Canadian

Northern Railway

WE have for sale large tracts of the finest grain growing and mixed farming lands in Western Canada. With the completion of the extensive branch line building programme for the current year, these lands will be brought in very close proximity to the railway, and the prices will in consequence increase many fold.

The Canadian Northern main line to the Pacific Coast will be completed in the near future, thus placing the Company's Townsites on a great transcontinental highway. Their growth and development from now forward will be enormous.

Now is the opportune time to purchase inside and business property, before values so increase that they are beyond your reach, and again you will have let opportunity pass by.

For the future of the "TOWN" with a good location will be but a replica of the "ONCE-TOWNS-NOW-CITIES" that have made fortunes for those with the foresight to buy when prices were low.

Write or call on us to-day for plans and price lists of farm land and townsite property. Ask for a copy of the "OPPORTUNITY BOOKLET."

GUY WEADICK

*$20,000.00
in Cash

MR. GUY WEADICK is the Manager and Promoter of "The Stampede," and the $20,000.00 Cash Prize-list in a Celebration of this nature. This style of work is not new to Mr. Weadick, as he is a Cowboy himself, and as a Fancy Roper he has travelled the United States and Europe, both in Vaudeville and with the leading Wild West Exhibitions. Every Music Hall of note have had him as their star attraction. The gay boulevards of Paris, the broad streets of Berlin, even St. Petersburg and the foggy streets of old London, have seen the tall young Cow-puncher in his marvellous exhibitions with his "educated rope."

Mr. Weadick enjoys the personal acquaintance of all the best exponents in Cowboy and Cowgirl sports, whether they are on the Range or travelling with Wild West aggregations. His experience in the game is second to none, as the promoting of "The Stampede" has demonstrated. It is that same experience that made him advertise far and wide: "The money is here, come and get it. The best man wins and takes the money, irrespective where he comes from or what his color or nationality may be."

SUGGESTIONS TO PATRONS

Physicians and others who anticipate being summoned during the performance are requested to leave their seat numbers at the main entrance in order that they may be promptly notified should any messages be received for them.

All articles found by any of the employees will be left at the main entrance, where owners may direct inquiries.

Patrons who find articles left in the seats are requested to leave them at the main entrance.

The management, seeking above all things to please its patrons, will gladly and thoroughly investigate any charges of discourtesy preferred against any of its employees.

Any demands for fees or acceptance of money for seats by ushers or other employees, or any incivility or inattention of any attaches, will not be tolerated. Patrons will confer a distinct favor by reporting to the management any violation of this rule.

The management positively disclaims any connection with ticket speculation, and reserves the right to refuse tickets bought from speculators. If the unthinking public desire to patronize speculators, it is hoped they will be careful not to be imposed upon, and make sure of the location and the regular prices for seats so bought. The management can in no manner be held responsible for such transactions.

TRANSCONA

REASONS WHY

We recommend an Investment in C.P.R. Transcona to Stampede Visitors

BECAUSE

Transcona is bound to be the future railroad, factory and labor centre of Winnipeg.

The C.P.R. Terminals at North Transcona in a few years will be larger than those of Winnipeg.

All through freight traffic from the East to the West, and from the West to the East will be handled through North Transcona instead of Winnipeg.

All engineers, firemen, brakemen and conductors must be within reach of the call-boy, and must consequently live at North Transcona.

The monthly pay-roll next winter will amount to approximately $150,000.

The distribution of $150,000 monthly in wages will carry North Transcona through any period of temporary depression.

Sites have been selected for the erection of one hundred houses on our property this summer to accommodate the large number of employees who will be living at C.P.R. Transcona this Fall. The first unit of construction is finished and ready for occupation.

Bank buildings, hotels and stores must be erected at once. Considering the immediate development of this property, no district near Winnipeg has ever offered the inducements to contractors and builders for making a quick sale of their houses.

If you have not already received one of our folders, write today for latest map and original price list the right side of the horse's neck, and if in the left hand, up the left side. The halter shank shall be loose at one end—not knotted, and shall not be wrapped around rider's hand. A rider found wrapping a halter shank will be put in the same class as a rider who "pulls leather." Rider is not allowed to change hands.

Visitors should make a point of seeing Transcona before leaving the city. Automobiles always at your service to make inspection. One hour will make the return trip and allow you fifteen minutes or more on the property.

4.—Any one of the following offences will disqualify any rider and he will not be allowed to continue in this contest: Rider must leave chute with both feet in the stirrups. Pulling leather, changing hands on rein, wrapping rein around hand, loosing stirrup and being bucked off. The Judges will order horses to be picked up by firing a revolver. Everything the rider does from the time he leaves the chute until the pistol shot, will be considered whether it be for or against him. After the shot has been fired nothing that the rider does will be considered against him unless he should fight his horse, for which the rider will be disqualified. The Judges will not order a horse picked up until they are satisfied that he has bucked his hardest and has become winded.

5.—In the semi-finals the Judges shall choose not less than ten (10) to ride, and in the finals not less than six (6).

We Pioneered with the Cowboy

But our pioneering days, like his, when we did things on a small scale, have passed. We have both advanced with civilization. Since we commenced business in the modest premises depicted alongside, in 1902, we have developed widely, increasing our original capital forty-fold. Only in this way could we handle the enormous business that is now ours. Our success lies in the completeness and high quality of our stock; in the excellence of our service; and in our endeavor to supply our patrons with the best of builders' supplies of every description, at fair prices.

Various Styles of Roping

By WILL ROGERS

There are several different kinds of roping which may be divided into the following styles: Steer roping, Horse roping, Calf roping and Fancy roping.

Steer roping is done from horse back. The roper catches the steer, throws him and ties him. Men who follow this particular line of work have horses trained especially for that purpose. The roper makes a study of how to make every second count. The man of the horse ranch may be a great horse roper, still he could not catch a steer in time, and quick time. A man may be a good corral roper on foot, yet could not sit up on a horse and catch with any degree of accuracy whatever. Another man may be first class in roping horses from horse back, but put him on the ground and he could not catch a thing.

Calf roping is an art in itself. A man may be the best calf roper in the world and be unable to go out and catch and tie a steer in anything like quick time. Of course there are exceptions in all these instances, but I am only speaking now as a general rule.

Fancy and trick roping, such as spinning and making fancy catches, is another different line of roping. This line of work originated in Old Mexico, and is called the New

Mode of roping. There are several explanations given as to how fancy roping was first originated. It is my contention that making the circle of the rope originated first when someone was taking the tangle out of his rope, swung it around and it fell into a circle, which when practiced he discovered he could keep open. The first man to bring this kind of rope work into the United States was Vicente Oreps, the Mexican who will be remembered for several years with the Buffalo Bill Show. I think he first joined the show in 1893 or '94 and was with them until three or four years ago. He was the first roper that any of the present day fancy ropers ever saw, and up to this day I have never seen a man exhibit the same accuracy and style that he did. He did not have as extensive a routine of tricks as the different ropers of to-day, but he seldom missed and his catches were long and clean. He was a great straight roper, and that is saying a whole lot, as many of the fancy ropers of to-day are poor straight ropers. He was a wonder at catching loose bucking horses that had got their man, or had become loose in the arena and were free to run where they pleased. In catching these runaway horses he always threw a small loop and got them right around the throat latch, not the middle of them or hind leg, or around the saddle horn.

Fancy roping is advancing all the time, and you, who are fortunate enough to attend "The Stampede," will see the greatest bunch of fancy ropers in the world. Every one of them excel in some particular little trick or stunt that he can do better than the other one, but as to who is the best on the general average on all the tricks remains to be seen when the judges' decision is awarded at the end of the contest.

Among the better exponents of this style of roping is Fred Burns, who has originated many tricks and especially fancy catches. His catches are long and clean. Another is Chester Byers, a boy, I am proud to say, I taught some of his first tricks, and who for the last few years has been teaching me some new ones. He is one of the quickest to learn a trick, and he has a lot of original ones of his own. I consider he is easier and slower in action than any of them. He is good in all lines of fancy roping and spinning, still I think Burns excels them all in fancy catches. Bee Ho Gray is another leader in fancy roping. He has originated as many hard tricks as anybody, lots of which he is the only one doing to-day. He is great with either hand, and is the best one handling one rope over the other that I ever saw. Sammie Garrett is also another good one. Montana Jack Ray, great. Tommie Kiernan, look out for him as he can handle the rope mighty easy—can do anything that he ever saw anybody else do, but probably not with such ease. Hank Durnell, while not with the same ease as Byers, does it all. Tex McLeod, Hutton, Homer Wilson, and a bunch of others equally as good. Do not overlook Fred Stone, the actor of Montgomery and Stone. He has had the best boys in the business teach him, and at the present time bids fair to excel lots of them in a little while. The Mexicans are the best on catches. They do lots of hard tricks which are not understood by a great many of the ropers who are the best to do fancy catches while on horse back, still they do not do any tricks like jumping through the loop.

Tex McLeod, the present champion, I have never seen work, but I know from hearsay that he is good. If he wins against his opponents this year my hat is off to him, or any of them, even the losers, as they are all good and have worked hard to learn what they know. If you do not believe it, pick up a rope and try and do a trick with it yourself, so give them all credit.

Florence LaDue, the present lady champion, is very fast and graceful with her spinning. She has a large routine of catches. I have not seen her work lately, but she was always good on all around fancy roping. Hazel Moran is a very good graceful spinner. When I last saw her work she did not do many catches, but everything she does she does well. There are several other lady fancy ropers, among them Jane Bernaudy, Grace Shultz, Bertha Blancett, who are all good.

The end of the week will tell who is the best of the bunch, as all those who consider themselves as good as the best will be here to participate in all lines of cowboy and cowgirl sports and contest for the largest cash prizes ever given.

The Cowboys

The great days of the cowboy have passed. The agricultural stage pushes aside the pastoral. Farming, wherever it can be advantageously pursued, and stock farming, possess, or will possess, the great area where once the knights of the quirt and stock saddle lived their healthy and adventurous lives. They were found at one time or another from Mexico to the Peace River, throughout the so-called arid lands and bad lands, Texas, New Mexico, part of Arizona, Colorado, Wyoming, Montana, Western Kansas, Nebraska, Dakota and Canadian Northwest Territories. But the cowboy will soon be only a memory, like the buffalo hunter. He will disappear as the trapper is disappearing. The broncho buster and the horse wrangler will go the way of the old stage driver.

The accessories, the "properties" as the stage managers say, of the cowboy, his sombrero and chaperajos, and jingling heavy spurs, have struck the imagination and blinded it to his qualities and services. There rises up the distorted image of him in his most reckless moments, in his hours of gross merry-making, when he tones down his constitution with frontier whisky and rides his horse into saloons and caracoles crazily through the town shooting and whooping. Yet all observers of his class paint him as far from quarrelsome, sudden and quick in quarrel, indeed, but not in seeking it; courteous and self contained, as men who live out of doors and carry dangerous weapons and know that their associates carry them are apt to be; truthful, honest, brave, of course, and not merely in action, but endurance, laborious, full of resource. He belonged to a highly skilled profession. An early initiation into it, and years of training were required. Plenty of Easterners who thought that it was easy for any muscular fellow graduated from the riding schools to become a cowboy found their mistake. The cowboy rode well and roped well. Skill with the rope is only attainable after long and constant practice. Considering the refractory and unbroken or badly broken beasts the cowboys had to ride, and the rough country in which most of their riding had to be done, and considering their perfect control of their mounts, they must be counted among the best horsemen in the world, masters of a style effective for their purposes.

Perfect presence of mind was necessary to the cowboy. We are likely to forget in his fringe and jingle how much hard work, often in difficult conditions, he had to do. Cowpunching in a stampede during bitter weather is no child's play. The men in the "line camps" had duties more responsible and difficult than often fall to soldiers. A great round-up was managed with a skill and discipline substantially military. One day the cowboy drags a steer out of a quicksand and the grateful beast charges at him in consequence. The next day he is fording a freshet-swollen river, or struggling through a blizzard. A bright-eyed and resolute race were and are the cowboys. Their military capabilities received sufficient demonstration in 1900 in the Strathcona Horse, and in 1898 in the Rough Riders. The idea of forming a cowboy force had, we believe, occurred some ten or twelve years before.

The personal qualities of the cowboys are visible enough, but their services to civilization are scarcely thought of. Over wide regions they have been the pioneers and forerunners. They have fought a good fight, against thieves, especially horse thieves, the arch criminals in a new country where everybody must ride. Banded together they have done wild justice upon many malefactors. Sometimes there has been war between ranch and ranch. But essentially the cowboys have been a force for law and property in a territory where no writ runs that is not signed by the strong hand.

The cowboy's costume and his profession are a modification of those of the Mexican vaquero. They spread from the southwest northward. Something of their quiet courtesy is perhaps due to their southwestern origin. The East had added to their number. For a time cowpunching was almost a mania among Eastern college men. Cultivated youths were fascinated by the free, open life. In some parts of the West, notably in Colorado, there arose a curious and delightful society. The ranchman was only a cowboy in chief. He was emancipated from many prejudices and localisms. In particular it was noticed in El Paso and Denver in the most high and palmy state of the cattle business, that cowpunching was a sure receipt for reducing the Bostonian morgue.

The strange, burned and gloomy country over which many of the cowboys roamed yet awaits its sacred bard, and no master's hand has yet set down the manly and generous cowboy life under the sun and the stars.

Cowboy in Real Life

A few words about Western character may be quoted from ex-President Theodore Roosevelt's writings. He, a New Yorker, Harvard student, Western plainsman, rancher, national statesman and conservative analyzer of his subjects, years ago gave the following description as a result of personal knowledge and experience.

"Cowboys resemble one another much more and much less than is the case with their employers or ranchmen. A town in the cattle country, where it is thronged with men from the neighborhood round about, presents a picturesque sight. Here are assembled men who follow the various industries known only to frontier existence, who lead lonely lives, only when occasion causes their visit to the 'camp.' All the various classes—loungers, hunters, teamsters, stage-drivers, trappers, shepherds, settlers, and men drawn from all classes, plainsmen and mountainmen—are here to be seen. Most prominent of all the cowboy; singly, or in twos or threes, they gallop the wild little horses down the street, their lithe, supple figures erect, or swaying slightly as they sit loosely in the saddle. Their stirrups are so long that their knees are hardly bent, and the bridles not taut enough to keep chains from clinking."

The West for Me

By E. A. BRININSTOOL

I love the peaks with their snowbound caps, the stately mountains grand,

*The pungent smell of the bending pines that tower on either hand,
The streams that leap through the canyons deep, and the wind's low melody,—*

I heed their call, for I love them all—'tis the West, the West for me!

*I love the stretches of desert gray, the brown buttes grim and high;
I love the scent of the sagebrush flats, the blue of the vaulted sky;
The charm and spell of each draw and swell, and the shifting sand dunes free—*

They grip and hold as their charms unfold—aye, the West, the West for me!

*I love the trail through the lonely hills to the door of the old log shack,
And an instinct strong is luring on, as it calls and beckons back.*

I love the croon of the low, sweet tune that sighs through the scrub-oak tree,

And the bubbling note from the wild bird's throat—ah, the West, the West for me!

*I love the herds on the open range, the riders who guard them well,
Who ride like fiends in the night stampede through the ocean of chaparral;*

*I love to dream in the campfire's gleam of the days as they used to be
And the stalwart men who were heroes then—so the West, the West for me!*

Oh, the boundless West, and the wild, free life that is spent in the open air,

With the handiwork of the God of All in the plains and the mountains there!

I love the sweep of the streams that creep from the hills to the throbbing sea,

And I hear their call as the shadows fall—oh, the West, the West for me!

The Cow Horse

Let's Stampede!

No adjunct is more necessary in all spheres of the cowboy's routine than the so-called cow-horse. He knows the needs and the exigencies of the cattle business as thoroughly as the sombreroed man of the plains, who sits astride his back. Without the cow-horse there could be no cattle industry on a big scale, for steers would not be captured, "cut-out," tied, branded, penned or shipped.

A horse becomes, in the phaseology of the West, a cow-horse when he has served his apprenticeship on the range. The best of them are worth about $300.00 in the open market, whereas an equine unschooled in the business of the prairie goes begging at half the price. Fifty-mile wanderings, day by day, fatigue them not at all, and their sole means of subsistence is prairie grass. Grain is a luxury not vouchsafed them once a year, and sometimes there are twenty-four hour stretches without water. So familiar is the experienced cow-horse with the method of pursuit and capture of a wild running steer that bridle, reins and the guiding hand of a rider are unrequired details. He follows the quarry in every turn and brings the cowboy speedily to the most advantageous position for the casting of the imprisoning lasso. And when the rope encircles horns or neck, he understands how best to withstand the physical shock as it grows taut. Every muscle is braced against the impact, which sometimes wrenches the saddle horn from its fastening, or tears cinch as if it were paper. If the plan is to tie the captive, he knows the rope must not slacken, for the steer, thrown headlong in the abruptness of its halt, is held prostrate only by the rigid line.

In moving among a herd of prairie cattle the cow-horse has been taught to proceed with furtive movement, for unwonted activity will cause a stampede. If the rider has singled out an individual steer whom he wishes to "cut-out," the cow-horse comprehends instantly the purpose, quietly forces the animal to the outer limits of the drove, and then, the danger of commotion over, no longer withholds speed.

The cow-horse fords or swims a river without hesitation, and seems to know and avoid quicksand by intuition. He traverses tracts riddled with prairie dog and gopher holes without once becoming entrapped.

Little wonder that the cowboy comes to love the faithful beast who is his companion by day and night, who is his ally in every step and without whom his means of livelihood would be gone.

"THE STAMPEDE"—By WALLACE D. COBURN

Did you ever hear the story of how one stormy night
 A wild beef herd stampeded, down yonder to the right?
 No? Well, you see that sloping hill, beyond the sage-brush flat,
 East of the old round-up corral, where all the boys are at?
 'Twas one night in November, and I was on first guard,
 A storm was brewing in the West, the wind was blowing hard.
 Of wild Montana steers we had about a thousand head,
 Belonging to the "Circle C," and each one full of "Ned."
 The season had been rainy and the grass was thick and long,
 So the herd had found good grazing in the hills the whole day long.
 The clouds had piled up in the west, a strangely grotesque mass,
 And the rain began to patter on the weeds and buffalo grass.
 The lightning flared up in the clouds, and all was deathly still,
 Except the melancholy howl of a coyote on the hill.
 The vivid shifting lightning kept bright the stormy scene,
 And I could see the broken hills with wash-outs in between.
 And when Bill, who was standing first guard with me that night,
 Came jogging past, he loved that it was certainly a sight,
 And then commenced to whistle, while I began to sing.
 The lightning flared along the sky like demons on the wing,
 But round and round rode Bill and me, with slickers buttoned tight,
 And looked like dim specters in the constant changing light,
 The thunder now began to peal and crash along the sky,
 The cattle pawed and moved about, and the wind went whistling by.
 Then, suddenly without a sign, there came an awful crash,
 And my eyes were almost blinded by a bright and burning flash
 That filled the air an instant, then as suddenly went out,
 While little sparks of lightning seemed floating all about.
 And then the scene that followed defies my tongue to tell,
 For those wild steers stampeded when the deadly lightning fell.
 I don't know how it happened, but when my vision clears,
 I find that I am riding in the midst of running steers.
 And oh! the thoughts that filled my brain as in that living tide,
 Of hoofs and horns and glowing eyes, I made that fearful ride,
 On and on at deadly speed, I dared not slacken pace;
 A stone wall could not stop us in that blood-curdling race;
 And if a cowboy ever prayed with fervor in his prayer,
 'Twas me among those mad n'd beasts, for I prayed in despair.
 My horse was jammed and thrown about as o'er the rocky ground
 We sped like some vast torrent, with stubborn sullen sound,
 And then my horse was almost gone, and death stalked all about,
 I heard above the awful roar a cowboy's ringing shout.
 And looking backward in the gloom I caught a fleeting glance
 Of cowboys flitting to and fro, like spirits in a dance,
 And then I felt my nerve come back, like some old long lost friend,
 For I had given up all hope, and waited for the end.
 At first I couldn't hardly tell just what they hoped to do,
 But soon I saw they meant to cut that running herd in two,
 For after cutting off a bunch, they lines up with a cheer,
 To form a wedge of solid men and charge them from the rear.
 Then on they came through tossing horns, with old Jack in the lead.
 The cattle parted stubbornly, but didn't slacken speed.
 On and on, with sturdy force, those brave lads struggled on,
 But I doubted if they'd reach me before my horse was gone,
 For as I spurred his reeking flanks and pulled his head up high,
 He slowly sank beneath me and I felt that I must die,
 But up again he struggled, then down he went once more,
 And I found myself a knockin' at old death's gloomy door,
 And when I got my senses the hoofs and horns were gone;
 And Bill was kneeling at my side with streaming slicker on,
 You see, my leg was broken and chest was badly crushed
 By half a dozen reckless steers, as over me they rushed.
 But it is hard to kill a cowboy, they're pretty tough you know,
 Else I'd been riding in the clouds with angels long ago.

*The significance of the use of Ochres and Paint among the Indians' People—by the Rev. John

This earth and mineral colorings were used on the human face and form, also on the panels of the Buffalo and Mooseskin Lodge of the tribes.

These later, when the horse came upon the scene, the Indian daubed and painted his mount for the occasion.

The following will indicate some of the times and seasons for special-painted face and form in human life:

- 1st—Learning to hunt and trap.
- 2nd—Reaching manhood.
- 3rd—Seeking a creed or meeting the spirit of his dreams.
- 4th—Going to war.
- 5th—Seeking a mate.
- 6th—Going to battle.
- 7th—Coming home as victor.
- 8th—Undergoing defeat.
- 9th—Joy and feasting.
- 10th—Death and mourning.
- 11th—Seeking the priesthood.
- 12th—Medicine and burying.
- 13th—Becoming a seer and being able to travel far in spirit.
- 14th—Religious and used especially at the great annual festival of mid-summer.
- 15th—Peacemaking.
- 16th—Travelling.
- 17th—Visiting.

All of the above gave reason for certain style and shapings of color on face and form and costume, and many of these customs are still in vogue in the three middle provinces of this Western land. I very much question if these Indians have donned war paint since 1885. A few individuals, such as the Blackfoot, who killed the issuer of rations down at the Blackfoot Crossing, or the Blood Indian who ran amuck and killed several people before he was arrested, or Almighty Voice the Cree, who also killed several men and finally succumbed to the gathering guns near Duck Lake, with these few individual cases we have not had any "war paint," but of the other paint and feathers as in use among these tribes we have had these in common among all these Indians and doubtless will for some time to come.

The paintings on the panels of the lodges were the life history of the warrior, hunter, occupant of same. His daring and pluck and skill were thus made an object lesson even during his life in the lodges of his people.

“The Outlaw”

By CHAS. BADGER CLARK, Jr.

When my loop takes hold of a two-year old
By the feet or the neck or the horn,
He can plunge and fight till his eyes go white,
But I'll throw him as sure as you're born.

Though the taunt sing like a banjo's string,
And the latigoes creak and strain,
Yet I've no fear of an outlaw steer,
And I'll tumble him on the plain.

For a man is a man, and a beast is a beast,
And the man is the boss of the herd;
And each of the bunch, from biggest to least,
Must come down when he says the word.

When my legs swing 'cross on an outlaw hawse,
And my spurs clinch into his side,
He can r'ar and pitch over hill and ditch,
But wherever he goes I'll ride.

Let him spin and flop like a crazy top,
O. flit like a wind-whipped smoke;
But he'll know the feel of my rowelled heel
Till he's happy to own he's broke.

For a man is a man, and a hawse is a brute;
And the hawse may be prince of his clan;
But he'll bow to the bit and the steel-shod boot,
And own that his boss is the man.

When the devil at rest, underneath my vest,
Gets up and begins to paw;
And my hot tongue strains at its bridle reins,
Then I tackle the real outlaw.

When I get plumb riled and my sense goes wild,
And my temper has fractious growed;
If he'll hump his neck just a trifstin' speck,
Then it's dollars to dimes I'm throwed.

For a man is a man, but he's partly a beast;
He kin brag till he makes you deaf;
But the one lone brute from West to East
That he kain't quick break, is himself.

The Old Cowman's Appeal

By CHAS. BADGER CLARK, Jr.

*I rode across a valley range,
I hadn't seen for years,
The trail was all so spoilt and strange,
It nearly fetched the tears.*

*I had to let the fences down,
The fussy lanes ran wrong,
And each new line would make me swear,
And hum this little song:*

*'Twas good to live when all the sod,
Without no fence or fuss,
Belonged in partnership to God,
The Government and Us.*

*With sky-line bounds from east to west,
And room to go and come,
I loved my fellow man the best,
When he was scattered some.*

*When my old soul hunts range and rest,
Beyond the great Divide,
Just plant me in some stretch out West,
That's sunny, lone and wide.*

*Let cattle rub my tombstone round,
And coyotes mourn their kin,
Let horses come and paw my mound,
But don't you fence it in.*

The Boys of the Yellowstone Flats

*We are the gay punchers of the Yellowstone flats,
We wear the high heels, also the white hats,
We're noted in Texas and on the Staked plains,
Also in Montana on the Yellowstone range.*

*We ride Marden saddles, our chaps are the best,
Our bits, boots and spurs can't be beat in the West.
We ride up the trail, take down the rawhide;
There never was a broncho but what we could ride.*

*We've worked on the D.T.'s, also the H.S.,
But as for the Shoesole, we think them the best.
We ride to the wagon, we ride in pursuit;
We hear the cook holler, "Chuck-away," grab a root*

*We spread our blankets on the ground, cold and hard,
For shortly we'll have to stand two hours' guard.
The night is so dark, we can scarce see at all;
We ride to the sound of some young maverick's bawl.*

*Next morning at daybreak on circle we'll ride,
To round up the maverick, take down the rawhide.
We'll rope him and throw him, as in days of old,
And on his left shoulder we'll brand the shoesole.*

*The game of cowpunching may be honest enough,
But for the young cowboy it seems mighty tough.
What cares the puncher, as he rides the range o'er,
The cowman will get there or else make a roar.*

*From Broncho bustin' I've had quite enough;
I'll go east like Big Bill and there play the tough.
I'll let my hair grow long and dance on the stage;
Tell them that I eat cactus out West and chew sage.*

*For boots, quirts and saddles I've no further use;
I'll ride to the home ranch and turn the bronk loose,
I'll put boots and saddles where they will keep dry,
For perhaps I may need them in the sweet bye and bye.*

HISTORY OF ROPING

*To-day, roping is the cleanest and fairest of all sports, and anyone, I do not care who he is,
can well appreciate a contest participated in by the ropers who have proven themselves to be
— Champions —*

ABOUT a half century ago, when thousands upon thousands of cattle grazed the open prairies of the Northwest Territories, and what is now Alberta and Saskatchewan, before corrals and wire fences came upon the scene, and the cattle business was conducted on the open range plan, it was found that experts with the lariat were much in demand. At this time the cattle roamed the plains more or less as they pleased, only to be disturbed two or three times a year; first in the spring when they were gathered and thrown back on the summer ranges and calves branded; next in the early fall when they were rounded up and thrown together again, all beef "cut" driven to a railroad station, loaded and shipped to market, at the same time all late calves were caught and branded.

This, in the general way, was the procedure of the ranchmen, but all this time the cowboy, who was handy with the rope, found his competitor for first honors; hence, disputes would arise as to who was the best of the bunch. Finally, the different ranches developed a champion and matched contests were held on the open prairies, with only cowboys for an audience. This proved a great sport for the cattle men in general. At these contests horses so well trained as to display almost human intelligence were used and carried off their share of the honors. These contests were usually arranged for the 24th of May (the Queen's birthday), and July 1st (Dominion Day), finishing with a cowboy dance at night. These dances consisted of "Ballance All," to the tune of "Turkey in the Straw," delivered by some old cow hand, who enjoyed his task as much as the many happy couples, especially if the boys had plenty of the old brand to shorten the intermission with. In later years the public became interested and matched contests were brought to the cities. This proved so interesting to the large crowds which would come many miles, and there were so many ropers who believed themselves as good as the best. Free-for-all contests were next in order, when rules governing the contests were adopted by the ropers. The boys took more pains in training their horses for contest work and today a good roping horse sells for a price equal to that which is paid for a winning race horse.

WINNIPEG THE WONDERFUL. In 1870, when the first census of Winnipeg was taken, it showed 215 persons in the village. Frontier celebrations were annual events then. The visitor who comes to Winnipeg on this occasion expecting to find a frontier town will find one of the most marvellous and impressive examples of civic growth the history of the world has seen. The life that populates Winnipeg and the Canadian West is virile. It has been made by the man of red blood who broke away from the family fireside in the East, South or abroad and who came here to make his place in the doing of big things. The same spirit that turned him West has urged him through the line of progress which has turned buffalo trails leading from the old cow town and trading post of Fort Garry into the magnificently built streets of the city of Winnipeg of to-day which welcomes visitors to this historical Stampede celebration.

During the past few years Winnipeg has been favored by visits from many competent judges of civic progress whose expressions of opinion have been those of unqualified praise, mingled with astonishment. Astonishment that so much has been accomplished in so short a period of time, and praise for our fine streets, our long rows of six, eight and twelve story buildings, and the general and architectural evidences of prosperity. That these visible signs of progress can be justified and substantiated by duly authenticated figures surprises the visitor still more, and Winnipeg has reason to be proud of these incontrovertible statistical records of progress and development. Few, if any, cities on the continent can show better, or equal the steady solid advancement they represent. Everybody knows that Winnipeg's statistics of building and banking record wonderful progress, but it is not so generally known that these figures prove Winnipeg to be the most progressive city of its size on the North American continent. Even compared with such cities as St. Paul and Minneapolis, Winnipeg is a youngster. In 1870 there were but 215 people in the settlement. The first railway entered Manitoba in 1878, coming from St. Paul to St. Boniface, just across the river from Winnipeg. Meanwhile the Canadian Pacific was busy, first building a summer road from Fort William to Winnipeg, and later its great trans-continental line. The first through train from Montreal to Vancouver arrived at Winnipeg July 1, 1886. The coming of the Canadian Pacific marked the beginning of the greatness of the city. As the ramifications of that system brought railway facilities to portions of the prairies before untouched, and allowed them to produce, Winnipeg reaped the benefit. Then the Canadian Northern opened further territory, and later the Grand Trunk Pacific was built. The result to Winnipeg was a growth phenomenal. In 1870, as before stated, there were 215 people in the village; 1881, 7,985; in 1885, 19,574; in 1895, 48,411; in 1905, 79,975; now Winnipeg and suburbs have a population about the 200,000 mark, one firm, compilers of the city directory, placing it at 260,436.

All experts in economics assert that agriculture is the basis of true wealth; that all other activities revert to the tilling of the soil for their base and source of life. Probably there has never been a more striking instance of the power of agriculture to create a nation than that which is on view on the plains of Western Canada to-day. Here is a country where no more than forty years ago there were about 12,000 people, mostly half-breeds and Indians, but which has now a population of 1,500,000 and is adding to that rather considerable number in the spring and summer months of each year at the rate of over a thousand a day. The soil of Western Canada is rich and fertile beyond the dreams of agricultural avarice, and produces crops year after year in unexcelled quality and higher average yield than any other country in the world where farming is done on the same big scale. Wheat produces twenty to sixty bushels to the acre; oats from fifty to one hundred bushels, and barley from thirty to sixty bushels.

The area of the three prairie provinces—Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta—is 471,243,338 acres, including Manitoba's new area of 114,226,560 acres. Of this it is estimated that, exclusive of Manitoba's added territory, 200,000,000 acres are arable. In 1900 the acreage under crop—wheat, oats and barley only—was 3,491,413; in 1906 it had increased to 7,894,666; 1911, 14,626,234 acres and in 1912, 17,329,000 acres were sown with these cereals. In addition to this 1,110,000 acres of flax were sown last year.

That these facts and figures are only records of the beginning of progress and development in Western Canada, and that the future holds tremendous possibilities for this Last Best West, may be judged by the fact that less than eight per cent. of the available land is under cultivation. Commerce is measured by the power of the land to maintain population, and cities can grow to the limit of the crop resources that directly or indirectly support them. So that the future of Winnipeg, the economic manufacturing and shipping centre of Western Canada, will be measured closely by the size of the crops of the three prairie provinces—Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

The money value of last year's crop alone is conservatively estimated at $208,368,000.

325,000 individuals from all countries settled in the West last year

13,480 miles, having increased from a mileage of 3,680 in ten years. Immigration, too, shows a remarkable increase during that period. In the year 1901 49,149 new settlers entered the provinces; in 1906 this figure had increased to 189,064, and last year the immigration authorities state that 325,000 individuals from all countries settled in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, bringing cash and effects from the United States alone to the value of $350,000,000.

The entire Canadian West, even into the Rockies, pays tribute to Winnipeg. And this is a market second to none; the large agricultural population demands great quantities of manufactured products; there are a thousand-and-one things for which Winnipeg will be looked to as the logical distributing point. It must not be supposed for a minute that the prairie cities will not be turning out their share of manufactured articles, but here in Western Canada is a habitable area nearly as great as that of the United States west of the Mississippi. The Western States have Denver, Butte, Salt Lake City, Spokane, and a great many more fairly large cities, each with a strong array of manufacturing; and yet think of the size, that say, Minneapolis would attain were St. Paul, Omaha, Des Moines, St. Louis, and all the balance of the cities from the Lakes to the Gulf, wiped off the map, and Minneapolis left the only portal to the rich country in the West. If this impossible thing should come to pass, wouldn't Minneapolis be an ideal distributing and manufacturing city? Western Canada is capable of supporting just as large a population as can the Western States, and at the present rate of immigration some of us won't be very old when the Canadian prairies will be the dwelling place of a vast multitude. And, in relation to this vast territory, Winnipeg holds the same enviable position as would Minneapolis under the conditions supposed above; her position assures her of a large, constant, wealthy market. There is no other country or section better fitted by nature or need for raising cattle than Western Canada. There are thousands of acres of grazing land in the country; other thousands of acres that produce natural grasses which make the very best cattle hay at the rate of one to three tons to the acre; abundant water; bush where vetch and wild pea-vines grow profusely; hills and bluffs which

Did you ever hear the story of how one stormy night
 A wild beef herd stampeded, down yonder to the right?
 No? Well, you see that sloping hill, beyond the sage-brush flat,
 East of the old round-up corral, where all the boys are at?
 'Twas one night in November, and I was on first guard,
 A storm was brewing in the West, the wind was blowing hard.
 Of wild Montana steers we had about a thousand head,
 Belonging to the "Circle C," and each one full of "Ned."
 The season had been rainy and the grass was thick and long,
 So the herd had found good grazing in the hills the whole day long.
 The clouds had piled up in the west, a strangely grotesque mass,
 And the rain began to patter on the weeds and buffalo grass.
 The lightning flared up in the clouds, and all was deathly still,
 Except the melancholy howl of a coyote on the hill.
 The vivid shifting lightning kept bright the stormy scene,
 And I could see the broken hills with wash-outs in between.
 And when Bill, who was standing first guard with me that night,
 Came jogging past, he loved that it was certainly a sight,
 And then commenced to whistle, while I began to sing.
 The lightning flared along the sky like demons on the wing,
 But round and round rode Bill and me, with slickers buttoned tight,
 And looked like dim specters in the constant changing light.
 The thunder now began to peal and crash along the sky,
 The cattle pawed and moved about, and the wind went whistling by.
 Then, suddenly without a sign, there came an awful crash,
 And my eyes were almost blinded by a bright and burning flash
 That filled the air an instant, then as suddenly went out,
 While little sparks of lightning seemed floating all about.
 And then the scene that followed defies my tongue to tell,
 For those wild steers stampeded when the deadly lightning fell.
 I don't know how it happened, but when my vision clears,
 I find that I am riding in the midst of running steers.
 And oh! the thoughts that filled my brain as in that living tide,
 Of hoofs and horns and glowing eyes, I made that fearful ride,
 On and on at deadly speed, I dared not slacken pace;
 A stone wall could not stop us in that blood-curdling race;
 And if a cowboy ever prayed with fervor in his prayer,
 'Twas me among those mad n'd beasts, for I prayed in despair.
 My horse was jammed and thrown about as o'er the rocky ground
 We sped like some vast torrent, with stubborn sullen sound,
 And then my horse was almost gone, and death stalked all about,
 I heard above the awful roar a cowboy's ringing shout.
 And looking backward in the gloom I caught a fleeting glance
 Of cowboys flitting to and fro, like spirits in a dance,
 And then I felt my nerve come back, like some old long lost friend,
 For I had given up all hope, and waited for the end.
 At first I couldn't hardly tell just what they hoped to do,
 But soon I saw they meant to cut that running herd in two,
 For after cutting off a bunch, they lines up with a cheer,
 To form a wedge of solid men and charge them from the rear.
 Then on they came through tossing horns, with old Jack in the lead.
 The cattle parted stubbornly, but didn't slacken speed.
 On and on, with sturdy force, those brave lads struggled on,
 But I doubted if they'd reach me before my horse was gone,
 For as I spurred his reeking flanks and pulled his head up high,
 He slowly sank beneath me and I felt that I must die,
 But up again he struggled, then down he went once more,
 And I found myself a knockin' at old death's gloomy door,
 And when I got my senses the hoofs and horns were gone;
 And Bill was kneeling at my side with streaming slicker on,
 You see, my leg was broken and chest was badly crushed
 By half a dozen reckless steers, as over me they rushed.
 But it is hard to kill a cowboy, they're pretty tough you know,
 Else I'd been riding in the clouds with angels long ago.

*The significance of the use of Ochres and Paint among
the Indians' People—by the Rev. John

This earth and mineral colorings were used on the human face and form, also on the panels of the Buffalo and Mooseskin Lodge of the tribes.

These later, when the horse came upon the scene, the Indian daubed and painted his mount for the occasion.

The following will indicate some of the times and seasons for special-painted face and form in human life:

- 1st—Learning to hunt and trap.
- 2nd—Reaching manhood.
- 3rd—Seeking a creed or meeting the spirit of his dreams.
- 4th—Going to war.
- 5th—Seeking a mate.
- 6th—Going to battle.
- 7th—Coming home as victor.
- 8th—Undergoing defeat.
- 9th—Joy and feasting.
- 10th—Death and mourning.
- 11th—Seeking the priesthood.
- 12th—Medicine and burying.
- 13th—Becoming a seer and being able to travel far in spirit.
- 14th—Religious and used especially at the great annual festival of mid-summer.
- 15th—Peacemaking.
- 16th—Travelling.
- 17th—Visiting.

All of the above gave reason for certain style and shapings of color on face and form and costume, and many of these customs are still in vogue in the three middle provinces of this Western land. I very much question if these Indians have donned war paint since 1885. A few individuals, such as the Blackfoot, who killed the issuer of rations down at the Blackfoot Crossing, or the Blood Indian who ran amuck and killed several people before he was arrested, or Almighty Voice the Cree, who also killed several men and finally succumbed to the gathering guns near Duck Lake, with these few individual cases we have not had any "war paint," but of the other paint and feathers as in use among these tribes we have had these in common among all these Indians and doubtless will for some time to come.

The paintings on the panels of the lodges were the life history of the warrior, hunter, occupant of same. His daring and pluck and skill were thus made an object lesson even during his life in the lodges of his people.

“The Outlaw”

By CHAS. BADGER CLARK, Jr.

*When my loop takes hold of a two-year old
By the feet or the neck or the horn,
He can plunge and fight till his eyes go white,
But I'll throw him as sure as you're born.*

*Though the taunt sing like a banjo's string,
And the latigoes creak and strain,
Yet I've no fear of an outlaw steer,
And I'll tumble him on the plain.*

*For a man is a man, and a beast is a beast,
And the man is the boss of the herd;
And each of the bunch, from biggest to least,
Must come down when he says the word.*

*When my legs swing 'cross on an outlaw hawse,
And my spurs clinch into his side,
He can r'ar and pitch over hill and ditch,
But wherever he goes I'll ride.*

*Let him spin and flop like a crazy top,
O. flit like a wind-whipped smoke;
But he'll know the feel of my rowelled heel
Till he's happy to own he's broke.*

*For a man is a man, and a hawse is a brute;
And the hawse may be prince of his clan;
But he'll bow to the bit and the steel-shod boot,
And own that his boss is the man.*

*When the devil at rest, underneath my vest,
Gets up and begins to paw;
And my hot tongue strains at its bridle reins,
Then I tackle the real outlaw.*

*When I get plumb riled and my sense goes wild,
And my temper has fractious growed;
If he'll hump his neck just a trifstin' speck,
Then it's dollars to dimes I'm throwed.*

*For a man is a man, but he's partly a beast;
He kin brag till he makes you deaf;
But the one lone brute from West to East
That he kain't quick break, is himself.*

By CHAS. BADGER CLARK, Jr.

*I rode across a valley range,
I hadn't seen for years,
The trail was all so spoilt and strange,
It nearly fetched the tears.*

*I had to let the fences down,
The fussy lanes ran wrong,
And each new line would make me swear,
And hum this little song:*

*'Twas good to live when all the sod,
Without no fence or fuss,
Belonged in partnership to God,
The Government and Us.*

*With sky-line bounds from east to west,
And room to go and come,
I loved my fellow man the best,
When he was scattered some.*

*When my old soul hunts range and rest,
Beyond the great Divide,
Just plant me in some stretch out West,
That's sunny, lone and wide.*

And coyotes mourn their kin,
Let horses come and paw my mound,
But don't you fence it in.*

The Boys of the Yellowstone Flats

*We are the gay punchers of the Yellowstone flats,
We wear the high heels, also the white hats,
We're noted in Texas and on the Staked plains,
Also in Montana on the Yellowstone range.*

*We ride Marden saddles, our chaps are the best,
Our bits, boots and spurs can't be beat in the West.
We ride up the trail, take down the rawhide;
There never was a broncho but what we could ride.*

*We've worked on the D.T.'s, also the H.S.,
But as for the Shoesole, we think them the best.
We ride to the wagon, we ride in pursuit;
We hear the cook holler, "Chuck-away," grab a root*

*We spread our blankets on the ground, cold and hard,
For shortly we'll have to stand two hours' guard.
The night is so dark, we can scarce see at all;
We ride to the sound of some young maverick's bawl.*

*Next morning at daybreak on circle we'll ride,
To round up the maverick, take down the rawhide.
We'll rope him and throw him, as in days of old,
And on his left shoulder we'll brand the shoesole.*

*The game of cowpunching may be honest enough,
But for the young cowboy it seems mighty tough.
What cares the puncher, as he rides the range o'er,
The cowman will get there or else make a roar.*

*From Broncho bustin' I've had quite enough;
I'll go east like Big Bill and there play the tough.
I'll let my hair grow long and dance on the stage;
Tell them that I eat cactus out West and chew sage.*

*For boots, quirts and saddles I've no further use;
I'll ride to the home ranch and turn the bronk loose,
I'll put boots and saddles where they will keep dry,
For perhaps I may need them in the sweet bye and bye.*

HISTORY OF ROPING

*To-day, roping is the cleanest and fairest of all sports, and anyone, I do not care who he is,
can well appreciate a contest participated in by the ropers who have proven themselves to be
— Champions —*

ABOUT a half century ago, when thousands upon thousands of cattle grazed the open prairies of the Northwest Territories, and what is now Alberta and Saskatchewan, before corrals and wire fences came upon the scene, and the cattle business was conducted on the open range plan, it was found that experts with the lariat were much in demand. At this time the cattle roamed the plains more or less as they pleased, only to be disturbed two or three times a year; first in the spring when they were gathered and thrown back on the summer ranges and calves branded; next in the early fall when they were rounded up and thrown together again, all beef "cut" driven to a railroad station, loaded and shipped to market, at the same time all late calves were caught and branded.

This, in the general way, was the procedure of the ranchmen, but all this time the cowboy, who was handy with the rope, found his competitor for first honors; hence, disputes would arise as to who was the best of the bunch. Finally, the different ranches developed a champion and matched contests were held on the open prairies, with only cowboys for an audience. This proved a great sport for the cattle men in general. At these contests horses so well trained as to display almost human intelligence were used and carried off their share of the honors. These contests were usually arranged for the 24th of May (the Queen's birthday), and July 1st (Dominion Day), finishing with a cowboy dance at night. These dances consisted of "Ballance All," to the tune of "Turkey in the Straw," delivered by some old cow hand, who enjoyed his task as much as the many happy couples, especially if the boys had plenty of the old brand to shorten the intermission with. In later years the public became interested and matched contests were brought to the cities. This proved so interesting to the large crowds which would come many miles, and there were so many ropers who believed themselves as good as the best. Free-for-all contests were next in order, when rules governing the contests were adopted by the ropers. The boys took more pains in training their horses for contest work and today a good roping horse sells for a price equal to that which is paid for a winning race horse.

WINNIPEG THE WONDERFUL. In 1870, when the first census of Winnipeg was taken, it showed 215 persons in the village. Frontier celebrations were annual events then. The visitor who comes to Winnipeg on this occasion expecting to find a frontier town will find one of the most marvellous and impressive examples of civic growth the history of the world has seen. The life that populates Winnipeg and the Canadian West is virile. It has been made by the man of red blood who broke away from the family fireside in the East, South or abroad and who came here to make his place in the doing of big things. The same spirit that turned him West has urged him through the line of progress which has turned buffalo trails leading from the old cow town and trading post of Fort Garry into the magnificently built streets of the city of Winnipeg of to-day which welcomes visitors to this historical Stampede celebration.

During the past few years Winnipeg has been favored by visits from many competent judges of civic progress whose expressions of opinion have been those of unqualified praise, mingled with astonishment. Astonishment that so much has been accomplished in so short a period of time, and praise for our fine streets, our long rows of six, eight and twelve story buildings, and the general and architectural evidences of prosperity. That these visible signs of progress can be justified and substantiated by duly authenticated figures surprises the visitor still more, and Winnipeg has reason to be proud of these incontrovertible statistical records of progress and development. Few, if any,

cities on the continent can show better, or equal the steady solid advancement they represent. Everybody knows that Winnipeg's statistics of building and banking record wonderful progress, but it is not so generally known that these figures prove Winnipeg to be the most progressive city of its size on the North American continent. Even compared with such cities as St. Paul and Minneapolis, Winnipeg is a youngster. In 1870 there were but 215 people in the settlement. The first railway entered Manitoba in 1878, coming from St. Paul to St. Boniface, just across the river from Winnipeg. Meanwhile the Canadian Pacific was busy, first building a summer road from Fort William to Winnipeg, and later its great trans-continental line. The first through train from Montreal to Vancouver arrived at Winnipeg July 1, 1886. The coming of the Canadian Pacific marked the beginning of the greatness of the city. As the ramifications of that system brought railway facilities to portions of the prairies before untouched, and allowed them to produce, Winnipeg reaped the benefit. Then the Canadian Northern opened further territory, and later the Grand Trunk Pacific was built. The result to Winnipeg was a growth phenomenal. In 1870, as before stated, there were 215 people in the village; 1881, 7,985; in 1885, 19,574; in 1895, 48,411; in 1905, 79,975; now Winnipeg and suburbs have a population about the 200,000 mark, one firm, compilers of the city directory, placing it at 260,436.

All experts in economics assert that agriculture is the basis of true wealth; that all other activities revert to the tilling of the soil for their base and source of life. Probably there has never been a more striking instance of the power of agriculture to create a nation than that which is on view on the plains of Western Canada to-day. Here is a country where no more than forty years ago there were about 12,000 people, mostly half-breeds and Indians, but which has now a population of 1,500,000 and is adding to that rather considerable number in the spring and summer months of each year at the rate of over a thousand a day. The soil of Western Canada is rich and fertile beyond the dreams of agricultural avarice, and produces crops year after year in unexcelled quality and higher average yield than any other country in the world where farming is done on the same big scale. Wheat produces twenty to sixty bushels to the acre; oats from fifty to one hundred bushels, and barley from thirty to sixty bushels.

The area of the three prairie provinces—Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta—is 471,243,338 acres, including Manitoba's new area of 114,226,560 acres. Of this it is estimated that, exclusive of Manitoba's added territory, 200,000,000 acres are arable. In 1900 the acreage under crop—wheat, oats and barley only—was 3,491,413; in 1906 it had increased

That these facts and figures are only records of the beginning of progress and development in Western Canada, and that the future holds tremendous possibilities for this Last Best West, may be judged by the fact that less than eight per cent. of the available land is under cultivation. Commerce is measured by the power of the land to maintain population, and cities can grow to the limit of the crop resources that of Western Canada, will be measured closely by the size of the crops of the three prairie provinces—Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

The money value of last year's crop alone is conservatively estimated at $208,368,000.

325,000 individuals from all countries settled in the West last year

13,480 miles, having increased from a mileage of 3,680 in ten years. Immigration, too, shows a remarkable increase during that period. In the year 1901 49,149 new settlers entered the provinces; in 1906 this figure had increased to 189,064, and last year the immigration authorities state that 325,000 individuals from all countries settled in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, bringing cash and effects from the United States alone to the value of $350,000,000.

The entire Canadian West, even into the Rockies, pays tribute to Winnipeg. And this is a market second to none; the large agricultural population demands great quantities of manufactured products; there are a thousand-and-one things for which Winnipeg will be looked to as the logical distributing point. It must not be supposed for a minute that the prairie cities will not be turning out their share of manufactured articles, but here in Western Canada is a habitable area nearly as great as that of the United States west of the Mississippi. The Western States have Denver, Butte, Salt Lake City, Spokane, and a great many more fairly large cities, each with a strong array of manufacturing; and yet think of the size, that say, Minneapolis would attain were St. Paul, Omaha, Des Moines, St. Louis, and all the balance of the cities from the Lakes to the Gulf, wiped off the map, and Minneapolis left the only portal to the rich country in the West. If this impossible thing should come to pass, wouldn't Minneapolis be an ideal distributing and manufacturing city? Western Canada is capable of supporting just as large a population as can the Western States, and at the present rate of immigration some of us won't be very old when the Canadian prairies will be the dwelling place of a vast multitude. And, in relation to this vast territory, Winnipeg holds the same enviable position as would Minneapolis under the conditions supposed above; her position assures her of a large, constant, wealthy market. There is no other country or section better fitted by nature or need for raising cattle than Western Canada. There are thousands of acres of grazing land in the country; other thousands of acres that produce natural grasses which make the very best cattle hay at the rate of one to three tons to the acre; abundant water; bush where vetch and wild pea-vines grow profusely; hills and bluffs which

and the pioneer days with its dare devil, dashing, riding, bucking bronchos and steer throwing is one long story of excitement.

The history of early Winnipeg is far more interesting. Winnipeg is the first city of this great and glorious west—the gateway to the bread-basket of the world. Since the year 1870 Winnipeg has grown from a small trading post of the Hudson's Bay Company to a big hustling, industrial, commercial and financial centre, with a population of over 200,000 people. The population of Winnipeg is increasing so rapidly that the suburbs are being built up as rapidly as the city itself, and the demand for well located building lots has become so great that investors who have been shrewd enough to buy outlying property are becoming more wealthy every day.

make the best of winter outdoor quarters for the beasts, and a climate which though severely cold in winter, is dry and free from the wet shivery storms that make it impossible for cattle to live out and thrive, in other parts.

In the live stock industry lies one of Western Canada's greatest opportunities. With a home market that is growing faster than any other home market in the world, and near neighbors who will soon be calling for help to feed their millions, the outlook for live stock raising, from a ready market point of view, is excellent in this part of Canada. The facilities for live stock farming in the West cannot be excelled, and with a need so imperative as that which exists for dressed meat in all the older countries—and in our own as well—conditions could not be more suitable for further and rapid growth in all branches of live stock raising here. A substantial beginning has been made and when it is considered that all the great activity that has been exerted in the field of wheat growing has served to put under the plow no more than eight per cent.

of the available land of the West, it is easy to see where the cattle raising industry—to which much less attention has been paid—will arrive when the movement towards mixed farming that has set in so strongly shall have been developed to the full capacity of this marvellously rich and growing section of Canada.

Great as has been the progress made by the Canadian West during the past twenty-five years, the progress of the future bids fair to be far greater, and not only will Winnipeg develop into a mighty city of the size and importance of Chicago and New York, but other cities in Western Canada must grow out of the trade and commerce which will follow the putting under cultivation of the almost illimitable stretches of prairie land that still lies untouched by the plow, untraversed by the reaper and binder. It is the story of an opportunity—the last of its kind on the American continent if not in the world—an opportunity so exceptional, so remarkable, so fraught with the promise of honestly gained wealth to the humblest worker with a spark of ambition in his breast—that it would be almost a crime for visitors not to spread the knowledge of it broadcast on their return home.

World's Greatest Frontier Days' Celebration

In presenting for your approval this celebration, typical of the Frontier West, we feel that we have done all that we advertised, namely, gathered together in open competition the very best exponents of rangeland sports in their diverse lines, and feel sure that you will agree with us that "The Stampede" is worth while in more respects than one.

To the old timers, the old West which they knew and still love, has passed away, and to the newcomer, who knows the West only as it is today, we would say, that while this is to be a week of joy, rich with reminiscences, and an occasion of hearty greetings and renewals of old friendships, there will be just a tinge of sadness as we gaze upon the passing of the glories of the "Rangeland" and the "Sunset of a Dying Race."

Sincerely yours,

The STAMPEDE COMMITTEE
