., fish., log., mining)	11,772
Not stated	2,138
Total	279,929

These data are not directly comparable to those of the labour force survey. The main difference is based on the fact that in the census persons are classified according to their usual occupation in the preceding twelve months, while the quarterly labour force survey classifies individuals on the basis of what they were actually doing in the particular survey week.

CHINA

REPORTED ARREST OF FIVE MISSIONARY SISTERS BY CHINESE COMMUNISTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he is in a position to say what steps are being taken by the Canadian government in the light of the reported arrest by the present government of China of five missionary sisters under obviously trumped-up charges?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): This information has been brought to our attention and we are taking what steps we can to inquire into the basis of it. On the face of it it would appear that the charges have been made for communist propaganda purposes of a kind with which we have become all too familiar in recent years.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

STRAIT OF CANSO BRIDGE—INQUIRY AS TO CONSENT OF PROVINCE FOR PRODUCTION OF PAPERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Clarence Gillis (Cape Breton South): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. No notice is necessary. Has the Department of Transport requested the consent of the government of Nova Scotia to the bringing down of the return moved in this house on February 26 relating to the Canso project?

Mr. Gillis: No answer has been received?

Mr. Chevrier: Not at this date.

OLD AGE PENSIONS

CORRESPONDENCE WITH PROVINCES—INQUIRY AS TO PROGRESS IN REACHING AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I should like to ask the Minister of Justice whether he has done any of the long-distance telephoning that he offered to do in his letter to the provincial premiers of February 28. If so, can he advise the house as to what progress is being made in reaching an agreement with respect to the new old age pension program?

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): If my hon. friend will read that letter carefully he will see that the long-distance telephoning in question was to be done after we had received replies to this letter of February 28 to the various provincial premiers, and after we had endeavoured to reconcile any divergence of opinion that might be expressed in those replies. We have now received replies from eight of the provinces, but I have not as yet, unless they came in this morning, received a reply from Manitoba or Saskatchewan. Until we receive those and endeavour to reconcile them, there will be no occasion for the long-distance telephone calls, because such telephoning will be done for the purpose of reconciling any residual difference of opinion, which has not as yet emerged.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Knowles: May I ask a supplementary question? Had not these two provinces indicated their stand before this letter was written?

Mr. Garson: Yes; they had indicated their stand before this letter of February 28 was written; but this letter dealt with viewpoints expressed by at least four of the other provinces, and resulted in new drafts of these constitutional amendments upon which we sought to get the views of the various premiers in the form of replies to my letter of February 28 to which my hon. friend is referring.

Mr. Coldwell: If there is anything further to report, will the minister bring us up to date before we rise on Wednesday?

Mr. Garson: Yes, indeed.

Mr. Pouliot: May I ask the minister what provinces have not answered yet, in addition to Saskatchewan?

Mr. Garson: Manitoba.

Mr. Knowles: Both of them answered favourably long ago.

LAKE ONTARIO

STORM DAMAGE—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE OF HAMILTON HARBOUR COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. E. Lennard (Wentworth): I should like to ask a question or make a request of the Minister of Public Works. The information upon which I am basing this request has just been received; I have not given the minister notice, and do not expect an answer now, but would ask him to take it as notice. I have been informed that buildings at Van Wagner's beach, near Hamilton, are being washed away by a storm which is raging on lake Ontario. I would ask the minister if it might be possible to instruct the Hamilton harbour commission to give whatever assistance it can in this emergency.

Hon. Alphonse Fournier (Minister of Public Works): As the hon. gentleman mentioned, I am not aware of these facts. I shall inquire into them and give the hon. member an answer as soon as possible.

HOCKEY

WINNING OF WORLD CHAMPIONSHIP BY LETHBRIDGE MAPLE LEAFS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Blackmore (Lethbridge): I rise on a question of privilege. Your Honour will desire to know, I believe, that Canada, on the night of March 17, at Paris, France, retained the amateur hockey championship of the world, won for her last year by the Edmonton Mercurys of Alberta. The team which played for Canada this year was the Lethbridge Maple Leafs, also of Alberta, all Lethbridge boys, supported by Dinny Flanagan, Mickey Roth and Billy Flick, hailing from Stratford, Ontario. These latter boys, having played this season with the Kitchener-Waterloo team, were flown to Paris after their 1951 play-offs by the Canadian amateur hockey association, to help the Leafs win and to be on hand in case of injuries.

The names of the Lethbridge Maple Leafs are: Dick Gray, formerly of Medicine Hat, coach and defence player; Mallie Hughes; Carl Sorokoski; Don Vogan; Jim Malacko; Whitey Rimsted; Bill Gibson; Hector Negrello; Don MacLean; Stan Obodiak; Tom Wood; Bill Chandler; Lou Siray; Nap Milroy; Bert Knibbs.

Many of the players are married and the fathers of children. During their absence the salaries of the members of the team are being paid by the people of Lethbridge, who donated $10,000 in a drive to help make the trip a possibility.

Lethbridge invites all Canadians to be glad with her that reports convey that her boys, chosen and commissioned to represent Canada, have been: first, gentlemen on and off the ice; second, ambassadors of good will to all they met; third, a team genuinely great; fourth, an attraction of the first order, playing to over 250,000 people in their lengthy tour of Europe and frequently drawing crowds of 15,000 and more; fifth, an honour to their country in this additional respect, that in their tour they won the last 29 games. Then in the play-off they defeated Finland, 11-1; Norway, 8-0; Britain, 17-1; United States, 16-2; Switzerland, 5-1 and Sweden, 5-1.

This, I am told, is the thirteenth such title won for Canada since 1924. Will you join with me, Mr. Speaker, in congratulating Alberta, the fine young city of Lethbridge, and the Lethbridge Maple Leafs?

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Dion in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Mr. Abbott moved:

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $413,758,902.33, being one-sixth of the amount of each of the several items to be voted, as set forth in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1952, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament; and in addition thereto, a sum not exceeding $1,644,656.25, being three-quarters of the amount of items 62, 121, 204, 470, a sum not exceeding $4,040,634.67, being one-third of the amount of items 39, 456, 463, a sum not exceeding $536,759.17, being one-sixth of the amount of items 88, 566, 206, 209, 210, and a sum not exceeding $1,322,403.33, being one-twelfth of items 86, 386, 395, 398, 401, 411, 412, 415, 417, 420, 451, 458, 460, 495, of the said estimates, be granted to His Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending March 31, 1952.

He said: Mr. Chairman, the bill to be founded on this resolution is in exactly the same form as the bill we passed about this time last year.

It will provide one-sixth, that is to say two months, of all the items to be voted in the main estimates for the fiscal year 1951-52.

It will provide an additional three-quarters of four special items to provide for services on which the whole or greater part of the charges will come for payment within the first few months of the year.

It will provide an additional one-third of three special items to provide for services coming for payment within the first few months of the year but which do not require as great a proportion as the items to which I have just referred.

It will provide an additional one-sixth of five special items of which two are required to meet early in the year requirements of external affairs officers abroad, and three to cover the sessional expenses of the Senate and House of Commons, on which, as hon. members of the committee are aware, the heaviest charges come early in the year.

It will provide an additional one-twelfth of fourteen special items, mainly of a seasonal nature, connected with the experimental farms and so on, where heavier than normal proportions are required to get activities under way in the early part of the year.

The general proportion of one-sixth for all services is intended to provide for all necessary ordinary requirements to the end of May. The additional proportions requested for certain special items, as I have indicated, are necessary because of the seasonal and sessional services affected, such as the sessional expenses of the Senate and the House of Commons, seasonal expenses of the Department of Resources and Development, early-in-the-year requirements of external affairs and trade of commerce for their offices abroad, and other services involving total commitments coming for payment in the first few months of the year.

In no instance is the total amount of any item being released. The form of the bill is exactly the same as the bill I introduced last year at about this time, and the several items are approximately the same as well. I give the usual undertaking that the passing of this bill will not prejudice the rights and privileges of hon. members to criticize and discuss any item in the estimates which will come up for consideration from time to time during the balance of the session.

Mr. Drew: In view of the statement that has been made by the Minister of Finance perhaps it is hardly necessary to add anything; but so there may be no doubt about it, approval of this motion does not imply acceptance of the contents of any of the items to which this resolution refers. It simply follows the established practice of making the necessary amount available to carry on the business of government until the accounts can be fully examined.

Mr. Abbott: That is correct.

Mr. Gillis: In the past it has been the practice of the government to give financial assistance in the marketing of feed grains across the country. Last year I believe about $18 million was spent for this purpose. I notice that in the regular estimates there is an amount of $4 million allotted, but there is nothing in the supplementaries. I should like to find out from the minister if it is the intention of the government to discontinue the feed grain subsidy, and if not, can he so assure the committee?

Mr. Abbott: The estimates, Mr. Chairman, are in exactly the same form as they have been for several years past in so far as this item is concerned—freight assistance on western feed grain. It has been the practice to include in the main estimates an amount sufficient to pay this assistance until the end of the current crop year. The crop year, I understand ends about the end of July, and our fiscal year ends on March 31. We now have in last year's estimates an amount sufficient to carry it until the end of this month. The main estimates now before the committee provide for the continuance of feed grain assistance until July 31, the end of the crop year.

As has been the case in previous years, during the period between now and the time the main supplementaries are brought down, usually in June, the question as to the continuation of this assistance in the same or some other form will be considered. In past years, an amount sufficient to continue the freight assistance has been included in those supplementaries. As my hon. friend has pointed out, it amounts to between $18 million and $20 million to cover a full year. No consideration has yet been given as to what policy shall be followed with respect to the period after July 31. That will be brought, of course, before the house when the main supplementaries are tabled, late in May or early June. Does that answer my hon. friend's question?

Mr. Gillis: No, not exactly. I did have unofficial assurance that it was not the intention of the government to discontinue the feed grain subsidy. There has been a lot of anxiety among farm organizations, in maritime organizations particularly, concerning not only feed grains but fertilizer which was also subsidized. In view of that anxiety, and certain statements that have been made in the press, can the minister not give the assurance that it is not the intention of the government to discontinue the feed grain subsidy? I would interpret his statement to mean that at least the present arrangement will carry on until the end of July, but that there has been no decision whether it will be continued beyond that date. That sort of statement is likely to convince those who are anxious about the present arrangement that there is some doubt whether the feed grain subsidy is to be continued. It certainly leaves a doubt in the minds of those who may read that statement.

Mr. Abbott: The situation is exactly the same as it has been in past years. The doubt may have arisen by reason of the fact that in this year's estimates, following a suggestion by the public accounts committee, a great deal more detailed information has been included. It is pointed out that the $4 million for this year is approximately the same as the amount in the estimates for last year, and it covers only the time up to the end of the current crop year. It is not customary to forecast government policy in advance of final decision.

I do not think I should add anything to the statement I made a moment ago. We are following the same practice as has been followed in prior estimates for several years. The reason why the small amount is included now is that the crop year overlaps the fiscal year.

Mr. Coldwell: I do not want to be out of order when the further supplementary estimates are before the house; consequently I am taking this opportunity of drawing the attention of the government, particularly of the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Finance, to a situation to which I referred just a year ago. In 1944 we appropriated $200 million for the support of agricultural prices other than wheat. This year I have again received, from the same person who wrote to me last year, a complaint about the lack of support for the potato growers of Prince Edward Island.

The minister will recall that last year I referred to a complaint from O'Leary railroad station in Prince Edward Island. Within the past few days the gentleman who wrote to me from there last year has written to me from Toronto. He says that he is in Toronto because the price received for his potatoes this year has been so low that he has had to move there to try to earn a little money to carry on his farming operations in Prince Edward Island. With his letter he enclosed his receipts for potatoes sold. I find that, between January 10 and February 22 of this year, the range of prices he received for his potatoes, before paying four cents a bushel for trucking, was 45 cents per bushel at the highest point and 40 cents per bushel at the lowest—that is for No. 1 Canadian table potatoes.

It seems to me that there is ground for complaint on the part of the potato growers of Prince Edward Island, and the other maritime provinces. I would draw attention to the fact that the appropriation which we thought was going to be used for the support of such agricultural prices has not been used to the extent that the house expected. As a matter of fact, in 1949, immediately before the general election, money from the agricultural price support appropriation was used, and that winter this man received an average of 69 cents a bushel. As I have said, within the last few months he received 40 to 45 cents per bushel, less the four cents for trucking, which brings it down to 36 and 41 cents respectively. I believe every hon. member will agree, without going closely into costs of production—and we know that they are not low for that type of produce in Prince Edward Island, because of the cost of fertilizer and so on—that those prices do not return to the producer a reasonable amount to enable him to live in the way we expect the producers of agricultural products to live in this country.

I am seizing this opportunity to bring this matter to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Finance, indeed the government as a whole, to the end that some support may be given to these potato growers in the maritime provinces to enable them to continue to produce and to have a decent standard of living. After all, in the maritime provinces potatoes are an important agricultural product.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Chairman, I suggest that in addition to support the potato growers need protection. Today United States potatoes are being served in the parliamentary restaurant. These people are not getting any protection at all.

Mr. Gardiner: The question which has just been brought forward is one which has been under discussion continually throughout this season. Arrangements have been made from time to time which have been helpful, but have not brought a final solution of the problem involved. About a week ago the minister of agriculture of the province of New Brunswick telephoned me to know whether or not we would be willing to receive a delegation which would present to the government the problems of the maritime potato growers. That delegation is here today. I have been discussing potatoes all forenoon with this delegation from the maritime provinces.

Mr. Fraser: Can you see eye to eye?

Mr. Gardiner: They are here this afternoon, as a matter of fact, meeting with a committee over in the agriculture department; and they are trying to work out some plan which may be of some assistance. I shall have a report, I expect, some time later in the day, or if not today, tomorrow morning, on the discussions which are now going on.

There are about 4,000 cars of potatoes unsold of this year's crop. That is not a quantity which is great as compared with other years. But the chief difficulty this year is that the potato price is very much lower in the United States than it was last year, or had been for some years previously, and when the double duty is applied at the end of the quota there is some doubt whether there is any market left in the United States for a considerable quantity of the potatoes, indeed probably for any of them. Under these circumstances it may be necessary to try to arrange some plan under which all the surplus can be converted into starch, or sold on the market in other parts of Canada as table potatoes. In any case, that is under consideration.

Mr. Coldwell: This condition has existed for some time. The house appropriated $200 million for support of such agricultural products, and apparently the support has not been given.

Mr. Gardiner: There was support given earlier in the year, but it was to assist in marketing the potatoes in Europe. These markets did not develop, for reasons which I shall be in a better position to discuss when we get to the appropriate item in the estimates.

Mr. Hatfield: I should like to draw to the attention of the minister the fact that the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar says that the price received by his friend on the island was 40 cents a bushel and 45 cents a bushel, less the trucking charge. The potato growers in New Brunswick sold potatoes as low as 25 cents a bushel, and some lower, less trucking charge, this fall, especially the veterans who had just taken up farming under the Veterans Land Act, and the young growers who have just started to farm.

The minister mentioned that there were 4,000 cars unsold. I believe there are 8,000 or 10,000 cars left in New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. In New Brunswick there are six or seven thousand cars left, and I should like the minister to understand that. Every day now the banks and the machinery companies are seizing machinery from these potato growers, and the growers are leaving their farms by the dozens every week and going to Ontario to try to earn enough money to come back and pay their fertilizer bills so that they can carry on next year's farming operations.

I knew about the delegation being up here today. I hope that the minister will give them every encouragement, and that he will report to the house.

Mr. Nowlan: The minister referred to the delegation that is here and the conferences which are going on. If it is decided to give support in this instance, will the Nova Scotia growers be accorded the same consideration as that which may be accorded to the growers of the other two provinces?

Mr. Gardiner: That question of course will come up, as it always does immediately any decision is reached on the other areas. But I would just like to correct what the hon. member (Mr. Hatfield) said. I think when information is given out which is correct it is hardly proper for an hon. member to rise in his place in the house and say that it is not correct. I went all over this with the representatives from New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island this morning, and it is not correct to say that there are 8,000 or 10,000 carloads now unsold. There are 4,000 carloads unsold; the others are sold but not yet delivered. The position is that there are 4,000 for which there is yet to be a market found. I think it is much better to take the correct information rather than a statement that is not correct.

Mr. Hatfield: I have been in this business for the last forty-five years. I do not know where the minister got his figures, was it from the members of the marketing board? I do not think he got them from them.

Mr. Gardiner: That is exactly where I got them.

Mr. Hatfield: If I am any judge, there are 2,000 cars left in Prince Edward Island, and

I am sure there are over 4,000 cars left in New Brunswick. After this time last year we had shipped over 3,600 cars to the United States; this year we are shipping very few cars there.

Mr. Gardiner: According to the latest information, there are 2,000 cars in each province not sold.

Mr. Fulton: When this problem of potatoes is under consideration and the whole matter is being looked into, I hope the minister will not lose sight of the fact that the potato growers in the interior of British Columbia had a very difficult year last year, mainly on account of the early United States competition. I am not going to take the time at this moment to go into that, because I do not think this is the right time to discuss the whole question of protection, but I do hope when this matter is under consideration the minister will bear that in mind. I am sure they would rather have steps taken to ensure them a local market than be dependent on subsidies. The two problems are interrelated, and I hope they will be so regarded.

On section 5—$536,759.17 granted for 1951-52.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Mr. Chairman, are we supposed to get copies of what you are reading from? They have not been distributed.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Chairman, I doubt if there are copies yet available. It is the standard form of interim supply bill. Usually, by agreement, we put it through all stages at this time. I have given copies to the leader of each of the parties but it has not yet been made available for general distribution, although I think my hon. friend could get a copy a little later this afternoon.

Section 6 agreed to.

On section 7—Power to raise sums required for redeeming loans or obligations.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask the minister whether there is, in section 7, any variation from the usual provisions.

Mr. Abbott: I am informed there is not. I have been assured that the terms of the bill, except for the appropriate changes in amounts, are identical with the interim appropriation bill which we passed last year. I have not checked it myself.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

Contingencies and miscellaneous—

584. To authorize the write-off from non-active assets to the consolidated deficit account of the net trading loss in the securities investment account incurred between April, 1940, and November, 1949 ($8,299,183.77), $1.

Mr. Fraser: We are always suspicious of these one-dollar items. I should like to know what this is for.

Mr. Abbott: These proceedings this afternoon have gone so rapidly that I have not yet here with me my book containing the detailed information. I will have it here in a moment. Speaking from memory this item 584 is one of the dollar items which I think was indicated in the public accounts committee as a perfectly appropriate item. It is to authorize the write-off of the net trading loss in the securities investment account incurred between April, 1940, and November, 1949. I recall to the committee that there was some discussion in the house last year, and I indicated in some detail the operation of the securities investment account, colloquially known as our "X" account, in which the government purchased fairly substantial quantities of Dominion of Canada securities for various government funds. On the operation of that account, over the period referred to, there was a trading loss of some $8 million; but as against that, we earned some $50 million in interest accruals. This was taken up and explained in some detail, as I have mentioned, last year; and the insertion of this item in the estimates is to authorize the formal write-off of the trading loss in that account.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Does this mean that we are now dealing in this way with the loss practically over ten years? And does this mean that this is the first time that this loss has come before us? I remember there was discussion about it.

Mr. Abbott: We hold no securities in the account at the moment.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Will the minister just say a word about it? It was active and large over a period of years?

Mr. Abbott: That is correct.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): And, as I recall it, it covered several different accounts. Can the minister explain just what it is that has happened to cause the cessation entirely of that system?

Mr. Abbott: One answer would be that the demand for dominion government securities has been such that it was found desirable to sell the securities in the account. That is a matter of monetary management, management of the public debt, as my hon. friend appreciates, and involves some exercise of judgment as to when these securities should be sold. As he has pointed out, it covers a period of some ten years.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): What are the divisions of the accounts?

Mr. Abbott: I am sorry, but I am without the memorandum to which I referred but for which I have sent. The item could be allowed to stand, but, speaking only from memory, I did give the house last year the approximate amount of the trading losses and this is to give statutory authority to writing those off the books.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I would be grateful if the minister would allow the item to stand.

Item stands.

General items of payroll costs including superannuation payments—

585. To provide, subject to the approval of the treasury board, for supplementing other votes for the payment of salaries, wages and other paylist charges—further amount required, $2,000,000.

Mr. Knowles: I take it this is the item that makes provision for the increases in civil service salaries which are to be made effective as from December 1, 1950?

Mr. Abbott: That is correct. This is the balance of the amount we estimated we would need to pay arrears from December 1 to March 31.

Mr. Drew: Is the minister going to make a statement in regard to this?

Mr. Abbott: I shall be happy to do so. The Prime Minister made a public statement on December 14, 1950, indicating the basis upon which it had been decided to give increases to the civil service. That statement indicated that it would be necessary to obtain a supplementary vote from parliament to cover them. I think I may have indicated previously that the cost of these increases for a full year will be something in the order of $30,000,000, so that for the four months of December, January, February and March something in the order of $9,000,000 will be paid out as supplementary payments.

There is a certain amount of money available to meet those payments in the votes of the various departments. In addition there is a certain amount left in the general salaries vote which, as the committee will recall, is the general vote available to provide for salary adjustments during the year. The information which we have received from the departments indicates that an additional amount of approximately $2,000,000 will be required in order to make the additional payment of some $9,000,000 representing the increases effective from December 1.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I certainly shall support this item and the proposal that our civil servants should get the increases which have been indicated. However, I should like to point out that civil servants are like other workers in this country in that the increases they get are all gone before they get them.

An hon. Member: Before they are spent?

Mr. Knowles: My hon. friend says, "Before they are spent." What I had in mind was the fact that the value of any increase is more than absorbed in the rising cost of living. The indication is that this increase is to be effective as from December 1, 1950. The last increase to civil servants was effective in October, 1948. During the period from October, 1948, to December 1, 1950, the cost of living rose by 11·5 points. Since the increase in civil servants' salaries and wages is put in terms of percentages it is only fair that I should translate that rise in the cost of living index from points to percentages. Therefore, I must say that the rise I have just referred to from October 1948 to December 1, 1950, was a rise of 7·2 per cent over the level as it stood in October 1948.

Before we get to the implementation of these increases we have had two further reports from the dominion bureau of statistics as to the cost of living index. The latest report is for February 1, 1951, at which time the over-all index stood at 175·2. That figure represents a rise in points from the last date of a civil service increase of 15·6 points. May I repeat that in terms of percentages? The cost of living has risen from October 1, 1948, the date of the last civil service increase, to the present time by 9·8 per cent over the October 1948 level.

I imagine that the minister will argue that the government is doing a fairly good job when they increase civil service salaries by what is reported to be an average of ten per cent. I understand that these increases vary from a low of four per cent to a high of 12·5 per cent.

Mr. Abbott: The four per cent is in relation to the higher group. It starts at 10 per cent, goes up to 12½ per cent and then drops rather sharply to four per cent.

Mr. Knowles: Correct, and the over-all average is about 10 per cent. May I point out that by the time the civil servants get this 10 per cent increase in salary to take care of the 9·8 per cent rise in the cost of living we will have passed the date at which the cost of living had risen by that amount. I am prepared to make the prediction that today the cost of living index is already considerably higher than it was on February 1.

In addition to the increased cost of living faced by civil servants there has also been an increase in the number of hours per week that they work. If my arithmetic is correct that works out to an increase of 6·8 per cent. In other words, this increase in salary will just compensate for the increase in the cost of living up to February 1, 1951. It will not compensate for the increased cost of living that has taken place since then, and for the further increases in the cost of living that are bound to take place before civil service increases are considered again. Further, it does not compensate for the increased work week which is the lot of the civil service.

I do not want to go into too many figures, but if you were to work out an index for the civil service and were to start with October, 1948, as 100 across the board and then take into consideration the rise in the cost of living and the increased hours per week that civil servants work you would find that the index of real hourly earnings for civil servants as at February 1, 1951, would be 93·8.

All of this it seems to me highlights the problem of our civil servants. I know the minister will say that it is the usual role of members of the opposition to approve of what the government has brought down and then say that it has not gone far enough, but I ask him to consider seriously the position of the civil servants. The government denies to them any effective collective bargaining rights. There are various civil service organizations, but collective bargaining as we know it under the provisions of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act is not open to civil servants. It is also a matter of record that once an increase has been brought down there has to be a considerable period before another one is provided. It is a relatively short period this time if you take it from October 1, 1948, to December 1, 1950, but that period of two years and two months means that they can hardly look for a revision of this new scale until some time in 1953.

It seems to me that raises the whole question whether consideration should not be given to some sort of automatic cost of living bonus for our civil servants. That idea has already become quite current in contracts that trade unions are able to negotiate with their employers. That is particularly true in the United States where quite a number of employees work under an escalator clause which provides that whenever there is a certain increase in the cost of living index there is an automatic increase in the salaries or wages of those covered by that contract.

I have been trying to find out whether there are any recent examples of the same practice in Canada. I understand that recently, as reported on page 9 of the Montreal Gazette of March 12, 1951, the Robert Simpson Company approved of a plan whereby for its employees there is to be a 30 cents per point per week increase, in other words $1.30 a month, as the cost of living index goes up. Similarly on page 5 of the Toronto Globe and Mail of March 6, 1951, it is reported that General Motors of Canada has agreed to a similar escalator clause. In this case the provision is for $5 per month for each 4-point rise in the cost of living index. I am interested in those figures because they seem to have a scientific basis. As I understand it, the cost of living index was worked out for the years 1935-39 on the basis of what was taken to be the average expenditure of a group of typical wage earning families surveyed in the middle of that period. The budget of this group, so I am told, was $1,453 per year.

That means therefore that a rise in the cost of living index of 1 point represents an increase of $14.53 a year in the retail prices of goods priced in the index budget. I may say when one takes that figure of $14.53 for one point, which is one hundredth of the total budget of the families who were surveyed, that no account is taken of the increased standards of living which we all accept as part of the progress that we are pursuing. I recall as a matter of fact a discussion with the minister's parliamentary assistant on that very point. He may have thought he was arguing with me, but the fact is that we both took the position that we do not want a return to the standard of living envisaged by the cost of living index basket of goods and services that was taken as the norm in the years 1935-39.

In other words what I am saying now is a case for arguing that a one point rise in the cost of living index should be considered as requiring more than $14.53 per year to meet that rise. Nevertheless I am prepared to take that figure as a minimum because it can be argued mathematically on the basis of the figures that were taken in arriving at the cost of living index. If a one point rise in the cost of living index means an increase of $14.53 a year in the prices of the goods and services covered by the cost of living index, that means that for any employee to be compensated for an increase of one index point he should receive an additional 28 cents per week or $1.21 per month.

I point out that the figures I have just given for the Robert Simpson Company and General Motors of Canada are reasonably close to the figure of $1.21 per month per point increase in the cost of living index. With regard to our civil servants my feeling is that they are not going to be greatly comforted with the increase they are now to get. They are counting on what they know has been announced by the government but as they look into the future, realizing it will be two or three years before their salaries can be reviewed again, they face the prospect of the cost of living index continuing to go up with the result that their latter position will be worse than what it was before the increase became effective.

It seems to me that the only solution to this kind of situation is for the government to work out a plan similar to that in effect in the case of many collective agreements in industry whereby our civil servants would automatically receive an increase in their income as the cost of living index goes up. As a matter of fact I went to the trouble to ascertain figures as to what increases in the cost of living index would involve. For example, if the cost of living index reaches a figure of 180 the supplement on that basis would have to be $11.12 per month, over and above the present increase, on the basis of the rise in the cost of living as from December 1, 1950. If it reaches 185 it would have to be $17.37 per month. If it reaches 190 it would have to be $23.62 per month.

I submit with the way the cost of living index is rising that those figures are not unlikely at all. My guess is that when we come back after the Easter recess and have the figure for March 1 we will find that it has gone up another two or three points above 175·2, perhaps to over 178, and that before the end of the year we will be up to a figure such as 190. If the minister says that my figures indicate that it would be a costly business for the government to consider an automatic increase in the salaries of civil servants, may I reply to him that those figures indicate the loss that the cost of living increase means to the civil servants themselves. Certainly it would cost the government $23.62 per month per employee to compensate for a cost of living index of 190. Similarly the average civil servant will be just that much short over his position as at December, 1950, namely, $23.62 a month, if the cost of living index goes up to that figure, and there is no compensation. I would be glad to hear from the minister as to what consideration has been given by the government to the position of civil servants from here on until the next time when their salaries might be subject to revision.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I can add very much to what the Prime Minister said in the statement which he made outlining the proposed basis of increase to the civil service. In 1947 and 1948 the various civil service organizations urged upon the government the principle that salaries in the public service should be directly related to the cost of living; in other words, that there should be an automatic increase with an increase in the cost of living index. As the committee will recall, that was tried during the war, and in the view of the government at any rate it had some very considerable defects. On both occasions to which I referred, in 1947 and 1948, the government decided not to accept that principle, mainly on the ground, I think, that it was not widely accepted in private employment, and because of the fact I think that we all recognized it would be very difficult to lower the bonus in the event of some decline in the cost of living. So on balance the government felt it was better to proceed on the principles I have outlined on several occasions, and which I think were reiterated by the Prime Minister in his statement to which I referred. As I have had occasion to say at other times, if the cost of living continued to climb of course the remuneration of civil servants would have to be adjusted, in the same way the remuneration of other groups in the community would have to be adjusted. Further than that I do not know that I would be prepared to elaborate at this time.

Mr. MacDougall: The hon. member who spoke a moment ago dealt very effectively, I thought, with the question of the cost of living in connection with those who are now inside the service. I wonder if I would be in order now to discuss the question of those who are without the civil service, who also are in very dire straits.

The Chairman: No.

Mr. Abbott: I should like to accommodate my hon. friend but I am afraid he would be completely out of order. If we were to open that door I do not know just where we would be able to stop.

Mr. MacDougall: Very well.

Mr. Knowles: Does the hon. member mean government employees outside the civil service?

Mr. Abbott: No, I think he means wage earners generally.

Item agreed to.

584. To authorize the write-off from non-active assets to the consolidated deficit account of the net trading loss in the securities investment account incurred between April, 1940, and November, 1949 ($8,299,183.77), $1.

Mr. Abbott: I am sorry the hon. member for Greenwood has left the chamber; I now have the information he requested, which I might put on the record. I am sure it will meet his desire.

[Mr. Abbott.]

Between the fiscal years 1940-41 and 1949-50 the government of Canada purchased and sold its own securities pursuant to P.C. 10061 dated December 24, 1941. The purpose of these bond transactions was twofold; first, to profitably employ idle cash balances which the dominion had in the Bank of Canada and the chartered banks and which were not bearing interest; and secondly, to promote a better and sounder market for dominion securities during those years.

The face value of Dominion of Canada bonds purchased and sold during this period totalled $2,674,790,000. The cost of such securities was $2,715,145,837.34 and the proceeds from the sale thereof totalled $2,706,846,653.57, leaving a net trading loss of $8,299,183.77. Against this trading loss there was a total revenue from interest on the securities purchased of $53,067,559. This interest was taken into revenue each year as received and no portion thereof was used to reduce any possible losses on the principal amount involved in these bond transactions.

Last fiscal year, i.e., 1949-50, the amount of trading loss of $8,299,183.77 was written down in our books to non-active assets and accordingly constituted an expenditure charge in arriving at the budgetary surplus or decrease in net debt for the year. The purpose of this dollar item is merely to provide the necessary authority to write off this non-active account to the consolidated deficit account of Canada, which would have no effect on the budgetary surplus for 1950-51, nor on the net debt.

Mr. Fraser: The other day in the public accounts committee it was brought out that securities totalling some $51 million had not been cashed by the public. I wonder if it would not be possible for the finance department to notify bondholders when a particular issue is going to be called, or when an issue is due. I say that because many people purchasing bonds today know nothing about such things. People have had bonds left to them, and they are just put away. We were told in the committee that one bond was taken and framed. So I wonder if it would not be possible for the department to notify these people that their bonds are being called or are maturing.

Mr. Abbott: As my hon. friend knows, the great majority of the bonds outstanding are bearer bonds, so there is no way of knowing who the holders may be. My recollection is that when bonds mature, and certainly if they are called ahead of maturity, the practice invariably is, as is required by the bond, to publish in various newspaper and other organs of public information—

Mr. Fraser: But that is only in the financial journals.

Mr. Abbott: No; when bonds are called we publish in the daily press. I know, because we have an item in the finance department appropriations to cover the cost of that advertising. In the case of the different series of victory loans we have been calling progressively for the last few years, notices have been published in the newspapers. As to the publication of a notice in connection with a bond which on its face falls due on March 1, 1951, whether we should remind the public of that by advertising in the newspapers, I shall be glad to consider. I must say I have always felt that in the interests of economy and the wise use of public funds we should not spend money to draw attention to the fact that people hold an obligation of the dominion which is coming due on a certain date. But we all know people are apt to be a bit careless about these things and not pay too much attention to the due date of a government bond, so possibly consideration should be given to a modest expenditure for that sort of thing.

Mr. Fraser: The minister says he has no record in connection with bearer bonds, but the department must have some kind of record because when a person cashes a coupon at the bank he must sign a slip.

Mr. Abbott: We have no record at all. The income tax department may have some record of those who are cashing coupons; but the bearer bond, by its terms, means that it is a bearer security, and neither the finance department nor the bank of Canada has any idea who may be the owners of those bonds.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I am grateful for the statement given by the minister, which makes it clear that actually you did charge this amount as an expenditure in the year ending March 31, 1950.

Mr. Abbott: I believe that is correct.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Therefore you put yourself in the position of turning it into a non-active asset which you could write off, and you are now writing it off. The amount involved was very large, $2,715,145,837.34, and the minister has pointed out that this was done for two reasons, first to employ idle cash balances, and second to promote a better and sounder market for dominion securities during those years. Could the minister say what was the total amount in those votes at any one time? That would give us an idea how much of that $2,700 million is buying and selling.

Mr. Abbott: I am afraid I could not, from memory. It was several hundred million dollars at one time, but it varied.

Item agreed to.

587. To provide for the transfer to the civil service superannuation account of a special government contribution of a portion of the amount by which the estimated liabilities exceed the balance in the account, $75,000,000.

Mr. Abbott: I think perhaps I had better make a brief explanatory statement on this item, and give the house some background to this amount of $75 million which we are proposing as a special contribution to the superannuation account in order to provide for part of the deficiency which was accumulated in that account over a long period of years.

Under the Civil Service Superannuation Act, employees to whom the act applies contribute for current service at rates which range from 5 per cent to 6 per cent. In that regard may I say that male employees who were contributors prior to August 11, 1939, contribute 5 per cent. Other male employees in receipt of a salary of $1,200 or less contribute 5 per cent. Those in receipt of a salary of over $1,200 and not over $1,500 per annum contribute 5½ per cent. Those in receipt of a salary of over $1,500 per annum contribute 6 per cent, while female employees contribute 5 per cent. Contributions may also be made for prior employment in the civil service, for some types of war service, and, under certain conditions, for prior pensionable service with a previous employer. The act does not require any specific contribution by the government but the practice has been to include annually an item in the estimates for a government contribution in an amount equal to the estimated current contributions of individuals in the previous fiscal year. In addition, interest at 4 per cent per annum is credited annually to the account, but no provision has been made heretofore for the matching by the government of past service contributions of employees.

The principal benefits under the act are calculated on the number of years of service, and the average salary for the last few years immediately preceding retirement. Contributions as provided for in the act with a matching contribution by the government will in general provide these benefits so long as the general level of salaries does not change appreciably. However, during the last decade or so there has been a substantial rise in the general salary level and future benefits under the act, being based on these higher salary levels, are thus greater than past contributions can provide.

I have been advised by the actuaries of the department of insurance that a substantial deficiency has accumulated, due principally to the rise in the general level of salaries and to the practice over the years of not crediting the account with any government contribution for other than current service. An improvement in mortality among pensioners generally, and a tendency towards retirement at earlier ages, have also been factors contributing significantly to the deficit.

On the basis of an actuarial investigation made in the early thirties, there was a deficit of over $53 million in the account as of March 31, 1933. Two or three years ago we asked the actuaries of the department of insurance to undertake a further investigation and bring their earlier valuation up to date. While their report is not as yet in final shape, they advise me that the estimated accrued liability in respect of benefits under the superannuation act has continued to increase, and as of December 31, 1947, was in fact several times as large as the amount which we are providing for in this estimate. Hon. members will, of course, realize that what we are doing here is essentially to make a bookkeeping adjustment to reflect more accurately in our public accounts the magnitude of the liability to which the government of Canada is committed under this act. It is our hope that over the next few years it may be possible for us to make similar provisions for the remainder of the deficiency which has now been disclosed by the actuaries.

Although there is a substantial deficiency in the superannuation account, I think it is desirable to emphasize that it has arisen out of events of the past. While at a later date we propose to review the benefit and contribution provisions of the act with great care in the light of the detailed findings of the actuaries, present indications are that current contributions as provided in the act together with a matching contribution by the government will be probably about sufficient to cover benefits for employees entering the service in the future. If it should be found that the joint contributions of civil servants, and of the government as employer, are insufficient to cover the benefits provided by the act, we would hope to be able to suggest at this or the following session suitable amendments for the consideration of parliament.

I might also mention that the influences that have resulted in this deficit for which we are now making certain provision have not affected the civil service superannuation account alone, but have had a like influence on pension funds throughout the country. A great many other employers have had to make special contributions to their pension funds to offset similar deficits.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Can the minister state whether there is any difference between "superannuation fund" and "superannuation account", two expressions he used?

Mr. Abbott: No, they are the same. The superannuation account is the account we carry in the public accounts of Canada.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): It would seem, then, that contributions have about equalled payments out?

Mr. Abbott: There has been a small surplus of $2 million or $3 million a year in the last couple of years in the actual payments into the fund as against payments out. That is not particularly significant from an actuarial point of view, because of the fact that the number of people in the service has been growing and, as I indicated in my statement, rates of pay have been increasing.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Can the minister give a little more detail about this vote of $75 million which his advisers have told him is needed?

Mr. Abbott: If my hon. friend will read my statement in Hansard, I think he will find I have given a comprehensive statement of the principles involved in this vote. The actuaries are still working on an analysis of the fund. As he will appreciate, and other members who know about these matters will appreciate, it is an extremely complicated calculation which involves the question of mortality tables, the ages of the civil servants, the contributions which are being made, the rate of growth in the service, and so on. I indicated that in 1933 when a survey was made during Mr. Bennett's time, the indication was that there was an actuarial deficit of approximately $50 million.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): A liability.

Mr. Abbott: My friend appreciates that this is a charge against the government of Canada. There is a contractual obligation that when an employee has served so long in the public service, having made certain contributions, he receives a retiring allowance based upon that length of service and upon his average salary prior to the time of retirement. It is to reflect more accurately in our public accounts the ultimate liability of the taxpayers of Canada with respect to this superannuation that we are now suggesting that this transfer be made.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): This $75 million will merely represent a book entry.

Mr. Abbott: I said that in my statement, that it is a book entry. We will credit the account with 4 per cent each year as earnings on the payment.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): There will be another vote for that?

Mr. Abbott: That is statutory; that is included each year.

Mr. Gibson: Did I hear the minister state it would be 4 per cent?

Mr. Abbott: Yes, that is right, on the funds in the superannuation account. That is the rate at which interest is credited on that account, and that has been the case ever since the fund was set up, I believe.

Mr. Gibson: Would it not be more realistic to take the rate which the government pays on annuities to the general public?

Mr. Abbott: It is certainly favourable from the point of view of the civil servants, yes.

Mr. Knowles: I cannot but approve of the action of the government in making good the bookkeeping deficiency which has been brought to their attention in connection with this matter. As the minister knows, there is another deficiency which I wish he would make good as well. He need not lounge back in his seat too far, as though I were going to make a long speech on this question. But I should like to remind him that the position of quite a group of our retired civil servants is still worsening.

On March 12 of this year, in response to a question of mine, sessional paper 102-C was tabled, bringing us up to date as to the number of retired civil servants that we have, and as to the amount of their pensions in various brackets. The total number of retired civil servants on pensions of one kind or another as at February 28 of this year was 9,877. In addition to that, there were 4,667 widows of pensioners drawing their share of the pension.

I find in this return, however, that of the 9,877 retired civil servants, 1,478 of them, or 15 per cent, are receiving pensions of less than $40 a month. That includes a group of 291 receiving pensions of less than $20 a month.

With respect to the widows, I find that out of 4,667 who are drawing their widows' pensions, being widows of retired civil servants, 2,647, or 57 per cent of them, are drawing pensions of less than $40 a month. That includes a group of 906 who are drawing pensions of less than $20 a month. I picked that particular figure of $40 a month because it is the old age pension figure; at least it is the maximum provided under federal legislation.

And as we know from the rising cost of living index, that figure of $40 a month today, in terms of 1935-39 dollar values, is worth less than $23 a month. I know all the arguments on the minister's side, as he knows all the arguments on my side, because we have been throwing them back and forth for the last seven, eight or nine years. But it does seem that just as the minister now is bringing in an item of money to take care of something that arose out of a situation in the past, so he should face up to the problems of these people.

It has been pointed out that many of these people, whose case I argue, were people who were working in the civil service during the early 1930's when there was a cut in their wages and salaries. Accordingly, the amount of the pension that they receive reflects the cut that they had to take at that time. But in the meantime—and the government has had something to do with it—the cost of living has gone up tremendously. I contend there is a moral obligation there that is equal to the contractual argument that the government uses, and that it is time that something was done to improve the position of those old, retired civil servants, particularly those in the lower brackets.

There were many above the $40 figure who would feel that their case should be argued as well, and so it should, but I make a special plea for those down in the very lowest brackets. The minister knows, because I have gone into it before, that some other governments do something about the position of their retired civil servants. I refer particularly to the three I mentioned on previous occasions, namely, the United Kingdom, Newfoundland and Saskatchewan; and I urge that further consideration be given to this matter.

I have had a great deal of correspondence with these people, as one might expect. Just a few days ago I was sent an exchange of correspondence between two retired civil servants one at The Pas, Manitoba, to a fellow retired civil servant in Winnipeg. They were discussing back and forth the situation, and the prospect for their future, and one asked the other what the situation might be if the new old age pension plan were to come into effect, and this was the reply:

> I understand that we would come under that in addition to the pension that we are receiving now. According to reports, 1952 may be when that would go into effect if passed. Unfortunately, a great number of us may be under the sod before then, or perhaps it might be fortunate for some of us if that happened.

That is not a nice way to put it, but it expresses the opinion of a great many of these people. They feel that, partly because their numbers are so small, they are literally being left out in the cold. I will not take more time on it now. I dare to hope that something might have got into the minister's heart since the last time this was up, and that the matter might be reconsidered, namely, the matter of providing some cost of living bonus or other supplement for these people. I know the kind of letters I will get from them if nothing is done in the next little while—the minister will get them too—when they learn of the increase that we are providing for the civil servants, which I support. As a matter of fact, a few moments ago I was arguing that they should have a cost of living bonus as well. When they hear of this $75 million which is being provided to take care of the situation that flows out of the past they will wonder what it is that stands in the way of their getting an adjustment on their situation, their deficiency, which to them is very serious.

Mr. Pouliot: Mr. Chairman, it is not only a question of having a big heart. The minister has one, and everybody knows it. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken has said that the minister knows all about it. I know that he does. But I do not want him to forget one class of former civil servants, employees of the state. I mean the old employees of the Intercolonial Railway and the Prince Edward Island Railway and even the Temiscouata Railway. The former were civil servants inasmuch as the old Intercolonial was owned by the government before it was transferred to other companies with which it has been amalgamated. As the minister knows, the amount of superannuation of these employees is just a mere pittance, and I hope that the matter will be reconsidered by the government in due course. I know that the Prime Minister and all the members of the government are sympathetic to these people.

There is one thing that I want to say about the remarks made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. He has asked for bonuses without any discrimination between the civil servants. I presume it was that. Well, there should be a difference established between civil servants, the difference between those who are useful to the state and those who are not. There must be some means to establish the value of any civil servant to the state. It is not only a matter of commiseration and pity. I realize as well as the hon. gentleman that not only civil servants are affected by the rise in the cost of living index. It affects us all. I know. If you have one civil servant who does positively nothing and is surrounded by his staff, just as the sultan is surrounded by his harem, and surrounded by girls who do nothing except knitting, and by men who do nothing but chew gum and read the paper, then I do not see what increase that man should have. We should see the efficiency and the usefulness to the state of each civil servant, and that seems only fair.

When they get into the service they think they are into a charitable organization, and then they have only to repeat their laments for an increase in salary. Members of parliament should have the courage to say that some civil servants are not worth their salt.

Mr. Knowles: We are talking now about retired civil servants.

Mr. Pouliot: Some are retired, yes. I am speaking of those who will be retired afterwards and will enjoy the benefits of that legislation. I do not say that of all civil servants. There may be the exception, I do not know; but there are some civil servants who are completely dumb, who are not worth their salt, who refuse to work, who are procrastinators. They are good for nothing. They come here and ask for an increase in salary just the same as those who work and do well. There is something else that struck me forcibly the other day. I was listening to the radio and I heard the voice of a youngster who was speaking in a high-pitched voice to a gathering of civil servants. He said: Gentlemen, if you are not satisfied with the answer of the Minister of Finance, remember the railway strike, and we will tell the government what to do. That fellow should have been fired at once. There should be no strikes among civil servants. There is no reason for that. That is not the tone in which to speak. If they come to speak to the government, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has said, submitting their grievances, I have no objection; but if they come on the warpath to tell the government: You must do this or we will strike; we will have a sympathy strike along with this group or that one, then I say they should not be received, and that the government should show a firm hand in dealing with them. Is the tail to run the head? We have seen that.

To the late prime minister I offered on a silver platter the control of the whole civil service, but he refused it at the time and it was lost forever—well, I hope not forever because I trust that the Prime Minister may be firm at the right moment, the Minister of Finance also, and all members of the government. As the supplementary estimates show clearly, they are ready to come to the assistance of civil servants who are worthy of consideration; but it is time to draw a distinction between those who are useful to the state and those who are not. I wonder how long it will take. They do not all deserve the same sympathy. There is a necessary distinction which must be made, and I hope that it will be made in due course. I do not want the hon. member who has just spoken to say that I am not in sympathy with his suggestion. I am in sympathy with it, provided that those who get any benefit from it are those who are worthy of it.

Mr. Knowles: I am glad to have the sympathy and support of the hon. member for Temiscouata for my suggestion that something should be done to improve the lot of retired civil servants, particularly those in the lower brackets. Since he has indicated his agreement with the basic contention that I am making, I will not take the time to spell out my disagreement with a number of things that he has said. I should like to say this, however, on behalf of civil servants generally. I think that they accept—not only because it is in the law, but as a matter of principle—the denial to them of the use of the strike weapon. There is no question about that so far as civil servants are concerned. What they complain about is the feeling that at times advantage is taken of them because they have not the same effective bargaining power that is enjoyed by some other workers in this country. That was the point I was making.

Mr. Pouliot: If my hon. friend will pardon me, may I say that the other day I heard, with my own ears, over the radio, a man holding up the railway strike as an example, as a threat to the government, in order to get exactly what my hon. friend is advocating for them. I thought that was not the proper way to go about it. I hope that sort of thing will not occur again. That is all I want to say. But I was a witness to the lecture that was given on that occasion.

Mr. Knowles: I will not deny that, but—

Mr. Abbott: I have only one comment I want to make on my hon. friend's remarks. I do not know what the civil servants feel and I do not know whether my hon. friend can speak with authority as to what they feel; but they certainly are not justified in feeling that the government takes advantage of the fact that they are not organized and do not exercise the strike weapon in order to fix unfair levels of salaries and wages. So far as my own experience goes, it has been that we have tried to lean over backward for that very reason. I do not think there is any justification for saying that the civil servants' salary scales are lower because of the fact that they, quite properly, have not the right to strike. I could not allow that sort of statement to go unchallenged.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Since the cost of living, from the time that controls were first taken off, has risen about 60 points, has any consideration been given by the government to the giving of a cost of living bonus to these retired civil servants, especially those in the lower brackets to whom the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre referred?

Mr. Abbott: My hon. friend has been in the house only a short time. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has said, I have dealt with this matter on numerous occasions. I do not know that I should attempt to reiterate what I then said, but briefly it is this. The right of the civil servant to superannuation is the same as any other contractual obligation. There are a great many people in this country who are not entitled to superannuation from anybody. They have to provide their own superannuation. There are a great many taxpayers in that position. I have never been able to see why one particular group who are paid out of taxpayers' money should receive preferential treatment. The people who have had to provide their own social security by small holdings of victory bonds and others who have had to provide their superannuation or its equivalent in other ways are not compensated out of public moneys for whatever increase there may have been in the cost of living. I am perhaps oversimplifying my argument, but the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre knows that I have elaborated it a great deal more on other occasions. In essence, that is the reason why the government feels that it is not justified in increasing this particular type of contractual obligation.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I have only one comment to make and that is that I do not agree with the position taken; I think it is unsound and unjust.

Mr. Knowles: As the minister says, we are both speaking in shorthand today, so far as our arguments are concerned. I simply want to make this reply to what he has said. These people are our employees, and I think that the government should be the model employer in this country.

Special—

588. Notwithstanding section 32 of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, to authorize payment under votes 678 and 679 of the Appropriation Act No. 4, 1950, of the federal government's share of the claims received after March 31, 1951, in respect of costs incurred as a result of the large fires in Rimouski and Cabano in May, 1950, where such claims are certified for payment by the commission named for that purpose by the government of the province of Quebec, $1.

Mr. Abbott: Perhaps I should give a word of explanation of this item. In the further supplementary estimates for the year now closing, the two votes referred to in this item were provided:

678. To authorize and provide for a grant to assist the province of Quebec to meet costs incurred as a result of the large fire in Rimouski in May, 1950, $2,500,000.

679. To authorize and provide for a grant to assist the province of Quebec to meet costs incurred as a result of the large fire in Cabano, in May, 1950, $300,000.

The wording of those original items, the votes to which I have just referred, envisaged the federal government making grants to the province of Quebec to meet costs incurred as a result of these fires. Subsequently, however, an arrangement was entered into between the federal and provincial governments whereby the two governments would share equally in such claims as were determined as justified and approved by the commissions set up to investigate claims arising out of the large fires at Rimouski and Cabano, in May, 1950.

In view of this new arrangement some payments will have to be made directly from the federal treasury after March 31, 1951.

During consideration of the main estimates for 1951-52—that is, the coming year—it was decided not to include therein items to continue these programs of assistance because it was felt that a final supplementary estimate amendment of this type, the type we are now considering, would be most in keeping with the original intention of parliament and of the government and would be most workable in the pursuit of that intention.

In other words, it is intended that the dollar item is really an amendment to the wording of the two original votes and is intended to constitute this as a continuing appropriation.

Mr. Pouliot: Is it possible to have a list of all those who have made claims, showing the amounts they have received from this government and from the provincial government, in connection with Cabano at least, if not for both places?

Mr. Abbott: Claims are paid after the two commissions, one for Cabano and the other for Rimouski, have approved them. On that authorization payment is made to the extent of 50 per cent from the federal treasury and 50 per cent from the provincial treasury. I would be glad to get that list and give it to my hon. friend.

592. Expenses of work in the interest of fire prevention—further amount required, $3,000.

[Mr. Abbott.]

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): What is this item for?

Mr. Abbott: This is for printing, stationery and office equipment and the actual cost of reprinting 25,000 copies of a textbook on fire prevention education which exceeded the estimated cost by $4,700. This was due to changes having been made in the reprint. A portion of the excess cost will be paid from surplus and then the further additional amount will be required.

Mr. Knowles: Is this branch now fully staffed?

Mr. Abbott: I think so, although I cannot answer that positively.

Mr. Knowles: But the minister is not sure.

Mr. Abbott: I do not think we have any authorized positions which are not filled at the moment. I might say that I consider this staff to be a highly competent one.

Mr. Herridge: How is this book distributed?

Mr. Abbott: I am sorry but I cannot give my hon. friend that information. It is distributed under the direction of the dominion fire commissioner, but I cannot say just where it goes.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

B—General—

580. The Canadian government's assessment for membership in the food and agriculture organization of the United Nations, further amount required, $109,000.

Mr. Wright: Can the minister give us a brief outline of the work being carried on by this organization?

Mr. Pearson: I think possibly the Minister of Agriculture would be in a position to deal with this matter with more authority than I possess. As hon. members know, the food and agriculture organization is a specialized agency of the United Nations which deals with food and agricultural questions. Its membership consists of approximately 70 states, each with one vote in the conference or in the governing body which meets between conferences. The FAO is divided into technical divisions, of which I think there are seven. There are the divisions on agriculture, distribution, commerce, statistics, forestry and fisheries products, nutrition and rural welfare.

These divisions provide a wide range of fact-finding and advisory services designed to furnish information to the member states and to help them in the formulation of their agricultural policies. Canada has a real interest in the technical information obtained from these various divisions. I believe the Department of Agriculture feels that useful services are being performed by them.

The FAO has been in existence for five years and during that period has established statistical services in the field of food, agriculture, forestry and fisheries which have been of use to our government and to the provincial agricultural services. The organization has also collected a great deal of technical information in these fields which has been made available to us and which has been of special assistance in the development of the agriculture of backward countries. If the hon. member would like to have more detailed information I can secure for him a copy of the report of FAO which deals with these matters at much greater length.

Mr. Hatfield: Is not most of this money being spent to send agricultural representatives behind the iron curtain to teach the people there how to farm with tractors and agricultural machinery bought with Marshall aid funds in order that the products may be shipped back to this country or to the United States?

Mr. Pearson: I am not sure that I quite gather the import of my hon. friend's question. I would point out that there are no countries behind the iron curtain which are members of the food and agriculture organization. They have all withdrawn from that organization and are not now receiving any assistance from it.

Mr. Hatfield: They were receiving assistance. I was at the United Nations at Lake Success and we heard a man who had just come back from the Ukraine where he said he had been trying to show the farmers how to use tractors, gang plows and other agricultural machinery that had been shipped under the Marshall plan. Before that time they were using only wooden sticks for plows. He said he had been there all this time trying to show those people how to grow wheat with agricultural machinery sent from the United States under the Marshall plan.

Mr. Nowlan: Could the minister tell us on what basis this amount is arrived at? Is it prorated between the countries?

Mr. Pearson: The budget of this organization has been fixed this year by the United Nations at $5,000,000, and Canada's contribution is 4·11 per cent, which is slightly lower than the figure of 4·5 per cent, for last year. Our proportion on that basis would be roughly $205,500 U.S. or $217,000 Canadian.

The organization decided this year to move its headquarters from Washington to Rome and some additional expenditures must be made immediately. We, along with other countries, have been requested to make the contribution on next year's assessment available at as early a date as possible and this item is one-half of next year's contribution.

Mr. Hatfield: What can the Canadian farmer expect to learn about agriculture from Rome?

Mr. Pouliot: What is the total personnel of FAO? How many members of that personnel are Canadian? What is the top salary paid to any member of the FAO? Are they allowed travelling expenses?

Mr. Pearson: I have not that information available at the moment but I shall be glad to get it for my hon. friend. I know that the staff is pretty efficiently managed. I know the Minister of Agriculture will agree that there are some Canadians in important positions, the director of the fisheries division, for instance. As to salary scales and allowances and all that sort of thing, I shall have to secure that information and give it to my hon. friend.

Mr. Pouliot: I am not so much interested in the efficiency as in the number.

Terminable services—

582. Contribution for the United Nations relief and rehabilitation program for Korea, $7,250,000.

Mr. Knowles: I wonder if the minister could give us a few comments on this item. It certainly deals with a very desirable move. Is this the first amount that we have been asked to vote for rehabilitation in Korea? What is the total amount being undertaken under the auspices of the United Nations? Can the minister give some comment as to the nature of the program and as to what progress is being made?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, at the last session of the general assembly a resolution was passed providing for a program of relief and rehabilitation for Korea where of course the need is very great and getting greater every day. A committee of the assembly discussed this matter at great length and a United Nations commission for relief and rehabilitation of Korea was set up. That organization drew up a plan of action and reported back to the United Nations. Its plan was also very carefully considered by the economic and social council. It is estimated that about $250 million will be required to meet the immediate needs. That of course will not begin to cover the whole problem of rehabilitation.

Mr. Knowles: That is just relief?

Mr. Pearson: That is relief only.

Mr. Graydon: It will be worse now.

Mr. Pearson: This was some weeks ago. Of course there has been more damage done since that time, and there have been more refugees moving south. It was felt that $250 million might see the organization through the immediate period of relief. Our delegation at that time thought it would be most desirable if this amount could be raised by assessment of all members on the basis of their proportions of contribution to the United Nations itself. We were not able to get sufficient support for that idea but a committee was set up to try to raise this money on some equitable and proportionate basis. As a result a high proportion of the $250 million has now been earmarked by various governments.

We felt that as a government we might ask parliament to agree to appropriate an amount which would be roughly proportionate to our share of the United Nations budget. For that reason we are asking approval for this estimate of $7,250,000 for Korean relief. The organization to supervise the expenditure of this money has been set up. The director general of the organization is Mr. Kingsley, who has been director general of the international refugee organization. He has been to Korea and has made arrangements that these relief supplies should be distributed through the unified command while operations are going on. We hope that this effort will be successful because there is no part of the world now where relief is more urgently needed than in Korea.

Mr. Brooks: Can the minister give a list of the different nations that are contributing?

Mr. Pearson: I have at least a partial list. In addition to its military appropriations, the United States has already pledged some $162 million for Korean relief. The United Kingdom has allocated $28 million for relief. We are asking for an appropriation of $7,250,000; $4,500,000 has been appropriated each by Thailand and Australia, and something between $2 million and $3 million by the Philippines, Brazil and Uruguay. We also expect other contributions from other countries.

Mr. Brooks: The communist nations are not contributing.

Mr. Pearson: Not a bit.

Mr. Knowles: I take it that thus far the money has been spent mainly on medical supplies, food, clothing and other things necessary for immediate relief. Do the terms of the resolution voted by the United Nations envisage going on with a program of rehabilitation if and when the shooting is over?

Mr. Pearson: Yes. This is a program of relief and rehabilitation but the funds that are being raised now will not be sufficient even to cover the immediate cost of relief.

Mr. Low: Is there any possibility of Russia and her satellites making a contribution eventually to this rehabilitation fund?

Mr. Pearson: They have been given the opportunity but they have not seen fit to take advantage of it, and I think it a highly unlikely contingency that they will contribute.

Mr. Knowles: Let us do our share anyway.

Mr. Graydon: In other words, the Soviet nations are doing the damage and we are having to pay for it.

Mr. Pouliot: In the first place I would ask the minister to give the same information about the United Nations relief and works agency for Palestine refugees, the vote that was just passed, and the United Nations program for Korea as was requested for FAO. I should like to know the number of Canadians on the Palestine agency, the number of Canadians who have contributed to the rehabilitation program for Korea, the size of the staff, the highest salary and the lowest.

We are now rebuilding what we have destroyed. The temple of Jerusalem was destroyed and it was hard to rebuild it in three days. The destruction has taken place, and what surprises me is the amount of the contribution of the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada. I wonder if the amounts for rehabilitation are in proportion to the loss and damage caused to Korea by each of those countries. Naturally no one knows about that. United States bombers were there. They were very active and caused more damage than the Canadian destroyers or the few Canadian soldiers who have been there. That is evident.

I should also like to know how the United Nations came to establish Canada's share for the rehabilitation program in Korea at $7,250,000. What is the use of destruction when we have to rebuild afterwards? I know that life is perpetually recommencing. On the other hand, a country is destroyed and then we proceed to rebuild it again. Coventry is not yet rebuilt in its entirety. In many parts of Europe there are still ruins dating from the last conflict, and no new buildings have been erected there. I find it very sad. I am not a pessimist but we hear of war every time that there is a sitting of the house. It is war, war, war. Now we are trying to rebuild what has been destroyed. Would it not have been easier not to destroy and therefore not have to rebuild?

That is a suggestion that may arouse the minds of some of my colleagues but I find that the war in Korea is very pitiful. I was the only one to say that in the house last June, and some hon. members gave me the cold shoulder at the time. What progress has been made in Korea up to now? The armies go up to the 38th parallel and they come down. Now they are nearing the 38th parallel and the newspapers are full of news of a possible total war. How can we rehabilitate Korea if we have a total war? There are some Canadians in Korea in the Canadian army. For a time they complained that they were not dressed warmly enough. I have every sympathy with the Korean people. It is not because they live in the antipodes that we have the right to be indifferent to their sufferings. As human beings they are entitled to our consideration and the consideration of the whole world. No country has publicized the tragedy and misery of Korea to such an extent as the United States, through the big magazines of that country which have published illustrations showing refugees wandering about in numbers, without shelter, deprived of food.

I ask the minister a supplementary question, which he may answer whenever he feels like it. If we vote this amount of $7,250,000 for the rehabilitation of Korea, can we be sure that our men there who may be wounded, and the Koreans themselves, will get some advantage from it? I hope so.

Mr. Pearson: I will try to get the information the hon. gentleman has requested in regard to these other agencies. As far as the Palestine agency is concerned, I do know that the director is a Canadian, and I can assure the hon. gentleman he is doing that work as an international duty and not because of any salary involved. The figure of $7,250,000 was not established for us by the United Nations; it is a figure this government thought fit to recommend to parliament as an estimate for this purpose. The other information I will get as soon as possible.

Mr. Pouliot: But what was the basis for the computation of that amount? What made the minister come to the conclusion that $7,250,000 should be voted by the house?

Mr. Pearson: The amount requested by the United Nations was $250 million. Our proportion of the expenses of the United Nations has been laid down as 3·2 per cent, and the application of that principle to this amount gave us roughly this figure.

Mr. Graydon: I congratulate the minister on at least having some principle and some mathematical calculation for this amount, which has been lacking in other instances.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I wonder if the minister could say anything in the most general way as to how the work is going to be done. What is the plan? How will this money be handled? He has explained the basis for the amount; perhaps he can tell us something about the way the undertaking will be proceeded with.

Mr. Pearson: It is very difficult to answer that question at the present time. The director himself has just returned from Korea. He had long talks with the commander in Tokyo and with the commanders in the field, trying to work out an organization by which these relief supplies could be distributed. At the present time, with military operations going on, it will probably have to be brought under the supervision of the military in the field, but it is hoped that conditions will soon become stable enough so that the administration of relief may be turned over to this civilian agency and removed, to some extent at least, from military control. The position in that regard is not unlike what it was after the war in Europe, when the first stage of relief was handled by the soldiers in the field as military relief until UNRRA came in as a civilian organization. It is hoped that this will be done in Korea, but for obvious reasons these plans are still in a very formative stage.

Mr. Graydon: Will this relief and rehabilitation apply only to the portion of Korea south of the 38th parallel?

Mr. Pearson: No, it will apply to all that part of Korea which is under United Nations and republican Korean control. At present, of course, that does not include any territory north of the 38th parallel.

Mr. Noseworthy: Can the minister give us any information regarding what relief is now being given in Korea? A great deal of relief work is being carried on in Korea at the present time, and I wonder if the minister could tell us about it.

Mr. Pearson: There is a very great deal of relief work being carried on for several hundred thousands of these people. That is being done by the military authorities as part of military relief. It is also true, I think, that there have been some voluntary contributions to Korea, and that the Red Cross is helping out there under arrangements with the unified command. So far the relief has been largely military, however.

Mr. Graydon: From time to time we have seen in the newspapers reports of the movement by the military of certain civilian refugees from Korea to some adjoining islands. Could the minister give any indication of how many people have been taken off the mainland and what provision is being made for them at other places?

Mr. Pearson: I am afraid I have not all those details at my command. I do know some thousands have been taken to islands not far from Korea and looked after there in relief establishments. There again, those establishments have been kept up by the military authorities at their expense, and by and large that means at the expense of the United States. So far relief has been almost entirely military, and it has covered many thousands of Korean refugees, some of whom are in these island camps.

Mr. Graydon: In the discussions at the United Nations did the Soviets, either for themselves or speaking on behalf of red China, refuse to accept any responsibility for the damage that had been done?

Mr. Pearson: Yes. The U.S.S.R. and the satellite states were invited to appear before this committee which was arranging for relief contributions and give some assurance that they would participate in this work. Naturally they refused to take any part in it. That is what one might have expected. They disclaimed all responsibility for this work because, again as one might have expected, they claimed it was due to the aggressive policies of the United States and other countries that this relief was necessary. Therefore, in their estimation, that relieved them of responsibility.

Mr. Pouliot: I do not want to be considered heartless, but my impression of the whole thing is that the population of Korea has been bombed, revived, bombed again, and revived again. How long are we to continue that?

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): The minister has made it clear that at the moment, naturally I think, relief is being directed to the first and obvious necessity of keeping people alive. Is it possible now to say how far the objectives of relief go? For example, what measure of reconstruction of physical damage would it cover?

Mr. Pearson: Any rehabilitation or reconstruction which is incidental to military operation no doubt will be carried on by the military. It is hoped that this United Nations agency will have responsibility not only for relief but for civilian rehabilitation and reconstruction afterwards, but of course that will depend upon the resources made available to the agency. At the present time they are seeking only $250 million. That may seem a large amount of money, but it is not large in terms of the needs of the people of Korea, and I doubt very much if any great portion of that will be available for anything but immediate needs.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

Annuities Act—

594. Notwithstanding the Government Annuities Act, to authorize the Minister of Labour in consequence of the transfer of employees from the original employers to the new employers specified in the details of the estimates to enter into contracts with the original employers and the new employers, to provide that the new employers shall, effective on the dates respectively specified in the details become parties to group annuity contracts specified in the said details respectively in the place of the original employers with respect to employees to whom those contracts applied and who were transferred to the new employers and for the application of the contracts in respect of service with the original employers and the new employers and for such other terms as the minister deems necessary for the maintenance and continuity of pension rights of the employees under those contracts, and to provide for payments in the current and subsequent fiscal years in accordance with the contracts so entered into out of the government annuities account, $1.

Mr. Fulton: This is another dollar item, one of those referred to in the public accounts committee as having a legislative effect. We have not had time to study the details, so would the minister give us some information in connection with this item?

Mr. Gregg: Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this item 594 is to provide authority to effect the transfer of certain group annuity contracts to successor employers when a change of ownership has occurred, so that the pension rights of the employees under the group contract of such employers will not be affected. In the back of the book there is a list of such employers who, in many cases, have just changed their name. Legally that is interpreted as another corporate entity, and consequently it would be impossible to pay the pensions unless some such item as this were approved or unless an amendment were made to the act. This will be looked into when the act is again opened up.

Mr. Pouliot: Just before the item is carried, may I say that I regret that government annuities are not more publicized because they are the best system of saving something for old age. I hope the minister will see to it that in due course government annuities receive greater publicity than ever so that people will know the advantages of that scheme.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask the Minister of Labour to take into consideration a suggestion made three or four years ago in connection with the annuities act? Apparently it was given some consideration at that time, and it was that the annuities act be referred to a special committee for study. There is an exchange of questions and answers between the former minister of labour and myself which I shall not bother to recall in detail at this time. At any rate, that idea, though it was considered, was never carried out. If the minister does not give me a direct answer now, will he consider the idea of having this act referred to a committee for study to see if there are not ways in which its benefits might be improved, and its publicity widened, as has just been suggested by the member for Temiscouata?

Special—

595. To authorize and provide for federal contributions to reimburse the province of Quebec for one-half the expenditure for the reconstruction of buildings of technical and marine schools, Rimouski, Quebec, and one-half the cost of re-equipping the technical school and to authorize the Minister of Labour to enter into an agreement with the province of Quebec for such expenditures, $330,000.

Mr. Pouliot: Before this item is carried may I ask the minister if he would be kind enough to give me a list of the firms engaged in the construction work mentioned in this item, and the members of each of those building firms?

Mr. Gregg: Mr. Chairman, the question refers to the item covering 50 per cent of the cost of the schools at Rimouski. I am sorry that I have not the detailed information available that my hon. friend is requesting. Our negotiations in this matter have been entirely with the government of the province of Quebec. We have received a report by the Theriault-Laurent commission indicating the validity of this total amount, which I believe they said would total about $659,000. On the basis of our regular participation of 50 per cent with the province, this amount is included in the estimates. Later I shall attempt to get perhaps the information for my hon. friend, if it is obtainable.

Mr. Pouliot: Thank you.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): Are funds available to the other provinces on the same basis as this grant to the technical school at Rimouski?

Mr. Gregg: Well, funds have been available under the vocational training plan for some time. There is an item in the main estimates under that heading.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): This is not a special contribution of any kind?

Mr. Gregg: This is a very special one, yes.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): Will the minister go into a little more detail about it?

Mr. St. Laurent: Mr. Chairman, this item covers the cost of replacing two schools that had been in operation there for a number of years, and which were destroyed in the the conflagration that occurred at Rimouski last spring. Arrangements were made with the provincial government that there would be a contribution of 50 per cent towards the damages suffered by a number of individuals, and in addition to that the federal government and provincial government would contribute on a 50 per cent basis to the rebuilding of these two schools which had been erected originally as a consequence of joint contributions made by these two governments.

Mr. Brooks: Will the minister state whether there is any insurance on buildings of this kind held by the government?

Mr. St. Laurent: There was insurance, and it was applied to the rebuilding, but the insurance was quite insufficient. The cost of the equipment is much more than the amount of the insurance. Originally the equipment for the marine school had been provided from war assets out of the "innards" of one of the corvettes. The insurance was for a sum much below the market value of equipment of that character when new. It cost more than the amount that was provided by the insurance to instal the kind of equipment required for this training.

When this matter arose I was concerned. I had been down there at the time of the fire, and I knew something of the situation. When these accounts were submitted, I found that they were high, and though the commission originally did not have any jurisdiction in respect of government property or property that had been contributed to jointly by the two governments, we asked that the commission check all the items to make sure whether or not proper care had been taken in the restoring of the schools. As a matter of fact the people down there had gone ahead with the work, making their own arrangements. There was a corporation administering this marine school, and they had gone ahead on their own because they wanted it re-established as rapidly as possible. We had agreed that we would contribute 50 per cent of the cost of the contract provided it was let to the lowest tenderer. As a matter of fact, when that arrangement was made the thing was already more than two-thirds completed. In order to be sure that it had been carefully handled, we asked the commissioners to go down and inquire into the whole situation. Their report was that if we were going to do the work now, because of cost increases, it would cost even more; that they had salvaged everything that could be salvaged, and that the matter had been handled in a workmanlike manner by the corporation comprised of citizens of Rimouski. It is on the basis of the certificates given by the commission that the item was proposed in the estimates.

Mr. Brooks: The Prime Minister suggests that the original equipment for the school was obtained from a corvette and so obtained cheaply?

Mr. St. Laurent: Originally, yes.

Mr. Brooks: And for that reason he suggests the insurance on it was very low. Is that the principle on which they base their insurance when they equip other government buildings?

Mr. St. Laurent: This was insured in the name of the corporation that is made up of the citizens of Rimouski who had founded this thing in a spirit of public service, and they had been supplied with the equipment for the training of sailors.

Mr. Brooks: It happens all over Canada.

Mr. St. Laurent: If I remember rightly they had insured for $75,000. That was the amount of insurance that they carried on the equipment. That was probably more than they had paid War Assets Corporation for the equipment, but it was not anything like the cost of new equipment today to replace it.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

The Deputy Chairman: The committee was considering item 595, in the Department of Labour. Shall the item carry?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, this is an item to authorize and provide for federal contributions to reimburse the province of Quebec for one-half the expenditure for the reconstruction of buildings of technical and marine schools at Rimouski, Quebec, and one-half the cost of re-equipping the technical school, and to authorize the Minister of Labour to enter into an agreement with the province of Quebec for such expenditures.

May I say first of all that this item has my hearty support. I presume these unfortunate people lost their schools through the fire, and they are now being helped by the federal government to restore those educational facilities. It is a worthy cause, and I hope the government has made the grant sufficiently large.

However while supporting this expenditure I would point out that this is a grant in aid to education in Quebec. It is a grant from the dominion government to a province, and earmarked as an expenditure for education. The last three words in the item, "for such expenditures", are reminiscent of the last few words of the resolution I moved on February 22 of this year. Those words were, "by the granting of financial assistance to the various provinces for that purpose." I see my genial friend, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, in his seat, and I would recall to his mind that it was on those words that he based his special and final argument.

Here is a dominion grant for an expenditure on education, such expenditure to be given to a province. We have every sympathy in the world for this town which suffered so disastrously from fire, and we are pleased to see that they are being given this assistance. However I would point out that while this is a special case—and this is what I rose to say—a district such as the town of Rimouski which was prosperous enough to afford that type of school on its own account, but which lost it through fire, is in no worse plight than many corresponding districts which have never been able to afford that type of school, simply because of a lack of ability to pay for it.

I hope the people of Quebec will not feel that this grant is interfering in any way with their autonomy in matters of provincial education, or that that autonomy has been violated by the giving of this grant, or that dominion-provincial relations will be impaired thereby. I presume this grant is being given without suggestion of any control whatsoever by the dominion government, except that it be spent for the purposes indicated in the vote. I am sure someone will disagree with me before long when I say that this is just another precedent in a long list of precedents of grants earmarked for purposes of education, and which have been granted by the federal government to a province.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): Mr. Chairman, all hon. members appreciate the full explanation given by the Prime Minister with respect to this grant. I am wondering however, as did the hon. member who has just taken his seat, if we are now setting a precedent, and whether we may look forward to its being extended over a wider area so that it will not be confined alone to the province of Quebec; or is it a precedent which in future the government may regret? If we are going to base our grants on needs and expectations—and I refer in passing to the $65 million grant

—there will be many municipalities in Canada that will be hoping to come under the same provision or to receive the same help from the federal treasury.

Some time ago I mentioned that the burden of taxation on real estate was becoming very heavy, and that I hoped the federal government would see its way clear to give grants in aid of education to a degree greater than has been done in the past. I have been wondering how many students were going to the school in question, and how great an area it serves.

Mr. Gregg: Mr. Chairman, I am not able to answer the last question, but I shall try to get the information for my hon. friend. Referring to the comment made by both hon. members, however, they both know that in their respective provinces, as in all provinces of Canada, a federal-provincial program has been under way in the field of vocational and technical training. This operates on a two-way basis: on the one hand by way of assistance in capital expenditures, which would correspond with the present instance—and consequently this does not set a new precedent—and, on the other hand, assistance to vocational training students.

When the main estimates are before the committee I shall be able to give a full report in this matter as it affects all provinces, and at that time I shall endeavour to have details with regard to this particular school.

Mr. St. Laurent: Mr. Chairman, I have a figure here which indicates that 342 students had been enrolled up to October. I understand that a considerable number have been refused because they were being housed in what formerly had been a shed, and such facilities could not be made sufficient to care for any more than the 342.

This happened to be a school; but it was a part of the aid extended in the province of Quebec because of the disaster that had occurred. That aid was extended, not particularly in respect of schools, but as a part of the general aid extended following the precedent that had been established in connection with the Fraser valley floods, and then the Red river floods, as a consequence of a disaster that, rightly or wrongly, was regarded as being too extensive to be left to the resources of the locality.

It happened to be a school; but it was because of the nature of the disaster—and in that respect I am sure the hon. member hopes, as I do, that it is a precedent of disaster that will not occur very often elsewhere.

Mr. Pouliot: I must thank the Prime Minister for what he has said. But I will say to the member for Middlesex East, who is a popular member in the house, that his remarks about Rimouski were most untimely. I am not the member from Rimouski, but I know the situation there, and I was greatly surprised that the hon. member for Middlesex East had no observation to make about an amount which is twice as large for the Palestine refugees. Over $7,250,000 was voted for Korea, but here is an amount of only $330,000 which is to equal the amount being spent by the province of Quebec. Yet questions are being asked about it. I notice the hon. member for Peel was in favour of the money being spent for Korea, but my friend complains about this grant for Rimouski. I hope in future he will be more judicious about his parliamentary intervention.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): The hon. member for Temiscouata seems a little touchy on this subject.

Mr. Pouliot: Yes, I am.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): I was seeking information; I was not complaining.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, I am sure that all members of the committee will approve wholeheartedly of this appropriation and its purpose. As the Minister of Labour has said, aid for technical education by the federal government is nothing new. We have been giving such aid for many years. If the federal government can constitutionally make grants in aid of technical education, they can make grants in aid of any kind of education. All this argument about the federal government not being able to do it because of the constitution is just so much nonsense. It is just merely something that is said because there is no will to do it.

The Prime Minister is usually quite logical and clear on nearly all matters that he discusses in this house, and he stated that this grant was made because of the fire last summer in Rimouski. If a disaster of that kind is sufficient basis for a grant of this kind I think teachers and those who have to do with education throughout the provinces would be able to tell the Prime Minister that there is a condition existing that amounts to disaster in the failure of the provinces to provide all the education required to equalize educational opportunity among the people of the provinces. There is an urgent situation there which makes nonsense of the government's argument that nothing can be done because education is a matter that is under the control of the provinces. Where there is a will there is a way, as this item so well demonstrates.

Item agreed to.

B—Unemployment Insurance Act, 1940—

596. Government's contribution to the unemployment insurance fund—further amount required, $3,350,000.

Mr. MacDougall: Mr. Chairman, this is the second attempt today I have made to speak about a matter which I think is of extreme importance to all members of this house. I shall start off by complimenting the government, and particularly the Minister of Labour, upon the work they are doing with respect to the screening of the film "Date of Birth." The pamphlet which has gone out with respect to that film I believe has done a tremendous amount of good for a great number of people in Canada. It is of that particular group that this film was designed to assist that I wish to speak tonight.

There has been a tendency to refer to men and women in industry and unfortunately in the civil service as being too old at forty-five years. I think that argument is completely and utterly erroneous and in order to indicate what happens when we consider a cross-section of Canada, I have tabulated, not to the nth degree, what would happen to the membership of this House of Commons if everyone over forty-five years was ruled out of court. It was rather startling to me when I went through the red bible of the parliamentarians to find that if we removed those who are forty-five years or over from the house with a membership of 262, we would have only 66 members, and among those would be just two cabinet ministers. It might be that such a housecleaning would expedite the business of the house, but I rather doubt it. If the numerical strength of the house were decreased, the quality generally of the house would be decreased.

I give those figures simply to illustrate the over-all picture in the Dominion of Canada. I intend to deal only with the age group of 45 to 69. I find that there are 1,431,000 males in that group and 1,312,000 females, or a total of 2,743,000, or roughly 20 per cent of our total population. I have taken those figures from the Canada Year Book of 1950 and they are applicable to the end of 1948.

Coming now to what the Department of Labour is endeavouring to do with respect to this age group, I commend for hon. members' consideration a pamphlet which has been put out by the Department of Labour over the signature of the deputy minister entitled, "A progress report on 'Date of Birth' ". In that pamphlet we find some helpful information. It brings us up to January 15, and on page two there are certain comments which I should like to draw to the attention of the committee as follows:

The film was designed to bring to the attention of the Canadian public, and community and national leaders in particular, the problem of the older worker in obtaining employment with a view to expanding employment opportunities for these workers.

We find that this film has been shown in Canada 751 times, and that it had a total audience of approximately 58,000. Here are some of the comments after the film had been seen by various executives and businessmen across the length and breadth of our land. On the same page paragraph (b) reads:

In an Alberta city the personnel manager of a large department store telephoned the local office to state that as a direct result of seeing the film this firm was placing an order for five older people to train as sales clerks.

Paragraph (c) reads:

. . . the sales manager of a large firm reported he was hiring thirty salesmen in western Canada. After seeing the film he decided to insert in his advertisement "that age is no barrier." This advertisement was to appear in all western newspapers.

Paragraph (d) on the same page reads:

After a showing of the film to the personnel managers' association the personnel director of one department store reported that he had revised the age radius in several occupations in their store to include workers from forty-five upwards in their hiring program.

On page 4 we also find some very revealing information. Toward the bottom of the page, with reference to the Ontario region there is the following:

I unhesitatingly believe that this film has done an outstanding job in placing before the proper persons the problem of the older worker with a lasting effect, and in many cases direct results.

There have been beneficial and practical results. In addition there is the following:

For example, there is no doubt that the twenty-eight showings of the film in the Toronto area have developed an impetus in opportunities for senior citizens. Many individual orders have resulted from this publicity. As a result of one showing six orders were received in the local office for older workers.

I think that this is one of the very important bits of work that the present government is carrying on to a degree of great fruition. We are short of many skilled labourers in the Dominion of Canada. We also have many semi-retired people who actually are not desirous of attaining full retirement and have not at the present time a sufficient bank roll to maintain themselves. They have a great desire to work if and when work is provided for them to do. Many authorities have been quoted in this house, all of whom I presume are in the nature of things much greater authorities than I, but I should like to quote what I stated with respect to this problem on a radio broadcast to the Vancouver area on March 6. At that time I said:

> It seems to me there is one particular class in the Canadian community that must now be afforded some additional protection against the high cost of living. That is the great community of people across Canada who are on fixed incomes. It matters not whether those fixed incomes are old age pensions, annuities, disability pensions, veterans allowances, or retired pensioners from industry and the civil service. It seems to me that these groups are the ones who should have greatest consideration immediately by measures which will alleviate their present situation. I think it is also fair to say that the time is now opportune for the government and parliament to consider the question of men and women who are considered too old at forty-five . . . I am sure we are all agreed that forty-five years of age does not mean that a man's or woman's capacity to produce is over, and with such a great amount of manpower being required in our defence efforts this is the logical time for parliament to consider giving a better deal than now exists for those in this age category.

There are revealing figures in the Canada Year Book with respect to this problem. I think it was Horace Greeley who at one time said: Go west, young man, and grow up with the country. I might reiterate that when you look over the list of figures compiled in the Canada Year Book you find that there is a surplus of men in Canada in all age categories from forty-five up to seventy-five. But apparently when one reaches the three-quarter century mark in one's travails through this mundane sphere the old man of the family sloughs off through hard work in order that his wife may have some of the better things of life to think about after he has gone.

At seventy-five we see there is a complete balance of 85,000 males and 85,000 females. The ratio from then on up to 90 plus is all in favour of the widow or spinster. I am informed that there is a great plethora of females in the city of Ottawa, and so I say that what the girls should do is go west and grow up with the country. In the riding of Cariboo in the northern part of British Columbia—my hon. friend behind me nods his head—it has practically become a matter of notable history in Prince George that no girls who go into that country as nurses and school teachers have ever lasted in single blessedness for more than eighteen months.

To me there is a great urgency with respect to this problem. This afternoon one hon. member raised the point about securing a higher standard of living for our civil servants. I am all for that but, Mr. Chairman and hon. members, I want to make a plea to you that we do something now, not next year or the year after, for men and women who are forty-five and cannot get into the civil service. It seems to me a great many of those people are living on fixed incomes on a pension basis which have long since lost their purchasing power in the markets of this country. So I am very much in sympathy with doing something now to better the living conditions of those men and women on fixed incomes. As I have stated, only 66 persons in this house are under the age of 45, so I think it must be recognized that people over that age make a tremendous contribution to the biggest business in Canada, the business of governing the country. On the same basis, Mr. Chairman, I say those people have a great contribution to make whether within or without the civil service, provided the government will give them the opportunity to do so.

In thinking of this great question I tried to find out something about a gentleman who a few years ago started a business in one of the larger metropolitan centres of Canada. This man was disabled in the first war. When the second war broke out things were not too good, and he determined to start a business where the first consideration in hiring personnel would be that men or women should be selected who were 45 or over, either fit or suffering some disability from one cause or another. He found by actual comparison with conditions in a similar industry in another city that he was getting much less absenteeism from those employees of mature age who were to some extent physically handicapped. He also found that while a group of younger personnel might do a certain task quicker, over the long haul the older workers, men or women, disabled or otherwise, gave more continuous, active and efficient service.

Having that in mind I think we as members of parliament should give all possible assistance to the work outlined in this pamphlet, "Date of Birth", because this is the sort of liaison between employer and employee that industry throughout Canada needs today more than ever before, when in many categories of labour we are actually scraping the bottom of the barrel. Surely working together we can evolve some scheme to assist these people who will find themselves in dire straits unless they are able to secure employment.

I appreciate that people over this age have not been able to get into the civil service because of pension qualifications. Well, we have some excellent actuaries employed by the government, and I believe a way could be found to open the door to employment in the civil service for these people of 45 or over, who are so much steadier than people of 25. Surely we can find a way of making their employment possible, just as the provincial government took steps to aid in the employment of disabled persons who returned from overseas after the last war. Arrangements were made in factories under provincial supervision whereby certain percentages of their time off through illness or accident were paid for by the employers as well as by the employees under the Workmen's Compensation Act.

I believe we should give this matter very serious and earnest consideration, because in this category of men and women across Canada I think we have a most stable influence in our whole national economy. It is not good enough for any government at any level to say these people on meagre pensions, regardless of the source of those pensions, have contributed to what they are now receiving and it is simply unfortunate that the purchasing power of the dollar now is not what it was when they were pensioned off. I join heartily in what was said today by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre about those in the civil service, only in reverse. I am expressing the same sentiments, I trust, when I say I am for those who are outside the civil service. I am anxious that they should get consideration equal to that given those in the service, and I believe a way can be found to do that.

I am going to conclude by suggesting to the government with all the force at my command that we come to grips with this problem, not next year or the year after but now. We should avail ourselves of the services of this group of men and women who do not desire charity but who are determined now as always to make their own way in life. Their only desire is to be of service to Canada, either their native or their adopted land. So, sir, in all sincerity I ask the most serious consideration of this problem by the government, so that before many days or weeks, we may come up with an answer that will give us individually and collectively a great lift because we will have done something for Canada. If it is good for Canada it is good for them and good for us. Vive le Canada! God save the King!

Mr. Carroll: I agree with the hon. member who has just taken his seat, that this age limit that is placed against people forty-five years of age and over by both the civil service and industry of this country should not exist. As the hon. gentleman has pointed out, the reason industries say they cannot take these people into service is that they cannot make their pension plans actuarily sound. It is not on this particular matter that I wanted to say a few words this evening. We have a very serious situation in the coal mining town of Inverness. The principal coal operation there is carried on by the government of Nova Scotia. It has been losing between $350,000 and $400,000 a year. Today there is a motion before the provincial legislature to have the government close down this mine. I may say that the members who are proposing it are not Conservative or C.C.F., but are supporters of the Liberal government of Nova Scotia.

Strange to say the man who is doing most of the objecting to the continuance of this operation comes to Ottawa about four or five times a year in order to get $125,000 to help a concern in the northern part of Cape Breton county get their products to market by giving them deeper dredging. I have supported that, too, but it does seem to me to be a dangerous precedent for the gentleman from Halifax who has made this motion. However, that is by the way.

I am in hopes, Mr. Chairman, that this mine will not be closed down this year. I should like to bring to the attention of the Department of Labour the fact that if this mine is closed down all those miners who are over forty-five years of age and out of employment will find it difficult to get work. The chief employer of miners in that area is the Dominion Coal Company and, rightly or wrongly, they do not employ people who are over forty-five years of age. There are a few other small coal operations around Inverness county, but they are well manned now. I am fearful of what is going to happen to those miners, roughly between 300 and 400, and their families if this mine should be closed this year or in the near future.

I am bringing this to the attention of the Minister of Labour in the hope that something can be done to assist those coal miners by way of unemployment insurance if this disaster should come about. Last year something very helpful to many people in my constituency was done, and that was the supplementary aid in connection with unemployment insurance. I know of eight or ten persons, not fishermen but people who were doing different work, who did not get the required number of days' works to qualify. The Department of Labour, through this unemployment insurance commission, did come to their aid when the matter was brought to their attention. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether it is possible to do something about a situation such as this, but I am bringing it to the attention of the minister because I am fearful of what will happen in that time.

Mr. Gregg: I want to express my gratitude to the member for Vancouver-Burrard for his encouraging words. I am sure that they will, in truth, be encouraging to the officials of the national employment service, who come under the Minister of Labour, and also those who are also working to assist in the employment of older veterans, who come under my colleague the Minister of Veterans Affairs. The hon. member has brought forward a very important question. It is true that the employers of labour are increasingly sympathetic and receptive to the idea of employing older people. Owing to the depression of the thirties, the gospel was then preached that we should get people out of employment somewhere around sixty to make jobs for those coming along. Now we should, from two points of view, reverse our steps. First, from the point of view that those who want to work should have an opportunity to work, and also because of the need for greater production.

The film to which the hon. member referred has been well accepted across the country. While my officials have co-operated in its preparation, the fulsome compliments I have to divert to the national film board under the direction of my seatmate the Minister of Resources and Development. To the imagination and ability of the people on the film board who are responsible for producing this film goes most of the credit.

In speaking of the older workers may I say that they have, in fact, been incapacitated for work because they have not been given the opportunity to get jobs. We are trying our best to overcome that. These people are thus associated with another group namely those who are incapacitated for work because of some physical disability, and the reluctance on the part of industry in offering them jobs as compared with fit men and women. As for the second group, I am hoping that before too long my colleagues the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Veterans Affairs will have an opportunity of telling the house some of the plans that were evolved during the federal-provincial conference at Toronto attended by the three of us early in February. At that time the important voluntary agencies, all provincial government departments affected, and all three federal government departments affected, were represented, and they worked out recommendations which I believe will be useful in helping to solve the problem of those incapacitated owing to physical defects. I can assure the member for Vancouver-Burrard that this whole problem is receiving the full consideration of the government, of my department, of the unemployment insurance commission and of the national employment service. These organizations are now actively engaged in efforts for the improvement of the lot of the older and incapacitated workers.

In so far as the request made by the member for Inverness-Richmond is concerned, I shall be glad to look into that situation and see what we can do.

Mr. Gillis: Mr. Chairman, I just have a few observations to make on this item. At this stage of the session when the supplementary estimates are before us, I know it is not the proper time to make an extended speech. I should like to support the statement made by the member for Inverness-Richmond. That particular town has taken a bad beating for the past twenty years. It is a mining operation that was destroyed by faulty development under free enterprise. When it was no longer profitable it was taken over by the provincial government, and has been operating for the last twenty years more or less as a relief project.

Like many other industries in our economy, it is necessary but not self-supporting. That industry has been subsidized and operated by the provincial government over the years because it provides the means of a livelihood in that particular area, and is necessary to the economy of a large section of Cape Breton Island.

I have commended the provincial government for doing it. They pay wage rates prevailing in the rest of the industry, but because of the shrinkage of that particular operation over the past couple of years men have been laid off periodically. They have no chance of employment elsewhere because, as the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond pointed out, they have reached the age when organizations like the Dominion Coal and Steel Company will not take them on, and they are permanently unemployed, despite the fact that they are still productive.

There is a threat of closing the mine; and, as the hon. member has suggested, it will throw out of employment perhaps 300 men who have families, and who have a stake in the community. A town has been built around that industry. There is a big investment there on the part of the community. There are schools and churches, and that has to be taken into consideration.

My main objective in rising was to ask the Minister of Labour whether any thought has been given to the possibility of extending the unemployment insurance benefits, I do not say right across the country, but in areas such as the one referred to, which is affected in the manner indicated. A man becoming unemployed in that particular area, with a family on his hands, is through. There is not much chance of his getting out, and most of them are over the employable age, because it is the national policy of every industry in Canada, and has been since 1945, not to employ a person over 40 years of age, and they are sticking to that policy.

With his officials the minister might consider the possibility of extending unemployment insurance in an area such as the one I describe until such time as more gainful employment can be found for these people either in that community or elsewhere, because if we can take 600 Germans to northern Ontario, pay transportation and train them in the metal industry of northern Ontario, then we certainly have a similar obligation to Canadian citizens who have been paying taxes over the years. That is not an unreasonable request. I would ask the minister to take a look at that particular subject.

My second point is this. Over the years there has been a demand to take in the fishing industry. There are hundreds of fishermen who are employed probably eight months or nine months of the year, but there is a period when they are out of employment. I do not think you would be adding any additional burden to the Unemployment Insurance Act if the fishing industry were taken in, because they are totally unemployed for only a couple of months of the year. The contribution you would get from that industry would offset any expenditures you may have to make during the seasons when certain types of fishermen are unemployed. I bring that again to the attention of the minister so that his actuaries may have a look at it and ascertain if it is not possible to bring them under the act. But I want him definitely to be able to make an answer to the house before it closes next June or July on this particular program of extending the benefits of unemployment insurance to areas such as Inverness, and to other places where unemployment is a permanent thing, where, because of the present industrial policy right across the country, people over 40 years of age are not going to be employed any more. They are too young for pensions. There is no picture into which they can fit.

Another thing I want to mention to the minister is this. Anyone who says that industry is co-operating a hundred per cent with the employment offices does not know very much about it because it is not. In practically every industry that I know of employment offices have been set up. These industries have their own employment agents, and they by-pass completely the unemployment insurance offices which have a tabulation of all the unemployed in the area. Those offices know what these unemployed people are fitted for, how long they are unemployed and what their family obligations are, and the unemployment insurance offices are in a position to give proper direction in every community across this country to the employers, if the employers will make their needs known to them and take direction from the offices, instead of setting up their own employment offices. In that respect they are not co-operating. They by-pass them.

But more than that, contracts are let by the government in many communities across this country. They are federal contracts. When the contractor comes in, instead of going to the employment offices and getting his men through those offices, he will accept slips from people all over the community, from local politicians of all kinds. I have been on jobs, and I have seen the type of personnel that a contractor had to take because of that vicious patronage system. His work was hampered, he told me, because he did not get the right type of man. He knew that if he had the right to go to the employment office, and if the employment officer could direct personnel to him, he would have obtained the kind of people he wanted.

I said I was not going to take very long. I hope the minister will take a look at tonight's Hansard before the end of the session and see if he cannot correct these few sore spots in the act.

Mr. Pouliot: It is fortunate that the Minister of Labour follows the footsteps of his predecessor, the late Mr. Mitchell. He is sincere and friendly and that is why he so often meets with success.

Unemployment insurance is a big organization, and the personnel is working in a satisfactory manner. I have just a question to ask the minister. I am sure he is not in a position to answer now but I hope he will be kind enough to convey the information when he gets it. I should like to know the number of people who have received unemployment insurance during the last twelve months in each of the constituencies of the city of Winnipeg. How much was paid during that period for unemployment insurance in each constituency?

Item agreed to.

597. To reimburse the unemployment insurance fund under section 87F(1) of the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1940, as amended by statute of 1950, $1,780,000.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I notice that this item comes under section 87F (1) of the Unemployment Insurance Act. There were four new classes added by the amendment of last year. Has the minister figures to show how much is for each class? What I particularly rose for was to speak about the operation of the unemployment assistance that we had in Newfoundland in the winter of 1949-50. Through inexperience I suppose as much as inadvertence, several hundred, I believe indeed thousands, of persons were not considered eligible for this unemployment assistance. Mistakes were made by the officials handling unemployment insurance for the first time. I was speaking to the manager down there, Mr. O'Grady, of the case of several workers who had 85 days in instead of 90 days. He admitted to me that it was possible to work now the other five days, on this new arrangement. That was done in several of the cases of the workmen, but one of the minor officials said it could not be done in the other case. I wonder if the minister knows now about that position? My first question was with regard to the proportion of this money which will be spent on the different classes.

Mr. Gregg: I shall read the remarks of the hon. member for Cape Breton South as they appear in Hansard, and do what can be done.

The hon. member who has just taken his seat will recall that last year upon the amendment made to the Unemployment Insurance Act the supplementary payments were payable only from February 28 until April 15. Consequently it was quite a rush for the officials in all parts of Canada to get the new changes into the picture. I would imagine there may have been cases where some who felt they were entitled to supplementary benefits did not get them because of a lack of a clear understanding of the regulations. I have in my hand a document which shows that the amount of supplementary benefits paid in Newfoundland during that short period was $3,955.90. This amount was expended in the last fiscal year, and this item in the estimates is to reimburse the fund to the extent of $1,780,000.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

National health branch—Health services—

604. Food and drugs, further amount required, $10,000.

Mr. Pouliot: I was under the impression that the Food and Drugs Act was still under the Department of National Revenue. Apparently however it has been transferred to the Department of National Health and Welfare.

There are three kinds of gin: there is gin; there is compound gin, and there is blended gin. I would ask the minister for the formula for each kind of gin.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): May we have these two items in the department stand; the minister is not here. I suggest that we take item 577, in the Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

Mr. Pouliot: I would like to have a description of each of those gins. It may be printed; it may be publicized—I do not know. However I do not want the item to stand, because I am sure the minister would be willing to give the information tomorrow.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Carried.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall item 604 carry?

Mr. Knowles: Some of us have questions we would like to ask the minister.

The Deputy Chairman: Then items 604 and 605 will stand.

Item stands.

DEPARTMENT OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

Immigration branch—

577. To provide for payments to Trans-Canada Airlines of the difference in cost between air transportation and minimum tourist class ocean transportation for immigrants transported from the United Kingdom by Trans-Canada Airlines during the period of November 29, 1950, to March 31, 1951, $380,000.

Mr. Lennard: May we have an explanation?

Mr. Coldwell: This is something that members of the house know very little about?

Mr. Lennard: That is why I wish to have an explanation.

Mr. Coldwell: Could the minister give us a brief explanation of what this means, what is being done, and how the money is being spent?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Chairman, in order to speed the movement of immigrants to Canada it was decided at December 1 that T.C.A. might be used to some extent. The plan evolved was that any immigrant starting from the United Kingdom, though not necessarily a person resident in the United Kingdom, might come by T.C.A., upon the payment of $160, which is the tourist passage by steamship, and that the remaining portion of the normal passage cost on T.C.A. would be met by the government. That works out to $215.50. There will be something like 1,750 of these persons between the period December 1 and March 31, at the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. Coldwell: Are those specially selected people? Are they technicians or specialists of any kind?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): We try to give priority to them. But a good deal of it depends upon the desire of the immigrant to come by that particular form of transportation.

Mr. Lennard: How does the minister arrive at this amount?

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): The minister has explained with regard to the difference between the $160 and the T.C.A. fare paid under this item. I do not think he told us however who pays the $160.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): The immigrant pays the $160.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Would the minister take us into his confidence and tell us more about the plan? What happens to the people when they get the fare? Do they have to have a certain minimum of money when they arrive? There are several things of which I am ignorant and which it seems to me would be of interest to hon. members—unless, of course, others are better informed than I am. If not perhaps the minister would give some further information.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): There is nothing unusual about this. It applies to any immigrant who can meet our requirements otherwise. I could discuss the requirements in connection with immigration when we are discussing other items, quite as well as in connection with this one. There are absolutely no strings attached, except that one who wishes to come by T.C.A. has to pay the $160. And of course such persons must have met all the other requirements of our immigration program.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Is this the appropriate place to ask what arrangements if any there are for his housing when he arrives, and for his employment? If the minister would prefer to discuss the matter at some other time, I do not mind. However, it is a question which it seems to me is relevant.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Those matters are relevant to all problems of immigration, of course. But anyone from the United Kingdom is entitled to come to Canada, if such person has met the health requirements and has some means whereby he will not be a public charge. He does not necessarily have to have assured employment, although in most cases he should have a sponsor for that purpose. I venture to say that ninety-nine per cent of these people are either persons coming to assured employment, or the dependents of persons already here.

Mr. Fulton: How many did the minister say he anticipates will be here by March 31?

[Mr. Coldwell.]

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): About 1,750, within a few one way or the other.

Mr. Fulton: I am not very good at arithmetic, but if one divides this $380,000 by $115, the amount the minister said the department had put up—

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): It is $215.50.

Mr. Fulton: Oh, I did not hear the figure.

Mr. Fraser: Are these all from the United Kingdom?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): No. It applies to anyone who is in the United Kingdom and who wishes to come forward by this means.

Mr. Fraser: They must come to the United Kingdom first?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Yes.

Mr. Pouliot: Mr. Chairman, the real crux of the problem of immigration has not been touched by hon. members who have asked these questions. The real crux of the problem is this: Do we need immigrants?

An hon. Member: Yes.

Mr. Pouliot: One hon. member says yes.

Mr. Lennard: I say yes, too.

Mr. Pouliot: It is a matter of opinion. When I went to London some years ago I met a gentleman who told be that Duchess So and So desired to see me. I was greatly impressed because that was the first time that such a thing had happened to me. I went to pay my respects to the beautiful duchess and she told me she had been in Canada and had found it a beautiful country, but there were not enough people there. I told her that if she decided to come to Canada again she would be one more charming person in our country. She smiled graciously.

Then I went back to where I was staying and another gentleman came to see me and told me another lady would like to see me. I told him I was pleased but I had just been to see a duchess and did not want to see anyone else. He told me that she was Marchioness So and So, and I told him I would go to see her. The marchioness asked me if I was a member of parliament and I told her I was. She told me that she thought Canada was a great country, that she understood its motto was, "From sea to sea," between two oceans. I told her in that way it was the same as England, only larger. She also thought that there was not enough population. She told me we needed more people in Canada.

That is the kind of propaganda that is used, flattery and fine words from attractive women. It did not go further. I am sure the hon.

member who suggested a minute ago that there should be more immigration has met many duchesses and marchionesses and countesses who think Canada is a great country but without enough people.

There are many unemployed in this country and I do not think they are all just day labourers. We are told that the immigrants who come here are technicians and specialists in trade and industry. If they are, well and good. But if they are coming here to take the place of Canadians in our hospitals or in our labour ranks, then I am opposed to it. I am making a clear distinction. There are some hon. members who are such imperialists that whenever a man or woman comes from any European country through Great Britain they consider it is something like the buildings that were marked with the blood of the lamb at the time of the Jews in the Old Testament—they are O.K., they have passed through the holy land of our time. That is not enough.

On the part of all men in the labour ranks who are not employed I protest against the bringing to Canada of anyone who is not a specialist in industry.

An hon. Member: From where?

Mr. Pouliot: Anyone from anywhere who is a specialist in industry. I am not anti-British, I am pro-Canadian. I want to make that clear because there are some people who do not seem to understand it. They are ready to swallow anything under a British label. We must be Canadians first. I know that many people are unemployed and what has been said tonight about unemployment insurance confirms that fact. We are having to pay unemployment insurance benefits to Canadians and yet the doors are wide open for people to come in from outside to enjoy these benefits at the expense of the Canadian taxpayers.

I am not against immigration, but as I said in Westminster hall in London, Canada is not to be a dumping ground for all the nations in the world. We have to look after our own people first. We have unemployment insurance and it must be available to those who have been here long enough to qualify them for the payment of taxation that is paid by other Canadians.

We should welcome specialists in industry from all countries of the world, but we should not have to receive migratory birds who will be just passers-by with an ultimate destination in the United States or some South American country. I am in favour of bona fide immigrants, but I am not in favour of the other type. I ask the minister how many immigrants have come here during the last twelve months to take the place of Canadians in hospitals?

How is it that no member of the opposition has given any information to the minister about the charges that have been laid against immigration officials in the old country or on the continent? Do they suffer from amnesia?

Mr. Fulton: The hon. member has been speaking most of the time.

Mr. Pouliot: The hon. member from Kamloops is like all the other Tories. They are all ready to swallow anything, to swallow immigrants from all parts of the world who come here to take the place of Canadians who are unemployed.

An hon. Member: Liberal policy.

Mr. Pouliot: Hon. members should remember that their leader hired planes to bring more Britishers to Ontario and I would refresh their memories in regard to that.

An hon. Member: Good immigrants.

An hon. Member: None better.

An hon. Member: Where would you get them?

Mr. Pouliot: Immigrants from Great Britain, immigrants from Europe or the continent, immigrants from the United States if they find Canada to be a better country, immigrants from anywhere provided they are willing to be Canadians, provided that they are fit, provided that they are self-supporting.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): We were all immigrants originally.

Mr. Pouliot: They may come from anywhere. I know people from the Nordic countries and central Europe who are excellent Canadian citizens. I know of people from the British isles who are good Canadians. As I said before in the house, some of them are better than people who were born here. That is not new. I said it before.

An hon. Member: Say it again.

Mr. Pouliot: If the hon. member does not remember what I said a minute ago he is too hard to teach and I shall not repeat it. We hear speeches about the fundamental freedoms and the rights of men but when anyone expresses his own opinion in the house in the defence of Canadians by birth, or Canadians by adoption, it is taboo. It should not be said. Well, no Tory or anybody else will prevent me from saying what I sincerely believe it my duty to say in the House of Commons.

Mr. Brooks: We like to hear you rant.

Mr. Pouliot: Thank you. My hon. friends know that I have no rancour but I want to warn the government against the intrusion into this country of many people who will be a burden for the taxpayers within a short time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pouliot: Now that my hon. friends agree with me I thank them, and I hope in the future they will always agree with me.

Mr. Noseworthy: Are any of these fares recoverable or are they entirely subsidized by the government?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): The $160 is paid by the immigrant. The $215 is paid by the government and is not recoverable.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, the committee has been given some information as to what seem to me to be the bare essentials that go into the making up of this item. Certain questions have been asked by the hon. member for Temiscouata concerning which I think the committee is entitled to an answer. I think there are answers to some of the questions he has asked, and it seems to me it is the duty of the minister to provide them.

I should like to make one or two observations about the item. As we have been told by the minister, it provides for assistance of this particular kind to immigrants during the four-month period commencing December 1 and ending on the 31st of this month. It is anticipated there will be approximately 1,700 to 1,750 immigrants who will be taking advantage of this subsidy towards the expense of their air transport.

We should be told how this fits into some scheme. This is more than a four-month scheme. When it was announced in December I think the country was given to understand this was the beginning of a scheme that was to be continuous. It seems to me that the committee has not yet been given information on some essential aspects of this matter. It is obvious that the 1,700 people are merely a fraction of those who will be coming to our shores as immigrants during this four-month period. One must naturally ask, how is it that certain immigrants are selected to have the benefit of this subsidy, some small fraction out of the total? What is the basis of selection? Is it simply those who wish to come by air, or is it rather those who have special aptitudes or skills that are in urgent demand in this country at the present time?

We have been given no information on that subject, and it seems to me it is highly essential information that the committee ought to have. If there are intending immigrants who have skills that are in urgent demand in this country at the present time, is 1,700 the total of such or is 1,700 the total for whom in this four-month period transportation space is available? What is it that determines the number, 1,700 or 1,750 in the four-month period? How then does this plan relate to plans for the coming year? Surely there is something much more in the minds of the government than simply a limited appropriation now to meet the needs of a limited number of immigrants for a limited period. Surely we should have a more comprehensive statement from the government. We sit here and have to prod and needle all the time to get little tidbits of information. It seems to me it is high time the government came out in the open and made a comprehensive statement on the subject.

That leads me to make an observation concerning the questions put to the minister by the hon. member for Temiscouata. One does not have to share all the views expressed by the hon. member for Temiscouata to appreciate the force of some of the questions he has asked. I am quite sure the minister has the answers to some of the questions put by the hon. member for Temiscouata. I am another member of this house who would like to hear a statement from the minister as to the number of immigrants who have become charges, who have been found later to have health defects that were not discerned at the time of entry, and how many of them have become charges on the unemployment insurance fund.

Let us have the information in order that we may determine whether the hon. member for Temiscouata is drawing sound or unsound inferences. I think the minister has the answers to these questions, and I urge him to give them to the house so that there may be some serious attempt to set at rest a lot of these questions that are raised from time to time as they have been tonight.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Chairman, I do not have at this moment any figures to indicate that any persons in hospitals have been displaced by immigrants. There may be some. If there are complaints of that kind of course we will look into them. We do have these complaints made regularly. We investigate them, and we do not say that there is not an immigrant hired in the place of someone but in many cases it is found that the inference to be drawn from that very thing is not that the immigrant has displaced the person who has lost his employment. I did not think that the house would want to engage in a long discussion of immigration. We have provision made in the main estimates for a continuation of this policy. I thought that when the main estimates came before the house we could have an extended debate on the whole policy of immigration, and the experience that has been built up in the past year. I think we could then debate it under circumstances that would be more conducive to coming to good conclusions than on the supplementary estimates of two or three items which are the result of a new policy devised since the house last met, and for which money is being voted for the limited period covered by the supplementaries.

Mr. Fleming: I do not wish to be querulous with reference to the statement of the minister, but I do say that the committee has not been given the information at the present time that it ought to have. After all we are not suggesting—

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): What do you want?

Mr. Fleming: —an extended debate on the question of immigration policy. We are asking for essential information with respect to the plan for which an appropriation is to be provided for a four-month period. I have asked certain questions and the minister has given no information with regard to them. Has the minister nothing to say about this particular plan? I was not suggesting that we enter into a debate on the whole policy of immigration. I think, however, that a house that is being called upon now to vote $380,000, a tidy sum, for a four-month period for a particular plan is entitled to a good deal of information. Therefore I come back to the questions which I asked before and which were in the main unanswered.

How does this tie in with the plan? What is it that has established the figure of 1,700 or 1,750? Is it a limitation of the number of those who are applying for emigration from the United Kingdom and who have aptitudes and skills that are in urgent demand in this country at the present time? Is it a limitation on air transport facilities? What is it that has fixed this number? Let us have some information about it.

May I ask the minister also to be a little more explicit in dealing with the questions thrown about by the hon. member for Temiscouata, who seemed to be throwing them at the opposition benches instead of in the proper direction, namely, at the minister. Why should the opposition be expected to answer for the shortcomings—and goodness knows they are plenty—of the immigration policy of the government? I suggest to the hon. member for Temiscouata that this is an example of the error into which habit can lead even an earnest member of the house. When you get into the habit of railing at those who happen to be sitting on the opposition benches, you are led into the habit of directing to the opposition benches questions concerning government policy and the elaboration of government immigration plans for which we modestly profess our inability to answer for the government. But I do think the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration owes it to all members of this house, not only the hon. member for Temiscouata but all those of us who have been asked by the hon. member to provide him with answers, to provide the information and answer the questions.

Mr. Pouliot: I want to correct what has been said for the hon. member for Eglinton. I never asked the opposition to give me any information about the immigration policy of the government. All I said was that they were completely silent on what I considered the essential matter in the immigration policy. I did not blame them for not answering me. I said I was very much surprised that they had not asked those questions on the basis of the immigration policy; that is all. Now I will excuse myself for having intervened at this point, because I see the minister is very anxious to answer the questions that have been put to him by myself and rebroadcast by the hon. member for Eglinton.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): I should like to say a few words on this very important matter, and at the outset of my remarks I think I can say I concur to a certain extent in the words that have been uttered by the hon. member for Temiscouata. As he is against immigration unlimited, so I always will be opposed to immigration unlimited. I do not say that the plan mentioned by the minister is what we may call immigration unlimited; but while I am not qualified to give the minister advice or warnings or anything like that, I can utter what is in mind on this special question, as I have always desired to do every time it has come before the house.

I should like to know, of those who have been coming and those who are to come under this special arrangement how many technicians there were or will be, how many day labourers, how many farmers and so on. That would be very interesting to know, because as everyone is aware the percentage of population as between the cities and rural districts of Canada is increasing every day in favour of the cities. That situation should not exist, and certainly it should not be allowed to increase. Then I should like the minister to say whether under this scheme the screening of these immigrants will be as severe as the screening I called for the last time I took the floor on our immigration policy.

The hon. member for Temiscouata says no one has ever touched the main point of the immigration policy. There was an immigration policy which I believe is still the policy of the present minister; that is, that Canada must not receive more immigrants than she can absorb. This is the main point to be made on this question of immigration. If Canada cannot absorb more than let us say 75,000 or 100,000 a year, we should not bring in more than that number. There is one feature of this scheme I do not like very much, because I am afraid it might develop into some kind of a trade. I believe the minister stated that these immigrants will leave the United Kingdom by plane. That is O.K., but let us say a few thousand come from other countries on the continent. They cross to the United Kingdom to comply with this scheme. It could develop into some kind of a trade, which would not be desirable because it would make the screening that much harder.

I believe we cannot talk too often and too firmly on this question of the screening of immigrants, not only in relation to physical health but in relation to mental health, intellectual and moral health, and political health. I believe those requirements are not too hard to comply with, but in any case I feel they are absolutely necessary especially in this period in which we are living. I have great confidence in the minister. Last year he told me the screening was to be very severe, and I hope he will not forget that this screening should cover the various issues I have mentioned, especially moral and political health.

Sometimes, even in the rural districts, we hear criticism which appears to be well founded. Some say these immigrants, not all but a few or perhaps many, come here with the assurance that they will have jobs. They even leave the United Kingdom or some other country of Europe with the assurance that their jobs are here waiting for them. That is a criticism we hear very often. Another is that we have a very real problem of housing in this country. I have been told by people in Montreal that some immigrants even have houses ready for them here. I was told of two instances in which friends of mine wanted to buy houses built under a certain housing scheme, only to be told that those houses were being kept, or had even been sold to some company, for the use of immigrants. That is another criticism I should like the minister to deal with, if not on this item then on the general item in the estimates having to do with immigration.

[Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf).]

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): As I said a moment ago, I would be pleased to do that. I think we could debate immigration policy much better on the main estimates than on this item; but with respect to the questions asked by the hon. member for Eglinton, as I understand it he wants to know why this was done, why it is apparently limited to 1,750, and the basis of selection of those 1,750.

It was done because one of the problems we had to face in immigration was the lack of transportation. T.C.A. is flying certain regular flights from the United Kingdom here. It seemed logical, if there was space on T.C.A., that we should take advantage of that space. The numbers who are coming forward are the numbers that can be provided with transportation on the regular flights for immigrants in seats that are not taken up by other types of passengers.

As a matter of interest, the plan was announced on December 1, and because it took some time for arrangements to be made, and because of the Christmas season, there were not many who wished to come forward at that time. There were 79 in December; in January 461; in February 577, and the first two days of March, 48, making a total of 1,165. We have estimated that there will be 1,750 by the end of March. As I said before, there is an item in the main estimates continuing this plan. We believe that as long as there is available space we could use it in this operation. Have I covered all the questions?

Mr. Fleming: Would the minister just confirm one inference I have drawn from his remarks? That figure has been arrived at because of the limitation on space available by T.C.A.; that has been the factor that has established the number?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): On the regular flights, yes.

Mr. Fleming: Then, within the ceiling established by the limitation of space on regular flights on T.C.A., what has been the basis of selection of the 1,700 from what must have been a larger number of applicants?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): There has not been such a large number of applicants for passage by T.C.A. under this plan. We have about 1,000 now booked for the period after March 31. T.C.A. has been accepting applications from individuals who wanted to come forward under this plan. T.C.A. has within itself the means of booking the passage. We do not make a selection unless there is a particular demand for a particular person.

Mr. Fleming: It comes down to this, then, that up to the present time the entire number of applicants has been contained within the limitation of space available on T.C.A., and there has been no selection?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): And the numbers who indicated a desire to come in the summer months rather than in the winter months. As I say, we have bookings after March 31 of persons who in January said they would like to come by air in May or April or some other month.

Mr. Fleming: Then what has been done to make the plan known in the United Kingdom or elsewhere where this type of immigrant has been invited?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Chairman, there was a poster issued immediately by T.C.A. Shortly after, in connection with another item we have here providing for assisted passage, we put out posters on a limited scale. I should say that the transportation agencies found it most convenient to advertise the schemes themselves, and there is ample publicity now in the United Kingdom and elsewhere for this plan.

Mr. Brooks: I quite agree with the member for Temiscouata that we should not dump a lot of people in this country unless they have employment. I take it that most of those people who are coming here have employment somewhere in Canada. Could the minister give by provinces the number of people who are coming in under this system?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Chairman, I want to make it clear that this is not a special scheme, but only provides additional transportation facilities for those seeking to come to Canada from Europe. The persons who come under this scheme are persons who are otherwise admissible and who would come by ordinary passage if it were not for this scheme.

Mr. Brooks: They would come in the regular quotas?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): We have no quotas against any particular country. We have certain qualifications which were mentioned by the member for Portneuf. I could give the house the statistics for last year's immigration, which would be a good guide to what we would logically expect this year, but perhaps I would do it at a later time. The figures show that roughly 60 to 65 per cent of the immigrants indicated a desire to go to Quebec and Ontario, and the remainder to the maritimes and the west.

Mr. Coldwell: Will some of this amount of $380,000 be repayable? What I have in mind is that I believe there are some assisted passages when an immigrant comes here for a special purpose, when the employer pays part of the $160 and the balance over a period of time. I was wondering if that is done by the Department of Immigration or is that a matter which is looked after by the Department of Labour? Does this item include any portion which is repayable?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): No, Mr. Chairman, no part of this is repayable. The assisted passage item appears under loans and investments at the end.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I still have the feeling which the member for Eglinton expressed that we are still not getting this story except in bits and pieces. The minister has said this is not a special scheme but is part of a larger undertaking. I believe that is what the member for Eglinton had in mind. The member for Temiscouata made a particular suggestion which, so far as I know, has not been answered. It came to me as a surprise, but he suggested that the whole thing was unsound because of a substantial amount of unemployment. I have not heard that answered. It came to me as a surprise, but perhaps the minister can answer it.

Another thing one hears is that private organizations have immigration plans and are making their own attempts to get people in substantial numbers. Are those in any way integrated with the larger plan? From before Christmas I carry in my mind that we heard a number, not 1,700 or 17,000, but many tens of thousands, perhaps over 100,000 immigrants for this year. I cannot see why this is not the natural time for us to get a somewhat comprehensive outline as to what the plan is. It may be many weeks before we are on the main estimates concerning immigration, and surely plans must exist. Why is this not the natural time for us to hear about them? For some reason the minister does not want to give them out.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Chairman, there is a later item for the assisted passage scheme, and I am sure that is what my hon. friend has in mind. If the committee reaches that item I shall go into detail on it, but I can only repeat what I said a minute ago that this is merely one method of providing transportation which is vitally needed because there is a scarcity of transportation for immigrants coming to Canada.

Mr. Noseworthy: The minister states that anyone who desires can come by air. I think that is what he said. Who determines whether an immigrant from the British isles comes by air or by boat? Is it entirely up to the immigrant?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): It is entirely up to the immigrant.

Mr. Noseworthy: Then, Mr. Chairman, are we bringing any immigrants from European countries by air?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): T.C.A. only operates as far as the United Kingdom. If people come to the United Kingdom they can then use this plan if they can make arrangements with T.C.A.

Mr. Coldwell: When the service is established to Paris, will Paris be a place of embarkation?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): That is a matter of government policy and the decision will be announced in due course.

Mr. Fraser: The minister said an immigrant can apply to T.C.A. I have cases of people in my riding who have sent transportation, or arranged for transportation with the Trans-Canada Air Lines, to bring immigrants from the United Kingdom to my riding. These people have had to pay the full fare. It happened within the last month or so. Has any arrangement been made to reimburse these people? The immigrants are coming here definitely to do a job as domestics. In most cases the domestic promised to pay half the fare and the employer the other half. Has any arrangement been made to reimburse them?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I shall look into the matter that my hon. friend has mentioned and see him privately about it.

Mr. Fraser: Something should be done about it. The people who have arranged the fares do not know about the assisted passage arrangement. They go down to the Trans-Canada Air Lines office and say: I want this to go to such and such an immigrant. The passage is arranged as to when the person can leave the United Kingdom to come here and that is all there is to it. It costs them full fare.

Mr. Fleming: I was hoping that the minister was not going to brush off the questions put by the hon. member for Temiscouata without a fuller answer than he has just given. I should like to hear the minister make a comment on the suggestion that immigration has caused unemployment. The minister ought to be prepared to make a statement on the remarks made just a few minutes ago by the hon. member for Portneuf. He raised the question as to the absorptive capacity of this country. What has the government to say about the absorptive capacity of the country at the present time? How does it relate to the government's plans for encouraging immigration? We heard the statement last December about the new plans. A question has been raised about the absorptive capacity of the country. The government should be prepared to give us a statement. They must have some conception of what they consider the absorptive capacity of the country to be at the present time. I ask the minister, for the benefit of all hon. members of the house, to answer these two important questions by the hon. member for Temiscouata and the hon. member for Portneuf, in relation to the plan of which this item is to provide for a part.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): On the question of the capacity of absorption, I said to the minister that I was ready to wait until the main item having to do with the policy on immigration was before the committee. I did not ask for a declaration from the minister right now. I am ready to wait until the special item on immigration comes before the house.

Mr. Pouliot: It is before the house now.

Mr. St. Laurent: What is before the house now, Mr. Chairman, is a supplementary estimate to carry out the policy that was announced and approved by the house in the general estimates for the year 1950-51. All those who are coming by these amounts are immigrants who have been certified as admissible to Canada. There is not sufficient transportation for them all to get here by ship, and there were regular flights on the Trans-Canada Air Lines that were not taken up by the ordinary passengers at that season of the year, and it was thought that that would be a convenient way of hastening the transportation to Canada of persons who had been certified under the plan that was approved in the general estimates for the year 1950-51.

In the estimates for the year 1951-52 there are substantial sums for the whole of the services of the immigration department, and when they are being discussed I think the whole policy for the year 1951-52 should be discussed, but I do not think it is usual to discuss the policy for the coming year on a supplementary estimate to take care of the expenses incurred in the current year; and that is all that is provided for by the supplementary estimates. They are all persons who have been certified by the services established as admissible to Canada. They have not been able to get here by boat, and there were those empty seats, or there would have been those empty seats, on the Trans-Canada Air Lines. Trans-Canada Air Lines operates only between England or Scotland and Canada, and it was made known that those who wanted to come could be accommodated in that way when there were seats that had not been sold to the ordinary passengers. They get notice that there are a certain number of seats available, and they have to be prepared to come on very short notice. They express some ultimate desire to come at a certain time. They are told, if there is space you can come at that time; but this will not provide for the 1951-52 program. That program will be up before the house in a general estimate, and there will be full opportunity to discuss it then.

I do not think anyone feels that there has been, up to the present time, any overtaxing of the absorptive capacity of the country with respect to immigrants who have come forward.

Mr. Pouliot: This is the first satisfactory explanation that the committee has got about item 577 of these estimates.

Mr. Noseworthy: Are there among those who find their way to England and come by air any number of displaced persons? Will the minister tell us how these displaced persons are screened? Who does the screening?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I do not use the phrase "displaced persons" but those who do, I think, refer to persons under the management of the international refugee organization. If that is what my hon. friend has in mind, they do not come forward in this manner. They come from Europe by ordinary transportation.

Mr. Fleming: It would be much easier to follow the Prime Minister in the statement he has just made if this item were not directly related to what was put before the people of Canada last December as a new plan.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): By whom and when?

Mr. Fleming: By the government in an announcement of the plan that was made. It may have been another case of someone speaking for the government; but certainly it was put before the people of Canada in the way I now describe and the government, so far as I am aware, has made no attempt to correct or alter the statement. It was that a plan was being inaugurated to bring 150,000 immigrants to Canada, and a concerted effort was to be made to interest in coming to Canada artisans and persons having those skills that are in urgent demand at the present time; and that to facilitate early movement of such immigrants into Canada with their skills the government was going to assist air passages and take other means to help bring these people to Canada at a time when their skills were in urgent demand. That, it seems to me, is the reason, and a very proper reason, why some of us have been asking questions tonight designed to elicit necessary information relating to this item, because this item certainly represents the first four months' instalment of the new plan if the new plan is what the people of Canada were given last December to understand it to be.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): The hon. member for Eglinton has entirely misconceived the information that he thinks he has received. In December the government of the province of Ontario made some announcement about their plans, and that is what I think my hon. friend was referring to, and what I think the hon. member for Greenwood was referring to.

Mr. Fleming: That is not what I was referring to.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): We made no announcement whatever in December except the plan we are now debating which was to bring forward people by Trans-Canada Air Lines, and that took effect on the 1st of December. There was no other announcement made in that month except with respect to persons under P.C. 2115. Well, during January the minister made a speech in which he said that it was expected that 150,000 people might come to Canada during this year, if that is the matter that my hon. friend has in mind. It was at that point that we announced assisted passage, which may be debated under a subsequent item of the supplementaries.

Mr. Fleming: The minister has shed some light on the subject. I should like to ask him, in view of the answer he has just given, if then it is a fact that there is no new plan, so far as the government is concerned, with respect to encouraging further immigration to Canada?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): If my hon. friend will look at page 13 of the further supplementary estimates he will see there item 648, which has to do with an assisted passage scheme. That is the only scheme I think we have any purpose in debating at this point—when we come to it.

Mr. Fleming: That is not an answer to my question. I do not want to take up the time of the house —

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Oh no!

Some hon. Members: No!

Mr. Fleming: I can tell some hon. members that I do want to get on with the business of the house, and if they want to do so the best thing they can do is to encourage ministers to give direct and simple answers to questions.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The hon. member is out of order.

Mr. Abbott: Ask simple questions, then.

Mr. Fleming: I do not think I could put a more simple question than the last one, and it has not been answered yet.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): What was that?

Mr. Fleming: I will put the same question, to which I wish to have a short answer, in keeping with the standard prescribed by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Abbott: A high standard.

Mr. Fleming: Am I to infer that there is no new plan with respect to immigration, so far as the government is concerned?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Of course not. I have said twice that there was one, and it is described in item 648, which we will come to shortly—if this is passed.

Mr. Fleming: The answer is yes and no.

Mr. Gardiner: The answer is that you are out of order.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, the Prime Minister has not clarified things at all. He has referred to a statement made in the session last year, when the regular estimates were before the House of Commons. There was no statement at that time which would explain the item now before us.

The minister knows perfectly well that the item now before us relates to an announcement made some time subsequent to the regular session, when it was stated that the government planned or that the government intended to provide part of the cost of air passages. There was some suggestion that it would apply particularly during the off season, when there would be space available on the transatlantic planes.

Now, that is a new plan, since the session. It being a new plan, a plan related to this particular item, then I say this is the time for hon. members to find out why they are being asked to vote $380,000. I know that the figure mentioned here, without any explanation, of $380,000, may seem a mere pittance to a good many members; but the fact remains that at a time like this members should be asking themselves why they are voting this amount.

The minister has given a number of explanations in regard to the procedure by which intending immigrants may avail themselves of the funds available. A plan for assisted passages is justified only if it is a plan that is going to mean some substantial movement of people. If it is going to affect only a few people, then it simply means that some people who happen to learn about it will get a cheaper passage than others get, and it does not mean any really important part of a planned immigration to this country. And, having regard to the expense of maintaining immigration offices, and carrying out the ordinary duties related to immigration, there simply is no justification for a plan of this kind, unless it is a real plan, and one that will bring a substantial number of people to this country.

The minister has explained that this is an additional amount which would take care of a substantial part of the passage—in fact, more than half of the passage, where an immigrant applies for transportation by air and succeeds in getting it. It is available not only to people living in the British isles but it is also available to anyone who wishes to come to Canada, gets as far as the British isles and then decides to come the rest of the distance by air.

One of the things the minister certainly should explain in this connection, at a time when we are being asked to vote an item for the first time relating to this plan, is this: By what device does the immigration branch determine whether the individual who has arrived in England and is coming here is in fact a prospective immigrant, or is just a tourist who finds that this would be a cheap way to get to Canada?

Do not let the minister suggest that that does not happen. I know it does happen—and under a very much more carefully arranged plan than this. After all, why would not a person avail himself of this, unless there were some process which actually determined how this money is to be allocated? What the committee should have is an explanation in detail of a plan of this kind. We should know what the process is, from the time a person makes application until the time he gets here. Do they go to some office and do they then qualify before an immigration official for this special allowance, or do they simply go to the T.C.A. office in London, explain they want to fly to Canada and, if they get their reservation, make application under this plan?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Chairman, I can well understand that the leader of the opposition has had some experience in this. It may be that the plan he had in mind did work in such a way that occasionally some took advantage of it as tourists. There is always the possibility that that would happen. But so far as I know now, we have not found that to happen in respect of the eleven hundred, odd, who have come forward.

The procedure is simple. The applicant arrives at the immigration office. He passes through all the processes of becoming an immigrant. He is investigated, as is any ordinary immigrant. If after that he is passed as an immigrant—not as a tourist—he then may obtain passage by T.C.A. under this plan. That is always provided, of course, that there are demands for his services in this country, and that he is in all probability urgently needed at this moment, or will be very shortly.

Mr. Drew: That, Mr. Chairman, does not explain the detail at all. May I tell the minister, in case he has any wrong impressions, that not a handful of people among close to 20,000 who came into Ontario by air, under a different device, came for any purpose other than as straight immigrants. Nevertheless we did find that there might have been fifteen or twenty who availed themselves of the opportunity to come to Canada on a cheap fare—at that time it was $170.

I am only pointing out that in a plan of this kind, if an assisted passage is justified, there must be some definite procedure which assures that the assisted passage is for the purpose of bringing immigrants with a definite objective and who are going to be useful citizens in this country.

Now, it seems to me we have not yet anything before us to indicate that the immigration branch has assured itself in any way, first, that these people are really going to be able to fit into satisfactory jobs and, secondly, that they really are people who are coming out here with the idea of settling down as citizens in this country. If the minister has any explanation of that, then I certainly have not been able to find it in what he has said.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Perhaps the leader of the opposition would accept my assurance that that is the case. I can disclose to him all the files of the 1,160 who have come. But let him for the moment, I hope, take my assurance that we check this movement of people, having in mind that it is an assisted passage—we check very carefully—and having in mind the necessity of bringing forward persons of the class he has described.

Mr. Pouliot: Mr. Chairman, this item 577 is to provide for payments to Trans-Canada Air Lines of the difference in cost in air transportation and minimum tourist class ocean transportation for immigrants transported from the United Kingdom by Trans-Canada Air Lines during the period November 29, 1950, to March 31, 1951. This is the 19th of March and in twelve days we will have reached March 31. Is this $380,000 going to the T.C.A. to pay for past transportation or is it to pay for future transportation?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): It is for the transportation of the 1,165 who had come up to March 2, and of the roughly 600 more we expect to come between March 2 and March 31.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): When the minister was describing the requirements which are required in the case of people coming to Canada under this scheme he used the words, "provided that there is a demand for his services in this country." Will the minister state what means are taken by the authorities to satisfy themselves on that point?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): If I understand the question correctly it relates to the destination of the immigrant. If the immigrant is coming to assured employment he will qualify under this if that employment is in something which is urgently required.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Does that mean that he will have made his own private arrangement with some person for employment?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Yes and no. There may be a demand sent by an employer to our offices in London which is filled in this manner or, alternatively, he may have made his own arrangements.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, a very widespread impression has been created throughout this country that the government has inaugurated some new plan or policy with respect to immigration into Canada. Statements have been made and if they do not reflect government policy then I think in the interests of a proper understanding of the situation the house and country should be told.

Last September two senior officials of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, on the immigration side, when departing for Europe in connection with certain duties, were quoted in the newspapers as saying that the Canadian government aimed to step up the flow of immigrants to 150,000 or 175,000 a year. The two officials concerned were Mr. C. E. S. Smith, director of the immigration department, and his deputy, Mr. George A. Benoit. They were leaving for Europe with a view to concentrating their efforts, so the newspaper statement indicates, on Britain, France, Germany, Italy and Switzerland, and attaining that which had been described as the goal of the government in this stepped-up program.

The Deputy Chairman: Would the hon. member quote the newspaper?

Mr. Fleming: It appeared in several papers.

An hon. Member: Globe and Mail?

Mr. Fleming: The statement was issued on September 25 on the departure of these two officials for Europe.

An hon. Member: What paper?

Mr. Fleming: It appeared in a number of papers. I am informed that it was made in Montreal on their departure for Europe. Whether the minister intended it or not, the speech which he made in Winnipeg on January 19 of this year was interpreted by many people as confirming the statement attributed to these officials in the previous September. The minister is reported in a Canadian Press dispatch from Winnipeg of January 19 as saying:

> Our objective—

Note the word "objective."

> —for this year, assuming that conditions remain the same, is in the neighbourhood of 150,000. Of this number it is expected that over 30,000 will come from the United Kingdom. The balance will come largely from western Europe and will include some refugees.

Later on in the same dispatch the minister is quoted as saying:

> Immigration is of great importance to Canada today. Through a vigorous, yet carefully controlled immigration program lies the solution to meeting, in part at least, the problem of national defence, and any real ability to participate fully in united undertakings against aggression.

I think the minister should indicate whether the two officials who were quoted in the statement I have referred to were speaking with authority and were making a statement that reflected government policy, and whether the government has committed itself to an objective, as the minister put it, in the neighbourhood of 150,000 immigrants this year as compared with only 74,000 in 1950. If the minister is not prepared to say that the statement attributed to those two officials reflects government policy, then why did he use the word "objective" in his Winnipeg speech as indicated in the dispatch I have referred to? At that time, I repeat, he said:

> Our objective for this year, assuming that conditions remain the same, is in the neighbourhood of 150,000.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): The quotation from the officials that has been read is new to me, but since the figure is approximately that which I gave in Winnipeg I do not think that any explanation is needed. As my hon. friend has quoted, in Winnipeg I said that under present conditions we thought that perhaps 150,000 people would come to Canada. I went on to say, what my hon. friend did not quote, that we thought those people could be absorbed into the national economy.

[Mr. Fleming.]

Mr. Fleming: I still come back to the purpose of this discussion and that is to find out whether there is a government plan with reference to this objective. The minister has just said that he thinks that 150,000 people will come this year, but that is not what the minister said in Winnipeg. In Winnipeg he said:

> Our objective for this year, assuming that conditions remain the same, is in the neighbourhood of 150,000.

To an intelligent Canadian the use of the word "objective" would imply that the government has set a goal for itself. That is quite different from saying in a casual way, "Well, we think 150,000 people will come this year as compared with 74,000 last year."

Mr. Blue: What was your objective when you were married?

Mr. Fleming: Those who are not prepared to take the discussion of an important problem seriously should find means of amusing themselves elsewhere. I want to say to the minister, and I say this in a friendly spirit, that what he has said now is not what he said at Winnipeg. What he has said now does not indicate an objective set by government policy. What he had said is very different from indicating an objective which would be a matter of deliberate, conscious government policy.

Mr. Noseworthy: Do I understand correctly that the T.C.A. is used to bring immigrants whose fares are partly paid by the government only when T.C.A. planes would be coming back without paying passengers?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): In these particular seasons.

Mr. Hatfield: What becomes of these particular immigrants after they land in Canada? Has the department anyone there to guide them to their destination? I ask the question because I was coming up on the train the other day from Saint John, New Brunswick, and there were a dozen immigrants on it. They were on a C.P.R. train and they all had C.N.R. tickets. The conductor was going to put them off. I told him he had better take the tickets. They were going through to Grand Falls. I should like to know who was at the port to guide these immigrants when they came here.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I am glad the hon. member drew my attention to this. I am sure that everybody in the maritimes has been at a port at one time or another when a ship came in with immigrants. If they have they will realize that we have a large staff of persons there to look after them, to see that they get on the right trains and arrive at their destinations.

Mr. Hatfield: Why were they given Canadian National tickets on a C.P.R. train?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I must say I cannot understand that but I will make inquiries.

Mr. Pouliot: Was it not a pool train?

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Chairman, the immigration department during the war and since has certainly been neglected by the government either intentionally or because of the fact that they believe that Canada does not need any immigrants. My hon. friend who is now in charge as minister of the department has proven his outstanding ability in other matters in this house. If he is given the department to run without unnecessary and continuous restraint and restriction I believe he is far-sighted enough to realize what Canada needs in the way of immigrants. If he is restricted it will certainly not be through lack of ability and knowledge on his part because in his heart he knows what Canada needs so far as immigrants are concerned. He knows that this land has not been given to the present generation of Canadians. He knows that our forefathers came here to expand a profitable and rich gift from God.

So far as the government is concerned, in the last fifteen years absolutely no desire or ability to expand this great country and develop its natural resources has been displayed by any of the minister's predecessors. Whether or not that is the wish of the cabinet nobody knows. I want to say that it is up to the minister not only to make speeches in Winnipeg and have representatives of his department make statements to the press prior to departing for Europe. He must realize, and I know he does, the serious attitude of the citizens of Canada with respect to what is going to happen so far as immigration is concerned. Are we going to be told there are not sufficient boats to bring these people here? Are we going to have curtailment of expansion of our industries owing to lack of labour?

We know that we are preaching unity in the world. We know that our representatives in the United Nations are preaching brotherly love but it was only recently that we considered this country no longer at war with Germany. Some of the finest settlers in this country were men and women who came from Germany, people of whom we are proud, and we are exceedingly proud of their children and grandchildren. We have men from Yugoslavia and their descendants, men from Iceland. Citizens of Canada have every right to point to them with pride and call them citizens of Canada because they have earned that title. Yet we are continuing a policy of a paltry 75,000 immigrants a year. Knowing the minister as we do we know that is not his plan, and we know that is not his wish. We know it is somebody else's wish, somebody else's planning in the typical manner in which this government has been planning immigration for at least the last twenty years.

Some of us fought against the Germans. We took pot shots at them and they took pot shots at us. Sometimes they hit and sometimes we hit but when they were taken prisoners there was not the slightest animosity towards them for having been good soldiers. Why should we bear them ill will for being Hitler-trained in the last war? We could almost do the same thing with our youth under certain conditions and with the same kind of training that produced the SS troops. We point to them as people who should almost never be associated with again. That is poppycock and nonsense. Give these people what we have got to give. Set an example for these people from all these European countries and bar none excepting those from Russia.

Bring them here and spend one-tenth of what we spend to educate every man and woman in this country, which is approximately $5,000. Give them a break, and it is a cheap investment at $500 per educated person over the age of twenty, able bodied, medically examined, whom we bring to the Dominion of Canada. Let them help us develop the country. On the day the house closed last June I was travelling to my home town of Collingwood on the train from Toronto to Allandale.

Mr. Blue: Looking for help.

Mr. Ferguson: You would not have been much good if I had asked you to do the job. You would have done more talking than work. Let us get on with the talking now and I will proceed. There was a Roumanian doctor on the train with his wife who was a Viennese. They had tabs on them indicating that they were D.P.'s. With them were a man and his wife from Yugoslavia marked "domestic". There was another man and his wife marked "domestic" from Poland. With my poor French and the doctor's good French I was able to carry on a conversation with him. He in turn carried on a conversation with the people from Yugoslavia and Poland. That was the latter part of June when this house closed. Two months later I received a letter from the doctor written in almost perfect English saying that this was a land of opportunity and a great country. He is now working as a doctor in the Gravenhurst sanatorium and his wife is helping around the institution. A month later, I received word from the man from Yugoslavia who is working in an hotel in a northern town with his wife. Two months later the Pole wrote and thanked me for the information I had given to new citizens. I had told them that if they played the game they were just as good as any other Canadian citizen from the day they landed here. We Canadians came from the same kind of stock, the stock that is in a man from any country who is willing to work be he from the British isles, Yugoslavia, Poland, Germany or any other European country. He comes, he brings the right kind of stock and if he is a willing worker he is willing to become a loyal citizen of Canada. We cannot monopolize this country. The world has its eyes on Canada, a country of fourteen million people.

Mr. Blue: Hear, hear.

Mr. Ferguson: I suggest to my hon. friend who keeps interrupting that the new immigrants will forgive him. They will understand him the same as I do. He will not make any more impression on them than he makes in the House of Commons. He will not prevent them from becoming good citizens.

Mr. Blue: I want to prolong your speech.

Mr. Ferguson: Maybe it would not hurt, but it is time some of us said something that this government will understand, and make an appeal for broadening immigration. It is time that a man with the ability of the present minister was permitted to do something to tell the world that Canada, not only by words but by deeds, intends to show itself in its true colours and to open its doors to the right kind of immigrants without any nonsensical strings on them. Hundreds of thousands of people in devastated, grief-stricken Europe would be very happy to travel in boats with the same equipment we used to transport our brave soldiers during both wars. There are women in those countries who would make wonderful Canadian citizens and be the mothers of the children of the future, also willing to travel in that type of accommodation. But our ships are now gathering barnacles in our harbours, with the crews laid off. We have the transportation—

An hon. Member: And the water.

Mr. Ferguson: Please make your own speech later. We are not getting along very quickly, with your foolish interjections. Please behave yourself. I would hate to have you called to order, but it will have to be done soon because your interjections are simply nonsense. You make your speech; I will make mine.

[Mr. Ferguson.]

We are asking these people to pay $500, $600 or $700; people who have gone through a dreadful ordeal, who will be under the handicap of not being able to speak our language, and that money must be in American or Canadian dollars. That is a fortune to them. It seems to me that a little sincere effort on the part of the minister and his department should make it possible for these people to be brought here with about $350 left of their $500, to keep the wolf from the door and worry from their minds for a few months after their arrival. In other words they should be able to get here by paying $150 instead of $500. We have been trying to tell the Chinese we are pretty good people. We have been telling them we do not bear any animosity, and that they should not believe Mr. Stalin when he puts his arm around them. The truth is that the Chinese has proven himself a good citizen. But he wants to bring his wife from Hong Kong, and there is no effort on the part of the government to help him. He has to pay $1,000 to bring the wife that he loves as dearly as we love our wives.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Ferguson: Well, the hon. member probably would not love anyone, but after all the Chinese is a human being. We tell him we are the broadminded, western people; but we also tell him it will cost him $1,000 to be reunited with his wife. He may have been a Canadian citizen for years; he may have contributed in his own way as much as most Canadians and far more than many who have been here for generations and who are too proud to work. You know whom I mean as well as I do. Let us be realistic about this immigration situation. Many members of the cabinet are right-thinking; many of the men in the Liberal ranks are businessmen, but even today there is no semblance of business practice in the department. I should like to believe the minister has a plan almost complete. Dear knows he had to start from scratch to get that department in any kind of workable condition. But if he has a plan that would appeal to Canadians let him announce it in this house; let him tell the country all about it. Do not bring these immigrants and displaced persons here piecemeal. The minister knows as well as I do that any businessman, given authority to go to Europe with good screening teams, could bring back numbers of carpenters, bricklayers, farmers and all the rest of it. We could load our boats with bricklayers, carpenters, masons, plasterers, barbers, cooks and all the others we need. There should be nothing difficult about that. But there is no sign of a concrete immigration plan even today with the possibility of an all-out war facing us. How are we going to man our munition factories, when our Canadian boys will have to go into the ranks?

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I have given the hon. member every possible chance, I think, to discuss this item, which relates to payments to Trans-Canada Air Lines to make up the difference in cost between air transportation and minimum tourist class ocean transportation for immigrants, and I would ask him to direct his remarks to the item under consideration.

Mr. Ferguson: Very well, Mr. Chairman; I have never tried to be objectionable at any time. In conclusion let me simply say that I pray the minister to enlighten this country on one of the most vital subjects confronting Canada today, affecting as it does our hopes for the future.

Item agreed to.

648. To authorize and provide for a special account in the consolidated revenue fund from which interest-free loans may be made to heads of families or single persons, whose services are urgently required in Canada, towards the cost of ocean transportation to Canada and rail transportation in Canada from port of entry to destination—including cost of meals en route—under conditions fixed from time to time by the governor in council; and to authorize the crediting to such special account of repayments by immigrants and the re-advancing of such repayments, $3,000,000.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): In view of the previous discussion I am sure there will be a few questions and I should make an explanation. This is the item everyone seems to want to talk about, but they wanted to do it under the previous item. We announced a policy for the purpose of bringing to Canada single persons or the heads of families whose skills are urgently needed in Canada at the present time. That plan calls for the loan to that person of his passage money, except for the sum of $30 which he is expected to put up himself in the currency of his own country. The loan of the passage money will be repayable by arrangement with the immigrant and his employer by deduction from his wages monthly over a period of twelve months in some cases but in no case to exceed twenty-four months. We expect we will require the $3 million to be voted here so that by the time the money starts coming in again by way of repayment we will have expended approximately this amount.

The reason for this is that the cost of transportation has been one of the factors which have delayed immigration to Canada, as the hon. member for Simcoe North just said. At the same time we have done what we could to provide transportation for these people, and if the committee will permit me I should like to give an explanation of the transportation facilities. More than 30 vessels will make scheduled stops at Canadian ports during 1951. Five of these vessels did not visit Canadian ports last year. They are the La Guardia, the Homeland, the Europa, the Stockholm, and the Stavengerfjord. Several others have increased the number of scheduled stops. For example, the Scythia will make six more visits to Canada than she did during 1950. The Neptunia and the Italia will each make five additional visits to Canada. The Washington will make four more visits than she did last year.

Mr. Riley: On item 648, Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words in tribute to the minister and his department for the new immigration facilities which were recently opened at the port of Saint John. When the member for Simcoe North was describing the lack of evidence of an immigration plan a few moments ago, I could not help but feel that he should have accepted my invitation to come to the port of Saint John a few weeks ago. He would then have seen some really concrete evidence of an immigration plan, because this building was opened a few short months ago.

We were given a picture of a bright future for this immigration policy which would be carried on by the department under the leadership of the present minister. This building is most modern, and probably the best equipped immigration station in North America. The building was commenced in 1948 and opened last December. It is located on the dockside and is more than 130 feet by 330 feet. It is bright and airy, and has excellent hospital facilities. It has the latest in restaurant and cafeteria equipment, and the detention quarters are of a superior nature.

The member for Fraser Valley is making a few suggestions, but I would suggest that he hold back for private members' night, because I am sure that before this session is completed he will have every opportunity to exhaust himself on the pipe line bills. I should like to pay particular tribute to the immigration work that is being carried on in the port of Saint John by the splendid volunteer organizations who are meeting the new immigrants and adding that touch of welcome which cannot be given by the regular efficient employees of the department. I should like to mention the Salvation Army, the lay members of the Baptist church, the Presbyterian church, the British and Foreign Missionary society, the Canadian Red Cross, the Catholic Women's League, and the Sisters of Service. The Canadian Red Cross is operating an excellent nursery which is staffed and equipped through voluntary effort and subscription. I am sure that the excellent work carried on by these voluntary organizations in welcoming these new immigrants to our country could be helped by other organizations throughout the country who may wish to lend a hand.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Chairman, when we were asking questions on the previous item, I understood that the minister rather preferred to have us wait for item 648. I thought that when we came to this item our questions would be answered. So far as I am concerned they have not been answered at all. I can add one or two more to give the minister a start.

We have heard a description of the fine set-up at Saint John, but I should like to know something more about it. How many are employed there? How many people came through that port of entry? Is it going to be operated during the summer? How is this $3 million to be used? How much is to be for each family or each unit? Is there any estimate as to how often the fund will revolve? How many can be brought out under this plan during the year, and what is the relationship of this figure, which I understand is still an accepted figure, more or less a basic figure, of 150,000? We are still in the dark about that.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Chairman, to answer the first question first, the personnel at the port of Saint John in the immigration building totals about 15 to 18. For the period when a ship comes in, there are a good many more on a temporary basis.

The second question, as I understood it, was how much money is to be loaned? A person who benefits from this scheme provides $30 in the currency of his own country, and the Canadian government will lend him the difference between $30 and the cost of his transportation to Canada, including his transportation to any point in Canada, which works out to about $40 on the average.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): The minister must have in his mind an average amount of money to each person on that basis?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): It works out to just about $200.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): In the case of a family?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): This applies only to single workers or to the head of a family.

[Mr. Riley.]

In other words, it is working hands that are required here, and the members of the family do not receive the benefit of this loan.

Mr. Brooks: I was very much interested in what the member for Saint John-Albert said. I had the pleasure, of course, of seeing this splendid shed, and I have known something about it. I agree when he says it is one of the finest immigration sheds in Canada, and perhaps in North America. There is one thing the people are very much concerned about, especially those who are employed in the shed, and that is whether these splendid facilities would be used for only a few months during the winter, or whether ships would be brought into Saint John to use those facilities which cannot be excelled anywhere else in Canada the year round. Really, I believe it is a great loss of money if those sheds are not used during the summer, just as they are during the winter. I should like the minister to say whether there is any intention of using these splendid facilities at the port of Saint John during the summer months.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I believe it is the desire of the department to use all its facilities to the maximum efficiency.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): One of my questions has not been answered. It was, how many came through the port of Saint John? I might ask the minister if my arithmetic is correct. He says there would be about $200 each, so the maximum would be about 15,000 people that might be accommodated under this particular item?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): The first question was the number who came in. In December, there were 1,533; in January 280; and in February, 1,625. The 15,000, the expected number who will benefit by this plan, will probably come in, in the course of the next three, four or five months. We have only an estimate to go on. Over 30,000 persons applied in the offices in the United Kingdom and western Europe in the months of January and February for immigrant status. We are processing these now, and I should imagine that a very large number of these will come forward under the assisted passage scheme.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Will the minister say how this compares with figures of a year ago?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): We had no assisted passage scheme a year ago.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): No, but would you not have figures of the applicants of a year ago?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Only 13,000 came forward from the United Kingdom in the whole of last year, so that my hon. friend can see that in the two months of January and February we received twice as many applications as came forward during the whole of the year.

Mr. Pouliot: Just before my hon. friend goes on, these are further supplementary estimates, 1950-51, for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1951. What has been said about item 577 was about an amount that has to be spent from now until March 31; but item 648 is entirely different, and I wonder why it was not put in the main estimates which were tabled not long ago, because this amount of $3 million is apparently not for the supplementary estimates of 1950-51, but for the main estimate of 1951-52, and it is for future payments, not four or five months only. I ask the minister why it was not in the main estimates of 1951-52?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): The plan was announced effective February 1, so that to the extent of two months it would have been included in these supplementaries in any event, but in order that it should be made clear that it was a continuing plan on a revolving fund basis, we put it in for the full amount that we expected to use while the plan was in operation.

Item agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall we revert now to item 578?

Indian Affairs branch—Reserves and trusts—

578. Administration—further amount required, $22,082.

Mr. MacKenzie: Under this item I want to clarify something that has appeared in the press just recently. This item has to do with reserves and trusts. In the riding that I have the honour to represent, Lambton-Kent, there is probably the largest Indian reserve in Canada. It contains something over 40,000 acres. There are close to 1,000 Indians in my riding. Adjacent to the reserve is a shooting and hunting marsh that the Indians have had the rights to for many years. This has been under lease and was called the St. Anne's lease. It was leased by a Toronto firm mainly for several years, but the department decided that it should be advertised and leased to someone else. They called for public tenders.

My experience with the Indian branch has been that the officials of the Indian affairs branch are very zealous of the Indians' rights. Any time that I have talked to them they have claimed that their first consideration is the Indian. I was rather bothered and disturbed over an item that appeared in the papers a few days ago. As a matter of fact, it appeared in the Journal last Thursday night. It was in the Globe and Mail, and I clipped this little item from the Windsor Star last Thursday. I will read it:

> Hunters ask lease probe.
> A parliamentary investigation of the federal government's action in leasing St. Anne's island in lake St. Clair, near Wallaceburg, to a private sportsmen's club was asked today by the Ontario federation of anglers and hunters in a brief to the legislature's fish and game committee.
> K. S. Clarke, federation president, said that the lease had been "slipped over" by the federal department of Indian Affairs to a "highly objectionable" private club, whose members are mostly from the United States. "The amount of game that is taken from the island is something that the police might well look into," he said. The province had offered to pay the same amount, but the lease had been granted to the private club "for purely political reasons."

As the representative of that riding I want to know why it was granted for political reasons, because if it was I have no knowledge of it in the least.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I probably would not have commented except for the conclusion of the quotation. The St. Anne's lease is a well known lease in southwestern Ontario, and as my hon. friend says, the only interest that this department has in it is to obtain the maximum return from these grounds for the Indian band who surrendered part of the island in the first place. It has been under lease for something over sixty years, I think. Last year, as a result of a lawsuit, this lease came to an end and we had to re-lease that portion of the island because that was the basis on which the Indian band council had surrendered it. We advertised the hunting privileges in the Toronto Star, the Toronto Globe and Mail, the Windsor Star, the Chatham News, the London Free Press, the Sarnia Canadian Observer and the Detroit Free Press during July and August of last year. We asked for tenders, and they were opened on August 30, 1950. At that time there were three bids in the tenders, and we accepted the highest tender. That happened to be a number of persons, some Canadians and some Americans. A suggestion has been made that we ignored certain representations which had been made by a sportsmen's association in southwestern Ontario, but we did not receive any firm undertaking or bid from either the Ontario federation of anglers and hunters, the Kent county sportsmen's association or any similar organization in the province of Ontario.

I may repeat, our only interest is on behalf of the Indians who in fact are the beneficiaries of the lease.

In regard to remarks in the paper that the amount of game taken from the island is something that the police might look into, it is to be observed that in the lease there is a section stating that the lessee will at all times co-operate as closely as possible with the dominion wildlife authorities and the game and fisheries branch of the province of Ontario in all matters pertaining to wildlife conservation.

Item agreed to.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported, read the second time and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will continue with these further supplementary estimates. Then we will take up Bill No. 79, an act respecting Indians. If the second reading of this bill is given, the bill will be sent to the special committee on Indian affairs. Then, we have some other small bills which could be taken up too tomorrow.

[Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce).]

Mr. Fulton: Would the minister indicate the order in which the supplementary estimates will be dealt with?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We were trying today to place before the committee the less contentious ones. However, perhaps I misjudged the situation. Tomorrow I will do my best to have the less contentious estimates come up first. Then we will take the difficult ones —if there are some.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, March 20, 1951

The house met at three o'clock.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

FEDERAL AID TO EDUCATION—CORRESPONDENCE WITH PROVINCES

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, an order was made on the 14th instant in connection with a motion of the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Knight) for the production of correspondence with the government of Saskatchewan dealing with federal aid to education. On looking at the files I find that that correspondence was all tabled on May 23, 1950, and was added as an appendix to Hansard of that date. Perhaps that declaration might be taken in lieu of a new tabling of these same letters.

While I am dealing with this kind of subject, may I say that my attention has been called to the fact that I made too inclusive a statement on Friday with respect to correspondence with the government of Manitoba.

I tabled a letter, which was the only letter which had not yet been tabled. In doing so I said that the letters tabled on January 29 had been printed as an appendix to Hansard. I find that is not so. They were tabled and they had been distributed at the time of the dominion-provincial conference, and had received a lot of publicity at that time. However they constituted a quite voluminous collection of letters, and there was no order made that they be printed as an appendix to Hansard.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

TABLING OF AUDITORS REPORT

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table the auditors report to parliament of accounts of Trans-Canada Air Lines for the year ended December 31, 1950.

NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD

TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORT

Hon. F. G. Bradley (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier), and in pursuance of the National Harbours Board Act, I wish to table, in manuscript form, the annual report of the national harbours board for the calendar year 1950.

It is expected that printed copies will be ready shortly, and as soon as they are received they will be made available for distribution.

CHINA

REPORTED ARREST OF FIVE MISSIONARY SISTERS BY CHINESE COMMUNISTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jean François Pouliot (Temiscouata): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he has any more information since yesterday about the five nuns who have been arrested in China? This matter interests, very much, many people in Canada.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Well, Mr. Speaker, I have not very much by way of additional information, but the information I have I shall give to the hon. member and the house. It is as follows—

Mr. Fulton: Why did you not give it to me yesterday?

Mr. Pearson: I did not give it to the hon. member yesterday because I did not have it yesterday. However, I have it today for the hon. member for Temiscouata, and other hon. members.

Attacks have recently been made in the Chinese communist press in Canton, Peking and Hong Kong against Canadian nuns of the Order of the Immaculate Conception who conduct the Orphanage of the Holy Child in Canton.

Typical charges made against the nuns are as follows:

1. Far from pursuing acts of charity they are guilty of inhuman acts against the children in their charge.

2. The orphanage is a typical example of an imperialist charity organization, operation of which would not be tolerated by the Chinese people.

3. Since the communist liberation of Canton the orphanage had admitted a total of 2,251 infants, of whom 2,116, or 94 per cent, have died in the institution to date.

4. This mortality rate reflects fully on the irresponsible attitude adopted by the sisters in caring for the infants.

This information, which we received from unofficial sources—that is the information as to these charges—has been confirmed by telegram from our high commissioner in London, who secured the confirmation from the United Kingdom authorities, who of course are represented in China.

A letter from the orphanage in Canton, dated March 5, has been received by the Mother Superior in Montreal. The nuns reported that the orphanage had been taken over by the Chinese authorities and that the Canadian nuns were to be deported to Hong Kong. There has been no official confirmation of newspaper reports of their arrest. The United Kingdom foreign office has been requested by the Canadian government to ask the United Kingdom chargé d'affaires in Peking to do everything possible to assist these nuns who apparently have been the victims of grotesque and unfounded charges.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

AUDIBILITY OF DEBATE—HOURS OF SITTING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gordon Graydon (Peel): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to ask, but I am not sure whether it should be addressed to the Prime Minister or to Your Honour. It arises out of the statement made a few days ago by Your Honour with respect to audibility of debate and the acoustics of this chamber, a statement with which I fancy everyone is in complete agreement.

I suggest, sir, that during the Easter recess, or shortly afterward, you have some kind of plebiscite taken among the members of the House of Commons to see if something cannot be done about the inhuman hours we work, particularly at night. I think an attempt should be made to reach an agreement among members under which the sitting hours could be changed to the satisfaction of all members.

I suggest that Your Honour, and perhaps the Prime Minister and some others, might give this matter consideration and see if we cannot come to some agreement on it.

LAKE ONTARIO

STORM DAMAGE—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE OF HAMILTON HARBOUR COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alphonse Fournier (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Lennard) made the following request:

> I have been informed that buildings at Van Wagner's beach, near Hamilton, are being washed away by a storm which is raging on lake Ontario. I would ask the minister if it might be possible to instruct the Hamilton harbour commission to give whatever assistance it can in this emergency.

[Mr. Pearson.]

The Hamilton harbour commission is under the jurisdiction of the Department of Transport, and not this department. The territory under control of the commission is confined to the inside of Burlington bay. Van Wagner's beach is on the inside of the sandspit stretching between Hamilton and Burlington, and consequently does not come under the jurisdiction of the Hamilton harbour commission. Any arrangements for assistance would seem to be a purely local matter.

POSTAL SERVICE

REDUCTION IN URBAN MAIL DELIVERIES—HAMILTON

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Ellen L. Fairclough (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a series of questions to the Postmaster General (Mr. Rinfret), notice of which has been given. They are as follows:

1. Have additional carriers been requested by the postmaster at Hamilton?
2. Has any consideration been given to supplying this need?
3. How many carriers have resigned?
4. How many letter carriers have been granted superannuation in the last month?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Speaker, this is urgent.

Mr. Speaker: As the house will be sitting only one more day before we adjourn for Easter, perhaps I should allow these questions. If the hon. member would like to continue, I will allow her to do so.

Mrs. Fairclough: The fifth question is possibly the significant one. It is as follows:

5. Is there a sufficient number of vacancies to absorb the men who have received notice of lay-off?

Mr. L. Langlois (Parliamentary Assistant to the Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, subject to your remarks, and as notice of these questions was given and the information is available, I am prepared to answer them now.

To question No. 1 the answer is no. Question No. 2 is answered by the answer to question No. 1. The answer to question No. 3 is that since February 1 the number is four. The answer to question No. 4 is that since February 1 the number is one. The information with regard to question No. 5 will not be available until March 31.

BACKLOG OF MAIL AT HAMILTON POST OFFICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. E. Lennard (Wentworth): I should like to ask the Postmaster General (Mr. Rinfret) or his parliamentary assistant what is being done to relieve the backlog of mail which has piled up in the Hamilton post office.

Mr. L. Langlois (Parliamentary Assistant to the Postmaster General): I have received no information with regard to the backlog of mail mentioned by the hon. member, but I shall be pleased to investigate the matter and do whatever has to be done under the circumstances.

SUPPLY

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

KOREA—QUESTION AS TO RECROSSING OF 38TH PARALLEL BY UNITED NATIONS TROOPS

Mr. Angus MacInnis (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair I should like to take a few minutes to bring to the attention of the house a matter which I believe is of great concern, not only to the people of Canada but to the people of the whole western world. I refer to the fact that for the second time communist forces in Korea have been driven to or across the 38th parallel. I should like to know what action is to be taken by the United Nations forces when they reach the 38th parallel on this occasion.

On February 13 the leader of this group, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell), asked a number of questions which were answered by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson). These will be found on page 306 of Hansard and are as follows:

Were members of the United Nations consulted about the reported recrossing of the 38th parallel by United Nations troops? If so, did Canada express an opinion, and what was it?

Has Canada made any representations to the Secretary General or to the United Nations concerning reconsideration of the implied permission which was granted to the troops last October?

The Secretary of State for External Affairs replied in part as follows—and I do not think I am leaving out any important part of his reply:

There is some doubt as to the exact details about the reported crossing of the 38th parallel by a South Korean detachment. Apparently it was a purely tactical movement and on a small scale, and does not indicate that any decision has been taken for a major crossing of the line, even if military conditions make that possible.

In reply to the second question, Mr. Speaker, Canada has not made any representations to the Secretary General or to the United Nations concerning the question of the recrossing of the 38th parallel by United Nations forces. However, representatives of governments with forces participating in Korean operations have had informal discussions recently with the United States representatives in regard to this and other matters arising out of the Korean campaign. These discussions have included a Canadian representative. As a result of these discussions, I think I can state that the political significance of any new move across the parallel deep into North Korean territory is fully appreciated. At this moment I would not like to add anything to this observation beyond repeating my view that any decision taken in this matter should be a collective one, including particularly those governments who are participating in United Nations Korean operations, of which the most important is the United States of America.

I wish to draw attention to one sentence I have just read from the statement of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is as follows:

As a result of these discussions, I think I can state that the political significance of any new move across the parallel deep into North Korean territory is fully appreciated.

In other words, the military consequences of crossing the parallel last October are in the minds of the members of the United Nations, and particularly those who have representatives in the armed forces of the United Nations in Korea. So far as recrossing the parallel is concerned, the situation today is one that should not be left in doubt, and indeed in my opinion cannot be left in doubt very long, because if the United Nations organization itself does not take action in this matter, action may be taken by others. I maintain that the decision to recross the 38th parallel is a political decision and should be taken by the United Nations; the matter should not be left to any military general no matter how eminent he may be.

At this time the press is full of conjecture about what may happen. The question is discussed in newscasts. I believe that the government of this country, which has a military force with the United Nations forces, should not leave the country in the dark concerning what its attitude is with respect to the recrossing of the 38th parallel. For my part I have always felt that it was a wrong policy to cross the parallel. I do not know whether any hon. members can recall the contribution I made to the debate last September, when we were discussing the sending of armed forces to Korea. I asked at that time what our attitude would be if we drove the North Koreans across the 38th parallel. I pointed out then that I did not believe we could unify North and South Korea under one government. I said in support of my argument that I had attended the United Nations assembly in 1947 when the commission on Korea was set up. I said that I had noted Soviet Russia's attitude at that time to the commission, an attitude which has not changed since then, because the commission was never allowed to cross into North Korea. I said that if Soviet Russia had not recognized the United Nations commission in 1947 she was not likely to recognize it in 1950.

Perhaps I had better read to the house what I said at that time. As recorded at page 229 of Hansard for September 4, 1950, I said:

> In my opinion we should without delay answer some of the questions people are asking. What are our intentions in Korea? If we succeed in driving the North Koreans back to the 38th parallel, are we going to stop there or are we going to go on beyond that? As this is a United Nations force, I agree that it is not altogether within our right to say what a United Nations army is going to do when it reaches that point; but our government certainly should make it clear what is their opinion on the issue.

I did not foresee that it would not be Russia but China that would come into the picture. However, whether it is Russia or whether it is China, I am satisfied that there is not the slightest hope of unifying Korea at this time under one government. In an article which I wrote on the Korean situation for a weekly paper in Vancouver in the first week of October I said that, in my opinion, for the United Nations forces to cross the parallel would needlessly and tremendously increase the danger of war. As it happens, it has been demonstrated that I was correct on that point.

I contended at that time, and I contend now, that so far as the United Nations forces are concerned this is not a war of conquest. It is not a war to destroy communism. It is not even a war, if there can be such a war, to prevent war. In Korea the United Nations took police action only, and in my opinion we are only justified in going as far as the boundary that was in existence and was recognized on June 25 last year.

Mr. Ferguson: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. MacInnis: Yes.

Mr. Ferguson: The hon. member says the boundary was recognized. The North Koreans, the Russians and the Chinese forgot to recognize it, and since then there has been practically no recognition of that boundary line. Nevertheless the hon. member must have reasons for saying that he thought it was a poor idea to pass that line. Will he give us the cold reasons why he came to that conclusion over and above the generals of the army?

Mr. MacInnis: I thought I had already given those reasons.

[Mr. MacInnis.]

Mr. Ferguson: You gave your reasons, but why did you have those reasons?

Mr. MacInnis: I suppose I had those reasons because my mind worked that way.

Mr. Ferguson: Why?
